42. UNRWA continued to operate a gender-based violence referral service system in Gaza and the West Bank, providing services for Palestine refugees. During the reporting period, 1,404 cases of gender-based violence were identified in Gaza. In the West Bank, UNRWA identified 284 cases and referred 29 cases to other service providers, including both government institutions — such as the Ministry of Health, for specialized medical care, and the Ministry of Social Development, for protection and for financial assistance — and non-governmental organizations.

E. Power-sharing and decision-making

43. While women participate in some areas of political life, they remain underrepresented in both elected and appointed decision-making positions. Women account for only 12.8 per cent of members of the Palestinian Legislative Council.<sup>15</sup> During the seventh conference of Fatah (the ruling political party in the West Bank), of the 19 members elected to the Fatah central council, only one was a woman. In the current Government, women hold only two ministerial positions: the Minister of Tourism and the Minister of Women's Affairs. Similarly, the most recent available data, from 2015, show that women accounted for only 5.8 per cent of Palestinian ambassadors, 17.2 per cent of judges, 16.7 per cent of prosecutors and 22.5 per cent of lawyers. Although women hold approximately 42.6 per cent of public sector positions, they tend to be towards the lower end of the decision-making hierarchy. For example, women held only 11.7 per cent of positions at the director general level.<sup>16</sup>

44. United Nations entities sought to enhance women's political participation and representation across these positions through several initiatives. UN-Women continued to provide technical assistance to 20 female local council members in the West Bank, who, in turn, through their engagement with local communities and community leaders, supported the development and implementation of nine women-led community-based initiatives. The initiatives were focused on voicing women's needs within the local community to encourage inclusive and gender-responsive decision-making in the local council. UNDP supported women in building their own awareness of rights in the context of the local elections in Tubas and Qalqilyah Governorates in the West Bank. This initiative reached more than 800 women, who were encouraged to participate actively in decision-making. As a result, two women's forums were established to facilitate increased networking and coordination among women and to build their capacity to advocate for their rights. WFP continued to promote and support women's active participation in the local committees that assist in the implementation of its assistance programmes. Through the local committees,

WFP and civil society partners ensured that women took a lead role in the management of food distribution and cross-checking of beneficiaries.

45. On 27 September 2017, UN-Women, in close collaboration with the Office of the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Process, organized an open day on women and peace and security in the State of Palestine, which included the participation of the Special Coordinator, senior United Nations and European Union officials, women's rights and human rights organizations, political leaders and international organizations. During the open day, the participants drew attention to a range of pressing concerns and priorities, including the rights of women refugees, the impact of settlements, the socioeconomic situation of women and girls in Gaza and Jerusalem and the situation and rights of women imprisoned by Israel. Under the theme of the open day, women's participation in the reconciliation process was stressed, as was the commitment of the United Nations to prioritizing the women and peace and security agenda in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

F. Institutional development

46. The promotion of peaceful, just and inclusive societies, as enshrined in Sustainable Development Goal 16, cannot be achieved without gender-responsive policies and actions. Inclusive institutional development is an essential component of preventing conflict and sustaining peace and should promote women's ability to lead and participate in all aspects of development, humanitarian and peace and security efforts.

47. United Nations entities implemented a range of initiatives to promote women's meaningful leadership and participation within long-term institutional reform efforts. For example, UNESCO, together with the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Education and Higher Education and the European Union, launched the First Skills Forecasting Model, which provides quantitative projections on the supply of and demand for skills in the Palestinian labour market with a view to developing curricula, training programmes and employment policies. The model will offer essential insights to female students in choosing their educational path.

48. UNICEF and WFP jointly supported the Ministry of Social Development in the formulation of the Social Development Sector Strategy 2017–2022 to address the social and economic vulnerabilities of women and other groups. A key element of the Strategy is the introduction of a case management system in the West Bank that provides essential referrals based on clients' specific needs and vulnerabilities. ILO supported the establishment and training of 11 technical committees, including a gender committee, to produce policy papers supporting the adoption of reformed labour legislation. In July 2017, ILO and the Ministry of Labour signed an implementation agreement to support the establishment of the Palestinian Social Security Corporation, an independent institution that will enable the roll-out of the first social security system to cover private sector workers and their families in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

49. UNICEF provided technical and financial support for the development of a child protection information management system, in cooperation with the Ministry of Social Development and partners, which was transferred to the Ministry of Social Development in February 2017 and is used by service providers to document and follow up on cases. UN-Women supported the Ministry of Women's Affairs in reviewing the Cross-Sectoral National Gender Strategy 2014–2016 and in developing the strategy for 2017–2022. The process was focused on localizing the Sustainable Development Goals within the strategy for long-term, transformative reform. In addition, UN-Women supported the Ministry of Women's Affairs in incorporating gender equality priorities into 12 sectoral strategies, namely with respect to education, health, culture, economic affairs, labour, agriculture, social development, water, housing, justice, security and local government.

50. OHCHR provided technical assistance to the Palestinian Authority, the Independent Commission for Human Rights and civil society in the West Bank and Gaza, including targeted assistance in the implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, to which the State of Palestine acceded in 2014. OHCHR, in collaboration with UN-Women, worked closely with all stakeholders to prepare the initial State party report of the State of Palestine on the implementation of the Convention. The report was submitted to OHCHR on 8 March 2017 and will be considered by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women in 2018.

51. In February 2017, UN-Women held a regional exchange workshop in Amman to enhance the knowledge and advocacy skills of civil society organizations regarding the Convention to protect women's rights in the Middle East and North Africa region and to improve the technical capacity of government entities with regard to the rules of procedure of the Committee. Approximately 50 participants attended the workshop, representing 20 Palestinian non-governmental organizations from the West Bank and Gaza, as well as government entities. In preparation for the consideration of the report of the State of Palestine by the Committee, UN-Women, with support from OHCHR, organized a mock session for government representatives and the Independent Commission for Human Rights.

52. A number of initiatives supported by UN-Women, ESCWA and others were aimed at building institutional support and capacity for the implementation of commitments on women and peace and security, including the national action plan on women and peace and security for the State of Palestine for the period 2017–2019. For example, during the reporting period UN-Women organized a regional knowledge exchange between the State of Palestine, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and Tunisia on the planning, monitoring and evaluation of national action plans on women and peace and security, which benefited 30 participants. This contributed to enhanced regional networking and partnerships with respect to data collection and advocacy.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

53. Palestinian lives and livelihoods and the enjoyment of human rights by Palestinians continue to be seriously affected by more than 50 years of the military occupation of Palestinian territory by Israel, including a 10-year closure of the Gaza Strip, as well as by the Palestinian political divide. Women and girls continue to be disproportionately affected by unstable political circumstances that systemically create gender-based vulnerabilities. They also experience multiple forms of violence, based on the continuing military occupation, human rights violations and a growing humanitarian crisis, compounded by conservative traditions and patriarchal norms. Limited access for women to employment opportunities and sustainable financial income, an overwhelming share of care responsibilities, and the marginalization imposed owing to geographical fragmentation and the related restriction of movement, exacerbate women's vulnerability to violence and limit their opportunities to access protection, justice and security services.

54. The accession of the State of Palestine to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women is an important step towards greater recognition of the human rights of women. It is commendable that the State of Palestine submitted its initial report to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. The report is scheduled to be considered by the Committee at its seventieth session, to be held in July 2018. Relevant Palestinian authorities and the Government of Israel have a critical role to play in eliminating discrimination against women and upholding women's human rights, ensuring accountability, respect for the rule of law and women's full, equal and meaningful participation in governance processes. The State of Palestine is encouraged to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention as an accountability tool under international human rights law. There is an increased need for the availability of both quantitative and qualitative data and analysis on the situation of Palestinian women,<sup>17</sup> the gender-specific impact of the occupation and the lack of progress in finding just and enduring peace. However, data disaggregated by sex and age, as well as gender analysis more broadly, have not yet been sufficiently utilized to inform related reporting and briefings on the situation of Palestinian people to other intergovernmental bodies, including the Security Council. In addition, options for facilitating direct inputs from women's civil society organizations to discussions on related themes should be considered.

55. Increased efforts are needed to improve women's economic empowerment. There is a need to focus on the interlinkages between the supply and demand sides of the labour market. This requires the design of practical interventions that promote the demand for women's labour while continuing to address the institutional and market impediments facing women's participation in the labour market. Women are entering the labour force in increasing numbers, but face numerous barriers notwithstanding their advanced education. An important starting point would be to challenge cultural stereotypes according to which women work only in certain fields or are better off working at home, and to identify women's real needs when they seek to enter the workforce and find stable employment. Robust social policies that support those needs, such as childcare, flexible working hours, policies that support work/life balance, and public awareness campaigns in support of working women, are essential.<sup>18</sup> National institutions should also address the lack of affirmative policies that promote the hiring of women. Labour laws and regulations should address existing gaps with respect to women's right to work and rights at work to promote gender equality in all sectors of the workforce.

56. National institutions should be supported in adopting holistic approaches to education, health and social services. Enhancing education quality and relevance can be achieved through the adoption of a more proactive approach to gender mainstreaming and inclusive and transformative education. Giving priority to women's health can be achieved through a public health perspective that is not limited to maternal and child health but also addresses Palestinian women's health needs regardless of their age and marital status.

57. Building an accurate understanding of the patterns and drivers of gender-based violence cannot be isolated from the impact of the overall political, humanitarian and economic context created by the prolonged occupation and other political realities in terms of increasing the risk and vulnerability for gender-based violence. While global standards for addressing gender-based violence emphasize the need for effective national systems that guarantee security, justice and protection for women, Palestinian women are denied those guarantees in the Gaza Strip and in parts of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. The Israeli occupation has severely limited the possibility of advancing protection through legal frameworks for addressing gender-based violence. The fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the closure imposed on Gaza have caused services, capacity and expertise to be made available only in certain areas. United Nations entities need to continue to work to strengthen services for survivors of gender-based violence and to address gaps in the quality, accessibility and sustainability of services. All actors should place greater focus on income generation for survivors of violence and on the provision of independent housing in which women survivors and their children may live free of abuse. The United Nations system should also support the institutionalization of violence prevention and response, particularly in areas most affected by conflict.

58. The United Nations humanitarian country team should continue to build on the foundation for a strengthened gender focus (in analytical, programmatic and institutional terms) in humanitarian action in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and to ensure the capacity to identify and respond to priority gender needs in the humanitarian response. Humanitarian actors should continue to ensure a shift in humanitarian approaches and mechanisms to guarantee effective protection and access to assistance for women and girls in humanitarian crises, including the full and meaningful participation and leadership of women in all stages of humanitarian action, as well as adequate funding for gender-sensitive response.

59. The promotion of gender equality, and the empowerment of women and their human rights, remain essential to efforts for the realization of just and durable peace and sustainable development in the Middle East. A strong normative framework is in place at the global level on women and peace and security, with regional and national policies and action plans providing additional guidance on its operationalization. Continued efforts should be made by the Palestinian Authority and all other actors to fulfil commitments relating to women and peace and security and to achieve the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, leaving no one behind.

Commission on the Status of Women

Sixty-third session

11–22 March 2019

Item 3 (c) of the provisional agenda*

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and to the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”: gender mainstreaming, situations and programmatic matters

Situation of and assistance to Palestinian women

Summary

The present report, submitted in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2018/10, highlights the situation of Palestinian women for the period from 1 October 2017 to 30 September 2018 and provides an overview of the assistance provided by the entities of the United Nations system with regard to education and training; health; economic empowerment and livelihoods; the rule of law and violence against women; power and decision-making; and institutional development. The report concludes with recommendations for consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women.

I. Introduction

1. In its resolution 2018/10 on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women, the Economic and Social Council expressed deep concern about the grave situation of Palestinian women in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, resulting from the severe impact of the ongoing Israeli occupation and all of its manifestations. The Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation, assist Palestinian women by all available means, including those laid out by the Secretary-General in his previous report on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women (E/CN.6/2018/6), and submit to the Commission on the Status of Women, at its sixty-third session, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the resolution.

2. The present report covers the period from 1 October 2017 to 30 September 2018 and provides a review of the situation of Palestinian women on the basis of information received from the United Nations entities that provide assistance to Palestinian women in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, unless otherwise indicated. Those entities include the following: the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Labour Organization (ILO), the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and its Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the Office of the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), United Nations Volunteers, the World Food Programme (WFP) and the World Health Organization (WHO). It also reflects information provided by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA). The report builds on previous annual reports on the topic (see A/73/13, A/73/35, A/73/84-E/2018/72, A/73/87-E/2018/69 and A/73/346-S/2018/597).

II. Situation of Palestinian women

3. The reporting period was characterized by a rise in political tensions, violence and a continued deterioration in the humanitarian, socioeconomic and security situation in and around the Gaza Strip, including in the context of the protests held under the label “the Great March of Return”.<sup>1</sup> Despite diplomatic efforts for intra-Palestinian reconciliation, the continued divisions between the Fatah-controlled Palestinian Authority and Hamas authorities in Gaza compounded the impact of closures, deepening the economic hardships in Gaza and obstructing key infrastructure projects on water and electricity.<sup>2</sup> In parallel, settlement expansion, the destruction of homes, infrastructure and livelihoods and strict movement and access restrictions continued in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem. All of those developments negatively affected the situation of Palestinian women in terms of their safety and security, livelihood, access to education, health care and other services, employment and political participation.

4. Since 30 March 2018, Palestinians in Gaza have held weekly mass protests along the perimeter fence under the label “the Great March of Return”. By the end of September 2018, 161 Palestinians had been killed along the fence and over 22,409 Palestinians (20,456 men and boys and 1,953 women and girls) had been injured, including by tear gas inhalation.<sup>3</sup> One Israeli soldier was killed and another injured, and 37 Israeli civilians were injured by projectiles launched from the Strip.<sup>4</sup> Furthermore, tensions remained in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Frequent clashes between Palestinians and Israeli security forces resulted in 24 Palestinian deaths and 8,921 injuries, including by tear gas inhalation, with 274 women and 172 girls among those affected,<sup>5</sup> and acts of violence between and vandalism by Israeli and Palestinian civilians. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded a total of 236 violent incidents involving Israeli settlers that resulted in three Palestinian fatalities and 100 Palestinian injuries, with 11 women and 7 girls among those affected, as well as damage to Palestinian property. Six Israeli civilians and three members of Israeli security forces were killed in shooting or stabbing attacks by Palestinians.

5. Funding cuts to UNRWA, which affected UNRWA emergency services and programmes in particular, raised concerns about the ability of the United Nations to respond effectively to the deteriorating humanitarian situation, including its impacts on women and girls.<sup>6</sup> Some of those cuts were made up in part by other donors.<sup>7</sup> Several political developments also cast a shadow on the financial situation of the Palestinian Authority, at a time when external budget support has been on the decline. On 23 March 2018, the President of the United States signed into law the Taylor Force Act, which prohibits the provision of nearly all economic assistance to the West Bank and Gaza that would directly benefit the Palestinian Authority. In July 2018, the Israeli Knesset passed a similar law withholding tax revenues that Israel collects for the Palestinian Authority, in an amount equivalent to the total sum of those Palestinian Authority payments. These and other funding cuts constrained the operations of several organizations, including United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, which had an overall negative impact on Palestinian women and men.

6. In Gaza, the deteriorating humanitarian and socioeconomic situation, compounded by financial constraints, a worsened electricity and fuel crisis and related power cuts, has further restricted access to basic services, including services to survivors of gender-based violence. It has also placed higher demands on and intensified the unpaid care and domestic work carried out by women. Some hospitals were expected to close in order to preserve energy for the central hospitals, which would have a particular impact on pregnant women, adolescents, older persons, those with chronic illnesses and survivors of gender-based violence.<sup>8</sup>

7. In the West Bank, ongoing settlement activities, demolitions, strict movement and access restrictions and limitations on planning and development continue to prevent entire communities, in particular in Area C, East Jerusalem and the H2 area of Hebron, from accessing essential services and have led to a heightened risk of displacement for many Palestinians.<sup>9</sup> According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 376 Palestinian structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, were demolished by Israeli authorities, displacing at least 471 people (90 households). UNRWA records indicate that 78 of the displaced individuals were Palestine refugee women and girls, including 36 girls under the age of 18, and 4 of the displaced households were headed by women. The situation of Bedouin communities such as Khan al-Ahmar is of particular concern, as they face the risk of impending demolition of structures and relocation.<sup>10</sup> When displaced, Palestinian women find themselves further constrained in their access to public spaces and livelihood opportunities, against a backdrop of increasing personal and family food insecurity and vulnerability. They also suffer an increase in domestic violence and often resort to negative coping mechanisms such as early marriage.

8. Circumstances in Area C are especially hard for women and girls, in the face of geographic isolation, poverty and conservative traditions and the absence of basic infrastructure and services. Few economic opportunities exist.<sup>11</sup> Restrictions on mobility are especially perilous for pregnant women. Women are at a high risk of suffering from psychosocial disorders such as anxiety and depression, compounded by a sense of failure to protect their children from violence. They are also at risk of violence in their homes or while tending to farmland or collecting water. Girls in the area have limited access to education and often drop out of school, which can lead to early marriage, early pregnancy and sexual abuse. In addition, women are often at risk of gender-based violence, exacerbated by the stresses and frustrations experienced by men. Few communities in Area C, especially Bedouin communities, have access to services such as police, health centres or shelters.<sup>12</sup>

9. Stereotypical attitudes relating to gender roles remain common in the State of Palestine. Men are largely viewed as heads of households, main providers and protectors of their families, while women are seen as responsible for care and domestic work relating to their often large and extended families with high numbers of children. The constant deterioration of the economic situation, combined with land confiscations and movement restrictions and exacerbated by intra-Palestinian political divisions, leaves many men unable to fulfil their traditional roles and women compensating for the absence of services and income.<sup>13</sup> Despite the increasing participation of women in higher education and the labour market, the division of work within the household continues to fall sharply along gender-specific expectations. However, there are signs of more equitable views, including in relation to the right to work, political participation and the sharing of care and domestic work, in particular among the younger age groups.<sup>14</sup>

10. A thorough analysis and understanding of the gender-specific aspects of the situation across the Occupied Palestinian Territory is essential for establishing effective responses to the multifaceted security and development challenges and extensive humanitarian needs. As further detailed below, the impact of the crisis on the everyday lives and the future of women, young women and girls is immense, and compounded by prevailing discrimination in law and in practice. The physical and longer-term emotional and societal impacts of all forms of violence remain of deep concern.

III. Assistance to Palestinian women

11. This section further outlines the situation of Palestinian women and efforts by the United Nations to respond to and deliver assistance amid complex humanitarian challenges. It contains updated information on the assistance provided by the United Nations system, in cooperation with the Palestinian Authority, donors and civil society, to address the specific needs and priorities of women, young women and girls. The volatile context and the increasingly constrained funding environment continue to pose operational challenges for the delivery of assistance and have an impact on the sustainability of the progress achieved.

12. Current priorities for the provision of United Nations support to the Palestinian people are outlined in a set of key documents, including the United Nations Development Assistance Framework 2018–2022 for the State of Palestine, which is aligned with the Palestinian National Policy Agenda (2017–2022), the Cross-Sectoral National Gender Strategy 2017–2022, the National Strategy to Combat Violence against Women 2011–2019, the National Action Plan for the Implementation of Security Council Resolution 1325 (2000) on Women, Peace and Security (2017–2019) and the 2018–2020 Humanitarian Response Strategy.

A. Education and training

13. Several challenges to children's access to education persist in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. These challenges often affect girls differently, for both security and sociocultural reasons. At age 5, about 1 in 10 children are excluded from education. A higher percentage of 5-year-old girls (11.9 per cent) are out of school, as compared with boys (8.8 per cent). Compulsory education in the State of Palestine begins the following year, at age 6, but the levels of exclusion from education increase rapidly as children progress through the compulsory grades. This trend is especially alarming for boys. For example, the estimated out-of-school rate for boys increases from 1.4 per cent at age 10 to 5.9 per cent at age 13, then jumps to a staggering 22.0 per cent at age 15. The rates of exclusion for girls start lower and increase less rapidly, with 0.4 per cent of girls out of school at age 10, 2.9 per cent at age 13 and 5.4 per cent at age 15.<sup>15</sup> This challenging situation is exacerbated by the electricity crisis, which restricts students' study time both at school and at home and increases dropout rates. In the West Bank, girls in Area C in particular have limited access to education, owing to poor infrastructure, closures, permit restrictions and curfews, restricted mobility and the fact that they are required to help with household chores. They also often drop out of school, which can lead to early marriage, early pregnancy and sexual abuse. In the H2 area of Hebron, the impacts of economic hardship are especially hard on girls, who are the first to drop out of school.<sup>16</sup> Furthermore, girls are often pulled out of school as a protective measure against harassment, violence and intimidation on their way to school in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.<sup>17</sup> In a recent study, ESCWA highlights the low levels of educational attainment and literacy for Palestinian women with disabilities.<sup>18</sup>

14. UNICEF continued to facilitate safe access for 6,600 Palestinian schoolchildren (3,500 girls) and 400 teachers (300 women) on their way to and from school in high-risk locations, through protective presence and accompaniment past checkpoints and near Israeli settlements in the West Bank. UNDP built additional classrooms and sports facilities for six schools in marginalized communities in the West Bank, providing 1,075 female students with a better learning environment and creating more than 22 jobs for teachers in administrative positions. UNDP also supported improved learning for approximately 12,000 female students in East Jerusalem by enhancing physical infrastructure and supplying information and communication technology equipment and tools. In the Gaza Strip, UNDP completed the rehabilitation and reconstruction of 50 educational institutions, benefiting 50,686 female students and teachers (99,114 overall) and creating 1,284 job opportunities for women.

15. In the Gaza Strip, UNRWA provided basic education for 131,554 first- to ninth-grade students (48.4 per cent of whom were girls) and access to mental health support for students and their families to prevent students from dropping out. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, UNRWA schools enrolled 48,192 students (59 per cent of whom were girls). UNESCO promoted inclusive and child-friendly education through training for 33 school principals in the West Bank and 14 school supervisors and counsellors in Gaza, with a focus on establishing gender sensitivity in classrooms.

16. At the higher education level, enrolment by young women in colleges and universities continued to grow. In 2017, 53 per cent of all young women of higher-education age were enrolled in colleges and universities, compared with 32 per cent of young men in the corresponding age group.<sup>19</sup> Under the UNDP-supported Al Fakhoora Dynamic Futures Programme, 50 out of 100 full four-year scholarships to enable access to academic programmes were awarded to young women from underprivileged backgrounds.

17. UNRWA offered technical and vocational training, including to 640 female refugees in Gaza, where they made up 35 per cent of trainees, and 617 female refugees in the West Bank, where they made up 84 per cent of trainees. UNDP provided support to a vocational training centre and a nursing school in the East Jerusalem district to prepare students to enter the labour market. UNICEF helped over 10,000 disadvantaged adolescent girls to develop critical life skills through civic engagement and entrepreneurial programmes so they could continue their academic path, support their communities and enter the labour market.

18. In partnership with Sharek Youth Forum, UN-Women promoted gender equality through mobile theatre in 10 boys' schools in Ramallah. Additional interventions included awareness-raising and social skills training for girls, women, boys and men in Jerusalem and Nablus and awareness-raising and civic education initiatives in 20 schools in Gaza. UNESCO carried out a radio and video spot campaign to promote diversity, gender equality, peace and development through sports media coverage. In addition, a theatre performance and an art exhibition were organized in partnership with Theatre Day Productions in Gaza in order to celebrate International Women's Day 2018 with women and men from rural areas, university students, members of youth organizations and representatives of women's organizations and international organizations.

B. Health

19. Health services facilities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory face chronic shortages of medical supplies, affecting the availability and quality of health services for Palestinian women. In Gaza, the health system is on the verge of collapse as a result of the 10-year closures, the deepening intra-Palestinian political divide, the deteriorating energy supply, the inconsistent payment of public sector medical personnel and the growing shortages in medicines and disposables.<sup>20</sup> The ongoing crisis has led to high psychological stress levels. Despite the fact that psychosocial and mental health service providers are active in Gaza, social norms play a key role in hindering service uptake, especially for adolescent girls, as service users face a high degree of stigma and service use is often perceived to constrain marriageability. In the West Bank, restrictions on mobility as a result of the restrictive permit regime, poor infrastructure and threats by soldiers and settlers make the situation especially perilous for pregnant women who require prenatal, neonatal and other maternal care from hospitals.<sup>21</sup> In addition, facilities outside East Jerusalem completely lack certain treatment and diagnostic options, such as radiotherapy and nuclear imaging technology. That means, for example, that cancer patients, including women with breast cancer, are dependent on referrals to East Jerusalem or Israel and therefore require security permits from Israeli authorities to receive services.

20. United Nations entities continued efforts to improve access to and the quality of health-care services. UNDP began the second phase of upgrades to the chemotherapy department at the Augusta Victoria Hospital in East Jerusalem, where direct support is provided to women with cancer. In the West Bank, UNDP provided two hospitals in the north and south with new structures, facilities and equipment and contributed to the construction of a new health clinic and medical laboratory that will benefit more than 1,660 people from the village of Tirah and the surrounding areas. UNFPA provided the Ministry of Health clinics in the West Bank with four advanced electrographic ultrasound machines to enhance breast cancer screening and detection. UNFPA also supported a mobile clinic for the early detection of breast cancer, enabling the clinic to provide mammogram screenings to 858 women in the northern West Bank, and provided subsidies for mammogram services to 180 women in Gaza.

21. In Gaza, UNDP constructed a service building for the visually impaired, benefiting 400 children (208 of whom were girls). Three hospitals and one primary health-care centre received photovoltaic renewable energy systems in order to provide sustainable operations. WHO procured and delivered equipment to the central stores in Gaza, including 20 postnatal beds, 50 delivery kits, 5 ultrasound machines, 20 delivery beds and 50 bag valve masks.

22. During the reporting period, UNRWA provided 3.3 million medical consultations, 1.94 million (58 per cent) of which were to women and girls in Gaza and 1 million to women in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Between 31 March and 8 July 2018, UNRWA health centres received 2,588 requests for medical treatment (94 per cent involving men and boys and 6 per cent involving women and girls) resulting from violence associated with the demonstrations held under the label “the Great March of Return”. The UNRWA Community Mental Health Programme tended to patients and to family members of those killed and injured who required psychosocial and mental health support.

23. UNRWA provided substantial reproductive health care during the reporting period. A total of 31,358 Palestine refugee women were newly enrolled in preconception care services; 39,596 women in the Gaza Strip received post-partum care within six weeks of delivery; and 77,809 individuals received family planning services. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, UNRWA enrolled 13,559 women in antenatal care and provided 12,746 women with postnatal care services and 22,525 women with family planning services.

24. UNICEF provided postnatal home visiting services by skilled midwives or nurses to mothers and newborns within two days of birth following high-risk pregnancies, targeting hard-to-reach locations and vulnerable communities. Since October 2017, some 5,584 high-risk lactating mothers and newborns benefited from these targeted postnatal home visiting services; 16.9 per cent of those visits involved mothers under 18 years of age. UNICEF also supported capacity-building for 20 female staff members, community workers and volunteers in assessing child development and providing early intervention services for children with developmental delays and disabilities.

25. UN-Women supported the Palestinian Family Planning and Protection Association in providing services relating to sexually transmitted infections and reproductive tract infections, benefiting 292 people (245 of whom were women). A four-day training course was conducted to increase the capacities of 20 service providers with regard to HIV/AIDS, sexually transmitted diseases and gender-based violence, and a three-day intervention was carried out with a total of 169 women (28 per cent of whom were under the age of 25) to sensitize women at high risk for sexually transmitted infections and to increase awareness about voluntary counselling, voluntary testing and sexual violence in Hebron and Bethlehem. UN-Women organized a two-day exchange visit between HIV-positive “champions” from Moldova and Palestinian health sector actors, service providers, youth volunteers and civil society representatives.

26. Through the Palestinian National Institute of Public Health, WHO continued the implementation of a maternal and child health electronic registry and a customized interactive checklist that facilitates data collection and utilization. By July 2018, 182 out of 427 maternal and child health clinics in the West Bank and Gaza had used the registry, helping to flag high-risk pregnancies and guide care providers in their clinical management. Through the Institute, WHO helped to improve mammogram protocols by expanding the risk factors assessed during breast cancer screening and supported the Ministry of Health in adopting and technically updating its protocols.

C. Economic empowerment and livelihoods

27. Economic security is a challenge for Palestinian women. Their limited share of economic opportunities and agricultural holdings and the restrictions on their mobility constrain their ability to contribute to household resources and food security. A gap remains between educational attainment by women<sup>22</sup> and their participation in the labour force. In 2017, the rate of labour-force participation by women stood at only 19.0 per cent, compared with 71.2 per cent for men. In a worrying trend, the unemployment rate for women across the Occupied Palestinian Territory hit a record high of 47.1 per cent in 2017, an increase of 12 per cent over the past five years. By comparison, the unemployment rate for men was 22.2 per cent.<sup>23</sup> In a recent report on UNCTAD assistance to the Palestinian people: developments in the economy of the Occupied Palestinian Territory (TD/B/65(2)/3), it was indicated that women with higher education (13 years of schooling or more) accounted for the largest share of those unemployed. In 2016, half of women with higher education were unemployed, compared with 19.1 per cent among their male counterparts.<sup>24</sup> Owing to limited employment opportunities, women remain overrepresented in unskilled or informal labour fields, putting them at risk of exploitation and unsafe working conditions.

28. UN-Women and ILO continued to promote equal access to decent work opportunities and the protection of women's labour rights through a "one-stop shop" programme in Ramallah that provides a comprehensive hub of services aimed at improving access to economic opportunities for micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises run by Palestinian women. UN-Women and ILO also worked on enhancing equitable legislation, gender-sensitive policies and active labour market programmes. As a result of this cooperation, an awareness-raising campaign was carried out on women's right to decent work opportunities, a position paper was published on reviewing the labour law from a gender perspective and an assessment was conducted of the existing complaint mechanism of the General Directorate for Labour Inspection and Administration of the Ministry of Labour, which included recommendations for strengthening the mechanism with regard to gender-responsive data collection, analysis and reporting.

29. UNDP supported the economic empowerment of women in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, through vocational training for 69 women, job placements for 131 women and business development services for 135 women. In Gaza, UNDP helped 98 young women to become entrepreneurs by facilitating access to financial and business development services. In the West Bank and Gaza, UNDP created 2,576 temporary workdays and 31 permanent jobs for women. It also helped 30 businesswomen and female workers in Gaza to become involved in efforts to revitalize the industrial sector.

30. The United Nations Volunteers programme secured 39 opportunities for national Volunteers, which benefited 26 young women and 13 young men. The Volunteers are assigned to different United Nations agencies and support various functions, including engineers, education officers and community development officers.

31. Throughout the West Bank, FAO contributed to a variety of livelihood activities, such as the construction of a livestock market in Hebron, which created a space for women herders to sell their processed food products and animals. Some 200 women herders benefited from training on farm management, dairy processing, marketing, hygiene and safety; 30 women received training on food processing and food safety; 23 women farmers received training on vegetable garden and animal production units; and 14 women farmers benefited from in-kind support to diversify the varieties of the crops they cultivate. In addition, 24 women farmers benefited from the rehabilitation and construction of water harvesting cisterns. In the Gaza Strip, FAO provided 11 female beekeepers with treatments for varroosis, which affects honey bees and honey production, an important supplementary livelihood option for women.

32. In the West Bank, UNRWA provided life skills coaching sessions and business development services to 508 economically vulnerable women, of which 8 subsequently received grants to develop their own enterprises and 58 took vocational training courses. A total of 3,929 loans were granted to female clients, and 64 women received microcredit to establish income-generating projects. Entrepreneurial skills training and microcredit was also provided to women in the Gaza Strip. The Agency's social safety net programme assisted 2,510 female-headed households in the West Bank and 21,341 female-headed households in the Gaza Strip.

33. UN-Habitat, in partnership with civil society, established a safe and inclusive public space for the Palestinian community in the Wadi al-Jawz neighbourhood in East Jerusalem, benefiting around 17,000 residents. Safe public spaces meet the needs and aspirations of women in the neighbourhood and their children.

34. Economic insecurity is directly linked to continued high rates of food insecurity and malnutrition. As at November 2017, 40 per cent of households in the Gaza Strip and 13 per cent in the West Bank were estimated to be suffering from moderate to severe food insecurity. Female-headed households were found to be disproportionately affected, and pregnant and lactating women were especially vulnerable.<sup>25</sup> In order to increase food consumption and dietary diversity and raise nutritional awareness, WFP distributed food and vouchers to 354,970 beneficiaries, half of whom were women, and provided nutritional awareness sessions to food-insecure women and men in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, the majority of whom were women.

D. Rule of law and violence against women

35. Discrimination in law and in practice, a high prevalence of gender-based violence and a lack of access to justice and related services remain the reality for Palestinian women. High rates of violence against women are of particular concern among vulnerable communities in the West Bank and Gaza, such as the internally displaced, women in refugee camps and in Bedouin communities, within certain groups, such as women with disabilities and adolescents, and among those with limited access to multisectoral services.<sup>26</sup> As previously reported (E/CN.6/2018/6, para. 37), social acceptance of violence against women and underreporting due to stigma continue to be of concern.<sup>27</sup> The fragmentation of the legal system and the existence of laws that continue to allow for violations of women's human rights, including in matters of marriage, divorce, child custody and inheritance, remain barriers to women's empowerment.

36. OHCHR and UN-Women trained members of the legislative harmonization committee on reviewing Palestinian law for compatibility with international human rights treaties to which the State of Palestine has acceded. In a positive development, a decree was issued in March 2018 abolishing the application of some articles of the Jordanian Penal Code that had provided for mitigating circumstances as exceptions to the prosecution of and/or judicial sentencing for offenses, including crimes committed in the name of honour and sexual violence offences when a perpetrator marries a victim.

37. UNDP, UNICEF and UN-Women supported the Attorney General's Office and the High Judicial Council in providing specialized services for cases relating to violence against women. A baseline study was conducted in partnership with the High Judicial Council to identify the needs of and gaps in the judiciary system and inform future interventions. Gender-responsive standard operating procedures were developed for specialized public prosecutions and endorsed by the Attorney General. Service providers within the justice and security system, including sharia court judges, were offered capacity-building training and awareness sessions on women's human rights, gender equality and ways to end gender-based violence. UNODC continued to provide support to the Palestinian criminal justice system to improve access to justice for women and girls who are survivors of violence. Seven forensic doctors trained by UNODC examined 89 cases involving victims of gender-based violence and produced forensic reports that constituted substantial evidence for the investigations by the Attorney General's Office into crimes relating to violence against women and girls. The doctors underwent additional training through individual work placements at the St. Mary's Sexual Assault Referral Centre in Manchester, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

38. UNFPA supported the training of 233 health service providers on detection, documentation, response and referrals for cases involving gender-based violence. The Gender-Based Violence Sub-Cluster developed a directory mapping all services provided relating to gender-based violence and trained humanitarian specialists in the Gaza Strip and Hebron on how to conduct an initial detection and referral for cases of gender-based violence. In Hebron and East Jerusalem, UNICEF trained 100 school counsellors on gender-based violence referrals. In Gaza, 293 counsellors and 9,427 teachers were trained on the detection of gender-based violence and the referral of children with specific protection needs, including needs relating to gender-based violence.

39. A total of 19,403 survivors of gender-based violence received at least one type of service supported by UNFPA and its partners, and 457 outreach awareness sessions on protection from and the prevention of gender-based violence reached 7,995 beneficiaries. The Occupied Palestinian Territory Humanitarian Fund provided support to 34,178 vulnerable women and 7,025 girls, in particular survivors of gender-based violence, and helped women with disabilities to gain access to enhanced support and protection services in the Gaza Strip.

40. Access to quality services, including psychosocial counselling and referrals, was enhanced through a number of initiatives. UNFPA established two new safe spaces for women and girls in the Old City of Jerusalem and the Bureij camp in Gaza. UNFPA also equipped six primary health-care clinics and one hospital in the West Bank with furniture and medical tools for detecting cases of gender-based violence and treating survivors and supported the establishment of seven community protection networks across the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

41. UN-Women provided multisectoral services to 2,406 women and 474 men in Gaza. This included case management support for 288 women who are survivors of gender-based violence, awareness-raising on the incidence of gender-based violence and information on associated services to 1,746 women and 474 men, support for health and reproductive health services to 320 women and referrals for 52 women. Moreover, 1,480 adolescents (1,050 girls and 430 boys) in Gaza were provided with psychosocial support, reproductive health services and grants for adolescent-led initiatives. UN-Women provided legal and psychosocial support to 160 women in conflict with the law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including at least 90 Bedouin women.

42. UNRWA addressed the risks of gender-based violence through community outreach interventions to Palestine refugees, awareness-raising activities and community protection mechanisms. Awareness-raising sessions delivered through the Agency's Relief and Social Services Programme reached 7,213 women and 2,796 men in the Gaza Strip.

43. UN-Women implemented the regional "Because I am a Man" campaign, which challenges gender stereotypes surrounding household roles and responsibilities, fatherhood and violence against women, among other issues, and raises awareness of the positive roles men can play in achieving gender equality. As part of the campaign, UN-Women implemented community events with university students and displayed billboards in Ramallah, Nablus and Bethlehem, featuring images of men advocating gender equality in their daily lives. In addition, UN-Women supported a media and advocacy campaign on ending violence against women run by Al-Muntada, a coalition of non-governmental organizations committed to ending violence against women, which promoted a gender-responsive family protection bill. UNICEF worked with 1,000 adolescent boys and 1,000 girls in the West Bank to develop their knowledge on and skills in dealing with gender-based violence and bullying in schools. In Gaza, 3,256 adolescents (50 per cent of whom were girls) were provided with training on gender-based violence, the prevention of bullying and life skills to enable them to combat violence and advocate positive change in their communities.

E. Power and decision-making

44. While the contribution of Palestinian women to political life is widely acknowledged, women continued to be underrepresented in decision-making bodies and processes at various levels of public life. According to the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, there are significant gender disparities in favour of men in the public sector. The proportion of women in political leadership and decision-making positions is only 11.7 per cent, with women representing only 12 per cent of directors general and 16 per cent of deputy ministers.<sup>28</sup> Women have also been largely excluded from formal dialogue efforts to end the intra-Palestinian political division. For instance, no women participated in the talks that led to the signing of the agreement between Fatah and Hamas in Cairo in October 2017. No women are represented on the technical committees that were subsequently established to work out the details of the reconciliation arrangements.<sup>29</sup> To address some of those challenges, the Palestinian Authority adopted a national action plan to promote the implementation of Security Council resolution 1325 (2000), in which it recognized the significant role of women and girls in the peace and security agenda and their agency in responding to the impacts of the conflict on their lives.

45. To support the empowerment of young Palestine refugee women and their participation in leadership and decision-making, UNRWA provided 495 women graduates from different fields with training on leadership and management skills, project cycle management and business orientation and facilitated work placements for 274 women graduates in the Gaza Strip. UNRWA also supported training on advocacy and lobbying skills on gender equality and women's human rights, targeting 350 women and a number of community-based organizations. Subsequently, 115 women and girls organized advocacy campaigns on combating gender-based violence in the Gaza Strip. UNESCO provided 40 young Gazan women with an orientation session on Security Council resolution 2250 (2015) on youth and peace and security to help to integrate the theme into the plans and programmes of youth-led organizations.

46. In the West Bank, UNRWA provided 673 Palestine refugee women with training and activities within the framework of the United Nations women and peace and security agenda. Training for female employees of women's programme centres in camps were aimed at increasing the number of women engaged in the centres' activities and developing mechanisms to ensure the inclusion of women's voices in decision-making forums. UNRWA and local partner organizations conducted a leadership training programme for 63 young women, focused on social innovation, public speaking and volunteerism. Supported by UNDP, 54 young women attended a winter leadership camp on civic leadership, which has led to the design and implementation of 12 community initiatives.

47. WFP set up guidelines to ensure that 50 per cent of its local food committee participants were women, and UN-Habitat reported that more than one third of the representatives on community representative committees were women, giving them an important role in shaping the building of their communities in the coming years.

F. Institutional development

48. At its seventieth session, held in July 2018, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women considered the initial report of the State of Palestine on its implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (see CEDAW/C/PSE/1). This was the first report presented by the State of Palestine before one of the treaty bodies. UN-Women provided support to the Non-Governmental Women's Coalition for the Implementation of the Convention, led by the General Union of Palestinian Women, in preparing the first-ever shadow report on the initial report of the State of Palestine. In preparation for the constructive dialogue, UN-Women organized a workshop with four ministries and five civil society organizations, in collaboration with the organization Musawah,<sup>30</sup> to further strengthen their capacity to implement the Convention, in particular article 16. OHCHR produced a radio spot that was broadcast three times a day for five days prior to the meeting, in order to raise awareness and thereby enable civil society and interested individuals to watch the constructive dialogue, which was held in Geneva, through a live broadcast.

49. In its concluding observations on the initial report of the State of Palestine (CEDAW/C/PSE/CO/1), the Committee recommended that the State of Palestine fully incorporate the provisions of the Convention into its national law and ensure its implementation across the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Committee also recommended, inter alia, that the Palestinian Authority take concrete steps to accede to the Optional Protocol to the Convention, publish the Convention in the Official Gazette and train members of the judiciary, including judges of sharia courts, legal professionals and law enforcement officers, on the Convention, on the Committee's jurisprudence under the Optional Protocol and on its general recommendations.

50. The Ministry of Women's Affairs, with technical support from UN-Women, finalized a plan of action to advance the implementation of the Cross-Sectoral National Gender Strategy 2017–2022. UN-Women supported the Ministry in aligning and localizing Sustainable Development Goal indicators with the Strategy and the Palestinian National Policy Agenda (2017–2022). UN-Women also helped to enhance the capacity of the national gender-responsive budget technical team, through a workshop for senior staff of the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Women's Affairs, providing tools and approaches to promote accountability with regard to women's rights and public transparency.

51. UNICEF continued its efforts to increase the capacity of the Ministry of Social Development, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics and other institutions to undertake quality research and prepare analyses on child rights, gender equality, evidence-based social policies and social protection reforms. UN-Women initiated a partnership with the Bureau for the regular generation of data and information on gender equality for advocacy and policy development, including support for the publication of a situational analysis of trends and statistics on women and men in the State of Palestine across different sectors.<sup>31</sup>

52. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and UN-Women began the implementation of a new joint action plan for 2018–2020 for gender-responsive humanitarian action in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Under the framework of the plan, gender focal points and cluster coordinators were trained on the new Gender with Age Marker of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee.<sup>32</sup>

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

53. The continued lack of a solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict continues to negatively affect the daily lives of Palestinian women and men. This is compounded by the continued impact of the military occupation, including more than 10 years of closures on Gaza, political divisions and repeated cycles of violence. Recent escalating political tensions and violence have resulted in increased stress on women and girls, as societal protection mechanisms have suffered damage and coping mechanisms are being exhausted. Women's rights and priorities within the peace and security framework remain unaddressed. During the reporting period, the United Nations has continued to provide tailored and holistic assistance to Palestinian women and girls across a broad range of areas, including in bridging the development-humanitarian divide and in leveraging the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

54. All stakeholders should, however, increase their efforts, in a holistic manner, to improve the economic empowerment of women and their access to economic and productive resources. The Palestinian Authority should address existing gaps in labour laws and regulations with respect to women's right to work and their rights at work and expand decent work opportunities for women.

55. Stakeholders should also expand initiatives to address and transform discriminatory social norms and gender stereotypes, including through changes to school curricula, education and public media campaigns and alliances with male gender equality advocates.

56. Governmental and non-governmental actors must expand efforts throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory to improve women's access to justice and support services. Steps to enhance the capacity of institutions and personnel to prevent and respond to all forms of violence against women and girls, including by addressing the particular needs of adolescent girls and women with disabilities, are especially necessary in that regard.

57. Stronger efforts by the Palestinian Authority and other duty-bearers are also needed to bridge the gap between policy commitments on gender equality, the empowerment of women and girls and the enjoyment of their human rights and the translation of those commitments into law and practice. The Palestinian Authority should, in particular, make use of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women as a road map for action. Key frameworks, such as the Cross-Sectoral National Gender Strategy, must be adequately resourced and accompanied by structural and institutional changes at the social, political and economic levels to ensure their full implementation. The national action plan on Security Council resolution 1325 \(2000\) should be fully implemented, including through the allocation of adequate human, technical and financial resources and enhanced cooperation with civil society organizations, as well as with the international community and relevant United Nations agencies.

58. Efforts by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics and other actors to collect and use quantitative and qualitative data and analyses on the situation of Palestinian women should continue and should inform all policymaking, planning and programming initiatives in the State of Palestine, including by guiding the peace process and reconciliation and humanitarian efforts.

59. Efforts by UNRWA to maintain services have been made more difficult in view of its funding crisis. Enhanced efforts by donors to ensure continued and sustained support are needed to improve access to maternal and child health care, safe reproductive health-care services and services for survivors of gender-based violence.

60. Gender equality and the empowerment of women are essential to the realization of peace in the Middle East. The United Nations will continue to work towards the realization of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East on the basis of relevant Security Council resolutions, an end to the occupation that began in 1967 and the establishment of a sovereign, democratic, viable and contiguous Palestinian State, existing side by side in peace with a secure Israel. It is only by realizing the vision of two States living side by side in peace, security and mutual recognition, with Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and Palestine, and all final status issues resolved permanently through negotiations, that the legitimate aspirations of both peoples will be achieved.

General Assembly
Sixty-first session
Agenda item 63 (a)Security Council
Sixty-first year*Promotion and protection of the rights of children: promotion and protection of the rights of children*Children and armed conflict*Report of the Secretary-General*I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), by which the Council requested me to submit a report on the implementation of that resolution and resolutions 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003) and 1539 (2004), providing information on compliance in ending the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law and other violations being committed against children affected by armed conflict.<sup>1</sup> In accordance with the Council's request, the report also includes information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism; information on progress made in the development and implementation of action plans (called for in paragraph 5 (a) of resolution 1539 (2004)); information on the assessment of the role and activities of child protection advisers; and findings and recommendations of an independent review on the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism.

2. Pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005), the report covers compliance in ending the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations, such as the killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, denial of humanitarian access to children and attacks against schools and hospitals.

II. Current issues of concern

3. Although progress has been made with respect to the protection of children in a number of situations of armed conflict covered in my previous report (A/59/695-S/2005/72), new situations have arisen that are of great concern. The recent escalation of violence in the Middle East, in Lebanon, Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, has resulted in thousands of child victims. Concerted efforts by all parties must be undertaken to mitigate and prevent further violations through dialogue and active participation of all stakeholders interested in the protection of children.

4. New evidence suggests that the recruitment and use of child soldiers and other grave violations are beginning to “migrate” within regions. The movement of rebel groups across borders to prey upon vulnerable children needs further attention and adequately developed monitoring expertise to effectively address the problem. Of particular concern are the Mano River and Great Lakes regions of Africa. Another preoccupying phenomenon is the use of children by mercenaries and mercenary groups. Though adequate data has yet to be gathered systematically, reports from the field indicate that this is a growing concern.

5. Insecurity and a lack of access to affected areas by the United Nations often preclude access to information, especially when non-State actors operate in isolated areas. For example, insurgents and rebel groups in Iraq and Afghanistan operate in a clandestine manner and often in inaccessible areas, posing a challenge in obtaining evidence on recruitment practices and other grave violations against children.

III. Other challenges

6. In other situations, such as Northern Ireland, there are still concerns about the existence of youth wings of paramilitary organizations, such as the Ulster Volunteer Force and the Ulster Defence Association, which continue to engage persons under 18 years of age.

7. In the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation, there has been no specific information on the recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups. However, the United Nations has received information from non-governmental sources that children have been subject to abductions and hostage taking by illegal armed groups.

8. The widespread availability of illicit small arms and light weapons in conflict areas continues to be a major factor in enabling the recruitment of child soldiers. These weapons are simple to operate and carry, therefore easily placed in the hands of children who can be quickly trained to use them.

9. Recent experience with regard to demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration points to the need to recognize the special concerns of girl combatants and girls associated with armed groups. This should be taken into consideration when developing and implementing policies, programmes and action plans.

IV. Information on compliance and progress in ending the recruitment and use of children and other violations being committed against children

10. The present report provides information on developments covering the period from November 2005 to September 2006. The preparation of the present report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict at Headquarters, country-level monitoring and reporting task force teams, peacekeeping missions and country teams, as well as with Member States, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations. United Nations country-level monitoring and reporting task force teams, peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams were the primary sources of the information contained in the report. Following the adoption of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict initiated the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism, and facilitated this process in close collaboration with agencies, countries concerned and with the cooperation of United Nations peacekeeping missions and country teams. This resulted in the set-up of country-level monitoring and reporting task force teams, and the establishment of dialogue with a number of parties within the framework of the resolution towards the preparation and implementation of time-bound action plans to prevent and end the violations for which they are cited.

11. Progress made by the parties listed in annexes I and II to the present report, and named in the body of my 2005 report, has been assessed with respect to whether the parties have engaged in dialogue with United Nations country-level task force teams or other United Nations field representatives as a follow-up to Security Council resolution 1539 (2004) and whether through this dialogue, or in the context of other processes, such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes or the signing of peace agreements, they have developed action plans to end the use of child soldiers. Progress made by the parties is also assessed with respect to whether they have ceased recruiting and using child soldiers, and whether they have refrained from committing other grave violations against children.

12. The present report does not seek to make any legal determination as to whether situations included herein are or are not armed conflicts within the context of the Geneva Conventions and the additional protocols thereto, nor does it prejudge the legal status of the non-State parties that might be involved in these situations. In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, focusing on ensuring broad and effective protection for children exposed to situations of concern, rather than seeking to define “armed conflict” from a legal perspective.

A. Information on compliance and progress in situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Developments in Afghanistan

13. There has been a significant increase in violence and attacks by insurgents, including Taliban militias and other armed groups, Afghan armed forces operations and international military forces present in the country throughout 2005. There have been isolated reports, including statements by United States military officials that Taliban forces have recruited and used children in combat. However, in the reporting period, the United Nations country teams could not obtain specific and reliable information on which illegal armed groups may have continued to use children owing to a lack of access to affected areas. No commitments have yet been made by any of these illegal armed groups to end this practice. There have also been no reported cases of recruitment of children into the Afghan national army.

14. A growing concern is the marked increase of attacks against schools, attributed mainly to insurgents, including Taliban militias and other armed groups, which has spread from the south and south-eastern regions to all the provinces. Since late 2005, incidents have included the burning or bombing of schools, the assassination of principals, teachers and officials and threats to students. These attacks have led to the closure of all schools in six districts and the closure of a substantive number of schools in 10 other districts of the southern region. From January to July 2006, over 100 violent incidents against schools, teachers or pupils were recorded, compared with 60 during the whole of 2005; and 105,000 children in the southern region were reported to be denied access to education because of insecurity. It is also reported that ideological opposition to the education of girls appears to motivate some of these attacks.

15. In the southern region, including Panjwai district and the Hilmand province, civilians are increasingly falling victim to an upsurge in fighting between Taliban insurgents and Government and United States-led Combined Forces Command-Afghanistan. A particularly egregious incident on 11 April 2006 resulted in the death of six children and the wounding of 14 other people when a rocket fired by Taliban elements exploded in the Salabagh School in Asadabad, Kunar. On 22 May 2006, the aerial bombardment by the Combined Forces Command-Afghanistan of a residential area of Taloqan village in Panjwai district, where alleged Taliban were presumed to be in hiding resulted in the deaths of approximately 35 civilians, including at least 9 confirmed children. Children have also been injured in incidents involving suicide bombers targeting foreign military forces.

16. In parallel to the Afghanistan New Beginnings Programme, a United Nations-backed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration initiative, a child-specific demobilization and reintegration programme, is led by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). As of July 2006, a total of 7,444 children associated with armed groups and affected by armed conflict had benefited from various reintegration support activities in 34 provinces of the country since the start of the programme in February 2004. Despite this progress, there are still some children who remain associated with local commanders in rural areas of the north, north-east and central regions.

Developments in Burundi

17. Progress has been made in the negotiations between the Government of Burundi and the armed rebel group, Forces nationales pour la libération (FNL/Agathon Rwasa). On 7 September 2006, a comprehensive ceasefire agreement was signed by the two parties in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania.

18. FNL continues to use children as combatants and for various logistical duties. Currently, hundreds of children are estimated to be active in the ranks of FNL. Ongoing recruitment of children by FNL continues to be a grave concern. From January to July 2006, 75 cases of recruitment of children into the two remaining factions of FNL, FNL/Agathon Rwasa and its splinter group, FNL/Jean Bosco Singayigaya, were reported in Bujumbura, Bujumbura Rural, Bururi, Bubanza, Makamba, Rutana and Gitega Provinces. In the central Burundian town of Gitega, alleged recruitment by FNL was reported in Mutaho and Bugendana Communes. This is of particular concern as incidents of recruitment seem not only to have increased in number in the western part of Burundi, but are spreading to the centre of the country. Owing to the sensitive nature of the information, and perceived danger to the lives of investigators and informers, it has been difficult to verify most reports of child recruitment. In addition, there are also reports of former FNL child soldier presence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for which further investigations are in progress.

19. Since November 2005, 55 incidents of killing and 93 incidents of maiming of children by FNL or State authorities were reported to the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB). Some of them were killed during fighting between the Parti nationale pour la libération du peuple hutu (Palipehutu)-FNL and the national military, Force de la défense nationale (FDN). Other children were accused of participating in the rebellion and were arrested and tortured during their detention. In one case, four children were shot dead and two were injured during crossfire between FDN and FNL. In another case, in Muramvya, Bujumbura Rural, a 17-year-old student was found dead by the riverside, badly beaten, and his hands manacled. Two policemen were detained on charges of murder and were awaiting trial at the time of reporting. Violence between FDN and FNL escalated in June and July 2006, when at least eight children were killed by grenade explosions during fighting.

20. From November 2005 to July 2006, a total of 381 cases of detained children were reported to ONUB. Of those cases, 174 were related to the illegal detention of children by FDN, the Police nationale burundaise, Police de sécurité intérieure or the Service national de renseignement, including one nine-year-old child, being detained under suspicion of association with FNL. Some of the children from this group are used by the police and military as informers on FNL activities. Further, in mid-April 2006, the Government reopened Randa, a former demobilization centre in Bubanza Province, to house former FNL combatants who had either been captured or had surrendered. As of July 2006, there were a total of 454 detainees in Randa, of whom 25 were children between the ages of 15 and 17, including one girl. Many of these children remain traumatized from their experiences as FNL combatants. They have yet to be separated from former FNL adult combatants and officially recognized as former child soldiers, a prerequisite set by the Government, prior to receiving demobilization benefits and assistance. The status of these children will probably remain uncertain in the absence of a political agreement between the Government and FNL.

21. From November 2003 to July 2006, the demobilization, reintegration and prevention of recruitment of child soldiers programme supported by UNICEF and the Multi-country Demobilization and Reintegration Programme led by the World Bank, demobilized and reintegrated 3,013 former child soldiers (Partis et mouvements politiques armés, 639; Forces armées burundaises, 885; Gardiens de la paix, 1,383; and Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie/Forces pour la défense de la démocratie, 106) to their families and communities. By June 2006, around 560 former child soldiers were back in school, and 1,800 were undertaking vocational training. A technical committee was formed in January 2006 to ensure the smooth handover of the child soldier project to the Government, integrating it with the Programme national de démobilisation, réinsertion et réintégration, implemented by the Executive Secretariat of the National Commission for Demobilization, Reinsertion and Reintegration. The technical committee is currently developing the procedures and mechanisms to demobilize former child soldiers from FNL. In addition, the International Labour Organization (ILO), through its International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour, has reintegrated 898 former child soldiers and has prevented the recruitment of 452 children at risk.

22. A child protection network was set up by UNICEF and its partners in December 2005. In August 2006, ONUB and UNICEF established a task force on monitoring and reporting on child's rights violations within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

Developments in Côte d'Ivoire

23. Children are associated with armed groups both in the Government-held territories and in areas under the control of the Forces nouvelles. There is currently no tangible evidence of children in the ranks of Government armed forces, Forces armées nationales de Côte d'Ivoire (FANCI). Children are however associated with armed militia groups close to the ruling party, Front populaire ivoirien (FPI). These militias, which include the Front de libération du Grand Ouest (FLGO), the Mouvement ivoirien de libération ouest de Côte d'Ivoire (MILOCI), the Alliance patriotique de l'ethnie Wé (APWé) and the Union patriotique de résistance du Grand Ouest (UPRGO), are active in Government-controlled areas, notably in the West. The Forces armées des Forces nouvelles (FAFN) and other associated militia groups recognize that children are associated with their fighting forces. FAFN committed to an action plan in November 2005, and has made significant efforts in the implementation of the action plan. The FAFN efforts are acknowledged and its removal from the annex List will be considered in the next report, subject to a full implementation of the action plan.

24. Children are also often used in violent mass demonstrations by the Young Patriots, a pro-FPI party, in territories under the control of the Government, where they run the risk of being maimed or injured. For example, in January 2006, a mass demonstration in Guiglo, during which United Nations peacekeepers were also attacked, five Ivoirians, including two children aged 14 and 16, were killed.

25. Although there are no official figures reflecting the true scale of grave sexual violence occurring, reliable reports establish that sexual violence is a prevalent security problem encountered by women and children, particularly in areas under FAFN control and in the Zone of Confidence. Further, children in detention in areas controlled by FAFN, where the administration of justice has collapsed, also remain exposed to grave abuses. FAFN issued a command order on 30 April 2006, triggered by the report of an alleged rape of a 14-year-old girl by FAFN elements in Bouaké, instructing an end to the detention of children pending restoration of the administration of justice.

26. A major cause for concern remains the seizure and forced occupation of schools by pro-Government militia. From 12 to 17 June 2006, over 100 members of the pro-Government militia group, the Groupement patriotique pour la paix (GPP), occupied a children's centre, the Centre d'écôte pilot d'adjame in Abidjan. No children were found on the premises at the time of the seizure, although the incident had prevented children's access to the centre during this period.

27. During the reporting period, 327 children associated with fighting forces in areas under the control of the Forces nouvelles were demobilized, of whom 251 were officially handed over by FAFN. Currently, UNICEF facilitates the rehabilitation and reintegration of 1,194 former child soldiers and another 600 selfdemobilized children in Danané, who received military training from pro-FAFN Liberian fighters. Further, FLGO, MILOCI, APWé and UPRGO in West Guiglo released 400 children who are currently benefiting from rehabilitation programmes sponsored by UNICEF. However, reflecting a disturbing trend in the region, child protection partners in Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire have reported new and re-recruitments across the border between Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire by armed groups active in Côte d'Ivoire.

28. On 20 September 2006, a task force on monitoring and reporting on child's rights violations within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) was inaugurated in Côte d'Ivoire.

Developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

29. Reports on the presence of children among Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) troops continue, notably in North Kivu. In April 2006, the presence of children among the 84th and the 85th non-integrated Brigades (former Mai-Mai) was registered (respectively 20 children with Colonel Akilimali and about 150 children with Colonel Sami). Reports of re-recruitment by FARDC also continue.

30. From January to June 2006, 22 children were reportedly killed or maimed by FARDC. For example, in May 2006, three children died as a result of a gunshot fired at close range by military forces of the 23rd Battalion of FARDC as they stormed into huts during clashes between FARDC and the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) in Nyamilima, Rutshuru Territory, North Kivu. Child protection actors in North and South Kivu Provinces continue to register a number of abductions and recruitments of children by FDLR. In the same period, the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) monitored a total of 61 children, allegedly victims of rape by members of FARDC. For example, on 27 March 2006, when moving to Nindja in South Kivu with his troops, FARDC Captain Indi-Mulenga allegedly took five girls with him.

31. International warrants for the arrest of Laurent Nkunda and Jules Mutebutsi were issued by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo on 21 December 2004, in connection with the Bukavu crisis of May/June 2004 that resulted in dozens of killings, rapes of adults and children, as well as widespread looting. However, until now, no steps have been taken to execute the warrants. In North Kivu, elements of the non-integrated 81st and 83rd brigades of FARDC considered loyal to rebel leader Laurent Nkunda continue to harass, threaten and re-recruit children formerly associated with the military and now reunified with their families in parts of Masisi and Rutshuru territories. It is estimated that since July 2005, 70 children were recruited into Nkunda's ranks in the Masisi and Rutshuru territories. In February 2006, there were allegations of recruitment of about 20 children by Nkunda's forces in the Masisi area. Abductions and attempted abductions of 16 children in June and early July 2006 in North Kivu were reported. Thirteen of the children were abducted on 22 June 2006 near Kitchanga, Masisi territory, by dissident FARDC elements of the 83rd Battalion. The children, on their way to being reunified with their families, were recognized for having been formerly associated with that unit when their vehicle was stopped by military. Some of them escaped, but others were detained and released only after MONUC intervention. Children reported that they had been submitted to severe beatings while in captivity.

32. In the course of 2005, the Forces armées populaires congolaises (FAPC) was completely disbanded through the Ituri disarmament and community reinsertion process and is consequently not openly active in Ituri. Hundreds of children associated with FAPC, including a relatively high number of girls, joined the Ituri process. A number of FAPC elements reportedly moved to Uganda in the course of the first half of 2005 in order to avoid the disarmament and community reinsertion process. There are no estimates of how many children remained in these groups.

33. Allegations of re-recruitment and use of children by the Front nationaliste et intégrationniste (FNI) continued in 2005. On 20 November, MONUC received allegations that young people, including children, were being recruited by FNI commander Peter Karim Udaga, to reinforce his militia who were in conflict with FARDC in Mahagi. On 13 July 2006, following negotiations led by the Government with the facilitation of MONUC, Mr. Udaga agreed to join the disarmament and community reinsertion programme in Ituri. As of 25 July 2006, 87 children had been demobilized from the Udaga troops.

34. The Mai-Mai groups are mostly present in North and South Kivu, Maniema and Katanga provinces. Most of them have now joined FARDC. In the course of 2005, a large presence of children in former Mai-Mai groups continued to be observed in North Kivu. In South Kivu the presence of children among former Mai-Mai groups also continued. At least 78 children (all boys) were demobilized from armed groups between March and May 2006; of these, 49 children associated with Major Abdou Panda, a renegade Mai-Mai commander operating in the Ruzizi plain, and 29 children associated with the 111th brigade of Colonel Nyakabaka. Further, large parts of Katanga, especially the northern and central areas, are still under the control of various Mai-Mai groups who remained outside the official disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. On 12 May 2006, however, an important breakthrough was made when Kyungu Mutanga, a Mai-Mai leader known as Gédéon, operating in Katanga Province, surrendered in Mitwaba. He was accompanied by more than 150 combatants, 76 of whom were children. It is estimated that between 2,000 and 4,000 of his followers still remain at large, a significant number of them thought to be children.

35. Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, the former leader of the political and military movement, the Union des patriotes congolais (UPC), was arrested by the Congolese authorities in March 2005 in connection with the assassination of nine United Nations peacekeepers. On 10 February 2006, the International Criminal Court issued a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Lubanga for the war crime of "conscripting and enlisting children under the age of 15 years and using them to participate actively in hostilities". On 17 March 2006, Mr. Lubanga was transferred to the International Criminal Court in The Hague. As a result of the disarmament and community reinsertion process in Ituri, the UPC-Kisembo (UPC-K) wing ceased to exist in the course of 2005. Further, in March 2006, Jean Pierre Biyoyo of the armed group known as Mudundu 40, was condemned to five years' imprisonment for the arbitrary arrest and illegal detention of children and child recruitment committed in South Kivu in April 2004. However, he escaped from prison during the Bukavu Central Prison outbreak in early June 2006 and remains at large.

36. Reports have shown that Congolese refugee children in Rwanda have time and again been subjected to “voluntary” and forced recruitment by elements of the former Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Goma (RCD/G), and latterly, rebel groups loyal to rebel leader Laurent Nkunda, and also transferred from Rwanda to the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo to engage in active combat.

37. The current operational framework for children’s disarmament, demobilization and reintegration was launched by the Commission nationale de désarmement, démobilisation et réinsertion in cooperation with UNICEF, ILO and non-governmental organization partners in July 2004. As at 30 May 2006, 18,524 children had been released from the armed forces and groups through the official process; of that number, 16 per cent were girls. Thousands more, the majority of whom are girls, have escaped from fighting forces on their own and are returning to civilian life.

Developments in Haiti

38. A range of armed groups control territory in Haiti, in particular in the capital, Port-au-Prince, and other cities such as Gonaïves, and are involved in political as well as criminal activity. Such groups fall under a number of categories such as:

(a) Popular Organizations, composed primarily of youth and children under 18 years, with strong links to political leaders and parties and used by them to political ends;

(b) Baz Armes, typically youth groups formed around sports or cultural activities and used for various purposes by political or criminal elements;

(c) Armed criminal gangs involved in organized crime, often also with links to political elements;

(d) Front de résistance (paramilitaries) composed of former military known as “armé cannibal” and civilians who toppled the Government of Jean Bertrand Aristide in 2004 and contested the February 2006 elections as the Front de reconstruction nationale;

(e) Random organized criminal and political opposition groups comprised of excommunicated members of the Haitian police or criminal gangs. For example, on 7 July 2006, the United Nations documented four children killed and two maimed in Martissant, as a result of violence between the armed groups, Lame ti machet and Grand ravine.

39. Widespread and systematic rape and other sexual violence against girls are of particular concern. From interviews and investigations by the United Nations and non-governmental organizations, it is estimated that up to 50 per cent of girls living in conflict zones such as Cité Soleil have been victims of rape or sexual violence, and in areas such as Carrefour, Martissant and Les Cayes the phenomenon of collective or “gang” rape is widespread. Also of grave concern are reported violations against children by the National Haitian Police, including the illegal detention of children and sexual abuse of female children while in custody, as well as the reports of execution and mutilation of street children during police operations early in 2006.

40. The establishment in September 2006 of the National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration represents a positive development, and it will be important to ensure that adequate provision is made for children in this framework.

Developments in Iraq

41. The current situation in Iraq has not allowed for the systematic collection of child protection information regarding the effects of violence and insurgency on children. In the current security context, it is also very difficult to determine the number of children who have been victims of and/or involved in the violence.

42. Many children have been killed and/or maimed as a result of large-scale suicide attacks or roadside bombs by various terrorist and criminal groups, or in military and security operations by the Iraqi police and Special Forces acting alone or in association with the Multinational Force in Iraq. On 15 March 2006, a raid by the Multinational Force in the outskirts of Al-Isshaqi District in Balad caused the death of a family of 11, including 5 children between 7 months and 5 years of age. In two separate incidents, on 19 March and 2 April 2006, 4 children were reported killed in fighting between the Multinational Force and the insurgents. In mid-March 2006, five Multinational Force soldiers were charged with the rape and murder of a 14-year-old girl and the murder of her family, including her 5-year-old sister, in Mahmoudiyah, south of Baghdad.

43. The recent rise in sectarian violence, exacerbated by the bombing of the Al Askari shrine in Samarra, resulted in thousands of civilian casualties, many of whom were children. On 29 April 2006, 2 children were wounded when a mortar round landed on a home in Ta' Afar; on 26 June 2006, 10 children were killed in targeted explosions on two markets in Hilla and Ba'qubah; and on 2 August 2006, a bomb buried in the middle of a football pitch exploded, killing at least 12 people, most of whom were children. According to figures provided by the Ministry of Health, which include counts from hospitals in all governorates, excluding the three northern governorates of Kurdistan, from 1 January to 31 August 2006, 139 children were killed and 395 were wounded.

44. Of particular concern are reports of attacks involving children as combatants. On 1 November 2005, a boy said to be aged between 10 and 13 years carried out a suicide bombing targeting the police commander in the city of Kirkuk. Later in the same month, two boys aged 12 and 13 years, reportedly carried out attacks against patrols of the Multinational Force in Iraq in Fallujah and Hweejah.

45. Abductions of children by Iraqi armed groups related to the sectarian violence have increased significantly, in addition to the number of children abducted for ransom. A survey conducted by several local non-governmental organizations in Baghdad indicates that approximately 20,000 people have been kidnapped throughout the country since the beginning of 2006, 50 per cent of whom are women and children. In one case, the corpse of an abducted and sexually assaulted 12-year-old boy was found by the Iraqi police wrapped in a plastic bag even though his family had paid ransom. In another case, on 17 May 2006, the entire Iraqi Tae Kwan Do team composed of 15 children, between the ages of 12 and 15 years, from Al Sadr City were kidnapped near Ramadi. Recently, increasing concerns have been expressed by international and national non-governmental organizations that Iraqi children, both girls and boys, are being abducted and trafficked for purposes of sexual exploitation. The rise of armed criminal groups has contributed to this phenomenon.

46. The ongoing violence and exposure to violence in schools and threats of abuse, kidnapping and/or injury by armed groups has contributed to non-attendance in schools. For example, on 26 March 2006, a schoolboy was killed while entering his school in Al Basrah. There have also been incidences where children have witnessed the killing of educators. In mid-2006, also in Al Basrah, the dean of the Al Basrah Abdullah Bin Om Kalthoum School was assassinated inside the school in front of his students. The targeting of teachers for ransom and violence has also seriously affected the delivery of education in schools. The national primary school drop-out rate is 3.6 per cent and the attendance rate is 76 per cent. However, this does not take into account the special arrangements between schools and parents where children are only present in school during final examinations.

47. The Government has, through the Commission of Child Care, begun to address the challenges confronting children in Iraq. The Commission has designated a committee, which has recommended that the Government sign the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. The Government of Iraq has repeatedly called upon the international community and all relevant United Nations agencies to offer their support and assistance in reinforcing their efforts in securing and protecting the welfare of children in Iraq.

Developments in Lebanon and Israel

48. The conflict involving Lebanon and Israel which began on 12 July 2006 has resulted in more than 1,109 Lebanese civilians killed and 4,405 injured, and 43 Israeli civilians killed, including 7 children, and 200 civilians injured. It is estimated that one third of the dead and wounded in Lebanon are children. For example, on the second day of hostilities, Israeli forces killed 38 civilians, among them 20 children, in four different attacks. Further, on 30 July, the Israeli air force bombed the village of Qana, in southern Lebanon, killing 28 civilians, including 16 children. On several occasions, Israeli forces attacked individual vehicles and convoys of civilians fleeing their villages after Israeli warnings that the villages would be bombed. For example, on 15 July, an Israeli air strike hit a civilian convoy fleeing the village of Marwahin, killing 21 people, including 14 children.

49. About 975,000 people, constituting approximately one quarter of the Lebanese population, were displaced during the hostilities. More than a third of these are reported to be children. As at 30 September 2006, 200,000 people had still not yet been able to return to their homes, while others had returned to their destroyed homes and villages. It is estimated that 30,000 homes were destroyed throughout the country, particularly in southern Lebanon and the suburbs of Beirut.

50. During the conflict, indiscriminate Hezbollah rocket attacks in northern Israel killed seven children. A large number of civilians in northern Israel, including a significant proportion of children, were also displaced, having sought safety further south or spent lengthy amounts of time in crowded shelters. Further, the Hezbollah rocket attacks also damaged and destroyed at least 6,000 homes as well as over 30 schools and day-care centres. Four Israeli hospitals also incurred serious damage. On 18 July 2006, a rocket hit a hospital in Safed, northern Galilee, wounding eight people.

51. The war also caused extensive damage to schools and hospitals in Lebanon. In Baalbek, the main hospital, with an estimated population of 80,000, was reportedly severely damaged during ground and air military operations in north-east Lebanon. In southern Lebanon, Ghandour hospital in Nabatiyeh was also extensively damaged. All hospitals in the affected areas are also encountering serious shortages of drugs, fuel, electricity and water supplies. Rapid assessments of the losses in the education sector indicate that between 40 and 50 schools were totally destroyed, while around 300 schools need repair. For instance, on 20 July 2006, in Bint Jbeil, the Vocational School building, used to shelter hundreds of refugee families, was subjected to Israeli bombardment.

52. Children in Lebanon were also denied access to humanitarian assistance owing to an Israeli military blockade of Lebanon's borders, seaports, bombing of roads and Beirut's airport. Bombardments of electricity plants and water bores also resulted in power cuts and water shortages, increasing food and health insecurity of children particularly. The water systems in both urban and rural areas in southern Lebanon, Beqaa Valley and the southern suburbs of Beirut were totally destroyed or partially damaged, with at least 1.7 million people, of whom up to 40 per cent were children, suffering either temporary breaks or full stoppage of water supply to their households. Further, in at least two cases, Israeli forces fired on humanitarian convoys and Red Cross ambulances.

53. Since the cessation of hostilities on 14 August until 28 September 2006, 12 civilians, including 2 children, were killed, as well as 98 civilians, including 39 children, injured by unexploded ordnances. The presence of a large number of unexploded munitions, including an estimated 1.2 million cluster bombs, 90 per cent of which were apparently fired in the last three days of the conflict, poses a special threat to children by heavily contaminating the destroyed infrastructure, school grounds and agricultural lands.

Developments in Liberia

54. The inauguration of President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf in January 2006 after winning pivotal elections in November 2005 has ushered in a new era of peace and justice for Liberia. President Johnson-Sirleaf took a landmark step when she formally requested Nigeria to surrender former President Charles Taylor to face trial. Former President Taylor has been transferred to The Hague, where he is awaiting trial for war crimes, crimes against humanity and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, including the use of child soldiers, abduction and forced labour.

55. As of July 2006, there is no known group that uses or recruits child soldiers or former child soldiers. Although there are allegations of such activities in connection with the volatile political situation in neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea, these have not been confirmed by United Nations joint monitoring missions, subregional peacekeeping operations or United Nations operations. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), however, has continued to facilitate the repatriation of foreign former child combatants. As of June 2006, a total of 55 former child combatants (11 Ivorians, 29 Guineans and 15 Sierra Leoneans) or children associated with the fighting forces have returned to their countries of origin. ICRC has also started to repatriate Liberian children associated with the fighting forces from countries neighbouring Liberia. The situation in neighbouring countries needs particular attention and is subject to ongoing monitoring by the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), in close cooperation with the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA), the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (ONUCI) and other actors. UNMIL and ONUCI carry out coordinated border patrols to deter any attempts to recruit Liberians, while UNICEF and other child protection agencies have responded by putting in place a mechanism for prevention of re-recruitment through increasing reintegration programmes along the borders.

56. Between 2004 and 2005, UNMIL disarmament and demobilization programme has been relatively successful, resulting in 10,963 children demobilized. Of these, 77 per cent were boys and 23 per cent girls. On 13 April 2006, President Johnson-Sirleaf signed executive order No. 4, which extended the mandate of the National Commission on Disarmament, Demobilization, Rehabilitation and Reintegration for another year. UNICEF, UNMIL and other key partners are continuing to conduct follow-up monitoring of former child combatants through family and community-based interaction.

Developments in Myanmar

57. There are reliable reports of continued forcible recruitment and training of children for the Government armed forces (Tatmadaw Kyi) and non-State armed groups. However, owing to access limitations, the United Nations country team has not been able to systematically verify these allegations. Despite the difficulties in obtaining information, since the beginning of 2005, at least 12 detailed and credible allegations of forced recruitment of children aged between 12 and 17 into the national army were received by a United Nations partner. Myanmar's written law states that the Government army is all voluntary and the minimum age is 18. In early October 2004, the Government-established Committee for the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Under-age Children developed a plan of action, which included provisions for the discharge of children under 18 years from military service and their reintegration into their families and communities. The Committee was reinstated on 3 February 2006, and has been stepping up efforts to promote awareness among the military establishments, training institutions and local communities. On various occasions over the past few months, UNICEF held discussions with the Government on the need to further develop and operationalize this national plan of action to prevent the recruitment of child soldiers, including a high-level meeting between the UNICEF Deputy Executive Director and the Secretary One of the State Peace and Development Council, who is also the Chairman of the Committee on the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Under-age Children. While concrete cooperation on this issue is yet to be fully forthcoming, the authorities propose to deepen their collaboration with UNICEF to review progress on the issue. The United Nations country team is aware of some cases of children being released from army service but is unable to verify the effectiveness of the Committee's plan of action or whether all children are being screened out of the Government armed forces.

58. Reports of abductions of children for forced labour or to serve in the armed forces by Government forces and non-State armed groups continue. However, the United Nations country team is hampered from accessing many areas controlled by both State and non-State actors. The country team has also been hindered from providing detailed information by a Government decision to prosecute parties who make false allegations of forced labour against the Government.

59. Access to communities in conflict zones and the special zones for humanitarian actors is a fundamental problem in Myanmar. Although assistance actors can work in many areas of the country, in some critical areas, where children are believed to be in very vulnerable situations, humanitarian assistance and protection is denied owing to Government restrictions on movement, allegedly for “security reasons”. These areas include part of Kayin State and Bago Division, as well as parts of Shan and Kayah States, where civilians, including children, are being displaced owing to military activity. Access for humanitarian actors to some other non-conflict areas and ceasefire areas is also denied by the Government.

60. There are reports that the Karen National Union (KNU) and Karenni National Progressive Party (KNPP) continue to use and recruit children into the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) and the Karenni Army (KA), respectively. There are also allegations of recruitment from the Thai refugee camps. There is a long-standing practice that children go from the refugee camps across the border to the KNLA and KA for military training. Some children living in the refugee camps also provide logistical support to nearby military bases. In June 2006, leaders of KNU and KNPP assured United Nations representatives in Thailand that both armies had policies in place prohibiting the recruitment of children under 18 years although they conceded that those policies were not always followed by the local commanders. On 31 July 2006, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict received a letter from KNU stating that it would no longer use or recruit children; would monitor its units and take action to ensure that no children were within its ranks; and would cooperate and allow unhindered United Nations access to monitor and verify compliance to non-recruitment. Further, given the KNPP desire to be removed from the list, it has requested United Nations technical support on monitoring and enforcing the KNPP policy on non-recruitment. There are also reports of recruitment of child soldiers by the United Wa State Army.

61. Former child soldiers from the Government forces seeking protection in Thailand as army deserters face the threat of forcible return to Myanmar under a current practice by Thai authorities. The Thailand Working Group of the Security Council on Children and Armed Conflict has sought clarifications on this practice from Thai Government officials who stated they were not aware of the situation. However, the Thai Government has agreed to cooperate and address the problem of child soldiers through a common strategy with the Thailand Working Group.

62. There are also challenges in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, especially with respect to former child soldiers from the non-State armed groups who seek refuge in Thailand. No formal demobilization is possible and former child soldiers must be integrated into Thai refugee camps. Sending children back to their villages or families would put them and their families at risk of persecution.

Developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel

63. The plight of Palestinian children in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, has become more precarious since the previous reporting period, as the Israeli-Palestinian conflict intensified, with hostilities focusing on the Gaza Strip in mid-2006. From 1 November 2005 to 30 September 2006, an estimated 93 children, 83 in Gaza and 10 in the West Bank, were killed by Israeli forces. Between 28 June and 30 September 2006, since the start of the Israeli “Operation Summer Rains”, United Nations agencies working in the Occupied Palestinian Territory estimate that 289 Palestinians were killed, of whom 65 per cent were children, and over 1,261 injured in the Gaza Strip, of whom 189 were children, with 42 children killed in July alone. United Nations agencies have documented reports of children being killed and injured by Israel Defense Forces gunfire. For example, on 19 February 2006, a boy was injured by a bullet fired from the Balata Basic Girls’ School, Nablus, which the Israel Defense Forces had occupied that morning. On 3 March 2006, during a large-scale Israel Defense Forces incursion into Camp No. 1 in Nablus, a boy was shot in the face and killed by Israeli sniper fire. Further, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reports that from 28 June to 22 August 2006, at least 4,809 Israeli artillery shells were fired into the Gaza Strip. Palestinian armed groups also launched a total of 367 rockets into Israel during the same period.

64. Two Israeli children were reported killed as a result of separate Palestinian attacks on civilian areas in March 2006. Additionally, communities living close to the Gaza Strip border, particularly the city of Sderot, endure regular, often daily, home-made rocket attacks by Palestinian militants. For example, in September 2006 alone, 45 Qassam rockets were launched into Sderot. These rockets damaged homes and schools, landed in public places frequented by children, such as playgrounds, and caused high levels of prolonged anxiety among children residing there.

65. As at 30 September 2006, 389 Palestinian children, including two 12-year-old boys, had been detained by the Israeli army in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, often following transport of the children out of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and into Israel. A field survey of former child detainees, provided by a United Nations agency, estimated that 60 per cent of the children interviewed were reported to have been subjected to physical coercion or inducement to collaborate with Israeli authorities.

66. Recent incursions and shelling as well as direct military attacks have damaged schools and health facilities. Restricted access to health-care providers has resulted in the serious deterioration of health and health services and, consequently, the health status of Palestinian children in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. For example, on 2 July 2006, in the West Bank, the Israel Defense Forces forcibly entered four Palestinian hospitals in search and detain operations, and, during one of the operations, in Nablus City, the hospital premises were used as cover by the Israel Defense Forces to fire live ammunition; while on 17 July 2006, Israel Defense Forces bulldozers demolished the boundary walls of the clinic operated by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) in Beit Hanun, Gaza. Direct air attacks on schools caused extensive damage and injury; shrapnel landed inside schools and school compounds during operations in the vicinity of schools; and Israel Defense Forces soldiers forcibly entered schools, causing destruction and detaining students and teachers in schools. For example, on 5 December 2005, during clashes between the Israel Defense Forces and Aida camp youths in the West Bank, the Israel Defense Forces used live rounds, tear gas and plastic-coated bullets in the vicinity of the UNRWA Basic Girls School, which resulted in tear gas inhalation by over 100 pupils in the first to third grades; while from 19 to 21 February 2006, the Israel Defense Forces and the Israeli Border Police entered Balata refugee camp’s Basic Girls School and used it for three days as a detention centre and firing position, causing extensive damage. In the Gaza Strip, from 19 to 21 July 2006, the military operations of the Israel Defense Forces in Maghazi refugee camp left dozens of bullet holes in the Maghazi Elementary and Preparatory School buildings. Further, the prohibition on the entry of construction materials into Gaza has prevented repairs to schools damaged by the Israel Defense Forces and the Israeli Air Force, restricting access of Palestinian children to education.

67. The Barrier and its associated regime, such as the Seam Zone permit system, and checkpoints, which restrict the freedom of movement of Palestinians, has deepened concerns about Palestinian access to medical services and schools within the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and between East Jerusalem and the rest of the West Bank. For example, the East Jerusalem's Augusta Victoria Hospital, which serves West Bank Palestinians, had the number of beds reduced owing to a decrease in patient numbers by 30 per cent, resulting from the Barrier and associated restrictions on the movement of people. Similarly, most students and teachers who are living behind the Barrier face long delays, resulting in regular missed classes and longer commutes to schools.

68. There is an increased exposure to unexploded ordnance owing to the recent military operations by the Israel Defense Forces. The number of Palestinians killed and injured, including children, more than doubled between January and April 2006, from 15 to 36 people. The most affected districts are Ramallah, Nablus and Jenin in the West Bank and northern Gaza.

Developments in Somalia

69. The Union of the Islamic Courts (ICU) seized control of Mogadishu on 4 June 2006, after four months of conflict with a coalition of warlords calling themselves the Alliance for the Restoration of Peace and Counter Terrorism (ARPCT). At peace talks held in Khartoum on 22 June 2006, ICU and the Transitional Federal Government agreed on a number of principles, including a cessation of media and military campaigns, and the pursuit of dialogue and talks without preconditions in a framework of mutual recognition, which were subsequently reaffirmed during second round of talks, held from 2 to 4 September 2006.

70. Numerous cases of children being recruited by force by elements of ICU and ARPCT have been reported, both in Mogadishu and the Hiran region. ARPCT was very active in recruiting street children for its militia. ICU was reported to have recruited children from madrasas with promises of spiritual rewards for martyrdom, while there has also been widespread clan-based recruitment with families receiving financial incentives. As the United Nations country team only has limited presence in the country given the high level of insecurity, access to precise and updated information is therefore not readily available. After ICU took control of Mogadishu, reports continue that suggest that children between 10 and 16 years of age are being enrolled by force for military training by ICU in Dabble, near Kismayo, in Mogadishu and the Hiran region.

71. From March to June 2006, the heavy fighting between ICU and ARPCT was marked by grave human rights violations against children. Thousands of children, with their families, have been displaced from Mogadishu, and have been victims of shelling and gunfire in the capital. In May 2006, it was reported that 19 children had been wounded and 5 killed in the conflict.

72. In May 2006, armed Somali fighters from ARPCT occupied a major Mogadishu hospital run by ICRC and the Somali Red Crescent Society, in a clear violation of international humanitarian law. Humanitarian access in Somalia remains critical, in particular to the large vulnerable population in the southern and central region, including Mogadishu, Lower and Middle Shabelle and Hiran, which faces severe food shortages or are internally displaced. The political tension, which has escalated since June 2006 after ICU took control of these areas, continues to pose serious security and access concerns.

Developments in the Sudan

73. The various armed forces and groups that are parties to the conflict in the Sudan have a long history of using children for military purposes, and their complex links with the Government make it difficult to determine precisely the accountability for the violations of children's rights. In southern Sudan and Khartoum, responsibility for the recruitment and use of children rests with the Sudan Armed Forces and the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA, part of the Government of Southern Sudan), as well as their Joint Integrated Units, made up of both legal forces and militias known as other armed groups, such as the White Army. Additionally, the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) is also responsible for the recruitment and use of children. Children were recruited between May and July 2006, in Khartoum, Jonglei and Bahr al-Ghazal by the Sudan Armed Forces and SPLA. For example, on 16 May 2006, the Sudan Armed Forces, SPLA and the new Joint Integrated Units were all reported to be involved in recruiting children in Nasser, Upper Nile State. In the same month, child soldiers were seen in a newly incorporated Sudan Armed Forces unit near Nasser, and there were reports of approximately 50 uniformed and armed SPLA soldiers aged between 14 and 16 years in the same area. In the same period, SPLA attacked the White Army in Motot, Jonglei State, and reportedly killed 113 White Army youth. The White Army, a livestock defence force linked to the Lou clan of the pastoralist Nuer ethnic group, is made up largely of males aged between 15 and 20 years, with some much younger. These forces were sometimes used by larger groups to carry out military tasks. Further, LRA units present in southern Sudan have recruited and used both Sudanese and Ugandan children.

74. In Darfur, SAF, Janjaweed militias, the faction of the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA) led by Minni Minawi that signed the Darfur Peace Agreement, other SLA factions that refused to sign the agreement, as well as paramilitary forces that are part of the Government, such as the camel police, are responsible for the recruitment and use of children. The Chadian opposition forces are also responsible for the recruitment and use of children. It is estimated that thousands of children are still associated with armed forces and groups in Darfur and were actively involved in the conflict between May and July 2006. The security situation, access limitations and the delayed implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement impede the ability to monitor the recruitment and use of children. Monitors have confirmed that the SLA (Minawi) commanders were forcibly recruiting boys in Gereida in May 2006, and that many child soldiers were also witnessed in Gereida at the end of June 2006. G19, a breakaway faction of SLA (Minawi), claimed in interviews at the beginning of June that SLA (Minawi) had abducted 108 children for use as soldiers on 10 May 2006. On 15 May 2006, interviews by United Nations staff of people displaced after Janjaweed attacks on villages near Kutum, Northern Darfur, confirmed that there were many armed child soldiers among the Janjaweed militiamen who attacked them; and in June 2006, in Western Darfur there were further reports of many boys less than 18 years of age recruited into the camel police, a group used to mediate and control disputes between pastoralists and farmers. On 24 May 2006, a 17-year-old Tama boy was abducted from Geneina, southern Sudan, by Chadian opposition forces. This is indicative of the ongoing problem of abduction of youth from the Tama ethnic group for recruitment to the Chadian opposition.

75. In southern Sudan, 38 children were killed from May to July 2006. Some of them were reportedly participating in hostilities when they were killed. For example, in the fighting between the White Army and SPLA in Ulang and Akobo, Jonglei State, from 24 April to 15 May 2006, 33 children were killed. In Darfur, over 51 children were reported killed in the same period. However, these reports do not cover all of the areas of fighting in Darfur and many reports of civilian deaths are not age-disaggregated. On 5 July 2006, a breakaway faction of SLA led by Abdul Wahid reported that SLA (Minawi) forces had killed 16 children on their way to school in Dalil, Northern Darfur. There were also killings by Government allied militia in Darfur. For example, in Gereida, 150 children were missing after attacks on villages around Gereida in March 2006 by Government-allied militia. By the end of May 2006, 30 of those children had been found dead in different locations between Joughana and Gereida.

76. There have been numerous reports of abductions throughout the conflict in southern Sudan. Between May and July 2006, in Jonglei State, children were abducted; however it has been difficult to ascertain the exact numbers or responsible parties owing to access restrictions. In Darfur, there are abductions of children by Janjaweed militias, SLA (Minawi) and the Sudan Armed Forces. Girls are often abducted for short periods for sexual purposes. Many abductions are also linked to recruitment. Between May and July 2006, 18 cases of abduction were reported to the United Nations. For example, on 26 May 2006, six armed men in Sudan Armed Forces uniforms reportedly abducted a 13-year-old boy from Wadi Saleh, Western Darfur, while on 21 June 2006, Janjaweed militia abducted two boys in an attack on Abuderesa camp, Southern Darfur.

77. In Darfur, the practice of ethnically targeted sexual violence against girls and women continues, particularly in areas of displaced populations. Some 40 per cent of the victims have been under 18 years of age. Many of the attacks are carried out by uniformed men. Girls have been targeted in inter-ethnic conflicts as a deliberate form of humiliation of a group, and as a means of ethnic cleansing. For example, on 24 May 2006, a group of about 25 armed men in SLA uniforms threatened, beat and robbed six separate groups of women and girls in Hajar Jalanga, Western Darfur. One of the victims was a 15-year-old girl, who was sexually assaulted. Further, on 15 May 2006, Janjaweed militia attempted to rape women and girls displaced from villages near Kutum, Northern Darfur.

78. Humanitarian access worsened between May and July 2006 with the upsurge in violence that followed the peace agreement. On 6 June 2006, the rebel SLA (Wahid) faction reported that the Sudan Armed Forces checkpoint at Kass, Southern Darfur, had denied access to trucks carrying food into areas under their control. Further, in May 2006, three cases of hijacking of humanitarian convoys by armed men suspected to be affiliated to Government militias were reported in Western and Southern Darfur. From March to June 2006, the Government authorities imposed access restrictions on United Nations agencies in eastern Sudan. Food assistance for about 110,000 refugees and internally displaced persons, 50 per cent of whom are children, was suspended in March but resumed in June 2006. The protection activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) for the refugee population in Kassala state were also seriously hampered during that period.

B. Information on compliance and progress in situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern

Developments in Chad

79. The overall security situation remains volatile in eastern Chad, especially with the ongoing fighting between the Government forces and the armed opposition, and the presence of Sudanese rebels of a faction of the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA) and the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM). There are reports of forced recruitment by SLA of children from the Breidjing, Treguine, Djabal and Goz Amir refugee camps in eastern Chad. The children are reportedly taken into the Sudan. From 17 to 19 March 2006, SLA rebels loyal to Commander Khamis Abdullah Abaker entered the Breidjing and Treguine camps. According to UNHCR, an estimated 4,700 refugees, some of them children, were recruited, some forcibly. All of the 4,700 refugees returned to the camp in weeks subsequent to the recruitment, except for 104, who as of 31 May 2006, were reported by refugee leaders and their families not to have returned to Breidjing and Treguine. According to the leaders, the missing refugees were either with the rebels or in hiding in neighbouring villages for fear of being targeted again by recruiters. Some children were reported to have been recruited in Goz Amir and Djabal camps as well, although many refugee youth interviewed by UNHCR indicated that they had joined SLA voluntarily. In Djabal and Goz Amir camps, teachers were among the recruiters. There is compelling evidence that some Chadian authorities were aware but not able or willing to prevent the recruitment taking place in these refugee camps. UNHCR, in coordination with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, is looking into the possibility of strengthening security arrangements in and around refugee camps in Chad.

80. Although it is difficult to obtain the exact number of victims, hundreds of Chadian displaced people, including children, have been killed, raped and abducted in attacks on sites for internally displaced persons throughout eastern Chad since January 2006. Displaced women and girls are also targeted for sexual violence by members of armed groups, including the Janjaweed. It was reported to UNICEF that 33 women and girls from the Bildigue and Haraza tribes in the Koubigou internally displaced person site had been raped during the past four months.

Developments in Colombia

81. Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) continues to recruit and use children. There is no information of recent child recruitment by the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN), which is presently involved in talks with the Government. However, from November 2005 to September 2006, at least 56 children who had been demobilized through the Government demobilization programme declared that they had been part of ELN.

The United Nations country team believes that there are still children in ELN. The United Nations has received information that children also continue to be recruited by other right wing illegal armed groups outside the demobilization process begun in late 2004 with the Autodefensa Unidas de Colombia (AUC), such as the Autodefensas Campesinas del Casanare and the Frente Cacique Pipinta.

82. Although there has been a marked decrease in the number of child abductions compared with recent years, the practice of abducting children continues among illegal armed groups. According to reliable sources, 137 children were abducted in 2005 and 2006 by illegal armed groups.

83. FARC-EP, ELN and other illegal armed groups outside the demobilization process also continue to be responsible for acts of sexual violence, including rape and torture, against girls. According to a report on Colombia prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), there has also been an increase in the number of allegations of acts of sexual violence against girls, in particular by members of the security forces.

84. The presence of landmines laid by FARC-EP and ELN and unexploded ordnance on school premises, in local water sources and on rural access roads represent a grave and growing concern, claiming many child victims. Some 30 per cent of civilian victims of anti-personnel landmines are children. Although there has been a reduction in comparison with previous years, forced displacement of civilians, 40 per cent of them children, has continued as a result of armed confrontations among parties to the conflict.

85. The Government has been relatively successful in its efforts with regard to the demobilization process of AUC. Since 12 December 2005, all 11 AUC groups have been demobilized in 17 collective demobilization sessions. However, there are concerns about the demobilized groups regrouping into criminal groups, as well as the emergence of new illegal armed actors or the strengthening of existing groups in areas already evacuated by demobilized groups. Since 1999, the National Institute for Family Welfare has undertaken a comprehensive programme to provide proper care to children and adolescents demobilized from illegal armed groups, which had involved 2,916 children from all groups up to June 2006 and 440 children from November 2005 to September 2006. Significant State resources have been applied to this programme, with progressive improvement in its quality. Child beneficiaries of this programme have largely been individually demobilized or captured, with the exception of approximately 300 formally handed over by AUC since the end of 2004 during the formal AUC demobilization process. Concerns in this regard have been expressed by the Procurador General de la Nación, considering that this illegal armed group is likely to have only released a portion of the children associated with its armed group.

Developments in Nepal

86. The change in Government in April 2006 and the subsequent ceasefire announcements by the Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (CPN-M) have halted military actions throughout the country. However, the peace process remains fragile. Reciprocal ceasefires have been declared without a formal ceasefire agreement being signed, and the issue of removing children from armed groups and their reintegration has not been the subject of agreement. Despite the efforts of child protection stakeholders, the 25-point code of conduct for the ceasefire signed by both parties in May 2006 did not include any specific provisions for the protection of children.

87. There is increasingly strong evidence of the presence of children with the People's Liberation Army (PLA), the military wing of CPN-M, and that they are used as combatants, informants and in various logistical capacities. While CPN-M repeatedly denies the recruitment and use of children for military purposes, UNICEF has documented reports confirming the presence of numerous child soldiers in PLA. Some 295 cases of recruitment, 39 per cent of them girls, have been documented, out of which 137 are still active since the ceasefire. Prior to the April 2006 ceasefire, there were special recruitment campaigns, such as the "one family, one member for the party", where children were recruited, forcibly or voluntarily. Some children who have escaped from CPN-M, are afraid to return to their homes for fear of re-recruitment by CPN-M and of arrest by the State security forces. There are also reports that clearly suggest that the CPN-M cultural groups are largely composed of children used as community mobilizers, to attract other children in the CPN-M affiliated movements. In April 2006, CPN-M released a statement of commitment to respect the rights of children, stating that CPN-M would not make use of children below the age of 18 years. However, to date, no substantial progress has been noted to prevent the use of children or to release children.

88. There is also cursory evidence of children being used as informants and messengers by the State security forces, to spy on and identify CPN-M cadres. However, more information is needed to determine if this is a systematic practice.

89. The State security forces and CPN-M have consistently failed to take all necessary measures to protect civilians during attacks on military targets. For example, in January 2006, in Nepalgunj, a 15-year-old girl was killed while she was inside her home as a result of indiscriminate firing by a police patrol. Further, investigations conducted by OHCHR into 13 military operations or clashes that took place between the end of the CPN-M unilateral ceasefire and the beginning of March 2006 showed that two children had been killed and six others injured as a result of aerial bombardments by the Royal Nepal Army. Since the ceasefire, there have been no reports of children killed or injured as a result of military operations by either party.

90. Mass abductions of thousands of individuals, mostly students and teachers, to participate in political demonstrations and mass rallies took place throughout the reporting period. National human rights organizations reported over 8,000 abductions, including 3,000 children between 3 September and 2 December 2005. Most of the children were released after short periods of political indoctrination. Since May 2006, there has been a significant decrease in abductions by CPN-M, although the party and its affiliated bodies continue to take civilians into captivity, including children, as part of their investigations into alleged offences as part of their "law enforcement" activities. For example, on 20 June 2006, in Nawalparasi, 6 children between 14 and 16 years of age were among 10 persons abducted and accused of theft.

91. There is widespread practice of forced closure of private and community schools by CPN-M and its student wing in all regions of Nepal, with a notable increase from September to December 2005 in the rural areas of the eastern region. The use of school buildings as army barracks or temporary shelters by both the security forces and CPN-M, the destruction of schools during military operations and the actual killing of teachers and students impede children's access to education in Nepal. Schools were sometimes attacked when students were present, or attacks were initiated from schools by CPN-M, leading to further retaliation. For example, in January 2006, members of PLA in Syangja District who were being attacked by the Royal Nepalese Army took refuge in a school while 130 children and 5 teachers were present. During an aerial attack in March 2006 in Sindhupalchowk District, bombs were fired from helicopters by the Royal Nepalese Army in a civilian area with extensive damage caused to school buildings and classrooms. Since the ceasefire, military attacks in and around schools have stopped. However, some schools continue to be occupied by security forces and CPN-M in various parts of the country such as Khotand, Myagdi, Syangja, Tanahun, Bara, Kathmandu, Rukum, Banke and Sindhuli districts.

92. The newly established Government has publicly announced that all detainees held under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Control and Punishment) Ordinance have been released, including children detained because of their previous association with CPN-M. However, the United Nations country team believes that some children still remain in detention, under different charges such as detention for possession of arms and explosives, and murder.

Developments in the Philippines

93. Children continue to be targeted for recruitment, allegedly by the New People's Army (NPA), the armed wing of the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP), despite the stated policy by CPP prohibiting the recruitment of anyone under 18 years of age into NPA. NPA claims that it assigns children to self-defence and non-combatant duties. From January 2005 to June 2006, the United Nations country team, in collaboration with child protection actors on the ground, documented 22 cases of children affiliated with NPA. During the last quarter of 2005, NPA allegedly stepped up recruitment in the Visayas provinces, including Negros Occidental. There have also been reports that children from indigenous communities in Northern Luzon and many parts of north-eastern and southern Mindanao have been joining NPA. In all these areas the actual number of children being recruited is difficult to determine.

94. The Abu Sayyaf Group still recruits children to fight, although the number of fighting forces is reported to have greatly diminished after the joint Philippine-United States military exercises in Basilan. There are also known cases of recruitment by the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), the rebel group in Mindanao, with whom peace talks are presently under way. It is estimated that 13 per cent of the 10,000 elements of MILF are children. The increased numbers of children joining MILF in Maguindanao Province is based on the assumption by MILF that the children would benefit from the socio-economic package offered in the event of the conclusion of the peace agreement. Despite sporadic fighting in Mindanao, the Government of the Philippines and MILF remain committed to continuing their talks with the hope of achieving sustainable peace in southern Philippines within a year. The positive state of the peace talks has also encouraged MILF to cooperate with civil society groups. Members of MILF have participated in two training programmes on child protection, international human rights and humanitarian law.

95. In some provinces such as Bohol and Negros Occidental, child recruitment is also reportedly being conducted by Government paramilitary forces such as the Citizen's Armed Forces Geographical Units (CAFGU), although current reports do not indicate that recruitment is systematic in nature. In 2005, the Commission on Human Rights Region VI Office learned that two children had been recruited into the CAFGU in Murcia, Negros Occidental. It immediately called the attention of the commander of the 12th Infantry Battalion of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, and the company commander sent the two under-aged recruits home. Such isolated reports of recruitment into CAFGU continue, despite a directive from AFP strictly setting the age of recruits at 18 years and above. The Armed Forces of the Philippines, however, continues to be vigilant in ensuring that no children are involved in CAFGU. The presence of independent authorities such as the Human Rights Council appears to provide protection against these isolated violations.

96. From November 2005 to May 2006, the Joint Secretariat of the Government of the Philippines and the National Democratic Front of the Philippines (Joint Monitoring Committee) and United Nations partners received reports and affidavits that documented 5 children killed and 45 children maimed in incidents related to armed conflict, and 9 children abducted, with some allegations against members of the Philippine Army and Scout Rangers. For example, on 25 November 2005, during a clash between the Philippine military and rebel forces in Sariaya, Quezon, a 15-year-old boy was injured, and on 31 January 2006, two 17-year-old boys were reported to have been taken by members of the 71st Infantry Battalion of the Armed Forces of the Philippine in Sta. Ines West, Tarlac Province, and were later found dead.

97. In response to the protection needs of children affected by armed conflict, the Government of the Philippines continues to implement a presidential order establishing a comprehensive programme for children involved in armed conflict, a framework that tasks relevant agencies of the Government, including the Department of National Defence and the Philippine National Police, on specific protection mandates for affected children.

Developments in Sri Lanka

98. The ceasefire agreement between the Government of Sri Lanka and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) has been seriously hampered by heightened levels of violence. Since early December 2005, violence has escalated dramatically, including military confrontations in the north and east; suicide bombings and claymore mine attacks in all parts of the country; and increased death and injury of civilians. On 29 May 2006, the Council of the European Union added LTTE to the Union's list of terrorist organizations.

99. From 1 November 2005 to 30 September 2006, UNICEF received reports of 513 children recruited or re-recruited by LTTE. These figures only represent the number of cases reported to UNICEF, and there were indications that the prevailing security situation might be deterring families from reporting cases. The overlap between children recorded on the UNICEF database and children who left LTTE (released, ran away or returned home) is approximately 36 per cent, suggesting that UNICEF figures reflect approximately one third of total cases of recruitment. On the basis of cases reported to UNICEF, the average age of child recruits during this period was 16 years. Some 68 per cent of recruits were boys and 32 per cent were girls. From 1 November 2005 to 30 September 2006, most cases were reported from Kilinochchi district, with 26 per cent of the total number of children recruited or re-recruited occurring in the district; Batticaloa reported the second highest number of cases, with 23 per cent. During the same period, LTTE officially released 91 children and another 25 children are known to have escaped or run away. In most cases, LTTE did not follow the agreed release procedures as children were often transferred to a residential vocational training facility in Kilinochchi, or to the human rights body of LTTE, the Northeast Secretariat for Human Rights. UNICEF expressed concerns at this practice as children were placed in the institutions without parental consent, and there were verification difficulties owing to limitations in accessing the institutions.

100. Concerns have also been expressed regarding the civil defence training provided by LTTE to civilian communities throughout the north and east. UNICEF received reports of children as young as 16 years being included in the training programmes. School principals and teachers were also required to attend, affecting children's schooling. Reports were received from Batticaloa, Ampara, Trincomalee and Kilinochchi districts of children not returning after attending the training programmes and it is suspected that they have been recruited.

101. As at 30 September 2006, UNICEF had received 128 reports of children being recruited by the Karuna faction. In the space of one week in mid-June, UNICEF received 30 reports alleging that children had been abducted by the Karuna faction in the areas of Santhiveli, Kiran, Mankerni, Valachchenai and Iruthayapuram (Manmunai North). Only boys were taken. All of the cases involved forced recruitment and abduction, in some cases by armed men who openly identified themselves as members of the Karuna faction.

102. During the period from 1 November 2005 to 30 September 2006, the Sri Lankan Monitoring Mission received 195 complaints of child abductions, including 110 complaints against LTTE, 79 complaints against a non-ceasefire agreement entity (the Karuna faction) and 6 complaints against the Government of Sri Lanka.

103. Bombing raids were conducted by the Sri Lankan air force against LTTE positions as part of retaliatory actions of a limited duration, causing death and injury to children. On 25 April 2006, following a suicide bomb attack on the army chief, General Sarath Fonseka, at army headquarters in Colombo, the Sri Lankan armed forces launched retaliatory strikes on LTTE positions around Sampur and Mutur in Trincomalee District. In this bombing raid, 4 children aged 4, 14, 15 and 16 years were killed and 14 children, ranging in age from 3 months to 17 years, were injured. On 14 August 2006, a bombing raid on a compound, which LTTE claimed was an orphanage and the Government claimed was a military training ground, killed a number of schoolgirls and injured many others.

104. In Jaffna, Kilinochchi, Mullaitivu, Trincomalee, Batticaloa and Ampara districts, school attendance rates have decreased in many places because of fear of recruitment and the general security situation. Schools are also being occupied by internally displaced persons and damaged by air and artillery attacks by fighting forces. On 25 April 2006, a pre-school and the science laboratory of Chenaiyoor Central College were damaged by Government air and artillery strikes around Mutur in Trincomalee district. In Batticaloa, the Karuna faction opened a political office of the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Puligal (TMVP) next door to St. Cecilia's Girls High School, exposing children to the danger of attack.

105. The escalation in violence since July 2006 has curtailed access to civilians affected by the conflict in the north and east of Sri Lanka, restricting the delivery of humanitarian assistance and raising concerns about the security of humanitarian personnel, especially after the killing of 17 aid workers from the French non-governmental organization, Action Against Hunger, on 5 August 2006 in Trincomalee. Further, as at 30 September 2006, according to UNHCR, 209,672 people (56,739 families) had been displaced since 7 April 2006 owing to the rapid escalation of the conflict. The vast majority of the displacement has occurred since August 2006 in Jaffna, Kilinochchi, Trincomalee and Batticaloa districts, affecting thousands of children.

106. A task force on monitoring and reporting on child's rights violations within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) has been established in Sri Lanka. The inaugural meeting of the task force was held on 26 July 2006.

Developments in Uganda

107. The Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) continued to abduct children for use as combatants and as sexual slaves in northern Uganda, although the total number of abductions has significantly reduced over time. The total number of abductions since January 2005 is estimated to have been approximately 1,500, significantly reducing to 222 over the first six months of 2006. For example, in May 2006, all 17 children reported to the United Nations country team to have been abducted were released within 48 hours. On 13 October 2005, the International Criminal Court issued arrest warrants for LRA leader Joseph Kony and four others. The five are accused of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including murder, abduction, sexual enslavement, mutilation and forced recruitment of children. In May, June and July 2006, Mr. Kony met with southern Sudanese mediators attempting to broker an end to the hostilities between LRA and the Ugandan Government. The LRA leader reportedly said that he was committed to the peace process. Although President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni had given LRA leaders until 31 July 2006 to surrender and receive amnesty, on 15 July, Uganda's representatives agreed to send a delegation to meet with the LRA delegation in Juba, southern Sudan, and began negotiations. On 29 August 2006, a ceasefire between the Government of Uganda and LRA came into force. LRA has since begun to assemble in the Ri-Kwangba and Owiny Ki-Bul camps at the border with southern Sudan, and has agreed to release all women and children present in the group.

108. Although the Government of Uganda does not have an official policy to recruit children, children are present among the local defence units and the Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF). There are also no signs of the release of the 1,128 children reported to have been mobilized into local defence units in late 2004 in Kitgum, Pader and parts of Teso. During the recent visit of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for children and armed conflict to Uganda, the Government agreed to enter into an action plan and to strengthen the implementation of existing legal and policy frameworks on the recruitment and use of children.

109. Children were among the 131 civilians reported to the United Nations country team as having been killed by LRA between August 2005 and June 2006 in ambushes on roads and attacks on persons found outside internally displaced person camps. For example, in January 2006, a boy was killed by LRA after he was captured close to Amida camp in Kitgum district. Children have also been killed by UPDF soldiers and local defence units. For example, in February 2006, an 8-year-old girl was killed by soldiers in Ngomoromo in Kitgum district, and 4 children were among 10 civilians killed by local defence units at Ogwete camp in Lira district in May 2006.

110. There are also many reported cases of sexual exploitation and sexual violence against girls by Government military personnel in internally displaced person camp settings. For example, in January 2006, a UPDF soldier was reported to have been responsible for the rape of a 17-year-old girl outside Pagal camp in Gulu district and in February 2006 a 17-year-old soldier was arrested and charged with rape in Lira Palwo in Pader. The Government has made a commitment to putting in place enforceable guidelines and training of military personnel to prevent such cases from recurring.

111. In June 2006, a monitoring and reporting task force on child's rights violations within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) was inaugurated in Uganda, co-chaired by UNICEF and OHCHR.

C. Sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeeping personnel

112. Building on the work of my Adviser on sexual exploitation and abuse, Prince Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein, Permanent Representative of Jordan to the United Nations, efforts to combat sexual exploitation and abuse by peacekeeping personnel continue. The Secretariat, with the support of Member States, has developed a comprehensive strategy to address sexual exploitation and abuse. Mandatory training for personnel and awareness-raising for the local population on sexual exploitation and abuse are key aspects of the prevention strategy. United Nations peacekeeping operations are reporting a high coverage of personnel trained with over 90 per cent of all personnel having received mandatory training in some missions.

113. To strengthen the Organization's ability to respond effectively to allegations of abuse, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations established a conduct and discipline team at its headquarters and in eight peace operations in November 2005. The headquarters team provides oversight on the state of conduct and discipline for all categories of United Nations personnel in all peace operations led by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. Conduct and discipline teams in peace operations provide advice to the head of mission on preventing and responding to all conduct and discipline issues involving all categories of personnel in the mission. Mission conduct and discipline teams play a key role in receiving allegations of misconduct, tracking misconduct cases and assisting the mission to develop and implement measures to prevent misconduct, enforce United Nations standards of conduct and provide remedial action to victims. For instance, child protection advisers assist the work of the mission team by incorporating messages on sexual exploitation and abuse in training tools on the rights of the child for contingent personnel, directing allegations of sexual misconduct from child rights and human rights organizations to the mission team and helping disseminate information on United Nations standards of conduct through their civil society contacts. Further, to provide support and assistance to victims of abuse by United Nations personnel, I issued a draft policy statement and comprehensive strategy on assistance and support to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations staff. This policy provides for victim advocacy, referral systems and funding. It should be highlighted that the responsibility of troop-contributing countries to discipline their peacekeeping personnel is critical in this regard.

114. It is unfortunate that despite these efforts abuses continue. From 1 January 2004 to 18 August 2006, investigations into allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse involving 313 United Nations peacekeeping personnel resulted in 17 civilians being dismissed or their contracts not renewed and 17 police and 141 military peacekeeping personnel being repatriated on disciplinary grounds. As of 18 August 2006, 85 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse involving civilian (29), police (8) and military peacekeeping personnel (48) were reported to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations during 2006, and these cases are pending investigation.

115. Further, on 18 August 2006, the international media reported on allegations of a prostitution ring run by soldiers, and involving young girls, some as young as 15-years old, in the South Kivu area of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It is believed that some of these soldiers are United Nations peacekeepers. Investigations into these allegations are currently being conducted and disciplinary action will be taken against any United Nations personnel implicated.

V. Information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism

116. In its resolution 1612 (2005), the Security Council called for the implementation, within existing resources, of the monitoring and reporting mechanism outlined in my report (S/2005/72). It also requested an independent review of the mechanism to be reported to the Security Council by 31 July 2006. I have requested the Office of Internal Oversight Services to carry out this independent review. The review is ongoing and key partners are fully cooperating with the exercise. I will present the results of this review to the Security Council in November 2006.

117. In the year since the adoption of resolution 1612 (2005), steady progress has been made in establishing the monitoring and reporting mechanism in the seven situations that were designated as priorities for the first phase of implementation, namely, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Somalia, the Sudan, Nepal and Sri Lanka. The country-level task forces received significant guidance from United Nations Headquarters to facilitate implementation, including reporting templates, definitions of grave violations and other relevant technical materials. In addition, several country visits have been undertaken to brief and facilitate the start up of the work of these task forces. I have sent information from the monitoring and reporting mechanism through reports to the Security Council on the situation of children affected by armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Sudan; and through the United Nations Secretariat "horizontal" reports on situations of concern to the Working Group of the Security Council on Children and Armed Conflict.

118. The Working Group has been established and has held five formal meetings. The terms of reference of the Working Group and its workplan for 2006 were adopted in May 2006. To date, the Working Group has considered reports on situations of concern in relation to children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and the Sudan, and has issued recommendations with respect to the report of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the Council and other bodies within the United Nations system.

119. There have been significant challenges in undertaking such a complex multi-stakeholder initiative. These include serious difficulties of safe and unhindered access of United Nations and other humanitarian personnel for monitoring and reporting; ensuring buy-in and clarity on division of labour and complementarity of roles of partners within and outside the United Nations system; adequate levels of child protection expertise within United Nations entities and other partners; and adequate level of resources for sustainable long-term response and intervention programmes for children affected by armed conflict. Although country specificities, capacities and expectations of major stakeholders vary at country level, all possible efforts have been made to ensure provision of reliable, accurate and objective monitoring reports.

VI. Information on progress made in the development and implementation of the action plans

120. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1539 (2004), calling for parties to prepare concrete time-bound action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children in violation of international obligations applicable to them, and reaffirmed by the Council in resolution 1612 (2005) calling for the parties concerned to develop and implement action plans without delay in close collaboration with United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, action plans and/or advocacy efforts have been made with the parties in the following situations of armed conflict.

121. In Burundi, there have been no official negotiations with FNL to halt the use and recruitment of children. However, the ONUB presented a document to FNL during the ceasefire negotiations in June 2006, requesting FNL to prioritize the demobilization of children. FNL has not signed the document. Further, in a note verbale dated 9 August 2006, ONUB requested the Government to release former FNL child combatants from the Randa detention centre, for immediate demobilization. As of the beginning of September 2006, the child combatants were still being held in Randa. Discussions with the Government continue on the need to release these children into the reintegration programme.

122. In Côte d'Ivoire, on 26 November 2005, FAFN committed to an action plan to handover all demobilized children to UNICEF and to prevent the recruitment and association of children with its forces. FAFN also agreed to designate focal points for the identification and demobilization of children in the camps as well as approve unimpeded access to camps, checkpoints and military barracks to verify the presence of children. FAFN has agreed with UNICEF to establish an independent verification commission to ensure compliance with the action plan. The work of the verification commission will be complemented by the regular monitoring activities of United Nations peacekeeping personnel. So far, FAFN has made all efforts to comply. Additional resources are required for the rehabilitation and reintegration programme for demobilized children. The other militia groups, FLGO, MILOCI, APWé and UPRGO, with the exception of the armed civil defence groups in the west and GPP in Abidjan, have also engaged in dialogue with the United Nations, for the establishment of an action plan to end the use of child soldiers in government-controlled territories. On 14 September 2006, all four militia groups signed a regional action plan to end the use and recruitment of children. They have agreed to release all children within their ranks; cooperate with the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme on children's issues; take specific measures to prevent recruitment of children, define time-bound benchmarks for measuring progress and compliance, and to allow unhindered access for monitoring and verification of the action plan.

123. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, UNICEF and MONUC met with FARDC in March 2005 in order to raise issues of the recruitment and use of children. Following this meeting, all regional commanders of FARDC were given instructions prohibiting the recruitment and use of children, stating that perpetrators would be prosecuted. FARDC military tribunals have also begun prosecuting cases of child recruitment by FARDC officers. Further, dialogue with militia leaders aimed at completing the withdrawal of all children present in military groups continue in the context of the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan.

124. The submission of my country report on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the Security Council and its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict on 13 June 2006 (S/2006/389) was received positively by the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Working Group made recommendations to the Security Council to consider targeted sanctions on the leaders of the Mouvement Révolutionnaire du Congo (MRC) for repeated violations of Security Council resolutions on children and armed conflict; and have referred rebel leader Laurent Nkunda to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the support of the United Nations country task force, is currently engaged with its national institutions in implementing the recommendations outlined in the country report, a progress to be commended.

125. In Nepal, in June 2006, the United Nations country team met with the Government and CPN-M and requested the parties to nominate focal points to discuss monitoring and reporting on grave violations affecting children within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005). The nomination of focal points is still pending. To date, CPN-M has yet to engage in substantive dialogue on the release of children associated with their forces.

126. In Sri Lanka, in June 2003, the Government of Sri Lanka and LTTE endorsed an agreement committing to an action plan for children affected by war in the north east of Sri Lanka. Under the action plan, LTTE committed to ceasing all recruitment of children and to releasing all children already in its ranks. In a meeting between UNICEF and LTTE in January 2006, it was agreed that both parties would meet regularly to discuss technical issues about the release of children and measures to stop recruitment. Dialogue continues to take place between UNICEF and LTTE through this forum. LTTE also announced the formation of a child protection unit. However, a residual caseload of 1,464 children remain unaddressed as at 30 June 2006. In June 2006, following reports of recruitment by the Karuna group, UNICEF met with the political wing of the Karuna faction, TMVP, to remind it of its obligations not to recruit children and to seek the release of underage recruits. This dialogue is ongoing, but the Karuna faction has yet to provide concrete commitments.

127. In Somalia, as a follow-up to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), the United Nations country team met with ICU, and will include the issues of child recruitment in its further dialogues with both sides to the conflict. UNICEF and its partners have just finalized a five-year strategy for advocacy and intervention for children associated with armed groups, which will guide future interaction with those responsible for involving children in armed conflict. To date, no concrete interventions on this issue have been made with the existing political entities.

128. In southern Sudan, the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) child protection advisers have been using the Ceasefire Joint Military Committee and its seven subsidiary area joint military committees to engage the Sudan Armed Forces and SPLA in dialogue on abuses against children and difficulties in releasing children from military units, in particular those newly incorporated from other armed groups. In Darfur, since the signing of the Darfur Peace Agreement, UNICEF and UNMIS have been in dialogue with SLA (Minawi) and SLA (Wahid) regarding the need to end recruitment of children and to release children who are associated with those armed groups. SLA (Minawi) committed itself to facilitate the work of UNICEF and provide its full support in releasing and reintegrating children associated with its forces. However, recent internal fighting within the SLA (Minawi) faction has hindered follow-up action. It is important to note that the ability of the United Nations to initiate and engage in dialogue with armed groups on grave child rights violations is often hindered by access restrictions and fluid chains of command in some groups.

129. In Uganda, the recent mission of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict resulted in: (a) the Government agreeing to work with UNICEF and OHCHR to set up an action plan for the prevention of recruitment; (b) the removal of child combatants in local defence units and UPDF; (c) the strengthening of measures by the Government with regard to taking disciplinary action against armed forces personnel who knowingly recruit children in the local defence units and UPDF, as well as strengthening existing procedures for access of designated personnel from UNICEF, OHCHR and the Uganda Human Rights Commission to enter military installations for the purposes of verifying presence of children in the armed forces; and (d) the Government undertaking to seriously consider enacting criminal legislation to prevent and punish civilian abettors of child recruitment.

VII. Information on the assessment of the role and activities of child protection advisers

130. The Security Council has repeatedly called upon me to ensure that the need for and the number and roles of child protection advisers are systematically assessed during the preparation of each peacekeeping operation. In this regard, in resolution 1612 (2005), paragraph 20 (d), the Council requested me to include information on the assessment of the role and activities of child protection advisers in my report on the implementation of the resolution. Pursuant to that request, the Peacekeeping Best Practices Section of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is undertaking a study of the child protection experience in peace operations. This study seeks to address the following specific questions: (a) are child protection advisers effective?; (b) in what ways have they made an impact?; and (c) how can the overall impact of child protection advisers be strengthened?

131. Preliminary findings from the study indicate that child protection advisers are effective in two major areas: in gathering information for monitoring and reporting purposes; and in mainstreaming child protection within missions and through mission training programmes. Mainstreaming child protection within the mission reinforces the monitoring and reporting aspect by creating a knowledge base and expertise on child protection. Serving and former child protection advisers who participated in the study, as well as child protection partners, highlighted monitoring and reporting as an area where child protection advisers have been effective and have made a positive impact. The increased awareness of children and armed conflict issues among United Nations civilian police, military observers and the military, all of whom operate on a regular basis in front-line areas, where children are found in harm's way, greatly enhances the work of child protection advisers by providing an extended network of available resources to monitor violations.

132. The findings also indicate that there is room for improvement in a number of areas. First is the overall understanding of the child protection adviser function within missions, especially among senior mission leadership. There is also a tendency for other civilian personnel to see child protection advisers as providers of humanitarian assistance rather than advocates for improved policy and approaches towards children and armed conflict. Second is the placement of the child protection function within the "pillars" of the mission structure, concluding that the child protection function is often not optimally located within that structure; the actual location of the child protection function tends to vary across missions, with child protection advisers sometimes subsumed within other sections, pointing to a lack of a clear Department of Peacekeeping Operations policy consensus about where child protection advisers should be located. Individual child protection advisers have on certain occasions interpreted their mandate broadly, sometimes leading to a lack of common understanding with key partners. This should be addressed in a structured way with all major stakeholders as a priority. Third is the need for stronger child protection policy support within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations at the headquarters level.

133. The study on child protection experience in peace operations is expected to be completed within the next two months, and will provide a comprehensive assessment of the impact and effectiveness of child protection advisers as well as a number of specific recommendations.

VIII. Recommendations

134. I recommend that the Security Council consider expanding its focus and give equal care and attention to children affected by armed conflict in all situations of concern; and to give equal weight to all categories of grave violations beyond the recruitment and use of child soldiers to include the killing and maiming of children, rape and other grave sexual violence, abductions, attacks against schools or hospitals, and denial of humanitarian access for children.

135. I encourage the Security Council to continue to call upon parties to prepare concrete time-bound action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children in violation of international obligations applicable to them, and to expand the call for action plans to all situations of concern.

136. I call upon donors to ensure that adequate resources and funding are available to national Governments, the United Nations and partners, for the rehabilitation and reintegration of all children who have been associated with armed forces, and to develop relevant and effective programmatic action that reinforces the rehabilitation and reintegration efforts for children, ensuring long-term sustainability and success of such interventions.

137. I welcome the Security Council's continuing consideration of effective targeted measures against parties to armed conflict who continue to systematically commit grave violations against children in armed conflict in defiance of Council resolutions.

138. I encourage State parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to take measures to support the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, to strengthen national and international measures for the prevention of recruitment of children for armed forces or armed groups and their use in hostilities, in particular by signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict; enacting legislation that explicitly prohibits by law the recruitment of children under the age of 15 years into armed forces/groups and their direct participation in hostilities.

IX. Annexed lists

139. The present report contains two annexes.<sup>2</sup> Annex I lists parties that recruit or use children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children. Annex II lists parties that recruit or use children either in situations of armed conflict not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern, also bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children.

140. It should be noted that the annexes do not list countries as such. The purpose of the annexed lists is to identify particular parties to conflict that are responsible for specific grave violations against children. In this respect, the names of countries are referred to only in order to indicate the locations or situations where offending parties are committing the violations in question.

Notes

- <sup>1</sup> Applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict include, in particular, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and obligations applicable under the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977, the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989, the Optional Protocol thereto of 25 May 2000, and the amended Protocol II to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restriction on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, the International Labour Organization Convention No. 182 concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour and the Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction.
- <sup>2</sup> The parties are listed in alphabetical order in the annexes.

21 December 2007

Original: English

General Assembly
Sixty-second session
Agenda item 66 (a)
Promotion and protection of the rights of children

Security Council
Sixty-second year

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Security Council presidential statement (S/PRST/2006/48), by which the Council requested me to submit a report on the further progress in the implementation of resolutions 1612 (2005), 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003) and 1539 (2004). In accordance with the Council's request, the report includes information on compliance in ending the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law and other grave violations being committed against children affected by armed conflict.<sup>1</sup> The report also includes information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism; information on progress made in the development and implementation of action plans (called for in para. 7 of resolution 1612 (2005)); and information on the mainstreaming of child protection in United Nations peacekeeping operations.

2. Pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005), the report covers compliance in ending the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations, including the killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, denial of

3. The preparation of the present report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict at Headquarters, country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams, as well as with concerned Member States and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions, and United Nations country teams are the primary sources of information for the report.

4. References to reports, cases, incidents, and so on in the present report refer to information that is gathered, vetted and verified for accuracy. In situations where access to, obtaining or independently verifying information received is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such.

5. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in identifying the situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for children and armed conflict was guided by the criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence.<sup>2</sup> In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, with a humanitarian emphasis, focusing on ensuring broad and effective protection for children exposed and affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

II. Cross-cutting issues of concern

6. Recruitment of children and internal displacement are closely linked, such as in Colombia, as too often displacement becomes the only avenue left for families in certain areas to avoid their children's recruitment by armed groups. On the other hand, evidence suggests that refugee and internally displaced person camps are often prime recruiting grounds for child soldiers owing to the convenient concentration of vulnerable children. The lack of security around these camps is said to be an important factor that increases the likelihood of child recruitment. During the reporting period, there have been reports that the Karuna faction have abducted and recruited children from internally displaced person camps in Sri Lanka. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, children have been recruited from internally displaced person camps in North Kivu Province by forces loyal to rebel leader Laurent Nkunda during the recent upsurge in violence.

7. The movement of armed groups across borders to recruit children from refugee camps continues to be alarming. Along the Sudan-Chad border, both Sudanese and Chadian armed groups are recruiting children from Sudanese refugee camps in eastern Chad, while Chadian refugee children are being recruited by Sudanese rebel groups in Darfur. Since January 2007, there has also been a surge in the recruitment and use of Congolese and Rwandan children in North Kivu from refugee camps and communities in Rwanda by forces loyal to Laurent Nkunda, as well as Ugandan children from the Democratic Republic of the Congo-Uganda border areas. The transportation of vulnerable children by both the Government and rebel groups across borders during armed conflict constitutes one of the worst forms of child trafficking.

8. Girls, and sometimes boys, are targeted with various forms of sexual and gender-based violence, including rape, during armed conflicts. The perpetration of sexual violence against children by State and non-State parties to conflict is prohibited by international humanitarian law and is a violation of human rights. In Darfur, rape is a method of warfare used by armed groups to deliberately humiliate and to force displacement of girls and their families. In the Great Lakes region, especially in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights indicated appalling levels of sexual and gender-based violence. For example, 60 per cent of the cases recorded in Kisangani, northern Democratic Republic of the Congo, involved victims between the ages of 11 and 17. It is imperative that perpetrators of acts of rape and other sexual violence which leave a long-term, devastating impact on the victims are prosecuted in accordance with the gravity of such crimes. The recent decision of the International Criminal Court to open an investigation in the Central African Republic on allegations of rape and other sexual crimes committed in the context of armed conflict between the Government and rebel forces is an important step towards that end.

9. Increasingly, we are also encountering cases of children being detained for alleged association with armed groups in violation of international standards, for example in Burundi, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Iraq, Israel and the Philippines. Many of the detained children are subjected to ill treatment, torture, forceful interrogation and deprivation of food and education. The children also lack recourse to prompt and appropriate legal assistance, and usually are not separated from adults. In certain situations, some of these children have been used as guides and informers for Government military operations, usually under coercion. During the reporting period, some children have been released owing to United Nations advocacy efforts, such as in Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo; however, many children remain in detention centres, local prisons, interrogation centres and holding camps.

10. Systematic and deliberate attacks on schoolchildren, teachers and school buildings have, since the last reporting period, escalated in certain conflict situations, warranting the increased attention of, and action by, the international community. In Afghanistan, insurgents continue to burn down schools, especially girls' schools, in an effort to intimidate and prevent girls from accessing education. In Iraq, students are also targets of violent crimes and sectarian killings, especially in Baghdad and Mosul. Killings of teachers, closures of schools and children's fear of being abducted have contributed to a dramatic decrease in school attendance rates.

11. Despite the continuing commitment of the Government of Thailand to ensuring children's access to education, of increasing concern are the disruptions in schools experienced in the south of the country owing to violent attacks on schools, children and teachers by armed elements. In March 2007, three students were killed and seven injured in an attack at a boarding school in Songkhla, and five primary school students were injured when their bus was fired at in Narathiwat. So far, 73 teachers have been killed and more than 100 schools have been burned down, including 11 schools in June 2007 alone, in Raman district, Yala Province. Efforts by the Government to keep educational facilities available for all children in the region are commendable.

12. Since the last reporting period, important precedents have been set to end impunity for crimes against children, particularly the recruitment and use of children by Government forces or armed groups. These include the confirmation of charges by the International Criminal Court against Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, founder and leader of the Union of Congolese Patriots in the Ituri region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, for the conscription and enlistment of children under the age of 15 and the use of children for active participation in hostilities and the arrest warrants issued by the Court for five senior members of the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), including its leader, Joseph Kony, who is charged with 33 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the forcible enlistment and use of children in hostilities. Furthermore, for the first time, a former head of State, Charles Taylor of Liberia, is undergoing trial in The Hague before the Special Court for Sierra Leone for 11 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including conscripting or enlisting children into armed forces or groups and using them to participate actively in hostilities. Sentencing by the Special Court for Sierra Leone of Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara and Santigie Borbor Kanu of the Armed Force Revolutionary Council and the conviction of Allieu Kondewa of the Civil Defence Forces militia for the recruitment and use of child soldiers send an important message that such crimes against children will not be tolerated and that those who engage in the practice will be brought to justice. Notwithstanding international efforts, national authorities must also promptly commence appropriate national prosecutions for grave crimes against children.

13. The use of indiscriminate weapons, such as cluster munitions during attacks in areas of civilian concentration, has a severe impact on civilians, particularly children, even long after the conflicts have ended. In southern Lebanon, for example, children continue to be injured and killed by the large number of unexploded submunitions remaining from the 2006 conflict. It is imperative that a legally binding international instrument be developed to prohibit the use of cluster munitions which cause harm to civilians.

14. There has been less focus on the reintegration of children associated with armed groups than on disarmament and demobilization in post-conflict situations. As the prospects for recovery in most countries also depend on the successful reintegration of these children, peacebuilding efforts should address children's protection and reintegration needs in the initial planning and implementation of peacebuilding operations. Long-term recovery and development programmes, linked to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, should be community based, in order to provide sustainable and successful reintegration for these children.

III. Information on compliance and progress in ending the recruitment and use of children and other violations against children

15. The present report provides information on developments covering the period from October 2006 to August 2007. Reports on children and armed conflict in Burundi, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda were also submitted to the Security Council and its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict in the reporting period.

16. Progress made by the parties listed in annexes I and II to the present report, and named in the body of my 2006 report (A/61/529-S/2006/826), has been assessed with respect to whether they have ceased recruiting and using child soldiers and whether they have refrained from committing other grave violations against children. Progress made by the parties is also assessed with respect to whether they have engaged in dialogue with the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting or United Nations country teams (as called for in Security Council resolution 1539 (2004)), and whether through that dialogue, or in the context of other processes, such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes or the signing of peace agreements, they have developed and implemented action plans to end the use of child soldiers and released all children from their ranks.

17. Parties who fully comply with terms set forth in action plans and undertake verified measures to address all the other grave violations for which they have been cited, to the satisfaction of the country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting or United Nations country teams and the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict, will be considered for de-listing from the annexes. De-listing does not in any way negate the requirement for continued monitoring of formerly listed parties by the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting or the United Nations country team. Should it be determined that de-listed parties recruit and use children at a later point in time or fail to allow continuous and unhindered access to the United Nations for verification, they will be re-listed onto the annexes and the Security Council alerted to non-compliance.

18. A noteworthy achievement has been realized with the parties to conflict in Côte d'Ivoire, where no new cases of recruitment of children have been recorded since the last reporting period. The Forces armées des Forces nouvelles (now Forces de défense et de sécurité des Forces nouvelles, FDS-FN) and the four armed militias, namely, the Front pour la libération du Grand Ouest (FLGO), the Mouvement ivoirien de libération de L'Ouest de la Côte d'Ivoire (MILOCI), the Alliance patriotique de l'ethnie Wé (APWé) and the Union patriotique de résistance du Grand Ouest (UPRGO) in Côte d'Ivoire have ceased recruitment and taken concerted measures to identify and release children associated with their forces for rehabilitation since signing action plans in October 2005 and September 2006, respectively.

A. Information on compliance and progress in situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Developments in Afghanistan

19. The security situation in Afghanistan has deteriorated during the reporting period, with children continuing to be the victims of the conflict between anti-Government elements, including the Taliban, and national and international security forces, namely, the United States-led Coalition as well as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization-led International Security Assistance Forces (ISAF). Weak governance and judicial system, as well as the inadequate coverage by the Afghan security forces in insurgency-affected areas, have contributed to the lack of protection afforded to children affected by the conflict. Indiscriminate attacks and disproportionate use of force by the Taliban and other armed elements, including the use of car bombs, suicide attacks and improvised explosive devices, directed at national and international forces have caused a high number of child deaths and injuries. Many of these attacks have taken place in densely populated areas or in the vicinity of popular gatherings. From January to July 2007, there were at least 950 civilian deaths as a result of insurgency-related violence, out of which the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan has documented at least 49 deaths and 19 injuries to children. On 15 June 2007, a suicide attack against an ISAF convoy in Uruzgan Province that was distributing sweets and water to local children resulted in the deaths of four girls and seven boys, aged between 8 and 15 years.

20. Children have also become casualties in military operations against the insurgency, including air strikes by international military forces. Air strikes have in some cases missed their targets and fallen on civilian areas, killing children. On 9 March 2007, nine civilians in Kapisa Province, including four children, were killed in a Coalition military air strike. On 8 May 2007, 21 civilians, including women and children, were reportedly killed in Helmand Province as a result of air strikes that supported ISAF operations. ISAF acknowledged, at the Protection of Civilians Workshop in Kabul in August 2007, that mistakes had been made during operations and informed the United Nations that it continued to adjust operations to minimize civilian casualties.

21. Unexploded ordnance has also caused deaths of and injuries to children during the reporting period. Between August 2006 and July 2007, 295 mine and unexploded ordnance accidents involving children, which account for over 60 per cent of the total number of accidents, resulted in at least 59 deaths.

22. The United Nations remains disturbed by reports of children being used to perpetrate attacks and, in some cases, as human shields by the Taliban and other insurgents. There have been reports that the Taliban have recruited and used children in their activities, such as suicide attacks. This is a relatively new phenomenon, and the United Nations has documented several high-profile cases of children involved in attacks. In February 2007, a boy estimated to be between 12 and 15 years old killed himself and a guard and injured four civilians as he attempted to gain entry to a police station in Khost city, Khost Province. Additionally, a 14-year-old boy was caught wearing a suicide vest on his way to assassinate the Khost provincial governor. No commitments have yet been made by any of these groups to end this practice.

23. Attacks against schools by the Taliban and other anti-Government elements continued, and security incidents affecting schools and threats against students and teachers documented by the United Nations remain a serious concern. Between August 2006 and July 2007, there were at least 133 documented incidents of school attacks. These caused at least 10 reported deaths among students, mainly in the southern provinces. At least 100 attacks in the south were reported in the first six months of 2007. There have been deliberate attacks on female students and women teachers, and girls' schools are particularly targeted. On 12 June 2007, two gunmen killed two schoolgirls and injured six others as they left the Qalay Meadan Girls' School, in Qala-e Saeed Habib area, Logar Province. According to the Ministry of Education, 384 of the total 721 schools in the southern provinces of Helmand, Kandahar, Uruzgan and Zabul are currently closed.

Developments in Burundi

24. The reporting period was characterized by political instability and persistent tensions between the Government and political opposition parties following the President's unilateral Cabinet reshuffle on 13 July 2007. It was equally characterized by the impasse in the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement signed by the Government and the armed rebel group Forces nationales de libération (FNL)-Agathon Rwasa on 7 September 2006. Children continue to be associated with FNL. The ongoing recruitment of children by the two factions of FNL-Agathon Rwasa and the smaller break away Jean Bosco (Gateyeri) was of serious concern. However, the FNL-Jean Bosco (Gateyeri) faction is now defunct. From October 2006 to July 2007, 85 cases of recruitment of children were reported throughout the country, with 60 cases occurring in the months following the signing of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. The upsurge in recruitment by FNL was allegedly aimed at enhancing their bargaining power should further peace negotiations take place, and enabling them to claim increased financial benefits during the demobilization and reintegration phases. Some 48 of the 60 children were students from Gashasa, Rumonge, Marangara and Gashikanwa, in the Bururi and Ngozi Provinces. Most of those children have been released or have defected from FNL ranks owing to the stalled implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement and resulting delays in the distribution of demobilization benefits. On a positive note, 26 children, aged 14 to 18 years, who were previously detained in the former demobilization camp in Randa were released in March 2007 and reintegrated with their families and communities prior to the visit of my Special Representative.

25. The detention of children remains a concern. Progress has nevertheless been achieved during the reporting period, with the release of some children arrested for association with FNL. From October 2006 to July 2007, 49 cases of detention of children accused of participation in armed groups have been reported, notably in the provinces of Bujumbura Mairie and Bujumbura Rural. That represents a 35 per cent increase in such cases since the last reporting period. Many of them had been incarcerated for several months without trial or legal assistance. More than 65 children, held in the Mpimba prison in Bujumbura owing to their former association with FNL, were released in March 2007.

26. As a result of the ceasefire, the number of children killed and maimed in armed clashes between members of the armed forces (Forces de défense nationale (FDN)) and FNL from September 2006 to August 2007 decreased by 30 per cent in comparison with the last reporting period. A total of 40 cases of children killed and maimed by FDN and FNL was reported, with 80 per cent of the victims killed by grenade explosions during looting operations. On 11 December 2006, five children were killed in Taba, Gitega district, when three FDN soldiers threw a grenade into their residence.

27. Rape and other sexual violence against children by members of FNL and some members of the Security Services is also of great concern. More than 30 such cases were reported during the period, 80 per cent of which involved girls. On 6 January 2007, a 4-year-old girl was raped by an FDN soldier in Mugongomana, Bujumbura district. On 19 February, a 16-year-old girl was raped by FNL elements in Nyanza-Lac, Mkamba district.

Developments in the Central African Republic

28. There have been numerous reported cases of recruitment of children by the Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR) rebel group, which controls parts of north-eastern Central African Republic. During UFDR attacks on the positions of the Government Forces armées centrafricaines (FACA) and French Army in Birao on 3 and 4 March, some of the rebels were identified as former students of the Birao governmental secondary school. Many of the children, between the ages of 12 and 17 years, who participated in these attacks, were killed.

Further, two out of three schools were partially destroyed by FACA and UFDR following the attack.

29. On 16 June, a tripartite action plan between UFDR, the Government of the Central African Republic and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) for the reduction and elimination of the recruitment and utilization of child soldiers and their demobilization and reintegration was signed, following which the first group of approximately 200 children were symbolically released. Earlier, in April and May, over 450 children associated with UFDR, 75 per cent of whom were boys aged 13 to 17 years, were demobilized. All these children have since been reintegrated into their families and communities. Approximately 75 per cent of the children had participated in military operations and combat for a sustained period, averaging from nine months to a year, while some had been with armed groups, later associated with UFDR for three years. Ten per cent of the children are as young as 10 years old and were used mainly for logistical support during UFDR operations in 2006 and 2007. It is claimed that the last remaining group of 450 to 500 children had been released to their communities as at September 2007, although this had not yet been verified by the joint Government-UNICEF-UFDR monitoring structure established under the tripartite action plan.

30. A UNICEF mission in June 2007 also confirmed that there were approximately 400 to 500 children, including girls, associated with the rebel groups, the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la démocratie (APRD) and Front démocratique pour le peuple centrafricain (FDPC), both active in the north-western region. APRD and FDPC are increasingly resorting to forced recruitment of children in their areas of influence. In March and again in June 2007, APRD requested for assistance from the United Nations country team to demobilize child soldiers in its ranks. Although informal dialogue with APRD to prevent recruitment and to demobilize and reintegrate children associated with its ranks is under way, formal negotiations are hampered by insecurity in the north-western region.

31. Reprisals by FACA IN villages suspected of assisting rebels in areas such as Bemal-Boguila, Kabo, Batangafo and Kaga-Bandoro have resulted in massive displacement, death and injury among the civilian population, particularly children. During the reporting period, UNICEF and United Nations partners recorded approximately 1,389 houses, 7 schools and 3 health centres partially or completely destroyed, torched or looted in the areas of Kaga-Bandoro and Ouandago and 203 houses, 2 schools and 1 health centre destroyed in the areas of Kaga-Bandoro and Dekoa.

32. Owing to the heavy presence of rebel groups in the areas of the Batangafo-Kabo-Ouandago "triangle", there has been a 75 per cent increase in sexual and gender-based violence reported, compared with the number of cases reported in 2006. According to UNICEF, 15 per cent of women and girls in the northern region of the country have been raped. United Nations partners also report that between Batangafo and Bokamgayé, many young girls are forcibly taken as wives for rebels and forced to perform sexual favours in exchange for movement across the numerous checkpoints set up by these rebel groups.

Developments in Côte d'Ivoire

33. Following the signing of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement on 4 March 2007 between President Laurent Gbagbo and Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles, Guillaume Soro, the "zone of confidence" separating the rebel-held North and the Government-controlled South was dismantled, creating a new momentum for the peace process.

34. During the reporting period, there was no substantiated evidence of active recruitment and use of children by armed groups. The United Nations has been able to regularly monitor the association of children with fighting forces as part of the implementation of action plans agreed with FDS-FN and four armed militias, namely, FLGO, MILOCI, APWé and UPRGO. FDS-FN renewed its commitment to the action plan to put an end to such association of children with their forces. On 26 January 2007, FDS-FN submitted a letter to UNICEF requesting support to complete the implementation of the action plan, followed by the immediate action by FDS-FN to complete the identification of remaining children associated with their forces. On 14 August 2007, FDS-FN submitted a report to my Special Representative for Côte d'Ivoire detailing action taken to finalize the implementation of the action plan, where 85 children, including 27 girls, were identified.

35. Similarly, the four militia groups have worked closely with the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, UNICEF, the newly integrated command centre, which is responsible under the Ouagadougou Agreement for the disarmament and demobilization phases of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and the Programme national de réinsertion et de réhabilitation communautaire (PNRRC), which oversees the reintegration programmes, to implement their commitments under the action plan, which included the designation of focal points by the militias. In April 2007, the focal points began the process of identifying children associated with their forces in Guiglo, Toulépleu, Bloléquin, Tai, Zagné, Duékoué and Bangolo. This resulted in the identification and registration of 204 children, including 84 girls, all of whom are now being assisted through UNICEF programmes.

36. As it has been determined that the FDS-FN and the four militia groups have implemented the action plans and continue to allow unhindered access to the United Nations to monitor compliance, they shall be removed from the lists annexed to my report this year. However, the country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting, supported by a verification commission, will continue to monitor the groups' compliance with the action plans, to ensure that continuous efforts are made to prevent the recruitment and use of children and greater emphasis is accorded to the rehabilitation and reintegration of children who have been released.

37. While there has been a decline in reported cases of killings, children continue to lose their lives as a direct result of the conflict environment. Many of the killings are not investigated, and the perpetrators, who may be private members of the community or uncontrolled elements of the various armed groups, are rarely identified. Incidents of rape and other grave sexual violence against children also remain alarmingly high, particularly owing to the prevailing culture of impunity. The Government and FDS-FN have been slow to undertake any rigorous and timely investigations to prosecute the perpetrators.

Developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

38. There has been a decrease in the number of cases of recruitment of children in the reporting period, which can be attributed to several factors, including the progress made in the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme for children, the army integration process, the decrease in the number of active fighting zones and persistent lobbying by child protection networks against the recruitment of children. Despite this overall trend, all the parties to conflict listed in my 2006 report (A/61/529-S/2006/826) continue to recruit, use and abduct children. The presence of children in the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) integrated and non-integrated brigades remains high, particularly in the Ituri district and the two Kivu Provinces. In South Kivu, the presence of at least 25 children, including girls, among the ranks of FARDC integrated 3rd and 8th brigades has been documented. On 4 January 2007, following the fighting in North Kivu in November 2006, the Government reached an agreement with rebel commander Laurent Nkunda, allowing for the mixage (integration) of Nkunda's troops with FARDC units. The mixage resulted in the de facto presence of many children among the ranks of the new FARDC mixed brigades and their use for active combat against the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR). Despite the agreement, Nkunda and troops loyal to him rebelled at the end of August 2007, and fighting with FARDC troops resumed. An increase in child recruitment by Nkunda and forces aligned with him has been reported since. Several schools in the area have also been closed owing to attempts by Nkunda elements to forcibly recruit students.

39. Reports also indicate that increased recruitment activities were carried out in North Kivu, as well as in Rwanda and Uganda, prior to and throughout the mixage process. This surge appears to be linked to the strategy of commanders loyal to Laurent Nkunda to increase the number of troops to be mixed and the strength of forces prior to engaging in combat operations against FDLR and the Mai-Mai in North Kivu. Children who escaped or were separated indicated that recruitment was ongoing in the returnee settlements of Buhambwe, Masisi territory, the Kiziba and Byumba refugee camps in Rwanda, in the towns of Byumba and Mutura in Rwanda and in the town of Bunagana on the border between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Uganda. On 29 January 2007, a 16-year-old boy from Uganda stated that he had been forcibly recruited along with five other Ugandan children in Bunagana by Adjutant chief "Eric" and Major Janvier, who operate under the command of Colonel Saddam of the 836th battalion, loyal to Laurent Nkunda. Following his recruitment, the boy, together with other newly recruited children, was taken to Mushake for the mixage of the FARDC Charlie Brigade. As at 30 August 2007, 13 Congolese children recruited in the refugee camps in Rwanda and 17 Rwandan children, 11 recruited in Rwanda and 6 recruited in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, had been separated from the FARDC mixed brigades. In addition, a group known as the Association des jeunes réfugiés congolais, reportedly linked to Laurent Nkunda, had been actively recruiting Congolese ethnic Tutsi children and young people in the Kibuye camp since July 2006.

40. In May 2007 the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) undertook a joint assessment visit with the Rwandan authorities to the refugee camps in Rwanda to verify reports of child recruitment and devise protective and responsive mechanisms, such as enhancing sensitization of the refugee community with more involvement by the local authorities, improving the control of exit of children from the camps and ensuring that those accused of recruiting children were charged and brought to justice. The Rwandan Government has undertaken an investigation following the recruitment of eight children from the Kiziba refugee camp on 24 July 2007, allegedly for deployment to South Kivu. The outcome of the investigation is pending.

41. In Ituri, although numbers are lower than in the previous reporting period, child recruitment by the Front des nationalistes et intégrationnistes (FNI) and the Front de résistance patriotique en Ituri (FRPI) continues. In particular, during the third phase of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in Ituri, which began on 4 August 2007, more than 40 children were reportedly re-enrolled by forces loyal to Peter Karim Udaga. Although 2,900 ex-combatants had been demobilized as at 16 August 2007, it is estimated that FNI, FRPI and the Mouvement révolutionnaire congolais (MRC) still have 1,500 elements, including children, that did not surrender. FNI has also been responsible for actively obstructing the separation of children during the disarmament process.

42. Mai-Mai groups still active in North and South Kivu continue to use children. There are reports of child recruitment by Colonel Abdou Panda, former commander of the 121st Mai-Mai brigade based in Lubarika, Ruzizi Plain, South Kivu. In December 2006, 107 children were released from his group at the brassage centre of Luberizi. In May 2007, the presence of 30 children, including girls, among the Mai-Mai group Baleine, under the command of Colonel Jackson, was reported in Bingi, North Kivu. Further, owing to the recent phase of conflict in North Kivu, recruitment of children by Mai-Mai groups has also escalated. In August 2007, more than 50 children have been recruited by Mai-Mai groups in Nyamilima, Rutshuru territory, North Kivu. There are also reports of children being held by Mai-Mai groups in Katanga and Maniema Provinces.

43. A decrease in the number of incidents involving the killing and maiming of children was recorded during the reporting period, in comparison with the preceding year. However, children continue to be victims of attacks and clashes between FARDC integrated and non-integrated units, armed groups in Ituri and FDLR in North and South Kivu. In an incident on 26 and 27 May 2007, the killing of 17 people, including 8 children, and the wounding of at least 28 people, including 21 children, was reportedly committed by FDLR/Rasta in the villages of Nyalbuze, Muhungu and Chihamba in South Kivu.

44. Despite all the initiatives undertaken by the Government to counter sexual violence, including the adoption of two national laws on 20 July 2006, the number of incidents of rape and other sexual violence against children remains extremely high. From October 2006 to July 2007, 10,381 survivors of sexual violence, 37 per cent of whom are children, were identified by United Nations partners in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo; a 4 per cent increase since the previous reporting period. In a one-year period until June 2007, at least 1,400 child victims of rape and other sexual violence were registered and received assistance from the United Nations and its partners in South Kivu alone, where the main perpetrators include elements of FARDC, the police and armed elements of FDLR.

45. A total of 4,182 children, including 629 girls, were separated from armed forces and groups in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the reporting period. In Ituri, 2,472 children, including 564 girls, were separated from MRC, FRPI and FNI militia forces and 10 boys were separated from Mai-Mai forces in the remote area of Opienga, Oriental Province; in North Kivu, 1,374 children, including 52 girls, were separated primarily from mixed brigades loyal to Laurent Nkunda and FARDC and Mai-Mai militia forces; and in South Kivu, 336 children, including 13 girls, were separated primarily from Mai-Mai militia forces and troops associated with Laurent Nkunda.

Developments in Haiti

46. It should be noted that, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1780 (2007), the Council recognizes the grave violations committed against children affected by the armed violence in Haiti and requests their continued protection, as set out in resolution 1612 (2005). Following military operations by the Haitian National Police (HNP) and the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) since December 2006, as well as the arrest of several gang leaders and the dismantling of armed entities, security conditions have improved, especially in areas affected by armed violence, such as Cité Soleil and Martissant in Port-au-Prince. These armed entities vary in organizational structure, activities, motivation and degree of political affiliation. According to MINUSTAH, although these groups are currently essentially criminal in nature, their character and motivations may shift between criminal and political depending on the specific time and circumstances and may pose a threat to peace and security.

47. The situation of children in areas under the influence of armed entities is critical. However, it has been challenging to ascribe definite responsibility for violations to specific parties owing to a large number of actors involved, fragmentation of groups and the difficulty of distinguishing the identity of one group from another. However, the United Nations at the country level has reliable information that the parties named below have been involved in the recruitment and use of children.

48. During the reporting period, there were confirmed reports that children have been used as messengers, spotters, attackers and porters to transfer and hide weapons, as well as for kidnappings. Moreover, children have been directly targeted as a group. In February 2007, Base de Bois-Neuf, controlled by Belony Pierre in Cité Soleil, used two boys, aged between 8 and 10 years, to ignite gas tanks near the “Blue House” occupied by MINUSTAH troops. Also in Cité Soleil, United Nations sources observed that Base de Boston, controlled by Evens Jeune, used children in various capacities as outlined above. On 11 July 2007, a 17-year-old boy, suspected of being a group member, was arrested by HNP in Grand Ravine, Martissant, an area under the control of Base Galil, headed by Wilkens Pierre, and Armée Ti-Machèt. In Gonaïves, a 16-year-old boy associated with the group Raboteau, controlled by Winter Étienne and Ferdinand Wilfort, was arrested by HNP and his weapon confiscated.

49. In the reporting period, 12 children, including a girl, were killed and 8 children, including 4 boys and 4 girls, were injured in Cité Soleil and Martissant. In Gonaïves, four children were killed and five injured in deliberate attacks by armed entities. In December 2006, three girls, aged 13, 14 and 16, were shot in Raboteau. In the same month in Raboteau, a 13-year-old girl was injured by a gunshot and then burned alive; and on 19 July and 5 August 2007, two boys, including one 10-year-old, were decapitated in Ouanaminthe and Mirebalais areas, respectively. Armed entities in Cité Soleil have also used schools as bases during the armed confrontations with MINUSTAH forces at the end of January and the beginning of February 2007.

50. There were approximately 119 cases of child abductions in the reporting period. Although the majority of these cases occurred in Port-au-Prince in 2006, an increasing number of cases were reported from the regions in 2007. In the autumn of 2006, some students were specifically targeted by kidnappers. The situation deteriorated on 13 and 14 December 2006, when 30 students between the ages of 13 and 15 years, were abducted while travelling on school buses near Cité Soleil.

51. Gang rape and other sexual violence against girls and women are still extensively perpetrated by groups in Cité Soleil, Martissant and Carrefour Feuilles. Owing to the lack of official and aggregated data, the number of cases reported is indicative of a larger phenomenon of sexual violence against girls in Haiti.

According to a United Nations partner, approximately 100 cases of child rape were registered from October 2006 to January 2007. Among these, a 3-year-old girl was raped by armed men from Cité Soleil on 9 November, and two cases of rape allegedly perpetrated by members of Evens's group were registered in January 2007. From January to June 2007, it was reported that 54 children, 10 of whom were victims of gang rapes, were raped by members of armed and criminal entities. On 7 May 2007, a 15-year-old girl was raped by six armed men of Bois Neuf, and on 10 May 2007, a 17-year-old girl was raped by six armed men in Grand Ravine, controlled by Base Galil.

Developments in Iraq

52. The prevailing security situation makes obtaining information on violations against children increasingly difficult. Most of the available information is extracted from a wide range of different sources but can rarely be sufficiently verified. It remains clear, however, that Iraqi children suffer most in the ongoing violence. Statistics from United Nations partners and Iraqi authorities suggest that approximately half of all Iraqi refugees are children, as are as many as 38 to 40 per cent of internally displaced persons.

53. There are some indications of children being recruited as combatants by non-State armed groups, such as insurgency organizations. A recent concern is the reported new tactic by insurgent group militias, Al-Qaida and Al-Qaida-affiliated groups, of using children as decoys in suicide car bombings. On 21 March 2007, reports described an incident in which two children were used to facilitate the passing of a car with explosive materials through a Multinational Forces in Iraq (MNF-I) checkpoint in the al-Shaab neighbourhood of Adhamiya district in north-eastern Baghdad. The car was then blown up with the children inside, killing five people, including the two children, and injuring seven others. A MNF-I spokesperson confirmed the incident. MNF-I has publicly reported that insurgents in Anbar Province have been using children to plant roadside bombs and act as spotters for detonation teams. On 21 March 2007, a 14-year-old boy on a bicycle reportedly detonated his suicide vest on an Iraqi police patrol in central Haditha, killing three policemen. Owing to ongoing security operations under the "Baghdad Security Plan" as well as the increasing use of children by insurgents, the number of children, aged between 12 and 17 years, in MNF-I detention has significantly increased, from less than 300 in December 2006 to almost 800 in August 2007, with some 30 children alleged to be active insurgents. These children are provided with education programmes and vocational training.

54. Sectarian violence, fuelled by insurgent and militia action and various criminal gangs throughout the reporting period, has claimed large numbers of civilian lives, including children. There are as of yet no reliable figures on the number of child casualties, although reports of killing and maiming of children are received almost daily. Victims of indiscriminate mortar shelling of residential areas or of bomb attacks, the latter often in the form of devastating suicide car bombs, include many children. As a result of insurgent mortar attacks, five children died in their school in Adil, western Baghdad, on 28 January 2007; three children in Khan Bani Saad on 23 May 2007; and two children in Samarra on 7 August 2007. On 22 May 2007, insurgent gunmen in Iraqi army uniforms killed a family of six, including four children, at a fake checkpoint. On 6 August 2007, a truck bomb in Al-Qebbek, north of Tal Afar, killed 28 persons, including 12 children.

55. Reports of civilians being killed or injured during MNF-I military operations such as house searches or air strikes are becoming more frequent. On 22 February 2007, at least 12 civilians, including 2 to 4 children, were allegedly killed in a gun battle between insurgents and MNF-I forces followed by MNF-I air strikes in Ramadi. Three children in Fallujah were killed on 2 June 2007, when MNF-I allegedly opened fire on a group of individuals believed to be planting a bomb. Many more civilian casualties of military operations were reported, but the age of the victims was rarely confirmed.

56. The education system in Iraq has been adversely affected since the sectarian violence began following the attack on the al-Askari shrine in Samarra on 22 February 2006. Since that attack last year, more frequent attacks on schools, children and teachers have been recorded. UNICEF estimates that at least 30 per cent of Iraqi children are not currently attending school. A particularly disconcerting incident was the deliberate targeting by armed insurgents of the al-Khulud Secondary Girls School in western Baghdad on 28 January 2007, resulting in the deaths of 5 students and 21 injured. In another targeted attack against a school, on 18 June 2007, insurgent gunmen entered a secondary school in Saydiyah, where boys were taking their exams. Approximately 30 students, aged between 17 and 19 years, were abducted. Furthermore, in developments that mirror incidents in Afghanistan, extremists, mainly in Diyala Province, have repeatedly burned or destroyed school buildings: on 15 May 2007 in Abu Ghraib, Baghdad; and on 6 June, 20 June and 21 June 2007, in or near Baqubah, possibly meant as an attack against secular education or schooling for girls.

57. Schools have also become “collateral damage” during fighting between insurgents and MNF-I forces. On 8 May 2007, an attack by an MNF-I helicopter against suspected insurgents in the village of Al-Nedawat, Dujala Province, reportedly killed and injured six children. Local police reported that the helicopter was shot at from the ground and when it fired back, hit the school.

58. The Government has, through the Commission of Child Care, begun to address the challenges confronting children in Iraq. The Commission has designated a committee, which has recommended that the Government sign the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. The Government has repeatedly called upon the international community and all relevant United Nations system agencies to offer their support and assistance in reinforcing their efforts in securing and protecting the welfare of children in Iraq.

Developments in Lebanon

59. There are no reports of recruitment of children by the regular armed forces. Both Prime Minister Fouad Siniora, on behalf of the Government of Lebanon, and Parliamentary Deputy Mohamed Raad, on behalf of Hizbullah, informed my Special Representative during her mission to Beirut on 12 April 2007 that Lebanon would ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, and not use children for armed violence or political mobilization.

60. Civilians, including several thousand children and family members, were caught in the fighting in the Palestinian refugee camp of Nahr el-Bared, northern Lebanon, which lasted from 20 May to 2 September 2007. It is estimated that the fighting between the Lebanese Army and the armed extremist group of Fatah al-Islam resulted in 40 Palestinian civilians killed and over 200 injured, including children. There are reports of use of Palestinian children by Palestinian armed factions and groups in the Palestinian refugee camps.

61. The extensive and unprecedented use by Israel of cluster bombs during the 2006 conflict left southern Lebanon severely contaminated with approximately 1 million unexploded submunitions and general unexploded ordnance. This continues to pose one of the most serious threats to children in southern Lebanon. From the cessation of hostilities on 14 August 2006 until 31 August 2007, 4 children have been killed and 66 injured as a result of unexploded munitions. On 24 and 25 December 2006, five children, aged 13 to 15 years, from Hanaway and Kaakaeyet al-Jiser, were injured by unexploded cluster bombs while playing. Israel has yet to provide the much-needed strike data on the quantity, types and location of the cluster bombs that were dropped.

Developments in Myanmar

62. The Government, through its Committee for the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Underage Children, has undertaken some efforts to address the issue of the recruitment and use of children, including the recent inclusion of preventing the recruitment of child soldiers in their national plan of action against trafficking. Furthermore, written law states that participation in the Government armed forces (Tatmadaw Kyi) is entirely voluntary and that the minimum age for recruitment is 18 years. However, reliable reports from United Nations partners indicate that forcible attempts to recruit children for Tatmadaw Kyi are still taking place. It is difficult to systematically verify the extent of recruitment or the number of children in military camps owing to access limitations. Lack of proper birth certification and local-level connivance in falsifying existing registration information also perpetuate the difficulty of verifying child recruitment.

63. Since 2005, the United Nations country team has received periodic updates from the Government on the activities of the Committee, including information on children being discharged from army service and, most recently, on disciplinary measures taken by the Government against recruiters who have violated Government recruitment policies with regard to minors. The United Nations country team, however, cannot verify the written information provided by the Government concerning disciplinary action taken against perpetrators, even though it has sought working-level interface on numerous occasions.

64. During the recent mission of my Special Representative, who met with acting Prime Minister and Secretary One of the State Peace and Development Council, the Government agreed to cooperate in the establishment of a monitoring and reporting mechanism on child rights violations within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) by appointing the Director-General of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Resettlement as the Government focal point on issues relating to the implementation of resolution 1612 (2005). The Government also agreed to provide the details of actions taken against army recruiters who recruited children and the list of children discharged for follow-up verification by the United Nations country team. At the time of writing, the United Nations country team had just received from the Government a list of children discharged.

65. The Government also agreed in principle to engage in an action plan with the United Nations country team and UNICEF that meets international standards. This would include the establishment of a subcommittee for the reintegration of former child soldiers; a transparent complaints procedure for incidents of recruitment of children, including instituting disciplinary measures against parties responsible for aiding and abetting recruitment of children; access to recruitment centres by the United Nations country team and UNICEF on a regular basis to verify whether or not children are present; regular child protection training for Tatmadaw Kyi officials; and a public campaign, including at the village level, to create awareness of the rules, regulations and modalities of a complaints procedure to prevent recruitment. It is noted that in parallel with the above, a supplementary understanding was agreed between the Government and the International Labour Organization (ILO) in February 2007 providing a complaints mechanism in respect of allegations of forced labour, under ILO Convention 29, which encompasses forced recruitment and underage recruitment.

66. The United Nations has not received any reports of new recruitment and use of children by the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) and Karenni Army (KA), the armed wings of Karen National Union (KNU) and Karenni National Progressive Party (KNPP) respectively, during the reporting period. However, the Government's limitations on United Nations access to areas of operations and on dialogue with KNLA and KA hamper efforts to verify whether those groups have ceased the recruitment and use of children. As a follow-up to letters received by my Special Representative in the last reporting period from KNU and KNPP, dialogues with both parties were initiated by the United Nations, which resulted in KNU and KNPP signing deeds of commitment to halt and prevent the recruitment and use of children on 6 April and 13 April 2007, respectively. Under the deeds, the parties also commit to allow the independent monitoring of violations, demobilize and release children in their ranks and facilitate the provision of appropriate physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration assistance by United Nations system agencies and NGOs for the released children. However, owing to the concerns of the Government, further discussions to finalize arrangements on the implementation of these action plans are ongoing.

67. There are reports indicating that a breakaway faction of KNU, the KNU-KNLA Peace Council, has recruited children from the Mae La refugee camp, as well as from villages in the border areas. Sources suggest that several boys were deceived into crossing the border by promises of pay and participation in celebrations but were subsequently coerced into joining the armed group. While most of the children have returned, four boys are reportedly still missing. It is not known whether the KNU-KNLA Peace Council continues recruitment, and the United Nations has not been able to verify the reports of recruitment. Furthermore, there are reports of a "one child per family" recruitment policy by the Kachin Independence Army (KIA). In early 2007, the United Nations verified a report of a 15-year-old girl recruited by KIA when she returned to her home village from school in Myitkyina, Kachin State. To date, the girl remains with KIA.

68. There are also eyewitness accounts of children present within the ranks of the United Wa State Army (UWSA) in northern Shan State, despite their recent statement to my Special Representative that children are no longer recruited since the ceasefire agreement with the Myanmar Government. UWSA, however, agreed to further discussions to engage in an action plan to separate and reintegrate children associated with their forces.

69. There are reports of the Shan State Army-South recruiting children as part of a new mandatory recruitment policy. Children are also recruited and used by the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (Kokang) in northern Shan State. There is also information that children are present in the ranks of the Karenni National People's Liberation Front (KNPLF) and Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA). However, in-depth monitoring is hampered by access limitations to areas of operations of these groups.

70. Government restrictions on humanitarian access to communities in conflict-affected areas continue to seriously hamper the delivery of aid to those affected, particularly children. Civilians in these areas, including children, are allegedly subjected to systematic human rights abuses by members of the armed forces. Ongoing Government offensives in these areas against ethnic armed opposition groups, such as KNLA and KA, have resulted in many deaths, the destruction and looting of villages and schools, the mining of trails and the displacement of thousands of people. The Minister for National Planning and Economic Development, U Soe Tha, had committed to my Special Representative during her recent mission that the Government would facilitate humanitarian access and operations in those affected areas, within the monitoring and reporting framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

71. United Nations partners have highlighted the issue of former child soldiers imprisoned by the Myanmar authorities for deserting the Tatmadaw Kyi. The United Nations is also aware of cases involving former child soldiers in the refugee camps in the region for whom some services and case management have been provided on an ad hoc basis. However, proper and systematic mechanisms to identify former child soldiers in the refugee camps in the region do not exist and thus it is not possible to conclusively state the number of cases.

Developments in Nepal

72. The Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed between the Seven Party Alliance (SPA) and the Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (CPN-M) in November 2006, as well as the separate Agreement on Monitoring and Management of Arms and Armies signed in December 2006, prohibit both parties from recruiting or using persons under age 18. They also set out phased plans for the registration of Maoist combatants and the discharge of persons born after 25 May 1988 from the Maoist Army. By January 2007, more than 31,000 Maoist personnel were cantoned and enumerated in 28 sites across the country. In July 2007, the second stage registration of Maoist combatants began and is still under way. The registration should lead to the automatic discharge of all those aged under 18 years at the time of the May 2006 ceasefire. The United Nations Mission in Nepal (UNMIN), with the participation of UNICEF and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), has finalized the verification at three cantonment sites in cooperation with CPN-M. Verification at other cantonment sites continues. No official release of children has taken place to date. The Government is making the necessary preparations to release and rehabilitate combatants who are under age 18, as provided for in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement.

73. With the end of active conflict, there has been a significant decrease in reports of grave violations of children's rights. Reports of violations by the Government's security forces have seen a particularly marked decrease, and large recruitment drives by CPN-M have come to an end. The Nepal country-level task force on monitoring and reporting documented over a thousand cases of children recruited by CPN-M and its affiliates between October and December 2006. Many of those children ended up in Maoist Army cantonments, and over 300 were released without follow-up or official documentation after spending a few days at these sites. Since January 2007, four cases of recruitment by the Maoist Army have been documented. Two of the children involved have since left the Maoist Army. There were also no new cases of arrest under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Control and Punishment) Ordinance (TADO) reported. TADO expired at the end of September 2006 and was not renewed. Most children arrested under TADO during the conflict were released.

74. Militias linked to the CPN-M and the Nepal Army are no longer operational, but many personnel from the CPN-M, the Maoist Army and the militia have joined the Maoist Young Communist League (YCL), which was re-established in December 2006. Some of those joining YCL are under age 18. YCL carries out social programmes, as well as activities that parallel those of the security forces, aimed at enforcing laws or punishing social crimes. The presence of children in YCL and youth wings of other political parties is a cause for concern because of the deep politicization of children and youth during the conflict. The exposure or involvement of these children and youth in the violent demonstrations that are a feature of political action in Nepal is also disconcerting.

75. The period of unrest in the Terai region of southern Nepal has also resulted in the deaths of seven children during the reporting period. Four children were killed by the police force and one by CPN-M during demonstrations. In January 2007, a 15-year-old boy was killed by CPN-M at a roadblock established by the Madhesi People's Rights Forum (MPRF) in Siraha district, eastern region. In a separate case, a 17-year-old girl associated with a CPN-M cultural group was one of 27 people killed in March 2007 during a confrontation between CPN-M and MPRF in Gaur and surrounding villages, Rautahat district. YCL claimed that the girl was a member of their organization. Many more children were injured during public rallies between December 2006 and February 2007.

76. Although the use of schools for military purposes has decreased with the end of the conflict, 40 incidents of inappropriate use of schools were reported between October 2006 and June 2007, with 25 of the 40 occurring in the mid-western region. In 13 incidents, CPN-M used school grounds to train their cadres; in 22 incidents, schools were forced to accommodate political or cultural programmes by the CPN-M party and sister organizations such as YCL and the All Nepal National Independent Students' Union-Revolutionary; and in at least six incidents, affecting over 200 schools, students were forced to participate in gatherings of CPN-M and its sister organizations. Schoolteachers have been abducted and assaulted, mostly in the Siraha and Saptari districts. Two such incidents were committed by CPN-M and YCL, and approximately six incidents were allegedly committed by two factions of Janatantrik Terai Mukti Morcha (JTMM), namely, JTMM-Goit and JTMM-Jwala Singh.

77. There are also serious concerns regarding the Government's commitment to ending impunity and ensuring accountability for serious human rights violations. An increasing number of reports indicate that the Nepal Police refuse to register or investigate serious crimes committed during and after the conflict. The Government believes that the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, as referred to in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, will address the issues of ending impunity, if and when established.

Developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel

78. The situation of Palestinian children in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, remains grave, with continued Israeli military operations, incursions and raids throughout the territory, in addition to an escalation in internal hostilities resulting in intense fighting between rival Palestinian factions. During the reporting period, a total of 106 Palestinian children were killed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; 58 per cent of whom were killed by the Israel Defense Forces (IDF). Seventy-four per cent of child deaths caused by IDF occurred in the Gaza Strip, mostly during military operations and artillery shelling. From 1 to 7 November 2006 alone, eight children were killed during the Israeli incursion, code-named "Operation autumn Clouds", into Beit Hanoun in the northern Gaza Strip.

79. A total of 24 per cent of the 106 Palestinian children were killed as a result of factional violence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Armed clashes between the Palestinian Executive Security Forces (ESF) and Al-Aqsa Brigades in Khan Younis on 26 January 2007 killed a 5-year-old Palestinian child. On 7 February 2007, an 8-year-old Palestinian boy died of wounds sustained when he was caught in armed clashes between ESF and the Presidential Guards of the Palestinian Authority in Bureij refugee camp.

80. A total of 323 Palestinian children were injured during the same period, 64 per cent of whom were injured by IDF in the West Bank, 10 per cent by IDF in the Gaza Strip, 7 per cent by Israeli settlers in the West Bank, 3 per cent in factional violence and 3 per cent owing to the reckless handling of explosives.

81. Five Israeli children, four living in Sderot and one in Kibbutz Karmiya near Ashkelon, were injured by Qassam rockets fired from the Gaza Strip by Palestinian militants in the reporting period. Furthermore, two schools and one kindergarten in Sderot were damaged by home-made Palestinian rockets in May, July and August 2007.

82. Documenting the recruitment of children by Palestinian armed groups remains a challenge, and the extent of the phenomenon is not well known. Although there is no evidence of systematic attempts to recruit children for training or operations, militiamen from at least one Palestinian armed group have approached boys outside their school in Gaza requesting them to join paramilitary training. On 2 August 2007, the case of a 13-year-old boy recruited by Hamas militants in Gaza was reported. The boy had been asked by Hamas to monitor the streets and gather information on drug dealers and collaborators with Israel. On 30 August 2007, IDF soldiers on an anti-terror patrol in the northern Gaza Strip spotted a 16-year-old boy who was carrying two explosive devices intended to be detonated in a suicide bombing attack against them. In April 2007, during the mission of my Special Representative to the Middle East, Palestinian President Abbas and then Foreign Minister Abu Amr agreed to revive the code of conduct among Palestinian groups not to involve children in political violence, and to engage with UNICEF to devise a plan of action to prevent the use of children in such violence.

83. Reports also suggest that Shabak, Israel's security agency, continues to seek to recruit Palestinian children to be used as collaborators inside prisons or upon their release. Data are extremely difficult to gather owing to the reluctance of child detainees to talk about these issues, especially while still in detention, and the lack of systematic monitoring. However, at least one case involving a 16-year-old boy was reported in 2007. Furthermore, IDF continues to force civilians, often minors, to enter potential zones of conflict before the soldiers in order to clear the area or limit casualties, although the Israeli Supreme Court has ruled that practice to be illegal. Four cases of Palestinian children used by Israeli soldiers have been documented in 2007. In two separate incidents on 25 February 2007, during military operation "Hot Winter" in Nablus, an 11-year-old girl and a 15-year-old boy were forced at gunpoint to walk in front of Israeli soldiers into houses which were thought to shelter militants. The children were physically coerced into carrying out searches for the soldiers. In another incident, during a military incursion into the Balata refugee camp on 11 April 2007, two boys aged 14 and 15 were assaulted and forced to sit on the bonnet of an Israeli jeep while youths were throwing stones at the jeep. These incidents are currently being investigated by IDF.

84. There were five cases of abduction, involving 10 children, registered by the United Nations during the reporting period. Four cases occurred in the Gaza Strip, one attributed to Palestinian armed groups and three to IDF. Another case was carried out by Israeli settlers in the West Bank. On 17 June in the Tal al-Hawa area of Gaza, three children aged 11 to 16 were abducted by masked militants of the Preventive Security Forces, who accused them of collaboration with Hamas. The children were held at gunpoint and interrogated. They were released after a few hours.

85. Schools and hospitals continue to be attacked or occupied by both IDF and Palestinian armed groups, in some instances resulting in the killing or injury of children. There were at least 10 incidents where IDF soldiers attacked schools (both Palestinian Authority and UNRWA schools). In five of those attacks, Israeli soldiers used tear gas and sound bombs or stun grenades inside the schools. On 18 November 2006 in an UNRWA-run school in Beit Lahia, two students, aged 7 and 12, were shot and injured inside the school by IDF. In a separate incident in the West Bank, on 5 March 2007, IDF soldiers stormed the UNRWA-run Al-Jalazoun Basic Boys' School and Basic Girls' School and opened fire at students, injuring two in the head. In Gaza, Palestinian militants stormed several schools, and in three of those attacks, hand grenades were used. Damage to at least three schools or school property during fighting were reported.

86. At any given point during the reporting period, between 361 and 416 Palestinian children were being held in Israeli prisons and detention centres, including children as young as 12 years. Between 10 and 22 of those children were being held in administrative detention without charge or trial. The majority of prisoners were boys, while approximately 11 girls had been detained or were serving terms of imprisonment during this period. Over 90 per cent of children arrested, interrogated and charged before the military courts were convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. There are reports that some children held in detention undergo physical beatings and psychological torture, including threats of sexual violence. The systematic transfer of Palestinian child prisoners outside the Occupied Palestinian Territory into Israel is in direct violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

87. An expert paper commissioned by a United Nations body found that the most serious consequence of the barrier and its associated regime, and its damaging humanitarian ripple effect, is an increasing occurrence of forced internal displacement, violations of associated rights and induced poverty. A total of 390 civilian structures were demolished during the reporting period, 117 in Gaza and 273 in the West Bank, leaving at least 1,842 people displaced, 717 in Gaza and 1,125 in the West Bank. The majority of affected persons are children. The denial of passage or delays at checkpoints has significantly affected the access of civilians, particularly children, to medical care and services, causing serious threat to their physical health. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reports that from October 2006 to August 2007, there were a total of 442 incidents of ambulances reporting delays or denied access at Israeli checkpoints in the West Bank. In addition to home evictions and house demolitions, other causes of forced displacement are settlement expansion, restrictions on water and land use and restrictions on movement.

Developments in Somalia

88. Reports indicate that both the Union of the Islamic Courts (UIC) and the Transitional Federal Government (TFG) recruited and used children during intense fighting for control of Mogadishu in November and December 2006. UIC publicly declared its intention to recruit from schools, and appointed Sheikh Fu'aad Mohamed Khalaf to be in charge of training the students. An intensive recruitment campaign of boys and girls under age 18 by UIC and its allied militias took place from schools in Mogadishu in that period. TFG militias as well as some clan militias have been widely reported to be using children to carry arms. In January 2007, a senior United Nations official visited Mogadishu and was an eyewitness to children training at Belidogle airport, where TFG has a military base. Since June 2007, however, the TFG administration in Jowhar has begun to release children from its ranks, and activities are being planned to reintegrate these children into their communities, with support from UNICEF. In August 2007, the Minister for Women's Development and Family Affairs agreed to play a role in an advocacy campaign to release children from TFG armed forces and prevent future child recruitment.

89. During the reporting period, violence between the TFG and Ethiopian forces on the one hand and insurgent groups, including the Al-Shaabab, remnants of the former UIC elements and Hawiye clan militia on the other, has resulted in high civilian casualties in Mogadishu. Precise numbers of casualties among children are difficult to verify owing to insecurity and the lack of access, but estimates from United Nations partners indicate that in Mogadishu alone, there have been over 1,200 deaths and several thousand civilians injured since October 2006, of which approximately 35 per cent are children. In April 2007, the security situation in Mogadishu deteriorated, as anti-Government factions began staging hit-and-run attacks and using improvised explosive devices and suicide bombings against the TFG and Ethiopian forces. Those forces retaliated with indiscriminate exchange of fire and shelling, sometimes using untargeted rocket launchers. Many of these attacks occurred in residential areas of the city, resulting in disproportionate numbers of children killed or injured. On 1 February 2007, mortars launched into a settlement for internally displaced persons in Talex village killed seven people, including three children; on 29 July 2007 three teenage boys were injured by a roadside bomb in Towfiq district; and on 26 August 2007, a roadside explosion killed two children on their way to school in Gupta district.

90. Rape and other sexual violence committed by the parties to the conflict have not occurred systematically. However, between January and June 2007, the heightened violence has rendered women and girls, particularly among the internally displaced, more vulnerable to sexual violence and attacks. There have been several cases of girls raped while fleeing Mogadishu, mostly along the road to Afgoye and Baidoa. In four of those cases, verified reports identified the perpetrators as men dressed in the uniforms of the TFG militia. Another incident in May 2007 involved TFG militias stopping a minibus at a checkpoint and raping eight women and five girls. These violations have gone unpunished to date.

91. In July and August 2007, reports indicated a wave of raids on schools by TFG forces in Mogadishu, allegedly in search of extremist elements. On 26 July, TFG forces stormed into a school near KM 4 Junction and abducted 4 teachers and 20 students. Several hospitals, including the Al-Hayat and Al-Arafat hospitals, were also raided or attacked with mortar rockets in April and May 2007, disrupting medical services and forcing patient evacuations. More recently, on 18 August, mortar shells from fighting between the TFG and Ethiopian forces and insurgents hit the SOS Hospital in Mogadishu. Furthermore, it has been reported that Ethiopian forces occupied the Mohamoud Ahmed Ali secondary school for military purposes between April and July.

92. Incidents of mine and unexploded ordnance accidents resulting in deaths and injuries among children increased in 2007. Between January and June in southern Somalia, there were more than 28 landmine accidents, killing 8 children and wounding 10; and 33 incidents involving bombs or unexploded ordnance, killing 25 children and wounding 46. A particularly serious incident occurred on 6 July 2007 in central Mogadishu, where a piece of unexploded ordnance exploded, killing eight people, including five children.

93. The insecurity and the multiple checkpoints along main roads have affected humanitarian organizations in and around Mogadishu and, more generally, in south-central Somalia, leaving staff unable to access communities in urgent need of assistance or protection. Humanitarian workers, human rights defenders and media have also been targeted in various security incidents and killings throughout the country, and offices and assets have been destroyed. On 15 May 2007, gunmen attacked the office of the World Health Organization, wounding a guard in the process; and on 27 June, two staff members of the International Medical Corps were killed by gunmen in El-Berde town. On 4 August, staff from an international NGO on an assessment mission in Dhobley, Lower Juba, were ambushed by unknown men, resulting in one person killed and two others injured.

Developments in the Sudan

94. The overall situation in Southern Sudan has improved slightly since the last reporting period. The Government of National Unity and the Government of Southern Sudan made the following commitments during the visit of my Special Representative to the Sudan in January 2007: to allow UNICEF and the United Nations Mission in Sudan (UNMIS) access to the military barracks of the Sudan Armed Forces (SAF), Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and allied armed forces and groups to monitor and verify compliance; to adopt and implement national legislation to criminalize the recruitment of child soldiers in a timely manner; to allocate adequate resources for the reintegration of children associated with the armed forces; to establish jointly with the United Nations a task force on sexual violence and abuse against children; and to ensure the safety and protection of humanitarian personnel.

95. As a follow-up to those commitments, some important measures have been undertaken by the Government of Southern Sudan to address the situation of children, including progressive legislative reform, structures to address sexual exploitation and abuse and other child protection concerns and a serious commitment to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of children.

96. UNMIS has engaged in dialogue with SPLA and SAF to end violations against children and release children from their military units, particularly those newly incorporated from other armed groups. On 7 June 2007, 60 SAF and SPLA commanders committed to end child recruitment and developed an Area Joint Military Committee action plan to address abductions, rape and other sexual violence against children in Upper Nile, Jonglei and Unity States. However, SAF and SPLA have not allowed the United Nations unhindered access to military barracks for verification purposes. Progress has also been limited with regard to the timely release and reintegration of children.

97. During the reporting period, hundreds of children were released from SPLA and several from other armed groups aligned with SAF, through the coordination of the Southern and Northern Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commissions. In May 2007, 25 children were released from SPLA in Bentiu, Southern Sudan, and reunited with their families in the North. A separate disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme for approximately 600 children from SPLA ranks in Southern Sudan is currently being organized. Despite this progress, thousands of children are still held in military barracks, and some demobilized children return to the army owing to an inefficient reintegration mechanism.

98. Children continue to be recruited and used by armed groups aligned with SAF and SPLA forces that fall under their respective commands. In late November 2006, confirmed reports indicate that SAF-aligned forces of Major General Gabriel Tang Ginye recruited approximately 70 children, including street children, during hostilities in Malakal Province. Furthermore, at least another 300 children are confirmed to be present in the Pibor Defence Forces, also previously an SAF-aligned armed group. The Mundari militia, which operates in Terrekeka, Central Equatoria, is also reported to have 40 children in its ranks.

99. During the reporting period, many children were killed during gunfights between SPLA and SAF. There are also persistent reports of SPLA forces attacking or occupying schools in various locations of Southern Sudan. On 24 October 2006, SPLA forces raided a school in Nassir, Upper Nile, for the purposes of recruiting the children. A total of 32 boys and 24 teachers were abducted, although all but 2 boys were released. Further, SAF and SPLA continue to deny child protection personnel access to areas north and south of Abyei Province, Southern Sudan.

100. There were seven confirmed cases of child abduction in Southern Sudan, several of which were attributed to LRA. On 28 March 2007, a village near Maridi, Western Equatoria, was attacked by armed men, suspected to be from LRA. Six girls, aged between 12 and 17 years, were abducted and their whereabouts remain unknown.

101. There are some promising signs in the current phase of the Darfur peace process and agreement on a hybrid African Union-United Nations mission. However, the day-to-day situation for children on the ground remains grave. There are credible reports indicating that SAF, the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM-Peace Wing), the Sudan Liberation Army/Minni Minawi (SLA/MM), SLA/Gasim (SLA/AG), SLA/Abdul Wahid (SLA/AW), SLA/Shafi (SLA/S), the Popular Defence Forces (PDF), Chadian rebel forces, Government of the Sudan allied militias, known as the Janjaweed, and the Central Reserve Police (CRP) continue to recruit and use children. However, in many instances owing to insecurity, access limitations and a multiplicity of armed actors, it has been difficult to identify the perpetrators or verify the allegations. During the reporting period, some children interviewed by the United Nations reported that they had been fighting in East Jebel Mara, Southern Darfur, for at least three years. Those children are allegedly associated with SLA/AS, SLA/AG or SLA/AW. In April 2007, armed children, aged 12 years, were identified with SLA/MM at Khazan Tunjur, South-West El-Fasher, Northern Darfur. In April 2007, United Nations and African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) monitors identified many armed children believed to be associated with SAF-allied militia in the Kutum area. In May 2007, 13 boys were identified with JEM-Peace Wing. AMIS also confirmed the presence of children as young as 15 years recruited and used by PDF in Mukjar, Western Darfur.

102. In Darfur, there were 46 verified child deaths perpetrated by the Janjaweed and SAF. On 22 November 2006, bombardments from an SAF Antonov plane and two helicopter gunships killed two children in Kishi village, near Bir Maza; and in May 2007, two children aged 4 and 5 were killed as a result of the Government of the Sudan aerial bombardments of villages in Northern Darfur.

103. Rape continues to be widespread in Darfur, and is used as a method of warfare, with an increasing trend to specifically target younger girls. During the reporting period, there have been 23 confirmed reports of rape, with two of the victims being boys. The perpetrators include elements of SAF, CRP, Janjaweed and SLA/MM. Although the prosecution of perpetrators of rape is rare in Darfur, during the reporting period two CRP officers and one SAF soldier were prosecuted for the rape of children as young as 13 years old.

104. In Darfur, frequent hijackings of humanitarian agencies' vehicles impede the delivery of aid and services to the most vulnerable, particularly children. Abductions and the use of physical and psychological violence against aid workers during attacks on humanitarian compounds are also increasing. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reports that between January and August 2007, five aid workers have been killed, 11 injured and 53 physically assaulted.

105. On 11 June 2007, SLA/MM signed an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children. It agreed to release and hand over all children associated with their forces or any other forces aligned with them; develop and implement an age-determination process; and provide special protection for girls and women. The action plan will benefit 1,800 children associated with SLA/MM. UNICEF and UNMIS have also been in dialogue with representatives of SLA/AW, SLA/AS and SLA (Free Will), who indicated their willingness to collaborate towards the release of children from their ranks. However, as at 30 June 2007, no concrete commitments to release children had been made.

106. Some progress has also been made in Eastern Sudan. As part of the Eastern Sudan Peace Agreement signed on 14 October 2006 between the Eastern Front armed group and the Government of National Unity, 3,700 ex-combatants are being demobilized, 250 of whom are children.

B. Information on compliance and progress in situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern

Developments in Chad

107. With the talks between the Government and the armed opposition in Tripoli, and the rainy season, fighting in eastern Chad has significantly decreased. The security situation, however, remains extremely volatile and tense owing to the unsuccessful integration of the United Front for Change (FUC) fighters in the national army following the peace agreement signed in December 2006 by the FUC leader, Mahamat Nour, and President Deby, and the build-up of Government forces. The prevailing insecurity in eastern Chad is also exacerbated by sporadic cross-border raids by Janjaweed militias from the Sudan and inter-communal violence. The decrease in clashes has not reduced the phenomenon of forced recruitment of children by both the State and non-State parties to the conflict.

Reports indicate that children have been recruited into the Chadian National Army. Although the actual figures are unknown, approximately 400 child soldiers, 100 of whom are between the ages of 8 and 12, were found stationed at a Government training centre in central Mongo. On 9 May 2007, the Government of Chad and UNICEF signed an agreement for the demobilization of child soldiers throughout the country. As at 30 July, 425 children, all boys, had been released from Mongo and Moussoro military instruction centres and the N'Djamena main military camp, and transferred to five transit care centres in Abeche and N'Djamena. However, thousands of children in various locations in eastern Chad have yet to be released from armed forces and groups.

108. United Nations monitors have reported that the recruitment and use of children by Chadian armed groups is widespread, although difficulties in identifying leaders, the constant shifting of alliances and groupings and the vast number of groups make it difficult to establish the chain of responsibility for recruitment. UNHCR is currently seeking to increase its child protection staff in eastern Chad. It is estimated that hundreds of children are within the ranks of the Union of Forces for Democracy and Development (Union des Forces pour la Démocratie et le Développement (UFDD)). In November 2006, during clashes between the Chadian National Army and UFDD in Abeche, 60 per cent of UFDD members captured were children. Furthermore, although the recruitment and use of girls by armed forces and groups is not widespread, 50 girls were allegedly associated with FUC in the area of Guereda, Dar Tama Department.

109. Thousands of children have also been recruited and used by Sudanese armed groups backed by the Chadian Government, including JEM and the SLA/G-19 breakaway faction from refugee camps located close to the Sudan-eastern Chad border. In January 2007, 39 children from the Breidjing refugee camp were recruited by Sudanese rebels, and their whereabouts remains unknown. Furthermore, there have been reports of Chadian children being forcibly recruited by the Janjaweed, coming from areas across the border in Darfur.

110. Systematic use of child soldiers by Chadian self-defence groups has been reported in Ade, Mogororo and Dogdore of the Dar Sila Department. In January 2007, nine children between the ages of 13 and 17 were recruited in the surrounding perimeters of the Djabal refugee camp in Goz Beida.

111. Many children are killed and maimed by unexploded ordnance and landmines, which are a result of military engagements in 2006 and 2007. In 2007, 107 child victims of landmines and unexploded ordnances were documented, of whom 22 were killed and 85 injured. In May 2007, four children were playing with a piece of unexploded ordnance in Zaigueye when it exploded, killing two of the children and maiming the others.

112. There have been a large number of incidents of sexual and gender-based violence targeted at women and girls by members of armed groups, particularly within the refugee populations. During the first three months of 2007, 139 cases of sexual and gender-based violence were reported in the 12 refugee camps in the eastern region. However, as it remains a taboo subject, comprehensive information on the number of victims and survivors of sexual violence and the proportion of such incidents perpetrated by members of armed forces and groups is difficult to obtain.

Developments in Colombia

113. The Government of Colombia, through the Colombian Family Welfare Institute, has carried out programmatic efforts to prevent the recruitment of children and reintegrate children into their communities. To date, the Government's efforts have benefited 3,326 children previously associated with illegal armed groups.

114. The Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) continues to recruit and use children. Cases have been reported in the Departments of Cauca, Antioquia, Sucre, Bolivar, Cundinamarca, Guaviare, Meta and Nariño. In Corinto, Cauca Department, members of FARC frequently visit schools to persuade children to join their ranks. Furthermore, despite current talks between the Government and the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) and demands by the National Council for Peace that ELN cease recruitment and release all children from its ranks immediately, this group also continues to recruit children. In December 2006, two girls aged 14 and 15 were forcibly recruited by ELN in Nariño, municipality of Guachavez-Santa Cruz.

115. Children have been used by Government armed forces for intelligence purposes despite official Government policy to the contrary. On 6 March 2007, the Colombian Ministry of Defence issued directive 30743, prohibiting all members of the armed forces from utilizing children for intelligence activities, especially children recovered from illegal armed groups. However, the Defensoría del Pueblo reported that in Cauca, a child demobilized from FARC was used by the XXIX Brigade as an informant for the armed forces in an operation and was later killed at the age of 19 years while in combat with FARC, in contravention of the Paris Principles and Guidelines on children associated with armed forces or armed groups. In April 2007, two children aged 8 and 11 in Urrau, Chocó Department, were forced by the national army to carry materials for them. In Bebedo, Chocó Department, reports received by the United Nations in June 2007 confirm that the armed forces operating in that area provided children with food in exchange for cleaning and maintaining their weapons. The Defensoría del Pueblo continues to report children being kept for unauthorized periods in police stations, army battalions or judicial police premises.

116. There are increasing concerns about reported violations and abuses committed against children by new organized illegal armed groups. These groups, such as the Aguilas Negras, Manos Negras, Organización Nueva Generación or the Rastrojos are largely involved in criminal activities related especially to drug trafficking. The Government considers these groups as criminal gangs. In June 2007, Aguilas Negras was reported to have coerced children to join their ranks in Cartagena, Bolivar Department. Reports on the recruitment and use by the other three groups mentioned above have also been received in the reporting period from Valle de Cauca, Bolivar in Cartagena city and Antioquia in Medellin city. Furthermore, the two illegal armed groups outside the demobilization process listed in my 2006 report, Autodefensas Campesinas del Casanare and Frente Cacique Pipinta, have been only partially demobilized, and it is believed that children are still present in those groups. The gravity of the reported violations by those groups is very real and calls for serious efforts to enhance the protection of children.

117. Positive efforts have been made by the Government in the demobilization of combatants from the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC). According to official figures, 63 children were demobilized from AUC in 2006, compared with 17,581 adults. Those children, however, were not formally handed over as per the requirements of the collective demobilization process, and there are concerns that a number of children have been missed out in that process. The Colombian Family Welfare Institute reports that an additional 32 children were demobilized on an individual basis during the same period.

118. The national Instituto de Medicina Legal y Ciencias Forenses certified that in the reporting period 37 children, including 13 girls and 24 boys, were killed and 34 children, including 4 girls, were injured allegedly by Government security forces, of which, according to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), nine cases have been filed by the Judicial Police. Extrajudicial executions by some Government security forces have also been reported. In March 2007, two people, including one 16-year-old boy, were killed by forces from the XVI Brigade of the National Army. According to eyewitness accounts, those killed were subsequently presented as guerrilla members. Children have also been abducted, killed and injured by illegal armed groups. From October 2006 to May 2007, approximately 43 children were reported to have been held as hostages. In October 2006, a 17-year-old girl was abducted in Toribio, Cauca, and later killed, allegedly by FARC, and on 9 April 2007, in Buenaventura, Valle del Cauca, a girl was abducted and killed by members of FARC. On 9 January 2007, a child was abducted and killed by members of Aguilas Negras.

119. There are reports that rape and other sexual violence and exploitation continue to be perpetrated by illegal armed groups and some members of the State forces. OHCHR reported that FARC-EP had committed forced abortions and other degrading treatment against young girls in their ranks. A report was also received by OHCHR that two girls, aged 7 and 11 years from Florida, Department of Valle del Cauca, were sexually abused by a soldier from the San Mateo Battalion on 19 November 2006.

120. There have been some reports of schools being occupied by illegal armed groups. Landmines and abandoned explosive ordnance are often left behind once the illegal armed groups retreat from their occupation of these facilities. A school in Guacamayal, Caldas Department, is still surrounded by landmines. On the other hand, in Puerto Caicedo, Putumayo Department, a school was occupied by members of the National Army. In La Joya, also in Putumayo Department, tanks were placed at the entrance of a school as part of a military checkpoint from July to September 2007.

Developments in the Philippines

121. Armed clashes in the Philippines intensified during the reporting period as the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) stepped up its military campaigns against non-State armed groups, particularly in Mindanao. Government forces have reiterated their declaration of an all-out war and engaged the rebel New People's Army (NPA) in skirmishes. Although the Moro National Liberation Front signed a final peace agreement with the Government in 1996, some of its factions based in the Province of Sulu, southern Philippines, have fought AFP in several large-scale confrontations. AFP and its paramilitary allies have also battled elements of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) in the Provinces of Basilan, Shariff Kabunsuan and Maguindanao despite an existing agreement on cessation of hostilities. Military campaigns against the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) in Basilan and Sulu also continue. Despite these conflicts, the ability to document child rights violations remains weak.

122. During the reporting period, the Government recorded the recruitment of 11 children, allegedly by NPA: 1 from Leyte, 7 from Samar and 3 from Agusan del Sur.

Three of the children are girls and remain in the custody of the Department of Social Welfare and Development awaiting reintegration. The remaining children have been released to their families. The children were allegedly captured by Government forces in the course of their military operations. However, United Nations partners claim that the children were innocent civilians who happened to be in the areas where the military conducted their patrols or armed encounters took place. The Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP) reiterates its policy not to recruit children under age 18 as armed combatants, although it does not deny using children for non-combatant functions in violation of international legal standards. CPP claims disciplinary action is taken against violators of this policy, although monitoring of such compliance remains limited.

123. There are indications that children may be present in the ranks of MILF and ASG, however, owing to access limitations, no new reports of the recruitment and use of children were obtained in the reporting period.

124. United Nations partners reported that four children were killed, three in Mindanao and one in the Bicol region, and seven children were maimed in the Provinces of Cagayan, Davao del Norte and Sulu. Three of the children were girls between the ages of 9 and 14 years. Those incidents occurred during military operations or armed encounters against insurgents, and the victims and survivors have been branded as “rebels” or collateral damage. The most notable case was that of a 9-year-old girl who was killed when Government soldiers opened fire near her home in the Province of Compostela Valley on 31 March 2007, allegedly in pursuit of NPA guerrillas. The military had initially declared her an NPA child soldier but later recanted its accusation, and the Philippine Commission on Human Rights officially declared that she was “caught in the crossfire”. In another incident on 23 January 2007, in Baggao, Cagayan Valley, two girls aged 14 and 15 years were seriously injured by the 17th Infantry Battalion of the Philippine Army when they opened fire without warning in the area.

125. The Philippine country-level task force on monitoring and reporting was convened on 26 March 2007, comprising of United Nations system agencies and local human rights organizations. On 19 July 2007, the Government of the Philippines, through its Permanent Mission to the United Nations, has affirmed its concurrence with the implementation of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005). In addition, the Government is carefully studying the Paris Principles, which could pave the way towards improving programme interventions for children and armed conflict by the Government.

Developments in Sri Lanka

126. From 1 October 2006 to 31 August 2007, UNICEF received confirmed reports of 339 children being recruited or re-recruited by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), of which 41 per cent were from Batticaloa, compared with 679 children recruited in the preceding 11 months. In the same period, LTTE released 226 children, compared with 171 children released in the preceding 11 months, predominantly from Kilinochchi. Of the children recruited, 78 per cent were boys and 22 per cent girls. The average age of the children recruited during the reporting period was 16 years. Among the 6,221 children registered on the UNICEF database as having been recruited since 2001, 1,469 cases remain outstanding, including 335 children currently under 18 years of age as at 31 August 2007. The reported cases may only be indicative of the actual number of children recruited given access limitations in LTTE-controlled areas. LTTE has designated its so-called Child Protection Authority as the interlocutor on child recruitment issues and Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), and weekly dialogue between UNICEF and the so-called Child Protection Authority continues. As at 22 August 2007, eight children continued to reside in the Educational Skills Development Centre, in violation of the recommendations of the Working Group of the Security Council. At the time of reporting, UNICEF was in the process of arranging the return of those eight children to their families.

127. UNICEF received confirmed reports that 246 children had been recruited or re-recruited by the Karuna faction during the reporting period, compared with 154 children recruited in the previous 11-month period. Most of the children were recruited from Batticaloa. The Karuna faction released 80 children in the same period, compared with 14 children released in the previous 11-month period. The average age of the children being recruited by the Karuna faction was 16 years. All of the children recruited were boys, with the exception of one girl. From the 385 children registered on the UNICEF database as having been recruited, 214 cases remained outstanding as at 31 August 2007, including 160 children currently under 18 years old.

128. The majority of reported child abduction cases occurred in Jaffna, Batticaloa and Vavuniya. Abductions are carried out mainly in the context of recruitment, and are attributed to LTTE and Karuna faction. In some instances, children who were abducted were later found to have been killed. On 14 November 2006, four boys were abducted in Batticaloa. That case is part of several group abductions of children in the area which remain unresolved. On 18 December 2006, 22 students were abducted by LTTE for recruitment purposes while attending a tutoring class in Ampara. All of the children were released within two days as a result of UNICEF advocacy with LTTE. On 22 December 2006 and 18 March 2007, two boys were reportedly detained by the Government of Sri Lanka security forces in Jaffna and have subsequently been reported missing.

129. Since 1 October 2006, according to verified reports, 46 children were killed and 79 maimed owing to the conflict. This includes the deaths of 11 recruited children, 9 of whom were recruited by LTTE and 2 by the Karuna faction. More than half of the killings and maimings occurred in Batticaloa district. On 2 January 2007, a Sri Lankan Air Force aerial bombardment killed seven children and injured eight in Padahuthurai, an internally displaced persons village near Mannar. All but one of the children was under the age of 10 years. On 2 April 2007, three children were killed and four maimed in a bus explosion at a military checkpoint in Ampara attributed to LTTE.

130. Aerial strikes and shelling by the Sri Lankan Army (SLA) and attacks by LTTE have resulted in the destruction of schools and the death and injury of students and teachers. On 8 November 2006, an SLA artillery bombardment hit an internally displaced persons camp located in a school in Vaharai, Batticaloa. At least 26 civilians died, including at least 2 children, and at least 69 civilians were injured, including 21 children under the age of 15 years. On 7 December 2006, LTTE shelling hit a school in Trincomalee which resulted in the death of a teacher and injury of 15 people, including 5 children.

131. Hospitals have also been damaged during SLA operations in the reporting period. On 18 October 2006, the Gramodaya Health Centre in Vaharai was damaged by SLA shelling, and the Centre was used by SLA from January to the end of July 2007. The Special Task Forces of the Government of Sri Lanka have also been utilizing a maternity ward and on-call duty room at a hospital in Batticaloa since July 2007. On 14 July 2007, SLA shelling damaged the maternity section and outpatient department of a hospital in north Vavuniya.

132. LTTE submitted a draft action plan on 28 March 2007 and a revised version on 19 July 2007, following dialogue with the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting. However, those drafts committed LTTE to a minimum age of recruitment of 17 years until 1 January 2008, at which point the minimum age of recruitment would be raised to 18 years. The delay in raising the minimum age of recruitment to 18 years is contradictory to their previous commitments and international standards. At the time of reporting, LTTE had indicated that the minimum age of recruitment would be raised to 18 years. However, this has not translated into a commitment to release those between 17 and 18 years old at the present time. On the other hand, despite continued advocacy, there has been less progress with the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Puligal, the political wing of the Karuna faction. Following the commitment made to the Working Group of the Security Council, a committee comprising senior officials of the Government of Sri Lanka was established to carry out an independent and credible investigation into the allegations that certain elements of the Government security forces are supporting and sometimes participating in the abduction and forced recruitment of children by the Karuna faction. While the appointment of the committee is welcomed, there is an urgent need for the Government of Sri Lanka to investigate the allegations and take active measures to prevent grave violations against children, including the abduction and recruitment of children by the Karuna faction, especially in Government-controlled areas. Action is also still required by the Government of Sri Lanka to address the situation of children who sought special protection and surrendered to Government forces and who are currently in Pallekele and Jaffna Prisons, including the need for appropriate rehabilitative measures.

Developments in Uganda

133. Although the Government of Uganda has no deliberate or systematic policy to recruit children, the lack of effective monitoring at the local level leads to children continuing to join some elements of the armed forces. During the reporting period there were 16 cases of recruitment and use of children aged 14 to 17 years by the Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF). Three cases were reported in Pader district in which children who had escaped from LRA were used for gathering intelligence before being released in February 2007. In that regard, UPDF did not make use of the agreed civilian reintegration structures in place. Three other cases were reported in the Teso subregion in May 2007, but with the full cooperation of UPDF, the children were later released to OHCHR. The other 10 cases concern the use of children within auxiliary forces of the UPDF, in particular the local defence units. Young boys continue to serve in the local defence units in Anaka and Alero sub-counties, Amuru district, Acholiland. To date, there are still no signs of the release of 1,128 children reported to have been mobilized into the local defence units in late 2004 in Kitgum, Pader and parts of Teso region. The Government has claimed that the local defence units have been disbanded and some of its members integrated into UPDF and Uganda Police Force. During this process, the opportunity to utilize the agreed civilian reintegration structure in place was also missed. The country-level task force on monitoring and reporting noted that comprehensive planning for the demobilization and disarmament of children associated with the local defence units was an essential element for sustainable peace in northern Uganda. In early August 2007, the task force team met with the Minister for Foreign Affairs to finalize an action plan to prevent the recruitment and use of child soldiers within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005). A workshop was held in Kampala on 24 August 2007 with key stakeholders from the Government and the task force team, culminating in a draft action plan to be adopted by the Government shortly.

134. Since December 2006, 48 cases of rape and other sexual violence against girls perpetrated by UPDF or local defence unit elements were reported, of which 37 cases were recorded from March to August 2007 in Kitgum, Gulu, Lira and Amuru districts. Thirty-four of the latter offences were committed by UPDF forces, and three were perpetrated by members of the local defence units. Most of those cases occurred in internally displaced camp settings and return areas. In February 2007, four girls were abducted by a UPDF soldier in Gulu district, resulting in the rape of two of the girls, aged 12 and 14. In the same month, another 14-year-old girl was raped and strangled to death by a local defence unit soldier in Amuru district. Although these cases have been reported to the police, no arrests have been made either owing to difficulties in identifying the perpetrator or because the suspects have disappeared.

135. Two primary schools in Aswa county, Gulu district of Acholiland, were occupied by military forces and used for military training purposes. Through OHCHR intervention, the army vacated the schools on 23 August 2007. In Lira district, the Baralegi primary school in Okwang sub-county is still occupied by military forces. Owing to severe damage to the school structure, the Government plans to build new schools.

136. Owing to the absence of LRA in Ugandan territory during the reporting period, no cases attributable to it have been recorded by the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting. LRA has not released any children from the Ri-Kwangba assembly point in Southern Sudan. However, since the signing of the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement in August 2006, approximately 70 children, 15 per cent of whom are girls, have returned from Southern Sudan to reception centres in Gulu, Kitgum, Pader and Lira. The majority of the children had either escaped or were captured by UPDF or SPLA forces, while six children were transferred from the Toto Chan reception centre in Juba, Southern Sudan. Those children have been successfully reintegrated into their communities through UNICEF-supported child protection programmes. A mechanism is currently in place to receive the remaining children still held by LRA. The country-level task force continues to advocate for the release of all children and women remaining in LRA captivity.

C. Sexual exploitation and abuse of children by United Nations peacekeeping and other United Nations personnel

137. During the reporting period, the United Nations continued to seek ways in which to strengthen the institutional framework to prevent and address sexual exploitation and abuse by peacekeepers and other United Nations personnel, with some initiatives directed specifically at preventing the abuse of children.

138. The ability of the United Nations to cover field locations grew considerably, and as at 31 July 2007, the Department of Field Support has established Conduct and Discipline Units to cover 18 peace operations.<sup>3</sup> Those units are responsible for receiving, monitoring and tracking complaints of sexual exploitation and abuse

139. In 2006, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) reported the receipt of 371 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse. Some 357 of these were from United Nations peace operations, which represents a 5 per cent increase in reported allegations from the previous year. During the first half of 2007, OIOS reported the receipt of 72 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse from United Nations peace operations. This downward trend in reported allegations is attributable to the impact of prevention and enforcement initiatives which the United Nations put in place over the course of 2005 and 2006. Of the allegations reported for peacekeeping operations during 2006, 82 investigations have been completed as of June 2007. Of those, five involved acts of sexual exploitation and abuse against minors. The completed investigations resulted in the dismissal or non-renewal of contracts of 1 civilian staff member and the repatriation of 1 police and 13 military personnel.

140. In June 2007, allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by a contingent of United Nations peacekeepers were reported in the United Nations peace operations in Côte d'Ivoire. Those allegations involved acts of abuse of young women and girls. OIOS was immediately informed and the investigation process was initiated. Owing to the seriousness of the allegations, the contingent concerned was cantoned. The Departments of Peacekeeping Operations and Field Support, together with the concerned Member State, remain actively seized of the matter.

141. Recognizing the importance of a strategy for victim assistance as a part of the comprehensive response to sexual exploitation and abuse, the General Assembly, in its resolution 61/291, established an ad hoc open-ended Working Group to consider a draft policy statement and comprehensive strategy on assistance and support to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations staff and related personnel (see A/60/877, annex). That Working Group commenced its deliberations during the sixty-second session of the General Assembly. It is anticipated that, when endorsed by the Assembly, the strategy will provide an institutional framework that will give much-needed support to children who are victims of abuse or are born as a result of cases of abuse by United Nations staff and related personnel. In the interim, victims of abuse may receive emergency medical and psychosocial support facilitated by United Nations operations on the ground in conjunction with local service providers. In some peace operations, such as in Liberia, the United Nations peace operation has established a Rape and Sexual Assault Rapid Response Team to ensure that swift action is taken to aid women and children who are victims of abuse. That team, which embraces local partners, has helped some minors to receive safe housing and medical attention. This initiative was intended to minimize the risk of losing or damaging critical evidence and to reduce the exposure of survivors of abuse to further trauma. The challenge now is to create sustainable initiatives for victims' support. Implementing this strategy is of critical importance.

142. A high-level conference on sexual exploitation and abuse, held on 4 December 2006, jointly hosted by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNDP and UNICEF, resulted in the issuance of a Statement of Commitment on Eliminating Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations and Non-United Nations Personnel, which contained 10 principles to facilitate rapid implementation of standards relating to the prevention and elimination of sexual exploitation and abuse. As at 31 July 2007, 40 United Nations and 31 non-United Nations entities had endorsed the Statement and committed to combating sexual exploitation and abuse.

143. Significant progress was made during the reporting period with the establishment of an effective legislative framework which members of national contingents are required to comply with. It is encouraging to note that in July 2007, the General Assembly unanimously endorsed recommendations to incorporate revisions on standards of conduct into the draft model memorandum of understanding between troop-contributing countries and the United Nations (see A/61/19 (Part III)). In addition to strengthening the accountability of uniformed contingent personnel, the revisions to the memorandum of understanding also emphasize the need to immediately collect forensic evidence in sexual exploitation and abuse cases in a manner which will be sufficient to prosecute perpetrators in their home country.

IV. Information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and mainstreaming of child protection in United Nations peacekeeping operations

144. As called for in paragraph 3 of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), a monitoring and reporting mechanism on grave child rights violations has been established in situations of armed conflict, listed in annex I of the Secretary-General's 2006 report, that are on the agenda of the Security Council, namely Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and the Sudan; and in other situations of armed conflict, listed in annex II of the Secretary-General's 2006 report, that have voluntarily implemented the monitoring and reporting mechanism, namely, Chad, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Uganda. The Government of Myanmar has also agreed to cooperate in establishing a monitoring and reporting mechanism within the framework of resolution 1612 (2005).

145. Since its inception, monitoring and reporting has moved from a concept to a concrete United Nations system response. The establishment of the monitoring and reporting mechanism has allowed for systematic, reliable, timely and objective information to be gathered on the six grave violations against children in armed conflict, including the identification of offending parties, which feeds into my country-specific reports examined by the Working Group of the Security Council on Children and Armed Conflict. The designation of these offending parties on the annexed lists of my annual reports has proven to have a deterrent effect and has allowed the relevant "destinations for action", such as the Working Group, to maintain political pressure and take action on parties to conflict who are found to be persistent violators of child rights. Reports generated through the monitoring and reporting mechanism process have also contributed significantly to increased international awareness on the issue of Children and Armed Conflict, particularly through their inclusion in Security Council resolutions and debates that have been generated in other United Nations forums.

146. There have been positive developments as a result of the recommendations and actions taken by the Working Group, including drawing the attention of the Security Council as well as its sanctions committees, where applicable, to the need to follow up on the recommendations addressed to them. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, after an initial delay, the Government brought to trial former Mai-Mai Commander Kyungu Mutanga, alias "Gedeon", for war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the recruitment of 300 children in Katanga Province from 2003 to 2006. This action follows strong recommendations by the Working Group to take appropriate legal measures against members of armed groups accused of grave crimes against children. In Côte d'Ivoire, the Working Group requested that Forces de Défense et de Sécurité des Forces nouvelles continue its dissemination of the command order to end the detention of children. Since then, that command order has been successfully implemented, and regular monitoring of prisons and detention facilities in areas under the control of FDS-FN is carried out by the United Nations to ensure that no children are incarcerated.

147. Direct contact and dialogue by the Working Group with all the Government representatives of countries whose situation had been considered by the Working Group has also played a role in encouraging their active participation in its meetings, and in obtaining their positive commitments to protect children affected by armed conflict. The Government of Sri Lanka reaffirmed its zero-tolerance policy for the recruitment and use of children and reiterated its commitment to the Working Group by establishing a committee comprising high-level Government officials to conduct an independent and credible investigation into allegations that some security forces are abetting the Karuna faction in the recruitment and use of children. The Government of Uganda also reiterated its commitment to finalize its action plan pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) in order that the Uganda People's Defence Forces and local defence units be removed from the annexes of my annual reports.

148. Similarly, cooperative and constructive engagement by the Working Group with parties in situations of conflict not on the agenda of the Council, such as the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Uganda, has resulted in their acceptance of the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism pursuant to resolution 1612 (2005).

149. However, in certain situations, increased pressure is required against persistent and recalcitrant violators of child rights, such as dissident General Laurent Nkunda in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Janjaweed in the Sudan, and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam in Sri Lanka, by further considering the need to impose targeted measures against those parties.

150. In my 2006 report to the Security Council, I recommended that the monitoring and reporting mechanism be expanded to give equal care and attention to children affected by armed conflict in all situations of concern, thereby encouraging the establishment of the mechanism in all situations on the annexed lists. In April 2007, the Working Group placed the situation of children affected by armed conflict in Myanmar on its agenda. Despite the agreement achieved with the Government of Myanmar on monitoring and reporting mechanism implementation, the issue of access in a timely manner to conflict-affected areas, as well as other Government restrictions, are factors that need to be overcome to enable the effective and independent functioning of the mechanism. In situations not on the agenda of the Council, such as Chad, Colombia and the Philippines, overriding factors such as insecurity, restriction or denial of access to certain areas of the country and insufficient resources pose a significant challenge to the establishment of a rigorous monitoring and reporting mechanism. For example, precarious and unpredictable security situations in eastern Chad or in certain areas of operation of illegal armed groups in the Philippines and Colombia make it difficult to obtain accurate and up-to-date information on child rights violations.

151. My Special Representative has undertaken several country missions to carry out high-level advocacy on issues of children and armed conflict and to assist the authorities, United Nations and civil society partners in improving the situation of children in armed conflict. Several of these country missions have been mandated by the Working Group. Cooperation from Governments in extending their invitation to my Special Representative has been instrumental in achieving those objectives. In the reporting period, missions to Sri Lanka (November 2006); the Sudan (January 2007); the Democratic Republic of the Congo (March 2007); Lebanon, Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel (April 2007); and Myanmar (June 2007) were carried out by my Special Representative or, in the case of Sri Lanka, by the Special Adviser to the Special Representative. Specific outcomes of those missions have been described under the relevant country situations in section III of the present report.

152. My 2006 report highlighted the findings from the study of child protection experience in peace operations<sup>4</sup> commissioned by the Peacekeeping Best Practices Section, as called for in paragraph 20(d) of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005). The study recognized the crucial need of child protection advisers, and the significant impact they achieve through their monitoring and reporting capacity in increasing the attention to the rights of war-affected children on the United Nations peace and security agenda. The study, however, also brought attention to the need for a clear inter-agency decision-making process to ensure that all child protection actors are playing a role in such a way that takes advantage of their comparative strengths.

153. Five main lessons emerged from the study, namely: (a) the concept of child protection advisers and their current terms of reference should be jointly reviewed and clarified by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and UNICEF; (b) there is a need for a specialized capacity at the Department of Peacekeeping Operations headquarters to provide guidance, training and daily operational support to the child protection advisers in the field; (c) best practices need to be captured from child protection advisers and fed into policy and guidance development by the Department, in consultation with the Office of the Special Representative, UNICEF and other partners; (d) the location of child protection units or advisers within the mission structure needs to be reviewed and possibly standardized; and (e) the profile and selection process for child protection advisers should be reviewed by the Department, in consultation with the Office of the Special Representative and UNICEF. The Peacekeeping Best Practices Section is currently in the process of recruiting a senior-level child protection focal point, who will be responsible for following up on the above-mentioned lessons and recommendations.

154. The child protection advisers should also be placed in Afghanistan, Iraq, Lebanon and the Occupied Palestinian Territory to augment the human rights monitoring expertise in the respective missions. There should also be the placement of child protection advisers within the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur and United Nations-European Union multidimensional presence in Chad and the Central African Republic. This would strengthen the task of monitoring and reporting, as well as help to provide timely and accurate information for prompt advocacy and response to the issue of children affected by armed conflict in those conflict situations.

155. The Committee on the Rights of the Child has recently adopted new reporting guidelines under the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, which encourage States parties to cooperate with my Special Representative and the monitoring and reporting mechanism as per the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in the implementation of the Optional Protocol.

V. Information on progress made in the development and implementation of action plans

156. Pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005), parties are called upon to develop and implement concrete time-bound action plans, in close collaboration with United Nations peacekeeping missions and/or United Nations country teams. During the reporting period, progress on action plans has been made with armed forces and groups in four country situations on the agenda of the Security Council, namely, the Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Myanmar and the Sudan; and two parties in country situations not on the Council's agenda, namely Sri Lanka and Uganda. In Chad, although an action plan has not been developed, the Government signed an agreement with UNICEF to demobilize child soldiers from the armed forces.

157. In the reporting period, several factors have contributed to the compliance by parties, including their engagement in action plans to halt and prevent the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict:

(a) There has been sustained engagement and pressure on parties by the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, including the possibility of targeted measures;

(b) Trust and confidence-building measures carried out by the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting and United Nations country teams with parties have resulted in significant achievements with respect to the demobilization and release of children associated with armed forces and groups;

(c) The visits of my Special Representative have provided the opportunity for high-level advocacy and opened doors for follow-up dialogues with military and political authorities by the task force and United Nations country teams;

(d) The continued mainstreaming of issues on children and armed conflict in the peacekeeping missions through child protection advisers, and enhanced cooperation with UNICEF and OHCHR are resulting in greater efforts for the protection of children.

158. While progress has been made with certain parties to conflict, progress with others has been slower. In Sri Lanka, the draft action plan submitted by LTTE commits the group to not recruit children under 17 years of age, which is inconsistent with international standards. In Myanmar, although KNU and KNPP had engaged with the United Nations on deeds of commitment following their listing on the annexes of my annual report to the Security Council in 2006, the Government of Myanmar had been reticent to allow for further dialogue owing to various concerns relating to their status as non-State actors. Similar sensitivities apply to the conflict in Colombia. In Uganda, an action plan which meets international standards has yet to be finalized.

VI. Recommendations

159. It is recommended that the Security Council consider giving equal care and attention to children affected by armed conflict in all situations of concern listed in the annexes to my report.

160. It is further recommended that the Security Council give equal weight to all categories of grave violations, including not only the recruitment and use of children, but also the killing and maiming of children, rape and other grave sexual violence, abductions, attacks against schools or hospitals and denial of humanitarian access to children.

161. While recognizing the efforts and cooperation by some countries, the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) should be supported in all situations of concern.

162. The Security Council is encouraged to continue to call upon parties in situations of armed conflict listed in the annexes to my report to prepare concrete time-bound action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children and other violations and abuses committed against children for which they are cited, including the killing and maiming of children, rape and other grave sexual violence, abductions, attacks against schools and hospitals and denial of humanitarian access to children, in violation of international obligations applicable to them, and to expand the call for action plans to all situations of concern.

163. I welcome the Security Council's continuing consideration of effective targeted measures against parties to armed conflict who continue to systematically commit grave violations against children in armed conflict in defiance of recommendations by the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict and of Council resolutions. The Security Council should consider a range of measures, including a ban on the export or supply of arms, a ban on military assistance, the imposition of travel restrictions on leaders, their exclusion from any governance structures and amnesty provisions, and restriction of the flow of financial resources to the parties concerned.

164. The Security Council is encouraged to empower its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict to recommend to the Council the imposition of targeted measures, and to monitor the implementation of such measures, on parties to armed conflict who commit grave violations against children in all situations of concern listed in the annexes to my report.

165. It is recommended that all future peacekeeping missions and relevant political missions include within their mandates child protection advisers, as appropriate, to strengthen monitoring and reporting and provide timely and accurate information for prompt advocacy and response for the protection of children affected by armed conflict in those situations.

166. Member States concerned should take effective action to bring to justice individuals responsible for the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations against children through national justice systems. The Security Council is encouraged to refer to the International Criminal Court, for investigation and prosecution, violations against children in armed conflict that fall within its jurisdiction.

167. Member States concerned should coordinate with my Special Representative on her engagement with non-State parties to ensure the broad and effective protection of children exposed to situations of concern.

168. States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child are encouraged to take measures to support the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child; to strengthen national and international measures for the prevention of recruitment of children into armed forces or armed groups and their use in hostilities, in particular by signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and enacting legislation that explicitly prohibits the recruitment of children into armed forces/groups and their use in hostilities; to submit reports under the Optional Protocol to the Committee on the Rights of the Child; and to exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction in order to strengthen the international protection of children against recruitment.

169. Member States are urged to work towards the implementation of a comprehensive strategy on assistance and support to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations staff and related personnel, thereby enabling children who are victims of or born as a result of such abuse to receive much-needed support.

170. Adequate resources and funding need to be made available by donors to national Governments, the United Nations and partners to support the rehabilitation and reintegration of all children who have been associated with armed forces or armed groups, including relevant and effective programmatic action that reinforces such efforts, while ensuring their long-term sustainability and viability.

171. Member States are urged to address immediately the grave humanitarian, human rights and development consequences of cluster munitions. To that end, Member States are encouraged to conclude a binding instrument that prohibits the use, development, production, stockpiling and transfer of cluster munitions that cause unacceptable harm to civilians; requires the destruction of current stockpiles of those munitions; and provides for clearance, risk education and other risk-mitigation activities, victim support, assistance and cooperation, and compliance and transparency measures.

172. The present report contains two annexes.<sup>6</sup> Annex I lists parties that recruit or use children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children. Annex II lists parties that recruit or use children either in situations of armed conflict not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern, also bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children.

173. It should be noted that the annexes do not list countries as such. The purpose of the annexed lists is to identify particular parties to conflict that are responsible for specific grave violations against children. In this respect, the names of countries are referred to only in order to indicate the locations or situations where offending parties are committing the violations in question.

<sup>5</sup> Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), the present report is guided by criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence. Reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

General Assembly
Sixty-third session
Agenda item 60 (a)

Promotion and protection of the rights of children

Security Council
Sixty-third year

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Security Council presidential statement (S/PRST/2008/6), by which the Council requested me to submit a report on the implementation of its resolutions 1612 (2005), 1261 (1999), 1314 (2000), 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003) and 1539 (2004) on children and armed conflict. The report includes information on compliance with applicable international law to end the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict and other grave violations being committed against children affected by armed conflict;<sup>1</sup> information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children, as well as progress made in mainstreaming children and armed conflict issues in United Nations peacekeeping and political missions; and a brief summary of the conclusions of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, and of its progress.

2. The report includes a proposal to strengthen the monitoring and reporting on rape and other grave sexual violence against children. The Office of my Special Representative has also identified the following emerging concerns in relation to the children and armed conflict agenda as key priority areas for action and continued advocacy. These concerns include internally displaced children and their particular risks for recruitment; terrorism and counter-terrorism measures and its impact on children; the accountability of child soldiers for acts committed during armed conflict, and special protections accorded to them; control on the transfer and use of arms and ammunitions, particularly to countries where children are known to be, or may potentially be, recruited or used in hostilities; and measures to achieve sustainable reintegration of children affected by conflict.

3. The report covers compliance and progress in ending the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations, including the killing and maiming of children, rape and other grave sexual violence, abductions, attacks on schools and hospitals, and the denial of humanitarian access to children by parties to armed conflict.

4. The preparation of the present report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict at Headquarters, country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams, as well as with concerned Member States and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams are the primary sources of information for the report.

5. References to reports, cases and incidents in the present report refer to information that is gathered, vetted and verified for accuracy. In situations where access to obtaining or independently verifying information received is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such.

6. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in identifying the situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is guided by the criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence.<sup>2</sup> In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, with a humanitarian emphasis, focusing on ensuring broad and effective protection for children exposed and affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

II. Information on compliance and progress in ending the recruitment and use of children and other violations being committed against children

7. The present report provides information on developments covering the period from September 2007 to December 2008, as well as some developments that have extended beyond the reporting period. Reports of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Afghanistan, Burundi, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Dusko Tadic*, Case No. IT-94, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia Appeals Chamber (2 October 1995).

Congo, Myanmar, Nepal, Philippines, Somalia, Sri Lanka and Uganda were also submitted to the Security Council and its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict during the reporting period.

8. Progress made by the parties listed in annexes I and II to the present report, and named in the body of my 2007 report (A/62/609-S/2007/757), have been assessed with respect to whether they have ceased recruiting and using children, and whether they have refrained from committing other grave violations against children. Progress made by the parties is also assessed with respect to whether they have engaged in dialogue with country-level task forces on monitoring and reporting, as called for in Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005), and whether through that dialogue, or in the context of other processes, such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes or the signing of peace agreements, they have developed and implemented action plans to end the use of children and released all children from their ranks, and made specific commitments to address other grave violations against children for which they have been cited.

9. Parties who fully comply with terms set forth in action plans and undertake verified measures to address other grave violations for which they have been cited, to the satisfaction of the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting and the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict, will be considered for de-listing from the annexes. Ongoing monitoring by the country-level task force on monitoring and reporting is required to ensure the protection of children and compliance with the undertakings given by parties that have been de-listed. Should it be determined that de-listed parties recruit and use children at a later point in time, or fail to allow continuous and unhindered access to the United Nations for verification, they will be re-listed onto the annexes, and the Security Council will be alerted to the non-compliance.

A. Information on compliance and progress in situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Developments in Afghanistan<sup>3</sup>

10. Allegations of recruitment of children by armed groups, including those associated with the Taliban, have been received from all regions, particularly from the south, south-east and east. Recruitment is also reported to be prevalent in areas with high concentrations of returnees or internally displaced persons, particularly in the south and south-eastern provinces. Recently, allegations were received of children living in the southern border areas who were being approached and offered money to carry out activities on behalf of armed groups. A study conducted by the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) also documented cases of children being used by the Taliban to carry out suicide attacks.

11. There are also concerns that due to inadequate age-verification procedures in its recruitment processes, children have been found in ranks of the Afghan National Police.

12. Children have been captured, arrested and detained by Afghan law enforcement agencies and international military forces because of their alleged association with armed groups. There is evidence of children being ill-treated, detained for long periods of time by the National Directorate of Security and prevented access to legal assistance, in contravention of the provisions of the Afghan Juvenile Code and international standards on juvenile justice. In November 2007, a 17-year-old boy arrested by the National Directorate of Security in relation to the murder of the head of the Department of Women's Affairs by the Taliban in Kandahar was detained with no charge until August 2008 and was allegedly severely beaten and deprived of food and sleep. He was later transferred to National Directorate of Security detention in Kabul, tried and sentenced to 15 years of imprisonment in Pul-i-Charki adult prison.

13. Reports of child casualties due to the conflict have been received from all across Afghanistan. Children are caught between opposing sides in the ongoing conflict in the southern and eastern regions. Between January and December 2008, 73 children were killed and 91 injured in the eastern region; and 100 children were killed and 116 injured in the southern region. Children have also been victims of asymmetric attacks, which have included suicide bombings, vehicle-borne improvised explosive devices, body-borne improvised explosive devices, and attacks by anti-government elements including the Taliban, in the north-east, west and central regions, which primarily target national and international security forces, governmental infrastructure and personnel. For example, on 20 October 2008 in Kunduz Province, a suicide bomber blew himself up in the vicinity of an international forces checkpoint, killing five children and seriously injuring two more. Furthermore, a total of 106 children (94 boys and 12 girls) were killed and 409 children (354 boys and 55 girls) injured from landmines and unexploded ordnance in the reporting period, mainly in the Baghlan, Kabul and Kandahar provinces.

14. Since my last annual report, there has been an escalation of incidents affecting the education sector, including attacks on schools, students and teachers. From September 2007 to September 2008, 321 cases were recorded, compared to 133 cases reported over the same period last year. As of September, the Ministry of Education reported that 99 schools had been attacked, burned or destroyed by anti-government elements, including the Taliban, and 600 schools were closed since the start of the year, with 80 per cent of the closures being in the southern provinces of Helmand, Kandahar, Zabul and Urozgan. Students, teachers and other education personnel have been threatened or killed. During the reporting period, approximately 20 children were killed and 27 seriously injured, mainly in the central and south-eastern regions. These incidents were perpetrated by anti-government elements, including the Taliban. A particularly disturbing incident occurred on 12 November 2008, when Taliban militants attacked a group of girls en route to school by throwing acid on their faces. They were reportedly paid 100,000 Pakistani rupees for each girl they were able to burn. Schools have also been unintentionally damaged in artillery exchanges with anti-government elements and international military forces.

15. The conflict has negatively affected access to basic health services in almost half of the country, with the southern region being the most affected. Medical personnel have been targeted by anti-government elements, including the Taliban. On 14 September 2008, two World Health Organization (WHO) doctors and their driver were killed by the Taliban during a targeted suicide attack in Spin Boldak. The impact of the violence is further exacerbated by the dissemination of night letters throughout the country by anti-government elements, including the Taliban, instructing civil servants to stop working for government and international organizations. This is instilling fear and panic, and particularly affecting female health service workers.

16. Humanitarian access is increasingly restricted in conflict-affected areas, aggravated by recurrent threats, beatings, abductions and killings of humanitarian workers, attacks and looting of aid convoys. Anti-government elements, including the Taliban, were responsible for more than 144 attacks on humanitarian personnel in 2008, in which 38 humanitarian workers were killed. These groups have expanded their presence turning many areas of the country into “no-go” zones, particularly in the south, south-east and east. As of December 2008, 79 out of 398 districts were inaccessible to United Nations agencies for the delivery of humanitarian assistance to millions of Afghans, including children.

17. Reports of children being sexually abused and exploited by members of armed forces and groups were documented. Although some incidents were investigated and perpetrators sentenced to imprisonment, in most incidents they are not officially reported for fear of retaliation, and only a few reach the prosecution stage. Nevertheless, a few cases of influential leaders of armed groups using young boys for sexual purposes were prosecuted.

Developments in Burundi

18. The Parti pour la libération du peuple Hutu-Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL) led by Agathon Rwasa continues to recruit and use children. From January to December 2008, 152 children between the ages of 9 and 17 were confirmed to have been recruited by FNL. An increase in the incidence of recruitment coincided with the 26 May 2008 Government/FNL joint declaration on the cessation of hostilities and the gathering of FNL in pre-assembly and assembly areas where the recruitment of hundreds of students along with or by their teachers was reported. The children were promised demobilization benefits by FNL, which was probably seeking to inflate its numbers. During the initial verification of FNL combatants assembled in Rugazi in June 2008, approximately 150 children were present. In August 2008, following the sensitization on children in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, FNL submitted a list acknowledging the presence of 30 children in Rugazi, although their separation was blocked on two occasions by the FNL leadership. This issue has still not been resolved.

19. Children were also found associated with the alleged FNL dissidents at the Randa and Buramata assembly areas. The alleged dissidents agreed to the release of all children in exchange for their inclusion in the formal demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation process. In April, the separation and demobilization of 220 children was completed, and all the children were reunited with their families by July 2008. An additional 69 children associated with the alleged dissidents were identified in September 2008, and their separation by the national authorities is pending the establishment of the new government disarmament, demobilization and reintegration structure.

20. The Group of Special Envoys for Burundi met in Bujumbura on 16 and 17 January 2009. Following the meeting, they issued the Bujumbura Declaration, which set out deadlines on critical aspects of the peace process, including the unconditional separation of all children associated with FNL by 30 January 2009. FNL failed to meet that deadline. It subsequently assured the Government and the international community of its willingness to release the children associated with the movement, but again made the release conditional on the start of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process for all its combatants and the integration of its members into security institutions. Despite repeated pledges and agreements, FNL has failed to cooperate on this issue.

21. In October 2008, allegations were received of child recruitment by forces of General Laurent Nkunda's Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP). According to the Burundi National Police, investigations on possible recruitments were being carried out in Cibitoke and Bujumbura Marie provinces. The country task force is closely monitoring the situation.

22. Sexual violence against children continues to be a serious concern, with a vast majority of the reported victims being girls. From January to December 2008, the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi registered 476 cases of rape and sexual violence against children between the ages of 1 and 17 years, of which 449 were girls and 27 boys. The perpetrators included members of the Burundi National Police, the Burundi National Defence Forces, FNL and alleged FNL dissidents, although a majority of the cases were perpetrated by civilians in an environment of insecurity and impunity. The recent adoption of the revised Penal Code by the National Assembly and by the Senate with amendments that strengthen the sentencing of perpetrators of sexual violence against children is welcomed.

23. Reports indicate that Armée populaire pour la restauration de la République et de la démocratie (APRD), Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR), Forces démocratiques populaires de Centrafrique (FDPC), and Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLCJ) recruit and use children. Self-defence militias are also found to be recruiting children into their ranks, particularly in the Ouham-Pénde region. There are concerns that these militias have in some cases been supported by the Government of the Central African Republic and that they have been used as auxiliaries by the Forces armées centrafricaines (FACA). An increasing presence of armed children recruited by these militia groups has been sighted along main roads from Bossangoa to Bouar to Bocaranga. Although not a systematic practice, there are also reports of some elements of FACA and the Presidential Guard committing other grave violations against children, including killing, maiming, and attacks on schools.

24. In February and March 2008, attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) on villages in the Obo area, in south-eastern Central African Republic, led to the abduction of approximately 55 children (40 boys and 15 girls). The majority of the children abducted were under 15 years of age. According to the testimonies of some children who were abducted and later released by LRA, the children were being used as soldiers and for auxiliary tasks, and some of the girls were used as sexual slaves. Two girls under the age of 18 testified that they were repeatedly gang-raped by LRA elements.

25. Incidence of rape and sexual violence against children by armed elements is of grave concern. In March 2008, 5 of the 15 girls released by UFDR were found to have been regularly sexually violated by members of the group. Three girls reported that they were either raped or gang raped. All the girls were between the ages of 11 and 17 at the time of release. Cases of rape and sexual violence and of abduction, killing and maiming of children have also been attributed to the zaraguinas, who are from the Central African Republic, the Sudan, Chad, Cameroon, Mali and Uganda, and on occasion are made up of elements from the Central African Republic rebel groups or from the Chadian and the Central African Republic armed forces.

26. Patterns of displacement are unique in the Central African Republic, and can be distinguished in two categories. In the first case, persons leave their villages in an organized manner and stay in the bush for a few days. Such “preventive” displacement or coping strategy is usually provoked by rumours of movements of armed forces and groups or zaraguinas. In the second case, displacement is a reaction to unexpected attacks on villages by armed forces and groups or zaraguinas, and populations typically have no time to organize their escape and leave without any basic necessities. They may hide in the bush, move from one village to the other, or end up in the internally displaced persons camp of Kabo (central north). In this unpredictable context, children are particularly vulnerable, given the possibility of being left behind or suffering grave violations such as abduction and recruitment, killing, maiming, or sexual violence.

Developments in Chad<sup>5</sup>

27. Information gathered by the United Nations confirms that there is a consistent pattern of recruitment of children by both Government forces and rebel groups, including in refugee camps and internally displaced persons sites, particularly in eastern Chad. Between March and August 2008, there were reports of missing children recruited in all camps visited. All indications show that those children have joined the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) rebel group. In most camps, some refugee leaders act as focal points to facilitate the recruitment of children, in particular for JEM. These leaders reportedly take advantage of social gatherings in the camps, such as religious celebrations or wedding parties, to incite children into joining the rebellion. The Government of Chad is reported to be aware of this fact, and, according to consistent information received, some local officials have been assisting in the recruitment.

28. The presence of military elements in the camps has been reported. According to information received, JEM has opened offices in some camps, including in Oure Cassoni (Bahai), the second largest refugee camp in the country, and the closest to the Sudanese border. It has also opened offices in the city of Iriba, broadcasting and distributing public appeals, calling for people, including children, to support and join them.

29. The recruitment and use of children is also perpetrated by other Sudanese armed groups generally referred to as Toroboros. The Toroboros are reported to have recruited children in the Breidjine and Treguine refugee camps between July and August 2008.

30. Thousands of children remain associated with armed groups belonging to different rebel factions such as the Convention révolutionnaire démocratique du Tchad (CRDT), Concorde nationale tchadienne (CNT), Front uni pour le changement (FUC) and Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement (UFDD).

31. Government officials deny that Armée Nationale Tchadienne (ANT) recruits children. However, it should be noted that 13 per cent of the 555 children released from the armed forces and groups in 2007 and 2008 originated from ANT, particularly from the Centres d'Instruction Militaire of Lumia and Moussoro, and from the Gendarmerie Nationale, including the Legion de Abeche and École de la Gendarmerie de N'Djamena. Further, most Chadian self-defence groups operating in Ade, Dogdore and Mogororo, listed in my last annual report, have been integrated into the Chadian national army. These elements received formal training at the Moussoro Military Instruction Centre. There are no more children present in their ranks.

32. In addition, at the end of 2007 and throughout 2008, children were reportedly recruited by the Direction Générale de Sécurisation des Services et Institutions de l'Etat (DGSSIE), which is directly in charge of special military operations. Those children were recruited south and east of N'Djamena for the sum of 333,000 FCFA each (US$ 600), or in exchange for a motorcycle. Many of them were sent to DGSSIE training centres in Amtinene and Moussoro. Information corroborated from various sources confirmed that approximately 100 children from a DGSSIE contingent left the Moussoro training centre in July 2008, and were deployed in different units of the DGSSIE in the Gassi and Amtinene camps and Camp des Martyrs in N'Djamena. They are frequently spotted in the streets of N'Djamena and in the operational units in Tine, Adre, Am Zoer, Goz Beida and Abeche in the east.

33. Women and girls in refugee camps and internally displaced persons sites, as well as in the surrounding towns and villages, have been subject to sexual assaults. Rape and physical assaults directed at girls are mainly attributed to unidentified uniformed armed men but also to ANT soldiers from units operating in the hills of Goz Beida and Modeina area. Cases of sexual and gender-based violence show an increasing trend of abuse towards refugee and internally displaced females, in particular girls under the age of 10.

34. The reporting period was characterized by a number of attacks targeting humanitarian personnel and assets. In most cases, the attackers seized material assets, while in others the attackers were more violent, killing humanitarian staff. Perpetrators are believed to be mainly armed elements and members of rebel groups who use extorted property for their military campaigns. There were also reports that, in some instances, members of ANT were implicated in incidents against humanitarian personnel. The consequences of these attacks for civilians and children in particular have been severe. Humanitarian programmes were disrupted in Iridimi, Touloum, Ade, Adre and Dogdore. It is important to note that in many incidents of carjacking of humanitarian vehicles, the attackers drove into the Sudan, emphasizing the cross-border nature of this problem.

Developments in Côte d'Ivoire

35. There was no substantiated evidence of use of child soldiers by armed forces or groups in the reporting period. In February 2008, the United Nations Operations in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) received a small number of allegations against militia groups in the west, which were investigated through the established United Nations verification modality and disproved. The leadership of the groups allowed full and unhindered access by the United Nations for verification. Following that, the militia groups issued a communiqué on 17 February 2008 condemning the use of child soldiers and reiterating their full commitment to their action plan and to Security Council resolutions. Similar cooperation is also extended by Forces de défense et de sécurité des Forces nouvelles (FDS-FN).

36. Rape and other sexual violence, as well as other grave violations against children, are prevalent throughout Côte d'Ivoire and are perpetrated with impunity by individuals and groups, often unidentified, who take advantage of the current deficit in the rule of law and administration of justice. The situation is more serious in areas under the control of FDS-FN in the north of Côte d'Ivoire. Some progress has been noted in Government-controlled areas, although many reported cases remain uninvestigated or unprosecuted.

37. In follow-up to the conclusions of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, the Ministry of Family, Women and Social Welfare requested UNOCI to submit a draft proposal to the Government on the creation of a national commission for children affected by armed conflict, in accordance with international law and taking into account the principles relating to the status of national institutions. A separate proposal on the establishment of a national action plan to combat sexual violence was also submitted at the request of the Government in September 2008. These proposals are under review by the Government.

38. The leadership of FDS-FN also developed and signed a programme of action against sexual violence on 19 January 2009, in response to the request of the Working Group. The programme of action includes elements of prevention, addressing impunity and providing witness protection and assistance to victims of sexual violence, and will constitute a stopgap measure pending the establishment of a national action plan to combat sexual violence by the Government. In a letter addressed to my Special Representative in Côte d'Ivoire dated 17 April 2008, the militia groups in the west also expressed their willingness to join efforts to address sexual violence.

Developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo<sup>6</sup>

39. During the reporting period, the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) documented a total of 554 children (including 26 girls), who were newly recruited. Of those documented cases, 86 per cent occurred in North Kivu, 12 per cent in South Kivu, 1 per cent in Oriental province and 1 per cent in Rwanda. New cases of recruitment of children have been attributed to Coalition des patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO) (29 per cent), all Mai-Mai factions (32 per cent), CNDP (24 per cent) and Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) (13 per cent). A total of 1,098 children, including 48 girls, were documented to have separated from or escaped from armed groups.

40. Although systematic recruitment of children by the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) have ceased in accordance with their military policy and applicable international laws, children continue to be integrated into the force through the brassage process, owing to lack of proper screening. The release of children present within FARDC has been frequently obstructed, and child protection partners have been denied access to brassage centres by some FARDC commanders in order to identify and separate children. The presence of some children continues to be reported in remaining non-integrated FARDC brigades, particularly in the Kivus.

41. The recruitment of children and their use in active combat by CNDP increased because of the resumption of fighting with FARDC in late 2007 and since September 2008. In November 2008, CNDP recruited children from schools in Masisi and Rutshuru territories. CNDP also detained children captured from various armed groups during the fighting.

42. FDLR and its sub-groups FDLR-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FOCA), FDLR-Rally for Unity and Democracy and FDLR-Soki continue to recruit children, including many children from Rwanda. Between June 2007 and September 2008, a total of 84 Rwandan children separated from armed groups were repatriated by MONUC. Out of that total, 48 were recruited by FDLR, 25 by CNDP, 7 by FARDC and 4 by Mai-Mai groups.

43. In Ituri, following the surrender of the main militia leaders, no new recruitments were reported from Mouvement révolutionnaire congolais (MRC) and Forces de résistance patriotique en Ituri (FRPI). Only a few cases of recruitment were documented and attributed to Front nationaliste et intégrationniste (FNI).

44. Widespread sexual violence remains a grave concern, with a majority of the perpetrators being elements of armed groups in the regions of active conflict, but also including FARDC soldiers and national police officers. In 2008, children constituted 2,727 cases of sexual violence in Oriental province; among them 2,204 cases in Ituri, 528 cases in South Kivu, and 1,196 cases in North Kivu.

45. Since September 2008, reports of abduction of large numbers of children by LRA were received. As of November 2008, MONUC documented 154 cases following the LRA attacks in and around Dungu, Haut Uélé district, Oriental province. At the end of December 2008, further cases of abduction, killing and sexual violence against children were reported after attacks on Faradje and Doruma. Between September and December, 104 children escaped LRA and received reintegration support by child protection partners. In December 2008, FARDC, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and the Uganda People's Defence Force (UPDF) launched a joint military attack on LRA rebels in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, provoking the dispersion of LRA towards the Sudanese border and south of Congolese territory.

46. During the periods of renewed fighting in North Kivu, there was an increase in reports of attacks on schools and health facilities by CNDP and Mai-Mai. As FARDC reinforced their positions, cases of lootings and occupation of schools and health facilities attributed to FARDC elements in Ituri and the Kivus were reported. From July 2008, at least 10 violent attacks on humanitarian convoys, institutions and individuals attributed to the Mai-Mai and 5 cases attributed to FARDC soldiers were received.

47. Recent significant events such as the splitting of CNDP, the detention of Laurent Nkunda by the Rwandan Government and the joint military operations by FARDC and Rwandan Defence Forces (RDF) against FDLR may also carry significant implications for children, in terms of the increased risk of children being used in military operations, or killed or injured in hostilities, as well as the demobilization of children within CNDP and other armed groups.

Developments in Georgia

48. The dramatic escalation of hostilities in South Ossetia, Georgia, on 7 and 8 August 2008, and the subsequent conflict significantly affected the situation in and around the regions of Abkhazia and South Ossetia. According to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the fighting has led to the displacement of approximately 158,700 persons, with 120,700 displaced within Georgia and 38,000 South Ossetians having sought refuge in the Republic of North Ossetia of the Russian Federation. UNICEF has estimated that, as of 1 January 2009, there remain 12,000 children internally displaced and 400 children displaced in the Republic of North Ossetia of the Russian Federation.

49. According to the Georgian Ministry of Labour, Health and Social Affairs, a total of 228 persons, including two children, were killed during and immediately after the hostilities. Reports indicate that some of the casualties were due to action by regular troops that fought during the August conflict, as well as by South Ossetian militias. According to the de facto authorities in South Ossetia, there were approximately 1,692 civilian casualties, including children. However, the United Nations indicated 391 civilians were killed and 2,234 injured. Mines and other unexploded remnants of war continue to pose a threat to a returning population in the areas adjacent to the South Ossetia administrative boundary line. Seven people, including three children, have been injured by unexploded remnants of war in various villages in Shida Kartli region. As of the end of September 2008, approximately 26,500 unexploded remnants of war were cleared from the adjacent areas and 98,240 from the South Ossetian zone of conflict.

50. Approximately 99 schools suffered damage from the conflict to varying degrees, including from rocket attacks. Loss of school equipment and furniture was also reported both as a result of military action and subsequent looting. In Tskhinvali, 6 schools and kindergartens were destroyed, and 22 others were damaged, according to the de facto authorities in South Ossetia.

51. As of the beginning of September 2008, 13 clinics in Gori and in the adjacent areas were not functioning owing to infrastructure damage and/or the displacement of health-care workers, having serious consequences for the provision of health services to children. Doctors and nurses were also killed or seriously injured from sniper shooting or bombardments of medical infrastructure during the conflict. Clinics in Karaleti and Dvani were severely damaged; Tkviavi hospital and three clinics in Mereti, Nikozi and Berbuki were damaged; and several primary health-care facilities in Dzevera, Mereti and Nikozi were completely looted. Almost all health-care facilities in South Ossetian villages, including in Sarabuk, Pris, Tbet, Khetagurovo and Satikar, were totally destroyed. The main hospital in Tskhinvali was hit by rockets reportedly launched by Georgian forces.

52. There has been no humanitarian access to South Ossetia from the south since the August conflict, although the United Nations has been allowed full access to Abkhazia, Georgia. This has limited the ability of the United Nations to obtain information on the situation of children and their needs and to investigate child protection concerns. Humanitarian access to South Ossetia is currently provided through the Republic of North Ossetia of the Russian Federation. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) gained access to its office in Tskhinvali on 20 August 2008, and provides humanitarian assistance to the four districts comprising South Ossetia, including Tskhinvali.

Developments in Haiti

53. Since my last annual report, armed elements in Haiti have been dismantled through military and police operations by the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) and the Haitian National Police. However, children were used in violent political demonstrations throughout the country, roadblocks and lootings, as well as in the attempt to enter the Presidential Palace compound in April 2008. MINUSTAH military battalions reported that approximately 30 per cent of the protestors were children. MINUSTAH confirmed that 45 children were arrested under charges of criminal conspiracy and detained in the Delmas-33 detention centre, in Port-au-Prince, for their participation in the violent demonstrations. Children also continue to be used by armed elements to carry out abductions and weapons smuggling.

54. In the last quarter of 2007, MINUSTAH reported an alarming phenomenon among some armed elements in the area of Jamaica Base, Cité Soleil. These groups were equipping children with toy guns that looked realistic, and the children had approached MINUSTAH military checkpoints brandishing these weapons. Preliminary investigations indicated that the armed elements acting as political spoilers were using the children in an attempt to instigate public disorder.

55. The abduction of children remains a serious concern, particularly in Port-au-Prince and Cap-Haitien. A total of 126 children, including 60 girls, were abducted by armed elements in the reporting period. The majority of girls abducted were also raped or sexually abused. Students on their way to or from schools have been particularly targeted by abductors.

56. Despite an overall improvement in security, 52 children were killed in the reporting period, mainly caught in cross-fire between Haitian National Police and armed elements.

57. Sexual violence, including gang rapes, against children perpetrated by armed elements in the context of insecurity and impunity continues to be reported. The report on sexual violence against girls and women in Haiti by the National Forum against Violence against Women (Concertation Nationale contre les violences faites aux femmes) estimated that from cases documented between January and June 2008, 50 per cent of the rape victims were girl children. The report highlights that the number of reported cases has increased, as a result of the improved security situation allowing girls to seek support without fear of retaliation and sensitization activities encouraging girl victims to obtain follow-up assistance.

58. MINUSTAH confirmed that 297 children, including 30 girls, are being detained in detention centres throughout the country as at the end of December 2008; 60 per cent of them are being detained for their alleged association with armed groups and 87 per cent are held in prolonged pre-trial detention, some of them since 2004.

Developments in Iraq

59. While the human rights situation in Iraq remained serious in 2008, the country has witnessed gradual stabilization and security improvements, with a lower number of violent, high-visibility, high-casualty attacks by non-State armed groups and criminal gangs. The capabilities of groups such as Al-Qaida in Iraq have diminished considerably over the past several months. However, Al-Qaida in Iraq is now suspected of training children to become fighters or insurgents, after video footage of such training sessions was discovered during a raid by United States soldiers on a hideout in Khan Bani Saad, north-east of Baghdad, in February 2008. In another reported case, on 26 May, in Sumer (Mosul), Iraqi troops arrested six boys between the ages of 15 and 18, who were suspected of being trained by a Saudi Al-Qaida member to carry out suicide bombings.

60. There are particular concerns about non-State armed groups allegedly using children to support operations such as transporting improvised explosive devices, acting as lookouts for other armed actors and as suicide bombers. On 15 May 2008, insurgents strapped explosives to a young girl and remotely detonated her as she approached an Iraqi Army command post in Yousifiyah; on 2 September, a 15-year-old boy blew himself up among pro-government militia members in al-Tarmiyah (northern Baghdad); and on 10 November, a 13-year-old girl blew herself up at a checkpoint in Ba'qubah.

61. The case of a 15-year-old girl, would-be suicide bomber, made international headlines when she was arrested by Ba'qubah police on 24 August 2008, still wearing an explosive vest. She was married to an alleged Al-Qaida militant at the age of 14, after leaving school at the age of 11. Both her father and brother had allegedly been suicide bombers.

62. While there are no reports of children in the new Iraqi Army, there are disturbing reports of children being recruited into the ranks of the Awakening Councils. The recent decision by the Iraqi Government to integrate the Awakening Councils into the Iraqi Army may alleviate these concerns. United Nations partners have documented 472 children who have been recruited and used by local militias in disputed areas.

63. Killing and maiming due to armed violence remained a continuing occurrence although at decreased levels in Iraq, and children were among the victims. On 31 December 2007, five children were victims of a suicide car bomb in al-Tarmiyah; on 16 July 2008, a car bomb explosion in a market in Tal Afar (Ninewa governorate) killed nine children; and on 22 September, a bomb blast in Hammam al-Ali (south of Mosul) killed five children who were playing near their homes. There were some cases of attackers directly targeting children. These include an incident that occurred on 18 November 2007 in Ba'qubah, when a suicide bomber detonated his vest containing explosives while United States soldiers were handing out toys to children in a playground, killing three children. On 22 January 2008, a suicide bomber blew himself up at the entrance to al-Mutwra school in Ba'qubah, injuring 17 students and 4 teachers.

64. Civilians, including children, were unintentionally injured or killed by multinational force (MNF-I) air strikes, military ground operations or during checkpoint confrontations. The most notable campaign was the MNF-I joint action with Iraqi security forces on militias in Baghdad's Sadr City in April and May 2008. Although militias were successfully driven out, the use of air strikes and other high-calibre weaponry in the densely populated area led to a considerable number of civilian casualties. The spokesman of the Baghdad Security Plan reported that, as of 30 April, 925 people had been killed due to many causes, including insurgent killings. Many of those killed were non-combatants, but no precise gender or age disaggregation of victims was carried out.

65. There have been incidents of children being killed by employees of private military and security companies. On 16 September 2007, at least one child was among the 17 persons killed by Blackwater guards in Baghdad's Nisoor Square, when they fired into a crowd of civilians following an alleged security threat. Five indictments were handed down against Blackwater team members in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for manslaughter. A sixth Blackwater member has already pleaded guilty to one count each of manslaughter, attempted manslaughter and aiding and abetting.

66. As of December 2008, there were 838 children in conflict with the law under custody of the Government of Iraq. Some children have been detained or imprisoned for conflict-related reasons such as alleged participation in insurgent activities or other forms of association with armed groups. During a United Nations Assistance Mission in Iraq (UNAMI) visit to the central prison of Fallujah, it was revealed that in one cell (of 25 square metres) reserved for juveniles, 29 inmates as young as 14 years old were being confined. Eight of the children have been in pre-trial detention for more than one year. Children continue to face the threat of sexual and physical abuse by Iraqi police and prison guards, particularly upon arrest and during the early stages of investigations. Detained children have also been allegedly subjected to threats and ill-treatment by investigators with the aim of obtaining a confession. The Government of Iraq has made serious commitments to improve the conditions of children in detention. UNICEF and UNAMI human rights advocacy to apply the Amnesty Law of February 2008 contributed to the release of 750 children detained in Iraqi facilities without trial or formal charges.

67. The administrative detention of children allegedly associated with armed groups by MNF-I had been a major concern in the recent past. The situation is no longer at a crisis level, with a decrease in detainee figures from 874 as of 8 December 2007 to approximately 500 as of mid-May 2008, and to 58 as of 17 December 2008. The children are being treated well, but the vague basis for their internment "required for imperative reasons of security" remains troubling. The United States-Iraq security agreement that came into force on 1 January 2009 no longer authorizes MNF-I to detain individuals for reasons of imperative security.

68. Children's access to education has been compromised by insecurity and population movement due to insecurity in 2007 and 2008. The UNESCO National Education Support Strategy from Iraq released in April 2008 estimates that 2 million children of primary school age do not attend school largely because of the security situation. UNICEF received reports that schools have also been threatened by groups promoting religious extremism, particularly against girl schools in south and central Iraq. On 27 March 2008, armed elements blew up a school building in Saydiyah.

69. In Diyala governorate, efforts were under way to have MNF-I, the Iraqi Army and Iraqi police units vacate more than 70 school buildings they had occupied and used for military purposes. The use of public buildings for military purposes may continue to decrease given the end of the “surge”, improving conditions on the ground, and articles within the United States-Iraq security agreement that require United States forces to vacate all Iraqi cities and villages by the end of June 2009.

Developments in Lebanon

70. As a result of the use of cluster munitions by Israel during the 2006 conflict, the United Nations Mine Action Coordination Centre has investigated and recorded seven child casualties (one killed and six injured) in the reporting period. These incidents occurred in Nabatieh and Bint-Jbeil. Children will continue to be exposed to the threat of explosive remnants of war in all affected regions because of the unprecedented usage of cluster munitions in residential areas, villages, schools and agricultural lands, and as long as there is lack of information on the cluster bomb strike data and the clearance of the munitions. During her mission to Lebanon in April 2007, my Special Representative requested the Government of Israel to hand over the strike data to the Government of Lebanon or the United Nations Mine Action Coordination Centre in south Lebanon; however, there has been no response from the Government of Israel to date.

71. Although Lebanon has signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, it has not yet ratified it. Although the ratification instrument was submitted to Parliament on 11 February 2002, ratification continues to be delayed.

Developments in Myanmar

72. According to official reports shared by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Government of Myanmar continues to screen and release underage children found in its armed forces during the training process. The Government informed that 68 children were detected in various military training schools and were released to their parents and guardians during the reporting period. The 68 cases included 12 children who were released through the International Labour Organization (ILO) mechanism, 1 released and reported to ICRC, and 2 released and reported to ILO and ICRC. ILO, through its mechanism to eliminate the use of forced labour, has verified the release of 23 children, mostly from involuntary military enrolment, based on complaints filed by parents and relatives. An additional 14 cases either await Government response or remain open while the process continues. The complaints lodged have been dealt with expeditiously by the Government Working Group for the elimination of forced labour, although they are assumed to represent only a portion of the actual cases.

73. The Government further informed that it has discharged nine military recruitment officers from service for violating the national military recruitment law. The United Nations has not been able to verify that. However, on underage recruitment cases received by ILO, no action against perpetrators has been taken under either the Penal Code or military regulations which results in imprisonment. ILO has noted that three military personnel received administrative penalties, such as a demotion or loss of salary, for the illegal recruitment of children. Minor progress has also been made with the recent release and quashing of cases involving two underage recruits who were imprisoned for desertion.

74. The Government also informed the United Nations country task force that it has put procedures in place for the rehabilitation and reintegration of underage recruits. UNICEF has not been permitted access to children who were released through the Government's mechanisms for follow-up purposes. Discussions with the Government have been initiated by the United Nations to address methods for accessing released children, as well as to undertake inspections of recruitment centres, training schools and camps, with a view to identifying children, gaining their release and subsequently supporting their reintegration and rehabilitation.

75. Details on children released and verified by ILO as already being in the care of their families have been shared with UNICEF. UNICEF is working towards offering them rehabilitation support as appropriate under their existing child protection programme, subject to its gaining Government approval. No broader programme initiative is available at the present time.

76. UNICEF met Wa authorities in early 2008, which included a visit to two military camps, where the Wa State Army was managing and running four primary schools. This is worrisome, given the allegations of their recruitment and use of child soldiers. The Wa reported that the students are not given military training and that they are attired in military uniform because these are affordable. The children are orphans, street children or children from poor families. No further assessment was carried out and there has been no further contact with the Wa authorities.

77. Reports from camps along the border areas found one case of a child recruited by the Karen National Union (KNU) and three cases of children associated with the Karenni National Progressive Party (KNPP). A 14-year-old boy escaped from KNU in January 2008, after being forced to join in September 2006. In June 2008, a 16-year-old boy travelled to a KNPP base to become a soldier. His parents visited the base and requested his release, which was refused by KNPP. The parents sighted approximately 20 children at the base. The monitoring and reporting mechanism has been established in all nine camps along the border in order to improve the verification of cases and raise awareness on the issue of child soldiers among camp residents.

78. Although there have been reports of the presence of children among other groups listed in my 2007 report (i.e., the Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA), Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council, Kachin Independence Army (KIA), Karenni National People's Liberation Front (KNPLF), Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (Kokang) in northern Shan State, and the Shan State Army-South), the United Nations had not been able to establish contact with any of these groups as of end December 2008.

Developments in Nepal<sup>7</sup>

79. As of 25 May 2006 2,973 Maoist army personnel were assessed to be under the age of 18, and, at the time of reporting, were still being held in Maoist army cantonments. Following the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Nepal to my Special Representative on 5 February 2009, the Army Integration Special Committee decided to request the Government to immediately release the children from the cantonments. Prior to the formal verification procedures called for in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of November 2006, many children informally self-released, and in some cases, escaped or went absent after official leave. In other cases, children were released after negotiations by their families or members of the country monitoring and reporting task force. There are 10 documented cases of self-released children being pressured or forced to return to cantonment sites by the Unified Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) (UCPN-M), the Maoist army or the Young Communist League (YCL), the youth wing of UCPN-M. Since July 2007, approximately 7,500 children and young people formerly associated with armed forces and groups, and 3,000 children affected by the conflict, have benefited from community-based reintegration programmes in 58 districts.

80. During campaigning for the Constituent Assembly election held on 10 April 2008, all major political parties either used children or did not prevent children from participating in the electoral campaign. In some cases, YCL used children in acts of intimidation. On election day many children between the ages of 7 and 15 years were observed participating in political party activities, some violent, breaching the election code of conduct which restricts the use of children. The participation of children in demonstrations raised protection concerns when violence by some demonstrators and excessive use of force by security forces caused injury to some children. Children were sometimes given risky roles in these demonstrations, such as carrying flaming torches, burning tires and throwing stones at the police, and there were instances where homeless children were paid to undertake these roles. The creation of militant youth wings with self-declared policing roles, including YCL, the Communist Party of Nepal-Unified Marxist-Leninist (UML) Youth Force, the Madhesi Peoples Rights Forum and the Nepali Congress, are also raising protection concerns.

81. As an update on the previously reported case of Maina Sunuwar, a 15-year-old girl who died while in custody of the then Royal Nepal Army in 2004, a case was filed and the district court issued a summons for the four army officers accused of intentional homicide to appear before the court. The four officers were all still at large at the time of reporting.

82. Abductions, killings, explosions of improvised explosive devices and attacks on schools and teachers by armed groups in the Tarai (southern plains) region continued, with children making up a disproportionate number of the victims. Three cases of abduction and killings of teachers and principals were attributed to the Tarai armed group Janatantrik Tarai Mukti Morcha led by Jwala Singh, and one case of abduction of a 6-year-old child was attributed to the Tarai Mukti Tigers. Some Tarai armed groups are alleged to have been recruiting and using children, and the United Nations is seeking to verify these allegations.

Developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel

83. A total of 112 Palestinian children were killed in the reporting period up to 26 December 2008 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and a further 431 children were killed during the hostilities from 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009. Of the total 543 children killed, 96 per cent of deaths were as a result of Israeli Defense

Forces (IDF) operations and 4 per cent were because of factional violence. The majority of deaths occurred in Gaza. The main causes for the killings included shootings during IDF raids, Israeli search and arrest campaigns, IDF launched ground-to-ground and Israeli Air Force missile strikes, tank shells fired in the course of IDF ground operations, aerial bombardments and a few cases of shootings at crossings as children approached IDF checkpoints. Children were also killed during armed clashes resulting from Palestinian factional violence.

84. A total of 581 Palestinian children were injured in the reporting period up to 26 December 2008 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, with 71 per cent of the injuries occurring in the West Bank. From 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009, an additional 1,871 children were injured in Gaza. The main causes of injuries included shelling and aerial bombardment by IDF, rubber-coated metal bullets fired by IDF at protestors during demonstrations, IDF military operations, including search and arrest campaigns, military incursions, and assaults by Israeli settlers. During her visit to Israel in April 2007, my Special Representative raised with the Israeli authorities the issue of the frequency of settler attacks on Palestinian children in Hebron and al-Tuwani village and the need for effective law enforcement and accountability. The Government committed to fully investigate the cases; however, the outcome of these investigations is pending. Approximately 35 children have also been injured during armed clashes as the result of Palestinian factional violence.

85. Four Israeli children were killed by a Palestinian gunman in an attack on a Jewish seminary in West Jerusalem. In addition, 15 Israeli children were injured, mainly as a result of rockets fired from the Gaza Strip towards Israel and stone throwing.

86. While there have been reported incidents of children being trained and/or used by Palestinian militant groups in Gaza, community members are reluctant to provide information on cases of children used by armed forces or armed groups for fear of reprisals. Significant progress has been made towards the implementation of an informal monitoring system on child rights violations.

87. There are concerns that Hamas reportedly used children as shields and may have used schools and hospitals or areas in their proximity to launch rockets into Israel during the December 2008 and January 2009 hostilities. These concerns must be further investigated.

88. On 15 January, in Tal al-Hawa, south-west of Gaza City, an 11-year-old boy was made to accompany IDF for a number of hours during a period of intense operations. As the soldiers entered the Palestinian Red Crescent Society building, the boy was made to enter first, in front of the soldiers. While moving through the town the boy was made to walk in front of the group, even when the IDF soldiers met with resistance and were fired upon. On arrival at Al-Quds Hospital, the boy remained in front of the soldiers, but then was subsequently released. This appears to be in direct contravention of a 2005 Israeli High Court ruling on the illegality of the use of human shields.

89. Continued raids and use of schools by IDF and Israeli settlers have resulted in damage to property, but, more significantly, they have resulted in the injury and death of students and teachers. A total of 27 incidents of raids by IDF soldiers and Israeli settlers attacking both governmental and United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) schools and students have been reported. During the hostilities in December 2008 and January 2009, 7 schools were destroyed and 157 government schools were damaged in Gaza. A total of 36 UNRWA schools were lightly damaged. Further, 14 hospitals and 38 clinics were damaged or destroyed. A total of eight UNRWA health facilities were lightly damaged.

90. A total of nine schools and kindergartens in Sderot, Be'er Sheva, Ashdod, Ashkelon and Kiryat HaHinoch were hit and damaged by Qassam and Grad rockets launched by Hamas during the December 2008 and January 2009 hostilities.

91. Humanitarian access to Gaza was severely strained through much of the reporting period, but deteriorated further with the onset of the December 2008 and January 2009 hostilities. While Israel kept one crossing open at partial capacity during that period of hostilities, key crossings remained closed and movement within the Gaza Strip was severely restricted. In both the West Bank and Gaza, the lives of children continue to be put at risk because of difficulties in accessing specialized medical services in East Jerusalem as a result of border restrictions and applications for permits to cross checkpoints. While children often receive permits, their parents frequently do not and as a result they are unable to access medical treatment. A total of 13 children are known to have died in Gaza in the reporting period after Israeli authorities denied access to specialized medical services in Israel.

92. The arrest of children by Israeli military authorities and their detention continue to be significant concerns. Children are arrested and sentenced on a range of charges, including throwing stones at the barrier or at Israeli security forces, demonstrations against the occupation, and violence against security forces. At any given point during the reporting period, between 281 and 337 Palestinian children were being held in Israeli prisons and detention centres, including children as young as 12 years, in violation of international humanitarian law. Approximately eight girls were detained and serving terms of imprisonment. Reports indicate that due process was systematically violated throughout the stages that led children into detention, including arrest, interrogation, trial and sentencing. Statements taken from 21 children who had been arrested and detained indicate that children continued to be subjected to abuse, including beatings, blindfolding, solitary confinement, forced confessions in a language they do not read or write, food being withheld, yelling and insults, and exposure to loud noises. Upon release, a number of children reported that they had been approached to provide information on behalf of the Israeli intelligence service.

93. Further, between 8 and 15 children were being held in administrative detention at any given point during the reporting period. Children can be detained in administrative detention for up to six months without charge or trial on the basis of information of which neither the detainees nor their legal representatives are advised. The administrative detention of two girls aged 16 years, with no charges made against them, was reported. That was the first reported incident of girls in administrative detention recorded by the United Nations. The girls have since been released.

94. Approximately 1,369 Palestinians were forcibly displaced or affected as a result of home demolitions of 192 Palestinian-occupied residential structures in Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, by Israeli forces. A confirmed 440 children and an additional estimated 194 children were impacted. The December 2008 and January 2009 hostilities resulted in a dramatic increase in home demolitions, with at least 112 demolished homes, affecting hundreds of children.

Developments in Somalia<sup>8</sup>

95. A situation analysis on children and armed conflict administered by UNICEF and partners, with the participation of community leaders in central and southern Somalia, indicated that approximately 1,300 children have been recruited into the Transitional Federal Government forces, the remnants of the former Islamic Courts Union (ICU), Al-Shabaab and clan-based armed groups throughout central and southern Somalia, particularly in and around Mogadishu. The community leaders informed that boys in Al-Shabaab were used as frontline combatants, and girls were recruited into cooking and cleaning roles. Most of the recruitment takes place from schools. In the clashes in Guriel and Dhusamareb in December 2008, eyewitness accounts indicated that between 30 and 45 per cent of Al-Shabaab combatants were children. Seven of these children were killed and three were injured in these clashes.

96. Violence escalated between armed forces and groups, mostly between the Transitional Federal Government security forces, the Ethiopian National Defence Force (ENDF) and African Union Mission to Somalia (AMISOM) forces against opposition groups, including the remnants of the former ICU, Al-Shabaab and other clan-based armed groups, and children are often killed or injured in the crossfire. Children have been killed and maimed as a result of indiscriminate attacks that have included the use of artillery, mortar, rocket fire, gunfire and improvised explosive devices in areas with high civilian concentration, including busy market places and residential areas. Reports indicate that anti-government armed groups, including Al-Shabaab and clan-based armed groups, used strategies that reduced their visibility in civilian areas, placing civilians at risk, and used children to detonate improvised explosive devices against the Transitional Federal Government and ENDF soldiers. In October 2008 alone, 19 children were killed and 10 injured in Mogadishu. In one case, two children demonstrating against Ethiopian presence in Somalia were shot and killed by ENDF soldiers following the detonation of an improvised explosive device during the demonstration. According to community leaders, approximately 100 children have been killed or injured by landmines and unexploded ordnances in central and southern Somalia in the reporting period.

97. Rape and other sexual violence were committed by both members of armed forces and groups, as well as civilians, in the context of breakdown in law and order. Children and women living in internally displaced persons settlements in Bossaso, Galkayo, Hargeisa and along the Afgoye corridor reported a large number of rapes. Between July and September 2008, 303 cases (292 girls and 11 boys) were reported in the north-west zone of Somalia. Perpetrators are rarely brought to justice and in some cases victims are forced to marry the perpetrators or be killed under traditional law. In October 2008, a 13-year-old girl was stoned to death for adultery by local authorities after being raped by three men in Kismayo. Cases of rape by ENDF soldiers have also been reported.

98. Since mid-2007, 144 schools in five districts of Mogadishu were closed at various times, as they were attacked or risked being attacked because the surrounding areas became scenes of conflict between ENDF, the Transitional Federal Government, AMISOM and anti-government armed groups, including Al-Shabaab and clan-based armed groups. These included targeted attacks by the Transitional Federal Government on students and teachers of Koranic schools in Mogadishu, owing to the perception that children in these schools are being mobilized to join the insurgency and are therefore considered legitimate military targets. A total of 34 schools were temporarily occupied by armed groups or used as military bases by armed forces at various times throughout the reporting period. On 22 October 2008, the President of the Somalia National Union of Teachers reported that the 34 schools and universities that remained open in Mogadishu had to be closed because of the general insecurity, the presence of Government forces in close proximity and an increasing number of deaths of students and teachers.

99. An escalation in the number of humanitarian aid workers who have been targeted has resulted in reduced access to the 3.2 million Somalis, including approximately 1.6 million children, requiring emergency assistance. During the reporting period, 34 humanitarian workers were killed, 26 were abducted and many others were harassed, received death threats or were detained for questioning.

Developments in the Sudan<sup>9</sup>

100. In southern Sudan, the United Nations confirmed the recruitment and use of 101 children by the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA). More children are present in SPLA, although the exact numbers cannot be determined prior to the completion of the registration exercise currently under way. The United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) child protection officers have been able to regularly access SPLA military barracks to register children. As of 31 December 2008, 68 children were registered for demobilization, although their release and reunification have met with serious delays. Government authorities have also reported on the spontaneous demobilization of some children associated with SPLA. These children are unaccounted for to date. In some states, SPLA has been reported to be including previously registered children in troop movements prior to the children being officially released. Children were also witnessed among the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) in the Abyei area.

101. The United Nations reported the recruitment and use of 487 children by various armed forces and groups operating in all three Darfur states, with a majority taking place in the state of Western Darfur. The fragmentation and proliferation of opposition armed groups have created fertile ground for recruitment, with over 14 Sudanese and foreign armed forces and groups identified in Darfur for recruiting and using children. These include the groups identified in my 2007 report, which are Justice and Equality Movement (JEM (Peace Wing)), Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Free Will, SLA/Abu Gasim/Mother Wing, SLA/Minni Minnawi, SLA/Abdul Wahid; Government forces including SAF, Central Reserve Police and militias supported by the Government; as well as Chadian opposition groups. New groups identified include Justice and Equality Movement, Movement of Popular Forces for Rights and Democracy, SLA/Peace Wing, SLA/Unity and various tribal groups in the north. There is no evidence of recruitment by the Popular Defence Forces and SLA/Shafi.

102. The increasing activities of the Lord's Resistance Army, including the recruitment of children, in Western Equatoria state were also reported.

103. On 10 May 2008, approximately 110 children, between the ages of 11 and 17, were among the JEM forces who attacked Omdurman, Khartoum, who were captured by SAF. A presidential decree pardoned 99 children, all of whom have been reunified with their families in the three Darfur states, Khartoum, South Kordofan, El Gedarif and While Nile states, as well as some in Chad. Four children were released at a later date, while the whereabouts of 5 others remain unknown. One 16-year-old received the death penalty.

104. Sexual violence continues to be a major concern in Darfur, where the United Nations verified cases of 53 children, the youngest being 6 years old, who were raped by armed elements. One third of the cases occurred within the vicinity of internally displaced persons camps. Perpetrators were identified by witnesses or victims as Government forces, including the Border Intelligence Force, the Central Reserve Police, SAF, police forces and militias supported by the Government.

105. United Nations monitors reported the killings of 42 children and injuries to 20 children across Darfur, mainly during attacks on villages, market places and internally displaced persons camps, or during clashes between different armed groups. The perpetrators include SAF, the Central Reserve Police and police forces, as well as armed groups such as JEM, SLA/Unity, SLA/Minnawi, militias supported by the Government, Chadian opposition groups and tribal groups. Children were also killed or injured in continuous aerial bombardments by SAF, primarily in Northern Darfur state. Between March and May 2008, 12 children were killed and 7 injured during six such aerial bombings.

106. All attacks on schools or hospitals in Darfur occurred during ground attacks or clashes between different armed groups. In September 2007, five schools and a clinic were burned in connection with an attack on Haskanita. An investigation by the United Nations has noted that the whole town had been burned in what seemed to be a systematic and intentional operation committed by splinter groups from both SLA/Unity and JEM. However, most lootings of schools and hospitals occurred in Western Darfur, including by SAF and militias supported by the Government.

107. The reporting period was marked by a substantial increase in attacks against humanitarian workers and premises in Darfur. As of October 2008, a total of 19 humanitarian workers were killed and 38 injured in Darfur; 227 humanitarian workers were abducted; and 293 vehicles were stolen, which seriously affected food deliveries to Darfur. Despite the extension of the moratorium on restrictions, the humanitarian community continues to face Government restrictions, such as delays and denials of work permits for international NGO staff, as well as access impediments for humanitarian missions in the field. For instance, in early 2008, the Government denied access for 40 days to humanitarian agencies assisting some 160,000 conflict-affected people, including an estimated 80,000 children in the northern part of Western Darfur.

B. Information on compliance and progress in situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern

Developments in Colombia

108. The Government of Colombia adopted a comprehensive policy to prevent the recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups, including the creation of a high-level intersectorial commission in December 2007, aimed at reducing the risks of recruitment of and violence against children. The Government also continues to carry out programmatic efforts to reintegrate children separated from illegal armed groups into their communities.

109. Information has been received on the recruitment and use of children by the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) in the departments of Antioquia, Arauca, Caqueta, Cauca, Choco, Guaviare, Nariño, Putumayo, Santander, Sucre, Valle del Cauca and Vaupés, as well as by the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) in the departments of Arauca, Cauca, Nariño and Norte de Santander. Both FARC-EP and ELN are reported to be recruiting from schools. In addition, in September, FARC-EP abducted three girls, aged 12, 14 and 16, in Arauca department; and in May 2008, FARC-EP recruited five indigenous children, between the ages of 12 and 16 years, from the Waunaan community, in Choco department. Children are used by these groups to take part directly in hostilities, to provide logistical support and for intelligence services. In Ituango, Antioquia department, a child was used by FARC-EP to transport weapons and explosives. In several cases, children have been tortured or killed by these groups for resisting recruitment or when they intended to escape.

110. Recruitment frequently leads to the displacement of affected populations in order to avoid the recruitment of their children. The Constitutional Court, in its order No. 251 of October 2008, confirmed that child recruitment is one of the main causes of displacement in the country. In March 2008, 18 children from a rural community in Putumayo department were forced to leave their homes to avoid recruitment by FARC-EP.

111. Recruitment is also a common practice of armed groups that emerged after demobilization. In March 2008, the recruitment of children by Autodefensas Campesinas Nueva Generación (AC-NG) was confirmed in the Nariño department. The United Nations has collected several testimonies from children and adolescents separated from the former Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia, in which they report having been contacted to join these armed groups.

112. According to information from the Colombian Institute for Family Welfare (ICBF), a total of 402 children separated from FARC-EP, 86 from ELN and 1 from the Ejército Popular Revolucionario (EPR) during the reporting period. ICBF also reported that a total of 44 children separated from armed groups such as AC-NG and Ejército Revolucionario Popular Antiterrorista de Colombia (ERPAC), and other armed elements such as the Aguilas Negras, Rastrojos and the Cooperativa de Seguridad de Meta y Vichada. The Government considers these groups as criminal gangs largely involved in criminal activities related especially to drug trafficking. Children are still assumed to be present in these groups. In August 2008, following the demobilization of the Ejército Revolucionario Guevarista (ERG) in Choco, 7 children, including 3 girls, were released.

113. According to the Colombian High Commissioner for Peace, 391 children were released by AUC within the demobilization framework under the Justice and Peace Law from 2002 to 2006. Approximately 432 children separated individually, outside the negotiations with AUC, although credible information indicates many more children associated with AUC did not undergo the formal demobilization process. The Attorney General's office met with the former commanders of the Elmer Cardenas Block, the Central Bolivar Block and the Autodefensas del Magdalena Medio to exclusively address the issue of recruitment of children in order to establish accountability for former recruitment cases within the framework of the Justice and Peace Law. More than 1,000 cases of illicit recruitment by such groups have been denounced under the Justice and Peace Law as of December 2008. Further, the Attorney General is currently investigating 141 cases of child recruitment under the Penal Code, and there were three convictions for this crime during 2008.

114. The United Nations received credible information regarding the use of children by some members of the security forces for intelligence purposes despite Government policy to the contrary. Three directives have been issued by the Ministry of Defence prohibiting this practice, in accordance with the national law on childhood and adolescence. It was reported in February 2008 that a 12-year-old boy was used by the police as an informant in Valle del Cauca department. As a consequence, the boy received death threats by FARC-EP and was later killed in December 2008. Also in February, it was reported that members of the army and national police solicited information from children in rural communities in Carmen de Atrato and Quibdo, in Choco department, on the locations of guerrilla groups and the identities of their members.

115. Children are victims of indiscriminate attacks by illegal armed groups or are often caught in crossfire in clashes between illegal armed groups and national armed forces. A total of 15 children have also been killed and 29 injured by anti-personnel mines and unexploded ordnance laid by FARC-EP and ELN between September 2007 and October 2008.

116. Credible information on cases of extrajudicial executions of children was gathered by the United Nations. In January 2008, a 17-year-old boy disappeared from Soacha municipality near Bogotá, and was presented as "killed in combat" a day later by the Armed Forces in Norte de Santander, a department on the border with the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. A similar case involved a child from Gamarra municipality, Cesar department, in August 2008. The Ministry of Defence has issued three specific directives and established a transitory commission in October, to investigate cases of extrajudicial executions, which has resulted in the dismissal of 37 military officers as of January 2009.

117. According to Constitutional Court order No. 092 of April 2008, the impact of sexual violence against girls has increased. Perpetrators include illegal armed groups and members of the Armed Forces. The Attorney General's office has initiated investigations, and there have been a number of convictions as of December 2008.

118. During the reporting period illegal armed groups continued to attack or occupy schools for military purposes and target teachers. Schools are also often damaged as a result of military clashes between illegal armed groups and the Armed Forces. In May 2008, two schools in Dagua municipality, Valle del Cauca department, were seriously damaged as a consequence of separate armed clashes between FARC-EP and the national police and national army, respectively. In June 2008, four teachers in Nariño department were abducted and killed by FARC-EP, as they were allegedly believed to be army informants. The United Nations has verified information on the occupation of schools by the Armed Forces. In June 2008, a school in Montana municipality, Caqueta department, was occupied by members of the army. The school was subsequently attacked and seriously damaged as a result of an armed confrontation with FARC-EP on 13 June. The authorities have ordered an investigation into this case.

Developments in the Philippines<sup>10</sup>

119. The Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) acknowledged the presence of children in their ranks in a meeting with my Special Representative in December 2008, and agreed to enter into negotiations with the United Nations for an action plan.

120. The New People's Army (NPA) remains adamant that it does not recruit or use children, and reiterated its policy of non-recruitment in communications to the United Nations. However, in March 2008, three children were reported to have admitted their association with NPA upon their surrender to Government authorities in Catanduanes province.

121. The Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) has long been known to have children in its ranks. This was confirmed by a local news correspondent who was held captive by the group in Sulu province in June 2008. After her release, she revealed that boys in their teens were among her armed captors.

122. There were reports of the attempted recruitment of indigenous children in Quezon province for the paramilitary Citizen Armed Force Geographical Unit (CAFGU).

123. A total of 48 children, including 27 girls, were killed or injured in the reporting period, 81 per cent as a result of armed clashes between the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) and MILF that erupted pursuant to the aborted signing of the memorandum of agreement on ancestral domain in August 2008. The United Nations confirmed that AFP and CAFGU were also responsible for the deaths of 11 children and injury to 20 children, all of whom were casualties of either military aerial or artillery bombardment against renegade MILF forces in Maguindanao province or military operations against ASG and NPA.

124. More than 100 residents of Kolambugan town, including 28 children, were temporarily held hostage and used as human shields by elements of the 102nd Base Command of MILF during attacks on civilian communities in Lanao del Norte province on 18 August 2008. MILF also razed five classrooms during the incident.

125. There were four cases of military occupation and use of schools as temporary camps. Soldiers from the 50th and 503rd Infantry Battalions of the Philippine Army set up camps in a primary school in Tubo town in Abra and conducted aerial operations from the location in March 2008. Other cases were documented in

Lianga municipality, Surigao del Sur province and in Barangay Ngan, Compostela Valley province, Southern Mindanao.

126. United Nations partners reported one case of sexual assault perpetrated against a 14-year-old girl by a member of the 30th Infantry Battalion of the Philippine Army stationed in Butuan City. The victim filed a complaint against the suspect, and the trial is currently in progress, although cooperation from the 30th Infantry Battalion has been difficult. During her mission in December 2008, my Special Representative raised the case with the Undersecretary for Defence Affairs of the Department of National Defence, Antonio C. Santos.

127. Former child soldiers are being rehabilitated and reintegrated into society through the implementation of Government social integration programmes, which include financial and legal support, and access to education, health services and psychosocial services for these children. However, mechanisms for release and reintegration of children need to be further brought in line with good practices.

Developments in southern border provinces of Thailand

128. There has been significant improvement in the security situation in the southern border provinces of Thailand owing to the continuing efforts of the Royal Thai Government to protect the safety and enhance the development of children in cooperation with the local communities. However, the impact of violence on children is still a concern. There have been several reports of child casualties as a result of bombings by militants in public spaces and of being caught in the crossfire between militants and security forces.

129. The number of attacks on schools has decreased significantly. According to the Ministry of Education, during the reporting period from September 2007 to December 2008, 34 State-run education facilities were damaged or destroyed (compared to 164 for the whole of 2007), 7 schoolchildren were killed and 30 were injured.

130. The current Government has announced that it will take serious measures to ensure that security operations conducted in the southern border provinces are in accordance with international standards and respect for human rights, and that any alleged abuse by state authorities, such as the irregular detention of children, is fully investigated. The Government is also undertaking a systematic review of its laws, including the Emergency Decree.

Developments in Sri Lanka

131. UNICEF received 39 reports of child recruitment and 7 reports of re-recruitment by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) from 1 September 2007 to 31 October 2008. However, the number of children who were recruited by LTTE is estimated to be much higher. The majority of the recruitment by LTTE (64 per cent boys and 36 per cent girls) occurred in the Vanni. The capacity in the Vanni to monitor and receive reports of recruitment of children was reduced steadily in the reporting period owing to limited access allowed to the United Nations, increased insecurity and the requirement that international and national humanitarian agencies leave the Vanni on 16 September 2008 and relocate to Vavuniya as a result of the intensification of the conflict. Threats by LTTE against families wishing to report have also been a significant factor. Although data collection has been severely hampered prior to their relocation, UNICEF was able to verify a total of 19 children released by LTTE and 9 children who had escaped and returned to their families. According to UNICEF reports registered before the onset of the fighting, as of the end of January 2009, there were 81 children who had not been released and 1,342 individuals who had been recruited as children but are now over the age of 18. In February 2009, the United Nations reported that there are clear indications that LTTE has intensified forcible recruitment of civilians and that children as young as 14 years old are being targeted.

132. The Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Pulikal (TMVP), a former breakaway faction of LTTE, became a registered political party on 24 January 2008. It signed an action plan with the Government of Sri Lanka and UNICEF on 1 December 2008, agreeing to commence the release of children for rehabilitation and reintegration. Efforts are under way and the United Nations awaits the full and timely implementation of the action plan. This was seen as an important undertaking by TMVP. From November 2008 to January 2009, 7 cases of child recruitment were reported, and 22 children were released, while during the period from 1 September 2007 to 31 October 2008 UNICEF received 113 reports of child recruitment and 40 reports of re-recruitment by TMVP. During the same period, a total of 108 children were released and 81 children escaped and returned to their families. As of the end of January 2009, 41 children remain recruited and there are 804 individuals who were recruited as children but are now over the age of 18.

133. The Government has made significant initiatives to support its obligations towards children leaving armed groups. The Office of the Commissioner General for Rehabilitation undertook five specific initiatives in the reporting period: the establishment of the Ambepusse Centre for the rehabilitation of children leaving armed groups; the development and signing of a memorandum of understanding with UNICEF clarifying roles and responsibilities in relation to the prevention, release, care, protection and reintegration of children associated with armed groups; the drafting of an Emergency Regulation for the provision of rehabilitation services for children leaving armed groups; the development of a public awareness campaign against child recruitment; and the facilitation of the action plan with TMVP and UNICEF.

134. The Human Rights Commission of Sri Lanka recorded 102 incidents of child abduction in the reporting period, with 54 children abducted in Batticaloa alone. Of the 41 children remaining in the ranks of TMVP, 16 were abducted.

135. Reports indicate that, as at the end of December 2008, 26 children had been killed and 10 injured. The causes included aerial bombardment by the Sri Lankan Air Force and children being caught in crossfire and shelling between the Sri Lankan Army and LTTE. Children were also victims of claymore mine attacks; for example, on 29 January 2008, a claymore mine detonated on a bus carrying mostly schoolchildren in Thatchanamadhu, Mannar district, an area that was tactically controlled by LTTE. Thirteen children were killed and 8 were injured in the incident.

136. The physical security of children trapped in increasingly small areas where intense fighting is taking place and in other conflict affected areas has become a critical protection concern. LTTE was carrying out operations, including artillery fire from civilian areas, placing them at risk. The Government also continued aerial bombardment and long-range artillery fire. The full scale of child rights violations is not known due to access impediments. However, on the very few occasions that access was possible in the Vanni, the United Nations verified that at least 4 children were killed and 17 injured in December 2008 and 55 children were killed and 212 injured in January 2009. On 29 January 2009, ICRC successfully escorted 226 sick and wounded patients requiring urgent medical treatment to Vavuniya hospital in the Government-controlled area. The wounded included 50 children between the ages of 4 months and 17 years.

137. Between 15 December 2008 and 15 January 2009, 11 shellings of or near medical facilities in the Vanni were reported. On 2 February, ICRC issued a statement condemning the shelling of Puthukkudiyirppu Hospital for the second time. It has since been shelled on three further occasions.

138. As a result of the intensification of military operations in LTTE-controlled areas of the Vanni at the end of 2008, and restrictive procedures imposed by the Government for the transportation of essential goods to the Vanni allegedly owing to security concerns, including medical supplies, therapeutic food to treat malnourished children and shelter materials, children displaced by the conflict have been adversely affected. Some WFP and Government food convoys were delivered in January and February 2009. The United Nations has been engaged in ongoing advocacy with the Government and LTTE for increased access to the Vanni, but that became more difficult as the conflict intensified. Additional impediments to humanitarian access included LTTE preventing civilians, including children and United Nations national staff and their dependants, from leaving the Vanni to Government-held territory. Further, internally displaced persons sites in Government-controlled areas of Mannar and Vavuniya are subjected to tight Government security regulations, which severely restrict the movement of internally displaced persons and access to humanitarian agencies.

Developments in Uganda

139. There were no cases of recruitment and use of children by Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF) or the local defence units in the reporting period. The Government of Uganda asserted that local defence units had been disbanded and its members integrated either into UPDF or the Uganda Police Force. In February 2009, the country task force on monitoring and reporting carried out on-site visits to UPDF facilities in northern Uganda to observe UPDF general recruitment exercises and to verify the implementation of UPDF recruitment policies, as part of the terms of the action plan signed by the Government on 16 January 2009. In addition, the visits sought to verify the disbanding of local defence units and to confirm the discharge of any persons under the age of 18 in the process of integrating local defence units into UPDF.

140. Following the visits, the country task force ascertained that the age criteria for recruitment into UPDF within existing laws and regulations were strictly observed; confirmed that current policies and directives relating to the prevention of recruitment and use of underaged persons were in place, including for age verification, awareness-raising, prevention and disciplinary measures; noted that UPDF recruitment criteria and procedures were strictly adhered to by its officers; and that there has been no evidence of the recruitment of children by UPDF since August 2007. The country task force also confirmed that local defence units were in the process of being phased out, and members who did not meet the recruitment criteria, including age limits, are demobilized and reintegrated into their communities.

141. On the basis of these findings, and as it has been determined that UPDF and its auxiliaries have shown full commitment towards the implementation of the action plan and continue to allow regular access to the United Nations to any UPDF facilities upon request to monitor compliance, they shall be removed from the lists contained in the annex to my report this year. However, the country task force will continue to monitor UPDF compliance with the action plan, to ensure that continuous efforts are made to prevent the recruitment and use of children.

142. The Government has established a clear national policy framework for the demobilization and reintegration of non-government forces operating in and outside Uganda, based on the Amnesty Amendment Act (2006). Its peace, recovery and development programme for northern Uganda encompasses a demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants programme that seeks to coordinate and facilitate socio-economic reintegration of non-governmental forces that voluntarily surrender to the Government, including those associated with LRA.

143. Owing to considerable improvement in the security and humanitarian situation in northern Uganda, the number of grave violations attributable to UPDF and its auxiliaries has dropped significantly. A total of 16 cases of sexual violence were registered from September 2007 to October 2008. Eight cases were reported to law enforcement officers for investigation, and in five of those cases, the perpetrators were arrested. In addition, the presence of UPDF soldiers on the ground has decreased, and formal institutions and structures such as the police, particularly children and family protection units, as well as welfare officers and members of local councils, are assuming a greater role in ensuring social and legal protection for children.

144. No cases have been attributed to LRA, as the group has not been operating in Ugandan territory, although women and children are reported to still be present within its ranks. Between November 2007 and April 2008, 20 boys who had fled LRA captivity were received at various reception centres across northern Uganda and confirmed the presence of many more children in LRA. The Government estimates that at the time LRA left Uganda, it consisted of approximately 1,000 individuals, of whom 500 were women and children. The presence of LRA has been reported in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, southern Sudan and the Central African Republic, and, in response to grave violations committed against children by LRA, a strategy for a subregional coordination mechanism to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children will be developed.

III. Information on progress achieved in implementing Security Council resolutions on children and armed conflict, including progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and in the development and implementation of action plans

Progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism

145. As called for in paragraph 3 of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), monitoring and reporting mechanisms on grave child rights violations have been established in all eight situations of armed conflict, listed in annex I to the 2007 report of the Secretary-General (A/62/609-S/2007/757), that are on the agenda of the Security Council; and in all five situations of armed conflict or other situations of concern, listed in annex II to the same report. Parties in Afghanistan and the Central African Republic were listed in the report of the Secretary-General for the first time last year for recruitment and use of children, thereby triggering the requirement to establish a monitoring and reporting mechanism within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005). In July 2008, the monitoring and reporting mechanism was set up in Afghanistan, while the mechanism is in the process of being formally established in the Central African Republic. The Government of Colombia formally accepted the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on 29 December 2008.

Progress made in the development and implementation of action plans with parties to conflict

146. Pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005), parties are called upon to develop and implement concrete time-bound action plans, in close collaboration with the United Nations. During the reporting period, formal action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children were signed with the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Pulikal (TMVP) of Sri Lanka on 1 December 2008 and the Government of Uganda on 16 January 2009. Important commitments to begin negotiations on an action plan were received from the Justice and Equality Movement in the Sudan and the Moro Islamic Liberation Forces in the Philippines. In addition, commitments were received by the Government of Nepal to release children from Maoist cantonments as a matter of priority and by FNL in Burundi to immediately and unconditionally separate and release all children.

147. Engaging in dialogue on child protection with all parties to conflict is crucial in order to bring parties into compliance with international standards for the protection of children. With regard to non-State actors, it is important that States allow such dialogue between non-State actors and the United Nations without prejudice to their political and legal status, for the purposes of developing action plans to halt recruitment and use of children and to address all other grave violations committed against children. However, in certain situations of concern, such as in Myanmar and Colombia, the Government has been reticent to allow for further dialogue with certain armed groups, and this has impeded progress on securing the release and rehabilitation of children associated with these groups.

148. Over the last years, commitments by parties leading to action plans have been obtained by several parties to conflict, both State and non-State actors. The status of these action plans and other commitments made for the release of children as of the end of January 2009 is reflected in the table below.

Status of action plans

Parties to conflict listed in annex I to the reports of the Secretary-General (A/61/529-S/2006/826 and Corr.1 and A/62/209-S/2007/757)

Parties in Afghanistan

Taliban forces

No action plan. In September 2008, the country task force on monitoring and reporting initiated consultations with the Government of Afghanistan to devise a strategy to disseminate information to parties to the conflict on the monitoring and reporting mechanism, and on engaging with parties for the preparation of action plans to end child recruitment.

Parties in Burundi

Parti pour la Libération du peuple Hutu-Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL)
(Agathon Rwasa)

No formal action plan. The release of children associated with Palipehutu-FNL is being negotiated within the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement signed on 7 September 2006 between the Government of Burundi and Palipehutu-FNL. Pursuant to the Bujumbura Declaration of 17 January 2009, FNL committed to immediately and unconditionally separate children associated with its combatants no later than 30 January. However, FNL has refused to begin the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of its combatants, including the separation of children associated with its forces on 5 February, until there is an agreement on the integration of its combatants into the national security forces.

Parties in the Central African Republic

Armée populaire pour la restauration de la République et de la démocratie (APRD)

Dialogue has been initiated by the United Nations to translate commitments into an action plan. During the visit of my Special Representative to the Central African Republic in May 2008, the leader of APRD, Laurent Djim Wei, committed to prepare a list and release all children in his armed group as soon as proper arrangements are made for their protection and reintegration into communities.

Union des forces démocratiques pour la rassemblement (UFDR)

On 20 October 2008, APRD handed over to UNICEF and partners a list of 105 children to be released.

Dialogue has been initiated by the United Nations to translate commitments into an action plan. In June 2007 a tripartite agreement was signed between the Government of the Central African Republic, UFDR and UNICEF, in which the UFDR agreed to separate and release all children associated with its armed group; and facilitate their reintegration.

Forces démocratiques populaires de Centrafrique
(FDPC)

No action plan.

Parties in Côte d'Ivoire

Armed militia groups affiliated with the Presidential camp:

(a) Front pour la libération du Grand Ouest
(FLGO);

(b) Mouvement ivoirien de libération de
L'Ouest de la Côte d'Ivoire (MILOCI);

(c) Alliance patriotique de l'ethnie Wé
(APWé);

(d) Union patriotique de résistance du
Grand Ouest (UPRGO).

Action plan signed on 14 September 2006.

Parties have been de-listed from annexes of the report of the Secretary-General (S/2007/757). All the parties have ceased recruitment and taken concerted measures to identify and release children associated with their forces for rehabilitation, and have allowed the United Nations to regularly monitor the association of children with fighting forces as part of the implementation of action plans.

Forces de défense et de sécurité des Forces
nouvelles (FDS-FN)

Action plan signed on 10 October 2005.

Party has been de-listed from annexes of the 2007 report of the Secretary-General. Party has ceased recruitment and taken concerted measures to identify and release children associated with their forces for rehabilitation, and have allowed the United Nations to regularly monitor the association of children with fighting forces as part of the implementation of its action plan.

Parties in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC)

No formal action plan. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of children has been carried out within the Operational Framework for Children Associated with Armed Forces and Groups, adopted by the Unité d'exécution du programme national de désarmement, démobilisation et réinsertion, in March 2004.

Through that national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, from mid-2003 to December 2006, approximately 30,000 children were released from armed forces and groups, including those released prior to the adoption of the operational framework. The final phase of the formal national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration did not take place in 2008; however, 1,098 children were documented to have separated from or escaped from armed groups in the reporting period.

Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR)

No formal action plan.

Front nationaliste et intégrationniste (FNI)

No formal action plan. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of children was carried out within the operational framework for children associated with armed forces and groups, except for small splinter groups from FNI and FRPI who failed to disarm.

Forces de résistance patriotique en Ituri (FRPI)

Mouvement révolutionnaire congolais (MRC)

Mai-Mai groups in Maniema and Katanga that have not integrated into FARDC

No formal action plan. Remaining combatants are awaiting inclusion into the next phase of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

Mai-Mai groups in North and South Kivu

No formal action plan. In January 2008, the Mai-Mai groups adopted the “actes d’engagement” for North and South Kivu, in the context of the Conference on Peace, Security and Development in the Kivus, and committed to release children in their ranks.

Congres National pour la Défense du Peuple (CNDP)

No formal action plan. In January 2008, CNDP adopted the statements of commitment (actes d’engagement) for North and South Kivu, in the context of the Conference on Peace, Security and Development in the Kivus.

Parties in Myanmar

Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA)

No action plan.

Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council

No action plan.

Kachin Independence Army (KIA)

No action plan.

Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA)
Karen National Army (KA)

No action plan. However, the Karen National Union (KNU)/KNLA signed a deed of commitment on 6 April 2007; and the Karen National Progressive Party (KNPP)/KA signed a deed of commitment on 13 April 2007.

Karenni National People's Liberation Front
(KNPLF)

Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army

Shan State Army-South (SSA-S)

Tatmadaw Kyi

United Wa State Army (UWSA)

In line with this commitment, the United Nations country team in Myanmar will undertake discussions with the parties in order to finalize action plans to cease the recruitment and use of children from their armed wings in the border areas. The country teams in Myanmar and Thailand, however, have been unable to establish contact and undertake formal dialogue with these groups to date due to resistance from the Government of Myanmar.

No action plan. The country team has been unable to establish contact with these non-State entities to date.

No action plan. The Government action plan does not meet minimum standards. In 2004, the Government of Myanmar high-level committee for the prevention of military recruitment of underage children outlined a plan of action to address the recruitment, release and reintegration of children; public awareness; cooperation with international organizations; and action against transgressors of recruitment policies.

During the visit of the Special Representative in June 2007, the Government of Myanmar agreed to update the Tatmadaw Kyi action plan and to bring it into line with international standards, with the country task force on monitoring and reporting. The United Nations has formally sought a meeting with the Committee to advance discussions on the action plan development and implementation, but the meeting has not yet taken place.

No action plan. During the visit of the Special Representative in June 2007, UWSA agreed to engage with the United Nations on the modalities for an action plan.

Parties in Nepal

Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M)

No formal action plan. The release of children associated with UCPN-M who are held in Maoist army cantonments is being addressed within the context of Nepal's Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 2006 and the Agreement on Monitoring the Management of Arms and Armies, which commits UCPN-M and the Government of Nepal to the immediate release and reintegration of children associated with armed forces and groups. A draft national plan of action for the reintegration of children affected by armed conflict, including children associated with armed forces and groups, is pending finalization and Government approval for implementation.

During the visit of my Special Representative on 5 December 2008, the Prime Minister of Nepal committed to the release of 2,973 children from the Maoist army cantonments by the end of February 2009.

Parties in Somalia

Transitional Federal Government

No action plan. An advocacy campaign against child recruitment targeting armed groups, government officials, and community and religious leaders is ongoing to mobilize broad support for the development of action plans.

Remnants of the former Islamic Courts Union (IUC)

No action plan. Dialogue with IUC or any other armed groups in Somalia is seriously impeded by access restrictions and the targeting of humanitarian workers.

Parties in southern Sudan

Parties under the control of the Government of the Sudan

South Sudan Defence Forces, including the forces of Major-General Gabriel Tang Ginyi

The South Sudan Defence Forces have been fully incorporated into the Sudan People's Liberation Army.

Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF)

No formal action plan. However, the United Nations continues its advocacy with SAF on issues related to grave violations against children, including the recruitment and use of children, through the Ceasefire Joint Military Committee and its seven subsidiary Area Joint Military Committees.

Parties under the control of the Government of southern Sudan

Pibor Defence Forces

The Pibor Defence Forces have been fully incorporated into the Sudan People's Liberation Army.

Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA)

No formal action plan. The release and reintegration of children associated with armed forces and groups are carried out by the South Sudan disarmament, demobilization and reintegration Commission within the context of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, which calls for the immediate and unconditional release of all children from various fighting forces and armed groups. A national reintegration strategy for children associated with armed forces and groups has been developed.

During the reporting period, 150 children were demobilized.

Parties in Darfur

Parties under the control of the Government of the Sudan

Chadian opposition groups

Government-supported militias called Janjaweed

There is no United Nations engagement with Janjaweed to date.

Police forces, including the Central Reserve Police

No action plan.

Popular Defence Force

Former rebel parties that have accepted the Darfur Peace Agreement

Justice and Equality Movement (Peace Wing)

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Free Will

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Abu Gasim/
Mother Wing

No action plan. However, during a meeting to launch child disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in Darfur in June 2008, representatives of the six signatories to the Darfur Peace Agreement, including Justice and Equality Movement (Peace Wing), SLA/Free Will, SLA/Minni Minnawi, SLA/Peace Wing, SLA/Abu Gasim/Mother Wing and Movement of Popular Force for Rights and Democracy agreed to start discussions on a plan of action and reaffirmed their commitments for the release, return and reintegration of children associated with their groups, in accordance with the Darfur Peace Agreement.

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Minni Minnawi

Action plan signed on 11 June 2007 between Sudan Liberation Movement/Army (Minnawi) and UNICEF.

After an initial delay in implementation of the action plan owing to a lack of clarity on the mandate and channels of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in Darfur, SLM/A (Minnawi) reaffirmed its commitment for the release, return and reintegration of children into its ranks in June 2008; so far, 16 children have been registered for demobilization.

Former rebel parties that rejected the Darfur Peace Agreement

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Abdul Wahid

No action plan.

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Shafi

Parties to conflict listed in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General (A/62/609-S/2007/757)

Parties in Chad

Chadian National Army

No action plan. However, an agreement was signed on 9 May 2007 between the Government of Chad and UNICEF in the context of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts in Chad to release all children associated with the armed forces and groups and facilitate their sustainable reintegration into communities and families.

In addition, during the visit of my Special Representative in May 2008, the Government of Chad committed to allow verification by United Nations teams of detention centres, training camps and military facilities; release as a matter of priority children associated with armed groups held in detention; and establish an inter-ministerial task force to coordinate and ensure effective reintegration of children.

A joint commission was formed by the Government and UNICEF in August 2008. The commission has carried out verification visits to the Moussoro and Lumia instruction centres, where one child was identified and released.

	A total of 555 children have been demobilized to date, including 13 per cent from the Chadian National Army and 87 per cent from the Convention révolutionnaire démocratique du Tchad (CRDT), Concorde nationale tchadienne (CNT) and Front uni pour le changement (FUC).
Chadian self-defence groups operating in Ade, Dogdore and Mogororo	Most elements of these groups have been integrated into the Chadian National Army.

(a) Autodefensas Campesinas del Casanare;
(b) Frente Cacique Pipintá.
Parties in the Philippines
Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG)	The absence of a political organization and the extreme risks involved prevents the possibility of the United Nations engaging with ASG.
Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF)	Dialogue has been initiated by the United Nations to translate commitments into an action plan. During the visit of my Special Representative in December 2008, the leadership of MILF committed to enter into an action plan with the United Nations to halt the recruitment and use of children and to ensure their separation and return into civilian life.
New People's Army (NPA)	No action plan. The Government of the Philippines has expressed reservations on the engagement of the United Nations with NPA.

However, the United Nations country team is considering possible dialogue on child protection with the Office of the Presidential Adviser to the Peace Process within the context of the ongoing peace processes.

Parties in Sri Lanka

Karuna faction/TMVP

Action plan signed on 1 December 2008 between TMVP, the Government of Sri Lanka and UNICEF. The action plan lays out a three-month process by which TMVP should stop the recruitment of children and release all children in its ranks.

Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE)

Action plan does not meet minimum standards. LTTE developed an action plan on 15 October 2007. However, it does not meet minimum prerequisites, including but not limited to allowing full access to the United Nations country team for verification, formalizing principles and time-bound measures for the safe release of children, and accountability mechanisms and mechanisms for preventing re-recruitment. Also, the action plan was not signed by the parties.

Any small progress made was not maintained and, as of April 2008, only 17 children have been verified as released. There has been no consistent dialogue with LTTE to review its commitments since the relocation of the United Nations in September 2008 from the Vanni.

Parties in Uganda

Lord's Resistance Army (LRA)

No action plan. LRA has not been present in Ugandan territory as of November 2005. On 24 August 2007, the United Nations Special Envoy for LRA-affected areas transmitted a message from the Security Council to the leader of the LRA delegation, who assured that the delegation would convey the message to the leader of LRA, Joseph Kony. The message urged LRA to take immediate steps to release children associated with its forces; to immediately engage in transparent procedures with UNICEF for verification of the demobilization of all children; to provide humanitarian personnel unimpeded access to populations in need; and to ensure that specific provisions for children are included by the parties at all steps of the negotiations.

Government armed forces and defence units:

- (a) Local defence units;
- (b) Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF).

Action plan signed on 16 January 2009 between the Government of Uganda and the Uganda Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting. As it has been determined that UPDF and its auxiliaries have shown full commitment towards the implementation of the action plan and continue to allow regular access to the United Nations to any UPDF facilities upon request to monitor compliance, the parties have been de-listed from the current year's report.

Parties to conflict not listed in annexes to the report of the Secretary-General (A/62/609-S/2007/757)

Parties in Central African Republic

Self-defence militias

No action plan. On 13 December 2008, UNICEF met with the Minister of Defence to request for access to these militias. Following his agreement, UNICEF and partners met with the militia leader of the Ouham-Pendé prefecture, who has agreed to work collaboratively to release children within its ranks.

Parties in Darfur

Former rebel parties that have accepted the Darfur Peace Agreement

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Peace Wing

Movement of Popular Force for Rights and Democracy

No action plan. However, during a meeting to launch child disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in Darfur in June 2008, representatives of the six signatories to the Darfur Peace Agreement, including Justice and Equality Movement (Peace Wing), SLA/Free Will, SLA/Minni Minnawi, SLA/Peace Wing, SLA/Abu Gasim/Mother Wing and Movement of Popular Force for Rights and Democracy agreed to start discussions on a plan of action and reaffirmed their commitments for the release, return and reintegration of children associated with their groups, in accordance with the Darfur Peace Agreement.

Former rebel parties that rejected the Darfur Peace Agreement

Justice and Equality Movement (JEM)

Dialogue has been initiated by the United Nations with JEM to translate commitments into an action plan. In July 2008, JEM stated its commitment during a workshop held by the Centre for Humanitarian Dialogue in Geneva to refrain from recruiting children for military operations.

Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Unity

No action plan. In July 2008, SLA/Unity, during the workshop in Geneva, also committed to refrain from recruiting children.

149. Concerted leadership by United Nations missions and country teams on the ground and partners in following up on these commitments through sustained advocacy and monitoring is vital to their success, in addition to the credible threat of action by international actors, including the Security Council. However, more must be done to ensure that parties to conflict respect and comply with their child protection obligations and commitments. This should include targeted and concrete measures by the Security Council where insufficient or no progress has been made by parties listed in the annexes to my reports, particularly the persistent violators, in accordance with its resolutions 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005).

150. The Working Group has drawn the attention of several Security Council sanctions committees and their relevant expert groups to the repeated violations against children by leaders of armed groups, such as in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the aim of obtaining targeted measures against individuals or groups who persistently commit, or are complicit in the commission of, grave violations against children. Limited progress, however, has been made to date.

Progress made in the mainstreaming of children and armed conflict issues in United Nations peacekeeping and political missions

151. The Department of Peacekeeping Operations has significantly expanded the incorporation of children's issues in peacekeeping operations, including child rights and protection in training for peacekeepers and the deployment of child protection expertise in peacekeeping missions. Child protection advisers are currently deployed in seven peacekeeping operations. In situations where a peacekeeping operation exists, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations co-chairs the country task forces on monitoring and reporting. The department is currently developing a policy directive on mainstreaming the protection of children affected by armed conflict within United Nations peacekeeping that will also provide guidance on the role and function of child protection advisers in peacekeeping operations, outline the policy framework within which they operate, and define partnerships and coordination with other key child protection actors on the ground. The reports of the Secretary-General on country situations with peacekeeping missions have increasingly included child protection issues as a specific aspect of the reports.

152. The Department of Political Affairs has developed specific guidance on child protection for mediators. It has also recently revised its Operational Guidance Note on Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration, in order to integrate the consideration of children and armed conflict issues that facilitate or impede peace processes, and has identified the release of children as a factor that promotes confidence between parties to conflict in its guidance on confidence-building measures. The newly established United Nations mediation focal point system of the Department of Political Affairs seeks to ensure that children and armed conflict issues are taken into account early on in the strategic thinking and planning phase of a peace process. Significant effort has also been made by special political missions of the Department to mainstream the protection of children and armed conflict throughout their missions and mandates.

153. The presence of child protection advisers should be integrated into or enhanced in all relevant peacekeeping and political missions as key implementers of Security Council resolutions, and in order to mainstream a child-conscious approach in the discharge of their functions. Child protection advisers engage in monitoring the situation of children in armed conflict, including monitoring grave violations under resolution 1612 (2005), engaging in dialogue with parties to conflict for the development of action plans, advocating on politically sensitive issues, thereby supporting operational partners who may be unable to do so without the risk of jeopardizing their programmes on the ground, ensuring systematic training on child rights and protection, lending support to the planning and implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and implementing other aspects of Security Council resolutions on children and armed conflict.

IV. Strengthening monitoring and reporting of rape and other grave sexual violence against children in armed conflict

154. Widespread and systematic rape and sexual violence against children, both girls and boys, is increasingly a characteristic of conflict, often perpetrated in a rule-of-law vacuum that is a consequence of conflict, and exacerbated by an ensuing culture of impunity. In some instances sexual violence has been used as a premeditated tactic of war designed to humiliate or exterminate a population or to force displacement. For children, the physical and mental consequences are devastating, with far reaching negative effects on sustainable peace and security. During the reporting period, high incidence rates of rape and sexual violence against children were received from Burundi, Chad, Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Haiti, Somalia and the Sudan.

155. There is universal consensus that rape and sexual violence against children in armed conflicts are grave crimes. It is therefore critical that efforts be strengthened towards ending impunity and ensuring access to justice, accountability and remedies for cases of such crimes against children. International humanitarian and human rights law provides that children affected by armed conflict are entitled to special respect, protection and care, including against all forms of sexual violence and exploitation. Rape and other forms of sexual violence also constitute a war crime or a crime against humanity if committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

156. During the Security Council open debates on children and armed conflict in February and July 2008, Member States reaffirmed the need to strengthen the general framework of protection against such crimes. The Council, as a follow-up to its resolution 1325 (2000), has begun to translate that call through its resolution 1820 (2008), in which it requested in paragraph 15 that I provide “information on situations of armed conflict in which sexual violence has been widely or systematically employed against civilians; analysis of the prevalence and trends of sexual violence in situations of armed conflict”. The Council also requested in paragraph 3 that, where appropriate, I “encourage dialogue to address this issue in the context of broader discussions of conflict resolution between appropriate United Nations officials and the parties to the conflict”.

157. To this end, the office of my Special Representative has initiated consultations with relevant United Nations agencies and departments to devise a strategy to strengthen data collection and reporting on sexual violence within the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), which will provide a better platform for the identification of incidents, victims and perpetrators through a common set of indicators, and to enable a better analysis of trends on sexual violence against children. Resolutions 1612 (2005) and 1820 (2008) are mutually reinforcing, and the complimentary processes for documentation or reporting vis-à-vis these resolutions should be explored to allow for streamlined and better coordinated sharing of information on rape and sexual violence among United Nations agencies. Enhancing the participation of relevant United Nations agencies and departments working on the issue of sexual violence in the country task forces on monitoring and reporting is a step towards that objective.

158. In the light of the fact that children are particularly vulnerable to sexual violence in situations of armed conflict, and the culture of impunity prevails for such crimes, I recommend that the Council adopt an incremental approach by first including rape and other grave sexual violence as an additional criteria for inclusion in the annexes along with recruitment and use of children. Like the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence is always deliberate, targeted and a direct consequence of criminal intent. This would be a positive step towards expanding the protection framework for children and drive United Nations and international efforts to seal commitments to put an end to sexual violence against children.

159. The same way parties that are listed for child recruitment have to prepare and implement time-bound concrete action plans, steps also need to be taken to ensure that parties that are listed for rape and sexual violence against children enter into dialogue with the United Nations to formally outline commitments and undertake measures to put an end to such practices. Structured dialogue on recruitment and use of children has already paved the way for dialogue on broader child protection issues and enabled child protection actors in the field to pursue other priorities such as rape and other grave sexual violence against children, such as in Côte d’Ivoire.

160. This proposal as laid out above should be supported as a constructive step towards addressing issues of prevention, impunity, and response, in order to put an end to sexual violence against children.

V. Recommendations

161. It is recommended that the Security Council consider giving equal attention to children affected by armed conflict in all situations of concern listed in the annexes to my report, as well as other relevant situations of concern addressed in my report.

162. While acknowledging the equal weight for all grave violations against children, considering that children are particularly vulnerable to rape and sexual violence in situations of armed conflict, as noted in the present and previous reports, and the culture of impunity prevails for such crimes, it is recommended that the Security Council consider, at a minimum, expanding the criteria for the annexes of my report to include parties that commit rape and other grave sexual violence against children in armed conflict without prejudice to the possibility of further expanding the criteria in the future to include other violations, including, if possible, intentional killing and maiming of children.

163. As addressing sexual violence is an important system-wide priority of the United Nations, mechanisms and arrangements for monitoring such violations should be strengthened. Country-level task forces under Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) should include actors who monitor gender-based violations, and modalities for data sharing and coordinated action, including on access to justice and remedies, should be developed between gender-based violence and child protection actors. National capacity to address sexual violence should also be strengthened.

164. The Security Council is encouraged to continue to insist that parties in situations of armed conflict listed in the annexes to my report prepare and implement concrete time-bound action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children in violation of international obligations applicable to them, and to take measures against any parties that fail to comply.

165. The Security Council is also encouraged to call upon parties in situations of armed conflict listed in the annexes to my report to undertake specific commitments and measures to address other violations and abuses committed against children for which they are cited.

166. Concerned Member States should allow contact between the United Nations and non-State parties to ensure the broad and effective protection of children in situations of concern, including for the purposes of preparing action plans to halt recruitment and use of children and undertaking specific commitments and measures to address all other grave violations committed against children. The Security Council should encourage this. Such contact will not prejudice the political and legal status of these non-State parties.

167. The Security Council is urged to ensure that systematic communication is established between its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict and the relevant sanctions Committees and their expert groups in country situations of common concern. This may include the Working Group bringing to the attention of relevant sanctions Committees and their expert groups specific information contained in my reports prepared in the framework of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) for any necessary action. In situations where there are no existing sanctions committees, the Security Council is urged to consider means by which targeted measures may be applied against persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children.

168. It is recommended that the Security Council ensure that specific provisions for the protection of children continue to be included in all relevant United Nations peacekeeping operations and political missions, including by means of the deployment of child protection advisers. The need for, the number and roles of and the budget for child protection advisers should be systematically assessed during the preparation of each peacekeeping operation and political mission, and children's concerns should be reflected in all mission planning instruments and processes, including technical assessment and review missions.

169. Given the regional dimension of some conflicts highlighted in this report, relevant Member States, United Nations peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams should establish appropriate strategies and coordination mechanisms for information exchange and cooperation on cross-border child protection concerns such as recruitment, release and reintegration of children.

170. Member States should take strong and urgent action to bring to justice individuals responsible for the recruitment and use of children in violation of applicable international law and other grave violations against children through national justice systems. The Security Council is encouraged to refer to the International Criminal Court, for investigation and prosecution, violations against children in armed conflict that fall within its jurisdiction, and other international justice mechanisms should also prioritize accountability for crimes against children.

171. Member States are urged to ensure that children who are accused of crimes under international law allegedly committed while they were associated with armed forces or groups are considered primarily as victims, and that they are treated in accordance with international law, and within a framework of restorative justice and social rehabilitation.

172. States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child are encouraged to strengthen national and international measures for the prevention of recruitment of children into armed forces or armed groups and their use in hostilities. In particular, these include signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and enacting legislation that explicitly prohibits the recruitment of children into armed forces/groups and their use in hostilities; exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction in order to strengthen the international protection of children against recruitment; taking measures to implement the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child; and submitting timely reports under the Optional Protocol to the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

173. Effective disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for children is crucial for the well-being of all children associated with armed forces and groups, and, as such, relevant Governments and donors should ensure that these programmes receive timely and adequate resources and funding, and are community-based for long-term sustainability. This is increasingly a critical factor for durable peace and security.

174. The monitoring and reporting of violations against children need to be supported with effective measures to prevent and respond to such violations. The Security Council should continue to call upon relevant national and international actors to support and expand programmes to ensure that children who are victims of violations have access to appropriate services and response.

VI. Lists<sup>11</sup> in annexes to the report

175. The present report contains two annexes.<sup>12</sup> Annex I contains a list of parties that recruit or use children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, bearing also in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children. Annex II contains a list of parties that recruit or use children either in situations of armed conflict not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern, also bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children. Parties marked with an asterisk (*) have been on the annex lists for a minimum of four years.

176. It should be noted that countries as such are not listed in the annexes. The purpose of the lists is to identify particular parties to conflict that are responsible for specific grave violations against children. In this respect, the names of countries are referred to only in order to indicate the locations or situations where offending parties are committing the violations in question.

<sup>11</sup> Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), the present report is guided by criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence; reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

Annex I

List of parties that recruit or use children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, bearing in mind other violations and abuses committed against children<sup>a</sup>

Agenda item 65 (a)

Promotion and protection of the rights of children

Security Council
Sixty-fifth year

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2009, is submitted pursuant to paragraph 19 of Security Council resolution 1882 (2009), by which the Council requested me to submit a report on the implementation of that resolution, resolutions 1261 (1999), 1314 (2000), 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004) and 1612 (2005), as well as its presidential statements on children and armed conflict.

2. The first part of the report (section II) includes information on measures undertaken by parties listed in the annexes to end all violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict that serve as indicators of progress made in follow-up to the recommendations of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict. The second part (section III) contains an update on the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism established by the Council in its resolution 1612 (2005). The third part (section IV) of the report focuses on information on grave violations committed against children, in particular recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence against children, abductions of children, attacks on schools and hospitals, and the denial of humanitarian access to children by parties to armed conflict in contravention to applicable international law.<sup>1</sup> Where possible, this section identifies trends or patterns of violations and provides an assessment of the progress or deterioration.

3. In accordance with the request of the Security Council, and taking into account the views expressed by the members of its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, the fourth part of the report (section V) provides information on the criteria and procedures used for listing and de-listing parties to armed conflict in the annexes of my report. And the final part (section VI) contains a series of recommendations.

4. By paragraph 3 of its resolution 1882 (2009), the Security Council requests that the present report include in the annexes, in addition to recruitment and use, those parties to armed conflict that engage in patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence against children in contravention of applicable international law. A conservative approach has been taken this year in determining the parties to be listed for these additional violations, given the limited time for country task forces to orient themselves with the listing criteria and requirements pursuant to resolution 1882 (2009).

5. The preparation of the present report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict at Headquarters, country task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams, as well as with concerned Member States and non-governmental organizations.

6. References to reports, cases and incidents in the present report refer to information that is gathered, vetted and verified for accuracy. In situations where the ability to obtain or independently verify information received is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such.

7. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in identifying the situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is guided by the criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence. In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, with a humanitarian emphasis, aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children exposed and affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.<sup>2</sup>

II. Information on measures undertaken by parties listed in the annexes to end all violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict

8. The present section presents the specific measures and initiatives undertaken by parties during the reporting period to cease recruiting and using children, refrain from committing rape and other sexual violence and/or from killing and maiming children, as well as to address other grave violations against children during armed conflict for which they have been cited, in line with their obligations under international law and relevant national legislation.<sup>3</sup> These measures are based on a review of all pertinent sets of conclusions of the Security Council Working Group and recommendations in my country reports on the situation of children affected by armed conflict. They comprise the critical priority recommendations addressed to parties, based on which progress made by parties is assessed. They include:

(a) Engagement in dialogue with country task forces on monitoring and reporting, as called for by the Security Council in its resolutions 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009), towards the preparation and implementation of action plans to end the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, and rape and other forms of sexual violence against children;

(b) Release of all children from their ranks unconditionally through a formal process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in line with international standards;

(c) Addressing impunity for perpetrators through investigations, convictions or sanctions of those responsible for grave crimes against children;

(d) Reform or implementation of national legislation that criminalizes child recruitment, sexual violence or any of the other grave violations in line with international law;

(e) Any other specific measures to prevent the killing and maiming of children and/or to prevent and combat the perpetration of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children.

A. Dialogue and action plans

9. Action plans to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers, and association of children, as well as to secure their release from armed forces and groups, were signed between the United Nations and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF); the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA); the Government of Nepal and the Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M) on 30 July, 20 November and 16 December 2009, respectively. In conjunction with the MILF action plan, a supplemental general order for dissemination to all frontline commanders is being finalized to re-state the policy on non-recruitment of children within the MILF-Bangsamoro Islamic Armed Forces (BIAF), providing for, inter alia, the necessary sanctions for non-compliance and the establishment of child protection units within MILF-BIAF. A programme for the demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration of children who may be found in the ranks of MILF-BIAF is planned to be put into place in 2010. The SPLA action plan, signed in the presence of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, will set a timetable for the release of children, defines continuous prevention measures against recruitment and re-association of children and grants the United Nations access to the military barracks of SPLA to monitor and verify compliance. In Nepal, the signing of the action plan, witnessed by my Special Representative, resulted in the discharge and release of 1,843 personnel verified as minors in the United Nations-led verification process in 2007. The discharged minors will have access to a range of rehabilitation options provided by the Government, with assistance from the United Nations. A total of 1,130 children, the remainder of the caseload, did not present themselves, as many had fled on earlier occasions or were fearful to return to the cantonments. Those children will obtain discharge notifications and will be traced in their home communities for assistance and protection.

10. In the Central African Republic, although an action plan for the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la République et de la démocratie (APRD) had been negotiated and ready to be signed by the Government, the national “Comité de pilotage” and the United Nations since October 2008, it has been put on hold by the Minister of Defence, who requested that other parties to conflict listed in the annexes of my report, in addition to APRD, be included within the action plan.

11. Dialogue on action plans with parties to conflict is also ongoing in other country situations. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, a draft action plan has been submitted to the Government. The Minister of Defence and the Chief of Staff of the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) have expressed their willingness to cooperate with the United Nations, although the Government has yet to engage formally in the discussions. A draft action plan is also under discussion with the Working Committee on the Monitoring and Reporting Mechanism of the Government of Myanmar. On 26 November 2009, the Government agreed to undertake the following steps identified in the draft action plan: to appoint a focal point from the Office of the Chief of Military Affairs Security, in addition to representatives from the Ministry for Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of Social Welfare and Resettlement; to cooperate with the United Nations so as to strengthen birth registration systems that facilitate age verification during recruitments; to provide awareness training on child rights and protection at all military recruitment centres and training schools; to issue directives stipulating disciplinary measures for recruiters and violators to all military divisions on the prohibition of recruitment of minors; to facilitate in-country access on specific requests by the United Nations, in conjunction with states and divisional coordination committees; and to facilitate visits by the United Nations to Government recruitment centres and military sites. Those positive commitments to the draft action plan should be accelerated and finalized in an urgent manner.

12. Important commitments to begin negotiations with the United Nations towards the development of action plans and the release of children were received from several parties in the Sudan. The leadership of the Sudan Armed Forces (SAF) agreed to consider the adoption of an action plan that also extends to pro-Government militia groups in Darfur. Commitments were also received from the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Abu Ghasim (Mother Wing), SLA/Free Will and the Justice and Equality Movement (Peace Wing), all of which are signatories to the Darfur Peace Agreement. SLA/Minni Minnawi agreed to allow continuous unhindered access to its military camps and areas of concentration for verification by the United Nations in compliance with an action plan it had signed in 2007.

13. In Afghanistan, the Government appointed a high-level focal point on 18 October 2009 to interact with the country task force on monitoring and reporting.

That was followed in December by the commitment to establish an interministerial steering committee on children and armed conflict, with the objective to develop an action plan to address issues affecting children in the context of the conflict. The official launch of the Government steering committee is scheduled to take place in early 2010. In Chad, the Government has, since July 2009, shown a consistent policy position and commitment against child recruitment, and is engaged in discussions with the United Nations, through its Defence Adviser, on the process towards development of an action plan. In Somalia, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has undertaken to assist the Transitional Federal Government to prepare an action plan that would include measures to screen its troops, as well as the establishment of prevention mechanisms against the further recruitment of children.

14. In Sri Lanka, where an action plan was signed by the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Pulikal (TMVP) in December 2008, distinct steps are being undertaken to ensure its implementation. A task force comprising the Government agent, the police department, the Sri Lankan army, the Department of Probation, the National Child Protection Authority and UNICEF was established in Batticaloa in January 2009. It meets on a monthly basis to monitor progress and address issues related to the action plan. In addition, the task force established a child welfare unit to provide assistance to families seeking information, orientation and support for the release of their children. This has contributed significantly to increasing the confidence of the population in the authorities and to reporting cases of child recruitment. Only five children remain associated with the group as of December 2009.

15. The United Nations country team in Myanmar, however, remains unable to establish contact and undertake formal dialogue with non-State armed groups listed in the annexes to my report, as the Government has not granted access to those groups. In the Philippines, the Government has not given its endorsement for the United Nations to directly engage the New People's Army (NPA) for the purposes of an action plan. In Colombia, the Government has also expressed concerns about dialogue with Colombian parties listed in my report and dialogue with my Special Representative continues in that regard.

16. During the reporting period, child protection dialogue has also resulted in some positive movement in the form of commitments by parties in Côte d'Ivoire to combating sexual violence against children, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1882 (2009). Consultations with the Government on a draft national action plan on sexual violence are currently under way. Furthermore, on 19 January, the Forces de défense et de sécurité des Forces nouvelles (FDS-FN) signed a programme of action to address sexual violence against children in areas under its control. This is expected to serve as a stopgap measure pending the establishment of the national action plan. On 20 February, the Chief of Staff of FDS-FN established a working group (groupe de travail et de suivi) composed of 14 members, to oversee the implementation of the programme of action in all zones under its control and has requested the United Nations to provide a comprehensive briefing on resolution 1882 (2009) to his cabinet. In a similar development, on 30 January, the leadership of the militia groups operating in western Côte d'Ivoire also committed to collaborate with the United Nations on preventing sexual violence, through a communiqué addressed to my Special Representative in Côte d'Ivoire.

B. Release of children through a formal process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration

17. In Burundi, in response to the Declaration of the Special Envoys for the Great Lakes Region of 17 January 2009 and continued advocacy by the United Nations and the Political Directorate, as well as the regional initiative, eight focal points from Agathon Rwasa's Forces nationales de libération (FNL) were nominated to be responsible for facilitating the separation of children associated with FNL combatants. This encouraged real progress in discussions on the release of children associated with FNL, which culminated in pivotal success, with the formal release of the first group of 112 children on 2 April from the Rubira and Rugazi assembly areas. On 10 April, the remaining 228 children were released from five FNL pre-assembly areas. On 8 June, 40 children associated with alleged FNL dissidents in the Randa and Buramata assembly areas were also released. To date, all the children have been reunified with their families and there are no known children associated with armed groups in Burundi.

18. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, during the reporting period 2,672 children, including 97 girls, were separated or escaped from the armed forces and groups during the "fast-track integration" process carried out in North and South Kivu. Of the 2,672 children, 2,032 were separated from the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP), the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) and its sub-groups, FDLR — Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FOCA), FDLR — Rally for Unity and Democracy (RUD) and FDLR — Soki, the Forces des résistance patriotique en Ituri (FRPI), the front populaire pour la justice au Congo (FPJC), the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) and the Mai-Mai groups in North and South Kivu, including the Patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO), the Mai-Mai Patriotes résistants, the Mai-Mai Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain, the Mai-Mai Mongols, the Mai-Mai Kasindiens, the Mai-Mai Ruwenzori and other unnamed, smaller Mai-Mai groups. The remaining 640 children were separated from the newly integrated FARDC units after the completion of the integration process. All those children were provided temporary care in transit and orientation centres or in foster families pending family reunification.

19. In north Sudan, 739 children associated with SPLA, the Eastern Front Movement, the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM), SLA/Peace Wing and other armed groups aligned to the SAF registered for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process since the signing of the three peace agreements in the Sudan and have all been released. A total of 638 of those children have been benefiting from inclusive reintegration activities in nine states across the north of the country during the reporting period. In south Sudan, 56 children associated with SPLA have been demobilized since August 2009 and 35 children have been registered for the demobilization anticipated for 2010. This has been as a result of the establishment of the first child protection unit within SPLA headquarters, which consists of five SPLA officers and carries out joint monitoring and verification missions to SPLA barracks with the United Nations. Furthermore, the good collaboration between the North and South Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commissions for the reintegration of children in the Three Areas (Abuja, Southern Kordofan and the Blue Nile) is acknowledged. In Darfur, a decree by the Government of National Unity for the North Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission to coordinate disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities in Darfur, in collaboration with the Darfur Security Arrangements Implementation Commission of the Transitional Darfur Regional Authority, has assisted in efforts to release and reintegrate children associated with armed groups. The Darfur child disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, endorsed in early July 2009, with UNICEF as the United Nations-system lead, is based on an operational plan developed with six armed groups, including SLA/Free Will, SLA/Abu Ghasim (Mother Wing), the Justice and Equality Movement (Peace Wing), SLA/Minni Minnawi, SLA/Peace Wing and the Movement of Popular Force for Rights and Democracy. A total of 387 children from SLA/Free Will and SLA/Abu Ghasim (Mother Wing) have been disarmed and demobilized during the reporting period.

20. Despite the absence of a formal action plan with APRD in the Central African Republic, a contingency plan to assist the release of children was developed by the United Nations and child protection partners following the commitment by the group to demobilize all children in its ranks. As part of the implementation of this plan, APRD identified several cantonment sites for children and provided preliminary lists of children associated with the group for verification by the United Nations. During the reporting period, 652 demobilized children, including 52 girls, were assisted. In the north-west, 474 children, including 39 girls, were demobilized from APRD. All the children received immediate care in interim care centres or with foster families and have been successfully reunified with their families. An additional 174 children, including 13 girls, formerly associated with the Unión des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR) in the north-east, were identified and assisted through community child protection mechanisms.

21. In Chad, with a view to verifying the presence of children and facilitating their release from the ranks of the Armée nationale tchadienne (ANT), the Ministry of Defence sent out orders to commanders of armed and security forces to grant access to military camps to the United Nations and the International Committee for the Red Cross for monitoring and verification. The Government also initiated and allowed joint verification visits by the United Nations to military barracks and training centres in Abéché, Koundoul, Moussoro and Mongo. Joint visits to the headquarters of the Armée de terre, the Gendarmerie nationale, the Garde nationale et nomade du tchad (GNNT) and the Direction générale de sécurisation des services et institutions de l'État (DGSSIE) in N'Djamena were also undertaken in August 2009. As a result of those verification exercises, UNICEF has documented a total of 240 children who have been released from the following armed groups: Front pour le Salut de la République (FSR); Front uni pour le changement (FUC); Mouvement national pour le redressement (MNR); Rassemblement des forces pour le changement (RFC); Conseil démocratique et révolutionnaire (CDR); Union des forces révolutionnaires (UFR); Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement (UFDD); Union des forces démocratiques pour le changement (UFCD); Union des forces démocratiques (UFD); Front populaire pour la renaissance nationale (FPRN); and Union pour le changement démocratique (UDC).

22. Following the end of the conflict in Sri Lanka, as of November 2009, a total of 560 "surrendee"<sup>4</sup> children, including 199 girls, were identified through the process of screening for former Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) combatants. Of the 560 children, 6 were formerly associated with the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Pulikal (TMVP). Children have been separated from the adult surrendeers and transferred to rehabilitation centres dedicated for children, in line with Emergency Regulation No. 1580/5 concerning the reintegration of children leaving armed groups. In the Poonthottam Cooperative Training Centre in Vavuniya, established as a child rehabilitation centre in July 2009, children undergo vocational training courses, while at the Ratmalana Hindu College, established in October 2009, children have resumed formal education. The process of screening is ongoing and small groups of children continue to be identified.

23. In Myanmar, according to official reports made available by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, 87 child soldiers were released through Government mechanisms from January to December 2009. Progress has been made with respect to those reports, as they now include addresses and other contact details of the children, which assist the United Nations in verifying the release and in tracing the families of the children. In addition, under the International Labour Organization (ILO) Supplementary Understanding complaints mechanism for the elimination of forced labour, a total of 44 under age recruits were verified as discharged and reunited with their families in 2009. The Government working committee on the monitoring and reporting mechanism has also invited the United Nations to witness the discharge of eight children from the basic military training schools, recruitment centres and camps. During the reporting period, UNICEF and child protection partners provided reintegration services to 54 former child soldiers, in support of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Resettlement.

24. In Colombia, the Colombian Institute of Family Welfare (ICBF) continues to implement reintegration programmes, re-establishment of rights and psychosocial attention for children separated from illegal armed groups. From January to December 2009, information from ICBF indicated that a total of 218 children had been separated from the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP), 74 from the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) and 1 from the Ejército Popular de Liberación (EPL). In addition, according to ICBF, 22 children had been separated from other illegal armed groups which the Government considers to be criminals involved in drug trafficking. While many of those groups are dedicated to common criminal activities, others operate in a manner similar to that of the former paramilitary organizations.

C. Addressing impunity for perpetrators through investigations, convictions or sanctions of those responsible for grave crimes against children

25. In many of the country situations covered in the present report, the near total impunity for grave crimes perpetrated against children remains disturbing and poses a serious challenge for the protection of children. Despite several initiatives and commitments by some Governments to address impunity using national accountability mechanisms in 2009, including by initiating investigations, arrests and trials against members of armed forces or armed groups, with some resulting in convictions, impunity continues to prevail. The number of prosecutions of parties to conflict listed in the annexes of my report for the commission of violations against children remains small. Information received suggests that factors which undermine the fight against impunity include, the lack of political will, weak legal and judicial infrastructures, as well as the absence of resources and expertise to conduct investigations and prosecutions. In some situations, there is deliberate obstruction of the course of justice and the failure to focus on command responsibility. Concerted effort must be made in establishing and maintaining the rule of law at the national level, as well as ensuring that perpetrators of crimes against children are held accountable in a manner consistent with international human rights norms and standards, as this has a critical deterrent effect.

26. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mai-Mai commander, Gédéon Kyungu Mutanga was convicted by the Haut-Katanga military court for crimes against humanity on 5 March 2009. This was the largest trial involving such crimes in the country and his conviction by the military justice system set an important precedent for those who suffered human rights abuses. On 3 June, the Kisangani military tribunal sentenced four members of a Mai-Mai group to life imprisonment and one to 30 years' imprisonment for crimes against humanity, in particular for the rape of more than 30 women, including 8 girls. In South Kivu, six FARDC elements were convicted for crimes of sexual violence against children during the reporting period. It is important to note, however, that while the efforts of military tribunals should be recognized, their jurisdiction should be restricted to military offences committed by military personnel, to the exclusion of human rights violations, which should fall under the jurisdiction of ordinary criminal courts. Where military courts have exercised jurisdiction, they must do so in accordance with international due process and fair trial standards.

27. Collaboration between the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the International Criminal Court has resulted in the arrest and transfer to the Court of Germain Katanga, a commander of the Forces de résistance patriotique en Ituri, and Mathieu Ngudjolo Chui, the former head of the Front des nationalistes et intégrationnistes and a colonel in FARDC. Both individuals are charged with the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the use of children in hostilities, attacks against civilians, as well as murder, rape and sexual slavery. Their trials resumed in January 2010.

28. There has been some cause for concern, however, despite those positive steps to investigate and prosecute violators in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the appointments of known perpetrators of grave crimes against children to Government or senior military positions. Jean-Pierre Biyoyo was made a colonel in FARDC despite being convicted by a military court in March 2006 for the abduction and illegal detention of children for the purposes of recruitment, while a leader of the Mudundu 40 militia; Bosco Ntaganda was made a general in FARDC in January 2009 despite being the subject of an arrest warrant issued by the International Criminal Court for the war crime of enlisting child soldiers and using them in hostilities; and Ndayambaje Nyangara Kipanga, convicted to life imprisonment in absentia by the military court in Goma on 27 July 2009 for the abduction and rape of three girls, escaped from prison and is reportedly within the command structure of FARDC.

29. In Sri Lanka, a TMVP cadre was arrested in Batticaloa in April 2009 for child recruitment and use, but was released after one week on bail without being charged. The cadre was reportedly killed following his release. The Government has not taken any additional action with regard to similar allegations. However, commitments to take steps to address allegations of recruitment and re-recruitment of children in Ampara district by errant TMVP cadre Iniya Barathi, referred to as “commander”, were made by officials during the mission of the envoy of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Major General (ret.) Patrick Cammaert in December.

30. In Myanmar, in response to complaints lodged by ILO on under age recruitment by Tatmadaw Kyi officers, such administrative penalties as serious reprimands, the loss of wages or the loss of seniority have been imposed on 26 soldiers. In addition, a commissioned officer has been dismissed from the military and sentenced to one-year imprisonment, and two privates have been sentenced to imprisonment of up to three months with hard labour by the military courts.

31. In Colombia, according to a report by the Attorney-General, for the period from January 2008 to August 2009, 156 cases of recruitment, affecting 633 children, were received by its Human Rights Unit and a total of 13 persons were convicted. In addition, as of December 2009, the United Nations has confirmed information of the Justice and Peace Unit indicating that demobilized members of self-defence groups have begun giving testimony on 1,437 cases of child recruitment and have completed testimonies on 1,093 cases. Of those cases, 90 charges have been pressed, but there have been no convictions to date.

32. In Nepal, on 13 September 2009, a decision was finally issued by the Kavre District Court on the previously reported case of Maina Sunuwar, a 15-year-old girl who was tortured and killed by members of the former Royal Nepal Army in 2004. The court ordered the Nepal Army to turn over court-martial documents and immediately proceed with the automatic suspension of Major Niranjana Basnet, one of the four soldiers charged with Ms. Sunuwar’s killing. Major Basnet had been deployed by the Nepal Army to serve with the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT). Upon the recommendation of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, in view of the serious nature of the allegations, Major Basnet was repatriated on 12 December. At the time of writing, he remains in the custody of the Nepal Army despite a formal request by the Nepal police for his arrest. Senior officers from the Nepal Army and the Minister of Defence have made statements challenging the court’s jurisdiction over the case and indicating that the officer would not be turned over to the police until a military court of inquiry had completed an investigation into the circumstances of the repatriation.

33. In Afghanistan, a number of investigations were conducted into incidents involving, inter alia, the killing and maiming of children by military forces. Notably, an investigation led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was ordered into the events surrounding the air strike in Kunduz, in which 40 children were killed. There have been no known investigations by the Afghan National Forces and Afghan National Police for violations concerning children. The Taliban or other insurgent armed groups are responsible for the vast majority of violations against children.

D. Reform or implementation of national legislation criminalizing child recruitment, sexual violence or other grave violations against children

34. In 2009 a number of important new pieces of legislation were adopted or existing laws modified to prevent, prohibit and criminalize child recruitment and other grave violations against children, in line with State obligations under international law. There have also been some significant successes in efforts to integrate child rights and child protection goals into national development plans and strategies, such as the national action plan for the child in Côte d'Ivoire.

35. As of 31 December 2009, the number of ratifications of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict has increased to 131 countries. My Special Representative continues to advocate with Member States for the ratification or accession to this important international instrument in order to give it the broadest possible legitimacy and force. Countries covered in the present report that have not ratified the Optional Protocol include the Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti, Lebanon, Myanmar, Pakistan and Somalia.

36. On 10 January 2009, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo promulgated a new law on child protection, replacing the decree of 6 December 1950 on juvenile delinquency. Under the law, for the first time, the recruitment and use of children under 18 years of age by armed forces, the police and armed groups are prohibited and can result in a prison term of 10 to 20 years. The law also sets the age of legal majority at 18 years and calls for the creation of special tribunals and police units for the protection of children.

37. In the Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Army Act of 2009, adopted on 10 February 2009, explicitly establishes 18 years as the minimum age required for enrolment into the SPLA forces. In addition, on 9 April 2009, the President of the Government of South Sudan inaugurated the Child Act of south Sudan, the first-ever law recognizing children's rights. The act criminalizes the recruitment and use of child soldiers, as well as torture and cruel treatment of children. Another example of major progress in this regard was the ratification of the Federal Child Act by the Sudan National Assembly on 29 December 2009. This new act brings Sudan's legislation in line with international standards, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its two Optional Protocols. The act prohibits the recruitment of children into armed forces or groups, ensures demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation support for child soldiers and child victims of conflict, and abolishes the death penalty for any person under 18 years of age.

38. In Burundi the revised penal code adopted by the National Assembly on 22 April 2009 now prohibits the enlistment of children into the national defence forces, lays down that 18 years is the minimum age for conscription, raises the age of criminal responsibility to 15 years, provides alternatives to imprisonment and strengthens sentences against perpetrators of violations against children, in particular sexual violence.

39. Another significant development is the coming into force of the Child Soldier Prevention Act, on 23 June 2009, in the United States of America. The act restricts the provision of United States military training, financing and other defence-related assistance to countries identified as recruiting or using child soldiers in Government armed forces or Government-supported paramilitary organizations or militias, in violation of international law.

40. In Nepal, the Ministry of Women, Children and Social Welfare has initiated a draft of the child rights protection and promotion bill, which will include, among other provisions, criminalization of the recruitment of children in armed forces and groups. This process has been put on hold owing to the change of Government.

E. Other measures to prevent the killing and maiming of children and/or to prevent and combat rape and other forms of sexual violence against children

41. On 1 April 2009, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo officially endorsed the Comprehensive Strategy on Combating Sexual Violence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, developed in consultation with relevant ministries, non-governmental organizations, United Nations agencies and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC). A plan that operationalizes the components of the comprehensive strategy was subsequently developed as the priority action plan for addressing sexual violence, including against children, in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo and has been integrated into the wider national strategy against gender-based violence. Similarly, in the Sudan the Ministry of Justice of the Government of National Unity developed an action plan for combating violence against women and children in line with Security Council resolutions 1820 (2008), 1882 (2009) and 1888 (2009). The action plan defines key objectives and activities in five main areas, that is, legislative, health, social protection, awareness-raising and addressing impunity.

42. In October 2009 the Government of the Philippines and MILF panels signed the Agreement on the Civilian Protection Component of the International Monitoring Team, which reconfirms their obligations under international humanitarian law and human rights law to refrain from intentionally targeting or attacking non-combatants or to avoid acts that would cause collateral damage to civilians. The Agreement also includes provisions for the preservation of facilities vital for the survival of civilians, such as schools, hospitals and relief distribution sites. To give effect to the Agreement, both parties agreed to issue or reissue orders to their respective military units or security forces (including paramilitary organizations, associated militias and police units) to conduct their operations consistent with their obligations and commitments. In Afghanistan, a review was conducted by the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) and the United States Forces in Afghanistan, leading to the issuance of a new tactical directive in July 2009. In 2010 a comprehensive analysis and review of ISAF standard operating procedures will be undertaken to ensure that international child protection standards are being met.

III. Information on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism

43. Following the listing of Al-Qaida in Iraq in my last report, the United Nations country team in Iraq endorsed the establishment of a country task force on monitoring and reporting in March 2009. The task force has not yet been activated owing to the lack of expertise on the ground; however, the training of partners aimed at improving the reporting and verification of child rights violations has been undertaken throughout the year. In Colombia, the country task force was formally established in January 2009, subsequent to the acceptance by the Government of the process in accordance with Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

44. In 2009 four regional task forces on monitoring and reporting were established in the eastern, central, south-eastern and western regions in Afghanistan. Task force members also increased the number of staff dedicated to monitoring and reporting mechanism activities. A child protection unit was established in the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) in March 2009, consisting of a child protection adviser and a monitoring and reporting officer, although greater field presence is urgently required. Focal points on child protection were appointed in four of the Mission's eight regional offices to work with the regional task forces. In eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, under the leadership of the MONUC child protection section and UNICEF, several working groups established pursuant to resolution 1612 (2005) have been set up, which act as sub-branches of the country task force in the field to ensure the regular reporting on grave violations of child rights. The Nepal country task force expanded its scope to monitor and report on armed groups, especially in the Tarai region and the eastern hills.

45. Given the presence of two distinctive peacekeeping operations in the Sudan, an agreement has been reached to establish a national task force on monitoring and reporting co-chaired by African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) and the United Nations Mission in the Sudan Deputy Heads of Mission with the UNICEF Country Representative. This unique arrangement of three co-chairs is intended to facilitate coordination and fulfil the requirements as outlined in my report on children and armed conflict in 2005 (A/59/695-S/2005/72), which specified the significance of the role of Special Representatives in any given conflict situation. Furthermore, to facilitate more effective monitoring of violations, UNAMID will enhance its existing capacities on the ground through the establishment of child protection field presence in the three states of Darfur.

46. In Côte d'Ivoire, the persistence of sexual violence against children across the country has resulted in the need to reactivate and strengthen the country task force in order to monitor and report on such violations with immediate urgency. Efforts in that regard are currently under way.

IV. Information on grave violations committed against children in armed conflict

A. Information on grave violations against children in situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Developments in Afghanistan

47. While detailed documentation is still difficult to obtain, available information indicates that a number of children were recruited or used by armed opposition groups throughout the country, including the Taliban, the Haqqani network, Hezb-i-Islami, the Tora Bora Front and Jamat Sunat al-Dawa Salafia. Cases were documented of children as young as 13 and 14 years of age who carried out suicide attacks or were used to plant explosives. This was further reinforced by the documentation of cases of children in Government custody allegedly under national security-related charges, which confirmed that a number of such children detained had been lured into carrying explosives or trained in conducting suicide-type attacks against national and international security forces or Government officials. Two children revealed that they had been kidnapped from Afghanistan and taken to Pakistan, where they underwent military training. Several cases of Pakistani children used to conduct military-related operations in Afghanistan were also confirmed. Children also continue to be associated with the Afghan National Police.

48. During the reporting period, more than 1,000 children were killed or injured in conflict-related violence, victims of, inter alia, improvised explosive devices, air strikes, rocket attacks and mines and unexploded ordnance accidents. This is a marked increase from last year and is due mainly to the growth and spread of the insurgency, with armed groups being responsible for the vast majority of incidents. The southern region of Afghanistan (Helmand, Uruzgan, Kandahar) remains the most volatile, with the highest number of civilian casualties, including children, closely followed by the south-east (Khost, Ghazni) and east (Kunar, Nangarhar). A total of 128 children were killed by armed opposition groups, including the Taliban, in 2009. The reported child casualties were caused by suicide attacks, assassinations and improvised explosive devices, including at least five children who were killed while positioning or using explosives against pro-Government targets. Furthermore, from January to December 2009, 55 children were killed and 199 injured in mine accidents, the vast majority (205) of whom were boys. While the number of deadly air strike incidents remains limited overall, aerial bombings by international military forces caused the death of 131 children in 2009.

49. Available information points to sexual violence, including that against children, as a widespread phenomenon. The practice of bacha bazi and sexual abuse against boys is also a matter of concern. The general climate of impunity and the vacuum in rule of law has adversely affected the reporting of sexual violence and abuse against children to the authorities and the prosecution of perpetrators. According to the July 2009 report entitled Silence is Violence, drafted by UNAMA and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, perpetrators also include and are linked to local power holders, such as Government or elected officials, powerful commanders, members of illegal armed groups and criminal gangs.

50. The burning of schools or school equipment, forced closure, use of school facilities, damage from attacks, fighting or explosions from improvised explosive devices in the vicinity of school buildings or targeted military attacks and threats against pupils and educational staff have increased since my last report. A total of 613 incidents were recorded from January to November 2009 compared to 348 incidents reported in 2008. Those incidents were largely perpetrated by groups opposing the Government, but also by conservative elements in some communities that are opposed to the education of girls. Such incidents have spread throughout the country, with a notable increase in areas around Kabul, Wardak, Logar and Khost, and in the eastern provinces of Laghman, Kunar and Nangarhar. The situation in the southern region remains of great concern, while attacks have further spread to northern provinces previously considered relatively safe, such as Takhar and Badakhshan. Reports indicate alarming figures of schools closed in certain areas, such as in Helmand (more than 70 per cent) or in Zabul (more than 80 per cent). During the reporting period, at least 23 pupils were killed and 342 suffered serious or minor injuries from such incidents, while 24 teachers and education personnel lost their lives and 41 were injured throughout the country.

51. There were also continued attacks on health workers and facilities, forcing many to close or scale down services, effectively cutting off hundreds of thousands of Afghan children from basic health care, in particular in Kandahar, Nimroz, Kunar, Khost, Helmand, Wardak, Nangahar and Kunduz. While 31 incidents were reported in 2008, the number of incidents nearly tripled to 115 in 2009 and includes the abduction, killing and assault of medical staff, personal threats from armed groups, burning, looting and forced closure as well as the use of explosives in and around health facilities by armed groups. Abduction of health workers by armed groups, including vaccinators and support staff, was by far the most reported violation. Search operations conducted by national and international military forces in health facilities, and occupation of health facilities were also denounced as a serious breach of international standards.

52. Increased incidents targeting the aid community continue to adversely affect the delivery of humanitarian programmes throughout the country, with significant peaks in Kunduz, Kandahar and Herat. A total of 163 incidents attributable to armed groups, including complex attacks against humanitarian agency compounds and aid vehicle/convoy ambushes, and numerous threats to aid personnel were recorded in 2009.

53. Countrywide, approximately 110 children have been detained by the National Directorate of Security and international military forces on charges related to national security, including their alleged involvement or association with the Taliban and other armed groups. Access to detention facilities continues to be difficult and information on children detained by pro-Government forces remains limited. The use of harsh interrogation techniques and forced confession of guilt by the Afghan National Police and the National Directorate of Security was documented, including the use of electric shocks and beating.

Developments in Burundi

54. The United Nations has verified that all children associated with the Forces nationales de libération (FNL) were released through a formal disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in June 2009, and reunified with their families.<sup>5</sup> It has also been confirmed that FNL has ceased recruitment and since June no new reported cases of recruitment or use of children by the group have been recorded. On the basis of this information, FNL will be removed from the lists annexed to my report this year. The country task force will continue to monitor compliance by FNL and its alleged dissident groups to ensure that continuous efforts are made to prevent the recruitment or re-recruitment of children.

55. However, sexual violence against children continued to be of serious concern during the reporting period. An increase was noted with regard to the number of rape cases committed by civilians, while cases committed by members of security and defence forces have decreased since July. From January to November, four cases of rape were committed by members of the Burundi National Police, 7 by the National Defence Forces and 4 by FNL members. This is a marked decrease compared to the 42 cases attributed to those actors in 2008.

56. In addition, I remain concerned by the reports on militant activities of youth groups allegedly associated with certain political parties that are generating fear and suspicion. The United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi has received reports about members of the youth wing of the ruling Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD-FDD) party, the

Imbonerakure, being involved in community patrols, guarding premises and accompanying public and police officials during arrest procedures, allegedly sanctioned by the authorities.

Developments in the Central African Republic

57. Child recruitment continues to be a serious concern in 2009, with active mobilization of a large number of children into the ranks of self-defence militias throughout the country, in particular in Nana-Mambéré, Ouham-Pendé and Ouham prefectures. It is estimated that children constitute one third of the total self-defence militias. There are concerns that those militias are supported by the Government of the Central African Republic and are being used as auxiliaries by the Forces armées centrafricaines (FACA). The United Nations has observed an increased and open presence of armed children linked to those militias along main roads in Bocaranga and Bouar/Niem. The Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR) and the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix (CPJP), which had split from UFDR, were also recruiting and using children in the frontlines in the Vakaga area of north-eastern Central African Republic. Between 200 and 300 children remain present in the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la République et de la démocratie (APRD),<sup>6</sup> the Forces démocratiques populaires de Centrafrique (FDPC) and the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLCJ). Furthermore, approximately 100 children are estimated to be associated with Chadian zaraguinas present in the Nana-Gribizi and eastern Ouham areas. The zaraguinas are from the Central African Republic, the Sudan, Chad, Cameroon, Mali and Uganda, and on occasion are made up of elements from the Central African Republic rebel groups or from the Chadian and the Central African Republic armed forces.

58. The situation in the south-eastern region was particularly alarming, following repeated incursions and the presence of LRA in Obo, Bambouti, Zemio, Djema and Mboki villages, in Haut-Mbomou prefecture. LRA continues to abduct and forcibly recruit children and use them as combatants, spies, sex-slaves and porters. A total of eight Central African children and young mothers who had escaped were received in reception centres in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and repatriated under United Nations auspices. At least 23 other Central African children reached their communities in Haut-Mbomou on their own from the neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo and/or southern Sudan.

59. Incidence of rape and sexual violence against children by armed elements is of grave concern. The United Nations confirmed 108 cases of sexual violence against children in the north-west in the reporting period, with rebel groups and armed bandits (coupeurs de routes) among the perpetrators.

Developments in Chad

60. Recruitment and use of children, in particular in eastern Chad, by the Armée nationale tchadienne (ANT) and different armed groups continued in 2009. All the children recruited were boys, mainly from 14 to 17 years of age, with several as young as 12 years of age. The Government of Chad stated that there was no policy to recruit children; however, on several occasions, Government officials have admitted the presence of children among their ranks. During the reporting period, MINURCAT documented 26 cases of child recruitment by ANT. According to the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees, 15 of those children were refugees and were recruited in March 2009 by ANT, which promised the children CFA francs 400,000 each (US$ 900) to join the armed forces. To date, 19 children remain associated with ANT.

61. Persistent and corroborated reports have also indicated the active recruitment of Sudanese children from refugee camps by the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM), in many instances with the full complicity of local camp leaders. At least 17 children were recruited, with some having been used as combatants in clashes between JEM and the Sudan Armed Forces in south Darfur. Throughout 2009, MINURCAT also received 56 reports of children disappearing under suspicious circumstances from the Abéché, Farchana, Goz Beida and Iriba refugee camps, of which 16 children were confirmed to have been recruited by JEM. The remaining 40 children were also suspected to have been recruited.

62. A total of 84 children were identified among Union des forces révolutionnaires (UFR) combatants captured by Government forces following clashes in Am Dam in May, although interviews with the children and adult combatants indicate that the number of children who took part in the battle was significantly higher. From June onwards, a massive process of voluntary defections from Chadian armed opposition groups took place. Approximately 5,000 former members of such groups, mainly from the Mouvement national (MN), a coalition made up of the Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement rénové (UFDD-R) of Issa Moussa Tamboulet, the Mouvement national pour le redressement (MNR) of Mahamat Ahmat Hamid and the Front pour le salut de la république (FSR) of Ahmat Hassaballah Soubiane, as well as from other armed groups,<sup>7</sup> laid down weapons and joined Government forces. Among those who disarmed, 155 children were identified and released. There are no more children associated with those groups.

63. Within the MINURCAT area of operations in eastern Chad, it has been established that the mine threat is relatively low. However there is concern about the possibility of new mines being laid by Chadian armed opposition groups. In 2009 the Mine Action Unit identified 36 new casualties resulting from mines and explosive remnants of war in the Wadi Fira, Quaddai, Salamat and Sila regions, including 19 persons killed and 17 injured. Children from 3 to 15 years of age were the biggest casualty group, with 11 killed and 17 injured.

64. In eastern Chad, women and girls face the threat of rape and other forms of sexual violence by the militia, armed groups and ANT, and some cases have been recorded. However, owing to the lack of comprehensive data and information, there is insufficient evidence to suggest that sexual violence against children is a systematic feature of the conflict in Chad.

65. The prevailing insecurity in eastern Chad and the recent surge in attacks against aid workers and humanitarian assets have forced some aid agencies to suspend operations in some areas in the east, thus leaving thousands of children in need of relief support. The kidnapping of humanitarian workers has become a new and disturbing trend in eastern Chad.

Developments in Côte d'Ivoire

66. Child protection officers in the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) continue to monitor compliance by FDS-FN and militia groups with their respective action plan commitments on recruitment and use of child soldiers by conducting regular verification visits to checkpoints, areas around camps or military sites, police stations and customs posts. Both the leadership of FDS-FN and militia groups agreed to an "open door" policy with UNOCI, whereby any allegations of the use of child soldiers can be immediately investigated with their full cooperation and with unrestricted access. During the reporting period, there was no substantiated evidence of child-soldier use by those parties.

67. The prevalence of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children remains the most urgent concern in Côte d'Ivoire, with no substantial improvement compared to the previous reporting period. The situation is more serious in the northern parts of the country controlled by FDS-FN and is aggravated by the continued impunity of perpetrators. There is a similar concern in the western parts of the country under the control of pro-Government militias.

68. The number of cases of killing and maiming of children has also increased notably in 2009 and is linked to the other grave violations, such as abduction or rape and sexual violence. Although in several instances the perpetrators were identified as FDS-FN elements, the majority of violations are perpetrated by individuals or groups, often unidentified, who take advantage of the current lack of administration of justice. Perpetrators remain unidentified for a number of reasons: in most cases victims do not know their aggressor and they are reluctant to press charges owing to fear of reprisal or revenge, in particular in cases involving FDS-FN elements; poor administration of justice; and the general widespread culture of impunity that often results in many cases going unreported.

Developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

69. In 2009 the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUC) documented 848 newly recruited children (including 52 girls). Of those recruitments, 77 per cent took place in North Kivu province, 10 per cent in South Kivu province, 7 per cent in Katanga province, 4 per cent in Oriental province and 1 per cent each in Maniema and Kasai Oriental provinces.<sup>8</sup> Perpetrators include the national armed forces, the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) (24 per cent), Mai-Mai factions (26 per cent), the Patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO) (31 per cent), the various factions of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) (10 per cent) and the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP) (9 per cent). Furthermore, 15 cases of new recruitment of children were attributed to the Forces de résistance patriotique en Ituri (FRPI). There were no new recruitments by the Front nationaliste et intégrationnaliste (FNI).

70. A total of 473 new cases of child recruitment were attributed to FARDC. The increased presence of children within the ranks of the national armed forces compared to the previous reporting period was a result of the fast track process that integrated armed groups into FARDC, as well as new recruitment operations in

Katanga and the Kasais. It appears that children recruited in those provinces during general recruitment drives have been transferred to such regroupment centres as Kamina, in Katanga, or Kitona, in Bas-Congo, for military training. The documentation of 64 children in the Kamina centre indicates that the Presidential Guard recruited them before and during their deployment in Haut-Uélé (Oriental province). Child protection actors experienced several obstructions and sometimes blunt refusals from FARDC to access those sites and identify children for their release. Many of the children that have escaped from remaining armed groups, but especially from FDLR, reported that they were detained by FARDC elements, sometimes over extended periods of time.

71. In the first four months of the year, 238 new cases of child recruitment by CNDP were registered in North Kivu before the military wing of CNDP officially ceased to exist. However, in the second half of 2009, a new surge of recruitment and re-recruitment of children, in particular in Masisi territory, North Kivu, was attributed to integrated former CNDP elements within FARDC. A total of 154 children were reported to have been recruited by former CNDP elements currently operating as FARDC.

72. No specific trends or patterns of killing and maiming of children could be identified during the reporting period. Nevertheless, 23 cases of killing and 12 cases of maiming were documented. Nine cases of killing were attributed to FDLR, six to FARDC, two each to the National Police and PARECO, and one to FRPI. In three cases, the group could not be identified. Four cases of maiming were reportedly perpetrated by FARDC, four by FDLR, one by the National Police and three by unidentified armed men.

73. Sexual violence against children continued to be a widespread phenomenon despite a slight decrease compared to the previous reporting period. In Oriental province and the Kivus, of 2,360 cases that were reported to have been committed against children, 447 have been attributed to security forces and armed groups, 38 cases were allegedly committed by FARDC, 30 by the National Police and 379 by several Mai-Mai groups, FDLR, FRPI, the Front nationaliste et intégrationnaliste (FNI), LRA and non-identified people in uniform.

74. In December 2008 a new surge of abduction of children and killings in Haut-Uélé district of Oriental province was attributed to LRA. Attacks against civilians by that group, including killings, abductions and pillaging, which triggered significant population displacements, continued in 2009. During the reporting period, 130 children (77 boys and 53 girls) were reportedly abducted by LRA. Most of them were abducted for the purpose of recruitment and 14 were reported to have suffered sexual violence. Of those children, seven were allegedly recruited in the Sudan and two in the Central African Republic.

Developments in Haiti

75. The devastating earthquake that struck Haiti on 12 January 2010 has dramatically increased the vulnerability and risks of children to abuse and exploitation, since such conventional protection environments as children's families, schools and churches have been weakened and destroyed, and security and order have been disrupted. Thousands of children have been orphaned, lost or otherwise separated from their families, while many more face serious threats of abduction, trafficking, sexual exploitation and association with criminal elements. According to UNICEF, half of the Haitian population is under 18 years of age, and almost 40 per cent is under 14 years of age. Concerted efforts must be made to protect children, including ensuring that priority is given to reinforcing security and control along the border with the Dominican Republic and at international airports, establishing rapid registration and tracking systems as well as safe spaces for separated children, reuniting children with their families or caregivers and providing physical and psychological support for the long term. Furthermore, criminal elements who have escaped from prison constitute a serious threat to the security of children, especially in terms of recruitment of children to criminal gangs. The Government of Haiti has been heavily involved in investigating cases of abuse against children, as well as their movement across borders without proper authorization.

76. Prior to the earthquake, efforts by the Haitian National Police, working in close cooperation with the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), dismantled a number of kidnapping rings towards the end of 2009, which resulted in a significant decline in reported kidnappings of children from 89 cases in 2008 to only 21 cases (15 girls and 6 boys) in 2009. The arrests of armed elements and gang leaders involved in child abductions and an improved security situation, as well as the increased capacity of the Haitian National Police to solve abduction cases were factors that contributed to the reduction in the number of children abducted. According to information gathered by MINUSTAH with regard to those abductions, children remain particularly vulnerable within school surroundings and on their way to or from schools. It has also been observed that girls who are abducted are commonly exposed to sexual abuse and rape during captivity.

77. Killing and maiming of children within the context of armed violence in Haiti were relatively rare during the reporting period. Statistics collected by United Nations police serving with MINUSTAH demonstrated a decline in the number of children killed over the last two years, from 38 cases in 2008 to 21 cases in 2009.

78. The rape of children committed by armed elements in the context of insecurity and impunity continued to be reported, predominantly in the urban areas of the West department. According to information received by United Nations police serving with MINUSTAH, 162 children, including 3 boys, from 2 to 18 years of age, were victims of rape from 1 January to 9 December 2009. According to the Concertation nationale contre les violences faites aux femmes, the principal coordination mechanism for sexual and gender-based violence in Haiti, of 291 cases of sexual violence documented in the West, North-east and South-east departments, 186 cases were committed against children. It was also reported that although gang rapes against children appeared to have decreased in general, cases in the proximity of areas affected by armed violence had increased. Despite efforts to document incidences of rape and sexual violence, a large number of cases remain underreported.

79. It is important to note that reference to “heavily armed groups” was no longer applicable to the Haiti security situation prior to the earthquake. MINUSTAH instead refers to “criminal syndicates” in areas affected by armed violence, such as Martissant, Bel-Air and Cité-Soleil. Those groups are comprised of about five persons, are well organized and armed with clear criminal motivations. They have been seen using children to, inter alia, provide early warning to members when security forces are conducting operations, carry weapons and intervene in armed confrontations, act as spies, carry out arson attacks or destroy private and public property, and undertake various other services for the groups.

80. There has been an increase in the number of children in detention since the last reporting period, with 328 children detained at the end of 2009 compared to 297 children (including 30 girls) in 2008. The arrest of children charged with association with criminal and armed activities, including such serious crimes as kidnapping, rape and murder, continued to be reported. In the West department, approximately 56 per cent of children (14 per cent of whom were girls) arrested were charged with crimes associated with criminal and armed activities, in addition to nine children suspected of association with gangs involved in criminal activities in Gonaïves. The prolonged pre-trial detention of children and the lack of separate and adequate detention facilities for children remained a serious concern during the reporting period.

Developments in Iraq

81. Police and military sources, community members, the media and United Nations partners have reported the continuing recruitment of children by armed groups for acts of terror, including as suicide bombers. The children were reported to have been tricked, coerced or enticed with financial incentives. Some of the children used as suicide bombers were girls. Apart from Al-Qaida in Iraq, several insurgent groups reportedly have children in their ranks and have used them in conflict-related activities. Al-Qaida in Iraq had taken responsibility for the terrorist attacks in Ninewa, Kirkuk, Salahadin and other areas in Iraq in 2009, in which, according to United Nations partners, children were used. Information provided by the Multi-National Force-Iraq (MNF-I) in Kirkuk relayed four cases of children, from 14 to 16 years of age, used by insurgents as suicide bombers or to throw grenades at security forces, in Kirkuk in April and May 2009.

82. Since the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism in April 2009, 142 violent incidents, in which children were reported to have been killed or injured, were documented. In 10 of those incidents, where it had been possible to confirm the information, a total of 223 children were killed or injured. In a double truck-bombing in Ninewa (Khazna village in Bartala district) on 10 August, 177 civilians were killed or injured, of whom 76 were children. Another huge bomb explosion outside a mosque in Mosul resulted in 236 persons killed or injured, of whom 87 were children. The large number of child casualties was attributed to the fact that many of the bomb attacks took place in public areas, including markets and outside mosques, where children tend to gather.

83. The high profile attacks on Government institutions and security forces suggest a new trend and tactic by insurgents. However, they have also resulted in large casualties among children. The Baghdad bombings of 25 October, targeting the Ministry of Justice and the Baghdad Provincial Council building, hit a bus carrying children from a day-care centre next to the justice Ministry, killing the driver and 24 children on board, as well as wounding 6 other children. The Islamic State of Iraq group claimed responsibility for the bombings.

84. A total of 110 children have been arrested by Iraqi authorities on suspicion of being involved in terrorist activities or have been convicted for their involvement in a terrorist activity. United Nations partners reported that 25 of those 110 children, the majority of whom were from 15 to 18 years of age, from a juvenile rehabilitation facility in Ninewa, are accused of being involved in terrorist activities, 4 of whom have since been convicted. Other reports indicate that 62 male adolescents were arrested by Iraqi security forces and detained in a juvenile detention centre in Baghdad for alleged terrorism under the anti-terrorist legislation. Efforts to gather information on the remaining 23 children have been futile so far. There are also allegations that suggest significant numbers of children are being detained in Tikrit and Basra.

Developments in Lebanon

85. Owing to the five-month delay in forming a Government after the 2009 parliamentary elections, the United Nations has faced some major difficulties in taking up child protection issues with the Government of Lebanon. The collection of accurate and credible evidence on the association of children with armed groups remains problematic because of the lack of independent monitoring mechanisms. A monitoring and reporting mechanism to track emerging patterns of children's involvement in political violence, which was agreed to by the Government following the visit of my Special Representative to Lebanon in 2006, has yet to be established.

86. The United Nations, child protection partners and human rights agencies were concerned with the continued politicization of youth and children, and their active participation in armed clashes between opposing political forces, often involving the Lebanese Armed Forces. In the past, this has led to the arrest of children under terrorism charges. Some of these children were held owing to their alleged association with Fatah al-Islam. A total of 12 children are currently awaiting trial by the Justice Council or the military courts, neither of which conforms to international child protection standards and therefore offer little protection to children.

87. The presence of cluster munitions used by Israel during the 2006 war continues to present a serious danger to the civilian population living near contaminated areas. Children are especially exposed to the risk of serious incidents associated with such munitions. After repeated requests by the United Nations, the Government of Israel transferred cluster bomb strike data to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon in May 2009, which has enabled the Lebanese Mine Action Authority and the United Nations Mine Action Coordination Centre to identify previously unknown strike sites and begin clearance. The Lebanese Armed Forces consider this data to be incomplete and call for further submissions. In 2009 30 separate accidents occurred, mostly in south Lebanon, one of which was fatal. Among the injured, four were children below 14 years of age. Since July 2006, 276 civilians have been injured or killed, among them 96 children.

Developments in Myanmar

88. The United Nations country task force on monitoring and reporting continues to face challenges related to access to Government armed forces (Tatmadaw Kyi) recruitment units, schools and camps in order to carry out its monitoring and verification exercises. The task force also had extremely limited access to non-State armed groups during the reporting period and was unable to establish contact with many of those groups owing to Government restrictions. Therefore, although there have been reports of the recruitment and use of children in all the groups listed in my previous report, the United Nations has not been able to fully verify, or in the cases of the Kachin Independence Army (KIA), the Karenni National People's Liberation Front (KNPLF), the Karen National Union-Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council, the Shan State Army-South (SSA-S) and the United Wa State Army (UWSA), to obtain any new information.

89. New information received by ILO indicates that recruitment and use of children by the Tatmadaw Kyi continued during the reporting period.<sup>9</sup> Reports have recently been received from Shan state (north) and Ayeyarwaddy division, indicating that the Tatmadaw Kyi is ordering Village Peace and Development Council chairmen to organize mandatory military trainings for village militias known as "Pyithusit". A trend may be emerging in both those regions, where adult males, who are the primary breadwinners of the family, are unable to attend the military training sessions and are sending their children instead. There are also reports that in some instances in Ayeyarwaddy division, children who have completed the village militia training are being recruited into the Tatmadaw Kyi. The country task force is still attempting to verify those reports.

90. ILO has verified a report that an under age boy who was recruited into the Tatmadaw Kyi and had taken a direct part in hostilities, had been convicted of murdering a colleague and sentenced to death. The sentence has not yet been carried out and the case has been urgently raised by ILO with the Government authorities in respect of his recruitment, his treatment under the law and his future.

91. In Kayin state, information received indicated that the Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA) had scaled up its recruitment efforts and many children reportedly have been recruited in 2009. The reports also indicated that DKBA was actively recruiting in order to meet the quota of 6,800 soldiers to form border guards under the command of the Tatmadaw Kyi as part of a plan allegedly agreed by the Myanmar Government and some non-State armed groups. Many children, all armed, were seen working for DKBA-run businesses, in particular DKBA-run toll gates. In one of the townships in Kayin state, locals estimate that at least 50 children are working for DKBA in their township alone. The country task force has verified four cases of recruitment of children from 10 to 16 years of age, including one girl, who were used as porters.

92. Reliable information received in March 2009 through the country task force indicated that every household in Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (Kokang Army) areas with more than one child has to provide at least one child to the group. According to the reports, both boys and girls, including those under 15 years of age, are recruited and families that have more daughters than sons will, in most cases, send their girls. Some child soldiers have also been witnessed manning the Kokang Army checkpoints during the clashes in Kokang state in August 2009. However, since the defeat of the Kokang Army shortly thereafter, there are indications that the group has disintegrated and it is unclear as to what has happened to the child recruits.

93. On 18 April 2009, the Executive Committee of the Karenni National Progressive Party (KNPP) issued a press release, in addition to a communiqué sent to my Special Representative in February 2009, highlighting the fact that it has invited the United Nations on several occasions to monitor its military bases and areas of operations, has offered open and independent access for compliance verification and has expressed its willingness to have an dialogue with the United Nations. It noted that, in accordance with the Karenni state constitution, article 29 (5), all under age children shall be free from conscription into the Karenni Army and appealed for the group to be removed from the annexes. On 25 April, the Karen National Union (KNU) issued a similar press release, in addition to calling upon the Government of Myanmar not to limit United Nations access to its areas. The groups also committed to investigate any allegations of child recruitment received. During the reporting period, a boy 14 years of age was confirmed present in KNU as was a boy 17 years of age in KNPP.

94. Villagers and internally displaced persons, including children, in locations along the eastern border areas of Myanmar continue to suffer serious threats to their lives from the effects of the use of anti-personnel mines. Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA), Tatmadaw Kyi and DKBA soldiers have been responsible for laying mines in Karen areas. Two cases of boys 13 years of age, maimed by landmines, were recorded during the reporting period. It is important to note that, owing to the limited scope of data collection and the lack of access to contested and ceasefire areas of the country, there may be more casualties that remain unreported.

95. Since the clashes in Kokang in August and the resulting tension that had spread to Wa state, local district authorities in Wa have prevented access to the north-western area that is close to the border with China because of the scaling-up of the United Wa State Army (UWSA) presence. As a consequence, food-for-education programmes, benefiting around 1,450 children from 46 community schools in that area, were suspended.

Developments in Nepal

96. There were no cases of recruitment or use,<sup>10</sup> killing and maiming of children or sexual violence against children by the Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M) during the reporting period. However, reports indicate that many children are involved in the youth wings of major political parties, such as the UCPN-M-affiliated Young Communist League (YCL), the United Marxist Leninist-affiliated Youth Force and the Nepali Congress-affiliated Tarun Dal. Friction between cadres from those youth wings has continued, with violent clashes taking place in the eastern and mid-western regions, resulting in injuries on all sides. The country task force reported that a significant number of children participated in 42 protests and demonstrations in 2009, of which 14 were organized by UCPN-M and its sister organizations, including YCL and the All Nepal National Independent Students Union-Revolutionary (ANNISU-R). While all political parties are accountable for the activities of their respective youth wings and should ensure that the activities are carried out within the limits of the law, a particular responsibility rests with UCPN-M to fulfil its commitments to end the violent activities of YCL. Furthermore, the protests resulted in the frequent closure of schools: 120 separate instances of school closures were reported, of which 36 were related to the series of protests, rallies and demonstrations organized by UCPN-M and its sister organizations.

97. In 2009 64 casualties, including 7 deaths and 28 severe injuries from victim-activated explosions caused by mines, improvised explosive devices and such other explosive devices as hand grenades and socket bombs, were documented. A majority of incidents involved children from 5 to 14 years of age. In one case of the explosion of an improvised explosive device, a Tarai-based armed group, the Tarai Rastriya Mukti Sena, claimed responsibility. In three other cases, other Tarai-based armed groups, including the Madhesi Freedom Tigers, the Nepal Defence Army and the Great Madhesi Revolutionary Army, were identified as perpetrators.

98. Public security remains an issue of serious concern in many Tarai districts and impeded the ability of the country task force to monitor and verify information on grave violations against children. However, 10 cases of children abducted by Tarai armed groups and criminal gangs were documented. Some children were also found to be involved with Tarai armed groups as messengers and, in some cases, children were used for cross-border smuggling.

Developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel

99. At the close of 2009, the effects of Israel's military operations in Gaza, codenamed "Operation Cast Lead", from 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009, were still being felt across the Gaza Strip. Thousands of Gaza residents, including children, are still living in alternative or temporary accommodation and many schools, health facilities and parts of vital water and sanitation infrastructure networks have not been rehabilitated or repaired. The ongoing blockade by Israel and the resulting lack of necessary materials in Gaza make such repairs and rehabilitation difficult.

100. A total of 374 Palestinian children were killed and 2,086 were injured during the reporting period, including at least 350 killed and 1,815 injured in Gaza alone during "Operation Cast Lead" by Israeli forces. The Israel/occupied Palestinian territory working group on grave violations against children confirmed 12 cases of Palestinian children who were killed while bearing arms and acting as combatants during "Operation Cast Lead". The working group also confirmed one case of recruitment of a 16-year-old boy by the armed group Ezz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades. The actual number of cases is believed to be higher and there had been other reported incidents of children being trained and/or used by Palestinian militant groups in Gaza. Community members are, however, reluctant to provide information on this practice.

101. The working group confirmed reports of seven Palestinian children used by Israeli soldiers as human shields in three separate incidents during "Operation Cast Lead." The office of Israel's Military Attorney-General is investigating those incidents, although the United Nations is unaware of the actual process under way or the outcome of the investigations to date. On 11 March 2010, the Military Advocate for Operational Affairs brought criminal charges against two Israel Defense Forces staff sergeants who ordered a nine-year-old Palestinian child to open bags and suitcases suspected of being booby-traps. The criminal investigation of this case was launched in June 2009, following the report of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. The indictment was filed with the District Military Court for offences of excessive authority that endangers life or health and of unbecoming conduct.

102. Since the end of the offensive in January 2009, 24 children were killed and 271 were injured in incidents involving Israeli gun and tank fire in the Gaza buffer zone as a result of unexploded ordnance, and in settler-related incidents in the West Bank and East Jerusalem. One Israeli child was killed during the reporting period and three Israeli children were injured in two separate incidents in the West Bank. The working group was able to verify three incidents of Palestinian inter-factional fighting during 2009, resulting in the injury of six children and the deaths of two others. The two children, allegedly affiliated with the Jund Ansar Allah group, were killed in armed clashes between Hamas-affiliated security forces and members of the Jund Ansar Allah group in the southern Gaza town of Rafah.

103. No children were harmed as a result of rocket attacks from the Gaza Strip on Israeli communities in adjacent areas. However, attacks and the threat of attacks are known to cause high levels of prolonged anxiety among Israeli children residing there and among Palestinian children in Gaza.

104. In 2009 the working group documented at least five children who were requested to become informers for the Israeli intelligence while being subjected to violent interrogation by the Israeli authorities. The actual figure is suspected to be much higher, but as testifying puts the lives of the concerned children at risk, the United Nations does not actively seek information on this practice.

105. The number of Palestinian children arrested and detained by Israeli military authorities rose sharply at the beginning of 2009, immediately after the start of "Operation Cast Lead", but has decreased steadily since then, although remaining systematic and widespread. As of December 2009, 305 children were being detained. There are serious concerns regarding the rise in the number of young children, from 12 to 15 years of age, being detained, with 42 children in that age category being held in Israeli detention in December 2009 compared to 30 in December 2008. The United Nations has documented over 87 reports of ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian children during the reporting period, including 6 reports of threats of rape and sexual assault against the children to elicit confessions or in some cases collaboration from child detainees. Israeli authorities stress that the Israel Security Agency operates in strict compliance with Israel's Supreme Court ruling (HCJ 5100/94), which states that investigations are free of torture, cruel inhuman treatment and any degrading handling, and absolutely prohibits the use of "brutal or inhuman means" in the course of an interrogation. Israeli authorities also stress that note should be taken of Israel's commitment to investigate any allegation, irrespective of the source, and of Israel's concern that more information should be provided in order to enable the appropriate authorities in Israel to investigate and respond substantively, where appropriate.

106. On 29 July 2009, the Israeli military commander in the West Bank, Major General Gadi Shamni, issued a new military order (Military Order No. 1,644) establishing a juvenile military court in the West Bank. This attempt to incorporate juvenile justice standards within the military court system was met with concern by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child during its session in January 2010. Since the order came into effect on 1 October 2009, lawyers have observed that the military court judges, who adjudicate on juvenile matters in the West Bank, also continued to preside over cases involving adults. However, unlike previously, children under 16 years of age are now tried separately from adults and are brought into the courtroom individually, but are still taken to the courts from the detention facilities with adults.

107. In Gaza, 18 schools were destroyed and more than 260 were damaged, including 5 schools run by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, by Israeli forces during “Operation Cast Lead”. In some cases, the Israel Defence Forces forcibly entered school compounds and used schools as interrogation centres. The lack of materials for reconstruction and rehabilitation of schools, coupled with chronic shortages of educational supplies as a result of an ongoing blockade forced thousands of students to learn in overcrowded schools operating on double shifts and often under unsafe and unsanitary conditions. To date, very few of the destroyed or damaged schools have been rebuilt or repaired. In addition, discrimination and neglect by Israeli authorities in East Jerusalem and Israel-controlled area C of the West Bank have also jeopardized children’s right to education. Inadequate structures, including tents, shacks and crude cement structures, are being used as schools owing to the difficulties in obtaining building permits needed to expand and upgrade existing schools and build new ones to accommodate the student population in area C, while in East Jerusalem, each year large numbers of Palestinian children are denied admission in the municipal schools run by the Jerusalem municipality and the Israeli Ministry of Education owing to a shortage of over 1,000 classrooms.

108. Almost half of Gaza’s health facilities were damaged or destroyed during “Operation Cast Lead” and Gaza’s health-care system is currently unable to provide adequate responses to children’s health-care needs. As a result, some patients must seek treatment outside Gaza — in the West Bank, East Jerusalem, Egypt, Jordan and Israel — for a wide range of medical assistance. During the reporting period, while 1,407 of 1,648 applications for children who sought to obtain medical assistance outside Gaza were approved, nine children in Gaza died while waiting for the appropriate permits to travel outside Gaza. In 2009 there was also an increase in the number of interrogations at Erez crossing, including the interrogation of children leaving Gaza for medical treatment.

109. Throughout 2009, the continuing high rate of settler violence against children was registered. Palestinian children continue to be shot, beaten and threatened while walking to school, grazing their livestock or playing outside their homes. According to reports, it has been revealed that a new pattern of violence has emerged since 2009, which suggests that Israeli settlers undertake attacks against Palestinians and their property in response to attempts by the Israeli authorities to dismantle “unauthorized” settlement outposts, raising additional concerns regarding the protection of Palestinian children. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has documented at least two such incidents, in which 11 children were attacked by settlers. It is suspected that there are many more incidents that remain unreported. Perpetrators are never held accountable. This underscores the need for greater enforcement by the Israeli Government of the rule of law where violent settlers are concerned.

Developments in Somalia

110. Over the past year there has been growing evidence regarding the widespread recruitment and use of children by all warring parties. The United Nations carried out research in June 2009 which confirms that the recruitment of children has become more systematic and widespread. The insurgent group Hizbul Islam reportedly had 30 persons dedicated to recruiting children and the group is estimated to have around 500 active child soldiers. While very active in the central and southern regions, Al-Shabaab is also reportedly recruiting in Puntland and Somaliland, and is training children in Bay, Bakool, Galgaduud, Hiran, Mogadishu and Raskiambooni. In March 2009 alone, Al-Shabaab reportedly recruited 600 children. At the Galduuma base, on the border of Bay region, Al-Shabaab has allegedly recruited 1,800 children, some as young as 9 years of age. In Raskiambooni training camp, Al-Shabaab trains boys, some as young as 12 years of age, and every six months, 270 students graduate to operational units.

111. While recruitment of girls has been rare and is generally regarded as socially unacceptable, there are documented accounts of girls working for armed groups, in particular in cooking and cleaning. Girls are also brought in to transport detonators, for logistics and for intelligence collection, though they do receive weapons training as well. An Al-Shabaab training camp for about 120 girls is located near Kismayo, where girls learn intelligence-gathering techniques, how to transport explosives, and driving. Girls are also reported to be recruited for marriage to young combatants.

112. The current Transitional Federal Government is also reported to be recruiting and using children, although the recruitment pattern by the Government forces is said to be less systematic. During the early months of 2009, the Transitional Federal Government, especially members of the former opposition group, the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia-Djibouti, is alleged to have trained about 3,000 new recruits, approximately 50 per cent of whom were under 18 years of age. Before its defection to the Hizbul Islam, the freelance KM60 militia, aligned to the Transitional Federal Government, also had about 50 children in its ranks. Those numbers have increased now that the militia is part of Hizbul Islam.

113. Humanitarian actors have expressed concern over the recruitment of young men and boys from north-eastern Kenya, including from Dadaab refugee camp, to fight alongside the Transitional Federal Government in Somalia. The Transitional Federal Government and the Government of Kenya have denied press reports making such allegations. The Minister of Defense of Kenya and other members of Parliament stated in mid-November 2009 that a training programme exists, but claim it is intended for Somali recruits to join the Transitional Federal Government army and police. No Kenyan or Somali official has admitted to recruiting inside Kenya-based refugee camps, which contravenes fundamental principles of refugee law. In October 2009 the Kenyan Parliamentary Committee on Defense and Foreign Relations said it would look into the matter and expected to report to the House of the Parliament. The United Nations country team in Kenya has expressed concern with the Government of Kenya at the highest levels, urging the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the protection of all children in Kenya. UNICEF and the United Nations country team continue to monitor the issue closely.

114. During the year, monitors reported more than 280 children as having been killed in the conflict and more than 550 wounded. However, the total number of child casualties is estimated to be much higher. Access by child protection monitors to first-hand information and to direct contact with child victims of the violence has been critically compromised by security concerns, especially in the second half of the year. Typically, in the current conflict, children are being injured or killed as a result of crossfire, mortar attacks, or grenade launches. Significant concerns have been raised by the shelling of civilian areas by the Transitional Federal Government and troops of the African Union Mission in Somalia during the last four months of 2009, and the indiscriminate nature of their return fire when attacked by insurgent groups, which has resulted in hundreds of civilian deaths, including a large number of children. Children also continue to be the victims of explosive remnants of war, predominantly unexploded shells, grenades and mortars from the recent conflict, but also landmines or pieces of ordnance remaining from previous years of clan fighting and border disputes. Since the United Nations began systematic surveillance in the second half of 2009, 49 child casualties have been recorded, including 14 deaths as a result of those incidents.

115. Reports of sexual violence against children have remained at the same levels during 2009 as compared to 2008, but that is a generalized abuse occurring in all regions of the country and there is no indication that it is being used as a tactic of war by the parties to conflict. Reported cases of sexual violence by uniformed and armed individuals have decreased since my last report, and less than 1 per cent of the 415 documented cases of rape were confirmed as perpetrated by either Government-associated armed forces or anti-Government groups.

116. In 2009 more than 60 schools were closed in Mogadishu, while more than 10 schools were temporarily occupied by armed forces. Schools were damaged and destroyed, and students were killed or injured, during exchanges of fire between forces of the Transitional Federal Government and anti-Government armed groups. In other instances, soldiers threatened students and teachers, and destroyed school facilities. Hospitals were also hit by mortar shells, resulting in their temporary or permanent closure, and were compromised by the lack of sufficient manpower, supplies of medicines and other equipment. Medical personnel received death threats, including those in Medina Hospital, Mogadishu, who were accused of treating Government soldiers and receiving support from enemies of Islam.

117. Humanitarian access in general has vastly deteriorated during the year. The new wave of hostility against humanitarian aid work in Somalia is putting the lives of Somali children at great risk. United Nations agencies have now withdrawn all international staff and most of their national staff from central and southern Somalia. That action followed the takeover of the UNICEF office in Jowhar in May and the United Nations offices in Baidoa and Wajid in July by factions of Al-Shabaab. The looting and destruction of life-saving humanitarian supplies and equipment in the UNICEF office in Jowhar have enormously affected the ability of the Fund to deliver services to the most vulnerable children. The United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Political Office for Somalia, the United Nations Department of Safety and Security and, more recently, the United Nations mine action programme for Somalia, were accused by Al-Shabaab of working against the interests of Islam and instructed to leave immediately. In October 2009 Al-Shabaab announced that all international relief organizations were banned from operating in Somalia, in particular in areas that were under its control. Many partner organizations have reported threats and invasions into their offices. As such, their personnel are operating under a constant threat to their lives.

Developments in the Sudan

118. Although there are no reports of active child recruitment by the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), the demobilization of children from the group remains a concern.<sup>11</sup> Some children who had previously been demobilized by the South Sudan Disarmament Demobilization and Reintegration Commission had voluntarily rejoined SPLA in order to carry out military and domestic chores for the army. While SPLA has made efforts to remove children from payrolls, some children interviewed stated they were still receiving salaries to support their families. Joint field visits to Unity state by UNICEF, UNMIS, the SPLA Child Protection Unit, the South Sudan Disarmament Demobilization and Reintegration Commission and the Ministry of Social Development in August 2009 revealed that some of the children who were demobilized, reunified with their families and attending school in Warrap state had re-joined SPLA in Unity state after they were informed by SPLA officers that their salaries were ready to be collected. Children also remain or return to military barracks as they have access to food, shelter and even some schooling provided by SPLA. However, SPLA expressed concerns regarding the inadequate provision of reintegration services for the released children and it had little choice but to provide such services to the children itself. The lack of provision of such services by the United Nations is due to the lack of capacity and resources, among other constraints. This has made it increasingly difficult for the United Nations to continue advocating for the release and integration of children. Furthermore, there have been reports of re-recruitment of 33 former child soldiers by SPLA in Blue Nile state and the families of 23 of those children confirmed the re-recruitment. UNICEF, UNMIS and the North Sudan Disarmament Demobilization and Reintegration Commission are following up on this as a matter of priority with SPLA forces in Kurmuk.

119. In Darfur, the association of children with the Sudan Armed Forces (SAF), Government forces such as the Central Reserve Police and Border Intelligence Forces, and pro-Government militias remains a concern, although the numbers have decreased compared to the previous reporting period. It should be stressed that the Government has no policy to recruit children and directives have been issued in that regard. In 2009 there were 20 reported incidents of association of children with SAF, involving 65 children, in all three Darfur states. In addition, UNICEF documented a total of 315 children associated with armed groups: 72 children in North Darfur; 166 children in West Darfur; and 77 children in South Darfur. Those children were observed with SLA/MM, SLA/Abdel Wahid, the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM), Chadian opposition armed groups and unknown armed elements.<sup>12</sup> The majority of children were observed in West Darfur state, though logistical and security issues affected monitoring ability in North and South Darfur.

120. The Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) sporadic attacks and incursions into villages and abductions continue to cause civilian deaths and remain a threat to children in southern Sudan, in particular in Western Equatoria state. As a result of such attacks, 177 Sudanese children have been abducted, 18 have been killed and 19 have been injured in 2009. The number of children who escaped or were rescued from LRA increased in 2009 as a result of the joint military operations by the Uganda People's Defence Force (UPDF), FARDC and SPLA. From January to November 2009, a total of 192 LRA-affected children, including 154 Sudanese, 35 Congolese and 3 Ugandans, were rescued. Ten girls who returned were pregnant or had babies. Of the 154 Sudanese children, 9 were repatriated from the Democratic Republic of the Congo and 6 from the Central African Republic. In addition, 9 Congolese children were handed over by the UPDF to FARDC and 37 persons were repatriated to the Central African Republic. The majority of Ugandan children picked up by UPDF forces operating in southern Sudan, however, are returned directly to Uganda without the United Nations in Sudan being notified, despite requests to do so.

121. A presidential amnesty was granted for the remaining children who were involved in the JEM attacks on Omdurman, Khartoum state, in May 2008, in line with advocacy by child protection partners. All detained children were released and no criminal measures were taken against them. The children have been handed over to their families and are currently benefiting from reintegration services.

122. An upsurge in inter-communal violence in Jonglei state among the Lou Nuer, Dinka and Murle accounted for many of the deaths and child abductions reported in 2009. Since March 2009, there have been four brutal massacres involving at least 2,500 victims, most of whom were women and children. The increased targeting of women and children in inter-communal conflicts occurring throughout southern Sudan has been a recent and disturbing trend.

123. Child abduction also continued in the context of conflict between and within tribal communities in Jonglei state. Official figures provided by the Jonglei state Government indicated a total of 227 children who were abducted both by the Murle and the Lou Nuer groups in Pibor county from November 2008 to November 2009. Most of the cases were attributed to the Murle, although the identity of perpetrators can be difficult to ascertain and abductions are not exclusive to the Murle. It is believed that most cases go unreported and that overall numbers could be significantly higher. There has been minimal progress in securing the release of those children. As of the end of the reporting period, approximately 30 children from Jonglei state, Central and Eastern Equatoria States and the neighbouring Gambella region of Ethiopia have been rescued from their abductors.

124. In Darfur, cases of rape and sexual violence against children were often allegedly committed by men in uniform and attributed to military, police personnel, armed-group factions and militia men. However, in general, victims and witnesses provide little information on the identity of the alleged perpetrators and the uniforms alone do not always substantiate the alleged perpetrators' affiliation. Other alleged perpetrators do not wear uniforms and are unidentified. The persistent allegations indicate that sexual violence remains a major concern in Darfur, taking into consideration that many cases remain unreported owing to stigma and fear. The climate of conflict resulting in insecurity and breakdown of law and order exacerbates the prevalence of sexual violence; however, there has been no substantiated evidence during the reporting period that such violations are systematically perpetrated upon orders by the leadership or field commanders of the parties to the conflict.

125. It is anticipated that the recent developments deriving from the Doha peace dialogue and normalization of relations between the Sudan and Chad may have positive implications for children.

B. Information on grave violations against children in situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern

Developments in Colombia

126. The Government of Colombia is continuing to implement a comprehensive policy to prevent the recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups. It has established a high-level Intersectoral Commission that sets up social, family and institutional networks aimed at reducing the risks of recruitment of children, focusing on those departments and municipalities that are especially vulnerable. The Government also continues to carry out programmatic efforts to reintegrate into their communities those children who have been separated from illegal armed groups.

127. During the reporting period, recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups continued as an extensive, systematic and habitual practice. Although the true magnitude and territorial coverage remains unknown, the United Nations observed a significant increase in the information received on cases of recruitment of children by the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia — Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) in the departments of Antioquia, Arauca, Cauca, Cesar, Chocó, Guaviare, Meta, Nariño, Putumayo, Tolima, Valle and Vaupés; as well as by the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN).<sup>13</sup> The children were used in hostilities, to recruit other children, to act as spies and gather intelligence, to serve as sex slaves and to provide logistics support. Resistance or attempts to escape have exposed some children to torture or death. Reports indicate that schools remained a major venue for recruitment by those groups. Many adolescent girls considered pregnancy as a means to avoid being recruited by illegal armed groups. Threats of child recruitment continued to cause the displacement of local populations, in particular in the departments of Putumayo, Vaupés and Nariño, in 2009. There is also evidence that indigenous children have been increasingly subjected to recruitment.

128. Recruitment and use of children is also a practice by illegal armed groups that were formed from units of the demobilized former United Self-Defences Forces of Colombia (Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC)). Those groups are not homogeneous in terms of their motivation, structure or modus operandi. The Government considers all those groups to be criminal gangs which are principally involved in illegal activities, especially in the production and commercialization of drugs. However, while many are dedicated only to common criminal activities, others operate in a manner similar to that of the former paramilitary organizations. Some of the groups have a military structure and chain of command, and are capable of exercising territorial control and sustaining military-type operations. Moreover, they have a political and ideological orientation similar to that of the former AUC. In May 108 members of an unidentified illegal armed group, among them 12 boys and 2 girls, surrendered to the National Armed Forces in the department of Chocó.

129. Information was received on the use of children for intelligence purposes by members of the National Armed Forces, in violation of the Code on Children and Adolescents (Law No. 1098) and directives by the Ministry of National Defence. Reports indicated that members of the Army had offered food as an incentive to boys and girls in exchange for information on the presence of illegal armed groups in rural areas of Valle del Cauca. The National Armed Forces also continue to use children in civic-military activities and maintain specific programmes for children despite the fact that the Code on Children and Adolescents expressly requires the State to refrain from using children in military activities, psychological operations, civic-military campaigns and similar programmes. In the first half of 2009 members of the Army entered rural schools in Meta department in order to make contact with the students within the framework of the lanceritos programme, through which children were taken to the Brigade Command facilities, participated in helicopter tours and received food. There is a concern that such activities, when undertaken in conflict-affected areas, may put children at risk and expose them to subsequent retaliation by members of illegal armed groups.

130. Children continue to be victims of indiscriminate attacks carried out by illegal armed groups, or caught in clashes between illegal armed groups or between illegal armed groups and national security forces. In some instances, children have been threatened with death or killed by illegal armed groups on suspicion of being informants for the national army. According to the Presidential Programme for Comprehensive Action against Anti-Personnel Mines (PAICMA), from January to October, anti-personnel mines laid by illegal armed groups, mainly by FARC-EP and ELN, resulted in the deaths of 9 children and injury of 24 children.

131. Information received confirmed cases of sexual violence committed against children by illegal armed groups. Although there is no systematic information on the number of cases of sexual violence against children perpetrated by illegal armed groups, there is evidence that child members of such groups are subjected to grave sexual violence. They are required to have sexual relations with adults at an early age and many girls have been forced to abort if they become pregnant. Three cases of rape and sexual violence by members of security forces were also documented in 2009.

132. Schools have been damaged as a result of hostilities and, in many instances, owing to anti-personnel mines planted by members of FARC-EP. There are also concerns about the continued occupation of schools by members of the National Armed Forces in Cauca department during the reporting period. In addition, military barracks or police quarters have been installed in close proximity to several schools in conflict areas in Putumayo and Nariño departments.

133. Clashes among illegal armed groups, or between the armed groups and the National Armed Forces, the presence of landmines, as well as attacks by FARC-EP on humanitarian missions, have largely limited humanitarian access and the delivery of humanitarian assistance to villages in conflict-affected areas, such as Arauca and Putumayo.

134. In March the Government approved Presidential directive No. 001, a comprehensive initiative to strengthen the coordination of military and social efforts in strategic zones of Colombia, as part of the overall objectives established in the Government's democratic security policy. In August the 29th Command of the FARC-EP declared all the projects within the framework of Presidential directive No. 001 in Nariño department to be legitimate military targets. That threat was also made to international cooperation agencies, which could potentially jeopardize the delivery of humanitarian assistance and thus affect children. Dialogue is ongoing between the Government and members of the humanitarian community on the implications of that policy for access and safety of humanitarian personnel.

Developments in the centre/east states of India

135. Reports of recruitment and use of children by the Maoist armed groups, also known as the Naxalites, especially in some of the districts in the Chhattisgarh state were received by the United Nations. According to a statement by the Ministry of Home Affairs on 20 October 2009, information gathered from intelligence inputs has indicated forced recruitment of children by the Naxals in areas south of Chhattisgarh. The statement also refers to the Naxals exhorting villagers to provide five boys or girls for their armed group. Those reports are consistent with findings by India's National Human Rights Commission, which stated in its submission to the Supreme Court in August 2008 that the Naxals forced many families to send at least one adolescent boy or girl to join their ranks. Other credible reports indicate that many children are abducted or forcibly recruited from schools. The Naxals have claimed that children were used only as messengers and informers, but have admitted that children were provided with training to use non-lethal and lethal weapons, including landmines. It must be noted that the Naxalite problem is spread over several states in the centre/east of the country.

136. The Naxals have also carried out systematic attacks on schools in order to intentionally damage and destroy Government structures and to instil fear among the local community. This has been confirmed by the National Human Rights Commission in its findings (as well as by the National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights, following its visit to Dantewada district, Chhattisgarh, in January 2009) that some schools remained closed or abandoned as a result of continued Naxalite bombings of school buildings, especially those occupied by security forces for protection. The state Government and Jharkhand police indicated that they had vacated 28 of 43 schools in Naxalite-affected districts of the state and were in the process of vacating 13 more. However, by September 2009, the Jharkhand High Court issued a ruling calling for security forces to vacate all educational premises as early as possible.

137. The Government of India strongly condemns the acts of the Naxalites and has committed itself to control those activities. The Government, together with concerned state authorities, has undertaken specific actions, including awareness-raising programmes through the media and mass contact, establishment of new schools under its programme for universal elementary education (sarva shiksha abhiyan) in all villages as well as ashram schools, and the strengthening of integrated child development and pre-school education centres in all areas.

Developments in north-west Pakistan

138. In a statement made on 28 July, the Federal Minister for Religious Affairs of Pakistan, Syed Hamid Saeed Kazmi, said that children were being recruited by terrorist and extremist groups and used for suicide attacks, and that the enticement of children to join such groups was the most serious challenge facing the Government. Furthermore, in the submission of its States party report of 19 March to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Government of Pakistan stated that it was taking strict measures to stop recruitment of children by non-State actors, in addition to initiating reforms to streamline and regulate the madrasahs that were the major source of children going into armed conflict.

139. The United Nations in Afghanistan confirmed several cases of children from Pakistan used in hostilities in Afghanistan, as well as two cases of Afghan children who were abducted and taken to north-west Pakistan where they underwent military training. This calls for more attention to cross-border issues.

Developments in the Philippines

140. It should be noted that reports on grave violations against children may only be indicative, as the country task force continues to face tremendous challenges with regard to the monitoring of child rights violations. The limited number of verified incidents may be attributed to a number of factors, including inadequate human resources capacity for the monitoring and reporting mechanism, as well as safety and security considerations in affected areas. A significant portion of south-western Mindanao continues to be highly restricted to United Nations travel, as armed skirmishes between non-State groups and Government forces intermittently erupt, a situation compounded by the tangible threat of abduction. That situation complicates the verification, monitoring and response activities for grave child rights violations, in particular in the restricted areas of Zamboanga, Sulu and Basilan provinces in Mindanao.

141. During the reporting period, reports on recruitment and use of children by the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF)<sup>14</sup> and the New People's Army (NPA) were received consistently according to United Nations partner organizations, although the reports could not be verified. In addition, although children have been reportedly associated with Abu Sayyaf units, no accurate estimate of the number of children is currently available. A total of six cases of children used by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) to carry supplies, for intelligence purposes, or who had been illegally detained for their alleged association with MILF recalcitrant commands or NPA have been documented by the country task force. In one case, three children were blindfolded and mistreated by elements of the 7th and 40th Infantry Battalions of the Philippine Army (IBPA) in an attempt to obtain confessions regarding their membership in MILF.

142. From January to December 2009, 12 children killed and 40 injured were recorded. There has been a considerable increase in incidents involving the use of improvised explosive devices in populated areas, in particular by the Abu Sayyaf, causing more casualties among the civilian population, including children. Mortar shelling by AFP during clashes with MILF has also caused serious injuries to some children.

143. Ten incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals have been verified by the country task force from January to December 2009, where in several instances children were injured as a result. All incidents resulted from ongoing clashes between the military and non-State armed groups. Furthermore, accounts of schoolteachers abducted in Zamboanga and Sulu provinces by members of the Abu Sayyaf caused fear among the civilian population and disrupted the learning activities of children in conflict-affected areas.

Developments in the southern border provinces of Thailand

144. The overall situation improved somewhat in 2009 owing to measures taken by the Royal Thai Government, in close cooperation with the local communities. Nevertheless, information based on interviews by child protection partners with Government officials, family members of affected children, members of civil society, village headmen and religious representatives indicates that there are concerns relating to the involvement of children in activities of armed groups in the southern border provinces of Thailand in 2009. Credible reports indicate that children begin carrying out tasks for armed groups from approximately 13 years of age, which may include acting as lookouts, spraying graffiti messages and destroying State property. The United Nations country team in Thailand has informed my Special Representative that it is not in a position to monitor, report or verify allegations of grave violations against children in the conflict-affected areas of southern Thailand, based on its activities in the area.

145. The ongoing serious commitment and efforts by the Royal Thai Government to protect the safety and enhance the development of children in the southern border provinces are commendable. In my annual report last year, reference was made to the intention of the Government to investigate any alleged abuse by State authorities, such as the irregular detention of children, and to undertake a systematic review of its laws, including the Emergency Decree. According to the Government, it carried out in 2009 a systematic review of relevant laws and formal investigation mechanisms, as well as human rights training for security personnel. However, there are credible reports that indicate that children detained for alleged association with armed groups are not guaranteed their rights under Thailand's Juvenile Justice Act. That remains a concern, while the Government maintains that to date there are no children in irregular detention.

146. The overall trend of attacks on schools, teachers, students and education personnel in 2009 was similar to the one observed in 2008. According to the Ministry of Education, 9 schools were burned and 10 teachers and education personnel as well as 32 students were killed or injured in 2009, while 6 schools were burned and 14 teachers and education personnel as well as 31 students were killed or injured in 2008.

Developments in Sri Lanka

147. There has been no evidence of significant recruitment by the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Puligal (TMVP)<sup>15</sup> in 2009. TMVP, formerly led by Vinayagamoorthy Muralitharan (also known as Karuna), has been reconstituted and is now under the control of former Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) cadre Sivanesathurai Chandrakanthan (also known as Pillayan). From December 2008 to November 2009, 21 cases of child recruitment were reported, 78 children were released and only 5 children remain associated with the group. TMVP declared that those children were not in their ranks and police investigations are ongoing in each of those cases. In addition, 60 persons who were recruited as children and are currently over 18 years of age remain associated with the group.

148. Reports of recruitment by LTTE continued to be received until the end of the conflict in May 2009. UNICEF verified and documented 397 cases of child recruitment, including 147 girls, by LTTE that occurred from 1 January to 19 May 2009. As of the end of November 2009, UNICEF recorded at least 34 children as well as 1,345 persons who were recruited as children but are now above 18 years of age, whose whereabouts remain unknown.<sup>16</sup> LTTE appears to have ceased to exist as a military organization in Sri Lanka.

149. During the mission to Sri Lanka by the Special Envoy of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, a number of reports were received on recruitment of children and threats of re-recruitment by Iniya Barrathi (who was part of the TMVP breakaway faction, under Karuna's leadership, and is referred to as "commander") in Ampara district in the Eastern province.

150. In the districts of Killinochchi and Mullaitivu (northern Sri Lanka), a total of 199 cases of children killed and 146 cases of children maimed were reported from 1 January 2009 to 19 May 2009, although the actual number of casualties is likely to be higher. The most affected age groups were the oldest and the youngest children — the majority of children killed were those up to 5 years of age (71 children killed and 28 maimed), while the older children, 13 to 15 years of age, and 16 to 18 years of age, suffered proportionally more by incidents of maiming (40 children in the first category and 37 in the second). The vast majority of children (97 per cent) were injured or killed in Mullaitivu district, followed by 3 per cent in Killinochchi district. According to interviews with internally displaced persons, a large number of casualties were allegedly due to artillery fire from the Sri Lankan Armed Forces and a number of casualties were allegedly due to artillery fire from LTTE. Four cases of child deaths and injuries were related to incidents that occurred in or near a hospital. In addition, children and youth continue to be at risk from the presence of mines and unexploded ordnance in northern Sri Lanka, although unexploded ordnance removal and de-mining activities continue.

151. Interviews with internally displaced persons also indicated that during the months leading to the end of the conflict, there were reports of rape during flight and of sexual harassment, especially towards former female LTTE cadres, including girls. Some women and girls trying to flee the conflict areas had their hair forcibly cut by LTTE as a deterrent to fleeing, knowing that women with short hair would be suspected by the Sri Lankan Army of being LTTE cadres and would likely be treated differently from other internally displaced persons. Some young girls were forced by their families to marry their relatives to avoid forced recruitment by LTTE. Within the internally displaced person sites, exploitation of women and girls appeared to be perpetrated by various actors through promises of favours, money or marriage and through threats.

152. To date, nine schools are being used by the Sri Lankan Armed Forces (SLAF) to detain adult "surrendees" who were identified as former combatants. The schools remain only partially operational for the education of children, affecting a population of 5,753 children. SLAF barracks are established within school compounds, and classrooms as well as other school facilities are being used by the forces, causing high levels of disruption to the schools' normal routine. Despite the separation by barbed wire between the school and the “surrendee” site, adult “surrendees” are seen walking around the schools. The need to transfer the “surrendees” out as soon as possible has been brought to the attention of the relevant military and civilian authorities on several occasions, including by Major General (ret.) Cammaert during his December mission, and the Government has made commitments in that regard.

153. The emergency that arose from the last phase of the conflict, including the insecurity and the large number of persons displaced, posed a serious challenge for national authorities and the international community to provide assistance and respond to the conflict-affected population, including children. Access to the areas directly affected by the conflict was extremely limited and access to the displaced population was also difficult not only for protection organizations but also for relevant Government bodies. LTTE continued to prevent civilians, including United Nations staff and other employees of humanitarian organizations, from leaving the conflict area. Some civilians were injured and killed during the fighting.

154. By May 2009, some 40 internally displaced person sites were established in various districts in the north and east of Sri Lanka. No freedom of movement was granted to the 280,000 internally displaced persons in the sites and access to those persons was curtailed for “national security-related issues”. Specifically, the authorities restricted vehicle access to the internally displaced person sites in Vavuniya district for the distribution of non-food relief items and other humanitarian assistance by agencies, and protection monitoring was not authorized. Access greatly improved by the end of June, although delays in granting access to some zones in the Vavuniya Menic Farm camps occurred. Access was also occasionally denied when cordon and search operations were being conducted in the internally displaced person sites. During the months of September and October, access was not fully granted to closed “transit sites”, specifically in Jaffna and Trincomalee districts, where internally displaced persons who were being released from the Menic Farm camps were held in their districts of origin, reportedly for further screening. By the end of October, however, over 12,000 internally displaced persons who were accommodated in transit sites in all five districts had been released or sent to rehabilitation centres and almost all of the transit sites are now closed.

155. The lifting of military security clearance for travelling out of Jaffna district on 18 November and the introduction of the pass system on 1 December at the internally displaced person sites in all districts have had a positive impact on humanitarian access and freedom of movement for internally displaced persons. The remaining concerns include restriction of access by non-governmental organizations to return areas and limits on access to rehabilitation centres where internally displaced persons suspected of association with LTTE are being held. As of the end of the reporting period, access to rehabilitation centres has been granted only to the World Food Programme, for the provision of food, to UNICEF, in order to manage the childcare centres, and to the International Organization for Migration, for the construction of non-temporary centres.

156. Other serious concerns remain with regard to the need for a more efficient registration system for separated and unaccompanied children that promotes early family tracing and reunification, as well as the need to address the issue of children who have been reported missing by their parents. Additional concerns include the care and protection of children with disabilities and with critical medical conditions.

As of the end of November, 1,221 separated, unaccompanied and orphaned children have been identified in the north of the country. Of those, 517 have been reunified with their families or relatives and 704 have been placed in residential homes. In addition, 162 parents have reported to probation officers that their children are missing and families continue to file requests for tracing their children at the Family Tracing and Reunification Unit established in Vavuniya in December 2009.

Developments in Uganda

157. The Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) has not operated in Uganda throughout the reporting period. In the past four years, the group has moved into the neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic, as well as into southern Sudan. The root of the LRA insurgency began in Uganda, therefore the role of the Government of Uganda remains central to achieving a resolution.

158. Last December, the Ugandan People's Defence Forces (UPDF), with the cooperation of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC) and south Sudan (SPLA), have launched joint military offensives into northeast Democratic Republic of the Congo and southern Sudan territories in pursuit of LRA. The rebels have scattered and spread out in smaller groups in the region. Those groups carried out violent reprisal attacks against civilians, including killings, abductions and forced recruitment of children, rape and pillaging, that have led to the death and disappearance of hundreds of children and triggered significant population displacements. During such offensives, UPDF has come into contact with children who are either in the frontlines, associated with LRA or being held captive. There are a number of child protection concerns in that regard, including timeliness of release of such children to child protection agencies, their cross-border repatriation, the use of those children for intelligence purposes by UPDF and the lack of immediate access to psychosocial support and services for children who are severely traumatized. The United Nations has stressed to the Government of Uganda the need to establish appropriate protocols between UPDF and child protection actors, and between other concerned Government forces that would ensure timely access to UPDF military barracks for the identification and release of children to the United Nations and partners.

159. The cross-border repatriation of children associated with LRA has become a major component of the humanitarian response for the protection of children and women in LRA-affected areas, and has benefited from cooperation between the Governments of Uganda, south Sudan, the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. That cooperation needs to be reinforced and systematized. During the reporting period, 71 children and young mothers formerly associated with LRA were received in reception centres in northern Uganda as part of the repatriation and reinsertion process for LRA-affected children. Among the 71, 2 were subsequently confirmed to be Sudanese and 1 Congolese, and they were repatriated to their respective countries of origin.

Developments in Yemen

160. Clashes between Al-Houthi groups and the Yemeni Government in Sa'ada governorate escalated into open hostilities on 12 August 2009, triggering the displacement of 250,000 persons from Sa'ada and neighbouring areas of Amran, Hajjah and Al-Jawf, and raising other serious protection concerns for the civilian population, including children. UNICEF and child protection partners conducted several investigations in the conflict-affected areas in Sa'ada, Amran and Hajja in order to document incidents and cases of grave violations against children. The numbers quoted below only represent a portion of the cases that were accessible and verifiable, and may not entirely reflect the actual situation on the ground,.

161. It has been reported that as many as half of the total number of fighters, either from the tribal militia affiliated with the Government, called Al-Jaysh Al-Sha'bi (Popular Army), or the Al-Houthi rebels, are below 18 years of age. A total of 402 cases of children recruited by Al-Houthi rebels and 282 recruited by the Popular Army were documented, including 59 cases of children who were confirmed as having been abducted for the purposes of recruitment by those groups. The truce between the Government and Al-Houthi rebels on 11 February 2010 is a positive development. However, it is a priority to ensure, through action plans, access to, and identification and release of, children associated with armed forces and groups to child protection partners.

162. Although a clear estimation of the total number of children killed or injured during the current conflict is difficult to obtain, a total of 189 cases of children killed and 155 children injured was recorded. Of those cases, 71 per cent occurred as a result of direct shelling on civilian targets during military operations by both sides to the conflict, while 29 per cent occurred as a result of lack of access to humanitarian aid, especially food and health care. In addition, 59 cases of children were reported missing by their families after disappearing at the very beginning of the conflict. Parents and relatives do not know if the children have been killed, abducted or recruited.

163. Most of the schools in the conflict-affected areas are currently being used for military purposes either by Al-Houthi rebels or by Government forces, which make them a legitimate military target by both sides. It was confirmed that 17 schools were completely destroyed and 16 schools continued to be used as military bases during the reporting period. The Ministry of Education had to cancel the school year in the conflict-affected areas, in particular in Sa'ada and Harf Sufyan.

164. Approximately 70 per cent of health facilities in Sa'ada were either completely destroyed or used as military installations during the conflict, including 2 hospitals, 3 health centres and 13 health units destroyed, as well as 2 health centres used as military installations. That situation highly affected access by the community to health care both during and after the conflict.

165. Since the beginning of the conflict, the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies have raised serious concerns regarding the inability to deliver humanitarian assistance to the internally displaced persons and other affected population, in particular in Sa'ada governorate, Harf Sufyan and Al-Jawf. There are approximately 60,000 children who are trapped in crossfire areas between Al-Houthi rebels and Government forces/pro-Government militias. All efforts with the parties to conflict in order to open a safe corridor for humanitarian aid failed to reach any breakthrough. However, the truce cleared the way for Government officials and aid workers to carry out humanitarian needs assessment in previously inaccessible areas and to enable humanitarian assistance to reach civilian populations, including children.

166. There are reportedly more than 1,000 children being detained in prisons throughout the country as a result of the conflict. Those children were either captured from opposing forces during the conflict or suspected of being fighters or pro-Houthis. The United Nations does not have access to those children.

V. Information on the criteria and procedures used for listing and de-listing parties to armed conflict in the annexes

A. Authority

167. In paragraph 3 of its resolution 1882 (2009), the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to include in the annexes to his reports on children and armed conflict those parties to armed conflict that engage, in contravention of applicable international law, in patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence against children, in situations of armed conflict, bearing in mind all other violations and abuses against children, and noted that paragraph 3 would apply to situations in accordance with the conditions set out in paragraph 16 of its resolution 1379 (2001).

168. In paragraph 16 of its resolution 1379 (2001), the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to attach to his report a list of parties to armed conflict that recruit or use children in violation of the international obligations applicable to them, in situations that are on the Council's agenda or that may be brought to its attention by the Secretary-General.

169. In paragraph 19 (a) of its resolution 1882 (2009), the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to include in its 2010 report annexed lists of parties in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Council or in other situations of concern, in accordance with paragraph 3 of that resolution.

170. By paragraph 2 (a) of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), information collected by the monitoring and reporting mechanism should be timely, objective, accurate and reliable.

B. Scope of the annexes

171. By paragraph 3 of its resolution 1882 (2009), the Security Council expanded the scope of the annexes to the Secretary-General's reports beyond the unlawful recruitment and use of children to include acts in violation of applicable international law involving patterns of killing and maiming of children and patterns of rape or other acts of sexual violence against children.

172. Within that expanded scope, the Security Council, in paragraph 19 (d) of resolution 1882 (2009) also requested that the Secretary-General include in his 2010 report on children and armed conflict information on the criteria and procedures used for listing and de-listing parties to armed conflict in the annexes to his periodic reports, bearing in mind the views expressed by all the members of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict during informal briefings. In devising criteria and procedures for listing and de-listing, the Secretary-General will be guided by paragraph 3 of resolution 1882 (2009), and the Council's request to list parties that engage, in contravention of applicable international law, in patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence against children.

173. The reference to acts in contravention of applicable international law suggests that the acts in question are not merely crimes under the national law of the State where the crime was committed, but rather acts that amount to a violation of applicable international law, including international humanitarian or human rights law. Isolated incidents of killing, maiming or sexual violence, which are not part of a pattern, as discussed below, would not be listed.

174. At the same time, the reference to “patterns” of violations rather than to “crimes” — whether war crimes or crimes against humanity — suggests that the Security Council did not necessarily intend to raise the threshold for inclusion to the actual commission of international crimes, which could only be met through an investigative or prosecutorial process.

C. Listing and de-listing criteria: the notion of a “pattern”

175. The threshold for inclusion therefore revolves around the notion of a “pattern”. Based on the use of the notion in similar contexts, a “pattern” denotes a “methodical plan”, “a system” and a collectivity of victims. It is a “multiple commission of acts” which, as such, excludes a single, isolated incident or the random conduct of an individual acting alone and presumes intentional, wilful conduct. In proving the acts to be systematic, it would also be necessary to show that all such acts in contravention of applicable international law involving killing and maiming, or sexual violence, are being perpetrated in the same context and, from that perspective, are considered “linked”.

D. Specific listing criteria

176. On the basis of the above-mentioned understanding of the notion of a “pattern” as a threshold for inclusion in the list, reference to the description of the acts in contravention of applicable international law involving killing, maiming, rape and other sexual violence is as follows. Killing and maiming should include mutilation, torture resulting in serious injury or death and killing in contravention of applicable international law. Rape and other sexual violence should include rape, sexual slavery and/or any other form of sexual violence.

177. Recruitment and use of children will continue to be the basis for listing and de-listing in conformity with past practice and in line with applicable international law.

E. Specific de-listing criteria

178. A party will be de-listed on condition that there is United Nations-verified information that it has ceased commission of all the said grave violations<sup>17</sup> against children for which the party is listed in the Secretary-General’s report on children and armed conflict, for a period of at least one reporting cycle.

179. As part of the de-listing process, a party to the conflict, whether a State or non-State actor, is required to enter into dialogue with the United Nations to prepare and implement a concrete, time-bound action plan to cease and prevent grave violations committed against children for which the party has been listed in the Secretary-General's report on children and armed conflict, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009). The action plan should include:

- (a) A halt to violations and/or the pattern of violations concerned;
- (b) Official command orders issued through the chain of command of the armed force or group specifying a commitment to halt violations and to take disciplinary measures against perpetrators;
- (c) An agreed means of cooperation between the party concerned and the United Nations to address grave violations committed against children;
- (d) Access to territory under the control of the party and to bases, camps, training facilities, recruitment centres or other relevant installations, for ongoing monitoring and verification of compliance. The framework of access will be mutually agreed upon by the United Nations and the party;
- (e) Verifiable information regarding measures taken to ensure the accountability of perpetrators;
- (f) Implementation of an agreed prevention strategy by the party to address violations;
- (g) Designation of a high-level focal point in the military hierarchy of the group responsible for the fulfilment of action plan criteria.

180. It should be noted that once a party is de-listed, ongoing monitoring and reporting of the situation is required as long as the Secretary-General remains concerned that such violations may recur. The de-listed party must ensure continuous and unhindered access to the United Nations for monitoring and verification of compliance with commitments for a minimum period of one reporting cycle following de-listing, failing which it may be re-listed in the annexes, and the Security Council alerted to the non-compliance.

VI. Recommendations

181. I welcome the signing of action plans by the Sudan People's Liberation Army, the Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist and the Government of Nepal, and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, as well as the progress made by parties in releasing children, addressing impunity for perpetrators through investigations and prosecution, implementing and/or reforming national legislation to put into practice international legal prohibitions, including criminal penalties, against child recruitment and undertaking other measures to prevent the killing and maiming of children and the rape and other forms of sexual violence against children highlighted in the present report.

182. The Security Council is encouraged to continue to insist that parties listed in the annexes to my report for the recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, and/or rape and other sexual violence against children, in contravention of applicable international law, prepare and implement concrete time-bound action plans to halt those violations and abuses, and to take measures against any parties that fail to comply.

183. The Security Council is also encouraged to call upon all parties mentioned in my report for committing grave violations against children to engage with the United Nations peacekeeping and/or political missions and United Nations country teams to undertake specific commitments and measures to address violations committed against children for which they are cited.

184. Concerned Member States should allow contact between the United Nations and non-State actors to ensure the broad and effective protection of children, including for the purposes of preparing action plans to halt recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, and/or commission of rape and other sexual violence against children, as well as undertaking specific commitments and measures to address all other grave violations against children. The Security Council should encourage this. Such contact is not to prejudice the political and legal status of those non-State actors.

185. As the pace of the conclusion of action plans with parties to conflict accelerates, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict should convene United Nations departments, agencies and programmes and invite Member State commitment to devise a more stable and long-term funding structure for the provision of staffing and other resources required to fulfil all elements of the action plans. Donors are encouraged to ensure that adequate resources and funding are available to national Governments, the United Nations and partners for the rehabilitation and reintegration of children who have been associated with armed forces and groups.

186. The Security Council is encouraged to weigh more vigorous measures against persistent violators who have been listed in my annual report for at least five years for grave violations against children. In that regard, the Council is encouraged to consider including child recruitment and use in the mandate of all its sanction committees, including counter-terrorism committees, to streamline the sharing of information between its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict and its sanctions committees, and to ensure that my Special Representative is invited to brief them on a more regular basis on specific information contained in my reports prepared in the framework of Council resolution 1612 (2005) and necessary actions.

187. To facilitate the work of the Security Council sanctions committees, its expert groups are encouraged to incorporate child protection expertise in their investigation and research teams, and to systematically include information on violations against children in their reports, recommendations and confidential lists/annexes.

188. In situations where there are no existing sanctions committees, the Security Council is encouraged to consider means by which targeted measures may be applied against persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children, including through direct referral of information and recommendations for measures by its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict.

189. The introduction of additional listing criteria, as provided for in Security Council resolution 1882 (2009), necessitates renewed attention to the provision of timely, accurate and reliable information to the Council, and the need to develop the capacity to document incidents and trends on killing, maiming and sexual violence against children. In that regard, the donor community is urged to support relevant United Nations agencies, programmes, funds and peacekeeping and political missions, as well as national Governments.

190. In light of the current challenges in monitoring and reporting on sexual violence, the Chair of the United Nations country task forces on monitoring and reporting is requested to undertake efforts to improve the collection and verification of information on sexual violence against children by systematically liaising and engaging with entities working on other relevant mandates to ensure synergies and the exchange of information, as requested by the Security Council in its resolutions 1882 (2009) and 1888 (2009).

191. National Governments are encouraged, in collaboration with the United Nations, and through the participation of civil society and grass-roots organizations, especially those involving women and girls, to devise and implement national strategies against sexual violence that would include prevention, the provision of health, psychosocial, security and protection, and legal/justice services for survivors of sexual violence, and rigorous and timely investigation and prosecution of crimes of sexual violence. Such efforts should be pursued in coordination with other national efforts to address gender-based violence.

192. I am concerned by reports, in several country situations, of the use of children by national armed forces for military intelligence purposes and the interrogation of children who have been separated from armed groups. The Governments concerned are strongly urged to ensure that their national armed forces cease such practices and hand children over to child protection authorities as soon as possible after their separation.

193. Given the regional dimensions of some conflicts highlighted in the present report, relevant Member States, United Nations peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams should accelerate the development of appropriate strategies and coordination mechanisms for information exchange and cooperation on cross-border child protection concerns.

194. In accordance with the newly implemented child protection policy directive of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Security Council is urged to ensure that specific provisions for the protection of children continue to be included in all relevant United Nations peacekeeping operations, as well as political and peacebuilding missions, including by means of the deployment of child protection advisers. The need for such advisers, including the required budget, should be systematically assessed during the preparation of each peacekeeping operation and political mission. Child protection concerns should be reflected in all mission planning instruments and processes, including technical assessment, review missions and reports to the Council.

195. I am concerned about reports on the high numbers of civilian casualties, including children, during military operations, remind all parties to conflict of their obligations to ensure respect for international law and urge them to consider practical steps to spare civilians from the effects of hostilities.

196. The Security Council should require that when requesting peacekeeping operations to support, through provision of supplies or by other means, national forces that may be committing serious human rights violations, such support is conditional on compliance with international law.

197. Member States and non-State actors are urged to ensure that children and armed conflict concerns are consistently reflected in peace processes and peace agreements so that this issue is carried forward as a priority into the post-conflict peace consolidation and peacebuilding phases. The United Nations will help to ensure this, including by providing mediators, negotiators and heads of mission with adequate guidance in that regard.

198. The Security Council is encouraged to call upon all parties in situations of armed conflict to adhere to international normative instruments protecting educational facilities from attack. This includes protecting educational institutions as well as students, teachers and other education personnel. Special attention should be paid to the protection of girls' right to education, given the increased targeting of girls' educational facilities in some countries.

199. States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child are encouraged to strengthen national and international measures for the prevention of recruitment of children into armed forces or armed groups and their use in hostilities. In particular, those measures include signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and enacting legislation that explicitly prohibits the recruitment of children into armed forces or groups and their use in hostilities, exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction in order to strengthen the international protection of children against recruitment, taking measures to implement the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child and submitting timely reports under the Optional Protocol to the Committee.

VII. Lists in annexes to the report<sup>18</sup>

200. The present report contains two annexes.<sup>19</sup> Annex I contains a list of parties that recruit or use children, kill or maim children and/or commit rape and other forms of sexual violence against children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, bearing in mind other violations and abuses committed against children. Annex II contains a list of parties that recruit or use children, kill or maim children and/or commit rape and other forms of sexual violence against children in situations of armed conflict not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern, bearing in mind other violations and abuses committed against children.

201. A conservative approach has been taken this year in determining the parties to be listed for killing, maiming and sexual violence against children, given the limited time for country task forces to orient themselves with the listing criteria and requirements pursuant to Security Council resolution 1882 (2009) in August 2009. The relatively low incidence of sexual violence against children reported does not reflect the depth and extent of that practice by parties; rather, it reflects the challenges encountered in collecting and verifying information on sexual violence.

<sup>18</sup> Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), the present report is guided by criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence. Reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

202. The following parties have been on the annex lists for at least five years:

- (a) Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG);
- (b) Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN);
- (c) Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC), including fast-track integrated units of the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP), formerly led by Laurent Nkunda and Bosco Ntaganda;
- (d) Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR);
- (e) Front nationaliste et intégrationniste (FNI);
- (f) Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP);
- (g) Karenni Army (KA);
- (h) Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA);
- (i) Lord's Resistance Army (LRA);
- (j) Mai-Mai groups in North and South Kivu, including Patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO);
- (k) Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF);
- (l) New People's Army (NPA);
- (m) Pro-Government militias in Darfur;
- (n) Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA);
- (o) Tatmadaw Kyi;
- (p) Transitional Federal Government of Somalia (TFG).

203. It should be noted that the annexes do not list countries as such. The purpose of the lists is to identify particular parties to conflict that are responsible for specific grave violations against children. In that regard, the names of countries are referred to only in order to indicate the locations or situations where offending parties are committing the violations in question.

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2010 (as well as some developments that have extended beyond the reporting period), is submitted pursuant to presidential statement S/PRST/2010/10 of 16 June 2010, by which the Council requested me to submit a report on the implementation of its resolutions 1261 (1999), 1314 (2000), 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009), as well as its presidential statements on children and armed conflict.

2. Pursuant to Security Council resolutions 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009), the report provides information on grave violations committed against children, in particular the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence against children, the abduction of children, attacks on schools and hospitals, and the denial of humanitarian access to children by parties to armed conflict in contravention of applicable international law<sup>1</sup> (see sect. IV). The report also elaborates on the progress made by parties to conflict on dialogue and action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children and the patterns of killing and maiming of children or rape and other sexual violence against children (see sect. II). It provides updates on the release of children associated with armed forces and armed groups (see sect. III), and describes progress made by the United Nations system in implementing specific requests of the Security Council (see sect. V). It also examines the grave violations related to attacks on schools and hospitals (see sect. VI), and outlines a series of recommendations (see sect. VII).

3. The preparation of the present report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict at Headquarters, country task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams, as well as with concerned Member States and non-governmental organizations.

4. References to reports, cases and incidents in the present report refer to information that is gathered, vetted and verified for accuracy. In situations where the ability to obtain or independently verify information received is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. In several situations covered by this report, the deterioration in security conditions continues to hamper systematic monitoring and reporting of grave violations against children. Therefore, the information presented is indicative of the gravity of the violations committed against children, but not necessarily the scope and scale.

5. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in identifying the situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is guided by the criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence. In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, with a humanitarian emphasis, aimed at ensuring a broad and effective protection for children exposed and affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.<sup>2</sup>

II. Information on progress made by parties to conflict on dialogue and action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children, patterns of killing and maiming of children or rape and other forms of sexual violence against children in armed conflict

6. New action plans to address child recruitment and use, as well as to secure their release, were signed between the United Nations and the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/SLA/Free Will; Sudan Liberation Army/SLA/Mother Wing (Abu Gasim); and the Government of Afghanistan, respectively. Updates on progress made in the implementation of action plans signed by the Government of Nepal and the Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M), the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), and the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) in 2009 and the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Puligal (TMVP) in 2008 are also reflected below.

Afghanistan

7. On 30 January 2011, the action plan for the prevention of underage recruitment into the Afghan National Security Forces was signed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Zalmi Rassoul, and my Special Representative for Afghanistan, and witnessed by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. In the action plan, the Government of Afghanistan committed itself to preventing underage recruitment in the Afghan National Army, the Afghan National Police, including the Afghan Local Police, and the National Directorate of Security. In addition, the Government committed itself to addressing issues of sexual violence against children by its security forces, and of killing and maiming in contravention of international humanitarian law. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict also met with high-level stakeholders and obtained commitments from the Ulema Shura (Council of Clerics), the High Peace Council, the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), donors and human rights actors to redouble their efforts in support of the action plan.

8. As steps towards the development of the action plan, the Ministry of Interior issued an executive order on 24 April 2010 prohibiting children from being recruited or used within ANP, requiring children found in ANP ranks to be separated within 30 days; and calling for investigations and disciplinary action against those found to be in violation of this order. The United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) undertook its first unannounced verification visit to the Afghan National Police recruitment and training centre in Kunduz City, Kunduz Province, in May 2010, and noted that the executive order was clearly posted on the walls of the centre, and trainers and new recruits were fully aware of its contents. Further, a Government steering committee on children and armed conflict, consisting of eight Deputy Ministers, the Director of the National Directorate of Security and the Presidential Adviser on Health and Education, was launched on 18 July 2010. The steering committee approved the action plan and established a technical working group, comprising focal points from relevant ministries and the United Nations to ensure its implementation.

9. While there are no ongoing discussions on action plans with armed groups, dialogue held at the community level in order to carry out protection activities has proven partially successful. Dialogue with armed groups on the recruitment and use of children is impeded by the current situation and the fragmentation within these groups. Additionally, given their ties with those groups engaging in criminal activities, it is often difficult to determine the identification and accountability of these groups for grave violations against children in conflict.

Sudan

10. On 14 June 2010, an action plan was submitted by SLA/Free Will to the United Nations. Under this action plan, the armed group committed to, inter alia, the release of all children found within its ranks; fully cooperate with the North Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission; and grant access to the United Nations to monitor its implementation. In a progress report to my Joint

Special Representative for the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) in August, in follow-up to the action plan, SLA/Free Will informed of the dissemination of a command order to all members of the armed group, and participation of its field commanders in child protection training.

11. A similar action plan was submitted by SLA/Mother Wing (Abu Gasim) to the United Nations on 15 August 2010. Preceding the signing of the action plan, the armed group issued a command order on 9 April prohibiting its fighters from recruiting and using child soldiers, and designated two senior commanders as focal points to prepare and implement the action plan.

12. A memorandum of understanding was signed between the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) and the United Nations on 21 July 2010, as a first step towards the signing of an action plan. This memorandum of understanding aimed at establishing an understanding of the basic principles of child rights enshrined in national and international laws, and outlining conditions for unhindered access to verify compliance with such laws, particularly that no child under the age of 18 is recruited or associated with JEM. The dispersal of JEM to remote areas of Darfur or neighbouring countries as a result of renewed clashes with Government forces, however, have contributed to delays in implementation of this memorandum of understanding.

13. On 22 December 2010, JEM/Peace Wing submitted a draft action plan to the United Nations, to be implemented in Geneina and Zalengi (Western Darfur).

14. On 23 December 2010, UNAMID and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) visited Gur Lumbung (Golum Bay) in Jebel Marra (Southern Darfur), a stronghold of SLA/Abdul Wahid, to discuss the recruitment and use of child soldiers. The armed group confirmed that while they do not actively recruit children, children may be associated with them. SLA/Abdul Wahid commanders pledged full commitment to continue dialogue with the United Nations and agreed to consider the establishment of an action plan.

15. There are ongoing discussions between the United Nations and the Sudanese Armed Forces on an action plan to end the association of children with the Sudanese Armed Forces. This action plan will also apply to its proxy groups. It is acknowledged that the Sudanese Armed Forces does not have a policy to recruit children. The Sudanese Armed Forces agreed to work towards an action plan in a meeting with the United Nations held on 21 October 2010, at the Ministry of Defence.

16. Finally, in Southern Sudan, the action plan that was signed between the United Nations and SPLA on 20 November 2009 lapsed in November 2010. A progress report on the implementation of the action plan was submitted by the technical committee comprising of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), UNICEF and the South Sudan Disarmament Demobilization and Reintegration Commission to SPLA leadership for approval, including a request for a six-month extension in order to complete the identification and removal of all children remaining within the ranks of the group. In 2010, despite several challenges, considerable progress was made by SPLA in action plan implementation, with support of the South Sudan Disarmament Demobilization and Reintegration Commission and the United Nations. A child protection unit was established at SPLA general headquarters in Juba and in all SPLA divisions across all 10 States of Southern Sudan. SPLA officers were trained on child rights and child protection, and similar trainings targeting SPLA soldiers were rolled out throughout the region in December.

17. Insecurity (such as in Jonglei, Unity, Upper Nile and Western Bahr el-Ghazal States), lack of cooperation from some SPLA commanders (such as in Lakes State) and poor road conditions were key challenges faced in the implementation of the SPLA action plan. In addition, access for child protection actors to assess the situation of children associated with SPLA in Kordofan State remained problematic during the reporting period. Attempts made by child protection actors to work with the Joint North-South Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission to officially register these children could not be achieved for security reasons. On 3 December, UNMIS raised these concerns with the SPLA Deputy Chief of Staff for Moral Orientation, who acknowledged the presence of children associated with SPLA in Kordofan State and committed to cooperate with the United Nations to release them. Furthermore, it was jointly agreed that the second phase of the action plan implementation would begin with assessments in the transitional areas, including in Jaw and Kurmuk, where children have been sighted within SPLA.

Nepal

18. In line with the action plan signed on 16 December 2009, between the Government of Nepal, the Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M), and the United Nations regarding the discharge of disqualified Maoist army personnel and related tasks, and in accordance with the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the formal discharge of Maoist army personnel verified as minors was completed in early 2010; 2,973 Maoist army personnel were verified as minors. The discharge process took place in the seven main cantonment sites and included 1,843 persons verified as minors; the remaining 1,130 verified minors who were not present for this process were discharged with the signing of a declaration of discharge on 23 March 2010.

19. A United Nations monitoring team comprising representatives from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and UNICEF, in conjunction with the United Nations Mission in Nepal (UNMIN), was established to monitor and report on compliance with the provisions specified in the action plan. Information collected and verified to date indicates that there are continuing links between some verified minors and the Maoist army, including monthly payments being made to the verified minors and accommodation, in the form of shared housing, being provided in different regions. A small number of verified minors have returned to the cantonment sites. However, there are also social-economic aspects to these continuing links, including difficulties faced by the verified minors in reintegrating into their communities and finding alternative employment. Despite concerns being raised with UCPN-M at the central level and with Maoist army commanders at the cantonment sites, few measures to redress these trends have been observed.

Philippines

20. As part of the 1 August 2009 Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) action plan to address child recruitment and use, in January 2010 MILF issued a supplemental general order restating the policy of non-recruitment of children within the MILF-Bangsamoro Islamic Armed Forces. The order also sets out punitive sanctions for non-compliance, and provides for the establishment of child protection units within the ranks of the Bangsamoro Islamic Armed Forces.

21. Rapid registration of children associated with MILF in line with the action plan is in progress across core communities in 18 of the 21 MILF base commands, in partnership with mutually agreed upon non-governmental organizations. Preliminary unverified results of the rapid registration indicate that 432 children (366 boys and 66 girls) may be associated with MILF. The training of additional data-gatherers and rapid registration covering the three remaining MILF bases, as well as systematic expansion to peripheral Moro-MILF communities, commenced in early 2011. In order to meet all its commitments, in August, the United Nations and MILF agreed to extend the action plan agreement for an additional 12 months.

22. On 2 November 2010, the Government of Philippines issued an official endorsement reaffirming its support for United Nations engagement with the New People's Army (NPA) on the development of an action plan. The Government recognizes that this initiative will contribute to the advocacy urging all parties to the conflict to respect the rights of children at all times, and likewise support the complementary tracks of the peace process currently pursued by the Office of the Presidential Adviser on the Peace Process.

23. The absence of political representation, as well as the security risks involved, currently prevents United Nations engagement with the Abu Sayyaf Group.

24. Finally, the United Nations has initiated discussions with the Government, through the Office of the Presidential Adviser on the Peace Process, on the development of a strategy for engaging with government forces to protect children in armed conflict. Consistent with recommendations in my report on children and armed conflict in the Philippines (S/2008/272), on November 2010, the Government appointed Army Colonel Domingo Tutaan, Jr., as the chief Human Rights Officer of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

Sri Lanka

25. In 2010, sustained efforts were made by the United Nations throughout the year to encourage the full implementation and completion of the action plan signed by the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Pulighal (TMVP), the Government of Sri Lanka and UNICEF in December 2008. The working group established in Batticaloa in January 2009, comprised of representatives from the local administration, the police, the Sri Lankan army, the Department of Probation and the United Nations, met on a monthly basis to follow up on their commitments in accordance with the action plan. Between June and July 2010, meetings were also held between the Police Department, Iniya Barrathi (former element of the Karuna faction) and the United Nations, to advocate and advance progress on the release of children who remain associated with the group. This resulted in an investigation being carried out on 30 August 2010 by the National Child Protection Authority and its police section, upon request of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, to establish the whereabouts of these children. Although a request for a full investigation into allegations of recruitment and use of children by Iniya Barrathi was lodged with the Government after the visit of Special Envoy Patrick Cammaert, limited progress has been made to date.

Chad

26. The Government of Chad expressed its intention to prepare and implement an action plan to address the recruitment and use of children by the Armée nationale tchadienne in a meeting between my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict and the Minister of Social Action, National Solidarity and Family in October 2010. A draft action plan has been prepared and is currently being discussed with the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

27. The Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo has not been forthcoming in engaging with the United Nations on an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children by the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC), despite advocacy by child protection actors, including the country task force on monitoring and reporting, over the last several years. While efforts have been ongoing to professionalize FARDC, these efforts have not consistently involved a formal process to remove all children from FARDC units. Many children continue to be recruited and remain associated with FARDC units, particularly within former Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP) units. Many children released in 2010 reported that they had been recruited several times, even after family reunification. This reaffirms the urgent need for a political commitment at the highest levels of the Government in order to move forward on the action plan and ensure its coherence with ongoing security sector reform efforts. In a positive move, new military directives were issued by the “Amani Leo” chain of command ordering the release of all children remaining in FARDC units.

Myanmar

28. In Myanmar, progress was made in the action plan negotiations between the Government and the country task force on monitoring and reporting to end the recruitment and use of children by the Tatmadaw Kyi. The Committee for the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Underage Minors, chaired by the Adjutant-General of the Tatmadaw, agreed to form a technical panel to negotiate the action plan. The panel met to consider the draft action plan put forward by the task force. In October and November, the task force was invited to discuss the action plan with the Government with a view to signing the action plan at the earliest opportunity. While the positive commitments made by the Government on the draft action plan are noted by the task force, some crucial elements of the action plan, including access for monitoring, require further discussions.

29. There has been no progress on dialogue with listed non-State armed groups in Myanmar. In 2010, the Government again refused access to these groups, despite continued high-level advocacy from the task force. Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) underlines the primary role of States in providing effective protection and relief to all children affected by armed conflict. To date, however, prevention and response activities provided by the Government have involved the Tatmadaw, and have not reached children purported to be present in the other listed parties in Myanmar. Further, the protection of children in armed conflict has also not been included in the comprehensive strategy to negotiate transformation of ceasefire groups to border guard forces or to resolve the conflict with the Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army (KNU/KNLA), the Karenni National Progressive Party/Karenni Army (KNPP/KA) or the Shan State Army-South.

Somalia

30. Dialogue with the Transitional Federal Government on child protection issues has been very limited. Prime Minister Mohamed Abdullahi Mohamed committed to nominating a focal point to work with the United Nations towards the development of an action plan to address the issue of child recruitment with the Transitional Federal Government and its allied militia in a meeting with my Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict during her visit to Somalia. State Minister Zahra Ali Samantar was officially appointed by the Prime Minister in December as the focal point for child protection and human rights. Given the serious deterioration in the situation in Somalia with regard to the protection of civilians, and in particular children, throughout 2010, the development and implementation of a comprehensive time-bound action plan to stop and prevent the recruitment and use of children should be given urgent priority.

31. While advocacy efforts on child protection issues have been possible with the Transitional Federal Government, it has not been possible to engage with Al-Shabaab and other insurgent groups owing to difficulties in contacting the group's leadership and concerns over the possibility of further compromising humanitarian access.

Colombia

32. The Government voluntarily accepted the monitoring and reporting mechanism pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) on the condition that any dialogue between the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the United Nations country team or the country task force on monitoring and reporting and illegal armed groups may be possible only with the previous and explicit consent of the Government of Colombia. There was no contact or dialogue between the United Nations system and armed groups on the preparation and implementation of action plans to address grave violations against children, delaying progress in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009). Upon inauguration and later in 2010, President Santos indicated that a Government precondition to starting peace talks with the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia (FARC) and the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) included a halt to recruitment and the release of children remaining in the guerrillas' ranks.

Yemen

33. Ongoing dialogue between UNICEF and the Government of Yemen for the immediate release of children detained for their association with Al-Houthi led to the opening of discussions with the Ministry of Defence on the issue of child recruitment and use, including towards the preparation of an action plan to cease all grave violations against children.

34. To date, restrictions on access have made it very difficult for the United Nations to begin negotiations with the Al-Houthi armed group.

III. Information on progress made in the release of children from armed forces and armed groups

Chad

35. One hundred and eighty-one children, including 25 girls, were released by the following armed opposition groups during the year: Front pour le salut de la République (FSR); Front uni pour le changement (FUC); Mouvement national pour le redressement (MNR); Rassemblement des forces pour le changement (RFC); Conseil démocratique et révolutionnaire (CDR); Union des forces de la résistance (UFR); Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement (UFDD); Union des forces pour le changement et la démocratie (UFCD); Front populaire pour la renaissance nationale (FPRN); Mouvement pour la démocratie et la justice au Tchad (MDJT); Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement-Fondamentale (UFDD-F); Mouvement pour la paix, la reconstruction et le développement (MPRD) and JEM.

Central African Republic

36. Between 2009 and 2010, 525 children, including 37 girls, were separated from the ranks of the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la république et de la démocratie (APRD). Of the 525 children, 417 were separated in Paoua (Ouham-Pendé) in 2009 and 2010, and 108 in Kanga-Bandoro (Nana-Gribizi) in 2010. At the end of the reporting period, all these children were reunified with their families and communities. It should be noted that towards the end of 2008, 775 children had been separated from APRD, bringing the total number of separated children to date to 1,300.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

37. A total of 1,656 children (including 47 from Rwanda, 5 from Uganda and 2 from Central African Republic) escaped or were separated from armed forces and groups during the year. Of these, 71 per cent were released in North Kivu Province; 17 per cent in Orientale Province; 8 per cent in South Kivu Province; 2 per cent in Katanga Province; and the remaining 2 per cent in other provinces. A number of factors may have contributed to the higher number of children released in North Kivu, including the comparative ease of access to locations in North Kivu, and the greater number of child protection actors in the province from which children can seek protection and assistance. These children were released or escaped from the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) (29 per cent); FARDC (21 per cent); the Coalition des patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO)-Mai-Mai (18 per cent); remaining Mai-Mai factions (15 per cent); Forces de résistance patriotique en Ituri/Front populaire pour la justice au Congo (FRPI/FPJC) (13 per cent); the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) (3 per cent); and the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF)/National Army for the Liberation of Uganda (NALU), the Forces républicaines fédéralistes (FRF), non-integrated elements of CNDP and the national police (1 per cent).

38. Of the 1,656 children, only 240 were separated by child protection actors, while the large majority escaped and approached United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) bases or service providers for assistance. Four hundred forty-seven of the children released reported that they were recruited in 2010, indicating that 73 per cent of the children were therefore recruited before 2010 and have been associated with armed forces and groups for one to four years. Access to girls associated with armed forces and groups remained a challenge, as indicated by the small number of girls (121) among the children released. In addition to the 1,656 children released in 2010, 387 children who had separated from armed groups or forces in 2009 were also registered by the country task force on monitoring and reporting in 2010.

39. As part of MONUSCO support to FARDC during “Amani Leo” military operations, a conditionality policy issued pursuant to Security Council resolution 1925 (2010) required the screening of all FARDC units to verify the presence of children and, if found, their separation from FARDC ranks. Although over 50 attempts of screening were carried out in coordination with the FARDC units supported by MONUSCO, only five children were separated during the exercise. That was owed mainly to troops not being made available for screening. Despite numerous attempts to coordinate with FARDC and implement new military directives and the conditionality policy, no formal organized operation to separate children in 2010 took place; as a result, children continued to be present in the ranks of FARDC.

Myanmar

40. According to official reports made available by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 110 child soldiers (all male) were released from the Tatmadaw Kyi through Government mechanisms during the year (bringing the total of child soldiers notified as discharged to the country task forces on monitoring and reporting since 2006 to 383). Of the 110 child soldiers, 40 were released in response to complaints lodged under the supplementary understanding complaints mechanism for the elimination of forced labour of the International Labour Organization (ILO). In 2010, 184 children received reintegration support from UNICEF, Save the Children, World Vision and other child protection partners, in support of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Resettlement.

41. In 2010, the Government shared details of a number of new military instructions issued on the prevention of underage recruitment and granted greater access to UNICEF, on behalf of the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, to recruitment units to observe recruitment procedures. This did not extend to military training schools or operational units. During these visits, greater rigour in the screening process was observed. The rejection of prospective recruits due to invalid age verification documentation or to the fact that they were underage was also observed. Further, it was brought to the United Nations notice that the Directorate for Military Strength in Nay Pyi Taw holds a database of children rejected by recruitment units and who are not included in the lists of released children shared with the task force. This measure has been put in place to ensure that underage recruits rejected in one unit are not brought elsewhere for recruitment.

42. From the ILO experience, from late 2009 onwards, it appears that, of the four main recruitment units, recruitment unit No. 1 in Da-nyin-gone, Yangon, seems to be applying a more rigorous screening mechanism. In a number of cases, reports were received that underage recruits were initially rejected when presented to this centre, but were accepted at other more remote or less rigorous centres when presented there.

43. Although these steps reflected positive progress in terms of prevention and discharge and cooperation with the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, the Government had yet to draw up a plan to systematically identify and separate children being used by the Tatmadaw Kyi, and the discharge of children continued to be undertaken on an ad hoc basis as a response to complaints.

Sudan

44. The establishment of the North Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission by the Government of National Unity has greatly assisted efforts in the release of children from armed groups. From February 2009 to March 2010, the Commission, with the support of the United Nations, facilitated and organized the release of 957 children by SLA/Free Will, SLA/Mother Wing (Abu Gasim), SLA/Peace Wing, JEM/Peace Wing and the Popular Forces for Rights and Democracy (173 children in Northern Darfur, 534 in Southern Darfur, 250 in Western Darfur). In January 2011, SLA/Free Will and SLA/Mother Wing (Abu Gasim) jointly released 84 children (44 from SLA/Free Will and 40 from SLA/Mother Wing (Abu Gasim)) in Northern Darfur to the Commission as part of the implementation of their action plans.

45. Further, UNICEF and the North Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission officially registered 526 children formerly associated with armed groups in the three States of Darfur, including 53 girls. In addition, 149 children were registered in the Three Areas.

46. A total of 210 children associated with SPLA were released in 2010, of which 42 were confirmed by the United Nations as children listed on the payroll, trained and armed. In the majority of cases, children were used as porters, messengers, cooks and guards by SPLA officers. In Unity State, 89 children were released from SPLA Division 4 in April (from Pakur and Buoth barracks in Duar); 50 children from Division 5 (Mapel) in July; and 26 children (from Wunyik) in November. In Divisions 7 and 8 (in Panpandiar and Yomding), as well as in New Kush and the SPLA general headquarters, a total of 45 boys were released. Separately, in Blue Nile State, SPLA released 140 children of the 220 children registered. Efforts are under way to release the remaining 80 children in early 2011.

Colombia

47. According to the Colombian Family Welfare Institute, 338 children (114 girls and 224 boys) have been separated from illegal armed groups between January and December 2010 and entered protection programmes. Of these, 246 were separated from FARC-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP), 62 from the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN), 1 from the Ejército Popular de Liberación (EPL), 8 from the former Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC) and 21 from other armed groups the Government deems criminal gangs.

Sri Lanka

48. Since 1 December 2008, 122 children have been reported as released by TMVP, including 32 boys released in 2010.

49. On 25 May 2010, all 562 “surrendee”<sup>3</sup> children and youth, including 201 girls, identified at the end of the conflict as formerly associated with armed groups were released, upon completion of one year of rehabilitation as required by Emergency Regulation No. 1580/5(2008). All children were released through a Magistrate’s Court order, as well as a letter from the Commissioner General for Rehabilitation. All children, except one, have been reunited with their families. In line with Regulation 1580/5, monitoring of these children is ongoing by the Department of Probation and Child Care Services. In addition to highlighting the limited employment opportunities, which may improve given the joint plan of action for the Northern Province, the monitoring showed that at least 250 children formerly associated with armed groups in the north and east of the country are facing a number of security issues. Concerns range from being requested to report regularly to the nearby military/police posts, visits by military and police/intelligence staff to their house, arrests by the police, to being required to report and sign at the local military or navy post before leaving their administrative division of residence.

IV. Information on grave violations committed against children in armed conflict

A. Information on grave violations against children in situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Developments in Afghanistan

50. The recruitment and use of children by anti-government elements, including the Taliban and its various factions, Haqqani network, Hizb-e-Islami of Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, the Tora Bora Front, Latif Mansur Network and Jamat Sunat al-Dawa Salafia, was observed throughout the country in 2010. Children were used by them to carry out suicide attacks, plant explosives and transport munitions. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting verified 23 incidents of recruitment and use of children by armed groups. Half of these incidents were reported from provinces near the border with Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran. All recruited children are male, between the ages of 9 and 17, and most of them were recruited in southern and western regions.

51. There have been continued reports of cross-border recruitment and use of children by armed opposition groups, including the Taliban, from both Pakistan and Afghanistan. Many have been forced to carry explosives across the Pakistan-Afghanistan border, often without their knowledge, while others have received more advanced training in weapons. One boy, aged 15 years, recounted that he was kidnapped by the Taliban at the age of 13 and taken to Pakistan, near the Turham border, where he was kept in captivity, among other Afghan children, for almost two years and received training in the use of weaponry. The boy was told that anyone who tried to escape would be killed. He was forced to join a Taliban fighting group and participated in armed clashes in Khyber, Kharkhano and other locations before escaping during an attack. He managed to find his way to Kabul, where he was arrested by the Afghan National Security Forces. He is currently serving a prison sentence in Kabul Juvenile Rehabilitation Centre for threatening national security.

52. The Government's policy is to not recruit children under 18 into the national security forces, and efforts are made to identify and remove children during the recruitment process. However, children continue to be found in the ranks of the Afghan National Police. This was especially true for local recruitment in rural district police stations and conflict-affected areas, where there were consistent reports of children associated with Afghan National Police units at checkpoints and police stations, including as drivers, messengers and tea boys. Insufficient age-verification procedures, extremely low levels of birth registration, opportunities to manipulate age in national identity documents, and the current recruitment drive within the Afghan National Police have led to such underage recruitment.

53. Sixty-six incidents of detention of children for crimes relating to national security and alleged association with armed groups were verified and documented. Children were often detained with adults in police custody and some reported abuse and mistreatment. The Afghan National Security Forces detained 62 children, while 3 children were arrested and detained by the international military forces. According to ISAF, there are an additional 300 detainees between the ages of 16 and 18 held in the detention facility in Parwan (formerly known as Bagram). This has yet to be verified and followed up by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting. A request has been made to ISAF for access to these children.

54. A total of 1,396 children were killed or maimed (486 killed and 910 maimed) in 2010. This is a 35 per cent rise compared to 2009, mainly owing to an increase in indiscriminate methods of warfare and asymmetric attacks by armed groups all around the country. The majority of incidents occurred in the southern and eastern regions. Seventy-two per cent of child casualties were attributed to armed groups, including the Taliban, the Haqqani network, and Hizb-e-Islami and their respective factions. Improvised explosive devices, suicide attacks, and rocket and mortar shelling were the main causes of death and injury to children by these groups. Of grave concern is the killing of children by the Taliban on the suspicion that they were spies, or for being allegedly associated with or supporting the international military forces. One such case in Helmand Province and another case in Ghazni Province have been reported. Pro-Government forces (the Afghan National Security Forces supported by the international military forces) were responsible for 21 per cent of all child casualties in 2010, mainly caused by air strikes, artillery and operations conducted during night raids. Cross-fire accounted for the remaining 7 per cent of child casualties, for which it was impossible to determine which party was responsible. Furthermore, explosive remnants of war and landmines, left over from the preceding decades of conflict, continued to cause loss of lives and injury to children, mostly boys between 8 and 14 years old in the south and central regions.

55. Reports were received of sexual violence committed against children by members of the Afghan National Security Forces with no or limited follow-up by the authorities. Moreover, there continued to be reports of boys being sexually abused and exploited by armed forces and groups, including the practice of baccha baazi (dancing boys). Such incidents and their context continue to be difficult to document, but efforts are being made to further investigate.

56. Eight incidents of abduction of children by armed groups, including the Taliban, were verified in 2010. Children were abducted for various reasons, to intimidate families perceived as pro-Government or to pressure an exchange or release of individuals detained by the authorities. Dozens of additional reports of abduction of children were received during the reporting period, but information on the perpetrators and their motives has been difficult to obtain.

57. A total of 197 education-related incidents throughout the country were verified. Incidents affecting education included direct attacks against schools, collateral damage, killing and injury of students and education personnel, threats and intimidations, and forced school closures. These incidents were mostly perpetrated by armed groups (86 per cent); 30 per cent of the incidents were carried out in September 2010, the month of the Parliamentary elections, when half of the polling stations were located in schools. Of the 47 verified incidents affecting health delivery, 33 were attributed to armed groups and 14 to pro-Government forces. Incidents included the abduction of medical staff, the looting of medical supplies, improvised explosive device attacks, collateral damage and intimidation. The highest incident levels were recorded in the north-eastern, eastern and northern regions. The occupation of schools and health facilities by pro-Government forces is a concern, including five verified incidents of school occupation by the international military forces in 2010.

58. Humanitarian access continued to be seriously affected by widespread insecurity, especially in the south and south-east of the country in 2010. Significantly increased levels of insecurity in these areas, as well as the northern, north-eastern and north-western regions, also hindered the capability of aid agencies to assess needs, assist vulnerable populations and monitor provision of assistance. Armed opposition groups were responsible for the majority of incidents, including the abduction of humanitarian personnel, intimidation, the looting of humanitarian aid, and armed attacks against the convoys and staff of humanitarian organizations. Abduction by armed opposition groups remained the most common violation (74 persons abducted in 30 separate cases). In a majority of instances, those abducted were released on the intervention of community elders and religious leaders.

59. In January 2010, President Karzai outlined a peace and reintegration programme aimed at promoting peace through dialogue with armed opposition groups. In the Afghanistan Peace and Reintegration Programme 2010 document of July 2010, however, no specific reference was made, nor resources or responsibilities allocated, for the particular needs of children directly affected by armed conflict.

Developments in Burundi

60. Following the release of all children associated with the Forces nationales de libération (FNL) in April 2009 and the transformation of the movement into a registered political party, Burundi was removed from the annexes to my last annual report on children and armed conflict (S/2010/181). No new reported cases of recruitment or use of children were recorded in 2010. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting continues to monitor the situation of children in Burundi, given the security challenges that are present in a country emerging from conflict.

61. The operational framework for the reintegration of children formerly associated with FNL and its alleged dissidents, established in 2009 (comprising a government technical coordination team, UNICEF, United Nations Office in Burundi (BNUB), international NGOs and national civil society organizations), continued to monitor the reintegration of 626 children, including 8 girls, during the reporting period.

62. The number of reported cases of rape and other sexual violence perpetrated by members of security and defence forces decreased in 2010 (6 cases) compared to 2009 (15 cases). According to BNUB, from January to November, the six cases of rape of children (7-16 years of age), including one boy, were committed by members of the Burundi National Police, National Defence Force (FDN) and national intelligence service. For most of the reported cases, no judicial case has been filed by the victims or follow-up taken by the authorities. In line with the national strategy to fight gender-based violence still to be adopted and as part of the joint programme signed with the United Nations, the Government is setting up a “one-stop” centre to provide medical and psychosocial support to victims of gender-based violence, including rape.

63. From January to November, BNUB registered the extrajudicial or arbitrary detention of 204 children (45 girls and 159 boys), including some children arrested for offences linked to national security. Among them is a 14-year-old girl suspected of subversion, and a 14-year-old boy suspected of involvement in mercenary activity. On a positive note, the Ministry of Justice established a child protection unit for providing protection and assistance to children in contact with the law.

Developments in the Central African Republic

64. The Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR) and the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix (CPJP) reportedly continued to use children in the north of the country. Children were seen fighting for both armed groups during the attack on Birao in Vakaga prefecture by CPJP in November. The presence of children within the Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) near Kabo (Ouham prefecture) and the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLJC) in Vakaga prefecture was also reported. Further, while hundreds of children have been demobilized from APRD since 2008, reports have confirmed that children, including girls, remain associated with the armed group in Ouham, Ouham-Pendé and Nana-Gribizi. APRD commanders have denied using children, and have explained that children voluntarily joined APRD elements for food and protection. The United Nations has not been able to confirm the number of children still present in the ranks of APRD. The abduction of children by LRA, especially in the south-east of the country (Mbomou and Haut-Mbomou prefectures), remained of concern, along with reports that self-defence militias supported by local authorities had mobilized children into their ranks, principally in the north-west.

65. Attacks on villages in the north and north-west of the Central African Republic resulting in civilian casualties, including children, were documented during the year. In particular, in February, APRD attacked a campsite of members of the Peuhl ethnic group in Taley (near Markounda in Ouham prefecture), killing 18 people, including 4 children. CPJP attacked Kpata village (near Ndélé in Bamingui-Bangoran prefecture) in October, killing one girl. Multiple LRA attacks in which children were killed were reported in Haut-Mbomou and Mbomou prefectures by survivors.

66. Incidences of rape and other sexual violence against children by armed elements continued to be of grave concern in 2010, even though they remain severely underreported. Of the hundreds of cases reported to the United Nations, approximately 10 per cent of victims were children, with CPJP and zaraguinas (coupeurs des routes) among the perpetrators. In the east, the abduction of young girls by LRA for use as sex slaves was reported by several victims who were able to escape. Weak law enforcement systems, compounded by the absence of protective measures to separate victims of sexual violence from their known aggressors in the community, have contributed to a high level of impunity for such crimes.

67. The education system, especially in the east of the country, was considerably affected by insecurity owing to the presence of armed groups. While schools were not specifically targeted by LRA or other armed groups present in the east, the atmosphere of fear of incursions by armed groups, including LRA, have prevented parents from sending their children to school. From mid-May to September 2010, schools in several villages of Mbomou (Rafai and Dembia in particular) and Haut-Mbomou (i.e., Obo and Zemio) prefectures were closed owing to LRA activities. In addition, it was reported to the United Nations that CPJP occupied several schools in villages near Bria (Haute-Kotto prefecture) between May and July; while in October, schools in Ippy (Ouaka prefecture) were temporarily closed owing to the occupation of the town by CPJP.

68. During the year, there were cases of lootings of health centres in the east and north of the country during attacks on villages by CPJP (in Bamingui-Bangoran prefecture) and by LRA (in Mbomou, Haut-Mbomou, Haute-Kotto and Vakaga prefectures), which adversely impacted access to health care by the population, including children.

69. Humanitarian access was a major challenge in several parts of the north and east (including Bamingui-Bangoran, Vakaga, Haute-Kotto, Mbomou and Haut-Mbomou prefectures) owing to sporadic fighting between armed groups and FACA, as well as increased rebel group attacks throughout the year. Incidents linked to armed attacks and banditry, including kidnappings and killings of humanitarian workers, resulted in a substantial decrease of activities by humanitarian organizations in these areas, especially in Vakaga. Widespread insecurity in the LRA-affected prefectures of Mbomou and Haut-Mbomou considerably limited humanitarian aid and protection activities, especially to the displaced rural population. Restrictions on the passage of humanitarian convoys by the Government on major routes around Ndélé (Bamingui-Bangoran) until July 2010, as well as attacks on convoys by armed groups and looting of premises of NGOs by UFDR and FDPC, compounded the challenges associated with aid delivery to affected populations. On several occasions, negotiations for humanitarian access were complicated by a lack of clarity in the chain of command, in particular with FDPC in Kabo (Ouham prefecture).

70. In June, the Government of the Central African Republic signed the N'Djamena Declaration to end the recruitment and use of children within its armed forces. The Government's commitment to protect children affected by armed conflict was restated at the African Union ministerial meeting on LRA, held in Bangui in October. Other efforts led by the Government to protect children included the signing in September of the two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the

71. In January, the revised Penal Code, which includes a section on crimes against children under discussion since 2003, was promulgated by presidential decree. Moreover, the Government decided, with the support of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, to revise its existing law on the protection of women against violence in the Central African Republic to include the protection of children against all forms of sexual and gender-based violence. At the time of writing, the bill was still under review.

Developments in Chad

72. The slow but progressive improvement in the security situation in 2010, and the normalization of relations between Chad and the Sudan contributed to a decrease in the number of reported cases of child recruitment in Chad, compared to 2009. JEM was less visible and present in the refugee camps in eastern Chad; no new cases of child recruitment by JEM were reported to have occurred after May 2010. Furthermore, between May and August 2010, at least 40 former child combatants allegedly recruited by JEM prior to 2010 returned to the refugee camps. Prior to May, the recruitment of Sudanese refugee children by JEM from north-eastern Chad had been reported. Information corroborated by various sources pointed to local refugee leaders who in some cases acted as “facilitators” in the recruitment process.

73. On 17 September, a group of Sudanese men reportedly attempted to recruit children and youth from the Goz Amer refugee camp (Dar Sila region) to join the SLM/A. The recruiters targeted boys and girls, some as young as 12 years old. Although the group was reported to have enlisted at least 207 refugees, most of them children, they were prevented by the Détachement intégré de sécurité (DIS) from taking the recruits with them, and the perpetrators were subsequently arrested by Chadian authorities.

74. Only eight allegations of child recruitment by the Armée nationale tchadienne (6 Sudanese refugee children from north-eastern Chad and 2 children among displaced communities in the Goz Beida area of south-eastern Chad) were received in 2010, compared to 26 cases in 2009. In addition, between May and August 2010, the presence of children within Armée nationale tchadienne forces was also observed in Adré, as well as within mobile brigades of the Armée nationale tchadienne in the border areas of Goungour and Sawa, Assoungoua department. The number of cases documented were isolated and allegedly carried out by low-ranking officers. In response, the Government, with the support of the country task force on monitoring and reporting, organized training sessions to build and reinforce the capacity and knowledge of rank-and-file officers of the Armée nationale tchadienne on child rights and child protection, in line with international norms and standards.

75. Children were also identified within several Chadian opposition armed groups, including those that joined Government forces following the signature of several peace agreements (peace agreements of July 2009 with Mouvement national; with Front démocratique populaire (FDP) of December 2009, and with MDJT of May 2010). For instance, 13 boys between the ages of 14 and 17 were identified among the 60 FPRN combatants captured by the Armée nationale tchadienne during the fighting between Armée nationale tchadienne and FPRN in April 2010. Furthermore, according to information received from the local population, children allegedly remain associated with FDP, whose forces are armed and stationed in the Central African Republic/Chad/Sudan border triangle; and MPRD in the hills of Korbol in Moyen-Chari.

76. Children represented the majority of victims of explosive remnants of war in 2010. Of the 17 incidents reported in the four eastern regions (Ouaddai, Wadi Fira, Dar Sila and Salamat), 14 involved children (all boys), and 2 were fatal. In addition, access to the Tibesti region, an intensely mined area occupied by MDJT was possible as a result of the peace agreement between the Government of Chad and MDJT. Demining activities by the Government, as well as mine education campaigns were carried out in the last quarter of 2010. Despite these efforts, the prevalence of mines and explosive remnants of war in Chad has been understated. With the departure of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) and the termination of its mine and explosive remnants of war clearance and road verification programmes, there is a serious risk that incidents of killing and maiming of children by explosive remnants of war may increase.

77. Sexual and gender-based violence against women and girls continued to be a widespread phenomenon in Chad. Perpetrators include members of armed groups and the Armée nationale tchadienne, but the majority of incidents were perpetrated by civilians. Two observations may be made from sexual and gender-based violence data collected in Chad by the United Nations. First, there is an ascending trend of reported sexual and gender-based violence cases among refugees, with 295 cases in 2006, 512 cases in 2007, 656 cases in 2008, 860 in 2009 and 650 by midyear 2010. This may not necessarily indicate that sexual and gender-based violence cases have increased, but rather the result of increased reporting owing to sustained work on sexual and gender-based violence. Second, it may reveal a behavioural change evidenced by survivors and their relatives willing to report cases. While underreporting remains a concern, particularly for rape or attempted rape cases, this trend may indicate growing trust in the protection mechanisms established by international actors, in close coordination with the communities, and in DIS.

78. Of the 650 cases of sexual and gender-based violence against refugee women and girls recorded by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in the first semester of 2010, nearly 30 per cent of victims were children, including children as young as 3 years old. Gender-based violence assaults, rapes and attempted rapes, including by members of the armed forces, were documented. Within the host population, two cases of rape against children by members of the armed forces were also documented. Impunity related to sexual and gender-based violence cases, particularly when the perpetrators are soldiers of the Armée nationale tchadienne, remains a major concern.

79. During 2010, 11 security incidents and attacks against humanitarian workers were recorded. This was attributed to three factors: DIS, with the support of MINURCAT, increasingly providing escorts and being able to react relatively promptly; the creation of the joint Chad/Sudan monitoring force and its deterrence effect; and the fact that other security forces, including the Armée nationale tchadienne and Gendarmerie, intensified their efforts to pursue and apprehend perpetrators. However, this decrease came after a spate of serious security incidents in June 2010, including carjackings, kidnappings and abductions. As a result, one international NGO withdrew its international staff from eastern Chad and three others partially suspended their operations. In order to continue protection for humanitarian operations in view of the withdrawal of MINURCAT, the Government created the Bureau de sécurisation et de mouvement in six different locations (Abéché, Bahai, Guéréda, Iriba, Koukou, Goz Beida) to provide additional security to the humanitarian actors.

80. As part of its efforts to address the recruitment and use of children, the Government of Chad organized a regional conference in N'Djamena on ending the recruitment and use of children by armed forces and groups in June 2010. Bringing together representatives of Chad, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Niger, Nigeria and the Sudan, the conference culminated in the signing of the N'Djamena Declaration, by which Governments committed to, inter alia, end child recruitment and use by armed forces and armed groups; establish a strategy to fight arms proliferation; implement relevant regional and international instruments on child rights and child protection; and harmonize national legislations.

Developments in Côte d'Ivoire

81. The prevalence of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children remains one of the many concerns in Côte d'Ivoire. Out of the 37 cases of sexual violence documented by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting at the national level, 7 were perpetrated by Forces nouvelles elements in the north. In the west, most of the cases of rapes allegedly attributed to pro-Gbagbo militia groups occurred during road attacks, which has become a new concern in the region. Three cases were reported in May, June and October 2010. Generally, it was difficult to identify whether perpetrators belonged to militia groups, as most of them were in civilian clothing. In San Pedro, two members of the Fédération estudiantine et scolaire de Côte d'Ivoire, aged 17, who had been arrested on 12 March for their involvement in the kidnapping and gang-rape of one of their peers, were released.

82. There were also concerns about the killing and maiming of children, with 23 cases recorded, of which 19 were verified. Of the 19, 11 cases occurred during the immediate post-electoral period mainly in the cities of Issia, Duékoué, Sinfra, Abidjan and Tiébissou. These cases were allegedly perpetrated by forces loyal to former president Laurent Gbagbo. The remaining allegations were not verified by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting at the time of writing, owing to the volatile security situation and the restrictions to movement of personnel in areas controlled by forces loyal to Mr. Gbagbo.

83. The involvement of children in campaigning activities and political demonstrations during the weeks leading up to the elections exposed them to reprisals, and in some cases resulted in children being physically harmed. In order to address this concern, the Forces nouvelles Chief of Staff and Integrated Command Centre officials were requested to instruct their personnel to ensure children are protected from any potential risks of violence or manipulation that are against their best interests.

84. A worrying trend of youth militarization was observed, particularly after the run-off election on 28 November 2010. Young people were recruited in various localities, notably in Abidjan, Bouaflé, Daloa, San Pedro, the Agnéby region, Vavoua and Zuénoula, which are areas controlled by forces loyal to Mr. Gbagbo. Some were brought to Abidjan to undergo rapid military training in designated centres. There were also reports of forced abductions of youth who were taken to training centres. Upon completion of their training, some of the youth were sent to the field with military uniforms and weapons. In Yamoussoukro, the Compagnie des Scorpions Guetteurs, a militia group led by a Young Patriot, was reactivated, and reportedly recruited youth to infiltrate areas controlled by the Forces nouvelles.

Developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

85. Child protection actors recorded 447 cases of child recruitment (including 49 girls) so far in 2010, representing about half of the number of recruitment cases reported in my last report (S/2010/181). This difference can be attributed to the surge of recruitments just before FARDC fast track integration in 2009. Of the recruitments that took place in 2010, 311 took place in North Kivu Province, 74 in South Kivu Province, 60 in Orientale Province and 1 in Bandundu Province. One child was reportedly recruited in Uganda and separated in North Kivu. Perpetrators include FARDC, FDLR, PARECO, Mai-Mai, LRA, FRPI/FPJC, CNDP, Police nationale congolaise, ADF/NALU and unidentified armed elements. The majority of children recruited in 2010 were used in military operations and were recruited more than once by the same or other groups. Of particular note is the ongoing recruitment and threats of re-recruitment, including from schools, in Masisi and Rutshuru territories by former elements of CNDP that have been integrated into FARDC. For example, in November 2010 in this area, at least 79 children who had been reunified with their families returned to transit centres for fear of re-recruitment.

86. A total of 26 cases of killing of children and 16 cases of maiming of children by armed forces and groups were documented in 2010 (compared to 23 cases of killing and 12 cases of maiming in 2009). Of the 26 cases, 13 were attributed to FARDC, 5 to LRA, 2 to ADF/NALU, 2 to FRPI/FPJC, 2 to PARECO, and 1 each to FDLR and Mai-Mai groups, respectively. Seven cases of maiming were reportedly perpetrated by FARDC, four by FDLR, three by Mai-Mai, one by PARECO and one by an unidentified group.

87. Sexual violence against children by security forces (army and the Police nationale congolaise) and armed groups continued to be a serious concern in 2010. A total of 141 cases (including two against boys) were recorded in 2010 by child protection actors, compared to 134 cases in 2009. Of the 141 cases, 73 occurred in North Kivu Province, 35 in Orientale Province (13 in Ituri and 22 in Haut and Bas Uélé), and 33 in South Kivu Province. Sixty-seven cases of sexual violence against children were allegedly perpetrated by FARDC, followed by FDLR (20 cases), LRA (15 cases), Police nationale congolaise (12 cases), PARECO (4 cases), FRPI (2 cases), Mai-Mai factions (1 case), ADF/NALU (1 case) and Agence nationale de renseignement (1 case). On 10 January 2010, an element of the Uganda People's Defence Force (UPDF) reportedly raped a 16-year-old girl in Haut Uélé territory, Orientale Province. In 15 cases, perpetrators remained unidentified. Twenty-six children who were victims of sexual violence, including one boy, were under the age of 10. In addition to the 141 cases of sexual violence against children that occurred in 2010, 89 other cases that occurred in 2009 and earlier were also documented in 2010.

88. Ensuring accountability for perpetrators of crimes against children remained problematic. Despite the large number of reported cases of child recruitment, particularly by FARDC commanders involved in “Amani Leo” operations, no judicial action has been initiated against them. Bosco Ntaganda, Innocent Zimurinda and Beaudoin Ngaruye, all of whom are suspected of recruitment and use of children, remained in the command structure of FARDC. On the positive side, 28 security forces were arrested for sexual abuses against children (19 in South Kivu Province and 9 in Province Orientale). Among those arrested, 20 FARDC and two Police nationale congolaise elements were convicted. In addition, in the Kivus, two FARDC elements and one member of the Mai-Mai were convicted for the killing and maiming of children.

89. In 2010, at least 14 schools and 9 hospitals (10 in North Kivu, 8 in Ituri, 5 in South Kivu) were attacked by armed forces and groups (7 by FRPI/FPJC, 7 by FARDC, 3 by PARECO, 1 by FRF, 2 by FDLR, 3 unidentified). The attacks included 10 cases in which the buildings were destroyed, 18 cases of looting and 7 cases of occupation of the buildings.

90. Humanitarian access continued to be hampered in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo throughout 2010, not only as a consequence of armed group activity and military operations against these groups, but also because of the direct targeting of humanitarian staff. The number of recorded security incidents against humanitarian partners increased in 2010 by 10 per cent compared to 2009. All parties to the conflict targeted humanitarian personnel, severely limiting the provision of aid to vulnerable populations. While the national security forces and armed groups accounted for some cases (mostly FDLR and Mai-Mai), the majority remains unidentified. The trend was particularly worrisome in North and South Kivu, with Masisi, Rutshuru and Fizi territories being most affected. In South Kivu alone, the number of attacks against aid workers more than doubled in 2010 compared to 2009. In the Haut and Bas Uélé districts of Orientale Province, insecurity owing to the threat attributed to LRA and other tensions severely restricted the movement of humanitarian staff throughout the year. The provision of humanitarian assistance by United Nations agencies in the east has continued to depend largely on the capacity of MONUSCO to deploy troops to escort relief convoys and secure the areas where assistance is being delivered.

Developments in Haiti

91. Since my last annual report, the security environment was marked by the 12 January 2010 earthquake, which displaced over a million people into precarious and internally displaced camps, and two rounds of presidential and legislative elections, on 28 November 2010 and 20 March 2011. More firearms are reportedly circulating, and gangs possess an estimated 17,000 of the 205,000 illegal weapons now in circulation. This poses an increased risk for children, who are recruited as gang members, especially as conventional social structures and protective environment — their schools and families, churches — remain disintegrated as a result of the earthquake. The political turmoil and the volatile security situation have also heightened the risk of opportunistic alliances by armed elements with political or private sector actors for political or criminal purposes. Further, trafficking of children remains a serious concern in Haiti. Many of these children are victims of mistreatment, sexual abuse, forced labour and criminal exploitation.

92. Although there was a decline in the number of child abductions prior to the earthquake owing to the arrest of armed elements and gang leaders involved in child abduction by the Haitian National Police in close cooperation with the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) (89 cases in 2008; 21 cases in 2009), the numbers increased slightly in 2010, with 27 children (including 13 girls) abducted for ransom or for assault, including by armed elements, predominantly in Port-au-Prince. Abducted girls were exposed to sexual abuse and rape during captivity. Underreporting to the authorities by families owing to fear of repercussions suggests that the total number of abductions may be higher.

93. According to official figures provided by national law enforcement authorities, 17 boys and 4 girls were killed during armed confrontations among Port-au-Prince gangs in 2010. During the last week of November and the first week of December alone, nine children were reported killed by armed gangs in Martissant as a result of the political unrest related to the first round of elections.

94. Despite more frequent patrols by the Haitian National Police, rape and other sexual violence against children committed by armed elements continue to be reported, particularly in the internally displaced persons' camps that have limited or intermittent access to law enforcement services. Several IDP camps were a base for escaped prisoners and gangs' operations. Sixty per cent of the 284 cases of sexual violence registered during the reporting period by an international NGO in Port-au-Prince were children under the age of 18; and the Haitian National Police recorded 279 cases of rape and sexual violence against women and girls and 1 case of male child rape in Port-au-Prince between January and October 2010. Given that collecting data on sexual violence cases in post-earthquake Haiti has been extremely challenging with no active case registration system in the country, information on the number of cases perpetrated against children in IDP camps was not available at the time of writing.

95. Children as young as 10 years old are reportedly being used by armed elements in and around Port-au-Prince to courier drugs, warn members when security forces are conducting operations, carry weapons and intervene in armed confrontations, convey messages, act as spies, collect ransom during kidnapping, carry out arson attacks or destroy private and public property. In Martissant, approximately 30 children reportedly belong to one armed gang.

96. Physical damage to rule-of-law institutions by the earthquake has exacerbated existing challenges, including the lack of adequate detention facilities and the prolonged pre-trial detention of children. Of the 342 children detained across the country in December 2010, 88 per cent were held in pre-trial detention and 14 per cent were girls. Children charged and undergoing a judicial process lacked adequate detention facilities. Nevertheless, the Direction de l'Administration Pénitentiaire has undertaken steps to resolve this issue, within the framework of the development strategic plan for the period 2007-2012.

Developments in Iraq

97. Children were used in Iraq by Al-Qaida in Iraq to spy and scout, to transport military supplies and equipment, to videotape attacks, to plant explosive devices and to actively engage in attacks against security forces and civilians. There have been consistent reports received in 2010 by the United Nations from civil society groups, national authorities and security forces, as well as the United States Forces in Iraq

(USF-I), that Al-Qaida in Iraq operates a youth wing for children under the age of 14 called “Birds of Paradise” (also referred to as “Paradise Boys” or “Youth of Heaven”) to carry out suicide attacks against military, government and civilian targets. Information concerning this wing of Al-Qaida in Iraq is difficult to verify owing to the group’s clandestine nature and the difficulty in identifying its leadership and chain of command. However, Al-Qaida in Iraq reportedly targets vulnerable children for forced recruitment, such as orphans, street children and the mentally disabled. In other instances, insurgents have allegedly used children as proxy bombers who did not know they were carrying explosives that were intended to be detonated remotely without their knowledge.

98. At least 194 children were killed and 232 injured as a result of the continued conflict in 2010. The majority of these incidents took place in the governorates of Baghdad, Ninewa, Kirkuk and Basra. Access to many parts of Iraq is limited to United Nations staff as a result of security conditions, and therefore verification of all incidents was not possible. As a result, it is believed by the United Nations that these figures may underrepresent the actual number of child casualties during the year. The largest number of casualties is attributed to Al-Qaida in Iraq and Islamic State of Iraq (ISI), which carry out indiscriminate attacks, including suicide bombers, car bombs, and roadside bombs, with the intention of creating terror among the population and engendering a climate of fear in public places where civilians, including children, tend to gather. ISI had taken responsibility for the attack on 31 October against Our Lady of Salvation Church in Baghdad that killed 55 people, including 3 children. In addition, children were also killed or maimed as a result of being caught in the crossfire between insurgent groups and military or police forces engaged in combat, or during checkpoints confrontations.

99. The ongoing security situation has in some instances compromised children’s access to education. In particular, threats and intimidation against specific groups remain a concern. For example, in October 2010, as a result of the attack by ISI against Our Lady of Salvation Church, it was reported that many schools in Baghdad, often sharing the same grounds as their churches, cancelled classes for several weeks out of fear of a similar attack taking place by ISI or another insurgent group intending to terrorize the community.

100. The detention of children by USF-I ceased during the reporting period. The United States-Iraq status of forces agreement requires that juveniles detained by USF-I be released, or, if sufficient evidence exists, that they be transferred to the Iraqi justice system for processing. As of June 2010, no juveniles remained in USF-I custody. The Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, supported by UNICEF, started a “justice for children” project, which combined prevention, protection, reintegration and restorative justice for children and youth in 2009. Four mobile legal teams continued to provide assistance to boys in pre- and post-trial detention in Baghdad and Basra in 2010. Many of these boys were accused of being involved in terrorist activities, which carries a 15-year jail sentence if convicted. Others had been in detention without a formal charge for more than 12 months.

Developments in Lebanon

101. The United Nations and child protection organizations remain deeply concerned about the politicization of children and their potential participation in armed clashes between opposing political forces or in political demonstrations.

However, the collection of accurate and credible evidence on the association of children with armed groups remains problematic owing to the lack of monitoring mechanisms in Lebanon at this time. The Government of Lebanon has not yet ratified the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

102. The impact of ongoing political volatility, acute socio-economic inequities, significant school dropout rates and high youth unemployment among Palestine refugees in comparison to the host population also constitute major risk factors for the increased association of children with political armed violence, or with violent extremism in some Palestinian camps. It should be noted that significant amendments to the Labour Code and the Social Security Law adopted by the Lebanese Parliament in 2010 aim at improving access to the private sector labour market by Palestinian refugees in Lebanon.

103. On a positive note, 9 out of the 12 children detained on national security grounds, some held owing to their alleged association with Fatah al-Islam, as reported in my last report, were released this year. Two of the detainees turned 18 during the year and were transferred to adult facilities.

104. The presence of cluster munitions used by Israel during the war in 2006 continues to pose a serious danger to the civilian population living near contaminated areas. Since the end of the conflict in August 2006, the number of incidents among civilians has reached 347, including 44 fatalities and 303 injuries, among them 102 children.

105. There are also ongoing threats related to landmines and unexploded ordnance, with 17 civilian casualties recorded during the reporting period. This includes the killing of one child and the maiming of three others in a single incident in a Palestinian camp in Beddawi (northern Lebanon), which is currently being investigated by the Lebanese Mine Action Centre. On 17 August, the Lebanese Parliament ratified the Convention on Cluster Munitions.

Developments in Myanmar

106. Of the 93 child soldiers notified as having been discharged from the Tatmadaw through government mechanisms from January to December 2010, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting verified that 40 had been recruited during 2010, with the remaining 53 recruited in 2009. However, this most likely does not represent the total number of children recruited, given that ILO received 201 complaints of child soldier recruitment in 2010 (a significant increase over the 86 complaints received in 2009), and there continued to be a steady stream of underage recruitment reports submitted regularly to the task force. In 2010, the task force regularly followed up on reported cases, but access restrictions in Myanmar continued to limit the number of cases that the task force is able to verify. Analysis of verified cases and credible reports indicates that, despite progress made by the Government, the patterns of recruitment of underage children into the Tatmadaw did not alter significantly, and still included the recruitment of working and unaccompanied children from the streets, railway stations or other public places, although the majority of children were recruited from their homes or villages. Most cases of recruitment were of children between 15 to 17 years of age, and the majority were from Yangon division. Children continue to be persuaded or duped by relatives (working in the Tatmadaw), soldiers (to earn a promotion or other incentives) and other brokers to join the Tatmadaw. The majority of children interviewed after discharge stated that the recruiter had not requested for the age of the child, or had falsified the age of the child upon recruitment. Credible reports indicate that, in addition to children who are officially recruited into the Tatmadaw, children are used by the Tatmadaw as porters, and as labour for road construction, kitchen work, farming, and aides-de-camp to high-ranking officers. Reports also confirm the recruitment and use of children by village militias known as “Pyi thu sit”.

107. Children were still present in the ranks of the Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA), based in Pa’an district of Kayin State. Three cases were verified, involving three boys between the ages of 11 and 15, who were recruited by DKBA battalions 555 and 907, respectively, prior to 2010. Testimonies by these children, who had separated from DKBA in 2010, point to the presence of many other children in the armed group.

108. Credible information indicated that children are also present in the ranks of the Kachin Independence Army, KNU/KNLA Peace Council, the Karen Peace Front, KNPP/KA, the Shan State Army-South and the United Wa State Army. However, the country task force on monitoring and reporting has been unable to establish contact with these groups or to directly monitor the presence of children in these groups owing to access restrictions placed on it by the Government. The Karen National People’s Liberation Front and the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army/Kokang Army, listed in annex I of my 2010 report (A/64/742-S/2010/181), have now been integrated into the Tatmadaw border guard forces (Border Guard Force 1004 and Border Guard Force 1006, respectively). A DKBA breakaway faction has also been integrated into the border guard forces. Further, one case of a child associated with KNU/KNLA was verified in 2010. The boy reported that he performed administrative tasks for the group and that there were two other boys present in the camp.

109. Children in military attire were spotted in the Chin National Front/Chin National Army (CNF/CNA) in Tongzam and Tedim in north-west Chin State. This would be a breach of the CNF “deed of commitment” published on 15 March 2009, in which it reaffirmed that the group does not recruit any persons under the age of 18, and reiterated its commitment to facilitating independent monitoring and to developing a time-bound action plan, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

110. There were a number of media reports in 2010 of children being killed or maimed during skirmishes involving the Tatmadaw, DKBA, KNLA, KA or Mon Pyi Thit, or by landmines and unexploded ordnance. In a verified case, on 31 March 2010, two boys under the age of 10 accidentally detonated an unexploded round from a M-79 grenade launcher while playing in Hlaingbwe Township in Kayin State. One of the boys died instantly, whereas the second boy was seriously injured. The Tatmadaw, DKBA and KNLA make regular use of M-79 grenade launchers in that area. There were many additional allegations in 2010 of children being directly targeted and killed and maimed by parties to the conflict (the majority of cases reported involving the Tatmadaw and DKBA). The country task forces on monitoring and reporting was unable to verify these cases, owing to access limitations imposed on the task force by the Government of Myanmar.

111. Access to vulnerable groups in many areas of the country, including children, remained limited for United Nations agencies and other international humanitarian actors in Myanmar. The Government continued to restrict access to various parts of the country, citing security concerns as the main justification for limiting the presence and travel of international (as well as national) personnel of relief agencies. Access was limited in ceasefire and non-ceasefire areas, including mixed administration areas.

112. There have been a number of media reports of attacks on schools or hospitals by the Tatmadaw and DKBA in Kayin State. The country task force on monitoring and reporting has been able to verify only two reports, as access is either severely limited or forbidden by the authorities. These involved an offensive conducted by Tatmadaw Light Infantry Battalions 362 and 367 in Ler Doh Township, Nyunglebin District, Kayin State. Between 3 and 8 February 2010, the battalions caused a large number of people to be displaced and 13 schools with a total of 531 students to be abandoned. Of these schools, a high school and a nursery in Thi Baw Tha, Kwee Lah village tract were destroyed. In addition, Thi Baw Tha Clinic, serving approximately 3,000 people, was burned down. It is unclear whether villagers were able to return to their homes by the end of the reporting period, as access to this region is severely curtailed.

113. The Government shared documents that indicated that from January to May 2010, 43 Tatmadaw soldiers were either warned, demoted, had their pay and allowance cut, received a serious reprimand or were imprisoned in military and civilian jails, in connection with the illegal recruitment of children. This represents a significant increase compared to 2009, when only 22 disciplinary action cases involving military personnel were reported by the Ministry of Defence. However, the country task force on monitoring and reporting, while welcoming and noting the steep increase in sanctions and penalties meted out to perpetrators, remains of the view that this falls short of the urgent need for the Government to systematize disciplinary processes against perpetrators (both military and civilian). As far as the task force is aware, no civilians who may have aided and abetted underage recruitment have faced criminal prosecution. The Government has also failed to take steps to criminalize the recruitment and use of children by non-State armed groups.

114. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting previously reported the welcome development of the Government accepting the principle that underage recruits charged with desertion should be discharged and released from prison on the basis of their illegal recruitment. ILO reports that, to date, 7 (1 in 2010) such imprisoned underage recruits have been released from prison and discharged from the military, with negotiations continuing for the release of another 10 such persons. Unfortunately, the arrests of young “deserters” have continued and no pro-active action to identify such persons currently imprisoned has been taken. Also welcomed is the Government acceptance of the principle that a child recruit attaining the legal age of majority does not legitimize his recruitment, his continued retention in the army or his being charged with subsequent desertion.

115. In 2010, there was a marked increase in reporting of underage recruitment into the country task forces on monitoring and reporting and other child protection organizations. This can be attributed in part to more effective cooperation between the Government and members of the task force on the issue, not only at the national level, but also at local level, where awareness of local officials has been increasing. Reporting has also increased in project areas where broader mechanisms for child protection have been put in place by local officials with the support of child protection agencies and their local child protection partners.

116. On 4 November 2010, the Government enacted the People's Military Service Law, which, to the knowledge of the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, has not yet entered into force. The law stipulates that men between the ages of 18 and 35 and women between the ages of 18 and 27 may be summoned for military service for a period not exceeding 24 months (or 36 months in the case of a defined class of professional and skilled personnel). The task force remains concerned with the possible implementation of this legislation considering systemic issues for age verification. The Government of Myanmar has not yet signed the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

Developments in Nepal

117. The Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M) took part, as a political party, in the Constituent Assembly elections in 2008, and conflict-related violations against children have subsequently decreased significantly. However, armed elements operating with political and often criminal motives primarily in the southern Terai districts continue to have a serious impact on the overall security situation and have created new protection risks for children and increased their vulnerability to violations. However, no consistent pattern of violations can be established, and perpetrators are often unidentified, given that the situation in the Terai region is fluid and different armed groups quickly form, split and disappear.

118. In 2010, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting documented that 14 children were abducted and 4 were subsequently killed. Of the 14 cases, 12 abductions involved demands for ransom, while the motives of the other two cases were not known. In addition, 20 children sustained injuries caused by improvised explosive devices in different parts of the country. However, it was difficult to determine if the improvised explosive devices were remains from the former conflict or new contamination by the armed elements.

119. Mine risk education programmes led by the Department of Education, the Nepal Police and Armed Police Force, with support from UNICEF, have trained and equipped teachers, Nepal Police officers and Armed Police Force officers in the 25 most affected districts. Some 500,000 schoolchildren and 25,000 security personnel have been educated in avoiding the risks of mines and, importantly, explosive remnants of the conflict, which have caused more casualties than mines have in Nepal. A mine action section was established within the Ministry of Peace and Reconstruction and has commenced its operation as the government focal point for coordinating mine action initiatives.

Developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel

120. Eleven Palestinian children were killed and 360 injured (342 boys and 18 girls) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, in incidents related to the armed conflict. Of the 360 children injured, 58 were under the age of 12; 83 per cent of the injuries occurred in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and 17 per cent in Gaza; 302 children were injured by the Israeli security forces, 40 by Israeli settlers, 11 by unexploded ordnance, and 2 by unidentified perpetrators. In addition, five children were injured by mishandling weapons and explosives, including one incident allegedly related to interfactional fighting by Palestinian armed groups. No Israeli children were killed in 2010 as a result of the conflict, but two were injured, including one as a result of a rocket from the Gaza Strip on 21 December launched by an unidentified Palestinian armed group.

121. There are serious concerns regarding the increasing number of civilians, including children, shot and injured in the so-called Gaza buffer zone imposed by Israel, which covers the area up to 300 metres from the Gaza fence. The exact boundaries of the zone are unclear, given that it is not physically delimited, but is known to be an area where there are clashes between militants and the Israeli security forces. In May 2009, the Israeli Army made a statement indicating that any individual entering the zone would be endangering his or her life. However, Palestinians continue to collect gravel and scrap metal in abandoned settlements and industrial zones near the fence, which they later sell to support their families. In 2010, 40 boys and 4 girls were allegedly injured by Israeli fire in or near the buffer zone. Of those, 26 boys, some as young as 13, were shot while collecting gravel within 800 metres of the fence. In cases where sworn affidavits were taken, 19 children were shot in the leg, 2 in the arm and 1 child was shot in the head.

122. For the third consecutive year, the use of Palestinian children as human shields by Israeli security forces was reported, with three new cases documented in three separate incidents in the West Bank in 2010. A 16-year-old girl and a 13-year-old boy were used as human shields during house searches in two separate incidents in Nablus, and a 14-year-old boy was forced to walk in front of Israeli soldiers as a shield while stones were being thrown at them during clashes in Hebron. In the first prosecution of its kind, on 11 March 2010, two soldiers were charged with using a boy as a human shield during "Operation Cast Lead". The soldiers were convicted by an Israeli military court on 3 October 2010 for "inappropriate behaviour" and "overstepping authority". They were demoted from the rank of staff sergeant to sergeant and given three-month suspended prison sentences. To date, the measures taken by the Israeli security forces to prevent and punish the use of children as human shields have not reflected the gravity of such conduct.

123. As of December 2010, 213 Palestinian children between the ages of 12 and 17 were in Israeli detention or imprisoned by the Israeli security forces, including one girl on conflict-related charges. Two Palestinian children were held in administrative detention without charge or trial in 2010, including one boy having been detained for over 10 months. Of particular concern is the sharp increase in the last quarter of 2010 in the documented cases of arrest of young children in the Silwan neighbourhood of East Jerusalem. There are also increasing reports of violence and mistreatment of children by Israeli soldiers during patrols in Silwan, as well as during the arrest, transfer to detention and interrogation of children from East Jerusalem. According to Israeli police figures, 1,267 criminal files were opened against children accused of throwing stones in East Jerusalem between October 2009 and October 2010.

124. In 2010, 90 cases of ill treatment with regard to the treatment of Palestinian children in Israeli detention were documented by the United Nations and its partners, including through the sworn affidavits of children. Twenty-four of these children were below the age of 15, including two 10-year olds and one 7-year old. In more than 75 of these cases the excessive or extended use of hand-ties and blindfolds were reported, 62 children reported being beaten, 35 children reported position abuse and 16 children were kept in solitary confinement. In three cases, children reported the use of electric shocks on their bodies and four reported being threatened with electric shocks in the course of their interrogation, which resulted in confessions made under duress. Particularly concerning was the fact that there was an increase in documented cases of sexual violence, with 14 cases (13 boys and 1 girl) in 2010 compared to 9 cases (8 boys and 1 girl) in 2009. The cases involved threats of sexual violence (13 cases) and 1 actual sexual assault through the use of electrical cables on genitals. The high number of instances of such treatment reported and documented suggests that ill treatment of children is common in the Israeli military justice system. There is evidence that some children do not report incidents of ill treatment while in custody, owing to concerns about repercussions for making such complaints, and doubts about the effectiveness of the complaints process.

125. One case of ill treatment of a Palestinian boy by the Palestinian Preventive Security Force was also reported and documented in 2010. The case refers to an incident involving an alleged association with Hamas. The boy was threatened and beaten for the purposes of obtaining a confession. He was released after having been detained in solitary confinement for eight days after having been denied access to a lawyer or to presentation before a judge.

126. There was an increase in the number of attacks on schools and education facilities by Israeli security forces and settlers in 2010 (20 cases), compared to 2009 (9 cases). These attacks resulted in damage to schools or interruption of education, placing the safety of the children in Gaza and the West Bank at risk. The majority of cases involved the presence of Israeli security forces within school compounds following raids, forceful entry, and search and arrest operations, including the use of tear gas on students. There were also three incidents involving air strikes and shelling by Israeli security forces that resulted in damage to four schools in Gaza, although schools did not appear to have been directly targeted in these incidents. There was also an increasing number of incidents in 2010 in which Palestinian students were prevented from accessing schools and had their safety compromised by Israeli security forces. Thirty-six such incidents were documented in the West Bank in 2010, purportedly involving security measures such as road closures searches, harassment or assaults at checkpoints by Israeli authorities and settlers. In other cases, children were exposed to settler violence as Israeli authorities did not provide military escorts to protect children who pass near historically violent settlements and outposts in the West Bank, particularly Hebron. In this regard, the Israeli authorities have not yet responded to the request of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict in February 2009 to investigate the 2008 attack by Israeli settlers of children on their way to the Al-Tuwani School outside Hebron. Furthermore, they have failed to address the broader issue of settler violence against Palestinian children. In addition, the blockade on the Gaza Strip impacts on the availability, accessibility and quality of education in Gaza. Though the situation has improved since the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) commenced building 20 new schools after certain restrictions were lifted, UNRWA was unable to deliver education to a number of Palestinian refugee children owing to a shortage of school space resulting from the restriction on the importation of construction materials to rebuild schools destroyed or damaged during "Operation Cast Lead". Those children are therefore attending Palestinian Authority schools.

127. In 2010, Palestinian armed groups were responsible for eight incidents related to access to education, including two attacks on UNRWA summer schools in Gaza and one incident of a rocket that was fired into Israel and landed near a kindergarten in Ashkelon. Of particular concern was the attack in May on UNRWA summer camps located in Gaza by masked assailants. The attack and intimidation against UNRWA officials, for which no group has claimed responsibility, was apparently intended to have a negative effect on the attendance of the quarter million boys and girls who participated in those summer camps.

128. On 20 June 2010, the Israeli Security Cabinet declared the easing of the Gaza blockade, particularly pertaining to civilian goods and humanitarian access. While this has resulted in some improvement in the entry of construction materials, it amounts to only a fraction of what is needed to meet the humanitarian needs of the population of Gaza. Gaza's health-care system also suffers from a severe lack of adequate equipment and instruments. As a result, patients must seek treatment outside of Gaza. From January to November 2010, while 3,546 out of 3,851 (92 per cent) applications for children who sought medical assistance outside of Gaza were approved, 294 applications were delayed and 11 were denied. Both the delays and denials in processing applications can be life-threatening to child patients who are waiting for urgent medical treatment. Four children, all under the age of 3, died while waiting for the appropriate permits to travel outside of Gaza in 2010.

129. Forced displacement continues to affect the lives of hundreds of Palestinian families. More than 431 Palestinian structures were demolished in 2010 in the West Bank (including Area C and East Jerusalem), including 137 residential structures, leaving homeless at least 594 people, 299 of them children.

Developments in Somalia

130. There has been growing evidence regarding the widespread and systematic recruitment of children in central and southern Somalia, with child recruitment patterns known to be significantly more aggressive on the anti-government elements' side, especially within Al-Shabaab, including the newly merged Hizbul Islam. Partners on the ground consistently reported on the extensive forced recruitment of children by Al-Shabaab, especially in the schools. According to military sources, an estimated 2,000 children were abducted by Al-Shabaab in 2010 for military training in different camps in southern Somalia. An increasingly large number of these children are reportedly used by the insurgent groups to fight against the Government and troops of the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) in Mogadishu, and, as a result, many of these children are killed, injured or captured by the armed forces or other armed groups. Further, while the recruitment of girls has been rare and is generally regarded as socially unacceptable, there are documented accounts of girls working for armed groups, particularly for cooking and cleaning. Girls are also brought in to transport detonators, provide logistics support and collect intelligence. Girls are also reported to be increasingly recruited for marriage to fighters. In October, Al-Shabaab summarily executed two teenage girls in Beled Weyne whom they accused of spying for the Transitional Federal Government.

131. Despite its official policy not to recruit children into its national security forces, it is reported that children continue to be associated with the Transitional Federal Government and its allied militia, including Ahlu Sunna Wal Jama'a, with 40 cases documented in 2010. Ensuring that no children are de facto recruited or used remains a challenge, particularly when applied to the integration of allied militia into the Transitional Federal Government armed forces. While some vetting procedures are reportedly being implemented by the Transitional Federal Government in Mogadishu to ensure that children are not recruited, gaps remain and to date stringent vetting procedures to assess age are being applied only to those recruits who are being trained outside Somalia. Recruits being trained by the Transitional Federal Government inside Somalia and those being integrated into the Government forces from allied militia groups are not subject to the same stringent vetting standards and procedures. The United Nations remains highly concerned with the lack of progress in the area. The Transitional Federal Government has not yet signed the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

132. There were reported cases of children captured by the Government/AMISOM forces on the front line, as well as children who defected, many of whom were recruited from areas other than Mogadishu to fight for the armed insurgent groups. Upon defecting or self-demobilizing, these children find themselves alone in Mogadishu without any family or clan support and exposed to retaliation and re-recruitment. Family tracing and reunification are difficult in the current circumstances and may expose the children and their families to even higher protection threats if they come from areas under the control of insurgent groups. The United Nations recently initiated discussions with AMISOM to address this problem, including through the development of standard operating procedures to ensure that these cases are handled in line with relevant international standards. The Transitional Federal Government also expressed the need for urgent measures and programmes to be established to address the issue of child defectors.

133. There are increasing concerns about the detention of children in the central prison of Mogadishu. For example, between July and October, seven boys were reportedly being detained under different charges, including association with Al-Shabaab. In addition, in Lower Shabelle and Marka, two boys were detained by Al-Shabaab for refusing to join its forces.

134. A total of 222 children were reportedly killed and 592 wounded or maimed in 2010 as a result of being caught in crossfire or mortar shelling during fighting between Transitional Federal Government forces, supported by AMISOM, and armed insurgents, primarily Al-Shabaab and Hizbul Islam, in and around Mogadishu. The number of child casualties is, however, estimated to be much higher according to the International Committee of the Red Cross. In 2010, out of more than 6,000 patients (compared to 5,000 in 2009 and 2,800 in 2008) admitted to Keysaney and Medina Hospitals, the two main referral hospitals in Mogadishu, approximately 40 per cent were women and children. Of particular concern was the recent increase in the number of civilians, among them many children, being killed or injured owing to the use of explosive weapons in populated areas.

135. The number of documented cases of sexual violence against children substantially increased in 2010 (462 cases), compared to 2009 (128 cases) in south-central Somalia, Somaliland and Puntland, the majority of which occurred in Somaliland and Puntland IDP settlements. In south-central Somalia, these violations are committed mainly by members of clan-based militia. The continued fighting has rendered women and children more vulnerable to sexual violence because of displacement, destitution, the breakdown of the rule of law and the emergence of freelance militias, working under informal local authorities, mostly associated with Al-Shabaab. Most at risk are women and girls living on the streets and in open and unprotected IDP settlements such as those in Bossaso, Galkayo and Hargeisa and along the Afgooye corridor. Further, allegations that Al-Shabaab combatants were systematically forcing girls into early marriages were received in October. Two cases perpetrated by the Transitional Federal Government were also documented.

136. Increasingly, schools, educational establishments, teachers and students are being targeted by Al-Shabaab and other militia groups for recruitment and use in the conflict. In June, Al-Shabaab reportedly ordered teachers and school managers in Lower Shabelle to release more than 300 students to be trained, failing which they would be punished. In south-central Somalia, approximately 52 schools suspended operations and activities in May alone owing to growing demands from the militia groups. In addition, several schools were closed, damaged and destroyed, as well as students killed and injured, owing to clashes between armed insurgents and the Transitional Federal Government forces in Mogadishu.

137. As a result of the intensification of the conflict throughout 2010, the humanitarian and security situations have deteriorated further, with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimating that access for aid organizations in southern Somalia was at its lowest point since 2006. The operational environment for the United Nations is extremely restricted as Mogadishu remains inaccessible, except around the airport and the areas controlled by the Transitional Federal Government supported by AMISOM, while access to many southern and central parts of the country remains restricted for United Nations national staff. In 2010, seven international NGOs and one United Nations agency were expelled from south-central Somalia regions. An additional 12 international NGOs in the Lower Juba region suspended their activities in August following a raid by Al-Shabaab into their compounds, affecting approximately 130,000 people requiring humanitarian assistance, particularly children. Local Somali NGOs have been able to continue their work so far without major interruption, although under increasingly difficult conditions.

138. In my annual report on children and armed conflict issued in 2010 (A/64/742-S/2010/181), I raised the concerns about the alleged recruitment of young Kenyan Somali men and boys from North-eastern Province in Kenya, as well as Somali refugees from Dadaab refugee camp, in Kenya, to fight alongside the Transitional Federal Government in Somalia. This concern was raised with the Government of Kenya at the highest levels by the United Nations and other diplomatic missions. As a result, the Government, through its Joint Departmental Committee on Administration and National Security and the Committee on Defence and Foreign Relations, carried out a fact-finding mission to Garissa, Dadaab and Voi, in Kenya, in November 2009. United Nations sources confirmed that a vetting exercise was undertaken and anyone part of the recruitment drive who could not prove being over the age of 18 were removed and returned to their families. The report of the fact-finding mission was presented to the Kenya Parliament on 6 October 2010. It highlighted that young men and boys were susceptible to joining these groups owing to the high levels of poverty and unemployment in the north-eastern region. In addition, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs met with my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict during her mission to Kenya and Somalia in November 2010, and reiterated the commitment of the Government that necessary protections and safeguards would be implemented at the border and in and around refugee camps, in conjunction with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to prevent the recurrence of such activities. The immediate action and vigilance by the Government of Kenya in investigating these allegations of underage recruitment are welcomed.

139. Children associated with piracy continued to be held in prisons in Puntland. During the year, 10 children convicted were released following the overturning of their sentences by the Bossaso Appeals Court. As of December, three children were in remand.

Developments in the Sudan

140. The number of documented cases of child recruitment and use in 2010 decreased compared to 2009; however, the collection of accurate data continued to be seriously hampered by insecurity and fear of reprisals, lack of access to non-government controlled areas, and movement restrictions imposed by the Government. In addition, difficulty in recording new splinter groups, unclear lines of command, extremely mobile groups, renewed clashes between Government forces and armed groups, especially in the last quarter of 2010, also contributed to underreporting. Notwithstanding these challenges, 113 children were confirmed to have been recruited by the following armed forces and groups: Armed Movement of Liberals and Reform (splinter group of JEM and SLA/Abdul Wahid), Border Intelligence Forces, Chadian armed opposition groups, community policing forces, police forces, Popular Defence Forces, SLA/Abu Gasim, SLA/Historical Leadership (splinter group of SLA/Abdul Wahid), SLA/Abdul Wahid, Sudanese Armed Forces and unknown armed groups. In addition, credible allegations of recruitment and use of children involving more than 150 children by several armed groups in northern and southern Darfur, including SLA/Minni Minawi, SLA/Abdul Wahid, SLA/Historical Leadership, JEM, Central Reserve Police, Border Intelligence Forces, and Chadian armed opposition groups were received by the United Nations. Verification of these cases is ongoing.

141. Within the three States of Darfur, allegations of abduction of children have substantially declined with fewer cases documented in 2010. However, there were continuous allegations of cross-border forced recruitment of children by the Chadian opposition armed groups, JEM and unidentified armed men crossing into Chad and Darfur. UNAMID also documented cases of abductions in non-border regions of Darfur, including that of a girl in Northern Darfur and three boys in Southern Darfur.

142. Ongoing association of children within the ranks of SPLA Division 4 in Duar (Unity State), Division 3 in Wunyik (Northern Bahr el-Ghazal State), Division 5 in Mapel (Western Bahr el-Ghazal State), Division 7 in Upper Nile State, Division 2 in Eastern and Central Equatoria States and Division 8 in Jonglei State were noted in 2010. Further, 42 cases of active child recruitment by SPLA was also confirmed. It has been difficult to determine the exact numbers of children associated with SPLA, given that the children are subject to the constant movement of SPLA troops throughout southern Sudan. Further, in the Transitional Areas, 220 children associated with SPLA in Blue Nile State were verified and registered for demobilization in July, while 8 boys were confirmed to have been recruited by SPLA in Jaw (South Kordofan State) in November. More children are presumed to be present in the ranks of SLA in South Kordofan, although lack of access and restrictions imposed by the local authorities make it difficult to confirm or verify such allegations. Separately, 25 boys were recruited by the Joint Integrated Units (SPLA and Sudanese Armed Forces) in Wau (Western Bahr el-Ghazal State).

143. Inter-tribal conflicts in Jonglei State and the Equatorias continued to account for the deaths, injuries and abduction of children in 2010; a total of 10 children, including 4 girls, were killed, 2 were injured and 138, including 38 girls, were abducted. During a series of clashes between Murle and Lou-Nuer, the total number of children abducted from both communities reportedly reached as many as 140. In some areas, it was reported that parents took their children into the mountains in an effort to protect them from abduction. Many children remain in the hands of abductors. There has been minimal progress in securing the release of these children, which has been increasingly linked to the outcome of political negotiations between the groups.

144. In Darfur, six children were killed and one was injured as a result of gunshots, grenades or bombs during the year. The violations were attributed to men in uniform or unidentified assailants. The exact number of child casualties from government aerial attacks, during ground fighting between armed groups or during ethnic clashes, could not be determined owing to restrictions and limited access to affected areas. The increase in the number of deaths (8 cases) and injuries (19 cases) of children as a result of unexploded ordnance in 2010 was also of concern.

145. There were verified reports of children being physically abused and ill treated in relation to forced civilian disarmament exercises carried out by SPLA in as many as 10 cattle camps in Southern Sudan. The civilian disarmament exercise is part of the policy of the Government of Southern Sudan for creating an enabling environment for peaceful coexistence of the communities in Southern Sudan. In one incident, approximately 250 children, between the ages of 10 and 17, were separated from the adults, intimidated and beaten in attempts to extract information on the location of their community's arms cache.

146. In 2010, 22 cases of sexual violence against children attributed to members of the military, police personnel, factions of armed groups and militia men in Darfur were documented. As expressed in my report last year (A/64/742-S/2010/181), in most cases, victims and witnesses provide little information on the identity of the alleged perpetrators and the uniforms alone do not always substantiate the alleged perpetrator's affiliation. Monitoring and reporting of this violation remains a challenge as victims, their families and communities are often reluctant to report cases owing to fear of retribution or stigmatization. The Government of the Sudan has asserted that the situation has improved and that it has taken measures to address the concerns as part of due process of law. The Government is encouraged to continue its efforts in this regard and ensure that armed groups also take preventive action against sexual violence.

147. In Southern Sudan, a substantial increase in reported sexual violence and rape cases against girls by SPLA was noted during the year. In two particularly disturbing incidents, 10 girls were raped and sexually assaulted by SPLA soldiers during armed clashes between SPLA and communities in Palal and Tonj (Warrap State) in February; and 23 girls were raped in the Upper Nile State in June and July. Monitoring cases of sexual violence in South Kordofan, Abyei and Blue Nile States remained a challenge as the majority of violations are often not reported to law enforcement or judicial authorities. However, according to the Commissioner of El Buram locality in South Kordofan State, the local communities are complaining increasingly about sexual violence and the harassment of women and young girls by Sudanese Armed Forces soldiers; the United Nations has not been able to verify this information.

148. The tense security situation and renewed clashes at the end of 2010, attacks against United Nations personnel and assets, and government-imposed restrictions continued to have an impact on the delivery of humanitarian assistance for children. Many areas across Darfur remained difficult or impossible to access for humanitarian actors during 2010. Fighting in early 2010 between armed groups and Government forces in Jebel Marra contributed to the displacement of about 100,000 civilians, including children, and led to the suspension of humanitarian activities in February. Although partial access was granted in August and September 2010 for the delivery of essential health and nutrition items, this did not lead to the full restoration of humanitarian assistance in this area. Activities of the polio campaign and the accelerated immunization campaigns for children, for example, were seriously hampered by the lack of access.

149. In Southern Sudan, humanitarian actors have had largely unrestricted access throughout the reporting period, with the exception of a few isolated incidents. However, access in Western Equatoria State is reduced owing to the prevailing insecurity related to repeated attacks by LRA. With regard to the Transitional Areas, access to the northern part of former western Kordofan State has been difficult owing to restrictions by the Sudanese Armed Forces and the National Intelligence and Security Services claiming that it is outside the ceasefire zone, and therefore outside of the mandate of UNMIS. These restrictions have hampered monitoring activities of suspected recruitment and use of children in this area.

150. In September 2010, the Nyala Special Court tried 11 suspects allegedly being affiliated with JEM and accused of attacking a convoy of the Government of the Sudan in Sanyi Afundu, Southern Darfur. Five of the defendants declared their ages to be between 15 and 17. However, the Court recognized the childhood age of only one (age 16), following the opinion of Sudanese medical authorities, and sentenced him to “reform measures for juvenile delinquents” under article 69 of Child Act 2010. The same medical authorities opposed the age declarations of the remaining four and certified their ages to be between 18 and 21. Subsequently, the judge sentenced all four to death by hanging, together with five other adult defendants. The Government of the Sudan has reaffirmed that all necessary legal remedies will be offered to the accused. The United Nations has appealed to the Government of the Sudan to stay the execution of the death sentence, review the cases and take all necessary measures to protect alleged child soldiers from capital punishment in accordance with national and applicable international law. JEM should halt its practice of recruiting and using children and of placing them at risk.

B. Information on grave violations against children in situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern

Developments in Colombia

151. The complex humanitarian situation in Colombia is a consequence of a protracted conflict and is aggravated by structural poverty, inequality and the links between armed groups and illegal activities, including drug production and trafficking, extortion and abduction. Although significant progress has been made by the Government of Colombia in weakening the armed groups, particularly militarily, serious challenges around issues of security and human rights protection remain. In 2010, clashes intensified in departments such as Arauca, Cauca, Córdoba, Meta, Nariño and Norte de Santander, especially affecting children. Persons of African descent and indigenous communities have been particularly vulnerable. Another major consequence of the conflict is the continued displacement of the population; according to official Government information, as at September 2010 there were 61,047 new internally displaced persons, of which 30,488 were children (15,644 boys and 14,844 girls). Non-governmental sources estimate that the number of IDPs is much larger.

152. In July 2010, the Colombian National Economic and Social Policy Council published a document designed to coordinate Government strategies aimed at preventing the recruitment and use of children by armed groups. Government programmes and activities such as the “Protection of Children and Adolescents Demobilized from Armed Groups Operating outside the Law”, the Mine Action Programme and the Inter-agency Recruitment Prevention Commission continued under the new Government. Further, the Government initiated a process to actively locate children who informally left armed groups and offer them the necessary protection and the same benefits as offered to those demobilized under the Justice and Peace Law (Law 975). Further, a victims law, which, inter alia, provides for the protection of children and adolescents, is under consideration by Parliament. Although progress has been made by the Government of Colombia, combating impunity for these serious violations remains a challenge of paramount importance.

153. Widespread and systematic recruitment and use of children by armed groups in Colombia continued during the reporting period. Although the actual scale and scope of this violation remains unknown, in 2010, the country task force on monitoring and reporting received information on child recruitment from 19 of the 32 departments in Colombia. In addition, the early warning system established by the Ombudsman, which monitors and flags imminent risks of violations of human rights against civilian populations, including children, identified 43 risk situations in 19 departments, including risks related to child recruitment.

154. FARC-EP and ELN continued to recruit and use children, including for direct participation in hostilities against Government forces. In February, FARC-EP convened a community meeting in Antioquia to obtain a headcount of children in a rural area of the department. It also announced that children above the age of 8 would be recruited. In one characteristic use of children, a child was used by FARC-EP to carry out an attack against a police station using explosives. The explosives were attached to the child and activated as he approached the police station, killing him instantly.

155. Further, according to the Ombudsman office, during 2010, the armed groups Águilas Negras, Ejército revolucionario popular anticomunista de Colombia, Los Rastrojos, Los Paisas and Los Urabeños continued recruiting and using children. The Ombudsman office also detected situations where children were used for intelligence purposes and sexual exploitation in Córdoba and Chocó. These groups, which emerged after the demobilization of the paramilitary group Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia, do not possess a homogenous motivation, structure and modus operandi. While many are dedicated to common criminal activities, others operate in a manner similar to that of the former paramilitary organizations. Some of the groups have a military structure and chain of command and are capable of exercising territorial control and sustaining military-type operations. Some of these groups have demonstrated their capacity to mutate and, in some instances, to operate jointly. The Government considers all these groups to be criminal gangs.

156. The national armed forces continued to use children for intelligence purposes, in violation of the Code on Children and Adolescents (Law No. 1098) and directives by the Ministry of National Defence. In some instances, children who were separated from armed groups were questioned by members of the security forces to gather intelligence on the armed group they belonged to. Some of those children were held for extended periods in the custody of military forces, longer than permitted by law, instead of being handed over to child protection actors. Between May and June, in Valle del Cauca, members of the Marines sought information about the guerrillas by involving children in the region. In August, in Chocó, national army personnel allegedly questioned four children between the ages of 13 and 16 who had demobilized from ELN to obtain military intelligence. The national armed forces continued to use children in civil-military activities. For instance, in September, children in an indigenous reserve in Valle del Cauca participated in civil-military activities and interacted with the soldiers of the Psychological Operations Task Force. Such activities, when undertaken in conflict-affected areas, may put children at risk and expose them to retaliation by members of armed groups.

157. Children were victims of indiscriminate attacks carried out by armed groups, or as a result of being caught in the crossfire between illegal armed groups or between armed groups and national security forces in 2010. The deaths of children in combat were also reported. Further, according to official sources, 2 girls and 16 boys were injured by landmines between January and November 2010. The country task force on monitoring and reporting verified that 11 children were killed or injured during the same period in Arauca and Antioquia departments alone.

158. During the year, there were massacres and killings, including of children by armed groups considered by the Government to be criminal gangs. Between January and November, 10 massacres were reported in Córdoba. Among the victims, nine were children between the ages of 13 and 17. These cases were attributed to members of Los Rastrojos and other groups. Los Rastrojos is also responsible for killing two boys and a girl in April 2010 in Córdoba department, and for killing a five-member family in Cauca department, including two children aged 2 and 8, in the same month. Such violence has resulted in the forced displacement of populations, including women and children.

159. Cases of extrajudicial executions involving children persisted in 2010 despite the Government's zero tolerance policy for human rights violations and measures introduced by the Ministry of Defence. As for cases of enforced disappearances of children during armed conflict, it has not been possible to determine the total number to date, as official figures on missing persons are not disaggregated by age of the victims.

160. Of particular concern is the commission by the armed groups of grave forms of sexual violence against recruited girls. This phenomenon remains vastly underreported and unnoticed. Girls who are recruited or associated with armed groups are required to have sexual relations with adults at an early age and are forced to abort if they become pregnant. They are also forced to use methods of contraception that are often inadequate and harmful to their health. Separately, according to the Inter-institutional Committee for Justice and Peace, 677 cases of gender-based violence by former members of Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia, including against children, were documented between 2006 and December 2010 within the framework of the Justice and Peace Law. However, no progress has been made in following up investigations and convictions.

161. Reports have also been received concerning cases of rape and other sexual violence cases against children involving members of the armed forces. All the victims were girls, including as young as 2 years old. However, difficulties persisted in obtaining information on sexual violence against children, as many victims failed to report abuses owing to fear of reprisals by perpetrators or of re-victimization. A lack of adequate institutional response, lack of confidence in the administration of justice and lack of information on care and complaint procedures also contributed to the paucity of information on cases.

162. Serious concerns continued over the occupation of schools by the national security forces in the departments of Antioquia, Arauca, Cauca, Cordoba, and Norte de Santander. The presence of national security forces in or near schools increased the risks of schools being attacked by armed groups, placing the lives of children and teachers in danger.

163. The armed groups have also been reported to occupy schools. Schools were damaged as a result of hostilities and anti-personnel mines and explosive devices planted by FARC. In addition, schools and students were targeted by armed groups for recruitment and use in the conflict.

164. According to the country task force on monitoring and reporting, restrictions on humanitarian access owing to actions of parties to the conflict had seriously jeopardized the delivery of humanitarian assistance, affecting children in particular. The movement of populations in several areas was severely restricted owing to armed confrontations between armed groups and the national armed forces and the establishment of their checkpoints, thus limiting their access to essential food items, health care, education and other basic services. Access of humanitarian actors to those populations was also severely hampered. Areas particularly affected included the departments of Antioquia, Arauca, Cauca, Caquetá, Guaviare, Huila, Meta Córdoba, Nariño and Norte de Santander.

Developments in India

165. Reports of recruitment and use of children by the Maoist armed groups, also known as the Naxalites, especially in some districts in Chhattisgarh State, were received by the United Nations. While noting the absence of reliable data to determine the number of children affected, the Indian National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights, in its policy document of March 2010, pointed to the recruitment and use of children by the Naxalites and Salwa Judum. It also reported that children were being killed and maimed as a direct result of violence. The National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights also highlighted that schools had been targeted and destroyed by Naxalites. Separately, the occupation of schools by security forces was also reported in my last annual report (A/64/742-S/2010/181). On 18 November 2010, the Supreme Court expressed strong displeasure over the continued occupation of school buildings in Chhattisgarh by security forces. On 18 January 2011, the Supreme Court ordered the Chhattisgarh government to vacate security forces from all educational institutions within four months.

166. The Government of India strongly condemns the acts of the Naxalites. The Government, together with concerned state government authorities, has undertaken specific actions, including awareness-raising programmes through the media, establishing new schools under its programme for universal elementary education (sarva shiksha abhiyan) in all villages and ashram schools, and strengthening its integrated child development programme and pre-school education centres in all areas. In November, the Government of India launched a pilot programme (the Bal Bandhu scheme) to protect the rights of children in Naxal-affected areas, to be implemented by the National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights in 10 districts of Andhra Pradesh, Assam, Bihar, Chhattisgarh and Maharashtra. The programme has protection, health, nutrition, sanitation, education and safety components. The Government also began efforts to bring development services to affected areas, such as the integrated action plan for 60 Naxal-affected districts. The plan aimed to effect governance reforms and devolve power to grass-root institutions in selected districts over the coming three years.

Developments in Pakistan

167. In 2010, Pakistan continued to experience attacks by armed groups influenced by and/or associated with Taliban or Al-Qaida, including Tehrik-i-Taliban, on Government institutions and civilians, which escalated and expanded beyond Balochistan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (FATA) to several major urban centres. Sectarian violence also continued as attacks by armed groups, including the Taliban and Lashkar i Jhangvi, were launched mainly against Shiite processions and mosques. Children have been used by these armed groups to carry out suicide attacks. In one such incident on 25 January 2011, reported by the Government, a teenage suicide bomber carried out an attack near a Shiite procession in Lahore, killing himself and 9 others, and injuring a further 50 people, including several children. In another incident on 10 February 2011, a boy in a school uniform blew himself up at a Pakistani army recruitment centre in the north-western town of Mardan, killing himself and 20 cadets. The Taliban claimed responsibility for those attacks. Further, according to reliable sources, an increasing number of children were allegedly abducted by armed groups throughout the country in 2010.

168. Children also suffered the effects of cross-border recruitment related to the ongoing conflict in Afghanistan. Although there is no systematic monitoring of cases by the United Nations in Pakistan, the country task force on monitoring and reporting in Afghanistan has documented and verified cases of Afghan children recruited and trained in Pakistan by armed groups, including the Taliban. The Malakand-based Sabaoon Academy continued to provide rehabilitation and reintegration support to 150 children who were recruited by the Taliban and other non-State armed groups in Swat Valley and taken into custody by the Pakistan armed forces.

169. Children were victims of indiscriminate attacks in 2010, including suicide bombings, although there were no official figures on the number of children killed or injured. In two separate incidents reported by the media, children were among the casualties in bomb attacks on a Shiite mosque in November 2010; and on a Shiite procession in Quetta, Balochistan, in September 2010. Lashkar i Jhangvi reportedly claimed responsibility for the latter incident.

170. Reports of drone attacks continued to be reported in FATA in 2010, but no data is available on the number of children killed or injured in those attacks. In general, the number of civilians killed is highly contested. The United Nations does not have access to these sites to undertake any independent verification.

171. Civilian casualties as a result of landmines, unexploded ordnance and improvised explosive devices became a serious concern in Pakistan during 2010. Of the 268 reported incidents, 31 children were injured by these devices. The majority of the reported incidents occurred in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa or FATA, with the remainder occurring in Balochistan.

172. During the year, schools continued to be a target for bomb attacks by armed groups, including the Taliban, who are opposed to secular education and girls' education. In Malakand, in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province, 273 schools were destroyed and 367 were damaged by bomb attacks, according to the provincial Minister for Education. An additional 70 schools were destroyed or damaged in other affected provinces. In one particular attack in February 2010, an improvised explosive device targeted at a truck carrying Pakistani soldiers travelling to the inauguration of Koto Girls High School in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa detonated near the school, destroying it, which resulted in the deaths of three schoolgirls and the injury of 63 others. Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan reportedly claimed responsibility.

173. The Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Ordinance, which is aimed at addressing legal provisions to protect children from abuse, exploitation, recruitment and other types of violations of their rights, was approved by the Provincial Assembly in 2010. The Government of Pakistan has not yet ratified the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

Developments in the Philippines

174. There was an increase in the recorded number of cases of child recruitment and use by armed groups in 2010 (24 children), compared to 2009 (6 children). Of the seven recorded incidents attributed to the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), the country task force on monitoring and reporting was able to verify four incidents involving eight children carrying automatic weapons and performing military functions in MILF areas of Central Mindanao. Testimony from a 15-year-old child soldier in Maguindanao province confirmed that children, including girls, are being trained by MILF. The task force also continues to receive credible reports of children associated with the New People's Army (NPA) surrendering to the police and Armed Forces of the Philippines. The presence of children among the ranks of Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) in Sulu and Basilan was also reported by former captives of ASG, although these allegations could not be verified owing to security constraints. The task force verified two cases of children recruited by an armed group called the Black Fighters in North Cotabato. After participating in a series of attacks, including extrajudicial killings, the boys surrendered to police and gave detailed accounts of the group's activities. Several members of the Black Fighters are ex-NPA combatants. The group operates in North Cotabato Province, sometimes reinforcing Government security forces in their operations.

175. Reports indicate that at the local levels, members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines continued to use children for military purposes. A common pattern observed involved children being used in counter-insurgency operations, and often in pursuit of NPA rebels in remote areas of the country. The counter-insurgency strategy, “Oplan Bantay Laya” (Operation Freedom Watch), permits and encourages soldiers to engage with civilians, including children, for military purposes, using them as informants, guides and porters. Three cases involving boys, aged 13, 15 and 16 years old, were verified in 2010. Similarly, the country task force on monitoring and reporting recorded numerous allegations of recruitment and use of children by paramilitary groups, particularly the Citizens’ Armed Forces Geographical Unit, who reportedly pressure and coerce children to join their ranks. The Units are locally recruited from their community and their military operations are confined to the municipality where they are formed. They are under the command structure of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, but are loosely supervised.

176. The Armed Forces of the Philippines continued to detain children. Children in detention reported being physically abused, interrogated under extreme duress, subject to ill treatment and subjected to acts tantamount to torture to extract information on insurgents. Four incidents involving four girls and one boy were verified and involved the 11th, 34th, 25th, 54th infantry Battalions of the Philippine army (IBPA). Such incidents also led to the displacement of families for fear of being targeted as alleged members of NPA.

177. While there was a decline in the number of armed encounters between the Armed Forces of the Philippines and MILF in 2010, fighting with other non-State armed actors remained relatively unchanged. An increase in the number of casualties of children in 2010 was documented: 38 children, including 8 girls, were reportedly killed and 40, including 16 girls, reportedly maimed; in 2009, 12 children were killed and 40 injured. Of those, verified incidents implicated NPA, the Armed Forces of the Philippines and private militias of local politicians. The perpetrators were not identified in 13 incidents of killing and 10 incidents of maiming.

178. There has been an upward trend in the number of attacks on schools and hospitals and their personnel in 2010. This may be partially attributed to the use of schools as polling stations during the May and October elections. Forty-one incidents were recorded, compared to 10 in 2009. Of those, 14 were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines, 4 to NPA, 1 to MILF, 2 to ASG, 6 to private militias of local politicians, and 14 to unidentified perpetrators. Schools have been targets of improvised explosive device attacks and burning. In addition, teachers are increasingly targeted; 11 teachers were reportedly killed during the reporting period.

179. There has also been a rising trend of the occupation of schools by the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the Citizens’ Armed Forces Geographical Unit in 2010, in contravention of national legislation prohibiting such practice. In remote communities across the country, the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the Unit have been using functioning public school buildings as barracks and command centres, including for storing weapons and ammunition. In some situations, the soldiers were observed approaching children, questioning them and allowing them to handle weapons.

Developments in the southern border provinces of Thailand

180. Reports of child casualties owing to the unrest and violence in the southern border provinces remained a concern in 2010, although exact figures are not available. According to information received, many instances of death and injury of children are due to explosive devices in public spaces or indiscriminate shootings by unidentified armed perpetrators. This covers the far south provinces (Yala, Pattani, Narathiwat) and a part of Songkhla Province.

181. There has been a decline in the number of reported attacks against schools in 2010 (5 attacks), compared to the previous two years. Similarly, a decline in the number of attacks on students and teachers was recorded in 2010 (12 teachers and education personnel killed and 6 injured and 2 students killed and 5 injured). According to the Royal Thai Government, this was owing mainly to security measures implemented by the Government, including the provision of special escorts for children and teachers to and from schools, and to local community cooperation. These efforts aim at enhancing local solidarity and information sharing among heads of schools, religious teachers, government officials and students, as well as raising public awareness of the legal consequences of committing such crimes against students and teachers.

182. The United Nations has received information that points to the alleged involvement of children in activities of non-State armed groups and village defence volunteers (Chor Ror Bor). However, the United Nations country team in Thailand has informed my Special Representative that it is not in a position to monitor, report or verify these allegations, based on its activities in the area. The Royal Thai Government issued, in November 2009, a clear directive to the Governors of the southern border provinces prohibiting the recruitment of children under the age of 18, and stated that no children were associated with the village defence volunteers.

183. The Royal Thai Government has stated that allegations reported in my previous reports of children detained in police and army interviewing centres for their suspected association with armed groups had been addressed. According to the Government, child suspects are detained in these centres through a court order, and interviews are conducted in accordance with international standards. The Government also stated that there had been no cases of child detention in those centres since 2009, though the United Nations in Thailand is not in a position to verify this, despite visits to these centres. On 28 December 2010, the Cabinet lifted the state of emergency in the Mae Lan District of Pattani Province as a result of a systematic review of the Emergency Decree and improvement in the security in the area.

Developments in Sri Lanka

184. Child recruitment has come to an end in Sri Lanka, with the last case reported in October 2009. This is owing both to the defeat and disbanding of LTTE, responsible for most of the child recruitment cases reported in Sri Lanka, and the commitments of the Government of Sri Lanka and TMVP to release children recruited previously by TMVP. Nevertheless, the whereabouts of some children recruited by armed groups remain unknown, including some who are now adults. With regard to LTTE, as at the end of December 2010, the number of persons unaccounted for was 1,373, including 15 who are still children. With regard to TMVP, the total number of pending cases is 13 boys, including 5 who were under the age of 18 years at the time of the signature of the TMVP action plan. On 30 August 2010, upon the request of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the National Child Protection Authority and its police section, an investigation was initiated to establish the whereabouts of the five boys who remain associated with TMVP (former elements of Karuna faction, under the command of Iniya Barrathi). The National Child Protection Authority investigation, completed on 14 January 2011, could not ascertain the whereabouts of these missing persons. This is the case despite the fact that, according to the report of the Special Envoy of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict on his mission to Sri Lanka in February 2008, the abductions by the then Karuna faction took place exclusively in government-controlled areas. The report pointed to the fact that these children spent time in one of several camps of the then Karuna faction near the town of Welikanda (Polonnaruwa district), located in a government-controlled area. The Authority concluded with a recommendation to further investigate on the basis of information provided by families of the missing boys, as well as by a former LTTE member who was reportedly responsible for child abduction and recruitment in the past. The report of the National Child Protection Authority also recommended death certificates be issued for these persons, which, in accordance with Sri Lankan law, can be done once a person has been missing for over seven years. However, these 13 boys were abducted and last seen between 2006 and 2009, which is at most five years ago. It is hoped that Parliamentary Bill No. 52, which allows registration of death after one year owing to terrorist or subversive activities, would not prevent further investigations into these cases. In addition, the National Child Protection Authority investigation did not make any reference to Iniya Barrathi or his involvement in the recruitment or abduction of the missing persons. At the time of writing, no prosecution against persons allegedly responsible for child recruitment has been initiated, and repeated appeals to open a case against Iniya Barrathi for child recruitment by the United Nations country team and the Office of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict have not been actioned.

185. In 2010, 28 incidents related to mine and explosive remnants of war were recorded, killing 5 children and injuring 16, including 5 girls (compared to 12 child casualties in 2009). Nevertheless, the casualty rate remains relatively low, especially in the light of the high level of contamination in returnee areas. The presence of approximately 585 suspicious items were reported by communities, which were subsequently removed by demining agencies during the reporting period.

186. There were allegations of sexual violence across the four districts in the north (Killinochchi, Mullativu, Vavuniya and Mannar) among the displaced communities. Women and girls have reported lack of safety owing to the presence of members of the Sri Lankan Army or local officials, some of whom have been reported to have returned to the communities at night wearing civilian clothes and requesting sexual favours. However, protection monitoring and participatory assessments suggest that incidents of sexual violence remain underreported for fear of retribution by perpetrators.

187. The situation of schools that were occupied and used by the Sri Lanka security forces improved in 2010, although a number of schools remain affected. The schools are used for a variety of purposes, such as barracks for the Sri Lanka security forces, as transit sites for displaced persons who have left the IDP camps but cannot yet return to their places of origin (mostly owing to the presence of mines and explosive remnants of war), or to detain adult “separates” (persons identified by the Sri Lanka security forces as formerly associated with LTTE but not formally charged). Sustained advocacy was undertaken with the relevant local and national military and civilian authorities to resolve this issue, and the Government has made repeated commitments to resolve the situation.

188. Access for humanitarian partners is progressively improving, although difficulties continued to be experienced on several occasions. In particular, the strict implementation of Ministry of Defence orders requiring clearances to access conflict-affected areas across the Northern Province for all United Nations agencies, international organizations and international and national NGOs that was implemented in June 2010 delayed implementation of some projects in the region. Following engagement, including with the Presidential Task Force for Resettlement, Development and Security in the Northern Province, the United Nations is now in possession of clearance for six months at a time, and NGOs have obtained permissions for varying durations. However, this process has resulted in delays and disruption in the implementation of some activities at a critical time of the return process of displaced persons, and has had a direct impact on child protection projects. The approval of most child protection projects, including support to communities to prevent, identify and respond to vulnerabilities and issues affecting children, continues to be problematic. On a positive note, following discussions on the Government-led Joint Plan for Assistance for the Northern Province for 2011, child protection activities were included as a priority.

189. The Government established a family tracing and reunification unit for unaccompanied and separated children in Vavuniya (Northern Province) on 22 December 2009. As at the end of December 2010, 662 requests for tracing missing children (including 293 girls) had been filed by parents and families, 21 of which have been reunified and 32 are in the process of reunification. The verification of an additional number of cases is in progress. In 2010, the unit also developed a plan to undertake tracing activities in hospitals, children homes and police posts across Sri Lanka.

Developments in Uganda/regional impact of the Lord's Resistance Army on children

190. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting continued its onsite visits of Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF) facilities to verify the implementation of its recruitment policies and ensure compliance in ending child recruitment and use, in line with the action plan regarding children associated with armed forces signed between the Government of Uganda and the United Nations in August 2007. There were no cases of recruitment and use of children by UPDF or the local defence units in 2010.

191. LRA continued to commit violations against children outside Uganda, in the Sudan, the Democratic Republic of Congo and the Central African Republic. Despite repeated calls by the international community to LRA to unconditionally release children in its ranks, no progress has been made to date towards such release.

192. In the south-east, particularly in Mbomou and Haut-Mbomou prefectures and parts of Haute-Kotto prefecture of the Central African Republic, 138 Central African children were abducted by LRA. In 2010, 12 children, including 4 girls (one of them with a baby born in captivity), who escaped from LRA were repatriated to the Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Uganda and reunified with their families with the assistance of the International Committee of the Red Cross. Multiple attacks by LRA on the civilian population during the reporting period, which resulted in the deaths and injury of children, were documented.

193. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 49 children were reportedly abducted, recruited and used by LRA in 2010. An additional 233 cases of child abduction by LRA that occurred prior to 2010 were documented as a result of gaining access to zones not previously accessible in Orientale Province. Further, there was an increase in the number of children who escaped from LRA in 2010 (282 children: 146 boys and 136 girls, among which one was from Central Africa and two were from the Sudan), compared to 2008 and 2009, which was partly a result of heightened military operations against LRA during that period. Also, in 2010 only 47 children who were separated from LRA claimed to have been used as combatants, while 244 reported that they were used for forced labour, as opposed to 2009, when the majority of children abducted were reportedly used as combatants. In addition, 96 children reported that they had been victims of sexual exploitation.

194. In Western Equatoria State of Southern Sudan, 27 children, including 21 girls, were abducted by LRA in 2010. Two Sudanese children who returned from LRA captivity had babies. In addition, incidents of LRA attacks resulted in the confirmed killing of two children and the wounding of one child. Nine girls were raped or sexually abused during captivity. A total of 24 children, including 2 Congolese boys, were rescued by SPLA and UPDF during military operations in 2010.

195. Several child protection concerns that pertain to UPDF military offensives against LRA in neighbouring countries (see A/64/742-S/2010/181), in particular with regard to the repatriation of Ugandan children and women rescued or escaped from LRA to Uganda were raised by the United Nations with the Government of Uganda. These concerns were reiterated by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict during her meeting with the Uganda Chief of Defence Forces, General Aronda Nyakayirima, during her visit to Uganda in May 2010. As a result, it was agreed that the United Nations would draft standard operating procedures for the reception and handover of children and vulnerable women separated from LRA in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan and the Central African Republic. The draft standard operating procedures were shared with UPDF in September, but the document had not been endorsed at the time of writing the present report. In 2010, the majority (77 per cent) of children and young mothers formerly associated with LRA were repatriated to Uganda through the Chieftaincy of Military Intelligence or through UPDF child protection units, instead of being handed over immediately to appropriate civilian child protection actors. In addition, according to testimonies given by two children, some children stayed for more than two months with UPDF/Chieftaincy of Military Intelligence before being handed over to child protection agencies.

196. In Southern Sudan, repatriation and reintegration activities to support children abducted by LRA are being implemented by the Ministries of Social Development in each State. The support includes the repatriation of children back to their home communities in neighbouring States and border countries, interim care, trauma counselling, family tracing and reunification with families. However, the scope of such activities and the capacity of the United Nations to support the Ministries remains limited owing to funding shortages. There is an urgent need for increased institutional and human resource capacity to provide these children with psychosocial rehabilitation programmes.

Developments in Yemen

197. The signing of the ceasefire agreement between the Government of Yemen and the Al-Houthi armed group in February 2010 resulted in the de-escalation of the conflict in Yemen, with only sporadic fighting between the parties during the reporting period. Despite the ceasefire and ongoing peace negotiations, 20 per cent of Al-Houthi and 15 per cent of the tribal militia affiliated with the Government, Al-Jaysh Al-Sha'bi, are children. A United Nations partner observed that 75 children have engaged in tribal conflicts in Al-Jawf Governorate and 123 children in Sa'ada Governorate. In the northern governorates, 90 caregivers reported that at least one of their children had participated in the armed conflict. Children have been observed undertaking security functions for both the pro-Government militia and Al-Houthi. It has been reported that boys are mostly used by Al-Houthi armed groups and pro-Government militia in combat and logistical roles and girls in support roles (including food preparation, gathering military intelligence and carrying detonators) and are trained on how to use weapons. Children reportedly joined Al-Houthi and pro-Government militia for ideological, political and/or economic reasons, and allegations of recruitment by forced marriage of girls to members of Al-Houthi and pro-Government militias were received. Fifty-five children reported that they were approached by Al-Houthi to join the armed group. In 2010, the media reported that two child recruits of Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula, including an Iraqi and a German national, were tried by the Special Criminal Court on charges for planning attacks in Yemen. No further information is available on the recruitment and use of children by Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula.

198. The Government has detained children in prisons for their association with Al-Houthi during the six cycles of conflict. During the reporting period, the Government released 34 children from detention, of whom 31 were released as part of the ongoing peace negotiations. At the time of writing, the United Nations did not have access to these children, and therefore has not been able to verify the total number of children detained or released. In addition, there is lack of clarity on the basis of detention of the children.

199. A total of 42 reports of children killed and 55 reports of children injured were received, allegedly a direct result of the fighting between Al-Houthi and pro-Government militia. Additionally, 34 children were killed and 24 sustained serious injuries from explosive remnants of war throughout Yemen in 2010.

200. Credible sources reported that at the end of 2010, some 43 per cent of schools in Sa'ada Governorate were partially or completely destroyed owing to mortar shelling and crossfire during clashes between parties to the conflict. In two separate incidents, unexploded ordnance were sighted in schools in Malaheed in Sa'ada Governorate, and three bombs were found in a girls' school in Aden Governorate.

201. Over 80 per cent of the health-care facilities was either damaged or lost in Sa'ada Governorate as a result of the conflict, which has continued to seriously affect the provision of health care to the community, including to children. In this governorate alone, approximately 35 per cent of health-care structures were partially or completely destroyed owing to mortar shelling and crossfire during clashes between parties to the conflict, and most of the health workforce has migrated outside the governorate. On 28 November, AQAP kidnapped the Director of Al-Salam Hospital in Sa'ada, which resulted in the closure of the hospital for two days. The hospital had been admitting around 3,000 patients a day.

202. Access by the United Nations and humanitarian agencies to conflict-affected populations in the Sa'ada and Al-Jawf Governorates was problematic during the reporting period, with the Government frequently denying permission for access to humanitarian missions, and, when granted, Government guards refusing passage to United Nations staff and aid convoys at checkpoints on multiple occasions. Tribal groups have also stopped humanitarian missions at checkpoints. Tribal groups and Al-Houthi have looted food and educational supplies en route to these areas and from warehouses. The denial of humanitarian access, combined with extremely high levels of poverty and a lack of health and nutrition services, has had significant consequences for the well-being of children in conflict-affected governorates in Yemen, with a total of 11,931 children found in western districts of Sa'ada Governorate to be suffering from global acute malnutrition.

V. Information on progress made in follow-up to specific requests by the Security Council

A. Action plan templates and guidance

203. The Office of my Special Representative, in close consultation with partners, including the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and UNICEF, developed guidance on resolution 1882 (2009) and subsequent action plans, as requested by the Security Council. These action plans will be implemented in the field in the coming months in situations of concern where parties have been listed in my last report on children and armed conflict (A/64/742-S/2010/181) for the killing and maiming of children and/or for sexual violence against children. A similar process is currently in place to ensure updated guidance on the recruitment and use of children that would take into consideration best practices since the adoption of resolution 1539 (2004).

B. Update on Security Council resolutions 1882 (2009), 1888 (2009) and 1960 (2010)

204. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is currently consulting closely with my Special Representative on sexual violence in conflict and other partners on ways to coordinate their work on monitoring and reporting on sexual violence and the listing and de-listing of parties. As requested by the Security Council in its resolution 1960 (2010), such arrangements will retain the integrity of the children and armed conflict monitoring and reporting mechanism. Field partners have also expressed the need to retain the separate focus of each mandate. Discussions are ongoing on increased collaboration at Headquarters and field levels to enhance prevention and response activities on sexual violence. This includes the possibility of working towards a common system of information gathering on the area where the two mandates overlap.

C. Communication with sanctions Committees

205. The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the first time invited my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to brief the Committee in May 2010. As a result, several individuals were included on the Committee's list of individuals and entities against whom targeted measures will be imposed on the basis of verified information regarding, inter alia, their recruitment and use of children. Further, on 2 December, the Security Council imposed sanctions on Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo Colonel Innocent Zimurinda for grave violations against children, including the recruitment and use of child soldiers, the killing and maiming of children, sexual violations and denial of humanitarian access.

206. It will be important to build on the precedent set in the context of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Possibilities should also be explored for a similar focus on grave child rights violations by other thematic committees. It is also important to consider ways by which sanctions may be imposed in contexts where there are no existing Security Council sanctions Committees.

D. United Nations regional strategy on the protection of children affected by LRA

207. Following the conclusions of the Security Council Working Group concerning the situation in Uganda of June 2010 and the request of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to strengthen cross-border reporting on the effects of LRA on children, a joint meeting of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, UNICEF and the Office of my Special Representative took place in January 2011 to finalize modalities for such reporting and identify reporting focal points throughout the region. From its office in Uganda, UNICEF, on behalf of the country task force on monitoring and reporting, will coordinate joint reporting from country task forces in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, South Sudan and Uganda. All relevant departments and agencies, including military advisers and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration specialists will contribute to the monitoring and reporting arrangements.

E. Security Council Working Group visit to Nepal

208. The Security Council Working Group on children and armed conflict, led by the Mexican Chair, visited Nepal from 21 to 26 November 2010, at the invitation of the Government of Nepal. The purpose of the visit was to follow up on the action plan of December 2009 signed by the UCPN-M, the Government of Nepal and the United Nations to separate and reintegrate minors associated with the UCPN-M; assess remaining challenges and issues for monitoring and reporting under resolutions 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009), with special attention to the Terai region; and interact and obtain first-hand information on the situation of children affected by the conflict in Nepal. The Working Group was able to meet with senior Government officials, Maoist leadership and the United Nations, its partners and children themselves.

209. A number of commitments were made to the Working Group Chair and delegation by the Government of Nepal and UCPN-M. The Prime Minister of Nepal indicated his appreciation for the working methods of the Working Group and identified the plan of action as a key step in the fulfilment of the Nepal peace process. The Nepal army committed itself to increasing the training of its personnel on the protection of children in line with United Nations peacekeeping policy. UCPN-M Chair Dahal agreed to significantly strengthen coordination with the United Nations monitoring team in order to address the remaining challenges in fulfilling the action plan. On behalf of the Government, the Ministry of Peace and Reconstruction also committed to approve and implement the National Plan of Action for Reintegration of Children Affected by Conflict. The delegation was also briefed on the concerns of key partners, specifically on the protection of children in the Terai region and the longer-term rehabilitation needs of the thousands of children associated with armed groups or otherwise affected by the conflict.

F. Provision of administrative and substantive support to the Security Council Working Group

210. In response to the call of the Security Council in its resolution 1882 (2009), and presidential statements (S/PRST/2010/10, S/PRST/2009/9 and S/PRST/2008/28), a working arrangement is now in place within the Secretariat to provide additional administrative and substantive support for the Council's Working Group on children and armed conflict. This arrangement was established within existing resources, and I hope it will facilitate the work of this subsidiary organ in meeting the expectations of the Council.

VI. Attacks on schools and hospitals

211. As evidenced in this and previous reports, attacks against schools are a significant concern and a growing trend. The infrastructure of schools have been physically destroyed by armed actors, and students and education personnel have been attacked, threatened or intimidated. In some situations, girls and girls' schools have been specifically targeted. The use of schools by armed elements has, in certain circumstances, compromised the civilian nature of schools and put students at risk.

212. Hospitals have also borne the brunt of conflicts around the world, with physical attacks or threats of attacks on personnel or infrastructure leading to the disruption of the delivery of health services and/or the closure of hospitals. Looting of medical equipment by parties to conflict has also been documented. Access to medical facilities has also been an issue in a number of conflicts, with children and other vulnerable populations being denied access through restriction of access or intimidation by parties to conflict.

VII. Recommendations

213. I am concerned by the increasing trend of attacks against schools and hospitals, and I encourage the Security Council to further ensure that such facilities remain protected, including by calling on all parties to conflict to respect and take all possible measures to protect these crucial institutions and their personnel (and, in the case of schools, their students) and to ensure the functioning of schools and hospitals. Special attention should be paid to the protection of girls' access to schools and hospitals, given the increasing targeting of such facilities in some countries.

214. While acknowledging that equal weight should be given to all grave violations against children, and taking into account the ever-increasing need to protect schools and hospitals, as noted in the present and previous reports, it is recommended that the Security Council consider expanding the gateway to the annexes of my report to include parties that attack schools and/or hospitals.

215. I welcome the signing of action plans by SLA-Free Will and SLA/Mother Wing (Abu Gasim) in the Sudan and the Afghan National Security Forces, as well as the progress made by parties in releasing children, and in addressing impunity for perpetrators, through investigations and prosecution. I strongly urge parties who have been listed in my previous reports for recruitment and/or use of children, killing and/or maiming of children and/or sexual violence against children who have not concluded action plans to do so without delay, in conjunction with United Nations country task forces.

216. I encourage concerned Member States to facilitate contact between the United Nations and non-State actors to ensure broad and effective protection for children, including for purposes of concluding action plans in accordance Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009). Such contact will not prejudice the political or legal status of those non-State actors.

217. The Security Council is encouraged to continue considering the application of targeted measures against persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children who are listed in my annual reports. These measures include designating child protection criteria in the renewal or establishment of mandates of relevant sanctions Committees; requesting specific child protection expertise in its expert groups; and including systematic information on violations against children in its reports, recommendations and referral of recommendations of its Working Group on children and armed conflict to relevant sanctions Committees; and, when appropriate, seeking the expert advice of my Special Representative.

218. I urge the Security Council to ensure that specific provisions for the protection of children continue to be included in all mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as well as Special Political Missions and peacebuilding missions. The Security Council should furthermore ensure that the mandate is appropriately resourced.

219. I further call on the Security Council to strongly encourage troop- and police-contributing countries to include child protection in their predeployment training.

220. Reports of child casualties in the course of military operations continue to be of concern, and I remind all parties to conflict and mandated international forces of their obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law. I strongly urge them to ensure that they continuously review tactical directives to ensure that children are not harmed.

221. The detention of children on grounds of association with armed groups, including threats of violence against or ill treatment of children for intelligence-gathering purposes, is a growing trend, and I would invite the interested authorities to work with my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to devise appropriate measures to better protect these children.

222. Sexual violence against children in conflict remains a growing concern. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict will continue to work closely with my Special Representative on Sexual Violence in Armed Conflict and other parts of the United Nations system and its partners to ensure the swift implementation of the monitoring and reporting arrangements under Security Council resolutions 1882 (2009) and 1960 (2010), and to engage with the broad spectrum of partners working on child protection and sexual violence to ensure adequate protection for girls and boys.

223. I urge the donor community to address, as a matter of priority, the funding gaps for the implementation of action plans and sustainable long-term reintegration needs. I further encourage the donor community to ensure adequate resourcing for the implementation of monitoring, reporting and response in monitoring and reporting mechanism-implementing countries.

224. I welcome the universal ratification campaign of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, UNICEF and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to encourage Member States that have not done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, enacting legislation that explicitly prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces or armed groups and their use in hostilities, taking measures to implement the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child and submitting timely reports under the Optional Protocol to the Committee.

VIII. Lists in annexes to the report<sup>6</sup>

225. The present report contains two annexes.<sup>7</sup> Annex I contains a list of parties that recruit or use children, kill or maim children and/or commit rape and other forms of sexual violence against children in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, also bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children. Annex II contains a list of parties that recruit or use children, kill or maim children and/or commit rape and other forms of sexual violence against children either in situations of armed conflict not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations of concern, also bearing in mind other grave violations and abuses committed against children.

226. It should be noted that the annexes do not list countries as such. The purpose of the lists is to identify particular parties to conflict that are responsible for specific grave violations against children. In that regard, the names of countries are referred to only in order to indicate the locations or situations where offending parties are committing the violations in question.

<sup>6</sup> Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), the present report is guided by criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence; reference to a situation of concern is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

General Assembly

Sixty-sixth session

Agenda item 65 (a)

Promotion and protection of the rights of children

Security Council

Sixty-seventh year

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2011, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1998 (2011), by which the Council requested me to submit a report on the implementation of its resolutions 1261 (1999), 1314 (2000), 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003), 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009) and 1998 (2011), as well as its presidential statements on children and armed conflict.

2. The present report provides information on grave violations committed against children, in particular the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children, the killing and maiming of children, the abduction of children, attacks on schools and hospitals, and the denial of humanitarian access to children by parties to conflict in contravention of applicable international law (see sect. II). The report also describes progress made by parties to conflict on dialogue and action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children and the killing and maiming of children, as well as on the release of children associated with armed forces and armed groups (see sect. III). The report furthermore includes updates on the implementation of specific requests by the Security Council in follow-up of resolution 1998 (2011) (see sect. IV). The report concludes by outlining a series of recommendations (see sect. V). The present report covers 23 country situations, of which 16 are on the agenda of the Security Council and 7 are not on the agenda or related to other country situations. Two new country situations are added to the report (Libya and the Syrian Arab Republic), while two others have been removed (Haiti and Burundi).

3. By paragraph 3 of its resolution 1998 (2011), the Security Council requests that the present report include in the annexes those parties to conflict that engage in recurrent attacks on schools and/or hospitals, or in recurrent attacks or threats of attack against protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, in addition to parties that engage in the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children, and the killing or maiming of children in contravention of international law.

4. The preparation of the present report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict at Headquarters, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and political missions and United Nations country teams, as well as with concerned Member States and non-governmental organizations. The Office of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict also works closely at Headquarters with all relevant United Nations departments and agencies as well as special representatives.

5. References to reports, cases and incidents in the present report refer to information that is gathered, vetted and verified for accuracy. In situations where the ability to obtain or independently verify information received is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such.

6. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in identifying the situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is guided by the criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence. In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, with a humanitarian emphasis, aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children exposed to and affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.<sup>1</sup>

II. Information on grave violations committed against children in armed conflict and response

A. Information on grave violations committed against children in situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

7. In 2011, 316 cases of underage recruitment were reported in Afghanistan, of which the majority was attributed to armed groups notably the Taliban forces, including the Tora Bora Front, the Jamat Sunat al-Dawa Salafia and the Latif Mansur Network, as well as the Haqqani network and the Hezb-e-Islami. Children were recruited and used by armed groups to conduct suicide attacks and plant improvised explosive devices, as well as for transporting goods. In 2011, 11 children, including one 8-year-old girl, were killed while conducting suicide attacks. Some children unknowingly carried explosive packages. At least 20 reports of cross-border recruitment of Afghan children to Pakistan by armed groups, including the Taliban, were received. The boys were reportedly taken to Pakistan for training, and returned to Afghanistan to conduct military operations.

8. Although there has been notable progress on implementation of the Action Plan, the use of children by units of the Afghan National Police and the Afghan

National Army at checkpoints, including as messengers and tea boys, in contravention of Afghan law, remains to be fully addressed. Children were also recruited, mostly in the eastern and southern regions, into the Afghan Local Police, including through intimidation.

9. Verification of all reports of recruitment and use of children remained a serious challenge owing to the ongoing conflict and security constraints.

10. In 2011, 204 incidents of detention of children (all boys, including one 10-year-old) for alleged support to armed groups were documented. In several instances, children were initially detained by the International Military Forces, transferred to the National Directorate for Security, and subsequently to the juvenile rehabilitation centres. While the exact number of children held in International Military Forces detention facilities is unknown, concerns remain about the duration of detention and the handover to national authorities, particularly those held at the Parwan detention facility.

11. Through direct interviews with underage detainees, the United Nations documented incidents of ill-treatment during detention, including beatings, electrical shocks and threats of sexual violence. For example, the United Nations received one verified report of a 16-year-old boy, arrested and detained by the International Military Forces for alleged association with the Taliban, and transferred to a National Directorate for Security detention facility in Kandahar province, where he was raped in January 2011. There were no reports of abuse of children in detention by the International Military Forces.

12. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting documented that a total number of 1,325 children were killed or injured during the reporting period. Thirty per cent of child casualties were caused by improvised explosive devices placed by armed groups, killing 123 children and injuring 262. These incidents also include the use of suicide attacks. On 2 December 2011, for instance, a suicide attack in Mohammad Agha district, Logar province, resulted in the injuring of at least 28 children. In another attack, on 6 December 2011, the Lashkar i Jhangvi-Al-Alami, a Pakistan-based armed group, killed at least 10 children and injured at least 12 in an attack on a religious ceremony in Kabul. Children also continued to be victims of rocket, artillery and mortar attacks. The majority of incidents were attributed to the Taliban forces, including Tora Bora Front, Jamat Sanat al-Dawa Salafia, the Latif Mansur network, the Haqqani network and Hezb-i-Islami, killing 43 children and injuring 159. A total of 129 children were killed or injured in crossfire between the Afghan National Army and armed groups.

13. The number of child casualties attributed to airstrikes conducted by pro-Government forces, including the Afghan National Security Forces and the International Military Forces, doubled compared with the last reporting period, with 110 children killed and 68 injured in 2011.

14. Furthermore, 431 child casualties were caused by mines and explosive remnants of war from previous decades of conflict. The eastern region was the most affected and the majority of casualties were boys between the ages of 8 and 15 years.

15. Reports of sexual violence against girls and boys by armed elements continued to be received in 2011. Four incidents involving Afghan National Police elements were reported, including two verified cases. In one case of an attempted rape of a 9-year-old girl, the Afghan National Police officer was sentenced to six years' imprisonment by the regional military prosecutor. Of 76 interviewed boys detained in juvenile rehabilitation centres on national security-related charges, 10 reported sexual violence or threats of sexual violence upon their arrest. Reports also continued to be received of sexual abuse of boys by elements of armed groups.

16. During the reporting period, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting documented 185 incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals in the central, northern, south-eastern and eastern regions, including improvised explosive device and suicide attacks (51), burning of schools (35), intimidation of educational personnel (34), forced closures of schools (32), killing of educational personnel (25), abduction of educational personnel (7) and looting (1). Of these reported incidents, the majority was attributed to armed groups, including the Taliban, opposed to girls' education. It should be noted that in 2011 the Taliban reportedly issued a directive forbidding attacks on schools and teachers. Although this could not be confirmed by the United Nations, accounts suggested that Taliban members at the provincial level publicly denounced attacks against schools. In addition, 31 incidents of military use of schools were documented during the reporting period, of which 20 cases were attributed to armed groups and 11 cases to pro-Government forces.

17. The United Nations also received reports of 58 incidents of attacks against health facilities and personnel. Incidents attributed to unidentified armed groups included killings, abduction, suicide attacks, intimidation and the use of an ambulance in a suicide attack.

18. During the reporting period, 31 incidents of abduction of children by armed groups were documented. All cases involved boys and were motivated by recruitment, kidnap-for-ransom, retaliation and intimidation for suspected association with pro-Government forces. Five of these incidents indicated a link to armed groups located in Pakistan, and involved the movement of children across the Afghanistan-Pakistan border.

Central African Republic

19. The recruitment and use of children by the armed groups the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix (CPJP) and the Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR) continued to be reported, especially in the north of the country. Children were seen fighting in the ranks of CPJP and UFDR during armed clashes in September and October 2011 in Vakaga and Haute-Kotto provinces. Children were also reportedly seen in the ranks of the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLCJ) in Birao (Vakaga prefecture), and in the ranks of the Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) in Kabo (Nana-Gribizi prefecture). According to information received, a small number of children continued to be present in the ranks of the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la république et la démocratie (APRD). The Chadian Front patriotique pour le redressement (FPR) also recruited children in 2011. Of the 1,700 FPR combatants reportedly active in 2011, 15 per cent were estimated to be children, including children from neighbouring countries.

20. During the reporting period, attacks on towns and villages, as well as armed clashes by CPJP, UFDR and the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) predominantly in the north-east and south-east of the country, resulted in the killing of civilians, including children. Of a total of 88 children killed in 2011 (63 boys and 25 girls), 63 were killed in armed confrontations between CPJP and UFDR.

21. Incidents of rape and other grave sexual violence, although underreported, continued to be of concern in 2011. For example, on 21 February, CPJP rebels attacked two villages in Haute-Kotto province and raped a 13-year-old girl.

22. Attacks on schools and the use of schools by armed groups continued to have a negative impact on the education system in the Central African Republic. During the reporting period, 12 schools were used, attacked or destroyed during confrontations between CPJP and UFDR, as well as during FPR attacks, affecting a total of 1,500 children. In the town of Bria (Haute-Kotto prefecture), teachers were directly targeted and assaulted by different armed groups because the schools were located in areas controlled by rival armed groups.

23. Humanitarian access continued to be limited in the north and south-east of the country, especially in Bamingui-Bangoran, Haute-Kotto, Mbomou and Haut-Mbomou, Nana-Gribizi and Vakaga prefectures, owing to the activities of local (CPJP and UFDR) and foreign (FPR) armed groups. It is estimated that during the reporting period, some 40,000 children in affected areas were deprived of humanitarian assistance owing to widespread insecurity in these provinces. Humanitarian access was complicated by lack of clarity in the chain of command, in particular with FDPC in Kabo (Ouham prefecture).

Chad

24. A general improvement in the security situation in the country in 2011, as well as the demobilization and reintegration of the Armée nationale tchadienne during the second half of 2011, contributed to a significant decrease in the number of reported cases of child recruitment in Chad. The presence of children was not registered during the restructuring operations of the Armée nationale tchadienne, which were monitored by the regional delegation of the Ministry of Social Action and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in Moussoro. Although the Armée nationale tchadienne has stopped recruiting children as a matter of policy, concerns exist that a small number of children may still be associated with it. Five Sudanese refugee minors are still alleged to be serving in the Armée nationale tchadienne in different locations. The Government denies any possibility of participation of refugee children in the Armée nationale tchadienne.

25. The presence of the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) in refugee camps in eastern Chad has significantly decreased, and no new cases of child recruitment by JEM were reported in 2011. Potential attempts of re-recruitment of Sudanese refugee children by armed forces or armed groups cannot, however, be excluded and requires monitoring by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting. Children also allegedly remain associated with the Front démocratique populaire (FDP), whose forces are deployed in the border area between Chad, the Central African Republic and the Sudan.

26. During 2011, and since the creation of the joint Chad/Sudan monitoring force, there has been a significant decrease in security incidents. The Government of Chad has assumed full responsibility for the protection of humanitarian workers and finalized a joint United Nations-Government protection of civilians strategy. The Détachement intégré de sécurité (DIS) has expanded its operational area from the east of the country to provide coverage in the southern and south-eastern part. Nevertheless, United Nations system agencies and partners were obliged to use armed escorts for their movements in eastern and southern Chad.

Côte d'Ivoire

27. The post-election crisis in early 2011 was directly associated with a rise in the commission of grave violations against children. The end of hostilities led to a subsequent decrease in the number of violations registered. However, some violations against children continued to be committed after the end of fighting, particularly in the west.

28. Cases of child recruitment and use were documented during the reporting period, and peaked during the post-election crisis. During the run up to the 2010 election, a worrying trend of involvement of children in campaigning activities and political demonstrations had been observed, which exposed them to violence and culminated in public statements and recruitment drives targeted at youth. Subsequently, between January and May 2011, many youths joined various armed groups, including the Jeunes patriotes and the Commando Invisible.

29. Thirty-seven cases of recruitment and use were verified by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, although the total is believed to be higher. Children and youth participated in self-defence groups instituted by supporters of both sides. Children were seen manning checkpoints in collaboration with the Jeunes patriotes and elements of the Forces républicaines de Côte d'Ivoire (FRCI) in the period covering January to April 2011. The majority of children associated with armed groups during the crisis have been released, although their formal reintegration remains a challenge in the absence of a national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme during the reporting period. Since the end of hostilities in May 2011, no new cases of recruitment and use of children were reported.

30. The killing and maiming of children in crossfire and shelling peaked during the period between January and May 2011, mainly in Abidjan and in the west. A total of 42 cases of children killed and 66 of children maimed by armed elements were registered by the United Nations in 2011, although the number of actual cases is likely to be higher. In Abidjan, some cases were attributed to elements of the Forces de défense et de sécurité (FDS). Cases of maiming of children by explosive remnants of war have also been reported.

31. The prevalence of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children continued to be of great concern. A total of 271 cases of sexual violence were registered by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, affecting 265 girls and 6 boys. Of these cases, 24 per cent were perpetrated by armed groups. For example, on 28 March 2011, a 16-year-old girl was gang-raped at gunpoint in her home by three FRCI elements in the Carrefour neighbourhood of Duekoue. The situation was particularly serious in the west where armed groups continued to enjoy freedom of movement and impunity. Victims are generally reluctant to file a complaint for fear of stigmatization and/or retaliation.<sup>2</sup>

32. During the reporting period, a total of 477 schools were reported as being damaged, looted and/or used by armed groups, depriving an estimated 67,500 children of education. Of these cases, 23 schools were used, 3 of them as storage for weapons and 4 as collective graves. In addition, seven medical facilities were attacked. These incidents were mostly attributed to FRCI, especially in the west of the country. In addition, one case of military use of schools in the Yopougon neighbourhood of Abidjan by Liberian mercenaries and pro-Gbagbo elements, including the Jeunes patriotes, was reported.

33. In August, the Government ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. The Government has also drafted a national strategy for the fight against gender-based violence. The document is still pending approval by the Ministry of Family, Women and Children.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

34. Child protection actors documented 272 cases of recruitment and use of children (259 boys and 13 girls) during the reporting period. Of these, 266 cases reportedly occurred in North and South Kivu, four in Orientale Province and two in Maniema. The Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) was allegedly responsible for the largest number, followed by Mai-Mai groups and the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR). Other alleged perpetrators include the Ugandan armed group the Allied Democratic Forces/National Liberation Army of Uganda (ADF/NALU) and the Forces républicaines fédéralistes (FRF). Other cases of child recruitment were attributed to new local defence groups and non-integrated units of the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP). Most children were used as escorts, cooks and/or porters. A majority of the children were between the ages of 11 and 17 years at the time of recruitment; 12 children were under age 10.

35. Ten cases of killing and 14 cases of maiming of children were documented in 2011. Most were allegedly perpetrated by FARDC (six cases of killing and nine cases of maiming). Three cases of maiming were attributed to the Police nationale congolaise, one case of killing to a Mai-Mai group, and the remaining cases were attributed to unidentified armed elements.

36. Sexual violence against children was committed by all parties and continued to be a serious concern in 2011. The majority of documented cases were perpetrated by Government security forces. A total of 108 cases of rape (including 3 cases against boys) were documented. Of these, 86 cases occurred in North and South Kivu and 22 in Orientale Province. Sixty-seven cases were attributed to FARDC, 17 to various Mai-Mai groups, 10 to the Police nationale congolaise, 4 to FDLR and 2 to the Front de résistance patriotique en Ituri/Front populaire pour la justice au Congo (FRPI/FPJC). Twelve cases of rape against children allegedly occurred during mass rape incidents in Mutongo/Walikale, North Kivu, between 8 and 10 and 22 and 23 June 2011. The perpetrators were allegedly affiliated to the Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS). Most of the child victims were between the ages of 8 and 17 years; five victims were under the age of 6.<sup>3</sup>

37. The number of attacks against schools and health centres increased in 2011, with 53 incidents against schools and health centres taking place in the Kivus and Orientale Province, compared with 23 incidents in 2010. FDLR was responsible for 21 cases of destruction and looting of schools and health centres in 2011. Mai-Mai groups were responsible for six cases and ADF/NALU for one case. FARDC was responsible for several incidents, mainly involving looting, and in two cases the use of schools.

38. Humanitarian access continued to be hampered in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo throughout 2011. For instance, five humanitarian workers were killed during an attack allegedly carried out by Mai-Mai elements in South Kivu in October. Cases of kidnappings of humanitarian workers were also reported. Goma, Masisi and Rutshuru territories in North Kivu and Bukavu, and Uvira territory in South Kivu, were the most affected. The security vacuum that followed the temporary redeployment of FARDC in the context of the regimentation process was exploited by armed groups, including FDLR and various Mai-Mai groups, to re-establish their position in vacated areas, preventing humanitarian access.

39. Three years after the adoption of the Child Protection Law in January 2009 and the criminalization of child recruitment, no perpetrators of recruitment and use of children were prosecuted and convicted, despite the fact that many of them — including at the senior level — were clearly identified. Perpetrators such as Bosco Ntaganda, Innocent Zimurinda and Baudoin Ngaruye, remain in the FARDC command structure, and some, such as Biyoyo Josue, have received promotions. Others who have been tried and sentenced remain at large. For example, Mai-Mai chief Kyungu Mutanga, alias Gedeon, sentenced to death in March 2009 for crimes against humanity and for recruitment and use of children, escaped from prison in September 2011 and resumed activities in North Katanga. Despite advocacy efforts, no action was taken by the FARDC “Amani Leo” hierarchy in South Kivu to investigate the looting of 10 schools by FARDC elements between August and September 2011.

40. A positive development was the arrest and prosecution of FARDC and Police nationale congolaise suspects who allegedly perpetrated acts of sexual violence against children: 44 FARDC and Police nationale congolaise elements allegedly involved in 77 cases of rape perpetrated in 2011 were arrested, and 18 were tried. Two were acquitted owing to a lack of evidence and 16 were imprisoned and obliged to pay financial compensation to the victims.

Iraq

41. In the reporting period, armed groups, including Al-Qaida in Iraq and Islamic State of Iraq (ISI), continued to carry out violent attacks targeting security forces, Government buildings and civilians. The most affected governorates were Baghdad, Kirkuk, Ninewa, Diyala, Anbar and Salahaddin. From January to December, a total of 341 incidents affecting children were reported, of which 117 were verified by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting.

42. Throughout 2011, armed groups such as Al-Qaida in Iraq and ISI, continued to recruit, train and use children to take part in hostilities. The exact number of children recruited and used by armed groups remains difficult to ascertain owing to the security context. However, incidents were documented in Anbar, Babil, Baghdad, Diyala, Kirkuk, Ninewa and Wassit. Children were used to spy and scout, transport military supplies and equipment, videotape attacks for propaganda purposes, plant improvised explosive devices and actively engage in attacks against security forces and civilians. Children were also reportedly seen manning checkpoints of the Awakening Councils, mainly in Diyala, Babil, Salahaddin and Anbar. It should be noted that the Al-Qaida in Iraq's youth wing "Birds of Paradise", listed in my previous report for recruitment and use of children, was no longer active in the current reporting period.

43. During the reporting period, 294 children, including an unknown number of girls, were indicted or convicted of terrorism-related charges under article 4 of the Anti-Terrorism Act (2005). The last three months of 2011 saw a spike in the percentage of children charged with alleged association with armed groups with terrorism-related offences held in pretrial detention facilities.

44. At least 146 children were reportedly killed and 265 injured as a result of the continued violence in 2011. The majority of these incidents took place in the governorates of Baghdad, Ninewa, Kirkuk and Salahaddin. Verification of incidents remained limited owing to the security risk associated with independent monitoring.

45. The killing and maiming of children was attributable mainly to indiscriminate attacks, including suicide attacks, as well as targeted executions and crossfire incidents. In the reporting period, there was also an emerging practice of complex attacks in Iraq. In 2011, 20 of these attacks (14 between October and December 2011 alone) killed at least 20 children and injured 33 others.

46. Armed groups, including Al-Qaida in Iraq and ISI, caused the large majority of casualties. ISI, for example, claimed responsibility for the bombing on 25 July 2011 near a restaurant in Kirkuk that killed and injured 14 people, including five girls and four boys. Al-Qaida in Iraq claimed responsibility for a series of coordinated attacks in Baghdad on 22 December 2011, including a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device that targeted a Government building in Rufasa district that claimed the lives of 7 children and injured another 28.

47. The reporting period saw a significant increase in the number of children abducted, with 27 cases of abduction of boys and 10 cases of abduction of girls documented. Although the motives of most incidents could not be ascertained, a strong nexus between the cases of abduction of children and the funding of non-State armed group activities in Iraq was suspected. For instance, in Kirkuk, an 11-year-old boy was abducted near his house in June 2011 by perpetrators claiming to be members of ISI. The boy was later released after the payment of a ransom.

48. Access to school and health services was also impacted by improvised explosive devices planted in or in the vicinity of schools and medical facilities, indiscriminate firing and targeted attacks against education and health personnel. Fifty-four incidents affecting schools and 40 incidents affecting hospitals were reported in 2011, which in both cases represents an increase compared with 2010. Twenty-seven education personnel and 17 medical workers were killed or injured in different incidents that included direct shooting and improvised explosive devices, mostly in Baghdad, Kirkuk, Ninewa, Salahaddin and Anbar. Other incidents related to the abduction of medical staff and attacks against health facilities or civilian ambulances. Armed groups, including Al-Qaida in Iraq and ISI, were responsible in all reported cases.

49. In 2011, sustained efforts were made by the United Nations to encourage the Government of Iraq to put in place a mechanism to address the issues affecting children in the context of the armed conflict. Following a meeting held in January between the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the co-chairs of the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, the Ministry of Human Rights committed to establishing an interministerial committee composed of representatives of the Ministries of the Interior, Defence, Education and Labour and Social Affairs and, on 19 October 2011, the Ministry requested the Council of Ministers to approve the establishment of that committee. As at 31 December 2011, no progress was noted.

Lebanon

50. The situation in Lebanon has been included in my previous annual reports. Despite the general calm along the Blue Line since the cessation of hostilities in 2006, occasional incidents of violence affected children, including the killing and maiming of children in sporadic incidents of violence. On 15 May 2011, Palestinian demonstrators moved towards the Blue Line in southern Lebanon, prompting an armed response by the Israeli security forces in the area of Maroun al-Ras. This resulted in seven civilian casualties, including two boys, aged 16 and 17 years, and the injuring of 111 persons, including four boys and two girls as young as 6 years old.

51. In relation to the situation in the Syrian Arab Republic, Lebanon witnessed an influx of over 6,200 Syrian refugees, half of whom were children, between April and December 2011. Increased military manoeuvres on the Syrian side of the border and the planting of landmines along the Lebanese border have made entry into Lebanon through unofficial crossing points increasingly risky and contributed to unease among displaced populations and host communities. Two Lebanese boys, aged 14 and 16 years, were wounded by gunfire originating from the Syrian side in the northern area of Wadi Khaled. One Lebanese child aged 13 years, was also maimed by a landmine planted along the Lebanese border on the Syrian side.

52. In the Ain El Helweh camp, Sidon district, at least two separate violent clashes between political factions occurred in 2011 killing one child and causing serious injuries to two other children. These incidents also led to a disruption of schooling.

Libya

53. Since the conflict began in mid-February 2011, the United Nations has received numerous reports of grave violations against children in Libya throughout the reporting period. Owing to fighting, the lack of access to affected populations, especially in Sirte and Misrata, and the absence of systematic monitoring and reporting, grave violations against children, including child casualties, were not systematically documented. As a result, even though a total of 129 cases of killing and 247 cases of maiming of children were recorded, mostly in Misrata, Tawargha, Bani Walid and Tripoli, 53 incidents of killing of children (16 girls and 37 boys) and 96 incidents of maiming (18 girls and 78 boys) were verified, mostly in Benghazi, Tripoli, Misrata, Brega, Tawargha, Ajdabiya and Nafusa. The main causes of death and injury were shelling by former Government forces (in particular in Misrata) and crossfire between former Government forces and opposition groups. For example, between mid-February and mid-August 2011, Brega Hospital admitted 24 children, 15 of whom had been shot and 9 injured by explosions. According to medical personnel in Misrata, Benghazi and Zlitan, in addition to shelling, the association of boys with armed groups was also reported as a cause of killing and maiming. Explosive remnants of war contamination also led to a significant number of child casualties. The most affected areas were Ajdabiya, Nalut, Zinten, Sirte and Bani Walid, especially as displaced populations returned to their homes.

54. Child casualties were also reported in the context of military operations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in Libya. The Commission of Inquiry on Libya stated that NATO “conducted a highly precise campaign with a demonstrable determination to avoid civilian casualties” (A/HRC/19/68, para. 812). However, it documented at least 10 deaths of children in the course of NATO operations in Majer, Tripoli, Zlitan and Sirte. For example, the Commission found that at least seven children were killed in an airstrike in Majer on 8 August 2011. In addition, the United Nations gathered information on 11 cases of deaths (three boys and eight girls) and a further 11 cases of injuries (four boys and seven girls) related to NATO operations in Brega.

55. The presence of children in armed forces and armed groups was broadly reported in the context of the conflict in Libya, including by the Commission of Inquiry, but the constraints for monitoring and reporting mentioned above prevented the United Nations from verifying all reported incidents. The Commission found strong evidence that, during the fighting, former Government forces recruited and used children. The Commission was also very concerned about the reports of children who had formed part of the opposition forces/brigades associated with the National Transitional Council, also known as the “thumar”, in the Nafusa Mountains. Seventeen cases of recruitment of boys were verified in 2011, which represents only a portion of the actual scope as estimated by witness accounts. Reports indicated that children associated with former Government forces undertook military training and were engaged in fighting alongside adult combatants.

56. Verified information was also received on the presence of children in opposition forces and brigades associated with the National Transitional Council during the conflict. Children were spotted undertaking military training, carrying weapons, wearing uniforms and performing various tasks in support of combat operations. At the end of 2011, children were seen manning checkpoints and providing security, which remains a concern. On 20 May 2011, the National Transitional Council reportedly issued directives to all front-line troops not to recruit children. The United Nations has not been able to confirm this claim at the time of writing. The current Government of Libya is working with the Office of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to address the issue of children remaining associated with some brigades.

57. Concerns remain over the detention of children for alleged association with armed forces of the former regime. The Commission of Inquiry documented four cases of boys who were detained by brigades, together with adults, for association with former Government forces. In addition, five separate cases of abduction and detention of boys, aged 15 to 17 years, were documented by the United Nations. The boys, from the Tawargha community, were taken from internally displaced persons camps by opposition forces/brigades to military bases or security facilities for interrogation. Detention lasted from one day (four cases) to five days (one case). All boys reported being victims of ill-treatment and acts tantamount to torture during their detention.

58. Twenty-seven attacks on schools and four attacks on hospitals were documented in 2011, in particular in Zlitan, Ajdabiya, Misrata, Nalut, Zinten and Sirte. For reasons mentioned above, this number reflects only a portion of all incidents that took place. A majority of these cases were attributed to former Government forces and opposition forces and brigades. One case was attributed to NATO. These attacks included shootings at schools and hospitals, shelling, airstrikes, improvised explosive devices, looting of medical supplies and the use of facilities by the military. This resulted in partial or total destruction of health and education facilities and in disrupted provision of services. During an airstrike, NATO hit the Institute of Health in Tigi, in August 2011, on the basis of intelligence assessment that it was a missile and ammunition storage site for the former Government forces.

59. At the end of 2011, the continued presence of armed brigades and sporadic clashes between these brigades posed a challenge to the Libyan authorities in their efforts to contain the overall security situation. In this context, children remained vulnerable to association with these brigades, displacement and exposure to explosive remnants of war and the widespread presence of small arms and light weapons.

Lord's Resistance Army and the Central African region (the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, South Sudan and Uganda)

60. Grave violations against children by LRA in the Central African region remained a major concern in 2011. The armed group continued to operate in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Central African Republic and South Sudan. While no violations have been reported in Uganda since 2006, Uganda continued military operations against LRA in the region.

61. In the Central African Republic, 101 children (63 boys and 38 girls) were reportedly abducted by LRA in 2011, mostly in Mbomou, Haut-Mbomou and Haute-Kotto prefectures. Out of these, 43 cases were verified by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting. All but one of the abducted girls were released. A Congolese girl who had escaped from LRA in December 2010 was repatriated to the Democratic Republic of the Congo and reunified with her family in January 2011; five boys and four girls were reunified with their families in the Central African Republic. Twenty-four LRA attacks against civilians were documented in 2011, resulting in the killing and injuring of children in Mbomou and Haut-Mbomou. In 2011, over 22,523 civilians were displaced by attacks or fear of attacks by LRA. Access to humanitarian assistance continued to be restricted in LRA-affected areas during the reporting period.

62. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 211 LRA attacks were documented in 2011. In the Uélé districts of Orientale Province, 124 children (59 girls and 65 boys) were abducted by LRA and escaped a few days to months after their abduction. Thirty-nine children reported that they had been used as combatants, while 51 children reported that they had been used for forced labour. Nine of the 59 girls were abducted for a longer period and reported that they had been used as forced wives. A total of 180 children escaped from LRA in 2011. Six cases of killing and nine cases of maiming of children were attributed to LRA in 2011. Humanitarian assistance continued to be hampered by LRA activity, in particular in Faradje and Dungu in Orientale Province. In total, eight foreign children, five from the Sudan and three from Uganda, were repatriated in 2011, and 18 Congolese children were repatriated from neighbouring countries to the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

63. In South Sudan, LRA carried out eight attacks against civilians, directly affecting children. In Western Equatoria and Western Bahr el Ghazal States, 13 children were reportedly abducted by LRA in 2011. Six cases of killing of children were confirmed, four of whom died while in captivity. Eighteen girls, between 12 and 17 years of age, separated from LRA by the Uganda People's Defense Force (UPDF) and the "home guards", reported that they had been sexually abused while abducted. One health centre in Western Equatoria State was looted by LRA.

64. In 2011, nine Ugandan mothers (aged 20 to 21) and their children (12 girls and eight boys, all below the age of 6) formerly associated with LRA were received at a reception centre in Gulu, Uganda. The young mothers and children were subsequently reunited with their families.

65. In May 2011, UPDF established standard operating procedures for the reception and handover of children and women separated from LRA in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan and the Central African Republic. The procedures stipulate that child protection actors shall be alerted immediately to the presence of children in LRA custody, and in any case no later than 48 hours, and that all children separated from LRA in UPDF custody, regardless of their nationality, must be handed over to child protection actors in the shortest time possible, in any case no later than within seven days. UPDF, in cooperation with the United Nations, has trained 450 troops on the implementation of the standard operating procedures. To ensure full implementation of the standard operating procedures, all troops participating in counter-LRA operations should undergo comprehensive predeployment training on the procedures. The UPDF is encouraged to enforce full compliance within its ranks, to ensure that all children, including Ugandan nationals, are handed over to child protection actors and within the time frame set out in the standard operating procedures.

66. The weak presence of the Government security forces in LRA-affected areas continued to have an impact on insecurity and impunity and contributed to the establishment of unregulated community-based self-defence groups, such as the "home guards" in South Sudan, and "milices d'auto-défence" in the Central African Republic. Where Government security forces were present, concerns were raised over human rights violations and lack of discipline. For example, a 14-year-old boy who escaped in May 2011 was held hostage for three months by a soldier of the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) who demanded payment for services given to the boy following his release. In the Central African Republic, the Forces armées centrafricaines (FACA) reportedly used children for various purposes, including checkpoint duty.

Myanmar

67. The number of complaints of underage recruitment, including children under 15 years of age, continued to rise, from 194 in 2010 to 243 in 2011, reflecting an increased awareness of the age of recruitment by the Tatmadaw, and the existence of reliable vetting mechanisms, including the International Labour Organization forced labour complaints mechanism and community-based structures for complaints about underage recruitment. The Committee for the Prevention of Recruitment of Underage Children in Myanmar received more complaints than in previous years as a result of its extensive public awareness campaign. The vast majority of complaints in 2011 reflected recruitment in Yangon, Ayeyarwaddy and Mandalay regions.

68. Children continued to be recruited by the Tatmadaw. The majority of underage recruits interviewed after release stated that their recruiter had not asked their age, or had falsified age documentation for presentation at the recruitment centre. Reports continued to indicate that, in addition to children who were formally recruited into the Tatmadaw, children were also used by the Tatmadaw for forced labour, including as porters. In Kachin State, there were verified reports in late 2011 of children being used by the Tatmadaw alongside adults as porters on the front line.

69. Reports of recruitment and use of children by non-State actors in Myanmar also continued to be received. In 2010, the Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA) split into two factions, with the majority joining the Tatmadaw as a border guard force, and the remainder allying itself with the Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army (KNU/KNLA). In 2011, with respect to both the DKBA border guard force and the separatist DKBA troops, reports were received of forced recruitment of children, unless payment in lieu of recruitment was received. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting was able to verify this practice in Kayin State, Ta Nay Cha and Thandaunggyi townships, in April and August 2011. Reports of increased recruitment by the Kachin Independence Army (KIA) were also received in the second half of 2011, as tensions mounted in Kachin and northern Shan State. The country task force also received allegations of children joining KIA purportedly to avoid being used by the Tatmadaw as porters on the front line. The country task force also confirmed one report of a 15-year-old boy recruited by the Kachin Defense Army (KDA) in northern Shan State.

70. As conflict escalated in Shan State in 2011, reports of Shan State Army South (SSA-S) perpetrating underage recruitment increased. Children are also reportedly present in the ranks of the KNU/KNLA, Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council, Karen Peace Front (KPF), Karenni National Progressive Party/Karenni Army (KNPP/KA), and the United Wa State Army (UWSA). However, the country task force was unable to verify information about these armed groups owing to travel restrictions imposed on it by the Government.

71. The country task force verified that 43 children had been killed or maimed as a result of conflict-related violence in 22 separate incidents. During the reporting period, children continued to be victims of landmines, explosive remnants of war, mortar and rocket-propelled grenade attacks, and of crossfire between non-State armed groups and the Tatmadaw.

72. There were a number of verified cases of children killed in retaliatory actions by members of the Tatmadaw in villages where non-State armed groups were based, or in villages considered aligned to non-State armed groups. For example, in October 2011 the country task force verified an incident where, after having sustained a severe beating, a one-year-old child in a village in Hsipaw township in northern Shan State died by drowning, when soldiers of the Shan State Army-North (SSA-N) threw the child and his parents into a pit filled with water.

73. Of the 22 verified incidents, a total of 9 occurred in Kachin State as a result of fighting between the Tatmadaw and KIA, during which 22 children were killed or maimed. In June 2011, for instance, a 16-year-old girl from Bamaw township was shot and killed in crossfire between the Tatmadaw and KIA. In another example, in August 2011, a 3-year-old boy was shot and killed in the crossfire while fleeing his village in Bamaw Township with his grandmother.

74. In 2011, both the Tatmadaw and non-State armed groups, such as KNU/KNLA, KNPP/KA, DKBA, UWSA, KIA and the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) continued to use anti-personnel mines in order to restrict the movement of people, hinder the movement of troops, or to mark areas of operations.

75. The United Nations received a number of reports of attacks on schools or hospitals by the Tatmadaw and other non-State armed groups during the reporting period. The country task force verified that, during the fighting in May 2011 in Kayin State, the Tatmadaw and DKBA/KNLA allied forces had partially destroyed a hospital in Kawkareik.

76. During the reporting period, there were also a number of documented reports in Kachin and Kayin States of schools being closed for long periods and schools being damaged by shelling and mortar fire. In August 2011, the country task force verified one case of a school in Kawng Lwin village in Mansi Township being damaged by artillery fire in exchanges between the Tatmadaw and KIA. In July 2011, the country task force documented the incident of a school in Mone Hkawng village in Mansi Township, Kachin State, being damaged by a Tatmadaw mortar attack.

77. Access to vulnerable groups in many areas of the country, including children, remained limited for United Nations system agencies in Myanmar. The Government continued to restrict access to various parts of the country, citing security concerns as the main reason for limiting the presence and travel of international as well as national personnel of relief agencies. Access was particularly limited in ceasefire and non-ceasefire areas, including mixed administration areas. However, some progress was made when, in December 2011, a United Nations mission visited inaccessible areas along the Myanmar-China border where displacement was recorded.

Nepal

78. The situation in Nepal was included in my previous annual reports. While conflict-related violations against children have significantly decreased in the reporting period, children continue to be at risk. The presence of armed groups operating with political and often criminal motives, primarily in the Terai districts (southern belt of Nepal) and the Eastern Hills, gave rise to general insecurity in those areas.

79. During the reporting period, 4 children were killed and 11 children sustained injuries caused by explosive remnants of war in different parts of the country. Out of the total number of cases documented, approximately half of the cases were related to explosive remnants of war planted before the peace process, while the remaining cases were the result of new contamination.

80. The United Nations Monitoring Team continued to monitor and follow up on the Unified Communist Party of Nepal-Maoist (UCPN-M) compliance with the Action Plan for the discharge of the disqualified Maoist army personnel (including verified minors) and related tasks, signed on 16 December 2009 between the Government of Nepal, the United Nations and UCPN-M.

81. Information collected and verified by the Monitoring Team indicates that at least one out of the seven Maoist army cantonment sites has ceased to distribute payments to the verified minors through the Maoist army commanders. In addition, three out of five Maoist army cantonment sites that previously provided shared accommodation to verified minors have now either dismantled them or are no longer using them to maintain a link between the verified minors and the Maoist army commanders. There were no verified cases of returns of verified minors to the cantonments.

Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel

82. In 2011, Palestinian and Israeli children continued to suffer from the prevailing situation of conflict. Twenty Palestinian children (19 boys and one girl) were killed and 448 (393 boys and 55 girls) were injured in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and five Israeli children (four boys and one girl) were killed and two boys were injured in Israel in incidents related to the conflict, marking a significant increase compared with the previous year.

83. Among the 20 Palestinian children killed, 13 boys were killed by Israeli security forces, two boys and one girl by Palestinian armed groups, including the Izz al-Din Al Qassam Brigade and the Popular Resistance Committee in Gaza, two boys by explosive remnants of war and two boys by Israeli settlers. Out of the 448 Palestinian children who were injured, 89 were under the age of 12 years. A total of 384 children were injured by the Israeli security forces, 41 by Israeli settlers in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, 15 by unknown perpetrators owing to the detonation of improvised explosive devices and 8 by unidentified Palestinian armed groups. Sixty-nine per cent of the injuries occurred in the West Bank (including 20 per cent in East Jerusalem), and 31 per cent occurred in Gaza (including 15 per cent in the so-called buffer zone).

84. In the West Bank, there were serious concerns regarding incidents in which Palestinian children were killed or injured by Israeli settlers. In 2011, two boys were killed as a result of shooting attacks perpetrated by settlers, and another 35 boys and 6 girls were injured in incidents involving Israeli settlers, such as throwing stones at vehicles and attacks against Palestinian houses or farm land.

85. In 2011, 8 Palestinian children were shot and killed and 65 boys and 2 girls were injured by the Israeli security forces in the so-called buffer zone in Gaza that was established for security concerns. Thirty-four children were injured while collecting gravel and scrap metal, fishing, at home or playing in the so-called buffer zone. Thirty-four boys were also injured on 15 May 2011 during a demonstration at Erez crossing by live ammunition and tear gas fired by the Israeli security forces to dispel demonstrators near the border fence. All subsequent claims of excessive use of force during this incident are being investigated by the Israeli security forces.

86. Eight Palestinian children were injured as a result of rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups from Gaza that fell short and landed inside Gaza, or by explosives that detonated while preparing for an attack or being stored in populated areas.

87. In 2011, five Israeli children, four boys and one girl, were killed and two boys were injured in conflict-related incidents. A 1-year-old boy was killed in a car accident near Hebron caused by Palestinian stone-throwing. On 11 March, two boys and a three-month-old girl were killed in an attack on an Israeli family living in the Itamar settlement near Nablus, perpetrated by two Palestinian young people. In southern Israel near the border with Gaza, a 16-year-old boy was killed when a rocket fired by a Palestinian armed group hit a school bus on 17 April. Another two Israeli boys, aged 1 and 9 years, were injured when a rocket fired by a Palestinian armed group from the Gaza Strip hit the town of Ashkelon on 20 August.

88. One case of child recruitment by Izz al-Din Al Qassam Brigade was reported, when a 17-year-old Palestinian boy was killed on 11 August by the detonation of the explosives he was carrying while performing surveillance tasks in Rafah, southern Gaza.

89. Five separate cases of use of children by the Israeli security forces for military intelligence purposes were reported in 2011 in Meggido prison and Salem and Mescobiyya interrogation centres. These cases involved Palestinian boys aged 15 to 17 years who were arrested and offered money, entry to Israel and a car or a mobile telephone in exchange for intelligence on activities in their villages.

90. At the end of December 2011, 135 Palestinian children, 134 boys and 1 girl, aged 12 to 17 years, were detained in Israeli prisons for alleged security violations. This represents a steady decrease compared with 2010. It should be noted that on 18 December 2011, 55 children were released as part of the second stage of the prisoner swap for Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit. In 2011, two cases of administrative detention were reported. In the first case, the boy was released in February 2011, after 11 months in administrative detention. Another child was arrested and placed in administrative detention in December 2011. In 2011, 59 children from the West Bank were reportedly transferred to prisons inside Israel in contravention of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.

91. In relation to the 135 cases of detention mentioned above, 116 cases were documented through affidavits. Sixty-two children were below the age of 16, including two 10 years of age and one 9 years of age. All of the 116 boys reported being subjected to cruel and degrading treatment by the Israeli security forces and Israeli police while in detention. Ninety-two per cent of the children interviewed reported the use of hand-ties in violation of Israeli security forces orders, 70 per cent reported having been blindfolded, 61 per cent reported having been beaten, 7 per cent reported solitary confinement, 21 per cent reported denial of access to toilets and 18 per cent reported denial of access to food and water.

92. In a positive development, on 27 September 2011, the Israeli Military Commander in the West Bank issued Order 1676 which raised the age of majority in the West Bank from 16 to 18 years. This amendment increases the level of protection given to children in the context of juvenile military courts in the West Bank by introducing new provisions that relate to the adequate and professional care of child detainees, the separation of child detainees from adults, notification of parents, access of parents to trials, appointment of a lawyer and so forth.

93. A significant number of attacks on schools and education facilities continued to be reported both in Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory in 2011. These attacks resulted in damage to schools or interruption of education, and in some cases, in direct injury of children. Thirty-six cases were reported in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, compared with 20 cases reported in 2010. Four attacks were reported against Israeli schools, compared with one case in 2010.

94. Twenty-three cases of attacks on schools or military use of schools were reported in the West Bank, including 15 by the Israeli security forces and 8 by Israeli settlers. In five instances related to search operations in villages or to demonstrations, the Israeli security forces fired tear gas at Palestinian schools, resulting in students suffering from tear-gas inhalation. In several instances, direct attacks on schools or military use of schools were reported. In seven cases, Israeli soldiers entered school premises. In April 2011, the Israeli security forces converted a school into a military outpost for a few hours in Nablus. In another incident, the killing of five members of an Israeli family in a settlement near Nablus led to a curfew imposed by the Israeli security forces on the adjacent village of Awarta. During a period of five days, the military conducted search operations and used one school as a detention and interrogation centre. In addition, eight attacks were perpetrated by Israeli settlers, including by physically assaulting Palestinian children on their way to school, attacking schools by throwing rocks and empty bottles, or vandalizing schools. One incident involved Israeli settlers setting fire to a school prayer room in Huwwara (Nablus). In addition to these attacks, 10 schools located in Area C of the West Bank received demolition or stop-work orders issued by the Israeli authorities.

95. Fourteen incidents of attacks on schools were reported in Gaza. Eleven schools were damaged as a result of shooting or heavy firing near the schools, or by Israeli air strikes targeting Palestinian armed groups or suspected weapons and ammunition storage located in the vicinity of schools. Palestinian armed groups were responsible for damage caused to two schools in Gaza, when rockets allegedly fired at southern Israel fell short. In addition, an unidentified Palestinian armed group attacked a United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East summer games facility in Beit Lahiya.

96. Missiles or rockets fired from Gaza damaged four school facilities in Israel, including a day-care centre in the area of Eshkol in March 2011, a day-care centre and a high school in Beer Sheba in August 2011 and a school in Ashdod in October 2011.

Somalia

97. In 2011, the United Nations documented 948 cases of recruitment of children, mostly by Al-Shabaab. There were also documented cases of recruitment and use by the Transitional Federal Government and allied militia. Separately, the Transitional Federal Government forces inadvertently recruited 86 children, who were identified and repatriated from Bihanga military training camp in Uganda in April and August 2011. While 11 of these children joined a United Nations-supported reintegration programme, a number of them were reportedly released without undertaking a formal release process, and others reportedly remain in the custody of Transitional Federal Government forces.

98. In June 2011, mass recruitment by Al-Shabaab in Kismayo, Lower Juba region, was reported by a victim of child recruitment, who indicated that the recruitment took place in Kismayo town and that over 80 children remained in the training camp from which he had escaped. Reports were also received of girls recruited and forcibly married to Al-Shabaab combatants. Children were typically recruited by Al-Shabaab from schools and madrasas, particularly in internally displaced person settlements in Somalia and refugee camps in neighbouring Kenya. Forced recruitment increased in 2011 as a result of the escalation of military operations in Somalia.

99. In 2011, 127 cases of abduction were reported. Most abductions and detentions were carried out by Al-Shabaab in South Central zone.

100. In 2011, 7,799 child casualties of conflict were registered in the three main hospitals in Mogadishu. The main cause of death among children below the age of 5 were burns, chest injuries and internal haemorrhage caused by blasts, shrapnel and bullets. In addition, the United Nations verified the killing of at least 189 children and the injury of 362 as a result of conflict. For example, in October, in Mogadishu, Banadir region, Al-Shabaab conducted a suicide attack against the Ministry of Education using a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device. Hundreds of children waiting outside to apply for scholarships were affected; at least 15 children were killed and 18 were seriously wounded.

101. A total of 252 cases of rape and sexual violence were reported in 2011. Continued fighting has rendered children more vulnerable to rape and sexual violence, particularly in open and unprotected internally displaced person settlements and especially in Mogadishu. The Transitional Federal Government and allied militia were the main alleged perpetrators in Mogadishu and border areas. In August and September 2011, the United Nations noted a trend emerging where multiple perpetrators raped the same victims in a group setting. Cases of sexual slavery were also reported, with Al-Shabaab fighters reported to have taken girls as young as 9 years old for marriage. Sexual violence in Al-Shabaab-controlled areas was underreported, given the significant fear of reprisals.

102. In 2011, Al-Shabaab and militia groups continued to target schools. In May 2011, a teacher was killed by Al-Shabaab in the Hiiran region for opposing the recruitment of children. In August 2011, Al-Shabaab used a school in Elwak district, Gedo region, for military purposes, disrupting the education of over 500 children. Since February 2011, the school has been used intermittently. In December 2011, Al-Shabaab militia attacked and used a secondary school in Merka district, Lower Shabelle region, as an operations centre. Schools in Mogadishu have been reportedly closed or used by Transitional Federal Government forces.

103. The ongoing conflict continued to restrict humanitarian access and hamper the delivery of assistance, especially in areas controlled by Al-Shabaab. This was further complicated by military interventions in the fourth quarter of 2011. Humanitarian actors have experienced increasing difficulty in accessing South Central zone, particularly following the access ban against 16 humanitarian organizations issued by Al-Shabaab in November 2011. It is estimated that the access ban affected over 3.5 million people — half of them children. The ban affects regions that were critically affected by the famine of 2011.

South Sudan

104. The United Nations verified 352 cases of recruitment or use of children in 2011. Of these, 253 were associated with SPLA, while 99 were associated with armed groups loyal to commanders David YauYau, Peter Gatdet and the late Gatluak

Gai. In addition, 272 boys were released to the South Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission from various armed groups.

105. In 2011, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting verified the killing of 104 children and the maiming of 78. In addition, 306 reports of killing and maiming were received. Thirty-three children were reportedly killed and 36 injured during five separate clashes between SPLA and armed groups (South Sudan Democratic Movement, South Sudan Liberation Army, an armed group led by Joseph Oloney, and an armed group led by Gabriel Tang). Air strikes by the Sudanese Armed Forces in Unity State resulted in the death of three children and injury of two.

106. In 2011, the country task force also verified the use of 21 schools by SPLA, resulting in the disruption of schooling for approximately 10,935 children. An additional 10 schools were damaged as a result of fighting among different armed groups. In addition, four primary schools in the counties of Uror and Bor were damaged during tribal fighting in Jonglei State, in August and October respectively. The SPLA Deputy Chief of Staff issued an order in December to all SPLA commanders to immediately vacate all schools used by their forces. Two schools were vacated after the issuance of the order.

107. A total of 602 children were reportedly abducted during 2011, of which 356 cases were verified by the United Nations. Most of the abductions took place in the context of tribal conflict in Jonglei State.

108. In 2011, 34 incidents of restriction of humanitarian access were reported, during which personnel of humanitarian organizations were harassed, robbed or blocked at military checkpoints: 8 incidents of looting or diversion of aid were reported; 10 humanitarian premises were raided for equipment and supplies, delaying the humanitarian response in certain areas; and 16 reports were received of humanitarian staff being exposed to violence, out of which two incidents were fatal. Hostilities in the border areas between South Sudan and the Sudan, mined roads in Unity State and tribal conflict in Jonglei continue to limit access to areas where violations are reported and hinder humanitarian assistance to affected populations.

Sudan

Darfur

109. In 2011, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting documented 45 cases of recruitment and use of children, representing a significant decrease from the 115 recorded in 2010. Of the 45 cases, 7 were perpetrated by the Sudanese police forces; 5 by the Border Intelligence Forces; 5 by Central Reserve Police; 14 by pro-Government militias; 5 by the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)/Abdul Wahid; 3 by the Popular Defense Forces (PDF); 1 by the Sudanese Armed Forces; 1 by SLA/Minni Minawi; 1 by JEM; and 3 by unidentified armed groups. The majority of recorded incidents of recruitment and use of children took place in Government-controlled areas. Collection of information in areas that were not fully under the control of Government forces, such as parts of Jebel Mara and the border areas with South and North Kordofan, remained a challenge owing to restrictions and denial of access by both Government and armed groups.

110. The country task force verified 54 cases of maiming and 17 cases of killing of children. The 17 cases of killing included 7 attributed to crossfire, 5 attributed to the Sudanese Armed Forces air strikes and 5 to explosive remnants of war. Of the 54 cases of maiming, 23 children were shot, and 31 were injured by explosive remnants of war.

111. In 2011, the country task force verified 59 cases of rape of girls aged 6 to 17 years, an increase compared with the 22 cases recorded in 2010. Some of these cases were reported to the police or to the Sudanese Armed Forces. The alleged perpetrators included members of the Sudanese Armed Forces, unidentified armed men, armed nomads, pro-Government militia, Sudanese police forces, PDF and the Central Reserve Police. Limited access in areas controlled by armed groups and fear of being stigmatized affected the documentation of sexual violence cases.

112. One incident of looting of a school was reported, allegedly by the Sudanese Armed Forces in North Darfur in January 2011. The looting of a hospital in South Darfur by unknown armed elements was also reported.

113. Throughout 2011, humanitarian access continued to be seriously hampered in some areas of Darfur owing to fighting between Government forces and armed groups, as well as security restrictions imposed by the Government. Restrictions and denial of access delayed or prevented the delivery of essential drugs and vaccination for children in Darfur in April 2011.

Three areas (Abyei, Blue Nile and South Kordofan)

114. Cases of recruitment and use of children significantly increased in Abyei, Blue Nile and South Kordofan in 2011, with 52 verified cases compared with 8 in 2010. In South Kordofan and Abyei, 41 cases of recruitment of boys aged between 14 and 17 years were verified. Perpetrators included SPLA (12); the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-N) (5); the Sudanese Armed Forces (2); PDF (5); and unidentified armed groups (17). In Blue Nile, 11 cases of recruitment of boys between 14 and 17 years were verified and attributed to SPLA (10) and the SPLM-N (1). The country task force received a number of credible allegations of abductions of children by SPLM-N with the aim of forcefully recruiting them.

115. From April to June 2011, the number of cases of killing and maiming increased with the resumption of conflict. At least 29 children were reportedly killed and 34 maimed in South Kordofan and Abyei during the reporting period. Of these, two children were killed and three were injured in incidents involving explosive remnants of war. The remaining children were killed or injured as a result of crossfire between the Sudanese Armed Forces, PDF and SPLM-N, or as a result of shelling and aerial bombings by the Sudanese Armed Forces. In addition, one 7-year-old boy was killed and two children aged 14 and 16 years were injured by Sudanese Armed Forces aerial bombing in Blue Nile. Lack of access impeded the verification of these incidents.

116. Monitoring cases of sexual violence against children in South Kordofan, Abyei and Blue Nile continued to be a challenge. One incident of rape of a 14-year-old girl by four PDF elements in South Kordofan was verified. The country task force received allegations of about 20 additional cases of rape targeting Nuba girls and women by unidentified armed elements, including one incident leading to the death of a girl.

117. The military use of schools and hospitals in El Buram localities, in South Kordofan, by the Sudanese Armed Forces before June 2011 continued. In addition, the functioning of at least 12 schools in South Kordofan was disrupted since fighting began in June 2011. As at December 2011, the education of an estimated 137,900 schoolchildren had been disrupted owing to schools being damaged or used by armed forces, inhabited by internally displaced persons or contaminated with explosive remnants of war. In Blue Nile, it is estimated that 35,335 children were prevented from attending school owing to the disruption of the functioning of 156 schools as a result of fighting between the Sudanese Armed Forces and SPLM-N in Bau, Geissan and Kurmuk localities.

118. Humanitarian access deteriorated in South Kordofan, Abyei and Blue Nile in 2011 owing to insecurity and Government-enforced restrictions of movement and new administrative measures. Although limited humanitarian access was granted in some areas of South Kordofan and Blue Nile, this was restricted to Government-controlled areas. In addition, no international humanitarian staff has been allowed into South Kordofan and Blue Nile since early October 2011. Meanwhile, Abyei remained accessible for humanitarian actors only through South Sudan.

Syrian Arab Republic

119. The United Nations has received reports of grave violations against children in the Syrian Arab Republic since March 2011 and throughout the reporting period, continuing into 2012. In response to the need for United Nations verified information, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict sent a technical mission to the region to conduct interviews with victims and witnesses in refugee camps, villages and hospitals in the region in March 2012. In almost all recorded cases, children were among the victims of military operations by Government forces, including the Syrian Armed Forces, the intelligence forces and the Shabbiha militia, in their ongoing conflict with the opposition, including the Free Syrian Army (FSA). Children as young as 9 years of age were victims of killing and maiming, arbitrary arrest, detention, torture and ill-treatment, including sexual violence, and use as human shields. Schools have been regularly raided and used as military bases and detention centres. Information obtained by the technical mission is in line with the findings of the independent international commission of inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic.

120. Interviews with former members of the Syrian Armed Forces and the intelligence forces indicated that civilians, including children, were targeted by Government forces if they were residing in villages where members of FSA or other armed opposition groups were believed to be present or where deserters were hiding, or if they were seen fleeing the country seeking refuge. In one instance, a former member of the Syrian Armed Forces stated that, during protests in Tall Kalakh in December 2011, he was given an order by his commander to shoot without distinction, although the soldiers were aware that there were women and children among the protesters. During the armed break-up of the demonstrations, the witness saw three girls between approximately 10 and 13 years of age who had been killed by the Syrian Armed Forces. In another similar incident in Aleppo in the fourth quarter of 2011, a former member of the intelligence forces witnessed the killing of five children in a secondary school during demonstrations.

121. The grave violations continued into 2012 and although this is beyond the reporting period, the gravity of the incidents requires their inclusion in the report. Witness accounts described a particularly grave incident in the village of Ayn l'Arouz in the Jabal Azzawiyah in Idlib province. On 9 March 2012, Syrian Armed Forces, together with the intelligence forces and the Shabbiha militia, surrounded the village for an attack that lasted over a period of four days. Government forces entered the village on the first day and killed 11 civilians, including three boys aged between 15 and 17 years. Thirty-four persons, including two boys aged 14 and 16 years, and one 9-year-old girl, were arrested for interrogation about the suspected presence of deserters. Eventually, the village was reportedly left burned and 4 out of the 34 detainees were shot and burned, including the two boys aged 14 and 16 years.

122. There is no evidence of Government forces formally conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 18 years. However, the Syrian Armed Forces and its associated Shabbiha militia used children as young as 8 years on at least three separate occasions within the reporting period. In the incident mentioned above in the village of Ayn l'Arouz in March 2012, a witness stated that several dozen children, boys and girls ranging between the ages of 8 and 13 years, were forcibly taken from their homes. These children were subsequently reportedly used by soldiers and militia members as human shields, placing them in front of the windows of buses carrying military personnel into the raid on the village.

123. The United Nations collected dozens of accounts of eyewitnesses of both children as young as 14 years of age who were tortured while in detention, as well as former members of the Syrian Armed Forces who themselves were forced to torture or witness torture. The Shabbiha militia was also involved in the detention and torture of children, especially during military operations and often in makeshift detention cells in schools. Most child victims of torture described being beaten, blindfolded, subjected to stress positions, whipped with heavy electrical cables, scarred by cigarette burns and, in one recorded case, subjected to electrical shock to the genitals. At least one witness said that he had seen a young boy of approximately 15 years of age succumb to his repeated beatings. Children were detained and tortured because their siblings or parents were assumed to be members of the opposition or FSA, or they themselves were suspected of being associated with FSA. On one occasion, in May 2011, a 15-year-old boy was taken into custody by intelligence forces in the municipal building in Jisr Ash-Shughur and repeatedly beaten with heavy electrical cables during interrogation. The boy stated that there were at least 20 other children his age or younger held in detention.

124. The United Nations has received some credible allegations of the recruitment and use of children by armed opposition, including FSA and other armed groups, although FSA has a stated policy of not recruiting any child under 17 years of age. Various sources reported on young children association with FSA carrying guns and wearing camouflage uniforms. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict reminded all parties of their obligations under human rights and international humanitarian law.

125. The United Nations recorded multiple accounts of the use of schools by Government forces, including the Syrian Armed Forces, the intelligence forces and the Shabbiha militia as military staging grounds, temporary bases, detention centres, sniper posts and centres for torture and the interrogation of adults and children. Several witnesses stated that the intelligence forces and the Shabbiha militia had gun emplacements installed on the roofs of schools while students were attending. Accounts also indicated that, on a number of occasions, children were killed or injured by Government forces during military operations on school grounds, and schools were looted and burned as retribution by Government forces in response to student protests.

126. Reports also pointed out that, during the reporting period, hospitals were struck by heavy artillery by Government forces. Aside from the conduct of military operations that prevent civilians from accessing hospitals, reports also indicated that injured persons, including children and their families, were afraid to seek medical treatment out of fear of reprisals by the Government for suspected association with the opposition. Similarly, reports were also received of medical workers being intimidated and threatened by Government forces for having provided or being suspected of providing medical assistance to members of the opposition.

B. Information on grave violations against children in situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or in other situations

Colombia

127. The armed conflict continued to pose considerable challenges for the protection of children in 2011. Children of African descent and of indigenous communities were disproportionately affected.

128. Widespread and systematic recruitment and use of children by non-State armed groups in Colombia continued in 2011. Although the actual scale and scope remains unknown, 300 cases of recruitment and use were reported in 29 of the 32 departments in the country. The early warning system of the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman, which monitors and flags imminent risks of human rights violations against civilians, identified 50 risk situations in 16 departments (104 municipalities) in 2011, including 20 cases of risk related to child recruitment.

129. The Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia — Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) and the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) continued to recruit and use children. For example, in May in Antioquia, in two separate events, 15 children were recruited by FARC-EP and 13 children were recruited by ELN. In May and June 2011, in Meta, five children were recruited by FARC-EP. The non-State armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of the paramilitary group Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC) also continued to recruit and use children. In February 2011, for example, in Antioquia, at least 13 children were recruited by several of these groups, including Los Paisas, Los Rastrojos and Los Urabeños. In a 2011 report, the Office of the Ombudsman noted a strengthening of these non-State armed groups, following a process of reconfiguration, expansion and consolidation in various regions of the country.

130. In 2011, reports were received regarding the use of children for intelligence purposes by the Colombian National Army. On several occasions, children separated from non-State armed groups remained in military premises for periods exceeding 36 hours, in violation of the Code on Children and Adolescents and directives by the Ministry of National Defence. For example, in August 2011, in Putumayo, a 15-year-old boy who escaped from FARC-EP and surrendered to the Colombian National Army, was held in military premises for 72 hours. The Colombian National Army also continued to use children in civil-military activities. Such activities, when undertaken in conflict-affected areas, put children at risk and expose them to retaliation by members of non-State armed groups.

131. Children continued to be victims of attacks, including indiscriminate attacks carried out by armed groups, or as a result of crossfire among non-State armed groups or between non-State armed groups and security forces. In January and February 2011, in various attacks by FARC-EP and other non-State armed groups targeting community leaders and local authorities, three boys and one girl, relatives of these leaders, were killed. In June 2011, in Nariño, an 11-year-old boy was killed and three boys injured in a FARC-EP attack on the police. As at December 2011, at least 32 children had been injured and 7 children were killed by anti-personnel mines and explosive remnants of war.

132. While underreported, girls continued to be victims of sexual violence attributed to members of non-State armed groups. Girls associated with non-State armed groups were often required to have sexual relations with adults at an early age and forced to abort if they became pregnant. In September 2011, a 16-year-old girl separated from FARC-EP reported having undergone five forced abortions during the four years she was associated with the group, in Antioquia. In December 2011, in Nariño, a pregnant 17-year-old girl and a 12-year-old indigenous girl were raped during a massacre by members of Los Rastrojos. In November 2011, in Putumayo, a 12-year-old indigenous girl was raped, tortured and murdered by members of an unidentified non-State armed group. In March 2011, in Nariño, a 17-year-old girl was raped, forced to clean a public place naked, tortured and forced to eat excrement, and subsequently killed in front of the community, allegedly by members of Los Rastrojos. Reports have also been received of cases of sexual violence against children involving members of the security forces.

133. Attacks against schools by non-State armed groups continued to be reported. Schools were damaged as a result of hostilities as well as by anti-personnel mines and explosive remnants of war. In addition, teachers and students were targeted by non-State armed groups, for preventing recruitment and for recruitment and use, respectively. In May 2011, in Arauca and Norte de Santander, 15 teachers were threatened by FARC-EP, ELN and other non-State armed groups. In August 2011 in Córdoba, 44 teachers were threatened. At least 18 of these resorted to displacement for protection. These threats left 1,160 children without schooling.

134. The military use of schools by the Colombian National Army was reported in several departments, including Antioquia, Arauca, Cauca, Córdoba, Huila, Nariño, Norte de Santander and Valle del Cauca. In August 2011, in Cauca, members of the Colombian National Army used a school for seven days, resulting in the suspension of classes.

135. Humanitarian access was restricted owing to the armed conflict, particularly affecting children and indigenous peoples. The departments of Antioquia, Arauca, Cauca, Caquetá, Chocó, Guaviare, Huila, Meta, Córdoba, Nariño and Norte de Santander were particularly affected. Some communities did not receive humanitarian assistance and basic services as a result of armed confrontations, the establishment of illegal armed checkpoints and massive mine laying.

136. Information on the abduction of children was limited during the reporting period. In May 2011, a 14-year-old indigenous girl, the sister of a community leader, was abducted and tortured for four days, allegedly by members of Los Rastrojos, in Nariño. Also in Nariño, in July and August 2011, the abduction of two girls, aged 13 and 16 years, was attributed to FARC-EP, reportedly as a reprisal for maintaining relationships with members of the National police.

India

137. In 2011, reports were received of recruitment and use of children by Maoist armed groups, also known as Naxalites, particularly in Chhattisgarh State and some districts in adjoining states. In December 2011, the Ministry of State for Women and Child Development stated in Parliament that Maoist armed groups were recruiting and indoctrinating children, and had constituted children's squads and associations (Bal Dastas, Bal Sangham and Bal Manch) as part of mass mobilization. This is supported by a 2010 National Commission for Protection of Child Rights report, which indicated that children were being recruited by Maoist armed groups through, inter alia, intimidation and abduction, and were used in support roles, including as lookouts, messengers, porters and cooks. The report also pointed to the recruitment of children by the militia Salwa Judum. In its judgement of 5 July 2011, the Supreme Court of India ordered the State of Chhattisgarh to take all appropriate measures to prevent the operation of any group, including but not limited to Salwa Judum, that in any manner sought to take the law into its own hands, act unconstitutionally or violate human rights.

138. In 2011, incidents of attacks on schools by Maoist armed groups continued to be reported. Home Ministry statistics indicated that between 2006 and November 2011, Maoist armed groups destroyed 258 school buildings, mostly in Chhattisgarh, Jharkand and Bihar States, of which 21 schools were destroyed between January and November 2011. Government statistics indicate that the number of attacks on school buildings has declined progressively since 2009. The Supreme Court has, on at least two occasions, ordered security forces to vacate schools in Chhattisgarh State, most recently in its order of 18 November 2011. In January 2011, the Government of Chhattisgarh conceded that security forces were using 31 schools. The use of schools by the security forces continued to be reported in various states in 2011.

139. The Government of India has strongly condemned the acts of Naxalites. Based on recommendations from relevant stakeholders, including the National Commission for Protection of Child Rights, the Government of India has undertaken a multifaceted approach to address the protection of children in areas of civil unrest, involving focused development efforts, capacity-building and improvement in local governance, in coordination with the concerned state government authorities. While some recommendations of the National Commission remain to be implemented, in 2010 the Government of India launched a pilot scheme, Bal Bandhu, in 10 districts of Andhra Pradesh, Assam, Bihar, Chhattisgarh and Maharashtra to address children's needs comprehensively, focusing on protection, education, health, nutrition, sanitation and safety aspects, including through local community participation. As at 2011, the project had been initiated in nine districts. In September 2011, the Prime Minister announced the launch of the Integrated Action Plan for 60 Naxal-affected districts, with the purpose of implementing public infrastructure projects and improving services.

Pakistan

140. In 2011, Pakistan continued to experience attacks by armed groups using terror tactics and influenced by and/or associated with the Taliban or Al-Qaida, including the Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP). Attacks have targeted Government sites, schools and civilians, including children, in Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa, the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and urban centres.

141. In 2011, 11 incidents were reported of children being used by armed groups to carry out suicide attacks, involving 10 boys, some as young as 13, and one 9-year-old girl. In one such incident, on 3 April 2011, one boy was killed and another was arrested in a double suicide attack on a Sufi shrine in Dera Ghazi Khan, southern Punjab, which killed 50 people and injured 120. A 14-year-old survivor reported having been trained for two months in Taliban camps in North Waziristan. In another incident on 19 August 2011, a boy was used in a suicide attack during Friday prayers at a mosque in the Ghundai area of Khyber Agency, killing 48 people and injuring more than 100.

142. In 2011, children continued to be victims of indiscriminate attacks, including by improvised explosive devices and suicide bombings. Reports indicate that a total of 57 children were killed during the reporting period from landmines, explosive remnants of war and improvised explosive devices (38), bomb blasts (11), shelling (4) and targeted attacks (4). In one case, on 5 June 2011, a bomb blast in a bazaar outside Peshawar killed seven people, including an 11-year-old girl, and injured four other children, for which TTP claimed responsibility. In another case, on 13 September 2011, TTP allegedly attacked a school bus in Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa, killing four children.

143. Child casualties as a result of landmines and other explosive devices remained a serious concern in 2011. The majority of the casualties were reported in Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas, including the killing of 30 children (25 boys and 5 girls) and injuring of 49 children (29 boys and 20 girls).

144. Throughout the year, schools continued to be directly targeted by armed groups in bomb and improvised explosive device attacks, resulting in 152 incidents of partial or complete destruction of school facilities in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa. According to the Federally Administered Tribal Areas Department of Education, a total number of 73 schools were damaged in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas, with the remainder occurring in Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa. In a double attack on 20 December 2011 in Charsadda District, a Government primary school for girls and a primary school for boys were blown up. In neighbouring Mohmand Agency, TTP claimed responsibility for the attack, reportedly to avenge military operations in the region and in opposition to secular and girls' education.

145. With regard to the abduction of children, it was reported that on 31 August 2011 at least 27 boys from Bajaur Agency were abducted along the border with Afghanistan by armed militants of TTP. Seventeen children under the age of 10 were released by TTP and two other boys managed to escape, leaving at least eight children with TTP. The remaining children are believed to be in the neighbouring Kunar Province in Afghanistan.

146. On 10 January 2012, the Governor of Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa launched a child protection policy in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas, implementing a plan for protective services and child protection units in all Federally Administered Tribal Areas Agencies. The Malakand-based Sabaoon rehabilitation and reintegration programme for children taken into custody by the Pakistan security forces for alleged association with armed groups received 29 new cases in 2011, bringing the total number of children in the Sabaoon Centre to 170; 102 of these children have been reintegrated into their families, including two girls.

Philippines

147. An increase was noted in the recorded number of cases of recruitment and use of children by armed groups in 2011 (54 children) compared with 2010 (24 children). The country task forces on monitoring and reporting documented 26 incidents, involving 33 boys and 21 girls. Of that number, the country task force verified two incidents, involving two boys and four girls aged between 14 and 17, attributed to the New People's Army (NPA). The Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) was implicated in two verified incidents, involving seven boys, who were armed and performing military functions. Although the United Nations currently has no access to the areas under control of the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Movement (BIFM), a breakaway faction of MILF led by commander "Kato", the country task force received reports that the armed group had children within its ranks. Four incidents, involving six boys aged between 13 and 17 years, were attributed to the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG). Reports indicate that ASG used children as combatants against Armed Forces of the Philippines targets, but these cases could not be verified owing to security concerns.

148. A number of incidents of association of children and/or false labelling of children as NPA combatants were attributed to AFP and the Citizen Armed Force Geographical Units, its associated paramilitary groups. The country task force verified six cases, involving at least 12 boys and 7 girls aged between 10 and 17. There were also allegations that as part of the implementation of the new Internal Peace and Security Plan (Bayanihan) children were used for military intelligence by AFP and its associated Units. There have also been reports of four cases of detention by AFP and the Units, involving two boys aged 13 and 17, and two girls aged 6 and 14, as part of counterinsurgency operations.

149. During the reporting period, children continued to be victims of bomb explosions, shootings, explosive remnants of war and improvised explosive device attacks. Although fewer encounters took place between Government security forces and MILF, fighting with other armed groups, including NPA, ASG and private militia remained relatively unchanged compared with the previous reporting period. In 2011, 44 incidents of killing and maiming of children were recorded, signifying an increase in the number of child casualties. Twenty-six children, including 16 boys and 10 girls, were reportedly killed, and 41 children, including 21 boys and 20 girls, were reportedly maimed. Of those incidents, nine implicated AFP and the Citizen Armed Force Geographical Units, five implicated MILF, three implicated ASG and one implicated NPA. Twenty-seven incidents were attributed to private militia and unknown perpetrators. It is important to note that violations allegedly committed by armed groups, in particular ASG and NPA, are more difficult to verify, as few primary sources are willing to come forward, and the United Nations has restricted access to the concerned areas for security reasons.

150. There was a significant increase in incidents affecting schools and hospitals in 2011. During the reporting period, a total number of 52 cases were recorded. Twenty-seven cases, of which 16 were verified, were attributed to AFP and its associated Citizen Armed Force Geographical Units, including one incident of military use of a health centre, one incident of a school being burned during an airstrike operation, and 14 incidents of military use of schools in the course of counterinsurgency operations.

151. The remainder of the recorded incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals were attributed to MILF (6), NPA (4), ASG (3) and unknown perpetrators (12). During the clashes between MILF and the breakaway faction BIFM in August 2011, the country task force verified that two schools were used and another partially destroyed during the fighting. An increase was also observed of improvised explosive devices being planted by NPA and other unknown perpetrators near and on school grounds, targeting AFP detachments.

152. Throughout the reporting period, 13 incidents of abduction of children have been recorded, involving at least 12 boys and 8 girls aged between 4 and 17. A pattern of kidnap-for-ransom activity to finance armed groups was observed in the conflict-affected regions of Mindanao. ASG was identified as perpetrator in three incidents of abduction of children, involving three boys, and MILF was identified in one incident, involving a 7-year-old girl. Nine more incidents, involving at least seven boys and five girls following similar modus operandi were recorded, but the perpetrators remain unknown.

Sri Lanka

153. During the reporting period, the security situation in the country stabilized, gradually moving towards an early recovery. However, assistance for the most vulnerable families in the north remained a challenge. There continued to be a heavy military presence, and the civil administration is in need of further strengthening. The Government stated that this would be a priority. The implementation of these commitments as well as the recommendations of the Lessons Learned and Reconciliation Commission, including on children, will positively contribute towards post-conflict efforts.

154. No new cases of recruitment of children by armed groups have been reported since October 2009. However, the whereabouts of 1,373 children of a total of 6,905 who had been recruited by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) remains unknown, and the location of five boys previously recruited by the Tamil Makkal Viduthalai Pulikal (TMVP), three of which have been traced to the forces of Inya Bharathi, is also unknown. The Government of Sri Lanka has been actively following up on these allegations. The National Child Protection Authority has undertaken an independent investigation and made recommendations to the Government of Sri Lanka which are being pursued by the Criminal Investigation Division of the police. To date, no prosecution has been initiated.

155. Since 2008, three rehabilitation centres have been in operation, providing education, care, psychosocial support and reunification assistance to children associated with LTTE, TMVP and Inya Bharathi. To date, 594 children aged between 12 and 18 years, including 364 boys and 230 girls, have completed the rehabilitation programme and have been reunited with their families. However, recent community awareness programmes have revealed that a number of children formerly associated with armed groups have not accessed reintegration programmes, including a trend of underreporting of girls. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting is engaging with the Government on the need to identify the possible reintegration needs of these individuals.

156. In December of 2009, the Vavuniya Government Agent and the Probation and Child Care Commissioner (Northern Province) jointly established the Family Tracing and Reunification Unit for unaccompanied and separated children, with UNICEF support. At the time of writing, 736 tracing applications had been registered concerning children, the majority of whom were recruited by LTTE. To date, 139 children have been matched and referred to the Unit for tracing and verification, of which 42 have been reunited with their family members.

157. The Government of Sri Lanka has made headway in the evacuation of school premises in the reporting period, vacating four out of five schools recorded in my previous report. However, one school in Poonahri, Kilinochchi District, remains in use by the Sri Lankan Army. The Government has indicated that the school will be vacated by May 2012. I remain concerned that 14 additional schools in Mullaitivu, Kilinochchi and Jaffna districts continue to be used by Sri Lankan security forces, although these areas are not opened for civilian return.

Southern border provinces of Thailand

158. Although no exact figures are available, children continued to be victims of attacks by armed groups against Government officials, security forces and civilians in the four southern border provinces of Thailand: Yala, Pattani, Narathiwat and Songkhla. On 3 February 2011, for example, armed assailants reportedly opened fire on a group of civilians in Panare district, Pattani Province, killing five people and injuring four others, including a 12-year-old boy. In another incident, on 16 September 2011, three bombs exploded at 30-minute intervals in different public places in Sungai Kolok district, Narathiwat province, reportedly killing five civilians, including a 3-year-old girl, and injuring another 115 people. On 1 February 2011, members of a family in Rueso district, Yala Province, including a 15-year-old girl and a 7-year-old boy, were reportedly executed by armed assailants.

159. During the reporting period, armed groups reportedly continued to carry out targeted attacks against schools, teachers and students, purportedly because they were perceived as a symbol of Government authority. The practice of having Government soldiers present on some school grounds in the southern border provinces to provide protection is also worrisome. On 28 September 2011, various sources reported that 18 members of a uniformed armed group attacked Ban Lamoh school in Rueso district, Narathiwat Province. The gunmen reportedly opened fire on soldiers waiting to escort teachers home, killing one 7-year-old child in the crossfire. In another incident, on 19 July 2011, three students were allegedly injured when a motorcycle bomb exploded in front of a school in Bannang Sata district, Yala Province.

160. Armed groups were also allegedly responsible for the killing of at least 31 Government teachers and educational personnel in the southern border provinces during 2011. All reported incidents follow a similar modus operandi characterized by a combination of hit-and-run attacks and the use of improvised explosive devices. On 15 January 2011, a teacher at Decha Pattayanukul in Muang district, Pattani Province, was reportedly killed in a drive-by shooting. In another case, on

161. Reports continue to indicate that children in the southern border provinces were targeted for recruitment by armed groups, and that these children were used in a variety of roles, including for intelligence gathering, diversion tactics and arson attacks. The United Nations has also received allegations of association of children with the Chor Ror Bor (village defence volunteers). These reports indicated that children were engaged by the Chor Ror Bor to patrol villages, man checkpoints and identify police suspects.

162. The Government of Thailand has taken positive action to protect children in the southern border provinces. The Government made increasing efforts to prevent the involvement of children with armed groups under the guidance of the Plan for the Development of the Five Southern Border Provinces Special Areas (2009-2012), as well as the Educational Development Plan in the Southern Border Provinces (2010-2012). It should also be noted that, on 19 April 2011, the Government amended its 2008 regulation on the Chor Ror Bor to explicitly prohibit the recruitment of children below 18 years of age. In addition, the United Nations has been informed that the Government is in the process of setting up a Subcommittee on the Protection and Development of Children and Youth to oversee and respond to the situation of children in the southern border provinces.

163. The United Nations country team in Thailand has informed my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict that it is not in a position to monitor, report or verify the aforementioned allegations of violations against children in the southern border provinces. It is therefore critical that the United Nations country team be granted such access to the southern border provinces that is necessary to independently verify and report on alleged violations against children in the region, as requested. I strongly encourage the Government of Thailand to strengthen cooperation with the country team to enable such access.

Yemen

164. The United Nations and its partners documented the association of children to the Yemeni armed forces and various armed groups. Members of the Yemeni armed forces indicated that children were in the ranks of the Republican Guard, and in Sana'a and Taiz, were seen armed at military checkpoints of the Yemeni armed forces. In the districts of Khanfar and Zinjibar in Abyan Governorate, the recruitment and use of children by the Yemeni armed forces and pro-Government tribal militia to fight against Ansar Al-Shari'a/Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) was observed, with many families enlisting their children for financial reasons.

165. The recruitment and use of children by the breakaway First Armoured Division (FAD), led by defected General Ali Mohsen, was also documented during 2011. Children associated with FAD were seen carrying out security duties in Sana'a. Elements in FAD indicated to the United Nations that many children were associated with the armed group. They also described how FAD encouraged voluntary enlistment among demonstrators in Change Square in Sana'a.

166. In Sa'da, recruitment drives by the Al-Houthi armed group included the targeting of children. New recruits, including children, were seen manning Al-Houthi checkpoints in Sa'da city and fighting armed tribal groups in neighbouring Al-Jawf Governorate. In the districts of Khanfar and Zinjibar in Abyan Governorate, children were observed being recruited in mosques by the Ansar Al-Shari'a/AQAP. One 15-year-old boy reportedly joined Ansar Al-Shari'a/AQAP and was later killed during fighting in 2011.

167. A total of 159 children (138 boys and 21 girls) were reportedly killed in 2011, compared with 76 cases in 2010. The number of children maimed increased fourfold to 363 (312 boys and 51 girls), from 79 in 2010. Another 322 child demonstrators (319 boys and 3 girls) reportedly suffered tear-gas suffocation. Most cases of killing and maiming occurred in Sana'a (47 killed and 141 maimed), Taiz (27 killed and 112 maimed) and Aden (19 killed and 21 maimed). Killing and maiming resulted from, inter alia, children being fired upon alongside adult demonstrators; proximity to clashes between Government forces and opposition groups (including FAD and armed tribal groups such as the Al-Ahmar group); or indiscriminate shelling by Government forces or armed groups. While the verification of perpetrators has been challenging, some 76 per cent of the reported cases received by the United Nations were attributed to Government forces (the Republican Guard and Central Security Forces) and pro-Government militias in Sana'a, Taiz and Aden. In Abyan Governorate, 31 children were killed and 28 maimed as a result of the fighting in late May between Government forces and Ansar Al-Shari'a/AQAP. Fourteen children were reported killed and 29 children maimed in Al-Houthi controlled areas of Sa'da Governorate, mainly in the village of Damaj, home to a (Sunni) Salafist religious group, which was under siege by the (Shiite) Al-Houthis in late 2011, before an agreement was reached by the parties. Twenty-eight children were killed and nine maimed by mines or explosive remnants of war during the reporting period, including 18 children who were killed and 4 injured in an explosion at an ammunitions factory in Abyan Governorate, in March 2011.

168. A surge in attacks on schools was recorded, including 211 attacks on schools affecting a total of 150 schools, including in Sana'a (130), Taiz (72), Abyan (7), Hajja (1) and Sa'da (1). Incidents against schools included looting; military use of schools by armed forces (Republican Guard and Central Security Forces) and armed groups (FAD and the Al-Ahmar group); shelling; aerial bombardment; arson; and intimidation. In Sana'a, at least 77 schools were attacked, the majority of which was reported to have been carried out by armed groups such as FAD and the Al-Ahmar group. The operations of Al-Houthi in Hajjah decreased school attendance. Forty-five schools were closed as a result of armed conflict and violence. In total, the schooling of some 200,000 children was disrupted in 2011.

169. In total, 23 attacks on hospitals and medical personnel were reported, including nine health-care facilities in Sana'a and the killing of two medical staff in Change Square, while they were reportedly assisting injured demonstrators. In Abyan, the Al-Razi Hospital was bombed, resulting in the maiming of two children. Three hospitals in Abyan were allegedly used by pro-Government tribal militia. In Taiz, four hospitals were reportedly attacked, including Al-Thawrah Hospital, which was used by the Republican Guards in October 2011 as a base for military operations while patients were being treated. It was subsequently attacked on 3 December 2011, allegedly by armed groups. In Sa'da, the only primary health centre in the As Safra district of Damaj was shelled by Al-Houthi during the first half of November of 2011; damage forced the closure of the centre.

170. In total, 46 incidents of denial of humanitarian access for children were reported. In addition to Al-Jawf Governorate, safe and unhindered humanitarian access in Abyan Governorate was impeded by fighting between Government forces and the Ansar Al-Shari'a/AQAP. A siege by Al-Houthi on the village of Damaj, Sa'da Governorate, from October to December 2011, disrupted the provision of basic services, affecting 12,000 inhabitants. Meanwhile, Al-Houthi placed conditions on humanitarian assistance in their area of control; some humanitarian agencies completely withdrew from Sa'da Governorate as a result. Sixty-seven security incidents affecting humanitarian actors were reported, perpetrated predominantly by tribal armed groups and Al-Houthi.

III. Information on progress made by parties to conflict on dialogue, action plans and the release of children

Afghanistan

171. On 30 January 2011, an action plan for the prevention of underage recruitment by the Afghan National Security Forces, including annexes on sexual violence and killing and maiming in contravention of international humanitarian law, was signed by the Government of Afghanistan and the United Nations, and witnessed by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. A working group composed of Ministry representatives was established to report on the implementation of the Action Plan. A first compliance report was submitted to the United Nations at the beginning of 2012.

172. Positive initiatives were taken by individual ministries in moving towards the prevention of recruitment and use of children, and progress was noted in the course of 2011. For example, the Ministry of the Interior trained more than 150 staff of the Afghan National Police on age-assessment procedures and launched a nationwide awareness-raising campaign for the prevention of underage recruitment. The Ministry of the Interior also initiated investigations into 19 cases of alleged underage recruitment into the Afghan National Security Forces. In the western region, the Afghan National Police established child centres in four provincial recruitment centres, which began systematically documenting and rejecting attempts by children to enlist. Also in compliance with the Action Plan, the Ministries of the Interior and Defence have provided the United Nations with unimpeded access to Afghan National Police and Afghan National Army recruitment and training centres, and the Ministry of Justice to detainees in juvenile rehabilitation centres across the country. Also, in line with the addendum to the Action Plan, both the Ministry of the Interior and the Minister of Defence issued directives to prevent the recruitment and sexual abuse of children in the ranks of the Afghan National Security Forces, specifically stating sanctions for the perpetrators. Finally, the Government of Afghanistan mapped all the programmes and legislation that identified gaps and enhanced implementation of the Action Plan. This effort is welcome as a step towards full compliance with the Action Plan.

173. However, the lack of regular follow-up with the United Nations on the development of a comprehensive interministerial strategy has delayed the full implementation of the Action Plan, despite constructive engagement and initiatives taken by individual ministries.

174. Limited access to certain areas and the fragmentation of armed groups impeded dialogue on the recruitment and use of children. However, dialogue with elders in communities has proven partially successful, in particular for the reopening of schools and the safe access for humanitarian assistance. It should also be noted that the highest religious council, the Ulema Shura, issued a fatwa in March 2011, which condemns child recruitment, attacks against education and killing and maiming in contravention of international humanitarian law.

Central African Republic

175. On 19 October 2011, APRD, which had released approximately 1,300 children between 2009 and 2010, signed an action plan with the United Nations to end the recruitment and use of children. On 20 November, another action plan on the recruitment and use of children was signed by CPJP, and witnessed by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. Furthermore, on 20 November, the leader of UFDR, in dialogue with my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict and my Special Representative in the Central African Republic, reiterated his commitment to release children remaining in UFDR ranks, and undertook to allow United Nations verification of the presence of children. In 2007, UFDR had signed an action plan to end recruitment and use of children with the United Nations.

176. Since the signing of the action plans, two implementation committees were created with CPJP and UFDR, respectively, to oversee the release of children. Attempts to contact APRD leadership and put in place an implementation committee failed following the arrest of the APRD leader. Further, owing to security constraints, the United Nations was not able to verify the absence of children in the ranks of APRD.

177. In April 2011, the Government of the Central African Republic established an Interministerial National Council on Child Protection to support the development and validation of new legislation, policies and strategies on child protection, as well the reinforcement of data collection and profiling of different vulnerabilities to which children are exposed in the country. In 2011, the National Assembly ratified the two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Government has also drafted a child protection law, which was being finalized in 2011.

178. During the reporting period, an estimated 400 children were separated from self-defence groups in the Ouham-Pende prefecture.

Chad

179. On 14 June 2011, an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children by the Armée nationale tchadienne was signed in N'djamena between the Government of Chad and the United Nations, and witnessed by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. In the action plan, the Government committed to preventing underage recruitment in the Armée nationale tchadienne and associated forces by, inter alia, allowing United Nations verification of the presence of children in their ranks, and criminalizing the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict under domestic law.

180. In August 2011, a committee of experts composed of the Government, the United Nations and civil society developed a road map to guide the implementation of the action plan, as well as terms of reference for focal points in the Ministries of Social Action and National Defence. The implementation of the action plan remains limited, despite advocacy by the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, representatives of the international community in Chad and my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. In February 2012, the Ministries of Social Action and National Defence nominated focal points in their respective Ministries to ensure, in cooperation with the United Nations, the supervision and monitoring of the implementation process.

181. During 2011, a total of 165 children formerly associated with armed forces and groups, all boys, were supported in two transitional care centres in N'djamena. Of the 55 children separated from armed groups in 2011, 50 children between the ages of 14 and 17 years (including 13 girls) were separated from the Chadian armed group Mouvement pour la démocratie et la justice au Tchad, 4 children were separated by the Armée nationale tchadienne from CPJP, an armed group based in the Central African Republic, and one child was separated from the Chadian armed group Union des forces républicaines. The latter boy had been captured in 2010 but was held for over 10 months in the prison of N'djamena before being handed over to child protection actors.

Colombia

182. The Government voluntarily accepted the monitoring and reporting mechanism pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) on the condition that any dialogue between my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, the United Nations country team or the country task forces on monitoring and reporting and illegal armed groups is possible only with the prior and explicit consent of the Government of Colombia. There was no contact or dialogue between the United Nations system and non-State armed groups during the period covered by the report on the preparation and implementation of action plans to address grave violations against children, delaying progress in the implementation of resolution 1612 (2005).

183. During the reporting period, the Colombian Institute of Family Welfare provided protection to 282 children (76 girls and 206 boys) separated from non-State armed groups. Of these, 207 were separated from FARC-EP, 44 from ELN and 24 from non-State armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of paramilitary organizations, considered as criminal gangs by the Government. In 2011, the Institute also provided protection to three children who had separated from AUC, the Ejército Popular de Liberación and the former Ejército Revolucionario Guevarista. Children separated from other non-State armed groups formed after the demobilization of paramilitary organizations were not systematically referred to the Institute; some were referred to the Attorney General's Office for prosecution. All children, as victims, should be accorded the same benefits and protection, regardless of the group that recruited or used them.

184. The Inter-Sectoral Commission for the prevention of recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups, composed of 17 governmental entities, continued activities aimed at the prevention of child recruitment, including supporting the development of regional action plans on prevention and awareness-raising. The Commission also addressed the prevention of conflict-related sexual violence. Coordination mechanisms for the prevention of recruitment at the departmental and municipal level were also established. The impact of the work of the Commission would be reinforced by the strengthening of its coordination and leadership role, ensuring financial sustainability and by increasing its institutional capacity.

185. Other child protection activities conducted by the Government of Colombia include prevention measures adopted under the national development plan, “Prosperity for all”, endorsed by local authorities in six departments to date; the Colombian Institute of Family Welfare protection and reintegration programme; and the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman early warning system, operationalized with help of the Inter-Institutional Early Warning Committee.

186. As at 31 August, 1,448 cases of child recruitment had been registered, out of a total of 26,026 crimes confessed in the framework of the Justice and Peace Law (Law 975). In December, the first conviction under this legal framework was handed down for the recruitment between 1997 and 2002 of 309 children in Antioquia and Chocó, by former AUC commander “El Aleman”.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

187. Despite entering its seventh year on my list of parties that commit grave violations against children, the Government and FARDC made little progress towards the development and implementation of an action plan to halt the recruitment and use of children. Nevertheless, the Ministries of Defence and of Justice and Human Rights created a joint inter-ministerial committee/working group to discuss an action plan to end recruitment and use of children by FARDC in line with Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

188. While some progress was made in separating children from FARDC through the security sector reform process, concerns remain over the ineffectiveness of the mechanisms to verify the ages of incoming recruits, further compounded by low levels of birth registration.

189. In 2011, 1,244 children (1,226 boys and 18 girls) were separated from armed forces and groups, in North Kivu (69 per cent), South Kivu (23 per cent) and Orientale Province (7.6 per cent). Forty-two of the children were foreigners (40 Rwandans and 2 Ugandans). Three factors explain the higher number of documented releases in North Kivu: FARDC operations against armed group operations in the province; the comparatively high presence of protection actors; and the difficulty of accessing many locations in South Kivu and Orientale Province. In July 2011, General Kirikicho Mirimba, commander of the Mai-Mai Kirikicho armed group operating in South Kivu, made a written commitment to separate children from the ranks of his armed group.

190. Most of the children separated during 2011 had been recruited and used by FDLR, various Mai-Mai groups and FARDC. The majority escaped and approached bases or partners of the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) for assistance; others were identified through MONUSCO screenings during FARDC “regimentation”, biometric registration and training events. Most of the 1,244 children released had been recruited before 2011 and had been associated with armed forces and armed groups between one and three years, corresponding to the 2008-2011 period of increased hostilities between armed groups and FARDC, as well as clashes between armed groups such as CNDP and the Patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO). It is unclear whether the small number of girls separated in 2011 reflects the extent of girls' association with armed forces or armed groups. Child protection actors commonly identify girls long after they have separated from an armed force or armed group.

Myanmar

191. Beginning in October 2010, the co-chairs of the country task forces on monitoring and reporting participated in seven meetings to negotiate an action plan with the Tatmadaw, including the integrated border guard forces. Discussions on the action plan were also held between my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict and the Myanmar delegation in New York during September to November 2011 and are ongoing. There has been much progress in the negotiation process, and the country task force reported that it is optimistic that an action plan will be signed in 2012. However, the country task force and my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict also reported that a number of issues remain outstanding before this can be done. This includes access of the country task force to affected children, in particular to military facilities and prisons, and permission to have additional international staff for monitoring purposes.

192. There was no dialogue with non-State actors during the reporting period, despite the fact that the issue has been pursued throughout the reporting period by the co-chairs of the country task force at the highest level. Access to vulnerable groups in many areas of the country, including children, continued to be challenging for United Nations system agencies and other international humanitarian actors. However, there was some progress by the end of the reporting period, as the Government, in principle, has agreed to provide the country task force with a written assurance that once an action plan is signed with the Tatmadaw, it would facilitate access to non-State armed groups. The terms of that access are yet to be agreed. The country task force has advocated with the Government to include the protection of children in armed conflict as an important aspect of any comprehensive strategy to negotiate the transformation of ceasefire groups to border guard forces or to resolve the conflict with KIA, KNU/KNLA, KNPP/KA and SSA-S.

193. The country task force verified the release of 109 underage recruits, all boys, from the Tatmadaw in 2011. Of these, 61 were released under the ILO forced labour complaints mechanism. In 2011, the Government continued to regularly submit a list of discharged children.

194. In addition to those formally released, the country task force obtained information from the Government of an additional 417 potential new recruits rejected at the recruitment unit screening between January and the end of September 2011 for the reason of being under 18 years of age. However, despite increasing visits to Tatmadaw recruitment units and training schools, it remained difficult for the country task force to determine that these vetting measures were consistently applied. During informal discussions, Tatmadaw soldiers have highlighted the conflicting pressure they are under, with instructions to find new recruits often taking precedence over the age restrictions on recruitment.

195. Furthermore, arrests of underage recruits as “deserters” continued in 2011. ILO documented a total of 22 children arrested and charged with desertion in 2011, of whom three were released and discharged from service.

196. New military instructions continued to be issued in 2011 on the prevention of underage recruitment. The Government shared documents indicating that, in 2011, 51 soldiers of the Tatmadaw were either warned, had their pay and allowances cut, received a serious reprimand or were demoted for recruitment and use of children. However, the country task force noted that, in most cases, the penalties meted out to those convicted of underage recruitment were not commensurate with the crimes committed.

Nepal

197. A technical mission from the Office of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict was undertaken in coordination with the United Nations Monitoring Team in Nepal, from 12 to 16 December 2011. The purpose of the mission was to advocate with the UCPN-M to fully comply with the action plan and to assist the Monitoring Team in this regard. The mission met with the UCPN-M Chair, Pushpa Kamal Dahal “Prachanda”, senior Maoist army leaders, members of the diplomatic community and members of the Government of Nepal. A matrix of UCPN-M compliance with the action plan was developed and shared with the relevant Maoist leaders to help UCPN-M address the remaining challenges towards full compliance.

198. Following the technical mission, a letter was sent by the UCPN-M Chair to the Maoist Army division commanders. The circular acknowledged some of the findings of the Monitoring Team and requested the division commanders to fully comply with the action plan. Subsequently, UCPN-M has taken steps to suspend payments, to cease providing housing and to encourage disqualified minors to register for the reintegration programme provided by the United Nations. In the light of the above, it has been determined that UCPN-M has come into full compliance.

Philippines

199. During her visit to the Philippines in April 2011, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict met with the MILF leadership to discuss the implementation of the action plan between MILF and the United Nations, signed in August 2009. It was agreed with MILF that the registration of children across the 21 base commands would be completed within nine months, while more determined criteria on the degrees of association with the armed group would be applied to the identification of children. MILF reaffirmed its position that no child under the age of 18 would be recruited or used, yet acknowledged that children might become involved through the community fabric.

200. The extension of the United Nations-MILF action plan remains pending. While the MILF agreement in principle to continue with implementation of the action plan remains, the expiry of the action plan in July 2011 after two years of implementation has been followed by a significant period of inactivity. This period, from August 2011 to the present, coincided with the MILF withdrawal from the peace talks with the Government of the Philippines, and an escalation in armed skirmishes between AFP, MILF and the breakaway BIFM. Direct communication between the United Nations and MILF resumed in December 2011, allowing for constructive dialogue on the challenges to the complete registration of children associated with MILF. This dialogue is expected to result in the signing of an addendum on the extension of the action plan within the first quarter of 2012.

201. The National Democratic Front of the Philippines (NDFP), the political front of NPA, agreed on 7 April 2011 to meet for talks on the possibility of an action plan with the United Nations to prevent and halt the recruitment and use of children. In January 2012, with the knowledge of the Government of the Philippines, a technical team from the United Nations met with members of the NDFP negotiating panel for an initial discussion. NDFP continues to deny that NPA has any children in its ranks, and claims to have a policy of no underage recruitment. NDFP requested more time for internal consultation and committed to continue a protection dialogue with the United Nations.

202. Owing to the security risks involved, the United Nations has not been able to engage with ASG to date.

203. During her field visit in April 2011, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict was able to gain the commitment of the Department of National Defense and AFP to develop a strategic plan for the protection of children affected by armed conflict. This strategy aims to address concerns surrounding the association of children with AFP paramilitary units, including the Citizen Armed Force Geographical Units, by ensuring child protection training for AFP personnel, the establishment of vetting procedures at the local level, and the secondment of international specialized staff to the AFP Human Rights Office.

Somalia

204. While the implementation of the recommendations of the Security Council Working Group on children and armed conflict was delayed owing to a change of Government in 2011, the political commitment of the post-June 2011 Government to end grave violations against children by the Transitional Federal Government was encouraging. A number of important steps have been taken. In July, the Transitional Federal Government issued General Order No. 1, which underlined that the recruitment and use of children by members of Somali National Security Forces was a violation of national law and the Code of Conduct of the armed forces. In November, during a mission of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to Mogadishu, the Transitional Federal Government appointed military and civilian focal points to interact with the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, including on the development of an action plan to address recruitment and use of children by Transitional Federal Government forces. Procedures to ensure that children are screened during recruitment exercises and are separated on an ongoing basis from the Transitional Federal Government forces will be the cornerstone of the action plan that the Transitional Federal Government will develop with United Nations support. Engagement with Al-Shabaab on the protection of children was not possible during the course of the year.

South Sudan

205. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting was formally established in September 2011, following the independence of South Sudan and the establishment of the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS). Following consultations, a new action plan was signed by the Government of South Sudan on 13 March 2012 during the visit of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. SPLA has continuously granted access to military barracks or training centres for child protection actors to verify the presence of children. Following the August 2010 establishment of the SPLA Child Protection Unit at SPLA headquarters, such units have been established in seven other SPLA divisions.

206. SPLA offered the rebel militia groups in South Sudan amnesty if they surrendered and accepted integration into SPLA within a certain deadline. Three armed groups (allied to David YauYau, Peter Gatdet and the late Gatluak Gai) accepted that arrangement. The children associated with those three groups were released prior to integration.

207. Four military orders were issued during the reporting period by SPLA for the immediate release of all children and for halting all recruitment and use of children within SPLA. As a result, seven military barracks submitted the names of 392 boys who were released from SPLA.

208. As part of the programme for release and reintegration of children associated with armed forces or groups in South Sudan, a total of 352 children (351 boys and 1 girl) were registered by the South Sudan Disarmament Demobilization and Reintegration Commission in 2011. Of these, 272 (all boys) were released through the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme in 2011. Some 255 children were reunited and received reintegration assistance. In addition, 210 children released in 2010 continued to receive assistance during 2011.

Sri Lanka

209. In relation to the continued listing of the Inya Bharathi faction and in response to efforts by the Government of Sri Lanka to implement the recommendations of the Working Group of the Security Council on children and armed conflict, a United Nations Headquarters compliance mission visited Sri Lanka in January 2012. The mission found that the Government had undertaken serious efforts to locate the five children allegedly still associated with the Inya Bharathi faction. Upon the request of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Nation Child Protection Authority undertook initial investigations, which were subsequently handed over to the Criminal Investigation Division of the Police for further investigation. In addition, on 7 January 2012, additional enquiries were undertaken by the Secretary of Justice in the presence of the Director General for the United Nations of the Ministry of External Affairs and local authorities directly with Inya Bharathi. Mr. Bharathi denied the charges. The mission was able to verify that the police had approached the families and witnesses in the cases and those investigations continue. There has been no obtained evidence suggesting that Mr. Bharathi possesses a chain of command over the aforementioned cases. The United Nations in Sri Lanka will continue to monitor and report on the case.

210. In view of the efforts of the Government to investigate the whereabouts of the remaining children allegedly still associated with the Inya Bharathi faction, and their compliance with previous action plan commitments and the recommendations of the Working Group on children and armed conflict and the special envoys of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict in Sri Lanka, I have delisted the Inya Bharathi faction from the annexes.

Sudan

211. In 2011, progress was made in discussions between the United Nations and the Sudanese Armed Forces on the preparation of a time-bound action plan. Discussions began during the course of the year with SLA/Abdul Wahid to establish an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children. In addition, SLA/Historical Leadership submitted a written commitment to the United Nations to end the recruitment and use of children in Darfur.

212. During the reporting period, 255 former child soldiers, including 94 young adults and 164 below 18 years of age, were registered in North and West Darfur by the North Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission. They had been formerly associated to JEM/Peace Wing, SLA/Mustapha Terab and Liberals and Reform Movement (LRM). Separately, the SLA/Historical Leadership shared a list of 120 children associated with their group in South Darfur with the United Nations for registration with the Commission. In Blue Nile, 353 children, all of them boys between 13 and 17 years old, were released between 30 December 2010 and April 2011 from SPLA and registered by the Commission.

213. During the reporting period, there were encouraging signs of progress in the area of juvenile justice. In my previous report, concerns were raised over the death sentence imposed against four children who allegedly took part in a JEM attack on a convoy of the Government of the Sudan in Sanyi Afundu in 2010 (see A/65/820-S/2011/250, para. 150). On 20 June 2011, the Supreme Court of the Sudan handed down a ruling dismissing the death sentence imposed by the Court in Nyala, South Darfur, and ordered a retrial, citing failure to follow the established legal procedures necessary to guarantee a fair trial.

214. The country task force on monitoring and reporting registered progress by the Government to address rape cases with the opening of investigations by the police that resulted in the arrest of 16 alleged perpetrators, including Government officials. In addition, the Government of the Sudan and the Liberation and Justice Movement signed the Agreement on the adoption of the Doha Document for Peace in Darfur, on 14 July. The Doha Document contains provisions that comprehensively address the causes of the conflict in Darfur and assist in addressing violations against children.

Yemen

215. In May 2011, the Government of Yemen issued a statement expressing its commitment to end the recruitment and use of children. In follow up to the recommendations of the universal periodic review of Yemen by the Human Rights Council, a decree on the same matter was issued by the Government in November. In August 2011, in response to my 2010 report on children and armed conflict and the listing of two Yemeni parties, the Minister of Legal Affairs and the Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood reaffirmed in writing their commitment to work with the United Nations on ending the use and recruitment of children. Defected General Ali Mohsen of FAD issued a decree in November 2011 for the release of 100 children. However, verification of this by the United Nations was not possible in 2011. Following the signing of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC)-brokered agreement in November, a military affairs, security and stability committee was formed with a mandate to rehabilitate combatants who do not meet conditions for service with the armed forces. The United Nations began working with the Committee to develop a concrete, time-bound action plan to end the use and recruitment of children in the armed forces of Yemen.

216. No progress was made in 2011 on the release of children from pro-Government militia. In November 2011, in response to the universal periodic review recommendations on Yemen, the Government entrusted the Minister of Legal Affairs to form a committee to conduct independent and transparent investigations into allegations of human rights violations committed during the civil unrest that started in February 2011. However, progress has been slow. It is expected that this recommendation will be implemented with the establishment of a new transitional Government following the signing of the GCC initiative. The Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood has, since the inception of the civil unrest, raised awareness and advocated against the use and exploitation of children, including through the media.

217. Dialogue with the Al-Houthi armed group on grave violations against children and the development of an action plan to end recruitment and use was not possible during the reporting period.

IV. Follow-up to specific requests in Security Council resolution 1998 (2011)

Communications with sanctions committees

218. Following a briefing by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict on the situation of conflict-affected children in Somalia, the Security Council Sanctions Committee pursuant to resolutions 751 (1992) and 1907 (2009) concerning Somalia and Eritrea expanded in July 2011 its sanctions designation criteria to include grave violations against children, including recruitment and use, killing and maiming, sexual violence, abductions, attacks on schools and hospitals and forced displacement in Somalia. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict continued to work closely with the Group of Experts established to monitor the implementation of the sanctions regime for the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

219. This brings to four the number of sanctions committees that now have designation criteria on grave violations against children (Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and the Sudan). Other sanctions regimes involving individuals or entities that commit grave violations against children — in particular those against Al-Qaida and the Taliban — are encouraged to include designation criteria for grave violations against children.

220. The expansion of the sanctions architecture on grave violations against children is a significant step. The threat of sanctions sends a powerful signal to parties that perpetrate grave violations, and has contributed to greater compliance with the Security Council agenda on children and armed conflict. Further efforts are necessary to ensure that sanctions are imposed against perpetrators. To this end, the Working Group of the Security Council on children and armed conflict and my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict are encouraged to increase transmission of specific information on alleged perpetrators to existing sanctions committees.

Options for increasing pressure on persistent perpetrators

221. Of grave concern is the unacceptably high, and growing, number of persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children listed in the annexes to my report. In the present report, 32 persistent perpetrators — that is, parties that have been listed for grave violations against children for five years or more — are listed, of which seven are Government security forces. While efforts by some persistent perpetrators to address the commission of grave violations are welcome, further decisive and immediate action is needed to halt these violations, and to ensure that persistent perpetrators are brought to account.

222. A number of actions could be considered. First, further linkages could be developed with the Security Council sanctions regimes. In addition to the expansion of designation criteria on grave violations against children to all relevant sanctions regimes, consideration could be given to ways by which sanctions may be imposed in contexts for which there is no existing sanctions committee, possibly beginning with relevant situations on the agenda of the Council. Secondly, high-level attention by the Council to the question of persistent perpetrators is warranted with a view to develop concrete measures, including specific consultations on persistent perpetrators. Thirdly, progressive and incremental measures could be taken by the Working Group on children and armed conflict, with the support of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, to develop close cooperation with national and international courts to address persistent perpetrators who have not taken concrete steps to halt grave violations.

Information on the criteria and procedures used for listing and delisting parties to conflict in the annexes to the annual report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, in line with Security Council resolution 1998 (2011)

Authority

223. In paragraph 3 of its resolution 1998 (2011), the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to include in the annexes to his annual reports on children and armed conflict those parties to conflict that engage in recurrent attacks on schools and/or hospitals, and/or recurrent attacks or threats of attacks against protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals in situations of armed conflict, bearing in mind all other violations and abuses against children, and noted that paragraph 3 would apply to situations in accordance with the conditions set out in paragraph 16 of its resolution 1379 (2001).

224. In paragraph 22 (a) of its resolution 1998 (2011), the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to attach to his report a list of parties to armed conflict on the agenda of the Council or in other situations, in accordance with paragraph 19 (a) of its resolution 1882 (2009) and paragraph 3 of its resolution 1998 (2011).

225. Paragraph 22 (d) of its resolution 1998 (2011), the Security Council also requested the Secretary-General to include in his 2012 report on children and armed conflict information on the criteria and procedures used for listing and delisting parties to armed conflict in the annexes to his periodic reports, bearing in mind the views expressed by all the members of the Working Group on children and armed conflict during informal briefings.

226. The concepts of “school” and “hospital” include all educational and medical facilities, determined by the local context, including informal facilities of education and health care. An attack on a school or hospital that has retained its civilian character constitutes a violation of international humanitarian law. In addition, even in cases where attacks on schools and/or hospitals may not result in child casualties, they may affect children through the disruption of educational and/or medical services.

227. Under international humanitarian law, schools and hospitals are protected civilian objects and therefore benefit from the principles of distinction, proportionality and precautions. For the purposes of listing, attacks on schools and/or hospitals include direct attacks against them as well as indiscriminate attacks, resulting in damage to or destruction of these facilities or which have the effect of impeding the ability of a school or hospital to function and/or placing children at risk, and acts of looting of these protected facilities. The country task forces on monitoring and reporting will continue to monitor and report on other concerns, including the military use of schools, although it does not constitute a trigger for listing.

228. Threats of attacks against protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals include a declaration of intention or determination to inflict harm, whether physical or moral, related to the provision of education or medical assistance. For the purpose of listing, these threats need to be credible and the consequences plausible.

229. Protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals refer to schoolchildren, teachers, medical personnel and any civilians involved in education or medical assistance, unless and for such time that such persons are directly participating in hostilities. For listing purposes, these attacks against protected persons need to have a link with the act of teaching and/or the provision of health care.

230. The references to “recurrent” attacks on schools and/or hospitals and “recurrent” attacks or threats of attacks against protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals suggest that such attacks or threats of attacks have been committed several times, which, as such, excludes single, isolated incidents or the random conduct of an individual acting alone.

231. Recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children in contravention of applicable international law, and rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, will continue to be the basis for listing and delisting, in conformity with past practice and my 2010 report on children and armed conflict (S/2010/181), and in line with applicable international law.

232. A party listed on the basis of Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009) and/or 1998 (2011) will be delisted on conditions specified in paragraphs 178-180 of my 2010 report on children and armed conflict (ibid.).

Security Council Working Group visit to Afghanistan

233. The Working Group of the Security Council on children and armed conflict, led by the German Chair, visited Afghanistan from 4 to 9 June 2012, at the invitation of the Government. The purpose of the visit was to follow up on the implementation of the action plan signed between the Government of Afghanistan and the United Nations, in January 2011, with the purpose of ending the recruitment and use of children, as well as sexual violence committed by the Afghan National Security Forces. During the visit, the Working Group was able to assess first-hand the impact of attacks on schools and hospitals on the lives of Afghan children in preparation of Security Council resolution 1998 (2011). In addition, the Working Group followed up on recommendations made in its conclusions of May 2011 (S/AC.51/2011/3). The Working Group met with senior Government officials, religious leaders, the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), United Nations representatives, as well as civil society partners and children affected by the conflict.

234. The Security Council delegation was encouraged by the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan to implement the action plan, including the Government's commitments to secure the full compliance of its forces. The Working Group also received assurances from the ISAF Commander with regard to support for the implementation of the action plan in its capacity-building activities with the Afghan National Security Forces and cooperation with the monitoring and reporting process, as well as commitments with regard to access to child detainees in Parwan detention facility.

First judgment at the International Criminal Court

235. On 14 March 2012, the International Criminal Court (ICC) delivered its verdict in the case Prosecutor vs. Thomas Lubanga Dyilo. Mr. Lubanga was convicted for the war crime of conscripting and enlisting children under the age of 15 into the Forces patriotiques pour la libération du Congo, and for making them participate actively in hostilities. This was the Court's first judgment on the issue of child recruitment and sets important international jurisprudence for future cases.

236. In 2008, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict filed an amicus curiae before the International Criminal Court arguing for a broad interpretation of the term "participate actively in hostilities" in article 8 (2) (b) (xxvi) of the Rome Statute to ensure justice and protection for all children associated with armed forces or armed groups. The Court in its judgment stated: "as regards the offence of using children under the age of 15 to participate actively in hostilities, the Chamber has concluded that this includes a wide range of activities, from those children on the front line (who participate directly) through the boys and girls who are involved in a myriad of roles that support the combatants [...] The decisive factor is whether the support provided by the child to the combatants exposed him or her to real danger as a potential target". The Court makes a distinction between "direct participation in hostilities", which determines combatant status under international humanitarian law and "actively participating in hostilities", which is the criteria used for the recruitment of children, holding that the latter is to be interpreted broadly. The Chamber accepted the approach adopted by the Pre-Trial Chamber and suggested by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict that "conscripting" and "enlistment" are both forms of "recruitment", in that they refer to the incorporation of a boy or a girl under the age of 15 into an armed group, whether coercively (conscription) or voluntarily (enlistment). These interpretations allow for greater protection for all children associated with armed forces or armed groups.

V. Recommendations

237. I welcome the signing of action plans by the Afghan National Security Forces in Afghanistan, the Armée nationale tchadienne in Chad, SPLA in South Sudan, and APRD and CPJP in the Central African Republic, as well as the progress made by parties in releasing children, and in addressing impunity for perpetrators through investigations and prosecutions. I strongly urge parties who have been listed in my annual reports for recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, sexual violence against children and/or attacks on schools and hospitals, and who have not concluded action plans to do so without delay, in conjunction with the respective country task forces on monitoring and reporting.

238. With an increase of action plans signed and under negotiation, I urge the donor community to address, as a matter of priority, the funding gaps for the implementation of action plans, including the monitoring of compliance with action plans, and sustainable, long-term reintegration needs of children formerly associated with armed forces or armed groups, including economic reintegration.

239. I encourage the Member States concerned to allow independent access to the United Nations for the purposes of monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children, and facilitate contact between the United Nations and non-State armed groups to ensure broad and effective protection for children, including for purposes of concluding action plans in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1539 (2004), 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009) and 1998 (2011), as well as undertaking specific commitments and measures to address all grave violations against children. Such contact will not prejudice the political or legal status of those non-State armed groups.

240. The Security Council is encouraged to put increasing pressure on those parties who are persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children and are listed in my annual reports, and to continue considering the application of targeted measures. These measures include the establishment of linkages with the Security Council sanction regimes; the development by the Council of other concrete measures, including specific consultations on persistent perpetrators; and the close cooperation with national and international courts to address persistent perpetrators who have not taken concrete steps to halt grave violations.

241. I urge the Security Council to ensure that specific provisions for the protection of children continue to be included in all relevant mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as well as political and peacebuilding missions, including by means of the deployment of child protection advisers in accordance with the Child Protection Policy of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. The need for child protection capacity in all situations mentioned in the present report, including in situations where there is no peacekeeping or political mission, should also be systematically addressed. Child protection concerns should be reflected in all United Nations planning instruments and processes, including budget provisions, technical assessment, review missions and reports to the Council.

242. Reports of child casualties in the course of military operations, including the use of explosive weapons, aerial bombardments and drones, continue to be of concern, and I remind all parties of their obligation under international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction and proportionality and the duty to protect children and prevent violations, to take all necessary precautions to avoid civilian casualties. I strongly urge them to ensure that they continuously review tactical directives for the better protection of children during the conduct of military operations, and that military and police personnel are sensitized to the protection of children's rights under national and international laws.

243. I welcome the universal ratification campaign of my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, UNICEF and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to encourage Member States that have not done so to sign and ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. As important mechanisms to strengthen national legal and policy frameworks for the protection of children, I call upon States parties to the Convention and its Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict to implement recommendations by the Committee on the Rights of the Child and to submit timely reports under the Optional Protocol.

VI. Lists in the annexes to the report

244. In the annexes to the present report, three new parties to conflict are listed for recruitment and use of children: SPLM-N, the Yemeni armed forces and the breakaway FAD. Two parties have been delisted after full implementation of the action plan: the UCPN-M and the Inya Bharathi faction. Three parties have been removed from the annexes as the armed groups no longer exist and no violations against children were reported during the reporting period: the Front nationaliste et intégrationnaliste (FNI), the Chadian armed opposition groups and the Movement of Popular Force for Rights and Democracy. One new party has been listed for killing and maiming of children: the Syrian Government forces. Five parties have been listed for attacks on schools and/or hospitals: the Taliban forces, FDLR, Al-Qaida in Iraq, the Islamic State of Iraq and the Syrian Government forces. It is important to note that for the present report parties can only be listed for incidents of attacks on schools and/or hospitals that took place after July 2011 in accordance with Security Council resolution 1998 (2011). Thirty-two parties to conflict have been in the annexes for at least five years and are therefore considered persistent perpetrators.

245. It should be noted that the annexes do not list countries as such. The purpose of the lists is to identify particular parties to conflict that are responsible for specific grave violations against children. In that regard, the names of countries are referred to only in order to indicate the locations or situations where offending parties are committing the violations.

15 May 2013

Original: English

General Assembly
Sixty-seventh session
Agenda item 65
Promotion and protection of the rights of children

Security Council
Sixty-eighth year

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2012, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2068 (2012), by which the Council requested me to continue to submit annual reports on the implementation of its resolutions and presidential statements on children and armed conflict.

2. The preparation of the report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in particular with the Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict, the country task forces on monitoring and reporting, peacekeeping and special political missions, United Nations country teams and non-governmental organizations. It also involved extensive consultations with relevant Member States and regional organizations.

3. In September 2012, Leila Zerrougui took office as my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. Building on the work of her predecessors, she will focus on furthering the implementation of the international legal framework and mechanisms in place for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, in particular by strengthening monitoring and reporting on all grave violations against children, increasing support for the implementation of action plans, enhancing cooperation with Member States and regional organizations to strengthen ownership of the agenda, ensuring rapid response in emerging situations to halt and prevent violations against children and developing strategies to put increased pressure on persistent perpetrators.

4. The present report begins by describing a number of emerging challenges regarding the impact of the evolving nature of armed conflict. It also explores some additional tools to enforce compliance by armed forces and armed groups with child rights obligations and provides an update on cooperation with regional organizations. The report then continues by providing information on grave violations committed against children and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent such grave violations.<sup>1</sup> Mali is a new situation covered in this reporting period, while Nepal and Sri Lanka are no longer included following the delisting of all parties within their territories in 2012. The report concludes with a series of recommendations to the Security Council.

5. In line with the resolutions of the Security Council on children and armed conflict, the present report includes in its annexes those parties that engage in the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children, the killing and maiming of children in contravention of international law, recurrent attacks on schools and/or hospitals or recurrent attacks or threats of attack against protected personnel.<sup>2</sup>

6. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), in identifying situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative is guided by the criteria for determining the existence of an armed conflict found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence. In the performance of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach to this issue, with a humanitarian emphasis, aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.<sup>3</sup>

7. References to cases and incidents in the present report refer to information that is gathered, vetted and verified for accuracy. In situations where the ability to obtain or independently verify information is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such.

II. Evolving nature of armed conflict and emerging challenges for child protection

8. In recent years, United Nations child protection actors have noted with concern that the evolving character and tactics of armed conflict are creating unprecedented threats to children. The absence of clear front lines and identifiable opponents, the increasing use of terror tactics by some armed groups and certain methods used by security forces have made children more vulnerable. Children are being used as suicide bombers and human shields, while schools continue to be attacked, affecting girls' education in particular, and to be used for military purposes. In addition, children are being held in security detention for alleged

association with armed groups. Furthermore, drone strikes have resulted in child casualties and have had a serious impact on the psychosocial health of children.

Military use of schools

9. In its resolution 1998 (2011), the Security Council expressed deep concern over attacks and threats of attacks against schools and educational personnel, calling upon all parties to cease such violations. The Council also urged parties to refrain from actions that impeded children's access to education, specifically requesting me to continue to monitor and report on the military use of schools in my annual report on children and armed conflict. Schools should serve as a safe haven for children and provide them with protection. The use of schools for military purposes puts children at risk of attack and hampers children's right to education. During the period under review, the United Nations observed that schools were used as military barracks, weapons storage facilities, command centres, detention and interrogation sites and firing and observation positions. Such use of schools not only results in reduced enrolment and high drop out rates, especially among girls, but also may lead to schools being considered legitimate targets for attack.

Detention of children by security forces

10. Another continuing trend in 2012 is the growing practice of States to arrest and detain children with or without criminal charges, be it as a perceived threat to national security, for alleged membership in an armed group or for acts committed while participating in hostilities. Children captured in the course of military operations are often held in detention for long periods, in poor conditions and, in certain cases, without access to counsel or judicial review to assess the lawfulness of their detention. When deprived of their liberty, children are particularly vulnerable to human rights violations, including degrading and inhumane treatment and, in some instances, torture. This observed pattern of ill-treatment of children in detention includes physical violence, sexual assault and threats of rape, prolonged stress positions, the use of painful instruments of restraint, solitary confinement, forced nudity and deprivation of food, water and basic facilities. In some cases, children are detained without charge and held in detention without being brought before a judge or being granted access to a lawyer. In others, children have been prosecuted for acts allegedly committed during their involvement with an armed group. Most courts in charge of such cases do not fully apply international juvenile justice standards. Military courts in particular are not appropriate for hearing cases involving children, given that they do not fully recognize the special status of juveniles in conflict with the law.

Impact on children of the use of drones in military operations

11. Over the past years, the United Nations has received an increasingly worrisome number of reports of child casualties in the course of military operations using weaponized unmanned aerial vehicles, or armed drones. I therefore reiterate my call upon relevant States to take all measures necessary to ensure that attacks involving drones comply with the principles of precaution, distinction and proportionality and to conduct transparent, prompt and effective investigations when child casualties may have occurred. In addition, the mixed use of armed and surveillance drones has resulted in permanent fear in some communities, affecting the psychosocial well-being of children and hindering the ability of such communities to protect their children. Reports further indicate that the use of drones has a wider impact on children, especially their access to education. For example, in some situations, both boys and girls have ceased attending school owing to the fear of drone strikes.

III. Enhancing compliance by armed forces and armed groups

12. Following the adoption of resolution 1998 (2011), an Arria-formula meeting with Security Council members, United Nations child protection actors and civil society partners was convened in July 2012 to discuss options for increasing pressure on persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children. During the meeting, three main strategies for ensuring compliance by parties with their international obligations on child rights were put forward: increased political pressure by the Council through full use of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict “toolkit” (see S/2006/724); strengthening the sanctions regime by expanding the criteria of sanctions committees and establishing a thematic or ad hoc sanctions committee for violations against children; and closer cooperation between the Council and the International Criminal Court in relation to crimes committed against children. In February 2013, the Permanent Mission of Liechtenstein to the United Nations and Watchlist on Children and Armed Conflict, a non-governmental organization, organized a follow-up workshop that resulted in a series of recommendations for addressing the issue of persistent perpetrators, focusing on the need for enhanced Security Council action and the efficient use of targeted measures (see S/2013/158).

13. In a continuing effort to find innovative and effective tools to address the growing number of persistent perpetrators, three additional tools are suggested for further consideration: support for national accountability mechanisms; inclusion of child protection issues in peace processes; and linkage between the United Nations human rights due diligence and children and armed conflict frameworks.

Accountability for violations against children

14. During the reporting period, investigations, prosecutions and trials of adult perpetrators of grave violations against children remained rare. Ending impunity for grave violations against children is a crucial element in enforcing compliance by parties with child rights obligations. The verdicts passed in 2012 by international courts against the Congolese warlord Thomas Lubanga and the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, in addition to the recent transfer of Bosco Ntaganda, represent significant progress and send a clear signal that child recruitment is a war crime and that perpetrators of violations against children will be held accountable. International justice complements national accountability mechanisms in cases in which national authorities are unwilling or unable to bring alleged perpetrators to justice. While a key challenge in conflict areas is weak political will, often a lack of capacity and resources severely cripples the ability of national authorities to prosecute child rights violations. In this context, the provision of capacity-building support by the United Nations to Governments may assist in reducing the accountability gap.

Inclusion of child protection issues in peace talks and peace agreements

15. Ceasefire agreements and peace processes have been strategic instruments with which to engage armed forces and armed groups on child protection concerns. Since the mandate of my Special Representative was created, peace negotiations in several country situations have demonstrated that peace talks can provide the context to engage in advocacy with parties to conflict regarding action plans on grave violations against children and other commitments for protection of children. They have also demonstrated that the protection and rights of children constitute a useful entry point for building confidence between parties. While it is better to maintain a separate negotiation track for child protection, parallel processes can mutually reinforce each other at various stages of engagement with parties.

16. Ensuring the inclusion of child protection provisions in peace agreements so as to, among others, regulate the release and reintegration of children formerly associated with armed forces or armed groups can provide a useful framework to deepen dialogue between parties and child protection partners. Other key elements in peace agreements are the establishment of 18 years as the minimum age for persons to join the armed forces, including armed groups that are being integrated; provisions ensuring family tracing and reunification; the need to address sexual abuse of children during and after conflict; the commitment to taking all measures to protect children from explosive remnants of war, including landmines; the principle that no amnesty should be granted for adult perpetrators of violations against children; and the principle that children associated with armed groups should be regarded as victims and not as perpetrators.

Human rights due diligence policy and the Security Council framework on children and armed conflict

17. In July 2011, the United Nations instituted a system-wide human rights due diligence policy to regulate the provision of United Nations support to non-United Nations security forces such as militaries and the police. This policy sets out the practical measures that all United Nations entities must take to ensure that any support provided to non-United Nations security forces is consistent with the responsibility of the Organization to respect and promote international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, including the rights of children affected by conflict. United Nations departments, agencies and programmes must assess the risks of the recipient entity committing human rights violations and put in place systems for monitoring compliance. The Security Council-mandated monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict, the listing of parties committing such violations and the action plans to stop such violations may serve as complementary platforms to the policy, including to monitor the behaviour of those security forces receiving United Nations support.

18. In various country situations, action plans to cease the recruitment and use of children provide a useful cooperation framework for the United Nations to assist Governments in building the capacity of national security forces to address child rights violations. Such action plans include provisions on the screening of troops to prevent underage recruitment, the appointment of military focal points and the establishment of mechanisms for monitoring compliance. This framework, mandated by the Security Council, could be used to enhance compliance by armed forces with international human rights standards, including under the human rights due diligence policy framework. What are known as “report cards”,<sup>4</sup> used to enforce compliance by individual commanders responsible for the behaviour of their troops, provide an instrument to ensure that no political gain is made by commanders in recruiting children and that a recipient of United Nations support is a legitimate partner for capacity-building support. Adequately applied, the human rights due diligence policy should contribute to strengthening the rule of law and a culture of protection of human rights, including child rights, prevention of violations and strengthened accountability.

IV. Cooperation with regional organizations on child protection in armed conflict

19. The growing involvement of regional and subregional organizations in conflict mediation, peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding missions highlights the importance of developing partnerships between the United Nations and those organizations to promote adequate protection for children affected by conflict in their respective mandates and work. The engagement of regional and subregional organizations in peace support and peace enforcement missions brings to the fore a wide range of child protection challenges, from ensuring that troops uphold international humanitarian law in the conduct of military operations to handling children associated with armed forces and armed groups. While procedures to avoid civilian casualties are generally in place, more efforts should be made to ensure that children are protected during such operations, including by reviewing and strengthening the rules of engagement and the conduct of investigations.

European Union

20. In 2003, dialogue between the European Union and my Special Representative led to the adoption of Union guidelines on children and armed conflict, in which the States members of the Union committed themselves to addressing the impact of armed conflict on children in non-Union settings, in the context of its human rights policy, its Common Foreign and Security Policy and its policies on humanitarian assistance and development cooperation. Dialogue is continuing on strengthening and implementing the guidelines, including through longer-term reintegration support for children formerly associated with armed forces and armed groups and the development of child-specific training for States members of the Union participating in crisis management operations. Due consideration should also be given to the list of perpetrators of violations against children included in the present report when providing bilateral or multilateral support to security or justice system reforms in third countries.

African Union

21. With the growing role of the African Union in peace support and peace enforcement missions, such as in Somalia, Mali and Central Africa, child protection challenges during military operations have also increased. In line with Security Council resolution 2033 (2012), on partnerships between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union, my Special Representative envisages stronger cooperation with the peace and security mandates of the African Union. In that regard, the upcoming deployments of child protection capacity to the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) and the African Union Peace Support Operations Division are seen as positive steps. The United Nations is also working with the African Union on developing procedures for the handover of children encountered during military operations. Discussions are also continuing on the alignment of national legislation of African States with international instruments on child rights, training for troop contributors to African Union and United Nations peacekeeping missions, capacity-building within the African Union Commission and the development of policy guidelines on children and armed conflict.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization

22. Over the past few years, the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan have jointly taken a number of practical measures that serve as a good basis for further integrating child protection considerations into North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) military training, mission planning and conduct of operations. This cooperation is creating a set of best practices currently being integrated into NATO predeployment training modules. Following a high-level briefing by my Special Representative to the North Atlantic Council in January 2012, NATO appointed its Assistant Secretary General for Operations as the high-level focal point for children and armed conflict, in charge of mainstreaming child protection in NATO training and operations. The issue of children affected by armed conflict was also highlighted in the declaration issued by the Heads of State and Government participating in the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Chicago, United States of America, on 20 May 2012. In November 2012, the NATO Military Committee adopted guidelines to integrate Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) and related resolutions into NATO military doctrine, training and operational planning and conduct, including quarterly reporting on children and armed conflict and the appointment of technical focal points.

V. Information on grave violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

23. In 2012, the country task force on monitoring and reporting in Afghanistan reported 66 cases of recruitment and use of boys, some as young as 8 years of age. Verification of such incidents remained a challenge, however, owing to the prevailing situation of conflict and resulting security constraints.

24. During the reporting period, 47 children were reportedly recruited and used by armed groups, notably the Taliban forces, including the Tora Bora Front, Jamat Sunat al-Dawa Salafia and the Latif Mansur Network, in addition to the Haqqani network and Hezb-e-Islami. Most were used to manufacture and plant improvised explosive devices and to transport provisions. At least 10 were recruited by armed groups to conduct suicide attacks. On 8 September 2012, a 16-year-old boy was killed while conducting a suicide attack at the entrance to the ISAF headquarters in Kabul. During the attack, seven children were killed and two others injured. There were also reports of cross-border recruitment of children by armed groups, including the Taliban forces, between Afghanistan and Pakistan. In several instances, children in detention reported that they had received military training in madrasas in the border areas of Afghanistan and Pakistan. In February and September 2012, a Taliban spokesperson rejected reports that the Taliban forces recruited, used or abducted children.

25. The official age requirements for enlistment notwithstanding, the Afghan National Police and the Afghan Local Police were reportedly responsible for 19 cases of underage recruitment in 2012. In May 2012, for example, a 14-year-old boy was observed in police uniform in a police station in the city of Kandahar, reportedly recruited by a relative. During the reporting period, the country task force engaged in consultations with the Government to assess the presence of children within the ranks of the national police and to prevent underage recruitment. Concern also remained over the informal use of children for security-related tasks by the Afghan national security forces, including the national police, the local police and the army.

26. The country task force documented 189 cases of boys detained in juvenile rehabilitation centres by the Afghan authorities in 2012. A further unknown number of children were held in detention facilities of the national police and the National Directorate of Security. The country task force expressed concern over continuing reports of ill-treatment in those detention facilities, the public display of child detainees in national media and the lack of documentation and follow-up on the release of those children. The exact number of children held in the detention facilities of the international military forces remained unknown. In July 2012, however, the country task force received information that at least 90 children were being held in such a detention facility in Parwan. On 25 March 2013, the facility was transferred to the Afghan authorities. My Special Representative was also informed by the legal counsel of Hamidullah Khan, a Pakistani male, that he had been arrested in August 2008, aged 14 years, by forces of the United States near the Afghanistan-Pakistan border and had been detained at Bagram Air Force Base without formal charge, apparently for security reasons, for more than four years. The United Nations has no access or additional information.

27. The country task force reported 18 incidents of abduction involving 67 boys. Verified information attributed the cases to the Taliban, the local police and other pro-Government militias. Children were abducted for the purposes of recruitment, sexual abuse and also intimidation in cases in which families worked or were perceived to be working for the Government or the international military forces. In one case, on 29 August 2012, the Taliban abducted and beheaded a 12-year-old boy in Kandahar Province in retaliation against his brother, an officer in the local police.

28. The country task force documented 1,304 conflict-related child casualties. Of those casualties, 283 cases of killing of children and 507 cases of injuring were attributed to armed groups, including Taliban forces. A total of 90 cases of killing of children and 82 cases of injuring were attributed to pro-Government forces, including the Afghan national security forces and the international military forces. The remaining cases, in which 116 children were killed and 226 injured, related to explosive remnants of war, crossfire incidents and cross-border shelling.

29. The vast majority of the incidents resulted from attacks with improvised explosive devices (399 child casualties) and suicide attacks, including by child suicide bombers (110 child casualties). Children were also victims of explosive weapons in populated areas, including mortar attacks, shelling and shooting between pro-Government forces and various armed groups (397 child casualties), explosive remnants of war (162 child casualties) and air strikes by the international military forces (74 child casualties). Some of the incidents were acknowledged by ISAF. Furthermore, artillery and mortar shelling from across the Afghanistan-Pakistan border killed at least 1 child and injured 25 others.

30. The country task force received isolated reports of sexual violence against girls and boys by members of armed groups, the Afghan national security forces and the international military forces. While only five cases were reported during the reporting period, sexual violence against children continued to be underreported owing to stigmatization and fear of retaliation. Some boys held in detention on charges relating to national security also reported sexual violence or threats of sexual violence upon arrest by the Afghan national security forces or in detention. At least one of those cases related to the practice of bachah-bazi (sexual abuse of boys by men in a position of power). In this regard, it should be noted that a joint team, comprising the Ministry of the Interior and the National Directorate of Security, was established to detect and investigate such incidents.

31. The country task force documented 167 incidents affecting education, of which 49 per cent were attributed to armed groups, including Taliban forces, 25 per cent to pro-Government forces and 26 per cent to unidentified perpetrators. Armed groups conducted targeted attacks against schools, including using improvised explosive devices and suicide attacks, burned schools and abducted and killed education personnel. Armed groups were also responsible for acts of intimidation, threats against teachers and pupils and the forced closure of schools. In 2012, the Taliban issued five statements in which it denied attacking schools and announced that it would set up a commission for education. The Taliban also issued a letter in which it opposed girls' education and threatened girls who continued to attend school, however. Throughout the reporting period, the country task force verified 10 cases of use of schools for military purposes, including 3 by armed groups and 7 by pro-Government forces. It received reports of a further 30 incidents of attacks against health facilities and health personnel, mostly carried out by armed groups. Such cases include abduction of medical personnel and attacks on medical facilities with improvised explosive devices.

32. The country task force verified 33 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, largely attributed to armed groups, including the Taliban. In some areas, however, armed groups also facilitated the provision of lifesaving health and other emergency services, especially in areas not under the Government's control.

33. In March 2012, the Government submitted its first progress report detailing the steps taken towards implementation of the action plan on underage recruitment by the national security forces, which it had signed with the United Nations in January 2011. In particular, the Ministry of the Interior reported the establishment of a monthly monitoring and reporting system, public campaigns on birth registration and training of Afghan national security forces personnel on age assessment procedures. It also provided information on training on child rights and prevention of underage recruitment conducted in seven Afghan national police zones, in addition to awareness-raising on gender-based violence and underage recruitment in 77 schools and 24 mosques. In parallel, the Ministry pursued efforts to prevent the falsification of national identity cards through the development of a biometric identity card system. Child centres established within national police recruitment centres in Ghor, Badghis, Herat and Farah Provinces documented attempts to enlist children into the national police and the army. Consequently, 122 underage recruits were rejected in 2012. Those encouraging measures notwithstanding, sustained engagement by both the United Nations and the Government is needed to build on the momentum created by the signature of the action plan.

34. The prevailing security situation in Afghanistan and fragmentation of armed groups continued to impede dialogue on the recruitment of children in 2012. The interlinkages between armed groups in Afghanistan made identification of perpetrators and their accountability for violations against children a challenge. Dialogue at the community level, however, continued to prove partially successful, especially with regard to the continuation of vaccination campaigns and the reopening of schools in some parts of the country.

Central African Republic

35. The reporting period saw an overall decrease in the occurrence of grave violations against children. Hostilities resumed in December 2012 between the Government and the Séléka coalition,<sup>5</sup> however, and, limited access notwithstanding, the United Nations received alarming reports continuing into 2013 of recruitment and use of children by armed groups and pro-Government militias, killing of children associated with those groups in the course of military operations and sexual violence against children by armed groups. Although these developments do not fall within the reporting period, the progress achieved and the violations committed in 2012 need to be placed against the backdrop of the recent deterioration of the security situation.

36. During the reporting period, the country task force documented 41 cases of recruitment of children, of which 23 occurred in Haut-Mbomou and Mbomou prefectures, 14 in Haute-Kotto prefecture, 2 in Nana Grébizi prefecture and 2 in Bamingui-Bangoran prefecture. The Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) appeared to be responsible for most of the cases, closely followed by the Séléka coalition. In December 2012, the country task force verified 11 cases of rerecruitment of boys by the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix fondamentale (CPJP fondamentale) and the Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR), both part of the Séléka coalition, in Haute-Kotto and Bamingui-Bangoran prefectures. Eight of those children had earlier been associated with UFDR and three with CPJP and all had been separated from them by child protection actors earlier in 2012. On 24 December 2012, the Central African National Police broke into a reception centre in Bangui and detained 64 children formerly associated with CPJP and UFDR, alleging that they were rebels. The children were paraded through Bangui market and questioned by the national police. Following high-level advocacy by the United Nations, they were eventually released. Owing to security constraints, the country task force was unable to verify the presence of children in the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice in Birao (Vakaga prefecture) and in the Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain in Kabo (Nana Grébizi prefecture).

37. During the reporting period, the country task force documented 10 cases of killing of children, as opposed to 88 in 2011. This decrease appeared to be linked to the cessation of hostilities between CPJP and UFDR in 2012. During armed confrontations on 23 January 2012 between the Central African and Chadian armed forces on the one hand, and the Front patriotique pour le redressement (FPR)<sup>6</sup> on the other, four children were killed. Overall, the total number of child casualties in 2012 is estimated to be higher, given that the country task force was unable to verify incidents that occurred during the crisis of December 2012 owing to security constraints.

38. Incidents of sexual violence remained a concern throughout 2012. The country task force verified 22 cases, of which 13 were perpetrated by members of FPR, who raped several girls between 9 and 17 years of age in the villages of Damara and Ngoukpe (Ombella-Mpoko prefecture). The country task force also received reports of rape of girls in Bambari, Bria, Ndele and Bangui by the Séléka coalition in December 2012. Between 2 and 5 February 2012, members of the Chadian army in Ndele raped three 15-year-old girls and a 17-year-old girl during their return to Chad after providing support to the offensive by the Central African armed forces against FPR. Although the cases were reported to the Governments of the Central African Republic and Chad, no action has been taken to date.

39. The number of attacks on schools and hospitals decreased, with 6 incidents recorded in 2012, compared with 12 in 2011. In January 2012, for example, the school in Ouadango (Nana Grébizi prefecture) was destroyed when a Chadian army helicopter landed on it during a military operation against FPR. Two other schools were used by CPJP in Yangoundrounja (Haute-Kotto prefecture) and Miamani (Bamingui-Bangoran prefecture) as military outposts. Three health centres in Nana Grébizi, Haute-Kotto and Mbomou prefectures were used by CPJP and medical equipment there was looted. CPJP also continued to use the health centre in Aigbando (Haute-Kotto prefecture), affecting the access to health services of more than 1,000 children.

40. Humanitarian access was severely hampered, especially in Bamingui-Bangoran, Basse Kotto, Ouham, Haute-Kotto, Mbomou, Haut-Mbomou and Vakaga prefectures, owing to the presence of armed groups in those regions. During the reporting period, the country task force recorded an increase in attacks by CPJP, UFDR and the Séléka coalition against humanitarian organizations, with 18 incidents in Bamingui-Bangoran and Haute-Kotto prefectures between October and December 2012. On 15 November 2012, for example, Chadian elements of the tripartite force composed of military units from the Central African Republic, Chad and the Sudan broke into a non-governmental organization compound in Birao (Vakaga prefecture) and assaulted a humanitarian worker. It is estimated that some 395,200 children were deprived of humanitarian assistance in the affected areas owing to security risks.

41. During the reporting period, CPJP failed to honour its commitment to implement the action plan to end the recruitment and use of children signed by its leadership in November 2011. The splintering of CPJP and a lack of internal cohesion complicated implementation. Children continued to be recruited into the ranks of CPJP and commanders opposed the release of children. During a verification mission by the United Nations in November 2012, 30 children who had been identified by the CPJP leadership for release were prevented from leaving the group. On a separate occasion, on 7 December 2012, CPJP elements in Aigbandou prevented the United Nations from separating two girls, aged 14 and 17 years, who had been forcibly recruited by CPJP elements.

42. The implementation of the action plan signed with the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la République et la démocratie (APRD) was delayed owing to the arrest of the APRD leadership on 6 January 2012. APRD had signed an action plan in October 2011 and released and reintegrated some 1,300 children in 2009 and 2010. During the period under review, APRD was dismantled and all its elements demobilized.

43. Although the release of children from the ranks of UFDR had begun in 2012, further progress was limited. A first commitment to release all children remaining in its ranks had been signed by UFDR with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in 2007. In November 2011, UFDR reiterated that commitment and allowed the United Nations to verify the presence of children remaining in its ranks. A formal action plan has yet to be signed. Difficulties in gaining access to CPJP and UFDR in remote areas of Vakaga and Haute-Kotto prefectures also hindered the verification and separation of children.

44. During the reporting period, 345 children (222 boys and 123 girls) were separated from CPJP (157) in Bamingui-Bangoran, Haute-Kotto and Vakaga prefectures; UFDR (170) in Haute-Kotto and Bamingui-Bangoran prefectures; and escaped from LRA (18) in Haut-Mbomou and Mbomou prefectures. In addition, the United Nations estimates that up to 35 children associated with FPR were repatriated to Chad following the dismantling of that armed group in September 2012.

Chad

45. Notwithstanding progress in the implementation of the action plan and although the national army of Chad did not recruit children as a matter of policy, the country task force verified 34 cases of recruitment of children by the army during the reporting period. In June 2012, a joint verification mission by the Government and the United Nations identified 24 children in an army training centre. An additional 10 cases were verified by the head of the army in the Moussoro training centre in September 2012 in the framework of the action plan. All 34 children appeared to have been enlisted in the context of a recruitment drive between February and March 2012, during which the army gained 8,000 new recruits.

46. Following the repatriation of 362 former FPR combatants from the Central African Republic, 26 children between 11 and 17 years of age were identified and informally released on 12 October 2012 during a joint mission by the United Nations and the Ministry of Social Welfare. An additional 23 children were identified by the International Committee of the Red Cross on 23 October 2012. There were no reports of recruitment and use of children by the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) during the reporting period. In March 2012, the country task force received allegations of recruitment of displaced children by unidentified armed elements in Assoungba and Kemititi. These cases are yet to be verified.

47. With regard to the implementation of the action plan signed between the Government and the United Nations in June 2011, my Special Representative intensified dialogue with the Government to accelerate the implementation process. In February 2012, the Government appointed technical focal points in the Ministry of Defence and the Ministry of Social Welfare and, in May 2012, the Prime Minister appointed his legal adviser as a high-level focal point to support implementation. In addition, the army reiterated its commitment to facilitating access to the United Nations for verification of military sites and issued a series of military directives prohibiting underage recruitment, calling upon the Chief of Staff of the army, the Director General of the National Gendarmerie and the Director General of the Garde nationale et nomade to ensure their full and swift implementation.

48. Those positive steps notwithstanding, further measures are needed to strengthen the screening mechanisms for recruitment by the army and procedures need to be finalized to prevent the enlistment of children. While the issuance of military directives concerning the prohibition of underage recruitment is consistent with the action plan, such instructions need to clearly spell out sanctions for breaches, as set out in the action plan. Furthermore, no investigations into allegations of recruitment and use of children were undertaken, nor was disciplinary action taken against recruiters.

49. The actions taken by the Government for the release, temporary care and reunification of separated children, while encouraging, are not yet in line with the commitments made in the action plan. For example, 18 of the 24 children identified in Mongo were not part of a separation process involving the United Nations and therefore could not benefit from reintegration assistance. Similarly, the 10 children identified in the Moussoro training centre were released and reunited with their families in N'Djamena without receiving reintegration support.

Côte d'Ivoire

50. Since the end of the political crisis in Côte d'Ivoire in May 2011, the United Nations has observed a decrease in the number of grave violations against children, with 65 cases documented in 2012, as opposed to 336 in 2011. Of those 65 cases, 34 were attributed to the Republican Forces of Côte d'Ivoire and 31 to armed elements, consisting of pro-Gbagbo elements and other militia groups operating along the border.

51. The United Nations verified seven cases of recruitment and use of children, all attributed to the national armed forces, during the reporting period. In April 2012, for example, it verified the presence of four children between 14 and 16 years of age at army checkpoints in the towns of Mahapleu, Tai and Duekuoe. In October 2012, it also documented three cases of boys manning an army checkpoint near San Pedro. The boys had been recruited by the army in 2011, when they were 17 years of age.

52. The United Nations documented 9 cases of killing and 21 cases of maiming of children in 2012. Of those cases, 14 were a result of unexploded ordnance, mostly along the border with Liberia, and occurred during or following attacks carried out by unidentified armed groups operating in those areas. Four cases of killing of children were attributed to an attack perpetrated by armed youth groups in the Nahibly camp for internally displaced persons in Duekoue in July 2012. In addition, a child was killed during an operation by the national armed forces in Arrah and another during an attack by an unidentified armed group in Paha-Tabou.

53. During the reporting period, the United Nations registered 21 cases of conflict-related sexual violence against children, of which 9 were perpetrated by the national armed forces and 12 by unidentified armed elements. Such incidents were particularly prevalent in the west of Côte d'Ivoire, where armed elements continued to attack civilians, in particular women and girls, at checkpoints and during patrols.

54. The number of attacks against schools and hospitals significantly decreased during the reporting period, with 7 verified cases in 2012, as opposed to 477 in 2011. The United Nations verified that the national armed forces used a health centre, a primary school and a children's community education centre in Grabou. In addition, they erected checkpoints in the vicinity of four primary schools located in Touba, Ziriglo, Tao-Zeo and Keibly, putting children at risk of attack by armed elements.

55. A national child protection policy was finalized in 2012 and is pending adoption by the Government. On 27 December 2012, the Chief of Staff of the national armed forces designated a child protection focal point and committed himself to developing an operational workplan to work with the United Nations to prevent violations against children, in particular recruitment and use of children. A national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration policy for former combatants was adopted in August 2012, in which it was stated that efforts had been made to discharge and reintegrate children. That commitment has not yet translated into a clear implementation strategy, however. I encourage the Government to develop such a strategy to ensure the full reintegration of any children identified in the course of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

56. The resurgence of conflict in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo following the creation of the Mouvement du 23 mars (M23) in April 2012 resulted in a marked increase in the number of grave violations against children. The M23 offensive stemmed from the defection of a significant number of commanding officers of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, affecting the capacity of the Congolese security forces. The vacuum left by those troops contributed to an overall climate of lawlessness and insecurity characterized by widespread, systematic and violent attacks against civilians by a variety of armed groups, including the fragmented constellation of self-defence militias commonly known as Raïa Mutomboki, which, together with the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR), was responsible for reciprocal retaliatory attacks.

57. In 2012, 578 children, including 26 girls, were recruited into armed forces and armed groups. The main perpetrators were Mai Mai groups (263), including the Mai Mai groups under the command of "Colonel Tawimbi" operating in the area of Uvira (116), the Mai Mai groups under the command of "General Lafontaine" and former Patriotes résistants congolais (PARECO) elements (29), the Mai Mai Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS) of “Colonel Janvier” (21) and other Mai Mai groups. Other perpetrators included FDLR (83), M23 (65), the Front de résistance patriotique en Ituri/Front populaire pour la justice au Congo (FRPI/FPJC) (52) and LRA (31). Some 80 per cent of the recruitment cases in 2012 took place in North Kivu and South Kivu.

58. The country task force documented 20 cases of recruitment and use of children by the national armed forces in 2012, including nine boys who were integrated into the national armed forces from Mai Mai groups or recruited by former Congrès national pour la défense du peuple elements who later defected to join the M23 offensive. In addition, 47 boys were arrested and detained by the Congolese security forces for alleged association with armed groups, but were subsequently released after strong advocacy by the United Nations. Most of the arrests took place in North Kivu, mainly involving boys formerly associated with M23. The children were detained by the national armed forces for up to seven months, with some reporting ill-treatment in detention.

59. M23 was responsible for systematic recruitment and use of children. A total of 65 boys between 13 and 17 years of age, including 25 who claimed to be Rwandan, escaped or surrendered from M23 between April and December 2012. A total of 21 of those boys, including 18 claiming to be Rwandan and 3 Congolese, said that they had been recruited on Rwandan territory to fight in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. While initially used as porters, most ended up on the battlefield as combatants or escorts of commanders. Testimonies from former M23 combatants suggested that hundreds of children remained in M23. They also reported a high number of child casualties during clashes with the national armed forces and killing, maiming and ill-treatment of young recruits within M23.

60. As a direct result of conflict-related violence, 154 children (including 86 boys and 64 girls) were killed and 113 (including 76 boys and 35 girls) injured in 2012. Between April and September 2012, Raïa Mutomboki killed and maimed children in their houses with machetes during a series of violent attacks against the civilian population in Masisi territory, North Kivu. A coalition composed of FDLR and Nyatura opposing Raïa Mutomboki was reportedly responsible for 51 child casualties. The national armed forces were responsible for 30 child casualties. During clashes with M23 on 28 October in Sake, North Kivu, five children were injured and two killed by mortars fired by the national armed forces. Other perpetrators were Mai Mai groups (30 casualties), M23 (7 casualties), the Congolese National Police (6 casualties) and LRA (2 casualties).

61. During the reporting period, 185 girls, most of whom were between 15 and 17 years of age, were subjected to rape or other forms of sexual violence. A total of 11 were under 10 years of age. More than half of the cases were perpetrated in the Kivus. The national armed forces were responsible for 102 cases, including an incident of mass rape. In November 2012, national armed forces elements raped more than 100 female victims, including at least 24 girls, in Minova, South Kivu, as they retreated following the fall of Goma to M23. In another mass rape incident in June 2012, members of Mai Mai Simba raped 28 girls between 10 and 17 years of age in Epulu, Orientale Province. A total of 81 other cases of sexual violence against children were recorded in Orientale Province, mainly perpetrated by Mai Mai elements (50, including 42 by Mai Mai Simba), FRPI (17) and FDLR (11).

62. In 2012, the country task force documented 33 incidents affecting schools (18) and hospitals (15). Most took place in North Kivu (16), South Kivu (11) and Orientale Province (6). Six schools were looted or damaged in arson attacks by armed groups. The national armed forces were responsible for the military use of 11 schools and FDLR for 1 school. In addition, 11 health providers were targeted during the reporting period: 6 in North Kivu, 3 in South Kivu and 2 in Orientale Province. The national armed forces were reportedly responsible for five incidents of looting of medical facilities, while FDLR reportedly pillaged a health centre and abducted a nurse who had denounced a rape perpetrated by FDLR elements. In two separate incidents in July and October 2012, LRA looted two health centres in Orientale Province.

63. During the reporting period, the country task force documented 256 incidents of denial of humanitarian access. North Kivu was the most affected, with a total of 123 cases, mainly in and around Goma, Masisi and Rutshuru territories as a result of clashes between M23 and the national armed forces. In South Kivu, 74 incidents were reported, mostly in and around Bukavu, Fizi and Shabunda. Nine other incidents occurred in Orientale Province. Although in most cases the perpetrators could not be identified, 38 cases were attributed to armed groups, including FDLR, Mai Mai groups and Raïa Mutomboki. Another 26 incidents were attributed to the Congolese security forces.

64. On 4 October 2012, the Government and the United Nations signed an action plan to halt and prevent the recruitment and use of children, in addition to sexual violence against children, by the national armed forces and security forces. The Government and the United Nations committed themselves to working through a joint technical working group in four areas: the separation and protection of children associated with armed forces and groups; response to child victims; prevention of grave violations against children; and efforts to combat impunity for perpetrators. Progress has been made in the facilitation of unimpeded access for the United Nations to national armed forces battalions and detention centres, resulting in the release of children associated with armed forces and armed groups, in addition to the joint screening of new recruits. This exercise prevented 269 children from joining the national armed forces in 2012. The integration of armed groups into the national armed forces continued to represent a useful entry point for the release of children. In October 2012, for example, 49 children were separated during a partial integration of Nyatura elements into the national armed forces in North Kivu.

65. In 2012, 1,497 children (1,334 boys and 163 girls) were separated or escaped from armed forces and armed groups. Most (1,453) were Congolese, with a further 40 Rwandans, 2 Ugandans (associated with the Allied Democratic Forces/National Army for the Liberation of Uganda), 1 South Sudanese and 1 Central African (both associated with LRA). Children escaped or were released from M23 (65 boys), Mai Mai groups (458 boys and 28 girls), LRA (121 boys and 116 girls), FDLR (211 boys and 1 girl), FRPI (121 boys and 10 girls), the national armed forces (96 boys and 5 girls), Nyatura (70 boys) and Raïa Mutomboki (48 boys). In 2012, 5,584 children associated with armed forces and armed groups received support from the United Nations, as did 5,022 child victims of sexual violence.

66. While the efforts of the Government to cease underage recruitment are commendable, the lack of accountability for perpetrators of grave violations against children remains of concern. More has to be done to ensure that adult perpetrators are duly prosecuted. Of the 185 cases of rape and sexual violence against children by government security forces documented in 2012, only 40 alleged perpetrators were arrested and 4 sentenced. A further 12 commanders involved in the Minova mass rape incident were removed from their posts and handed over to justice.

Iraq

67. In 2012, the country task force reported 355 incidents of grave violations against children. The most affected governorates were Baghdad, Kirkuk, Ninewa, Diyala, Anbar and Salahaddin. Islamic State of Iraq/Al-Qaida in Iraq (ISI/AQ-I)<sup>7</sup> was responsible for most of the incidents.

68. During the reporting period, the country task force reported 178 incidents of killing and maiming of children, of which 123 were verified. A total of 412 child casualties were recorded, including the killing of 102 children (63 boys and 39 girls) and the injuring of 310 (176 boys and 134 girls) in waves of coordinated attacks throughout the country, mainly using improvised explosive devices. On 3 July 2012, in the Diwaniya district of Qadissiya governorate, an attack with an improvised explosive device claimed by ISI/AQ-I killed 12 boys and 4 girls and injured 16 boys and 6 girls.

69. The country task force also received reports of child recruitment by ISI/AQ-I, mostly in Ninewa (in particular in Mosul) and Salahaddin governorates. In all verified cases, the children were boys between 14 and 17 years of age who were used for support functions such as transporting improvised explosive devices, acting as lookouts and planting explosives. On 17 May 2012, in the Mosul district of Ninewa governorate, the Iraqi security forces killed two boys aged 16 and 17 years while they were reportedly planting a roadside bomb, a technique used by ISI/AQ-I.

70. Allegations were documented in Ninewa, Salahaddin and Anbar governorates on the reported association of children with the Awakening Councils. These reports indicated that boys were reportedly manning checkpoints after having been locally recruited using false identification documents.

71. As at December 2012, 302 children, including 13 girls, were held in detention facilities and had been indicted or convicted on terrorism-related charges under article 4 of the Anti-Terrorism Act (2005). These children, on average between 15 and 17 years of age, had been in detention for periods ranging from two months to more than three years.

72. The prevailing security situation also affected schools and hospitals. During the reporting period, education and health facilities were damaged by improvised explosive devices and small arms fire, and personnel were targeted. The country task force documented 42 incidents in Baghdad, Babil, Kirkuk, Ninewa, Salahaddin and Anbar governorates, of which 15 attacks against schools and 8 attacks against medical facilities were verified. In addition, 19 education staff and 17 medical personnel were killed or injured in 2012. In an incident on 24 September 2012 in Anbar governorate, a car bomb detonated in front of Al-Kifah Primary School on the first day of school, killing four girls and a boy and injuring six other children.

73. In 2012, the country task force also documented 14 cases of abduction of children, involving seven boys and seven girls. Although the motives for most of these incidents remained unclear, a strong nexus between the abduction of children and the funding of non-State armed groups in Iraq was observed. ISI/AQ-I was allegedly responsible for most of the incidents. Although most cases related to funding the activities of these armed groups, the abduction of a boy in Mosul in March 2012 was allegedly linked to forced recruitment into Birds of Paradise, the AQ-I youth wing.

74. The country task force further verified three incidents of denial of humanitarian access during the reporting period. In an incident on 13 June 2012, 27 civilians were killed and dozens of others injured when a transport truck used for the delivery of humanitarian supplies exploded in a camp for internally displaced persons near Baghdad. No group claimed responsibility for the attack.

75. High-level engagement with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 2011 notwithstanding, a formal government mechanism on grave violations against children is yet to be established. I encourage the Government to establish such an interministerial committee to discuss and follow up on child protection concerns with the country task force.

Lebanon

76. The United Nations reported incidents of grave violations against children resulting from clashes between armed groups in Lebanon and hostilities along its borders. During the reporting period, the level and scale of armed violence affecting children increased, in particular as a result of the impact of the Syrian conflict on Lebanon. The United Nations documented 24 violations against children, most of which involved killing and maiming, compared with 11 in 2011. Most affected were the border areas between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic in the north and the Bekaa valley, in addition to the area in and around Tripoli.

77. The United Nations received reports on the participation of children in armed clashes between opposing political groups in Lebanon. In June 2012, for example, four boys between 15 and 17 years of age were arrested for their involvement in a protest against the national armed forces, following the harassment of a resident of the Nahr el-Bared Palestinian camp in Tripoli. The United Nations also received allegations of Syrian refugee children in border areas of Lebanon being pressured into joining armed groups in the Syrian Arab Republic. Anecdotal information regarding possible association of children with armed militias, in particular in and around Tripoli, was also prevalent.

78. The increasing number of Syrian refugees crossing into Lebanon created growing threats of exposure of children to landmines and unexploded ordnance. Cross-border shelling and armed clashes inside Lebanon posed new risks to children. Such incidents resulted in the killing of five boys and a girl between 8 months and 15 years of age and the maiming of two girls and three boys between 11 and 15 years of age, mostly in Tripoli and Wadi Khalid, northern Lebanon.

79. In March 2012, armed clashes between rival Palestinian factions in front of a school in the Ein el-Hillweh Palestinian camp, Sidon district, during school hours led to the disruption of schooling. During the incident, children between 6 and 10 years of age were evacuated from the school. On various occasions in July, August, November and December 2012, schooling was further disrupted in Beddawi Palestinian camp owing to armed clashes in the areas of Bab al-Tabbaneh and Jabal Mohsen in Tripoli.

Libya

80. In 2012, children in Libya remained affected by tensions that escalated into armed confrontations, mainly in Bani Walid, Kufra, Sirte, Zliten and Sabha, in some instances involving the use of heavy weapons. It should be noted that access to conflict areas and affected populations remained extremely limited throughout the reporting period and that security-related travel restrictions by the United Nations continued to limit the gathering of information. Increased control by the Government notwithstanding, many armed brigades continued to display a lack of discipline and command structure, which led in some instances to grave violations against children.

81. The United Nations received allegations of use of children by armed brigades and observed children carrying weapons on several occasions. During the conflict in Kufra in February 2012, for example, children were seen carrying weapons, manning checkpoints and securing buildings with both the Zwaya and Tabu brigades. In June 2012, the United Nations observed boys between 16 and 18 years of age carrying weapons in Kufra.

82. Child casualties were reported as a result of armed confrontations among brigades, and between brigades and the Libyan army or the Libya Shield brigade (an auxiliary unit of the Libyan army). In accordance with the information received from the United Nations and its partners, at least 12 children (8 boys and 4 girls) were killed and 33 (29 boys and 4 girls) injured in crossfire or through the use of heavy weaponry. In view of the lack of access to affected areas and the limited disaggregated data, it is likely that the number of child casualties remains underreported. In May and June 2012, the Kufra General Hospital registered 10 child casualties, including 2 children killed during armed confrontations between the Zwaya and Tabu brigades. Incidents relating to explosive remnants of war also led to 22 child casualties, mainly in Misrata, Zintan, Kufra, Sirte and Gharyan.

83. According to the Ministry of Education, five schools in Benghazi were attacked while being used as polling stations. On 6 July 2012, one school used for the elections was targeted by small arms fire and improvised explosive devices. On 28 July 2012, an improvised explosive device was dismantled at a school in Abdelrwak, Buhdeima area, which was being used as a polling station. Schools were also attacked when used as shelters for internally displaced persons. On 24 June 2012, in the Zwaya area of Kufra, a school sheltering 20 internally displaced persons was hit by a rocket from the Tabu area, injuring at least five children.

84. During the reporting period, armed confrontations also resulted in damage to health facilities. Sabha Central Hospital was attacked in April 2012 during the fighting between Tabu brigades and an Arab brigade. In October 2012, a hospital in Bani Walid was severely damaged and its equipment destroyed or looted by armed brigades, including the Libya Shield, the Misrata Shield and the 28 May brigades, during confrontations with the social council of Warfalla tribes. In view of the limited security of the medical facilities in Sabha at the time of the fighting in September 2012, combatants carried weapons inside the health facilities. On 24 March 2012, two individuals, including a nurse, were shot inside the hospital. On 11 September 2012, fighting between Alqmazfah Algdadfa tribesmen and the Supreme Security Committee, which is under control of the Ministry of the Interior, took place inside the Sabha medical centre while patients were being treated. In addition, the United Nations received allegations of threats against medical personnel. On 21 September 2012, medical staff in Sabha protested against the deterioration of the security situation in the hospital, claiming that several staff had been attacked and others threatened.

85. The United Nations recorded several cases of hampering of access for humanitarian assistance in conflict-affected areas, including through abduction, attacks or threats against humanitarian personnel, in Kufra, Sabha, Benghazi and Misrata.

Lord's Resistance Army in the Central African region (Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, South Sudan and Uganda)

86. The United Nations continued to receive reports on grave violations against children by LRA in the Central African region throughout 2012. Whereas 22 incidents were reported in the Central African Republic and 71 incidents in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, no incidents were reported in South Sudan in 2012. Even though no incidents have been reported in Uganda since 2006, Ugandan troops continued to pursue LRA. These cases are, however, merely indicative of the actual scope of grave violations against children, given that insecurity and poor infrastructure continued to hamper the reporting of violations. With 416,000 internally displaced persons and 26,000 refugees triggered by LRA, the armed group remained a serious threat to civilians in the region.

87. In the Central African Republic, 23 children were reportedly recruited by LRA in the south-east of the country. During an LRA attack at a mining site in the town of Nzako, Haute-Kotto prefecture, at least six people were killed, including several children. Owing to limited access, however, the exact number of child victims could not be verified.

88. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 58 children (23 girls and 35 boys between 2 and 17 years of age) were abducted by LRA in 2012. In contrast to previous years, they were used mainly as porters to carry looted goods, rather than to participate in attacks. Children continued to be victims of LRA attacks, however. In two separate LRA attacks, a girl and a boy were killed and a girl and three boys injured in Haut Uélé prefecture between January and May 2012. A case in which a girl was raped by LRA was documented in May 2012, while two other girls who escaped from the group in 2012 reported having been raped while in captivity. In total, 41 children (19 girls and 22 boys) escaped or were released from LRA during the reporting period. Between January and October 2012, LRA also attacked two health centres and three schools.

89. In South Sudan, no attacks on or grave violations against children by LRA were reported in 2012. LRA remained a threat to civilians, however, operating from bases inside the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic. Between January and December 2012, family tracing and reunification efforts were undertaken for 48 children (34 girls and 14 boys) who were rescued from LRA.

90. Uganda continued to play a major role in combating LRA with the participation of 2,000 troops in the Regional Task Force set up by the African Union for that purpose. To implement its standard operating procedures on the repatriation and handover of children separated from LRA, as agreed with the United Nations in June 2011, the army received implementation training in Uganda in May and June 2012. The armed forces of the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and South Sudan have yet to adopt standard operating procedures for the handover of children who escape from LRA.

Mali

91. The serious deterioration of the security situation in Mali in 2012 was characterized by a large number of grave violations against children by various armed groups. At different points in time, armed groups active in northern Mali formed shifting coalitions, involving joint military operations and co-location of troops. On the basis of the limited information available, membership of these armed groups has been extremely fluid, which presents a challenge when attempting to establish command responsibility for the violations against children reported throughout 2012. Although the prevailing situation of insecurity severely limited access, the United Nations received numerous reports that armed groups, including the Mouvement national de liberation de l'Azawad (MNLA), the Mouvement pour l'unicité et le jihad en Afrique de l'Ouest (MUJAO), Ansar Dine and Al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), were responsible for extensive recruitment and use of children. Initial information indicated that hundreds of children, mainly boys between 12 and 15 years of age, were enlisted during the reporting period. Children were used by the groups to man checkpoints and conduct patrols. Shifting alliances among armed groups resulted in the rerecruitment of children by different groups. As MNLA progressively lost control over northern Mali to Ansar Dine and MUJAO, some children shifted their loyalty to Ansar Dine, in particular those belonging to the Kidal-based group of Iyad Ag Ghali.

92. Reports of abduction and forced recruitment of children notwithstanding, many children allegedly joined armed groups for reasons of poverty or ethnic affiliation. Talibé children, entrusted by their parents to marabouts, or religious teachers, for Islamic instruction, were particularly vulnerable to recruitment, in addition to children belonging to the Tuareg, Arab, Peuhl and Songhai ethnic groups. MUJAO and Ansar Dine reportedly paid child recruits and their parents. Children as young as 12 years of age were enticed by MUJAO with the promise of receiving Koranic education. Children associated with MUJAO were seen standing guard in a secondary school in Douentza and carrying out menial tasks in a gendarmerie camp in Taoussa. MUJAO was reportedly also responsible for the forced recruitment of 15 children between 13 and 18 years of age in Menaka, following clashes in Konna, leading families to send their children to the Niger to prevent recruitment.

93. Children, both boys and girls, were also associated with pro-Government militias. For example, in the area of Mopti/Sévaré, which is controlled by the Government, the United Nations received reports of recruitment of children by Ganda Izo, Ganda Koy and the Forces de libération du nord. As some militias are being integrated into the Armed Forces of Mali, there is an urgent need for screening and separation of these children.

94. Children were also captured by the Malian armed forces during military operations in northern Mali. At least four children allegedly associated with MUJAO were detained by the Malian authorities, one of whom was reported to have been transferred to a juvenile rehabilitation centre. On 9 March 2013, French troops captured five child combatants in the course of military operations and transferred them to the Malian authorities. The children were immediately handed over to UNICEF for interim care. While children are currently being automatically transferred from the French armed forces via the Malian gendarmerie to UNICEF, the need remains to formalize this arrangement through standard operating procedures for the handover of children encountered during combat.

95. There is very limited information available for 2012 on the killing and maiming of children. Nevertheless, 17 incidents were reported during 2012 in which 6 children were killed and 22 maimed by explosive remnants of war. During the offensive, armouries of the national armed forces were pillaged, especially in Timbuktu, and weapons and munitions were scattered in the vicinity of towns. Armed groups also laid mines and left other explosive devices in northern Mali in anticipation of military operations, resulting in the killing and maiming of children. Between March and August 2012, 28 serious incidents were allegedly caused by mines and explosive remnants of war in northern Mali, killing 24 children. It is further alleged that children associated with armed groups were killed and maimed during the French and Malian military campaign initiated in January 2013, including during aerial bombardments. Some of those children were reportedly used as human shields by armed groups. Concern also remained over inter-ethnic reprisals against children of Arab or Tuareg origin, including by the national armed forces.

96. Sexual violence against girls by armed groups was reported to be widespread and systematic in northern Mali (Timbuktu, Gao, Kidal and part of Mopti). In total, 211 cases of sexual violence (including rape, sexual slavery, forced marriage, sexual violence in places of detention and gang rape) by MNLA, MUJAO, Ansar Dine and AQIM have been reported since January 2012. The United Nations gathered information on cases of girls who had been raped by several members of armed groups. Cases of forced marriage of women and girls by MUJAO, Ansar Dine and AQIM were reported in all regions under their control. Parents were reportedly coerced to hand over their daughters for marriage to members of those groups, resulting in rape and sexual slavery. The girls were often raped repeatedly by several men in the groups' camps. Reports have also been received that girls from the Bella ethnic group, a Tuareg caste considered to be inferior to the so-called "light-skinned" Tuareg, were particularly vulnerable to abduction for purposes of sexual abuse and exploitation.

97. The MNLA offensive and subsequent takeover of northern Mali by armed groups had a devastating effect on children's access to education. A total of 115 schools were looted, damaged, bombed, used for military purposes or contaminated with unexploded ordnance. Armed groups reportedly interfered in the conduct of classes, demanding that their interpretation of sharia law be taught. As at February 2013, 86 per cent of pupils remaining in the north still lacked access to education.

98. In October 2012, the Government established an interministerial working group to prevent grave violations against children. The objectives of this entity include public information campaigns to prevent recruitment and use of children and joint verification missions with international partners to ascertain the presence of children in self-defence militias. On 7 February 2013, an interministerial circular was signed on the prevention, protection and return to families of children associated with armed forces and armed groups.

Myanmar

99. In 2012, there were encouraging commitments and actions by the Government to prevent and end grave violations against children. The country task force, however, continued to document violations during the reporting period. Most took place during military clashes in Kachin and Shan States between the Tatmadaw Kyi and the Kachin Independence Army (KIA), and between the national armed forces and the Shan State Army North and the Shan State Army South. Other incidents resulted from bomb explosions and unexploded ordnance in Kayin State and Sagaing Region. To date, the country task force has remained constrained by capacity, access and security impediments that presented a challenge for comprehensive monitoring and verification.

100. While the number of cases of recruitment and use of children by the national armed forces decreased because of prevention measures and strengthened recruitment processes, recruitment and use of children remained of concern in 2012. The number of complaints of underage recruitment by the national armed forces increased from 236 in 2011 to 274 in 2012 as a result of enhanced awareness among the national armed forces and the general public of recruitment and the channels for raising such cases, including through the International Labour Organization (ILO) forced labour complaint mechanism, local-level child protection groups, national and international protection actors and direct approaches to military bases and relevant ministries. The country task force also received information that children had been deployed to the front line with exposure to both combat and non-combat duties. Nine children recruited by the national armed forces were deployed during the reporting period to Kachin State, where they were captured and detained by KIA, which notified ILO early in 2012 and released them in January 2013.

101. In addition, the country task force received reports of association of children with non-State armed groups. Verified reports indicated that children were present in the ranks of KIA and the United Wa State Army (UWSA). One case in April 2012 involved the abduction of three boys of 14 years of age by KIA from a village in Wine Maw township. The country task force also received information on the use of boys by UWSA to man checkpoints and secure offices. Reports further alleged that UWSA continued to require that one child in each family in the Wa autonomous zones be sent to UWSA for what it termed “military service”. Children were also reportedly present in the Karen National Liberation Army, the Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council and the Karenni Army.

102. Children were also victims of landmines, unexploded ordnance, mortar and grenade attacks and crossfire between the national armed forces and non-State armed groups. Late in 2012, hostilities intensified between the national armed forces and KIA in Kachin State, including air strikes and shelling by the national armed forces, in addition to the use of improvised explosive devices by KIA. The country task force verified that 13 boys and 4 girls between 3 and 17 years of age were killed in five incidents in Kayin State, Kachin State and Sagaing Region. The national armed forces and non-State armed groups (including the Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army, the Karenni National Progressive Party/Karenni Army, the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army,<sup>8</sup> UWSA and KIA) also continued to use landmines to restrict the movement of people, hinder the mobility of troops and mark areas of operations.

103. On 27 June 2012, the Government and the United Nations signed in the presence of my Special Representative an action plan to halt and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the national armed forces. Subsequently, a senior national armed forces liaison officer was appointed to oversee its implementation and a joint committee comprising the country task force and senior officials of the national armed forces and government ministries was created. The country task force and the national armed forces also developed detailed operational procedures for the identification, verification and discharge of children.

104. Throughout September 2012, military focal points in the national armed forces carried out training sessions on the action plan in each regional command, targeting officers responsible for the identification and registration of children within their battalions. The national armed forces also issued directives on the implementation of the action plan and developed communication materials for distribution to the military rank and file. In addition, the national armed forces launched a process of identification and verification that led to the discharge of 42 children in September 2012. The national armed forces reported that, since October 2012, a board had been established in each regional command to review the age of all new recruits. The Commander-in-Chief also issued a directive in which he stated that recruiters of children would face action under section 374 of the Myanmar Penal Code and section 65 of the Defence Services Act. In that regard, the Government reported to the country task force that, by the end of November 2012, 30 commissioned officers and 154 non-commissioned officers had been subjected to disciplinary measures for recruitment and use of children.

105. The country task force, however, remained concerned with regard to United Nations access to national armed forces operational regiments. In December 2012, the national armed forces informed the country task force that access to those regiments would be subject to consideration upon completion of United Nations monitoring of recruitment units and training facilities.

106. Pursuant to the action plan, the Government also committed itself to facilitating processes to end child recruitment by non-State armed groups and to facilitating the release and reintegration of all children within its sovereign territory. During the reporting period, however, efforts to secure the signature of the action plan and provision of support to identify and discharge children from the national armed forces were accorded priority.

107. In 2012, a total of 97 underage recruits were discharged from the national armed forces. Of those underage recruits, 42 were released under the framework of the action plan during a discharge ceremony in September 2012, while 45 were released under the ILO forced labour complaint mechanism. In October 2012, the country task force submitted 25 new cases of underage recruitment received through the ILO complaint mechanism to the national armed forces senior liaison officer for verification under the action plan framework. In addition, the Government reported that, in 2012, 538 potential new recruits had been rejected at the recruitment screening stage for being underage.

Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and Israel

108. In 2012, Palestinian and Israeli children continued to be affected by the prevailing situation of conflict. In the West Bank, the number of Palestinian children killed and injured during demonstrations and violence by Israeli settlers remained a serious concern. Throughout the reporting period, there were several escalations of violence between armed groups in Gaza and Israeli forces that resulted in the killing and injuring of Palestinian children and the injuring of Israeli children. During the reporting period, 50 Palestinian children (40 boys and 10 girls) were killed and 665 (640 boys and 25 girls) injured in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and 17 Israeli children were injured in Israel, marking a significant increase compared with 2011.

109. In the West Bank, four Palestinian boys were killed and 552 Palestinian children, including 16 girls, injured during the reporting period. Of the children killed, two were victims of unexploded ordnance and two were shot by Israeli forces during demonstrations. On 12 December 2012, a 17-year-old boy was shot and killed at a checkpoint at the entrance to Al-Masharqa neighbourhood in the old city of Hebron. Since mid-November 2012, an increase in the use of lethal force by Israeli forces has been observed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, also affecting children. A total of 436 Palestinian children were injured during demonstrations in clashes with the Israeli forces: 69 during military operations involving live ammunition, physical assault, gas canisters, rubber-coated metal bullets or tear gas inhalation; 39 as a result of settler violence; and 8 as a result of unexploded ordnance. Although no children were killed by Israeli settlers in 2012, 18 were injured as a result of physical assault, stone throwing or the use of Molotov cocktails or live ammunition. A total of 21 children were injured as a result of intervention by Israeli forces following clashes between Palestinians and Israeli settlers.

110. In Gaza, 46 Palestinian children were killed during the reporting period, the vast majority in November 2012 during an operation in Gaza codenamed "Pillar of Defence". During the first two weeks of November, armed violence escalated intermittently as the Israeli forces attacked various targets inside Gaza and Palestinian armed groups fired rockets into southern Israel. Between 14 and 21 November 2012, 32 Palestinian children were killed by Israeli air strikes. In three other incidents, Palestinian children were allegedly killed by Palestinian rockets aimed at Israel that fell short and landed in Gaza. Outside the November escalation, another 11 children were killed in Gaza: 3 as a result of Israeli air strikes; 3 by Israeli tank shells; 1 boy during an incursion into Gaza by Israeli forces; 1 boy as a result of mishandling a weapon found at home; 1 boy while mishandling unexploded ordnance; and 2 other children as a result of Palestinian rockets aimed at Israel that fell short and landed in Gaza.

111. A further 113 children were injured in Gaza as a result of Israeli military operations, during demonstrations or as a result of unexploded ordnance. In one particular incident, on 30 March 2012, 23 boys were injured during demonstrations, 21 as a result of the use of live ammunition by Israeli forces and 2 owing to severe tear gas inhalation.

112. During the reporting period, 17 Israeli children were injured. In November 2012, during the escalation of violence in Gaza, Palestinian armed groups launched rockets at southern Israel. On 15 November 2012, 14 Israeli children, including an 8-month-old baby, were injured. Three other Israeli children were injured inside the West Bank. On 10 July 2012, two settler children were injured during clashes between Israeli settlers and Palestinians in Al-Khalil neighbourhood of the old city of Hebron. On 8 April 2012, a girl was injured when the vehicle in which she was travelling was hit by an object thrown by an unidentified person on the outskirts of Jerusalem.

113. On 3 June 2012, a 17-year-old Palestinian boy was reportedly killed by an Israeli air strike on a motorcycle on which members of the Abdul Qader Al-Husseini armed group were travelling in Abasan, southern Gaza. On 21 February 2012, Israeli forces reportedly used a Palestinian boy as a human shield. The 15-year-old boy from Beit Ummar was taken from his home by Israeli forces and forced to walk in front of a military jeep at which villagers were throwing stones, in violation of an Israeli Supreme Court order forbidding the use of human shields. During the reporting period, four other cases of attempted use of children by Israeli forces for military intelligence purposes were reported in the Megiddo and Al-Jalame interrogation sites. These cases involved Palestinian boys between 15 and 17 years of age who were arrested and offered money, entry to Israel and a car or mobile telephone in exchange for intelligence on activities in their villages.

114. In 2012, Palestinian children continued to be arrested and detained by Israeli forces for alleged security offences and prosecuted in juvenile military courts. At the end of December 2012, 194 boys and 1 girl, of between 12 and 17 years of age, were in Israeli military detention for alleged security infractions. Of those children, 119 were being held in pretrial detention and 76 had been convicted and were serving a sentence. According to the Israeli Prison Service, 73 child detainees were transferred to prisons inside Israel during the reporting period. Such transfers contravene article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

115. In 2012, in relation to those cases of military detention, 115 cases of ill-treatment were documented through affidavits taken by lawyers. All 115 Palestinian boys reported being subjected to cruel and degrading ill-treatment by the Israeli forces and the Israeli police, including but not limited to the practice of blindfolding and painful restraint during arrest, transfer and interrogation; strip-searching; verbal abuse; physical violence, including beating and kicking; and threats of violence. A total of 21 boys were also held in solitary confinement for a period ranging from 1 to 20 days at Al-Jalame, Hasharon and Petah Tikva interrogation sites, in addition to the Megiddo prison inside Israel.

116. On 1 August 2012, Israeli Military Order No. 1685 established that children arrested and detained by the Israeli forces must be brought before a judge within four days of arrest, instead of the previously allowed eight days. Another military order, issued on 28 November 2012, which will enter into force in April 2013, will further halve the length of pretrial detention, stipulating that children under 14 years of age should be brought before a judge within 24 hours of arrest and children between 14 and 18 years of age within 48 hours. Although this represents progress, the duration remains double the maximum pretrial detention period for Israeli children under Israeli juvenile law.

117. In 2012, a significant number of attacks on schools and education facilities continued to be reported in both Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. A total of 321 cases were reported in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, in 2012, compared with 46 in 2011. Seven attacks against Israeli schools were reported.

118. A total of 25 incidents of attacks on schools were reported in the West Bank in 2012. In 11 instances, the Israeli forces entered or attempted to enter school premises during search operations, to remove Palestinian flags from the rooftops of schools or for other unknown reasons, causing disruption to classes and sometimes damage to schools. In another four instances, the Israeli forces fired live ammunition or tear gas at schools. In a worrisome spike in incidents, on four separate occasions, Israeli settlers from Yitzhar settlement threw stones at the school in Urif (Nablus). In one particular instance, on 23 April 2012, the stone-throwing by settlers triggered clashes between Palestinians and Israeli forces and settlers from the Yitzhar settlement, after which tear gas was fired at the Palestinians, injuring eight children. In addition, on six occasions, Israeli forces also entered the Haj Ma'zoz Al Masri Secondary School for Girls in Nablus to secure the area for Israeli settlers during night-time religious events.

119. The vast majority of the incidents affecting schools in Gaza occurred between 14 and 21 November 2012, during the Israeli military operation. A total of 285 school buildings suffered damage as a result of Israeli air strikes on nearby locations, including 60 United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) school buildings. Six UNRWA health centres also suffered damage during the escalation in November.

120. In southern Israel, six school buildings were damaged by rockets launched by Palestinian armed groups during the hostilities in November 2012. One additional Israeli school in Beersheba was damaged on 11 March 2012 by rocket fire from Gaza. No injuries to children were reported as a result of the incident, given that the school had been closed that day as a precautionary measure.

Somalia

121. In 2012, the country task force documented 4,660 cases of violations against children, of which 2,051 concerned recruitment and use of children (2,008 boys and 43 girls). Children were reportedly recruited by armed forces and armed groups from camps for internally displaced persons, schools and villages. Al-Shabaab also coerced teachers into enlisting pupils.

122. Al-Shabaab was the main perpetrator (1,789 cases of recruitment and use of children), followed by the Somali National Armed Forces (179 cases). A total of 53 of those cases took place after the Transitional Federal Government signed an action plan on 3 July 2012 to halt and prevent the recruitment and use of children.<sup>9</sup> On 9 September 2012, five boys between 16 and 17 years of age were recruited by the national armed forces in Beletweine district, Hiran Region. They were previously associated with Al-Shabaab and had escaped to join the government forces. In addition, it was reported that, in April 2012, a girl carried out a suicide attack at the National Theatre. Ahlu Sunna Wal Jama'a, a Government-allied militia integrated into the national armed forces in 2012, was responsible for 51 cases of recruitment and use of children. On 18 February 2012, six children between 15 and 17 years of age were recruited by the militia in Beletweine district.

123. In 2012, the country task force verified 296 cases of killing of children (228 boys and 62 girls) and 485 cases of maiming of children (326 boys and 132 girls). The killings were perpetrated by unknown armed groups (111), Al-Shabaab (94) and the national armed forces (70). According to the World Health Organization, the four major hospitals in Mogadishu treated weapons-related injuries of 230 children under 5 years of age during the period under review. Most of the cases verified by the country task force involved crossfire and mortar attacks. On 10 March 2012, for example, stray bullets injured three children between 11 and 14 years of age during fighting between Al-Shabaab and the national armed forces in Yurkud village, Berdaale district, Bay Region. Children were also allegedly killed for spying. On 18 January 2012, a 15-year-old boy associated with Al-Shabaab was killed by Al-Shabaab in Rabdhure district, Bakool Region, for allegedly spying for the national armed forces. On 16 September 2012, the country task force received allegations of ill-treatment of children implicating the national armed forces in Afgoye district, Lower Shabelle Region. According to reliable sources, the national armed forces arrested and detained 10 children on suspicion of being Al-Shabaab members. It is alleged that they were subjected to ill-treatment and acts tantamount to torture while in police custody. That information, however, could not be verified.

124. During the reporting period, the country task force received reports of 213 cases of sexual violence committed against 210 girls and 3 boys, mostly in central and southern Somalia. The incidents were attributed to the national armed forces (119), Al-Shabaab (51) and unknown armed groups (43). Following the end of the transitional period and establishment of the new Government, the Government issued a statement on 25 November 2012 in which it acknowledged that sexual violence was being perpetrated by its national armed forces and committed itself to ending the violations. My Special Representative will work with the Government to decisively address the issue.

125. During the reporting period, Al-Shabaab (51) and the national armed forces (14) were also responsible for attacks on schools. Al-Shabaab was responsible for a further 11 attacks on hospitals in 2012 in Hiran (4), Lower Juba (4), Middle Shabelle (2) and Middle Juba (1).

126. The country task force received information on 1,533 cases of abduction (1,458 boys and 75 girls) during the reporting period. Most were reported in central and southern Somalia and were perpetrated by Al-Shabaab (780) and the national armed forces and allied militias (720). On 28 May 2012, for example, around 30 children between 12 and 17 years of age were taken into custody by the national armed forces in Afgoye corridor, Lower Shabelle Region, on suspicion of being members of Al-Shabaab. The country task force is following up on this incident. Most of the southern and central parts of Somalia remained inaccessible, however, owing to the volatile security situation.

127. In 2012, humanitarian access continued to be affected by attacks targeting humanitarian workers, roadblocks and looting of humanitarian supplies, mainly in southern Somalia. There were a total of 96 attacks on aid workers or their assets, 27 incidents of aid interventions (aid diversions, lootings, confiscations or sabotages) and 20 cases relating to denial of movement.

128. On 3 July 2012, the Transitional Federal Government signed an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children, and, on 6 August 2012, another action plan to end killing and maiming of children. Progress towards their implementation was limited, however, owing to the election period and the appointment of the new Government. The President nevertheless pledged his strong commitment to implementing both action plans. The Government reported that it had issued strict guidelines prohibiting the recruitment of children into the national armed forces and that the implementation of the action plan was in the planning process.

129. In October 2012, the Government established, together with the United Nations, a joint technical committee in charge of the coordination and implementation of the action plans. On 7 and 8 October 2012, the country task force held a validation workshop with the Ministry of Defence and the Ministry of the Interior to finalize standard operating procedures for the handling and release of children who are captured, who surrender or who are otherwise separated from armed groups and who find themselves in the custody of the national armed forces or AMISOM. AMISOM efforts to reduce civilian casualties notwithstanding, slow progress has been made in the implementation of the civilian casualty, tracking, analysis and response cell. AMISOM has, however, instituted training on protection of women and children as part of the predeployment training for all AMISOM troops.

South Sudan

130. During the reporting period, the country task force verified the recruitment and use of 252 boys between 14 and 17 years of age. Of those boys, 106 were associated with the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), 68 with militia allied to David Yau Yau, Gabriel Tanginyang and Peter Gadet, 53 with militia allied to Hassan Deng in Northern Bahr el Ghazal State and 25 with militia allied to General James Kubrin Ngare. Children associated with SPLA were identified in convoys protecting high-ranking officials, wearing SPLA uniforms, during SPLA military recruitment drives and in SPLA barracks.

131. The country task force reported that 18 boys and 5 girls were killed and 23 boys and 8 girls injured in Jonglei, Unity, Upper Nile and Western Bahr el Ghazal States during the reporting period. In two separate incidents in 2012, a child was reportedly killed and a 6-year-old boy reportedly injured during clashes between SPLA and militia allied to David Yau Yau in Jonglei State. In addition, in April 2012, four children were injured by explosive remnants of war in Bentiu, Unity State. The country task force also received reports of child casualties as a result of aerial bombardments.

132. During the reporting period, the country task force obtained information on eight cases of sexual violence affecting 12 girls. SPLA soldiers in Jonglei, Unity and Western Bahr el Ghazal States were allegedly responsible for six of those incidents. The country task force also reported the abduction of girls for sexual violence purposes in the context of inter-communal conflict. For example, a girl in Pibor, Jonglei State, was abducted by armed men of the Lou Nuer tribe, held in captivity for several weeks and raped. In another incident in February 2012, two girls were raped by unidentified armed men in military uniforms in Mayendit, Unity State.

133. SPLA reportedly used 18 schools for military purposes, 13 of which were already being so used since 2011. By the end of 2012, 15 of the schools had been vacated. The military use of the schools reportedly affected more than 13,000 children. In October 2012, Juba Day Secondary School, in Central Equatoria State, was closed for a week following a violent crackdown on student protests by the South Sudan National Police Service using live ammunition.

134. In 2012, 129 children were abducted in the context of inter-communal conflicts and a further 243 were documented missing. While 110 abducted children were recovered in Jonglei State during the reporting period, the whereabouts of the others remain unknown. In July and August 2012, two girls aged 10 and 13 years were allegedly abducted by SPLA members in Jonglei State. Although the United Nations inquired with SPLA about the cases, no feedback has been received to date.

135. The country task force received reports of at least 197 incidents of denial of humanitarian access. Forceful entry into humanitarian compounds, harassment and physical assault of humanitarian workers hampered the ability of humanitarian actors to gain access to the civilian population. During the first quarter of 2012, nine incidents of violence against humanitarian personnel by SPLA soldiers were reported in Central Equatoria and Warrap States.

136. On 13 March 2012, my Special Representative witnessed the signing of a revised action plan by SPLA as a renewed commitment to ceasing and preventing the recruitment and use of children. Since the signature of the action plan, a national committee, consisting of the South Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission, SPLA military judge advocates, the SPLA spokesperson and the United Nations, has been established to implement the provisions of the action plan.

137. A system of screening and early identification of children has been established. Consequently, 421 boys and 29 girls who sought to voluntarily enlist in SPLA in 2012 were rejected. SPLA also issued a series of military orders to vacate schools and to grant unimpeded access to the United Nations. The country task force was granted access to 71 SPLA barracks during the reporting period. The Government also initiated the development of civil registration and birth registration systems. Of the 252 boys identified as associated with SPLA and militia groups, 230 were released, reunited with their families and provided with reintegration support.

Darfur

138. During the reporting period, the country task force recorded 31 cases of recruitment and use of children: 11 by the Popular Defence Forces, 4 by the Central Reserve Police, 3 by JEM, 2 by the Sudanese Armed Forces and 11 by unidentified armed groups. Three boys between 14 and 17 years of age were abducted for recruitment purposes by JEM in northern Darfur, but managed to escape and were subsequently detained by the national armed forces before being released and reunited with their families.

139. In 2012, 62 children (44 boys and 18 girls) were killed and 57 (42 boys and 15 girls) injured during hostilities in Darfur. Of those children, 27 were killed by stray bullets during clashes between unidentified armed groups, 26 during air strikes by the national armed forces and 9 by unexploded ordnance. The increase in the number of child casualties — 119 children in 2012 compared with 71 children in 2011 — is attributed to the escalation of violence between government forces and armed groups during the reporting period, in addition to inter-ethnic fighting in various areas of Darfur.

140. The country task force reported 36 cases of rape of girls between 5 and 17 years of age in 2012. In areas under the Government's control, several documented incidents of rape were attributed to government forces, including the national armed forces, the Central Reserve Police, the Popular Defence Forces, the police and the Border Intelligence Forces. Perpetrators also included unidentified armed men. These figures do not reflect the actual scope of sexual violence against children in Darfur, given that access to some areas remained limited.

141. In 2012, movement restrictions for humanitarian actors on security grounds continued to affect the delivery of assistance to children. Restrictions on movement by road from El Fasher to El Daein, for example, heavily affected humanitarian aid. On four separate occasions, refusal of clearance for humanitarian actors to gain access to areas not under the control of the Government impeded the provision of humanitarian assistance to children.

142. Among developments in the reporting period, a focal point to engage with the country task force on child protection concerns was appointed by JEM in January 2012. Following further consultations, on 11 September 2012, JEM issued a command order in which it prohibited the recruitment and use of children and, on 25 September 2012, it submitted to the United Nations a commitment to release children and to report on progress made. In November 2012, the Sudan Liberation Army/Abdul Wahid also issued a command order in which it prohibited the recruitment and use of children. Sudanese Liberation Army/Historical Leadership submitted two progress reports in which it outlined steps taken towards ending recruitment and use of children. Although there were allegations of recruitment and use of children by that armed group during the reporting period, they could not be substantiated. Sudan Liberation Army/Free Will, JEM/Peace Wing and Sudan Liberation Army/Peace Wing have been removed from the annexes to the present report, since no information was available on recruitment and use of children by these groups in 2012, nor that the groups were militarily active.

143. The Government informed the country task force that the Ministry of Defence had approved the development of an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children, which would apply also to other groups affiliated with the national armed forces, including the Popular Defence Forces. That commitment was reiterated to a United Nations technical mission that visited the Sudan in April 2013.

144. In January 2012, the Government established a national human rights commission to monitor and investigate human rights and child rights violations. In January 2012, the Police Commissioner created a national coordination mechanism for family and children protection units. Efforts were also made by the police and its Family Child Protection Unit to investigate cases of violations against children, an exercise that resulted in the arrest of a number of alleged perpetrators. On 18 July 2012, for example, a court in Zalingei, Central Darfur, sentenced a soldier to 20 years' imprisonment for the rape of an 8-year-old girl.

145. A list of 120 children released by Sudanese Liberation Army/Historical Leadership was submitted in 2011 to the Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission and the United Nations. The registration process of these children began in January 2013. In addition, the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur provided training on child rights and child protection to 118 commanders and combatants of the Liberation and Justice Movement in El Fasher and Nyala.

Three areas (South Kordofan, Blue Nile State and Abyei)

146. During the reporting period, 125 boys between 11 and 17 years of age were reportedly recruited and used by armed forces and armed groups in South Kordofan (31), Blue Nile State (46) and Abyei (48). Of those boys, 65 were reportedly recruited by the Sudan People's Liberation Movement North (SPLM-N), 12 by the Popular Defence Forces and 48 by SPLA. In addition, the United Nations continued to receive allegations of recruitment and use of children by SPLM-N in areas not controlled by the Government. Verification of those allegations remained impossible, however, owing to access restrictions.

147. In 2012, the United Nations received reports that 31 children had been killed in Kadugli and 1 in South Kordofan/Abyei. In that regard, nine incidents of aerial bombardments and shelling resulted in the killing of 10 boys and 10 girls, some only a month old. Six incidents involving 15 children were attributed to the national armed forces, while three other incidents were attributed to SPLM-N. Three boys were killed and one maimed by unexploded ordnance. A total of 43 children were reportedly injured in South Kordofan (42) and Abyei (1): 41 as a result of aerial bombardments and shelling by the national armed forces and SPLM-N, 1 by crossfire and 1 by unexploded ordnance.

148. Although the Government allowed United Nations national staff limited access to the areas under its control for the delivery of humanitarian assistance, movement of international staff outside the capitals of South Kordofan and Blue Nile State was restricted. No humanitarian assistance could be delivered to children in areas held by SPLM-N. The Government continued to impose restrictions on access for humanitarian actors both in government-held and non-government-held areas in Blue Nile State and South Kordofan. Verification of reports of grave violations against children was impossible in areas not controlled by the Government.

149. In a verification process with the Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission, the United Nations supported the registration of 18 children formerly associated with armed groups, who were reunited with their families and received reintegration support. An additional 42 children escaped from an SPLM-N camp and were registered with the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme in Blue Nile State. During the reporting period, SPLM-N committed itself to engaging in dialogue with the United Nations to address the presence of children within its ranks.

Syrian Arab Republic

150. The Syrian conflict has entered its third year. The situation for children has deteriorated in all areas of concern. Among the well in excess of 70,000 people estimated to have been killed to date, many thousands are children. Sizeable numbers of children have been killed and gravely injured in shelling and fighting, while thousands more have seen family members killed or injured or have lived through shelling, missile firing and heavy aerial and artillery bombardment of their homes, schools and hospitals by the government forces, resulting in severe psychological distress. The use of terror tactics by armed opposition groups, such as car and other bombs, in civilian areas, including near schools, and the association of children with such armed groups rose sharply over the reporting period.

151. Children in the Syrian Arab Republic continued to be killed, injured and maimed by heavy artillery, air strikes, crossfire and explosive remnants of war as a direct result of the conflict in incidents that occurred in Damascus, Homs, Dera'a and Aleppo, among others. Refugee children inside the Syrian Arab Republic have also been directly affected. Palestinian and other refugee children have been killed, injured, forced to flee their homes and live in need in shelters for internally displaced persons. Government air strikes and bombardment predominated in areas controlled by the Free Syrian Army and other opposition groups. Government forces and allied shabbiha militia continued incursions in areas of contested control. On 25 May 2012, government soldiers and shabbiha members reportedly entered El Houleh village, Homs governorate, and killed 100 civilians, including at least 41 children. The local school, where people had sought refuge, was reportedly bombed by government forces in July 2012, resulting in the death of two children.

152. The use of heavy weaponry and the alleged use of cluster munitions in heavily populated areas resulted in child and other civilian casualties. In a village near Ar Raqqa, survivors alleged that dozens of cluster munitions had been dropped on their homes over a period of days in March 2013. A witness recounted seeing two boys, aged 9 and 13 years, suffer injury and the loss of their hands and limbs when they picked up unexploded cluster bomblets. Further reports were received of cluster munitions being used in Hamah, Ar Rastan, Mohassan, Aleppo and Idlib. Although government forces were allegedly responsible for most of those casualties, opposition groups have also reportedly acquired and used heavy weapons against the civilian population.

153. The United Nations also received reports of opposition armed groups engaging in terror tactics, such as car and other bombings, near schools and in public places, resulting in the death of and injury to children and other civilians. It was not possible to attribute responsibility for specific incidents that led to child casualties, owing to the nature of the operational structure of armed opposition groups in the Syrian Arab Republic and the lack of access for the United Nations to carry out investigations.

154. Detention, torture and ill-treatment of children for alleged association with the opposition continued to be a worrying trend. In that regard, there were a number of accounts of sexual violence against boys to obtain information or a confession by the State forces, largely but not exclusively by members of the State intelligence services and the Syrian Armed Forces. Child detainees, largely boys and as young as 14 years of age, suffered similar or identical methods of torture as adults, including electric shock, beatings, stress positions and threats and acts of sexual torture. For example, a 16-year-old boy from Kafr Nabl, Idlib governorate, reported witnessing the sexual assault and killing of his 14-year-old friend while in detention. According to witnesses, a number of children continue to be held as ransom for parents and other relatives associated with opposition fighters to force them to turn themselves in to the State authorities.

155. Information was received that the national armed forces used children as human shields. In an incident in May 2012, the national armed forces reportedly raided the local primary school in As Safira, Aleppo governorate, took hostage 30 boys and 25 girls between 10 and 13 years of age and walked them in front of their forces in order to flush out a local Free Syrian Army unit that had recently taken the town. There were also a number of allegations of use of children between 15 and 17 years of age by shabbiha members in village incursions in Hamah governorate in January 2013.

156. The United Nations has received a growing number of reports of use of children by armed opposition groups, such as the Free Syrian Army. From accounts received, child association with the Free Syrian Army is often linked to an older relative facilitating recruitment or in instances in which the child has lost all members of his or her family. It is also linked to the fact that there is no central recruitment authority among the Free Syrian Army and that many forces are clan-based or village-based. Consequently, children, on average between 15 and 17 years of age, have been used in both combat and support roles, such as food and water portering and loading bullets into cartridges. A former Free Syrian Army combatant of Kafr Zeita village stated to the United Nations that children as young as 14 years were largely used for loading bullets, delivering food and evacuating the injured. Medical staff reported treating boys between 16 and 17 years of age injured in combat who were associated with the Free Syrian Army. For example, a 16-year-old boy receiving medical treatment for wounds suffered in the Salah-ad-Din neighbourhood of Aleppo recounted that he had spent three months with a Free Syrian Army unit. He had been injured in fighting against government forces in the first week of March 2013. It should also be noted that accounts stated that some Free Syrian Army units, including in Dayr Az Zawr city, had rejected children who had approached them to join or had released associated children when so requested by their families.

157. The United Nations received information suggesting that schools and hospitals were targeted by the Government. Reports were also received of schools being used and damaged by armed opposition groups. A total of 167 education personnel, including 69 teachers, were reported to have been killed as at the end of February 2013, while 2,445 schools were reported to have been damaged. Some 2,000 schools are being used as shelters for internally displaced persons. In some areas, children have not attended school in more than 18 months. Palestinian children residing in refugee camps in the Syrian Arab Republic are equally affected by the conflict. The education system in particular has been severely affected. As at April 2013, 69 of 118 UNRWA schools were closed, with only 23,700 of more than 67,000 enrolled pupils attending classes.

158. Reports indicated that schools continued to be bombed, shelled and raided by government forces. On the other hand, several parties to the conflict were responsible for using schools for military purposes. There are numerous incidents of government forces entering schools and using them either as a temporary base or as a detention facility. The Free Syrian Army allegedly used schools in a number of areas as bases, makeshift hospitals and, in some instances, ammunition storage and detention centres. In one example, Free Syrian Army elements in Kafr Zeita, Idlib governorate, used two classrooms of the Al Shahid Wahid Al Jusef High School as barracks for a number of days while children were attending classes.

159. The United Nations received further information that hospitals and makeshift hospitals had been bombed and, in some cases, specifically targeted by government forces, allegedly because they housed wounded Free Syrian Army elements. Reports have also been received of government forces entering hospitals and arresting young men and boys suspected of being Free Syrian Army sympathizers. In one instance, eyewitnesses stated that men and boys who sought assistance at the Kendi State Hospital in Aleppo were arrested for association with the opposition before entering. The hospital also housed a government sniper position. Attacks or threats of attacks against medical personnel, in addition to reprisals for medically assisting those suspected of links to the opposition, were also documented.

160. As noted in my report on sexual violence in conflict (A/67/792-S/2013/149), United Nations monitors received credible allegations of sexual violence against women and girls, in particular during raids conducted by the Syrian military in Homs and other areas, but also in detention facilities or at checkpoints. The United Nations is also concerned about allegations of abduction and rape of women and girls by armed opposition groups in cities, villages and neighbourhoods perceived to be in favour of the Government.

161. The conflict has also created an environment in which it has become extremely difficult to reach affected populations for humanitarian purposes. Medical care remained inadequate in contested areas, with many children succumbing to their wounds for lack of proper or timely attention. Lastly, fighting continued to force populations to leave their homes, with the latest United Nations figures indicating that there are more than 1.3 million Syrian refugees in neighbouring countries and 4.25 million persons displaced inside the country, half of whom are children.

162. My Special Representative was invited by the Government to assess first-hand the conflict's impact on children, to discuss strengthening the monitoring of grave violations against children in the Syrian Arab Republic and to better advocate child protection. During her visit, she met relevant ministers, the United Nations country team, civil society members, internally displaced persons and children. In this regard, I welcome the Government's commitment to cooperating with the United Nations in monitoring grave child rights violations and to establishing an interministerial committee on children affected by conflict. The Government has also informed my Special Representative that it will take measures to ensure the education of displaced children and to rebuild destroyed or damaged school facilities. My Special Representative was also able to reach out to Free Syrian Army commanders in Homs and Rif Damascus governorates regarding their responsibility to respect international humanitarian law and prevent association of children with their forces. In addition, I am encouraged that my Special Representative received a communication from the National Coalition of Syrian Revolutionary and Opposition Forces in which it committed itself to collaborating with the United Nations to halt and prevent the recruitment and use of children.

Yemen

163. The signing of the transition agreement in Yemen, the Gulf Cooperation Council initiative and implementation mechanism in November 2011 and the launch of the political transition in February 2012 led to a decrease in the number of grave violations committed against children. Nevertheless, hostilities between the Government and Ansar al-Sharia/Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and their effect on the civilian population remained of concern and resulted in grave violations against children.

164. In 2012, the United Nations verified 53 reports of recruitment and use of children between 13 and 17 years of age. Of those cases of recruitment, 25 boys were recruited by the government forces, including the Yemeni Armed Forces, the Republican Guards, the newly integrated First Armoured Division, the military police and the central security forces.<sup>10</sup> Many children recruited by the national armed forces were enlisted through brokers, such as military officers, family members and local sheikhs, who further facilitated their recruitment through false documentation and birth certificates. Some children reported fear of reprisal if it became known that they had enlisted with false documentation. Children often received a monthly stipend or retainer from the unit that recruited them.

165. The United Nations continued to face challenges in monitoring violations by the Al-Houthi armed group operating in Sa'ada governorate. Reports of recruitment and use of children could not be verified owing to security constraints. Nevertheless, the United Nations could verify the use of three boys by Al-Houthi in Hajja governorate, who were armed, manning checkpoints or "guarding" health centres. With regard to association of children with pro-Government militias, the United Nations documented the case of three children aged 13, 16 and 17 years, respectively, who were recruited and used for checkpoint duty by the Popular Resistance Committee in Abyan governorate. The recruitment and use of children by Ansar al-Sharia appeared to have increased during the reporting period. Of the 19 children verified to be associated with Ansar al-Sharia, 2 boys were killed and 3 injured in combat. The others are believed to still be with the group.

166. In 2012, at least 50 children (45 boys and 5 girls) were reportedly killed and 165 (140 boys and 25 girls) maimed. Many child casualties related to landmines, unexploded ordnance and explosive remnants of war. While in most of the incidents the perpetrators remained unknown, some have been attributed to the national armed forces, Ansar al-Sharia and AQAP. Five incidents were reported of drone strikes allegedly targeting AQAP and Ansar al-Sharia in Abyan, Shabwa and Al Bayda governorates, resulting in the killing of two boys and maiming of six boys and a girl. In one such incident, a 16-year-old boy was killed by a drone strike allegedly targeting an AQAP leader. A further 14 boys were killed, and 51 boys and 10 girls maimed, by landmines or unexploded ordnance during the reporting period. Attacks with improvised explosive devices killed 11 boys and maimed 16 boys and 1 girl. Two children were killed while conducting a suicide attack.

167. An emerging concern with regard to Ansar al-Sharia is the sexual abuse of boys associated with the group. The United Nations documented that three boys recruited by the group had been subjected to sexual violence. The United Nations further verified seven cases of forced marriage of girls between 13 and 17 years of age in Abyan governorate with members of Ansar al-Sharia. In two of those cases, a 15-year-old girl and a 17-year-old girl were offered as "gifts" by their brothers to leaders of Ansar al-Sharia in exchange for being allowed to join the group. The number of forced marriages is likely to be underreported owing to stigmatization and fear of reprisal.

168. During the reporting period, the United Nations received reports of 165 incidents of attacks on schools, most of which occurred in Sana'a and Abyan governorates. Ansar al-Sharia, the First Armoured Division and Al-Houthi were responsible for the incidents. In 61 incidents, teachers and pupils were threatened or intimidated. In another 57 incidents, schools were physically damaged by shelling, aerial bombardments and improvised explosive devices. Such attacks mainly took place during clashes between the Republican Guard and armed tribal groups, and in hostilities between government forces and Ansar al-Sharia. Supporters of Ansar al-Sharia also damaged schools and destroyed textbooks in an attempt to prevent the reopening of schools. In addition, a United Nations-supported child-friendly space providing psychosocial assistance to children in Sana'a was looted by the First Armoured Division. An additional 36 incidents involved the military use of schools for weapons storage, sometimes resulting in their closure.

169. A total of 11 attacks on hospitals were reported in Hajja and Aden. In Hajja, Al-Houthi was responsible for nine incidents of intimidation of health personnel and eight cases of military use of medical facilities, resulting in the closure of health centres affecting some 5,000 children. The central security forces were responsible for two incidents in Aden in which they forcibly entered hospitals in search of patients and damaged the medical facilities.

170. The United Nations received reports of 33 incidents of denial of humanitarian access affecting children. This figure included 16 incidents of hijackings of United Nations or non-governmental organization vehicles; the abduction of 16 humanitarian personnel; 5 cases of threats against or arrests of humanitarian personnel; and physical attacks against humanitarian workers and their compounds.

171. Tangible progress was made in dialogue with the relevant parties on the preparation and implementation of action plans to halt and prevent violations against children. On 18 April 2012, the Minister of the Interior sent a letter to the police and other relevant authorities in which he ordered the full implementation of Police Commission Law No. 15 (2000), which stipulated 18 years as the minimum age for recruitment, and the release of any children present in the ranks of the government security forces. During an official visit to Yemen in November 2012, my Special Representative met the President and other senior government officials, in addition to the leadership of Al-Houthi and the First Armoured Division. During her visit, the Government committed itself to developing an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children. The leadership of Al-Houthi also agreed to enter into a dialogue with the United Nations on the issue. In addition, the President issued a decree to prohibit underage recruitment and immediately thereafter established an interministerial committee to serve as liaison for the development of an action plan.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

Colombia

172. In 2012, hostilities continued between the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia — Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP), the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) and the Colombian national army. On 18 October 2012, however, peace talks were initiated between the Government and FARC-EP in Oslo.

173. Widespread and systematic recruitment and use of children by non-State armed groups was documented in 2012. Although the full scale and scope remain unknown, around 300 cases of recruitment and use were reported by the country task force in 23 of the 32 departments and in Bogotá. In 2012, the Colombian Family Welfare Institute documented 188 children separated from FARC-EP, 37 from ELN, 34 from armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia and 4 from the Ejército Popular de Liberación.

174. FARC-EP and ELN continued to recruit and use children. In February 2012, a 10-year-old girl and a 12-year-old boy, both wearing FARC-EP uniforms, were found in Meta during a raid by the Colombian army. The country task force also verified cases of recruitment and use by non-State armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia. In March 2012, for example, a 16-year-old boy was offered money to join the Ejército Revolucionario Popular Anticomunista de Colombia (ERPAC) in Meta. In March and April 2012, threats of recruitment of children by FARC-EP, ERPAC, Las Aguilas Negras, Los Rastrojos and Los Urabeños were reported in the departments of Antioquia, Cordoba, Guaviare and Meta. In Guaviare, the threats forced seven boys between 14 and 18 years of age into displacement.

175. Children were also killed and maimed during attacks carried out by non-State armed groups or in crossfire between non-State armed groups or between non-State armed groups and the Colombian security forces. In March 2012, for example, four boys and four girls between 14 and 16 years of age were killed in the crossfire when a FARC-EP camp in Meta was attacked by the Colombian army. In October 2012, a 13-year-old girl was killed and another girl injured by the army during an attack against alleged members of FARC-EP in Cauca. In 2012, at least 52 children (32 boys and 20 girls) were injured and 13 children (12 boys and 1 girl) killed by anti-personnel mines or explosive remnants of war.

176. While underreported, girls continued to be victims of sexual violence attributed to members of non-State armed groups. Girls associated with such groups were often forced into sexual relations with adults and, allegedly, to have an abortion if they became pregnant. In March 2012, a 16-year-old girl in Nariño was raped several times by hooded members of an unidentified non-State armed group. In July 2012, an 11-year-old girl was raped by a FARC-EP member in Valle del Cauca. A large proportion of sexual violence is being perpetrated by so-called criminal gangs ("Bacrim"). Since the Government does not acknowledge these non-State armed groups that emerged after the demobilization process as actors in the armed conflict, victims of sexual violence by them have faced major obstacles in gaining access to benefits under the Victims' Act (Act No. 1448 of 2011). Reports have also been received of cases of sexual violence against children by members of the Colombian security forces. In October 2012 in Nariño, members of the army reportedly sexually abused at least 11 girls, most of them of Afro-Colombian ethnicity, including an 8-year-old girl.

177. Teachers and pupils continued to be targeted and threatened by non-State armed groups for preventing the recruitment of children. In September 2012, for example, three teachers and a head teacher in Arauca were forced into displacement following threats from an unidentified armed group. The military use of schools by the army was reported in several departments. In July 2012, the army used a school for military purposes in fighting against FARC-EP in Cauca. The infrastructure of the school was damaged and unexploded ordnance found in the vicinity.

178. Although Colombia, as a signatory State to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, made significant efforts to eliminate landmines, contamination by landmines, unexploded ordnance and improvised explosive devices continued to cause mobility restrictions and complicate aid delivery in several departments, including Cauca, Nariño, Norte de Santander and Putumayo. In the last-mentioned department, for example, landmines laid by FARC-EP have intermittently confined hundreds of civilians and prevented timely assistance from reaching an estimated 1,000 flood-affected families. Restrictions imposed by ERPAC, Las Aguilas Negras, Los Rastrojos and Los Urabebios were also reported in urban areas of Antioquia, Cordoba and Valle del Cauca departments. In 2012, more than 46,000 persons, of whom some 30 per cent were children, were internally displaced in 18 departments, affecting rural, indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities in particular.

179. Indigenous and Afro-Colombian children continued to be disproportionately affected by all grave violations. Among the demobilized children assisted by the Colombian Family Welfare Institute, some 8 per cent were indigenous, even though indigenous children constitute just 1.55 per cent of the Colombian population.

180. The Government voluntarily accepted the monitoring and reporting mechanism pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) on the condition that any dialogue between the United Nations and armed groups would take place with its consent. There was no contact or dialogue between the United Nations system and non-State armed groups during the reporting period. A general agreement for the termination of the conflict and the construction of a stable and lasting peace was signed by the Government and FARC-EP in Havana on 26 August 2012, with representatives of Cuba and Norway as guarantors. The issue of children and armed conflict was absent from the agenda.

181. The Colombian Family Welfare Institute provided protection to 264 children (67 girls and 197 boys) who had been separated from non-State armed groups. Children separated from armed groups formed after the demobilization of paramilitary organizations were not systematically referred to the Institute, efforts by the Government of Colombia notwithstanding. Some children were referred to the Attorney General for prosecution. All children, as victims, should be accorded the same benefits and protection, regardless of the group that recruited or used them. The lack of information on cases taken up by the Office of the Attorney General and the limited number of prosecutions involving violations against children remained a challenge. While at least 5,075 children were separated from non-State armed groups by the Colombian Family Welfare Institute, to date there have been only 25 convictions for child recruitment, 3 under the Justice and Peace Act (Act No. 975 of 2005) and 22 through the Human Rights Unit of the Office of the Attorney General. Efforts by the Government of Colombia notwithstanding, children continued to face difficulties in gaining access to justice, while impunity for violations against children remained a concern.

182. The early warning system operated by the Office of the Ombudsman prepared a report on recruitment and use of children in Guania, Guaviare, Meta and Vichada to identify the impact of the armed conflict on children and to promote prevention and protection measures. In addition, in November 2012, the Ministry of Defence issued a law enforcement agencies protocol for the management of sexual violence with emphasis on sexual violence in instances of armed conflict, in addition to an operating charter for its implementation.

India

183. In 2012, the United Nations received reports of violations against children by parties in Bihar, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, Maharashtra and Odisha States. Although verification by the United Nations was not possible, the allegations are supported by reports submitted to Parliament. Recruitment and use of children by Maoist armed groups otherwise known as Naxalites, is alleged to have continued during the reporting period. Reports alleged that the Naxalites resorted to large-scale recruitment of children between 6 and 12 years of age into what they term “children’s units” (Bal Sanghatans) in the affected states. Children were reported to have performed various tasks, including fighting with crude weapons such as sticks or acting as informants. Children as young as 12 years of age were reported to be present in Maoist youth groups and allied militia, handling weapons and improvised explosive devices. Children were reportedly not allowed to leave those associations and faced severe reprisals, including the killing of family members, if they did so. According to government sources, children were reportedly used as human shields by the Maoist armed groups in confrontations with Indian security forces. In Chhattisgarh, seven children were reportedly killed in the crossfire between the Central Reserve Police Force and the Maoist armed groups in June 2012. Reports also indicated that the Maoists destroyed school buildings. The destruction of 267 schools since 2006 by the Maoists, including 3 in 2012, was reported. The number of schools destroyed over the past six years has raised concerns with regard to children’s access to education. The Government has stated that it has adopted an integrated approach to address the protection needs of children in areas of civil unrest, especially relating to security, development and good governance.

Pakistan

184. In 2012, Pakistan continued to experience attacks by armed groups using terror tactics and associated with the Taliban and/or Al-Qaida, including the Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP), in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province, Balochistan and urban centres. During the reporting period, at least 91 children were reportedly killed and 137 injured in the course of indiscriminate attacks on public places, largely attributed to TTP. A total of 51 children were reportedly killed by improvised explosive devices, roadside bombs and suicide bombings, 26 by mortar attacks and 14 by landmines and unexploded ordnance. On 24 November 2012, for example, at least four children were reportedly killed in a roadside bomb attack on a procession in Dera Ismail Khan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province. In addition, drone attacks were reported in the tribal areas of Pakistan. No exact data were available on the number of child casualties in those attacks. In one reported case, however, at least five children between 4 and 12 years of age were injured in a drone attack on 24 October 2012 in Tappi village, North Waziristan Agency. The United Nations has no access to those areas to verify the reports.

185. The recruitment, training and use of child suicide bombers by the Taliban, including TTP, in the tribal border areas between Pakistan and Afghanistan remained a concern in 2012. On 4 May 2012, for example, a 15-year-old boy with explosives strapped to his body reportedly committed a suicide attack in a crowded market place in Bajaur Agency, killing 26 persons and injuring 75. In another incident, on 20 November 2012, a 13-year-old boy from Khyber Agency who was wearing a suicide jacket was reportedly apprehended and detained by the police, along with his adult handler, while entering Peshawar. No exact figures are available on the number of children currently in detention in Pakistan under security regulations. The Government, however, reported that more than 1,150 boys had passed through de-radicalization and skills development programmes in Malakand district, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province. By the end of 2012, 40 children, including 23 new cases from 2012, were continuing to reside in the Sabaoon rehabilitation and reintegration centre for children taken into custody by the Pakistan security forces for alleged association with armed groups.

186. During the reporting period, armed groups opposed to secular and girls' education, including TTP, increasingly targeted schools, teachers and schoolchildren, in particular girls, in attacks with improvised explosive devices and drive-by shootings. A total of 118 schools, most of which were primary schools, were reportedly damaged or destroyed in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province (77), the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (40) and Balochistan (1) in such armed attacks. On 9 October 2012, TTP gunmen shot and seriously injured 14-year-old schoolgirl Malala Yousafzai and two other schoolgirls who were returning from school in Mingora, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province. Malala Yousafzai was known as a child activist speaking out against the forced closure of girls' schools by TTP in the Swat valley. In respect of attacks against medical personnel, 11 health workers administering polio vaccinations to children were killed and 4 more injured in targeted attacks in 2012. Of those, 9 health-care workers, including a 17-year-old girl, were killed in a series of attacks between 17 and 19 December 2012 in Karachi, Peshawar, Charsadda and Sindh.

187. In 2012, the Government took policy and legislative steps towards better protection of children, including the approval of a child protection policy for the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and the extension of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Act (2010) to the Provincially Administered Tribal Areas.

Philippines

188. During the reporting period, the country task force recorded 11 incidents of recruitment and use of children, involving 23 boys and 3 girls between 12 and 17 years of age. That figure represents a decrease in 2012, given that there were 26 incidents affecting 33 boys and 21 girls in 2011. Of those cases, 2 were reportedly recruited and used by the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, 11 by the New People's Army (NPA), 11 by the Abu Sayyaf Group and 2 by the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

189. That an action plan was signed between the Moro Islamic Liberation Front and the United Nations in 2009 notwithstanding, Front base commands continued to provide training, weapons and uniforms to children and to use them as guides, messengers and porters. In July 2012, a 16-year-old boy and a 17-year-old girl were recruited by the 103rd Base Command in Lanao del Sur Province, provided with martial arts training and used for weapons maintenance. Although the United Nations has no access to the areas under the control of the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF), a breakaway faction of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front led by Commander “Kato”, the country task force continued to receive credible reports that the armed group was actively training and providing weapons to children.

190. The National Democratic Front of the Philippines (NDFP), the political wing of NPA, continued to claim that it did not recruit children as combatants, but admitted that it recruited, trained and used them for non-combat purposes. Children continued to be killed and injured as a result of their affiliation with NPA in 2012. On 26 August 2012, for example, the country task force verified the killing of a 17-year-old NPA fighter during hostilities with the national armed forces in Paquibato district, Davao City.

191. The country task force also verified two incidents of recruitment and use of children by the Abu Sayyaf Group in Sulu and Basilan, involving at least 11 boys between 13 and 16 years of age. On 14 September 2012, for example, a 13-year-old boy armed with an M-203 grenade launcher was killed during an armed encounter with the national armed forces in Sumisip municipality, Basilan Province.

192. The United Nations remained concerned over the use of children by the national armed forces as guides and informants during military operations. In a verified case in July 2012, the Fifty-Seventh Infantry Battalion forced two boys aged 12 and 13 years to serve as guides to locate an NPA camp in North Cotabato Province. Upon notification of the incident, the national armed forces initiated an investigation on 20 March 2013. During the reporting period, it was also observed that the national armed forces continued to release names and pictures of children to the media, labelling them as members of armed groups.

193. In 2012, the country task force documented 66 cases of killing and maiming of children, of which 4 reportedly implicated the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, 3 NPA, 1 the Abu Sayyaf Group, 14 the national armed forces and 44 unidentified perpetrators. As a result of the attacks, 29 children were reportedly killed and 37 reportedly injured. There were no clashes between the national armed forces and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front in 2012. Most cases involving the Front related to internecine conflicts within Moro communities. During the reporting period, NPA conducted high-profile attacks on the national armed forces, often at the cost of the civilian population. On 1 September 2012, for example, NPA fighters of the Merardo Arce Command threw a grenade at a military outpost in a civilian community, injuring more than 50 persons, including 12 boys and 9 girls between 4 and 17 years of age.

194. In the course of their counter-insurgency campaign, the national armed forces were reportedly involved in indiscriminate attacks on civilian residences where NPA fighters were allegedly present. In a verified case, two boys aged 8 and 13 years were killed and a 5-year-old girl injured when the Twenty-Seventh Infantry Battalion strafed a house in Kiblawan municipality, Davao del Sur Province, on 18 October 2012. Following the incident, the national armed forces relieved and restricted to their barracks an officer and 11 enlisted personnel, who, at the time of writing of the present report, were undergoing pretrial investigation by the General Court Martial.

195. In 2012, incidents continued to occur in which schools were damaged in the course of hostilities. In July 2012, fighters from the Abu Sayyaf Group partially burned down Tipo-Tipo Central Elementary School in an effort to distract a military pursuit by the national armed forces after skirmishes in Sumisip municipality, Basilan Province. In August 2012, four schools were reportedly damaged by crossfire during armed encounters between the national armed forces and BIFF in Datu Unsay.

196. The military use of schools remained a concern. In four verified incidents, the national armed forces stationed military units in public elementary schools in Mindanao. In June 2012, the country task force verified that three units of the national armed forces had established a detachment next to Salipongan Primary School in Tugaya municipality, Lanao del Sur Province, resulting in the closure of the school for two weeks.

197. Since the expiry of the action plan between the Moro Islamic Liberation Front and the United Nations in July 2011, after two years of implementation, the signing of an addendum to extend the action plan remains pending. A significant delay in its implementation notwithstanding, the Front continued to express commitment in principle to the action plan. Recent progress in the peace talks between the Front and the Government, which resulted in the signing in October 2012 of a framework for a comprehensive peace agreement, may accelerate, with the support of the international community, the full implementation of the action plan, including the reintegration of children into civilian life. The framework agreement ensures specific social protection mechanisms for vulnerable groups, with particular emphasis on women and children in Bangsamoro areas.

198. In January 2012, a United Nations technical team met members of the NDFP negotiating panel for an initial discussion on child protection concerns. NDFP continued to deny that NPA had children in its ranks, but clarified its position that children of 15 years of age and older might be assigned to NPA self-defence and other non-combat units. On 29 June 2012, NDFP issued a unilateral declaration and programme of action on the rights, protection and welfare of children, in which it refuted the listing of NPA in the present report and rejected the application of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict to non-State armed groups and the Paris Principles. The activities put forward in the declaration do not include provisions on United Nations access and compliance monitoring.

199. I am pleased to note that the Government is finalizing the implementation of the monitoring, reporting and response system to prevent and respond to specific incidents of grave violations against children. The national armed forces are also preparing draft guidelines on the conduct of operations inside or within the immediate premises of schools and hospitals, which are expected to be launched as an operational directive during the first half of 2013. In addition, with regard to the use of children during military operations, the national armed forces have issued directives prohibiting such use of children, assigning responsibility to commanders, institutionalizing investigations and putting in place corrective measures.

Southern border provinces of Thailand

200. In 2012, efforts were made by the Government to protect children, who nevertheless continued to be victims of indiscriminate attacks by armed groups in the southern border provinces of Thailand: Yala, Pattani, Narathiwat and Songkhla. As a result of those attacks, which included drive-by shootings and bombings in crowded public places, 5 children were reportedly killed and at least 48 injured during the reporting period. In one instance, an 11-month-old boy was killed and a 10-month-old boy injured during a drive-by shooting at a tea house in Rangae district, Narathiwat Province, on 11 December 2012. The coordinated bomb attacks in Yala and Hat Yai of 31 March 2012 injured more than 300 civilians, including at least 16 children. The Government is investigating the incidents.

201. During the reporting period, armed groups also continued to carry out targeted attacks against schools and teachers. In 2012, at least 11 schools were partially damaged or destroyed in arson attacks or attacks with improvised explosive devices. On 24 September 2012, a bomb exploded at the entrance of Batu Mitrapap 66 School in Bacho district, Narathiwat Province, injuring two school directors. In another incident, Bang Maruat School in Panare district, Pattani Province, was burned down by militants on 29 November 2012. In addition, 11 incidents of targeted attacks were documented in 2012, resulting in the killing of six teachers and the injuring of eight others, with a worrisome spike in the final quarter of 2012. On 22 November 2012, the director of the Tha Kam Cham School in Nong Chik district, Pattani Province, was killed. As a result, the Confederation of Teachers of Southern Border Provinces closed 332 schools in the region for 10 days. On 11 December 2012, militants entered Ban Ba Ngo School in Mayo district, Pattani Province, and killed the school director and a teacher in front of the children. Some 1,200 government-run schools serving more than 200,000 schoolchildren in the four provinces were closed again for two days for security reasons. In those incidents, military personnel were also victims of the attacks. Since the attacks, the Government has stepped up investigations and boosted security measures.

202. Concern remained over the issue of informal association of children with village defence militias (Chor Ror Bor), who allegedly carry out duties similar to formal adult members. In this regard, the Government put in place clear regulations on the non-recruitment of children under the age of 18 years by those militias and sent reminders to all provinces to adhere to the provisions of the policy. The involvement of children in armed forces and armed groups remains to be explicitly criminalized in national legislation. The Government is amending the Child Protection Act of 2003 to explicitly criminalize the involvement of children with armed forces and armed groups.

203. I welcome the fact that the Government and the United Nations country team are engaging in dialogue on access to the southern border provinces to conduct independent verification of and report on alleged violations against children, including through minimum operating modalities. I encourage the Government to strengthen that dialogue with a view to agreeing on the minimum operating modalities to ensure the country team such access.

VI. Recommendations

204. I welcome the signing of action plans by the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Myanmar and Somalia, in addition to the progress made by other parties in releasing children. I strongly urge all parties to immediately cease all grave violations against children, and those parties who have been listed in my annual reports for recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, sexual violence against children and/or attacks on schools and hospitals or protected personnel, and who have not concluded action plans to do so without delay.

205. I note with appreciation that the number of action plans signed or under negotiation continued to increase in 2012. I call upon the donor community to enjoin a discussion to address the funding gaps for the implementation of these action plans and associated monitoring.

206. I call upon Member States to allow independent access to the United Nations for the purposes of monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children and to facilitate contact between the United Nations and non-State armed groups for dialogue, conclusion and follow-up on action plans in order to bring an end to violations, in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council on children and armed conflict. Such contact does not prejudge the political or legal status of those non-State armed groups.

207. I am encouraged by the increasing engagement between Member States and the United Nations at the country level for the better protection of children affected by armed conflict. In particular, I should like to highlight the value of interministerial committees as a successful partnership framework with Governments to discuss and follow up on child protection commitments and to foster action plan implementation. In that regard, I call upon Member States concerned to use interministerial committees more widely in cooperation with the United Nations.

208. The toll on children of the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic is unacceptable and unbearable. Urgent measures must be taken immediately by the parties to protect the lives and dignity of all children. I urge the Government immediately to cease bombardments of civilian areas, including the use of long-range missiles, artillery, air strikes and cluster munitions. The Government should be held responsible for all grave violations committed by groups affiliated to it, including the shabbiha and the intelligence forces. I also call upon the Government to put an end to the detention and any form of ill-treatment, including torture, of children for alleged association with the opposition. The use of terror tactics against the civilian population can also not be tolerated. In this regard, I urge all armed opposition groups to put an immediate end to these acts that cost the lives of children in the Syrian Arab Republic and to end the recruitment of children.

209. I reiterate my call upon the Security Council to tackle the issue of persistent perpetrators of grave violations against children, with the support of my Special Representative. The Council may wish to consider:

(a) Reaffirming its commitment to dealing with persistent perpetrators by requesting my Special Representative to brief it more regularly, devoting consultations to persistent perpetrators and including child protection as a specific issue of focus when undertaking relevant field visits;

(b) Continuing to consider the application of targeted measures and, in this regard, reviewing information provided in my annual reports to expedite current designation processes;

(c) Requesting its Working Group, in the light of recent discussions on persistent perpetrators, to update its toolkit (see S/2006/724) to include adequate mechanisms to deal with persistent perpetrators and, in this regard, to organize regular sessions on persistent perpetrators and the implementation of action plans.

210. I call upon the Council to continue to support the children and armed conflict agenda by strengthening provisions for the protection of children in all relevant mandates of United Nations peacekeeping, special political and peacebuilding missions, including the deployment of child protection advisers.

211. I call upon the Council to strengthen provisions for the protection of children in all relevant mandates, recognizing the country situations indicated herein that are without a political or peacekeeping mission and for which responsibility for these issues falls upon the Resident Coordinator.

212. In view of the continuing efforts of regional and subregional organizations in conflict prevention, mediation and peace support operations, I call upon all those organizations to further mainstream child protection considerations in their guidance and policy development, mission planning, training of personnel and conduct of peace support operations.

213. Compliance with international human rights and humanitarian law, with their emphasis on special protection for children, remains key to preventing grave violations against children. In this regard, I welcome the ratifications of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict during the reporting period, and I call upon Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify this key legal instrument. I encourage all States parties to the Convention and the Optional Protocol to implement the recommendations by the Committee on the Rights of the Child and to engage with the Committee and the wider United Nations system in this regard.

214. In the annexes to the present report, nine new parties to conflict are listed for recruitment and use of children: Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix fondamentale, Convention patriotique pour le salut du Kodro and Union des forces républicaines in the Central African Republic; M23 in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; MNLA, MUJAO and Ansar Dine in Mali; the Free Syrian Army in the Syrian Arab Republic; and Ansar al-Sharia in Yemen. The listing in my previous reports of Mai Mai groups for recruitment and use of children has been changed into the listing of APCLS under “Colonel Janvier”, Mai Mai “Lafontaine” and former elements of PARECO, and Mai Mai “Tawimbi”. Six new parties are listed for sexual violence against children: MNLA, MUJAO and Ansar Dine in Mali; M23 and Mai Mai Simba “Morgan” in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and the government forces in the Syrian Arab Republic.

215. During the previous reporting period, all parties in Nepal and Sri Lanka were delisted after full implementation of their action plans. In 2012, no further violations were recorded by any party in those country situations. While JEM remains listed under the Sudan section of the annexes, it has been removed from the Chad section, given that the United Nations no longer has information indicating that JEM is involved in violations against children on Chadian territory. APRD, which signed an action plan with the United Nations in October 2011, released some 1,300 children from its ranks and was dismantled as an armed group in 2012. Since it is no longer active, it has been removed from the annexes. Reference to the self-defence militia supported by the Central African Republic has also been removed, since it is no longer active. In the Sudan, Sudan Liberation Army/Free Will, JEM/Peace Wing and Sudan Liberation Army/Peace Wing have also been removed from the annexes, given that none remains militarily active.

General Assembly
Sixty-eighth session
Agenda item 65

Security Council
Sixty-ninth year

Promotion and protection of the rights of children

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2013, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2068 \(2012\), by which the Council requested me to continue to submit annual reports on the implementation of its resolutions and presidential statements on children and armed conflict.
2. The report highlights global trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children in 2013 and the main activities and initiatives with regard to the implementation of relevant Security Council resolutions and the conclusions of its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict. In follow-up to the previous report (A/67/845-S/2013/245), it provides an update on the cooperation among partners to the children and armed conflict agenda, including within the United Nations system.
3. In line with the resolutions of the Security Council on children and armed conflict, the present report includes in its annexes a list of parties that engage in the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children, the killing and maiming of children, recurrent attacks on schools and/or hospitals and recurrent attacks or threats of attacks against protected personnel, in contravention of international law.
4. All information presented in this report has been documented, vetted, and verified for accuracy by the United Nations. In situations where the ability to obtain or independently verify information is hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. The preparation of the report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, at Headquarters and in the field, and with relevant Member States.
5. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\), and in identifying situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is guided by the criteria found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence for determining the existence of an armed conflict. In the implementation of her mandate, my Special Representative has adopted a pragmatic and cooperative approach on the issue, with an emphasis on humanitarian principles, aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children affected by conflict in situations of concern. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

II. The impact of armed conflict on children

Trends and developments

6. Armed conflict continued to have a disproportionate impact on children. Indiscriminate attacks on civilian areas or attacks directly targeting civilians, through explosive weapons, air strikes or the use of terror tactics, took a worrisome toll on children. In 2013, the United Nations observed a significant spike in the killing and maiming of children in several situations, including in Afghanistan and Iraq.

7. The reporting period witnessed a deepening of the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic, where intensifying hostilities led to widespread grave violations against children and a worsening humanitarian crisis. In the Central African Republic, the recruitment and use of children became endemic throughout 2013 and increased with the surge in violence that has plagued the country since mid-September. With the resumption of conflict in South Sudan, pro-Government and opposition forces reportedly used children on a large scale and committed other grave violations.

8. The situation in northern Nigeria became of grave concern. While the humanitarian situation affecting at least half of the population living in north-eastern Nigeria remained critical, the extremist group known as Boko Haram intensified attacks on schools, resulting in the killing and maiming of children and other grave violations.

9. The recruitment and use of children in conflict remained prevalent. More than 4,000 cases were documented by the United Nations in 2013, but thousands more children are estimated to have been recruited and used. Impunity for grave violations against children, in particular sexual violence, is common to several situations and exacerbates even further the vulnerability of children. The detention of children for alleged association with armed groups or on security charges, highlighted as a concern in my previous annual report, continued in 17 of the 23 situations considered in the present report.

10. These and other worrisome trends during the reporting period call for a redoubling of efforts to better implement available tools to address the plight of children affected by armed conflict. Concrete and pragmatic measures must lead the way. The United Nations, and in particular my Special Representative, have sent a strong message in 2013 that efforts are being made to step up to the challenge.

“Children, Not Soldiers”

11. On 6 March 2014, my Special Representative and the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) launched the United Nations global campaign entitled “Children, Not Soldiers” to end the recruitment and use of children by Government security forces in conflict by the end of 2016. On 7 March, the Security Council endorsed the campaign’s objectives in its resolution 2143 \(2014\).

12. The campaign will be implemented in close cooperation with the eight Governments listed in the annexes to the present report for recruitment and use of children, all of which have signed or committed to an action plan and endorsed the campaign. The campaign aims at expediting the implementation of commitments to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children through the development of road maps identifying gaps and outstanding measures to be adopted by the Governments concerned, with the support of the United Nations and partners. Progress will be assessed against regular, joint reviews by the United Nations and Governments concerned.

13. Enhanced coordination between the United Nations country task forces and Governments concerned ensures that road maps identify remaining gaps and set priority activities, benchmarks and detailed deadlines. Such efforts will allow for expedited, yet context-specific and sustainable implementation of action plans. A clear sequencing of activities and measures provides the basis for step-by-step compliance assessments, reflecting the remaining challenges identified by both signatories to action plans, thus ensuring a structured path to delisting for all parties concerned. In that regard, the establishment of interministerial committees, facilitating an all-inclusive government approach, is critical. I note with satisfaction that the existing tools incorporated into this campaign, at this initial stage, have already yielded results. For example, in Chad, through the joint efforts of the Government and the United Nations system, 2013 marked a year of positive progress. Since May 2013, based on a mutually agreed set of priority measures, the Government and military authorities have intensified their efforts to reach compliance with the engagements undertaken in the action plan signed with the United Nations in 2011.

Engaging armed groups

14. As I emphasized in my message for the launch of the “Children, Not Soldiers” campaign, the ultimate goal is to ensure that no child is associated with parties to conflict — ever, anywhere. In that regard, it is important to note that the campaign, while focusing on State actors, does not diminish the attention paid to non-State actors. On the contrary, as described in the present report, and despite the ongoing challenges in respect of access to and dialogue with non-State armed groups to end grave violations against children, the number of public statements and command orders issued by armed groups prohibiting the recruitment and use of children has increased. That trend was observed in nine situations described in the report and provides a basis for building momentum to address grave violations against children by armed groups.

15. Fifty-one armed groups are included in the lists annexed to the present report. Those parties are very diverse in nature and require different strategies of engagement, and the implementation of child protection commitments may vary considerably. Advocacy strategies require the identification of specific incentives based on the military structure, size, modus operandi and other characteristics of armed groups. Taking those aspects into account, concrete commitments are then identified by the United Nations and translated into activities and measures with the armed group concerned, culminating in an action plan agreed on by both signatories.

16. Entry points for initial contact are chosen strategically in close cooperation with all pertinent actors in a given situation. Peace processes, for example, have provided strategic opportunities to reach armed groups that have already showed a willingness to discuss political commitments. It is also crucial to mainstream the children and armed conflict agenda into other forms and venues of engagement with armed groups. Sensitization on the consequences of the military use of schools may lead to a dialogue on how to end the use of children and the use of schools.

17. The Arms Trade Treaty adopted by the General Assembly in April 2013 is a significant new instrument. Keeping armed groups from acquiring arms and ammunition contributes to the protection of children in conflict situations.

Protecting education and health care in conflict

18. Attacks on schools and hospitals are a common feature in the majority of situations covered in the present report. I welcome the guidance note on Security Council resolution 1998 \(2011\) issued jointly by my Special Representative, UNICEF, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization. Its timeliness was further underlined by Security Council resolution 2143 \(2014\), in which the Council reiterated its concern regarding attacks on schools and hospitals and requested enhanced monitoring of the military use of schools. That practice, which deprives children of their basic right to access to education and puts them at risk, was documented in 15 of 23 situations.

19. The guidance note provides conceptual clarity and technical advice, including advocacy tools and an action plan template to end and prevent attacks on schools and hospitals and protected personnel, as well as an operational strategy to deter the use of schools. Therefore, it is not only a crucial tool for United Nations child protection, education and health practitioners on the ground. It may also serve Member States, regional and subregional organizations, or other pertinent actors as guidance for advocacy with third parties, or may serve to develop additional binding measures to better prevent attacks on schools and hospitals and to deter the military use of schools in accordance with international law in that regard. As for other child protection concerns, the protection of schools and hospitals should be introduced in military planning and operating procedures at all times. Creating awareness and mainstreaming at peacetime — setting in motion a cultural change — is crucial to preventing violations in times of conflict.

Mainstreaming of the children and armed conflict agenda

20. I welcome the continued support and attention of the Security Council to the children and armed conflict agenda in its thematic resolutions. I commend the Council for mainstreaming that agenda in many of its country-specific and thematic resolutions. It is also thanks to the Council's initiative that the plight of children in conflict is better recognized today than ever before. Cooperation among United Nations entities as well as with other partners from diverse thematic backgrounds continues to be strengthened, for example, through the above-mentioned guidance note on resolution 1998 (2011), as does the expertise of actors working for the well-being and protection of children. In view of the latter, I welcome the Council's appraisal of the importance of training, in particular in view of the predeployment child protection training for peacekeepers launched on 8 April 2014 by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and the strengthening of the child protection adviser capacity.

21. The present report could not have been produced without the Council's groundbreaking resolutions on children and armed conflict. In that regard, my "Rights up front" initiative, which ensures that the mandated human rights responsibilities of the Organization are fully integrated across its peace and security work, also supports strengthened action on grave violations against children.

22. The United Nations continued to work with regional and subregional organizations in the light of their increasing role in mediation, peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding missions, as well as in the development of child protection standards and best practices. On 17 September 2013, my Special Representative signed a declaration of intent with the Peace and Security Department of the African Union Commission, which is being implemented in partnership with UNICEF. Through the expert advice of a child protection specialist, the Peace and Security Department, with the support of the Office of my Special Representative and UNICEF, is working to develop guidance and mainstream child protection in the policies and activities of the African Union. I also welcome the continued role of the European Union in addressing the impact of armed conflict on children, including its outspoken support for and advocacy of the "Children, Not Soldiers" campaign. The Office of my Special Representative continued to work with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) with regard to the mainstreaming of child protection standards among the forces of its member States.

III. Information on grave violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

Afghanistan

23. Although the recruitment and use of children remained underreported owing to security constraints, the United Nations documented the recruitment and use of 97 children (all boys), as young as eight years of age. The majority of the children (72) were reportedly recruited and used by armed opposition groups, including the Taliban and the Haqqani Network. Nine of the children were recruited to conduct suicide attacks. In one incident, in May 2013, a 15-year-old boy conducted a suicide attack against an Afghan Local Police commander in Muqur district, Ghazni Province, killing three local police officers and two civilians, and injuring 16 civilians. Children were also recruited to manufacture and plant improvised explosive devices, as combatants and for other roles, including as sex slaves. In one particular case in Laghman Province, State authorities arrested 21 children, as young as seven years of age, allegedly on their way to Pakistan for suicide attack training by the Taliban. The Taliban rejected the allegations. According to the Government, all the children were released and reunited with their families. The recruitment and use of 25 children was attributed to the Afghan national security forces, including 14 by the local police, 5 by the national police and 1 by the Afghan national army. For example, a 12-year-old boy was killed when national police elements forced him to check a suspicious looking object. One boy associated with the Afghan national army in Kunar Province was used as a porter and was injured by an improvised explosive device. In a positive trend, child protection units within national police recruitment centres in the western region rejected 132 boys from voluntary enlistment.

24. According to the Ministry of Justice, 196 boys were held in juvenile rehabilitation centres across the country on national security-related charges, including for alleged association with armed opposition groups as of December 2013. The United Nations remained concerned regarding several reports of alleged ill-treatment and sexual abuse of child detainees. On 31 July 2013, the United Nations was granted access to the Parwan Detention Facility to meet with 2 of the 70 boys who had been arrested by international military forces between December 2009 and May 2013 and had been detained in the facility under the authority of the Government of Afghanistan at the time of the visit. Most of the children are believed to be in detention without charges and without the opportunity to have access to a court to assess the lawfulness of their detention.

25. At least 545 children were killed and 1,149 injured in 790 documented incidents. Child casualties increased by 30 per cent in 2013 compared with 2012. Armed opposition groups, including the Taliban and Hezb-e-Islami, were responsible for a majority (889) of the recorded child casualties. The use of improvised explosive devices and suicide attacks, including by boys in at least two instances, resulted in the killing of 229 children and in injury to 396 others. On 17 May, for example, two improvised explosive devices were detonated in Kandahar city, killing a six-year-old boy and injuring 18 boys and a girl, as young as four. Pro-Government forces, including international military forces, were responsible for the killing of at least 81 children and injury to 125 others, mainly resulting from clashes with armed groups. At least 120 of those casualties were caused by Afghan national security forces, which, as part of the handover and transition of security responsibilities to Afghan forces, has taken the lead in all operations since 18 June. Thirty-seven children were killed and 19 others were injured in international military air strikes. In addition, clashes between pro-Government forces and armed groups resulted in 167 children killed and 432 injured, including by gun shots and artillery and mortar shelling, for which it was not possible to verify a perpetrator. Some incidents were acknowledged by international security forces. Finally, civilian casualties resulting from drone strikes increased from 16 in 2012 to 59 in 2013, including the killing of 2 children. For example, on 27 November, in Mohammad Aqa district, Logar Province, a 10-year-old boy was killed in a reported drone strike on the premises of Shahid Ghulam Sakhi High School.

26. Twelve incidents of sexual violence against 11 boys and five girls were verified during the reporting period, including by the Taliban, the Haqqani Network, and the national police. Sexual violence against children remains a feature of the conflict but continues to be underreported owing to a climate of impunity as well as fear of reprisals and stigmatization. At least 15 boys detained by Afghan national security forces on national security-related charges claimed to having been raped or received threats of sexual violence upon arrest or in detention. Several reports on the sexual abuse of boys by Taliban and Haqqani Network commanders were also received, including from a 16-year-old boy formerly associated with the Haqqani Network and arrested by the national police in December 2013. The practice of bacha-bazi, the use of boys as sex slaves by men in positions of power, remained a serious concern. The Government stated that any act of sexual violence against children by elements of the Afghan national security forces was subject to criminal investigation, and an educational programme to prevent the practice of bacha-bazi was prepared in 2013 with the assistance of the national police.

27. Schools continued to be attacked by parties to conflict or indirectly damaged in clashes. In at least 73 incidents, schools were attacked, resulting in the killing of at least 11 children and in injury to 46 others. In some incidents, improvised explosive devices were planted inside school premises by armed opposition groups. Schools were also damaged by nearby suicide and improvised explosive device attacks targeting public areas or Government and international military forces, resulting in the killing of children. The Taliban also continued to issue threats against girls' schools and other schools. For instance, in May 2013, local Taliban members in Nangarhar Province, issued a letter in which they threatened teachers and children at a girls' school with acid attacks if they continued to attend school. Also in May, in Zabul Province, the Taliban forced the closure of 40 schools in retaliation for Government action against the groups. At least 13 teachers were killed or injured in 2013 and eight teachers were abducted by armed opposition groups.

28. According to the Afghan Ministry of Education, approximately 115,000 children were affected by the temporary or permanent closure of 539 schools owing to the security situation in the southern (482 cases), south-eastern (39) and western (18) regions. In addition, the military use of schools by the Afghan national security forces continued to put children at risk of attacks by armed groups and affect their access to education in at least 15 documented incidents. For example, in October, in Warduj district of Badakhshan Province, the Afghan national security forces temporarily closed down three schools for use as forward bases and installed artillery on the roofs. The Government states that orders have been disseminated to all Afghan national security forces units to refrain from using schools or health clinics as bases.

29. Incidents affecting access by children to health care included damage to health-care facilities, the placement of improvised explosive devices within the premises of clinics and hospitals, and forced entry into and looting of health-care facilities. In addition, at least 39 health-care personnel were killed or injured, abducted or intimidated. All the incidents were attributed to armed opposition groups, except one incident of forced entry into a health-care facility and its temporary use by international military forces and two incidents involving the intimidation of health-care personnel and forced entry by Afghan national security forces. The remaining incidents were attributed to armed opposition groups, including the Taliban. Although the Taliban publicly supported polio vaccination efforts in 2013, local factions in several provinces continued to restrict access for vaccination campaigns.

30. At least 30 children were abducted in 17 verified incidents, including 16 attributed to the Taliban and other armed opposition groups. Children were abducted for their alleged involvement in spying on behalf of the Government or international forces, for recruitment, sexual abuse and as reprisal against family members working or allegedly supporting the Government or international forces. At least 10 boys abducted by the Taliban were executed, including 2 who were abducted on 23 May for alleged spying for the Afghan national security forces in Bati Kot district of Nangarhar Province, as stated in a letter issued by the Taliban. Both boys were tortured before they were killed. On 19 October, in Bala Buluk district, Farah Province, in the only documented incident perpetrated by the local police, four boys were summarily executed after being abducted and blamed for planting improvised explosive devices for armed opposition groups.

31. At least 83 humanitarian staff were abducted and 35 were killed or injured by armed opposition groups during the reporting period. Humanitarian access was also affected by at least 23 incidents of attacks on or looting of humanitarian convoys and facilities of humanitarian agencies.

32. I welcome the progress made regarding compliance with the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children, including owing to the unimpeded access granted to the United Nations for screening purposes and the continuing build-up of child protection units within national and local police recruitment centres. I encourage the Government of Afghanistan to redouble its efforts and expedite the implementation of the action plan in line with the 15-point “road map towards compliance”, drafted in August 2013 with the United Nations and the assistance of the Office of my Special Representative. I note that the Government submitted its third progress report in March 2014, in which it detailed the steps taken towards the implementation of the action plan, and that international organizations have offered to assist the Government in its obligations in that regard.

Central African Republic

33. Throughout 2013, the human rights situation worsened dramatically, with a multiplication and shifting of alliances of armed groups: on the one hand, the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix (CPJP), the CPJP fondamentale, the Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) and the Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR), which came to form, or were associated in varying degrees with, the Séléka coalition; and the anti-Balaka, a local defence militia, which emerged in the second half of the year in response to the systematic attacks against the civilian population by the ex-Séléka coalition. Starting in December 2012, the Séléka coalition advanced towards Bangui, seizing the capital on 24 March 2013 and ousting President François Bozizé. Michel Djotodia, one of Séléka’s leaders, declared himself the new Head of State.

34. On 13 September, Michel Djotodia dismantled the Séléka<sup>1</sup> by presidential decree. However, widespread abuses continued to be perpetrated between September and December 2013 by ex-Séléka units that refused to disband and continued to engage in systematic killings, rape and torture, and the looting and destruction of villages.

<sup>1</sup> Reference will be made to Séléka when the incidents took place prior to the dismantlement (January to September) and ex-Séléka when incidents occurred after September.

35. In response to the systematic exactions and attacks against civilians by the ex-Séléka between September and November 2013, the anti-Balaka became increasingly organized in different parts of the country. In some cases, the militias were associated with elements of the former Central African Armed Forces. Tensions between the Muslim and Christian communities were exacerbated by increasing clashes between the ex-Séléka and the anti-Balaka.

36. On 5 December, anti-Balaka elements launched a coordinated attack against ex-Séléka positions in Bangui, which triggered a wave of violence with grave violations being committed by both sides.

37. Access by the United Nations remained severely restricted throughout 2013, significantly disrupting the monitoring and reporting of grave violations against children. Documented cases of grave violations are only indicative, therefore, of the actual scale of violations that has occurred.

38. Both the anti-Balaka and the Séléka coalition, prior and after its dismantlement, systematically recruited and used children. The United Nations documented the recruitment and use of 171 boys and 17 girls, and estimates that several thousand children have been and remain associated with the ex-Séléka and the anti-Balaka. The progressive deterioration of the security environment also led to the re-recruitment of children. For example, on 1 April, 41 children (36 boys and 5 girls), separated from CPJP in August 2012, were re-recruited by Séléka elements in the north-eastern towns of Ndélé and Bria from a Transit and Orientation Centre. In December, five boys previously separated from the ex-Séléka were re-recruited by the anti-Balaka in Bangui.

39. Hundreds of children are estimated to have been killed or maimed by machetes, firearms and other weaponry. The United Nations verified the killing of 27 children and the maiming of 115 others. Most documented incidents occurred in the context of the unconstitutional change of power on 24 March 2013 and the December attacks by the anti-Balaka on ex-Séléka positions in Bangui. The latter resulted in the death of an estimated 1,000 civilians, including many children.

40. While the majority of the children were killed or maimed in the context of clashes between the ex-Séléka and the anti-Balaka, targeted attacks against children were also documented. In two separate incidents, in December 2013 and early January 2014, six boys were beheaded by Muslim civilians in retaliation for attacks by the anti-Balaka. On 2 December, 10 children were wounded in an anti-Balaka attack against civilians in the town of Boali. In early 2014, grave violations continued to be committed by both sides.

41. The United Nations has documented sexual violence against 20 girls, mainly by the Séléka. For instance, on 29 July, an 11-year-old girl was raped by a Séléka combatant in the town of Bossangoa. Weak monitoring capacity, fear of stigmatization and a climate of impunity continue to heavily affect reporting on sexual violence. Nonetheless, credible reports suggest that sexual violence by Séléka combatants was part of a larger pattern of systematic violations committed against civilians in areas under their control throughout 2013.

42. At least 36 schools and five hospitals were attacked by ex-Séléka. For example, on 24 August, the Séléka burned down a school in Nana Gribizi Province after school authorities refused to hand over their archives. On 5 December, ex-Séléka combatants attacked the “Hôpital de l’amitié” in Bangui and summarily executed 10 patients. The hospital remained closed until 4 January 2014 and after security provisions by the African-led International Support Mission in the Central African Republic (MISCA) were put in place. In addition, at least 20 schools were reportedly used as bases and barracks by the ex-Séléka throughout the Central African Republic. Many schools remained closed throughout the Central African Republic, after having been looted or used by armed groups, damaged by shelling or destroyed by fire, causing a heavy impact on the right of children to education. A group of anti-Balaka and former elements of the national armed forces were observed using a school in Bangui following the 5 December attacks. The ex-Séléka also used and looted health facilities in at least seven documented cases. For example, from July to September, a Séléka unit established its base at the Ouandago health-care centre in Nana Gribizi before leaving the centre as a result of humanitarian advocacy efforts.

43. Owing to the security situation, humanitarian access was limited in large areas of the Central African Republic. The United Nations documented specific cases of denial of humanitarian access by the national armed forces in two incidents and by the ex-Séléka in 22 incidents. For example, in February, the national armed forces prevented international humanitarian non-governmental organizations from leaving Bangui because of their alleged support of the Séléka. On 11 February 2013, the Séléka prevented a United Nations plane from landing in Bria, preventing the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The compounds of many international non-governmental organizations were looted throughout the year.

44. On 26 November, the Ministry of Defence granted the United Nations unconditional screening access to military barracks and cantonment sites in view of the separation and reintegration of children associated with armed groups. The transitional authorities reiterated such commitments following a visit by my Special Representative in December. A total of 149 children were separated from the ex-Séléka. The fluid command structure of the anti-Balaka, among other challenges, was an obstacle to opening a structured dialogue. The United Nations continued to engage with international forces, including Operation Sangaris and MISCA, on the development of standard operating procedures for the separation and referral of children associated with armed groups. In early 2014, a national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration strategy was under revision by the transitional Government. At the time of reporting, the United Nations was working closely with the transitional authorities in that regard to ensure that the national strategy included adequate provisions on the release and reintegration of children.

45. The abominable atrocities committed against children by armed groups and in the context of the ongoing violence must stop and perpetrators must be held accountable. I am deeply concerned about the ongoing humanitarian crisis and the continued climate of lawlessness and impunity. In view of the re-establishment of national security forces, the ongoing disarmament of the ex-Séléka and the anti-Balaka must be accompanied by a thorough investigation of operational and political chains of command responsible for grave violations against children.

Chad

46. The deployment of Chadian troops to the African-led International Support Mission in Mali (AFISMA) prompted renewed momentum to accelerate the implementation of the action plan signed in June 2011 to end and prevent under-age recruitment in the Armée nationale tchadienne. My Special Representative, jointly with UNICEF, visited Chad in May 2013. On that occasion, the Chadian authorities renewed their commitment to engage constructively with the United Nations to expedite the implementation of the action plan, appointed a high-level focal point in that regard and adopted a road map detailing 10 specific and time-bound measures to be implemented in the short and long term to achieve compliance with the action plan.

47. Since then, the Government of Chad, in cooperation with the United Nations and other partners, has taken significant steps to fulfil its obligations. A central child protection unit in the Ministry of Defence and one in each of the eight “defence and security zones” were established to coordinate the monitoring and protection of children’s rights and to implement awareness-raising activities. Between August and October 2013, the Government and the United Nations jointly conducted screening and age verification of approximately 3,800 troops of the armée nationale tchadienne in all eight zones. Age verification standards had been previously developed during a workshop organized by the United Nations in July. In addition, between August and September 2013, a training-the-trainers programme on child protection was attended by 346 members of the armée nationale tchadienne. A child protection training module to be integrated in the curricula of the police and gendarmerie and of the senior military school in N’Djamena was under development at the time of reporting.

48. Since July 2013, troops of the armée nationale tchadienne to be deployed in Mali started to receive predeployment training on child protection and international humanitarian law, including 864 troops of the armée nationale tchadienne attending child protection training at the Loumia training centre in December. The United Nations stands ready to support further training initiatives for the troops, including the systematic training of troops for international peacekeeping operations.

49. In October 2013, a presidential directive was adopted to confirm 18 years as the minimum age for recruitment into the armed and security forces. It also established age verification procedures and instructed that “penal and disciplinary sanctions” would be taken against those violating the orders. The directive was disseminated among the commanders of all eight “defence and security zones”, including in the context of several training and verification missions. On 4 February 2014, the recruitment and use of children was explicitly criminalized through the adoption of a presidential decree. I encourage the National Assembly to expedite the consideration and adoption of the Child Protection Code, which will further strengthen the protection of children in Chad. Finally, following the adoption in May 2013 of the Law on the Organization of the Civil Registry, the United Nations, in collaboration with the Government, undertook the late registration of 100,000 births in N’Djamena and is developing a two-year strategy for capacity-building in civil registration.

50. While the efforts made by the Government to meet all obligations under the action plan resulted in significant progress, a number of challenges remained to ensure sustainability and the effective prevention of violations against children. Chad should pursue comprehensive and thorough screening and training of its armed and security forces to continue to prevent the presence of children, including in the light of Chad’s growing involvement in peacekeeping operations. While no new cases of recruitment of children were documented by the United Nations in 2013 and no children were found during the joint screening exercises, interviews confirmed that soldiers had been integrated in the past into the armée nationale tchadienne from armed groups while still under the age of 18. Moreover, the strengthening of operating procedures, such as those for age verification, which ensure the accountability of perpetrators, and free and accessible birth registration, should remain a priority for the Chadian authorities.

51. The security situation in neighbouring countries continued to affect children in Chad. At the time of reporting, the crisis in the Central African Republic, border porosity and weak State authority in the country had resulted in the inflow of approximately 80,000 refugees, including unaccompanied children into Chad. In May 2013, the United Nations received allegations of cross-border recruitment of Chadian children by the Séléka. A significant number of children associated with the ex-Séléka were reportedly crossing the border into the Central African Republic in Tissi area. In June, five Chadian children separated from the Séléka were re-recruited from a transit centre in Bangui, where they awaited repatriation to Chad and family reunification. In addition, a significant influx of refugees from Darfur, the Sudan, into areas contaminated with explosive remnants of war in Chad was recorded. On 28 June and 5 July, eight refugee children from Darfur, between 8 and 14 years of age, were killed (two boys) or maimed (six girls) in two incidents involving explosive remnants of war in Amboukoun, Tissi. I encourage the Chadian authorities to continue to work closely with the United Nations to provide refugee children with adequate protection and care.

Côte d'Ivoire

52. Despite the ongoing peace and reconciliation process and ongoing efforts regarding the reintegration of ex-combatants, the overall child protection situation remains of concern in the light of insecurity in some areas and a lack of accountability for grave violations against children.

53. In 2013, the United Nations documented a total of 30 grave violations against children perpetrated by the Forces républicaines de Côte d'Ivoire (FRCI). Four cases of recruitment and use of children by FRCI were documented. The children, between 13 and 17 years of age, were manning FRCI checkpoints in Mankono and M'bahiakro and, in one case, served as a cook.

54. Sexual violence against children remained the most recurrent violation. At least 23 girls, between 11 and 17 years of age, were raped by FRCI elements (20) and unknown armed elements (3) in the northern and western parts of the country. Following advocacy by the United Nations, five FRCI elements were arrested, but charges were reclassified to indecent assault. At the time of reporting, one of the arrested FRCI elements had been prosecuted, and condemned to five years of imprisonment and fined. The impunity and weak capacity of the national judicial system to address sexual violence have hindered access to justice for victims across the country, including in Abidjan. As a result of such gaps in institutional capacity, but also owing to the fear of retaliation and stigmatization, out-of-court settlements of rape cases remain frequent and to the detriment of the victims' rights to access justice and compensation.

55. The United Nations also verified five cases of military use of schools and hospitals by FRCI. For example, a primary school in Dja-Kouakoukro was used by FRCI for military purposes, preventing children from attending classes for two months. In addition, a health centre in Ranouinke had been used by FRCI since 2011. Following advocacy efforts, check points in the vicinity of three schools in Touba were dismantled in March 2013.

56. My Special Representative visited Côte d'Ivoire from 26 to 30 October 2013. During that occasion, she discussed with the national authorities the issue of impunity for sexual violence against children and advocated for the removal of the victim's obligation to produce a medical certificate as a requirement for filing a complaint and pressing charges against perpetrators.

57. A series of training and capacity-building sessions on child protection were organized by the United Nations for the defence and security forces. In November, a child protection cell was re-established within FRCI to liaise with child protection actors and deal with child protection concerns. The draft national child protection policy to address violence against children, assistance to child victims and the issue of impunity was pending adoption by the Government at the time of reporting. Furthermore, on 5 December, the Government adopted guidelines and procedures for service providers for the prevention, referral of and response to grave violations committed against children. Accountability for sexual violence against children and improved access to justice and adequate services should be the priorities for improved protection of children in Côte d'Ivoire.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

58. On 24 February 2013, as a result of international and regional mediation efforts, the Peace, Security and Cooperation Framework for the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Great Lakes region was signed in Addis Ababa by the Democratic Republic of the Congo and 10 regional countries as well as four international organizations. However, hostilities between the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) and the Mouvement du 23 mars (M23) continued until the military defeat of M23 in November. In the northern part of North Kivu, the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) intensified attacks on FARDC and the civilian population, prompting FARDC to respond with the support of the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) in early 2014. In addition, the security situation in Katanga Province also deteriorated in the last months of 2013, with systematic attacks on villages by Mayi Mayi Kata Katanga.

59. The United Nations documented 910 children (783 boys and 127 girls), who had been newly recruited and used by armed groups. Among them, 609 were Congolese, 28 Rwandan, and 5 Ugandan, while the nationality of 268 children remained undetermined. Almost half of the children were reportedly used as combatants, but children were also used as porters, cooks, informants and in other support roles. Most of the girls were subjected to sexual slavery. Armed groups recruiting children included the Mayi Mayi Kata Katanga, Mayi Mayi Simba "Morgan" and other Mayi Mayi groups (297 children), Nyatura (338), the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) (47), M23 (38), Raïa Mutomboki (37), Forces populaires congolais-Armée Populaire (FPC/AP) (ex-PARECO) (24), Forces de résistance patriotique en Ituri (FRPI) (22), Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS) (18), Union des patriotes congolais pour la paix (16), Nduma défense du Congo (NDC)/Cheka (15) and other armed groups (58).

60. With regard to preventing new child recruits into FARDC during the comprehensive recruitment campaign in 2013, the United Nations separated 113 children, including 79 from training centres to which the United Nations was granted unimpeded access under the action plan process.

61. At least 136 children were arrested and detained by FARDC for alleged association with armed groups. Of these, 21 children formerly associated with M23 (13 Congolese and 8 claiming to be Rwandan) were arrested in North and South Kivu and transferred to FARDC military intelligence headquarters in Kinshasa. All children except for one were released following advocacy by MONUSCO.

62. At least 68 children were killed in 2013, compared with 154 documented cases in 2012; and at least 96 were maimed, compared with 113 documented cases in 2012. Most casualties were attributed to Mayi Mayi groups. For instance, on 25 September 2013, in Bulende, North Kivu, NDC/Cheka elements killed six children. In February 2013, Mayi Mayi Kata Katanga killed at least seven children and maimed four others during an attack on Kabwele village, Katanga. Two four-year-old girls were locked into a hut and burned alive, while other children were killed or maimed by arrows and bullets. M23 was responsible for 24 child casualties, mainly during clashes with FARDC. On 11 December 2013, in an attack by ADF in Beni Territory, 11 children, including a two-month-old girl, were severely mutilated and killed with machetes. Finally, FARDC was involved in the killing and maiming of 36 children, predominantly during clashes with armed groups. For example, on 24 July 2013, three children were killed and four maimed when FARDC launched rockets on M23 positions in Rumangabo, North Kivu.

63. The United Nations verified 209 cases of conflict-related sexual violence against girls, some as young as 4 years of age. Mayi Mayi groups and FARDC were identified as the main perpetrators with 91 and 43 verified cases, respectively. Mayi Mayi Simba “Morgan” elements in Orientale Province raped 59 girls in 2013. For instance, following the rape of 19 girls during an attack on 6 January 2013 in Mambasa territory, 25 girls were raped on 5 February during an attack on Bafwambaya village, Haut-Uélé territory.

64. Impunity for the perpetrators of sexual violence remained a concern. Of the 209 perpetrators identified, 66 were arrested and 36 were sentenced. Thirty-nine FARDC elements and seven high-ranking officers were also accused of mass rapes and other human rights violations committed in and around Minova, South Kivu, in late November and early December 2012 and are currently undergoing trial before the Operational Military Court of North Kivu Province.

65. The United Nations verified 95 attacks on schools. ADF were the most recurrent perpetrators, looting 21 schools in Beni territory, North Kivu, followed by FRPI, which looted and damaged 10 schools in Irumu territory, Ituri district. Other incidents were attributed to FARDC, Mayi Mayi groups, including APCLS, Yakutumba, and LaFontaine, FDLR, Raïa Mutomboki, Nyatura and M23. In addition, 25 incidents of military use of schools were reported, including 13 cases by FARDC. Forty-two attacks on hospitals were also documented, including the looting of medical supplies and equipment, affecting the health care of at least 5,000 children in North Kivu and Orientale Province. Seventeen cases were attributed to ADF, nine to FARDC, three to FRPI and two to M23. FARDC were urged by the United Nations to take disciplinary measures against FARDC elements that attacked or used schools or hospitals, as stipulated in the respective directive of 3 May 2013.

66. Parties to the conflict abducted 147 children (70 girls and 77 boys) in 2013. The abductees were mainly recruited as combatants, or subjected to sexual slavery or forced labour in mining sites controlled by armed groups. The vast majority of abductions occurred in Orientale Province (79) and in North Kivu (77). The most notorious perpetrators were Mayi Mayi Simba “Morgan”, abducting 39 children (27 girls and 12 boys), mainly for sexual slavery, followed by ADF (12 girls and 16 boys) and the FRPI (19 boys and 3 girls). FARDC reportedly abducted nine girls and one boy, as young as six. FARDC elements in Bweremana, North Kivu, and a group of presumed deserters from the same regiment were involved in two separate cases involving the abduction and rape of a total of nine girls.

67. The United Nations documented 109 security incidents affecting humanitarian access, of which 104 took place in the Kivus, attributed to the Raïa Mutomboki (16), FARDC (14), M23 (4) and the Police nationale congolaise (4) as well as Mayi Mayi and unknown armed groups. In 39 of these incidents, FARDC (12) or armed groups (27) elements physically assaulted humanitarian workers on duty.

68. A total of 1,722 children (210 girls and 1,512 boys), recruited both in 2013 and previous years, were separated from armed groups and armed forces in 2013. They escaped or were released mainly from Mayi Mayi groups (635), Nyatura (354), FDLR (140), Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) (19), M23 (83) and FARDC (10 in addition to the 113 mentioned above). The United Nations, in close cooperation with the Government of Uganda, was also following up on the status of 96 unaccompanied children among M23 elements who fled to Uganda. Throughout 2013, UNICEF partners have provided assistance to a total of 4,804 children (738 girls and 4,083 boys) formerly associated with armed groups and armed forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

69. In November, my Special Representative visited the Democratic Republic of the Congo to assess the Government’s progress in the implementation of the action plan. On 3 May, the Ministry of Defence issued a directive prohibiting the killing, maiming and, recruitment of, and sexual violence against, children as well as the military use of schools and hospitals, foreseeing disciplinary measures or military prosecution. The same day, the Agence nationale de renseignement issued a directive for children in detention for alleged association with armed groups to be handed over to the United Nations. FARDC has designated child protection focal points to work with the United Nations country task force in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo. Since its establishment in December 2012, the joint technical working group in Kinshasa held 17 meetings and started a national prevention campaign.

Iraq

70. 2013 was marked by a significant increase in the number of security incidents, resulting in the killing of 7,818 civilians, including at least 248 children. This is the highest number of casualties reported since 2008. The most affected governorates were Baghdad, Kirkuk, Ninewa, Diyala, Anbar, Wassit and Salahaddin. The Islamic State of Iraq (ISI) and Al-Qaida in Iraq (AQ-I) were allegedly responsible for most of the documented incidents.

71. Reports from the governorates of Anbar, Ninewa and Salahaddin indicated the continued association of children with various armed groups, including AQ-I. In addition, continued reports were received on boys manning the checkpoints of the Awakening Councils under the control of the Ministry of Defence after having been recruited locally with falsified identification papers. Reporting is limited due to issues of access, insecurity in relevant areas, and the reluctance of authorities to release information on perpetrators. I note that Iraqi law prohibits the recruitment of children into Government forces and encourages its criminalization, in line with obligations under the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

72. As at December 2013, according to the Government, at least 391 children, including 18 girls, were being held in juvenile reformatory detention facilities (237), prisons or police stations under indictment or conviction for terrorism-related charges under article 4 of the Anti-Terrorism Act (2005). The children had been detained for periods ranging from two months to more than three years. Schools and learning programmes were established in four juvenile detention centres in the governorates of Baghdad, Thi-Qar and Basra with the support of the Ministry of Education and UNICEF.

73. According to the Government, 335 children were killed and 1,326 others injured in 2013. The United Nations, in 167 verified incidents, recorded 248 children killed and 665 others injured, including as a result of improvised explosive devices and in complex attacks. AQ-I was reportedly responsible for most of the incidents. On 11 March 2013, in Dibis district, Kirkuk governorate, the explosion of a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device caused substantial damage to an adjacent secondary school and injured 106 students (70 boys and 36 girls, between 13 and 17 years of age). Assassinations and raids targeting members of the Awakening Council, police officers or military personnel and their families were also on the rise, resulting in the killing of 13 children and the injuring of 18 others in direct or indirect fire.

74. Twenty-seven attacks on schools and hospitals/medical facilities were reported, of which five were verified. Most were a result of improvised explosive devices placed inside or in the vicinity of schools and hospitals in the governorates of Baghdad, Anbar, Diyala and Ninewa. On 6 October, in Qabak village (Ninewa governorate), 15 children were killed and at least 112 injured by a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device detonated in the playground of the primary school. The head of the school and an unknown number of teachers were also killed. On 27 June, in Baquba district (Diyala governorate), five ambulances were destroyed in the explosion of a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device as they arrived to a scene where many civilians, including children, had been killed and injured in a previous improvised explosive device attack on a popular café. No one claimed responsibility for any of those incidents.

75. The United Nations also verified the killing or injuring of 13 education personnel and 16 medical staff. In an incident in Diyala governorate, on 1 August, a medical doctor was killed and his two children wounded in an improvised explosive device attack against their house by AQ-I, reportedly because he refused to issue falsified death certificates for the armed group. Threats against teachers, particularly in Diyala governorate, are a growing source of concern. For example, in December, flyers were spread in Diyala threatening English language teachers in primary and secondary schools. No one claimed responsibility for the incident. At the same time, a threat was publicized in social media targeting medical personnel and medical facilities.

76. On 28 November, in Wassit governorate, the 10-year-old son of a member of the local human rights committee was abducted and found dead, with apparent signs of torture. Owing to the sensitivity and suspicion involved in collecting information on abduction cases from communities or authorities and the reluctance of families to report to the police, abductions are believed to be underreported.

77. Interaction on child protection between the United Nations and the Iraqi authorities continued at the national and local levels throughout 2013. However, it remains a serious source of concern that the Government of Iraq is not adequately addressing the impact of the ongoing conflict on children. I urge the Government to take all measures to ensure an adequate response to the plight of children, including through the adoption of laws criminalizing violations committed against children by parties to the conflict. The United Nations in Iraq stands ready to further engage with the Government in tackling the issue. Due attention must be given to the detention of children under security charges. Legislative reform and appropriate policies and programmes for the overall protection of children in armed conflict, including the engagement of community, religious and tribal leaders, should also be addressed. The implementation of a high-level Government interministerial committee on children and armed conflict, as advocated for by my Special Representative during her meetings with Government representatives during her visit to Iraq in July 2013, would facilitate regular information-sharing on and response to grave violations against children, as well as collaboration with the United Nations in Iraq.

Israel and the State of Palestine

78. Palestinian and Israeli children continued to be affected by the prevailing situation of military occupation, conflict and closure. Eight Palestinian children (six boys and two girls) were killed and 1,265 were injured in the occupied Palestinian territories in 2013. In the West Bank, an upsurge was observed in the number of Palestinian children killed and injured by Israeli security forces during clashes and as a result of violence by Israeli settlers. Eight Israeli children were injured in the West Bank in incidents related to the presence of Israeli settlements, while no Israeli children were killed in 2013.

79. In the West Bank, four Palestinian boys were killed by live ammunition, including three during incursions by Israeli security forces into the Al Jalazun, Jenin and Ayda refugee camps. Incursions into camps have increased by 60 per cent compared with 2012. For example, on 7 December 2013, a 14-year-old Palestinian boy was shot and killed by the Israel Defense Forces near Al Jalazun, allegedly while throwing stones at the soldiers. The Israeli authorities under the Military Advocate General opened investigations in all four cases, which were under review at the time of reporting. The 1,235 children injured in the West Bank constitute more than double the number injured in 2012 (552). Of the 1,235, 961 were injured during clashes between Israeli security forces and Palestinians during demonstrations, 183 during military operations, including search and arrest operations in villages or camps, four as a result of unexploded ordnances, and 86 as a result of settler violence, which saw a significant increase during 2013. During settler-related incidents, 49 children were injured directly by Israeli settlers by physical assault and stones or glass bottles thrown against Palestinian houses or cars. Of the 1,235 children injured in the West Bank, 155 were under the age of 12. Eight Israeli children were injured in Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including as a result of stone throwing by Palestinians (seven) and, in one incident, live ammunition shot towards the Psagot settlement.

80. In Gaza, most cases of killing and maiming Palestinian children occurred between January and March 2013, following the November 2012 Israeli military offensive “Pillar of Defence”. Three Palestinian children were killed, including two boys in unexploded ordnance-related incidents and, on 24 December 2013, a three-year-old girl in a shelling by Israeli security forces of a building in Al Maghazi refugee camp. Ten children were injured during military operations in Gaza, including by live ammunition gun shots and tear gas canisters, and 20 others as a result of unexploded ordnance incidents.

81. In 2013, Palestinian children continued to be arrested and detained by Israeli security forces and prosecuted in juvenile military courts. By the end of December, 154 boys, between 14 and 17 years of age (including 14 under the age of 16) were held in Israeli military detention for alleged security violations, including in pretrial detention (106) and serving a sentence (48). The Government of Israel reported that 1,004 children were arrested by Israeli security forces in 2013; 349 were released the same day and 655 were referred to the Military Advocate General. The United Nations documented 107 cases of ill-treatment during arrest, transfer, interrogation and detention, including against children below the age of 12 in five cases. All of the 107 boys reported having been subjected to cruel and degrading ill-treatment by the Israel Defense Forces and the Israeli police, including painful restraint, blindfolding, strip-searching, verbal and physical abuse, solitary confinement and threats of violence. This number represents an estimated 15 per cent of the total number of Palestinian children arrested and detained in the West Bank by Israeli security forces in 2013. Fifty-one children reported being arrested at night and 45 children reported being arrested during clashes, demonstrations and at other friction points. Reported use of physical violence against children, including with sticks, increased with a majority of the cases reported in the first half of 2013. The Israeli authorities received 15 formal complaints in 2013 related to the reported abuse of Palestinian children during arrest, interrogation and detention. No cases have resulted in dismissal, indictment or arrest to date. In addition, five cases of threats of sexual violence were reported, compared with two cases in 2012. A higher percentage of children were detained in prison facilities inside Israel (76 per cent, compared with 63 in 2012) with at least three out of four children being transferred outside the occupied Palestinian territory in contravention of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

82. A regular bilateral dialogue between the United Nations at the field level and the Military Prosecutor for the West Bank was ongoing at the time of reporting and has produced a number of results, including an Israel Defense Forces agreement to pilot test the use of summonses in lieu of night arrests. However, incidents have occurred where children were threatened while being summoned, and other summons were presented during night raids. I remain hopeful that the pilot process will be fully implemented and provide adequate protection for children. In addition, two Military Orders were issued in relation to children arrested and detained for alleged security violations. The orders reduced the time a Palestinian child could be detained prior to appearing before a military court judge for the first time; however, the time periods provided in military law are still longer than what is provided to Israeli children under Israeli law.

83. Fifty-eight education-related incidents affecting 11,935 children were reported in the West Bank, resulting in damage to school facilities, interruption of classes and injury to children. Forty-one incidents involved Israeli security forces operations near or inside schools, forced entry without forewarning, the firing of tear gas canisters and sound bombs into school yards and, in some cases, structural damage to schools. In 15 of the incidents, Israeli security forces fired tear gas canisters into schools run by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), some during class hours, without forewarning. In a majority of instances, schoolchildren and teachers were delayed or prevented from going to school owing to checkpoints, areas closed for military operations or exercises, military patrols in front of schools and preventive closures by the Israel Defense Forces. In 32 cases, teachers and children were arrested inside the school, at checkpoints or on their way to school. A further 15 incidents were related to settler violence in the areas of Nablus, Qalqiliya, Jerusalem and Hebron. This included physical assault of schoolchildren by settlers, absent or interrupted Israeli security forces escorts to schools in areas prone to settler violence, the evacuation of schools owing to the threat of settler attacks and sewage from Israeli settlements intentionally flooding school grounds. According to the Government of Israel, 63 rockets were fired from Gaza into Israel during 2013, resulting in school interferences for 12,229 Israeli children. The ceasefire understanding between the Government of Israel and Hamas resulted in a marked reduction of attacks on schools in Gaza. One incident was reported on 25 December, when Israeli security forces fired rockets damaging two schools. Shortages of construction materials in September 2013 owing to Israeli restrictions halted the construction of 13 Government schools, postponed the construction of another 26 and, in November, forced UNRWA to suspend the construction of 22 schools.

84. The Israeli blockade of Gaza since June 2007 continued to take a heavy toll on the more than 80 per cent of Gazan families dependent on humanitarian assistance. In 2013, 4,059 of 4,470 medical applications for children were approved; however, 409 applications, including for 215 boys and 194 girls, were delayed, usually as a result of the denial or delay of a permit for the child's parent. In one incident, the application of a 16-year-old girl scheduled to receive cancer treatment in Israel was delayed for 73 days. The recent movement restrictions imposed by the Government of Egypt have also affected the access to medical referrals.

85. I commend the State of Palestine for acceding to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

Lebanon

86. 2013 was marked by a significant increase in violence as a result of explosions inside Lebanon and along its borders, as well as sectarian violence between factions and communities, further exacerbated by the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic.

87. The United Nations continued to receive allegations of use of children in sectarian clashes, specifically in the Tripoli neighbourhoods of Jabal Mohsen and Bab al-Tebbaneh, and on children in Lebanon being pressured into joining armed groups in the Syrian Arab Republic. The majority of allegations received concerned Lebanese sectarian groups aligned with armed groups in the Syrian Arab Republic. Regarding the allegations of the involvement of children in armed violence in Lebanon, I note the joint declaration by representatives of factions of the Palestinian Liberation Organization and of the forces of the Palestinian National Coalition in Lebanon, prohibiting the recruitment and use of children within their organizations.

88. Despite restricted monitoring access owing to the security situation, the United Nations documented 56 incidents of violations against children, including the killing of 11 children and injury caused to 21 others by landmines, unexploded ordnance, cross-border shelling from the Syrian Arab Republic, sectarian armed clashes and sniper fire.

89. The United Nations received confirmed information on 24 school buildings sustaining damage during clashes between sectarian groups as well as between sectarian groups and Government forces, specifically in Tripoli and in Sidon between the Sunni radical faction of Sheikh Ahmad al-Asir and the Lebanese Armed Forces in June. A total of 36 schools, namely in Sidon (20); Ein el-Helweh Palestinian Camp (9); Nahr el-Bared Palestinian Camp (5); and el Beddawi Palestinian Camp (2), were temporarily closed due to security threats and nearby clashes, affecting more than 40,000 students.

90. With the large influx of refugees from the Syrian Arab Republic into Lebanon, I thank the Government's efforts to enrol more than 102,000 Syrian children in the public school system. Moreover, UNRWA ensured access to education for more than 7,000 Palestinian refugee children from the Syrian Arab Republic in Lebanon. However, up to 300,000 refugee children remain without access to education.

91. During her visit to Lebanon in July 2013, my Special Representative met with senior members of the Government of Lebanon who committed to finalizing the ratification process of the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict, which was pending in parliament. In late 2013, the Minister of Social Affairs publically called on all concerned actors in Lebanon to take concrete steps to end and prevent all violations against children in armed conflict. In view of the impact of armed conflict, including the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic, on Lebanese children and refugee children in Lebanon, I urge the Government of Lebanon to follow up on the commitment made to my Special Representative and the call by the Minister for ratification of the Optional Protocol.

Libya

92. The situation for children in Libya remained precarious in 2013, with political tensions escalating into armed confrontations in al-Ajailat, al-Shagiga, Ghadamis, Tripoli, Benghazi and Sabha, sometimes involving the use of heavy weapons. The United Nations continued to experience difficulty in gathering information owing to lack of security and a full monitoring mandate. Notwithstanding attempts by the Government to increase its control, many armed brigades under the nominal control of the Government continued to display a lack of discipline and command and control, leading in some instances to grave violations against children.

93. The United Nations documented the killing of 14 children (12 boys and 2 girls) between 4 and 17 years of age, and the injury of five others (four boys and one girl) in crossfire and improvised explosive device incidents or as a result of heavy weaponry. For example, in April in al-Shagiga, Nafousa Mountains, a four-year-old boy from the Mashashiya tribe was killed by a rocket hitting the family home during a clash between the Mashashiya and Zintan tribes. In three separate incidents in Benghazi on 30 July, 3 August and 3 November, four boys, between 2 and 15 years of age, were killed in improvised explosive device attacks against their fathers, who were security officers. In Tripoli on 15 November, members of a Misratah brigade stationed in the Ghargour neighbourhood of Tripoli opened fire on protestors. During the ensuing clashes in Tripoli, at least 46 people were killed, including a 15-year-old girl and a 17-year-old boy, and 516 others were injured, including an unknown number of children.

94. Seven incidents of attacks on hospitals were recorded by the United Nations in Benghazi and Sabha, including explosions, the targeting of medical staff and shooting inside medical facilities by armed militias. For example, on 30 July, in Benghazi, armed men broke into a secure ward in the city's Al-Hawri hospital to carry out a revenge killing, shooting one man dead. In Benghazi, on 13 May, an improvised explosive device exploded in front of Al-Jalaa hospital, killing a 14-year-old boy and two adults as well as wounding up to 30 others. On 27 August, two out of three hospitals in Benghazi closed down owing to staff protesting against violence, following the beating of nurses, stabbing of doctors and smashing of equipment by armed elements. In addition, in May 2013, a device was detonated inside a school in the al-Salmani neighbourhood of Benghazi by unknown perpetrators without casualty. In October 2013, also in Benghazi, another explosion took place in al-Alwiya al-Hura school.

95. The United Nations continued to visit detention facilities where children were held, including six Tawergha boys 16 years of age in al-Wihda prison in Misrata, held since 2011 without charges. I call upon the Government of Libya to expedite the review of such cases by the competent judicial authorities as a priority.

Lord's Resistance Army (Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo and South Sudan)

96. Despite continuing reports of sporadic attacks and abductions of children by LRA across the LRA-affected region, LRA has morphed into smaller cells and appears to have changed its modus operandi owing to the military pressure of the African Union regional task force. However, the instability in the Central African Republic and South Sudan could heighten the risk of an LRA resurgence in those areas. Attacks by LRA in 2013 largely took place in remote areas in the north-eastern region of Haut-Kotto prefecture of the Central African Republic, and in the Uélé districts of Orientale Province, Democratic Republic of the Congo. The United Nations recorded 353,000 persons, among them many children, displaced in areas affected by LRA.

97. During the reporting period, four boys were reportedly recruited by LRA in the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, marking a drastic decrease in reported cases compared to previous years. In addition, two girls were killed by LRA elements in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

98. Abductions of children by LRA remained stable with 65 cases reported from the south-eastern region of the Central African Republic (47) and the Democratic Republic of the Congo's Haut-Uélé district (18). The children were used for looting and the transport of pillaged goods and released within a short period of time. It is important to note that children, in particular girls, abducted or recruited by LRA are regularly subjected to sexual violence.

99. In 2013, 177 children were separated from LRA, including 121 Congolese, 47 Central Africans, 8 Ugandans and 1 South Sudanese. UNICEF and partners were supporting a transit centre in Yambio, South Sudan, where children received psychosocial counselling and medical services together with ongoing family tracing.

Mali

100. In 2013, the United Nations monitoring and reporting mechanism on grave violations against children was established in Mali following the listing of Ansar Dine, the Mouvement national pour la liberation de l'Azawad (MNLA), and the Mouvement pour l'unicité et le jihad en Afrique de l'Ouest (MUJAO) in the annexes of my previous annual report. Favourable political and security developments occurred in Mali during the second half of 2013, including the signing of the Ouagadougou Preliminary Agreement and the successful holding of presidential and legislative elections, which contributed to a significant decrease in the cases of grave violations recorded. However, armed incursions by MUJAO into the northern regions of Kidal and Gao continued, putting children formerly associated with armed groups at risk of re-recruitment. Humanitarian and monitoring access to northern Mali remained severely limited due to security and capacity constraints.

101. All armed groups in the North, including Al-Qaida au Maghreb Islamique, Ansar Dine, MNLA and MUJAO perpetrated grave violations against children. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 57 children, all boys as young as 11 years of age. Most of the boys were recruited in the first half of 2013 by MUJAO and the MNLA and were used in combat, to man checkpoints and in support roles. Reportedly, families, imams and community leaders have facilitated the recruitment of children into armed groups. Children entrusted by their parents to marabouts were particularly vulnerable, and religious schools often served as places for indoctrination and recruitment.

102. The detention of children formerly associated with parties to conflict remained a concern. By December, the United Nations had verified the detention of 24 children under security charges after separation from armed groups by the Forces armées et de sécurités du Mali during military operations. Despite the signing of a protocol on the release and handover of children between the Government of Mali and the United Nations on 1 July, nine boys remained detained in Bamako under security charges at the time of reporting. The United Nations continued to follow up on this issue, in particular on children detained before the signing of the protocol.

103. Children constitute more than half of the documented casualties of explosive remnants of war in Mali with at least six killed and 51 others injured in 2013. In addition, children were killed and maimed in attacks by armed groups, including through the use of terror tactics. For example, on 23 October, a six-year-old boy was killed in a suicide attack on a checkpoint of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA).

104. As of December, 147,425 students returned to 769 reopened schools in Gao, Kidal and Timbuktu; the regions that were most affected by the conflict. During the height of the conflict in 2013, all 1,418 schools in northern Mali were closed for an extended period. Access to education was also restricted owing to the use of schools by the military. For instance, on 14 November, 30 MNLA elements established a front post in a high school in Kidal town.

105. On 7 February 2013, an interministerial circular was signed by relevant ministers, outlining their commitment to end and prevent the recruitment of children and to ensure appropriate reintegration provisions. In addition, an initial 600 MSDF elements were trained on child protection by the United Nations. On 7 August 2013, the Government of Mali accepted the joint verification mechanism proposed by MINUSMA to conduct physical and administrative screening of elements of the Forces armées et de sécurités du Mali .

106. I encourage the Malian authorities to swiftly operationalize this joint mechanism and to ensure that specific procedures for the separation and reintegration of children associated with armed groups and forces are included in the development of the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process.

Myanmar

107. The recruitment and use of children by parties to conflict continued to be a concern in 2013. The United Nations received complaints of 37 children newly recruited into the Tatmadaw, including a 12-year-old boy, and 196 others previously recruited. Children used by the Tatmadaw continued to be deployed to the frontline as combatants and in other roles, in particular in Kachin State.

108. The number of reported arrests of children under charges of desertion from the Tatmadaw increased in 2013. Of 98 boys associated with the Tatmadaw, who were reported under the International Labour Organization (ILO) complaint mechanism, 40 were documented as absent without leave. Of the 40, 10 children were arrested and detained for alleged desertion. Four of the children were released from detention and discharged, including two in January 2014. In addition, children were arrested because of their alleged association with armed groups. For example, in Kachin State, a 16-year-old displaced boy was taken by the Tatmadaw on suspicion of being a Kachin Independence Army (KIA) soldier. He was released after being used as a porter for weapons for two days.

109. Armed groups also continued to recruit and use children, including the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) and the Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council. Several cases of children associated with KIA and KNLA were reported and verified. One boy was separated from KNLA upon advocacy by ILO. In a single incident in December 2013, the KIA forcibly recruited an unknown number of children from among 50 people. Thirty-two people had been released by the end of the reporting period. The remaining villagers, save one, were released in early January. Lack of access prevented the verification of reported use of children by the Shan State Army South, the Karenni National Progressive Party/Karenni Army (KNPP/KA) and the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army (DKBA). Approximately 20 children suspected of association with the United Wa State Army (UWSA) were observed by the United Nations in northern Shan State. On a positive note, the United Nations began to re-engage with armed groups listed for recruitment and use, including KNLA and KNPP/KA. KNPP proactively approached my Special Representative and subsequently the United Nations in Myanmar with a letter to renew previous engagements on the issue.

110. At least seven children were killed and six others injured in sporadic fighting between the Tatmadaw and KIA in Kachin and northern Shan States, including air strikes by the Tatmadaw. In addition, a two-month-old boy was injured by a grenade during a clash between the Tatmadaw and the KNLA on 16 March in Papun district, Karen State. Also in Karen State, Hpa-an district, on 27 April, a newborn baby and an 18-month-old girl were injured in shelling during a clash between the Tatmadaw and the DKBA. Although it could not be verified whether parties to conflict continued to use landmines, limited efforts at demining, marking and signing continued to put children at risk. During the reporting period, four boys, between 13 and 17 years of age, were killed by landmines in Kayin and Kachin States and five boys, between 10 and 16 years of age, were injured by landmines in Kachin and Northern Shan State. In addition, the communal violence in Rakhine State continued to preoccupy child protection actors.

111. During clashes between the Tatmadaw and KIA from October to November 2013, several schools were reportedly damaged in Kachin State and several others were closed. From late December 2012 until mid-February 2013, schools in Laiza, Kachin State, remained closed owing to fighting between KIA and the Tatmadaw. Allegations of schools being damaged by the Tatmadaw in Shan State could not be verified because of denial of access to the area. In November 2013, Tatmadaw troops, reportedly to minimize civilian casualties, surrounded a Boarding School in Mansi Township, Kachin State, forcing over 300 schoolchildren to flee. In addition, in Kachin and northern Shan State, mine fields laid by the Tatmadaw and KIA in close proximity to schools and hospitals remained a concern.

112. Several reports of sexual violence against children by Tatmadaw soldiers were received in 2013, including the alleged gang-rape of a 14-year-old girl in northern Kachin State. In February 2014, a Tatmadaw soldier was sentenced to life imprisonment by a civilian court for the rape of a seven-year-old girl in northern Shan State.

113. Humanitarian access to areas affected by armed conflict improved during the reporting period but remained restricted in certain areas, including areas beyond Government control in Kachin and Kayin States. Humanitarian access to such areas was only granted in June, September and November, when seven humanitarian cross-line missions assisted over 23,000 people.

114. Access for monitoring purposes covered under the action plan with the Government of Myanmar improved during the reporting period but remained limited. An initial eight monitoring visits were allowed to selected operational Tatmadaw units in the second half of 2013. On 29 May, the United Nations and representatives of the Government conducted a joint midterm review on progress and challenges in the implementation of the action plan. In November, the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict conducted a field visit to Myanmar, welcoming the Government's respective progress and stressing the need for continued efforts under the framework. In that regard, I welcome Myanmar's renewed commitment to the extended action plan in early 2014.

115. In 2013, 178 children, in one case as young as 12, were separated from the Tatmadaw, including 134 under the framework of the action plan and 15 through the ILO forced labour complaint mechanism. At the time of reporting, 197 other complaints of child recruitment shared by the United Nations were under review by the Government. Reports on the recruitment of children by the Tatmadaw received through the action plan complaints mechanism established in November 2012 increased significantly towards the end of the reporting period owing to a nationwide awareness campaign in consultation with the Government. I commend the ratification of ILO convention 182 (1999), prohibiting the worst forms of child labour, including the recruitment and use of children. The United Nations in Myanmar stands ready to support the implementation of the action plan and to further engage with armed groups to end and prevent child recruitment. In that regard, I am encouraged by the ongoing peace talks between the Government and several non-State parties listed for the recruitment and use of children.

Somalia

116. The United Nations documented the recruitment and use of 1,293 children, including by Al-Shabaab (908), the Somali National Army and allied militia (209), and Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (ASWJ) (111). The remaining cases were attributed to the Somaliland Armed Forces (15) and to unknown armed elements (36). Al-Shabaab continued its campaign for the recruitment of children and youth. For instance, on 24 January, Al-Shabaab recruited six boys, as young as 12, in a Koranic school in south-west Baidoa. In separate incidents, 19 children, as young as 15, were recruited during dedicated campaigns in Bardhere district, Gedo region, and Jilib district, Middle Juba region. Al-Shabaab uses children in various roles, including as combatants and to gather intelligence. Of particular concern are 14 cases of association of children with the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) in various capacities, including to man checkpoints and as cooks. The United Nations has been regularly engaging with AMISOM leadership with a view to addressing these cases and enhancing the mainstreaming of child protection.

117. The arbitrary arrest and detention of 1,009 children by the national army, including during operations against Al-Shabaab, remained a grave concern in 2013. In 11 cases, girls who had been arrested were also raped. Upon advocacy by the United Nations, 41 children detained by the national army for alleged association with Al-Shabaab were released in 2013.

118. At least 237 children were reportedly killed (179 boys and 58 girls) and 494 children were injured (383 boys and 111 girls) in 2013. The national army and allied militias were reportedly responsible for 334 child casualties (98 killed and 236 injured), followed by unknown armed groups (83 killed, 174 injured), Al-Shabaab (47 killed, 67 injured), AMISOM (7 killed, 14 injured), ASWJ (two killed, one injured), and the Puntland and the Somaliland forces (one child each injured). Child casualties mainly resulted from crossfire during clashes and indiscriminate shelling. Thirty children were killed and 51 others injured in incidents involving improvised explosive devices. In one incident, in December, a 16-year-old boy was executed by the Al-Shabaab for attempted desertion.

119. In 154 incidents of sexual violence, 152 girls and 2 boys were raped, including by unknown armed elements (65), members of the national army and allied militias (49), Al-Shabaab (31), ASWJ (7) and the Somaliland forces (2). Twenty of the girls were subjected to sexual violence in the context of forced marriages following recruitment into Al-Shabaab. The rape of 21 children in 19 separate incidents by national army and unknown armed elements inside internally displaced persons camps was a particular concern since the camps were supposed to be a safe place for displaced children.

120. Fifty-four attacks on schools and 11 attacks on hospitals by the national army (28), Al-Shabaab (18), unknown armed groups (7) and ASWJ (1) were documented. Four of the attacks on schools by Al-Shabaab and an unknown armed group resulted in the recruitment of 34 boys. In addition, Al-Shabaab used schools for recruitment campaigns.

121. In 2013, 863 boys and 237 girls formerly associated with armed forces or groups were enrolled in reintegration programmes in Mogadishu, Merka, Guriel, Dhusamareb and Afgoye districts. The United Nations also continued to engage with the Federal Government of Somalia to ensure the implementation of the two action plans to end and prevent the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children by the national army. With the establishment of the United Nations Assistance Mission (UNSAM) in July, one Child Protection Adviser was deployed to further support the process. In addition, a working group on children and armed conflict, comprising representatives of the Government, the United Nations, non-governmental organizations, and the donor community, was established in Mogadishu and reviewed standard operating procedures for the handover of children formerly associated with armed forces and groups before adoption by the Government in March 2014. Furthermore, I welcome the commitment of the Federal Government of Somalia to become party to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols, in particular in respect of the involvement of children in armed conflict, and urge the Government to ratify them.

South Sudan

122. Before the most recent crisis, the Government of South Sudan had made tangible progress in addressing grave violations against children and implementing an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children. Such progress included issuing command orders to stop recruitment and use of children within the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), undertaking joint verification visits with the United Nations to SPLA barracks, and regular training of SPLA troops. On 15 December 2013, fighting erupted between factions of SPLA aligned with the Government and former Vice-President Riek Machar Teny, reversing the initial progress made under the action plan.

123. The United Nations received credible information on grave violations against children by both pro-Government forces and opposition forces aligned with Riek Machar Teny. Thousands of children were reportedly mobilized in Upper Nile and Jonglei States by the Nuer ethnic group aligned with opposition forces, also known as the "White Army". Thousands of children were killed or maimed, raped, displaced or orphaned. Attacks on schools and hospitals and their military use by all parties were also widespread, depriving children of access to education and health care and adding to the humanitarian crisis. Although the United Nations was able to verify limited numbers of violations against children by all parties to conflict, documented cases remained only indicative at the time of reporting and further verification was ongoing. In the hospitals of the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) in Juba and Malakal alone, 110 children received treatment for conflict-related injuries. Since the United Nations was still verifying information regarding ongoing violations at the time of reporting, the cases reported below are limited to the period before the events following 15 December 2013.

124. Before the crisis, the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 162 children, all boys and mostly between 14 and 17 years of age. Of the 162 children, 99 were associated with SPLA, 3 with South Sudan national police services and 35 with militia allied to David Yau Yau in Jonglei, and 25 were mobilized from Lou Nuer tribe to conduct community policing in Jonglei State. Children associated with SPLA were identified in military barracks, wearing SPLA uniforms as well as undergoing military training in conflict areas. In addition, reports of the recruitment and use of 133 children were pending verification at the time of reporting.

125. Sixty-three children were killed and 83 injured prior to the December crisis. Child casualties resulted from clashes between SPLA and armed groups, from inter-communal conflict in Jonglei, and from five separate incidents involving explosive remnants of war in Central Equatoria, Eastern Equatoria, Jonglei and Unity States.

126. The United Nations verified information of seven cases of sexual violence affecting seven girls. Individual SPLA soldiers in Central Equatoria, Eastern Equatoria, Jonglei, Lakes, Unity, Upper Nile and Western Bahr-el-Ghazal States were allegedly responsible for the incidents.

127. During the reporting period, 26 new incidents of military use of schools and hospitals by SPLA (19), South Sudan national police services (6) and non-State actors (1) were documented, affecting the access to education of approximately 13,000 children. By 15 December, seven schools remained in use by SPLA, in contravention of the military order of 14 August 2013. The increased use of schools by SPLA also resulted from lessened cooperation with the United Nations following changes in SPLA leadership in January 2013. In addition, the United Nations verified the looting and burning of two hospitals located in Budi county, Eastern Equatoria State, resulting from clashes between cattle rustlers and Government forces. Militias allied with David Yau Yau allegedly burned another health centre in Pochalla County, Jonglei State.

128. As a result of inter-communal conflict, the United Nations received reports of 250 children abducted during the reporting period. The abduction of children continues to take place during cattle raiding and attacks at night where the sole aim is to abduct children.

129. The United Nations also received reports of at least 24 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, including forceful entry into humanitarian compounds, harassment and physical assault of humanitarian workers that hampered the ability of humanitarian actors to access the population in dire need of assistance.

130. As far as the latest crisis is concerned, the United Nations repeatedly advocated against the involvement of children in the ongoing conflict, and was in the process of collecting and verifying information of violations against children since the beginning of the crisis. Discussions between the United Nations and all parties were ongoing in that regard. I commend all efforts taken by the Security Council, the African Union, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and other regional actors to address the renewed escalation of conflict in South Sudan. I call upon all parties to immediately put an end to the unacceptable scale of violence against children and to ensure that perpetrators will be held accountable.

Sudan

Three areas (South Kordofan, Blue Nile State and Abyei)

131. The security situation in Blue Nile and South Kordofan remained volatile owing to continued fighting, primarily between Government forces and the Sudan

People Liberation Movement North (SPLM-N). Grave violations against children also resulted from fighting in West, South and North Kordofan between the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Sudan Revolutionary Front (SRF), a coalition of SPLM-N, the Justice Equality Movement (JEM) and the Sudan Liberation Army factions of Minni Minawi, (SLA-MM) and Abdul Wahid (SLA-AW). The security situation and access restrictions continued to have an impact on the ability of the United Nations to verify information, although access to Government-controlled areas slightly improved.

132. The United Nations recorded the recruitment and use of 42 children in South Kordofan and Blue Nile, including 2 by the SAF. Both boys, 13 and 14 years of age, were recruited in Blue Nile and remained associated with SAF at the time of reporting. Of the 40 children recruited and used by armed groups, 14 children, all boys, some as young as 12, were recruited by the Popular Defence Force (PDF) in Blue Nile (5 boys) and South Kordofan (9). At least 26 children (19 boys and 7 girls) were recruited and used by SPLM-N, including 10 (5 boys and 5 girls), as young as 12, escaping from an SPLM-N camp in Mandi, South Kordofan. Sixteen children (14 boys and 2 girls) were recruited by SPLM-N in Upper Nile State, South Sudan. Three of the children reported to have received military training in Blue Nile after having been recruited in South Sudan in April. The cases confirm previous allegations about the cross-border recruitment of children between South Sudan and the Sudan.

133. At least six children were killed in clashes, including between SAF and SRF, and between SPLM-N and the Central Reserve Police (CRP). In addition, 10 children were injured in mortar attacks by CRP (3) and SPLM-N (7). Furthermore, unexploded ordnance-related incidents resulted in at least six children being injured in Blue Nile, and six children reportedly killed and nine others injured in a single incident in Um Baraka, South Kordofan.

134. Sexual violence against children in the three areas continued to be underreported in 2013 owing to limited monitoring capacity and victims' fear of stigmatization. The United Nations documented the rape of three girls, between 14 and 17 years of age, by pro-Government militias in two separate incidents in Abu Zabad, South Kordofan, on 19 November.

135. In the only documented attack on a school, on 19 November 2013, a mortar shell by SPLM-N hit the yard of El Manar primary school for boys in Kadugli, South Kordofan, injuring a 10-year-old boy.

136. Access to Abyei via Kadugli, South Kordofan, was for the first time granted in September, but was quickly disrupted owing to intensified fighting between SAF and SPLM-N. No humanitarian access has been allowed in the non-Government controlled areas of Blue Nile and South Kordofan since the conflict broke out in 2011.

137. The United Nations organized child protection training and orientation for 131 SAF and PDF officers. Nine children released by PDF in Abugibaiha, Talodi, and Kalogi, South Kordofan, and the 10 children who fled from the SPLM-N camp in Mandi, were reintegrated with support from the United Nations. Although the SPLM-N had expressed its intention to enter into dialogue with the United Nations to address grave violations against children in 2012, lack of access didn't allow any follow-up.

138. The security situation in Darfur deteriorated owing to sporadic clashes between Government forces and armed groups as well as due to inter-communal and tribal clashes, including over natural resources. The increased mobilization and arming of children by communities further exacerbated the risk of the re-recruitment of demobilized children. The United Nations, in conducting monitoring in conjunction with the African Union through the United Nations Assistance Mission in Darfur (UNAMID), was able to verify four cases of recruitment by SAF and 14 by border guards, and received reports of 17 children allegedly recruited by SAF, border guards and SLA-AW. Challenges in monitoring and reporting in areas beyond Government control clearly limited the documentation and verification of child recruitment in Darfur.

139. The United Nations documented the killing of 91 children (71 boys and 20 girls) and injury to 98 others (64 boys and 34 girls). Forty-three children were shot and killed and 32 others injured during clashes between Government forces and armed groups as well as during inter- and intra-ethnic fighting. At least 31 children were killed and 14 others injured in SAF air strikes. Incidents involving explosive remnants of war also continued to be a major concern, killing 17 children and injuring 52 others.

140. At least 62 girls were raped in 40 separate incidents. Most cases were perpetrated by unknown armed elements, some of whom were wearing military uniforms. However, in three cases alleged perpetrators were identified as Government forces and, in one case, elements of SLA-MM. Government Police arrested a member of the Central Reserve Police for the rape of a 6-year-old girl on 17 October, and two Government Police officers were identified among the six men raping a 16-year-old girl on 5 February near the Al Meglis area of El Geneina, West Darfur. Sexual violence remained underreported owing to fear of stigmatization and reprisals by perpetrators as well as out-of-court settlements.

141. In three SAF air strikes on three schools in Dursa village, Central Darfur, in Um Dadeti, South Darfur, and in Tabit, North Darfur, all three schools sustained major damage and six schoolchildren were injured. In addition, between 15 and 17 April, unknown armed elements looted schools in Labado, East Darfur, following fighting between SAF and SLA-MM.

142. Fifteen cases of abduction of children were documented in Donkey Dreisa and in Hamada forest, South Darfur (12 cases), Labado and Muhajeria, East Darfur (2), and in Jabel Amer, West Darfur (1). For instance, in Labado and Muhajeria, a 15-year-old girl was abducted by pro-Government militia along with her 18-year-old sister, was used as a porter and was raped before being released.

143. The Government of the Sudan took some positive steps to end the recruitment and use of children. On 21 July, the Government enacted a law raising the age of recruitment into PDF from 16 to 18 years and establishing 18 as the minimum age for joining the national reserve service and the national service. I am encouraged by the ongoing discussions between the United Nations and the Government of the Sudan with a view of finalizing a draft action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. Progress was also made on dialogue with JEM/Jibril Ibrahim, SLA-MM and SLA-AW, which issued command orders prohibiting child recruitment within their ranks, and with Sheik Musa Hilal, who issued a similar order to nomadic communities under his leadership. Furthermore, 405 children formerly associated with armed groups and forces, including with the disbanded SLA-Historical Leadership, received reintegration support.

Syrian Arab Republic

144. The conflict and violence in the Syrian Arab Republic reached unprecedented levels during 2013. Intense bombardments by Government forces on opposition-controlled or disputed areas, increased operations by a growing number of armed groups in constantly evolving coalitions as well as the expansion of the control of Islamist groups in northern Syrian Arab Republic led to massive grave violations against children. Hundreds of civilians, including many children, were killed during the chemical attack on Damascus suburbs in August.

145. Numerous armed groups are reportedly recruiting and using children in the Syrian Arab Republic, including several FSA-affiliated groups, the Kurdish People Protection Units (YPG), Ahrar al-Sham, Islamic State in Iraq and Sham (ISIS), Jhabat al-Nusra, and other armed groups. All of the groups actively recruit and use children for logistics, handling ammunition, manning checkpoints and as combatants. Reports indicated that the recruitment of children or pressure to join armed groups also occur among refugee populations in neighbouring countries. Most children associated with FSA-affiliated groups, as young as 14 years of age, indicated that they had received weapons training and 4,000 to 8,000 Syrian pounds pay per month. For instance, a 14-year-old boy who joined the al-Murabiteen battalion of the Falloujat Houran FSA brigade in Bosra al-Sham, Dara'a Governorate, reportedly received a 15 days of weapons training in al-Lajat valley close to Bosra al-Sham. In June 2013, two brothers, 16 and 17 years old, joined the FSA-affiliated Majd al-Islam brigade in Dara'a, where they cleaned weapons and performed security duties. YPG reportedly trained children with adults near Al-Qamishli, al-Hassakeh governorate and used them at checkpoints and in combat. For instance, a 14-year-old boy reportedly recruited in September 2013 was trained in Rassalein, al-Hassakeh governorate, and used in hostilities. Islamist groups such as ISIS, Jabhat al-Nusra or Ahrar al-Sham also recruited and used children. A 15-year-old boy reportedly joined Ahrar al-Sham in Mayadin, Deir ez-Zor governorate, in March 2013 and continued to be associated with the group at the time of reporting. A 16-year-old boy reportedly joined Jabhat al-Nusra around April 2013 and stayed with the group for three months. ISIS reportedly used children as young as eight in hostilities. Children fighting with ISIS are reportedly paid like adults (35,000 Syrian pounds, approximately $200) and undergo both weapons and jihadist indoctrination training.

146. Adults and children released from detention reported that children were still present in detention facilities and suffered treatment tantamount to torture. For instance, a 17-year-old boy accused of participating in anti-Government demonstrations was arrested by Government forces in March 2013, detained in Homs, and subsequently for three months in the Damascus Political Security Detention Centre, where he was repeatedly beaten and forced to remain in stress positions. The boy reported that other children were present in the detention centre. Children were also reportedly arrested and detained in October 2013 during the temporary evacuation of over 1,000 civilians from al-Moaddamiyeh besieged area in Rif Damascus. The Government stated that no children were detained during the evacuation. Several cases of arrest or detention may amount to enforced disappearances. For instance, the whereabouts of two boys, 16 and 17 years old, reportedly detained by the Syrian Air Force Intelligence in Aleppo in May and June 2013 for alleged cooperation with the opposition remained unknown at the time of reporting. Approximately 1,500 detainees, including children, are reportedly held in the ISIS main detention centre in al-Raqqah. No disaggregated data on children was available. According to the Government, all detained children under 18 are prosecuted in accordance with juvenile law. In addition, the Government states that numerous amnesty decrees have been issued.

147. More than 10,000 children are estimated to have been killed since the outset of the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic and the killing and maiming of children has increased exponentially in 2013. Government forces continued to indiscriminately shell civilian-populated areas, in particular in Homs and Aleppo, but also in Deir ez-Zor, Idlib, Damascus and Al-Raqqah governorates. The use of barrel bombs by Government forces in Aleppo city in December alone led to hundreds of children killed and injured. Children also continued to be killed in ground offensives by Government forces. On 29 January, during the “Al-Queiq river” massacre in Bustan al-Qasr district of Aleppo, at least 10 children were reportedly among those summarily executed. Other massacres were reportedly committed by Government forces in several villages in the Al-Sfera area, south of Aleppo, between April and June. For instance, on 21 June, in Mazrat al Rahib village, at least three children were reportedly summarily executed along with at least 58 men. In early May, a high number of children were reportedly among the hundreds of civilians killed and burned by Government forces in Ras al-Nabaa district of Baniyas town and al-Bayda village.

148. Armed groups also continued to kill and maim children, including through the use of terror tactics and during ground operations throughout the Syrian Arab Republic. For instance, during Eid al-Fitr in July, at least 13 children were killed in a mortar shelling on areas of Zahra, besieged by Jabhat al-Nusra, Ahrar al-Sham and ISIS/Land Liwa al-Tawhid. On 4 August, the end of Ramadan, armed groups, including Ahrar al-Sham, ISIS, Jabhat al-Nusra, Jaish al Muhajireen wal-Ansar and Suqor al-izz, allegedly killed more than 200 persons, of whom at least 18 were children, including during executions of entire families in Latakia governorate during the “Barouda” offensive. On 10 September, Jabhat al-Nusra and Ahrar al-Sham allegedly attacked villages in eastern Homs, killing more than 30 civilians of which half were women and children.

149. While sexual violence against boys and girls in Government-controlled detention facilities has been documented previously, an increasing number of women and girls reported to the United Nations that they were subject to repeated sexual harassment at Government checkpoints. Government forces also reportedly abducted young women and girls in groups at checkpoints or in transport and released them a few days later in their village, intentionally exposing them as victims of rape and subjecting them to rejection by their families. Allegations of sexual violence against boys and girls by Jabhat al-Nusra and other unidentified armed groups were also received. For example, a boy of unknown age and his father were allegedly raped by several members of Jabhat al-Nusra. In another incident, a 15-year-old girl in Al Qoseir was reportedly gang-raped by unidentified armed elements and subsequently killed by family members for “having lost her sanity” following the event. The general fear of sexual violence by parties to the conflict continued to be stated as a reason for which Syrian families flee the country.

150. An increasing number of mosques hosting schools have reportedly been shelled during indiscriminate bombardments or directly targeted by missiles. For instance, on 30 July, Government forces shelled the Hamza mosque, recognized as a girls' school, in Anadan area, north of Aleppo. Nine girls, all younger than 10 years of age, and four female teachers were reportedly killed. ISIS control of school curricula, forcing teachers to introduce their ideology, was a growing concern. According to the Government, armed groups systematically targeted schools, with more than 3,000 being partially or completely destroyed. Hospitals and field clinics also continued to be damaged in targeted and indiscriminate shelling. For instance, in early November, in al-Bab district of Aleppo, Government forces shelled an opposition-run hospital twice, reportedly killing one doctor and two nurses. In March, an FSA brigade attacked the national hospital in Dara'a. According to the Government, 63 hospitals and 470 health centres have been targeted by armed groups. Doctors and medical personnel have also been killed or abducted for ransom by ISIS in northern Syrian Arab Republic. For instance, the whereabouts of two doctors reportedly arrested by ISIS in mid-December 2013 remained unknown at the time of reporting. As at March 2014, 68 of 118 UNRWA schools have been closed owing to conflict. Of 67,000 Palestine refugee children registered in UNRWA schools, 41,500 are currently attending classes. Fourteen UNRWA schools operated as shelters for displaced Palestine refugees and Syrians.

151. The abduction of civilians, including children, became an increasingly prevalent feature of the Syrian conflict, mainly committed by ISIS, Jabhat al-Nusra or Ahrar al-Sham. Allegations of mass abductions, sometimes followed by summary executions, including against minority communities, were also received. For instance, a 16-year-old boy was reportedly executed after a month and a half in the custody of Ahrar al-Sham. Approximately 50 children were also reportedly among the 200 persons abducted by several armed groups during the "Barouda" offensive, in August 2013 in Latakia governorate.

152. Active denial or intentional restriction of humanitarian access by all parties to the conflict remained a serious concern. As at 9 January 2014, 242,000 people were estimated to be living in besieged areas. Homs Old City, Darayya, al-Yarmouk Palestinian camp, Moadamiya al-Sham, Eastern Ghouta, including Douma, Arbin, Zamalka and Kafr Batna, were besieged by Government forces. Other localities, like Zahra and Nubul, were besieged by a coalition of Liwa al Tawhid, Ahrar al-Sham, ISIS and Jabhat al-Nusra. All besieged areas were cut off from all humanitarian assistance for months in 2013. Increasing reports were received of civilians, including children, dying in areas under siege. In addition, humanitarian access to areas controlled by extremist groups, in particular by ISIS in northern Syrian Arab Republic, was severely impeded and the seizure of goods, as well as abduction and killing of humanitarian personnel was a repeated concern.

153. My Special Representative visited the Syrian Arab Republic and neighbouring countries to assess the conflict's impact on children and discuss the strengthening of the monitoring of grave violations and measures to end and prevent violations by all parties. In 2013, the Government criminalized the recruitment and use of children by armed forces and groups, and on 23 September announced the establishment of the Inter-ministerial Committee on Children and Armed Conflict. My Special Representative also engaged with representatives of the Syrian National Coalition on their commitments in relation to the protection of children in armed conflict. I also note the command order issued by General Command for YPG on 4 October 2013 condemning and prohibiting the recruitment of children.

Yemen

154. The reporting period was marked by the beginning of the National Dialogue Conference and by a decrease in hostilities between the Government and Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP)/Ansar al-Sharia. The security situation remained volatile in the South, due to the activities of the secession movement led by Al-Hirak, opposing the Transitional Government and the Conference. In August 2013, tensions resurfaced between the Salafists and the Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah in the North, resulting in the siege of Dammaj, Sa'ada governorate, by Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah.

155. The United Nations verified the recruitment of 106 children, all boys between 6 and 17 years of age. The Salafists recruited 57 boys to fight against the Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah in Dammaj, Sa'ada governorate. Children were mainly recruited during recruitment drives in mosques and marketplaces in the southern governorates of Abyan, Aden, Al Dhale, Amran, and Lahj and, in a few cases, received military training. While 22 of the 57 boys were pulled out by family members and returned home, at least 2 were killed in combat and 2 remained in Dammaj at the time of reporting. Thirty-two boys were observed manning Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah checkpoints, carrying firearms and inspecting vehicles in Sa'ada and Amran governorates. One boy, 11 years old, reported having received two months of military and ideological training. Reluctance of victims' families to expose themselves by reporting on violations by the Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah remained a challenge to monitoring. Finally, 14 children were recruited by AQAP/Ansar al-Sharia in Abyan governorate and three boys were used by the Al-Islah party and the Popular Committee, a locally rooted resistance group, which aligned with the Government to fight AQAP/Ansar al-Sharia in Abyan. In addition, 10 children recruited prior to the reporting period, including due to falsified identity documents, continued to be used in support roles by the Yemeni Armed Forces in 2013.

156. Nine boys were arbitrarily detained by the Popular Committee for alleged association with AQAP/Ansar al-Sharia in 2013. After the Government regained control over Abyan in June 2012, the Popular Committee served as a de facto police force, "arresting" and "rehabilitating" suspected AQAP/Ansar al-Sharia elements, including children.

157. At least 36 children were killed and 154 others maimed. Child casualties occurred mainly in the governorate of Sa'ada, but also in 12 other governorates throughout Yemen. Most child casualties resulted from gunshots (17 killed and 63 injured) and shelling (10 killed and 56 injured) during clashes between armed groups and between armed groups and Government forces. For example, since August, the clashes in Dammaj between Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah and the Salafists resulted in at least 20 child casualties. At least five children were injured in attacks using terror tactics, including incidents involving improvised explosive devices and one suicide attack. Another 20 child casualties were attributed to the "civil disobedience movement" initiated by Al-Hirak in southern Yemen and at least 10 children were injured in clashes between armed tribes. Explosive remnants of war continued to pose a threat to children, killing and maiming at least 28 in 2013, including in Abyan, Sa'ada, and Aden governorates. Finally, on 9 June, one boy was killed in a drone attack in Al-Jawf.

158. Thirty-five attacks on schools, on protected personnel, or threats against protected personnel were documented in 2013. For example, on 27 December, the national armed forces shelled a school where a funeral was held, resulting in more than 30 casualties, including 2 boys killed and 10 boys injured. Four attacks on schools in Amran, for example the damage to Aisha primary school in crossfire, resulted from clashes between Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah and the Salafists. Al-Hirak was responsible for the majority of documented incidents, in particular threats against protected personnel. For instance, Shamsan school, in Aden governorate, was forcibly entered by Al-Hirak youth groups, destroying the gate, and demanding closure of the school and support for the civil disobedience movement. In a separate incident, in Sa'ada governorate, a timed improvised explosive device was detected inside a school and detonated safely.

159. The United Nations documented the military use of four schools by both Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah and the Salafists, including as military barracks and during clashes in Sa'ada, Amran and Aden governorates, resulting in the closure of the schools since October 2013. One school in Amran was used by the national armed forces as barracks from 19 January to 1 March 2013. Also in Amran, four schools were used and destroyed by armed elements of the Al-Osimat and Qaflat Uthar tribes.

160. Six attacks on hospitals and protected personnel were documented, including the partial destruction of four hospitals during a complex attack by AQAP/Ansar al-Sharia on 5 December in Sana'a, resulting in the death of 57 people and injury to 186 others. Two hospitals were partially destroyed in crossfire between Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah and the Salafists. Government forces were responsible for damage to a hospital and attacks on protected personnel in the context of dispersing Al-Hirak elements in Al Dhale'e and Hadramaut governorates.

161. Twenty-two incidents of denial of humanitarian access and attacks on humanitarian personnel were verified, mainly attributed to unknown armed groups and, in some cases, to Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah and Government forces. Of particular concern was the abduction of 11 humanitarian personnel in seven incidents. Two United Nations staff remained abducted at the time of reporting. From October to November, humanitarian access to Dammaj and three IDP camps was denied by Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah during clashes with the Salafists.

162. Following the visit of my Special Representative in November 2012 and the Government's commitment to address grave violations against children in Yemen, dialogue on an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment of children by the national armed forces continued in 2013. On 1 January, the Government established an interministerial committee, which, by July, had developed and endorsed a draft action plan. At the time of reporting, despite its adoption by the Cabinet on 4 September 2013, the action plan was pending signature owing to ongoing discussions regarding monitoring access. Meanwhile, the United Nations continued to promote relevant legal reforms and advocated, in the context of the National Dialogue Conference, for 18 as the minimum age for recruitment. In October, an implementation plan to accelerate birth registration was launched by the Government, addressing an existing loophole in recruitment mechanisms. Furthermore, the United Nations continued to engage in dialogue with Al-Houthi/Ansar Allah at the time of reporting based on a draft action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

Colombia

163. Following the signing of the “General Agreement for the end of the conflict and the construction of a stable and lasting peace” in August 2012, ongoing talks between the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) and the Government of Colombia achieved important progress on the issues of rural development and political participation. While the issue of children and armed conflict was not included in the agenda, both the third item, on “End of the conflict”, and the fifth item, on “Victims”, constitute opportunities to take into account child protection concerns. This is a positive development, I commend the ongoing efforts in the context of the peace talks and encourage the parties to continue to work in this direction towards a political solution. Furthermore, in the context of the peace talks, the Colombian Vice-President has specifically called on FARC-EP to respect minimum humanitarian standards, including by releasing children associated with them and by ending recruitment and use.

164. Hostilities between FARC-EP, the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) and the Colombian Armed Forces intensified in particular in the departments of Cauca, Choco, Nariño, Antioquia, Arauca, Santander and Putumayo. Extensive displacement triggered by such hostilities continued to increase children’s vulnerability, especially those of Afro-Colombian and indigenous origin. At least 110,000 people suffered from severe mobility restrictions in 2013, mostly as a result of hostilities but also confinement, contamination by explosive remnants of war, and security restrictions imposed by armed groups having an impact on access to humanitarian assistance and basic services. By the end of December, at least 24,862 people remained confined in 10 departments, with indigenous and Afro-Colombian people affected disproportionately.

165. Although the recruitment and use of children remained underreported in Colombia, the United Nations verified 81 cases of recruitment and use of children by armed groups in 25 departments and in Bogotá, including 58 children by FARC-EP and 17 by ELN. In July 2013, eight cases of recruitment of indigenous children by FARC-EP were documented in the department of Cauca. In December, in Antioquia, a 15-year-old boy was recruited by FARC-EP during a declared ceasefire. Furthermore, the Colombian Family Welfare Institute documented 342 children (114 girls and 228 boys) separated from armed groups in 2013, marking a significant increase, compared with 264 children separated in 2012. Among these children, 261 had been recruited by FARC-EP, 65 by ELN, 15 by armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of the paramilitary group Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia, and 1 by the Ejército Popular de Liberación.

166. At least 43 children were killed and 83 maimed during attacks by armed groups. Four children were killed and 10 maimed in clashes between armed groups or between the national armed forces and armed groups. For example, in August, a 14-year-old boy was killed in crossfire when FARC-EP attacked a police station in Putumayo. Furthermore, 11 children were killed and 28 maimed by anti-personnel mines or explosive remnants of war.

167. While underreported, girls and boys continued to be victims of sexual violence attributed to members of armed groups and in some cases by the national armed forces. Between January and October 2013, five cases of sexual violence against children by armed groups and 17 cases (two boys and 15 girls) by the national armed forces were referred to the National Institute of Forensics. Furthermore, information gathered by the United Nations and the Colombian Ombudsman Office indicate a pattern of sexual exploitation and abuse of girls and women in mining zones where armed groups are operating. Sexual violence also continued to be perpetrated by armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of the paramilitary groups. Since these groups are not considered actors of the armed conflict by the Government, and although children may also benefit from support by the State's Family Defenders as victims of violence, they continue to face obstacles in exercising their rights as protected under the Victims Law.

168. During 2013, the United Nations identified 26 education-related incidents resulting in damage to schools or suspension of classes. For example, in April 2013, a school in Arauca used as shelter by FARC-EP was damaged during clashes between the armed group and the national armed forces. In February 2013, the national armed forces used a school for military purposes while fighting against FARC-EP in Putumayo, putting school premises and children at risk often resulting in the suspension of classes. In November, during an armed lockdown by FARC-EP in Antioquia, at least six schools were closed, affecting approximately 3,000 children. Teachers continued to be targeted, with five teachers reportedly killed by unidentified armed groups and others subject to threats by armed groups in six different departments. The involvement of children in several civic-military activities by the Ministry of Defense and the national armed forces, prohibited by the Child Protection Code (Law 1098 of 2006), was reported in several departments.

169. The Government of Colombia has voluntarily accepted the monitoring and reporting mechanism pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\) on the condition that any dialogue between the United Nations and armed groups would take place with its consent. Constructive dialogue between the Government and the United Nations system, both at the political and technical levels, is ongoing. The establishment and implementation of policies to protect children from recruitment such as the Presidential Human Rights Programme is an encouraging development to ensure the protection of children affected by the conflict in Colombia.

170. A total of 342 children who had been separated from armed groups were referred to the Colombian Family Welfare Institute. Some children, in particular those separated from the armed groups formed after the demobilization of paramilitary organizations, were referred to the Attorney General's Office for prosecution in accordance with the Law on Childhood and Adolescence (8 November 2006) (Codigo de la Infancia y Adolescencia, Ley 1098). However, the children continued to face difficulties in benefitting from the same rights and protection as children recruited by other armed groups. All children, as victims, should be accorded the same benefits and protection, regardless of the group that recruited or used them.

171. The number of prosecutions for violations against children and information on cases taken up by the Office of the Attorney General remained limited. While the Colombian Family Welfare Institute attended to at least 5,417 children separated since 1999 from armed groups, to date there have been 69 convictions for child recruitment, including 5 under the Justice and Peace Law of 2005 (of which 2 in 2013), and 64 by the Human Rights Unit of the Office of the Attorney General (of which 14 in 2013). Additionally, there have been convictions by regional offices of the Attorney General. Despite such efforts, children continued to face difficulties in gaining access to justice, and impunity for violations against children remains a concern.

India

172. The recruitment and use of children, as young as 6 years of age, by Maoist armed groups in India, also known as Naxalites, continued in 2013. Although no disaggregated data on the number of children associated with armed groups in India was available to the United Nations, independent estimates indicate that at least 2,500 children are associated with armed groups in Naxal-affected areas. Notably, Naxalite recruitment also continued to affect girls and women. According to the Ministry of Home Affairs, boys and girls between 6 and 12 years of age were recruited into specific children's units (called bal dasta and bal sangham) in Bihar, Jharkhand, Chhattisgarh and Odisha States. The children were used as spies and for fighting with crude weapons, such as sticks. At the age of 12, children associated with Naxalites are reportedly transferred to age-specific units and receive military training in weapons handling and the use of improvised explosive devices. According to Government sources, children also continued to be placed in front of combat units as human shields. In Naxalite recruitment campaigns, targeting poor communities, parents are forced to offer boys and girls to the armed groups under the threat of violence, including killing and torture. Similarly, children are reportedly threatened with the killing of family members should they escape or surrender to security forces.

173. The recruitment and use of children remains to be criminalized by law. Of particular concern were several reports on the treatment of children allegedly associated with armed groups. As the Indian National Commission for Protection of Child Rights stated in its "Protocols for police and armed forces in contact with children in areas of civil unrest", children arrested under security legislation are often detained with adults, not tried through the juvenile justice system and deprived of their right to due process of law.

174. Although no disaggregated data on children killed or maimed in clashes between Maoist armed groups and Government security forces were available, at least 257 civilians, 101 security forces elements and 97 Naxalite members were killed in 2013 in 998 incidents. Taking into account the use of children as human shields by the Naxalites, the United Nations is concerned about the killing and maiming of children in hostilities.

175. The reported presence of girls within Naxalite ranks also raises concerns regarding sexual violence against children. According to the Government, based on statements of several women formerly associated with Naxalite groups, sexual violence, including rape and other forms of abuse, is a practice in some Naxalite camps.

176. Attacks on schools by Naxalites have continued to affect access by children to education in affected areas. Three schools were reportedly attacked by Naxalites in 2013. For example, on 15 June, up to 50 Naxalite fighters attacked and blew up a middle school in Bhulsumia village, Bihar. In that regard, continued reports on the military use of schools as barracks and bases or the deployment of Government security forces in the vicinity of schools remained a concern. For example, in an incident in Latehar district, Jharkhand, on 16 March, approximately 20 Naxalite fighters reportedly attacked a school, beat up teachers and destroyed a boundary wall under construction. Last, according to some reports, schools in Chhattisgarh were also used for the recruitment of schoolchildren by armed groups.

Nigeria

177. Conflict in the north-eastern region of Nigeria has resulted in serious violations against children. Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati wal-Jihad, also known as Boko Haram,<sup>2</sup> was created in 2002 in Maiduguri, the capital of the north-eastern Borno State. Its objective is to overthrow the Government and create an Islamic State governed by sharia law. Since July 2009, the extremist group has been carrying out targeted attacks against police, religious leaders, politicians, and public and international institutions, including a suicide attack on a United Nations building in Abuja in 2011, and indiscriminately killing civilians, including children.

178. The security and humanitarian situation in the north-eastern region deteriorated throughout 2013. The activities of Boko Haram and the military response have led to the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people within Nigeria and to neighbouring Cameroon, Chad and the Niger. A joint humanitarian assessment mission in September by the Nigerian authorities (National Emergency Management Agency), the United Nations and the Nigerian Red Cross, estimates that about 5.9 of the 11 million Nigerians who live in the north-eastern states have been affected by the Boko Haram insurgency, including 4 million in Borno State.

179. Humanitarian access to affected communities and for monitoring and verifying incidents of grave violations against children has become increasingly difficult, in particular since the closure of Maiduguri airport following an attack by Boko Haram in December 2013. Between May and December 2013 alone, at least 1,200 people were killed in 48 Boko Haram-related attacks in the States of Adamawa, Borno and Yobe.

180. The United Nations received reports of the recruitment and use of children as young as 12 by Boko Haram. Children are allegedly used for intelligence purposes, tracking movements of the security forces, transporting guns and taking part in attacks, including the burning of schools and churches.

181. Hundreds of children were killed or maimed by Boko Haram in bomb and gun attacks against anyone who supported democracy or so-called Western values. In September alone, 491 persons were killed in nine attacks, including an unknown number of children. For example, on 17 September 2013, Boko Haram attacked Benisheikh, killing at least 161 people, mainly civilians.

182. Of particular concern were the targeted attacks on schools by Boko Haram, which were on the increase in Yobe and Borno States since October 2012 and throughout 2013, resulting in the killing of at least 100 children and 70 teachers. For example, in March 2013, at least 11 schools in Borno State were attacked resulting in the killing of at least seven teachers and three children. In June, two secondary schools were attacked in Yobe and Borno States, resulting in the killing of seven schoolchildren and two teachers in Yobe and eight boys and two girls in Borno. In July, a Boko Haram leader, Abubakar Shekau, publicly stated that they would burn schools and kill teachers and the group claimed responsibility for an attack on 6 July on a secondary school in Mamudo, Yobe State, killing at least 29 children and one teacher, some of them burned alive. Also in July, a government secondary school in Yobe State was attacked by armed elements at night while the schoolchildren were sleeping. Sections of the school and dormitory were set ablaze and escaping students were shot. The reported number of casualties ranged between 18 and 42. In the most fatal attack on children in 2013, on 29 September, Boko Haram elements entered and opened fire in the male dormitory at the College of Agriculture in Gujba, Yobe State, killing 65 students and wounding 18 others.

183. Boko Haram also targeted and killed education and medical personnel. For example, on 9 April, suspected Boko Haram members killed four officials of the Borno State Feeding Committee, which runs a primary and secondary school feeding programme, while they were on an inspection tour of schools in Dikwa town, Borno State. In February, three foreign doctors were reportedly killed in Potiskum and 10 female health workers were killed in attacks on polio vaccination centres in Kano.

184. The escalating violence and recurrent attacks on schools severely disrupted the right of children to education, with 15,000 children in Borno State reportedly having to stop attending schools between February and May 2013. The health-care system in Borno State has also reportedly collapsed, with most medical personnel fleeing in fear of being attacked by Boko Haram. These trends of attacks on schools and the killing and maiming of children continued in early 2014. For instance, on 25 February 2014, 59 schoolchildren in the College of Buni Yadi, a secondary school in Yobe State in north-east Nigeria, were reportedly shot or burned alive.

185. The Government of Nigeria responded to the threat posed by Boko Haram with the deployment of a joint task force comprising military, police, immigration and intelligence officers in June 2011. In May 2013, the Government declared a state of emergency in Borno, Yobe and Adamawa States, following which armed clashes between the joint task force and Boko Haram escalated in the context of the joint task force counter-insurgency operations. The United Nations received reports of 14 children in Borno State, between 9 and 13 years of age, and 21 children in Yobe State who had been reportedly arrested in the context of such operations. The United Nations welcomes their release in May 2013 as part of the amnesty programme announced by the Government and calls on the Government to do its utmost to uphold its obligations to prevent the arbitrary arrest and detention of children and to ensure respect for the fundamental principles of the right to a fair trial, including in the context of a State emergency and of the ongoing counter-insurgency operations.

186. Furthermore, vigilante groups, commonly referred to as the “Civilian joint task force”, which emerged to protect their communities from Boko Haram, progressively armed themselves with machetes and guns, and were observed manning checkpoints in support of the joint task force. According to the Government, the “Civilian joint task force” is not part of the Government forces and the activities of the groups are of concern since they operate outside of the rule of law, chain of command and accountability of the security forces.

187. The United Nations has denounced the attacks in north-eastern Nigeria and has called upon the authorities to launch prompt and thorough investigations to hold perpetrators accountable. The United Nations also takes note of the commitment of Nigeria to uphold international humanitarian and human rights law, to protect the rights of children and to protect children from conflict-related violence, including through its existing national legislation and policies. I urge the Nigerian authorities to continue to support the independent National Human Rights Commission to implement its far-reaching and robust mandate to monitor and report on grave violations in the affected areas. I welcome the Government's commitment to help to facilitate access for human rights monitors and humanitarian actors to the north-east.

Pakistan

188. The recruitment of children by armed groups in Pakistan, including reportedly for use as suicide bombers and bomb planters, remained a grave concern in 2013. For example, in March, the police arrested 11 children, between 10 and 17 years of age, who were allegedly used by the United Baloch Army to plant improvised explosive devices. All the children were held in the government of Balochistan security facility awaiting trial at the time of reporting. No exact figures could be established on the number of children used by armed groups, in particular in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas. However, on 24 October, 21 children, between 7 and 12 years of age, allegedly proceeding to Pakistan for military training by the Taliban were detained by Afghan security forces in Nuristan Province. The Taliban rejected those allegations.

189. Although exact figures of child casualties were not always available in 2013, improvised explosive device blasts were reported to have killed at least 18 children and injured 76 others, particularly in the Provinces of Balochistan and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. For example, a twin suicide attack on 22 September at the All Saints Church in Peshawar city, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province, killed 81 people, including an unknown number of children. A splinter group of the Tehrik-i-Taliban, the Tehrik-i-Taliban-Jandullah, claimed responsibility. In another attack, on 20 June 2013, a suicide bomber blew himself up at a Shia mosque in Quetta, Balochistan, followed by a remote-controlled improvised explosive device explosion after civilians and rescue workers had reached the site, killing at least 28 persons, including 3 children, and injuring 65 others. Lashkar-e-Jhangvi claimed responsibility. On 16 February, in a suicide attack by an unknown group in a marketplace near the Hazara town of Quetta, 92 people were killed and 254 injured, including at least 45 women and 28 children. In addition, attacks by armed assailants, mainly in Balochistan and the city of Karachi, caused the death of 7 children and injured 16. Armed clashes between the security forces and armed groups and between armed groups themselves in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas resulted in the death of one child and the injury of four.

190. Targeted attacks on schools, teachers and schoolchildren have continued, mainly carried out by the Tehrik-i-Taliban and aligned local groups, with 78 attacks reported to the United Nations. The highest number of attacks on schools occurred in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province (51), followed by the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (19). In one incident, on 30 March, a school principal was killed and eight students, between 5 and 10 years of age, were injured when two men on a motorcycle hurled hand grenades and opened fire in a primary school in Karachi. Twenty-six attacks targeted female educational institutions. In January 2013, armed elements reportedly killed five female teachers and two health workers returning by bus from a community project in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province. On 26 March, a female teacher was executed in the presence of her 13-year-old son on her way to school by two unidentified armed elements in Khyber Agency, Federally Administered Tribal Areas. On 5 September, a bomb blast outside the Government Girls' Primary School in Bannu district, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province, allegedly carried out by the local Taliban, injured 13 female students below the age of 10. Several schools, in particular girls' schools, also received threats by armed groups resulting in closures. For example, on 15 April, a Taliban faction led by Hafiz Gul Bahadur threatened boys and girls if they violated his ban on five schools in Miranshah, North Waziristan. The United Nations also received reports that Pakistan security forces were using Government school buildings in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province and Federally Administered Tribal Areas to launch operations against armed groups.

191. Attacks on polio workers continued, resulting in the killing of several polio workers and eight police workers providing escort. On 21 November, 11 teachers and local volunteers were abducted from a private school in Khyber Agency after polio vaccinations had taken place in the school. The abduction was allegedly carried out by the Lashkar-e-Islam group, and the victims were released after a few days unharmed. Hospitals and medical clinics were also targeted. At least four people were killed, including at least one hospital staff, and five injured in a suicide bomb attack on a hospital in Bajaur tribal area on 20 April. On 15 June, at least 25 civilians were killed and many others wounded in a coordinated attack claimed by Lashkar-e-Jhangvi on a bus with female university students and, subsequently, the Medical Complex in Quetta, where casualties of the first attack received treatment.

192. The Government took steps towards strengthening its child protection policy and legislative framework, including the approval of a Balochistan child protection policy and the vetting and submission to the Cabinet of a child protection act for Balochistan; formulation of rules of business for the Child Protection and Welfare Commission in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and for the Child Protection Authority in Sindh; and the appointment of a Child Rights Commissioner at the federal level and in all provinces of Pakistan. I encourage the Government of Pakistan to continue its efforts to better protect children. My country team in Pakistan stands ready to support the Government in this regard.

Philippines

193. Children continued to be used by all armed groups, including by the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), which signed an action plan with the United Nations in 2009, the New People's Party (NPA), the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF), Abu Sayyaf and the independent MILF splinter group Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF). The latter two increasingly engaged in fighting in 2013 in opposition to the peace process between the Government and MILF. For instance, at least seven boys between 14 and 17 years of age were used as combatants and porters by MNLF in their attack on Zamboanga City in September, resulting in the death of two boys. At least 150 civilians, including 13 girls and 19 boys were used as human shields in the operation. With regard to Government forces, one case of the use of a 12-year-old boy as an informant for the police was verified.

194. The United Nations remained concerned regarding the continued reports of arrest, detention and public exposure of children by the Armed Forces of the Philippines for alleged association with armed groups. In June, three internally displaced boys from Maguindanao Province, between 16 and 17 years of age, were arrested, detained and ill-treated by elements of the national armed forces for alleged membership with BIFF. The interrogation and reported abuse took place in a nearby school building. In another case, a 14-year-old boy was arrested in Zamboanga, detained and handcuffed for almost two weeks under the allegation of being an MNLF member. Another two boys were arrested on 22 July by the national armed forces in Loreto town of Agusan del Sur Province for alleged association with NPA. Medical reports support that they were ill-treated in military custody.

195. At least 20 children (4 girls and 16 boys) were killed and 22 others injured (6 girls and 16 boys) in 33 separate incidents. Most child casualties resulted from clashes between the national armed forces and armed groups, including with MNLF in Zamboanga City in September, as well as in factional fighting within armed groups. For instance, in February and April, a series of clashes between two MILF factions in North Cotabato and Maguindanao resulted in the death of at least three boys and the injury of a 12-year-old girl. In another incident, on 3 April, an 8-year-old boy died and two more boys, between 12 and 13 years of age, were wounded in Compostela Valley Province in AFP gunfire. While the national armed forces alleged that the casualties resulted from a clash with NPA, their families denied such an incident and filed a murder case against the elements of the national armed forces.

196. Armed clashes also continued to have an impact on access by children to education in affected areas. For instance, in July, clashes between BIFF and the national armed forces resulted in the suspension of classes for 5,883 children in three municipalities of Maguindanao Province. Owing to tensions between MILF and MNLF in June, schools were closed in two villages in Matalam municipality of North Cotabato Province, affecting 398 students. In September, when MNLF clashed with the AFP in Zamboanga City, three schools were completely destroyed in fires.

197. Education and health-care personnel were also targeted by armed groups. For instance, on 23 September in Midsayap Municipality of North Cotabato Province, BIFF used the Malingao Elementary School as a defence posture, holding approximately 1,500 adults and children hostage, and abducted nine teachers in the course of their retreat. On 18 May, Abu Sayyaf abducted a medical worker from the health centre in Jolo municipality, Sulu Province.

198. On 15 July, the national armed forces issued guidelines on the conduct of activities in schools and hospitals. I am encouraged by the reported removal of some national armed forces units from schools upon advocacy by the United Nations in regular meetings with the Government's monitoring, reporting and response mechanism, and encourage continued implementation of the guidelines. Military camps in or in the vicinity of schools and health clinics affect the right of children to education and health care and put them at risk of attacks.

199. Peace talks between the Government and MILF were ongoing throughout 2013. A comprehensive peace pact towards the new Bangsamoro entity, including provisions on the demobilization of MILF forces, was signed on 27 March 2014. The United Nations continued to engage with MILF on the action plan, to which MILF signed an addendum on extension on 29 April 2013. A technical support mission conducted by the Office of my Special Representative and UNICEF in May resulted in the development of an operational plan outlining practical steps towards action plan implementation. However, MILF had not formally responded to communications by the United Nations in the Philippines at the time of reporting. I again urge MILF to continue its collaboration with the United Nations and encourage the Government of the Philippines to continue to provide support in that regard.

Southern border provinces of Thailand

200. Despite the unprecedented announcement of a “general consensus on the peace dialogue process” between the Government of Thailand and “people who have different opinions and ideologies from the State”, including the National Revolutionary Front (BRN), on 28 February 2013, armed violence continued to affect the southern border provinces of Thailand.

201. The United Nations received reports of the recruitment and use of both girls and boys as young as 14 years of age by armed groups, including BRN. The children are allegedly used mainly as informants and lookouts to track movement of the Thai security forces. Concerns also persist over the informal association of children with village defence groups (Chor Ror Bor). According to the Government, local Government officers in relevant provinces were instructed to raise awareness and monitor the implementation of regulations issued by the Government to address the concern of the informal association of children with the Chor Ror Bor. The involvement of children in armed forces and armed groups remains to be explicitly criminalized by law. Furthermore, the United Nations continued to receive worrisome information regarding the administrative detention of children for alleged association with armed groups. According to the Government, the Criminal Procedural Code and the Juvenile and Family Court and Juvenile and Family Procedure Act of 2010 are applied to child suspects in order to protect their rights and to assure orderly separation, reintegration and assistance. The United Nations looks forward to an update on the implementation of those commitments.

202. Credible sources indicate that at least 316 improvised explosive device attacks were reportedly carried out in Narathiwat, Pattani, Songkhla, and Yala Provinces, including 35 improvised explosive device attacks during the last two weeks of Ramadan. In April 2013 alone, 45 people were reportedly killed and 79 others injured in 298 incidents, including bombings and drive-by shootings. Although exact figures on child casualties were not always available, the United Nations received reports of 7 children killed and 37 injured in such incidents. For example, on 21 March 2013, a 9-year-old boy was killed and 14 people wounded when a bomb was reportedly detonated in an ice cream shop in Pattani Province. Among several reported child casualties resulting from drive-by shootings, a 2-year-old boy was severely wounded when his father was killed on 11 December 2013.

203. Armed groups continued to target schools and teachers, although the United Nations was not able to attribute them to specific parties. At least seven teachers and three education-related personnel were killed, as confirmed by the Thailand Ministry of Education. On 23 January, a teacher was executed by two gunmen in a school cafeteria in front of dozens of children, including his 7-year-old daughter, in Narathiwat Province. Classes were suspended for several days in 12 schools in Pattani Province, after the killing of a teacher in a targeted drive-by shooting in August. Schools were also affected by attacks, including by at least three improvised explosive device attacks on Government security forces deployed to protect schools, putting schoolchildren and protected personnel further at risk. In one attack in Yala Province, on 10 September, two soldiers were killed and a 12-year-old schoolboy injured on school premises.

204. In my previous annual report, I welcomed the fact that the Government and the United Nations country team were engaging in dialogue on access to the southern border provinces to conduct independent verification and report on alleged violations against children, including through minimum operating modalities. While the Government has continued to facilitate programmatic visits, I regret that no progress has been achieved on the issue of access for monitoring and verification, and I strongly urge the Government to move forward with the country team to facilitate independent access in that regard.

IV. Recommendations

205. I am deeply concerned about the grave violations outlined in the present report and call upon all parties to immediately cease to commit, and take all measures to prevent, all grave violations against children, and to take all necessary measures to make violators accountable.

206. I strongly urge all parties listed in the annexes to the present report engaged in the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, sexual violence against children and/or attacks on schools and hospitals or protected personnel to immediately cease all grave violations against children and to enter into dialogue with the United Nations to develop and implement action plans.

207. I welcome the positive engagement of Member States within the scope of the campaign “Children, Not Soldiers”, to end the recruitment and use of children by Government security forces in conflict by 2016 and call on them to continue with determined and tangible steps with a view to finalizing the development and implementation of action plans. In that regard, I call upon the donor community to assist in addressing funding gaps for the implementation of action plans and associated activities.

208. I welcome the progress made by some non-State armed groups in releasing children or issuing commitments to better protect children, including the prohibition of child recruitment in command orders and declarations.

209. I call upon Member States to allow independent access to the United Nations for the purposes of monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children and to facilitate contact between the United Nations and non-State armed groups for dialogue, conclusion and follow-up on action plans in order to bring an end to violations, in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council on children and armed conflict. Such contact does not prejudice the political or legal status of those non-State armed groups.

210. I note with deep concern the continued attacks on and the military use of schools and the impact on children in that regard. In line with applicable international humanitarian law, and in accordance with Security Council resolution 2143 \(2014\), I encourage Member States to consider adopting, as a priority, additional concrete measures to deter the military use of schools.

211. I am also concerned about the detention of children in situations of armed conflict, in particular in the context of counter-terrorism activities, and call for urgent measures to address this growing and worrisome trend.

212. I welcome the leadership and important contribution of regional and subregional organizations to conflict prevention, mediation and peace support operations. I call on them to further mainstream child protection considerations in their guidance and policy development, mission planning, training of personnel and conduct of peace support operations.

213. I call upon the Council to continue to support the children and armed conflict agenda by strengthening provisions for the protection of children in all relevant mandates of United Nations peacekeeping, special political and peacebuilding missions, including the deployment of child protection advisers.

214. I call upon all Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its three Optional Protocols. I also call upon all States parties to these instruments to fully implement the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

V. Lists in the annexes to the present report

215. Compared with the past year, eight new parties are included in the annexes to the present report. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, ADF, NDC/Cheka and the Mayi Mayi Kata Katanga are listed for the recruitment and use of children. NDC/Cheka are also listed for the killing and maiming of children and ADF for recurrent attacks on schools and hospitals. In South Sudan, SPLA in Opposition and the White Army are identified as perpetrators of the recruitment and use of children and the killing and maiming of children. Furthermore, SPLA has additionally been listed for the killing and maiming of children. Nigeria was introduced as a situation of concern in the present report owing to the continued, systematic attacks on schools and the killing and maiming of children by Boko Haram, which is listed for those violations. In the Central African Republic, local self-defence militias known as the anti-Balaka are listed for their widespread involvement in the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children. In addition to the new parties on the lists, FRPI in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, already listed for the recruitment and use of, and sexual violence against, children, is also listed for recurrent attacks on schools and hospitals. The Mayi Mayi Simba “Morgan”, already listed for sexual violence against children, are also listed for their recruitment and use.

216. Other changes in the list resulted from the fragmentation of previously listed parties or other changes in the landscape of armed conflict in respective situations. The following are separately listed in the present report for the recruitment and use of children: BIFF, formerly part of MILF in the Philippines; pro-Government militias in Yemen, including the Salafists and the popular committees; and ASWJ in Somalia, whose factions continued to have varying degrees of relationships with the Government forces. In the Syrian Arab Republic, armed opposition groups were treated under the FSA umbrella in previous annual reports. Owing to continuously shifting alliances, the emergence of new structures and strengthened reporting, Jhabat al-Nusra, ISIS, Ahrar al-Sahm and YPG were identified as separate perpetrators of the recruitment and use of children in 2013. Jhabat al-Nusra and ISIS are also listed for the killing and maiming of children. In the Central African Republic, the ex-Séléka, already mentioned in the annexes of my previous report, are now listed separately with associated armed groups for all four violations.

217. The Chadian armed forces were delisted from the annexes in the present report in view of full compliance with the action plan. I am looking forward to reporting on the sustainable efforts made by the Government in my report on children and armed conflict in Chad and in my next annual report. Finally, armed groups that were no longer active in 2013 and were removed from the annexes include the SLA-Historical Leadership, SLA-Mother Wing (Abu Gasim), and SLA-Unity in the Sudan; as the Mayi Mayi Tawimbi in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and, the Convention patriotique pour le salut du Kodro, the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricain pour la justice and the Union des forces républicaines in the Central African Republic.

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2014, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2068 (2012), by which the Council requested that I continue to submit annual reports on the implementation of its resolutions and presidential statements on children and armed conflict.

2. The report highlights recent global trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and provides information on grave violations committed against children in 2014. The main activities and initiatives with regard to the implementation of relevant Security Council resolutions and the conclusions of its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict are outlined. In line with the resolutions of the Council pertaining to children and armed conflict, the report includes in its annexes a list of parties that engage in the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children, the killing and maiming of children, attacks on schools and/or hospitals and attacks or threats of attacks against protected personnel, in contravention of international law.

3. All information presented in the present report and its annexes has been documented, vetted and verified for accuracy by the United Nations. In situations where the ability to obtain or independently verify information is hampered by such factors as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. The preparation of the report and its annexes involved broad consultations within the United Nations, at Headquarters and in the field, and with relevant Member States.

4. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), and in identifying situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict is guided by the criteria found in international humanitarian law and international jurisprudence for determining the existence of an armed conflict. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State party does not affect its legal status.

* Reissued for technical reasons on 4 August 2015.

II. Addressing the impact of armed conflict on children

A. Trends and developments

5. There were unprecedented challenges in 2014 with regard to the protection of tens of millions of children growing up in situations affected by conflict. In particular, children in several countries affected by major crises, namely, the Central African Republic, Iraq, Israel/State of Palestine, Nigeria, South Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic, were exposed to the most egregious violations. This added to existing violations against children in protracted conflicts, such as in Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Somalia. Most recently, the security situation in Yemen deteriorated further with reports, in April 2015, of significant numbers of child casualties.

B. Abductions as an increasing trend

6. Mass abductions of civilians, including children, have become an increasingly prevalent feature of conflict in many situations described in the present report. The abduction of children had primarily been a precursor to other violations, such as killing and maiming, recruitment and use, or sexual violence. In many instances, abducted children were also arbitrarily detained by Governments and armed groups. While these trends continued in 2014, armed groups abducted children in greater numbers and increasingly used abductions as a tactic to terrorize or target particular ethnic groups or religious communities.

7. In Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, over one thousand girls and boys were abducted by the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL). In one incident in the Syrian Arab Republic, ISIL abducted approximately 150 young boys on their way home from having taken school exams in Aleppo. They were released from captivity after a few months, during which they were physically abused, indoctrinated and made to observe violent practices. Towards the end of the year, ISIL issued a document justifying its sexual slavery of Yezidi girls abducted in Iraq. In Nigeria, Boko Haram abducted hundreds of women and girls in major attacks in Chibok and across the country's north-eastern region. Video statements released by Boko Haram indicated that the abductions were in retaliation against the Government for the detention of relatives and served as punishment for schoolchildren attending Western-style schools.

8. The information contained in the present report demonstrates that the increase in the frequency and scale of abductions has resulted in greater protection needs for children. The children require safe release, family tracing, medical, psychological and legal assistance and facilitation of voluntary repatriation in the context of cross-border abductions.

9. The long-term consequences of abductions are of concern. Dominic Ongwen of the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) was transferred to the International Criminal Court in January 2015. Abducted by LRA in 1989 on his way to school, Dominic Ongwen rose to the rank of major at 18 years of age. His transfer to The Hague 25 years later is a reminder of the long-term consequences of such violations.

10. Rising concerns about abductions were highlighted by Member States in the March 2015 open debate of the Security Council on children and armed conflict. In the light of those concerns, my Special Representative will explore new ways to respond to the increasing occurrence of abductions. I call upon the Security Council to expand the tools available to child protection actors to gather information and report on the abduction of children, including through adding abductions as a trigger violation for listing within the annexes of this report.

C. Responses to extreme violence

11. Extreme violence rose to unprecedented levels in 2014, leading to a dramatic increase of grave violations against children. Children have been disproportionately affected and were often the direct targets of acts of violence intended to inflict maximum casualties, terrorize entire communities and provoke worldwide outrage.

12. A tactic of extremist groups is the targeting of schools since they fundamentally object to the goal of universal education for children because they are an emblematic target. In other instances, schools located in areas controlled by extremist armed groups have had their curriculum changed to reflect the groups' ideology.

13. The military responses to the threat caused by extreme violence have also raised serious child protection concerns. In a number of situations where extreme violence is prevalent, military operations led by regional or international coalitions or by neighbouring countries have resulted in the killing and maiming of children. Children have also been subjected to sexual violence and recruited and used by pro-Government militias.

14. An area of particular concern related to the response to extreme violence is the deprivation of liberty of children due to their alleged association with extremist groups. Children have been detained on suspicion of being associated with an extremist group without review of the lawfulness of the deprivation of liberty. These children should be treated primarily as victims and their rights protected at all times. At a minimum, Member States should ensure that procedures or trials are consistent with international juvenile justice standards, with deprivation of liberty as a measure of last resort.

15. The reintegration of children recruited and used in extreme violence raises new challenges. Reintegration has always required significant and long-term resources. However, the impact of exposure to the severity of the violence committed in 2014 across a number of situations will cause particularly serious and long-term distress. Comprehensive programmes are needed to address the reintegration needs of these children. Only through concerted action will it be possible to establish measures to mitigate the harm done to them.

16. Responding appropriately to extreme violence is complex, but it is imperative that all responses be conducted in full compliance with international humanitarian law, refugee law and human rights law. These international legal obligations are the minimum that must be in place in all national, regional and international responses to security threats. The Security Council, African Union, European Union, League of Arab States, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, coalition Member States and individual Member States should ensure that responses include specific mitigating measures for the protection of children. I also encourage all concerned Governments to ensure that the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations against children, are criminalized, allegations of violations investigated and perpetrators held to account. It is also critical that military operations be complemented by efforts to address the root causes that lead to the emergence of extremist groups. Recognizing and addressing social deprivation and alienation of communities, strengthening efforts to grant access to education and other key social services will contribute to isolating the leaders of extremist groups through delegitimizing their discourse and reducing the numbers who willingly enlist.

D. Engagement with non-State actors

17. Forty-nine armed groups are listed in the annexes to the present report because they have committed grave violations against children. Engaging with that group of actors is inherently challenging, given their variety, number and often changing nature. The emergence of extremist groups has compounded the challenge. Notwithstanding those limitations, the United Nations has sustained dialogue with armed groups in several situations of conflict during the period under review with the aim of ending and preventing violations, negotiating the separation of children and facilitating their reintegration. As a result of that engagement, the leadership of a number of armed groups have issued command orders to prohibit and sanction child recruitment and use and other grave violations against children.

18. Engaging with armed groups requires a case-by-case approach. My Special Representative has utilized engagements with mediators, special envoys and regional organizations to integrate the protection of children into peacemaking initiatives, such as the Agreement on the cessation of hostilities in the Central African Republic, which was signed in Brazzaville in July by parties to the conflict in the country. This approach has contributed to gaining commitments from a number of non-State actors to end the recruitment and use of children and prevent other grave violations throughout the reporting period.

19. However, the nature of many armed groups listed in the annexes to the present report, combined with limitations on the access of the United Nations, presents challenges for monitoring commitments. While it is commendable when an armed group pledges to better protect children, such commitments need to be translated into concrete and verifiable actions that make a difference in children's lives.

20. With child protection partners in the field, my Special Representative will continue to identify opportunities to engage in dialogue with armed groups, obtain concrete commitments and sign action plans. The sustained and complementary use of multiple tools is needed to accelerate progress in compliance by armed groups with international child protection standards. In order for those tools to be effective, Member States should allow independent access to the United Nations in order to facilitate monitoring and reporting.

E. “Children, Not Soldiers” campaign

21. In March, my Special Representative and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) launched the campaign “Children, Not Soldiers” to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by government security forces by the end of 2016. The campaign generated wide support from Member States, United Nations and civil society partners and provided opportunities for the countries involved to have an exchange on experiences and best practices. In the campaign's first year, progress was steady. Six of the seven countries concerned — Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Myanmar, Somalia, South Sudan and Yemen — have signed or recommitted to action plans. I encourage the Sudan to sign an action plan with the United Nations.

22. A first country, Chad, fully complied with the measures detailed in its action plan, and its armed forces were delisted from the annexes to the present report in 2014. Other Governments have enacted laws to criminalize underage recruitment, released children from army ranks, conducted national awareness campaigns, and developed and implemented age-assessment mechanisms.

23. Throughout the coming year, my Special Representative will continue to reach out to Member States concerned with the campaign, the international community, regional organizations and all relevant partners to mobilize political, technical and financial support to address challenges faced by countries in the implementation of their action plan. This is necessary in order to put in place mechanisms strong enough to safeguard the progress accomplished to protect children from recruitment if a new crisis strikes. In the campaign's second year, United Nations efforts and advocacy will be directed to encourage all countries concerned with the campaign that have not yet done so to criminalize and prosecute the recruitment and use of children. Accountability remains far too rare, even in countries that have criminalized the recruitment of children.

24. Putting in place strong age-assessment procedures for troop screening and recruitment is another challenge faced by most countries involved in the campaign. It is an essential, yet often difficult, step to execute accurately, especially in countries lacking well-established national birth registration systems.

25. The release of children found in the ranks of national security forces is an essential step, and must be followed by adequate and properly resourced reintegration services that also take into account the particular needs of girls. Resources must be available for community-based programmes that provide psychosocial assistance and help children build their future through educational and vocational opportunities.

III. Information on grave violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

26. The Government of Afghanistan faced sustained security challenges in the reporting period, most notably following the presidential elections. In my previous annual report, I highlighted the significant spike in the killing and maiming of children in Afghanistan. In 2014, the reported number increased by 48 per cent, to 2,502 child casualties.

27. The United Nations documented the recruitment and use of 68 children (65 boys, 3 girls) of which 22 were verified (all boys), one each by the Afghan National Police and the Afghan local police and 20 associated with the Taliban and other armed groups. This marks a decrease in child recruitment and use in Afghanistan compared with 2013, when 97 children were reportedly recruited and used. However, owing to widespread underreporting, these figures do not accurately reflect the situation. In a worrisome trend, the Taliban continued to recruit children to carry out suicide attacks and to plant improvised explosive devices, and used them in active combat and as spies. For example, on 9 February, a 14-year-old suicide bomber detonated explosives near an Afghan National Security Forces checkpoint in Sharan district, injuring six civilians and five national police officers. The Taliban claimed responsibility for the attack.

28. The pilot child protection units in the national police in four provinces reportedly prevented 156 children from enlisting, indicating a potential for a large and beneficial impact if such units are replicated across the country. In addition, the local police reported 55 cases of rejected underage applicants.

29. As at December, according to the Ministry of Justice, 258 boys were held in juvenile rehabilitation centres across the country on national security-related charges, including association with armed groups. Of 105 child detainees interviewed by the United Nations between February 2013 and December 2014, 44 reported having been subjected to ill-treatment or torture.

30. The increase in child casualties included at least 710 children killed and 1,792 injured in 1,091 separate incidents. Armed groups, including the Taliban and the Hizb-e-Islami, were responsible for 1,343 child casualties (392 killed, 951 injured), Afghan national security forces for 396 (126 killed, 270 injured), and international military forces for 38 (24 killed, 14 injured). Cross-border shelling from Pakistan resulted in 57 child casualties (5 killed, 52 injured). The United Nations was unable to attribute 668 child casualties (163 killed, 505 injured), particularly in incidents of crossfire.

31. Ground engagements were the leading cause of child casualties, resulting in the killing of 311 children and injury to 920 others, nearly double the number in 2013. Attacks with improvised explosive devices by armed groups caused 664 child casualties. Suicide attacks resulted in 214 child casualties, up by 80 per cent compared to the previous year. Explosive remnants of war killed or maimed 328 children. Air strikes by international military forces resulted in 38 child casualties, including eight from drone strikes.

32. In nine incidents, eight boys and six girls reportedly were victims of sexual violence. Of these, five cases, affecting four girls and two boys, were verified. Four verified incidents were attributed to the national police, and one incident to a pro-Government militia commander. On a positive note, regarding accountability, a local police member from Laghman Province was sentenced in March to 10 years of imprisonment for sexual assault and attempted rape of a seven-year-old boy.

33. Schools were attacked in 163 verified incidents, including 29 attacks or threats of attack against protected personnel and 28 incidents of placement of improvised explosive devices inside school premises. Several attacks were related to the use of schools as polling stations. A total of 94 incidents were attributed to the Taliban and other armed groups, 1 to international forces and 68 incidents that could not be attributed. Girls' education was particularly targeted by the Taliban, including the distribution of leaflets with serious threats against students, intimidation of female teachers, attacks on school personnel for not complying with the Taliban's demand to close schools, and attacks on students on their way to school. At least 469 Afghan schools remained closed because of insecurity.

34. At least 10 health-care personnel were killed and 14 were abducted. Health facilities continued to be attacked directly or as collateral damage. A total of 38 verified incidents were attributed to armed groups, including 13 to the Taliban, and 4 to the Afghan national security forces, including forced entries into health facilities in search of alleged armed group elements.

35. The United Nations verified 11 cases of military use of schools by the Taliban (3), Afghan National Army (3), the local police (3), the national police (1), and other Afghan national security forces units (1), as well as 3 incidents of military use of hospitals by the national police and the Taliban.

36. Twenty-four boys and two girls were abducted in 17 separate incidents, resulting in the killing of at least four boys by the Taliban, the rape of two girls by the local police, and the rape of a boy by a pro-Government militia. Overall, the Taliban abducted 15 boys, accusing them of being Government spies.

37. The United Nations verified 72 of 83 reported incidents affecting humanitarian access to children. There were 125 abductions of humanitarian personnel, the killing and injuring of 41, and 9 attacks on humanitarian convoys, including 2 United Nations convoys. Armed groups, notably the Taliban, were responsible for 85 per cent of all verified incidents, including intimidation of humanitarian personnel.

38. In a welcome development, in July, the Government officially endorsed a road map for compliance with the action plan to end and prevent child recruitment into its security forces. Significant progress was made on three of five priority actions, in particular the adoption of a presidential decree criminalizing child recruitment by Government security forces, which came into effect on 2 February 2015. Furthermore, the Ministry of the Interior issued and disseminated a directive prohibiting the use of children at national police and local police checkpoints, including in support roles, stating that the perpetrators would be sanctioned. Efforts also continued to strengthen age assessment procedures and disseminate guidance to recruitment units.

39. Despite the progress achieved, significant efforts are needed by all actors to fully implement the action plan. The lack of services for children rejected from recruitment or released from active service remained a significant concern. Moreover, I urge the Government of Afghanistan to address widespread impunity for violations of children's rights, particularly within the national police and local police, and investigate the allegations of torture. I condemn the grave violations committed against children by armed groups, including the Taliban, the Haqqani Network and Hezb-i-Islami and urge them to immediately end all grave violations against children.

Central African Republic

40. The situation of children in the Central African Republic worsened as fighting between armed groups, including anti-Balaka and ex-Séléka, and attacks targeting civilians continued. In line with its mandate, the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission (MINUSCA) supported consultations to revitalize an inclusive reconciliation and political dialogue which resulted in the cessation of hostilities agreement, including commitments to end violations against children, signed in Brazzaville in July.

41. The United Nations verified 464 cases of new recruitment, including 446 by anti-Balaka (86 girls, 360 boys) and 18 boys by ex-Séléka. However, violations are thought to be largely underreported because of lack of access and limited monitoring capacity on the ground.

42. The period was characterized by a sharp increase in the number of documented cases of killing and maiming of children as young as three months old, with 146 killed (109 boys, 37 girls) and 289 injured (182 boys, 107 girls). A total of 58 of the killings were attributed to ex-Séléka, 49 to anti-Balaka, and 20 to unidentified armed men. Children were caught in crossfire, hacked to death with machetes and killed or injured by bullets. For example, in January, four boys between 9 and 10 years of age were beheaded by ex-Séléka in retaliation for an attack against Muslim community members in Bangui. Between January and February, 22 children, including 9 girls, were killed during attacks by anti-Balaka against ex-Séléka and Muslim communities. In August, Muslim youths associated with ex-Séléka attacked the Saint Joseph Cathedral in Bambari, killing 20 children and injuring 4.

43. Rape and other forms of sexual violence against children continue to be of great concern. The rape of 405 girls and 1 boy, between the ages of 7 and 17, were documented throughout the country; 205 by ex-Séléka, 187 by anti-Balaka, 12 by unidentified persons and 2 by the national police. Sexual violence incidents remained largely underreported. Also of concern is the fact that the leadership of both anti-Balaka and ex-Séléka did not take action against identified alleged perpetrators of rape against children when cases were reported to them.

44. The United Nations interviewed several boys following allegations of repeated acts of sexual violence by elements of “Operation Sangaris” in and around the M’Poko camp for displaced persons in Bangui between December 2013 and May 2014. Their national authorities have opened an investigation that is ongoing. The victims have been provided with necessary assistance by the United Nations and local partners. It is of the utmost importance that the perpetrators be held responsible.

45. Both anti-Balaka and ex-Séléka looted schools and hospitals and threatened health personnel, students and teachers. The United Nations documented nine attacks on schools, including four attributed to anti-Balaka, four to ex-Séléka.

46. Five other schools were temporarily used by the International Support Mission to the Central African Republic and “Operation Sangaris” and later vacated. The United Nations also verified nine attacks against hospitals. In addition, many schools and hospitals that were looted, destroyed or damaged in 2013 remained closed.

47. Thirty-four abductions of children (22 boys, 12 girls), some as young as 3 years of age, were verified, marking a decrease compared with 2013, in particular because of the decline of LRA attacks in the Central African Republic. Sixteen abductions were attributed to anti-Balaka, eight to LRA and two to ex-Séléka. In some cases, children were specifically targeted for ransom or as retaliation against communities.

48. A total of 80 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified in Bangui and the east of the country, including 42 attributed to anti-Balaka, 18 to ex-Séléka, and 20 to unidentified armed men. Incidents included shooting and stone-throwing at vehicles, carjacking, attacks on staff at their residences and looting of offices.

49. The United Nations engaged with the anti-Balaka and ex-Séléka leadership to identify and separate children associated with those groups. Efforts resulted in the separation of 2,807 children (2,161 boys, 646 girls) between the ages of 8 and 17, including 2,347 from anti-Balaka and 446 from ex-Séléka.

50. Dialogue was also initiated with the military chains of command of two ex-Séléka factions: the Rassemblement patriotique pour le renouveau de Centrafrique (RPRC) and Union pour la paix en la Centrafrique (UPC), resulting in the issuance of command orders by the military leadership of both factions to end the recruitment and use of children. In follow-up to this development, UNICEF provided training to over 400 combatants and officers from both factions. In addition, sensitization workshops were organized for anti-Balaka in Bangui and other south-eastern localities.

51. The collapse of the judicial system and other core functions of the State resulted in widespread impunity allowing grave violations against children to be committed on a large scale. To address the situation, MINUSCA was mandated under Security Council resolution 2149 (2014) to assist the transitional authorities to arrest and bring to justice those responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity. The Ministry of Justice and MINUSCA signed a memorandum of understanding establishing urgent temporary measures to restore law and order and fight impunity. In this context, two anti-Balaka members who allegedly raped a 14-year-old girl in November in Bangui were arrested by MINUSCA police and handed over to the national gendarmerie for investigation. As at April 2015, the two individuals were awaiting trial.

Chad

52. The Chadian National Army was delisted from the annex of the previous report (A/66/782-S/2012/61) following the full implementation of the action plan to end the recruitment and use of children, signed with the United Nations in 2011. During the reporting period, no recruitment or use of children by the national army was reported. The United Nations continued to provide support to the Government of Chad, with a particular focus on training, age assessment mechanisms and birth registration.

53. As part of ongoing follow-up, the Government signed a protocol agreement in September with the United Nations regarding the handover of children associated with armed forces or groups. The protocol includes provisions that secure the handover of children to child protection actors, regardless of their country of origin, and ensures adequate protection of children held in detention. Prior to the development of the protocol, 44 children associated with ex-Séléka in the Central African Republic had entered Chad and been arrested. Following joint collaboration among the United Nations, the Government of Chad and a national non-governmental organization (NGO), the children were released and handed over to child protection actors for family reunification and social reintegration. The protocol is also a valuable tool for the handover of children detained in the context of operations against Boko Haram.

54. A total of 346 national army troops attended child protection sessions and completed the training of trainers. Predeployment training of Chadian peacekeepers continued and a total of 864 soldiers took part before their deployment to the United Nations peacekeeping mission in Mali. An additional 1,500 troops were trained in Lumina prior to their departure for Mali.

55. Instability in the surrounding countries of the Central African Republic, Libya and the Sudan, as well the threat posed by Boko Haram in the Lake Chad Basin area, continued to have an impact on Chad. More than 150,000 people fled the Central African Republic and thousands of Nigerians, the majority of whom were children, arrived in Chad to escape the conflict. The children, often separated from their families, had experienced distress and were in need of special care. This spillover also affected border communities where child protection services are scarce and the risk of recruitment by armed groups is high. I call upon all stakeholders and the donor community to put in place adequate monitoring and protection mechanisms in southern Chad and in the Lake Chad Basin region to prevent and end violations.

56. I welcome the sustained efforts of the Government of Chad to enhance the protection of children and prevent new violations. The adoption of a Child Protection Code and the Criminal Code would further strengthen the legislative framework. In the context of the Government's participation in peacekeeping operations and in military operations against Boko Haram, I encourage the Government to continue to play a pivotal role in ensuring respect and compliance with international humanitarian and human rights law. In the of the progress made in the implementation of the action plan, the situation of Chad will be removed from the report as of 2016.

Côte d'Ivoire

57. More than three years after the post-electoral crisis in Côte d'Ivoire, the security situation continued to improve, although marked with sporadic incidents of armed attacks, banditry and other violent crimes, particularly along the border with Liberia. The United Nations verified 18 cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence committed by Forces républicaines de Côte d'Ivoire elements against girls aged 2 to 17, mostly in the western part of the country. Since 2007, when the last parties to the conflict were delisted from the annex to my report, the protection of children has continued to improve. In the light of that development, the situation of Côte d'Ivoire will be removed from the report as of 2016.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

58. The situation in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo remained volatile and witnessed major political and security developments, including a series of military operations against armed groups. Since October, the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) increased their attacks against civilians in Beni Territory and committed a series of massacres.

59. The United Nations documented 241 new cases of recruitment (223 boys, 18 girls), while a large backlog of children separated by national partners is still under verification. Recruitment was carried out by Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) (63), Nyatura (32), Rayia Mutomboki (19), Union des patriotes congolais pour la paix (UPCP) (17), Forces de résistance patriotiques en Ituri (FRPI) (16), LRA (13), Nduma Defence Coalition/Cheka (NDC/Cheka) (13), Mayi Mayi Alliance pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS) (7) and other Mayi Mayi groups (61). Seventy-five per cent of those cases occurred in North Kivu. At least 57 children were used as combatants. Of the 18 girls, 8 were victims of sexual violence. One 17-year-old boy was recruited and used in combat by the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC) in Rutshuru Territory. He was separated during a screening by the United Nations in a FARDC training camp in Bas-Congo in April.

60. Despite two Government directives, children continued to be arrested and detained for their association with armed groups. The United Nations secured the release of 121 children (110 boys, 11 girls) from FARDC, police and military prosecutor detention centres. Forty per cent of the children reported being subjected to ill-treatment during detention.

61. A total of 80 children (52 boys, 28 girls) were killed and 92 maimed (48 boys, 44 girls), mostly during violent attacks by armed groups targeting civilians. Thirty-eight per cent of child casualties occurred during brutal attacks by ADF in Beni Territory, in which at least 250 persons, including 35 children, were massacred with machetes, knives, hammers or axes. In another significant incident, inter-ethnic violence between the Bafuliru and Barundi/Banyamulenge in June claimed the lives of at least 12 children, including two babies, in Mutarule. Forty children (16 boys, 24 girls) were respectively killed and maimed by explosive remnants of war.

62. The United Nations documented 334 cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence (332 girls, 2 boys), a significant increase compared with 2013. State agents perpetrated 30 per cent of the documented violations (99). The remaining cases were perpetrated by Mayi-Mayi Simba (50), FDLR (39), Nyatura (24), Rayia Mutomboki (23), FRPI (22), APCLS (14), and other armed groups (63).

63. Twenty-two schools were attacked and twelve were used for military purposes, affecting over 31,000 children. In Shabunda Territory, ten schools militarily used by the FARDC (four) and Rayia Mutomboki (six) were destroyed or looted and their materials burned during clashes in April. Other schools were attacked by ADF, FDLR, UPCP and other armed groups. Nineteen hospitals were also attacked or looted by the FARDC (8), Rayia Mutomboki (2), and ADF (2), NDC/Cheka (2), APCLS (2) and unidentified armed groups (3). Following advocacy by the United Nations, two schools used by FARDC to host FDLR surrenders were vacated in September.

64. Armed groups abducted 108 children (65 boys, 43 girls), 55 per cent out of whom were below the age of 15, mostly in Orientale (59) and North Kivu (30). The main perpetrators were LRA (34), ADF (20), Mayi Mayi Simba (18), Rayia Mutomboki (17) and other armed groups (19). At least 11 abductees were used as combatants and 22 girls were subjected to sexual slavery.

65. Seven incidents of denial of humanitarian access were documented in North and South Kivu, perpetrated by ADF (3), FARDC (1) and other armed groups (3). Three NGO staff members and one United Nations staff member were killed and two humanitarian workers abducted by ADF. Challenges to humanitarian access persist, owing mainly to a volatile security situation, increased criminal activities and ongoing military operations.

66. At least 1,030 children were separated from armed groups (973 boys, 57 girls). Most of them children had been recruited in 2013 (441) and 2012 (220), and 31 per cent were below the age of 15 at the time of their recruitment. A total of 166 children were separated from FDLR, 140 from Nyatura, 124 from Rayia Mutomboki, 97 from FRPI and other armed groups (503). In relation to the response on sexual violence, UNICEF partners assisted 863 child survivors of sexual violence, a major decrease from 2013, owing largely to lack of funding.

67. In August and September, FARDC, with support from the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, conducted "Opération sauvetage" to provide medical evacuation and assistance to ADF dependants abandoned following military operations. A total of 71 persons, including 60 children, were rescued. Forty per cent of them had been used as combatants and are receiving reintegration support. Some had sustained bullet wounds and all were severely malnourished.

68. Despite security challenges and instability, the Government consistently demonstrated its commitment and ownership with regard to the implementation of the action plan signed with the United Nations in 2012 to end the recruitment and use of children, by funding and chairing joint coordination mechanisms and ensuring their decentralization to conflict-affected provinces. The Vice-Prime Minister/Minister of Defence also submitted to the United Nations two progress reports on the implementation of the action plan. In July, the President, Joseph Kabila appointed Jeannine Mabunda Liyoko as his Personal Adviser on sexual violence and child recruitment. With United Nations support, the Government also conducted awareness-raising activities. From 30 November to 4 December, the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict visited the Democratic Republic of the Congo and travelled to Kinshasa and Goma. The Working Group welcomed the progress made by the Government in implementing the action plan and encouraged it to sustain its efforts, particularly aspects related to the fight against impunity and sexual violence.

69. Progress was made in the fight against impunity with the arrest and prosecution of 61 individuals (46 FARDC, 10 Police nationale congolais, 5 leaders of armed groups). Thirty-five were convicted and received sentences ranging from two years to life imprisonment, including Lieutenant Colonel Bedi Mobuli Engangela, alias "106" and General Jerome Kakwavu, two of the five high-ranking FARDC officers. All but one were convicted for the crime of sexual violence against children. Four armed group leaders are currently awaiting trial, including on charges of child recruitment. FARDC Brigadier General Goda Supka Emery was indicted by the High Military Court in Kinshasa with crimes against humanity and war crimes, including the recruitment of children. The President also promulgated an Amnesty Law in February, excluding the crimes of recruitment of children and sexual violence from amnesty.

70. I welcome these positive developments and encourage the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to sustain its efforts to end and prevent all violations against children.

Iraq

71. The deadliest year in Iraq since 2007 was 2014. The United Nations received reports of systematic and widespread violations of international law, including executions and targeted killings, abductions, sexual violence and forced recruitment of children in the large swaths of territory in the country controlled by ISIL and associated armed groups. Beginning in June, an international coalition led by the United States of America conducted airstrikes on ISIL positions in support of the Government. Fighting between the Iraqi Security Forces, including its associated militias and Peshmerga forces, and ISIL and its associated armed groups, included the indiscriminate shelling of civilian areas by all parties, resulting in a sharp increase in the killing and maiming of children. Notwithstanding significant underreporting, 880 incidents of grave violations against children were reported, of which 711 were verified, marking a significant increase compared to 2013.

72. The United Nations verified the recruitment of at least 67 boys by ISIL in nine incidents. Children reportedly continued to patrol alongside adults and to man checkpoints in Ninewa, Salah al-Din, and Diyala governorates. On 5 September, in Salah al-Din, ISIL forcibly recruited 40 boys during Friday prayers. An unknown number of children were recruited by the pro-Government Popular Mobilization Forces in all conflict areas, as well as in Baghdad and Basra. Children wearing military uniforms and carrying weapons were spotted daily alongside those groups. For example, the United Nations witnessed children in the Hurriya area of Baghdad patrolling with militia convoys in July. Boys as young as 10 years old were recruited and used by self-defence groups supporting Iraqi security forces in the town of Amerli, Salah al-Din. Children, including girls, were reportedly associated with Yezidi self-defence groups fighting alongside Kurdish Peshmerga and Turkmen-based self-defence groups in Ninewa and Kirkuk, and with Sunni tribal-based militias supporting ISF in Ramadi. The lack of clear recruitment procedures, including age verification and disciplinary measures by Iraqi authorities remains a cause of grave concern. It is of concern that the draft National Guard law that was presented to the Council of Representatives in early March includes exceptions related to the age of recruitment, which would allow children associated with the pro-Government militias to join the National Guard.

73. As at December, at least 391 children, including 16 girls, held in detention facilities, were indicted or convicted of terrorism-related charges for their alleged association with armed groups under the Anti-Terrorism Act (2005). At least eight children, including two girls, were detained by Kurdistan Regional Government authorities under the Anti-Terrorism Law 3 (2006). Detention periods ranged from two months to more than three years.

74. The United Nations recorded the killing of 679 children (121 girls, 304 boys, 254 of unknown gender) and injury to 505 others (111 girls, 282 boys, 112 of unknown gender) in 498 incidents (of which 356 could be verified), representing the highest number of documented child casualties since the establishment of the monitoring and reporting mechanism in 2008. At least 87 children were killed and 211 injured in improvised explosive device and suicide attacks. On 2 September in Salah al-Din, 16 children (5 girls, 11 boys), between 8 and 16 years of age, were killed and 8 children (3 boys, 5 girls) were injured in an Iraqi security forces airstrike targeting ISIL. On 17 June, in Ba'qouba district, Diyala, the Shi'ite militia Al Asa'ib Ahl Al-Haq raided Al-Mafraq police station, killing 52 detainees, including 4 boys. On 22 August, in Sa'diya district, Diyala, 16 boys, as young as 8 years of age, were killed by armed elements, allegedly from the Popular Mobilization Forces, during Friday prayers in the Musaba Bin Umeir mosque. In June, the advance of ISIL increased constraints on the delivery of humanitarian assistance, often with devastating effects on children. For example, sources indicated that, in August, at least 45 Yezidi children besieged on Sinjar Mountain by ISIL died from shortages of food and water.

75. A total of 67 attacks on schools and protected personnel and 51 attacks on hospitals and protected personnel were reported, of which 84 were verified, resulting in the killing of 56 children and injury of 42. Twenty-eight schools were the targets of improvised explosive devices, including when they were being used as polling stations during parliamentary elections in April. In addition, 10 incidents of attacks or threats of attacks on teachers by ISIL were reported. Another 23 schools in Anbar, Ninewa, Salah al-Din and Diyala were affected by military use by ISF and ISIL and by the fighting between the two sides and supporting militias. Three schools were militarily used by ISIL in the Anbar and Diyala governorates, two by ISF in Salah al-Din and one by Peshmerga forces in Mosul. For example, on 11 November, in Beiji, Salah al-Din, the vacated Industrial High School was demolished by improvised explosive devices allegedly planted by ISIL since it had been previously used as a military base by the Iraqi security forces.

76. Al-Fallujah General Hospital in Anbar governorate alone was subjected to shelling in 17 separate attacks. In four incidents, hospitals were targeted by improvised explosive devices. In the Ninewa and Kirkuk governorates, at least two doctors were targeted by ISIL for refusing to treat injured fighters. For example, on 3 March, in Kirkuk, an improvised explosive device targeted the home of a physician previously threatened by ISIL, injuring his two children and 13 other civilians. At least seven hospitals in Salah al-Din, Ninewa, and Kirkuk were used by ISIL and pro-Government militias to treat their injured.

77. At least 1,297 children (685 girls, 612 boys) were abducted in 320 incidents, marking the highest number since 2008 and despite significant underreporting. Almost all incidents were perpetrated in August by ISIL against the Yezidi community in Sinjar. Children were taken in groups with their families and detained in schools, prisons and airports. Girls above the age of 12 were separated from their families and either sold in ISIL-controlled areas in Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, or retained, including for sexual slavery. The men and boys were allegedly forced to convert to Islam and join ISIL. Multiple sources in the Syrian Arab Republic reported in December that Yezidi girls had been moved to Raqqa to be sold as sex slaves. The number of Yezidi children abducted is indicative of targeting by ISIL of minority communities, with Turkmen, Shabak and Christian children also reportedly abducted in large numbers. Lack of access to conflict-affected areas or the fear of families in reporting abductions of children seriously impeded the documentation of cases.

78. United Nations interactions with national and local authorities on child protection continued despite the deterioration in the security situation and political instability. However, it remains a serious source of concern that the Government of Iraq is not responding to the disproportionate effect of armed conflict on children. Urgent measures are required in relation to the detention of children under terrorism charges, legislative reform, including the criminalization of the recruitment and use of children, the association of children with the Popular Mobilization Forces, as well as the implementation of policies and programmes for the rehabilitation of children affected by conflict. The United Nations stands ready to support the Government and encourages the establishment of a formal interministerial committee to facilitate regular information-sharing on and the response to grave violations against children.

Israel and State of Palestine

79. In 2014, the security situation significantly deteriorated in the State of Palestine with another escalation of hostilities in Gaza and a significant increase of tensions throughout the West Bank, with devastating impacts for children. Palestinian and Israeli children continued to be affected by the prevailing situation of military occupation, conflict and closure.

80. The reporting period saw a dramatic increase in the number of children killed and injured, especially in Gaza. At least 561 children (557 Palestinian; 4 Israeli) were killed and 4,271 injured (4,249 Palestinian; 22 Israeli).

81. In the West Bank, 13 Palestinian boys, aged 11 to 17 years, were killed. Twelve were killed by Israeli security forces live ammunition (11) and “sponge round” bullets (1) during demonstrations and military search and arrest operations, and one boy was killed by settlers. On 15 May, two Palestinian boys, aged 16 and 17 years, respectively, were shot and killed with live ammunition during clashes with Israeli soldiers near Beituniya checkpoint. Reports indicate that the children killed by the Israeli security forces did not appear to have posed a lethal threat. On 19 March, a 14-year-old boy was fatally shot by the Israel security forces when crossing the West Bank Barrier. In another example, a ten-year-old Palestinian boy was fatally shot in the back with live ammunition by the Israeli security forces in Al-Fawwar camp. The Government of Israel reports that investigations were or are being carried out on these cases.

82. On 13 June, three Israeli youths, two of whom were 16-year-old children, were abducted, and on 30 June, their bodies were found near Halhul in northern Hebron. The Government of Israel reported that three Hamas members were identified as suspects, two of whom were killed during a fire fight with the Israeli security forces. It was also reported that hundreds of Palestinians were arrested in the West Bank during large search operations carried out by the Israeli security forces between 13 and 30 June. On 2 July, a 16-year-old Palestinian boy was abducted in Shu’fat and burned alive in apparent retaliation for the kidnapping and killing of the Israeli youths. Three Israeli civilians, two of them under the age of 18 years, were arrested and charged.

83. Of the 1,218 children injured in the West Bank, more than half were under the age of 12 and 91 per cent were injured during confrontations in Hebron and East Jerusalem, with 231 of them hit by live ammunition and 530 by rubber-coated bullets.

84. Violence committed by Israeli settlers, and related incidents involving the Israeli security forces, remained high, resulting in the injury of 63 Palestinian children. For example, on 18 April, a group of settlers shielded by the Israeli security forces reportedly attacked the Urif Secondary School for Boys near Nablus, which resulted in the injury of 12 students from stones, bullets and a gas canister.

The school was attacked in four instances, reportedly by Israelis living in the Yizhar settlement.

85. Sixteen Israeli children, (14 boys and 2 girls) were injured in the West Bank as a result of stones and Molotov cocktail thrown and shots fired at vehicles by Palestinians.

86. In Gaza, civilians, including children, have borne the brunt of the third major military offensive in Gaza in six years, namely, "Operation Protective Edge". In Gaza, in the 50-day period between 8 July and 26 August, at least 540 Palestinian children were killed (340 boys and 200 girls between the ages of 1 week and 17 years, with almost 70 per cent of that number being younger than 12 years). The number of child casualties exceeds the combined number of Palestinian children killed during the two previous escalations. Hundreds of homes, some of which belonged to alleged members of armed groups, were directly hit by Israeli airstrikes. The Israeli bombardments resulted in the destruction of or severe damage to residential properties, schools and hospitals, causing civilian deaths and injuries. This is in addition to reports of Palestinian civilians and civilian objects being directly hit in circumstances where there was allegedly no rocket fire or armed group activity in the vicinity. This raises serious concern over the observance of the rules of international humanitarian law concerning the conduct of hostilities, including the principles of distinction, precaution and proportionality.

87. On average, between 8 July and 26 August, more than 10 children were killed daily in Gaza. More than 80 per cent of them were killed between 17 July and 5 August during the ground incursion by the Israeli security forces. At least 13 children in Gaza were reportedly killed as a result of rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups towards Israel that fell inside Gaza.

88. At least 2,955 Palestinian children were injured in Gaza. Preliminary estimates indicate that up to 1,000 of them will be permanently disabled. Apart from the July-August Israeli military operation, another 76 children were injured.

89. On 16 July, four children, 9 to 11 years of age, were killed on a beach in Gaza City. According to eye witnesses and video footage, one child hid in an empty building and was killed by an air strike. The other three children were hit by a shell fired from the sea, which killed them and injured two others. No military targets could be identified in the apparently calm area and no rockets had been fired towards Israel from that location at that time.

90. On 20 July, an Israeli air strike hit a residential building in Bani Suhaila, killing 25 family members, including 19 children and 3 pregnant women. Surviving family members testified that they had received no prior warning from the Israeli security forces. The Military Advocate General opened a criminal investigation.

91. Palestinian children were also killed in drone strikes. On 10 July, a five-year-old boy was hit by a missile fired by a drone in Deir Al Balah. On 23 July, a drone killed a nine-year-old boy seeking shelter in Beit Lahiya. At the time of the attacks, there were no reports of military activity near the homes.

92. The indiscriminate firing of rockets by Palestinian armed groups from populated areas in Gaza towards Israeli population centres endangered both the civilian population in Israel and the Palestinian civilians in Gaza. This raises concern over the observance of the rules of international humanitarian law on the conduct of hostilities, particularly the principles of distinction and precaution. On 22 August, a four-year-old Israeli boy was killed by mortar shelling in Sha'ar Hanegev region. At least six Israeli children between 3 months and 17 years of age were reportedly gravely injured as a result of rocket fire from Gaza. In addition, 159 children were injured on the way to shelters, 33 were injured by building debris, and 18 were injured in traffic incidents after the activation of warning sirens. In addition, on 22 October, a three-month-old Israeli baby, among others, was killed when a Palestinian man deliberately drove his car into a light rail train station in East Jerusalem.

93. Allegations of nine instances of child recruitment and use by Palestinian armed groups, including by the Al-Qassam Brigades, were reported. The following five cases were verified: on 21 July, a 16-year-old Palestinian boy was injured and captured during an ambush by the Al-Qassam Brigades on Israeli forces near Kibbutz Nir Am/Erez. Two boys aged 17 years were killed in targeted attacks by Israeli drone strikes in Jabaliya and Khan Younis on 12 and 14 July, both reportedly associated with Palestinian armed groups. On 22 July, a 16-year-old Palestinian boy, reportedly recruited by the Al-Qassam Brigades, disappeared and his family was informed of his death on 26 July. A video shows the boy giving his last statement, including his full name. On 2 August, a 17-year-old boy who was reportedly used by the Al-Qassam Brigades, was killed in the shelling of his home by Israeli security forces. A video uploaded by Al-Qassam Brigades shows him undergoing military training and giving his last testament.

94. On 23 July, a 17-year-old Palestinian boy was taken from his home near Khan Younis by the Israeli security forces and forced at gunpoint to search for tunnels. The boy reported being interrogated, abused and used to extract information about Hamas members.

95. Palestinian children continued to be arrested and detained by the Israeli security forces and prosecuted in juvenile military courts. According to the Israeli Prison Service, 151 children between 14 and 17 years of age were in Israeli military detention for alleged security violations at the end of December. A monthly average of 188 children were in Israeli military custody.

96. The United Nations obtained the affidavits of 122 Palestinian children from the West Bank, who had been detained by the Israeli security forces, in which they stated that they had been subjected to ill-treatment, such as beatings, being hit with sticks, being blindfolded, being kicked and being subjected to verbal abuse and threats of sexual violence. At least 700 children were arrested in East Jerusalem, 70 of whom were under the age of 13 years. The United Nations received 18 affidavits from Palestinian children reporting ill-treatment by the Israeli police and the border police.

97. Since February, IDF Central Command for the West Bank have implemented a pilot summons procedure to halt the practice of night arrests and tackle some of the protection issues. There are concerns regarding the delivery of summonses at night, arrests following appearance at police stations and reports of violations during the interrogation process.

98. In Gaza, between 8 July and 26 August, at least 262 schools were damaged in Israeli air strikes. Three public schools were completely destroyed and at least 23 were severely damaged. In addition, 274 kindergartens were damaged.

99. Of the 83 school buildings of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) that were damaged owing to Israeli airstrikes and shelling nearby, 7 being used as shelters were hit either directly or by air strikes or shelling, resulting in the death of at least 42 persons, including 16 children, and in the injury of about 230 persons. In May, the United Nations shared a list of its facilities with the Government of Israel, which was further discussed with government entities in July. During hostilities in July and August, UNRWA provided the Israeli authorities with real-time information identifying installations that were being used as designated emergency shelters and places of temporary refuge. Despite such information, on 24 July, the UNRWA Beit Hanoun Elementary Coed A and D school, which at the time was sheltering some 450 internally displaced persons, was hit by IDF mortar fire, resulting in the death of at least 12 persons, including 6 children, and in the injury of more than 90 others. The location of the school had been provided to Israeli authorities by United Nations staff on 12 separate occasions over the seven days leading up to the incident, including the day of the incident itself. Intense military activity was reported in the vicinity of the school prior to, but not at the time of, the incident. IDF launched a criminal investigation.

100. On 30 July, artillery projectiles struck the UNRWA Jabalia Elementary Girls A and B School, killing at least 17 persons, including one United Nations staff member, and injuring 99 persons sheltering inside. The school's coordinates had been formally conveyed to the Israeli authorities on at least 28 occasions over a 14-day span, including the night before the incident.

101. On 25 August, two Government schools were attacked and destroyed by air strikes. In addition to the July and August incidents, seven instances of attacks on schools were reported throughout the rest of the year.

102. During its routine inspections, UNRWA discovered that weapons or weapons components had been placed by Palestinian armed elements in three vacant UNRWA schools in Gaza.

103. In the West Bank, in 21 cases, the Israeli security force entered and used schools. On five occasions in the West Bank, UNRWA school premises were entered without the permission of the United Nations.

104. On 10 November, the Secretary-General decided to establish a United Nations Headquarters Board of Inquiry into ten incidents in which death or injury occurred and damage was done to, or weaponry was found at, United Nations facilities during the conflict.

105. Between 8 July and 26 August, 17 of the 32 hospitals in Gaza were damaged by Israeli air strikes or shelling. One hospital and 58 primary health clinics were destroyed. For instance, on 21 July, Al-Aqsa Martyrs Hospital was directly hit numerous times, killing three persons and injuring 40. Reportedly, no warning of the attack was given. The Israeli security forces claimed that the target was a cache of missiles in the hospital's immediate vicinity. That attack raises concerns about observance of the special protection accorded to hospitals under international law.

106. Three hits on schools were recorded in Israel by rockets fired from Gaza by Palestinian armed groups, resulting in damage to the school facilities, with no fatalities.

107. The blockade of Gaza since June 2007 continued to take a heavy toll on humanitarian assistance for more than 80 per cent of the families in Gaza. It has impacted the provision of health services, which suffered from a lack of adequate equipment, instruments and essential medicine. The Erez checkpoint with Israel and the Rafah crossing with Egypt, serving 1.7 million people, remain the only two humanitarian access points.

108. The Military Advocate General requested the IDF fact-finding and assessment mechanism to examine a number of “exceptional incidents” that occurred during the Gaza crisis. As at April 2015, the Military Advocate General had conducted an initial examination of more than 100 incidents and opened criminal investigations for 13. Since the focus of the Mechanism is on “exceptional incidents”, concerns remain over its not addressing failures to ensure respect for international law at the policy level and the State’s duty to investigate all incidents, policies or tactics that may violate international law.

109. The Israeli and the Palestinian authorities have an obligation to ensure that allegations of violations of international humanitarian and human rights law are promptly, effectively, independently, and impartially investigated, and that those responsible are brought to justice.

110. Israel has repeatedly claimed that its military operation in Gaza was in response to rocket fire into Israel and that it was conducted in full compliance with its international obligations. However, I am deeply alarmed at the extent of grave violations suffered by children as a result of Israeli military operations in 2014. The unprecedented and unacceptable scale of the impact on children in 2014 raises grave concerns about Israel’s compliance with international humanitarian law, notably the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution in attack, and respect for international human rights law, particularly in relation to excessive use of force. It is of particular concern that “Operation Protective Edge” was the third major Israeli military operation in Gaza within six years. The cumulative impact on children and the civilian population in general of these military operations, and the ongoing military occupation in the State of Palestine, is devastating. As indicated earlier in the present report, the number of Palestinian children killed (557) is the third highest in 2014, after the number of children killed in (a) Afghanistan (710) and (b) Iraq (679), and before the number of children killed in (c) Syrian Arab Republic (368) and (d) Darfur (197). The number of schools damaged or destroyed in the State of Palestine (at least 543) was the highest recorded number of all situations in 2014.

111. I urge Israel to take concrete and immediate steps, including by reviewing existing policies and practices, to protect children, to prevent the killing and maiming of children, and to respect the special protections afforded to schools and hospitals. An essential measure in that regard is ensuring accountability for perpetrators of alleged violations. I further urge Israel to engage in a dialogue with my Special Representative and the United Nations to ensure that there is no recurrence in grave violations against children.

Lebanon

112. Lebanon was heavily affected by insecurity and the existing trends of improvised explosive device attacks, urban clashes and cross-border shelling from the Syrian Arab Republic continued. Direct attacks by armed groups on the Lebanese Armed Forces resulted in violent clashes, particularly in the Aarsal, Bekaa governorate and in the Tripoli, North governorate. The United Nations collected credible information on children as young as 14 years of age who had joined armed factions in Palestinian camps and armed parties operating in the Syrian Arab Republic, particularly in border areas. The United Nations also received verified reports of at least 25 boys arrested by the Lebanese armed forces during anti-terrorism raids, mostly conducted in Aرسال and Tripoli between August and December, and kept in pretrial detention together with adults under military jurisdiction for national security offences. In mid-January 2015, the children were transferred to the area of the prison hosting children.

113. According to consistent reports from different sources, at least 17 boys and three girls were killed and four boys injured, mostly by gunshots or stray bullets, during armed clashes in urban areas. Six of them, three Lebanese and three Syrian, were reportedly killed during shelling by the Syrian Air Force on Aرسال on 17 January. A 15-year-old Syrian refugee boy was summarily executed by al-Nusra elements in Aرسال in June.

114. School facilities and learning activities were affected by armed violence, particularly in Tripoli surrounding areas, where 97 schools were used as shelters, depriving at least 20,000 students of education. Sporadic incidents of armed violence also affected the provision of humanitarian assistance.

115. As a result of an increase in the identification of children associated with armed groups, relevant authorities, civil society and the United Nations carried out advocacy to ensure that the children received support, including access to protection and reintegration programmes. In that context, I welcome the signing by the Government of a workplan to prevent and respond to the association of children with armed violence and encourage that the provisions be fully implemented. Finally, I urge Lebanon to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict which it signed in 2002.

Libya

116. The security situation in Libya deteriorated sharply in 2014, particularly in the fourth quarter of the year. Internal armed conflicts erupted in various parts of the country, including in its two largest cities, Tripoli and Benghazi. Humanitarian and monitoring access remained severely limited owing to security reasons and relief operations were suspended almost entirely following the relocation of United Nations international staff out of the country.

117. Although no verified information on the recruitment and use of children was available, concerns persisted over the association of children with armed militias. Furthermore, in May, during “Operation Dignity” in eastern Libya, forces loyal to General Khalifa Haftar allegedly detained dozens of males, possibly also children, based on their nationality, political or religious affiliation. This reportedly included a 17-year-old boy, who had allegedly been detained with three other youths, and who was tortured and died in custody in Benghazi.

118. The United Nations received numerous reports of indiscriminate shelling by all parties to the conflict, as well as of the deliberate destruction of homes in Warshafana and Benghazi. Following the escalation of the conflict in May, the United Nations received reports of about 30 children killed across the country, but the actual number is likely to be underreported.

119. The shelling of hospitals in Tripoli and Benghazi severely affected children's access to health care. Both the Al-Afya Hospital and the Tripoli Medical Centre were hit by shells in July and August, respectively. In November, four medical staff were reportedly abducted from the Hawari General Hospital but managed to escape, while another was shot dead, resulting in the resignation of many staff.

120. Reports of the use of schools and hospitals by armed groups were also a cause for concern. For instance, in Benghazi, Ansar al-Shari'a reportedly took control of the General Hospital and placed snipers on the roof. Many schools in eastern Libya had been closed since May due to the security situation, including those hosting internally displaced persons.

121. In the West, armed groups, either affiliated with the Libya Dawn coalition or rival armed groups from Warshafana or Zintan, abducted children in the aftermath of the fighting in Tripoli, as well as during the fighting in Warshafana. In addition, human rights defenders reportedly received threats from armed groups that their children would be abducted and killed if they did not stop their work.

Lord's Resistance Army (Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo and South Sudan)

122. During the reporting period, LRA was in survival mode but continued to engage in attacks on civilians, looting and kidnapping. A total of 13 children were recruited, mostly in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Abduction of children in LRA-affected countries remained the most significant violation. A total of 42 cases were reported in the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. However, many of those children were released immediately after being used to carry looted items. Others were held in captivity by LRA for three to four days before either being released or escaping. The United Nations continued to provide psychosocial assistance and support to family reunification in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Central African Republic, South Sudan and Uganda for the 180 children and young mothers who escaped or were released by LRA. The absence of long-term reintegration programmes for child returnees remained a challenge to the sustainability of those efforts. Owing to the decrease in LRA activity, the present section will be removed from the 2016 report if the current trends continue, and the violations will be reported in the relevant country sections.

Mali

123. Owing to repeated violations of the ceasefire agreement signed by the Government of Mali and the two coalitions of armed groups — the Coordination and the Platform — the security situation deteriorated considerably in northern Mali, especially after the resumption of hostilities in Kidal in May. In that context, the monitoring and verification of violations against children remained difficult and, therefore, violations are estimated to be underreported.

124. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 84 children within the ranks of Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad (MNLA), Haut Conseil pour l'unité de l'Azawad (HCUA), Mouvement arabe de l'Azawad (MAA)-Sidati, MAA-Ould Sidi Mohamed and Groupe d'autodéfense Touaregs Imghad et alliés (GATIA) in the regions of Kidal, Timbuktu, Gao and Mopti. In addition, allegations were received indicating that hundreds of children are currently associated with armed groups and engaged in hostilities, but the information could not be verified.

125. In accordance with the protocol on the release and reintegration of children associated with the armed forces and armed groups of 1 July 2013, four children detained under security charges were released. However, nine children remained in detention in Bamako for alleged association with armed groups, some for as long as two years. In June, the Ministry of Justice appointed a focal point to work with the United Nations on this issue.

126. The killing of nine children and the injuring of 23 were verified. Explosive remnants of war claimed all but one life and injured 21 children in the Mopti, Gao and Kidal regions. The widespread use of explosive remnants of war is of great concern since armed groups have left behind many remnants that have contaminated areas, mostly around Gao.

127. Thirty-eight incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence against girls were perpetrated by MNLA (6), Malian Defence and Security Forces (4) and unidentified armed elements (28) in Gao and Timbuktu regions. Reporting on sexual violence remained challenging, owing to fear of reprisals, lack of medical and judicial capacity and services in certain areas and preference for settlements outside judicial proceedings.

128. The United Nations verified one attack against a school in the Gao region in May. There were 20 cases of military use of schools, mainly attributed to MNLA and to joint troops of MNLA, HCUA, MAA-Coordination, and Coalition du peuple de l'Azawad. Nearly 60 per cent of the schools militarily used are located in Gao, while the others are in Kidal, Timbuktu, and Mopti. In the region of Kidal, almost all schools remained closed. Peacekeepers of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali used three schools in Gao city, Ansongo Cercle and Tabankort. In December, the Gao vocational school was vacated and the United Nations is currently refurbishing it. The use of one health centre by MNLA since March was documented in Ménaka, in the Gao region.

129. Reports of abduction of girls aged 12 to 16 years by unidentified individuals were also received, mostly in the context of clashes between the Peulh and Dogon communities.

130. Twenty-four incidents of denial of humanitarian access severely affecting the delivery of humanitarian assistance were verified but the perpetrators could not be identified.

131. Despite some initial progress made to address impunity for violations against children, slow restoration of state authority, including the reestablishment of a functioning judiciary in northern Mali, remained of great concern. Moreover, at least two suspected perpetrators of sexual violence were released from detention without being charged, as part of confidence-building measures within the framework of the peace negotiations.

132. The United Nations engaged with armed groups, such as MAA-Ould Sidi Mohamed and GATIA in Tabankort, MNLA and HCUA in Kidal, the leadership of the Coordination des mouvements et forces patriotiques de résistance II (CMFPR-II) in Timbuktu, and the joint troops of MNLA and MAA-Sidati in Ber. The latter engagement resulted in the signing of local command orders that prohibit all six grave violations against children. In September, the United Nations also conducted a screening of the MAA-Sidati and MNLA joint troops stationed in Ber, and identified five children aged between 15 and 17 years and two young adults who had been recruited as children. In line with advocacy efforts by my Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict, I call upon all parties involved in the inter-Malian peace process to take into consideration specific provisions to end and prevent violations against children in the peace agreement and its implementation.

Myanmar

133. Armed clashes between Government armed forces (Tatmadaw) and ethnic armed groups continued in Kachin, Northern Shan and, to a lesser extent, in Kayin State. By December, growing tensions between the Government and armed groups were negatively affecting progress towards a national ceasefire agreement. In October, four Karen armed groups, including the Karen National Liberation Army and the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army formed the Kawthoolei Armed Forces Alliance, allegedly in response to increased Tatmadaw operations.

134. A total of 357 cases of child recruitment and use by the Tatmadaw were reported through the Country Task Force-operated phone line, the forced labour complaint mechanism of the International Labour Organization (ILO) and community monitoring. At least 27 of the children, as young as 14 years of age, were newly recruited in 2014. Children were either enlisted owing to economic circumstances and family problems, or were deliberately tricked or forced into joining. The Government-led awareness campaign launched in November 2013 resulted in an increase in reports to the United Nations of child recruitment.

135. The United Nations received reports that children were deployed to the front line as combatants and in support roles and reported 15 such cases to the Tatmadaw, after which nine children were discharged and the others removed from the front line. A total of 389 boys and young males recruited as children were released from the Tatmadaw. Those released received reintegration assistance from the United Nations and its partners in collaboration with the Department of Social Welfare.

136. Detention of children as “deserters” remained a concern. Of the 53 documented cases of children escaping from the Tatmadaw, 13 were arrested on charges of desertion, with cases increasing towards the end of the year. The United Nations also received a worrisome report of a 16-year-old boy who had allegedly committed suicide while associated with the Tatmadaw in a battalion in Kayah State.

137. In addition to children recruited into the formal ranks of the Tatmadaw, several incidences of informal association of children were recorded, including as porters and scouts. For example, a 12-year-old boy from Chin State was approached by a soldier and taken to eastern Shan State where he was forced to carry out camp management tasks for five months. In Rakhine State, two battalions have been using a 16-year-old boy for support duties one day per week under abusive work conditions since he was 11. Up to 50 children were used by the same battalions.

138. Children also continued to be recruited by armed groups, including through abductions. For example, the United Nations verified five reports of children associated with the Kachin Independence Army (KIA). On 12 March, two girls, aged 15 and 16 years, were abducted by two KIA elements in Mansi Township.

After four days in captivity, they were asked to join KIA in support roles. In another incident, a 12-year-old boy was allegedly used as a combatant by KIA and was injured during a firefight with the Tatmadaw in Namkhan. Owing to access issues and limited capacity, the United Nations was largely unable to monitor the presence of children in armed groups.

139. Three children were injured in Kachin and northern Shan States and one child was reportedly killed in crossfire. For example, on 29 July, two boys, aged 16 and 17 years, were injured in shelling during clashes between the Ta'ang National Liberation Army and the Tatmadaw. According to a credible report, on 28 July, a 16-year-old boy was allegedly killed by the Tatmadaw because of his perceived association with the KIA in northern Shan State.

140. In the absence of a peace agreement, demining and marking explosive remnants of war remained impossible and children continued to be maimed and killed. For example, a 17-year-old boy stepped on a landmine in Kayin State and lost his right leg and injured his left leg seriously. In Mansi township, the KIA allegedly used civilians and internally displaced persons to clear areas of landmines. Of particular concern are landmines laid by the Tatmadaw and KIA in close proximity to schools in Kachin and northern Shan States.

141. The United Nations verified the rape of a 14-year-old mentally challenged girl in northern Shan State by a Tatmadaw private who was initially convicted by a military tribunal for neglecting his duty. Following pressure from civil society, the case was transferred to a civilian court, which sentenced the soldier to 13 years in prison for raping a minor.

142. The Tatmadaw continued to use a vacated school building in Bhamo, Kachin State. Also in Kachin, the Alen Bum boys' dormitory in Laiza was used by KIA-affiliated militia elements as a training facility during summer. After advocacy by the United Nations, KIA instructed the militia to vacate the school and committed itself in writing to prohibit its military use.

143. Humanitarian access to areas outside of Government control in Kachin and northern Shan States improved compared to the previous reporting period, but remained severely restricted, owing also to administrative delays. Twenty-eight cross-line missions provided assistance to approximately 30,000 persons.

144. Positive steps have been taken by the Government to advance the implementation of the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. This included the regular discharge of children from the Tatmadaw, regular review meetings with the United Nations to expedite discharges, strengthened training efforts to sensitize Tatmadaw troops and, in September, the endorsement of a workplan for full implementation of the action plan. In January, the United Nations was granted monitoring access with 72-hour notice to the Border Guard Forces and experienced increased access to Tatmadaw facilities in 11 monitoring visits. The Government and ILO have also been actively cooperating to eliminate forced labour, including recruitment and use, by 2015. Despite progress made, children continue to be present in the Tatmadaw ranks. I urge the Government to take action to prevent recruitment and to exercise due diligence to ensure that children escaping from the Tatmadaw are not arrested as "deserters". Prevention of child recruitment, as well as oversight mechanisms at all stages of the recruitment process, need to be strengthened urgently.

Somalia

145. The security situation remained extremely volatile, particularly in south-central Somalia, leading to displacement of more than 80,000 persons. The reporting period witnessed a gradual build-up of joint operations by the Somalia National Army and the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), driving Al-Shabaab out of key towns in southern and central regions.

146. A total of 1,870 violations against children were documented, affecting 1,482 boys and 250 girls, with 806 out of 893 incidents verified. While the numbers represent a substantial reduction compared with 2013, the decline is largely attributable to the reduced capacity and access to verify incidents.

147. The recruitment and use of 819 children (779 boys, 40 girls) by Al-Shabaab (437), national army and allied militia (197), Ahl Al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (109) and other armed elements (76) was documented. Of particular concern was the ongoing recruitment and use of children by clan militias. Al-Shabaab sustained a campaign of recruitment targeting children and youth in mosques and schools, for example, recruiting 82 children in mosques or during religious events. Reports were also received of five boys used by AMISOM in support functions.

148. The detention of children in Somalia remained a concern, with 286 children (277 boys, nine girls) detained by the national army and other security forces (229), Al-Shabaab (44) and other armed groups (4). Seven of the nine girls were kept in Al-Shabaab custody. Of the children detained by government security forces, many were arrested following house searches and security operations and most were released a few days after the arrest. Of concern is the situation of children held at the Serendi rehabilitation centre in Mogadishu, whom my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict met during her visit in August. The children have been deprived of their liberty, as they are not free to leave the centre. The Government must ensure that any child deprived of his or her liberty for alleged association with armed groups is treated primarily as a victim and handed over to child protection actors.

149. Some 340 incidents of killing and maiming were documented affecting 520 children (393 boys, 127 girls) perpetrated by the national army and allied militia (193), Al-Shabaab (96), and other armed elements (231). Children have been killed in crossfire, sometimes during joint national army/AMISOM operations and in suicide attacks. Targeted attacks against the national army, AMISOM and prominent Federal Government of Somalia officials also led to large numbers of civilian casualties, including children. Al-Shabaab carried out public executions, including of children, as punitive measures and to instil fear. One boy and one girl were executed on suspicion of being spies for the Federal Government or AMISOM. Seventeen children were reported killed and maimed during military operations by AMISOM.

150. The monitoring and reporting of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children remained a challenge, among other things, because of the victims' fear of stigmatization. A total of 70 incidents affecting 76 girls were reportedly committed by the national army and allied militia (24), Al-Shabaab (19) and other armed groups (33). Girls in internally displaced persons camps were particularly vulnerable to sexual violence and forced marriage. At least 13 documented incidents of abduction resulted in rape and forced marriage. In one particularly tragic incident in April, a 14-year-old female internally displaced person was abducted, raped and then killed by unknown armed men.

151. Seventeen schools were subjected to attacks by Al-Shabaab (eight), the national army and allied militia (six), and unknown armed elements (three). One school was also severely damaged in shelling by AMISOM. Al-Shabaab continued to use schools for recruitment and disrupted learning for hundreds of children including by distributing jihadist booklets for teachers and conducting indoctrination lectures. Incidents targeting protected personnel were also documented such as the detention of two teachers by Al-Shabaab for declining to refer their students to religious classes. Four schools were used for military purposes by the national army (three), later vacated, and Al-Shabaab (one). It was also reported that AMISOM used a school for military purposes during a few days in December.

152. Four hospitals were attacked by unknown armed groups (3) and Al-Shabaab (1) and incidents affecting related-personnel were documented. In one incident, Al-Shabaab abducted a health worker to provide medical care to its wounded fighters. Other incidents included improvised explosive device attacks against two hospitals resulting in the deaths of two doctors and two boys.

153. A total of 133 children were abducted, by Al-Shabaab (97), the national army and allied militia (25), and unknown armed groups (11). More than half of the children abducted by Al-Shabaab were used to increase its numbers ahead of joint national army/AMISOM operations.

154. Fifteen incidents of denial of humanitarian access were reported, the majority by unknown armed groups, and 3 each by Al-Shabaab and the national army.

155. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict visited Somalia in August to assess the situation of children affected by conflict, engage with the Federal Government of Somalia on the implementation of the two action plans signed in 2012 to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and advocate for the strengthening of the legal framework for the protection of children.

156. Coordination mechanisms between the United Nations, the Federal Government of Somalia, AMISOM and other partners were established to facilitate the implementation of the action plans. Significant steps were also taken with the signature of standard operating procedures for the handover of children separated from armed groups in February and the establishment of a child protection unit at the national army headquarters. Moreover, a mobile national army/United Nations team screened over 1,000 soldiers and the Barre Aden Shire “Hirale” militia that surrendered in anticipation of integration into the national army. No children were found during the screening exercises. The United Nations provided training on child protection to more than 8,000 national army soldiers, in collaboration with the European Union Training Mission in Somalia and AMISOM. In addition, following United Nations advocacy, the AMISOM Force Commander issued a directive to reinforce accountability and compliance with children’s rights during operations.

157. Following the listing of Ahl Al-Sunna wal-Jama’a for the recruitment and use of children, the United Nations initiated dialogue with the group and discussed steps towards the formulation of a commitment to halt and prevent continuation of the practice.

158. The United Nations also supported the reintegration of 500 children (375 boys, 125 girls) through community-based programmes. Reintegration activities included provision of psychosocial assistance, “back-to-school” support programmes and vocational training.

159. In December, in a positive legislative development, the Federal Parliament adopted a law ratifying the Convention of the Rights of the Child. The law was signed by President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud on 20 January 2015. I welcome the progress made by the Federal Government of Somalia and I encourage it to sustain all its efforts to better protect children in Somalia, including by finalizing the ratification process of the Convention and to take steps to ratify its Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

South Sudan

160. The political landscape in South Sudan changed dramatically in the wake of heavy fighting that broke out in Juba on 15 December 2013. Although the onset of the conflict was sparked by political issues, an ethnic dimension quickly evolved and had devastating effects for children. There was a large increase in the number of violations in 2014, with a total of 514 verified incidents affecting 16,307 children. A detailed account of the effects of the armed conflict on children in South Sudan is available in my recent report to the Security Council, covering the period from 1 March 2011 to 30 September 2014 (S/2014/884).

161. Eighty-one incidents of recruitment and use of children were verified, affecting 617 children (612 boys, 5 girls). The majority were associated with the Sudan People’s Liberation Army (SPLA) (310) and the Sudan People’s Liberation Army in Opposition (SPLA-IO) (108), but also with the South Sudan National Police Service, the South Sudan Wildlife Service, the South Sudan Liberation Army (SSLA), the South Sudan Democratic Movement/Army-Cobra Faction (SSDM/A-CF), the White Army and armed groups allied to Gabriel Tanginye. Unverified large numbers of children have also been observed with the Johnson Olonyi armed group, whose troop integration into SPLA was pending completion as at April 2015, and with other unidentified armed actors. Children were at risk of recruitment in refugee and internally displaced persons camps, protection of civilian sites and in their own communities. Given the challenging security situation and safety concerns for children, it has not always been possible to verify information. Last, as reported in the section of the present on the Sudan, in January and February, 64 boys, aged 14 to 17 years, were reportedly recruited by the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) in Unity State, South Sudan. Fifty-five of those cases were verified.

162. Ninety children were verified killed and 220 injured. There was also a disturbing increase in the incidents of killing and maiming of children reported to the United Nations that could not be verified. One report identified up to 490 bodies of children in mass graves found around Bor following heavy fighting at the start of the conflict. Some of the reported incidents suggest that children were summarily executed. For instance, following the fighting in Rubkona and Bentiu towns in April, two boys were found dead with their hands tied behind their back outside a mosque that was used by civilians seeking protection. The affiliation of the perpetrators is unknown but the incident occurred during an exchange of fire between SPLA and SPLA-IO.

163. In another incident, the United Nations received testimonies from boys aged 14 to 17 years in Juba who had been detained by security forces and subjected to inhumane and degrading treatment, such as beatings and being urinated upon, during interrogations about ethnic affiliation and involvement in the conflict.

164. Rape and other forms of sexual violence were reported, with a total of 22 incidents verified affecting 36 children (4 boys and 32 girls) by SPLA (24), JEM (4), SPLA-IO (1) and unknown perpetrators (7). In April, when SPLA-IO took control of Bentiu, hate speech calling upon persons to kill and commit sexual violence against non-Nuers and foreigners was broadcast on local radio.

165. There were seven incidents of attacks on schools, including looting, and 60 involving military use. Thirty-four schools in use, some before the reporting period, were vacated following United Nations advocacy; as at December, 33 reportedly remained in use by numerous armed actors, affecting access to education for approximately 11,000 children. A total of 22 incidents of attacks on medical clinics and health centres were also verified. In one incident in April, Bentiu Hospital was attacked by SPLA-IO, and medical staff, patients and civilians seeking protection inside the hospital, were killed.

166. Thirty-four incidents of abduction were verified affecting 147 children (52 boys, 95 girls). The United Nations received worrisome reports of large-scale abductions, including up to 105 children (29 boys, 76 girls) by SPLA-IO in Malakal in February. As at April 2015, abductions continued in large numbers.

167. One hundred and ninety-nine incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, representing a large increase from 2013. Incidents included forceful entry into compounds, looting, seizure of assets and harassment of humanitarian workers.

168. No incidents of LRA attacks involving children were reported in South Sudan. However, a total of 43 children either escaped or were rescued from the group. Twenty-eight of them have since been reunified with their families, while the rest remain in the interim care centre in Yambio, Western Equatoria State, pending family tracing and reunification.

169. Family tracing and reunification remained a challenge, owing partly to limited access or no access for child protection actors to some areas. Rapid response missions were occasionally conducted to provide basic, life-saving assistance to children in hard-to-reach areas. During a meeting with my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, the leader of the South Sudan Democratic Army — Cobra Faction (SSDM/A-CF), David Yau Yau, acknowledged that he had recruited children and declared himself ready to release them. As at April 2015, over 750 children had been released to the United Nations and were receiving interim care, psychosocial support and education service.

170. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict visited South Sudan in June to assess the impact of the conflict on children and engage with national authorities. During her visit, the President committed to issuing a decree criminalizing the recruitment and use of children and to issuing command orders to stop the military use of schools. My Special Representative also witnessed the signature of the recommitment by the Minister of Defence and Veteran Affairs to the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. The recommitment also included stopping and preventing sexual violence, the killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals. In August, a workplan to implement the agreement was endorsed. In October, the Government and the United Nations launched the campaign entitled “Children, Not Soldiers” at the national level. Following extensive advocacy, the Government and the United Nations also established a joint high-level committee on children affected by armed conflict. In May, the leader of SPLA-IO also signed a commitment agreement with my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to end violations against children.

171. As at the end of 2014, neither the Government nor SPLA-IO had made any progress in implementing their commitments. On the contrary, reports of violations, particularly recruitment and use and abduction of children, continue unabated. I call upon all parties to the conflict in South Sudan to stop all violations against children and to take all necessary measures, including through prompt and thorough investigations and prosecution, to hold perpetrators to account. I urge the Government of South Sudan to take concrete measures and fully implement the action plan and the recommitment agreement signed in June. I also urge SPLA-IO to implement the commitment that its Chair signed with my Special Representative in May.

Three areas

172. Conflict continued in South Kordofan and Blue Nile, where large areas remained inaccessible, especially those under the control of armed groups. After several months of political deadlock, fighting intensified during the first quarter of 2014. The Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-N) resumed talks in November in Addis Ababa under the auspices of the African Union High-Level Implementation Panel, but negotiations were suspended indefinitely by early December.

173. In April and December, the Government launched two phases of its “Decisive Summer” campaign to regain control of areas controlled by SPLM-N. This resulted in new waves of mass displacement. Tribal fighting was also observed, particularly in West Kordofan, with one verified incident in November of clashes breaking out among members of two Misseryia sub-clans in which at least 40 children were reportedly killed or injured. The disputed area of Abyei also witnessed continuing tensions.

174. The United Nations verified the recruitment of 60 boys aged 14 to 17 years by the JEM (55) and SPLM-N (5). All but 3 of them occurred during a forced recruitment campaign in refugee settlements in Unity State in South Sudan. Unverified information was received about an additional 9 boys recruited by JEM in that same period. Although no new recruitment cases by Sudanese Armed Forces were verified, the United Nations received credible information of recruitment and use of children by the Popular Defence Forces. Large areas of those states were inaccessible, which limited United Nations ability to monitor allegations in order to reflect the full extent of violations.

175. At least 12 incidents (2 verified) were reported, in which 62 children, aged 5 to 17 years, were killed or maimed. A boy was killed in the SPLM-N shelling of Kadugli in May and another boy died in an explosive remnants of war incident. Twenty-eight children (9 girls, 19 boys) were reportedly killed and 32 injured

(7 girls, 25 boys) in the shelling by the armed forces of SPLM-N-controlled areas. A further 42 children were reportedly killed or maimed as a result of tribal clashes.

176. Four boys, all South Sudanese refugees, were abducted by Arab men in El Muglad locality, West Kordofan, and kept in captivity for approximately six months. They were released and reunified with their families in August following negotiations by the Sudan Police Family and Child Protection Unit.

177. One school and two hospitals run by NGOs were severely damaged in aerial bombardments by the armed forces on SPLM-N-held territories, affecting access to education and medical care for over 75,000 children. In one instance, six persons were injured and the hospital's emergency room and pharmacy were destroyed. The United Nations also received credible information regarding the military use of three schools by the armed forces in South Kordofan.

178. Access to Government and SPLM-N-controlled areas remained very challenging, even though there was a slight improvement compared with 2013. For the first time, the United Nations was granted limited access to Kurmuk and Bau localities in Blue Nile. Access to Abyei through Kadugli continued to be difficult.

Darfur

179. Darfur continued to experience intermittent fighting between Government forces and non-signatory armed groups, with a spike from January to May and in December, following the launch of the Government's "Decisive Summer" military offensive using the rapid support forces. Intertribal and intratribal clashes in which children were involved intensified. In that context, the verification of violations against children remained difficult.

180. The country task force on monitoring and reporting verified three boys recruited and used by the armed forces and three by unidentified militias, a marked decrease compared with 2013. However, allegations of the recruitment of children continued to be received. In March, eyewitnesses reported the presence of boys between 15 and 17 years of age during a rapid support forces parade in Nyala, South Darfur. Another report mentioned that an estimated 37 children were seen carrying machine guns in El Daein, East Darfur.

181. Moreover, 197 children (135 boys, 62 girls) were killed (65) and maimed (132), by cross-fire during fighting between government forces and armed groups and in aerial bombardments by the armed forces. In addition, 15 children were killed and 29 injured by explosive remnants of war.

182. Forty-eight incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence affecting 60 girls were verified and attributed to the armed forces (15), the rapid support forces (10) and unidentified armed men (35). In most cases, girls were raped during attacks on their villages or when performing daily activities. Verifying cases of sexual violence remains a challenge due to fear of reprisals, mistrust in law enforcement and judicial authorities, and social stigma. In addition, the requirement by law to prove rape as a crime before the provision of medical care deters survivors and families from seeking help. When they do so, criminal law provisions may be interpreted in such a way that the survivor is accused of adultery. In cases where perpetrators are identified, families of victims often settle cases outside judicial proceedings.

183. Furthermore, the United Nations received allegations of the rape of 200 women, including children, by the armed forces in Thabit, North Darfur, in October. On 9 November, UNAMID conducted a mission to investigate the allegations, which could not be verified, as security personnel were present during UNAMID interactions with the community. UNAMID has since continued to face restrictions in its effort to access Thabit.

184. Ten schools were severely damaged, destroyed or looted during fighting between Government security forces and armed groups and in aerial bombardments by the armed forces. Eight incidents of attacks, looting and destruction of hospitals were reported. One school used militarily by the armed forces in South Darfur was also verified.

185. Eight incidents of abduction of 13 children (10 boys, 3) were reported and attributed to the rapid support forces (4), border guards (3), armed forces (1) and unidentified militias (5). Children were used in support functions or labour and sometimes were sexually abused.

186. Denial of humanitarian access and the imposition of restrictions on movements continued to impede efforts to reach affected communities, including children.

187. On 6 August, the Sudan Liberation Army-Minni Minawi established an operational mechanism to end recruitment and use of children, following a command order issued in December 2013. UNAMID engaged in dialogue with tribal leaders and communities, which resulted in the adoption of a community-based strategic plan to end use of children in intercommunal violence in October. It followed the issuance of a command order by the leader of the Mahameed clan of the Northern Rezeigat. On 26 November, UNAMID, UNICEF and the Sudan commission on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration launched the Darfur-wide campaign entitled “No Child Soldiers — Protect Darfur” in Masseriah, North Darfur. Training and awareness-raising activities on child protection were also conducted with civil society, religious and tribal leaders, state-level government personnel and the armed forces.

188. Limited progress was observed in holding the perpetrators of violations against children accountable. Twelve cases of arrest were documented by the country task force on monitoring and reporting, of which 4 resulted in prosecution and 1 in a sentence of 20 years’ imprisonment for rape.

189. I urge the Government of the Sudan to finalize and sign the action plan to address recruitment and use of children by its security forces.

Syrian Arab Republic

190. Conflict continued at unprecedented levels across the Syrian Arab Republic, resulting in massive violations against children. The United Nations verified 2,107 grave violations by all parties to the conflict in major urban and rural areas. ISIL has taken over large parts of the country and used public brutality and indoctrination to ensure the submission of communities; children were specifically targeted. The United Nations had limited capacity to verify information in the areas under the control of ISIL. Sieges and bombardments of civilian areas continued, particularly by Syrian Government Forces, which also hampered the verification of incidents.

191. The recruitment and use of children in combat has become commonplace in the Syrian Arab Republic. While actual numbers are expected to be higher, the United Nations verified that 271 boys and 7 girls had been recruited and used by groups affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (FSA) (142), Kurdish People's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) (24), ISIL (69) and al-Nusra Front (ANF) (25). In 77 per cent of the cases, children were armed or used in combat and almost one fifth were under 15 years of age. Boys associated with armed groups were commonly between 14 and 17 years of age, with 17 verified cases under the age of 15. In many cases, children were paid to fight for salaries of up to $400 per month. The payment of relatively large salaries by ANF, FSA, and in particular ISIL, created an incentive for children and their parents under difficult economic circumstances.

192. Fragmentation of FSA resulted in localized and variable recruitment, training and salary practices. During armed battles, children were used for fighting, attending to the wounded or for recording events for propaganda purposes.

193. YPG/YPJ continued to recruit and use boys and girls, including children younger than 15 years, reportedly taking them to indoctrination and training camps. For example, in March, a 13-year-old girl was taken to Ras al-Ayn for military training and the requests by her parents to see her were refused. In most cases, children were used in combat roles, and repeated allegations of "conscription" policies targeting children were levelled against YPG/YPJ.

194. Reports of the recruitment and use of boys by ISIL and ANF increased significantly. In 25 per cent of verified cases, boys were under the age of 15, including some as young as 8 years of age. ISIL reportedly established at least three child training camps in Raqqa, and hundreds of boys as young as 10 years of age were imprisoned in Aleppo, forced to attend indoctrination seminars and promised salaries, mobile phones, weapons, a martyr's place in paradise and the "gift" of a wife upon joining ISIL. In training and using children for combat roles, ISIL has violated international humanitarian law and perpetrated war crimes on a mass scale. Children were also recruited as suicide bombers and used to perpetrate extreme violence. For example, in July, four boys fighting with ANF in Dar'a participated in the beheading of four Syrian Government Forces soldiers.

195. A number of pro-Government groups, including Hizbullah, also reportedly recruited children in small numbers. Five boys joined the Popular Committee to support Syrian Government forces in al-Midan, Damascus. Children were also used as human shields and for forced labour. In November, children were among the civilians reportedly forced at gunpoint to be in front of the Syrian Government forces tanks entering the town of al-Sheikh Meskin to secure the Dar'a-Damascus highway.

196. Detention of children by Syrian authorities continued, with 38 verified cases (31 boys, 7 girls), including 15 who were subjected to torture. Children were arrested at checkpoints and schools. For example, in a verified incident in July, a 14-year-old boy from Homs, who had been detained in the State Security Centre, confessed under torture to carrying weapons and attacking checkpoints.

197. Indiscriminate attacks launched in civilian populated areas continued to cause widespread killing and maiming. The United Nations verified the killing of 368 children (184 boys, 66 girls, 118 gender unknown) by Syrian Government forces (221), ISIL/ANF (44), FSA-affiliated groups (24), international coalition airstrikes (4) and unknown parties (75). There were 771 cases of children maimed (420 boys, 142 girls, 209 gender unknown) by Syrian Government forces and pro-Government groups (336), FSA-affiliated groups (296), ISIL and ANF (19), YPG/YPJ (1) and unknown parties (119) across the country. Actual numbers are believed to be much higher.

198. Armed groups killed and maimed children by firing mortars mainly in Government-controlled areas. For example, a 7-year-old boy and a teacher were killed and 56 children injured in a mortar attack on the Al-Manar Armenian Catholic School in Damascus in April. Vehicle-borne improvised explosive device and suicide attacks by armed groups accounted for almost one fifth of child casualties. In April, 69 children were killed and injured in a double vehicle-borne improvised explosive device attack in a Government-controlled neighbourhood of Homs.

199. The public brutality and extreme violence perpetrated by ISIL also targeted children. For example, in July, a 15-year-old boy accused of adultery was publicly executed in Manbij, with his parents forced to watch and his corpse left on display for three days. In November, civilians were forced to participate in the stoning of a 14-year-old girl in Dei-ez-Zor. ISIL reportedly encouraged children to participate in public brutality, including holding decapitated heads for public display or playing “football” with them.

200. Aerial bombardment of civilian areas accounted for over 90 per cent of children documented killed and maimed by Syrian Government forces. In an attack in April by Syrian Government forces on the Ein Jalout primary school in Aleppo, 33 children were killed and 40 injured. Barrel bombs accounted for almost one third of child casualties inflicted by Syrian Government forces, including 6 children killed in June in al-Shajara internally displaced persons camp, Dar’a. Children continued to be killed during ground operations by pro-Government groups. For instance, in July, three children, aged 10 to 14 years, fleeing Suweida were killed by Popular Committee fighters. Children also continued to fall victim to explosive remnants of war.

201. The United Nations received 18 reports of sexual violence against children by ISIL (9), Syrian Government forces (5), Popular Committees (2), FSA (1) and the Kurdish police (1), of which 11 were verified. Forced marriage of girls to foreign fighters became common in ISIL-controlled territory. In July, the father of a 14-year-old girl in Aleppo was tortured for three days until he agreed to have his daughter marry an Egyptian ISIL “Emir”. ISIL issued guidance on the treatment of sex slaves, including children, and Yazidi girls abducted in Iraq were moved to and sold in Raqqa. Allegations of sexual violence against children by Syrian Government forces and pro-Government groups continued, with doctors reporting treating raped girls requesting abortions. In January, a 13-year-old boy was “arrested” at a checkpoint by the Popular Committee in Suweida and repeatedly raped over the course of three days.

202. According to the Ministry of Education, 889 schools had been fully (379) or partially (510) damaged by end-2014. The United Nations verified 60 attacks on education facilities by Syrian Government forces (39), ISIL (9), FSA (1), and unidentified parties (11). For example, in October two explosions near the Al Makhzomi and Al Mouhdeth primary schools in Akrama, Homs City, killed 29 children and maimed 27. Families repeatedly reported being too scared to send their children to school. The military use of schools also continued, with nine verified cases: YPG/YPJ (4), FSA (3) and ISIL (2). ISIL appropriated schools for child indoctrination, and in late 2014 all schools in ISIL-controlled Aleppo, Dei-ez-Zor and Raqqa were closed pending adoption of a “modified” curriculum.

203. By December, 413 medical facilities tracked by the United Nations were partially or fully damaged, while 823 were only partially functioning or not functioning due to shortage of staffing, equipment or use for other purposes. Eighty-six attacks on health facilities and 178 medical personnel killed were reported. The United Nations verified 28 attacks on health facilities and personnel by: Syrian Government forces (17), ISIL (9) and unidentified parties (2). For example, in May, a rocket attack on an FSA field hospital in an abandoned school in Jasem, Dar’a resulted in the death of two children and four medical personnel.

204. Abductions became a prominent tool used by ISIL. The United Nations verified that ISIL abducted and/or imprisoned 463 children, including for use in prisoner exchanges and for recruitment purposes, a number of whom were tortured. In May, 153 Kurdish boys aged 13 to 17 years were abducted in Manbij, Aleppo, while returning home from their school exams. Armed groups also arbitrarily detained children for alleged “criminal” offenses.

205. By January 2015, 212,000 persons remained under siege, 163,500 of them by Syrian Government forces and 26,500 by armed groups, and subjected to starvation. Children attempting to escape besieged areas were killed by snipers or in minefields. In January, an 11-year-old boy was killed by a sniper while attempting to leave al-Nashabiya, Rural Damascus. Attacks by armed groups on civilian infrastructure left millions of persons, including children, without access to water and electricity. Administrative blockages and refusals to allow certain items on inter-agency convoys, including surgical supplies, were common and threats and attacks on humanitarian personnel and facilities continued.

206. There were several meetings between the United Nations and the Government’s Interministerial Committee on Child Protection, and an expert level group of government and United Nations officials was established to strengthen engagement. In May, the United Nations provided training materials to support the Commission for Family Affairs in conducting child rights orientation for Syrian Government forces; however, this has yet to be implemented. Legislative Decree 22, adopted in June, granted an amnesty for children associated with armed groups, and the Government committed to diverting those children to rehabilitation programmes. However, cases of children detained by Syrian Government forces were verified by the United Nations throughout the year. In all circumstances, children are entitled to benefit from the special status of juveniles in conflict with the law, in conformity with international humanitarian and human rights law.

207. The political and military leadership of both YPG/YPJ and the FSA Supreme Military Council publicly committed to ending child recruitment and use, enforcing disciplinary measures and issuing command orders to that effect. However, the recruitment and use of children by both groups following these commitments continued and was verified by the United Nations.

Yemen

208. During the reporting period, the security situation deteriorated significantly in the northern governorates where Al Houthi/Ansar Allah (hereinafter Ansar Allah) expanded its presence. Armed clashes took place between the Yemeni Armed Forces and Islah-backed pro-Government tribal militias and tribal armed groups, against Ansar Allah and Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP). The situation in the southern governorates also remained tense and armed clashes took place in Al Dhale'e. A mass offensive was conducted by YAF against AQAP and Ansar Al Sharia', and clashes continued in Aden between Al Hirak (a southern cessation movement) supporters and the security forces. As at April 2015, an international coalition had launched airstrikes against Ansar Allah, which reportedly resulted in a significant number of child casualties.

209. The United Nations verified a significant increase from 2013 of recruitment and use of children, with a total of 156 boys recruited and used between the ages of 9 and 17. The majority (140) of cases were perpetrated by Ansar Allah with a highly visible presence. The United Nations observed and documented armed children manning checkpoints, being present on armed vehicles and guarding buildings. Following Ansar Allah's expansion into the capital in September, distinguishing between members of YAF and Ansar Allah became increasingly challenging, particularly at checkpoints. Eleven boys between the ages of 16 and 17 were recruited and used by Islah-backed tribal militias aligned with the Government or Salafists, all except two of them in the frontlines. An additional four boys were verified as joining tribal armed groups in Al Bayda governorate.

210. The numbers of child casualties increased significantly from the previous reporting period, with 74 children (56 boys, 18 girls) killed and 244 (176 boys, 68 girls) maimed. Child casualties due to mines and other explosive devices more than doubled, with 10 children killed and 54 maimed. Ansar Allah was targeted and attacked, including by two suicide bombings that killed 14 and injured 25 boys. A total of 14 children were killed and 30 maimed by six improvised explosive devices, including an attack on an Ansar Allah checkpoint. Another 10 children were killed and 37 injured due to shelling, and 2 boys and 3 girls were maimed as a result of aerial bombings, including one drone strike on 29 September in Al Jawf, which maimed 1 boy and 2 girls.

211. Nine boys were detained by Ansar Allah as they reportedly conducted "law enforcement operations". Six other incidents of detention by Ansar Allah were also verified involving six boys, four of whom were detained for their alleged association with Islah, and one because of his father's association with Islah.

212. The United Nations verified 35 attacks against schools. For example, all 10 schools attacked in Amanah Al Asimah governorate were destroyed during clashes that took place in September between Ansar Allah and YAF and pro-Government tribal militias. Nine attacks were attributed to YAF and eight to Ansar Allah. In many cases schools were forced to close completely.

213. The United Nations verified 13 attacks against hospitals by Ansar Allah and YAF, which severely hampered the provision of medical services. For example, on 21 January, a hospital in Al Dhale'e district was shelled by YAF, resulting in the death of a 45-day-old boy and injury to his 2-year-old sister while they were trying to escape the shelling with their father.

214. Ninety-two schools were verified as being used for military purposes by armed forces and groups with the majority of schools being used by Ansar Allah for providing accommodation or as weapons' storage. In response to that trend, the Ministry of Education and Governorate Education Offices, supported by the United Nations, established task forces on education in emergency, which vacated at least 25 schools used by Ansar Allah.

215. In total, 43 denials of humanitarian access were verified. In a positive development, a United Nations staff member kidnapped by an unknown armed group was released in November after 13 months in captivity.

216. On 14 May, in a ceremony attended by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, the Government of Yemen signed an action plan with the United Nations to end and further prevent the recruitment and use of children by YAF. Within a month after the signing ceremony, follow-up mechanisms were established in accordance with the action plan. In a welcome development, following engagement by the United Nations with the Constitutional Drafting Committee, the draft constitution issued in January 2015 includes the prohibition of voluntary recruitment of all persons under the age of 18. The final version of a draft action plan to end the recruitment and use of children by Ansar Allah was endorsed by their Human Rights and Civil Society Office, which was reportedly shared with the office of Abdul Malik Badrealdeen Al Houthi. Since the eruption of violence in early 2015 all progress on actions plans and on ending violations has been put on hold.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

Colombia

217. In 2014, peace talks between the Government of Colombia and the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia — Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) continued in Havana. The conclusions on the three first items of the agenda, “Rural development”, “Political participation” and “Illicit drugs”, were shared publicly and discussions began on item five, “Victims”. The latter opened up the opportunity to raise specific concerns on child protection, in particular with regard to the recognition of the rights of child victims. At the request of the negotiating parties, the United Nations and the National University of Colombia organized regional and national forums to collect the views of victims and proposals. On those occasions, many national and international actors advocated for child protection concerns to be raised at the negotiating table. In December, the FARC-EP and the Government started talks about de-escalating the conflict, including issues related to child recruitment and a ceasefire. I commend the sustained efforts to put an end to the conflict and encourage all parties to take further concrete steps to protect children and guarantee lasting improvements for children’s rights, including under item three, “End of conflict”.

218. Despite the ongoing peace process, hostilities between FARC-EP, the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) and the Colombian Armed Forces continued and intensified in some parts of the country, causing displacement and often putting children at risk of recruitment and sexual violence. As at December 2014, there were some six million persons registered as internally displaced persons, approximately 35 per cent of whom were children. Afro-Colombian and indigenous communities were particularly affected. Violence committed by post-demobilization groups and other local armed groups was an important trigger of displacement, both in urban and rural areas. In addition, about 500,000 persons suffered from severe mobility restrictions to access basic services and assistance, as a result of the sharp increase in attacks against civilian infrastructure committed throughout 2014, mostly by ELN (52 per cent) and FARC-EP (22 per cent).

219. The United Nations verified 343 cases of recruitment and use of children by armed groups in 22 departments and in Bogotá. The Colombian Family Welfare Institute documented the separation of 277 children, the majority of whom had escaped from armed groups. A total of 198 children had been recruited by FARC-EP, 52 by ELN, and the remaining by post-demobilization groups and other armed groups. In addition, the Ombudsman Office issued at least 36 risk reports on recruitment in 20 departments.

220. On 12 February 2015, FARC-EP announced that it had raised the recruitment age to 17 years. While I take note of that positive development, I wish to recall that the Convention on the Rights of the Child ratified by Colombia in 1991 stipulates that a child means every human being below the age of 18, and that its Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict, ratified in 2005, prohibits armed groups from recruiting children under the age of 18 and provides that the State party should prevent such recruitment and use.

221. At least nine children were killed and 60 were maimed, mostly in landmine incidents. Children, predominantly girls, were also victims of sexual violence attributed to armed groups, including post-demobilization groups, and in some cases to members of national armed forces. Furthermore, sexual exploitation and abuse of girls by members of armed groups in mining zones continued. The United Nations received reports of the detention in Bolívar of three persons charged with selling girls for sexual purposes to armed groups and to mine workers.

222. There were 12 reported cases of schools damaged in crossfire, anti-personnel mines and explosive remnants of war, as well as 11 cases of military use by parties to the conflict. In May, the armed forces found 76 gas cylinders stored by FARC-EP in a school in Cauca, ready to be used in combat, thereby putting schoolchildren at risk. In addition, the presence of units of the armed forces near or in front of schools during class hours put school premises and children at risk. Within the reporting period, teachers were also subject to threats by FARC-EP, ELN, Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia/Los Urabeños and Los Rastrojos and three teachers were killed by unidentified armed groups.

223. Despite its prohibition by the National Child Protection Code (Art. 41, para. 29, of Law 1098 of 2006), the involvement of children in civic-military activities organized by the armed forces continued in several parts of the country. For example, in July, in Cauca, the armed forces carried out a civic-military activity, inviting more than 500 persons; the recreational activity for children was carried out by the armed forces psychological operations team. The Committee on the Rights of the Child has previously shared its concerns with regard to civic-military activities organized by the armed forces inside schools and in the community. In its recent report on prevention of the recruitment of children and adolescents, issued in December 2014, the Ombudsman Office also requested the Ministry of Defence, the armed forces and the police to refrain from carrying out the campaigns with children. I echo those concerns and call upon the armed forces to refrain from involving children in any military activities that may place them at risk of being targeted by armed groups.

224. Since 1999, at least 5,694 children have been separated from armed groups and benefitted from the Colombian Family Welfare Institute programme. With regard to protection and assistance provided to children separated from armed groups as stipulated in the National Child Protection Code and the Victims Law, all children, as victims, should be accorded equal protection, regardless of the group that recruited or used them. In some cases, however, children who had been separated from armed groups, mostly those associated with post-demobilization groups, were referred to the Office of the Attorney General for prosecution without benefitting from the Institute's programmes for protection and assistance.

225. Since 1999, there have been 193 convictions for child recruitment, including under the Justice and Peace Law of 2005 and by the Human Rights Unit of the Office of the Attorney General, as well as by regional and local courts. In June, a new bill for the protection of victims of sexual and gender-based violence in conflict was approved. I welcome that major step, which was taken to harmonize the national legislation with international standards.

India

226. The recruitment and use of children as young as six years of age by armed groups, including the Naxalites, continued. According to the Ministry of Home Affairs, Naxalites in Bihar, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand and Odisha States recruited boys and girls between 6 and 12 years of age into specific children's units. They were used as informers and taught to fight with crude weapons, such as sticks. At the age of 12, children associated with Naxalites are reportedly transferred to specific units, where they receive training in weapon handling and the use of improvised explosive devices.

227. In Naxalite recruitment campaigns targeting poor communities, parents are forced to offer children under the threat of violence. Similarly, children are reportedly threatened with the killing of family members should they escape or surrender to security forces. In August, in Lakhisarai district, Naxalites reportedly made demands of children from families, resulting in up to 100 girls and boys, between 10 and 15 years of age, joining the group. In West Singhbhum, government security forces reportedly arrested an armed group element for the recruitment of 11 children aged 9 to 13 years, including 5 girls, on their way to a training camp. The recruiter allegedly stated that his commander had specifically asked for girls. According to the Government, based on the statements of several women formerly associated with Naxalite groups, sexual violence is common in the camps. Violence and the use of schools as recruitment grounds affected access to education for children in Naxalite areas.

228. The United Nations also received reports of the recruitment and use of children in Assam and Manipur States. Children were reportedly lured into joining armed groups in the face of the lack of livelihood alternatives, but were also abducted and forcibly recruited, including through coercion of family members and the threat of violence. Concerns persist over allegations of detention of children in violence-affected states, including for alleged association with armed groups.

229. I am concerned by the Government reports of the use of children as human shields and in combat roles by the Naxalites. The period under review reportedly saw an increase in Naxalite violence, resulting in the killing of 89 civilians and 48 security personnel in 429 incidents in the first quarter alone. Concerns also persisted over the killing and maiming of children in north-eastern states. For example, in Assam, on 23 December, in four seemingly coordinated attacks, the National Democratic Front of Bodoland allegedly killed around 75 civilians, including at least 18 children.

Nigeria

230. Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati wal-Jihad (JAS), commonly known as Boko Haram, continued and intensified its attacks on the civilian population in the three north-eastern states of Nigeria (Borno, Adamawa and Yobe). High-profile attacks were also conducted in other parts of the country: Kano, Gombe and Bauchi States, and the Federal Capital Territory. The group's tactics began with hit-and-run attacks targeting government officials, security forces, detention centres, religious figures and, increasingly, schools and children, and have evolved into take-and-hold attacks, controlling large swaths of territory. The pace and intensity of attacks resulted in the displacement of over 1 million persons, the majority being women and children. Since June, Nigerian security forces increased their operations against Boko Haram, in conjunction with the Civilian Joint Task Force and other pro-Government vigilante groups. Boko Haram activities have progressively expanded beyond Nigeria's borders into Cameroon, Chad and the Niger and have prompted a regional response to address the threat posed by the group.

231. In December, the United Nations in Nigeria formally established a country task force on children affected by armed conflict to monitor and report on violations against children following the listing of Boko Haram in my previous annual report (A/68/878-S/2014/339). The verification of incidents remained challenging, due to a severe lack of access to affected areas.

232. Increased reports were received on the recruitment and use of boys and girls by Boko Haram in support roles and in combat. Children were also used as human shields to protect Boko Haram elements. Another alarming trend observed since July was the growing number of girls used as suicide bombers in populated urban centres. For example, in July, four teenage girls were reported to have carried out a series of suicide attacks attributed to Boko Haram in Kano. A 13-year-old girl from Adamawa State was reportedly rescued at a checkpoint in Katsina State while carrying a belt with explosives. The United Nations also received reports of children joining CJTF and other vigilante groups, voluntarily or forcibly, and being used to man checkpoints, gather intelligence and participate in armed patrols. It was reported that some of the civilians, including children, who had voluntarily joined a particular side sometimes had done so in order to avoid the suspicion that they were associated with, or sympathetic to, the other side.

233. The killing of civilians, including children, by Boko Haram continued and sharply increased during the period under review. It is estimated that at least 7,380 persons were killed in 255 incidents (5,083 in Borno, 893 in Adamawa, 517 in Yobe and 887 in other states). Data on the age and status of the victims is not available and therefore, the exact number of children killed and injured remains unknown. Children were killed and maimed during Boko Haram raids on villages, in targeted attacks in public places, in clashes between Boko Haram and the Nigerian security forces and as a result of suicide bombings. Children were also killed by Boko Haram in their schools. Education authorities in the north-east recorded the killing of 314 school children between January 2012 and December 2014. In February, 59 secondary schoolboys were shot or burned to death in their dormitory during a night-time attack in Buni Yadi, Yobe. In November, a suicide bomber disguised in a school uniform killed at least 47 school children and injured 117 others in Potiskum, Yobe. In addition, 26 incidents of suicide attacks were reported, in the states of Borno (nine), Kano (eight), Yobe (five), Gombe (two), Bauchi (one), and in the Federal Capital Territory (one). The suicide attacks reportedly involved 45 suicide bombers and claimed the lives of at least 688 persons, including over 200 persons at the Grand Mosque in Kano.

234. Worrisome allegations were received of other violations against civilians, including children, by Government armed forces, CJTF and vigilante groups, including extra-judicial killings, arbitrary detention and torture.

235. Boko Haram targeted schools and teachers perceived to provide a “Western” curriculum. School facilities were attacked, looted and destroyed, teachers and students were killed, threatened and abducted. According to education authorities, a total of 338 schools were destroyed and damaged, and at least 196 teachers killed between 2012 and 2014. A number of specific incidents where children were targeted and killed are outlined in paragraph 230 above. Continuing threats in all three north-eastern states led to reduced access to education, closure of schools, teachers leaving and the withdrawal of children from schools. The United Nations received reports of health centres also looted and destroyed. Access for polio health workers was increasingly reduced, due to growing insecurity.

236. Since 2009, Boko Haram has reportedly been responsible for the abduction of at least 500 young women and girls from their homes or schools and while travelling on roads in the affected States. The abduction of 276 girls from their school in Chibok, Borno, in April 2014, represented the largest single incident of abduction attributed to the group. Of the 276 abductees, 57 managed to escape. Incidents continued to be reported and, in September, over 100 young women and girls were abducted from villages during attacks in Adamawa State. The whereabouts of the Chibok girls and the other abductees remain unknown. According to accounts from escapees, they were subjected to forcible religious conversion, physical and psychological abuse, forced labour and forced marriage to Boko Haram fighters. The group’s stated motives for abductions include retaliation against the Government for detention of relatives and punishment of schoolchildren for attending Western-style schools.

237. My Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict visited Nigeria in January 2015 to assess the impact of the conflict on children, support the roll-out of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and engage with the Government, including sharing her concerns regarding the allegations on violations committed by government forces, CJTF and vigilante groups. During the visit, the Special Representative met with civilian and military authorities at the highest level, who expressed readiness to cooperate with the monitoring and reporting mechanism through the establishment of a Federal-level interministerial committee and state-level committees on children in the three affected states. In January 2015, the Minister of Justice issued an advisory reiterating the prohibition of recruitment and use of children. In response to the number of schools affected by the conflict and following the abduction of the Chibok girls, the Government also launched the “Safe Schools Initiative” aimed at providing remedial education and piloting 10 safe education facilities in the three affected states.

238. The threat of Boko Haram to regional stability prompted neighbouring countries to react by conducting joint operations and coordinating efforts through a Multinational Joint Task Force composed of troops from Lake Chad Basin countries and Benin, and whose deployment was authorized by the African Union Peace and Security Council on 3 March 2015. Given the high numbers of children recruited or abducted by Boko Haram, it is of great concern that abductees or children associated with the group will be heavily affected in the course of military operations. In December, Cameroonian security forces reported the dismantling of an almajiri school near the border with Nigeria, where 84 boys aged between 4 and 17 years were found in the presence of instructors allegedly affiliated with Boko Haram. In April 2015, the boys were reportedly placed in a facility run by the Ministry of Social Welfare in northern Cameroon.

239. I urge the Government of Nigeria to take all necessary measures to protect children affected by the security situation and investigate the allegations of violations by its security forces as part of the military operations against Boko Haram and bring the perpetrators to justice. I also call upon regional countries participating in military operations against Boko Haram to carry out their operations against the group in compliance with international humanitarian, refugee and human rights law and to take all necessary measures to ensure the protection of children and minimize the impact of the conflict on them. I welcome the fact that child protection provisions have been included in the Multinational Joint Task Force concept of operations. I reiterate that depriving children of their liberty should only be a measure of last resort and that children who are detained should be treated primarily as victims and handed over to child protection actors as soon as possible.

Pakistan

240. Pakistan continued to face significant security challenges, posed in particular by armed groups and extremist groups, with schools being particularly targeted. Hundreds of civilians were killed or injured in dozens of attacks. In response, the Government launched a major offensive in North Waziristan in June to reduce the capacity of armed groups to strike within the country. In one of the most alarming incidents of the reporting period, on 16 December, nine gunmen stormed the Army Public School in Peshawar, firing on pupils and staff indiscriminately, and utilizing improvised explosive devices and hand grenades to maximize casualties. At least 132 boys, as young as 8 years of age, and several teachers and other staff members were killed. At least 133 persons were injured, the vast majority of them children. The Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) claimed responsibility for the assault, stating that it was an act of revenge for the ongoing offensive in North Waziristan.

241. Although exact figures of child casualties were not always available, sectarian violence and hundreds of indiscriminate attacks, including by improvised explosive devices and suicide bombers, continued to affect children in several areas, with Baluchistan and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Provinces most affected. In February, for example, in Peshawar, a suicide bomb in the crowded Koocha Risaldar area near Qissa Khawani bazaar reportedly killed 10 persons, the majority of whom were women and children, and injured 48 others.

242. Armed groups continued to regularly attack educational institutions. At least 40 secular schools were reportedly attacked, mainly in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province, the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and in Balochistan Province. In January, for example, a suicide bomber reportedly blew himself up outside the gates of a school in Hangu, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province, killing a 14-year-old boy who was trying to prevent the attacker from entering the school. In February, an improvised explosive device exploded outside school gates in Karak, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province, reportedly injuring 13 children and the school principal. In the wake of the December 16 attack on the Army Public School in Peshawar, all educational institutions across Pakistan were closed for a period of three to four weeks, thereby disrupting education.

243. Attacks on polio workers by TTP-affiliated and other armed elements continued unabated in 2014, resulting in the killing of at least nine such workers and several police and security personnel providing escorts for the conduct of polio campaigns. For example, in January, three persons were reportedly killed and two others injured by four armed elements in Karachi. In Balochistan, on 26 November, four polio workers, including three women, were reportedly shot dead and three other members of the polio vaccination team were wounded by two gunmen on a motorcycle. On 9 December, in Faisalabad, Punjab, a schoolteacher volunteering in a polio vaccination campaign was reportedly shot by armed elements on a motorcycle. The Taliban splinter faction Jundullah claimed responsibility for the attack.

244. Interaction on child protection between the United Nations and the Pakistani authorities continued throughout 2014. For example, with United Nations support, the Government of Gilgit-Baltistan approved a comparatively substantial budgetary allocation for the establishment of child protection services. One area of concern is the reports of detention of children for alleged association with armed groups and on national security charges. In January 2015, the Parliament of Pakistan passed a constitutional amendment on the establishment of military courts for a duration of 24 months, wherein civilian suspects accused of acts of terrorism will be tried. Military courts are inappropriate forums for hearing cases involving children since they do not fully recognize the special status of juveniles in conflict with the law. I urge the Government to ensure that any children arrested for their alleged association with armed groups or under security charges are treated primarily as victims. In all circumstances children are entitled to benefit from the special status of juvenile in conflict with the law in conformity with international human rights law.

Philippines

245. In March, the Government and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) signed a comprehensive agreement on the Bangsamoro that includes a transition plan on normalization towards the eventual decommissioning of the MILF Bangsamoro Islamic Armed Forces (BIAF). The Government also continued to enhance the monitoring, reporting and response system to institutionalize the response to child rights violations. Meanwhile, the emergence of breakaway armed factions and localized community feuds involving armed elements continued to affect children. As at March 2015, intensive fighting was continuing between the Government and the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF) and Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG).

246. Noting that child recruitment is mostly likely underreported since communities are apprehensive about sharing information for fear of reprisals, the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of seven boys, as young as 9 years of age, by the New People's Army (NPA) and ASG, marking a decrease from the 20 verified cases in 2013. For example, among the five boys recruited and used by ASG was a 9-year-old boy who was used as a weapons porter for approximately 18 months. After escaping, he was shot dead. ASG had previously told his family that the boy would be killed if he left. The recruitment of two boys by NPA, aged 15 and 16 years, was reported by their parents. The municipal police launched an investigation but the recruiter remained at large and an arrest warrant was issued.

247. Local communities continued to note that armed groups, including NPA and reportedly ASG, approached civilians including children, for recruitment purposes, offering them shelter, food, access to education or offering to support communities. In response, parents reportedly sent their children to urban centres for their protection.

248. On 3 July, a 14-year-old boy and his father were arrested by members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines in Maguindanao, allegedly on suspicion of the father being affiliated with BIFF. The whereabouts of the father and the boy were unknown at the end of 2014, although an investigation was launched by the Regional Human Rights Commission of the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao.

249. The United Nations verified the killing of 13 children and the injury of 26 others in 22 separate incidents. In one incident, on 28 July, seven children were killed and six others, as young as 3 years of age, were wounded by ASG when their vehicle was ambushed. Ten incidents resulted from armed forces operations against BIFF and retaliatory attacks. One boy was killed and four children (two girls, two boys) were injured in armed clashes in the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao resulting from conflicts involving MILF or Moro National Liberation Front commanders.

250. In five separate incidents, clashes between the armed forces and BIFF and between national police and NPA resulted in damage to schools, followed by suspension of classes. On 2 January, BIFF used a primary school in North Cotabato in operations against the armed forces and set the school on fire upon withdrawal. Concerns also persisted over threats made against teachers by ASG. In addition, the United Nations verified the military use of six schools and one hospital by the armed forces, mainly during operations against BIFF.

251. In June, the MILF leadership reappointed a panel to engage with the United Nations on a roadmap to expedite implementation of the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and took a number of important steps, notably that of appointing focal points in all of its base and front commands, displaying command orders prohibiting the recruitment and use of children, including sanctions against perpetrators, facilitating orientations on the roles and responsibilities of BIAF members vis-à-vis the action plan, and submitting progress reports to the United Nations every two months. MILF has also guaranteed unhindered access for action plan-related activities, including verification exercises.

252. In partnership with the Bangsamoro Development Agency, the United Nations has established 16 community-based child protection networks in conflict-affected communities in Mindanao to strengthen their capacity to prevent and respond to all forms of child rights violations.

253. The armed forces, through their Human Rights Office, and in line with my recommendations to better protect children affected by the armed conflict in the Philippines (S/2013/419), continued to finalize a strategic framework to protect children during military operations. Some of these have already been implemented, including the guidelines on the conduct of activities in schools and hospitals.

254. I commend the progress made by MILF and urge it to identify all children associated with BIAF to ensure their separation in line with the action plan. I encourage both the Government of the Philippines and MILF to continue their sustained engagement to ensure the success of the peace process, which the United Nations stands ready to support.

Thailand

255. Armed violence in southern Thailand continued, with armed groups launching attacks against civilian targets and engaging in sporadic fighting with Government security forces. Peace talks between the Government and armed groups, facilitated by Malaysia, began in 2014.

256. The United Nations continued to receive reports on the recruitment and use of children by armed groups. Children reportedly received military training and were used as lookouts, informers and combatants. For instance, a 14-year-old boy allegedly associated with an armed group was reportedly killed in a gunfight with civil defence forces in Narathiwat Province in August. Concerns persist over the informal association of children with civil defence groups providing security for transportation routes, teachers and schools. Reports also continue regarding the administrative detention of children for alleged association with armed groups.

257. The United Nations received reports of 57 incidents in Pattani, Yala and Narathiwat that resulted in the killing of 23 children and maiming of 65. The incidents included shootings and improvised explosive device attacks. For example, on 3 February, three boys, between 6 and 11 years of age, were reportedly killed by gunshots during a targeted attack on their family by armed elements.

258. Armed groups continued to target teachers and education personnel, often using brutal threats and acts. According to the Ministry of Education, six teachers, one education personnel and 10 students were killed in 2014, while three teachers, one education personnel and 15 students were injured. In a worrisome example, in March, insurgents shot a teacher while she was riding a motorcycle to work at Tabing Tingi Community School. The assailants reportedly then poured gasoline on her body and set it on fire. A leaflet, with the words “This attack is in revenge for the killing of innocent people,” was found nearby.

259. In line with that trend, in November, banners threatening teachers were found in several parts of Yala. Soldiers and police who have been providing security escorts for teachers in the affected region have also come under fire. In November, 18 members of an armed group launched an attack on a security escort, killing four soldiers and injuring two others. In October, eight schools in the provinces of Pattani and Narathiwat were burned at night. No group claimed responsibility for the attacks. However, according to some reports, it was retaliation by a National Revolutionary Front-led armed group for attacks by the Royal Thai Army. The Government arrested eight persons in October, who reportedly confessed to carrying out the attack.

260. In May and August, for the first time since the escalation of violence in 2014, three hospitals were attacked in Pattani and Songkhla. In one attack, a parked motorcycle exploded and set fire to adjacent areas in the bombing at the Khok Pho hospital, resulting in serious injury to a 3-year-old girl.

261. In my previous two annual reports, I welcomed the fact that the Government and the United Nations country team were engaging in dialogue on access to the southern border provinces to conduct independent verification and report on alleged violations against children. I am concerned that progress has still not been achieved on the issue of access for monitoring and verification, and again strongly urge the Government to facilitate independent access.

IV. Recommendations

262. I am deeply concerned at the increase of grave violations outlined in the present report and call upon all parties to immediately end, and take all measures to prevent, grave violations against children.

263. Accountability is crucial to preventing grave violations, and I urge Member States to place it at the core of national and international responses to violations.

264. I call upon Member States to ensure that their response to threats to peace and security are conducted in full compliance with international humanitarian law, refugee law and human rights law. Member States should ensure that responses include specific mitigating measures for the protection of children.

265. I strongly urge all parties listed in the annexes to the present report who have not yet done so to enter into dialogue with the United Nations to agree on and implement measures to end grave violations and assist victims.

266. I call upon Member States to allow independent access to the United Nations for the purposes of monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children.

267. I also call upon Member States to facilitate contact between the United Nations and non-State armed groups for dialogue and follow-up on action plans in order to bring an end to violations. Such dialogue does not prejudice the political or legal status of those non-State armed groups.

268. I urge Member States to consider alternatives to the deprivation of liberty or prosecution of children for their alleged or actual association with armed groups or as part of counter-terrorism measures. At a minimum, Member States should ensure that procedures or trials are consistent with international juvenile justice standards and the principle of the best interests of the child.

269. The recruitment and use of children by extremist groups pose new challenges with regard to their protection, rehabilitation and reintegration. I encourage Member States to highlight and address the need for prevention and appropriate measures to rehabilitate those children recruited and used, including education programmes and vocational training, in compliance with the principle of the best interest of the child and respecting the child's primary status as a victim.

270. I encourage Member States, regional organizations, international mediators and special envoys to continue including child protection provisions in peace negotiations and agreements.

271. I welcome the leadership and contribution of regional and subregional organizations in the protection of children. I call upon regional and subregional organizations to continue integrating child protection considerations in their policies, planning of peace support operations, training of personnel and conduct of operations.

272. I call upon all parties to respect the civilian character of schools and cease attacks against them and attacks and threats of attacks against students and teachers.

273. I call upon the Council to expand the tools available to child protection actors to gather information and report on the abduction of children, including through adding abductions as a trigger violation for listing in the annexes of the present report.

274. I also call upon the Council to continue to support the children and armed conflict agenda by strengthening provisions for the protection of children in all relevant mandates of United Nations peacekeeping, special political and peacebuilding missions. I also welcome and encourage the inclusion of grave violations against children as criteria for sanctions in Security Council committees.

275. I welcome the engagement and progress made so far regarding the “Children, Not Soldiers” campaign. I call upon all Member States to continue to mobilize political and financial support to ensure that progress achieved is institutionalized and durable.

276. I again urge all Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its three Optional Protocols.

V. Observations

277. The present report clearly lays out the egregious violations to which children were subject during the reporting period in countries affected by conflict. In several situations, in particular the Central African Republic, Iraq, Israel/State of Palestine, Nigeria, South Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic, children were affected to a degree which is an affront to our common humanity. The facts as presented in the body of the present report speak for themselves and should shock our collective conscience.

278. I am more convinced than ever that the United Nations and Member States must continue to give the protection of children affected by armed conflict the highest priority. Their plight should be the primary reason not to start conflicts and the primary reason to end them.

279. Determining responsibility for the killing and maiming and other grave violations against children raises the question of intention, although what is relevant is respect for international legal obligations and the impact on children. The case has been made by some parties to conflict that targeting children was never a policy or practice and that it was merely the unintended consequence of military action. In 2015, however, the case has been made in such a way that the integrity of the listing mechanism established by the Security Council to protect children has been threatened. This is deplorable.

280. I would like to put all parties to conflict on notice that those that engage in military action resulting in numerous grave violations against children will, regardless of intent, find themselves under continued scrutiny by the United Nations, including in future reports relating to children and armed conflict. Member States must re-examine existing policies and practices to stop and prevent grave violations against children. Member States must also be held to account and they, in turn, must hold perpetrators accountable.

281. I call upon all Member States not to lose sight of the vital objective at stake here: protecting children — a moral imperative and a legal obligation. Member States therefore must ensure that all avenues to protect children affected by armed conflict are identified and pursued. I urge all the parties to conflict identified in the report to work with my Special Representative to prevent future grave violations against children.

VI. Lists in the annexes to the present report

282. There are no new parties listed in the report. In the Central African Republic, local defence militias known as the anti-Balaka, already listed for recruitment and use and killing and maiming of children, are now listed for sexual violence against children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), who were already included in annex I for the recruitment and use of children and for attacks on schools and hospitals, are listed for the killing and maiming of children. In Iraq, the Islamic State of Iraq (ISI)/Al-Qaida in Iraq (AQ-I) are now listed for sexual violence against children under the name Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), in addition to the three other listed violations. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the Islamic State of Iraq and Sham (ISIS) are further listed for sexual violence against children and attacks on schools and hospitals, also under the name ISIL. In Nigeria, Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati wal-Jihad (JAS), also known as Boko Haram, is now additionally listed for the recruitment and use of children, having been previously listed for killing and maiming and sexual violence against children.

283. Other changes in the list resulted from the fragmentation of previously listed parties or other changes in the landscape of armed conflict in respective situations. In the Central African Republic, the situation remains complex and fluid. Some factions listed in 2014 under the “ex-Séléka coalition and associated armed groups” disappeared, while others emerged. For the current listing, the umbrella “ex-Séléka coalition and associated armed groups” is used. In the Syrian Arab Republic, Jhabat Al-Nusra is now listed as Al-Nusra Front (ANF).

284. In a unilateral declaration made in Nairobi on 12 December 2013, the M23 announced the end of its rebellion and its transformation into a political party, and was removed from annex I. In relation to Yemen, given the constant changing nature of the situation, no changes have been made to the annexes from the previous report, but changes may be made in future years.

Security Council
Seventy-first year

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2015, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2225 (2015). It highlights recent global trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and provides information on grave violations committed against children in 2015. The main activities with regard to the implementation of relevant Council resolutions and the conclusions of the Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict are outlined. In line with the resolutions of the Council, the annexes to the report include a list of parties that engage in the recruitment and use of children, sexual violence against children, the killing and maiming of children, attacks on schools and/or hospitals and attacks or threats of attacks against protected personnel,<sup>1</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. All the information provided in the present report and its annexes has been vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. In situations in which the ability to obtain or independently verify information is hampered by such factors as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. The preparation of the report and its annexes involved broad consultations within the United Nations, at Headquarters and in the field, and with relevant Member States.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), and in identifying situations that fall within the scope of her mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has adopted a pragmatic approach on the issue, with an emphasis on humanitarian principles aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status.

II. Addressing the impact of armed conflict on children

A. Trends and developments

4. Serious challenges for the protection of children affected by armed conflict continued throughout 2015. The impact on children of our collective failure to prevent and end conflict is severe, and the present report highlights the increased intensity of grave violations in a number of situations of armed conflict. Those violations are directly related to the denigration of the respect for international humanitarian and human rights law by parties to conflict.

5. Protracted conflicts had a substantial impact on children. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the five-year conflict has caused the deaths of more than 250,000 people, including thousands of children. In Afghanistan in 2015, the highest number of child casualties was recorded since the United Nations began systematically documenting civilian casualties in 2009. In Somalia, the situation continued to be perilous, with an increase of 50 per cent in the number of recorded violations against children compared with 2014, with many hundreds of children recruited, used, killed and maimed. In a most troubling example, in South Sudan, children were victims of all six grave violations, in particular during brutal military offensives against opposition forces.

6. In Yemen, a particularly worrisome escalation of conflict has been seen. The United Nations verified a fivefold increase in the number of children recruited in 2015 compared with the previous year. This compounded a sixfold increase in the number of children killed and maimed in the same period. These alarming trends continued into early 2016.

7. Attacks on schools and hospitals were prevalent in 2015, linked to the increasing use of air strikes and explosive weapons in populated areas. Armed groups particularly targeted girls' access to education, although attacks on schools and hospitals were also carried out by government forces. Member States should consider, where necessary, changes in policies, military procedures and legislation to protect schools and hospitals.

8. The proliferation of actors involved in armed conflicts was a particular concern. Cross-border aerial operations conducted by international coalitions or individual Member States, especially in populated areas, resulted in highly complex environments for the protection of children. Indiscriminate aerial bombardments have hit medical and education facilities and crowded markets, causing child casualties. The many actors involved in hostilities posed challenges for monitoring and reporting and to the efforts of the United Nations to engage with parties to conflict to prevent child casualties.

9. In its resolution 2225 (2015), the Security Council expressed grave concern regarding the abduction of children in situations of armed conflict and requested those parties to armed conflict that engaged in patterns of abduction of children to be listed in the present report. Abductions continued to be perpetrated on a wide scale by Al-Shabaab, Boko Haram, Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) and the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), with the number significantly increasing in Afghanistan and South Sudan.

10. The reporting period was marked by most disturbing cases of sexual exploitation and abuse committed by United Nations peacekeepers and civilians and non-United Nations international forces. Sexual exploitation and abuse by those entrusted to protect civilians is particularly egregious. I have initiated a robust response to allegations against United Nations personnel, following the recommendations of the external independent review panel on sexual exploitation and abuse by international peacekeeping forces in the Central African Republic. I am pleased that the Security Council, through its resolution 2272 (2016), endorsed my decision to repatriate military or police units when there is credible evidence of widespread or systemic sexual exploitation or abuse by those units and asked the United Nations to gather and preserve evidence of incidents in peacekeeping operations. The measures represent important steps in ensuring that there is accountability for those who commit these atrocious acts.

11. Notwithstanding the significant concerns relating to the protection of children affected by armed conflict, progress has been made. The momentum generated by the “Children, Not Soldiers” campaign remained strong. In particular, continued commitment by Governments towards their action plans was demonstrated in Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Myanmar. The Sudan, the only campaign country without a written commitment, in March 2016 signed an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by its security forces. Information on progress is included in the country-specific sections of the present report. In the light of the upcoming final year of the campaign, my Special Representative, the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) and other stakeholders will increase their efforts to support the implementation of actions plans in place with government forces.

12. There was also strong engagement with a number of listed non-State armed groups. Engaging the plethora of non-State armed groups in existence is complex, and a multifaceted approach is necessary, taking into consideration the operational environments. Political dialogue and peace and ceasefire negotiations represent opportunities to reach out to parties to conflict regarding the protection of children. The early consideration of children’s protection needs in negotiations is vital, and engagement with parties to conflict on issues such as the release and separation of children can also provide a starting point for discussions. The United Nations engaged strongly during the reporting period with non-State armed groups, both inside and outside peace processes, from the Central African Republic, Colombia, Mali, Myanmar, the Philippines, South Sudan and the Sudan. Progress in this regard is also reflected in the country sections of the present report.

B. Reducing the impact of violent extremism on children

13. Children have been significantly affected by violent extremism in recent years and were often the direct targets of acts intended to cause maximum civilian casualties and terrorize communities, including by depicting children as “executioners” or forcing them to be suicide bombers. The distribution of violent images and videos on social media placed the plight of children caught in the middle of these conflicts at the forefront of the world’s collective consciousness. Acts of violent extremism are abhorrent and Member States have obligations to ensure that their responses comply with international law to ensure that civilians are protected from these groups. The Security Council has emphasized that efforts to counter extreme violence must be carried out in full compliance with international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law.

14. It is noted herein that some military responses against non-State armed groups perpetrating violent extremism raised challenges for the protection of children. In some cases, State-allied militia and vigilante groups have been mobilized and used children in support roles or even as combatants. Children caught in the middle of operations have been killed and maimed and their homes and schools destroyed, raising concerns about compliance with international law. When responding to violent extremism, Member States should ensure that their rules of engagement take into account that children may be living in areas under the control of armed groups or may be used on front lines following their abduction or recruitment.

15. As noted in my Plan of Action on Preventing Violent Extremism (see A/70/674), dated 24 December 2015, purely military and security approaches have not proved effective in addressing violent extremism. Violent extremism does not occur in a vacuum. It is necessary to identify and address its root causes and catalysts, such as protracted conflict without hope of resolution, political grievances, the alienation of communities, the lack of good governance, poverty and the lack of education and socioeconomic opportunities. Action is required by individual Member States, regional organizations and the broader international community, including by mobilizing resources, building resilience and strengthening protective environments for children. A new and compounding challenge is the regular use of propaganda on social media to recruit children and young people. I urge Member States to strengthen programmes to prevent the recruitment of children through social media.

16. The effective reintegration of children formerly associated with groups perpetrating violent extremism should be a priority. However, in Member States' response to violent extremism, children are often systematically treated as security threats rather than as victims, and are administratively detained or prosecuted for their alleged association. Depriving children of liberty following their separation is contrary not only to the best interests of the child, but also to the best interests of society as a whole. This approach further complicates efforts to reintegrate children, given that it separates them from their families and can also lead to the creation of community grievances.

C. Children displaced by armed conflict

17. Armed conflict has resulted in forced displacement, with an ever-growing number of people fleeing in search of protection. In the Syrian Arab Republic, more than 4.8 million people have fled the country and 6.5 million have been internally displaced since the beginning of the conflict; nearly half of them are children. In Nigeria, as at the end of December, more than 1.8 million people had been internally displaced, including in excess of 1 million children, and more than 200,000 were refugees in neighbouring countries. In South Sudan, some 200,000 civilians, mainly women and children, remained in United Nations sites for the protections of civilians at the end of 2015. In Gaza, 44,479 children remain displaced as a result of the escalation of hostilities in 2014.

18. Those figures represent a very small fraction of the total number of children displaced by conflict, many of whom are unaccompanied or separated from their families and caregivers during displacement. Those children are at a high risk and were victims of grave violations inside and around camps or other areas where they sought refuge. It is noted herein that, in contexts such as South Sudan, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic, parties to conflict took advantage of the vulnerability of displaced and refugee populations to recruit children and commit other crimes, including sexual violence and abduction.

19. States of origin, transit and destination have a responsibility to ensure appropriate protection for displaced children and to avoid aggravating their vulnerability, including through equal access to health care, high-quality education and psychosocial support. The failure to accord priority to the rights and needs of children affected by armed conflict will only increase the cost of rebuilding society once peace has been achieved.

20. Conflict prevention must be the goal of the international community. Sustainable peace is the only way to reduce conflict-related displacement, and increased efforts should be made to identify long-term solutions that will reduce and mitigate the root causes of conflict. In the short term, action is urgently required to alleviate the plight of the many children currently displaced by armed conflict. I encourage Member States to respect the rights of displaced and refugee children and to provide them with the necessary support services, keeping in mind the best interests of the child.

III. Information on grave violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

21. Children were disproportionately affected by the intensifying conflict in Afghanistan. The number of child casualties verified by the United Nations has risen by 14 per cent since 2014 and reached the highest number ever recorded. One in four civilian casualties in 2015 was a child.

22. The number of verified cases of recruitment and use of children more than doubled compared with 2014. A total of 116 cases (115 boys, 1 girl) were documented during the reporting period, of which 48 were verified. Thirteen verified recruitment cases were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces: five to the Afghan Local Police; five to the Afghan National Police; and three to the Afghan National Army. The majority of verified cases were attributed to the Taliban (20) and other armed groups (15). The Taliban continued to recruit children for combat and suicide attacks. There is continuing concern about allegations of cross-border recruitment of children and of use of religious schools in Afghanistan and Pakistan for child recruitment and military training by the Taliban and other armed groups (see S/2015/336, para. 21).

23. As at 31 December, the Ministry of Justice reported that 214 boys had been detained in juvenile rehabilitation centres on charges relating to national security, including association with armed groups. In addition, 166 detainees arrested as children were being held at the Parwan detention facility for security-related offences; 53 of those were under 18 years of age. I am concerned about children being held in a high-security facility for adults for extended periods without due process, and about reports of the consistent use of solitary confinement for children.

24. The United Nations verified 1,306 incidents resulting in 2,829 child casualties (733 killed, 2,096 injured) — an average of 53 children were killed or injured every week. Of the casualties, 42 per cent (339 killed, 850 injured) were attributed to armed groups, including the Taliban, groups affiliated with ISIL and Hezb-i-Islami, and 23 per cent (177 killed, 471 injured) to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and pro-Government militias. A total of 55 child casualties were attributed to international forces, the majority of which were caused by air strikes (21 killed, 20 injured), and cross-border shelling (3 killed, 9 injured). A third of child casualties (937) could not be attributed to a specific party. The leading causes of child casualties remained ground engagements (55 per cent), improvised explosive device attacks (19 per cent) and explosive remnants of war (13 per cent). The number of casualties relating to air strikes by Afghan and international forces almost doubled in 2015.

25. The United Nations received 11 reports of sexual violence, affecting nine boys and six girls. One incident involving a boy recruited and sexually abused by the Taliban in the northern region was verified. Concerns remain regarding the cultural practice of bachah-bazi (“dancing boys”), which involves the sexual exploitation of boys by men in power, including Afghan National Defence and Security Forces commanders.

26. Attacks on schools and protected personnel continued to be verified, including the killing, injury and abduction of education personnel. Of 132 verified incidents, 82 were attributed to the Taliban, 13 to ISIL-affiliated groups, 11 to undetermined armed groups, 1 to Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) and 23 to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and pro-Government militias; 2 incidents could not be attributed to any party. The emergence of ISIL-affiliated groups in the east had an impact on access to education and led to the closure of 68 schools, affecting more than 48,751 children in Nangarhar Province.

27. Verified attacks on hospitals and health personnel (125) significantly increased compared with 2014. In the attacks, at least 63 health-care personnel, including vaccinators, were killed or injured, 66 abducted and 64 intimidated and assaulted. A total of 75 incidents were attributed to the Taliban; 14 to ISIL-affiliated groups; 1 to TTP; 19 to undetermined armed groups; 14 to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and pro-Government militias; and 1 to international forces. For example, 49 medical staff were killed or injured in an air strike by international forces on the Médecins sans frontières hospital in Kunduz on 3 October.

28. In a positive development, in May, the Government signed the Safe Schools Declaration, aimed at protecting education facilities from military use during conflict. The use of schools by parties to the conflict continued, however, with 24 cases attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and 11 to armed groups (Taliban (4), ISIL-affiliated group (7)). The United Nations also verified 10 incidents of military use of hospitals.

29. The verified number of children abducted more than tripled compared with 2014. A total of 92 children (74 boys, 4 girls and 14 of unknown sex) were abducted in 23 incidents, including incidents linked to the killing of seven children and sexual violence against a child. The abductions of 69 children were attributed to the Taliban (two killed), 3 to ISIL-affiliated groups (all killed) and 12 to undetermined armed groups. An incident involving eight children remains unattributed.

30. The United Nations received reports of 93 incidents of denial of humanitarian access (75 verified). Humanitarian personnel were abducted (100), killed (9) and threatened and intimidated (14 incidents), while five humanitarian convoys were attacked. Of the verified incidents, 76 (78 per cent) were attributed to armed groups, including the Taliban, and 10 to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and pro-Government militias, while 7 cases could not be attributed.

31. The United Nations welcomes the measures taken by the Government in meeting its obligations under the action plan, including criminalizing underage recruitment by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, the endorsement of national age assessment guidelines and the inauguration of three new child protection units within Afghan National Police recruitment centres, bringing the total to seven. Furthermore, the Ministry of Justice granted the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan unimpeded access to all juvenile rehabilitation centres.

32. In February 2016, my Special Representative visited Afghanistan. She commended the strong commitment of the Government and the important progress made to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, and discussed gaps and challenges to be addressed. Critical elements are the nationwide expansion of child protection units in Afghan National Police recruitment centres, the implementation of national age assessment guidelines in all Afghan National Defence and Security Forces recruitment and a general prohibition on child recruitment and use in the Child Law. I am concerned, however, about the lack of oversight mechanisms for Afghan Local Police recruitment, especially in the light of allegations of informal recruitment of children. Reintegration programmes and alternatives for children are also important, given that poverty is a driver of recruitment. Regarding the deprivation of liberty of children on charges relating to national security, I urge the Government to consider alternatives to detention and ensure that children are always treated in accordance with their best interests and juvenile justice standards.

33. Further analysis of the six grave violations is provided in my country report on children and armed conflict in Afghanistan, issued on 15 May 2015 (S/2015/336). The Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict adopted its conclusions on Afghanistan in February 2016, and I urge all parties to take action to address the recommendations set out therein.

Central African Republic

34. There were significant political developments in the Central African Republic in 2015, including the holding of the Bangui Forum on National Reconciliation in May, a constitutional referendum in November and the first round of presidential elections in December. A new outbreak of violence erupted in September between former Séléka elements, anti-balaka elements and members of the former Central African military, which critically affected children. A detailed account of the effects of armed conflict in the country is available in my recent report to the Security Council, which covers the period from January 2011 to December 2015 (S/2016/133).

35. The United Nations documented 40 cases of child recruitment and use, more than half of which were by LRA (21) and over a quarter by the former Séléka faction, Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) (13). Children were used as combatants, messengers, informants and cooks. Girls were also used as sex slaves. In addition, the United Nations documented the presence of an undetermined number of children manning checkpoints and barricades alongside armed individuals reportedly sympathetic or affiliated to anti-balaka and former Séléka elements, when violence erupted in Bangui in September. On several occasions, suspected anti-balaka elements used children as shields as they fired at United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic (MINUSCA) forces. Furthermore, the military leader of a former Séléka faction, Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique, acknowledged having 43 children in his group. The United Nations engaged with him for their release, but without further cooperation.

36. There was a fall in the number of documented child casualties compared with 2014, with 62 children killed and 185 maimed, mostly during the violence in September sparked by the beheading of a 16-year-old boy. The ensuing violence claimed the lives of 28 children and injured 31. Anti-balaka elements were responsible for killing 28 children and former Séléka factions for 8, while 26 children died in crossfire or in incidents involving explosive remnants of war.

37. Sexual violence remained prevalent, with 70 cases documented, although the number of verified cases significantly decreased compared with 2014. Incidents were mainly attributed to former Séléka factions, in particular UPC, but also to anti-balaka elements and armed individuals of Fulani origin. A small number of incidents were reported to the police, but did not result in investigation or prosecution.

38. In the context of already fragile education and health-care systems, 19 attacks on schools and 12 on hospitals were verified, the majority by anti-balaka and former Séléka elements (UPC and Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique factions). A nurse was killed in Bambari in March by anti-balaka elements who had accused her of spying. Two suspects were arrested and handed over to the police, but no action had been taken as at the time of writing (March 2016). Furthermore, 16 schools were used for military purposes, 14 of them by former Séléka factions. In a positive development, the Government signed the Safe Schools Declaration.

39. A total of 52 children were verified as having been abducted: 25 by LRA, 15 by anti-balaka elements and the remainder by unidentified armed men. More allegations involving LRA were received but could not be verified. While the children abducted by LRA were used as porters or looters or for sexual purposes, abductions by anti-balaka elements were mainly for ransom.

40. Humanitarian access remained a major concern, with 140 verified incidents affecting humanitarians. Unidentified armed individuals or alleged affiliates of anti-balaka and former Séléka elements, often for financial gain, systematically impeded the provision of humanitarian assistance.

41. The United Nations continued to engage with some former Séléka factions, local anti-balaka commanders and other armed groups. That interaction culminated with the signing of an agreement by 10 armed groups on 5 May, on the margins of the Bangui Forum on National Reconciliation, to end and prevent the recruitment and use of, and other grave violations against, children. Since the agreement was signed, 1,446 children have been separated from armed groups and space has opened for the United Nations to discuss commitments to end grave violations, especially with a number of the former Séléka factions. With regard to the anti-balaka, the United Nations engaged with local commanders, which led to the separation of children.

42. In total, 2,679 children were separated from armed groups: almost 89 per cent from anti-balaka elements and 10 per cent from former Séléka elements. UNICEF and its partners developed community-based approaches to reintegrate the children.

43. Allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse against children by MINUSCA military and police personnel were recorded, including four from the Democratic Republic of the Congo, one each from Burundi, the Congo, Gabon and Morocco and two by unknown perpetrators. As at December, investigations were continuing regarding seven allegations, with one involving personnel from Morocco and one involving personnel from the Democratic Republic of the Congo found to be unsubstantiated. Three allegations were also reported against members of the Sangaris force and contingents of the European Union-led peacekeeping force in the Central African Republic. Furthermore, many new allegations involving personnel of the Sangaris force and MINUSCA were received in 2016 and were being investigated at the time of writing (March 2016).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

44. The security situation in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo (Ituri, North Kivu and Tanganyika) remained volatile in 2015 and was marked by military operations by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo — FARDC) against the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR), the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), the Forces de résistance patriotiques en Ituri (FRPI) and other armed groups. The situation also deteriorated owing to the activities of armed groups and intercommunal clashes. The United Nations verified 2,549 violations against children, a significant increase compared with 2014. Nearly 40 per cent were attributed to FDLR. Children took the opportunity of military operations to escape from armed groups, resulting in a spike in the number of separated children.

45. The United Nations verified the new recruitment of 488 children (26 girls), of whom 30 per cent were under 15 years of age when recruited. This is more than twice the number of documented cases in 2014. Of the recruitment and use, 89 per cent occurred in North Kivu, and almost half of the children were recruited by FDLR (219), followed by Raia Mutomboki (89), Nyatura (69) and other groups (111). In July, 10 boys who had been recruited in 2013 and 2014 were separated from FARDC and reported that they had participated in military operations in North Kivu in the year of their recruitment. The United Nations engaged with FARDC, which indicated that it had suspended the suspected commanding officers and initiated an investigation, which was continuing at the time of writing (March 2016).

46. FARDC handed over 139, and the Congolese National Police 8, children formerly associated with armed groups to the United Nations. Ten other children were handed over after they had been detained by FARDC, notwithstanding the two government directives prohibiting the holding of children for alleged association with armed groups. Some had been detained for a few months, but one boy had allegedly been detained for more than a year. At the time of writing (March 2016), the United Nations had identified at least 22 children who were being held without charge in Angenga prison after being encountered in military operations.

47. At least 80 children were killed and 56 maimed, with most incidents occurring in North Kivu and Ituri. ADF (20), FRPI (19) and FDLR (14) were the main perpetrators among armed groups. A total of 29 children were killed and maimed by FARDC and 9 by the Congolese National Police. Fourteen casualties were attributed to military operations or clashes among armed groups and nine were the result of explosive remnants of war.

48. The United Nations verified 254 child victims of sexual violence. Armed groups were responsible for the majority of incidents, in particular FRPI (67), Raia Mutomboki (33) and Mayi Mayi Simba (27). FARDC was responsible for 68 cases, the Congolese National Police for 19 and the National Intelligence Agency for 2. A total of 42 FARDC and 11 Congolese National Police elements were arrested following the incidents.

49. Twenty-six attacks on schools (22) and hospitals (4) were verified. The Twa self-defence group destroyed 10 schools in Tanganyika Province in clashes with the Luba. The remaining attacks were perpetrated by Nyatura (4), FDLR (2) and other armed groups (5). Regarding hospitals, ADF was responsible for two attacks and LRA and FDLR for one each. Most notably, an attack by ADF on Eringeti hospital in Beni territory on 29 November resulted in at least 31 casualties.

50. Notwithstanding a directive issued in 2013 by the Ministry of Defence prohibiting the practice of military use of schools, 20 schools were used by FARDC. Following advocacy by the United Nations, however, 13 were vacated. Ten schools were also used by armed groups.

51. A total of 195 reports of abductions were received. Sixty-eight verified cases were attributed mainly to Raia Mutomboki, FRPI and ADF. Girls were reported to have been raped while in captivity, and some 40 per cent of the children are still missing. LRA continued to abduct children; 102 new reports were received in 2015.

52. Two cases of denial of humanitarian access by Raia Mutomboki were documented in Shabunda territory (South Kivu). In addition, at least 127 incidents of intimidation of and direct attacks on humanitarian organizations and staff were recorded in North Kivu.

53. Military pressure and radio messages encouraging children to escape contributed to 2,045 children being separated from armed groups, which is twice the number separated in the previous year. Children were separated from FDLR (891), but also from Raia Mutomboki, Nyatura, FRPI, Nduma Defence of Congo/Cheka and other armed groups. Ten boys were also separated from FARDC in 2015. Six Burundian boys allegedly recruited in a refugee camp in Rwanda were separated. A report released by the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) in November<sup>2</sup> demonstrated the plight of girls associated with armed groups. In 257 cases, children associated with armed groups were separated from FARDC bases (Kitona and Kamina) far from where they had been encountered, which delayed and complicated family reunification. In response, the United Nations advocated adherence to agreed principles to separate children where they are encountered by FARDC.

54. Throughout 2015, the Government maintained its commitment to implementing the action plan signed with the United Nations in 2012, including through the work of the President's personal adviser on sexual violence and child recruitment. In September, the Minister of Defence endorsed a road map outlining pending activities for the full implementation of the action plan. To accelerate the process, three new provincial joint technical working groups were established. The United Nations provided technical support and screened more than 17,000 FARDC troops. However, it remains a concern that FARDC may not be able to identify minors without assistance, as was the case with the children identified by the United Nations in 2015. It is important that, as part of the implementation of the road map, the standard operating procedure on age assessment, drafted in August, be adopted and implemented country-wide.

55. Efforts continued by the Government to hold the perpetrators of grave violations accountable. At least 68 individuals, including high-ranking officers of FARDC and the Congolese National Police, were arrested, with 37 receiving sentences of up to 20 years' imprisonment for sexual violence against girls. Moreover, in August, an FARDC officer was arrested for the alleged recruitment and use of children. Seven leaders of armed groups were arrested on similar charges, including the former FRPI leader, Justin Matata Wanaloki, alias "Cobra Matata".

56. I encourage the Government to continue its efforts to implement the action plan by institutionalizing procedures, adopting and disseminating the standard operating procedure on age verification assessment and sustaining its commitment to combating impunity.

57. Allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse of children involving members of MONUSCO military contingents from South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania were being investigated at the time of writing (March 2016). Two other incidents involving military personnel from Benin and South Africa were substantiated.

Iraq

58. Military operations against ISIL intensified, especially in the governorates of Anbar, Baghdad, Kirkuk, Ninawa and Salah al-Din. The governorates of Baghdad and Diyala witnessed the main concentration of ISIL attacks. The impact on civilians and civilian infrastructure was devastating. My report on children and armed conflict in Iraq (S/2015/852) provides information on the period from January 2011 to June 2015. Limited access, especially with the intensification of conflict, and fear of retaliation impeded the monitoring and reporting of grave violations. The figures presented below are considered to be underreported.

59. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 37 children (36 boys and 1 girl). Of the cases, 19 were attributed to ISIL (including 18 boys from Halabjah, Sulaymaniyah governorate), 6 to the Kurdish Workers Party and other Kurdish armed groups and 12 to groups under the umbrella of the popular mobilization forces. Cases of child recruitment by the popular mobilization forces, which since April 2015 have been under the authority of the Prime Minister, included the coercion of eight boys to go to a military training camp and the recruitment of four boys who were killed while fighting ISIL in Bayji, Salah al-Din governorate. Another 174 incidents of child recruitment (169 by ISIL, 3 by the Kurdish Workers Party and 2 by the popular mobilization forces) were reported but could not be verified. Recruitment by ISIL was reported in the Anbar and Ninawa governorates, and child soldiers were portrayed in social media, including as executioners.

60. As at December, at least 314 children (256 boys and 58 girls), including 23 in the Kurdistan Region of Iraq, remained in detention on charges under the Anti-Terrorism Law (2005), including for alleged association with armed groups.

61. The killing and maiming of children remained the most reported violation. The United Nations recorded 268 incidents, resulting in 809 child casualties (338 killed and 471 injured). Of those incidents, 152 were verified, including the killing of 203 children (125 boys, 32 girls and 46 of unknown sex) and injury of 314 (182 boys, 96 girls and 36 of unknown sex). The majority (74 per cent) of child casualties were recorded in the second half of 2015, as military operations intensified in the Anbar, Ninawa and Salah al-Din governorates. A total of 63 per cent of casualties occurred during military operations and engagements involving ISIL, the Iraqi security forces, including the popular mobilization forces and the Peshmerga, tribal elements and the international coalition against ISIL. There were 76 recorded improvised explosive device attacks targeting public areas and Iraqi security personnel.

62. The United Nations received reports of sexual violence against girls, in particular against members of the Yezidi community and other minority groups, in ISIL-controlled areas. Specific cases of rape and sexual violence remained difficult to verify, however.

63. The United Nations documented 90 incidents of attacks on schools and education personnel (68 verified). The majority (62) resulted from continuing fighting in Anbar, and schools were targeted by improvised explosive devices in three incidents in Baghdad and Diyala. Teachers and students were directly targeted in 24 incidents. On 9 December, ISIL tortured and killed a female teacher in Ninawa for refusing to use the ISIL curriculum. Three schools in the governorates of Anbar and Salah al-Din were used for military purposes (two by ISIL and one by Iraqi security forces).

64. Ten attacks on health facilities were reported, of which seven were attributed to air strikes in Anbar. In addition, 26 attacks on medical personnel were recorded, with 18 staff killed, 10 abducted and 2 injured in the governorates of Baghdad, Diyala, Ninawa and Salah al-Din.

65. The United Nations received many reports of abduction of children, primarily by ISIL. In two incidents in June and September, more than 1,000 children were reportedly abducted by ISIL from Mosul district. In another nine incidents, 12 children (10 boys and 2 girls) were allegedly abducted by unknown perpetrators owing to family affiliations.

66. Incidents were documented of internally displaced persons being prevented from fleeing conflict to access safety and basic services. For example, in December, 1,600 internally displaced persons from Anbar were stopped from crossing the Bzeibiz bridge between Anbar and Baghdad and some were abducted, reportedly by elements of the popular mobilization forces.

67. In collaboration with the United Nations, the Kurdistan Regional Government established a task force on justice for children to follow up on children in conflict with the law, including those detained on charges relating to national security. I welcome the efforts by the Government to identify preventive measures to counter child recruitment by ISIL, but am concerned about continued reports of recruitment and use of children by the popular mobilization forces, which now fall under the Government's responsibility. I urge the Government to put in place age verification and screening, and to criminalize and ensure accountability for child recruitment and use.

Israel and State of Palestine

68. In 2015, the situation was marked by heightened tensions that translated into widespread violence, especially in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, in the second half of the year. The detrimental impact of grave violations and an increasingly violent and oppressive environment continued to mark the lives of children. Palestinian and Israeli children were affected by the prevailing situation of military occupation, conflict and the blockade.

69. In 2015, 30 Palestinian children (25 boys and 5 girls) were killed and at least 1,735 injured (1,687 boys and 48 girls), predominantly in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

70. A total of 27 Palestinian children (23 boys and 4 girls) were killed in the West Bank, almost double the number killed in 2014. Most of the killings took place in the fourth quarter of 2015. Twenty-five deaths were attributed to Israeli forces, one to Israeli settlers and one to both Israeli forces and settlers. The number of Palestinian children injured also increased, predominantly as a result of clashes with Israeli forces and military-led operations. In the fourth quarter of 2015, 121 stabbing attacks against Israelis were carried out by Palestinians, including minors. From October to December, 14 Palestinian children involved in or suspected of stabbing attacks were shot dead by Israeli forces. I have repeatedly condemned the stabbings and other attacks. In addition, a number of the incidents raise concerns about the excessive use of force and unlawful killing, given that there are indications that the children posed no imminent or immediate threat to life that would justify the use of lethal force. For example, on 25 October, a 17-year-old girl was stopped at a checkpoint in Hebron, searched and shot at least five times. The Israeli authorities alleged that she had attempted to stab a police officer, yet an eyewitness stated that she had held her hands in the air and had posed no threat.

71. Violence by Israeli settlers and related incidents involving Israeli forces resulted in the injury of 54 Palestinian children (45 boys and 9 girls), with 20 cases of direct injury by settlers. An 18-month-old Palestinian boy was killed by Israeli settlers in an arson attack on 31 July that also claimed the lives of his parents and seriously injured his 4-year-old brother. Two Israelis, including a minor, were charged in relation to the crime.

72. A total of 13 Israeli children (9 boys and 4 girls) were injured by Palestinians. An Israeli girl who had sustained critical injuries in 2013 in a car accident involving stone-throwing by Palestinians died of complications. Furthermore, it was reported that a 17-year-old Israeli male had been shot dead in November.

73. In Gaza, three Palestinian children were killed by Israeli forces. Two boys were killed near the fence with Israel and one girl was killed in an air strike. In addition, 65 boys were injured, predominantly in the access-restricted areas along the fence with Israel and at sea.

74. Limited information is available about the recruitment or use of children. The Izz el-Deen al-Qassam Brigades reportedly ran a military camp for 25,000 children and young people between 15 and 21 years of age in Gaza from 25 July to 5 August. On 30 August, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine reportedly held a graduation ceremony during a camp for girls, which included training in weapons.

75. An increased number of Palestinian children were arrested and detained by Israeli forces and prosecuted by juvenile military courts in the West Bank. In East Jerusalem, 860 Palestinian children were arrested, including 136 between 7 and 11 years of age, under the age of criminal responsibility. The monthly average number of children held in Israeli custody, according to the Israel Prison Service, increased by 15 per cent compared with 2014. A worrisome development was the recommencement of administrative detention of children, which had not been used in East Jerusalem since 2000 and elsewhere in the West Bank since 2011. Between October and December, six children were placed in administrative detention by the Israeli authorities. The United Nations and partners continued to document cases of ill-treatment of children by Israeli forces during their arrest and detention in the West Bank and East Jerusalem.

76. In the West Bank, attacks on schools and protected personnel, and a pervasive environment of violence, harassment and intimidation, continued to have an impact on children's access to education. The United Nations documented 283 incidents relating to education, including 96 cases of schools coming under fire during military-led operations and clashes, 46 attacks and threats of violence against students and teachers by Israeli security forces and settlers, and 62 instances of interference with education owing to the closure of schools or the arrest and detention of staff and students. In Gaza, of the 262 schools and 274 kindergartens damaged or destroyed during the hostilities in 2014, 96 per cent of non-United Nations schools, all United Nations schools and 65 per cent of kindergartens have been repaired or rebuilt through the assistance of humanitarian organizations and donors.

77. Ten incidents of interference with health care were documented in the West Bank, with half involving the Makassed hospital in East Jerusalem. Incidents included the forced closure of clinics, search-and-arrest operations and Israeli security forces entering hospitals to obtain files and interrogate medical staff, resulting in the disruption of medical services. In addition, the Palestine Red Crescent Society reported that more than 131 paramedics and volunteers had been wounded and 76 ambulances damaged while undertaking their work in the West Bank and that access by medical teams to sick and wounded persons had been denied or delayed by Israeli security forces on 70 occasions.

78. In my previous report (A/69/926-S/2015/409), I urged Israel to take concrete and immediate steps to protect children, schools and hospitals, in particular by ensuring accountability for alleged violations. Of the 190 cases of alleged violations of international humanitarian law during the hostilities in Gaza in 2014 referred to the Israeli Defense Forces Fact-Finding Assessments Mechanism, the Israeli Military Advocate General has indicted three soldiers for looting and theft. Investigations into numerous incidents, including the killing of four children on a beach in Gaza City on 16 July 2014, were closed without criminal or disciplinary proceedings.

79. I am concerned that actions have been taken by the Government of Israel in 2015 that further restrict the rights of Palestinians, including children. For example, the Knesset passed temporary amendments to the Penal Code to increase the maximum sentence for throwing stones to 20 years, and the State Prosecutor directed that all prosecutors should seek the detention of suspects charged with stone-throwing until the end of legal proceedings. I also reiterate my concerns regarding the practice of punitive demolitions of the homes of Palestinians accused of attacking Israelis, which have rendered their families and neighbours, including children, homeless.

Lebanon

80. Children were affected by intensified clashes in the Bekaa governorate and the Ein el-Hillweh Palestine refugee camp, bombings in Tripoli and Beirut and violence along the border with the Syrian Arab Republic and the Blue Line with Israel.

81. The United Nations continued to document cases of recruitment and use of children by local and foreign armed groups, including of boys between 15 and 17 years of age who were sent to the Syrian Arab Republic. The majority of incidents were related to the Nusrah Front; however, children were reportedly also recruited by other armed groups, including Hizbullah, supporting the Syrian government forces. Furthermore, the United Nations documented the recruitment and use of boys and girls between 15 and 17 years of age by Palestinian armed factions and other armed groups within Lebanon. Reportedly, boys were used to man checkpoints or as guards, while girls were used in support roles.

82. As noted in my previous report (A/69-926-S/2015/409), I am concerned that children are held in pretrial detention under military jurisdiction on charges relating to national security. Fifteen boys (between 14 and 17 years of age at the time of their arrest) were still detained as at the end of 2015.

83. The United Nations verified 14 cases of child casualties relating to explosive remnants of war in southern Lebanon (2 killed, 9 injured), stray bullets during Hizbullah mourning ceremonies (1 killed, 1 injured) and crossfire (1 injured).

84. During violence between armed factions in the Ein el-Hillweh refugee camp in August, six United Nations schools and two medical facilities were damaged by crossfire and four United Nations schools were used by armed elements.

85. I commend the Government on its intensified efforts to implement the workplan to prevent and respond to the association of children with armed violence in Lebanon, signed in August 2014. I once again urge Lebanon to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, which it signed in 2002.

Libya

86. Protracted fighting continued in Benghazi, and sporadic armed clashes occurred in Ajdabiya, Darnah, Kufrah, Sabha, Sirte, Tripoli and the oil crescent. Groups pledging allegiance to ISIL expanded and gained territory in central Libya.

Access for monitoring continued to be restricted by insecurity, and United Nations international staff were located outside the country.

87. The recruitment and use of children by armed groups was reported. For example, groups affiliated with ISIL reportedly operated training camps south of Sirte, with a graduation ceremony for 85 children under 16 years of age reportedly held in December. It has been reported that children have been exposed to sexual violence during their association with armed groups.

88. At least 60 children were reportedly casualties of indiscriminate shelling of residential areas, air strikes, suicide bombings and crossfire, the majority in Benghazi. Summary executions of children were also reported, with groups affiliated with ISIL allegedly beheading a 17-year-old boy in Hawarah in May.

89. In Benghazi, 40 schools were reportedly damaged or destroyed, including through indiscriminate shelling. The United Nations also documented a case of military use of a school as a detention facility by the Darnah Mujahideen Shura Council. Attacks on hospitals and medical personnel continued. The Benghazi medical centre was shelled at least four times, and four medical personnel were reportedly killed on duty in an ambulance on 6 May. The abduction and killing of medical personnel by armed groups, including groups affiliated to Operation Karamah, was documented in Ajdabiya, Benghazi and Darnah.

90. In the context of the breakdown of law and order, there was a rise in the abduction of children by armed groups, militias and criminal organizations. For example, the body of a 16-year-old boy, reportedly abducted by militias affiliated with Operation Karamah, was found in Benghazi in December.

91. In June, an armed group believed to belong to the Magarha tribe abducted seven staff of a Libyan humanitarian organization; the whereabouts of the abductees remains unknown.

92. The United Nations engaged with the Constitution Drafting Assembly to include guarantees of children's rights in the draft constitution. I welcome the decision of the Zintan Municipal Council of February 2016 to release and reintegrate child soldiers, and look forward to its implementation with the support of UNICEF.

Mali

93. Notwithstanding the peace accord signed by the Government, the Platform coalition of armed groups and the Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad in May and June, clashes between the parties in northern Mali continued in the middle of 2015. The period was also marked by an increase in violent extremist and asymmetric attacks. In total, 109 verified and 128 unverified grave violations were reported.

94. A total of 127 cases of recruitment and use of children by armed groups were received, with 30 verified. In addition, 27 cases of recruitment and use of children by the Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés were verified in March 2016 in Ineggar, Gao region, and 47 other alleged cases were received. As at 31 December, of the 32 children arrested on security charges, 4 remained in detention in Bamako and Koulikoro. The United Nations continued to collaborate with the Malian authorities to ensure the implementation of the handover protocol signed in 2013. In addition, it documented cases of 14 children held by armed groups.

95. The United Nations verified the killing of 12 children and the maiming of 39 during rocket attacks and crossfire, as well as by improvised explosive device attacks and explosive remnants of war. While the identification of the perpetrators was not always possible, CMA was reportedly involved in at least two attacks. In one incident, two boys were lynched, dismembered and burned by a mob on suspicion of being associated with armed groups and participating in an attack.

96. A total of 22 cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children were verified, comprising 3 by the Malian defence and security forces, 1 by the Platform and 18 by unknown perpetrators.

97. Four attacks and threats of attacks on schools and protected personnel were verified, including one by CMA and one by the Front de libération du Macina.<sup>3</sup> Following the killing of a village leader by the latter group in Dogo, Mopti region, reportedly for seeking the authorities' support after he had been told to close secular schools, the group threatened teachers in six local communes, leading to the closure of 93 schools. The number of schools used for military purposes by armed groups had dropped from 20 in 2014 to 7 by December.

98. The operational environment remained extremely volatile and targeted attacks against humanitarian personnel and facilities contributed to the disruption of the delivery of assistance. In a verified incident, CMA forced an international medical non-governmental organization supporting two health centres in the Timbuktu region to withdraw.

99. In the light of increasing threats to education, the United Nations initiated a dialogue with the Ministry of Education on the protection of schools. Efforts to engage CMA on ending and preventing grave violations against children continued and steps were taken to develop an action plan with the Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad. In October, the United Nations also assisted the Malian authorities in developing a separation and reintegration strategy for children. I encourage the Malian authorities and stakeholders involved in the implementation of the peace agreement to dedicate attention to the rights and specific needs of children.

Myanmar

100. Conflict continued in Kachin and Shan States and the south-east between government armed forces (Tatmadaw) and armed groups. On 15 October, the Government and eight armed groups, including four listed parties, signed a nationwide ceasefire agreement.

101. The United Nations received reports of 217 cases of recruitment, of which 95 were verified. Five verified incidents took place in 2015, with three attributed to the Tatmadaw (those recruited were subsequently released) and two to the Kachin Independence Army. Twenty-six incidents verified in 2015 had taken place in 2014. Furthermore, the United Nations received seven reports of the use of children in support functions by the Tatmadaw, including two verified cases in Rakhine State. The Government indicated that action had been taken against 382 military personnel, including 73 officers, for failing to adhere to recruitment procedures. A civilian was also sentenced to a year's imprisonment for aiding underage recruitment. Credible information indicates that children were recruited and used by armed groups; however, five reported incidents could not be verified owing to limited access to the areas. Reports of recruitment involved the Karen National Liberation Army, the Kachin Independence Army, the Shan State Army-South and the Ta'ang National Liberation Army in Kachin, Kayin and Shan States.

102. The United Nations documented three children held in military detention. Two were released after notification to the Tatmadaw and the other was returned to his regiment pending age verification. In addition, three children were reportedly detained at the battalion level and subsequently discharged.

103. The United Nations documented 37 incidents of killing and maiming (25 killed and 50 injured), of which 23 were verified and which resulted in the killing of 15 children and injury of 37. More than half of the verified cases were related to landmines and explosive remnants of war (10 killed and 24 injured).

104. The United Nations verified three cases of sexual violence against girls, aged between 5 and 10 years, by Tatmadaw soldiers. In a grievous case, an 8-year-old girl was raped by a soldier and died after being taken to hospital. The perpetrators were court-martialled for being absent from duty and intoxicated, and two were convicted of rape by civilian courts.

105. The United Nations received 11 reports of attacks on schools. Three verified incidents were attributed to the Tatmadaw, the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army and an unknown armed group. Six verified cases of military use of schools were attributed to the Tatmadaw.

106. Five incidents of abduction were verified, with three leading to the disappearance of 11 children, which were attributed to the Tatmadaw, and two incidents involving three children were attributed to the Kachin Independence Army. Additional reports of abduction by armed groups in Kachin, northern Shan and Rakhine States, including for recruitment and use, could not be verified owing to access restrictions.

107. The United Nations received two reports of humanitarian personnel being caught in crossfire during engagement between the Tatmadaw and armed groups. Humanitarian access to areas outside government control in Kachin and Shan States was reduced compared with 2014, owing to limited government authorization.

108. Positive steps continued to be taken by the Government to advance the implementation of the joint action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Tatmadaw, including training on age assessment in recruitment centres, increased access to military battalions and units for monitoring missions and monthly case review meetings with the United Nations for the verification of suspected child recruits. In 2015, 146 former child soldiers, including 28 still under 18 years of age, were released and reintegrated into their families and communities.

109. My Special Representative visited Myanmar in July. While acknowledging the progress made, she noted that gaps remained in the systematic prevention of and accountability for the recruitment and use of children. Criminalizing recruitment and use by both military personnel and civilians is critical. The passage of the revised Child Law, including a chapter on children and armed conflict and a corresponding penalties section, would be highly important. The enforcement of existing accountability mechanisms also needs to be strengthened for all grave violations, including through legal clarity to ensure consistency in decisions, improved witness protection and follow-up of cases in civilian courts.

110. In September, Myanmar signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. I strongly encourage its ratification.

111. My Special Representative engaged in dialogue with three armed groups listed in the annexes to the present report, to encourage the development of action plans to address the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations. The United Nations has pursued further dialogue with these groups, and one listed party, the Karenni National Progressive Party/Karenni Army, is ready to sign an action plan. I urge the Government to allow the signing and implementation of action plans with listed armed groups, which is a critical component of its commitment to end the recruitment and use of children throughout Myanmar, in line with its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the commitment made by signing the Optional Protocol.

Somalia

112. The period saw increased attacks by Al-Shabaab on the Somali security forces, government officials and the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), in addition to inter-clan clashes. In July, AMISOM and the Somali National Army resumed their offensive against Al-Shabaab. The national forces of Ethiopia and Kenya also conducted military operations. The situation resulted in a spike in the number of grave violations against children, with an increase of almost 50 per cent compared with 2014.

113. The recruitment and use of 903 children was documented, with 60 per cent of the cases (555) attributed to Al-Shabaab. In December, around 150 children were reportedly abducted for recruitment purposes from madrasas by Al-Shabaab in the Bay region. Of those cases, 26 (all boys) were verified by the United Nations. The Somali National Army also recruited a high number of children (218), who were used for various tasks, such as manning checkpoints. Recruitment was also attributed to clan militias (68), Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (40) and Galmudug forces (17).

114. An increase in the detention of children for association with armed groups was documented, with 365 cases. The vast majority of children were detained by the Somali National Army (346), but also by Jubaland forces (11), Galmudug forces (6) and Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (2). Twenty-four boys were detained by AMISOM and later released. In a positive development, following engagement and advocacy by the United Nations, 79 children formerly associated with Al-Shabaab who had been held in rehabilitation centres were handed over to United Nations-supported non-governmental organization partners. At the time of writing (March 2016), however, dozens of children were reported to have taken part in an Al-Shabaab attack on Puntland and Galmudug and had been detained by the regional authorities.

115. A total of 474 incidents of killing and maiming were documented, affecting 753 children, and attributed to unknown armed elements (259), the Somali National Army (144), Al-Shabaab (138), clan militias (123), AMISOM (60), Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (3) and other regional forces (8). Most incidents were related to indiscriminate gunfire or improvised explosive devices. The United Nations also documented six cases of children being executed by Al-Shabaab. Most incidents attributed to AMISOM were caused by indiscriminate shooting in response to attacks by Al-Shabaab and during Operation Juba Corridor. For example, eight children were killed in two incidents in Marka district, Shabelle Hoose region, in July. In addition, 18 children were killed on 21 July in an air strike on a madrasa in Baardheere district.

116. The United Nations documented 164 incidents of sexual violence affecting 174 children, with the majority committed by clan militias (56), unknown armed elements (54), the Somali National Army (43), Al-Shabaab (15) and Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama‘a and AMISOM (2 each). Eighteen cases of forced marriage by parties to conflict were also documented.

117. Attacks on 24 schools and five hospitals were documented. Al-Shabaab committed 15 attacks on schools, the Somali National Army and allied militias were responsible for 4 attacks, clan militias and unknown armed elements were responsible for 2 each and unidentified air forces were responsible for 1 attack, as mentioned above. Attacks on hospitals were committed by AMISOM (two) and Al-Shabaab, clan militias and the Somali National Army (one each). The attacks by AMISOM involved the looting of medicines. In addition, two schools were used by the Somali National Army, including one in the Shabelle Hoose region, which was vacated following engagement by the United Nations.

118. A pattern of abduction was observed. Numbers spiked compared with 2014. A total of 458 boys and 65 girls were abducted, with nearly 95 per cent by Al-Shabaab (492), but also by clan militias (14). Abductions were often used as a tactic for recruitment, but also for the purpose of sexual violence, including forced marriage. For example, parents reported the abduction of 45 children by Al-Shabaab from a madrasa in the Juba Dhexe region in August.

119. Twelve incidents of denial of humanitarian access by clan militias (seven), the Somali National Army (three), Al-Shabaab and unknown armed elements were reported. Humanitarian access to children remained extremely challenging and United Nations staff were targeted. Seventeen humanitarian staff were killed in 2015, including four UNICEF staff in a suicide attack by Al-Shabaab.

120. Regarding separation, UNICEF supported the reintegration of 749 children through community-based programmes. The United Nations also provided technical support to the Child Protection Unit of the Somali National Army. Joint screening exercises were conducted and 36 children were separated from militias in Kismaayo, as part of a vetting process before their integration into the Somali National Army. Efforts to provide the separated children with assistance were continuing at the time of writing (March 2016). In another positive development, the Government ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child on 1 October. I am, however, particularly concerned by the continuing recruitment and use of children and high numbers of Somali National Army child detainees. I call upon the Government to immediately separate all children from the Somali National Army in adherence with the action plan signed with the United Nations in 2012 and to comply with international juvenile justice standards regarding detention.

121. The United Nations has engaged with AMISOM on the alarming numbers of killing and maiming of children committed by its forces. I urge the African Union and the troop-contributing countries to take all measures necessary to prevent violations and ensure the protection of children, as well as ensure accountability by undertaking prompt and independent investigations.

South Sudan

122. Conflict continued throughout the country, with intense clashes between the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Opposition (SPLM/A in Opposition) and their allied militias, primarily in Unity and Upper Nile States. A peace agreement was signed in August, but fighting continued, with mass displacement of civilians and severe repercussions on children. A total of 1,051 incidents affecting 28,788 children were documented, with 601 incidents in Unity State alone.

123. The United Nations verified 159 incidents of recruitment and use, affecting 2,596 children. Nearly 70 per cent were attributed to SPLA (110), other government security forces and allied forces, including the Cobra faction of the South Sudan Democratic Movement/Army, which was integrated into SPLA in 2015. Recruitment and use was also perpetrated by SPLM/A in Opposition (19), Johnson Olony's armed group (11), the Arrow Boys (4) and the White Army (3). Children wearing military uniforms were spotted throughout the country, especially in the greater Upper Nile region, where they were used in direct hostilities and support roles. First-hand reports were received of children being ordered to kill civilians and loot properties in Unity State. Girls reported being gang-raped and used for sexual purposes. According to the United Nations in the Sudan, some 400 South Sudanese children were also recruited by SPLM/A in Opposition from the Kharasana refugee camp, Western Kordofan, in October.

124. The United Nations verified 131 incidents of killing and 59 of maiming affecting 480 and 128 children, respectively, a sharp increase compared with 2014. The majority were attributed to SPLA (160), including in Unity State, where soldiers and allied militias reportedly shot at and burned houses with children inside. Incidents were also attributed to the South Sudan National Police Service, SPLM/A in Opposition, Johnson Olony's armed group and other parties to conflict. Moreover, seven children were killed and maimed in four incidents in United Nations sites for the protection of civilians during exchanges of fire between SPLA and SPLM/A in Opposition. Explosive remnants of war also caused child casualties. A cross-border incident involving SPLA that killed six children and maimed five was documented by the United Nations in the Sudan.

125. A total of 103 incidents of sexual violence affecting 430 children were verified and attributed to SPLA and other government security forces. Most incidents were documented in Unity State. Boys were reportedly castrated and sexually mutilated, while girls who resisted rape were killed.

126. Ten attacks on schools by SPLA were verified. They entailed destruction, damage, looting or the recruitment of children. In an incident in Upper Nile State, 36 children were rounded up by Johnson Olony's armed group, a militia aligned at the time with SPLA, during an SPLA recruitment exercise. They were later released. Eleven attacks on hospitals and health facilities were also verified, with nine attributed to SPLA and two to SPLM/A in Opposition.

127. As at the end of December, 25 schools were being used for military purposes by SPLA and other government security forces (22) and SPLM/A in Opposition (1).

Thirty-six schools were vacated in 2015, mainly through advocacy by the United Nations and joint verifications with SPLA.

128. There was a dramatic upsurge in the number of incidents of abduction, with 79 verified incidents affecting 1,596 children. The main perpetrators were SPLA (67), the Arrow Boys (5) and SPLM/A in Opposition (4). The largest number of abductions was documented in Unity State. Most children were abducted for recruitment and use. Testimonies of rape while in captivity were also received.

129. A total of 277 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified and included attacks on personnel, destruction of compounds and interference in the delivery of assistance.

130. The Cobra faction of the South Sudan Democratic Movement/Army released 1,755 children in the Greater Pibor Administrative Area following advocacy by the United Nations. Children joined reintegration programmes and received support, but some boys were reportedly rerecruited. Since the group's integration into SPLA, the United Nations has been working with the SPLA Child Protection Unit to release all children.

131. Child protection provisions were included in the peace agreement signed in August, but United Nations engagement with the parties to conflict yielded few results. Other commitments to protect children were forthcoming, however, and, in January, South Sudan ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child. On 26 December, SPLM/A in Opposition signed an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use and killing and maiming of children. I am, however, deeply concerned at the scale of violations affecting children and, in line with my call during my visit in February 2016, I urge the leaders of South Sudan to abide by their responsibilities to protect children. I also call upon all parties to turn their multiple commitments into action by stopping the violations against children and releasing the thousands of children from their ranks.

Three areas: Southern Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei

132. Clashes between the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-N) continued in Southern Kordofan and Blue Nile States and attacks against civilians were reported. The most recent round of peace talks between the two parties, convened in November, produced little progress. Intercommunal violence also occurred, including in Abyei. In addition, the period featured activities by armed groups along the border with South Sudan. Owing to access limitations, the United Nations was unable to verify allegations and figures may be underreported.

133. The United Nations documented four cases of recruitment and use of children by the Sudanese Armed Forces. As noted in my previous report (A/69/926-S/2015/409), cross-border activities by armed groups continued and two boys were recruited by SPLM-N from refugee settlements in South Sudan.

134. The United Nations documented 28 incidents of killing and maiming, mostly perpetrated by the Sudanese Armed Forces (16) and SPLM-N (6), affecting 43 and 38 children, respectively. Most incidents were caused by attacks on civilians by government forces and SPLM-N, aerial bombardment, shelling and crossfire. Two were also the result of tribal clashes and explosive remnants of war. In addition, the United Nations documented the killing and maiming of four girls in a Sudanese Armed Forces aerial bombardment in South Sudan.

135. The rapes of four girls and one boy by Sudanese Armed Forces elements and aligned militias were documented. Sexual violence against children remained a grave concern and the numbers are believed to be underreported owing to a lack of access.

136. Seven incidents of attacks on schools (two), hospitals (three) and protected personnel (two) were attributed to the Sudanese Armed Forces (two), SPLM-N (two) and unknown perpetrators. Two incidents occurred during clashes between the Sudanese Armed Forces and SPLM-N. For example, on 20 January, a hospital operated by Médecins sans frontières in the Nuba mountains was reportedly bombed by the Sudanese Armed Forces. A medical staff member and a teacher were reportedly killed in April in Western Kordofan by SPLM-N.

137. The United Nations documented the abduction of eight children, including five in Abyei, that occurred during Misseriya attacks on Ngok Dinka villages in January and March. The children were released and reunited with their families following engagement by the United Nations. Three other boys were reportedly abducted by SPLM-N, including two in South Sudan.

138. The Government continued to restrict humanitarian access, resulting in an estimated 165,000 children being deprived of immunization.

Darfur

139. The period witnessed continued confrontations between government security forces and armed groups, especially in the Jebel Marra area, which led to significant displacement. The situation, exacerbated by aerial bombardment and increasingly deadly intertribal clashes, resulted in grave violations against children.

140. The country task force on monitoring and reporting verified the recruitment of four boys by the Sudanese Armed Forces in West Darfur, including one who reportedly participated in fighting between the Abbas faction of the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) and the Sudanese Armed Forces in June. More allegations were received involving the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Government's Rapid Support Forces, which could not be verified. In addition, the United Nations documented the recruitment of six children by JEM from refugee settlements in Unity State, South Sudan. During her visit in March 2016, my Special Representative was given access to 21 children detained by the National Intelligence and Security Service since April and August 2015 for their alleged association with JEM. The children had allegedly been recruited in Southern Kordofan and South Sudan and used in combat in Darfur and South Sudan. My Special Representative advocated further access by the United Nations to the children and their release and reunification with their families.

141. Killing and maiming accounted for the majority of verified violations (196). Some 50 per cent of the children were killed (21) and maimed (74) by explosive remnants of war, but casualties also resulted from indiscriminate shooting, intercommunal clashes in East Darfur and aerial bombardments. A number of cases in restricted areas could not be documented.

142. Forty-five incidents of sexual violence affecting 60 children, including a boy, were verified and attributed to unidentified armed men (35), militias (13), the Rapid Support Forces (5), armed nomads (3), the Sudanese Armed Forces (2) and the police and JEM-Wing for Peace (1 each). In addition, the United Nations in South Sudan documented three incidents by JEM affecting 12 children.

143. Thirteen schools were damaged or looted by the Central Reserve Police and the Rapid Support Forces, but also during Sudanese Armed Forces aerial bombardments and intertribal clashes. All but one of the incidents took place in the eastern Jebel Marra. In two additional incidents, school personnel were threatened by elements of the Rapid Support Forces. Two attacks on hospitals and protected personnel were attributed to the Rapid Support Forces and the Central Reserve Police.

144. Humanitarian access, in particular to Jebel Marra, remained heavily restricted, which impeded efforts to reach affected communities, including children.

145. The country task force on reporting and monitoring engaged with armed groups and a command order prohibiting the recruitment and use of children was issued by JEM in September. In addition, my Special Representative met the leaders of JEM, the Sudan Liberation Army/Minni Minawi and the Sudan Liberation Army/Abdul Wahid in Austria in May, in consultations organized by the United Nations-African Union Hybrid Operation in Darfur and the Austrian Study Centre for Peace and Conflict Resolution. The leaders of the groups issued a joint statement with a commitment to stop and prevent grave violations against children. Lastly, in June SPLM-N signed Geneva Call's Deed of Commitment for the Protection of Children from the Effects of Armed Conflict.

146. In March 2016, my Special Representative visited the Sudan and witnessed the signing of an action plan by the Government to end and prevent child recruitment and use in its security forces. I welcome that step and count on the Government to ensure the swift and full implementation of the action plan.

147. The country task force on monitoring and reporting provided technical support to government personnel and local communities through awareness-raising, the development of referral pathways and community-based child protection networks. Although impunity for grave violations continued to be a concern, there was progress, with arrests being made for sexual violence and the killing and maiming of children. I call upon the Government to ensure accountability for all grave violations.

Syrian Arab Republic

148. The conflict was marked by increasing indiscriminate and disproportionate aerial bombings, especially in the second half of the year, and the proliferation of parties involved, including international forces. Besiegement of areas continued to be used as a tactic of war. On 27 February 2016, a cessation of hostilities agreement allowed the delivery of humanitarian assistance to previously unreachable areas. Owing to the increasingly constrained monitoring environment, the figures below do not reflect the full scale of grave violations committed by all parties to the conflict.

149. A total of 362 cases of recruitment and use of children were verified and attributed to ISIL (274), the Free Syrian Army and affiliated groups (62), Liwa' al-Tawhid (11), popular committees (5), Kurdish People's Protection Units (4), Ahrar al-Sham (3), the Nusrah Front (2) and the Army of Islam (1). Of the verified cases, 56 per cent involved children under 15 years of age, a significant increase compared with 2014. The payment of salaries and ideology continued to be major influencing factors.

150. The massive recruitment and use of children by ISIL continued. The United Nations verified the existence of centres in rural Aleppo, Dayr al-Zawr and rural Raqqah that provided military training to at least 124 boys between 10 and 15 years of age. Verification of the use of child foreign fighters increased significantly, with 18 cases of children as young as 7 years of age. The use of children as child executioners was reported and appeared in video footage.

151. The United Nations also verified the recruitment and use of children as young as 9 years of age by the Free Syrian Army, and the recruitment of 11 Syrian refugee children from neighbouring countries by Liwa' al-Tawhid. While cases became increasingly difficult to verify, the Kurdish People's Protection Units continued to recruit boys and girls as young as 14 years of age for combat roles, with pressure and coercion by communities reportedly a factor.

152. Recruitment and use by pro-Government groups was verified, with five cases of boys being recruited by the Popular Committee of Tallkalkh (Homs) to work as guards and conduct patrols. In addition, there were allegations of the use of children by government forces to man checkpoints.

153. The Government continued to detain children for their alleged association with armed opposition groups, with 36 cases verified. In 28 of those cases, the children were tortured, and one incident resulted in the child's death in detention. Pro-Government groups continued to deprive children of liberty for alleged association with opposition groups, with three cases attributed to the Popular Committee of Bludan. There were also five cases of ISIL depriving children of liberty owing to their association with parties to conflict.

154. Air strikes, indiscriminate attacks on civilian areas and objects, and complex attacks were the primary causes of killing and maiming of children. The United Nations verified 591 cases of children killed (269 boys, 106 girls and 196 of unknown sex) and 555 injured (203 boys, 128 girls and 224 of unknown sex), attributed to government forces and international forces supporting the Government (585), ISIL (142), the Nusra Front (23), other armed groups (168), the international coalition against ISIL (7), the Kurdish People's Protection Units (2) and unknown parties (219). Mortar, rocket and suicide attacks on government-controlled areas resulted in the killing and maiming of 275 children (77 boys, 93 girls and 105 of unknown sex), attributed to ISIL (79), the Nusra Front (14) and other armed groups (167). Aerial attacks and shelling of civilian areas by government forces and international forces supporting the Government killed and injured 531 children, including 133 from indiscriminate barrel bombs.

155. There was a significant increase in the number of verified cases of children killed and maimed as a result of their association with armed groups, including while participating in combat. Owing to the large numbers of children used by ISIL, at least 148 children were killed in ISIL military areas targeted by air strikes by government forces, international forces supporting the Government and the international coalition. ISIL and the Nusra Front continued to commit atrocities, including the execution of children. On 5 March, the Nusra Front executed two children during a ground offensive on Kanafez (Hama). On 22 August, in Muh

Hasan (Dayr al-Zawr), ISIL publicly amputated limbs of a 15-year-old boy accused of being affiliated with the Free Syrian Army.

156. Conflict-related sexual violence against children continued to be extremely difficult to document, with no case verified in 2015. In areas controlled by ISIL, girls reportedly continued to be vulnerable to early and forced marriage to fighters, while Yezidi girls captured in Iraq in 2014 were reportedly trafficked into the Syrian Arab Republic and used as sex slaves.

157. According to the Ministry of Education, since the beginning of the conflict, more than 6,500 schools have been destroyed, partially damaged, used as shelters for internally displaced persons or rendered otherwise inaccessible. The Ministry reported that 571 students and 419 teachers had been killed in 2015. The United Nations verified 69 attacks on educational facilities (60) and personnel (9) attributed to government forces and pro-Government groups (48), ISIL (11), the Nusra Front (1), other armed groups (9) and unknown parties (1), which killed and maimed 174 children.

158. ISIL continued to use education to indoctrinate and recruit children. In December, it imposed new regulations of compulsory education for all boys from grades 1 to 12, and for girls from grades 1 to 4, which is a factor contributing to recruitment in ISIL-controlled areas.

159. Reports of attacks on medical facilities increased, with 122 attacks on 93 separate medical facilities and at least 60 medical personnel targeted or killed. The United Nations verified 41 attacks on health facilities (33) and health personnel (8) by government forces and pro-Government groups (32), ISIL (2), other armed groups (2) and unknown parties (5).

160. The United Nations verified eight incidents of military use of schools by government forces in Idlib in March (four of the schools were subsequently attacked by armed groups) and three incidents of military use of hospitals by ISIL in Dayr al-Zawr and Raqqah.

161. Children continued to be abducted by parties to the conflict, with 21 cases (15 boys, 4 girls and 2 of unknown sex) attributed to government forces in a hostage-taking incident (13), ISIL (5) and 1 each to the Nusra Front, the Kurdish People's Protection Units and groups affiliated with the Free Syrian Army.

162. Parties to the conflict, in particular the Government, ISIL, the Nusra Front and armed opposition groups, continued to use siege and starvation as a tactic of war. In January 2016, an estimated 393,700 people were living under siege. Deaths of children as a result of malnutrition were reported. Some 35,000 children targeted by polio vaccination campaigns could not be reached owing to denial of vaccinations by armed groups, including ISIL. The use of water as a weapon of war escalated significantly, with some 7.7 million civilians affected by deliberate water cuts. The United Nations verified attacks on humanitarian facilities and attacks and threats against humanitarian personnel.

163. I call upon the Government to respect its obligations and take urgent action to protect civilians. Furthermore, I urge the Kurdish People's Protection Units and the Free Syrian Army to end child recruitment and use, and implement the commitments previously made.

Yemen

164. The conflict in Yemen escalated significantly following the takeover of Sana'a by the Houthis in September 2014 and the beginning of air strikes by the coalition led by Saudi Arabia on 26 March 2015. Intensive aerial bombardment was followed by ground fighting, taking a devastating toll on the civilian population. Grave violations against children increased dramatically as a result of the escalating conflict.

165. The United Nations documented a fivefold increase in cases of recruitment and use of children by armed groups, in particular following the escalation of 26 March, notwithstanding the challenges in verifying cases owing to security and access constraints. Of the 762 verified cases of recruitment of children (all boys), the majority were attributed to the Houthis (72 per cent), followed by the pro-Government popular committees (15 per cent) and Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (9 per cent). Recruitment was predominant in Houthi strongholds, such as Amanat al-Asimah (103), Ta'izz (69) and Amran (34). A shift was observed from largely voluntary enlistment towards forced or involuntary recruitment through coercion, including through the provision of misleading information or incentives.

166. In 2015, 183 boys were deprived of liberty by popular committees, owing to their association with armed groups, predominantly in Abyan, Aden and Lahij. At least 48 children recruited by Houthi forces were captured by popular committees and deprived of liberty for three to five months, before being released as part of a prisoner exchange that included adults held by popular committees. In addition, a child in Amanat al-Asimah was accused of planting chips in installations to be targeted by the coalition, and deprived of liberty by the Houthis.

167. The United Nations verified a sixfold increase in the number of children killed and maimed compared with 2014, totalling 1,953 child casualties (785 children killed and 1,168 injured). More than 70 per cent were boys. Of the casualties, 60 per cent (510 deaths and 667 injuries) were attributed to the Saudi Arabia-led coalition and 20 per cent (142 deaths and 247 injuries) to the Houthis. In 324 incidents, the responsible party could not be identified. ISIL claimed responsibility for an improvised explosive device attack on a mosque in Amanat al-Asimah that killed seven children and injured six, in addition to causing many adult casualties. Of the child casualties, 60 per cent were caused by air strikes, predominantly in Amanat al-Asimah, Hajjah and Sa'dah. Significant civilian casualties, including children, as a result of air strikes continued to be documented early in 2016. Ground fighting accounted for 29 per cent of child casualties, with the vast majority in Ta'izz, Aden and Dali'. Child casualties as a result of landmines and explosive remnants of war were documented, with 15 children killed and 67 injured in Abyan, Aden, Amanat al-Asimah, Amran, Bayda', Dali', Dhamar, Lahij, Ma'rib, Sa'dah, Shabwah and Ta'izz.

168. The United Nations verified an incident of sexual violence against a child by a member of an armed group. However, it is likely that this category of violation is underreported.

169. The United Nations verified 101 incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals, which is double the number of incidents verified in 2014. Of the attacks, 90 per cent caused the partial or complete destruction of schools or health facilities, while the remaining 10 per cent involved attacks on protected personnel, including students. Of the attacks on schools and hospitals, 48 per cent were attributed to the coalition, 29 per cent to the Houthis and 20 per cent to unidentified perpetrators. More than half of the violations occurred in the period from April to June.

170. Fifty-nine incidents of attacks on 34 hospitals were verified, with multiple attacks on the same facilities, especially in Aden and Ta'izz. In Aden, six facilities were attacked 10 times. In Ta'izz, three health facilities were hit in 23 separate incidents. The majority of repeated attacks were attributed to Houthi forces. For example, the Jumhuriyah hospital in Aden was attacked three times by the Houthis in April. In addition, coalition air strikes destroyed 15 health facilities in the governorate of Sa'dah.

171. The United Nations verified 42 attacks on schools, with the largest number in Amanat al-Asimah (12), Ta'izz (10) and Sa'dah (10). Of the attacks, 57 per cent were attributed to the coalition, 16 per cent to the Houthis and 21 per cent to unknown parties.

172. The United Nations verified 51 incidents of military use of schools, of which the large majority (44) took place in Ta'izz by Houthi forces (20), popular committees (8) and unknown armed groups (16). The Houthis also used schools in Aden, Dali' and Lahij, and two incidents were attributed to popular committees in Aden and unknown armed groups in Ibb. Four incidents of military use of hospitals were verified, of which three were attributed to the Houthis and one to Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula.

173. The United Nations verified the abductions of 11 children, all of which were attributed to the Houthis, with the exception of a case attributed to Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula. For example, two children were abducted next to Houthi barracks in Dali'. The Houthis and affiliated groups requested a ransom for the return of the children to the families, but the children were later killed.

174. Humanitarian access was severely restricted, with both the coalition and the Houthis imposing obstacles to the delivery of goods and services. The United Nations verified 16 incidents of denial of humanitarian access in Ta'izz, Sa'dah, Aden and Dali', mostly relating to the restriction of entry of humanitarian personnel, and threats and violence against personnel. The majority of verified incidents were attributed to the Houthis (11) and the coalition (3).

175. In May 2014, the Government signed an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. However, implementation did not advance in the light of the escalation of conflict. My Special Representative engaged in dialogue with the Government, Member States and subsidiary bodies of the Security Council to raise serious concerns about the devastating impact of the conflict on children. I call upon all parties to respect their international legal obligations to protect civilians and civilian infrastructure, and encourage the inclusion of child protection concerns in negotiations to end the conflict.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

Colombia

176. Substantial progress was made in the peace talks between the Government of Colombia and the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia — Ejército del

Pueblo (FARC-EP). In February, the group announced that it would stop recruiting children under 17 years of age and intended to release children under 15 years of age from its ranks. At the invitation of the Government, my Special Representative twice visited Havana to engage with the negotiating parties and facilitators on according priority to the release and reintegration of all under-aged members of FARC-EP, stressing that any action should be based on the principle of the best interest of the children to ensure their protection and successful reintegration, guarantee their rights as victims and prevent rerecruitment by other armed actors. Early in 2016, FARC-EP made public a commitment to ending the recruitment of children under 18 years of age and discussions on the separation of children continued. A historic agreement on the peace agenda item relating to victims was announced on 15 December, foreseeing the creation of a comprehensive system of truth, justice, reparation and non-repetition for victims, which identified children as a vulnerable group.

177. Armed violence between FARC-EP and government forces reached its lowest level in 50 years and displacement decreased following the unilateral ceasefire declared by FARC-EP and the suspension of government aerial bombings. Nevertheless, activities by the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN)<sup>4</sup> and post-demobilization armed groups continued to cause forced displacement.

178. The United Nations verified 289 cases of child recruitment and use by armed groups, the majority of which were documented following their separation and had been formerly associated with FARC-EP (182) and ELN (74). Cases were also attributed to the Ejército Popular de Liberación (1) and post-demobilization and other armed groups (32).

179. The killing of 12 children and maiming of 10, mainly as a result of landmines, were verified. With 31 of its 32 departments contaminated, landmines are a serious concern for the protection of children in Colombia. On 7 March, the Government and FARC-EP announced that they would carry out joint humanitarian demining initiatives (joint communiqué No. 52) and the parties began working on pilot projects.

180. The country task force on monitoring and reporting recorded 10 girls who were victims of sexual violence committed by the Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia (8), FARC-EP and an unidentified perpetrator. One additional case by a member of the Colombian military in 2012 was reported in 2015. The perpetrator was in detention awaiting trial at the time of writing (March 2016).

181. Eleven schools were damaged in crossfire and by landmines and explosive remnants of war. At least two teachers were killed by unidentified armed groups and allegations of threats against teachers by FARC-EP, ELN, the Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia and Los Rastrojos were received. In addition, there were one case of military use of schools by FARC-EP and four cases by the Colombian military in violation of directives issued by the Ministry of Defence.

182. I welcome the decision of the Constitutional Court of 18 February 2016 that children recruited by all armed groups, including post-demobilization groups, are victims and have the right to reparations guaranteed in the Victims' Act (No. 1448 of 2011). This is an important step forward that aims to guarantee equal treatment between children associated with guerrilla groups and those associated with post-demobilization groups, by ensuring that every recruited child will be treated primarily as a victim and receive adequate reintegration support.

<sup>4</sup> ELN has been listed for recruitment and use of children in annex II to the present report since 2003. The launch of peace negotiations between the Government of Colombia and ELN was announced in March 2016.

183. There has been historic progress in Colombia and I encourage the Government to secure guarantees for non-repetition and pay particular attention to the specific protection needs of indigenous children, children of African descent and children in marginalized areas, so as to address and prevent violations against children.

India

184. The United Nations continued to receive reports of the recruitment and use of children as young as 6 years of age by armed groups, including the Naxalites, in Bihar, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, Maharashtra, Odisha and West Bengal States. Reports indicate that children were coerced to join children's units ("Bal Dasta"), where they were trained and used as couriers and informants, to plant improvised explosive devices and in front-line operations against national security forces. For example, in April, the Bharatiya Communist Party (Maoist) reportedly forced the inhabitants of seven villages in Gumla district, Jharkhand State, to hand over five children per village to join their ranks. To avoid such forcible recruitment, families have resorted to sending children away from home at a young age, leading to children dropping out of school.

185. In the eastern provinces, children were killed and injured as a result of violence and fighting between armed groups and national security forces. In June, 12 Communist Party of India (Maoist) fighters, including 4 children dressed in uniforms, were killed in a joint police operation in Bhalwahi village, Jharkhand State.

186. The abduction of children, especially girls, by armed groups was a serious concern. Abducted children are subjected to further grave violations and abuses, and have been forced to serve in combat functions, exposed to sexual violence and, reportedly, used as human shields. In April, Maoists reportedly abducted five girls aged between 10 and 13 years of age from Karcha village, West Bengal State, and their whereabouts remain unknown.

Nigeria

187. Early in 2015, Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati wal-Jihad, renamed Islamic State's West African Province and commonly known as Boko Haram, controlled large swathes of territory in the north-eastern States of Adamawa, Borno and Yobe. In response, the Nigerian security forces intensified their military operations, in conjunction with the Civilian Joint Task Force, as well as local pro-Government vigilante groups, retaking control of territory. According to the Nigerian security forces, only two local government areas were under Boko Haram control (Abadam and Mobar in Borno State) by December.

188. As Boko Haram increasingly resorted to hit-and-run attacks on "soft targets", the group also intensified its operations, including suicide attacks, which have spread from north-east Nigeria to Cameroon, Chad and the Niger, causing a significant number of casualties among civilians and large-scale displacement. Consequently, by the end of December, in excess of 1.8 million persons had been displaced within Nigeria, including more than 1 million children, and 220,304 were registered as refugees in neighbouring countries.

189. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 278 children (143 boys and 135 girls) by Boko Haram (225) and the Civilian Joint Task Force (53). Twenty-one girls were used in suicide attacks claimed by Boko Haram, 11 of which were documented in the fourth quarter. Children were used in suicide attacks not only in Nigeria, but also in Cameroon and Chad, with cases also reported early in 2016. Of the 1,010 children (422 boys and 588 girls) encountered or rescued during the course of military operations in north-east Nigeria, 204 (117 girls and 87 boys) had been recruited and used by Boko Haram. With regards to the Civilian Joint Task Force, children were used to man checkpoints and as messengers and spies.

190. Cases of 129 children detained for alleged association with Boko Haram were documented (69 boys and 60 girls), including 85 held in military barracks in Maiduguri, 22 at the Aguata camp in eastern Nigeria by the Office of the National Security Adviser, after passing through the Chad security corridor, and 21 girls in Lagos detained by the Nigeria Department of State Services and the Nigerian security forces. On 1 December, an 11-year-old boy was arrested in Maiduguri, reportedly for being a suspected “Boko Haram terrorist”, and his picture displayed on posters disseminated throughout Nigeria. The poster appeared to include at least three other boys. In November, the Nigerian security forces handed over to the Governor of Borno State 48 boys and 10 girls who had been in military detention in Maiduguri since August for alleged association with Boko Haram.

191. At least 5,480 persons were reportedly killed in 352 incidents, a decrease of 26 per cent compared with 2014. The United Nations verified the killing of 244 children (109 boys and 135 girls), mostly in Borno (130), Adamawa (54) and Yobe (48). Sixty-five of them were killed in 13 suicide attacks committed by children. A total of 112 children (54 boys and 58 girls) were also maimed.

192. In May and June, 253 children (84 boys and 169 girls) encountered during military operations participated in an “deradicalization programme” run by the Office of the National Security Adviser in a facility in Kaduna State, to which the United Nations was given access in June. The Office reported that four girls were pregnant as a result of sexual violence during their captivity and that all 68 mothers of the 112 children under 5 years of age had been either raped and/or were wives of Boko Haram members. The facility was closed down on 6 November, but it was unclear whether the women and children who returned to their communities or camps for displaced persons received reintegration support.

193. Since 2014, an estimated 1,500 schools have been destroyed in north-east Nigeria, including 524 in Borno State. This has prevented access to education for more than 400,000 children. Five schools were reportedly used for military purposes by Boko Haram in Bauchi State, and three schools by the Nigerian security forces since April 2014 in Maiduguri and Chibok Local Government Area, Borno State. To strengthen the protection of education, Nigeria endorsed the Safe Schools Declaration, agreeing to use the Guidelines for Protecting Schools and Universities from Military Use during Armed Conflict.

194. Abduction by Boko Haram continued, with 162 cases documented, of which the United Nations verified 26 (15 boys and 11 girls). In addition, 693 children encountered or rescued during military operations (327 boys and 366 girls) had reportedly been abducted. There is no indication whether any of the Chibok schoolgirls, abducted in 2014, were among those rescued.

195. Engagement with the Nigerian authorities continued, including on the handover of children encountered during operations by the Nigerian security forces to civilian authorities. In December, the United Nations assisted the National Human Rights Commission and the Nigerian security forces in organizing a workshop to review the military code of conduct and rules of engagement for operations against Boko Haram. With regard to efforts to combat impunity, I welcome the establishment of a human rights desk at the army headquarters tasked to investigate human rights violations committed by the military, and I encourage the inclusion of dedicated child protection capacity to investigate grave violations committed against children. I am concerned by the number of children recruited and used by the Civilian Joint Task Force and I call upon the Government to take swift action to prevent further cases.

Pakistan

196. In 2015, attacks by armed groups in Pakistan declined by 48 per cent compared with 2014. The majority of attacks were attributed to TTP, predominantly in Baluchistan. The Government's military operations in North Waziristan against armed groups continued throughout 2015.

197. Reports were received of the use of religious schools for recruitment and military training of children by TTP and other armed groups (see S/2015/336).

198. Child casualties were reported as a result of indiscriminate attacks and armed violence. For example, on 4 January, four children were killed and 10 injured when an improvised explosive device detonated at a volleyball match in Orakzai Agency, Federally Administered Tribal Areas. In October, a suicide attack on a religious procession in Jacobabad, Sindh Province, killed 18 children and injured more than 40 others. Further indiscriminate attacks occurred early in 2016, when a large bomb blast claimed by a TTP faction killed more than 20 children in Lahore on 27 March.

199. Fourteen attacks on educational institutions across Pakistan were recorded, a decline of 65 per cent compared with 2014. They included the destruction of schools, including girls' schools, and occurred mostly in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (eight), Sindh (four) and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (two).

200. Notwithstanding the continued targeting of health personnel, humanitarian access to children increased, in particular for polio workers in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas. Attacks on polio workers continued, however, with 11 people killed in six attacks. For example, four members of a polio team were killed following their abduction in Northern Baluchistan. In addition, 76 security incidents, including 42 cases of threats and intimidation against polio workers, were reported throughout Pakistan.

201. I am concerned by reports of children being sentenced to death by military courts on terrorism-related charges. I urge the Government to adhere to its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which prohibits capital punishment for offences committed by persons under 18 years of age.

Philippines

202. There were limited large-scale armed engagements in 2015. However, sporadic low-intensity clashes continued to affect children, predominantly in Mindanao. An increased number of grave violations were documented in indigenous communities resulting from the conflict between the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the New People's Army (NPA), increasingly involving the Alamara and Magahat paramilitary groups with alleged links to the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

203. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 17 children, including 15 children used as human shields, by the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters in one incident, and two recruited by NPA. Unverified reports indicated that the Abu Sayyaf Group recruited around 30 children in Basilan in April.

204. Two cases of detention of children for their alleged association with armed groups were verified. In January, a 17-year-old boy was detained and questioned by the Armed Forces of the Philippines for alleged association with NPA in the Davao region.

205. The United Nations verified the killing of 6 children and the injury of 25. A third of the casualties were attributed to the Abu Sayyaf Group. For example, in May, a boy was beheaded by the Group in Basilan for allegedly spying. Two verified incidents were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines, involving the killing of two children and injury of two others. On 18 August, in Bukidnon Province, northern Mindanao, the Armed Forces of the Philippines killed five family members in front of their house, including two boys aged 14 and 17 years. Two injuries were attributed to the Magahat paramilitary group, one killing to NPA and one injury to the National Police. The other 13 casualties were attributed to crossfire or explosive remnants of war.

206. The United Nations verified the rape of a 14-year-old girl by three soldiers in three separate incidents between May and July. The soldiers were court-martialled and their superior was recommended for administrative sanctions. However, the civilian criminal proceedings for rape were dismissed owing to insufficient evidence.

207. Almost all verified cases of attacks on schools and education personnel took place in indigenous communities. Private schools run by non-governmental organizations were systematically targeted for alleged links to NPA. Five incidents were attributed to the Magahat paramilitary group, three to the Armed Forces of the Philippines, two to the Alamara paramilitary group and one each to NPA and the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters. In a particularly grave incident, the director of a school run by a non-governmental organization was killed in an indigenous community in Caraga by the Magahat paramilitary group. No arrests have been made, despite warrants being issued. The United Nations verified 10 incidents of military use of schools; 6 incidents were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines, 3 incidents jointly to the Armed Forces of the Philippines and paramilitary groups and 1 to the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters.

208. The Moro Islamic Liberation Front demonstrated a strong commitment to the action plan to end and prevent child recruitment and use, achieving significant progress. The majority of the benchmarks have been reached and, in November, its leaders agreed on the steps required to identify and disengage any children associated with it. The full implementation of the action plan also requires safeguards to prevent recruitment and association, linked to the implementation of existing accountability mechanisms. Services to minimize the risk of reassociation of children will also be important.

209. In an encouraging development, in 2015, UNICEF renewed engagement with the National Democratic Front of the Philippines/NPA on its declaration and programme of action for the rights, protection and welfare of children.

210. The United Nations continues to work with the Armed Forces of the Philippines on its 2012 strategic plan on prevention and response to grave child rights violations in situations of armed conflict to ensure that it strengthens the protection of children in the light of continuing violations involving the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

Thailand

211. Violence in southern Thailand continued, notwithstanding the reinitiation of dialogue between the Government and an umbrella organization of armed groups.

212. Although no cases of recruitment and use of children were reported, according to information provided by the Government, an armed group trained children as young as 13 years of age in the use of weapons in Narathiwat Province early in January 2016. The United Nations continued to receive reports of children being detained for alleged association with armed groups.

213. The United Nations received reports of the killing of 4 children and the injury of 15 in shootings and improvised explosive device attacks in Narathiwat, Pattani and Yala Provinces. This is a significant decrease compared with 2014 (23 children killed and 65 injured).

214. Schools and education personnel continued to be targeted by armed groups. According to the Ministry of Education, as at November, two teachers and a student had been killed, and a teacher and two students injured, in such attacks. In addition, on 11 September, a bomb attack at the entrance of a community school in Pattani Province injured five students between 3 and 15 years of age; a criminal investigation is continuing. The authorities have provided security escorts to teachers in affected areas.

215. I welcome and encourage the continuing dialogue between the Government and the United Nations country team on strengthening the protection of children in the southern border provinces and on access to those areas to conduct independent verification and reporting of alleged violations against children. In December, during a consultation on the dialogue process, convened by the Internal Security Operation Command for Southern Thailand, civil society organizations and the United Nations raised the need to include children in the agenda of the dialogue process to strengthen their protection in the south, which I strongly support.

IV. Recommendations

216. I am deeply concerned at the scale and increasing severity of the grave violations that were committed in 2015, including continuing large-scale abduction, and call upon all parties to immediately end and take all measures to prevent grave violations against children.

217. I urge Member States to ensure that their engagement in hostilities and responses to all threats to peace and security, including in efforts to counter violent extremism, are conducted in full compliance with international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law. It is unacceptable that the failure to do so has resulted in numerous violations of children's rights. Member States should include specific mitigating measures for the protection of children in their responses, in particular when conducting aerial bombing campaigns or ground operations. I also call upon all parties to conflict to refrain from using explosive weapons with wide-area effects in populated areas, and to consider making a commitment to this effect.

218. I encourage the Member States concerned by the "Children, Not Soldiers" campaign to redouble their efforts to fully implement their action plans in the coming year and invite regional organizations, the international community and all relevant partners to provide increased support to those making progress.

219. I urge Member States to hand over children encountered during military operations to civilian child protection actors as soon as possible, in accordance with their international obligations and the best interests of the child. It is crucial that there be appropriate resources for the reintegration of the children separated from parties to conflict, with attention given to psychosocial support and the needs of girls.

220. I call upon Member States to treat children associated with armed groups, including those engaged in violent extremism, as victims entitled to full protection of their human rights and to urgently put in place alternatives to the detention and prosecution of children.

221. I call upon Member States to investigate and prosecute perpetrators of grave violations against children. I encourage the donor community to support national justice systems in conflict and post-conflict situations, including by providing resources and technical capacity.

222. I encourage the Security Council to highlight, in its resolutions and debates, the prevention of displacement, the rights of children displaced by conflict and the obligations of States of origin, transit and destination.

223. I encourage Member States and regional organizations involved in negotiating cessation of hostilities or peace agreements to include specific child protection provisions to maximize opportunities to engage with parties and enhance the protection of children.

224. I call upon the Security Council to continue to request the deployment of dedicated child protection capacity to United Nations peace operations, in order to mainstream child protection, conduct dialogue on action plans, release and reintegrate children and for monitoring and reporting.

V. Observations

225. I am shocked by the scale of the grave violations committed by parties to conflict in many situations, including Afghanistan, Iraq, Somalia, South Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. Noted herein are the complex environments created by aerial operations by some Member States' armed forces and international coalitions, which killed and maimed many children. State-allied armed groups and militias have also increasingly been used to fight in support of government forces.

In some cases, State-allied armed groups have recruited and used children and committed other violations. Furthermore, I am gravely concerned at the increasing prevalence of deprivation of liberty of children allegedly associated with parties to conflict.

226. Member States should consider, as a matter of priority, changes in policies, military procedures and legislation, where necessary, to prevent violations and protect children. I have previously stated that those who engage in military action resulting in numerous violations of children's rights will find themselves under scrutiny by the United Nations. Accountability remains a key priority and a shared responsibility in order to end and prevent grave violations against children.

227. I reiterate that all parties to conflict identified in the present report should work with my Special Representative to protect children caught up in conflict.

VI. Lists in the annexes to the present report

228. In accordance with Security Council resolution 2225 (2015), Al-Shabaab (Somalia), Boko Haram (Nigeria), LRA (Central African Republic and Democratic Republic of the Congo), ISIL (Iraq) and the Taliban (Afghanistan) are listed for abduction of children. Those five groups have committed patterns of abduction of children over a number of years. SPLA (South Sudan) is also listed for abduction as a result of hundreds of violations attributed to it in 2015. Other parties have been added to existing trigger violations. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Raia Mutomboki<sup>5</sup> is listed for the recruitment and use of and sexual violence against children. In Nigeria, the Civilian Joint Task Force is listed for the recruitment and use of children, with more than 50 verified cases in 2015. In South Sudan, SPLA is now also listed for sexual violence against children, with more than 100 incidents attributed to government forces. In Yemen, owing to the very large number of violations attributed to the two parties, the Houthis/Ansar Allah and the Saudi Arabia-led coalition are listed for killing and maiming and attacks on schools and hospitals.

229. Other changes in the lists resulted from changes in the respective situations. With the removal of the specific regional section in the report, the Lord's Resistance Army, in addition to being listed for abduction, is now listed in the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the recruitment and use and killing and maiming of, and sexual violence against, children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mayi Mayi "Lafontaine" and former elements of the Coalition des patriotes résistants congolais are now referred to as the Union des patriotes congolais pour la paix also known as Mayi Mayi "Lafontaine", while Mayi Mayi Simba "Morgan" is now referred to as Mayi Mayi Simba.

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2016, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2225 \(2015\). It highlights trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and provides information on violations committed in 2016, as well as related protection concerns. Where possible, violations are attributed to parties to conflict and, in line with the resolutions of the Council, the annexes to the report include a list of parties that, in violation of international law, engage in the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, attacks on schools and/or hospitals and attacks or threats of attacks against protected personnel,<sup>1</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. All the information provided in the report has been vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. In situations where the ability to obtain or verify information was hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. In this regard, the information contained in the report is only indicative and does not always represent the full scale of incidents committed in 2016. In addition, some incidents, in particular instances of recruitment and use of children, abduction of children and sexual violence against children, were verified in 2016 but may have commenced earlier.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\) and in identifying situations that fall within the scope of the mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has adopted a pragmatic approach aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children. Accordingly, the present report documents situations in which apparent violations of international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by conflict are considered to be of such gravity as to warrant international concern. In characterizing the facts described below as grave violations, it is the aim of my Special Representative to bring these situations to the attention of national Governments, which bear the primary responsibility in providing effective protection and relief to all affected children, and to encourage them to take remedial measures. However, reference to a situation is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status.

4. The preparation of the report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, at Headquarters and in the field. The preparation of the present also reflects a new approach of enhanced engagement with Member States. Over the past six months, consultations with parties to conflict noted in the report focused on gaining a greater commitment to prevent violations against children. Where significant progress was achieved or ongoing conduct gave rise to concern, this is highlighted in country-specific sections.

II. Addressing the impact of armed conflict on children

A. Overview of the situation of children and armed conflict

5. While in some country situations the impact of armed conflict on children was low in 2016 and few violations were documented, in other country situations incidents affecting children continued at high levels. In 2016, there were at least 4,000 verified violations by government forces and more than 11,500 verified violations by the range of non-State armed groups.

6. The recruitment and use of children documented in Somalia and the Syrian Arab Republic more than doubled compared with 2015. In South Sudan, 1,022 children were recruited and used. Children continued to be exposed to an unacceptable risk of killing and maiming in a number of country situations. In Afghanistan, the United Nations verified 3,512 child casualties, the highest number ever recorded. In Yemen, the United Nations verified 1,340 child casualties. The cross-border activities of Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), coupled with responses to that group, also led to significant child casualties, with over 2,000 children documented as killed or maimed in Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic. The number of child casualties in the Democratic Republic of the Congo was also the highest recorded since 2012.

7. In the Lake Chad basin, Boko Haram activities continued to expand from Nigeria into neighbouring countries and attacks against civilians were perpetrated across the region. Sexual violence against girls was prevalent in Nigeria, as well as in other country situations, such as the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan, Somalia, South Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic.

B. Concerns regarding the increasing disrespect for international law and its impact on children

8. The ever-changing and complex nature of certain conflicts, as well as continually shifting allegiances, posed challenges for the protection of children in situations of armed conflict. In addition, the troubling trends presented above are a clear manifestation of the use of abhorrent tactics of warfare by a number of parties to conflict.

9. Asymmetric attacks by non-State armed groups had a severe impact on children in Afghanistan, Iraq, Somalia and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as in Nigeria and neighbouring countries, including forcing children to be suicide bombers. The number of violations committed by Al-Shabaab, Boko Haram, ISIL and the Taliban totalled more than 6,800. Responses to the actions of these groups led to high levels of child casualties, largely owing to their cross-border nature and presence in densely populated areas.

10. The denial of humanitarian access to children was also a troubling trend in certain contexts. Children were trapped in besieged areas or deprived of access to food, water and medical assistance, including vaccines. This is a deeply troubling issue that compounds the direct impact of hostilities and has devastating consequences for children, particularly in their formative stages.

11. The increasing number of non-State armed groups that were used to fight on behalf of Governments as well as ongoing air strikes by multiple entities, including international coalitions, were once again a particular concern. While these actors are bound by applicable obligations under international law, their composition, structure or cross-border nature can hamper the implementation of important safeguards, such as applying precautionary measures, and reduces the clarity of command structures, resulting in violations against children. I urge Member States, acting alone or as part of a coalition, to increase efforts to prevent such violations.

12. Given the number of incidents of killing and maiming of children documented in the present report, I also call for a renewed focus to ensure respect for the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution under international humanitarian law. Specifically, when making operational decisions, armed forces need to take into account that, in situations where armed groups hold territory, a significant number of children may be in close proximity to military positions or may even be used as human shields.

13. Enhanced implementation of these essential principles will also help to prevent the destruction of vital civilian infrastructure. In 2016, in nearly all the countries mentioned in the present report, schools and hospitals were subjected to air strikes as well as ground operations. I urge parties to conflict to be cognizant of the long-term impact of conducting hostilities in heavily populated or residential areas, such as the persistence of explosive remnants of war.

14. The “security screening” of civilians in areas formerly held by non-State armed groups, undertaken by government security forces or pro-government militias, has been an emerging concern related to the deprivation of liberty of children. While it is the responsibility of Governments to ensure the safety of civilians, authorities in conflict-affected areas are urged to use civilian child protection actors to carry out such screening, and to adhere to the principles of last resort and shortest possible time for deprivation of liberty of children, in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child. I also encourage the adoption of protocols for the handover of children associated with, or in areas formerly held by, armed groups to civilian child protection actors.

15. Regarding displacement, disregard for the fundamental principles of international law is a significant incentive for civilians to flee. The unprecedented number of refugee children and internally displaced children is not the result of conflict alone but of the brutality with which parties conduct hostilities, including by directly targeting children. Increased efforts must be made by the international community to enhance the protection of civilians and respect for international humanitarian law, including through ending impunity. These efforts also need to be coupled with conflict resolution and prevention initiatives.

C. Positive developments regarding engagement with parties to conflict

16. Notwithstanding the challenges to ending violations, there has been clear progress to protect children through dialogue and efforts to achieve conflict resolution and prevention. The United Nations has continued to utilize the “Children, not soldiers” campaign and to leverage peace processes to engage with a wide range of parties in order to gain commitments to protect children.

17. In this regard, the Security Council continues to have a crucial role to play to facilitate and encourage dialogue on child protection. When these efforts are fruitful and political space is opened, the protection needs of children can be addressed in negotiations and mainstreamed in peace agreements. The importance of this work has been demonstrated during the reporting period, with the continued direct engagement of the United Nations in support of the talks between the Government of Colombia and the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia — Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP). This important development builds on previous interactions, which have proved that engagement on issues such as the separation, release and handover of children can provide an entry point for difficult or protracted negotiations.

18. Other engagements by the United Nations with non-State armed groups resulted in the signing of two new action plans in Mali and the Sudan, while in the Central African Republic 3,897 children were separated from armed groups and in the Philippines more than 1,850 children were separated from the military wing of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF).

19. Moving forward, the progress achieved through the “Children, not soldiers” campaign to strengthen national capacity has helped to lay the foundations in a number of countries for strengthened engagement with non-State armed groups. I urge concerned Member States to support engagement with non-State actors on child protection and note that these initiatives can strongly contribute to peacemaking and conflict prevention efforts.

III. Information on violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

Afghanistan

20. The security situation in Afghanistan deteriorated in 2016, with intensifying armed clashes between the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and the Taliban affecting children throughout the country. The United Nations verified 3,512 child casualties, the highest number ever recorded in the country and an increase of 24 per cent compared with 2015; almost 1 in 3 civilian casualties was a child casualty.

Grave violations

21. The United Nations verified 96 cases of child recruitment and use of children, double the number of cases verified in 2015. Armed groups remained the main perpetrators of recruitment and use of children, with 84 verified cases, of which 69 (including 1 girl) were attributed to the Taliban (a threefold increase compared with 2015); 10 to ISIL-Khorasan Province (ISIL-KP), while 5 could not be attributed to a specific group. In addition, there were unverified reports of recruitment affecting more than 3,000 children, mostly by armed groups including Taliban and ISIL-KP.

22. A total of 11 verified cases of recruitment and use of children were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, of which 7 were perpetrated by the Afghan National Police; 2 by the Afghan Local Police; 1 by the Afghan National Police and Afghan Local Police at a joint checkpoint; and 1 by the Afghan National Army, while 1 verified case was attributed to pro-government militias. In addition to being used as checkpoint guards or as bodyguards, 3 of the boys were reportedly also sexually abused and exploited for the purposes of bacha bazi.

23. As at December, the Government reported that 167 boys were held in juvenile rehabilitation centres on national security-related charges, including for association with armed groups. The United Nations remains concerned about the detention of these children in adult detention centres, particularly the large increase in children detained in the maximum security detention facility in Parwan, where 133 juveniles were held in December compared with 53 juveniles held in January.

24. The United Nations verified 3,512 child casualties in Afghanistan in 2016 (923 killed and 2,589 injured). Ground engagements and explosive remnants of war were the leading causes.

25. Of these, 273 children were killed and 674 injured by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, 12 were killed and 41 injured by the pro-government militias and 3 were injured in joint operations of Afghan National Defence and Security Forces/pro-government militias. In addition, 87 casualties were attributed to international military forces, 19 were attributed to joint operations involving Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, pro-government militias or international military forces and 19 were attributed to undetermined armed forces. Trends of concern include a doubling of child casualties (200) resulting from air strikes and a 33 per cent increase of child casualties attributed to pro-government militias. In addition, 10 child casualties resulted from cross-border shelling from Pakistan.

26. Armed groups perpetrated 1,447 child casualties, including 1,093 attributed to the Taliban, 100 attributed to ISIL-KP, 4 attributed to Hizb-i Islami, 1 attributed to the Haqqani Network, 7 attributed to two or more groups and 242 to undetermined armed groups.

27. The United Nations verified 7 cases of sexual violence: 5 incidents were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and 2 to the Taliban. These incidents included children being raped at Afghan National Police and Afghan Local Police checkpoints as well as the abduction and forced marriage of a nine-year-old girl by the Taliban. As at early 2017, the United Nations had not received any information regarding actions taken against the perpetrators.

28. Verified attacks on schools and education personnel decreased to 77 incidents, compared with 132 in 2015. Intensive fighting between the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and the Taliban led to schools being hit in crossfire. Of the verified incidents, 51 were attributed to the Taliban, 7 to ISIL-KP and 12 to undetermined armed groups; 23 incidents directly targeted girls' education; 4 incidents were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (3 to the Afghan National Army, 1 undetermined); and 1 incident was jointly attributed to the Afghan National Army and the Taliban.

29. The United Nations verified 118 incidents of attacks on health facilities and personnel, of which 106 were attributed to armed groups, including 84 to the Taliban, 1 to Hizb-i-Islami and 1 to ISIL-KP. The targeting of, and threats against, polio workers by armed groups remained a particular concern.<sup>2</sup> In addition, 9 incidents were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, 1 was attributed to pro-government militias and 1 was jointly attributed to the Afghan National Army and international military forces.

30. The United Nations also documented the military use of 34 schools and 13 health facilities by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces. In addition, 1 school was used by pro-government militias. Armed groups were responsible for the military use of 7 schools and 10 health facilities. In a positive development, in 2016 the Ministry of Education promulgated two directives instructing the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces to stop using schools for military purposes.

31. The United Nations verified 10 incidents of abduction affecting 20 boys and 1 girl. A total of 13 children were abducted by armed groups (11 by the Taliban and 2 by ISIL-KP), including on account of their perceived affiliation with the Government; 1 verified incident was attributed to the Afghan National Army and 1 to the Afghan Local Police, affecting 8 children; and in September, the Afghan National Army took 7 boys from a school to pressure the Taliban to release a soldier.

32. Of 155 reported incidents of denial of humanitarian access, 98 were verified, including 46 incidents of threats and 10 incidents of attacks against humanitarian workers. Armed groups perpetrated 94 incidents, including the abduction of humanitarian workers; 2 incidents were also attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces.

Developments and concerns

33. I commend the Government for the significant progress made in implementing its action plan to end and prevent child recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, notably through the establishment of child protection units in Afghan National Police recruitment centres and the issuance of ministerial directives, including the decision of the National Directorate for Security prohibiting the transfer of children to the detention facility in Parwan.

34. Notwithstanding this progress, I am concerned that children continue to be detained in the detention facility in Parwan, and I call upon the Government to transfer them to juvenile rehabilitation centres in accordance with national directives and in line with international obligations under international law and international standards. Moreover, while important advances to strengthen age assessment processes in Afghan National Police recruitment centres were realized, the lack of corresponding procedures for Afghan Local Police recruitment, as well as the continued reliance on pro-government militias for which no recruitment oversight mechanisms are evident, remain cause for concern.

35. Lastly, regarding killing and maiming, I am deeply concerned about the increase of child casualties and urge the Government and other parties to conflict to take urgent action to better protect children.

Central African Republic

36. Notwithstanding a relatively stable election process in early 2016, intercommunal violence and conflict persisted across the country. The Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) extended its presence eastwards and opposed the ex-Séléka coalition reunification attempt by the Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique (FPRC).

37. Documented violations affecting children decreased by half compared with 2015, notwithstanding an increase in cases of recruitment and use of children. Incidents of violations also grew at the end of 2016 as a result of clashes between ex-Séléka and anti-balaka elements in Kaga Bandoro, as well as among ex-Séléka elements in Ouaka and Haute-Kotto Prefectures.

Grave violations

38. The number of children recruited and used increased by almost 50 per cent, with 50 boys and 24 girls affected, including some children as young as nine. Cases were attributed to the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) (56), FPRC (9), anti-balaka elements (4), UPC (4) and the Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC) (1).

39. A total of 66 children, including 27 girls, were killed (34) or maimed (32), the youngest being two months old. Child casualties resulted from targeted and stray bullets, stabbing and explosive remnants of war. FPRC, MPC and their coalition were responsible for the killing of 10 and maiming of 13 children; 9 casualties were attributed to anti-balaka elements, 7 each were attributed to UPC and the Retour, réclamation et réhabilitation group, 5 were attributed to armed Fulani elements and 2 were attributed to LRA.

40. The United Nations verified that 55 girls were victims of rape and other forms of sexual violence. Most incidents occurred in the Bangui PK5 neighbourhood, Ouaka prefecture and other areas controlled by armed groups. Perpetrators included anti-balaka elements (13), FPRC (6), MPC (6), PK5 self-defence group in Bangui (5), undetermined ex-Séléka elements (5), LRA (4), the Révolution et justice group (4) and UPC (3). There were also 2 incidents of sexual violence committed by government elements and 1 incident of attempted rape and 2 incidents of rapes committed by the Uganda People's Defence Force.

41. The United Nations verified 8 attacks on schools and protected personnel by LRA, MPC, RPRC, the FPRC/MPC coalition and anti-balaka elements. In October, 3 schoolteachers were killed by elements of the FPRC/MPC coalition who invaded a school in Kaga Bandoro and 1 teacher was stabbed by ex-Séléka elements in Bamou.

42. A total of 22 schools were used by armed groups, who claimed that the facilities were disused. In September, the United Nations issued press releases condemning the practice and, subsequently, MPC and FDPC vacated 6 schools, while 3 other schools were vacated by UPC and FRPC but were later reused. United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic (MINUSCA) troops used 2 schools in late 2016 and early 2017. Once informed, MINUSCA vacated the schools in accordance with its 2015 directive on the protection of schools and universities.

43. A total of 16 attacks against hospitals and medical personnel were verified, including by anti-balaka elements, LRA, FPRC, UPC, RPRC and the FPRC/MPC coalition. For example, on 12 October, anti-balaka elements invaded a health centre at a site for internally displaced persons in Kaga Bandoro, killed 1 mother and 1 baby and looted medical supplies.

44. The number of verified incidents of abduction almost doubled compared with 2015, with 38 incidents affecting 66 boys and 32 girls. LRA was responsible for the abduction of 84 children, while 43 children escaped from LRA during 2016, some of whom had been held in captivity since 2011. Following United Nations advocacy, anti-balaka elements released 4 Fulani children abducted in 2013.

45. Denial of humanitarian access remained a concern, with 72 verified incidents of killing, looting and threats against humanitarian workers. The majority of cases were attributed to anti-balaka elements, FPRC and other unidentified ex-Séléka elements. Moreover, LRA seemed to target non-governmental organizations for communication equipment. The national police and gendarmerie also arbitrarily arrested 5 humanitarian workers.

46. I urge MPC and FPRC to expeditiously fulfil their pledges to end and prevent grave violations, identify associated children and negotiate action plans. In this regard, I am encouraged that dialogue with anti-balaka local commanders, the Groupe des patriotes, the Révolution et justice group, RPRC and FPRC resulted in the handover of children.

47. A total of 2,691 boys and 1,206 girls, some as young as eight, were separated from armed groups (70 per cent from anti-balaka elements). The community-based nature of some groups represented a risk of re-recruitment for children and tailored programmes sponsored by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) were put in place. However, lack of funding and the resumption of violence impeded reintegration efforts.

48. Breaking the cycle of impunity in the Central African Republic must be prioritized and I call on all parties and partners to support accountability efforts, including the work of the Special Criminal Court, as well as through the framework of the African Initiative for Peace and Reconciliation led by the African Union.

49. Sexual exploitation and abuse of children by peacekeepers, whether under the command of the United Nations or other international arrangements, continued to be a serious protection concern in the Central African Republic (for more information, see A/71/818).

Colombia

50. The year 2016 was marked by the signing of a final peace agreement between the Government and FARC-EP and preparations for dialogue with the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN). Armed violence between the Colombian military and FARC-EP reached its lowest level in 50 years. Since FARC-EP committed itself to ending child recruitment in the context of the peace talks, the overall number of recruitment cases has dropped, although cases by ELN and dissident fronts of FARC-EP were reported towards the end of the year. According to data provided by the Government's Victim Assistance and Comprehensive Reparation Unit, displacement decreased compared with 2015 and affected approximately 70,000 victims, more than 45 per cent of whom were children. Despite a decline in conflict intensity and the withdrawal of FARC-EP, the presence of non-State armed groups, such as ELN and post-demobilization groups, as well as FARC-EP dissident fronts, continued to pose child protection challenges.

51. The recruitment and use of 151 boys and 79 girls was verified. Most of these children were recruited before 2016. The majority had been associated with FARC-EP (105) and ELN (102). For example, in February, a 16-year-old boy was handed over to humanitarian workers in Arauca, 11 months after his recruitment by FARC-EP. In October in Cauca, the Colombian military handed over to the Colombian Family Welfare Institute a pregnant girl of seventeen who had escaped from ELN. Other cases were attributed to post-demobilization groups (11) and the Ejército Popular de Liberación (3).

52. The United Nations verified the killing of 6 children and maiming of 2 children by landmines and unexploded ordnances, a sharp decrease following the 2015 demining agreement between the Government and FARC-EP. There were also developments regarding the accountability of Colombian military members who had killed children in the context of the armed conflict.

53. The number of verified cases of sexual violence remained low, with 3 girls affected. The peace agreement indicated that sexual violence-related crimes would not be subject to amnesty. Progress was made in fighting impunity, with a member of the Colombian military sentenced to 14 years of imprisonment in January for raping a 14 year-old girl in Cundinamarca in 2012.

54. The United Nations verified 6 attacks on schools and 3 cases of military use. Damage to schools occurred during crossfire between the Colombian military and ELN and as a result of landmines planted by unknown perpetrators. A school in Arauca was also damaged in an aerial bombing by the Colombian military in September. Allegations of teachers being threatened by armed groups, such as ELN and the Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia, were also received.

55. The final peace agreement between the Government and FARC-EP included an important provision on the best interests of the child and the primacy of children's rights in all areas of implementation. Moreover, the amnesty law approved by Congress in December included a special provision on children, requiring the State not to prosecute those who were under eighteen when they committed acts in the context of armed conflict.

56. I strongly commend the Government of Colombia and the FARC-EP leadership for the signature of the peace agreement. I note that successful implementation requires dedicated resources, sustained political will and effective coordination to address remaining challenges. In particular, I encourage the strengthening of institutional capacity at the local level and expansion of community-level prevention programmes to address the root causes of recruitment and use of children. I also call upon subregional organizations to support these processes.

57. In related developments, a Constitutional Court decision in February confirmed that all children recruited by armed groups, including post-demobilization groups, were victims and as such were entitled to reparations and reintegration support under the law on victims' rights and land restitution.

58. As reflected in my country report on the situation of children in Colombia (S/2016/837), one key achievement was the May agreement between the Government and FARC-EP on the separation of children. In September, 13 children were released by FARC-EP. In addition, presidential decree 1753 was issued in November to ensure that armed groups prepare a list of children for separation. Parties also agreed on the development of a special programme for the restoration of rights, reintegration and reparations for all separated children under eighteen. However, the operational modalities of the special programme remained to be defined as at early 2017.

59. As stipulated in the peace agreement and at the request of the Government, a United Nations political mission of observers was deployed to monitor and verify the bilateral ceasefire and laying down of arms, as part of a tripartite monitoring and verification mechanism. As FARC-EP are laying down arms, I urge parties to continue to identify recruited children, prevent informal demobilization and ensure an adequate child protection response to prevent retaliation or re-recruitment by other groups, as well as to provide health and education services to the most vulnerable communities.

60. I am concerned at the increasing numbers of cases of the recruitment and use of children attributed to armed groups, in particular ELN, and I call on them to take immediate steps to end this practice. Furthermore, I call upon the negotiating parties to take the issue of child recruitment fully into consideration in the ongoing peace talks between the Government and ELN.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

61. The security situation in the east of the country remained volatile and was marked by military operations by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC) against armed groups. The situation deteriorated in North Kivu, with the appearance of new armed groups, as well as violence between the Hutu and Nande communities. There were also clashes among Twa and Luba communities in Tanganyika and between security forces and the Kamuina Nsapu militia in the Kasai provinces. While information regarding violations committed in the Kasai provinces was pending verification in early 2017, the magnitude and nature of allegations received was alarming.

62. A total of 2,334 grave violations were verified. The number of child casualties increased by 75 per cent compared with 2015 and was the highest since 2012.

Grave violations

63. The United Nations verified the new recruitment and use of 492 children (including 63 girls) by armed groups, 82 per cent of which occurred in North Kivu; 129 of those children were under fifteen at the time of recruitment. The main perpetrators were the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) (141), Nyatura (122), the Mai-Mai Mazembe (44) and the Force de résistance patriotique de l'Ituri (FRPI) (40). Almost one third of the children were also victims of other violations during their association. Verification of the number of children recruited and used by militias of the Twa and Luba communities and by the Kamuina Nsapu militia was ongoing as at early 2017. In addition, 28 boys were identified among the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition elements extracted by the United Nations from the Garamba National Park in September.

64. In 2016, FARDC handed over to the United Nations 193 children allegedly associated with armed groups, including from Angenga prison, Mongala province, some of whom had been detained by national authorities for up to one year. As at early 2017, 21 boys were still detained by FARDC, including 3 for more than six months.

65. At least 124 children were killed and 116 maimed, including 41 due to crossfire and 34 due to unexploded ordnances. Mai-Mai Mazembe (49), FDLR (23) and the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) (19) were the main perpetrators. Furthermore, 110 children were allegedly killed and maimed by machete during the Twa-Luba violence in Tanganyika Province, while 20 child casualties were attributed to FARDC and 4 to the Congolese National Police. In December, the outbreak of violence in the Kasai region resulted in the maiming of at least 4 boys by FARDC and in the alleged killing of 1 baby boy by the Kamuina Nsapu militia. More allegations were being verified as at early 2017.

66. The rape of 170 girls and 1 boy was verified, with 87 violations taking place in North Kivu and 50 in Ituri. The main perpetrators among armed groups were FRPI (42), FDLR (14) and Nyatura (10). FARDC was responsible for 64 cases, including 1 boy in detention, the Congolese National Police for 12 cases and the Agence nationale de renseignement for 1 case.

67. A total of 68 attacks on schools (51) and hospitals (17) were verified, a significant increase compared with 2015. Perpetrators included Twa militia (13), ADF (8), Mai-Mai Simba (4), Mai-Mai Raia Mutomboki (4) and FRPI (3). In Butembo in October, an FARDC rocket hit a school and killed 2 girls and 2 teachers and injured 4 children. In addition, 51 schools and a health centre were allegedly damaged by militias from the Twa and Luba communities. The verification of allegations of a high number of attacks on schools in the Kasai region by the Kamuina Nsapu militia and FARDC was ongoing as at early 2017.

68. A total of 19 schools and 2 hospitals were used for up to several weeks by FARDC (14), the Congolese National Police (1) and armed groups (6) in North Kivu, Tanganyika and South Kivu.

69. A total of 137 boys and 56 girls were abducted, mostly by FDLR (29), FRPI (26), LRA (25), ADF (23) and Nyatura (13), while 4 abductions, including 3 for sexual purposes, were attributed to FARDC. At least 114 children were abducted for recruitment purposes.

70. In terms of denial of humanitarian access, 2 threats against humanitarian workers by Nduma Défense du Congo-Rénové and the Agence nationale de renseignement were verified. In addition, in North and South Kivu, at least 4 humanitarian workers lost their lives and 33 were kidnapped.

Developments and concerns

71. I commend the Government's continued and strong commitment to the action plan. While efforts need to be sustained to end and prevent sexual violence by FARDC and to ensure accountability for perpetrators of grave violations, I welcome the significant steps taken to fulfil the provisions of the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. This includes the establishment of an additional joint technical working group, the validation of standard operating procedures for age verification, the adoption of a Ministry of Defence directive for the dissemination of those standard operating procedures within FARDC and the screening of new recruits. I am encouraged that, for the second year in a row, no new case of child recruitment and use by FARDC was documented. In terms of accountability, the United Nations documented the arrest of at least 15 FARDC and 5 Congolese National Police officers, including for child recruitment and use of children offences before 2016, while 41 individuals (23 FARDC, 11 Congolese National Police, 1 Mouvement du 23 mars and 6 Nyatura) received sentences ranging from three years of imprisonment to the death penalty for sexual violence against children. The Government indicated that perpetrators of sexual violence against children were sentenced in 129 instances.

72. In July, the Government also endorsed the Safe Schools Declaration. Lastly, the Government provided multisectoral assistance to child victims of recruitment and use and child survivors of sexual violence.

73. Despite these advances, I am concerned by the reported levels of killing and maiming of children attributed to FARDC, particularly in the Kasai region where there were allegations of the disproportionate use of force, and I urge the Government to take immediate action to prevent child casualties and ensure accountability for any criminal acts, in accordance with its obligations under international law.

74. The United Nations provided technical support and screened more than 7,512 members of FARDC, the Congolese National Police, the Direction générale de migration and the Agence nationale de renseignement, and separated 191 children in recruitment centres during the screening of new recruits. Awareness-raising by the United Nations and military pressure also contributed to the separation of 1,662 children from armed groups (177 girls), including from FDLR (585), Nyatura (354), FRPI (115) and Mai-Mai Raia Mutomboki (93). In 2016, the Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain signed a deed of commitment to protect children in collaboration with the non-governmental organization Geneva Call. However, the Alliance had not signed an action plan with the United Nations as at early 2017.

Iraq

75. Conflict intensified throughout 2016, particularly in Anbar and Ninewa Governorates, with large-scale operations to retake territory from ISIL in Fallujah and Mosul. In addition, suicide and other asymmetric attacks by armed groups had a significant impact on children.

Grave violations

76. At least 168 boys were reportedly recruited and used by parties to the conflict, including ISIL, the People's Defence Forces of the Kurdish Workers Party and the popular mobilization forces. The United Nations verified 114 cases: 40 verified cases were attributed to ISIL in Anbar, Babil, Baghdad, Diyala, Kirkuk and Ningwa, with 28 boys recruited as fighters, 11 as suicide bombers and 1 as a spy. Children were also allegedly used as human shields by ISIL. A total of 57 children were recruited and used by groups operating under the umbrella of the popular mobilization forces, most of whom received military training and were deployed for combat, while 12 children were recruited by tribal mobilization groups, including from internally displaced persons camps. Five boys were also recruited by the People's Defence Forces

77. As at December, at least 463 children, including 172 in the Kurdistan region of Iraq, remained in detention on national security-related charges, including association with armed groups. There have been allegations of detention and ill-treatment of children by security forces during the screening of civilians from areas formerly held by ISIL and the Government of Iraq requested United Nations assistance to undertake training to prevent abuse of children during screening.

78. The killing and maiming of children remained the most prevalent grave violation. The United Nations recorded 257 incidents, resulting in 834 child casualties of which 138 were verified, resulting in the killing of 229 children (145 boys, 58 girls, 26 sex unknown) and injuries to 181 children (129 boys, 44 girls, 8 sex unknown). ISIL was responsible for at least 13 incidents of targeted attacks against children, including torture. A total of 66 verified incidents resulted from the use of improvised explosive devices, particularly by ISIL, while public areas, security forces and Shia ceremonies were also targeted: 32 incidents of killing and maiming of children were attributed to Iraqi security forces and the international counter-ISIL coalition (30), the Peshmerga (1) and the popular mobilization forces (1), resulting from mortars and rocket attacks, air strikes and artillery shelling. As at early 2017, the Government was working with the United Nations Mine Action Service to remove mines from areas previously under the control of ISIL.

79. One incident of sexual violence was verified, involving a 17-year-old boy who was raped by a member of an unidentified armed group. While concerns of widespread sexual violence perpetrated by ISIL persisted, the violation remained underreported.

80. A total of 10 attacks on schools and education personnel were verified: 2 schools were damaged by air strikes in Mosul, 1 of which was used by ISIL; 3 other schools were damaged during fighting in Kirkuk and Ningwa; 4 teachers were abducted, killed or injured; and teachers were threatened by ISIL in at least 1 other incident. Attacks on 8 health facilities and personnel were verified: 2 hospitals were damaged by air strikes in Ningwa; 3 by were damaged by mortars in Anbar; and medical personnel were targeted in 3 incidents in Diyala and Salah al-Din. Of the 18 verified attacks on education and health facilities and personnel, 8 were attributed to ISIL, 3 to air strikes by Iraqi or international forces and 1 to the popular mobilization forces, while 6 could not be attributed. A further 18 attacks were recorded but could not be verified.

81. The United Nations documented 41 incidents of the military use of schools and hospitals: 34 schools were used by ISIL as military positions, depots and training facilities in Anbar, Kirkuk and Ningwa; 3 schools were used by Iraqi security forces as screening centres in Ningwa; 1 school was used by the popular mobilization forces in Ningwa; and 2 hospitals were reportedly used by ISIL as military positions.

82. The United Nations verified 8 incidents of abduction involving 9 boys and 3 girls: 7 cases were attributed to ISIL (6 boys in Ningwa and 1 girl in Salah al-Din), while the perpetrators of the remaining cases in Diyala, Kerbala and Salah al-Din could not be confirmed. A further 7 incidents of abduction involving 26 children were reported but could not be verified. Moreover, as at 31 December, it is believed that approximately 1,700 women and children remained ISIL captives.

83. A total of 3 incidents of denial of humanitarian access to children were verified: in 1 case in Ningwa, a boy died when ISIL denied him access to critical medical assistance. In addition, it was reported that screening processes for civilians leaving areas formerly held by ISIL in Ningwa and Salah al-Din were used to deny access of children to assistance.

Developments and concerns

84. The continued level of violations by ISIL was gravely disturbing. I am also gravely concerned by the recruitment and use of children by pro-government forces. In this regard, the United Nations raised concerns with the Government and the Kurdistan region of Iraq authorities regarding the recruitment and use of children by the popular mobilization forces. Given that these forces formally came under the purview of the Government at the end of 2016, I urge the authorities to ensure that recruitment is in line with Law No. 3/2010, article 30 (2), to establish appropriate age verification mechanisms and separate any children currently in the ranks, and to pursue accountability for the recruitment and use of children and other violations against children.

Israel and State of Palestine

85. The first half of 2016 was marked by continued levels of violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, with clashes between Palestinians and Israeli security forces and a number of attacks against Israelis. Children in Israel and the State of Palestine continued to be affected by violence, security responses and the prevailing situation of military occupation and closure.

Grave violations

86. The United Nations did not receive reports of the recruitment and use of children in 2016; however, this violation is difficult to document, particularly in Gaza.

87. An increasing number of children from the West Bank were detained by Israeli forces for alleged security violations. Monthly figures provided by the Israel Prison Service indicated that the numbers of Palestinian children in military detention reached the highest levels recorded since 2010, with 444 children (including 15 girls) detained as at the end of March, although this number had decreased to 271 as at September. In East Jerusalem, the United Nations documented 712 cases of Palestinian children detained for security-related offences, including 15 children under twelve, which is the age of criminal responsibility. Following the resumption of the administrative detention of Palestinian children by Israeli authorities in 2015, 10 cases were documented in 2016. The United Nations also documented a total of 185 incidents of ill-treatment of children (175 boys, 10 girls) by Israeli forces during arrests and detention.

88. A total of 36 children (35 Palestinian boys, 1 Israeli girl) were killed and 900 children (887 Palestinian, 13 Israeli) were injured, predominantly in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

89. In the West Bank, 31 Palestinian boys were killed and all but 1 of the killings were attributed to Israeli forces: 15 children were killed while allegedly perpetrating stabbing attacks, 3 while carrying out stabbing attacks, 11 during military and search operations and 1 during demonstrations. Frequent use of live ammunition was documented, killing 30 Palestinian children. A number of cases raise concerns about excessive use of force. For example, on 20 September, an eyewitness stated that Israeli forces continued shooting at a sixteen-year-old boy in Bani Na'im after he had fallen to the ground following initial gunshots to his legs.

90. A total of 857 Palestinian children (797 boys, 60 girls) were injured in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem: 465 children were injured by Israeli forces during arrest operations or demonstrations, 356 during clashes and 4 in response to stabbing or alleged stabbing attacks. In addition, 29 Palestinian children were injured by Israeli settlers and 3 by unexploded ordnances.

91. In the Qiryat Arba' settlement, 1 thirteen-year-old Israeli girl was stabbed to death by 1 seventeen-year-old Palestinian boy who was subsequently killed by an Israeli settler, while in the West Bank 11 Israeli children were injured: 10 children were injured by Palestinian civilians in incidents of stone-throwing (8) and gunfire (2) towards vehicles and 1 child was injured by shrapnel from live ammunition fired by Israeli forces.

92. In Gaza, 3 boys were killed by Israeli forces and 30 children (27 boys, 3 girls) were injured: 25 children were injured by Israeli forces, 4 by unexploded ordnances and 1 by crossfire. On 12 March, 1 six-year-old boy and 1 nine-year-old boy were killed and their twelve-year-old brother was injured when Israeli security forces fired missiles in response to rocket fire into Israel at a site reportedly used by the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades adjacent to their home in Baht Lahya.

93. In Israel, after he reportedly stabbed and injured an Israeli civilian, 1 seventeen-year-old Palestinian boy was killed in Petah Tiqua on 8 March. At least 2 Israeli children were injured in attacks by Palestinians conducted in Israel, including in a suicide attack on a bus in West Jerusalem on 18 April, which Hamas praised.

94. In the West Bank, the United Nations documented 74 incidents of attacks on schools or protected persons in the context of operations by Israeli security forces, clashes in and around schools or closure of schools as a result of attacks, with over 8,000 students affected, particularly in Bethlehem, Hebron, Nablus and Ramallah Governorates. Incidents resulted in damage to 3 schools, injury and physical assault of students: 68 incidents were attributed to Israeli security forces and 6 to Israeli settlers. The United Nations also documented the disruption of access to education resulting from the closure of schools, search operations, detention of students and school personnel, as well as delays to the schedules of students and teachers caused by checkpoints.

95. The United Nations documented the confiscation of a donor-funded mobile health clinic by the Israeli authorities in December, which affected access to health-care services for 93 children in the Markez and Halawah communities in Hebron Governorate. In 2016, 26 per cent of child applications to cross the Erez checkpoint out of Gaza for medical treatment were delayed, affecting 2,490 children (1,026 girls, 1,464 boys), and 1 per cent were denied, affecting 87 children, representing the highest percentage of delayed and denied applications since 2010.

Developments and concerns

96. I note with grave concern the ongoing killing and maiming of children in Israel and the State of Palestine and voice my preoccupation regarding the potential recruitment and use of children in Gaza. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations under international law in order to protect children. I also call upon the Government of Israel to reconsider its imposition of administrative detention for children and to prioritize alternatives to detention in line with international juvenile justice principles contained in, inter alia, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (the Beijing Rules).

Lebanon

97. Heavy clashes in the north Bīqā' valley and the Ein El-Helweh Palestine refugee camp, bomb attacks and sporadic violence in border areas continued to have an impact on children.

Grave violations

98. The United Nations documented the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, with several dozen uniformed boys seen with arms in Aرسال, north Bīqā' valley. Armed groups, including ISIL and the Nusrah Front (also known as Jabhat Fath al-Sham) were active on the outskirts of Aرسال in the reporting period. Consistent with my previous reports, boys were reportedly trafficked to fight in the Syrian Arab Republic. Children from northern Baalbek-Hermel Governorate reportedly joined Hizbullah. Other children, mostly from Wadi Khalid in Akkar or Aرسال, allegedly joined ISIL. A total of 18 children, including 4 children from twelve to fourteen years old, were also seen wearing uniforms and, in most cases, holding weapons during patrols or celebrations in 2 Palestine refugee camps in southern Lebanon.

99. Children continue to be held in pretrial detention under military jurisdiction on charges relating to terrorism or national security, following their alleged association with armed groups in Lebanon or the Syrian Arab Republic: 10 boys were arrested during the reporting period and 6 remained in detention as at December, along with 3 others detained before 2016.

100. The United Nations verified 8 child casualties (4 boys, 4 girls) caused by stray bullets, shrapnel during clashes and a car bomb. The majority of cases were documented in Bekaa Governorate.

101. Two United Nations schools were damaged during violence between armed factions in Ein el-Helweh Palestine refugee camp and 1 school in Beirut was damaged by a car bomb explosion, while 4 cases of attacks on health services were verified in Baalbek-Hermel Governorate (3) and the Ein el-Helweh refugee camp (1). On 27 June, 1 medical professional was killed and 1 ambulance was destroyed in multiple suicide attacks on the village of al-Qaa in northern Bīqa'.

102. Following repeated armed clashes in the Ein el-Helweh camp, 19 United Nations schools suspended classes for 1 to 10 days, with over 10,000 students affected, while 2 United Nations health centres also suspended activities for 11 to 13 days.

103. In the light of the continued recruitment and use of children by armed groups and the continued detention of children for alleged association with armed groups, I reiterate my call for the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, to treat children associated with armed groups primarily as victims and to use the detention of children as a last resort, pursuant to international juvenile justice standards.

Libya

104. Conflict continued throughout Libya, particularly around Benghazi, Sabha, Sirte and Tripoli. In May, forces affiliated with the Presidency Council began an offensive to retake Sirte from ISIL, which lasted until early December. Monitoring continued to be restricted by insecurity, with the majority of United Nations staff remaining located outside Libya.

105. The recruitment and use of children by armed groups was documented. Groups pledging allegiance to ISIL reportedly ran a training camp for children and adolescents south of Sirte. On 4 January, a 15-year-old boy from Tripoli was reportedly used by ISIL to conduct a suicide attack in Sidra'. Children were also deprived of liberty as a result of their alleged association with parties to conflict.

106. At least 51 children were reportedly killed and 68 injured by air strikes, shelling, small arms fire, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war. The highest number of casualties was documented in Benghazi. The United Nations documented a pattern of incidents involving the use of indiscriminate weapons in heavily populated or residential areas.

107. The United Nations documented 14 incidents of attacks against health facilities or personnel across Libya. Shelling, vehicle-borne improvised explosive devices and air strikes killed at least 4 health-care personnel, damaged medical facilities and caused their closure. The abduction of 4 nurses to treat fighters was also documented.

108. The abduction of children continued to be reported, particularly in western Libya. The United Nations verified incidents affecting at least 3 boys and 1 girl. For example, on 4 November, the body of 1 four-year-old girl was found in the al-Ma'mura neighbourhood of Warshafanah, 15 days after she was abducted by an unidentified armed group.

109. The United Nations documented 1 incident of denial of humanitarian access: in August, food assistance for families in Darnah was reportedly confiscated by local authorities and redirected to Ajdabiya.

110. I am concerned about the impact of the volatile security situation on children in Libya. In this regard, I welcome the agreement concluded between the municipality of Zintan and the United Nations for the release and reintegration of children involved in armed conflict and call for support for similar efforts throughout Libya.

Mali

111. The lack of State authority in northern regions led to heightened security threats, which expanded to central regions and caused child casualties and displacement. Progress in the implementation of the 2015 peace accord was stalled as fighting resumed in July between signatory armed groups. The reporting period was also marked by attacks and threats against education personnel, intercommunal tensions and an increase in asymmetric attacks against national and international forces.

112. The presence of children among armed groups remained an issue of concern, with 442 cases of recruitment and use of children, of which 78 were verified and attributed to the Platform coalition of armed groups (54), Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad (CMA) (18) and Al Mourabitoun (3). This represents an increase compared with the 27 cases verified in 2015, which may be attributed to both improved monitoring and renewed fighting. The increase also affected girls. For example, 14 girls were used in support roles by the Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés (GATIA)/the Platform coalition of armed groups in Gao region. In some instances, signatory armed groups inflated their numbers with children to benefit from disarmament, demobilization and reintegration packages. In the context of registration and screening of Platform coalition of armed groups and CMA combatants in Gao in December to establish mixed patrols, 10 children were identified but had still not been handed over to child protection actors as at early 2017.

113. As at December, 5 of 13 children arrested and detained on security charges in 2016 remained in detention. The United Nations continued advocacy with the national authorities to ensure their release in line with the handover protocol signed in 2013.

114. The United Nations verified the killing of 12 children and the maiming of 35 children during rocket attacks and crossfire, as well as in improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war incidents. Almost one third of the victims were injured in Kidal and its vicinity during clashes between the Platform coalition of armed groups and CMA in July and August.

115. Rape and other forms of sexual violence continued to be underreported: 6 cases were documented, of which 2 were verified, including 1 attempted rape of a seven-year-old girl by a member of the Mouvement arabe de l'Azawad-Platform coalition of armed groups and the attempted rape of 1 four-year-old girl by an alleged element of Mouvement pour l'unification et le jihad en Afrique de l'ouest. The 4 unverified cases concerned 4 girls associated with GATIA in the Gao region.

116. A total of 6 attacks and threats of attacks on schools and protected personnel and 9 attacks against medical personnel were verified in Ménaka, Mopti and Timbuktu, none of which could be attributed. On 4 April, an attack by armed individuals against a medical team from Timbuktu led to the suspension of a vaccination campaign. Attacks and threats against educational staff, students and parents were prevalent, particularly in Mopti region. On 11 July, the director of a school was killed by armed elements allegedly hostile to “Western education” and State authorities. As at December, 367 schools remained closed in the conflict-affected regions.

117. In addition, 14 schools were militarily used by armed groups in Gao, Kidal and Timbuktu, of which 2 were vacated by CMA and CMA/Haut Conseil pour l’unité de l’Azawad. The military use of 8 schools by the Platform coalition of armed groups and CMA in Gao and Timbuktu regions was under verification as at March 2017, while 1 facility used by the Malian defence and security forces in Ménaka region was vacated in early 2017.

118. A total of 7 boys from seven to fifteen years old were abducted in 5 verified incidents, 2 of which were perpetrated by CMA: 4 of the incidents, affecting 5 boys including a relative of a CMA commander, occurred in Kidal. In October, 2 other boys under the age of ten, sons of a prominent figure in the peace process, were abducted in Bamako and released three weeks later.

119. A total of 43 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, including armed robbery, carjacking and kidnapping of humanitarian workers, none of which could be attributed. At least 2 entities were forced to temporarily suspend their humanitarian programmes in Mopti and Timbuktu regions.

120. I welcome the signature by CMA of an action plan with the United Nations in March 2017 to end and prevent grave violations against children, which I urge them to swiftly implement. Moreover, in June, the Platform coalition of armed groups signed a unilateral communiqué to address conflict-related sexual violence. However, I am seriously concerned about the high level of cases of recruitment and use of children attributed to the Platform coalition of armed groups, including specifically to GATIA, and I urge the leadership to take immediate action and work with the United Nations to release children and end this practice.

121. In December, following United Nations advocacy, a national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme with child protection provisions was adopted and a senior defence representative was appointed for women and child protection issues within the newly established national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration commission. I encourage all those involved in the cantonment process to implement age assessment mechanisms and ensure that children are identified and transferred to child protection actors. I further encourage subregional organizations to support these efforts.

Myanmar

122. Despite the ongoing peace process between the Government and a number of armed groups, conflict intensified in Kachin and Shan States, while sporadic skirmishes continued in Kayin State and other parts of the south-east.

123. There were also significant outbreaks of violence affecting the Rohingya community in Rakhine State, with the resumption of fighting between the Arakan Army and the Tatmadaw and military operations following separate attacks on border guard posts on 9 October. While the United Nations was not been granted access to the affected areas, accounts of serious human rights violations by government security forces, including killing and maiming of children and sexual violence against children, have been documented.

124. The United Nations received 489 reports of the recruitment and use of children and verified 127 cases (123 boys, 4 girls), 21 of which occurred in 2016: 2 verified cases of use of children in the current reporting period were attributed to the Tatmadaw and 4 cases of recruitment of children were under joint review as at early 2017. An additional 99 verified cases were attributed to the Tatmadaw but occurred before 2016, while 17 verified cases were attributed to armed groups, comprising the Kayan New Land Party (KNLP) (10) and the Kachin Independence Army (KIA) (7).

125. The United Nations documented 9 suspected cases of children held in military detention for being absent without leave from the army: following notification, the Tatmadaw returned them to their regiments pending age verification. In addition, 1 child used as a cook by the Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army was held in military detention following his capture and a number of children as young as 10 have been held by the Border Guard Police in northern Rakhine State on charges of “unlawful association” since November 2016, while 1 thirteen-year old boy died in detention in February 2017.

126. The United Nations documented 51 incidents of killing and maiming of children, of which 19 were verified (6 children killed, 13 injured): 6 verified incidents were attributed to the Tatmadaw, including 2 targeted killings, and 2 incidents each were attributed to KIA and Ta’ang National Liberation Army, and 1 to the Arakan Army. At least 8 cases of the killing of children by security forces in Rakhine State were also documented.

127. The United Nations verified 2 cases of sexual violence against 2 girls (four and nine years old) by Tatmadaw soldiers. Both cases were referred to civilian courts and judicial proceedings were initiated. In addition, at least 7 cases of sexual violence were documented against Rohingya girls as young as eleven during military operations in northern Rakhine State.

128. A total of 6 incidents of attacks on schools were reported, of which 2 could be verified: 1 incident was attributed to the Tatmadaw and 1 incident was jointly attributed to the Tatmadaw and the KIA during crossfire, resulting in the injury of 1 teacher. In addition, 2 cases of military use of schools by the Tatmadaw were documented in Kachin and Rakhine States.

129. The United Nations received 30 reports of the abduction of children, an increase compared with 2015. Verified incidents involved 20 children and were attributed to KIA (5), KNLP (1) and the Tatmadaw (1).

130. Humanitarian access to conflict-affected areas decreased significantly in 2016, especially in Kachin, northern Shan and Rakhine States, in particular following the suspension in October of all access to Rakhine State. In August, the Tatmadaw prevented the delivery of medicine to camps for internally displaced persons in eastern Kachin State.

131. I note the steps taken by the Government towards implementing its action plan, including through issuance of military directives; training on age assessment guidelines; accountability measures taken against 440 military personnel, including 86 officers; and the release of 101 children and youth from the Tatmadaw in 2016. I urge the Government to accelerate the joint age verification process to allow for the expeditious release of child recruits, to continue collaboration on strengthening accountability mechanisms for all perpetrators of grave violations and to finalize all aspects of the joint action plan. In this regard, I encourage the swift passage of the revised Child Law, which includes a chapter on children and armed conflict and corresponding penalties.

132. During 2016, the United Nations engaged with all armed groups listed in the annexes to the present report with a view to ending and preventing violations against children and encouraging the development of action plans. I urge the Government to facilitate the signature of action plans with armed groups, especially those with which they have engaged in peace talks.

Somalia

133. The security situation remained highly volatile, with continued attacks by Al-Shabaab on the Somali security forces, government officials and the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), as well as inter-clan clashes. The Somali National Army and AMISOM continued joint offensives against Al-Shabaab. Military forces of Ethiopia, Kenya and the United States of America also conducted operations against the group.

Grave violations

134. The number of children recruited and used doubled (1,915) compared with 2015 as a result of a twofold increase in cases attributed to Al-Shabaab (1,206). In September, Al-Shabaab compelled elders in the Galguduud region to persuade children to join the group, leading to the recruitment of 100 boys. Children were also recruited and used by clan militias (447), the Somali National Army (182) and Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (78). The use of 17 children by AMISOM was documented.

135. Regarding detention, 386 children were held by the Government for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab. As mentioned in my report on children and armed conflict in Somalia (S/2016/1098), children were captured or arrested during military and security operations, including mass security sweeps or house searches. In May, the Galmudug Interim Administration handed over to child protection actors 44 children allegedly associated with Al-Shabaab whom the group had captured in March. In October, the Puntland authorities also handed over 26 children from twelve to fourteen years old.

136. The Puntland authorities treated as adults 40 other captured children from fifteen to seventeen years old, in contravention of the obligations of Somalia under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; they were given lengthy sentences of 10 to 20 years' imprisonment or even sentenced to death. In January 2017, after sustained high-level United Nations advocacy, the death sentences were commuted to 20 years of imprisonment: at the time of preparation of the present report, those children had been handed over to child protection actors and the United Nations continued to engage with authorities on the legal status of the released children, whose prison sentences remained in effect.

137. A total of 1,121 children were killed and maimed by unknown armed elements (482), Al-Shabaab (290), the Somali National Army (146), clan militias (143), Puntland armed forces (5) and Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (1). Most child casualties resulted from crossfire during military operations, mortar shelling, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war. Among the children killed by Al-Shabaab, at least 30 were publicly executed on suspicion of spying. Child casualties attributed to AMISOM (42) primarily occurred in operations against Al-Shabaab or in indiscriminate fire responding to attacks. Child casualties also resulted from air strikes by the Kenyan defence forces (11) and United States armed forces (1).

138. The United Nations verified incidents of sexual violence affecting 310 girls and 1 boy, attributed to unknown armed elements (96), clan militias (94), the Somali National Army (81), Al-Shabaab (33), Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (3) and Puntland armed forces (1), while 3 cases were attributed to AMISOM. Rape and forced marriage often occurred in the context of abductions; for example, on 16 June, a sixteen-year-old girl, abducted from her house, was gang raped by 5 Somali National Army soldiers in the Bakool region.

139. Attacks on 46 schools and 10 hospitals were verified. Attacks on schools were attributed to Al-Shabaab (31), the Somali National Army (9), Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a and clan militias (2 each) and AMISOM (1). Attacks on hospitals were attributed to Al-Shabaab (5) and clan militias (4). In addition, 1 school and 1 hospital were used by the Somali National Army and 1 health centre by Al-Shabaab. In Gedo region, Ceel Adde secondary school was vacated by AMISOM after being used for six days in January.

140. The number of abductions spiked compared with 2015: 950 children were abducted, 87 per cent of them by Al-Shabaab (827) and most of the others by clan militias (113). Of the cases involving Al-Shabaab, 548 children were abducted for recruitment purposes.

141. Incidents of denial of humanitarian access to children were attributed to clan militias (10), Al-Shabaab (5), the Somali National Army (2) and Puntland armed forces (1). For example, in April in Gedo region, Al-Shabaab ambushed a truck belonging to a non-governmental organization in Ced Adde and stole food, including child nutrition products.

142. I welcome the release of children who had been detained for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab in Puntland and Galmudug and I urge that the legal status of the children released be swiftly resolved. Regarding reintegration, the United Nations supported 604 separated children and provided technical assistance to the Ministry of Defence Child Protection Unit. On 6 January, the Somali National Army Chief of the Defence Forces issued a general staff order stating that an individual must be at least eighteen to enlist. I urge subregional organizations to work with my Special Representative to develop a regional dimension for child protection efforts in Somalia.

143. During her visit to Somalia in July 2016, my Special Representative urged the authorities to implement their 2012 action plans signed with the United Nations and to treat children associated with armed groups primarily as victims, with the best interests of the child and international protection standards as guiding principles. My Special Representative also raised concerns with AMISOM about grave violations.

South Sudan

144. The security situation deteriorated following clashes in Juba in July between the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition, as well as the subsequent split within the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition. Overall in 2016, the level of violations against children remained at a similar level to that of 2015 and displacement continued at high levels.

145. The United Nations verified 169 incidents of recruitment and use affecting at least 1,022 children, 61 per cent of which were attributed to SPLA (574) and other government security forces (50). Children were also recruited and used by the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (115), the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition allied with Taban Deng Gai (207), the South Sudan Democratic Army-Cobra Faction (SSDA-CF) (32), Johnson Olony's armed group (25), the South Sudan People's Patriotic Front (16) and the South Sudan National Liberation Movement (SSNLM) (3). Children were observed wearing military uniforms and carrying weapons in the greater Upper Nile, Equatoria and Bahr el-Ghazal regions. The United Nations verified reports of children transported by SPLA from Jonglei, Lakes and Unity states to other parts of the country for military training and deployment. According to first-hand testimony, in one incident 100 boys were affected, while 40 boys previously released by SSDA-CF were recruited again but following United Nations advocacy all but two were released again.

146. A total of 101 incidents of killing and maiming of children, affecting 108 and 71 children, respectively, were verified, mostly in Western Bahr el-Ghazal and Central Equatoria. Children were killed and maimed by SPLA (104), the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (6), the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition allied to Taban Deng Gai (3) and the South Sudan National Police Service (3). Children were also killed and maimed by crossfire and unexploded ordnances (63). Some were deliberately fired at while fleeing SPLA, including at close range.

147. The United Nations verified 142 cases of sexual violence against girls, including 26 who were gang-raped. Most cases were documented in Unity and Equatoria regions and were attributed to SPLA (114), South Sudan People's Patriotic Front (15), other government security forces (7) and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (6). After the outbreak of conflict in Juba in July, girls were raped as they left the protection of civilian sites or at checkpoints.

148. Attacks on 17 schools and hospitals were reported, including in protection of civilian sites, carried out by SPLA (10) and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (3).

149. Attacks on 28 health facilities and 2 medical personnel were verified, with the majority of cases attributed to SPLA (19) and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (5). More than two thirds of the attacks occurred in the Equatoria region.

150. A total of 21 schools were newly used for military purposes, with the majority of cases attributed to SPLA (10) and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (7).

151. A total of 17 incidents of abduction were verified, affecting approximately 180 children mostly in Unity and Western Equatoria, with the majority attributed to SPLA, SSPPF and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition. In 1 large-scale incident in Unity, approximately 100 boys as young as fourteen were abducted by SPLA for recruitment purposes and transferred to Juba for military training.

152. A total of 445 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, almost twice as many as in 2015. Most incidents were attributed to SPLA (182) and government security forces and institutions (179), followed by the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (54). Incidents included attacks on personnel and compounds, looting of warehouses and humanitarian assets, and bureaucratic constraints and restriction of movement. In a particularly troubling example in Upper Nile in May, SPLA fired on humanitarian workers attempting to reach populations in need.

153. The scale of violations affecting children in South Sudan continued to be alarming. I urge leaders to abide by their responsibilities to protect children, I call upon all parties to cooperate with the African Union in the implementation of the peace agreement and I encourage the inclusion of child protection concerns in the national dialogue.

154. I am concerned that the implementation of the action plan by SPLA and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition has stalled as a result of the ongoing conflict. In this regard, I call upon these parties to resume the implementation of their action plans and note that the action plan for the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition applies equally to any splinter elements. It is encouraging, however, that following United Nations advocacy, 32 boys in Unity, were released by SPLA (25) and the South Sudan National Wildlife Service (7). In Jonglei, 148 boys were released, including 3 associated with SPLA, 120 associated with SSSA-CF and 25 associated with the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition.

Sudan

155. Hostilities continued in early 2016 but reduced in the second half of the year. In Darfur, military operations by the Government focused on dislodging the Sudan Liberation Army/Abdul Wahid from Jebel Mara. In June, the Government announced a unilateral ceasefire in Darfur although skirmishes continued. At the same time, there were confrontations between the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-N) in Blue Nile and Southern Kordofan States. In April and June, respectively, SPLM-N and the Government announced ceasefires, which were still in place as at early 2017; however, hostilities continued sporadically and access for the United Nations to areas under the control of SPLM-N remained constrained. A detailed account of the effects of armed conflict on children is available in my country report (S/2017/191).

Grave violations: Darfur

156. While allegations regarding the recruitment and use of 5 boys were received, only 1 was verified and attributed to the former Liberation and Justice Movement in Central Darfur.

157. A total of 109 incidents of killing and maiming affecting 199 children (85 killed, 114 maimed) were verified, resulting mostly from shooting (94), unexploded ordnances (55) and aerial bombardments (42): these were attributed to government forces (39) (Sudanese Armed Forces, rapid support forces, national police forces, popular defence forces, National Intelligence and Security Service), pro-government militias (7) and unidentified armed men (37), while 24 incidents related to unexploded ordnances.

158. Incidents of rape affecting 94 girls and 1 boy were verified and attributed to government forces (20) (Sudanese Armed Forces, rapid support forces, Central Reserve Police, national police forces, pro-government militias (18) and the Sudan-Chad Joint Forces (1). Unidentified armed men were responsible for 30 incidents. While efforts were made by the Government to address impunity for crimes of sexual violence against children, only 9 cases resulted in the arrest and sentencing of perpetrators.

159. A total of 20 schools and 6 hospitals were attacked, destroyed and/or looted by the Sudanese Armed Forces (15), the rapid support forces (1), tribal militias (2) and unidentified armed men (8), most as a result of aerial bombardments in Jebel Marra; 3 schools in Central Darfur were also reportedly used by the Sudanese Armed Forces in 2016.

160. A total of 18 incidents of abduction affecting 15 boys and 6 girls were verified and attributed to pro-government militias (10), the Sudanese Armed Forces (2) and unidentified armed men (6).

161. A total of 14 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, such as attacks on humanitarian workers and bureaucratic constraints and restriction of movement, were verified, including 11 by the Sudanese Armed Forces and 1 by the Sudanese Liberation Army/Abdul Wahid. Access continued to be severely impeded, particularly in eastern Jebel Marra.

Grave violations: Southern Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei

162. The United Nations received allegations of recruitment and use of boys between twelve and seventeen years old by government forces, particularly in Blue Nile, and by the SPLM-N in the greater Upper Nile region, South Sudan, although no cases could be verified.

163. The killing (2) and maiming (6) of 6 boys and 2 girls was verified and attributed to SPLM-N (2), the Sudanese Armed Forces (1) and the rapid support forces (1); 2 children were also affected by unexploded ordnances and 2 children were affected by an explosion at a military garrison.

164. The rape of 4 girls between thirteen and fifteen years old by Sudanese Armed Forces elements in Blue Nile was verified and reported to the police, resulting in the arrest and sentencing of perpetrators.

165. A total of 4 allegations of attacks on schools (3) and hospitals (1) during air strikes were received but could not be verified. In March, the military use of a school in Kadugli, Southern Kordofan, by the National Intelligence and Security Service was documented.

166. In March, 2 boys of twelve and sixteen were abducted by Misseriya militiamen in Abyei. They were released and reunified with their families following interventions by the United Nations and community networks.

167. I commend the Government's ongoing commitment to the action plan signed in March and the significant progress achieved, including through the formation of high-level and technical committees and the development of a workplan. Command orders for dissemination of the action plan were issued and focal points at the rank of Inspector General were appointed to facilitate discussions on access. In March 2017, the Government granted access to the United Nations to areas of Blue Nile to follow up allegations of child recruitment and use of children by its forces.

168. On 29 March, following extensive advocacy, the United Nations was granted access to 21 children who had been detained by the National Intelligence and Security Service for their alleged association with an armed group after their apprehension in Darfur in 2015. The children were released in September, granted a presidential pardon and reunited with their families.

169. Following engagement by my Special Representative and United Nations partners, SPLM-N signed an action plan to end recruitment and use of children in November. In December, SPLM-N issued a command order and appointed a high-level focal point. In November, the United Nations also met with the leader of the Justice and Equality Movement and a representative of the Sudan Liberation Army/Minni Minawi, who both agreed to develop implementation plans to expedite their action plans.

Syrian Arab Republic

170. Widespread conflict continued throughout the Syrian Arab Republic and further escalated in the last quarter of 2016, with intense hostilities in eastern Aleppo city and in Bab and Manbij in Aleppo Governorate. The intensification of hostilities and continuing access restrictions posed considerable challenges for monitoring.

Grave violations

171. The recruitment and use of children increased sharply: the number of verified cases more than doubled compared with 2015. The United Nations verified 851 cases attributed to armed groups self-affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (507), ISIL (133), pro-government militias (54), People's Protection Units (46), government forces (29), Army of Islam (28), Ahrar al-Sham (17), the Nusrah Front (also known as Jabhat Fath al-Sham) (10), Nur al-Din al-Zanki (3) and unidentified armed groups (24); 20 per cent of verified cases involved children under the age of fifteen. Payment of salaries, ideology and family or community influence continued to be incentives. As a result of their association with parties to conflict, at least 37 children were killed and 17 injured.

172. Some 60 per cent of verified cases were attributed to groups affiliated with the Free Syrian Army, a tenfold increase compared with 2015, with most cases occurring in Aleppo, Dar'a and Rif Dimastiq Governorates; 98 per cent of the boys recruited by these groups were used for military functions, including front-line combat. At least 103 children were used by ISIL for military functions, including to conduct executions and suicide attacks. People's Protection Units recruited and used 40 boys and 6 girls, who received military training and were used to patrol and guard checkpoints. Children recruited and used by other armed groups (82) predominantly guarded checkpoints.

173. The United Nations verified the association of 29 children with government forces, 5 of whom were trained, armed and used in combat, while the others were deployed at checkpoints, mostly unarmed. Pro-government militias recruited 54 boys, 20 of whom were used in combat and 34 to guard checkpoints. Coercion and financial incentives were used to recruit children.

174. Children continued to be arrested and detained for their alleged association with armed groups. The United Nations verified the arrest and detention of 12 boys by government forces and popular committees. In at least 7 of these cases, children were subjected to torture and ill-treatment.

175. Armed groups also deprived children of liberty for their alleged association with opposing parties to conflict. For example, ISIL deprived 27 boys of their liberty, some as young as ten, 9 of whom were executed and 17 remained unaccounted for as at early 2017.

176. The United Nations verified the killing of 652 children (297 boys, 125 girls, 230 sex unknown) and the maiming of 647 (223 boys, 133 girls, 291 sex unknown) during 2016. These casualties were attributed to government and pro-government forces (708), ISIL (235), People's Protection Units (8), groups affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (5), other armed groups (10) and unidentified armed groups (145). Verified violations were most prevalent in Aleppo, Rural Damascus, Dar'a and Idlib.

177. A total of 533 of the verified child casualties were caused by air strikes, with 451 casualties attributed to government and pro-government forces and 82 casualties attributed to unidentified parties to conflict. Parties involved in aerial operations in the Syrian Arab Republic included government forces, international forces supporting the Government, members of the international counter-ISIL coalition, Turkey and Israel.

178. A total of 243 of the verified child casualties were attributed to mortar, rocket and improvised explosive device attacks by armed groups on government-held areas. Children continued to be killed and maimed by suicide attacks (70), executions (16), sniper attacks (17) and improvised explosive devices and unexploded ordnances (130). In February, 3 children were publicly beheaded by ISIL after being accused of "spying". In addition, ISIL arrested 41 children for a wide range of acts that it classifies as crimes, some of whom were executed or subjected to amputation.

179. The United Nations verified 8 cases of sexual violence against girls, including rape, forced marriage and sexual slavery: 7 cases were attributed to ISIL and 1 was attributed to the pro-government Shu'aytat militias. Accounts were received of ISIL fighters demanding marriage of girls living in ISIL-held areas. In 1 verified case, a fourteen-year-old girl was abducted and gang-raped by 6 ISIL fighters after her family refused marriage. Reports also indicated that Yazidi girls captured in Iraq in 2014 continued to be trafficked into and within the Syrian Arab Republic and used as sex slaves. Trauma from sexual violence and social stigma continued to deter child survivors from coming forward.

180. The United Nations verified 76 attacks on schools and 11 attacks on education personnel resulting in 28 casualties among education personnel, a 40 per cent increase compared with 2015. These attacks were attributed to government and pro-government forces (57, including 38 air strikes), ISIL (6), People's Protection Units (1) and unidentified armed groups (14). Verified attacks on schools caused 255 child casualties and mostly occurred in Aleppo and Idlib Governorates. For example, in October the Kamal Qal'aji school complex in Idlib Governorate was hit by consecutive pro-government air strikes that killed 3 teachers and 19 children, injured 61 children and severely damaged the school.

181. The United Nations verified 81 attacks on medical facilities and 30 incidents of attacks on medical personnel resulting in 29 child casualties and 94 casualties among medical personnel, a nearly threefold increase compared with 2015. These attacks were attributed to government and pro-government forces (93, including 61 air strikes), ISIL (7), groups affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (2), Ahrar al-Sham (1) and unidentified armed groups (3). The majority of verified violations occurred in Aleppo and Idlib Governorates. In April, 13 children and 4 medical personnel were killed when pro-government attacks hit the Quds hospital in Aleppo Governorate.

182. A total of 9 incidents of military use of schools were attributed to groups affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (5), ISIL (3) and government forces (1), with 2 of those schools subsequently attacked by opposing forces, while 4 incidents of military use of medical facilities were attributed to ISIL.

183. The United Nations verified the abductions of 43 children that were attributed to ISIL (34), People's Protection Units (8), and government forces and pro-government militias (1). People's Protection Units abducted at least 8 children for recruitment purposes.

184. Parties to the conflict continued to use siege and denial of access to water as tactics of war, and as at end-2016, an estimated 292,000 children were trapped in besieged areas. The Government was responsible for 80 per cent of the instances of besiegement and ISIL was responsible for 17 per cent. Essential medicines were removed or excluded from humanitarian convoys by government authorities, while more than 411,000 children targeted by polio vaccination campaigns were not reached due to deliberate denial of access by ISIL and the Nusra Front.

185. The United Nations verified 90 instances of denial of humanitarian access, including 37 cases of deliberate denial of humanitarian services, 32 attacks on humanitarian facilities and related personnel and 21 acts of besiegement. Verified cases were attributed to government and pro-government forces (59), ISIL (15), Free Syrian Army-affiliated groups (2), the Nusra Front (2), the Army of Islam (1) and unidentified armed groups (5). In September, a United Nations and Syrian Arab Red Crescent (SARC) humanitarian convoy was hit by air strikes in rural western Aleppo, killing 17 staff and the head of the Urum al-Kubra branch of SARC.

Developments and concerns

186. The continued level of violations against children in the Syrian Arab Republic remains highly alarming and I urge all parties to engage in the inclusive and Syrian-led peace process under United Nations auspices aimed at ending conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic. I also call upon all parties to abide by their obligations under international law, and I urge the Government to take all possible measures to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by their armed forces and pro-government militias.

Yemen

187. A cessation of hostilities was in effect from April until peace talks adjourned in early August. During this period, while fighting continued in many locations, there was a significant decrease in the number of child casualties, in particular those resulting from air strikes, and in the number of attacks on schools and hospitals, although the intensification of hostilities following the adjournment led to increased violations. Throughout 2016, the documentation of violations against children was constrained by access restrictions and insecurity.

Grave violations

188. The United Nations verified 517 cases of the recruitment and use of boys as young as eleven, predominantly in Aden, Abyan, Amran, Sana'a and Ta'izz. The decrease in verified incidents compared with 2015 (917) reflects the challenges in monitoring rather than a reduction in cases. A further 105 reported cases could not be verified during 2016. The majority of verified cases (359) were attributed to the Houthis and affiliated forces, while 50 cases were attributed to the pro-government Popular Resistance, 29 to Ansar al-Sharia, 27 to Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula and 26 to the Yemeni Armed Forces. Children were mainly used to guard checkpoints and buildings, patrol areas and act as porters. In 69 verified cases, mostly in Amran and Aden, boys were used in combat, while 2 boys were killed and 5 injured at checkpoints or on the battlefield. Recruits for the Popular Resistance were often motivated by a desire to secure income for their families. In 1 verified case on 19 June, 5 boys recruited by the Popular Resistance, who were armed and wearing military uniforms, were queuing inside a government building in Jawf to collect salaries.

189. The United Nations documented the arrest or detention of 10 boys on the basis of their suspected association with an opposing party to conflict, 7 of which cases were attributed to the Yemeni Armed Forces and 3 to the Popular Resistance. In June, as part of a confidence-building measure during peace talks facilitated by the United Nations, the coalition to restore legitimacy in Yemen led by Saudi Arabia released 52 children who had reportedly been associated with parties to conflict. The children were handed over to the Government of Yemen and some were reunified with their families.

190. The killing and maiming of children remained the most prevalent violation. The United Nations verified 1,340 child casualties, with 502 children killed (345 boys, 152 girls, 5 sex unknown) and 838 injured (620 boys, 218 girls): 683 were attributed to the coalition, 414 to the Houthis and affiliated forces, 17 to the Popular Resistance, 6 to the Yemeni Armed Forces, 6 to ISIL in Yemen and 1 to Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula.

191. The highest number of child casualties was documented in Ta'izz, where 72 per cent (343 of 474 casualties) were attributed to the Houthis, mainly resulting from ground fighting. In 2016, ground fighting accounted for 39 per cent of all child casualties, causing the death of 107 children and injuries to 421 children. Large numbers of child casualties were also documented in Sa'dah, where 91 per cent (222 of 245 casualties) were attributed to air strikes by the coalition. In the reporting period, air strikes were the cause of over half of all child casualties, with at least 349 children killed and 334 children injured. For example, in October a coalition air strike hit Salah Hall in Sana'a during a funeral, killing at least 24 children.

192. A total of 113 child casualties were also attributed to landmines and unexploded ordnances, including in Aden, where armed groups allegedly planted landmines as they retreated. In addition, a number of civilians were reportedly killed in Saudi Arabia as a result of cross-border attacks.

193. The United Nations verified 52 incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals, resulting in the partial or complete destruction of facilities (46), attacks on protected personnel (3) and looting (3): 73 per cent of attacks were attributed to the coalition (28 schools, 10 hospitals) and 15 per cent to the Houthis and affiliated forces (4 schools; 4 hospitals). Attacks were also attributed to the Popular Resistance (2), the Yemeni Armed Forces (1) and crossfire.

194. A total of 33 attacks on schools were verified, affecting 30 schools: the majority of the incidents (28) resulted in the destruction of schools as a result of air strikes by the coalition, while 4 incidents were attributed to the Houthis and 1 to the Yemeni Armed Forces.

195. The United Nations verified 19 incidents of attacks on hospitals affecting 16 facilities, with hospitals being subjected to multiple attacks in Ta'izz and Marib, 10 of which were attributed to air strikes by the coalition; for example, on 10 January in Sa'ada Governorate, 1 hospital was hit by an air strike, resulting in 4 deaths, 10 injuries and the destruction of several hospital buildings. Of the remaining verified attacks, 4 were attributed to the Houthis in Ta'izz and Jawf and 2 to the Popular Resistance.

196. A total of 12 incidents of the military use of schools were documented: 6 were attributed to the Houthis, 4 to the Popular Resistance and 1 each to the Yemeni Armed Forces and Ansar al-Sharia, while 5 of the schools used were subsequently attacked. In addition, 2 incidents of the military use of hospitals occurred in Jawf and were attributed to the Houthis and to the Popular Resistance.

197. During 2016, 4 boys were abducted, 3 by unidentified armed groups in Ma'rib and Hudaydah and 1 by AQAP in Bayda' for ransom.

198. The United Nations received 220 reports of incidents of denial of humanitarian access, which involved bureaucratic constraints and restriction of movement (149), violence against humanitarian workers, assets and facilities (43) and interference with the implementation of humanitarian activities (28). The majority of incidents were documented and verified in Hudaydah, Sana'a, Ta'izz and Hajjah, and were attributed to the Houthis (181), unidentified armed groups (17), the coalition (13) and the Popular Resistance (9).

Developments and concerns

199. The action plan signed by the Government of Yemen in 2014 to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Yemeni Armed Forces remained stalled owing to the ongoing conflict. However, the United Nations and its partners provided support for reintegration to 100 children separated from armed groups in Aden.

200. The United Nations also engaged in enhanced dialogue with parties to conflict, including through several interactions between the Office of my Special Representative and Saudi Arabia, as leader of the coalition to restore legitimacy in Yemen, to address ongoing grave violations against children. The United Nations was informed of measures taken by the coalition in 2016 to reduce the impact of conflict on children, including through their rules of engagement and the establishment of a joint incident assessment team mandated to review all incidents involving civilian casualties and identify corrective actions. These initiatives are steps in the right direction. Nevertheless, I urge the coalition to improve its approach since, despite these measures, grave violations against children continued at unacceptably high levels in 2016. In this regard, I remain deeply concerned about the plight of children in Yemen and strongly request parties to take urgent measures to end violations against children. Furthermore, I urge the coalition, in particular Saudi Arabia as leader of the coalition, to continue to refine and fully implement the preventive and corrective measures put in place in 2016 to protect children, and to deepen its engagement with the United Nations and my Special Representative on this issue. In this regard, I wish to note that at the time of preparation of the present report, Saudi Arabia has created a child protection unit at the coalition headquarters.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

India

201. Children continued to be affected by incidents of violence between armed groups and the Government, in particular in Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand, as well as tensions in Jammu and Kashmir.

Grave violations

202. The United Nations continued to receive reports of the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, including the Naxalites, in particular in Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand. Owing to access restrictions for monitoring and reporting, the United Nations was unable to verify these incidents. Armed groups reportedly resorted to abduction and threats against parents in order to recruit children, who subsequently underwent military training and served as messengers, informants or guards in child squads (bal dasta). In March, the police relocated 23 children under threat of abduction by armed groups in Gumla district, Jharkhand, and supported their enrolment in schools. However, unverified reports suggest that police may be using children formerly associated with armed groups as informants, potentially making them targets for retaliation.

203. Children continued to be killed and injured in the context of operations of national security forces against Maoist armed groups. According to the Ministry of Home Affairs, the number of civilians killed in these encounters increased to 213, compared with 171 in 2015; however, no disaggregated data on children were available.

204. According to government information, at least 30 schools were burned and partially destroyed by armed groups in Jammu and Kashmir. In addition, government reports confirmed the military use of 4 schools by security forces in that region for several weeks. In a troubling development, Maoists were allegedly running several schools in Chhattisgarh and included combat training as part of their curriculum.

Developments and concerns

205. In the light of persistent reports of the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, I call upon the Government to develop appropriate mechanisms to protect children from recruitment, as well as to separate and reintegrate recruited children. The United Nations stands ready to assist in this process. I also urge the Government to ensure the protection of children from any form of violence in the context of civil unrest or law and order operations.

Nigeria

206. With the loss of territory to the Nigerian security forces, Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad, commonly known as Boko Haram, intensified attacks on civilians in north-east Nigeria as well as in neighbouring countries, including through suicide bombings, and in late 2016 split into two factions. In this context, 402 incidents of grave violations affecting 2,698 children were verified. A detailed account of the impact of armed conflict on children in Nigeria is available in my country report (S/2017/304).

Grave violations

207. The number of verified cases of the recruitment and use of children in 2016 (2,122) increased significantly compared with 2015 (278). The main perpetrators were Boko Haram (1,947) and the Civilian Joint Task Force (175): 4 boys and 26 girls were used by Boko Haram to carry out suicide attacks in Nigeria (19) and in Cameroon, Chad and the Niger (11). Children associated with the Civilian Joint Task Force were mostly used in support functions.

208. In 2016, 237 children were detained for their alleged association with Boko Haram, while 1,128 children were detained on the basis of their parent's alleged affiliation. While most were released, 336 children were still in detention as at December, including 71 held since 2015.

209. The killing of 304 children and maiming of 184 children was verified, a 27 per cent increase compared with 2015. More than half of the casualties were girls. The majority of casualties resulted from suicide attacks, including children used in these incidents, while internally displaced persons camps were the target of suicide attacks in 7 incidents. Boko Haram was responsible for 97 per cent of child casualties (475). The killing of suspected child suicide bombers by the Nigerian security forces was also a growing concern, with 13 children killed in November and December.

210. The rape or other forms of sexual violence perpetrated by Boko Haram against 51 girls as young as nine was verified. In addition, 3 girls between fourteen and seventeen years old were raped by Nigerian security forces elements. Allegations were also received of 19 cases of sexual abuse of girls in camps for internally displaced persons, reportedly perpetrated by Nigerian security forces elements, camp officials, the Civilian Joint Task Force and vigilantes. The investigation ordered by the Government culminated in the arrest of 8 suspected perpetrators.

211. No attacks on schools and hospitals were documented in Nigeria in 2016; however, Boko Haram perpetrated 3 attacks on schools and 5 on hospitals in the Diffa region of the Niger; 1 attack on a medical centre resulted in the killing of a health worker. A total of 7 schools were verified as militarily used by the Nigerian security forces in Borno (5) and Yobe States (2), 2 of which were vacated in early 2017.

212. Boko Haram abducted 17 boys and 17 girls in 2016. In addition, 2,046 child abductions from previous years were documented in liberated areas following Nigerian security forces operations; 106 of the Chibok schoolgirls abducted in 2014 were freed, partly as a result of internationally supported negotiations between Boko Haram and the Government.

213. A single incident of denial of humanitarian access was verified: on 28 July, 2 staff members were injured by unidentified assailants in an attack on a United Nations humanitarian convoy returning to Maiduguri, following which United Nations operations to Bama were suspended for 18 days.

Developments and concerns

214. I commend the efforts made by the Government to improve the protection of children, including the development of a plan of action to implement the Safe Schools Declaration, which was endorsed in 2015. Moreover, since April, the United Nations has been granted access to children detained in Giwa barracks, enabling the release and reintegration of 1,300 children.

215. Following the listing of the Civilian Joint Task Force for recruitment and use in my previous report (A/70/836-S/2016/360), the United Nations initiated dialogue with that group to develop an action plan to end and prevent recruitment and use of children. In this regard, I welcome the fact that at the time of preparation of the present report, the action plan had been signed.

216. Lastly, a total of 765 girl victims of sexual violence by Boko Haram were provided with support in Maiduguri through a UNICEF-funded community-based rehabilitation programme that aims to address negative community perceptions of girls and women who have survived sexual violence. I encourage subregional organizations to support these efforts.

Pakistan

217. Attacks by armed groups declined by 28 per cent in 2016, with 441 incidents reported. The majority of the incidents were attributed to Tehrik-e Taliban Pakistan (TTP). The security operation launched against armed groups in North Waziristan in 2014 concluded in April 2016, although a significant military presence remained.

Grave violations

218. Reports of the recruitment and use of children, including from madrassas, continued to be a concern and incidents of the use of children by armed groups for suicide bombings were reported. In a particularly troubling incident, on 12 November at least 52 people were killed and more than 100 wounded when a teenage suicide bomber blew himself up at the Shah Noorani shrine in Balochistan.

219. Age-disaggregated data on civilian casualties were extremely limited but the majority of incidents affecting children were reported in Balochistan. For example, on 7 February at least 10 people, including 1 girl, were reportedly killed in a suicide attack on a Pakistan Armed Forces vehicle in Quetta. Attacks also occurred in other parts of the country. In Lahore, a suicide attack on 27 March in a public park claimed the lives of 74 people, including 29 children. On 17 October, at least 1 child was killed in a bomb attack at an imambargah in Karachi, which was claimed by Lashkarh-e Jhangvi al-Alami.

220. A total of 6 attacks were carried out on educational institutions in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. On 20 February in South Waziristan, armed elements blew up part of a newly constructed government school, while on 25 November, TTP claimed responsibility for a bomb attack on a government primary school in Mohmand Agency, reportedly for promoting “Western values”.

221. Attacks on health care by armed groups continued in 2016, including direct attacks on and threats and intimidation against polio vaccinators, which was condemned by the Government. The majority of incidents occurred in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and led to the killing of at least 1 vaccinator.

Developments and concerns

222. In November, Pakistan ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. I welcome this important step and urge the Government to uphold its obligations under the Optional Protocol, particularly by criminalizing the recruitment and use of children in hostilities.

Philippines

223. Children continued to be affected by low-intensity armed engagements, as well as large-scale military operations conducted by government forces against armed groups, primarily in Mindanao. Owing to the intensification of activities of armed groups in Basilan, Lanao del Sur, Maguindanao and Sulu, access for monitoring was challenging. Following the resumption of peace talks between the Government and the National Democratic Front of the Philippines/New People’s Army (NDFP/NPA) in the second half of 2016, grave violations during clashes between them decreased significantly.

Grave violations

224. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 9 boys between thirteen and seventeen years old. Of the verified cases, 8 were attributed to armed groups, 5 to the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) and 3 to NPA. As well as being used in support roles, some boys attended training in arms and were used in combat: 1 child recruited by NPA died during a skirmish with the Armed Forces of the Philippines. In addition, credible reports suggest that the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters, the Abu Sayyaf Group and the Maute Group recruited children for combat. In addition, 1 verified incident was attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines, which has used 1 boy in a support role in Negros Occidental since 2013.

225. The United Nations documented the detention of 8 children without a formal judicial process for their alleged association with armed groups. For example, despite continued advocacy by the United Nations, 1 fifteen-year-old boy has been detained in an adult prison in Basilan for his alleged association with the Abu Sayyaf Group since November 2015.

226. The United Nations verified the killing and maiming of 38 children (14 killed, 24 injured; 26 boys, 12 girls); the cases were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines (11), the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the national police in a joint operation (2) and alleged pro-government armed groups (New Indigenous People's Army Reform (6) and Alamara (1)). In addition, 4 cases were attributed to the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters and 2 to NPA. Along with incidents of crossfire, indiscriminate attacks or explosive remnants of war, children were subjected to targeted killings and alleged torture.

227. A total of 10 attacks affecting 12 schools were verified and were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines (2) and the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (1) or were unattributed (7). Reports of threats by alleged pro-government armed groups against teachers working for schools run by non-governmental organizations in indigenous communities were also received. In addition, the United Nations documented the use of 8 schools for military purposes by the Armed Forces of the Philippines and/or the national police (6) and the Maute Group (2), 4 of which schools were attacked while they were occupied.

228. Of 4 reports of abduction received in 2016, one incident, which occurred in December 2015, was verified. In this incident, 1 eight-year-old boy and his parents were taken hostage by the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters. The boy and the mother were released; however the father was reportedly killed.

229. In the light of ongoing violations, the United Nations supported the Government's efforts to strengthen the protection of children in conflict. In particular, the Department of National Defence issued a circular setting out procedures and guidelines for the Armed Forces of the Philippines to prevent grave violations. To further strengthen the protection of children, I encourage the Government to promptly adopt the draft law on children in situations of armed conflict while ensuring its adherence to the highest standards of international law, and to leverage existing child protection mechanisms to provide assistance to victims.

230. Regarding MILF, I commend it for the significant progress in implementing its action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. In this regard, all 1,869 children identified by MILF as associated with its armed wing underwent formal disengagement in a series of ceremonies, the last of which was held in March 2017. In addition, MILF promulgated a directive requiring regular self-monitoring and screening of armed elements as well as age-assessment guidelines to establish safeguards for the prevention of association and reassociation of children. This significant progress should be replicated by other armed groups, including NDFP/NPA, who held discussion with UNICEF during the reporting period.

Thailand

231. A peace dialogue between the Government and an umbrella organization of armed groups continued in 2016. However, there was ongoing armed violence in southern Thailand, including sporadic clashes between security forces and armed groups, as well as attacks by armed groups on civilian targets.

232. The United Nations received reports of the killing of 5 children and injuries to 27 children resulting from improvised explosive device attacks and shooting, an increase compared with 2015, when 19 child casualties were recorded (4 killed, 15 injured). For example, in April in Songkhla Province, a 4-year old boy was killed in a motorcycle bomb attack allegedly targeting the police.

233. Schools and education personnel continued to be targeted by armed groups, including by the killing of teachers and by arson and improvised explosive device attacks. On 6 September, for example, a motorcycle-borne improvised explosive device was detonated in front of an elementary school, killing 1 four-year-old girl and injuring at least 10 people, including teachers. One attack on a hospital was reported on 13 March, when an unknown armed group stormed the Joh Airong Hospital in Narathiwat Province and used it to attack a nearby government security post. Before leaving, the attackers tied up 1 pregnant nurse and destroyed hospital equipment.

234. I welcome the ongoing peace dialogue between the Government and armed groups and encourage all parties involved to include the protection of children and schools in discussions.

IV. Recommendations

235. I am gravely concerned by the scale and severity of the violations committed against children in 2016, which included alarming levels of killing and maiming of children, recruitment and use of children and, in certain situations, denial of humanitarian access to children, and I call upon parties to conflict, the Security Council and Member States to take immediate action to prevent these violations against children from occurring.

236. Ensuring full compliance with international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law by all parties must be the cornerstone of our prevention efforts. In this regard, I welcome the steps taken by a number of Member States to make international commitments to protect children in the context of armed conflict, including through the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the endorsement of the Paris Commitments to protect children from unlawful recruitment or use by armed forces or armed groups and the Paris Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups. To further the aim of protecting children in all situations included in the present report, I urge all Member States engaged in operations against violent extremist groups, whether acting alone or as members of coalitions, to make commitments to establish specific safeguards to protect children from violations, including by placing an increased focus on the principles of distinction and proportionality under international humanitarian law.

237. I urge Member States, including when countering violent extremism, to treat children allegedly associated with non-State armed groups primarily as victims and to swiftly adopt protocols for their handover to civilian child protection actors in order to prioritize their reintegration. I also encourage the Security Council to highlight the detrimental impact on children that results from widespread screening of civilians in situations of armed conflict.

238. I encourage Member States to establish long-term multi-year mechanisms for the reintegration of recruited and used children, including by placing a specific focus on girls and on psychosocial and education programmes and vocational training. Adequate long-term funding is vital to implement and sustain such programmes.

239. I welcome national and international efforts to hold perpetrators accountable for crimes against children in situations of armed conflict. Impunity must end in order to break the cycles of violence and aid prevention efforts. Member States should strengthen their support for justice systems by allocating sufficient resources and capacity to the investigation and prosecution of those who perpetrate crimes against children.

240. I welcome the leadership and contributions of regional and subregional organizations regarding the protection of children and I call upon them to engage with my Special Representative to continue the integration of child protection considerations into their policies, planning of peace support operations, training of personnel and conduct of operations.

241. I urge Member States and regional and subregional organizations involved in negotiating cessation of hostilities or peace agreements to include specific child protection provisions from the outset in order to prioritize the prevention of grave violations.

242. I call upon the Security Council to continue to request the deployment of dedicated child protection capacity to United Nations peace operations, in line with newly revised United Nations policy on child protection in United Nations peace operations, in order to mainstream child protection, conduct dialogue on action plans, release and reintegrate children and for monitoring and reporting. The need for such child protection capacity, including the budget required, should be systematically assessed during the preparation of peacekeeping operations and political missions.

V. Lists contained in the annexes to the present report

243. The modifications in the presentation of the lists contained in the annexes to the present report resulted from additions to the report of dedicated sections to note the developments and concerns in the situations covered. In this regard, both annexes have divided the list into two sections: parties to conflict that have put in place measures to improve the protection of children during the reporting period and parties that have not.

244. In Afghanistan, ISIL-Khorasan Province is listed for the recruitment and use and killing and maiming of children in the light of the number of verified incidents attributed to that party. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Mai-Mai Mazembe has been included in the annexes for the recruitment and use and killing and maiming of children given the number of incidents attributed to that party since its emergence in mid-2016. In Iraq, the popular mobilization forces were responsible for 57 verified cases of recruitment and use during 2016 and that party is listed for that violation. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the Army of Islam also recruited and used children in significant numbers and has therefore been listed. All of the above-mentioned parties are included in section A of annex I. In Yemen, the actions of the coalition to restore legitimacy in Yemen objectively led to that party being listed for the killing and maiming of children, with 683 child casualties attributed to it, and as a result of that party being responsible for 38 verified incidents, for attacks on schools and hospitals during 2016. The coalition is included in section B of annex I, as it has put in place measures during the reporting period aimed at improving the protection of children.

245. Other previously listed parties to conflict have had additional violations added based on incidents that occurred in 2016. In this regard, given the levels of abductions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Allied Democratic Forces, the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda and the Force de résistance patriotique de l'Ituri have been included for that violation. In Nigeria, Boko Haram is listed for rape and other forms of sexual violence in the light of the cases verified as a result of improved access. In the Syrian Arab Republic, government forces and pro-government militias are listed for the recruitment and use of children. In the same country, ISIL is also included for the abduction of children.

246. In terms of delisting, the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo took all necessary steps in its action plan pertaining to the recruitment and use of children and that party has been delisted for that violation; however, it remains listed for rape and other forms of sexual violence against children. In addition, in the Philippines, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front has been delisted for the recruitment and use of children following the completion of its action plan.

247. Other modifications to the list have resulted from changes in the landscape of armed conflict in the respective situations. In this regard, in Afghanistan the name of the Taliban has been amended. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the names of the government forces and the Free Syrian Army have been slightly changed to more accurately reflect the realities on the ground. Similarly, in Yemen, the name of the government forces has also been slightly modified.

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2017, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2225 \(2015\). The preparation of the report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in the field and at Headquarters, and with relevant Member States. It highlights recent global trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and provides information on violations committed in 2017, as well as related protection concerns. Where possible, violations are attributed to parties to conflict and, in line with the resolutions of the Council, the annexes to the present report include a list of parties that, in violation of international law, engage in the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, attacks on schools and/or hospitals and attacks or threats of attacks against protected personnel,<sup>1</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. All the information provided in the report has been vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. In situations where the ability to verify information was hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. In this regard, the information contained in the report is only indicative and does not always represent the full scale of violations committed in 2017.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\) and in identifying situations that fall within the scope of the mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has adopted a pragmatic approach aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children. However, reference to a situation is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status. Accordingly, the present report documents situations in which apparent violations of international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by conflict are considered to be of such gravity as to warrant international concern. In characterizing the facts described below as grave violations, it is the aim of my Special Representative to bring these situations to the attention of national Governments, which bear the primary responsibility of providing effective protection and relief to all affected children, and to encourage Governments to take remedial measures.

4. Where significant progress was achieved and measures taken by listed parties positively affected the protection of children or where ongoing conduct gave rise to concern, this is highlighted in the country-specific sections. On the basis of the approach of enhanced engagement with Member States to prevent violations against children, the annexes distinguish between listed parties that have put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children during the reporting period and parties that have not.

II. Addressing the impact of armed conflict on children

A. Overview of the situation of children and armed conflict

5. Children continue to be disproportionately affected by armed conflict in many country situations. In 2017, there was a large increase in the number of violations compared with the number reported for 2016 (A/72/361-S/2017/821, para. 5), with at least 6,000 verified violations by government forces and more than 15,000 by a range of non-State armed groups.<sup>2</sup>

6. In 2017, changing conflict dynamics, including the intensification of armed clashes, directly affected children. Verified cases of the recruitment and use of children quadrupled in the Central African Republic (299) and doubled in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (1,049) compared to 2016. The number of verified cases of the recruitment and use of children in Somalia (2,127), South Sudan (1,221), the Syrian Arab Republic (961) and Yemen (842) persisted at alarming levels. In addition, boys and girls recruited and used were often doubly victimized by subsequently being detained for their former association with armed forces or groups.

7. Surges in the recruitment and use of children often coincided with increasing levels of killing and maiming of children. In addition, spikes in armed clashes and violence led to a substantial increase in the number of child casualties in Iraq (717) and Myanmar (296). Afghanistan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen remained the country situations with the highest number of verified casualties. In Nigeria, Boko Haram continued to force civilians, including children, to perpetrate suicide attacks, which led to over half of all the verified child casualties in the country.

8. Following the outbreak of violence in the Kasai region, there was an almost eightfold increase in attacks on schools and hospitals in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, totalling 515 cases in 2017. The siege of Marawi in the southern Philippines also led to a sharp increase in such incidents.

9. Additional developments included the abduction of over 1,600 children by Al-Shabaab in Somalia, pointing to a sustained reliance on children for combat and support duties. A high number of denials of humanitarian access, including in Myanmar, South Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen, prevented thousands of children from receiving essential aid. The nature of constraints to humanitarian access differ vastly from one context to another, which is reflected in the focus of the reporting in the different country-specific sections. Over 900 cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence against girls and boys were verified across all country situations, representing an increase from last year. However, cases of conflict-related sexual violence remain particularly challenging to verify, including as a result of the sensitivity of the issue, and remain chronically underreported (for more information, see the annual report on conflict-related sexual violence, S/2018/250).

<sup>2</sup> The use of the term “incident” describes an action by a party to conflict that leads to one or more grave violations. “Violations” or “cases” refer to each individual child or protected structure affected by an incident. Incidents may therefore result in multiple violations (for instance, one incident of abduction may affect several children).

10. In contrast, in situations where Governments and listed armed groups enhanced their engagement on preventing grave violations, important advances in the strengthening of child protection were achieved. Regarding the Government of the Sudan, for example, close cooperation with the United Nations resulted in the full implementation of the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. A process of building on the action plan in order to develop a national plan for prevention has since been initiated.

B. Strengthening partnerships to end and prevent grave violations against children

11. Preventing violations against children affected by conflict should be a primary concern of the international community. Failing to assume this collective responsibility affects not only the boys and girls living in insecurity, but may also amplify grievances between belligerent parties and reduce their ability to overcome conflict in a peaceful manner. And yet, as illustrated in the present report, time and again, armed conflict strips away layers of protection afforded by families, society and law and children are victimized as both the targets and the perpetrators of violence. We must do more to address this challenge by ensuring that child protection is made an integral part of any comprehensive strategy to prevent and resolve conflict in view of enabling sustainable peace and by promoting the close involvement of children during the development of such strategies.

12. Enhanced engagement with the Member States mentioned in the present report remains crucial in this regard. Action plans and other bilateral commitments provide the main framework for this engagement. Such commitments both address the immediate protection concerns and contribute to broader prevention by ensuring that national mechanisms are put in place to prevent future violations. In Afghanistan, child protection units in Afghan National Police centres have now been established in all but one province, preventing the recruitment of over 300 children in 2017. The Government of the Sudan issued formal command orders and directives to all Government forces to prevent child recruitment. The development of national, subregional or regional prevention plans, covering all listing violations, could support the systematization of preventive measures beyond the implementation period of action plans.

13. The global consensus among Member States that children should not be recruited and used in conflict also allowed for intensified engagement with armed groups. In the Central African Republic, such efforts resulted in the issuance of command orders by two armed groups barring the recruitment and use of children. Similarly, the Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad in Mali and the Civilian Joint Task Force in Nigeria signed action plans to release children from their ranks and prevent future recruitment. I encourage Member States to continue to facilitate the interaction between the United Nations and armed groups on the issue of child protection.

14. Engagement with armed forces and groups resulted in the formal release of over 10,000 children in 2017. In addition, an unknown number left such entities through informal pathways. While disengagement from armed actors is an essential first step, it is vital to ensure sustained psychosocial and educational reintegration support in order to break the cycle of violence and consolidate peace. Over 12,000 children were reintegrated during the reporting period by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and partners, but too many children were unable to benefit from such programmes. Cases documented in 2017 reconfirmed that when children are released but do not have access to appropriate long-term reintegration programmes they are particularly vulnerable and subject to mistreatment, social stigmatization and rerecruitment. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, over 8,000 children who have been released from armed groups are yet to receive basic socioeconomic reintegration support, owing to a lack of funding.

15. Ensuring predictable, sustained and flexible funding for the reintegration of children affected by armed conflict is essential to allow UNICEF and other child protection actors to set in place viable alternatives to military life and prevent their rerecruitment. Realizing this goal will require increasing child protection capacity and strengthening collaboration between child protection actors and potential reintegration funding partners, including concerned Member States, the World Bank and the Peacebuilding Fund.

16. Armed groups, such as the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) and Boko Haram, continue to recruit and use children on a large scale, including across borders. It is therefore more important than ever to ensure adequate capacity to deal with the increasingly complex task of prevention, tracing and reintegration. The phenomenon of the cross-border recruitment of children and their repatriation requires a coordinated international response, based firmly on international law and drawing on international child protection standards. Denying children the opportunity to rejoin their communities and to gain access to services, or detaining them solely for their alleged association with such groups, runs counter to the best interest of the child and international protection standards, and may generate new grievances.

17. As reflected in the report on peacebuilding and sustaining peace (A/72/707-S/2018/43), closer strategic and operational partnerships with regional and subregional actors is essential to address the challenge of sustaining peace. This approach was adopted by my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, who initiated a process to further deepen her cooperation with regional and subregional actors in view of multiplying child protection efforts, including to address the cross-border nature of the recruitment and use of children and the growing number of unaccompanied children on the move. Such collaboration, closely involving UNICEF, facilitated the appointment of a Senior Child Protection Adviser by the African Union in January 2018, further strengthening the regional child protection architecture.

III. Information on violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

18. Conflict-related violence continued to severely affect children throughout Afghanistan, with 3,179 verified cases of children killed and maimed in 2017. Although the number of verified cases represents a 10 per cent decrease in verified cases compared to 2016, casualty rates remain very high.

Grave violations

19. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 84 boys, and documented an additional 643 cases (all boys). Children were recruited and used for combat, as bodyguards, at checkpoints, to assist in intelligence gathering and to plant improvised explosive devices. When recruited by armed groups, children were also used to carry out suicide attacks.

20. Almost three quarters of the verified cases were perpetrated by armed groups (61), with 40 cases attributed to the Taliban, 19 to Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant-Khorasan Province (ISIL-KP) and 2 to undetermined armed groups. Cases attributed to ISIL-KP almost doubled in the reporting period. A total of 23 boys were recruited and used by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (Afghan National Police, 11; Afghan Local Police, 9; other Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, 3). The cases predominantly included the informal use of children, including as guards at checkpoints.

21. As at December 2017, the Government reported that 171 children were held in juvenile rehabilitation centres on national security-related charges. On 7 November, 50 juveniles were transferred from the adult maximum-security detention facility in Parwan to the juvenile rehabilitation centre in Kabul, following sustained United Nations advocacy. However, following a reassessment of their age, in December, 21 of them were moved back to the detention facility in Parwan and 25 were reassigned elsewhere.

22. The United Nations verified 3,179 child casualties (861 killed and 2,318 injured), including 251 girls, accounting for 30 per cent of all civilian casualties. Overall, the leading causes were ground engagements (45 per cent), followed by incidents involving improvised explosive devices (17 per cent) and unexploded ordnance (16 per cent).

23. The United Nations attributed 723 child casualties to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, 28 to pro-government militias and 21 to both pro-government militias and Afghan National Defence and Security Forces; 96 casualties were attributed to international military forces. In addition, 45 casualties were attributed either to joint operations of Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and international military forces or could not be attributed specifically to either party. The continuing increase of child casualties resulting from aerial operations remains a concerning trend. In addition, 27 child casualties resulted from cross-border shelling out of Pakistan.

24. Armed groups perpetrated 1,384 child casualties, including 1,105 casualties attributed to the Taliban, 94 to ISIL-KP, 9 to joint operations of ISIL-KP and the Taliban and 176 to undetermined armed groups. Child casualties resulting from complex and suicide attacks increased by 34 per cent (207 casualties).

25. Four cases of sexual violence, including rape (1) and sexual abuse (3) against boys as young as 13 were verified, three of which were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and one to the Taliban. The United Nations documented an additional 78 cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence against boys, most of which related to the practice of bacha bazi. Impunity for perpetrators remains a serious challenge.

26. For the second consecutive year, verified incidents of attacks against schools and education personnel decreased (68 incidents). Armed groups perpetrated 55 of the incidents (Taliban, 41; ISIL-KP, 7; undetermined armed groups, 7). Furthermore, three such incidents were attributed to pro-government militias, two to Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, two to international military forces and two to cross-border shelling out of Pakistan.

27. A total of 58 incidents of attacks on hospitals and protected personnel were verified, a 50 per cent reduction compared to 2016. Incidents included direct attacks on health facilities (18), direct attacks on health personnel (18) and threats of attack (22). Among those, 52 incidents were attributed to armed groups (Taliban, 37; ISIL-KP, 4; undetermined armed groups, 11), and 5 to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces.

28. The United Nations verified 16 incidents of the military use of schools and hospitals: 10 by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, 4 by the Taliban and 2 by ISIL-KP.

29. A total of 19 incidents of abduction, involving 41 boys and 2 girls, were verified. Among those cases, 32 were attributed to the Taliban, 6 to ISIL-KP (including the two girls), and 1 to a pro-government militia.

30. The United Nations documented 39 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, 29 of which were verified. All verified incidents were attributed to armed groups (Taliban, 22; ISIL-KP, 3; undetermined armed groups, 4). Incidents included the killing and injuring as well as the abduction of humanitarian personnel.

Developments and concerns

31. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. I commend the Government for the measures taken to better protect children affected by armed conflict. These measures had a positive effect on the implementation of its action plan to end and prevent child recruitment and the use of children by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, including through the establishment of 12 new child protection units in Afghan National Police recruitment centres, the revision of the Penal Code, which now criminalizes the recruitment and use of children by armed forces and the practice of bacha bazi, as well as the adoption of a child protection policy.

32. Notwithstanding the progress made in preventing the formal recruitment of children, I urge the Government to address remaining gaps, in particular the lack of screening mechanisms in the Afghan Local Police, the use of children at police checkpoints, the absence of measures for the protection, reintegration and support of children formerly associated with armed forces or groups, as well as the lack of accountability for the perpetrators of grave violations against children. I strongly encourage the Government to prioritize prevention and consider alternatives to detention for children formerly associated with the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces, pro-government militias or armed groups, in line with international juvenile justice principles, and ensure their reintegration into society.

33. While dialogue with armed groups regarding child protection continues, the level of violations has remained at an alarming level and I urge these parties to engage with the United Nations in pursuit of elaborating action plans.

34. I remain deeply concerned about the continuing high number of children killed and maimed and call on all parties to take immediate action to better protect children.

Central African Republic

35. The conflict escalated throughout the country, with confrontations between the Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique (FPRC)-led coalition<sup>3</sup> against the Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) in Ouaka and Haute-Kotto Prefectures, and anti-balaka associated militias against UPC in Mbomou Prefecture. Towards the end of 2017, fighting intensified between a faction of the Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC), anti-balaka elements and Révolution et justice (RJ). In addition, attacks against civilians and humanitarians increased, leading to mass displacement and child casualties.

36. The number of children recruited and used more than quadrupled compared to 2016, with 196 boys and 103 girls affected, some as young as 8 years of age. Cases were attributed to UPC (89), FPRC (62), MPC (53), anti-balaka elements (32), joint operations by FPRC/MPC<sup>4</sup> (23), ex-Séléka renouée (16), Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) (14), Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) (9) and Retour, réclamation et réhabilitation (3R) (1). Children were used as combatants, porters, informants, cooks and for sexual purposes.

37. A total of 104 children, including 34 girls, were killed (61) and maimed (43) by shooting, stabbing and when their houses were torched during clashes. Perpetrators included anti-balaka elements (34), UPC (29), FPRC (5), FPRC/MPC (4), 3R (3), MPC (2), FDPC, a self-defence group and the national security forces (1 each). Most of the incidents occurred in Ouaka and Mbomou Prefectures, with 57 per cent of casualties resulting from clashes between the Coalition and UPC, around Bambari, and anti-balaka activities in Mbomou Prefecture.

38. The number of verified cases of children affected by rape and other forms of sexual violence, some as young as 8 years of age, more than doubled (137 girls, 1 boy) compared to 2016. Among them were 48 girls who were victims of sexual violence during their association with armed groups. The main perpetrators were MPC (30), FPRC/MPC (18), anti-balaka elements (16) and FPRC (14). Additional allegations of sexual violence against boys were reported but remained unverified.

39. A total of 43 incidents of abduction were verified, affecting 35 girls and 66 boys, including infants. Most victims were abducted for recruitment purposes and four were subjected to sexual violence. Anti-balaka elements accounted for the highest number of abducted children (37), followed by LRA (20).

40. The United Nations verified 28 attacks against schools and 19 attacks against hospitals, including by anti-balaka (12), joint operations by FPRC/MPC<sup>4</sup> (9), UPC (7), FPRC (6), 3R, RJ (3 each), MPC (2), a self-defence group, MPC/RJ, the Mouvement national pour la libération de la Centrafrique (MNLC), national security forces and an unidentified armed group (1 each). Among those incidents, 12 schools were damaged following long-term military use. Three additional cases of the military use of schools were attributed to UPC (2) and FPRC (1).

41. A total of 101 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, including the killing of 14 humanitarian staff. The highest number of incidents was attributed to anti-balaka elements (40), followed by MPC (10), FPRC (7) and unidentified ex-Séléka elements (6). For example, on 7 September, anti-balaka elements looted non-governmental organizations' bases and damaged vehicles, which resulted in the temporary suspension of humanitarian activities in Batangafo, affecting an estimated 28,000 internally displaced persons.

Developments and concerns

42. I welcome the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child and urge the Government to ensure their swift implementation.

43. I take note of FPRC and UPC having issued command orders barring the recruitment of children, on 13 May and 27 September, respectively. Dialogue with armed groups also enabled the identification and separation of 1,816 children, including 371 girls (79 per cent from anti-balaka elements). In addition, 1,250 self-demobilized children (494 girls; 756 boys) from anti-balaka and the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLCJ) were identified in three prefectures.

44. I am deeply concerned regarding the further documented increase of grave violations against children, including the increase in abductions attributed to anti-balaka elements. I urge armed groups to take immediate action and engage with the United Nations to develop and implement action plans.

45. The sexual exploitation and abuse of children by peacekeepers remained a serious protection concern (for more information, see the annexes to A/72/751 and A/72/751/Corr.1).

Colombia

46. The year 2017 was marked by the implementation of the peace agreement between the Government and the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP). The agreement ended a five-decade long conflict between these parties and presented a unique opportunity to enhance the protection of children. However, new dynamics of violence involving other armed groups emerged in areas vacated by FARC-EP, resulting in continued child protection challenges.

47. On 1 October 2017, a three-month temporary bilateral ceasefire between the Government and the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) entered into force. The commitment to suspend the enrolment of minors under the age of 15 into their ranks was one of the humanitarian measures agreed in parallel to the agreement.

Grave violations

48. A total of 57 incidents of the recruitment and use of children, affecting 169 children, were verified. ELN was the main perpetrator (113 children) followed by the Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia (also known as Clan del Golfo) (AGC) (35). Between September 2016 and August 2017, 135 children were formally released from FARC-EP ranks and no new cases of recruitment were documented in 2017. According to the Government, 285 children separated from armed groups entered a demobilization programme administered by the Colombian Family Welfare Institute.

49. The United Nations documented 46 incidents of killing and maiming, affecting 53 children, a sharp increase compared to 2016 (8 casualties). A total of 18 children were killed and 35 were maimed by shooting, crossfire and anti-personnel mines.

50. The United Nations verified four cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence, which were attributed to AGC (2), ELN (1) and Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (1). AGC elements threatened they would rape all girls aged 15 and above whom they meet in the streets and an AGC leader, who has since been killed, repeatedly sexually abused girls in the Department of Antioquia. At the time of writing, the case was under investigation by the Office of the Attorney General.

51. Three incidents of threats of attacks in May against protected medical personnel by unidentified armed groups were verified in Catatumbo region, Department of Norte de Santander, disrupting the functioning of health centres.

52. Three incidents of abduction, affecting nine children, were verified. Two incidents were attributed to ELN (six children) and one to AGC (three children).

53. Six incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified in the Departments of Chocó, Antioquia, Nariño and Boyacá. In November, ELN denied the Colombian Family Welfare Institute access to assist in the reintegration of children in Boyacá.

Developments and concerns

54. I am encouraged by the fact that, as postulated in the peace agreement, FARC-EP laid down its weapons and transformed itself into a political party, and commend the release of children, as provided for in the joint communiqué of May 2016 between the Government and the group. However, I remain concerned about reports of children who have been informally released and who fail to receive institutional support.

55. During her visits to Bogotá in November 2017 and May 2018, my Special Representative encouraged the Government to continue prioritizing the protection and reintegration of children and the prevention of violations. I welcome the efforts of the Government in this regard.

56. It is vital to continue strengthening institutions and programmes so as to ensure the effective reintegration of children and prevent new patterns of recruitment and use, particularly in areas with limited Government presence. I therefore encourage the Government to prioritize the implementation of the new recruitment prevention programme, known as “Mi futuro es hoy”, which was established in collaboration with the United Nations and civil society partners.

57. I am concerned by the high number of cases of recruitment and use of children by armed groups, in particular by ELN and AGC, and call on these groups to take immediate steps to end this practice. I welcome the Attorney General’s ongoing investigations into cases of the recruitment and use of children by ELN and call upon the Government and ELN to include the issue of child protection in their peace talks.

58. The issue of sexual violence against children in conflict remains of great concern and I urge the Government to prioritize the prevention thereof and to ensure that perpetrators are swiftly held to account.

59. I strongly encourage the Government to continue its mine risk education activities. The risk to the civilian population is particularly acute in areas where new landmines have been planted and humanitarian demining has not started, such as in Riosucio, Department of Chocó.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

60. 2017 was a devastating year for children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The reporting period saw a further fragmentation of armed groups and shifting allegiances, both of which posed challenges for the protection of children.

61. In the east, children were most affected by Nyatura and Mai-Mai Mazembe activities in North Kivu, Raia Mutomboki in South Kivu and the Force de résistance patriotique de l'Ituri (FRPI) in Ituri. In the Kasais, Kamuina Nsapu recruited large numbers of children and destroyed an unprecedented number of schools. A large number of children allegedly associated with the militia were killed and maimed by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo) (FARDC), during operations aimed at addressing the threat posed by Kamuina Nsapu. The mobilization of the Bana Mura militias to fight Kamuina Nsapu led to further violations against children in the Kasais. Violence in the region also led to the large-scale displacement of civilians.

Grave violations

62. The United Nations verified the new recruitment and use of 1,049 children (including 128 girls), 52 per cent of which occurred in North Kivu and 37 per cent in the Kasais; almost one third were under the age of 15 at the time of their recruitment. The main perpetrators were Kamuina Nsapu (370), Mai-Mai Mazembe (173), Nyatura (121), Raia Mutomboki and Mai-Mai Charles (62 each), FRPI (53), Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové (NDC-Rénové) (42), Mai-Mai Yakutumba (30) and Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FDLR-FOCA) (22). The Congolese National Police recruited three boys in Haut-Katanga and South Kivu and three cases of the use of children were attributed to FARDC, including one girl for the purposes of sexual abuse and exploitation, and two boys, who were formerly associated with armed groups, as spies.

63. A total of 291 boys and 11 girls, some as young as 8 years of age, were detained by FARDC and the Congolese National Police for their alleged association with armed groups, for periods of detention ranging between one day and one year. At the time of reporting, the United Nations was continuing to advocate the release of two boys from Tshikapa prison, Kasai Province.

64. A total of 156 children were killed and 178 were maimed. The main perpetrators among the armed groups were Nyatura (33) and Kamuina Nsapu (31). FARDC was responsible for almost half of the total number of child casualties (154), 70 per cent of which occurred in the Kasais, and the Congolese National Police was responsible for 4.

65. Cases of rape and sexual violence against 179 girls and 2 boys were verified, mostly in North Kivu (64) and the Kasais (46). Two thirds of cases were attributed to armed groups, including Raia Mutomboki (25), Kamuina Nsapu (17), Bana Mura (15) and FRPI (14). FARDC was responsible for 44 cases and the Congolese National Police for 15.

66. From a total of 1,000 reported attacks, 396 attacks on schools and 119 attacks on hospitals were verified. Kamuina Nsapu perpetrated 395 such attacks, followed by Mai-Mai Mazembe (18). Thirteen cases were attributed to FARDC. The military use of 23 schools, for periods ranging from two days to one month, was perpetrated mainly by Mai-Mai Mazembe (11) and FARDC (6).

67. A total of 143 girls and 277 boys were abducted, mostly by Bana Mura (81), Kamuina Nsapu (72), Nyatura (60), Raia Mutomboki (40), Mai-Mai Mazembe (30) and FRPI (26). One girl was abducted by FARDC and sexually abused. At least 261 of those children were abducted for recruitment purposes and 50 were subjected to sexual violence. Between March and May, in Kamonia Territory, Kasai Province, Bana Mura militias abducted 49 girls and 15 boys, forced them to work on farms, and raped and sexually abused the girls. The United Nations continues its advocacy to secure the release of these children.

68. Eight incidents of denial of humanitarian access were attributed to unidentified armed elements in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Kasai region. In addition, in the last quarter of 2017 alone, 17 humanitarian staff were abducted.

69. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. I note the continued engagement of FARDC on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children, which led to their delisting in 2017 (see A/72/361-S/2017/821, annex I). Important steps were taken in this regard through the training provided by the United Nations to national security forces as regards implementing the action plan and to military justice authorities on prosecuting the war crime of child recruitment. The Government continued to make progress in addressing sexual violence against children, including through disciplinary and accountability measures and by operating a nationwide helpline for victims, however more must be done. I urge the Government to redouble those efforts by urgently implementing all aspects pertaining to ending and preventing sexual violence by FARDC.

70. Furthermore, the United Nations identified 133 boys in FARDC recruitment centres during the screening of new recruits, and those boys were subsequently removed from the group of potential recruits. Awareness-raising efforts conducted by the United Nations and military pressure contributed to the separation of 271 girls and 2,089 boys, including from Kamuina Nsapu (656), Nyatura (300), Raia Mutomboki (258), Mai-Mai Mazembe (243), FDLR-FOCA (132), FRPI (108) and NDC-Rénové (95).

71. I welcome the progress made by military justice systems in holding the perpetrators of child recruitment and sexual violence accountable, with 10 armed group commanders awaiting trial and two recruiters of the Allied Democratic Forces convicted of child recruitment. I encourage the Government to ensure that Ntabo Ntaberi Cheka, who surrendered in July, is swiftly brought to trial, in accordance with due process standards, and that charges against him include all crimes he is alleged to have committed against children. I am concerned that two FARDC colonels, Colonel Ramazani and Colonel Kamulete, who are allegedly responsible for child recruitment, remain at large and encourage the Government to ensure accountability within the ranks of its security forces.

72. I am gravely concerned by the high number of children killed and maimed by national security forces, including through the disproportionate use of force, and by armed groups, notably Kamuina Nsapu, in the Kasais. I am also concerned about the detention of children for their alleged association with armed groups or militia and urge the Government to treat those children primarily as victims, with the best interests of the child and other international protection standards as guiding principles.

73. I urge all parties to conflict to uphold their obligations under international law, put in place measures to mitigate the effects of armed conflict on children and ensure accountability, in close cooperation with the United Nations. I note with particular concern the high number of violations perpetrated by Kamuina Nsapu and the Bana Mura militias and call on those groups to immediately cease such actions.

Iraq

74. Large-scale military operations led to the ousting of ISIL from Mosul, Tall Afar, Hawijah and Qa'im. In December, the Government of Iraq declared final victory over the group. The military operations led to a significant increase in violations against children. On 15 October, the federal Government deployed its forces to re-establish control in Kirkuk and other disputed areas that were previously under the control of Kurdish Peshmerga forces, as well as over border crossings. Since December 2016, the popular mobilization forces (PMF) are under the direct command of the Commander-in-Chief of the Iraqi armed forces.

Grave violations

75. The United Nations documented 523 cases of children recruited by parties to conflict, of which 109 cases (101 boys, 8 girls) were verified. Cases of recruitment involving 59 children, including 8 girls, were attributed to ISIL. Children were used as suicide bombers and combatants, for logistics and manufacturing explosive devices, and as wives for fighters. A total of 35 boys were recruited by unidentified armed groups, 9 by the Hêzên Parastina Gel/People's Defence Forces — the armed wing of the Kurdish Workers Party (PKK), 4 by the Yekîneyên Berxwedana Şengalê/Sinjar Resistance Units, 1 by Hêza Parastina Êzîdxanê/Protection Force of Ezidkhan and 1 by Zeravani forces, part of the Peshmerga.

76. In 2017 at least 1,036 children (1,024 boys, 12 girls), including 345 in the Kurdistan Region, remained in juvenile detention facilities on national security-related charges, mostly for their alleged association with ISIL.

77. The killing and maiming of children remained the most prevalent violation, with 717 child casualties verified. Verified incidents resulted in 279 children being killed (143 boys, 84 girls, 52 sex unknown) and 438 children being maimed (270 boys, 143 girls, 25 sex unknown).

78. Of the total number of verified cases of killing and maiming, 424 were attributed to ISIL, 109 to Iraqi security forces (ISF) and the international counter-ISIL coalition, 34 to Peshmerga and 150 to unknown parties to the conflict. Over half of all incidents were the result of air strikes, shelling, sniper fire and rockets, resulting in 390 child casualties. Improvised explosive devices were the second leading cause (24 per cent), followed by targeted attacks on children (10 per cent), including three boys who were killed and two who were injured by unidentified parties for their alleged association with ISIL. The United Nations remains concerned about the continued targeting by ISIL of civilians fleeing areas of hostilities or of those who refuse to follow their "regulations", resulting in 79 child casualties.

79. Nine cases of sexual violence were verified. A 15-year-old boy was raped over three consecutive nights by an ISIL commander and one boy was sexually assaulted by an unidentified armed group. Six girls, aged 16 and 17, were forced to marry ISIL fighters in Hawijah and one 17-year-old Yazidi girl was sexually abused by ISIL members before being forced to manufacture bombs.

80. The United Nations documented 161 incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals, of which 153 were verified (135 of these incidents date from previous years). In Ninawa, two schools were destroyed during air strikes and eight were hit by mortars launched by ISIL. Explosive devices were found near five schools and were believed to have been placed there by ISIL, in Ninawa and Salah al-Din. In Ninawa, one member of medical staff was killed and two hospitals were damaged during ISIL attacks.

81. The United Nations verified 22 reports of the military use of schools (21) and hospitals (1), including by ISIL (14), PMF (3), the federal police (2), ISF (2) and Peshmerga (1), in Ninawa, Kirkuk and Erbil. ISIL used schools and hospitals to store weapons and explosives or position fighters and snipers, while other parties mainly used such facilities as military bases and screening centres.

82. The United Nations verified the abduction of 32 children, all by ISIL (22 of these cases date from previous years). Seven abducted children were found dead in Anbar. A 7-year-old girl, who had been abducted in Mosul, was found by ISF with a person-borne improvised explosive device, walking among civilians. One boy and one girl, aged 17, were abducted from their homes when ISIL attacked their village in Kirkuk.

83. Three incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, all of which were perpetrated by ISIL. Cases included restrictions placed on supplies of medicine and clean water, in west Mosul, and the closure of checkpoints.

Developments and concerns

84. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. I welcome the endorsement of the national child protection policy by the Government of Iraq, including a focus on the release and reintegration of children. I am also encouraged by the establishment of a high-level interministerial committee on monitoring and reporting, as endorsed by the Prime Minister in November, in order to better address grave violations against children in armed conflict, as well as the appointment of the National Security Adviser as focal point for the ongoing dialogue with the United Nations.

85. I remain deeply concerned over the number of verified violations committed against children, including cases of killing and maiming and the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, in particular ISIL. I am also concerned by credible reports from south Iraq, specifically Najaf and Diwaniyah, in which groups under the umbrella of PMF organized military training for boys aged 15 and above. I encourage the Government to develop an action plan to end and prevent the alleged training, recruitment and use of children by PMF without delay.

86. Reports of children held in detention for their alleged association with ISIL remain a concern. I urge the Government to treat all children formerly associated with armed groups primarily as victims, in line with international juvenile justice principles, and to use detention only as a last resort and for the shortest period of time. In this regard, the United Nations stands ready to support the Government in developing and implementing reintegration services for children formerly associated with armed groups.

Israel and State of Palestine

87. Throughout 2017, the security and political situation remained tense. A large number of documented incidents occurred in July and December following demonstrations and clashes between Palestinians and Israeli security forces in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

Grave violations

88. A large number of children continued to be arrested and detained by Israeli forces for alleged security offences. According to prison data provided by Israel Prison Service based on a request under the Freedom of Information Law, between January and December, a monthly average of 312 Palestinian children were held in detention. At the end of December, among at least 352 children detained, 244 were being held in pretrial detention and/or during trial. The United Nations obtained affidavits from 162 Palestinian boys between the ages of 12 and 17 who had been detained by Israeli forces, in which they stated that they had been subjected to ill-treatment and breaches of due process. The United Nations also documented five cases of children held in administrative detention in 2017.

89. In 2017, 15 Palestinian children (including two girls) were killed in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the Gaza Strip. Among those children, five (two girls, three boys) aged between 15 and 17 were killed in the context of stabbing or presumed stabbing attacks in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Two children were killed in shelling incidents and seven children were killed by live ammunition in clashes in Gaza and the West Bank. All of the casualties were attributed to the Israeli forces.

90. A number of cases raise concerns regarding the excessive use of force by Israeli forces. In one instance, on 21 July, Israeli forces responded to a group of young men and boys throwing stones in Abu Dis, East Jerusalem, with excessive use of force, shooting a 17-year-old boy. There were also worrisome calls by Palestinian political actors for the participation of youth in stone-throwing against Israelis.

91. A total of 1,160 Palestinian children (including 39 girls) were injured in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in Gaza: 809 were injured by Israeli forces during clashes and demonstrations; 317 during military operations, including search and arrest operations; and 3 Palestinian boys, aged between 15 and 17, in presumed stabbing attempts against Israeli forces.

92. In addition, seven Palestinian children were injured after being hit by stones or physically assaulted in Hebron, Nablus and East Jerusalem, reportedly by Israeli settlers.

93. Five Israeli children were injured by Palestinians in East Jerusalem (three), Hebron (one) and Ramallah (one) when their vehicles were hit by stones or Molotov cocktails. One 12-year-old Israeli boy reportedly suffered head injuries after being hit with a stone by a Palestinian in Hebron.

94. Six schools in Gaza and Israel sustained damage in the reporting period. Four schools suffered minor damage in Gaza in the context of Israeli air strikes, reportedly in response to projectiles launched by Palestinian armed groups from Gaza. In addition, one school in Gaza and one kindergarten in Sderot, Israel, sustained minor damage as a result of rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups. In addition, the United Nations documented 164 incidents of disruption of access to education in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

95. The United Nations uncovered two tunnels used by armed elements running under three United Nations-run schools in Gaza in June and October, posing a potential threat to the lives of Palestinian children and United Nations staff.

96. The United Nations documented six incidents of incursions or clashes between Israeli forces and Palestinians in or around health facilities, affecting children in the West Bank. An increasing percentage of applications by children to cross the Erez checkpoint out of Gaza for medical treatment were delayed in 2017 (32 per cent, against 26 per cent in 2016), which affected 2,420 children (including 988 girls).

Developments and concerns

97. I am extremely concerned regarding the ongoing violence against children in Gaza, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Israel. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations under international law to protect children from all forms of violence, to refrain from the excessive use of force and from encouraging their participation in violent demonstrations and to engage constructively with the United Nations to prevent future violations. I also reiterate my call upon the Government of Israel to draw on international juvenile justice principles, reconsider the use of administrative detention for children, refrain from the use of solitary confinement or from encouraging children to act as informants, ensure that detention is used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest period of time, and to prioritize alternatives to detention.

Lebanon

98. Children continue to be affected by clashes and explosive devices in the north Bīqa' Valley and the Ein El Helweh Palestine refugee camp, by unexploded ordnance in the south and sporadic violence in border areas.

Grave violations

99. In Lebanon, the United Nations continued to document the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, including three verified cases of boys recruited by ISIL in and around Tripoli for trafficking into the Syrian Arab Republic. In addition, three alleged cases of recruitment from Lebanon into the Syrian Arab Republic by Hizbullah were reported, as well as the use of children by armed factions and groups for fighting in Ein El Helweh Palestine refugee camp.

100. The number of children in pretrial detention under military jurisdiction on charges relating to terrorism or national security, following their alleged association with armed groups in Lebanon or the Syrian Arab Republic increased: 53 boys allegedly associated with ISIL were arrested during the reporting period. Of these, 29 were released and 24 remained in detention as at December, along with 9 children detained before 2017 for their association the Nusrah Front-led Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (also known as Levant Liberation Organization).

101. In a marked increase from 2016 (8 child casualties), the United Nations verified 20 child casualties (8 killed, 12 wounded). Violations were most prevalent in Arsal and Ein El Helweh camp.

102. A United Nations school for Palestinian refugees and a centre run by a non-governmental organization sustained major damages during violence between Palestinian armed factions in Ein El Helweh in February.

103. Escalations of armed violence in Ein El Helweh and one isolated incident in the Beddawi Palestine refugee camp disrupted the delivery of education and health services for extensive periods. Military operations in Arsal in July forced at least two non-governmental organizations to suspend critical services for children.

Developments and concerns

104. I am concerned by the increasing number of verified cases of child casualties in Lebanon as well as by reports of the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, and reiterate my call on the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. Children associated with parties to conflict must be treated primarily as victims and given reintegration assistance. I also call upon the Government to ensure that detention is used only as a measure of last resort, for the shortest period of time and to consider alternatives to detention of children formerly associated with armed groups whenever possible. I further call upon armed groups to immediately cease the recruitment and use of children.

Libya

105. Conflict continued throughout Libya, with numerous armed groups engaging in intermittent hostilities while fighting for control of territory. Owing to the level of insecurity, most United Nations staff remained located outside of the country, which restricted the ability to monitor violations.

Grave violations

106. Limited information is available regarding the recruitment and use of children by armed elements. However, cases of the use of children by armed groups continued to be reported. For instance, in October, 125 adolescents formerly associated with armed groups in the Zintan Municipality were released.

107. Children were deprived of their liberty by parties to the conflict and used in prisoner exchanges. In the context of fighting between the Libyan National Army (LNA) and the Petroleum Facilities Guard (PFG) armed group in the oil crescent area, LNA and affiliated forces arrested and detained children for up to seven weeks for their alleged association with PFG. This included boys aged as young as 10.

108. At least 40 children were killed and 38 children injured by air strikes, shelling, small arms fire, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war. For example, in January, four children were killed in an air strike conducted by LNA in Ganfouda neighbourhood, Benghazi. In June, in Sabha, a 13-year-old girl and a 3-year-old boy were caught in crossfire and injured during an armed clash between gunmen loyal to Qadhadhfa and Tebu armed tribal forces. In October, six boys and three girls were killed, and four children were injured, during air strikes in the rural areas of Fata'ih and Arqam near Darnah. The attacks occurred in areas contested by LNA and affiliated forces and the Darnah Mujahidin Shura Council.

109. The United Nations documented incidents that affected displaced persons and migrants, including children, who were deprived of their liberty, raped or subjected to prostitution or other forms of sexual violence by individuals believed to be associated with armed groups or affiliated with State actors.

110. The United Nations documented two incidents of children injured by stray bullets while attending school. The source of fire could not be verified. In addition, 18 attacks against hospitals and medical personnel were verified. For example, in March, one LNA air strike hit a medical centre, killing two civilians. In September, in the context of fighting between armed groups, the University Hospital in Sabratah in western Libya was partially damaged by shelling. Incidents of abduction and detention of medical personnel were also documented, including by LNA and the Special Deterrence Force.

111. The United Nations continued to document incidents of denials of humanitarian access, including attacks on humanitarian actors. Incidents included the detention of four humanitarian staff at the Mitiga airport and an attack on a United Nations convoy by an unknown armed group in Zawiyah.

Developments and concerns

112. I welcome the cooperation of authorities and commanders in releasing children associated with armed actors in Zintan Municipality and strongly encourage other armed groups to take similar steps. I am gravely concerned by reports of sexual violence and other violations committed against children in Libya, including the recruitment, use and trafficking of children, and urge the Government of National Accord to take action to address this issue without delay.

Mali

113. The situation in northern Mali was marked by clashes between armed groups that were signatories to the Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Mali, of 2015 (the Platform coalition of armed groups and the Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad (CMA)), which ended following the signing, on 20 September 2017, of the cessation of hostilities agreement. In contrast, in the northern and central regions, attacks by non-signatory armed groups against national and international forces increased.

Grave violations

114. A total of 159 cases of child recruitment and use were verified (157 boys, 2 girls), including 114 cases that occurred in previous years but were documented in 2017. Cases were attributed to CMA (47) (including to the Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad (21) and the Haut Conseil pour l'unité de l'Azawad (18)); the Platform (73) (including to the Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés (GATIA) (29) and the self-defence groups Ganda Izo and Ganda Koy (20 each)); Mouvement pour le salut de l'Azawad (MSA) (12); Ansar Eddine (9); Al Mourabitoun (3); Mouvement pour l'unification et le jihad en Afrique de l'Ouest and Front de libération du Macina (1 each); and to unidentified armed groups (13).

115. During the reporting period, 23 boys who had been detained by the Government for their alleged association with armed groups were released, including 3 boys who were convicted as adults and released after having served their sentences. The United Nations continued its advocacy with the national authorities, in line with the Protocol on the Release and Handover of Children Associated with Armed Forces and Groups signed in 2013, to ensure the release of three other boys who were still in detention. In separate incidents, 10 boys associated with GATIA (9) and CMA (1) were deprived of their liberty by CMA and GATIA, respectively, and released following United Nations advocacy.

116. The United Nations verified the killing (19) and maiming (15) of 34 children resulting from crossfire, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war. One girl died after being raped. The majority of casualties occurred in Gao (36 per cent) and Kidal (25 per cent) Regions.

117. Nine incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence were verified, affecting 13 girls aged between 12 and 17. Cases were attributed to the Coordination des mouvements et forces patriotiques de résistance II (CMFPR-II) (5); the Malian armed forces (3); MSA (1); and unidentified elements (4). A formal judicial process was initiated in two cases (against CMFPR-II and unidentified elements).

118. A total of 41 attacks on schools and 9 attacks against hospitals were verified in central and northern Mali, all of which remain unattributed. For instance, in September, unidentified armed elements attacked an ambulance belonging to an international non-governmental organization in Tassiga, Gao Region, firing at the vehicle and injuring a midwife. Attacks and threats against educational staff, students and parents were prevalent, particularly in Mopti Region, which accounted for 21 incidents. In addition, 12 schools were used for military purposes by armed groups, including at least four by CMA and two by the Platform. As at December, 657 schools remained closed in conflict-affected regions.

119. Two incidents of abduction, affecting three boys and one girl, were verified. For instance, in April, a 12-year-old girl, who was allegedly accompanied by an unspecified number of other girls, was abducted and raped by unidentified armed elements in Mopti Region.

120. The United Nations verified 132 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, including carjacking and the killing and kidnapping of humanitarian workers. Increasing criminality also undermined humanitarian response efforts. Most incidents occurred in Gao (35) and Kidal (31) Regions. All cases remain unattributed. At least seven organizations providing care to children were affected and at least 10 non-governmental organizations were compelled to temporarily suspend their humanitarian programmes.

121. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. Following the signature by CMA of an action plan with the United Nations in March to end and prevent grave violations against children, the group identified focal points and priority activities, including the screening of troops to identify associated children. I welcome these steps but remain concerned regarding incidents of child recruitment and use. I urge CMA to implement the action plan without delay.

122. In a positive development, on 1 February 2018, the Government endorsed the Safe Schools Declaration, aimed at protecting education facilities from military use during conflict. I encourage the Government to finalize the development of a plan of action to implement the declaration without delay.

123. I am gravely concerned about the continuing high numbers of children recruited and used by the Platform, in particular by GATIA, and urge its leadership to take immediate action and engage with the United Nations to release children and end this practice.

Myanmar

124. While the national peace process between the Government of Myanmar and several armed groups continued, long-standing conflicts in Kachin and Shan States persisted. In addition, on 25 August, armed attacks by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army against Myanmar police posts in northern Rakhine State triggered an immediate response from Myanmar Armed Forces, including the Border Guard Police and Tatmadaw, affecting primarily the Rohingya community. Following the Government's response, a situation of lawlessness ensued, which further compounded the vulnerability of civilians. In all these regions, the security situation remains volatile and grave violations against children continue to be documented.

125. With respect to the situation in Rakhine State, given that the majority of the affected population fled to Bangladesh, a specialized team of monitors was dispatched to camps in the border area to undertake monitoring and verification of alleged violations against children. Information from this monitoring mission is presented in paragraphs 135 to 137 below.

126. In 2017, the United Nations documented 438 cases of the recruitment and use of children, 38 of which were verified. Among those cases, 285 date from previous years.

127. The vast majority of documented cases were attributed to the Tatmadaw, including 166 cases of formal recruitment of children (as young as 13) and the informal or temporary use of about 200 children, mainly for maintenance or cleaning duties.

128. The United Nations verified 39 cases of the recruitment and use of children by armed groups were verified, 35 of which were attributed to the Kachin Independence Army (KIA) and four cases to the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA).

129. The United Nations verified the detention of three boys for alleged association with armed groups and one for alleged “desertion” from the Tatmadaw. In addition, five cases of the military detention of suspected minors (recruited before turning 18) by the Myanmar Armed Forces for alleged “desertion” were documented. After the Myanmar Armed Forces were notified, the suspected minors were sent back to their regiment and placed on light duty, pending verification of their age.

130. The United Nations verified 29 incidents of the killing and maiming of children, involving 47 children (36 boys, 11 girls) in Kachin and Shan States. Landmines and explosive remnants of war continued to be the primary causes of child casualties in those two states (21 incidents), while eight crossfire incidents were attributed jointly to the Tatmadaw and armed groups.

131. The United Nations verified three cases of sexual violence committed against four girls aged as young as 7. Cases were attributed to the Tatmadaw, KIA and a people’s militia in Shan State (one each). In one incident, a Tatmadaw soldier was court-martialled, sentenced to one year of imprisonment and permanently dismissed from the Tatmadaw.

132. A total of 15 attacks on schools were documented during the reporting period. Incidents included damage to a school owing to an armed clash between Tatmadaw and TNLA elements, and attacks on school personnel by TNLA, including the rape of a middle school director in Kyaukme township, Shan State.

133. The United Nations documented 12 incidents of child abduction (14 boys, 3 girls). 10 incidents were attributed to KIA, mainly for the purposes of the recruitment and use of children, while one incident each was attributed to the Tatmadaw and TNLA. Most of the children affected were released after a few days or weeks.

134. Access for humanitarian organizations, particularly in Kachin, Shan and Rakhine States, further deteriorated in 2017, affecting displaced people and other affected civilians in need of humanitarian assistance. Since April 2016, international humanitarian organizations have been refused permission by the Government to distribute food or other relief supplies in areas beyond Government control. Internally displaced persons located in those areas were instructed to travel to designated distribution points in Government-controlled areas in order to collect relief supplies.

Grave violations in northern Rakhine State

135. The United Nations verified the use of 53 boys in northern Rakhine State, largely by the Border Guard Police (47 boys), including for camp maintenance, construction and the carrying of equipment. Information on the recruitment and use by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army of boys, aged as young as 10, was also documented and one case was verified. The fear of reprisals by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army against refugees in Bangladesh for sharing information on the violations perpetrated by the group may have impeded a more complete documentation of such incidents.

136. The United Nations verified the killing (196) and maiming (24) of 220 children (133 boys, 51 girls, 36 sex unknown). All those child casualties occurred during operations by the Border Guard Police and Tatmadaw across 28 villages in Maungdaw, Buthidaung and Rathedaung townships in response to attacks by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army.

137. The United Nations documented 41 cases of rape by the Tatmadaw, including the gang rape of girls as young as 10. Ten cases were verified, including that of a 14-year-old girl in Maungdaw township, who was seized and gang-raped by two Tatmadaw soldiers before being killed in front of her mother and three siblings.

138. I recognize the progress of the Government on the implementation of its action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Myanmar Armed Forces, including through the release of 49 children from the Tatmadaw in 2017, the continued provision of access for monitoring and monthly meetings with the United Nations for joint case reviews of alleged underage recruits. I call on the Government to build on these achievements in order to reinvigorate its road map towards compliance by further accelerating the verification and release of children, ensuring that civilian and military perpetrators of child recruitment are held to account and bringing to a halt the informal association of children with its forces. Children formerly associated with armed forces or groups should be seen primarily as victims, treated in line with international juvenile justice principles and their swift release and reintegration should be prioritized whenever possible.

139. My Special Representative visited Myanmar in May 2018 and held constructive discussions with the Government, including on the speedy completion of the existing action plan, the expeditious passage of the draft child law, the inclusion of child protection issues in the ongoing peace dialogue and on the question of permission to enter Rakhine State to document violations. The Government made a commitment to prioritize these issues.

140. I commend the Kachin Independence Army, the Karenni National Progressive Party/Karenni Army, the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army, the Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council and the Shan State Army for their engagement with the United Nations on child protection and their commitment to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children, and reiterate my call on the Government to facilitate the signature and implementation of action plans with listed armed groups, as suggested by my Special Representative during her latest country visit.

141. I am concerned by the verified recruitment and use of children in northern Rakhine State and credible reports of the killing and maiming of children in a large-scale massacre of Hindus in Maungdaw township on 27 August, allegedly by Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army elements. I underline the need for intensified monitoring and verification of grave violations perpetrated by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army, in particular in Rakhine State, and call upon the group to take immediate action to end and prevent such violations and to refrain from issuing threats to potential witnesses of grave violations against children.

142. I am furthermore deeply concerned about the grave violations against children in northern Rakhine State following the August 2017 attacks, in particular cases of the killing, maiming and rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, and strongly urge the Government of Myanmar to immediately allow unimpeded access for child protection actors to conflict-affected areas, including Rakhine State, and to conduct transparent investigations into the allegations of grave violations against children and ensure support services for survivors and returnees, as discussed with my Special Representative.

Somalia

143. The security situation in Somalia remained highly volatile, with continued Al-Shabaab attacks on Somali security forces, government officials and the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM). The Somali National Army, AMISOM and military forces of Ethiopia and Kenya conducted military operations against Al-Shabaab, and the United States of America intensified air strikes against the group.

Grave violations

144. A total of 2,087 boys and 40 girls were recruited and used. Recruitment of children by Al-Shabaab significantly increased (1,770) compared to 2016, especially after the group forced teachers to adopt a new curriculum. Al-Shabaab used detention, violence and threats to force family members, teachers and elders to hand over their children, causing families to flee or to send their children, often unaccompanied, out of areas controlled by Al-Shabaab, in order to ensure their protection. Children were also recruited by the Somali National Army (119), Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (66), unidentified clan militias (58), Galmudug forces (40), Jubbaland forces (40), Southwest forces (21) and the Somali Police Force (11).

145. The detention of children for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab remained concerning, with children detained mainly by the Somali National Army (156), the Somali Police Force (37), Jubbaland forces (10), Southwest forces (7) and AMISOM (7).

146. A total of 931 children were killed and maimed by unknown armed elements (477), Al-Shabaab (208), the Somali National Army (88), unidentified clan militias (65), Southwest forces (26), AMISOM (21), Jubbaland forces (18), the Somali Police Force (10), Puntland armed forces (7), Kenyan Defence Forces (6), Galmudug forces (4) and Ethiopian Liyu Police (1). Most child casualties resulted from crossfire during military operations, mortar shelling, improvised explosive devices, explosive remnants of war and air strikes. Al-Shabaab also publicly executed children.

147. The United Nations verified incidents of sexual violence affecting 330 girls and 1 boy, attributed to unknown armed elements (125), Al-Shabaab (75), the Somali National Army (37), Jubbaland forces (28), Southwest forces (26), unidentified clan militias (19), Ethiopian Liyu Police (10), Galmudug forces (5), Puntland armed forces (3), Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a, Ethiopian National Defence Forces and the Somali Police Force (1 each). Rape often occurred in camps for internally displaced persons or when girls collected firewood or water.

148. Attacks on 64 schools were verified, 58 of which were attributed to Al-Shabaab. Cases included the detention of teachers for refusing to adopt Al-Shabaab's curriculum or school closures. For instance, on 24 February, Al-Shabaab closed a madrasa in Ceel Garas town, Galguduud Region, and arrested the teacher, who had declined to refer his students for military training. Of 10 verified attacks on hospitals, 6 were attributed to Al-Shabaab.

149. Abductions almost doubled compared to 2016: 1,634 children were abducted, 98 per cent of them by Al-Shabaab (1,608). Abductees as young as 9 were sent to Al-Shabaab madrasas or training camps. In July and August alone, 550 children were abducted in Ceel Buur district and taken to the Ali Jim'ale centre run by Al-Shabaab in Ceel Buur town, Galguduud Region.

150. Incidents of denial of humanitarian access were mainly attributed to Al-Shabaab (26), unidentified clan militias (9) and the Somali National Army (2).

151. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. The Child Protection Unit of the Ministry of Defence screened and sensitized 1,569 integrated Somali National Army soldiers, 700 members of the Darwish force and 235 members of the Southwest forces, with United Nations support. Sustained United Nations engagement with the National Intelligence and Security Agency resulted in the handover of 36 boys to child protection actors. In August, the Chief of Defence Forces issued a General Command Order to protect children from armed conflict. In November, the drafting process for a child rights bill was launched. I welcome these steps and call on the Government to swiftly implement its action plans.

152. A group of 40 children detained in Puntland since 2016 over their association with Al-Shabaab was placed in a reintegration centre in Garowe. The prison sentences of 28 of the children were reduced to 10 years. While I welcome their handover, I am concerned about the lengthy prison sentences and call upon the President of Puntland to grant a presidential pardon and accelerate the children's transfer to reintegration centres closer to their areas of origin. I further call on Puntland authorities to harmonize its legislations with federal laws and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

153. I am extremely concerned by the surge in the number of violations against children, including the increase in the number of cases of the recruitment and use of children and of sexual violence perpetrated against them attributed to Jubbaland, Southwest and Galmudug forces; the increase in the number of Al-Shabaab recruitment campaigns, attacks on schools and hospitals and abductions; as well as the increase in the number of air strikes by unidentified perpetrators targeting Al-Shabaab training camps holding children. I call upon all parties to immediately cease all violations and abide by their obligations under international law.

154. I remain concerned by the detention of children for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab and call on authorities to treat those children primarily as victims, with the best interests of the child and international protection standards as guiding principles.

South Sudan

155. Fighting between the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and its allies against the pro-Machar Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (SPLA-IO) continued and spread to the Greater Upper Nile region. Violations against children by all parties to the conflict increased, with the highest number of incidents documented in the Greater Equatoria region, followed by the Greater Upper Nile region. Owing to insecurity and access restrictions, many incidents could not be verified.

Grave violations

156. The United Nations verified 140 incidents of the recruitment and use of children, which affected 1,221 children, including 164 girls. They were attributed to pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO (459 children), followed by the South Sudan National Liberation Movement (SSNLM) (405), SPLA (254), pro-Machar SPLA-IO (60), the South Sudan Democratic Army-Cobra Faction (SSDA-CF) (42) and the South Sudan National Police Service (SSNPS) (1). Children were most affected in Unity but were observed throughout the country wearing military uniforms, manning checkpoints, being used as porters or bodyguards and carrying weapons.

157. The United Nations verified 54 incidents of killing (36 children) and maiming (57 children). The majority of casualties were attributed to SPLA (38 children) and pro-Machar SPLA-IO (6). Children continued to be affected by unexploded ordnance (38 child casualties).

158. The United Nations verified incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence affecting 55 girls, including 13 girls who were gang-raped. The majority of cases were verified in Central Equatoria and Eastern Equatoria and attributed to SPLA (47 girls) followed by pro-Machar SPLA-IO (3), pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO (2), SSNPS, South Sudan National Wildlife Service and SSNLM (1 each). Girls were most frequently affected during military operations carried out by SPLA and pro-Machar SPLA-IO, as well as at checkpoints.

159. Attacks on 26 schools and 24 hospitals were verified. Cases were attributed to SPLA (33), pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO (5), pro-Machar SPLA-IO (2) and the South Sudan People's Patriotic Front (SSPPF) (1). Nine cases resulted from crossfire incidents between SPLA and pro-Machar SPLA-IO. In April, schools and health facilities in Eastern Equatoria were particularly affected following SPLA military offensives in and around Pajok, Magwe County (17 attacks).

160. In addition, 22 schools and two hospitals were used for military purposes. Cases were mainly attributed to SPLA (18), pro-Machar SPLA-IO (2), pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO (2) and SSNPS (1). All 22 schools continued to be used for military purposes at the time of writing.

161. A total of 12 incidents of abduction, which affected 29 children, including 9 girls, were verified. Cases were attributed to SPLA (20 children), pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO (6) and pro-Machar SPLA-IO (3). Children continued to be abducted for recruitment purposes. For instance, in Unity, in August, three boys, aged between 14 and 15, were abducted by SPLA soldiers on their way back to a United Nations protection of civilians site in Bentiu, before being rescued by United Nations peacekeepers.

162. A total of 783 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, a significant increase from 2016. Incidents were attributed to national authorities and institutions (400), SPLA (189), pro-Machar SPLA-IO (104), pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO (10), the White Army and SSPPF (3 each). Incidents involved attacks on humanitarian personnel and the looting of warehouses and humanitarian assets, as well as bureaucratic impediments. For instance, in March, six humanitarian workers on their way to Jonglei to implement child protection activities for children released from SSDA-CF were killed in Central Equatoria.

Developments and concerns

163. Within the framework of the action plan signed with SPLA on the recruitment and use of children, the South Sudan National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission carried out two training-of-trainers sessions on child protection, with the support of the United Nations, for a total of 70 SPLA officers. The officers subsequently facilitated internal training programmes initiated by SPLA.

164. The United Nations and the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission conducted several advocacy campaigns for the release of children associated with armed groups. In August, during an age-assessment exercise in Pibor, Jonglei, 313 boys were found to be associated with pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO. Between October and December, an age assessment by the United Nations and the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission in Yambio, Western Equatoria, identified 426 children associated with SSNLM and 44 children associated with pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO. In the first four months of 2018, 518 children, including 182 girls, were released in a first phase by SSNLM and pro-Taban Deng SPLA-IO.

165. In November, in a meeting with the United Nations, the First Vice-President, Taban Deng Gai, acknowledged the presence of children in the ranks of his troops, reaffirmed his support for their release and subsequently nominated a child protection focal point.

166. While I take note of the above-mentioned steps, the scale of violations affecting children in South Sudan and the level of impunity for perpetrators remain alarming. I remind parties to conflict that all children recruited and used must be released and handed over to civilian child protection actors, in line with the 2015 Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict, the 2017 Agreement on the Cessation of Hostilities and the action plans signed with the United Nations. I call on the Government to ensure accountability for violations and urge all parties to conflict to abide by their obligations to protect children.

167. Furthermore, I am extremely concerned about the increase in the number of attacks on schools and hospitals, particularly by Government forces, and urge the Government to end such attacks immediately.

The Sudan

168. Clashes between the Government and armed groups in Darfur decreased significantly, although an unsuccessful attempt was made by the Sudan Liberation Army-Minni Minawi (SLA/MM) and allied forces to reassert their presence in North and East Darfur in May, and the arms collection campaign by the Government spurred clashes with Musa Hilal and allied forces in October. The activities of the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid (SLA/AW) remained limited to pockets of West Jebel Marra. While the situation in South Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei was relatively stable, divisions within the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-N) reportedly resulted in ethnic clashes. Throughout the year, unilateral ceasefires were extended in Darfur, South Kordofan and Blue Nile.

Grave violations: Darfur

169. The United Nations documented the recruitment and use of 24 children, of which one case, involving the recruitment of a 14-year-old boy by SLA/AW, was verified. In addition, 22 children were detained by the Government for their alleged association with armed groups, for periods lasting between three weeks and five months. All children have been released from detention.

170. A total of 94 incidents of killing (19) and maiming (75), affecting 146 children, were verified (116 boys, 30 girls), which reflected a decrease from the 199 children killed or maimed in 2016. Child casualties resulted from shooting (75), unexploded ordnance (66), aerial bombardment (3) and physical assault (2). Incidents were attributed to unidentified armed elements (33), Rapid Support Forces (RSF) (4), Sudan Police (3), Sudan Armed Forces (SAF) (3), tribal clashes (2) and one each to SLA/AW, the Popular Defence Forces and the joint Chad-Sudan border monitoring force. Almost half of all the incidents (46) were caused by unexploded ordnance and could not be attributed.

171. The United Nations verified 36 incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence, which affected 44 girls, aged between 6 and 17. Cases were attributed to unidentified armed elements (38), SAF (3), RSF (1), Sudan Police (1), and Sudan Liberation Army/Peace and Development (SLA/PD) (1). Of the 36 incidents, to date, 3 have resulted in a conviction.

172. A total of eight attacks on schools (4) and hospitals (4) were verified and attributed to unidentified armed elements (5), RSF (2) and SLA/PD (1). Attacks on schools and hospitals involved the abduction and rape of two teachers, physical damage to schools and the looting of medical material. In addition, the United Nations verified the military use of four schools by RSF (3) and SAF (1). The school used by SAF in Laiba, East Jebel Marra, remained occupied at the time of writing.

173. Nine incidents of abduction, affecting 10 boys and 3 girls, were verified, all of which were attributed to unidentified armed elements.

174. The United Nations verified one incident of denial of humanitarian access. In Kutum, North Darfur, a vehicle transporting medicine was prevented from passing by unidentified armed elements. Restrictions on movement and bureaucratic constraints imposed by the Government on the United Nations and international non-governmental organizations delivering aid to vulnerable populations, particularly in East Jebel Marra, continued to affect the delivery of humanitarian aid to children.

Grave violations: South Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei

175. While no cases of child recruitment and use could be verified, the United Nations received allegations of the recruitment of boys by a splinter group of SPLM-N in Kurmuk, Blue Nile, prior to the group's integration into SAF.

176. The killing (10) and maiming (6) of 16 boys was verified and attributed to unidentified armed elements (10) and SPLM-N (1). Three child casualties resulted from unexploded ordnance and two occurred during clashes and could not be attributed. Five incidents took place in South Kordofan and one in Abyei.

177. No attacks on schools and hospitals were verified. However, in May, SAF used three schools formerly held by SPLM-N in Kurmuk, Blue Nile, and one hospital in Jurt West village, Blue Nile, for military purposes.

178. Access restrictions imposed by SPLM-N continued to affect the delivery of humanitarian aid to children.

179. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. During her visit to the Sudan from 25 February to 1 March 2018, my Special Representative witnessed commendable progress in the implementation of the Government's action plan and the initiation of a process of building on the action plan so as to create a national plan of prevention of violations against children. In this regard, I welcome the impact of measures taken by the high-level and technical committees at the national and state levels to improve the protection of children, including the adoption of the standard operating procedures on the release and handover of children associated with armed groups and the complaint mechanism manual to report child recruitment. I am encouraged by the access provided for joint United Nations-Government monitoring and verification missions to barracks and training centres of the armed forces, the issuance of command orders and directives to all Government forces to prevent child recruitment and the release of all children previously detained. There have been no verified reports of the recruitment and use of children by the Government of the Sudan since 2015. Furthermore, I welcome efforts by the Government to demilitarize schools and hospitals and the initiation of an awareness-raising campaign to prevent violations against children.

180. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. I welcome the continued engagement by SPLM-N on its action plan, including the establishment of an action plan committee and the issuance of a command order prohibiting the recruitment and use of children, and call on the group to provide access for the United Nations to areas under its control.

181. I welcome the respective command orders issued by SLA/MM and the Justice and Equality Movement and urge both parties to expedite their implementation plans to end and prevent child recruitment, in particular by facilitating verification missions by the United Nations.

Syrian Arab Republic

182. A high intensity of conflict continued across the Syrian Arab Republic in 2017, resulting in the highest number of verified grave violations against children (2,896) ever recorded in the country. Civilians trapped in densely populated besieged areas, mainly by Government forces, continued to be the worst affected.

183. Verified cases of the recruitment and use of children increased by 13 per cent compared to 2016, with 961 cases (872 boys, 89 girls) verified. Ninety per cent of the children served in combat roles (861) and 26 per cent (254) were below the age of 15. Of the total number of verified cases, 36 children were of foreign origin and at least 16 were killed in combat.

184. Verified cases were attributed to ISIL (284); groups self-affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (FSA) (244); People's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) (224); Government forces and pro-government militias (73); Ahrar al-Sham (53); Nusrah Front-led Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (41); Army of Islam (also known as Jaysh al-Islam) (37); and unidentified armed groups (five).

185. Verified cases of the recruitment and use of children by ISIL, including a 4-year-old child, more than doubled in 2017. The recruitment and use of children by YPG/YPJ increased almost fivefold (from 46 to 224) compared to 2016. Nearly one third of the verified cases of children recruited by the group were girls (72) and 16 per cent were of Arab origin. Groups self-affiliated with the FSA were responsible for a quarter of all verified cases. Over 70 per cent of verified cases occurred in Aleppo, Hama and Idlib Governorates. In relation to children recruited by Government forces and pro-government militias, some received military training, including outside of the country when children of foreign origin were associated with pro-government militia, and were found carrying military intelligence identification cards.

186. Children continued to be arrested and detained for their alleged association with armed groups. The arrest and detention of 72 children by Government forces (46 boys, 26 girls; some aged as young as 10) for their alleged association with armed groups, was verified. At least 38 of these children were ill-treated, tortured and/or raped during their detention.

187. Six boys, as young as 12, were deprived of their liberty for alleged association with opposing parties. Four cases were attributed to groups self-affiliated with FSA, one to ISIL and one to Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham. In the context of the advances made on ISIL-held areas during the second half of 2017, at least 166 children were deprived of their liberty by the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) for their alleged affiliation with ISIL. ISIL also deprived 27 children of their liberty as punishment for a wide range of acts it classifies as crimes.

188. The United Nations verified the killing (910) and maiming (361) of 1,271 children. Cases were attributed to Government and pro-government forces (586 cases, of which 404 were aerial attacks); ISIL (150); the international counter-ISIL coalition (43); YPG/YPJ (29); groups self-affiliated with FSA (9); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (3); Ahrar al-Sham (1); and unidentified perpetrators (450). Most of the verified cases were as a result of air strikes (734), followed by shelling (191) and improvised explosive devices (133). In one incident, in April, aerial attacks struck a residential area north of Khan Shaykhun, Idlib, killing 35 children and injuring 23.

189. The United Nations verified 24 cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence (23 girls, 1 boy). Cases included gang rape, forced marriage to armed group fighters, trafficking and sexual enslavement. Of the 24 cases, 18 were attributed to ISIL, 4 to Government forces and 2 to Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham.

190. The United Nations verified 67 attacks on schools and education personnel. Incidents were attributed to Government and pro-government forces (44), the international counter-ISIL coalition (4), ISIL (3) and groups self-affiliated with the FSA (2). The majority of attacks were a result of air strikes (47).

191. The United Nations verified 108 attacks on hospitals and medical personnel, resulting in the killing of 6 and injuring of at least 29 medical personnel. Attacks were attributed to Government forces (13); pro-government forces (67); groups self-affiliated with FSA (4); the international counter-ISIL coalition (4); ISIL (2); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1). Most of the attacks resulted from air strikes (81).

192. Schools were frequently used for military purposes, with 22 verified incidents attributed to ISIL (20) and YPG/YPJ (2). Of these, 16 schools were subsequently attacked. In addition, the United Nations verified the military use of 10 hospitals by ISIL, among which 8 were subsequently attacked. Schools and hospitals served as training grounds, ammunition depots, detention facilities, accommodations and military bases.

193. The United Nations verified the abduction of 57 children (23 boys, 20 girls, 14 sex unknown), which were attributed to Government forces (20), YPG/YPJ (6), ISIL (6) and unidentified armed groups (25). The alleged affiliation of relatives with opposing armed forces or groups was the primary reason for abduction. Six children were abducted for the purpose of forced recruitment by YPG/YPJ (3) and ISIL (3).

194. In 2017, the escalation of violence in eastern Ghutah and Rural Damascus led to a rapid deterioration of living conditions for around 400,000 persons trapped inside the government-besieged enclave, including a high number of children.

195. The United Nations verified 105 cases of denial of humanitarian access, including 52 cases involving attacks on humanitarian facilities and personnel and 53 cases of the removal or blocking of humanitarian supplies. The main perpetrators included Government forces (36); air strikes by Government or pro-government forces (19); ISIL (6); YPG/YPJ (4); and Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (3). Attacks on humanitarian personnel resulted in the killing (21) and injury (35) of 56 persons.

196. I am deeply concerned about the continuing high numbers of verified violations, including the killing and maiming of children and the increase in child recruitment and use, and urge all parties to the conflict to put in place measures to end and prevent these violations.

197. I acknowledge the formation of a national committee to prevent and respond to underage recruitment by armed groups in March 2018, and urge the Government to work closely with the United Nations to implement concrete measures in this regard, as well as to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by its own armed forces and pro-government militia without delay.

198. I am deeply concerned about the fate of children, including of foreign origin, affiliated or allegedly affiliated with parties to the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic and call upon parties encountering and receiving these children to abide by international norms and standards and treat those children primarily as victims. In this regard, I stress the importance of developing protection-oriented rehabilitation activities for these children, so as to facilitate their reintegration into society.

199. I renew my call upon all parties to enhance their engagement in the United Nations-led intra-Syrian talks, in line with Security Council resolution 2254 \(2015\), in view of bringing sustainable peace to the country and ending violations against children.

Yemen

200. The situation in Yemen remained grave and was marked by continued armed conflict. In November, a military escalation began between the principal belligerents, when the Houthis fired a ballistic missile towards Riyadh and subsequent air strikes and ground fighting intensified, including for the control of ports and supply routes. In December, political alliances shifted, causing intensified fighting in Sana'a between the Houthis and the General People's Congress, culminating in the killing of former President, Ali Abdullah Saleh, and causing further political instability in the country.

Grave violations

201. The United Nations verified 842 cases of the recruitment and use of boys as young as 11 years old. Among those cases, 534 (nearly two thirds) were attributed to the Houthis, 142 cases to the Security Belt Forces and 105 to the Yemeni Armed Forces, marking a substantial increase compared to 2016, with the majority of children aged between 15 and 17. Other parties included pro-government Popular Resistance (50) and Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) (1). The Governorate of Abyan was the location with the highest number of verified cases (156). Access restrictions to areas with AQAP presence led to a decrease in the ability to verify cases attributed to that group.

202. Children were mainly used to guard checkpoints and government buildings, for patrolling, fetching water and bringing food and equipment to military positions; 76 children were used as combatants. 31 boys were killed and 14 were maimed while associated with parties to the conflict. Reports indicate that financial payments by the Houthis were used as incentives for child association.

203. The United Nations documented the deprivation of liberty of 23 boys (aged between 13 and 17) by armed forces and groups for their alleged association with opposing parties. Three boys were detained by the Yemeni Armed Forces and one by the coalition to restore legitimacy in Yemen (hereafter the coalition). Thirteen boys were seized and deprived of their liberty by the Houthis, 5 by the Security Belt Forces and 1 by the Popular Resistance.

204. The United Nations verified the killing and maiming of 1,316 children (552 killed: 398 boys, 154 girls; 764 maimed: 549 boys, 215 girls), and 51 per cent of those casualties were caused by air strikes (368 killed, 300 injured). The second leading cause was ground fighting, including shelling and shooting (136 killed, 334 injured), followed by explosive remnants of war and mines (27 killed, 119 injured).

205. Of the total number of verified child casualties, 670 were attributed to the coalition (370 killed, 300 injured); 324 to the Houthis (83 killed, 241 injured); 41 to the Popular Resistance; 19 to other international forces fighting for the Government of Yemen; 10 to AQAP; and 4 to the Yemeni Armed Forces, among other parties.

206. The highest number of child casualties was documented in Ta'izz (35 per cent), with 459 children affected. Of those casualties, 286 were the result of ground fighting, with 245 child casualties attributed to the Houthis. The second highest number of casualties was documented in Sa'dah (187), where 168 cases were the result of air strikes and ground fighting on the northern border (2) and attributed to the coalition. The escalation of fighting between the Houthis and the Yemeni Armed Forces and affiliated groups, as well as increased air strikes, resulted in 113 child casualties in Hudaydah Governorate.

207. There was a marked decrease in verified attacks on schools and hospitals compared to 2016, when 48 schools and 23 hospitals were partially or completely destroyed.

208. The United Nations verified 20 attacks on schools, with 19 schools affected by aerial attacks attributed to the coalition, the majority of which occurred in Sa‘dah (9), Hajjah (4), and Hudaydah (2). One incident was attributed to an unidentified armed group in Dali‘. In addition, 11 attacks on hospitals were verified, affecting 9 hospitals and health facilities and resulting in their partial or complete destruction. Five attacks were attributed to the Houthis in Ta‘izz, and five to the coalition in Hajjah (2), Hudaydah (1), Sa‘dah (1) and Ta‘izz (1). The remaining attack was attributed to the Security Belt Forces in Aden.

209. The United Nations verified eight incidents of the military use of schools in Ta‘izz (3), Amanat al-Asimah (2), Sa‘dah (2) and Sana‘a (1) and two incidents of the military use of hospitals in Taiz; of these, three schools and one hospital were subsequently the target of an attack. The Houthis were responsible for five incidents of the military use of schools, the Yemeni Armed Forces for one, and the Popular Resistance for the military use of two schools and two hospitals.

210. The United Nations verified the abduction of one boy by the Houthis in Shabwah. The boy was subsequently engaged to fight with the armed group.

211. The United Nations documented 248 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, including restrictions on movement (161), violence against humanitarian personnel, assets and facilities (55) and interference in the delivery of humanitarian assistance (32). Most of the incidents were documented in Ta‘izz (60), Hudaydah (44) and Sa‘dah (31), with the majority attributed to the Houthis (168), Yemeni Armed Forces (35) and the coalition (15).

212. Access to frontline areas was challenging and restrictions and delays were experienced throughout 2017 at main entry ports for humanitarian aid. Following the launching of missiles by the Houthis into Saudi Arabia, the coalition imposed a total land, sea and air blockade between 5 and 24 November, thereby halting all humanitarian and commercial access. A partial blockade continued until 20 December.

213. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. I am encouraged by the decrease in attacks on schools and hospitals attributed to the coalition. It reflects, among other things, the impact of preventive and protective measures taken, including the establishment of a child protection unit in the coalition headquarters, composed of civilian and military staff, put in place in coordination with my Special Representative. During my visit to Riyadh in April 2018, I was also encouraged by efforts undertaken by the Government of Saudi Arabia to support the reintegration of children formerly associated with armed groups in Yemen.

214. The action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Yemeni Armed Forces, signed in 2014, must be revitalized and updated. In this regard, I welcome the ongoing discussions between the Government of Yemen and my Special Representative regarding the drafting of protocols on the handover and release of children and the issuance of a command order by the Deputy Commander-in-Chief of the Yemeni Armed Forces in March 2018, recalling that the recruitment and use of children by the Government forces is forbidden and that violations must be reported. I further welcome the endorsement of the Safe Schools Declaration by the Government of Yemen in October, which is an important step for the development of concrete safeguards to ensure a better protection of these facilities, education personnel and children.

215. Notwithstanding this progress, I am deeply concerned that during the fourth quarter of 2017, the intensification of fighting resulted in an increased number of violations against children being committed by all parties. The number of children killed and maimed in Yemen remains unacceptably high, and those numbers have remained high in the first quarter of 2018, as does the number of children recruited and used by armed forces and groups. I acknowledge the Houthis' openness to engaging with the United Nations on child protection but remain deeply concerned about ongoing recruitment campaigns by the group, specifically targeting schools as a place of recruitment, and urge the group to establish preventive and protective measures. I further urge the coalition to continue strengthening mechanisms aimed at protecting children, particularly in view of preventing child casualties.

216. I remind all parties to abide by their obligations under international law to protect children from all forms of violence, including through respecting the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, to ensure humanitarian access to populations in need, to release children deprived of their liberty and hand them over to appropriate child protection actors and to engage constructively with the United Nations to prevent future violations.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

India

217. Children continued to be affected by incidents of violence between armed groups and the Government, particularly in Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand and during tensions in Jammu and Kashmir.

Grave violations

218. The United Nations continued to receive reports of the recruitment and use of children, including by the Naxalites, particularly in Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand. Naxalites reportedly resorted to the use of a lottery system to conscript children in Jharkhand. In addition, three incidents of the recruitment and use of children were reported in Jammu and Kashmir in the context of clashes with national security forces. One case was attributed to Jaish-i-Mohammed and two to Hizbul Mujahideen. Unverified reports also indicate the use of children as informants and spies by national security forces.

219. Children continued to be killed and injured in the context of operations of national security forces against armed groups. According to Government data, 188 civilians were killed in Naxalite-affected regions, although no disaggregated data on children were available. On 9 March, a 15-year-old boy was killed by national security forces during a clash with alleged Lashkar-e-Tayyiba elements in Padgampora village, Pulwama district.

220. In Jharkhand State, suspected Naxalites elements attacked one school in Khunti district, partially destroying it. With regard to military use, the occupation of over 20 schools was documented by the Central Reserve Police Force in Srinagar, Kashmir, in April. Increased tensions in Jammu and Kashmir reportedly also led to school closures for varying periods, including in Rajouri (65) and Poonch (76) districts.

221. I welcome the Government's signature of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) in June 2017, and encourage the Government to put in place measures to hold perpetrators of child recruitment and use to account and engage with the United Nations in view of ending and preventing violations against children.

Nigeria

222. In north-east Nigeria, as well as in neighbouring countries, Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati Wal-Jihad, commonly known as Boko Haram, intensified attacks on civilians, including through suicide bombings and ground attacks. In the northern part of Borno State, a new Boko Haram faction emerged following its separation from the Abubakar Shekau faction.

Grave violations

223. The total number of verified cases of the recruitment and use of children decreased by almost 50 per cent, from 2,122 in 2016 to 1,092 (738 boys, 353 girls, 1 unknown sex) in 2017. The main perpetrator remained Boko Haram (1,051). The Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) recruited 41 children, all of whom were used in support roles. The decrease may be attributed to the loss of territory by Boko Haram, the displacement of civilians from areas controlled by the group and the CJTF action plan, signed by the group in 2017.

224. In 2017, 2,199 children were deprived of liberty for their or their parents' alleged association with Boko Haram, in Nigeria (1,903), the Niger (239) and Cameroon (57). In 2017, the Nigerian authorities released 1,190 children, leaving 713 children in military detention at the time of reporting.

225. The United Nations verified a total of 881 children killed (570) and maimed (311) in Nigeria, attributed to Boko Haram (620) and to Nigerian Security Forces (NSF) (261). Almost half of all casualties resulted from suicide attacks perpetrated by Boko Haram (including the use of children as carriers of person-borne improvised explosive devices) (411). With regard to NSF, casualties were caused by aerial bombardments (235) and the targeting of children suspected to be carrying person-borne improvised explosive devices (26).

226. A worrying trend was the continued use of children by Boko Haram as carriers of person-borne improvised explosive devices, with 146 cases documented in Nigeria and 57 in Cameroon. Almost three quarters of the children used were girls (145).

227. The United Nations verified 45 incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence, affecting 131 children, including 9 boys. Cases were attributed to Boko Haram (9 boys, 116 girls) and NSF (6 girls). All child victims attributed to Boko Haram were abducted, raped or forcibly married to members of the group.

228. The United Nations verified four attacks on schools and one attack on a hospital in Nigeria attributed to Boko Haram (4) and NSF (1). Furthermore, two schools were attacked in far north Cameroon, eight hospitals in the Diffa region of the Niger and one hospital in far north Cameroon. At the time of writing, 14 schools continued to be used for military purposes by NSF in Nigeria, 10 in Borno State and 4 in Yobe State.

229. Boko Haram abducted 189 children (107 boys, 79 girls, 3 sex unknown). Between July and October, 90 children were abducted by Boko Haram during raids on villages across the borders of Nigeria with Cameroon and the Niger. In addition, 1,456 children in north-east Nigeria were verified as having been abducted by Boko

Haram during previous years. 82 of the Chibok schoolgirls abducted by Boko Haram in April 2014 were released as a result of internationally supported negotiations between Boko Haram and the Government, while 112 remain unaccounted for. On 19 February 2018, 105 girls were abducted from the Government Girls' Science Technical College in Dapchi, Yobe State, by Boko Haram insurgents, further curtailing access to education for Nigerian girls.

230. Five incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, including ambushes and physical attacks on humanitarian workers. Four were attributed to Boko Haram and one to NSF.

Developments and concerns

231. Measures put in place to improve the protection of children. I commend CJTF for signing an action plan with the United Nations on 15 September to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and the important first steps taken for its implementation, including the promulgation of a standing order by CJTF to end and prevent child recruitment. I encourage CJTF to consolidate and to further accelerate the implementation of the action plan.

232. I remain concerned that children continued to be detained and urge the Government to release them and to swiftly adopt the handover protocol for children associated with armed groups, in line with international standards, and to ensure the sustainable reintegration of children. I also encourage the Government to cease the use of schools for military purposes, in line with the commitments in the Safe Schools Declaration, and to provide a protective educational environment for children, in particular for girls.

233. The continued number of violations by Boko Haram remains gravely disturbing, in particular the use of children as carriers of person-borne improvised explosive devices and the number of abductions, including the reported abduction of more than 100 girls in Dapchi, Yobe State, in 2018.

234. I am deeply concerned by the significant increase in the number of children killed and maimed and of cases of sexual violence and call on all parties to the conflict to take urgent action to improve the protection of children.

Pakistan

235. Since 2009, attacks by armed groups have progressively decreased, with 370 incidents reported in 2017. More than half of all incidents were attributed to Tehrik-e Taliban Pakistan (TTP) and splinter groups, predominantly in Balochistan and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (FATA). Reports indicate an increasing presence of ISIL-KP, particularly in Balochistan and northern Sindh.

Grave violations

236. The United Nations continued to receive reports of the recruitment and use of children, including from madrasas, and allegations of the use of children by armed groups for suicide attacks. In January, TTP released a video showing children, including girls, being instructed in how to perpetrate suicide attacks.

237. Age-disaggregated data on civilian casualties are limited, but incidents of children killed and injured in attacks by armed groups continued to be reported. In February, at least 75 people, including 20 children, were reportedly killed in a suicide attack in Sehwan, Sindh Province. In April, 14 persons, including 4 children, were reportedly killed when a passenger vehicle struck a roadside bomb in the Gudar area, FATA. ISIL-KP and TTP-Jamaat-ul-Ahrar both claimed the attack.

238. Eight attacks on educational facilities and students were reported, four targeting girls' education. For example, in March, unidentified individuals vandalized the Oxford Public School, located in Ghizer Valley, Gilgit-Baltistan, and threatened to bomb the school if female teachers did not cover themselves. In the same month, a girls' school located in Qila Abdullah in Balochistan Province was damaged in an attack, through the use of improvised explosive devices.

239. Attacks on health-care facilities and staff by armed groups continued in 2017, including 113 direct attacks (three personnel killed) or threats against polio vaccinators.

Developments and concerns

240. I am concerned by the continued attacks on schools by armed groups, particularly the targeting of girls' education. In this regard, I take note of ongoing efforts to review national policies on child rights, and encourage the Government to prioritize measures to deter future attacks on schools.

Philippines

241. The reporting period was marked by the five-month Marawi siege and the related military operation against the Maute Group, the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) and the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF), resulting in the enactment of martial law in Mindanao. In addition, the United Nations continued to document low-intensity armed engagements between Government forces, occasionally in coordination with the Moro Islamic Liberation Front in territory controlled by the group, and armed groups, predominantly in Mindanao. Conflict-related incidents between the New People's Army (NPA) and Government forces supported by pro-government armed groups intensified, following the termination of the ceasefire agreement and the subsequent collapse of peace talks.

Grave violations

242. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 30 children (6 girls, 8 boys, 16 sex unknown) by armed groups. 16 children were used as human shields by BIFF in a single incident; 6 were recruited and used by NPA; and 8 by the Maute Group. Children were recruited and used for combat, as part of medical squads, as cooks and to extract gunpowder from firecrackers. The United Nations received additional unverified reports of the large-scale recruitment and use of children by the Maute Group during the Marawi siege and of nine children recruited by NPA, indicating that the actual number of violations is likely higher. Some of the children were reportedly killed in combat.

243. The United Nations documented the detention of 12 children for their alleged association with armed groups, none of whom were formally charged. For example, four boys were arrested and detained by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) for their alleged association with ASG. The boys were blindfolded, handcuffed and beaten during their detention and subsequently taken to a hospital for medical treatment.

244. The United Nations verified the killing and maiming of 33 children (16 killed, 17 injured; 21 boys, 12 girls). 12 cases were attributed to AFP and 1 to NPA and included incidents of indiscriminate attacks. For instance, on 12 July, two boys and one girl, reportedly associated with NPA, were killed during an encounter with AFP in Compostela Valley province. 20 cases could not be attributed and included casualties caused by explosive remnants of war (10) and crossfire (8). In addition, an undetermined number of children were killed and injured during the Marawi siege.

245. Three cases of the rape of girls aged as young as 14 by the Maute Group were verified. The Government is following up on these cases. Additional cases were reported in the context of the Marawi siege.

246. The United Nations verified 60 attacks on schools and educational personnel (24) and health-care facilities (36) signifying a substantial increase compared to 2016 (12 attacks). Almost all cases (56) were the result of armed engagements, including bombardments, in the context of the Marawi siege. Many of the structures were occupied by the Maute Group at the time of attacks. Threats by AFP and pro-government armed groups against educational personnel working for schools run by non-governmental organizations in indigenous peoples' communities continued to be reported. In addition, the military use of six schools and one hospital was verified (AFP four, Philippine National Police one, BIFF one, Maute Group one). In addition to being used as bases during armed clashes, schools were frequently used as sites to provide services by the AFP in the context of civil-military operations.

247. Five incidents of abduction, involving seven children, were verified, including one abduction of a 7-year-old boy by ASG for a period of seven months, in Sulu province and of two 14-year-old girls by the Maute Group for four months.

248. In a positive development, the Government of the Philippines revived formal coordination meetings with the United Nations on incidents of grave violations against children, with a view to facilitating appropriate response to these cases. Notwithstanding this progress, I urge the Government to intensify engagement with the United Nations to address ongoing violations against children, ensure consistent application of its national child protection procedures and guidelines and facilitate access to conflict-affected areas for child protection actors.

249. I am deeply concerned by the increase in the number of grave violations against children in 2017, particularly in Mindanao, and remind all parties to the conflict to abide by their obligations under international law and to prevent the killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals. I furthermore call upon armed groups that are recruiting and using children to take immediate steps to end and prevent the practice and to engage with the United Nations to develop action plans.

Thailand

250. Sporadic clashes between security forces and armed groups, as well as attacks by armed groups on civilian targets, continued in Thailand's southern border provinces.

Grave violations

251. The United Nations documented the lowest number of children killed (1) and injured (16) recorded in the past 14 years. Incidents resulted from attacks with the use of improvised explosive device and shooting. According to data from the Ministry of Education, no attacks on schools were perpetrated during the reporting period.

Developments and concerns

252. The security situation further improved in the southern border provinces in 2017, and I am encouraged by the cooperation on child protection issues between the Government and various partners, including the United Nations. I call upon the Government to take appropriate measures to prevent future violations, including by inviting the United Nations to conduct regular monitoring of grave violations against children, and to enable programmatic prevention activities in the southern border provinces, as well as by including child protection concerns in its ongoing talks with armed groups.

IV. Recommendations

253. I am deeply concerned by the scale and severity of grave violations against children outlined in the present report, including high levels of killing and maiming, recruitment and use, sexual violence and abductions, and call upon all parties to immediately end and take all necessary measures to prevent such grave violations, including through ensuring accountability for perpetrators.

254. I urge Member States, whether acting alone or as part of coalitions or international forces, to ensure that their responses to all threats to peace and security are conducted in full compliance with international law. Children formerly associated with armed forces or groups should be seen primarily as victims and detention should only be used as a last resort, for the shortest period of time, and alternatives to detention should be prioritized whenever possible.

255. I call upon Member States to continue supporting the implementation of action plans and other commitments aimed at strengthening the protection of children in armed conflict, including by facilitating the engagement of the United Nations with armed groups.

256. In view of the continuing high levels of cross-border recruitment and the subsequent challenges in terms of the repatriation and reintegration of children separated from armed forces or groups, I call upon Member States and regional and subregional organizations to engage closely with the United Nations in order to ensure a coordinated response based on international law and keeping in mind the best interest of the child.

257. I encourage Member States, as well as regional and subregional organizations, to further strengthen dedicated child protection capacities and to engage with the United Nations to prioritize the development of tools to forestall grave violations, including through the adoption of prevention plans aimed at systematizing preventive measures.

258. I call upon the Security Council to continue to support the children and armed conflict agenda by including provisions for the protection of children in all relevant mandates of United Nations peace operations and to request adequate child protection capacity in order to mainstream child protection, conduct dialogue on action plans, release and reintegrate children and further strengthen monitoring and reporting.

259. I enjoin the donor community to engage in a discussion to address the funding gaps for the reintegration of children recruited and used and to support the establishment of a multi-year funding mechanism, thereby allowing child protection actors to react swiftly to the release of children and put in place long-term viable alternatives to military life, notably by placing a specific focus on girls, on psychosocial support and on education programmes and vocational training.

260. I welcome all steps taken to ensure full compliance with international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law, and call upon Member States to further strengthen the protection of children in armed conflict, including through ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict as well as the endorsement and implementation of the Paris Commitments to protect children from unlawful recruitment or use by armed forces or groups, the Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups (Paris Principles) and the Safe Schools Declaration.

V. Lists contained in the annexes to the present report

261. Regarding new listings, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Bana Mura militias perpetrated incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence and abduction, and the Kamuina Nsapu perpetrated high levels of recruitment and use of children, attacks on schools and hospitals and abductions. Both groups have been listed for those respective violations. In Mali, the Platform, which includes the Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés and the self-defence groups Ganda Izo and Ganda Koy, has been listed for the recruitment and use of children. Similarly, in Yemen, the Security Belt Forces have been listed for the recruitment and use of children.

262. Other previously listed parties to conflict have had additional violations added, on the basis of incidents that occurred in 2017. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, several armed groups have engaged in patterns of abductions, including the Mai-Mai Mazembe, Nyatura and Raia Mutomboki and have been listed for such violations. In Myanmar, the Tatmadaw Kyi, including integrated border guard forces, have been listed for killing and maiming and rape and other forms of sexual violence, in the light of verified cases in northern Rakhine State. In Somalia, Al-Shabaab has been listed for rape and other forms of sexual violence and attacks on schools and hospitals. In South Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Army has been listed for attacks on schools and hospitals.

263. In terms of delisting, in Colombia, following the transformation of FARC-EP into a political party, the group ended all child recruitment, released 135 children and has been delisted for ceasing recruitment and use. In the Sudan, the Government security forces took all necessary steps in its action plan pertaining to ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children, and that party has been delisted. In Yemen, a significant decrease in the number of attacks on schools and hospitals by the coalition to restore legitimacy in Yemen and preventive measures that have been put in place have led to its delisting for that violation. In the Sudan, pro-government militias ceased to exist and were removed from the list.

264. Other modifications to the list are the result of changes in the landscape of armed conflict in the respective situations or changes in measures taken by parties to protect children. In that regard, in Afghanistan, the name of the Taliban has been amended. In the Central African Republic, the name of the former Séléka coalition was amended to reflect its core membership. Similarly, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the name of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda and of the Nduma and Mai-Mai Cheka have been adapted. In Myanmar, the Tatmadaw Kyi put in place measures to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and will be listed in section B of annex I to the present report for that violation. Similarly, the Kachin Independence Army, the Karenni Army, the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army, the Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council and the Shan State Army have been also been listed in section B of annex I for measures they have taken. In Iraq, given that the popular mobilization forces have been placed under the direct command of the Iraqi armed forces and that the Government has put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children, the popular mobilization forces have been listed under "State actors" in section B of annex I. In South Sudan, the split of the former Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Opposition is reflected in annex I. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the name of the Army of Islam and the Nusrah Front were modified to reflect changes on the ground. In Yemen, following renewed engagement with the United Nations, the Government put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children, and the Government forces will therefore be listed in section B of annex I.

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, which covers the period from January to December 2018, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2427 \(2018\). The preparation of the report involved broad consultations within the United Nations, in the field and at Headquarters, and with relevant Member States. It highlights global trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and provides information on violations committed from January to December 2018, as well as related protection concerns. Where possible, violations are attributed to parties to conflict and, pursuant to resolutions of the Council, the annexes to the present report include a list of parties that, in violation of international law, engage in the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, attacks on schools and/or hospitals and attacks or threats of attacks against protected personnel,<sup>1</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. All the information contained in the report has been vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. In situations where the ability to verify information was hampered by factors such as insecurity or access restrictions, it is qualified as such. In this regard, the information contained in the report is only indicative and does not represent the full scale of violations committed in 2018. In addition, some incidents, in particular instances of the recruitment and use of children, abduction and sexual violence committed against children, were verified in 2018 but may have commenced earlier.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\) and in identifying situations that fall within the scope of the mandate, my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has adopted a pragmatic approach aimed at ensuring broad and effective protection for children. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status. Accordingly, the present report documents situations in which apparent violations of international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by conflict are considered to be of such gravity as to warrant international concern. In characterizing the facts described below as grave violations, it is the aim of my Special Representative to bring these situations to the attention of Governments, which bear the primary responsibility of providing effective protection and relief to all affected children, and to encourage Governments to take remedial measures.

4. Where significant progress was achieved and measures taken by listed parties positively affected the protection of children or where ongoing conduct gave rise to concern, this is highlighted in the country-specific sections. On the basis of the approach of enhanced engagement with Member States to prevent violations against children, the annexes distinguish between listed parties that have put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children during the reporting period and parties that have not.

II. Addressing the impact of armed conflict on children

A. Overview of the situation of children and armed conflict

5. Continued fighting between parties to conflict, new conflict dynamics and operational tactics, combined with widespread disregard for international law, had a devastating effect on children in 2018. More than 24,000 grave violations<sup>2</sup> against children were verified by the United Nations in 20 country situations. While the number of violations attributed to non-State actors remained steady, there was an alarming increase in the number of violations attributed to State actors and to international forces compared with 2017 (see A/72/865-S/2018/465).

6. Verified cases of the killing and maiming of children reached record levels globally since the creation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\). In Afghanistan, the number of child casualties remained the highest such number in the present report (3,062) and children accounted for 28 per cent of all civilian casualties. In the Syrian Arab Republic, air strikes, barrel bombs and cluster munitions resulted in 1,854 child casualties, and in Yemen, 1,689 children bore the brunt of ground fighting and other offensives.

7. Some 13,600 children benefited from release and reintegration worldwide. However, children continued to be forced to take an active part in hostilities, including to carry out suicide bombings against civilians. Others were used in support roles, for example as sexual slaves or as human shields. Somalia remained the country with the highest number of cases of the recruitment and use of children (2,300) followed by Nigeria (1,947).

8. Attacks on schools and hospitals had a devastating effect on access to education and to health services for thousands of children, with a total of 1,023 verified attacks. In the Syrian Arab Republic, 2018 witnessed the highest numbers of attacks on schools and medical facilities (225) recorded since the beginning of the conflict. In Afghanistan, schools and hospitals (254) were increasingly targeted. Increased numbers of attacks were also verified in the Central African Republic, Colombia, Libya, Mali, Nigeria, Somalia, the Sudan and Yemen.

<sup>2</sup> The use of the term “grave violations” or “violations” refer to each individual child affected by recruitment and use, killing and maiming, sexual violence and abductions, while the number of incidents is used for attacks on schools and hospitals and the denial of humanitarian access.

9. In 2018, 933 cases of sexual violence against children were verified. The highest verified figures for violations relating to sexual violence continue to be documented in Somalia (331) and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (277). Cases of violations relating to sexual violence remained significantly underreported, in particular when perpetrated against boys, owing to stigma, the lack of services and concerns for the protection of victims (for more information, see the annual report on conflict-related sexual violence, S/2019/280). Impunity for sexual violence against girls and boys by parties to conflict remained endemic.

10. Some 2,493 children were abducted in 2018. The highest numbers were verified in Somalia (1,609), the Democratic Republic of the Congo (367) and Nigeria (180). Increased numbers of abductions were verified in South Sudan (109), the Syrian Arab Republic (69), the Central African Republic (62), the Sudan (22) and the Philippines (13). Children were abducted from homes, schools and public spaces by parties to conflict, often as a precursor to other grave violations, notably recruitment and use, and sexual abuse, including sexual slavery, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Nigeria and the Syrian Arab Republic.

11. In times of armed conflict, throughout the world, millions of people, children foremost among them, have inadequate access to or have been denied assistance that is essential for their survival and well-being. In 2018, only 795 incidents of denial of humanitarian access could be verified, compared with 1,213 in 2017. The decrease could be explained by restricted access to information, rather than an improvement of the situation. The shrinking of humanitarian space translated into widespread insecurity, severe and persistent constraints on humanitarian access, threats and the perpetration of violence against humanitarian personnel and civilian infrastructure, thereby preventing child protection actors and humanitarian actors from gaining access to information.

B. Challenges in ensuring a child-rights based response

12. Consent of the child is not a valid defence for the crime of recruiting and using children in war. Children actually or allegedly associated with armed forces and armed groups, including those designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, must be treated primarily as victims. These groups have abducted, recruited and used children nationally or transnationally. The children affected have been exposed to the highest degrees of violence and exploitation, leaving a severe impact on their physical and mental well-being.

13. Thousands of children actually or allegedly associated with Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) and affiliated groups, as well as children born of sexual violence, were deprived of their liberty, with limited or no parental care, access to food, medical and psychosocial support, and no access to legal or consular services. In December 2018, 1,248 children of 46 nationalities from areas formerly controlled by ISIL, mainly under the age of 5, were deprived of their liberty in internally displaced persons' sites in the north-east of the Syrian Arab Republic. In Iraq, 902 children remained in detention on national security-related charges, including for their association or alleged association with ISIL. Similarly, 418 children were deprived of liberty in Nigeria for their or their parents' alleged association with Boko Haram and 375 children were detained in Somalia for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab. The deprivation of liberty of children for their actual or alleged association with groups designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest period of time.

14. The best interests of the child must be given primary consideration in all actions affecting their lives, with no exception. All children below the age of 18 have specific rights to protection and should be treated first and foremost as victims. Member States must take responsibility for their nationals, including the children of their nationals who are deprived of their liberty in Iraq and in the Syrian Arab Republic for their alleged or actual association with these groups. The reintegration of all children affected by armed conflict must be prioritized through a comprehensive, coordinated and child rights-based approach so as to prevent recurring cycles of violence and to build sustainable peace for all children.

C. The way forward: prevention and reintegration

15. The prevention of violence against children in armed conflict is a crucial element in building and sustaining peace, as well as in ensuring that children and youth realize their rights and tap into their potential as agents of change, as identified in “Youth 2030 – The United Nations Strategy on Youth”. The development of national, subregional or regional prevention plans covering all violations, as called for in Security Council resolution 2427 \(2018\), would both sustain the gains made through action plans, beyond the duration of those plans, and systematize preventive measures across regions. My Special Representative launched a process of proactive engagement with national, subregional and regional actors in order to develop prevention initiatives to prevent violations against children affected by armed conflict, in support of my vision on prevention, the Sustainable Development Goals and the sustaining peace resolutions, Security Council resolution 2282 \(2016\) and General Assembly resolution 70/262.

16. Member States have a central role in providing long-term and sustainable reintegration programmes, including providing predictable funding for such programmes. Such support is crucial for ensuring the well-being of children and sustaining peace and security. Reintegration programmes must include mental health and psychosocial support, education and vocational training, as well as community-based interventions and access to a civil registry and to justice, taking into account the specific needs of girls and boys, including children with disabilities, so as to enable all children affected by armed conflict to return to their communities and regain their childhood. The role of Member States is now supported by the creation of the Global Coalition for the Reintegration of Former Child Soldiers, which was established and is co-led by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF), and aims to further explore and address existing gaps and needs for the reintegration of all children affected by conflict.

III. Information on violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations against children

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

17. Children continued to bear the brunt of the conflict, accounting for 28 per cent of all civilian casualties, with 3,062 verified cases of children who were killed and maimed in 2018, with the number of children killed (927) being the highest number ever recorded in Afghanistan. In addition, in response to the 2018 parliamentary elections, armed groups attacked election sites, more than half of which were based in schools. Also of concern was the Taliban's use of indirect fire systems such as mortars, grenades and rockets in and from civilian-populated areas on election days, which had indiscriminate effects and contributed to child casualties.

Grave violations

18. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 45 boys and 1 girl, with some of the children recruited as young as 8, who were used for combat, at checkpoints, to plant improvised explosive devices, to carry out suicide attacks or other violations, or for sexual exploitation. At least 22 boys were killed during their association. Of those violations, 67 per cent of the instances of recruitment and use were attributed to armed groups (31), including Tehrik-e Taliban Pakistan (17 boys in one incident), Taliban (11), Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant-Khorasan Province (ISIL-KP) (2) and an unidentified armed group (1). On 14 March, in Dehe Bala District, Nangarhar Province, ISIL-KP used two boys to publicly execute three men accused of being associated with the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces. The 15 remaining children were recruited and used by Afghan local police (6), Afghan National Police (1) and pro-government militias (8).

19. As at December 2018, the Government reported that 205 boys were detained in juvenile rehabilitation centres on national security-related charges.

20. The United Nations verified 3,062 child casualties (927 killed, 2,135 maimed), including 831 girls. The leading causes were ground engagements (276 killed, 916 maimed) and non-suicide improvised explosive devices (129 killed, 388 maimed), followed by aerial operations (236 killed, 256 maimed), which represented an increase compared with 2017.

21. Armed groups were responsible for 44 per cent of child casualties (1,343), including the Taliban (997), ISIL-KP (217), unidentified armed groups (114), self-proclaimed ISIL-KP (7) and jointly to different armed groups (8). The United Nations attributed 34 per cent of child casualties (1,051) to government and pro-government forces, including the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (629) – mainly the Afghan National Army (467) – international forces<sup>3</sup> (286), pro-government militias (56), joint operations of government and pro-government forces (58) and undetermined government and pro-government forces (22). Another 15 per cent of the child casualties were jointly attributed to government and pro-government forces and armed groups. Some 6 per cent of the casualties could not be attributed to a specific party to the conflict and 1 per cent was caused by cross-border shelling.

22. The United Nations verified four cases of sexual violence, affecting two boys and two girls, perpetrated by the Afghan National Police (3) and the Afghan local police (1). The two boys were used as bacha bazi.

23. A total of 192 attacks against schools and protected personnel were verified. Of those attacks, 92 per cent were attributed to armed groups, mainly the Taliban (123) and ISIL-KP (42). Attacks were also attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (6), pro-government militias (3), international forces (1), and jointly to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and armed groups (3). During the parliamentary elections held in October, more than half of the voter registration and polling sites were located in schools, which were targeted in 92 election-related attacks mostly attributed to the Taliban (85). An additional cause for concern is the emerging trend of attacks and threats by armed groups against education facilities, perpetrated in particular by ISIL-KP, which led to widespread school closures and many casualties. ISIL-KP expressly declared its intention to target schools, specifically girls' schools.

24. A total of 62 attacks on hospitals and protected personnel were verified, 74 per cent of which were attributed to armed groups, including the Taliban (30), ISIL-KP (11), self-proclaimed ISIL-KP (3) and unidentified armed groups (2). The remaining attacks were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (5), international forces (4), pro-government militias (2) and 1 to an undetermined pro-government force. Four attacks were jointly attributed to different parties.

25. The United Nations verified the military use of five schools by the Afghan National Army (4) and ISIL-KP (1) and of two medical facilities by the ANDSF (1) and by both the Taliban and the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (1).

26. Similar to the numbers reported in 2017, the abduction of 42 boys and 1 girl was verified, mostly by armed groups: the Taliban (36), ISIL-KP (3), self-proclaimed ISIL-KP, Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan and Hizb-i Islami (1 each). The abduction and sexual exploitation of one girl by an Afghan local police commander was verified.

27. The United Nations verified 44 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, mainly attributed to armed groups: the Taliban (27), ISIL-KP (10) and self-proclaimed ISIL-KP (2). The 5 remaining incidents were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (3) and pro-government militias (2). Of particular concern is the fact that these groups have also hindered demining activities and vaccination campaigns, especially vaccination against polio, reportedly preventing 840,000 children from receiving immunizations. In addition, the number of instances of violence against humanitarian personnel remained high, with 28 aid workers killed, 53 injured and 88 abducted during the reporting period.

28. I note the significant reduction in the recruitment and use of children by the Afghan Security Forces and commend the measures taken by the Government to better protect children affected by armed conflict, including through the child protection units in the Afghan National Police recruitment centres, which now cover all 34 provinces of Afghanistan, and the entry into force of the revised Penal Code, which explicitly criminalizes the recruitment and use of children, including bacha bazi and falsification of tazkeras (identity documents). I call for the full application of the revised Code. Notwithstanding those developments, the use of children, including bacha bazi, remains an issue of concern. I urge the Government to address remaining gaps, specifically the lack of screening mechanisms within the Afghan local police and the use of children at police checkpoints, and to ensure accountability for the perpetrators of grave violations against children.

29. I call on the Government to release children allegedly or currently associated with parties to conflict from detention facilities in accordance with the Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups (Paris Principles), which were endorsed by Afghanistan in 2017. In addition, children detained on national-security related charges need to be transferred to juvenile rehabilitation centres and have access to all services, in line with international juvenile justice standards.

30. I remain extremely concerned about the continuous high numbers of children killed and maimed by all parties, notably the record high number of children killed in 2018. I note the decrease of child casualties attributed to the Afghan security forces, and the measures taken by the Government to mitigate child casualties. I commend the ongoing implementation of the National Policy on Civilian Casualty Prevention and Mitigation, adopted in October 2017, as well as the entry into force of the Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (Protocol V), in February 2018, and the revision of the aerial targeting protocols, and encourage the Government to continue the inclusion of legal advisers in targeting processes. I strongly encourage the Government to include aspects relating to ending and preventing killing and maiming in the existing action plan. I am also alarmed by the increase in the number of children killed and maimed by international forces, especially in aerial operations. I welcome the precautionary measures to mitigate civilian and child casualties in military operations, including the designation by the United States of America Department of Defense of a senior civilian responsible for coordinating compliance with policies relating to non-combatant casualties in United States military operations. I also note the role of the Senior Child Protection Adviser of the Resolute Support Mission in protecting children in armed conflict. I request my Special Representative to engage proactively and follow up on the implementation of all measures taken by the Government and international forces to mitigate child casualties. I strongly urge the Government and international forces to immediately take additional extraordinary measures to protect children during military operations, including during aerial operations, and to continue to abide by their obligations under international law. I reiterate my call on armed groups to immediately cease the killing and maiming of children.

31. I am concerned about the continued recruitment and use of children by armed groups, including for combat roles, as well as about attacks that affect access to education and health, including during elections, demining activities and vaccination campaigns, and demand that concerned parties, notably the Taliban and ISIL-KP, put an immediate halt to such actions. I strongly encourage the Government to prioritize the protection of schools and hospitals during elections. I urge listed parties to conflict to engage with the United Nations so as to elaborate action plans.

Central African Republic

32. Violence between armed and criminal groups for the control of strategic sites and economic resources, and intercommunal tensions, including between Muslim and Christian communities, remained the primary source of insecurity and threats against civilians. Serious incidents, mostly related to transhumance and access to mining sites, occurred at the end 2018 in Ouaka, Haut-Mbomou and Ouham Prefectures. The United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic facilitated local peace processes, involving armed groups and community leaders, in order to reduce violence and increase humanitarian space. The peace process culminated in the signing on 6 February 2019 of the Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic between the Government and 14 armed groups.

Grave violations

33. A total of 75 children (14 girls, 61 boys), some as young as 6, were recruited and used by anti-balaka (34); former Séléka factions (27), including Mouvement national pour la libération de la Centrafrique (MNL) (14), Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique (FPRC) (10), Rassemblement patriotique pour le renouveau de la Centrafrique (RPRC) (2) and Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC) (1); Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) (10); PK5 groups (3); and Retour, réclamation et réhabilitation (3R) (1). Children were used as combatants, informants, porters, cooks, servants and for sexual purposes.

34. One girl and seven boys were detained by the national authorities for association with anti-balaka (six); FPRC and Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) (one each). All were released except for the boy associated with UPC, whose case is still pending before the court.

35. A total of 114 children (38 girls, 76 boys) were verified as having been killed (71) and maimed (43), a slight increase compared with 2017. The victims, some as young as four months, were affected as a result of shootings (92), the use of machetes (12), arson (8) and stabbing (2), during attacks on their communities. The majority of child casualties were attributed to former Séléka factions (63), followed by anti-balaka (20) and PK5 groups (9). Ouaka and Nana-Grébizi were the most affected prefectures. In October, anti-balaka elements killed 12 children by machete outside Zemio, Haut-Mbomou Prefecture, in an indiscriminate attack against two Fulani families.

36. The United Nations verified incidents of sexual violence affecting 58 girls and 1 boy, some as young as 8. A total of 18 girls were gang-raped, and 14 girls were victims of sexual violence during their association with armed groups. The main perpetrators were anti-balaka and former Séléka factions (18 each). One anti-balaka element, a member of FPRC and a police auxiliary were arrested and detained for the rape of children. The anti-balaka member was sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment.

37. A total of 34 attacks against schools and 22 attacks against hospitals were verified, a 21 per cent increase as relates to schools and 16 per cent increase as relates to hospitals, compared with 2017. The main perpetrators were former Séléka factions (36) followed by anti-balaka (6). The United Nations verified the military use of seven schools by FPRC (four), 3R (two) and anti-balaka (one).

38. A total of 62 children (28 girls, 34 boys), some as young as one, were abducted, mostly for purposes of recruitment (57). Former Séléka factions accounted for the highest number of such abductions (35) (MNLC (25); FPRC (6); MPC (2) and FPRC/MPC (2)); followed by LRA (10) and anti-balaka (9).

39. There was an increase in the number of incidents of denial of humanitarian access (120) compared with 2017 (101), which included the killing (6), injuring (23) and abduction (5) of humanitarian workers. Those incidents were predominantly perpetrated by unidentified armed individuals (57), followed by former Séléka factions (33), anti-balaka (29), and LRA (1). The Prefectures of Ouham and Nana-Grébizi were the most affected.

Developments and concerns

40. I commend the Government for fighting against impunity. Two anti-balaka leaders were arrested and transferred to the International Criminal Court for crimes including the recruitment and use of children under 15 years of age. I encourage the Special Criminal Court to prioritize crimes against children in their prosecution.

41. I welcome the signature of an action plan by MPC, on 30 May 2018, to end and prevent grave violations, and the appointment of four commanders to serve as child protection focal points, as well as the engagement with FPRC, leading to the signature of an action plan on 24 June 2019. I now urge MPC and FPRC to swiftly implement their action plans. I also call upon the leadership of UPC to adopt an action plan.

42. Dialogue with armed groups enabled the separation of 205 girls and 364 boys from FPRC (314), anti-balaka (248) and Séléka rénovée (7). In addition, 216 self-demobilized children were identified in Paoua (Ouham-Pendé Prefecture) and benefited from reintegration support from UNICEF. As part of the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme initiated at the end of 2018 in Paoua, 389 children were confirmed to have been associated with both factions of Révolution et justice (RJ). However, UNICEF and partners faced challenges in implementing reintegration programmes owing to a lack of funds and the volatile environment. I urge the Government to adopt a protocol for the handover of children associated with armed groups to child protection actors, to adopt the draft child protection code criminalizing the recruitment and use of children, to pass a decree protecting associated children from prosecution, and to consider a national prevention plan, in accordance with Security Council resolution 2427 (2018).

43. I remain deeply concerned about grave violations against children, including an increase in the killing and maiming of children and in the number of attacks against schools and hospitals by armed groups, as well as abductions attributed to former Séléka elements. I urge armed groups to immediately cease all violations and abide by their obligations under international law.

Colombia

44. The new Government took office in August 2018 and while the President, Iván Duque Márquez, affirmed his commitment to implementing the peace agreement with the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia–People’s Army (Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo) (FARC-EP), he also reiterated intentions to secure a consensual modification to certain controversial parts of the Agreement. Limited implementation of the peace agreement in some regions led to frustrations among communities, and in some cases, to the strengthening of non-State armed groups in former FARC-EP areas, thus exposing children to grave violations.

45. In August, the Government conditioned continued dialogue with the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) on the release of all victims of kidnapping and the cessation of criminal activity. Those conditions were not met. Negotiations were formally discontinued by the Government following the attack on the General Santander National Police Academy in January 2019, which was claimed by ELN.

46. More than 4,800 children were forcibly displaced in the Departments of Chocó, Nariño, Cauca, Antioquia, Norte de Santander, Valle del Cauca, Arauca and Boyacá owing to clashes and threats of child recruitment. According to the Government, by 31 December 2018, more than 1 million people from the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela had entered Colombia. Refugee and migrant children are at risk of recruitment and use and sexual violence.

Grave violations

47. A total of 120 incidents of recruitment and use, which affected 293 children, some as young as 14, were verified, a sharp increase compared with 169 children in 2017. Dissident FARC-EP groups<sup>4</sup> were the main perpetrators (82 children) followed by the ELN (69) and Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia (AGC) also known as Clan del Golfo (12). According to the Government, 196 children (105 boys; 91 girls) who were separated from non-State armed groups entered the demobilization programme of the Colombian Family Welfare Institute in 2018.

48. The United Nations verified 89 incidents of killing and maiming, which affected 108 children, some as young as eight (34 girls, 60 boys, 14 sex unknown), a sharp increase since 2017 (53), resulting from clashes between armed groups, crossfire, bombing and anti-personnel mines. The perpetrators were unidentified armed groups (63 child casualties), ELN (14), dissident FARC-EP groups (11), AGC (8) and Ejército Popular de Liberación (EPL) (1). There were 11 child casualties resulting from Colombian Armed Forces operations against armed groups. According to government data, 22 of the child casualties in 2018 were caused by anti-personnel mines.

<sup>4</sup> Throughout the report, dissident FARC-EP groups should be understood as including groups that did not adhere to the peace agreement and former FARC-EP repeat offenders who abandoned their commitments under the peace agreement.

49. Incidents of sexual violence, which affected nine girls, were verified and attributed to dissident FARC-EP groups (five girls) and AGC (four). For example, in Putumayo Department, a 17-year-old indigenous girl was sexually abused by a member of Frente Primero, a dissident FARC-EP group, and forced to use injectable contraceptive methods.

50. A total of 13 attacks on schools and protected personnel were verified in Nariño, Norte de Santander, Chocó, Valle del Cauca and Arauca, 2 perpetrated by dissident FARC-EP groups and 11 by unidentified non-State armed groups, which disrupted school classes. Incidents included the killing of a teacher, threats and the destruction of school premises.

51. Six children aged between 14 and 16 (including three girls) were abducted by ELN (two), dissident FARC-EP groups (one) and unidentified armed elements (three).

52. Two incidents of denial of humanitarian access, perpetrated by ELN, were verified in the Department of Arauca. In one instance, ELN imposed restrictions on movement for three days and forbade any type of activity, including school classes.

Developments and concerns

53. In August 2018, Decree 1434 was issued, adopting public policy guidance on the prevention of recruitment and use of children and of sexual violence against children by non-State armed groups. I welcome this positive development and encourage the Government to strengthen institutions and programmes to prevent recruitment and use. I call on the Government to prioritize the prevention of sexual violence against children in the context of armed conflict and to ensure that perpetrators are held to account.

54. I am deeply concerned about the high number of instances of the recruitment and use of children by dissident FARC-EP groups and urge them to immediately release children and end this practice. I remain concerned by the continuing recruitment and use of children by ELN and by the increase in the killing and maiming of children by armed groups. I call upon these groups to end and prevent such violations.

55. As highlighted in my report on the United Nations Verification Mission in Colombia (S/2018/1159), I am concerned about those children included in the programme “Camino diferencial de vida” who have not yet received reparations, and about the lack of adequate resources for the programme. I urge the Government to implement a reintegration process for newly identified children, who have been released through informal processes, and to reinforce security guarantees for programme participants.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

56. The weak presence of state authority in some areas of the country, tensions linked to the delayed elections, which were held in December 2018, the multiplication and fragmentation of armed groups, intercommunal clashes between the Hema and Lendu communities in Ituri and violence in the East and the Kasais all affected children. Armed groups remained the perpetrators of the vast majority of grave violations. The United Nations documented a decrease in grave violations against children, owing mostly to the reduction of conflict in the Kasais.

57. A total of 631 children (91 girls, 540 boys) were recruited during 2018. Mai-Mai Mazembe (170) and Nyatura (150) accounted for half of the new recruitments, followed by other armed groups. North Kivu remained the epicentre of child recruitment and use, with more than 70 per cent of all cases, followed by the Greater Kasai region (16 per cent) and South Kivu (10 per cent). Nine children were used in support functions for periods ranging between one and two months, by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC) (7 boys; 1 girl) and the Congolese National Police (1 boy), seven of whom were recruited and separated in 2018. For example, four boys were used by FARDC to carry looted goods for five days in Ituri, while one boy was used by the Congolese National Police in Shabunda Territory to perform police duties.

58. A total of 2,253 children (including 267 girls) were separated from 39 parties to conflict, including Nyatura (532), Mai-Mai Mazembe (417), Kamuina Nsapu (335), Raia Mutomboki (175), Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FDLR-FOCA) (128), Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové (NDC-Rénové) (75) and Force de résistance patriotique de l'Ituri (FRPI) and Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (57 each). Almost half of the children were below the age of 15 when recruited (1,067) and 45 per cent were used as combatants (1,014). Following United Nations advocacy, 25 per cent of those children were voluntarily released by the commanders of armed groups.

59. Some 125 children (including six girls) were deprived of liberty by Government forces, owing to their alleged association with armed groups, and were released after periods ranging from 3 to 48 days. In addition, 21 boys who were arrested for their suspected association with Kamuina Nsapu, some since September 2016, continued to be detained in Kananga prison, Kasai Province.

60. There were 169 child casualties, with 77 killed (39 girls, 38 boys) and 92 maimed (29 girls, 63 boys). Of those casualties, 36 were attributed to FARDC (33) and the Congolese National Police (3), mostly in the context of operations in the east. The remaining casualties were attributed to armed groups, including Kamuina Nsapu (45) and the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) (9), to unidentified armed elements (47), and 18 were caused by unexploded ordnance.

61. Sexual violence affected 277 girls in North Kivu (107), the Kasais (55), Ituri (36), South Kivu (31), Tanganyika (11) and other provinces (37). Government forces were responsible for 50 per cent of the cases, including FARDC (85), the Congolese National Police (51) and Agence nationale de renseignements (ANR) (5), more than double the number attributed to government forces in 2017. Eight suspected perpetrators were arrested and await trial, while five were given sanctions by their hierarchy. Other perpetrators included Nyatura (24), Raia Mutomboki (17), Conseil national de la résistance pour la démocratie (CNRD), FRPI and unidentified Mai-Mai groups (14 each), Mai-Mai Mazembe (8) and Kamuina Nsapu (7).

62. A total of 87 attacks on schools and 10 attacks on hospitals were verified, a significant decrease since 2017, which is explained by the reduction in violence in the Kasais, where institutions were no longer targeted. Most attacks occurred in the context of intercommunal clashes in Djugu Territory, Ituri (75). In total, 43 schools (42) and hospitals (1) were deliberately burned or damaged, another 51 schools (42) and hospitals (9) were looted and school personnel were attacked (3). Armed groups were responsible for most of the attacks. Three attacks were attributed to FARDC.

63. Three schools and one hospital used for military purposes by FARDC (3) and Nyatura (1) in North Kivu (3) and the Kasais (1) were vacated following United Nations advocacy.

64. The number of abductions decreased to 367 (270 boys; 97 girls) and occurred mainly in North Kivu (291), South Kivu (51) and the Kasais (17). Main perpetrators included Nyatura (91), Mai-Mai Mazembe (69), ADF (47), Raia Mutomboki (46), FDLR-FOCA (24), CNRD (14) and Kamuina Nsapu (10). Seven girls and one boy were abducted by FARDC mostly for the purpose of sexual exploitation. Children were mostly abducted for the purpose of recruitment (209). A total of 62 children were subjected to sexual violence during their association. In addition, a total of 151 children (95 girls; 56 boys), who have been abducted by the Bana Mura militia in the Kasai region since 2017 and subjected to forced labour and sexual violence, remain in captivity while 62 children (41 girls; 21 boys) returned to their families. United Nations advocacy with the Government for the release of the remaining abductees yielded limited results.

65. Four incidents of denial of humanitarian access to children were verified, all in South Kivu. For example, Raia Mutomboki attacked and abducted aid workers, hindering the distribution of vaccines to at least 5,000 children. Other incidents involved attacks by unidentified armed elements on humanitarian convoys carrying health supplies. However, the volatile security situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo affected tens of thousands of children and hindered the environment in which humanitarian personnel operate.

66. I welcome the screening to determine the age of children during FARDC recruitment campaigns, as a result of which 146 children were separated before their enrolment. Standard operating procedures for age assessment screening were continuously disseminated across the FARDC and PNC.

67. The United Nations increased its efforts to encourage armed groups to cease grave violations. Eight armed group commanders signed a unilateral declaration committing to end and prevent child recruitment and use, as well as other grave violations. Awareness-raising sessions regarding grave violations were conducted with focal points from nine armed groups and community mediators. As armed groups lay down their arms, I urge the Government to ensure that protection and screening measures are in place to identify and separate children and ensure their access to reintegration services.

68. The United Nations supported the implementation of the 2009 Child Protection Act, punishing child recruitment by up to 10 years' imprisonment, including through support to military justice, lawyers and non-governmental organizations. For the first time, two armed groups commanders were sentenced to life in prison for charges including child recruitment. The trial of Ntabo Ntaberi Sheka, former commander of Nduma défense du Congo-Sheka, and two of his commanders, on charges of war crimes, including child recruitment and use, and sexual violence, started in November 2018. Child victims and witnesses were identified, with support from the United Nations for those efforts.

69. I commend the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for sustaining the gains of its action plan on child recruitment and use, but I am concerned by the persistent number of violations involving sexual violence being committed by security forces and call upon the Government to expedite aspects of the plan relating to sexual violence against children. I urge the Government to ensure that perpetrators of grave violations are held accountable and to prioritize the prevention of violations against children. Moreover, I call upon the Government to ensure that the children abducted by the Bana Mura militia since 2017 are immediately released and returned to their families.

Iraq

70. The security situation in the country improved following the military defeat of ISIL in late 2017, resulting in improved access for the monitoring and verifying of grave violations, including those which occurred prior to 2018. Despite the loss of territory, ISIL continued to pose a threat to security forces and civilians, including children, by carrying out deadly attacks in Ninawa, Kirkuk, Anbar, Diyala and Baghdad. Demonstrations, which resulted in violent incidents, including killing and arson, were verified.

Grave violations

71. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 39 children by parties to conflict, including five boys between the ages of 12 and 15, used by the Iraqi Federal Police in Ninawa Governorate to fortify a checkpoint, and one 15-year-old boy used by ISIL in Anbar Governorate to drive a car bomb into Fallujah city. In addition, 33 Yazidi boys between the ages of 15 and 17 were rescued after being abducted in Iraq in 2014 by ISIL and trained and deployed to fight in the Syrian Arab Republic.

72. As of December, at least 902 children (850 boys and 52 girls) between the ages of 15 and 18 remained in detention on national security-related charges, including for their actual and alleged association with armed groups, primarily ISIL.

73. The United Nations verified the killing (48) and maiming (84) of 132 children (105 boys, 27 girls), an 82 per cent decrease compared with 2017, mainly due to a significant reduction in military operations against ISIL. A number of casualties were attributed to ISIL (38) and the Iraqi Security Forces (1), while responsibility could not be attributed for the remaining casualties.

74. Almost half of the child casualties (61) were caused by explosive remnants of war found mainly in areas previously under ISIL control, in the Governorates of Ninawa, Kirkuk, Diyala and Salah al-Din. Among those casualties, 28 child casualties resulted from improvised explosive devices, including children used for carrying and detonating improvised explosive devices, and 19 resulted from indirect attacks with small arms and light weapons, mainly in Ninawa, Kirkuk, Diyala and Salah al-Din. Among the remaining casualties, 16 child casualties were a result of targeted killings and ill-treatment. In addition, two explosions in weapons and ammunition storage facilities belonging to popular mobilization forces (PMF) occurred near or in residential areas, in Karbala' and Salah al-Din governorates, injuring eight children.

75. As a result of stigma and fear of retribution, among other issues, the United Nations did not verify any cases of sexual violence against children.

76. The United Nations verified 24 attacks on schools (21) and hospitals (3). All attacks on schools resulted from crossfire between ISF and ISIL during 2016 and 2017, in areas that only became accessible for verification in 2018, mainly in Kirkuk Governorate. The three attacks against hospitals and medical personnel were attributed to ISIL and comprised the killing of one member of medical staff in Diyala, an attack on a medical centre in Kirkuk and the looting of supplies from Dara medical centre in Kirkuk.

77. A total of 48 incidents of the military use of schools by ISIL were verified in areas previously under ISIL control in Kirkuk, between 2014 and 2017, which became accessible for verification in 2018. Of concern was also the temporary presence of members of the Iraqi Security Forces inside schools in Ninawa, Salah al-Din and Diyala, prior to and during the election period, to provide security to the Independent High Electoral Commission.

78. The United Nations verified two abductions of children. In one incident, a 16-year-old girl was abducted by an unidentified armed man in Mosul. In the other case, a 14-year-old Yazidi girl was abducted by ISIL in 2015 and later sold. Both girls were rescued by the Iraqi Security Forces in 2018.

79. While no incident of denial of humanitarian access was verified in 2018, humanitarian actors faced bureaucratic impediments, which translated into restriction of movement. Families with perceived affiliation with ISIL continued to face challenges in obtaining the necessary security clearance to gain access to basic services, including education and health, as well as restrictions on their freedom of movement to leave areas or camp settings in order to seek medical assistance.

Developments and concerns

80. I welcome the ongoing discussions with the Government of Iraq on developing an action plan to prevent child recruitment and use by PMF and encourage its forces' screening. I call on the InterMinisterial Committee on Monitoring and Reporting to resume regular consultations with the United Nations in order to proceed with its signature and implementation.

81. I welcome the release of 40 boys by tribal armed groups, with the support of the United Nations, which assisted in their reintegration.

82. I am deeply concerned about the situation of children held in detention on security-related charges and emphasize the need to treat children primarily as victims and in line with international juvenile justice standards. I further call for detention to be a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible period of time, and for the respect of due process. The restriction of movement imposed on civilians with suspected links to ISIL in camps for internally displaced persons is of concern, as is their physical security upon return to their areas of origin. I reiterate the willingness of the United Nations to support the Government in prioritizing the reintegration of children formerly associated with parties to conflict.

83. I call upon all countries concerned to facilitate the repatriation of foreign women and children actually and allegedly affiliated with ISIL, in line with the guiding principle of non-refoulement and with respect for the best interests of the child.

Israel and State of Palestine

84. Palestinian and Israeli children continued to be severely affected by the continuing Israeli-Palestinian conflict in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In 2018, the United Nations verified the highest number of Palestinian children killed (59) and injured (2,756) since 2014. Six Israeli children were verified as having been injured.

Grave violations

85. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of three 17-year-old boys in Gaza (two) and the West Bank (one) by the Palestinian Islamic Jihad's al-Quds Brigades, Hamas' al-Qassam Brigades and an unidentified Palestinian armed group (one each). The United Nations received testimony from three children, between the ages of 15 and 16, that Israeli forces attempted to recruit them as informants.

86. As of December, 203 Palestinian children were held over security offences by the Israeli forces, including 114 in pretrial detention and/or being detained during trial, and 87 serving a sentence. The United Nations received affidavits from 127 Palestinian boys who, during interviews with the United Nations, reported ill-treatment and breaches of due process during their arrest, transfer and detention. The United Nations documented four cases of the administrative detention of Palestinian children in 2018.

87. A total of 59 Palestinian children (57 boys, 2 girls), some as young as 18 months old, were killed in the West Bank, including in East Jerusalem (8) and Gaza (51), with most of the casualties attributed to Israeli forces (56) and one to an Israeli settler. In addition, one child was killed by the Palestinian Islamic Jihad's al-Quds Brigades, and one boy was killed by an improvised explosive device accidentally detonated at his home by his father, an Al-Aqsa Brigade member. Of these 59 children, 33 boys and 1 girl were killed by Israeli forces during demonstrations at the Gaza fence, 88 per cent of whom (30) were shot by live ammunition to the upper body, while reportedly posing no imminent threat of death or serious injury to Israeli forces, and another 2 boys died after being struck in the head by tear gas canisters. Three children were killed by Israeli forces air strikes in Gaza. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, eight boys were killed by Israeli forces, five of whom were shot during demonstrations and clashes.

88. The United Nations verified that 2,756 Palestinian children were injured (2,514 boys, 242 girls) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, an increase compared with 2017 (1,160), owing to injuries sustained during the Great March of Return. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, 1,421 were injured by Israeli forces (1,398) and settlers (23) in the context of demonstrations, clashes and search and arrest operations, including 988 injured as a result of inhaling tear gas, subsequently requiring medical treatment. Three boys were injured while committing or allegedly attempting to commit stabbing attacks against Israelis. In Gaza, 1,335 child casualties were attributed to Israeli forces, 1,276 of whom were injured between March and December during demonstrations at the Gaza fence, 62 per cent injured by live ammunition (629) or shrapnel (167) and 35 per cent by tear gas inhalation (443). Twenty children had limbs amputated.

89. Six Israeli children were injured, including two girls injured in their home by a rocket fired indiscriminately by a Palestinian armed group.

90. Two schools in Gaza were damaged during ground attacks by Israeli forces, and a further four schools were damaged during air strikes by Israeli forces. A mortar launched by Palestinian armed groups from Gaza exploded in the yard of a kindergarten near Sderot, a town located in southern Israel. No injuries were reported in connection with those attacks.

91. The United Nations verified 118 incidents of interference with education in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by Israeli forces (113) and Israeli settlers (5), affecting 23,188 children. Among those were two verified incidents of the military use of a school by Israeli forces. More than half of verified interferences involved Israeli forces firing live ammunition, tear gas or sound grenades in and around schools, mostly in the context of clashes or military operations. Of particular concern is the fact that Israeli forces did not always intervene when settlers entered Urif village and attacked the secondary school. Attacks on the school in Urif have been verified since 2012.

92. Conflict escalations also caused significant disruptions to children's education in Gaza and southern Israel, when schools were closed for the safety of students and educators as a result of air strikes by Israeli forces and indiscriminate rocket fire by Palestinian armed groups. For example, school closures affected an estimated 63,000 children in southern Israel and 637,195 children in Gaza during escalations of conflict on 12 and 13 November.

93. Three health facilities were damaged in Israeli forces air strikes. Three members of medical personnel were killed and a further 553 injured by Israeli forces, including 375 by tear gas inhalation, while providing medical services during Gaza demonstrations. Seven interferences with health services were documented in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, due to Israeli forces incursions into or clashes near health facilities, as well as attacks by Israeli settlers on medical vehicles and personnel.

94. With respect to applications to Israeli authorities for children to cross into Israel for medical treatment outside Gaza, approval for 24 per cent of such applications was reported as having been delayed, affecting 1,079 boys and 689 girls. Applications on behalf of children injured in Gaza demonstrations were approved at a very low rate (22 per cent approval compared with the average of 75 per cent for other cases involving children).

Developments and concerns

95. I am extremely concerned by the significant rise in the maiming of and injuries caused to children across Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including by tear gas inhalation requiring medical treatment. I request my Special Representative to further examine the cases of maiming and injuries caused by Israeli forces, and urge Israel to immediately put in place preventive and protective measures to end the excessive use of force. I reiterate my call upon Israel to uphold international juvenile justice standards, as well as to cease the use of administrative detention for children and end all forms of ill-treatment in detention, and to cease any attempted recruitment of detained children as informants.

96. I urge all parties to apply all feasible measures to ensure the protection of and care for children affected by armed conflict and to refrain from the excessive use of force. I call on all parties to engage constructively with the United Nations to prevent future violations.

97. I urge all Palestinian actors to refrain from encouraging children's participation in violence. I call upon the al-Quds and al-Qassam Brigades to immediately cease the recruitment and use of children, and I further request my Special Representative to further examine recruitment and use by armed groups.

Lebanon

98. Armed clashes in camps for Palestinian refugees, sporadic armed violence and the presence of mines and other explosive devices negatively affected children throughout the country.

Grave violations

99. The recruitment and use of children by armed groups continued, with 22 children (21 boys, 1 girl) verified as associated with the Ansarullah Movement (Ansar Allah) (5), Hizbullah (1) or unidentified militia (16). They were mostly used as guards or in support roles, for carrying weapons or food. For example, five boys associated with Ansar Allah, between the ages of 14 and 17, were trained to use weapons, wore military uniforms and held Kalashnikov rifles in Mieh Mieh camp for Palestinian refugees in Sidon in October.

100. Children continued to be arrested and prosecuted in relation to terrorism charges as part of military justice processes, with 20 new arrests in 2018 for alleged association with ISIL. As of December, 16 children remained in detention on such charges, 9 of whom were in pretrial detention and 7 of whom were detained following sentencing.

101. A total of 14 child casualties (13 boys, 1 girl) were verified, resulting from unattributed mine explosions (6) or crossfire (8), mainly in North Bija', Akkar and the south.

102. Marking an increase compared with 2017, five United Nations facilities in Palestinian refugee camps (3 schools, 2 health centres) sustained damage from crossfire between armed actors in three camps for Palestinian refugees. For example, two schools run by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) were damaged by shrapnel in Ein El Hilweh in October. In addition, armed clashes in camps for Palestinian refugees disrupted educational activities in UNRWA schools, with more than 11,000 students deprived of at least one day of school in Ein El Hilweh and Shatila camps and over 400 students deprived of 20 consecutive school days in Mieh Mieh camp. Two United Nations clinics had to close for 2 days and 19 days in Shatila and Mieh Mieh camps, respectively, affecting approximately 200 patients a day.

Developments and concerns

103. I am concerned about armed clashes in camps for Palestinian refugees and about the recruitment and use of children. I am also concerned about attacks on schools and the impact thereof on children's well-being and access to education. I reiterate my call for the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. Children associated with armed groups should be treated primarily as victims, detained only as a last resort and for the shortest possible period of time, and be promptly referred to reintegration programmes. I call on armed groups to immediately cease the recruitment and use of children.

Libya

104. The ceasefire agreement brokered by the United Nations Support Mission in Libya (UNSMIL) in September 2018 led to a decrease in hostilities in Tripoli. However, sporadic fighting continued in parts of Libya and children fell victim to indiscriminate attacks, including during exchanges of crossfire in densely populated areas. The lack of access for monitoring actors, owing to the security situation, severely inhibited the verification of grave violations against children.

Grave violations

105. The United Nations received reports of the increased recruitment and use of children, yet information could not be verified owing to security and access restrictions. Communities are also believed not to have reported incidents, out of fear of repercussions.

106. Children were deprived of liberty by the Libyan National Army for their alleged association with the Petroleum Facilities Guard (PFG) in the context of clashes in the oil crescent region. The United Nations also received reports of refugee and migrant children held by criminal networks allegedly associated with armed groups.

107. The United Nations verified the killing (30) and maiming (44) of 74 children by unidentified armed elements. Child casualties resulted from air strikes, shelling in urban areas, small arms fire as well as from improvised explosive devices and unexploded ordnance, mainly in Tripoli, Benghazi and in southern Libya. Children fell victim to clashes, including between the Libyan National Army and the Darnah Protection Force (DPF) in Darnah, between the Libyan National Army and PFG forces in the oil crescent region, and between tribal groups in Sabha.

108. The United Nations was unable to verify any case of sexual violence against children. However, refugee and migrant children were reportedly subjected to sexual abuse, including forced prostitution and sexual exploitation, in conditions that could amount to sexual slavery, by traffickers or criminal networks allegedly associated with armed groups.

109. The United Nations verified attacks on schools (5) and hospitals (37), mostly in the context of clashes between armed groups including shelling and crossfire, including in Sabha, Darnah and Tripoli. Attacks on schools were attributed to Ahmad al-Dabbashi (1) and the Abu Salim brigade (1) while three remained unattributed. The attacks on hospitals, all of which were unattributed, included the killing and maiming of 12 members of health-care personnel and of three patients.

110. While no incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, humanitarian actors in Libya continued to face restrictions, including administrative and bureaucratic impediments in providing humanitarian assistance to civilians, including children, who were also denied access to appropriate health care.

111. I welcome the collaboration between the United Nations and local authorities in the area of Zintan on the reintegration of children and the engagement with armed groups to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children. I urge all parties to engage with the United Nations to strengthen the protection and the prevention of violations against children.

112. I am deeply concerned about the levels of child casualties, often owing to indiscriminate shelling and crossfire in urban areas. The abuse of refugee and migrant children, including through trafficking, deprivation of liberty and sexual abuse, is abhorrent and I call upon the Government of National Accord to swiftly act to protect children and prevent them from being subjected to these violations.

Mali

113. The security situation in northern and central Mali remained volatile, marked by military operations and attacks by armed groups against Malian Defence and Security Forces, the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA) and armed groups signatories to the 2015 Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Mali, resulting in civilian casualties. The Central region was caught in a spiral of violence with the rise of self-defence groups and intercommunal conflict triggering killings and forced displacement, as well as affecting children's welfare. Previously peaceful western regions also witnessed instability.

Grave violations

114. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 109 boys and 5 girls. The main perpetrators were Platform (57) (including the Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés (GATIA) (27), Ganda Lassale Izo (24) and other Platform members (6)), and the Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad (CMA) (23) (including the Mouvement national pour la libération de l'Azawad (MNLA) (12), the Haut Conseil pour l'unité de l'Azawad (9) and other CMA members (2)). At least 31 children were used as combatants, 3 of whom were children between the ages of 14 and 17 who were associated with Congrès pour la justice dans l'Azawad and were killed by CMA at a checkpoint in Timbuktu region.

115. A total of 13 boys arrested by the Malian Defence and Security Forces for their alleged association with armed groups or on national security charges were released after between 5 days and 60 days in detention, including 5 boys who were ill-treated while detained. Three other children were deprived of their liberty in Ménaka by GATIA, the Mouvement pour le salut de l'Azawad (MSA) and by joint GATIA/MSA forces (one each).

116. A total of 77 children (13 girls, 64 boys) were killed and 52 maimed (16 girls, 36 boys) as a result of intercommunal conflict, crossfire, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war. Responsibility for the majority of the child casualties could not be attributed, except for 16 casualties attributed to the Group of Support to Islam and Muslims (Jama'a Nusrat ul-Islam wa al-Muslimin) (GSIM) and another 16 to traditional hunters of Dan Na Ambassagou. The regions most affected were Mopti and Gao.

117. Sexual violence continued to be highly underreported. A total of 20 girls between the ages of 12 and 17 were victims of rape and sexual violence perpetrated by unidentified armed groups (18), Forces armées maliennes and GATIA (1 each).

118. A total of 81 attacks on schools were verified, which doubled from the number verified in 2017 (41). The responsibility for most incidents was unattributed, except for two attacks perpetrated by GSIM. At least 40 schools closed following direct threats made to teachers. Other incidents included the burning of schools and physical attacks on school personnel. The most affected regions were Mopti (50) and Koulikoro (20) in the centre and the west/south of the country. As of December, 827 schools remained closed, leaving more than 244,000 children with no access to education. The United Nations verified 21 attacks against hospitals, all unattributed, in Mopti (12), Timbuktu (7) and Gao (2) regions, involving abductions of protected personnel and the carjacking of health centres' vehicles and ambulances.

119. Eight boys and one girl were abducted by unidentified traditional hunters (two), Islamic State in Greater Sahara and GATIA (one each) and unidentified armed groups (five). The girl abducted by GATIA in Gao region was subjected to sexual violence.

120. A total of 170 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified, the responsibility for which was unattributed except for incidents attributed to Dan Na Ambassagou (two), GATIA and Malian Defence and Security Forces (one each). Most incidents occurred in Timbuktu (41), Gao (36), Mopti (30), Kidal (26) and Ménaka (24) regions resulting in the disruption of the provision of humanitarian assistance to children, such as health care, vaccination and food distribution.

Developments and concerns

121. Following the adoption of the Safe Schools Declaration in February, I encourage the Government to continue its implementation, including the mapping of schools closed as a result of direct threats and insecurity

122. A joint United Nations-CMA-Government coordination mechanism was established for the implementation of the 2017 action plan. However, the implementation has been slow, and I am concerned by the continued recruitment and use of children. I urge CMA to implement the action plan without delay. In 2018, 102 boys and 5 girls formerly associated with armed groups received reintegration support from UNICEF and partners.

123. The United Nations continued engagement with French forces from Operation Barkhane on the protection of children during military operations. Twelve children captured by Barkhane during military operations were handed over to civilian child protection actors. Three children captured by MINUSMA were transferred to the Gendarmerie before their handover to civilian authorities. Dialogue was initiated with the Joint Force of the Group of Five for the Sahel to mainstream child protection in their operations. I welcome the adoption of a compliance framework by the Joint Force and encourage the Force to implement the child protection aspects therein, including the handover of children.

124. In the framework of the accelerated disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and integration process in Gao, Kidal and Timbuktu, nine individuals, who were presumed to be children, were identified during the screening of combatants but were not released, as they presented adult identity cards, which had been issued a few days prior to the screening. I am concerned by these reports and urge all parties to facilitate the immediate and unconditional release of all associated children. I am also concerned by the increasing number of child casualties, in particular resulting from an intercommunal conflict in central Mali, including by Dan Na Ambassagou, which further deteriorated in early 2019. I am concerned about the continuing high numbers of children recruited and used by the Platform and urge it to develop an action plan with the support of the United Nations to release children and end this practice.

Myanmar

125. Armed conflict continued to take place both between the Tatmadaw and armed groups, and among armed groups, notably in Shan, Kachin and Rakhine States. In the last quarter of the year, fighting between the Tatmadaw and the Arakan Army intensified in central Rakhine and southern Chin States. Attacks by Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army elements against Government forces were also registered. This resulted in the continuous displacement of civilians across the two states. Hundreds of thousands of Rohingya, half of whom are children, remained in Rakhine State, and those displaced in Shan and Kachin States continue to face serious hardships.

Grave violations

126. The United Nations verified 7 children having been recruited and 64 children having been used by the Tatmadaw in 2018. In addition, the past recruitment of 26 boys by the Tatmadaw was verified in 2018.

127. The United Nations verified 11 incidents of the recruitment and use of 17 children (14 boys and 3 girls) by armed groups. Nine incidents were attributed to the Kachin Independence Army (KIA), one to Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) and one to Karen National Liberation Army. In addition, two incidents were documented involving United Wa State Army (UWSA).

128. The United Nations documented the detention of five suspected minors, who had been recruited by the Tatmadaw and held for desertion, and advocated their release. They were placed on light duty in their regiments, pending assessment of their ages. In addition, despite United Nations advocacy, an appeal remains ongoing regarding the charges against the former child soldier Aung Ko Htwe, who was forcibly recruited by the Tatmadaw in 2005 and sentenced to two years imprisonment for sharing his experience with the media. As of December, he remained in detention. Furthermore, the United Nations sent 12 advocacy letters to the Tatmadaw regarding the assignment to the front lines of 11 suspected minors, who were returned to rear bases, pending verification of their ages.

129. The United Nations verified 34 incidents of the killing and maiming of children, resulting in the death of 16 children and injury to 39 children, mainly caused by landmines, explosive remnants of war and improvised explosive devices (24), crossfire (4), air strikes by the Tatmadaw (2), gunshots by Border Guard Police (BGP) (2) and unidentified elements (1), and mortar shells launched by an unknown armed element (1).

130. The United Nations documented eight incidents of attacks against schools (five) and hospitals (three) in Kachin (six) and Shan (two) States, attributed to Tatmadaw (two), KIA (two), Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army (RCSS/SSA) (one) and unidentified elements (three).

131. The United Nations received 32 reports of the military use of schools (30) and hospitals (2) in Rakhine (30) and Kachin (2) States, attributed to the Tatmadaw (21), BGP (7), and jointly to the Tatmadaw and BGP (4). In one incident in Kachin State, a hospital was used as a military base for 13 days, denying the local population access thereto.

132. The United Nations verified three incidents of abduction affecting nine boys, attributed to Tatmadaw (two) and KIA (one). Another six incidents were documented reportedly affecting 36 children, attributed to the KIA (four), the TNLA (one) and the UWSA (one).

133. Humanitarian access, particularly in Kachin, Shan and Rakhine States, continued to deteriorate. International humanitarian organizations have not been able to deliver relief supplies in areas beyond the Government's control since 2016 owing to denial of travel authorizations.

Developments and concerns

134. I am encouraged by the Government's formation of an interministerial committee to prevent all six grave violations and discuss action plans on ending and preventing sexual violence and killing and maiming, following their listing in my previous report, and hope for progress in granting access to conflict-affected areas of Myanmar and holding perpetrators accountable. I reiterate my call for the Government to fully comply with and to finalize action plans on ending and preventing the two remaining violations, with the United Nations, as a priority and encourage the Government to adopt a law on child rights. I remain concerned about the ongoing recruitment and use of children and detention of children by the Government.

135. In 2018, the United Nations engaged with all listed armed groups, in accordance with relevant Security Council resolutions, except for UWSA, and commitments are being sought from RCSS/SSA, Democratic Karen Benevolent Army, Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council and Karen National Union. I strongly encourage listed parties to remain engaged with the United Nations in adopting concrete commitments, and to take action to prevent and address the recruitment of children with immediate effect.

136. During her visit to Myanmar in May 2018, my Special Representative stressed to the Government the need for accelerated implementation of the joint action plan on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children. She urged the Government to ensure no new violations would occur with respect to child recruitment and use, to expedite the age assessment of recruits, to release suspected minors whose cases are pending, and to cease the detention of children for desertion or for being absent without leave. Though efforts are under way, full compliance is yet to be achieved and aggravated cases of new recruitment occurred in 2018, with no progress on accountability. However, 75 children and young people recruited as children were released from the Tatmadaw in 2018 and there has been steady progress in addressing the backlog of cases from previous years.

137. I am concerned about the levels of recruitment and use, and of the killing and maiming of children, notably caused by landmines, explosive remnants of war and improvised explosive devices, and condemn grave violations committed by all parties.

Somalia

138. The political and security situation in Somalia was marked by tensions between the Federal Government of Somalia and federal member states, with the latter breaking off relations with the Federal Government in September. The situation improved from December onwards, when the Federal Government engaged federal member states to normalize relations. Al-Shabaab continued its attacks against the Somali National Army and the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) and used improvised explosive devices against civilians, often with children as victims. In 2018, the number of children affected by grave violations increased by 23 per cent compared with 2017.

Grave violations

139. A total of 2,228 boys and 72 girls, some as young as 8, were recruited and used by parties to conflict. The recruitment of children by Al-Shabaab significantly increased (1,865) compared with 2017 as the group sustained its recruitment drive, including by forcing clan elders and parents to provide children or face reprisal. Other perpetrators included the Somali National Army (155), Somali police (93), Galmudug forces (67), Jubbaland forces (56), clan militias (24), Puntland forces (20) and Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a (ASWJ) (14).

140. The detention of children for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab remained a serious concern, with 360 boys and 15 girls affected. Children were detained by the Somali National Army (168), Somali police (145), Jubbaland forces (20), National Intelligence and Security Agency (18), Galmudug forces and AMISOM (3 each), clan militia and "Somaliland" elements (2 each) and ASWJ (1). Al-Shabaab held 13 children for failing to respect their rules.

141. A total of 781 boys and 260 girls were killed and maimed by Al-Shabaab (437), unidentified armed elements (344), Somali National Army (113), clan militias (36), Somali police (26), Jubbaland forces (24), Galmudug forces (19), AMISOM (15), Southwest forces (10), unidentified air strikes (8), Puntland forces (6), Ethiopian Liyu Police, Ethiopian National Defence Forces and Kenya Defence Forces (1 each). Most child casualties resulted from crossfire, targeted killings, aerial bombardments, improvised explosive devices and suicide attacks.

142. The United Nations verified incidents of sexual violence affecting 328 girls and 3 boys, attributed to unidentified armed elements (114), Somali National Army (50), Al-Shabaab (46), clan militias (42), Jubbaland forces (31), Galmudug forces (14), Somali police (13), Southwest forces (10), Ethiopian Liyu Police (6), Puntland forces (3), and Ethiopian National Defence Forces (2).

143. A total of 77 attacks on schools were verified, the majority (61) attributed to Al-Shabaab. Incidents included killing, abduction and threats against teachers, destruction and looting. On 9 June, a Koranic school teacher was forced to leave Galharur village, Aden Yabal district, Shabelle Dhexe Region, after receiving threats for not teaching according to Al-Shabaab's curriculum. A total of 14 attacks on hospitals were verified and attributed to Al-Shabaab (7), Galmudug forces (4) and unidentified armed elements, clan militias and the Somali National Army (1 each).

144. A total of 1,609 children (1,479 boys, 130 girls), some as young as 8, were verified as abducted, 97 per cent of them by Al-Shabaab (1,590) mainly for the purpose of recruitment and use. On 13 October, three boys between the ages of 11 and 16 were abducted by Al-Shabaab from a local madrasa in Howlwadaag village, Bu'aale district, Juba Dhexe Region. The children were taken to a training facility for indoctrination and subsequent recruitment.

145. A total of 74 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified by the United Nations, a sharp increase from 2017 (37). Most incidents were attributed to Al-Shabaab (41).

146. The Federal Government elaborated a road map to expedite the implementation of the two action plans signed in 2012. I welcome this positive development and call for its swift implementation by all Government security forces, including the Somali National Army and the Somali police. I also commend the drafting of the Child Rights Bill, which incorporates the Convention on the Rights of the Child into domestic law, and urge its speedy enactment. The Sexual Offence Bill is also a positive development and I call for its enactment.

147. I welcome the decree signed by the President of Puntland on 20 August pardoning 34 children who had previously received heavy sentences and been imprisoned since 2016 for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab.

148. During 2018, 74 children were released from the Puntland forces, 17 of whom separated during the screening of those Forces earmarked for integration into the Somali National Army. In addition, the Somali National Army rescued 36 boys, some as young as 7, from an Al-Shabaab training centre in Shabelle Hoose Region. All children were handed over to UNICEF and partners for reintegration support. Overall, 1,179 children formerly associated with armed forces and groups received reintegration support in 2018.

149. I am very concerned by the increase in the recruitment and use, and killing and maiming of children, and in the number of children who have been subjected to sexual violence, the perpetration of which is attributed to the Somali National Army and the Somali police. I am also preoccupied by the steady increase in grave violations by regional forces, in particular Galmudug and Jubbaland forces, and strongly encourage them to engage with the United Nations to end and prevent violations.

150. I remain severely concerned by the increased recruitment and use, and the continuous abductions of children by Al-Shabaab. I call upon all parties to immediately cease and prevent all violations against children. I also remain concerned by the detention of children for their alleged association with Al-Shabaab and call on authorities to treat these children primarily as victims, to prioritize their reintegration in line with their best interests, and to respect due process and international juvenile justice standards.

South Sudan

151. The signing of the Revitalized Agreement on the Resolution of Conflict in South Sudan in September 2018 resulted in a decrease in hostilities and a slight improvement in humanitarian access to children. However, the parties made modest progress on the implementation of the peace agreement and spikes in abductions and sexual violence against children were noted after the signing of the agreement. The greater Equatoria region remained the epicentre of grave violations with 50 per cent of the total number of incidents.

Grave violations

152. The United Nations verified 102 incidents of recruitment or use affecting 453 children (365 boys, 88 girls), 14 per cent of whom were under 15 years of age at the time of their recruitment. Almost half of the cases were attributed to the South Sudan National Liberation Movement (SSNLM) (224 children), followed by the pro-Machar Sudan People's Liberation Army-in-Opposition (SPLA-IO) (84) and the National Salvation Front (NAS) (2), with some cases relating to children who had been recruited in previous years. Close to 30 per cent of the children were recruited and used by Government Security Forces (143), including the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (SSPDF) (94), Taban Deng-allied SSPDF (46), the South Sudan

National Police Service (SSNPS) (2) and the National Prison Service of South Sudan (NPSSS) (1). In addition, 955 children were released by the SSNLM (629), Taban Deng-allied SSPDF (318) and NAS (8).

153. A total of 125 children (69 boys, 45 girls, 11 sex unknown) were verified as having been killed and maimed by Government Security Forces (75), including the SSPDF (66), the SSNPS (8) and the South Sudan National Fire Brigade (1). The pro-Machar SPLA-IO was responsible for the killing and maiming of five children. Fifteen children were affected by crossfire between SSPDF and pro-Machar SPLA-IO, and crossfire between the South Sudan National Movement for Change (SSNMC) and pro-Machar SPLA-IO affected seven children. Children also continued to be affected by unexploded ordnance (23).

154. A total of 72 children, including 1 boy, were subjected to sexual violence, 33 of whom were under 15 years of age and 8 of whom were gang-raped. The majority of cases were attributed to the Government Security Forces (57), including SSPDF (47 children, including 1 boy), SSNPS (6), Taban Deng-allied SSPDF (2), and to NPSSS and the National Security Service (1 each). The pro-Machar SPLA-IO was responsible for perpetrating sexual violence against 14 girls and responsibility for one case was attributed to unidentified armed elements. In addition, a spike in cases of sexual violence in northern Unity was reported by the United Nations in the last quarter of 2018.

155. A total of 30 attacks on schools (18) and hospitals (12) were verified and attributed to Government Security Forces (11), including SSPDF (10) and the Taban Deng-allied SSPDF (1), as well as to pro-Machar SPLA-IO (15), NAS (1) and to crossfire incidents between SSPDF and pro-Machar SPLA-IO (3). Attacks predominantly involved the destruction and looting of educational or medical facilities.

156. In addition, 33 schools (26) and hospitals (7) were used for military purposes, the majority by Government Security Forces (27), including SSPDF (25) and Taban Deng-allied SSPDF (2), followed by pro-Machar SPLA-IO (5) and SSNMC (1).

157. A total of 109 children (49 boys, 51 girls, 9 sex unknown) were verified as having been abducted. The pro-Machar SPLA-IO was responsible for a large majority of those cases (92), often for the purpose of rape and other forms of sexual violence and for the recruitment and use of children. SSPDF was responsible for the abduction of 17 children.

158. A total of 14 incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified in a context that continued to be challenging for humanitarian actors. Incidents were attributed to pro-Machar SPLA-IO (10), SSPDF (3), and NAS (1) and involved attacks, the abduction of humanitarian personnel and the looting of humanitarian aid intended for children. For instance, in April 2018, pro-Machar SPLA-IO held 10 humanitarian workers for five days in Central Equatoria.

Developments and concerns

159. I welcome South Sudan's accession to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict in September 2018, following the mission of my Special Representative to South Sudan, and the release of 955 children (including 317 girls) by armed groups that integrated SSPDF in 2018, including Taban Deng-allied SSPDF and SSNLM. I am encouraged by the willingness of the Government to engage with the United Nations on the development of a comprehensive action plan for ending and preventing all grave violations against children. The elaboration of a draft, together with the United Nations, in February 2019 is a welcome first step and I encourage the Government and allied parties to finalize the action plan without delay. Within the framework of the existing action plan to end and prevent child recruitment and use, signed in 2012 and recommitted to in 2014, the SSPDF appointed child protection focal points across its divisions, organized trainings on child protection jointly with the United Nations and granted access for the United Nations to conduct screenings in Bentiu military barracks.

160. I am seriously concerned about the ongoing impunity for violations against children and urge the Government to ensure accountability, in particular for sexual violence. I urge the Government to ensure that the protection of children is addressed in the implementation of the Revitalized Agreement, including by ensuring that crimes against children are not amnestied. I further urge the Government to cease attacks on schools and the military use thereof, in line with its endorsement of the Safe Schools Declaration. In addition, I am extremely concerned about the increase in abductions, often for the purpose of sexual violence and recruitment, and urge the pro-Machar SPLA-IO faction to engage with the United Nations on the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and the killing and maiming of children signed in 2016.

The Sudan

161. While fighting subsided in large parts of Darfur, sporadic clashes between Government forces and the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid (SLA/AW) continued in the Jebel Marra area, resulting in the displacement of civilians and in an upsurge in killing and maiming of children, the number of children subjected to sexual violence and in the number of children abducted. Progress in implementing the Doha Document for Peace in Darfur remained limited, as did political dialogue between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM/N). While unilateral ceasefires were extended in Blue Nile, Southern Kordofan and Darfur, violations were reported in the Blue Nile, as were clashes between factions of SPLM/N. The ability of the United Nations to monitor and report on grave violations was hampered by access restrictions and reduced child protection capacity.

Grave violations: Darfur

162. No cases of the recruitment and use of children were verified in 2018, although allegations thereof were received.

163. The United Nations verified a total of 77 incidents of killing and maiming affecting 186 children (121 boys, 65 girls), a 27 per cent increase compared with 2017 (146). Child casualties were attributed to Government Security Forces (98), including the Rapid Support Forces (RSF) (33), the Sudan Armed Forces (SAF) (57) and the Sudan Police Force (8), often occurring in the context of military operations in the Jebel Marra area. Remaining casualties were attributed to unidentified armed elements (16), SLA/AW (9) and SLA/General Leadership (1). More than a third of incidents (62 children) were caused by unexploded ordnance.

164. The United Nations verified that 68 girls were subjected to sexual violence, a 55 per cent increase compared with 2017 (44). Cases were attributed to Government Security Forces (39), including RSF (20), SAF (17), the Sudan Police Force (1), the National Intelligence and Security Service (NISS) (1), followed by unidentified armed elements (29). The majority of cases occurred in the context of clashes in the Jebel Marra area.

165. A total of 17 attacks on schools (14) and hospitals (3) were verified and attributed to Government Security Forces (12), including RSF (7) and SAF (5), followed by unidentified armed elements (5). In addition, the United Nations verified the military use of one school by SAF in West Darfur, which was vacated during the year. A school used for military purposes by SAF in Laiba, East Jebel Marra, reported on previously, remained occupied at the time of writing.

166. A total of 22 children (17 boys, 5 girls) were verified as having been abducted by the Government Security Forces (14), including RSF (9), SAF (2), the Border Guards (2) and the Popular Police Force (1), and most of those abductions were followed by arrests. Unidentified armed elements were responsible for the abduction of eight children.

167. While no incident of denial of humanitarian access was verified, the prevailing security situation and access restrictions imposed by parties to conflict largely complicated humanitarian access to children.

Grave violations: Southern Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei

168. During the reporting period, access restrictions hindered monitoring and reporting by the United Nations on grave violations committed against children.

169. The killing of a boy by unexploded ordnance was verified in Southern Kordofan.

170. Three schools and one health clinic in Blue Nile, which had been used for military purposes since 2011, were vacated by the Government in June 2018.

171. Major political developments in April 2019 resulted in the removal of the President of the Sudan and his Government. I welcome efforts made to sustain the gains of the action plan to end and prevent child recruitment and use, which was completed in 2018, including by preserving institutional structures at the national and state levels and taking steps to develop, with the United Nations, a national plan for the prevention of violations against children. I am encouraged by the continued collaboration between the Government and the United Nations in the training of security forces, local authorities, community members and community-based child protection networks on child protection and child rights, in particular at the state level, and I encourage these areas of collaboration to be further reinforced in all parts of Darfur. I also welcome the vacating by military authorities of schools and health facilities and encourage the authorities to continue to demilitarize schools, in line with the Safe Schools Declaration. I further encourage the authorities to operationalize the complaint mechanism manual for reporting child recruitment, to disseminate the standard operating procedures on the release and handover of children associated with armed groups among all Government security forces and to roll out the national awareness-raising campaign for preventing violations against children.

172. I am, however, concerned about the elevated numbers of cases of killing and maiming, sexual violence and abductions perpetrated against children in the context of clashes in the Jebel Marra area. I remind all parties to abide by their obligations under international law to protect children, including by respecting the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and by ensuring the accountability of all perpetrators. I am further concerned about the lack of access for the United Nations to areas under SPLM/N control and call on the group to allow and facilitate safe and unimpeded access to verify the implementation of its 2016 action plan on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children.

Syrian Arab Republic

173. The conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic continued throughout 2018, with an increasing number of grave violations (3,021), the highest number of violations ever verified in the country, despite security and access restrictions. In addition, 934 violations that took place in 2017 and in previous years were also verified. In January, the Government of Turkey officially launched Operation “Olive Branch” in support of groups self-affiliated with the Free Syrian Army (FSA) in northern Syrian Arab Republic. Following a five-year-long besiegement, pro-Government forces regained control over the previously besieged enclave of eastern Ghutah. April witnessed the launch of the Government’s military operations against armed groups in southern Damascus. In July, fighting between the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF), supported by the international counter-ISIL coalition, and ISIL in Hajin and Dashishah, Dayr al-Zawr, intensified, with air strikes and ground operations.

174. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 806 children (670 boys, 136 girls), 22 per cent of whom were under 15 years of age (179), and 94 per cent of whom were used in combat roles (754). The majority of the children were recruited and used by YPG/YPJ (313) operating under the umbrella of SDF, followed by Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusra Front (Levant Liberation Organization) (187), groups self-affiliated with the FSA (170), Ahrar al-Sham (34), ISIL (30), Army of Islam (17), Nur al-Din al-Zanki (16), Syrian Government forces (10), and unidentified armed elements (29). More than 40 per cent of the children recruited by the YPG/YPJ (126) were girls, 20 of whom were below the age of 15 and 119 of whom served in combat roles. The majority of cases were verified in Idlib, Aleppo and Raqqah. At least 25 child casualties resulted from combat and there were cases of children switching association after new groups gained control of territory.

175. The United Nations verified the deprivation of liberty of 51 children (50 boys, 1 girl) for their alleged association with parties to conflict, the majority by YPG/YPJ (40), followed by groups self-affiliated with FSA (8), Syrian Government forces (2) and Ahrar al-Sham (1). Some were subject to ill-treatment, torture or rape. In addition, at least 1,248 children, mainly under the age of 5 and of multiple nationalities, were deprived of their liberty in sites for internally displaced persons across the north-east of the country. The camps were managed by local authorities and YPG/YPJ.

176. The United Nations verified the killing (1,106) and maiming (748) of 1,854 children by Syrian Government and pro-government air forces (888), Syrian Government forces (148), pro-Government forces (96), ISIL (70), groups self-affiliated with FSA and Operation “Olive Branch” (54), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusra Front (25), YPG/YPJ (10), Army of Islam (7), the international counter-ISIL coalition (4), Ahrar al-Sham (2) and by unidentified armed elements (550). The majority of child casualties occurred in Idlib, Rif Dimashq and Aleppo and more than half of the casualties resulted from air strikes (987), including the use of barrel bombs and cluster munitions, followed by unexploded ordnance (434) and shelling (118). For instance, in January, Syrian Government forces dropped a barrel bomb on a residential area in Armanaz town, Idlib, resulting in the killing of 15 children.

177. The United Nations verified 38 incidents of sexual violence perpetrated against children by ISIL (30), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusra Front (5), FSA-affiliated Faylaq al-Sham (2) and Syrian Government forces (1), 30 of which occurred in previous years. Incidents included forced marriage, rape, trafficking and sexual violence while children were deprived of liberty. Sexual violence remained underreported owing to access restrictions, the lack of access to services for victims and stigma.

178. The United Nations verified 113 attacks on schools, a 69 per cent increase compared with 2017, and 112 attacks on hospitals, the highest number recorded since the beginning of the conflict. Attacks on schools were attributed to government and pro-government air forces (60), Syrian Government forces (24), pro-government forces and militia (12), ISIL (2), YPG/YPJ (2), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusra Front (1) and unidentified elements (12). Attacks on hospitals were attributed to government and pro-government air forces (82), Syrian Government forces (5), pro-government forces and militia (6), ISIL (1), the international counter-ISIL coalition (1) and unidentified armed elements (17). Child casualties resulted from attacks on schools (96) and hospitals (55). Close to 70 per cent of the attacks on schools and hospitals were caused by air strikes, including the use of barrel bombs, followed by shelling and the use of improvised explosive devices. Education and medical personnel were killed and maimed (48) and education personnel were detained (9).

179. The United Nations verified the military use of 24 schools and three hospitals, used as ammunition storage, military bases and as detention facilities. Schools were used by YPG/YPJ (14), groups self-affiliated with FSA and Operation “Olive Branch” (7), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusrah Front (2) and ISIL (1). Hospitals were occupied by ISIL (1), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusrah Front (1) and unidentified armed elements (1). Two health facilities and three schools were attacked following the military use thereof.

180. The United Nations verified the abduction of 69 children (40 boys, 24 girls, 5 sex unknown), some as young as two years old, by ISIL (44), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusrah Front (8), FSA-affiliated Rahman Corps (4), YPG/YPJ (3), Army of Islam (2), Ahrar al-Sham (1) and unidentified armed elements (7). Children were primarily abducted because of the alleged affiliation of relatives with parties to the conflict (32), for recruitment (25) and forced marriage (12). One in five children abducted was subjected to ill-treatment, torture, rape or execution.

181. The United Nations verified 59 incidents of denial of humanitarian access involving attacks and threats of attack on humanitarian facilities (37), humanitarian transport and personnel, and the removal or blocking of humanitarian supplies (22). The attacks resulted in the killing and maiming of humanitarian workers (18), and deprivation of liberty (23). Main perpetrators included the Government and pro-government air forces (13), Syrian Government forces (8), pro-government forces (3) and pro-government militia (1), YPG/YPJ (9), ISIL (2), Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusrah Front (2), groups self-affiliated with FSA (2), and unidentified armed elements (19). Several children in Rukban have died from preventable conditions as a result of the lack of access to adequate health care.

Developments and concerns

182. I note the United Nations dialogue with the Government on child protection, including on the reintegration of children. I encourage the Government to put in place long-term preventive measures on the protection of children, including by prioritizing the implementation of the national workplan on ending and preventing child recruitment by the national committee. I note a significant reduction in the recruitment and use of children in 2018. I further call for the adoption of an action plan on ending and preventing the grave violations for which it is listed.

183. I welcome the engagement of SDF, including YPG/YPJ, with my Special Representative, leading to the development and adoption of an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children in 2019. I urge SDF to expedite its implementation, notably the screening of all children within their ranks, including their swift handover to civilian authorities, the implementation of awareness-raising activities and the establishment of a public complaint procedure to report the recruitment and use of children.

184. I note the engagement by groups self-affiliated with FSA, and by Ahrar al-Sham and Army of Islam, as regards training, as well as the commitments made regarding child protection. I am encouraged by the issuance of a military order by Army of Islam setting 18 as the minimum age of recruitment and call for its swift implementation.

The cases that occurred in the context of Operation Olive Branch are currently under investigation.

185. I am seriously concerned about the increasing number of grave violations verified by the United Nations in the Syrian Arab Republic, in particular, the elevated numbers of child casualties and attacks against schools and hospitals. I remain deeply concerned about the detention of children on security-related charges.

186. I call upon all countries concerned to facilitate the repatriation of foreign women and children actually and allegedly affiliated with ISIL, in line with the guiding principle of non-refoulement and with respect for the best interests of the child.

Yemen

187. The conflict in Yemen entered its fifth year, with further deterioration in the dire humanitarian situation. Throughout the year, the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen continued air strikes, the Houthis continued to fire missiles into Saudi Arabia, and ground fighting intensified throughout the country. Air strikes attributed to the Coalition affected the majority of governorates, in particular Hudaydah, Sa'dah and Hajjah. In June, Government forces, backed by the Coalition, launched an offensive against the Houthis in Hudaydah Governorate. In December, the intra-Yemeni consultations convened by my Special Envoy for Yemen resulted in the Stockholm Agreement, followed by the establishment by the Security Council of a monitoring mission, the United Nations Mission to Support the Hudaydah Agreement, to support its implementation. The capacity of the United Nations to monitor and verify grave violations was significantly impeded by threats and by monitors being deprived of their liberty by parties to conflict. A detailed account of the impact of armed conflict on children in Yemen is available in my country report (S/2019/453).

Grave violations

188. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 370 children, attributed to Houthis (170), Yemeni Government forces (111), Security Belt Forces (44), Shabwani Elite Forces (23), Popular Resistance (17), Hadrami Elite Forces (4) and forces loyal to the Southern Transitional Council (1). The decrease compared with 2017 (842) is mainly a result of access and security restrictions, the fear experienced by communities, should they report, owing to the risk of repercussions, and cases of the deprivation of liberty of monitors. Of the total number, 37 per cent of the children (138) were used in active combat, at least 50 per cent of whom (70) were below the age of 15. Large-scale child recruitment reportedly took place in schools, orphanages and communities.

189. For the first time, the United Nations verified the recruitment of 16 girls between the ages of 15 and 17 by the Houthis in Sa'dah. The girls were used to encourage male members of their families to join the Houthis and to mobilize other women and girls to do the same. Some were also trained in the use of weapons. Boys were recruited and used as combatants and in various support roles, including as porters, guards, for patrolling and to assist in intelligence gathering.

190. The United Nations verified the deprivation of liberty of 96 boys by parties to conflict for alleged association with opposing parties, marking a substantial increase compared with 2017 (23). The majority of the children were held by the Houthis for their alleged association with the Yemeni Government Forces and were subsequently released (53). The Coalition captured 42 boys and Yemeni Government Forces held them in Ma'rib Governorate for their alleged association with the Houthis, 27 of those boys were released in February and reportedly reunified with their families. At the time of writing, the remaining 15 children were still held in Ma'rib. Lastly, one boy was held by the Popular Resistance for his alleged association with the Houthis.

191. The United Nations verified 1,689 child casualties, including the killing of 576 children (430 boys, 143 girls, 3 unknown sex) and maiming of 1,113 children (815 boys, 298 girls). The majority of child casualties resulted from ground fighting (755), followed by air strikes (685) and unexploded ordnance (223). A total of 43 per cent of child casualties were attributed to the Coalition (729) of which 684 were due to air strikes and 45 to ground fighting, followed by the Houthis (398), the Yemeni Government Forces (58) and the Popular Resistance (48), among other parties. Child casualties attributed to the Coalition remained high throughout the year, with a decrease during the last quarter of 2018. Of the total child casualties, 30 per cent occurred during offensives in Hudaydah (507), 267 of which were due to ground fighting and 181 to air strikes. The second highest number of child casualties was verified in Sa‘dah Governorate (354), followed by Ta‘izz Governorate (341).

192. The United Nations verified the perpetration of sexual violence against nine children (7 boys, 2 girls) between the ages of 9 and 17, attributed to the Yemeni armed forces (6), the Popular Resistance (2) and the Houthis (1).

193. The United Nations verified 44 attacks against schools (28) and hospitals (16), an increase compared with 2017, 84 per cent of which caused the partial or complete destruction of the facilities. Attacks on schools were attributed to the Coalition (12), the Houthis (12) and unidentified parties (4). Attacks on hospitals were attributed to the Popular Resistance (5), the Coalition (3), the Houthis (3), Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) (2) and unidentified armed elements (3). One third of the attacks occurred in Ta‘izz (14), followed by Sa‘dah (10) and Hudaydah (7).

194. The United Nations verified 32 military uses of schools, a fourfold increase compared with 2017, attributed to the Houthis (28), Yemeni Government Forces (3) and Security Belt Forces (1). At least 20 schools were used by the Houthis to mobilize and train children and 4 were used for recruiting and mobilizing girls. Three military use of hospitals were attributed to the Houthis (2) and the Popular Resistance (1). The majority of cases took place in Sa‘dah, Mahwit and Hudaydah.

195. The United Nations verified 275 incidents of denial of humanitarian access, including restrictions of movement (177), interference in the implementation of humanitarian assistance (49), violence against humanitarian personnel, assets and facilities (44) and attacks on humanitarian water facilities (5). The incidents were mainly attributed to the Houthis (206), the Coalition (41) and the Yemeni Government Forces (7), among other parties, and were concentrated in Hudaydah, Sana‘a and Sa‘dah. Access to areas along the frontlines was particularly difficult, with limited presence of humanitarian actors in the most affected districts and with the Houthis often requesting humanitarian organizations to share beneficiary lists and project details as a precondition to implementing humanitarian activities in areas under their control.

Developments and concerns

196. I welcome the endorsement of a road map by the Government in December 2018 to expedite the implementation of the action plan to end and prevent recruitment and use of children of 2014 and call for the immediate release of all children from its ranks, as well as for the provision of unimpeded access to civilian child protection actors to children deprived of liberty for their alleged association with armed groups. I count on the Government to follow through with commitments made.

197. I am encouraged by engagements with the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen, including the signing of a memorandum of understanding in March 2019 to enhance the protection of children, which provides a framework for the development of a workplan with my Special Representative. I look forward to the implementation of the memorandum of understanding and further steps to strengthen child protection.

198. I condemn the increasing number of child casualties, which are often a result of attacks in densely populated areas and against civilian objects, including schools and hospitals. The rise in the number of child casualties attributed to the Government Forces and the Coalition and the persistent killing and maiming of children by the Popular Resistance are increasingly worrying. I renew my call for all parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law, and to ensure that military operations are conducted in line with the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution.

199. I strongly condemn violations against children committed by armed groups and I am particularly concerned about the persistently high levels of the recruitment and use, and killing and maiming of children and of denial of humanitarian access and by the increase in the attacks on schools and hospitals committed by the Houthis. I call on the Houthis to meaningfully engage with the United Nations to conclude an action plan.

200. I also call upon all parties to the conflict to enhance engagement with the United Nations to develop standard operating procedures on the release and reintegration of children associated with parties.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

India

201. Children continued to be affected by incidents of violence between armed groups and the Government, particularly in Jammu and Kashmir and in the context of the Naxalite insurgency.

Grave violations

202. The United Nations received reports of child recruitment and use in Jammu and Kashmir. Five children, some as young as 14, were reportedly recruited by militant groups, including by Hizbul Mujahideen (two) and Ansar Ghazwat-ul-Hind (one). The two other children joined Lashkar-e-Tayyiba and were reportedly killed in an encounter with the government forces on 9 December. In addition, reports of the systematic recruitment of children by Naxalites continued to be received.

203. Children continued to be reportedly killed and injured in operations by the government security forces against Naxalites in the States of Bihar, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, Maharashtra and Odisha. For example, on 22 April, eight children were reportedly killed during an attack on Naxalites in the district of Garhchiroli, Maharashtra, where the C-60 district-level special forces claimed to have killed at least 40 Naxalites. In Jammu and Kashmir, 31 children between the ages of 7 and 17 were allegedly killed, including during Government armed forces operations. At least 150 children, some as young as 1, were reportedly injured, mostly by pellet bullets used by the security forces.

204. Allegations of the perpetration of sexual violence against girls by the security forces in Kashmir were reported. For instance, an 8-year-old girl was reportedly abducted, drugged, raped for three days and murdered in Kathua district by special police officers.

Developments and concerns

205. I welcome the Government's measures to provide protection to children, notably through the National Commission for Protection of Child Rights, but remain concerned by the reported child casualties and the recruitment and use of children in some areas of the country. I encourage the Government to put in place prevention and accountability measures to hold perpetrators of grave violations to account in view of ending and preventing grave violations against children.

Nigeria

206. The Boko Haram crisis was marked by attacks across the Lake Chad Basin and by increased attacks on hospitals in north-east Nigeria. The abduction of children, in particular girls, often for the purpose of sexual abuse, forced marriage or used to bear improvised explosive devices continued at elevated levels. In 2018, the United Nations faced significant access restrictions to conflict-affected areas, impeding its ability to verify grave violations and to deliver life-saving aid to children.

Grave violations

207. A total of 1,947 children (1,596 boys, 351 girls) were verified as having been recruited and used in Nigeria, 1,646 by the Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) and 301 by Boko Haram. No new recruitment and use by CJTF was verified in 2018 and all cases verified occurred in previous years. 833 children (694 boys, 139 girls) were formally separated from the group during 2018 as a result of the action plan. Boko Haram continued to recruit children and used 48 (38 girls) for the purpose of bearing and detonating improvised explosive devices in north-east Nigeria, 30 in Cameroon, 24 in Chad and 10 in the Niger.

208. In 2018, 418 children were deprived of liberty in Nigeria for their or their parents' alleged association with Boko Haram (304 boys, 86 girls, 28 unknown sex). The majority (52 per cent) of the children had been in detention for over two years. In 2018, the Nigerian authorities released 241 children from detention. In addition, 125 children were held in detention for alleged association with Boko Haram in the Niger, Cameroon (57) and Chad (18).

209. The United Nations verified 432 children killed (175) and maimed (257), attributed to Boko Haram (405), Nigerian Security Forces (NSF) (16), CJTF (1) and unattributed incidents of unexploded ordnance (10). Of the total child casualties attributed to Boko Haram, 58 per cent (234) were due to explosions of improvised explosive devices borne by civilians, including 48 children directly used as carriers of improvised explosive devices. Cases attributed to NSF occurred during the course of their response to Boko Haram offensives.

210. A total of 43 girls were subjected to rape and other forms of sexual violence by Boko Haram (40) and NSF (3). Cases attributed to Boko Haram involved subjecting girls to sexual abuse and forced marriage while in captivity.

211. Attacks on schools (5) and hospitals (10) were verified in north-east Nigeria and attributed to Boko Haram (14) and NSF (1). Furthermore, one hospital in the Far North Region of Cameroon and two schools in the Diffa region of the Niger were attacked by Boko Haram. In addition, NSF used four schools in north-east Nigeria for military purposes.

212. Boko Haram abducted 180 children (45 boys, 135 girls), often for the purpose of recruitment, sexual abuse, forced marriage or for use as carriers of improvised explosive devices. In February 2018, Boko Haram abducted 111 children (110 girls) from a girls' school in Dapchi, Yobe State. Five of the girls died during the abduction, 104 girls were eventually released, and one girl remains in captivity. More than 100 of the Chibok girls abducted in 2014 remain in captivity or missing. In addition, Boko Haram abducted 28 children in Cameroon, 23 in the Niger and 9 in Chad.

213. The number of denials of humanitarian access increased, from 5 in 2017 to 33 in 2018, in an environment where humanitarians face restrictions on movement imposed by parties to conflict. Most cases were attributed to NSF (23) and Boko Haram (10) and took place in areas where the humanitarian needs of children were dire.

Developments and concerns

214. The United Nations continued engagement with CJTF within the framework of the action plan to end and prevent child recruitment and use, signed in September 2017, and 833 children were formally separated from CJTF in 2018. I welcome this development and call on CJTF to continue the implementation of the plan with the United Nations. I take note of the constructive role played by the Government in support of this process and of the reintegration of released children.

215. While the release by the Nigerian authorities of 241 children from detention is encouraging, I remain concerned about children remaining in detention owing to their alleged association with Boko Haram. I call on the authorities to release all children, ensure their sustainable reintegration, swiftly adopt a handover protocol for children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors, in line with international standards, and provide access to the United Nations to all children deprived of liberty. I also urge the Government to avoid impinging on students' safety and education, in line with its commitments in the Safe Schools Declaration, and to swiftly endorse the Paris Principles.

216. The scale and brutality of grave violations perpetrated by Boko Haram in north-east Nigeria and the subregion remain a serious concern, notably the continued use of children, in particular girls, as carriers of improvised explosive devices and the targeting of girls' education, including through abductions and attacks on schools. I call upon the group to immediately cease all violations and abide by its obligations under international law.

Pakistan

217. Elections to the Senate and general elections, tensions between neighbouring countries and the emergence of new groups and continued threats from militant groups affected the security situation, including children's rights and protection. Balochistan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and the Newly Merged Districts remained the main geographical areas of concern.

Grave violations

218. The United Nations received reports of 36 incidents which resulted in the killing (7) and maiming (56) of 63 children. Of those incidents, 20 were attributed to armed groups, including attacks claimed by Tehrik-e Taliban Pakistan in Balochistan (2) and Killa Abdullah (1) and the Islamic State in Quetta (1). Ten of the reported incidents involved the use of improvised explosive devices disguised as toys and resulted in the maiming of 19 children, mainly in Bannu, North Waziristan in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and the Newly Merged Districts. The remaining 16 incidents involved cross-border attacks between Pakistan and India and reportedly killed (4) and maimed (18) 22 children.

219. A total of 34 attacks on schools, injuring 26 students, were reported. Among those, 14 attacks, which targeted girls' education, occurred during a single day in August in Chilas in Gilgit-Baltistan. Some attacks involved explosions and the use of improvised explosive devices and grenades. In addition, personnel of the Global Polio Eradication Initiative reported over 300 attacks in 2018.

220. During the General Election, on 25 July, 8 schools were reportedly used as polling stations and half of them were attacked with grenades. For example, unidentified elements allegedly threw a hand grenade at a girls' primary school in Kushak Village, before polling started.

221. I am seriously concerned by the reported spike in the number of child casualties and attacks on schools, including the targeting of girls' education, as well as attacks relating to the Global Polio Eradication Initiative. I welcome the Government's efforts to protect workers conducting the polio campaign and call on the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration and take preventive measures to protect schools.

Philippines

222. Although the Marawi siege ended in October 2017, military operations continued throughout 2018 against remaining members of the Maute Group, the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters, the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) and other Islamic State-affiliated groups. Additionally, conflict-related incidents between the New People's Army (NPA) and the Armed Forces of the Philippines, who were supported by pro-government paramilitary groups, intensified after the President, Rodrigo Roa Duterte, declared the Communist Party of the Philippines-NPA a terrorist organization, in December 2017, and after the cessation of formal peace talks in June 2018. Those operations resulted in the displacement of over 212,000 people, half of whom were children, the prolongation of martial law until December 2019 and access restrictions for the monitoring and verification of grave violations.

223. The United Nations verified 69 grave violations against children, 26 of which took place in 2017 but could only be verified in 2018, mainly owing to restricted access to Marawi after the siege.

224. The recruitment and use of 19 children (10 boys, 9 girls) by armed groups (18) and armed forces (1) were verified. The Maute Group used 13 children as human shields, to extract gunpowder from firecrackers or to ransack houses during the Marawi siege in 2017. NPA used five children in combat or support roles, and the Armed Forces of the Philippines used one boy to provide support in a military camp. The United Nations received additional allegations of the recruitment and use of children by NPA (eight), Maute Group (four) and ASG (one).

225. The United Nations verified the detention of four children (including one girl), between the ages of 16 and 17, by security forces for their alleged association with armed groups, for periods ranging from two days to one month.

226. The United Nations verified the killing (16) and maiming (41) of 57 children (33 boys, 24 girls). Child casualties were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines (8), NPA (3), Maute Group and ASG (1 each). Responsibility in 10 cases was attributed to armed groups allegedly influenced by Islamic State, and in 34 cases, responsibility could not be attributed. Half of the total casualties were caused by explosive remnants of war (17) and improvised explosive devices (12). For instance, on 2 September, in Isulan city, Sultan Kudarat, the explosion of an improvised explosive device resulted in the killing of a girl and the maiming of four boys, some as young as 5.

227. Three cases of the rape of girls, some as young as 14, perpetrated by the Maute Group, were verified. The girls had been raped or forced to marry Maute Group members during the Marawi siege in 2017.

228. The United Nations verified attacks, including threats of attacks, on schools and protected personnel, which affected two schools and 23 teachers, who were threatened mainly because they were suspected to be supportive of NPA. Those violations were attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines (18), the Maute Group (5) and unidentified armed elements (2). In addition, two schools were used for up to a week by the Armed Forces of the Philippines as bases during military operations.

229. The United Nations verified the abduction of 13 children (6 boys, 7 girls) by the Maute Group (10), during the Marawi siege, and by ASG (3). For instance, a 16-year-old girl was abducted by the Maute Group, was raped twice and was assigned to extract gunpowder from firecrackers and to take care of Maute Group members' children. On 16 October 2017, she managed to escape, together with other hostages, but was injured by a bullet.

230. I welcome the establishment of the Bangsamoro Transition Authority and reaffirm the readiness of the United Nations to help build its capacity to achieve peace, democratic governance and respect for human and children's rights. I commend the Government for the enactment of the Children in Situations of Armed Conflict Bill into national law on 10 January 2019, for the signing of the implementing rules and regulations of this law, and for its continuous commitment to the finalization of the national policy framework on schools as zones of peace. I trust that it will strengthen the protection of children and prevent further threats or attacks on indigenous communities' schools from the Armed Forces of the Philippines and pro-government paramilitary groups, and I call on the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration.

231. I am encouraged by the decrease in the number of grave violations but remain deeply concerned regarding the increased number of child casualties caused by explosive remnants of war, and by the lack of access for humanitarian actors to monitor, verify and provide appropriate response to the victims of the Marawi siege. I am concerned about the lack of due process for children arrested and detained by security forces for their alleged association with armed groups and would like to remind the Government that children demobilized from armed groups, against whom charges have been brought, are protected under the Juvenile Justice and Welfare Act.

Thailand

232. 2018 saw a continued decline in the number of violent incidents in the southern border provinces of Thailand. Talks between the Government and the umbrella MARA Patani continued at a slow pace. The Government proposed to pilot, with the collaboration of non-State armed groups, a "safety zone" in one district that would have aimed to reduce attacks on civilians. The concept never truly advanced, in part owing to a reported lack of full commitment by the Barisan Revolusi Nasional, the main non-State armed group operating in the border provinces.

Grave violations

233. Children continued to be victims of shootings and of the use of improvised explosive devices. Reportedly, one child was killed and at least five children were maimed during the year. For instance, on 6 February, 50m from Baan Siyoh School in Yala's Yaha district, an attack using improvised explosive devices, allegedly targeting security forces who were part of a teacher protection unit, injured two 12-year-old girls.

234. One attack against a school was documented, although additional attacks were launched near schools, including attacks on security forces who were guarding teachers.

235. A technical mission was conducted in January 2019 by the office of my Special Representative and UNICEF, with the aim of further strengthening Government and civil society efforts to better protect children and schools from attack in the southern border provinces. Findings included the need to highlight good practices and potential gaps in the Government's efforts to protect schools and the need for further specialized training of the security forces. The strengthening of child protection capacity in the Southern Border Provinces Administration Centre is a key positive development in this regard and I call on the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration and take preventive measures to protect schools. Thailand endorsed the Vancouver Principles on Peacekeeping and the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers and is welcomed as a centre of excellence in this regard.

IV. Recommendations

236. I am deeply concerned by the scale and severity of the grave violations committed against children in 2018, notably the record high number of casualties as a result of killing and maiming and the increase in the number of violations attributed to international forces. I call upon all parties to immediately end and take all necessary measures to prevent such grave violations, including through ensuring mitigation measures and enhancing training on preventing the six grave violations, as well as by ensuring strong accountability measures for the perpetrators of crimes against children.

237. I urge Member States, including when acting as part of international forces, to ensure that their responses to all threats to peace and security are conducted in full compliance with international law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and military necessity. I request my Special Representative to engage proactively with all parties referred to in the present report to end and prevent further grave violations against children.

238. The detention of children remained an issue of concern and I reiterate that this measure should only be used as a last resort, for the shortest period of time, and that alternatives to detention should be prioritized whenever possible. Moreover, I urge Member States to treat children allegedly associated with armed forces or groups, including groups designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, primarily as victims.

239. In line with Security Council resolution 2417 \(2018\), I call upon Member States to allow safe, timely and unimpeded access for humanitarian assistance and the protection of humanitarian personnel and assets. Parties to conflict should disseminate clear orders specifying that humanitarian assistance for children be facilitated.

240. I reiterate my call upon Member States to continue supporting the implementation of action plans and other commitments aimed at strengthening the protection of children in armed conflict, including by facilitating the engagement of the United Nations with armed groups.

241. I encourage Member States, regional and subregional organizations to strengthen dedicated child protection capacities and to engage with the United Nations to development prevention initiatives in order to forestall grave violations.

242. I reiterate my call upon the Security Council to ensure that provisions for the protection of children are included in all relevant mandates of United Nations peace operations and to request adequate child protection capacity so as to mainstream child protection, conduct dialogue on action plans, release and reintegrate children and further strengthen monitoring and reporting.

243. I enjoin the donor community to engage in a discussion to better address the funding gaps for the reintegration of children, thereby allowing child protection actors to react swiftly to the release of children and put in place long-term viable alternatives to military life, notably by placing a specific focus on girls, in particular on psychosocial support and on education programmes and vocational training for girls.

244. I call on Member States to engage closely with the United Nations to facilitate the return or relocation of foreign children and women actually or allegedly affiliated with groups designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, and to ensure a coordinated response on the basis of international law and children's rights, bearing in mind their best interests.

245. I welcome national and international efforts to hold perpetrators accountable for crimes against children in situations of armed conflict and encourage Member States to play a further proactive role in ensuring an international response where national accountability efforts are unsuccessful, so that impunity can end and cycles of violence can be broken.

246. I welcome all steps taken to ensure full compliance with international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law, and call on Member States to further strengthen the protection of children in armed conflict, including through the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the endorsement and implementation of the Paris Principles, the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles.

V. Lists contained in the annexes to the present report

247. No new listings were added for 2018, but a number of previously listed parties to conflict have had additional violations added, on the basis of incidents verified in 2018. In Afghanistan, Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant-Khorasan Province (ISIL-KP) continued to commit attacks against schools and hospitals and has therefore been listed for this violation. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Nyatura has been listed as a result of the group continuing to perpetrate incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence. In South Sudan, the pro-Machar Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army-in-Opposition (pro-Machar SPLA-IO) has been listed for abduction.

248. There will be no delisting for 2018, except for two technical delistings. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mai-Mai Kata Katanga has been removed, as the group ceased to exist when its leader surrendered in October 2016. In South Sudan, the White Army has been removed, as the group no longer showed evidence of clear leadership or structure and ceased to exist.

249. Other modifications to the list have resulted from changes in the landscape of armed conflict in the respective situations or changes in measures taken by parties to protect children. In this regard, in the Central African Republic, the Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC), as part of the former Séléka coalition, signed an action plan and will be listed in section B of annex I with respect to measures put in place. Similarly, in South Sudan, the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (SSPDF) will be listed in section B of annex I, with regard to recruitment and use only. Lastly, in the Syrian Arab Republic, the Kurdish People's Protection Units

(YPG/YPJ) will be listed in section B of annex I as a result of their enhanced engagement, which led to the signature of an action plan in 2019. On the other hand, in the Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM/N) will fall back to section A of annex I owing to the lack of action in support of the action plan during 2018.

250. Modifications to terminology and to names of parties resulted from some political changes on the ground. In South Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) is now listed as South Sudan People's Defence Forces (SSPDF). In addition, the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army-in-Opposition – pro Taban Deng is now listed as Taban Deng-allied SSPDF. They are now included as part of SSPDF and therefore listed as State actors. In Yemen, the Houthis/Ansar Allah will be listed as Houthis, and Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula/Ansar al-Sharia will be listed as Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula. The coalition to restore legitimacy in Yemen also changed to be listed as the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen. Lastly, in the Syrian Arab Republic, the People's Protection Units will be listed as Kurdish People's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) to reflect changes on the ground.

251. In view of the preventive and protective measures taken by the Government to better protect children over the past number of years, Thailand will be removed from the report in 2020.

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, prepared following consultations and covering the period from January to December 2019, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2427 \(2018\) and presents trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and information on violations committed.<sup>1</sup> Where possible, violations are attributed to parties to conflict and the annexes to the present report include a list of parties engaging in violations against children, namely the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, attacks on schools, hospitals and protected personnel,<sup>2</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. The information contained in the present report was vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. Where information is not verified, it is qualified as such. Where incidents were committed earlier but only verified in 2019, that information is qualified as relating to an incident that was verified at a later date. The information presented does not represent the full scale of violations against children, as verification depends on access. The report presents trends and patterns of violations, in order to effect a change in behaviour by parties, contribute to facilitating engagement with parties responsible for violations, promote accountability and include child protection issues in peace processes. Attacks or threats of attacks on community and civic leaders, on human rights defenders and on monitors of violations against children is a cause for concern and a strain on the monitoring capacity.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict adopted a pragmatic approach to ensure broad and effective protection for children. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status. Accordingly, the report documents situations in which apparent violations of international norms and standards are of such gravity as to warrant international concern, given their impact on children. My Special Representative brings these situations to the attention of Governments, which bear the primary responsibility for protecting children, in order to encourage them to take remedial measures. Where measures undertaken by listed parties had a positive impact on children or where ongoing conduct is of concern, this is highlighted. On the basis of enhanced engagement with Member States, the annexes distinguish between listed parties that have put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children, during the reporting period, and parties that have not.

II. Situation of children and armed conflict

4. Increased engagement by my Special Representative and the country task forces on monitoring and reporting on children and armed conflict resulted in the signing of new concrete time-bound action plans and commitments by listed parties with the United Nations.<sup>3</sup> Coupled with the implementation of action plans and commitments in several situations, these engagements yielded positive change for children, including thousands of children separated from armed groups and armed forces, and in some areas resulted in greater access for humanitarian and child protection actors. Engagement with governments and armed groups led to improvements in age screening procedures and the introduction of legislation to better protect child rights. United Nations advocacy, including the “Act to Protect children affected by conflict” campaign, national political talks or peace processes, and the reduction of conflict, in some of the situations, were beneficial to the protection of children in armed conflict.

A. Overview of trends and patterns

5. The United Nations verified over 25,000 grave violations<sup>4</sup> against children in 19 situations, more than half committed by non-State actors, and a third by government and international forces. Overall, 24,422 violations were committed or continued to be during the reporting period, and 1,241 were committed previously and verified in 2019.

6. Some 7,747 children, some as young as 6, were verified as having been recruited and used. Among those, 90 per cent were used by non-State actors. Some action plans led to increased access for the United Nations and its partners to verify violations and release children. In Nigeria and Mali, the late verification of cases attributed to the Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) and Coordination des mouvements de l’Azawad (CMA) respectively reflect their willingness to implement action plans. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo or the Central African Republic, the increase in numbers is due to the high numbers of previous recruitments verified upon separation in 2019, following engagement on actions plans or other commitments. Notable decreases in the recruitment and use of children occurred in Colombia and Iraq, although monitoring was challenged by security conditions.

<sup>3</sup> An exhaustive list of action plans signed between parties to the conflict and the United Nations can be found at: <https://childrenandarmedconflict.un.org/tools-for-action/action-plans/>.

<sup>4</sup> The use of the term “grave violations” or “violations” refer to each individual child affected by recruitment and use, killing and maiming, sexual violence and abductions, while the number of incidents is used for attacks on schools and hospitals and the denial of humanitarian access.

7. Some 10,173 children were verified as having been killed (4,019) and maimed (6,154). While a general decrease in the number of verified child casualties was observed, the number of incidents of the killing and maiming of children remains the highest verified violation, which underlines the serious concerns about the violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, about the lack of capacity and of measures to mitigate harm, and about warfare in densely populated areas. Causes of casualties include crossfire, small arms and light weapons (see S/2019/1011), ground engagement between parties, the use of explosive weapons in populated areas and the excessive use of force by State actors. Afghanistan remained the deadliest conflict for children, with a 67 per cent increase in suicide and complex attacks<sup>5</sup> affecting children, outweighing the decrease in casualties from aerial attacks. In Mali, an unprecedented number of child casualties was verified, 91 per cent of which were in Mopti region. In Myanmar, intensified fighting in Rakhine State caused a threefold increase of child casualties. Among the casualties, 25 per cent were caused by explosive remnants of war, improvised explosive devices and anti-personnel mines. Iraq and the Philippines had the highest prevalence of such casualties.

8. The United Nations verified 927 attacks on schools (494) and hospitals (433), including on protected persons. The highest numbers were verified in the Syrian Arab Republic, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Afghanistan and Somalia. Globally, attacks on schools and hospitals committed by State actors (503) nearly doubled. In Gaza and Israel, conflict escalation, notably air strikes by Israeli forces and rocket fire by Palestinian armed groups, continued to significantly disrupt children's education. Schools continued to be used for military purposes, eroding their sanctity as safe spaces and exposing schools, teachers and students to attack. When they were not cancelled indefinitely, classes have been suspended for weeks or longer.

9. Some 4,400 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access to children<sup>6</sup> were verified, the highest increase in the number of incidents verified for any violation, compared with 2018. Overwhelmingly, non-State actors were responsible for such incidents, notably in Yemen, Mali, the Central African Republic and the Syrian Arab Republic. Some 2,127 children were delayed and/or denied access to specialized medical care outside of Gaza. Violence against humanitarian workers and assets, including killings, assaults and arbitrary detention, and the military use of humanitarian premises, attacks on essential civilian infrastructure, bureaucratic impediments and restrictions on movements, seriously disrupted humanitarian activities. In some contexts, humanitarian operations were also constrained by groups designated as terrorist by the United Nations and by counter-terrorism measures.

10. Rape and other forms of sexual violence continued to be vastly underreported, with 735 verified cases. Cases were prevalent in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia, the Central African Republic, the Sudan and South Sudan. Cases attributed to State actors nearly doubled, reinforcing the fear of retaliations and of stigma for children and families willing to report sexual violence. Sexual violence, including rape, gang rape, sexual slavery and forced marriage, remains a tactic of war and a taboo subject, disproportionately affecting girls. The adoption of strong legislation is essential to ending such practices. The lack of protection, of holistic services for survivors and of accountability mechanisms disincentivize survivors, their families and witnesses from reporting violations, namely by reinforcing the stigmatization of survivors and their families and by discouraging male survivors from disclosing violations and accessing assistance and justice (S/2020/487).

<sup>5</sup> A deliberate and coordinated attack that includes all of the three following elements: a suicide device, more than one attacker and more than one type of device, as defined in the annual report of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.

<sup>6</sup> Information related to the denial of humanitarian access to children is presented pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\) and follows guidelines of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict. The information presented herein does not necessarily give an exhaustive view of the full humanitarian access situation in the countries concerned.

11. The United Nations verified the abduction of 1,683 children, with over 95 per cent of cases perpetrated by non-State actors, mainly in Somalia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Nigeria. Often combined with other violations, the abduction of children, although a feature of other violations, is possibly underreported. Children were abducted for recruitment and use and sexual violence or ransom.

B. Challenges and the way forward

12. A total of 13,200 children were separated from non-State actors and armed forces globally in 2019. Fundamental challenges hindered the successful and sustainable reintegration of these children, as well as at-risk children who were protected from recruitment through action plans or other measures, and of children released from detention for actual or alleged association with armed groups, including those designated as terrorist by the United Nations. Reintegration programmes must be gender-responsive, include mental health and psychosocial support, education and vocational training, and access to civil registry, identification documents and to justice. Without comprehensive programmes, poverty, the lack of opportunities and stigmatization may result in the recruitment and re-recruitment of children.

13. The scale of the situation regarding children deprived of liberty for their actual or alleged association with opposing parties continued unabated, with over 2,500 children held. Detained children are critically vulnerable and at heightened risk of violence, including sexual violence, torture, exploitation and neglect. Children deprived of liberty need to urgently benefit from individualized care and protection, including nutrition, medical and psychosocial care, and access fundamental rights, including to due process. Children actually or allegedly associated with armed groups, including with United Nations-designated terrorist groups, should be detained only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible period of time, and their reintegration must be prioritized. The adoption of national protocols has mitigated this issue in some situations.

14. Cross-border dynamics of conflict and intercommunal conflict affecting children are another issue of concern, particularly in the Sahel and Lake Chad Basin regions. Insecurity, violence and military operations, including counter-terrorism operations, have hindered access for child protection actors. It is urgent that the children affected by such factors be provided with assistance and protection.

15. Peace remains the most powerful means to reduce violations against children. Governments and non-State actors, in a quarter of the situations outlined in the present report, engaged in some efforts relating to a peace process, whether by initiating negotiations or implementing peace agreements. Child protection should be prioritized in engaging with parties to conflict and in peace processes. The children and armed conflict agenda is central to protection, peacebuilding and prevention efforts. My Special Representative developed the “Practical guidance for mediators to protect children in situations of armed conflict”, which I launched on 12 February 2020.

III. Information on grave violations

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

16. The United Nations verified 3,410 grave violations against 3,245 children (2,317 boys, 915 girls, 13 sex unknown).

17. A total of 64 boys, some as young as 10, were recruited and used by the Taliban (58), Afghan National Police (3), Afghan Local Police, pro-government militia, and by Afghan Local Police and pro-government militias (1 each). Children were used for combat, support roles and sexual purposes, including bacha bazi.<sup>7</sup>

18. The Government reported that 146 boys were detained in juvenile rehabilitation centres on national security-related charges.

19. Of concern, reports currently being verified indicate that among the 506 children, reportedly including foreigners, who surrendered with the thousands of individuals allegedly associated with Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant-Khorasan Province (ISIL-KP),<sup>8</sup> all children over the age of 12 were transferred to the Kabul juvenile rehabilitation centre.

20. A total of 3,149 children (2,226 boys, 910 girls, 13 sex unknown) were killed (874 children) and maimed (2,275 children), mainly as a result of ground engagements (1,213), by non-suicide attacks with the use of improvised explosive devices (575), and suicide and complex attacks (460). Additionally, explosive remnants of war and aerial attacks caused 403 and 341 casualties, respectively. The remaining 157 casualties resulted mostly from search operations, targeted or deliberate killings, and escalation of force. Armed groups caused 1,535 casualties, which were attributed to the Taliban (1,238), ISIL-KP (242) and unidentified armed groups (55). Government and pro-government forces were responsible for 1,032 casualties, including the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (610) (mainly Afghan National Army (491), the National Directorate of Security (38) and Afghan National Police (30)), international forces (248), pro-government militia (45), joint operations of government and pro-government forces (117) and undetermined government and pro-government forces (12). Another 403 casualties were jointly attributed to government and pro-government forces and armed groups, responsibility for 140 casualties was unattributed, and 39 casualties resulted from cross-border engagements at the border with Pakistan.

21. Sexual violence affecting 18 children (13 boys, 5 girls) was attributed to the Taliban (14), Afghan National Police (3) and one incident was jointly attributed to Afghan Local Police and pro-government militia. Two boys were used as bacha bazi.

22. Some 145 attacks against schools (70), hospitals (75) and protected personnel were verified. Armed groups were responsible for 113 attacks, attributed to the Taliban (101), ISIL-KP (8) and unidentified armed groups (4). A total of 26 attacks were attributed to government and pro-government forces, including the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (20) (Afghan National Army (10), National Directorate of Security (8), Afghan National Police and Afghan Local Police (1 each)) and international forces (6). Five attacks were attributed both to government and pro-government forces and armed groups, and one consisted of cross-border shelling from the Pakistan territory. Among all the attacks, 24 attacks against schools (21) and hospitals (3) resulted from election-related violence. Other attacks included targeting or damaging facilities and the killing, injuring or abduction of protected personnel, or such personnel being subjected to threats.

<sup>7</sup> Bacha bazi is a harmful practice whereby boys are used by men for entertainment. The boys are made to dance at parties, and are often dressed in female clothes and subjected to sexual violence, as reported by UNAMA and OHCHR in their annual report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.

<sup>8</sup> Additional information on Afghanistan is included in the twenty-fifth report of the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team submitted pursuant to resolution 2368 \(2017\) concerning ISIL (Da'esh), Al-Qaida and associated individuals and entities (S/2020/53).

23. The military use of six schools by the Afghan National Army and one school by government and pro-government forces was verified. Two medical facilities were used by the Afghan National Army, and jointly by the Afghan National Army, the Afghan Local Police and pro-government militia.

24. The abduction of 14 boys as young as 11, by the Taliban (12), Afghan National Police and pro-government militia (1 each), mostly for family association or alleged association with the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and in one case for sexual purposes, were verified.

25. A total of 20 incidents of denial of humanitarian access by the Taliban (13), ISIL-KP (4), unidentified armed groups (2) and international forces (1) were verified. Armed groups continued to intimidate, abduct, kill and injure humanitarian personnel, including polio vaccinators.

Developments and concerns

26. I commend the Government for progress in implementing the 2011 action plan and 2014 road map to end and prevent child recruitment and use, and for the presidential enactment of the Child Rights Protection Law in March 2019, prohibiting bacha bazi and the recruitment and use of children, and I call for its swift implementation, particularly in Logar Province. I note that child protection units within the Afghan National Police recruitment centres rejected 439 child applicants. I recommend the adoption of a standardized referral system for the reintegration of children who have been separated from parties to conflict, released from detention and/or rejected from recruitment centres.

27. I am extremely concerned about the increased number of children killed and maimed by all parties, in particular by the 67 per cent increase in incidents resulting from suicide attacks involving the use of improvised explosive devices and from complex attacks. I remain concerned about casualties caused by government and international forces, and I urge them to review, strengthen and implement current tactical protocols to prevent child casualties. I note the measures taken by the international forces and the decrease in the number of child casualties from aerial operations. I encourage the Government to engage with the United Nations to broaden the existing action plan and road map to end and prevent all grave violations by its forces. I request my Special Representative to continue to engage proactively and follow up on the implementation of all measures taken by the government and international forces to mitigate child casualties.

28. I am concerned that polio vaccinators are denied access by the Taliban and affiliated groups. I urge the Taliban to include child protection directives in their operational commands, in order to protect all children under the age of 18. I encourage them to sign an action plan with the United Nations to end and prevent violations against children. I further urge all parties to cease the use of improvised explosive devices and complex attacks.

29. I welcome efforts to achieve a lasting political settlement to the conflict in Afghanistan. I urge the Government and the Taliban to work with my Special Representative and the United Nations in considering the use of the “Practical guidance for mediators” in order to include child protection in the peace process.

Central African Republic

30. The United Nations verified 517 grave violations against 413 children (249 boys, 164 girls).

31. The recruitment and use of children was verified, affecting 208 children (165 boys, 43 girls) between the ages of 11 and 17. The children were recruited and used between 2016 and 2019, but the verification occurred in 2019, upon their separation. The perpetrators were anti-balaka (91), Retour, réclamation et réhabilitation (3R) (51), ex-Séléka factions (51) (Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique (FPRC) (36), Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) (14), Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC) (1)), PK5 groups (11), Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (2), Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) and Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) (1 each). Some girls were used for sexual purposes.

32. Four boys detained by national authorities for association with armed groups were released with no charges.

33. A total of 96 children (68 boys, 28 girls), some as young as 6 months old, were killed (61) and maimed (35) by ex-Séléka factions (37), including UPC (20), Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLCJ) (10) and FPRC (7); unidentified armed elements (30); 3R (5); PK5 groups (4); anti-balaka (3); and LRA (1). Casualties also occurred during clashes between FPRC and MLCJ (8), anti-balaka and UPC (7), and anti-balaka and the national armed forces (1). Most child casualties resulted from shootings (81), including 14 boys killed or maimed during their association with armed groups. Ouaka and Vakaga Prefectures were the most affected, followed by Bangui.

34. Rape and other forms of sexual violence were perpetrated against 76 girls, between the ages of 6 and 17, including one case which was verified at a later date. The main perpetrators were ex-Séléka factions (38), including FPRC (14), unidentified ex-Séléka (7), UPC (6), joint operations by FPRC and MPC (6) and MPC (5); unidentified armed elements (15); anti-balaka (10); the national armed forces (5); 3R (4); and Révolution et justice (RJ)-Sayo, LRA, Siriri, and PK5 groups (1 each). One RJ-Sayo element and one anti-balaka element were arrested for sexual violence.

35. A total of 33 children (16 boys, 17 girls), between the ages of 6 months and 16 years, were abducted by ex-Séléka (17), including FPRC (8), UPC (8) and MPC (1); unidentified armed elements (7); anti-balaka (3); FDPC (3); 3R (2); and LRA (1) for recruitment purposes (27) and ransom (6). Nine girls were raped in captivity.

36. A total of 14 attacks against schools (4) and hospitals (10) were attributed to ex-Séléka factions (6), including FPRC (4), MPC (1) and unidentified ex-Séléka (1); anti-balaka (5); unidentified armed elements, FDPC and internal security forces (1 each). Six incidents of the military use of schools were attributed to UPC (4), 3R and anti-balaka (1 each). Two schools continued to be used by UPC in Haut-Mbomou and Basse-Kotto Prefectures.

37. There were 90 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access. The main perpetrators were ex-Séléka factions (36), including UPC and FPRC (9 each), MPC (5) and other ex-Séléka factions (13); and anti-balaka (17). Nana-Grébizi, Ouham and Ouaka Prefectures were the most affected.

38. Dialogue with armed groups enabled the separation of 208 children. In addition, 647 self-demobilized children (437 boys, 210 girls) from RJ-Belanga, anti-balaka, FPRC, UPC and Rassemblement patriotique pour le renouveau de la Centrafrique (RPRC) were identified, and 963 children (744 boys, 219 girls) entered reintegration programmes.

39. I welcome the signature of the Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic in February 2019 between the Government and armed groups. I encourage the Government, parties to the conflict and civil society to develop a national strategy to prevent grave violations against children. I welcome the adoption of the Child Protection Code in February 2020, criminalizing the recruitment and use of children, and urge its implementation. I urge the adoption of the protocol for the handover of children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors.

40. I welcome the signing of action plans with FPRC and UPC. MPC and UPC issued command orders prohibiting grave violations. UPC appointed a child protection focal point for the implementation of the action plan. However, I remain concerned by continued violations against children by FPRC, UPC and MPC, and urge them to transfer perpetrators to competent authorities in order to ensure accountability and to implement their action plans. I note that dialogue with armed groups led to the release of 208 children. In addition, 647 self-demobilized children (437 boys, 210 girls) from RJ-Belanga, anti-balaka, FPRC, UPC and RPRC were identified and some 963 children (744 boys, 219 girls) accessed reintegration programmes.

41. I reiterate my recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Central African Republic (S/2019/852).

Colombia

42. The United Nations verified 176 grave violations against 168 children (88 boys, 68 girls, 12 sex unknown).

43. The recruitment and use of children was verified, affecting 107 children (54 boys, 41 girls, 12 sex unknown) between the ages of 12 and 17. The perpetrators were the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) (40), dissident groups of the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) (40), unidentified armed groups (11), Los Caparrapos and Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia (AGC) (7 each), Ejército Popular de Liberación (EPL) (1), and the Colombian armed forces, who used a girl as an informant. According to the Government, 180 children (112 boys, 68 girls) were separated from armed groups and entered the protection programme of the Colombian Family Welfare Institute.

44. A total of 46 children (33 boys, 13 girls), between the ages of 5 and 17, were killed (23) and maimed (23). Casualties were attributed to ELN (9), the Colombian armed forces (8), AGC and dissident FARC-EP groups (6 each), EPL and Los Caparrapos (1 each), and unidentified armed groups (15). Children were mostly affected by anti-personnel mines and improvised explosive devices, crossfire and air strikes.

45. Rape and other forms of sexual violence affected 11 girls, between the ages of 13 and 16, with responsibility attributed to AGC, ELN and the Colombian armed forces (3 each), and dissident FARC-EP groups (2). The three cases attributed to the Armed Forces are under investigation.

46. Four children, between the ages of 2 and 15, were abducted (1 boy, 3 girls), with responsibility attributed to ELN (3) and dissident FARC-EP groups (1). All children were released from captivity, including one girl rescued by the Colombian armed forces.

47. Three attacks affected schools and related protected personnel. Two were attributed to unidentified armed groups and one occurred during crossfire between AGC and the Colombian armed forces, after the school was used by AGC.

48. There were five unattributed incidents of the denial of humanitarian access. The incidents involved restrictions to freedom of movement owing to the control of territory by armed groups and armed confrontations in Chocó, Cauca and Antioquia Departments. Several indigenous communities were confined, thereby restricting their access to crops, health and education services.

49. Monitoring and reporting remains challenging owing to security conditions in Chocó, Arauca, Norte de Santander and Putumayo Departments. Communities and victims also fear reporting violations.

50. I welcome the Government's efforts to end and prevent violations against children, notably the policy to prevent the recruitment and use of children and sexual violence against children, issued in November 2019 by the Presidential Council for Human Rights and International Affairs. I encourage the Government to develop plans of action to implement the policy at the local level and allocate adequate financial and human resources for their implementation in the areas most affected by the armed conflict, particularly in indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities.

51. I remain concerned about the continuing recruitment and use of children by armed groups, in particular by ELN and dissident FARC-EP groups, and I urge all armed groups to adopt and implement commitments to end all grave violations, and to immediately release all children.

52. I encourage the National Reintegration Council to accelerate the response for the 218 young people identified by FARC-EP for inclusion in the dedicated reintegration programme entitled "A different path of life". I urge the Government to ensure the effective reintegration of all children who have left FARC-EP and to strengthen security measures for programme participants.

53. I reiterate my recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Colombia (S/2019/1017).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

54. The United Nations verified 3,831 grave violations, affecting 3,796 children (2,908 boys, 888 girls).

55. The recruitment and use of children affected 601 children (533 boys, 68 girls), all of whom were recruited and separated in 2019, 30 per cent of whom were under the age of 15 at the time of recruitment. The perpetrators were Nyatura (167), Mai-Mai Mazembe (103), the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) (55), Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové (49), Kamuina Nsapu (37), Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (22), Raia Mutomboki (18), Conseil national pour la renaissance et la démocratie (CNRD) and unidentified armed groups (17 each), Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS) (13), and other armed groups (103). Most cases were verified in North Kivu, followed by South Kivu, Ituri and the Kasais. A total of 22 girls were used for sexual purposes, 204 children were used as combatants and others were used in support roles.

56. In addition, 2,506 children (2,062 boys, 444 girls) were recruited in 2008 or later, and used until their separation in 2019, by 38 armed groups, mainly by Kamuina Nsapu (1,102), Twa militias (280), CNRD (125), Mai-Mai Mazembe (101) and the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (1). The latter case refers to a 15-year-old boy who participated in combat and was released, following an intervention by the United Nations, after one year. A total of 1,753 children were under the age of 15 when recruited, and 1,331 were used as combatants. Most children were separated during demobilization processes, others were voluntarily released, following engagement by the United Nations, or escaped from armed groups.

57. The armed forces and the Congolese National Police detained 111 children (106 boys, 5 girls) for alleged association with armed groups, 90 of whom were released. In addition, 21 children who had been detained since May 2018 for alleged association with Kamuina Nsapu, in Kasai Province, were released in 2019.

58. The United Nations verified the killing (68) and maiming (67) of 135 children (87 boys, 48 girls), in the majority of cases by armed groups (79) (ADF (35) and Lendu militia (26), Mai-Mai Omera (8), other groups (10)), followed by government forces (38) (armed forces (29) and national police (9)). Of the total number of child casualties, 18 resulted from anti-personnel mines and explosive remnants of war. All the casualties occurred during clashes, attacks on villages and intercommunal violence between Hema and Lendu communities in Ituri.

59. The perpetration of sexual violence affecting 249 girls was attributed to government forces (126) (armed forces (97), national police (25), Agence nationale de renseignements (4)); and armed groups (123) (Bantu and Twa militias (23 each), Raia Mutomboki (19), Nyatura (12), other armed groups (46)). The incidents occurred in North Kivu (64), South Kivu (50), Tanganyika (49), the Kasais (42) and other provinces (44). Almost half of the cases involving government forces were committed in the residences of the victim or the perpetrator; 26 per cent were attacks on girls returning from agricultural work; and 11 per cent occurred during military operations. Some 102 government elements were subsequently arrested. Among the 123 cases attributed to armed groups, 22 girls were used for sexual slavery and 101 girls were raped.

60. There were 30 attacks on schools (20) and hospitals (10), mostly attributed to armed groups: Twa militia (8), Mai-Mai groups (6), ADF (5), Lendu militia (4), Raia Mutomboki (3), APCLS and Kamuina Nsapu (1 each). Two attacks were attributed to the armed forces. Most schools were deliberately burned and/or looted. A high number of reported attacks on schools (108) linked to the Hema-Lendu intercommunal violence could not be verified.

61. One school was used by the armed forces for the demobilization of the Twa militia, in Tanganyika Province, and vacated after two months.

62. A total of 305 children were abducted (226 boys, 79 girls). The main perpetrators included Nyatura (86), ADF (83) and Mai-Mai Mazembe (23). Government forces abducted four children for sexual purposes and ransom. In 69 per cent of the cases, children were abducted for recruitment purposes (209). Most abductions occurred in North Kivu (187), Ituri (63), Tanganyika (31) and South Kivu (21). The United Nations continued its advocacy for the release of children abducted by Bana Mura militias in 2017 and forced into labour and sexual slavery. While 56 children returned to their families in 2019, another 54 are still being held captive.

63. There were five incidents of the denial of humanitarian access by Twa militia (3), Mai-Mai Mazembe (1) and Force de résistance patriotique de l'Ituri (FRPI) (1).

64. I welcome the Government's continued efforts to prevent child recruitment and use. The Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to screen new recruits and 141 children were identified and separated before enrolment. I commend the sentencing of two commanders of Coalition des patriotes résistants congolais and Nyatura armed groups, including for the recruitment and use of children, and the ongoing trials of commanders of Nduma défense du Congo, FRPI and Nyatura for child recruitment. I call upon the Government to pursue accountability efforts.

65. I am encouraged that the demobilization and surrender of several armed groups allowed for the release of children. I urge the Government to facilitate the access of child protection actors to all pre-cantonment and demobilization sites in order to separate children. The Government must guarantee that all surrendered combatants and their dependants, including children, are treated with dignity and receive support, including health care and nutrition, when hosted in camps under its care.

66. I welcome the engagement of armed groups with the United Nations to end and prevent child recruitment and other grave violations, with 21 new commanders signing commitments to protect children and the release of 920 children. I urge these armed groups, notably Kamuina Nsapu, Mai-Mai Mazembe, Raia Mutomboki and Nyatura, to expeditiously release any remaining children from their ranks and end other violations, and for other groups to engage with the United Nations.

67. I am concerned at the persistent high number of cases of sexual violence perpetrated by government forces. I urge the Government to continue to prioritize prevention and to continue its accountability efforts, and to continue providing medical support to survivors and expediting the implementation of its 2012 action plan and other commitments to end sexual violence.

Iraq

68. The United Nations verified 186 grave violations affecting 184 children (133 boys, 42 girls, 9 sex unknown).

69. Four boys were recruited and used by the Iraqi Security Forces (3), and by the Popular Mobilization Forces (1) in 2016, which was verified at a later date.

70. As at 31 December, 984 children (947 boys, 37 girls), some as young as 9, were detained on national security-related charges, including for their actual or alleged association with armed groups, primarily Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL).

71. A total of 141 children were killed (61) and maimed (80) by ISIL (68), the Iraqi police (11), Iraqi Security Forces (5) and Operation Claw<sup>9</sup> (3), while responsibility for 54 casualties could not be attributed. Almost half of the casualties (67) were caused by explosive remnants of war in areas previously under ISIL control; most such casualties were attributed to ISIL (36), while the remainder were unattributed (31). In addition, 32 casualties resulted from the use of improvised explosive devices, with 12 of the casualties attributed to ISIL and the perpetrators of the others unknown. Indirect attacks or crossfire incidents resulted in the killing of 15 children and the maiming of 13 children. Among those casualties, 16 were attributed to ISIL, 5 to the Iraqi police, 5 to the Iraqi Security Forces, and 2 casualties were unattributed. A total of 14 children were killed (12) and maimed (2) in targeted attacks. Four of those casualties were attributed to ISIL, six to the Iraqi police, three to Operation Claw, and one remained unattributed.

72. Incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence, which affected three girls and took place in 2014, were attributed to ISIL and were verified at a later date.

73. Two attacks, on a school and a hospital (1 each) resulted from the use of improvised explosive devices, and both remain unattributed. Four incidents of the military use of schools by the Popular Mobilization Forces were verified.

74. The abduction of 36 children was attributed to ISIL, including the late verification of 34 children between the ages of 6 and 13 (33 boys, 1 girl) who had been abducted between 2014 and 2018.

75. While no incident of the denial of humanitarian access was verified in 2019, humanitarian actors faced bureaucratic impediments and restrictions of movement.

Developments and concerns

76. I commend the Government of Iraq for its ongoing discussion with the United Nations on developing an action plan to prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Popular Mobilization Forces, the implementation of which the United Nations is ready to support. I note that no new cases of recruitment and use by those Forces have been documented since 2016.

77. I note the finalization of a national child protection policy in December 2017 and call for its implementation. I urge the Government to adopt a comprehensive law on the rights of the child to criminalize the recruitment of individuals below the age of 18 and establishing the minimum age of criminal responsibility, in line with international juvenile justice standards.

78. I remain deeply concerned about the situation of children detained on security-related charges. Children must be treated primarily as victims and in line with international juvenile justice standards. Detention should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible period of time, with respect for due process. The United Nations is committed to supporting the Government in the reintegration of children formerly associated with parties to conflict within its mandate. I welcome the provision of reintegration programming by the Government, with United Nations support, for 100 boys separated from parties to conflict and urge the Government to develop and implement a national reintegration programme for children affected by armed conflict.

79. I welcome the efforts of the Government to facilitate the return of children actually or allegedly associated with ISIL, and call upon all countries concerned to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of these children, in line with international law principles, including the principle of non-refoulement and with respect for the best interests of the child, and I commend those countries that have begun the voluntary repatriation of children.

80. I am concerned by the ongoing killing and maiming of children caused by landmines and explosive remnants of war. I urge the Government to fully implement international legal instruments on anti-personnel mines and explosive remnants of war, and to promote mine clearance, mine risk education, victim assistance and stockpile destruction.

81. I reiterate the recommendations included in my third report on children and armed conflict in Iraq (S/2019/984).

Israel and the State of Palestine

82. The United Nations verified 3,908 violations against 1,565 Palestinian and 6 Israeli children (1,486 boys, 85 girls).

83. No incidents of the recruitment and use of children were verified. Of concern, in Gaza, the Palestinian Islamic Jihad's al-Quds Brigades and Hamas' al-Qassam Brigades organized weeklong "summer camps" for adults and children as young as 14, exposing them to military content and activities. One child reported that the Israeli forces attempted to recruit him as an informant.

84. A total of 529 Palestinian children (528 boys, 1 girl) were detained for alleged security offences by Israeli forces (527) in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (527, including 374 in East Jerusalem), and by de facto authorities in Gaza (2). The United Nations received testimonies of 166 children who reported ill-treatment and breaches of due process by Israeli forces, including physical violence and one threat of sexual violence.

85. A total of 32 Palestinian children (29 boys, 3 girls) and 1 Israeli girl were killed in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (6), and the Gaza Strip (27). Most casualties were attributed to Israeli forces (29) and caused by live ammunition (15), air strikes (10) or tear-gas canisters (4). One case was attributed to a Palestinian armed group, while two children were killed in incidents involving explosive remnants of war. One Israeli girl was killed by an improvised explosive device in the occupied West Bank, attributed to unidentified perpetrators.

86. A total of 1,539 Palestinian children (1,460 boys, 79 girls) and 8 Israeli children (5 boys, 3 girls,) were maimed. Casualties were attributed to Israeli forces (1,496), Israeli settlers (19), Palestinian armed groups (7), Hamas (3), explosive remnants of war (17), unidentified perpetrators (3) and stabbing attacks not attributed to any party (2). The causes of maiming and injuries of children by Israeli forces were live ammunition (415), tear-gas inhalation (358), tear-gas canisters (311), rubber-coated metal bullets (229), ammunition shrapnel (121), air strikes (34), physical assault (22) and other causes (6). Children were maimed by Israeli forces during demonstrations (1,036) and other circumstances (1) at the Israel-Gaza perimeter fence, during air strikes by Israeli forces on Gaza (34) and on the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (425). Of the eight Israeli children maimed, three were injured in Hamas rocket attacks. The maiming or injuring of 532 additional children (510 boys, 22 girls) by Israeli forces during demonstrations in Gaza in 2018 was verified at a later date, in 2019.

87. Some 208 attacks on schools (15) and hospitals (193) and protected personnel, attributed to Israeli forces (201) and settlers (7), occurred in Gaza (168) and in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (40), and involved hospitals being damaged by air strikes (1) or affected by tear gas disrupting their functioning (3), incidents of injuring or killing of medical personnel (189) and threats against teachers or students (15). The United Nations verified 4 incidents of the military use of schools by Israeli forces and 242 other interferences with education by Israeli forces (229) and Israeli settlers (13), affecting over 48,000 Palestinian children, mostly involving Israeli forces firing live ammunition, tear gas or sound grenades in and around schools. Conflict escalation significantly affected children's education: rocket fire by Palestinian armed groups, on the one hand, and air strikes by Israeli forces on Gaza, on the other, each caused school closures for five days, affecting 1.3 million children respectively. Incendiary balloons were launched from Gaza towards Israel, some of which reportedly landed near schools.

88. The denial of humanitarian access by Israeli forces was verified in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in Gaza. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, medical and other emergency services were prevented from reaching children injured in four incidents. As for Gaza, 23 per cent of applications to Israeli authorities to gain access to specialized medical treatment outside Gaza were delayed until after the scheduled appointment and 5 per cent were denied, affecting 2,127 children (1,281 boys, 846 girls).

89. I note the decrease in the killing and maiming of children but remain extremely concerned by the high incidence of this violation in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. I welcome the increased dialogue on grave violations of Israel and the State of Palestine with my Special Representative and the United Nations on the ground, following my previous report, and request my Special Representative to continue her efforts to engage with all parties to end grave violations against children and to further examine grave violations against children, including recruitment and use by armed groups and killing and maiming by Israeli forces.

90. I urge all parties to end and prevent grave violations against children, in particular killing and maiming, and to apply all feasible measures to ensure the protection of, and care for, children affected by armed conflict.

91. I urge Israel to put in place measures to end any excessive use of force against children and to ensure accountability in all cases involving the killing and maiming of children. I reiterate my call upon Israel to uphold international juvenile justice standards, as well as to cease the use of administrative detention for children and end all forms of ill-treatment in detention or any attempted recruitment of detained children as informants, and I exhort Israel to better protect schools as places of learning.

92. I urge all Palestinian armed groups to uphold their responsibility to ensure the safety of children, including by preventing them from being exposed to the risk of violence or by abstaining from instrumentalizing them for political purposes, including by exposing them to military content and activities. I call upon Hamas and other armed groups in Gaza to cease all indiscriminate launching of rockets, mortars and incendiary balloons.

Lebanon

93. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 43 children (42 boys, 1 girl), between the ages of 11 and 17, by unidentified armed groups (20), Bilal Badr (10), Fath al-Islam (9), Hizbullah and Al-Nasri Front (2 each). Four children were Lebanese and 39 were Palestinian. Five children were recruited as combatants and 38 were used in support roles.

94. Children continued to be detained for association with armed groups, with 20 new verified detentions of boys, between the ages of 15 and 17, of Palestinian (9), Syrian (7) and Lebanese (4) origin. As at 31 December 2019, nine children (6 Palestinian, 3 Syrian) remained in custody, with one serving a custodial sentence and eight in pretrial detention.

95. Three children between the ages of 7 and 13 were killed (1) and maimed (2) as a result of cluster munition or explosive remnants of war in southern Lebanon.

96. Sporadic armed clashes in Palestine refugee camps continued to disrupt education and health services, leading to temporary closures of schools and hospitals. Security concerns also limited the operations of humanitarian actors.

97. I welcome the issuance of the Code of Conduct and the Code of Ethics by the Palestinian National Security Forces in Lebanon to protect people living in Palestine refugee camps.

98. I am concerned about the detention of children for alleged association with armed groups and urge the Government to treat children associated with armed groups primarily as victims, detain them only as a measure of last resort for the shortest possible period of time and promptly refer them to reintegration programmes. I reiterate my call to the Government to accede to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

99. I reiterate my concern about the recruitment and use of children and call upon armed groups to immediately cease this practice.

Libya

100. No incidents of the recruitment and use of children were verified. The United Nations verified the arrest and ongoing detention of eight boys between the ages of 14 and 17 by the Government of National Accord for their association with the Libyan National Army (LNA).

101. A total of 77 children between the ages of 6 and 17 were killed (35) or maimed (42) (60 boys, 17 girls), with responsibility attributed to LNA and affiliated forces (50), unidentified armed groups (9), Tebu armed groups (5), forces affiliated with the Government of National Accord (2) and Tripoli-based armed groups (1). Child casualties occurred during clashes between LNA and forces affiliated with the Government of National Accord (10). The vast majority occurred during the offensive by LNA on Tripoli and were caused by artillery shelling, air strikes, including by uncrewed aerial vehicles, and explosive remnants of war.

102. Reports of rape and other forms of sexual violence perpetrated against refugee and migrant girls were received, including incidents of forced prostitution by criminal networks, some of which are associated with armed groups.

103. The United Nations verified 24 attacks on schools (9) and hospitals (15), all of which were unattributed. Unverified reports of a further 24 attacks on health facilities were received. The hostilities forced nearly 220 schools to close in and around Tripoli, depriving at least 116,000 children of their right to education.

104. A total of 12 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to LNA and affiliated forces (5), Tripoli-based armed groups (3), the Seventh Brigade and affiliates (2), Tebu and Zawiyah armed groups (1 each). Access to Tripoli and southern Libya, where humanitarian needs are the greatest, remained restricted.

105. I am concerned about the prevalence of killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations under international law, particularly the principle of distinction between civilians and persons taking a direct part in hostilities and between civilian objects and military objectives.

106. I reiterate my concern about the abuse of refugee and migrant children, including through human trafficking, the deprivation of liberty, torture and sexual violence. I call upon the Government to end child detention and to pursue alternatives. The denial of humanitarian access to children, including those in detention, is worrisome.

107. I urge the Government to engage with my Special Representative and the United Nations so as to adopt measures to end and prevent violations against children.

Mali

108. The United Nations verified 745 grave violations against 547 children (381 boys, 139 girls, 27 sex unknown).

109. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 215 children (189 boys, 26 girls), between the ages of 9 and 17. In 140 of those incidents, it was verified at a later date that the victims had been recruited and used in previous years. Most children were recruited in Kidal (131) and Gao (49) Regions. The perpetrators were the Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad (CMA) (136) (including Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad (MNLA) (88), Mouvement arabe de l'Azawad (MAA) (30), Haut Conseil pour l'unité de l'Azawad (HCUA) (18)), Platform (27) (including Ganda Lassal Izo (12), Ganda Izo (8), Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés (GATIA) (5) and other Platform members (2)), Front de libération du Macina (FLM) (12), other armed groups (16), and the Malian armed forces (24) for the first time since 2014.

110. A total of 56 boys between the ages of 14 and 17 were captured by the Malian Defence and Security Forces (25), Operation Barkhane (18) and in joint operations of the Malian armed forces and Barkhane (13) for their alleged association with armed groups, including 10 children captured and handed over by Barkhane, who had identified them as adults to the anti-terrorism prosecutor in Bamako. Of the 56 children, 17 were still detained by the Government at the time of writing.

111. A total of 296 children (179 boys, 91 girls, 26 sex unknown), some as young as 2, were killed (185) and maimed (111), mostly in Mopti Region (269), resulting from intercommunal conflict, crossfire and improvised explosive devices. The perpetrators were dozo traditional hunters (147), unidentified armed elements (93), Fulani armed elements (31), other armed groups (17), Malian Defence and Security Forces (3) and Operation Barkhane (1). Four children were maimed during clashes between an unidentified armed group and Barkhane.

112. Sexual violence affected 19 girls, between the ages of 13 and 17, in incidents attributed to unidentified armed groups in Mopti (12), Gao (5), Ménaka and Timbuktu (1 each) Regions.

113. A total of 69 attacks on schools (55) and hospitals (14) were attributed to unidentified perpetrators (66), Dan Nan Ambassagou (2) and FLM (1). The most affected regions were Timbuktu and Mopti (23 each). Attacks involved the destruction and burning of school premises and equipment, threats, and the abduction and killing of education and health personnel. As at 31 December, 1,113 schools remained closed, leaving more than 333,000 children out of school.

114. Eight cases of the military use of schools were verified in Mopti, Timbuktu and Gao Regions by the Malian armed forces (4), dozo traditional hunters, HCUA, Congrès pour la justice dans l'Azawad/MNLA, and MAA-Platform (1 each). Two schools continue to be used by the Malian armed forces at the time of writing.

115. A total of 17 children (13 boys, 3 girls, 1 sex unknown), some as young as 6, were abducted by unidentified armed groups (13), FLM (2), dozo traditional hunters and Fulani armed elements (1 each).

116. Responsibility for 129 incidents of denial of humanitarian access remained unattributed, except for one incident each by FLM, GATIA, CMA, the Malian Defence and Security Forces and dozo traditional hunters. Most of the incidents occurred in Gao (34), Mopti (34) and Timbuktu (27) Regions.

117. I encourage the Government to continue efforts to strengthen its national legal framework and to finalize the revision of the Child Protection Code, criminalizing the recruitment and use of all children, including those between the ages of 15 and 18. I call upon the Government to reinforce national systems to prevent child recruitment and use in armed forces.

118. I commend the continued collaboration between CMA and the United Nations, including through meetings and workshops to accelerate the implementation by CMA of its action plan. I note that most incidents of child recruitment and use verified in 2019 and attributed to CMA had occurred in previous years. I welcome this and call upon CMA to continue implementing the action plan. I commend the ongoing dialogue between Platform and the United Nations and its commitment to adopt an action plan addressing the recruitment and use of children, as reiterated to my Special Representative, in July, and to the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, in December. I urge the swift adoption and implementation of the plan.

119. I am extremely worried by the rise in child casualties, mostly in central Mali, and urge all parties to take all necessary measures to prevent the killing and maiming of children.

120. I welcome the continued cooperation between the United Nations and Operation Barkhane, and between the United Nations and the Joint Force of the Group of Five for the Sahel, on the protection of children during military operations.

121. I remain concerned by the detention of children for their alleged association with armed groups and call upon national authorities and international forces to treat those children primarily as victims and for their detention to be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible period of time.

Myanmar

122. The United Nations verified 432 grave violations against 420 children (351 boys, 67 girls, 2 sex unknown).

123. The recruitment and use of 50 children, between the ages of 12 and 17, mainly in Kachin and Shan States, was attributed to armed groups (33) (Kachin Independence Army (KIA) (30), United Wa State Army (2) and Shan State Progress Party/Shan State Army (1)) and the Tatmadaw (17). Of those recruited by the Tatmadaw, nine boys were recruited by the Tatmadaw between 2012 and 2017 and the incidents were verified at a later date, and eight boys were recruited in 2019.

124. The use of 197 children by the Tatmadaw, in functions such as camp maintenance, brick carrying and rice paddy harvesting, some of which were on an intermittent basis, were verified in Rakhine (196) and Kachin (1) States, mostly at the end of 2019.

125. The detention of 18 boys, between the ages of 15 and 17, by the Myanmar Police was verified, for alleged association with Arakan Army (16) in Rakhine State and with Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) (2) in Shan State.

126. The killing (41) and maiming (120) of 161 children (108 boys, 51 girls, 2 sex unknown), some as young as 6 months, were verified. The total includes two child casualties from crossfire, which occurred prior to the reporting period and were verified at a later date. Child casualties occurred in Rakhine (95), Shan (50), Kachin (8), Kayah (4), Kayah and Chin (1 each) States, and in Mandalay and Magway Regions (1 each). While responsibility for 136 casualties was unattributed, 25 incidents were attributed to the Tatmadaw. Most of the casualties resulted from crossfire (66), anti-personnel mines and explosive remnants of war (59), shooting (14) and artillery shelling (12).

127. There were 12 attacks on schools, including one attributed to the Tatmadaw that occurred prior to the reporting period and was verified at a later date, in Rakhine (7), Shan (3), Kachin and Chin (1 each) States. The attacks were attributed to the Tatmadaw (8) and the Arakan Army (2). Two attacks occurred during fighting between the Tatmadaw and TNLA. The attacks involved artillery shelling (5), crossfire and looting (3 each) and shooting (1). The United Nations also verified the military use of 51 schools in Rakhine (44) and Shan (7) States attributed to the Tatmadaw (44), a combined force of the Tatmadaw and Border Guard Police (5), and the Border Guard Police (2).

128. The United Nations verified the abduction of 12 children (6 boys, 6 girls), between the ages of 12 and 17, in Shan State by TNLA (6), Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (3) and Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army-South (1), and in Kachin State (2) by KIA.

129. Humanitarian access, particularly in Rakhine, Shan and Kachin States, continued to deteriorate owing to insecurity and unpredictable and onerous governmental travel authorization requirements and processes.

Developments and concerns

130. I welcome the adoption by the Government of the Child Rights Law, criminalizing the six grave violations against children, and the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. I urge the Government to ensure their implementation. I note the efforts towards ending child recruitment by the Government, and the Government's initiative to create a national plan to prevent killing and maiming and sexual violence, but I urge the Government to address protection gaps by engaging with the country task force to develop a joint action plan, as requested by my Special Representative.

131. I welcome the release of 59 boys and young men and note the disciplinary action taken against 18 military personnel for not following proper recruitment procedures. I urge the Tatmadaw to continue to collaborate with the United Nations in releasing children in compliance with the joint action plan and in expediting the age verification of the remaining 125 recruits who are believed to be children, identified by the United Nations and the Tatmadaw in their joint action plan. I am concerned by the use of children in Rakhine State and call upon the Tatmadaw to immediately cease this practice. The detention for alleged association with armed groups in contravention of the Child Rights Law is concerning. I call upon the Government to treat children formerly associated with armed groups primarily as victims and detain them only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible time.

132. As discussed by my Special Representative during her visit in January 2020, I am alarmed by the sharp increase in the number of incidents of killing and maiming, including by anti-personnel mines, and in the number of attacks on and incidents of the military use of schools. Ongoing grave violations against children are extremely worrisome and I call upon all parties to immediately end violations. I call upon the Government to sign the Safe Schools Declaration and to ratify the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction. I urge all parties to take all possible measures to protect civilians, including by demining and marking contaminated areas.

133. I welcome the engagement of the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army, KIA, the Karen National Liberation Army, Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation

Army Peace Council, and the Karenni Army and Shan State Army, with the United Nations, including the release of 25 children (17 boys, 8 girls) by KIA, and urge them to sign joint commitments to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children.

134. I am extremely worried by persistent access restrictions in some States and call upon all parties to allow access to the United Nations and child protection actors for humanitarian and monitoring purposes.

135. I urge all parties to engage in national peace dialogues and use the “Practical guidance for mediators” to place children at the heart of discussions.

Somalia

136. The United Nations verified 3,709 grave violations against 2,959 children (2,436 boys, 523 girls).

137. The recruitment and use of 1,442 boys and 53 girls was verified, with some children as young as 8. Al-Shabaab remained the main perpetrator (1,169); followed by government security forces, including the Somali Police Force (100) and the Somali National Army (74); and regional forces, including Puntland forces (40), Galmudug forces (30), Jubbaland forces (19), Galmudug police (4) and Jubbaland police (1). Violations were also attributed to clan militia (56) and the Westland militia (2). A total of 300 children were used in support roles such as escorts, guards at checkpoints and for cleaning, and 269 children were used as fighters.

138. A total of 236 children, between the ages of 13 and 17, were detained for alleged association with armed groups by the Somali Police Force (164), the Somali National Army (37), Jubbaland forces (24), the National Intelligence and Security Agency (7) and Galmudug forces (4).

139. A total of 703 children were killed (222) or maimed (481) (518 boys, 185 girls). The casualties were attributed to Al-Shabaab (252); government security forces, including the Somali National Army (43) and the Somali Police Force (35); and regional forces, including Jubbaland forces (19), Galmudug forces (10), Puntland forces (5), Jubbaland police (3), Galmudug police (2) and Southwest forces (1). Violations were also attributed to clan militias (28), the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) (5), the Kenya Defence Forces (3), the Ethiopian National Defence Forces (1) and unidentified armed elements (296). The main causes of child casualties were improvised explosive devices (158), crossfire between armed forces and armed groups (155), gun shots (127) and explosive remnants of war (54).

140. Responsibility for rape and other forms of sexual violence against 227 girls was attributed to government security forces, including the Somali National Army (25) and the Somali Police Force (14), and to regional forces including Jubbaland forces (16), Galmudug forces (5), Southwest forces (3) Puntland forces and Jubbaland police (1 each). Al-Shabaab (26), clan militias (17) and the Westland militia (1) were also responsible for violations. One violation each was attributed to the Ethiopian National Defence Forces and AMISOM, respectively. In 116 cases, perpetrators could not be identified. The cases of sexual violence included rape (148), attempted rape (42), forced marriage (19), sexual harassment (17) and sexual assault (1).

141. A total of 76 attacks on schools (64) and hospitals (12) were attributed to Al-Shabaab (60), government security forces (including Somali National Army (5) and Somali Police Force (1)), clan militia (4), Galmudug forces (2), AMISOM (1) and unidentified perpetrators (2). Incidents included the abduction of teachers and pupils, the killing of and threats against teachers, and the destruction and looting of facilities. In addition, one school was used for military purposes by the Somali Police Force and one health centre was used by clan militias.

142. A total of 1,158 children (1,065 boys, 93 girls) were abducted, the overwhelming majority by Al-Shabaab (1,142), mainly for the purpose of recruitment and use. Other perpetrators include unidentified armed elements (11), Westland militia (4) and clan militias (1).

143. Responsibility for 50 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to Al-Shabaab (22), clan militias (12), unidentified armed elements (6), Galmudug forces (4), Jubbaland forces (2), as well as the National Intelligence and Security Agency, Southwest forces, Puntland police and Puntland administration (1 each). Incidents included threats and violence against humanitarian personnel and assets, the abduction or detention of personnel and beneficiaries, entry restrictions, disruption and looting.

Developments and concerns

144. I welcome the signature between the Federal Government and my Special Representative, in October, of a road map to expedite the implementation of the 2012 action plans on ending and preventing the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children. It includes renewed commitments to protect children, and I call upon the Federal Government to fully implement the commitments, including at the level of the federal member states.

145. High numbers of grave violations committed against children by all parties to conflict in Somalia are concerning, in particular the staggering numbers of child abductions and the recruitment and use of children by Al-Shabaab. Also concerning is the growing number of violations attributed to government security forces, in particular the sharp increase in the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children, as well as sexual violence perpetrated against children and attributed to the Somali Police Force and regional forces, and the detention of children for their actual or alleged association with armed groups. I call upon all parties to immediately cease all violations and abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

146. I urge the Federal Government to treat children formerly associated with armed groups primarily as victims in line with the best interests of the child, according to the Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups (the Paris Principles), as endorsed by Somalia, and to fully apply the 2014 standard operating procedures for the handover of children, including at the federal member state level. I urge the Government to fast-track the adoption of legislation, including the child rights bill.

147. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Somalia (S/2020/174).

South Sudan

148. The United Nations verified 270 grave violations against 250 children (188 boys, 62 girls).

149. Responsibility for the recruitment and use of 161 children (149 boys, 12 girls) was attributed to the Sudan People's Liberation Army in Opposition (SPLA-IO) (80), government security forces (30), including the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (20), South Sudan National Police Service (6) and National Security Services (4). Violations were also attributed to the South Sudan United Front/Army (SSUF/A) (21), the National Salvation Front (NAS) (19), the South Sudan Opposition Alliance (SSOA) (10) and the National Democratic Movement (NDM) (1).

150. A total of 51 children (39 boys, 12 girls) were killed (25) and maimed (26). Casualties were attributed to government security forces (12) (including South Sudan People's Defence Forces (8), South Sudan National Police Service (3) and National Security Services (1)). Casualties were also attributed to NAS (8) and SPLA-IO (1). Among the casualties, 10 children were killed and maimed in crossfire between the South Sudan People's Defence Forces and armed groups. Twenty children were affected by explosive remnants of war.

151. Rape and other forms of sexual violence were perpetrated against 35 girls, and in three cases there were multiple perpetrators. Most of the violations were attributed to the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (23), followed by unknown armed elements (6), SPLA-IO (5) and NAS (1).

152. Three girls were abducted by NAS (2) and the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (1).

153. Among 14 attacks on schools (10) and hospitals (4), responsibility was attributed to SPLA-IO (5) and the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (1). Seven attacks occurred in the context of crossfire between SPLA-IO and the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (6), and between NAS and the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (1). The attacks mainly involved the destruction and looting of facilities. In addition, 18 schools and 3 hospitals were used for military purposes by government security forces (17) (including South Sudan People's Defence Forces (15) and National Security Services (2)), followed by SPLA-IO (3) and SSUF/A (1).

154. Six incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to SPLA-IO (3), the South Sudan People's Defence Forces and unidentified armed elements (1 each). One incident occurred in the context of crossfire between the South Sudan People's Defence Forces and NAS. The incidents involved the killing of humanitarian workers, harassment of humanitarian workers, the confiscation of humanitarian assets and the denial of access to clear landmines.

155. I welcome the signing by the Government and the United Nations, in February 2020, of the comprehensive action plan to end and prevent all six grave violations and note that in view of the unification of their forces with the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, foreseen in the Revitalized Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan, SPLA-IO and SSOA have bound themselves to this action plan. I call for its full implementation. I welcome the establishment of a Joint Verification Committee in May 2019 composed of the United Nations, the Government, the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, SPLA-IO and SSOA. The Committee conducted screenings to identify and release children associated with armed groups and armed forces and conducted awareness-raising on grave violations in 24 barracks of the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, and in SPLA-IO and SSOA cantonments. In cooperation with the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission and the parties to conflict, the United Nations supported the release and reintegration of 280 children, including 76 girls, from the South Sudan National Liberation Movement (201), SPLA-IO (58) and SSUF/A (21).

156. I commend the cooperation between parties to conflict and the United Nations on child protection and in the release of children. I call upon all parties to immediately release all children recruited or abducted and call upon the international community to continue supporting programmes for the reintegration of these children. I remain concerned about continuing grave violations committed in South Sudan, including by emerging armed groups and in the context of intercommunal fighting. I call upon all parties to end violations and urge the Government to ensure accountability.

The Sudan

Darfur

157. The United Nations verified 208 violations against 199 children (123 boys, 76 girls).

158. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of three boys by the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid (SLA-AW). The United Nations is in the process of verifying 14 alleged cases of recruitment and use by the Rapid Support Forces.

159. Some 119 children were killed (38) and maimed (81) (103 boys, 16 girls) by unidentified armed elements (71), including 47 casualties caused by explosive remnants of war. The remaining casualties were attributed to government security forces (42) (Rapid Support Forces (19), the General Intelligence Service (formerly National Intelligence and Security Service) (13), joint Sudanese Armed Forces/Rapid Support Forces/Sudan Police Force operations (5) and Sudanese Armed Forces (5)), and SLA-AW (6). Most children were killed and maimed in the context of public demonstrations or during inter-factional fighting between SLA-AW splinter groups.

160. Incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence perpetrated against 59 children (2 boys, 57 girls) were attributed to government security forces (21) (Rapid Support Forces (9), Sudanese Armed Forces (8), Popular Defence Forces and Sudan Police Force (2 each)), the SLA-AW faction of Salih Borsa (4), and unidentified armed elements (34). Children living in camps for internally displaced persons and in remote areas in Jebel Marra remained vulnerable to sexual violence while carrying out livelihood activities, including farming, herding cattle or collecting firewood.

161. Six attacks on schools (2) and hospitals (4) were attributed to SLA-AW (4), joint operations by the Rapid Support Forces and Arab armed elements (1) and unidentified armed elements (1). The military use of nine schools by government security forces (6) (Sudanese Armed Forces (2), Rapid Support Forces (2), Sudan Police Force (1), National Intelligence and Security Service (1)) and by SLA-AW (3) was verified. Five schools that had been used by the Rapid Support Forces (2) and SLA-AW (3) were vacated following United Nations advocacy.

162. The abduction of 18 children (15 boys, 3 girls) was attributed to SLA-AW Salih Borsa (5) and unidentified armed elements (13). Among the armed elements, 11 were described as armed nomads, and they abducted children for ransom or to force them to work as cattle herders.

163. Three incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to the Sudanese Armed Forces (2) and SLA-AW Salih Borsa (1).

South Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei

164. Access restrictions hindered monitoring and reporting by the United Nations.

165. One baby was killed by unidentified armed elements in Abyei.

166. Two girls were raped by the Sudanese Armed Forces and unknown armed elements (1 each) in Blue Nile and South Kordofan. In the case attributed to the Sudanese Armed Forces, the perpetrator was arrested and sentenced to 20 years in prison.

167. The military use by the Sudanese Armed Forces of two schools and one hospital in South Kordofan was verified.

168. I welcome the opening of humanitarian space from October 2019, thereby allowing the United Nations to visit areas that had been inaccessible since 2011, including areas of Jebel Marra or areas of South Kordofan and Blue Nile controlled by the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North.

169. I welcome the engagement by the Government with the United Nations for the screening of 1,346 Rapid Support Forces soldiers in South and West Darfur, during which no child was identified. I further note the command orders issued by the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Rapid Support Forces prohibiting the recruitment of children.

170. I encourage the Government to further engage with the United Nations on preventative measures for the protection of children so as to sustain the gains of the action plan on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children, which was completed in 2018. I call upon all parties listed in the annexes to the present report to engage with the United Nations on action plans or renew their engagement with the United Nations in order to continue the implementation of action plans, including through time-bound road maps. I call upon all parties to take into account child protection in the ongoing peace process.

171. I remain concerned about grave violations committed in the Sudan, especially incidents of killing and maiming and sexual violence. I call upon the Government to refrain from the excessive use of force against children, and to ensure accountability for the perpetrators of grave violations. I further encourage all parties to fully cooperate with demining efforts.

Syrian Arab Republic

172. The United Nations verified 2,638 violations affecting 2,292 children (1,612 boys, 401 girls, 279 sex unknown).

173. The recruitment and use of 820 children (765 boys, 55 girls) was verified, 798 of whom served in combat and 147 of whom were below the age of 15. Cases were attributed to the Kurdish People's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) (283) under the umbrella of the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham led by Nusrah Front (245), Syrian armed opposition groups (formerly known as the Free Syrian Army)<sup>10</sup> (191), Ahrar al-Sham (26), other components of SDF (23), the Internal Security Forces (ISF) (22), unidentified armed groups (11), Syrian government forces (10), pro-government militia (5), Nur al-Din al-Zanki (3) and Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) (1). Most cases occurred in Aleppo, Idlib and Raqqah. In addition, within the framework of the action plan signed in June 2019 with SDF, 51 girls were released.

174. At least 218 children (216 boys, 2 girls) were detained or deprived of liberty for their alleged association with opposing parties, by YPG/YPJ (194) under the umbrella of SDF, ISF (20), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (2) and Syrian government forces (2). In October, the United Nations verified the deprivation of liberty of 150 boys, some as young as 9, of Syrian nationality and of at least 22 other nationalities, by YPG/YPJ under the umbrella of SDF, for alleged association with ISIL.

175. The killing (897) and maiming (557) of 1,454 children (834 boys, 342 girls, 278 sex unknown) were verified, with 678 of the violations occurring in Idlib. Half of the casualties were attributed to government and pro-government forces (723) (including government and pro-government air forces (487), government forces and pro-government militias (231) and government forces (5)), unidentified perpetrators (580), Operation Peace Spring<sup>11</sup> (65), YPG/YPJ (21) under the umbrella of SDF, ISIL (23), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (14), the international counter-ISIL coalition (11), Syrian armed opposition groups (10), other components of SDF (6) and ISF (1). The casualties mainly resulted from air strikes (515), shelling (332), unexploded ordnance (301) and attacks with the use of improvised explosive devices (165). The last quarter of 2019 witnessed a significant spike in the number of high-casualty incidents during military escalations in north-western and north-eastern parts of the country.

176. Sexual violence perpetrated against children and attributed to parties remained underreported. The United Nations verified 11 cases of sexual violence against girls in detention by government forces, which occurred in previous years and were verified at a later date.

177. There were a total of 262 attacks on schools (157) and hospitals (105), including on protected personnel, attributed to the Syrian government and pro-government forces (226) (including government and pro-government air forces (147), government forces and pro-government militias (75) and government forces (4)), unidentified perpetrators (14), Operation Peace Spring (6), Syrian armed opposition groups (5), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (5), ISIL (3), YPG/YPJ and other components of SDF (2), international counter-ISIL coalition (1). The majority of those attacks (192) occurred in Idlib, with most involving air strikes (158), shelling (50), explosions of unknown nature (34) and attacks using improvised explosive devices (6).

178. Some 32 schools and 2 medical facilities were used for military purposes by YPG/YPJ (17), government forces (10), ISF (3), other components of SDF (1) and Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1), mainly in Hasakah (22).

179. The abduction of 17 children (12 boys, 4 girls, 1 sex unknown) was attributed to YPG/YPJ (8), other components of SDF (1) and ISF (1), Syrian armed opposition groups (4) and government forces (3). In the majority of incidents, children were abducted owing to the alleged affiliation of relatives with opposing groups or as a precursor to their recruitment.

180. A total of 84 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access included attacks on water facilities (46), incidents of the removal or blocking of humanitarian supplies (21) and attacks on humanitarian facilities, transports and personnel (17). The incidents were attributed to government and pro-government forces (58) (including government forces and pro-government militias (30), government and pro-government air forces (26) and government forces (2)), unidentified perpetrators (10), YPG/YPJ (3), self-administration in northern and eastern Syrian Arab Republic (7), Operation Peace Spring (3), ISF (1), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1) and the Syrian Salvation Government (1).

Developments and concerns

181. I welcome the commitment by SDF to the action plan signed in June 2019 with my Special Representative and the progress in its implementation, in particular the issuance of a military order reiterating the prohibition of recruitment of children, the establishment of an implementation committee, the training of 100 commanders, the appointment of senior focal points and the release of 30 children in 2019 and 51 girls in early 2020, as well as the separation of 18 boys awaiting formal release. I further welcome the fact that United Nations child protection partners were granted access to Centre Houry in Hasakah, which mainly houses Syrian children formerly associated with ISIL as so-called “cubs of the caliphate”. I note that the start of Operation Peace Spring in October 2019 affected the implementation of the action plan.

182. I note the dialogue between the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Nations on non-military use of schools to implement the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, including recommendations concerning the recruitment and use of children. I call upon the Government to engage with the United Nations in Damascus and with my Special Representative to strengthen the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including through the signature of dedicated joint action plans for which the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic is listed.

183. I am appalled by the persistent high levels of all grave violations endured by children and perpetrated by all parties in the country, including by government and pro-government forces. I am particularly disturbed by the increase in the number of attacks against schools and hospitals. I am extremely concerned by the drastic increase in the detention of children on security-related charges. The rising number of incidents of the denial of humanitarian access and emerging trend of attacks on water facilities are also concerning. I urge all parties to take all necessary measures to better protect children in armed conflict, including precautionary measures to mitigate child casualties, and to protect schools and health facilities in the conduct of military operations.

184. I reiterate my call upon all concerned countries that have not already done so, to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of foreign women and children with suspected family ties to ISIL who are currently in camps in the north-east of the country, in line with international law principles, including the principle of non-refoulement and with respect for the best interests of the child.

Yemen

185. The United Nations verified 4,042 grave violations against 2,159 children (1,708 boys, 451 girls).

186. The recruitment and use of 686 children (643 boys, 43 girls) was attributed to the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (482), Yemeni armed forces (136), Security Belt Forces (41), Shabwani Elite Forces (14), unidentified armed elements (7), popular committees (4), a Salafist armed group and Hirak Southern Movement (1 each). Most children served in combat roles (514), 19 per cent of whom were below the age of 15.

187. The United Nations verified the deprivation of liberty and/or detention of 97 boys between the ages of 12 and 16, by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (68), Yemeni armed forces (26) and the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen (3) for their alleged association with opposing parties. Children were held for periods ranging from six months to three years. Among those children, 25 were captured and detained by the Coalition and handed over to the Government of Yemen, who further detained them before releasing them into an interim care centre in Ma'rib in October 2019. A total of 93 children were released as of January 2020, including the 68 who had been held by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis).

188. Killing (395) and maiming (1,052) of 1,447 children (1,041 boys, 406 girls) was attributed to the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (313), the Coalition (222), the Yemeni armed forces (96), popular committees (40), Security Belt Forces (11), Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (5) and ISIL (2). Responsibility for 482 child casualties could not be attributed and a further 276 casualties occurred during crossfire between various parties to the conflict. Of the total number of casualties, 865 resulted from ground fighting, 306 from landmines and explosive remnants of war, 171 from air strikes, and 68 from bombs, including suicide and attacks with the use of improvised explosive devices. Hudaydah, Ta'izz and Dali' Governorates were the most affected.

189. Incidents of sexual violence against three boys by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) and one girl by the Yemeni armed forces, between the ages of 12 and 16, were verified. The lack of access to conflict-affected areas, stigma and the fear of retaliation remain reasons for underreporting of this violation.

190. There were 35 attacks on schools (20) and hospitals (15). The attacks were attributed to the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (15), the Yemeni armed forces (6), the Coalition (4), Security Belt Forces (2) and Shabwani Elite Forces (1). Responsibility for four attacks could not be attributed and three occurred in the context of confrontations between the Yemeni armed forces and popular committees (2) and between the Yemeni armed forces and the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (1). Most attacks occurred in Dali' (15) and Ta'izz (13) Governorates.

191. The military use of 37 schools was attributed to the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (35), the popular committees (1) and an unidentified armed group (1). The military use of three hospitals by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (2) and the Yemeni armed forces (1) was also verified.

192. The United Nations verified the abduction of 22 children (21 boys, 1 girl) by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (19), Security Belt Forces (2) and popular committees (1). In most cases, children were used for recruitment, while the girl was abducted for marriage.

193. A total of 1,848 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) (1,553), the Coalition (186) and the Yemeni armed forces and other components of the Government (109). This represents a dramatic increase from the figure recorded for 2018 and involved restrictions of movements within the country, interference with the delivery of humanitarian assistance, violence against humanitarian personnel, assets and facilities, and restrictions of movement into the country. Denials were prevalent in Sana'a and Amanat Al-Asimah Governorates, followed by governorates adjacent to active frontlines, including Hudaydah, Ibb, Hajjah and Sa'dah.

Developments and concerns

194. I welcome the continued commitment of the Government of Yemen to protect conflict-affected children, including through its interim care centre in Ma'rib, through which children are reunited with their families, and I encourage further efforts, including the adoption of a handover protocol on the release of children. The implementation of its action plan and road map progressed in the first half of 2019, with the appointment of 90 child protection focal points within the Yemeni armed forces, 40 of whom were trained to identify associated children. That progress stalled, however, in August 2019, with tensions erupting between the Government and the southern transitional council. In this context, the political directive issued by the President in February 2020, instructing all forces to comply with the action plan and road map, is welcomed.

195. I commend the endorsement of a programme of time-bound activities by the Coalition, through an exchange of letters with my Special Representative, in order to support the implementation of the memorandum of understanding signed in March 2019. I am encouraged by the efforts demonstrated in the context of the memorandum and call upon the Coalition to expedite the implementation of agreed activities, including accountability provisions. I note the decrease in child casualties attributed to the Coalition in 2019.

196. I am encouraged by the ongoing dialogue with the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) to develop an action plan to end and prevent violations for which they are listed, and the military use of schools. I note that a senior focal point and technical committee were appointed and that a directive for the handover of children captured and/or detained during military operations was signed in April 2020. I welcome the release of 68 children detained for association with opposition parties by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) in early 2020 and urge that their reintegration be prioritized.

197. I am extremely worried, however, about the rise in the overall number of grave violations, including the continued recruitment of children by parties to conflict, and in particular by the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis), and the shrinking space for humanitarians in Yemen.

198. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations and responsibilities under international law and to take all measures necessary to end and prevent violations and facilitate humanitarian access to children.

199. I welcome the progress made towards ending the conflict that is the cause of this suffering. I urge all parties to continue their negotiations to bring lasting peace to Yemen.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

India

200. The United Nations verified the killing (8) and maiming (7) of 15 children (13 boys, 2 girls), between the ages of 1 and 17, by or during joint operations of the Central Reserve Police Force, the Indian Army (Rashtriya Rifles) and the Special Operations Group of the Jammu and Kashmir Police (10), Lashkar-e-Tayyiba (1), unidentified armed elements (1), or during shelling across the line of control (3). The casualties that occurred in Jammu and Kashmir were mainly caused by torture in detention, shootings, including from pellet guns, and cross-border shelling.

201. The United Nations verified attacks on nine schools in Jammu and Kashmir by unidentified elements.

202. Of concern, 68 children between the ages of 9 and 17 have been detained by Indian security services in Jammu and Kashmir on national security-related charges, including 1 for actual or alleged association with armed groups.

203. In Jharkhand State, approximately 10 children were reportedly rescued by Indian police from Naxalite insurgency groups, who allegedly abducted them or used them in support or combat capacities.

Developments and concerns

204. I remain concerned by child casualties in Jammu and Kashmir and call upon the Government to take preventive measures to protect children, including by ending the use of pellets against children. I am concerned by the detention of children, including their arrest during night raids, internment at army camps, torture in detention and detention without charge or due process, and urge the Government to immediately end this practice. I note that the Government conducted age verification for some detainees and urge for its systematization. I note the decline, as a result of government efforts, in the number of reports of child recruitment and of the killing and maiming of children relating to the Naxalite insurgency. However, children's access to education and health services continues to be of concern owing to this insurgency, in particular in Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand States. I am concerned by attacks on schools, yet I am encouraged that the Government has commenced legal proceedings against the perpetrators.

205. I reiterate my encouragement to the Government to put in place national preventive and accountability measures for all grave violations, as soon as possible.

Nigeria

206. The United Nations verified 788 grave violations against 733 children (596 boys, 131 girls, 6 sex unknown).

207. Responsibility for the recruitment and use of 46 children (28 boys, 18 girls), between the ages of 13 and 17, was attributed to Boko Haram (33) and the Nigerian Security Forces (13). The Nigerian Security Forces used children for menial jobs at military checkpoints. In addition, 516 children (458 boys, 58 girls) were verified at a later date as having been recruited and used by the Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) between 2013 and 2017. No new recruitment and use by CJTF has verified beyond 2017, when the action plan was signed with the United Nations. Furthermore, Boko Haram recruited and used 71 children in the Far North Region of Cameroon, 36 in the Niger and 8 in Chad.

208. The Nigerian authorities released 160 children (158 boys, 2 girls) from military detention following their arrest for alleged association with Boko Haram. The United Nations was unable to verify the number of children still in detention, as access to detention facilities was denied.

209. A total of 120 children (95 boys, 25 girls), between the ages of 11 and 17, were killed (56) and maimed (64) by Boko Haram (105), unidentified perpetrators (7), the Islamic State West Africa Province and the Nigerian Security Forces (3 each) and CJTF (1). One casualty occurred during crossfire between the Nigerian Security Forces and Boko Haram. Of the total child casualties attributed to Boko Haram, 41 were due to explosions of improvised explosive devices borne by civilians, including 9 children who were used as carriers. In addition, 103 child casualties in the Far North Region of Cameroon, 13 in the Niger and 3 in Chad were attributed to Boko Haram (109), government forces (9) and unidentified armed elements (1).

210. Sexual violence perpetrated by Boko Haram affected 30 girls, between the ages of 12 and 16, including 23 who were abducted and subsequently raped or forcibly married to Boko Haram elements. Furthermore, five girls were subjected to sexual violence in Chad and the Niger, two of whom were attacked by Boko Haram.

211. A total of 15 attacks on schools (4) and hospitals (11) were attributed to Boko Haram in Nigeria. Furthermore, Boko Haram attacked one school and seven hospitals in the Diffa Region of the Niger, and one school and one hospital in the Far North Region of Cameroon. Unidentified armed elements attacked one hospital in the Niger.

212. Responsibility for the abduction of 44 children (15 boys, 23 girls, 6 sex unknown), between the ages of 11 and 17, was attributed to Boko Haram. In addition, children were abducted in the Niger (67), Cameroon (49) and Chad (5) by Boko Haram (104) and unidentified perpetrators (17).

213. There were 17 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access attributed to Boko Haram (12), Islamic State West Africa Province (3) and the Nigerian Security Forces (2). Incidents included the killing and abduction of humanitarians by Boko Haram. Separately, two unattributed incidents were verified in the Niger.

214. I welcome the constructive role played by the Government in support of the United Nations engagement with CJTF under the 2017 action plan on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children. As a result, of the thousands of children released from CJTF, 1,355 children (1,138 boys, 217 girls) attended ceremonies marking their separation from the group in 2019. I encourage the authorities to ensure the reintegration of released children and further encourage CJTF to complete the implementation of its action plan.

215. While the release of 160 children from detention is encouraging, I am concerned about the children remaining in detention for their alleged association with Boko Haram. I reiterate my call upon Nigerian authorities to treat all children formerly associated with armed groups as victims, with detention as a last resort, and to release all children in its custody. I urge the Nigerian authorities to adopt a handover protocol for the handing over of children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors, and to provide access for the United Nations to all detained children.

216. The brutality of grave violations perpetrated by Boko Haram in north-east Nigeria and the Lake Chad Basin region remains a grave concern, notably the continued use of children, particularly girls, as carriers of improvised explosive devices, and I request my Special Representative to promote enhanced monitoring capacity in the Lake Chad Basin. I urge Boko Haram to immediately cease all violations against children.

Pakistan

217. A total of 23 children (2 boys, 4 girls, 17 sex unknown) were reportedly killed (5) and injured (18) during armed clashes or by shelling or targeted fire across the line of control (10), by improvised explosive devices (3) and explosive remnants of war (10) in Pakistan-administered Kashmir, Punjab, Balochistan and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Provinces. Responsibility could not be attributed for any of those casualties.

218. Three attacks against schools (2) and hospitals (1) were reported, but responsibility was not attributed. The two schools in Pakistan-administered Kashmir were reportedly attacked across the line of control. The hospital in Balochistan Province was attacked with the use of an improvised explosive device. The Global Polio Eradication Initiative reported over 660 attacks or threats of attacks against its staff and facilities, mostly in Balochistan and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Provinces.

219. I welcome the Government's continued efforts to protect the workers who are conducting the polio campaign. I note the decrease in the number of attacks against schools and in the number of child casualties, but call upon the Government to continue preventive measures to protect children, especially around the line of control. I reiterate my call for the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration and to protect schools.

Philippines

220. The United Nations verified 79 grave violations against 67 children (42 boys, 25 girls).

221. The recruitment and use of 18 children (14 boys, 4 girls), between the ages of 15 and 17, were attributed to armed groups, namely the New People's Army (NPA)

(12), ISIL-inspired armed groups (5) and Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (1), in Maguindanao, Quezon and North Cotabato Provinces.

222. The United Nations verified the detention of 35 children (13 boys, 22 girls), some as young as 11, arrested by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (5), the Philippine National Police (2) and during joint operations of the armed forces and the police (28), for alleged association with armed groups, and detained for periods ranging from 1 day to 10 months. Two boys aged 15 and 16 were still in police custody as at December 2019, having been arrested in August and September 2019 in Basilan and North Cotabato Provinces.

223. The killing (12) and maiming (37) of 49 children (28 boys, 21 girls), some as young as 1 year old, were attributed to Abu Sayyaf Group (10), Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (15) and the Armed Forces of the Philippines (4), including in Maguindanao and Sulu (18 each), North Cotabato (4), Negros Occidental, Basilan, Lanao del Sur and Sorsogon (2 each) and Misamis Oriental (1) Provinces. Responsibility for 20 casualties could not be attributed. Over half of the children were victims of explosive remnants of war and the use of improvised explosive devices (25) in Cotabato City and Sulu Province.

224. No incidents of rape or other forms of sexual violence could be verified, although information was received pertaining to such incidents.

225. There were 12 attacks on schools and protected personnel, as well as threats against 20 teachers, including an indigenous teacher. Attacks were attributed to the Philippine National Police (3), unidentified armed elements (2) and NPA (1), while 6 attacks occurred during crossfire between the Armed Forces of the Philippines and NPA (4) and between the armed forces and Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (2). In addition, two schools and one health centre were used by the armed forces during military operations in Maguindanao Province. Of concern, threats against schools run by non-governmental organizations in indigenous communities and harassment of their personnel and students by government security forces and paramilitary groups triggered an escalation of violence, notably in Mindanao, North Cotabato and Davao del Norte Provinces.

226. No incidents of the abduction of children nor of the denial of humanitarian access were verified. The monitoring and verification of violations was impeded by access restrictions, due to the volatile security situation and restricted freedom of movement imposed under martial law in Mindanao, thrice extended since 2017. Verification in some areas was limited owing to a lack of trained capacity.

227. I commend the adoption in June 2019 by the Government of the Implementing Rules and Regulations for the Law on Children in Situations of Armed Conflict. I urge the Government to swiftly disseminate and implement those domestic legal obligations. I am concerned about the increased detention of children due to joint operations of the armed forces and the police and I urge the Government to implement existing national protocols and standards on children arrested and detained for alleged association with armed groups.

228. I am encouraged by the inauguration of the Bangsamoro Transition Authority in March 2019, marking the culmination of the peace process between the Government and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front. I call upon the Bangsamoro Transition Authority to continue to implement the peace agreement and use the lessons learned and best practices collected by the United Nations Children's Fund in the Philippines and by my Special Representative to end and prevent violations against children. I welcome the lifting of martial law in the region after almost three years.

229. Improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war continue to kill and maim children. I call upon the Government to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction and to prioritize the drafting of legislation providing compensation for destroyed and damaged houses.

230. I remain concerned about persistent attacks and threats on schools and protected personnel, particularly in indigenous communities. I urge the Government to comply with the “National policy framework on learners and schools as zones of peace” issued in November 2019 by the Department of Education. I reiterate my call upon the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration.

IV. Recommendations

231. I welcome the enhanced engagement by parties to conflict, notably Governments and non-State actors, with the United Nations to develop and implement action plans and other commitments to protect children in armed conflict. I reiterate my call upon Member States to continue supporting the implementation of action plans and commitments, including by facilitating United Nations engagement with non-State actors. I call upon the Security Council to ensure that child protection provisions are included in all relevant mandates of United Nations operations, including peacekeeping and special political missions. I request my Special Representative to engage with parties on action plans and strengthen the monitoring and reporting on children and armed conflict in coordination with United Nations system entities.

232. I call upon Member States to respect the rights of the child, including through accession to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, if they have not yet done so, and the endorsement and implementation of the Paris Principles, the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles on Peacekeeping and the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers.

233. I am concerned by the continued high level of verified grave violations committed against children. I call upon all parties to fully comply with international humanitarian law, international human rights law and international refugee law. I call upon all parties to immediately end and prevent grave violations, including through mitigation measures, appropriate orders and training on preventing violations.

234. I call for the adoption and implementation of legislation to criminalize grave violations against children. I encourage Member States to proactively ensure strong national accountability measures, and to cooperate with relevant international accountability mechanisms. I call for the inclusion of accountability provisions in action plans signed between the United Nations and parties listed in the annexes, and for the implementation thereof.

235. I am deeply concerned at the growing number of children in detention, and I reiterate that this should only be used as a measure of last resort, and for the shortest possible period of time, and that alternatives to detention should be prioritized whenever possible. I urge Member States to treat children allegedly associated with armed forces or groups, including groups designated as terrorist by the United Nations, primarily as victims, and to give child protection actors full access to these children. I call upon all concerned Member States that have not already done so to take steps for the voluntary repatriation of children stranded in conflict zones, in line with international law principles and standards. I encourage parties to adopt standard operating procedures for the handover and release of all children detained in order to facilitate their reintegration and, when applicable, repatriation.

236. I call upon all parties to allow safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access, in order to provide assistance to children, and to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and assets. Parties to conflict should order that humanitarian assistance and protection services for children be allowed and facilitated, and humanitarian deliveries protected.

237. I enjoin the donor community to address funding gaps for the reintegration of children, including by ensuring long-term alternatives to military life, providing education and long-term reintegration support, including psychosocial and mental health services, as well as funding for monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children. I further ask that the specific needs of girls and of children with disabilities be prioritized in such programmes.

238. I encourage Member States and regional organizations to strengthen child protection capacities and to engage with the United Nations in order to develop strategies to prevent grave violations.

V. Lists contained in the annexes to the present report

239. There will be no new listing for 2019. In my previous report (A/73/907-S/2019/509), I requested my Special Representative to further examine cases in a number of situations, however, unforeseen delays due to political and security developments were encountered. In the case of Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, delays were caused by multiple electoral processes ongoing throughout late 2019 and early 2020 and the subsequent closures caused by the impact of the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) in the region. My Special Representative is continuing to dialogue with parties until such an examination can be completed; meanwhile, I urge all parties, in particular the Israeli forces, to refrain from the use of violence against children and to put in place measures that will prevent these violations from occurring in the first place.

240. In Myanmar, the Tatmadaw will continue to be listed under section A of annex I for the violations of sexual violence and killing and maiming. The Tatmadaw will be delisted for the violation of recruitment and use, following a continued significant decrease in recruitment, ongoing prosecutions and an agreement to continue to trace and release cases that were identified in previous years. The delisting with respect to recruitment and use is conditioned on the immediate ending and preventing of the ad hoc use of children in non-combat roles. A continued United Nations monitoring and engagement period of 12 months will ensure the sustainability of all existing measures, including the prevention of use of children, as verified by the United Nations, and continued engagement with my Special Representative. Any failure in this regard would result in a relisting for the same violation in my next report. In Yemen, the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen will be delisted for the violation of killing and maiming, following a sustained significant decrease in killing and maiming due to air strikes and the signature and implementation of the programme of time-bound activities to support the implementation of the memorandum of understanding signed in March 2019. A continued United Nations monitoring and engagement period of 12 months will ensure the sustained implementation of the programme of time-bound activities and the further decrease in the number of affected children as verified by the United Nations. Any failure in this regard would result in a relisting for the same violation in my next report.

241. Other modifications to the list have resulted from changes in the landscape of armed conflict in the respective situations or changes in measures taken by parties to protect children. In this regard, in the Central African Republic, Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique and Union pour la paix en Centrafrique, both part of the former Séléka coalition, will be listed in section B of annex I in recognition of the measures put in place within their respective action plans. Similarly, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kamuina Nsapu and Mai-Mai Mazembe will be listed in section B of annex I for their existing violations, while Raia Mutomboki will be listed in section B of annex I but only with regard to their listing for recruitment and use and abduction, following their respective engagement with the United Nations through signed commitments. In Myanmar, the Karen National Liberation Army will be listed in section B of annex I, as a result of their enhanced engagement to end the recruitment and use of children within their ranks. In South Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army-in-Opposition – pro-Machar will move to section B of annex I as a result of their engagement with and endorsement of the comprehensive action plan to end and prevent all six violations, signed in February 2020 between the United Nations and the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, including Taban Deng-allied South Sudan People's Defence Forces, and as a result of the measures taken to release children.

242. Modifications to terminology and to names of parties resulted from changes on the ground and are aimed at reflecting the name of parties more accurately. In Somalia, the Somali National Army is now listed as the Somali Federal Defence and Police Forces, and includes the Somali Police Force, remaining on list B of annex I, conditioned on their timely implementation of the October 2019 road map to expedite the implementation of the 2012 action plans on ending and preventing the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children and on the immediate application of the road map to the Somali Police Force, which is now included in the action plans. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the groups self-affiliated with the Free Syrian Army are now listed as Syrian armed opposition groups (formerly known as the Free Syrian Army). In Yemen, the Houthis will be listed as the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) and, owing to recent command orders to stop the recruitment and use of children and to release children, and to enhanced dialogue with the United Nations, will be listed in section B of annex I for recruitment and use, while remaining listed under section A of annex I for killing and maiming and for attacks on schools and hospitals.

243. In view of the gravity and number of violations reported and, where possible, verified in Cameroon (recruitment and use, killing and maiming, abduction, attacks on schools and hospitals, and denial of humanitarian access) and in Burkina Faso (attacks on schools, and killing and maiming) during 2019, both countries will be added as situations of concern with immediate effect and will be included in my next report.

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, prepared following consultations and covering the period from January to December 2020, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2427 \(2018\). The report includes trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and information on violations committed, as requested by the Council in its resolution 1612 \(2005\) and subsequent resolutions.<sup>1</sup> Where possible, violations are attributed to parties to conflict and the annexes to the present report include a list of parties engaging in violations against children, namely the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, attacks on schools, hospitals and protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals,<sup>2</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. The information contained in the present report was vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. Where information is not verified, it is qualified as such. Where incidents were committed earlier but verified only in 2020, that information is qualified as relating to an incident that was verified at a later date. The information presented does not represent the full scale of violations against children, as verification depends on many factors, including access. The report presents trends and patterns of violations, and engagement with parties responsible for violations that might lead to behavioural change, including promotion of accountability and inclusion of child protection provisions in peace processes. In the report, it is noted that attacks or threats of attacks on community and civic leaders, on human rights defenders and on monitors of violations against children are a cause for concern and a strain on the monitoring capacity.

<sup>2</sup> For the purposes of the present report, the phrase “protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals”, used in Security Council resolutions 1998 \(2011\), 2143 \(2014\) and 2147 \(2018\), as well as in the statements by the President of the Security Council of 17 June 2013 (S/PRST/2013/8) and 31 October 2017 (S/PRST/2017/21), refers to teachers, doctors, other educational personnel, students and patients.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\), my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict adopted a pragmatic approach to promote broad and effective protection for children. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status. Accordingly, the report documents situations in which apparent violations of international norms and standards are of such gravity as to warrant international concern, given their impact on children. My Special Representative brings these situations to the attention of Governments, which bear the primary responsibility for protecting children, in order to encourage them to take remedial measures. Where measures undertaken by listed parties had a positive impact on children or where ongoing conduct is of concern, this is highlighted. On the basis of enhanced engagement with parties, the annexes distinguish between listed parties that have put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children during the reporting period and those that have not.

II. Situation of children and armed conflict

A. Overview of trends and patterns

4. In 2020, the situation of children in armed conflict was marked by a sustained high number of grave violations. The United Nations verified 26,425 grave violations, of which 23,946 were committed in 2020 and 2,479 were committed earlier but verified only in 2020. Violations affected 19,379 children (14,097 boys, 4,993 girls, 289 sex unknown) in 21 situations. The highest numbers of violations were the recruitment and use of 8,521 children, followed by the killing (2,674) and maiming (5,748) of 8,422 children and 4,156 incidents of denial of humanitarian access.<sup>3</sup> Children were detained for actual or alleged association with armed groups (3,243), including those designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, or for national security reasons. Escalation of conflict, armed clashes and disregard for international humanitarian law and international human rights law had a severe impact on the protection of children. Cross-border spillover of conflicts and intercommunal violence affected children, in particular in the Sahel and Lake Chad basin regions.

5. The highest numbers of grave violations were verified in Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. Verified cases of abduction and sexual violence against children increased alarmingly by 90 and 70 per cent, respectively. Abduction is often combined with the recruitment and use of children and sexual violence. Continued high levels of denial of humanitarian access to children remained a concern. While attacks on hospitals decreased and attacks on schools increased, both continued to endanger children.

6. Grave violations affect boys and girls differently. Whereas 85 per cent of children recruited and used were boys, 98 per cent of sexual violence was perpetrated against girls. Sexual violence remained vastly underreported, owing to stigmatization, cultural norms, absence of services and safety concerns (see also S/2021/312). Abduction and killing and maiming also affected boys more severely (76 and 70 per cent, respectively).

<sup>3</sup> Information related to the denial of humanitarian access to children is presented pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\) and follows guidelines of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict. The information presented herein does not necessarily give an exhaustive view of the full humanitarian access situation in the countries concerned.

B. Challenges and the way forward

7. The coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic aggravated existing vulnerabilities of children, including by hampering their access to education, health and social services, limiting child protection activities and shrinking safe spaces. The socioeconomic impact of the pandemic exposed these children to grave violations, notably recruitment and use, abduction and sexual violence. Attacks on schools and hospitals, and the military use thereof, exacerbated the plight of children.<sup>4</sup> While engagement to end and prevent grave violations was challenging, my Special Representative and country task forces made progress in Afghanistan, the Central African Republic, Nigeria, the Philippines, South Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Engagement with parties to conflict resulted in the release of 12,643 children from armed groups and armed forces.

8. As emphasized in Security Council resolution 2427 \(2018\) and by the Secretary-General, the protection of children affected by armed conflict is crucial to prevent conflict and sustain peace. National and regional stakeholders should develop and expand initiatives to prevent grave violations. Prioritization of data analysis is crucial for early identification and response to prevent the impact of armed conflict on children, through enhanced information collection and analysis, support for national capacities and inclusion of child protection concerns in mediation.<sup>5</sup> Strategies and mechanisms for information exchange, while respecting individual data protection, in particular on cross-border issues, need to be researched.

9. Access challenges and escalation of conflict challenged child protection capacity and the monitoring and reporting of violations. While child protection actors adapted their working methods, strengthened the use of technology and maximized partnerships, child protection remained overstretched. The response to survivors was hampered, which led to delays in the separation of children from parties to the conflict and in family reunification and reintegration. Child protection advisers mainstream child protection and lead monitoring and prevention efforts. It is therefore important that their number and roles be assessed, protected and increased to adequately protect children.

III. Information on grave violations

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

10. The United Nations verified 3,061 grave violations against 2,863 children (2,020 boys, 840 girls, 3 sex unknown).

11. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 196 boys, attributed to the Taliban (172), Afghan National Police (5), Afghan National Army Territorial Force (4), pro-government militia (7) and jointly by the Afghan Local Police and pro-government militias (8), mainly in the northern (124) and north-eastern (51) regions. Children were used in combat, including in attacks with improvised explosive devices, intelligence gathering, staffing checkpoints and subjected to sexual violence. Nine boys were killed and injured in combat.

12. As at 31 December 2020, 165 children (164 boys, 1 girl) were detained on national security-related charges in juvenile rehabilitation centres for periods up to 3.5 years. In addition, 318 children, predominantly of non-Afghan nationality, were in prison with their mothers who were detained for alleged or actual association with the Taliban and Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant-Khorasan Province (ISIL-KP).

13. The United Nations verified the killing (760) and maiming (1,859) of 2,619 children (1,789 boys, 827 girls, 3 sex unknown) attributed to armed groups (1,098) (including the Taliban (940), unidentified armed groups (115) (including from crossfire between the Taliban and ISIL-KP (3)) and ISIL-KP (43)); and government and pro-government forces (962) (including the Afghan National Army (708), unidentified government and pro-government forces (111), international forces (46), pro-government militia (23), the Afghan National Police (22), unidentified components of the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (16), the National Directorate of Security (14), the Afghan National Civil Order Force (10), the Afghan National Border Force (9) and the Afghan Local Police (3)). Remaining casualties were attributed to unidentified perpetrators (512) (including from crossfire between pro-government forces and armed groups (404)) and cross-border shelling from Pakistan (47). Child casualties resulted from ground engagement (1,195), non-suicide improvised explosive devices (517), explosive remnants of war (315) and air strikes (299). Other causes of casualties included targeted killings, suicide and complex attacks,<sup>6</sup> threats, search operations and abduction.

14. Sexual violence affecting 13 children (9 boys, 4 girls) was attributed to the Afghan National Police (6), including 5 boys used as bacha bazi,<sup>7</sup> Taliban (3), Afghan National Army (1), Afghan Local Police (1), pro-government militia (1) and Afghan National Army Territorial Force (1).

15. A total of 152 attacks on schools (62), hospitals (90) and protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals were verified. Armed groups were responsible for 110 attacks, attributed to the Taliban (101), ISIL-KP (3) and unidentified armed groups (6). A total of 30 attacks were attributed to government and pro-government forces, including the Afghan National Army (16), Afghan National Border Force (1), pro-government militia (2), international forces (1) and unidentified government and pro-government forces (10). In addition, 12 attacks were attributed to unidentified perpetrators in crossfire between armed groups and government and pro-government forces.

16. The military use of schools (5) and hospitals (2) by elements of the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (2), pro-government militias (2), the Taliban (1), the Afghan National Army (1) and the Afghan National Police (1) was verified.

<sup>6</sup> A deliberate and coordinated attack that includes all of the three following elements: a suicide device, more than one attacker and more than one type of device, as defined in the annual report of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.

<sup>7</sup> Bacha bazi is a harmful practice whereby boys are used by men for entertainment. The boys are made to dance at parties and are often dressed in female clothes and subjected to sexual violence, as reported by UNAMA and OHCHR in their annual report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.

17. The abduction of 55 children (46 boys, 9 girls) by the Taliban (54) and a pro-government militia (1) was verified. Of those, 42 children were released, 4 were killed, 1 remained with the pro-government militia and the whereabouts of 8 children remain unknown.

18. A total of 26 incidents of denial of humanitarian access by the Taliban (24), Afghan National Police (1) and government forces (1) were verified.

19. I commend the Government for the continued progress in implementing the 2011 action plan and the 2014 road map to end and prevent child recruitment and use, including through the launch of the child protection policy by the Ministry of the Interior in November 2020, which includes provisions on the recruitment and use of children, bacha bazi, and the screening of children in Afghan National Police recruitment centres, with 187 child applicants prevented from enrolling in 2020. I call upon the Government to sustain the gains made in the implementation of the action plan since 2011 and to continue to prioritize the implementation of the road map, notably in terms of legal and policy reforms related to children detained on national security-related charges for actual or alleged association with armed groups and whose age assessment must be accelerated and subject to standard operating procedures, and in addressing reintegration policy gaps by adopting a referral system for the reintegration of children who have been separated from parties to conflict, released from detention and/or rejected from recruitment centres, as they remain at risk of recruitment and use. I also urge the Government to prioritize accountability for perpetrators and assistance for survivors and their families, and I urge the parliament to adopt the Child Rights Protection Law.

20. I continue to be concerned by the high number of children killed and maimed by all parties, as well as by landmines and explosive remnants of war, and at the high number of attacks on schools and hospitals. I urge the Government and the international community to invest in mine clearance and education. I am seriously concerned over the continuing increase in casualties caused by air strikes carried out by the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces and urge the Government to strengthen and implement protocols to prevent child casualties. I note the reduction in aerial operations by the international forces that has resulted, inter alia, in a sharp decrease in the number of child casualties attributed to these forces. I request my Special Representative to engage proactively on the implementation of measures taken by the Government to mitigate grave violations and to support the development of an action plan between the Afghan National Army and the United Nations on the killing and maiming of children.

21. I condemn all grave violations committed by parties to the conflict and am particularly concerned about the increase in the recruitment and use and the abduction of children by the Taliban. I appeal to all parties to the conflict to end and prevent grave violations against children, and I urge the Taliban to cease violations and engage with the United Nations to sign an action plan to end and prevent violations against children.

22. I welcome efforts to achieve a lasting political settlement to the conflict in Afghanistan and urge the Government and the Taliban to include child protection concerns in these negotiations.<sup>8</sup>

Central African Republic

23. The United Nations verified 899 grave violations against 731 children (440 boys, 291 girls) which occurred during the reporting period. In additionally, 201 grave violations against 201 children (130 boys, 71 girls) which occurred in previous years were verified at a later date.

24. A total of 584 children (400 boys, 184 girls) were verified as recruited and used by ex-Séléka factions (412), including Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique (FPRC) (374), Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC) (19), Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) (15), joint UPC/MPC (2) and Rassemblement patriotique pour le renouveau de la Centrafrique (RPRC) (2); Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLCJ) (46); Retour, réclamation et réhabilitation (3R) (45); anti-balaka (42); the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) (31); internal security forces (4); joint Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/internal security forces (3); and unidentified perpetrators (1). Children were used as combatants (111) and in support roles (464) and subjected to sexual violence (9). In addition, the recruitment and use of 190 children (124 boys, 66 girls) by anti-balaka in previous years was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

25. Four boys were arrested by the internal security forces for alleged association with armed groups; two were released. The United Nations advocated the release of the remaining 2 boys, as well as 10 children arrested in previous years. Four boys arrested in previous years were released in 2020.

26. The United Nations verified the killing (21) and maiming of (21) of 42 children (23 boys, 19 girls), mostly from gunshots. Violations were attributed to unidentified perpetrators (20) (including from crossfire between anti-balaka and UPC (2) and between the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic and UPC (1) and explosive remnants of war (5)), ex-Séléka factions (9) (FPRC (8), UPC (1)), anti-balaka (7), 3R (5) and Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) (1). In addition, the killing (5) and maiming (3) of 8 children (6 boys, 2 girls) in previous years by UPC (4) and unidentified perpetrators during crossfire (4) (between anti-balaka and FPRC (2) and between traders and the PK-5 group "YOU" (2)) was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

27. Rape and other forms of sexual violence against 82 girls were verified and attributed to ex-Séléka factions (27) (FPRC (12), unidentified ex-Séléka, MPC and UPC (4 each), Séléka Rénovée (2) and joint FPRC/MPC (1)), 3R (14), unidentified perpetrators (15), anti-balaka (13), LRA (7), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (4) and internal security forces (2). Perpetrators were arrested in two cases (1 each from the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic and internal security forces). In addition, sexual violence against three girls in 2019 by anti-balaka, unidentified ex-Séléka and 3R (1 each) was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

28. A total of 30 attacks on schools (23) and hospitals (7) were verified and attributed to Coalition des patriotes pour le changement (CPC) (14), unidentified perpetrators (6), ex-Séléka factions (5) (MPC (2) and FPRC, UPC and unidentified ex-Séléka (1 each)), anti-balaka (3) and 3R (2).

29. A total of 11 schools (10) and hospitals (1) were used for military purposes by the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (4), UPC (2), joint FPRC/MPC (1 school/1 hospital) and unidentified ex-Séléka, Révolution et justice-Sayo Branch (RJ-Sayo) and unidentified perpetrators (1 each). As at December 2020, three schools were still in use for military purposes.

30. Some 58 children (33 boys, 25 girls) were abducted by LRA (35), 3R (12), anti-balaka (6), FPRC (3) and unidentified perpetrators (2), including for recruitment purposes (29), sexual violence (10) and ransom (5).

31. The United Nations verified 103 incidents of denial of humanitarian access attributed to unidentified perpetrators (46), anti-balaka (21), ex-Séléka factions (20) (joint FPRC/MPC (8), FPRC (6), UPC (3), unidentified ex-Séléka (2) and MPC (1)), CPC (11) and 3R (5).

Developments and concerns

32. I welcome the appointment of a Minister Counsellor to the President on child protection and the promulgation of the Child Protection Code criminalizing child recruitment and use, and I encourage the Government to prevent the recruitment and use of children into armed and security forces. I welcome the conviction of 110 perpetrators of violations against children and urge the authorities to continue to pursue accountability for violations against children. I call upon the Government to submit its initial report on the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, and I continue to urge the adoption of the protocol for the handover of children associated with armed groups to civilian protection actors.

33. I welcome the release of 497 children following United Nations engagement with armed groups, including 255 children from FPRC. In addition, 190 self-demobilized children from anti-balaka were identified. The United Nations initiated dialogue with an LRA splinter group.

34. I am alarmed at the elevated numbers of grave violations, including the sharp increase in recruitment and use, sexual violence, abduction and attacks on schools, including by parties that have signed action plans with the United Nations. I call upon all parties to immediately cease all grave violations and to release children from their ranks.

35. I am concerned over the impact of electoral violence, leading to an increase in incidents of sexual violence and recruitment and use, and I call upon the signatories of the Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic to continue to implement it, including its child protection provisions.

Colombia

36. The United Nations verified 210 grave violations against 184 children (123 boys, 61 girls).

37. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 116 children (77 boys, 39 girls). Perpetrators were dissident groups of the former Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) (66), the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) (22), unidentified perpetrators (12), the Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia (AGC) (9) and Los Caparrapos (7). According to the Government, 144 children (105 boys, 39 girls) were separated from armed groups and entered the protection programme of the Colombian Family Welfare Institute.

38. A total of 69 children (48 boys, 21 girls) were killed (48) and maimed (21) by unidentified perpetrators (36), dissident FARC-EP groups (18), AGC (7), the Colombian armed forces (4), Los Caparrapos (3) and ELN (1). Children were killed and maimed by gunshots (49), landmines (12) and improvised explosive devices (8).

39. Rape and other forms of sexual violence affected nine children (2 boys, 7 girls). Violations were attributed to unidentified perpetrators (4), the Colombian armed forces (3) and dissident FARC-EP groups (2). The perpetrators were arrested in the three cases attributed to the Colombian armed forces, and investigations are ongoing.

40. Six attacks on schools (4) and hospitals (2) were verified and attributed to unidentified perpetrators (4) and AGC and ELN (1 each).

41. One school was used for military purposes by a dissident FARC-EP group in March.

42. Two children (1 boy, 1 girl) were abducted by dissident FARC-EP groups, including one for recruitment. Their whereabouts are unknown.

43. Eight incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified and attributed to dissident FARC-EP groups (3), AGC and unidentified armed groups (2 each) and ELN (1).

Developments and concerns

44. In July, the Government approved a national action plan to implement the 2019 policy to prevent the recruitment and use of children and sexual violence against children and launched the programme “Súmate por mí” to prevent child recruitment and use by armed groups. I encourage the Government to allocate adequate financial and human resources for their implementation, in particular in vulnerable areas, including in indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities.

45. I welcome advances in accountability, including through Case No. 07 of the Special Jurisdiction for Peace, concerning the recruitment and use of children, and I also welcome that the Truth Commission is addressing the disproportionate impact of armed conflict on children.

46. I am concerned about the continuing recruitment and use of children by armed groups, in particular by FARC-EP dissident groups and ELN, and by the increase in killing and maiming of children. I urge all armed groups to immediately release all children and to adopt and implement commitments to end and prevent all grave violations. I encourage the Government to continue its demining and mine risk education activities. As of February 2021, the crime of sexual violence against children is imprescriptible in Colombia. I urge the authorities to implement a zero-tolerance policy on sexual violence by the armed and security forces and to strengthen prevention and response for survivors.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

47. The United Nations verified 3,470 grave violations against 2,912 children (2,113 boys, 799 girls). In addition, 1,786 grave violations against 1,294 children (787 boys, 507 girls) which occurred in previous years were verified at a later date.

48. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 788 children (687 boys, 101 girls), all of whom were recruited, used and separated in 2020. Perpetrators were Mai-Mai Mazembe (209), Nyatura (109), Alliance des forces de résistance congolaises (101), Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové (NDC-Rénové) (66), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (62), Coopérative pour le développement du Congo (CODECO) (34), Raia Mutomboki (34), Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FDLR-FOCA) (29) and other armed groups (143). One boy was recruited by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to spy on Mai-Mai elements. The incidents occurred in North Kivu (544), South Kivu (117), Ituri (65) and Tanganyika (62). Fifty girls were subjected to sexual violence, and 240 children were used as combatants and 456 in support roles. In addition, the recruitment and use of 1,164 children (747 boys, 417 girls) by armed groups (1,162) (including Kamuina Nsapu (1,047) and Mai-Mai Mazembe (30)) and the armed forces (2) were verified at a later date.

49. In addition, 1,313 children (1,135 boys, 178 girls) were recruited in previous years and used, until their separation in 2020, by 36 armed groups: Mai-Mai Mazembe (296), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (187), Nyatura (185), Kamuina Nsapu (126), NDC-Rénové (93), Raia Mutomboki (67) and other armed groups (357). Two boys were used by the armed forces as servants for one year. The incidents occurred in North Kivu (764), Tanganyika (188), the greater Kasai region (177), South Kivu (119) and Ituri (65). A total of 592 children were used as combatants. Some children escaped and others were released following United Nations advocacy or through demobilization processes.

50. The United Nations verified the detention of 85 children (72 boys, 13 girls), by the armed forces (80) and the Congolese National Police (5) for alleged association with armed groups. Most (76) were released upon advocacy by the United Nations following detention periods of up to three years.

51. The United Nations verified the killing (220) and maiming (143) of 363 children (217 boys, 146 girls), mostly attributed to armed groups (294): CODECO (140), NDC-Rénové (27), the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) (26), Nyatura (23), unidentified Mai-Mai groups (16), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (14) and other armed groups (48). Government forces were responsible for 59 child casualties (armed forces (43) and the national police (16)), while another 10 casualties resulted from landmines and explosive remnants of war. The main causes were ethnically motivated raids on villages (146); crossfire between armed groups and the armed forces (25); and armed group clashes (23). A spike in casualties occurred during ethnic violence in Ituri and of armed groups fighting in North Kivu, with 83 per cent of all casualties verified in these two provinces. In addition, the killing (18) and maiming (32) of 50 children (34 boys, 16 girls) mainly by armed groups (46), including CODECO (15), Nyaturya (8) and Bana Mura (6), and by the armed forces (4) were verified at a later date.

52. The United Nations verified that 396 girls and 2 boys were subjected to sexual violence by armed groups (261) (Nyatura (50), NDC-Rénové (40), CODECO (31), Mai-Mai Mazembe (20), other groups (120)) and by government forces (137) (armed forces (92), national police (41), Agence nationale de renseignements (4)). Violations occurred in North Kivu (192), the greater Kasai region (58), Ituri (50) and other provinces (98) and involved rape (245), gang rape (77), forced marriage (46) and sexual slavery (23). Of the government elements, 45 suspects were arrested and 4 were convicted. Two armed group members were also arrested. In addition, sexual violence against 170 children (2 boys, 168 girls) by armed groups (148), including Kamuina Nsapu (67), Mai-Mai Mazembe (18) and Nyatura (7), and by State actors (22), namely the armed forces (12), the national police (9) and the Agence nationale de renseignements (1) was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

53. The United Nations verified 145 attacks on schools (101) and hospitals (44) and on protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals in Ituri (83), North Kivu (33), South Kivu (15) and other provinces (14), mostly attributed to armed groups (128): CODECO (66), NDC-Rénové (14), Twigwaneho (14), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (10) and other groups (24). Seventeen attacks were attributed to the armed forces. CODECO deliberately destroyed 53 schools during attacks in Ituri. In addition, 28 attacks on schools (22) and hospitals (6) by Twigwaneho (26), Bana Mura (1) and the armed forces (1) were verified at a later date.

54. Five schools were used by the armed forces in North Kivu (4) and Tanganyika (1) for up to four months for military operations and subsequently vacated.

55. There were 460 children (307 boys, 153 girls) abducted by Mai-Mai Mazembe (106), Nyatura (53), ADF (48), CODECO (42), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (38), NDC-Rénové (31) and other groups (135). Seven girls were abducted by government forces (armed forces (4), national police (2), Agence nationale de renseignements

(1)). Children were abducted for purposes of recruitment (273), sexual violence (88) and ransom (4) and for unknown reasons (95). Most abductions occurred in North Kivu (270), Ituri (94) and South Kivu (42). Separately, 52 children abducted in 2017 by the Bana Mura in Kasai province were returned to their families following United Nations advocacy. In addition, the abduction of 374 children (296 boys, 78 girls) by armed groups (370), including Mai-Mai Mazembe (71), Nyatura (55), Bana Mura (52) and Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (48), and by State forces, namely the armed forces (3) and the national police (1), were verified at a later date.

56. Three incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified and attributed to the armed forces, Mai-Mai Yakotumba and Mai-Mai Mazembe (1 each).

Developments and concerns

57. The armed forces continued to screen new recruits, separating 53 children before enrolment. I commend the Government for its continuing efforts to sustainably prevent child recruitment and use by its forces. I call upon the Government to durably address sexual violence against children, by implementing the 2012 action plan and prioritizing access to services for survivors.

58. I welcome the conviction of the former leader of Nduma défense du Congo, Ntabo Ntaberi Sheka, for war crimes, including child recruitment and use. The conviction of 17 soldiers of the armed forces and 11 police officers for the rape of children and the trials of suspected child recruiters are positive developments. I commend the Government for its efforts to hold perpetrators of grave violations accountable and urge them to continue to do so.

59. The signature of seven new commitments by commanders to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations, following United Nations engagement, is encouraging. As a result of similar commitments, 838 children were released in 2020. I encourage remaining armed groups to engage with the United Nations to end and prevent grave violations against children.

60. The separation of 2,101 children is a positive development. I urge the Government to facilitate access of child protection actors to demobilization sites to separate children. I call upon the Government to approve, fund and implement a national community-based disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. I appeal to the donor community to support the reintegration of children formerly associated with parties to conflict.

61. Despite a noted decrease, I am gravely concerned by the persistent prevalence of violations, particularly the recruitment and use, abduction and sexual violence against children, and the increased attacks on schools. I call upon all parties to conflict to end and prevent grave violations against children.

62. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (S/2020/1030).

Iraq

63. The United Nations verified 85 grave violations against 82 children (62 boys, 19 girls, 1 sex unknown) that occurred during the reporting period. In addition, 32 grave violations against 22 children (8 boys, 14 girls) that occurred in the previous reporting period were verified at a later date.

64. The recruitment and use of one boy by the Popular Mobilization Forces (PMF) was verified. The boy was recruited in 2018, used, and killed in a military operation in May 2020. In addition, the recruitment and use of a boy by Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) in 2015 was verified at a later date.

65. As at 31 December, 1,114 children (1,071 boys, 43 girls) remained in detention on national security-related charges, including for their actual or alleged association with armed groups, primarily ISIL.

66. A total of 79 children (61 boys, 17 girls, 1 sex unknown) were killed (24) and maimed (55) by ISIL (36), Operation Claw<sup>9</sup> (2), Companions of the Cave<sup>10</sup> (1) and unidentified perpetrators (40). Some 65 incidents took place in areas previously under ISIL control, and 25 casualties were caused by indirect attacks or crossfire, 17 by improvised explosive devices and 17 by explosive remnants of war. In addition, the killing (4) and maiming (2) of six children (3 boys, 3 girls) that took place in 2016 and 2017 in Mosul (Ninawa) was verified at a later date and attributed to ISIL (3) and the international counter-ISIL coalition (3).

67. Incidents of rape and other forms of sexual violence against nine girls by ISIL that took place in 2014 were verified at a later date.

68. The United Nations verified an Operation Claw air strike in Sulaymaniyah Governorate that hit a health centre. A total of 27 instances of military use of schools by the Iraqi police (22), the Peshmerga (1) and the Iraqi Army (4) were verified.

69. The United Nations verified the abduction of three children (1 boy, 2 girls) by ISIL. In addition, the abduction of 16 children (5 boys, 11 girls) attributed to ISIL that occurred between 2014 and 2016 was verified at a later date.

70. One incident of denial of humanitarian access was verified in 2020, claimed by the Guardians of Blood.

Developments and concerns

71. I welcome the decrease in cases of recruitment and use of children attributed to PMF and the ongoing engagement between the Government and the United Nations to develop an action plan to prevent the recruitment and use of children by PMF. I urge the Government to speedily agree to and sign the action plan. I encourage the Interministerial Committee on Monitoring and Reporting on Grave Child Rights Violations to resume consultations with the United Nations.

72. I remain deeply concerned at the ongoing killing and maiming of children by landmines and explosive remnants of war. I urge the Government to implement international legal instruments on landmines and explosive remnants of war and to promote mine clearance and mine risk education, including prior to any movement by internally displaced persons back to contaminated areas.

73. I remain concerned about the situation of children detained on national security-related charges, including for their alleged association with armed groups, and recall that children should be treated primarily as victims and in line with international juvenile justice standards. The detention of children should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, with respect for due process. The United Nations is committed to supporting the Government in the reintegration of children actually or allegedly associated with parties to conflict. I welcome the reintegration of 355 children (259 boys, 96 girls) through United Nations-supported programmes, in coordination with the Government, and urge the Government to develop and implement a national reintegration programme for children affected by armed conflict.

74. I commend the Government for its efforts to release 194 children (95 girls) allegedly affiliated with ISIL and to facilitate their return to their countries of origin.

I call upon all countries concerned to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of their children, in line with the principle of non-refoulement, with respect for family unity and the best interests of the children, and in accordance with international law.

Israel and the State of Palestine<sup>11</sup>

75. The United Nations verified 1,031 grave violations against 340 Palestinian and 3 Israeli children (327 boys, 13 girls) in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and Israel. In addition, 96 grave violations against 96 children (92 boys, 4 girls) which occurred in previous years were verified at later date.

76. The United Nations verified the recruitment of two Palestinian boys by Hamas' al-Qassam Brigades in Gaza.

77. The United Nations verified the detention of 361 Palestinian children for alleged security offences by Israeli forces in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (361, including 283 in East Jerusalem). Eighty-seven children reported ill-treatment and breaches of due process by Israeli forces while in detention, with 83 per cent reporting physical violence.

78. Twelve children (11 Palestinian boys, 1 Israeli boy) were killed in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (9), in Gaza (2) and in Israel (1) by Israeli forces (8), Palestinian security forces (1), Hamas' al-Qassam Brigades (1), unidentified perpetrator (1) and explosive remnants of war (1). Of the eight Palestinian children killed in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, seven were killed by Israeli forces by live ammunition (6) and physical assault during arrest (1), during law enforcement operations (3), demonstrations and confrontations involving stone throwing (2) and Molotov cocktails (1), and a shooting attack against Israeli forces (1). The child killed by Palestinian security forces was shot with live ammunition in a law enforcement operation. One Israeli boy was killed in the occupied West Bank while being pursued by Israeli police after allegedly throwing stones at Palestinians.

79. A total of 326 children (324 Palestinian children, 2 Israeli children; 313 boys, 13 girls) were maimed<sup>12</sup> in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (304), and in Gaza (22) by Israeli forces (294), Israeli settlers (20), Palestinian armed groups (2) and unidentified Palestinian perpetrators (2) and explosive remnants of war (8). The main causes of maiming of children by Israeli forces were tear gas inhalation (170), rubber-coated metal bullets and sponge-tipped bullets (70) and live ammunition (34). Eight children were maimed by Israeli forces during demonstrations at the Israel-Gaza perimeter fence. In Gaza, six Palestinian children were maimed during air strikes by Israeli forces on Gaza, and two Palestinian boys were maimed by a rocket fired by a Palestinian armed group landing near their home. Separately, the maiming of another 96 children (92 boys, 4 girls) by Israeli forces that occurred during demonstrations in Gaza in 2018 and 2019 was verified at a later date. Two Israeli children were maimed in stone-throwing incidents attributed to Palestinian perpetrators.

80. The United Nations verified 30 attacks on schools (11) and hospitals (19), including on protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, attributed to Israeli forces (26) and Israeli settlers (4) in Gaza (4) and the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (26). Incidents involved air strikes (4), settler attacks (1), attacks on medical personnel (18) and threats against teachers or students (7). The United Nations verified one incident of a school being used for military purposes in Gaza by unidentified perpetrators. Separately, 94 other interferences with health (5) or education (89) by Israeli forces (90), affecting the education of more than 6,900 Palestinian children, and Fatah's Tanzim (4) were verified in the occupied West Bank. Most verified interferences involved Israeli force closures or denial of teachers' and students' access through checkpoints (39), Israeli forces firing tear gas or other weapons in and around schools (22), or threats of demolition (9). Self-identified members of Fatah's Tanzim dismissed students and teachers from four schools owing to demonstrations.

81. The denial of humanitarian access by Israeli forces (661) was verified in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in Gaza. Two incidents occurred in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, through the delay and/or prevention by the Israeli forces of medical care being provided to fatally injured children. The suspension of coordination between the authorities of the State of Palestine and Israel in response to the plans by Israel to annex parts of the occupied West Bank continued to pose additional obstacles to children in need of medical treatment in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Israel. Some 28 per cent of permit applications to Israeli authorities for children to exit through the Erez crossing to access specialized medical treatment outside Gaza were delayed and 3 per cent were denied, affecting 659 children (397 boys, 262 girls). Three Palestinian children died while waiting for permission to access medical care outside Gaza.

Developments and concerns

82. I welcome the collaboration extended by the Israeli and Palestinian parties to my Special Representative following my request in 2019 to further examine the cases of maiming and injuries caused by Israeli forces and of the recruitment and use of children by armed groups (see A/73/907-S/2019/509), reiterated in June 2020 (see A/74/845-S/2020/525). I take note of the findings resulting from these consultations, which I have shared with the authorities of Israel and the State of Palestine. I welcome that both authorities reported that corrective measures had been taken and existing protection frameworks had been strengthened and that both expressed commitment to continuing to engage to better protect children. I note that investigations by Israeli authorities are ongoing and call for these investigations to follow international standards. My Special Representative will continue to engage with all parties to protect children, and I encourage the Israeli and Palestinian authorities to reinforce their dialogue with the United Nations at the country level, in particular in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

83. While I note a decrease in grave violations in 2020, I remain deeply concerned by the number of children killed and maimed, including through the use of live ammunition during law enforcement operations, and I urge Israel to continue to investigate each case where live ammunition was used, as required by procedure, and urge the authorities to pursue accountability for violations against children.

84. I urge the Israeli authorities to review and strengthen measures to prevent any excessive use of force, to ensure that force be used only when necessary and to minimize the effects of its forces' operations on children and ensure accountability in all cases involving the killing and maiming of children. I further call upon Israel to better protect schools as places of learning. Taking note of the decrease in detentions, I reiterate my call upon Israel to uphold international juvenile justice standards, including use of detention as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, and end the administrative detention of children, prevent all forms of ill-treatment in detention, and halt any attempted recruitment of detained children as informants. Of concern are continued allegations of attempts to recruit detained Palestinian children as informants.

85. I am also concerned by the two incidents of children recruited by al-Qassam Brigades. I call upon al-Qassam Brigades to cease the recruitment and use of children and to abide by its domestic and international legal obligations. I urge all Palestinian armed groups to protect children, including by preventing them from being exposed to the risk of violence or by abstaining from instrumentalizing them for political purposes.

86. I call upon all parties to engage with the United Nations, including at the country level, to end and prevent grave violations against children and to better protect children and respect international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

Lebanon

87. The United Nations verified 16 grave violations against 16 children (14 boys, 2 girls).

88. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of nine children (8 boys, 1 girl) by Jund Ansar Allah<sup>13</sup> (3), unidentified perpetrators (2), Fath al-Islam (2) and ISIL (2). Three children were used as combatants.

89. Children continued to be arrested and prosecuted under military jurisdiction on national security-related charges, including allegations of terrorism, with the verified detention of two boys. As at December 2020, an additional three boys were detained.

90. Seven children (6 boys, 1 girl) were killed (6) and maimed (1) by unidentified perpetrators.

Developments and concerns

91. I reiterate my call upon the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

92. I reiterate my call upon armed groups to immediately cease the recruitment and use of children.

93. I am concerned about the continued detention of children for alleged association with armed groups, including those designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, and urge the Government to treat children associated with armed groups primarily as victims, detain them only as a measure of last resort for the shortest appropriate period of time and refer them to reintegration programmes.

Libya

94. The United Nations verified 166 grave violations against 117 children (94 boys, 23 girls).

95. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of nine boys by the Libyan National Army (LNA) and affiliated forces (3), forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (3) and Syrian armed opposition groups formerly known as the Free Syrian Army (Mu'tasim and Samarqand brigades) (3), which trafficked them from the Syrian Arab Republic to Libya.

96. The United Nations verified the detention of one boy by LNA and affiliated forces, and of 67 children and their mothers, from several nationalities, by the Judicial Police for the mothers alleged association with ISIL, in Judaydah prison in Tripoli. As at December, 12 children had been repatriated to their countries of origin.

97. The verified killing (31) and maiming (65) of 96 children (79 boys, 17 girls) was attributed to LNA and affiliated forces (71), forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (8) and unidentified perpetrators (17), and caused by shelling (50), air strikes (20) or explosive remnants of war (26).

98. Five verified cases of sexual violence (3 boys, 2 girls) were attributed to forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (4) and unidentified perpetrators (1).

99. A total of 48 verified attacks on schools (22) and hospitals (26) were attributed to LNA and affiliated forces (16), forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (1) and unidentified perpetrators (31), including crossfire between LNA-affiliated groups and forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (8).

100. The verified abduction of seven children (3 boys, 4 girls) was attributed to LNA and affiliated forces (Ninth Brigade, also known as Al-Kaniyat) (3), forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (3) and unidentified perpetrators (1).

101. One verified denial of humanitarian access was attributed to forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord.

Developments and concerns

102. I welcome the efforts of the Government to mitigate the effect of landmines and explosive remnants of war, and I call upon Libya to become a party to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (Ottawa Convention) and the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (Protocol V). I call upon the Government to enforce laws on weapons and ammunition and to reinforce the implementation of the ceasefire agreement with emphasis on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of children.

103. I am concerned about the prevalence of killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law. I call upon parties to cease the recruitment and use of children and their trafficking across borders from the Syrian Arab Republic to Libya. I am concerned over the risk of sexual violence against children.

104. I welcome the initial efforts by the Government to facilitate the return of women and children allegedly associated with ISIL in Libya and call upon all countries concerned to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of these children, in line with international law principles, including the principle of non-refoulement and with respect for the best interests of the child.

105. I urge the Government to engage with my Special Representative and the United Nations to develop and adopt measures to end and prevent violations against children, and to ensure that child protection provisions are included in ceasefire and peace processes. I reiterate my concern about the abuse of refugee and migrant children, including through trafficking in persons, the deprivation of liberty, torture and sexual violence. I call upon the Government to take immediate action to end child detention and to pursue alternatives to detention and facilitate United Nations and other humanitarian agencies access to detention centres. The denial of humanitarian access to children, including those in detention, is deeply concerning.

Mali

106. The United Nations verified 809 grave violations against 535 children (394 boys, 135 girls, 6 sex unknown) which occurred during the reporting period. In addition, 204 grave violations against 183 children (145 boys, 38 girls) which occurred in previous years were verified at a later date.

107. Some 284 children (221 boys, 63 girls) were recruited and used by the Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad (CMA) (141), including Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad (MNLA) (70), Haut Conseil pour l'unité de l'Azawad (HCUA) (45) and Mouvement arabe de l'Azawad (MAA) (26); Platform (70), including Ganda Lassal Izo (31), Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés (GATIA) (15), Ganda Koy (15) and Mouvement pour le Salut de l'Azawad (MSA) (9); Dan Nan Ambassagou (DNA) (19), Front de libération du Macina (FLM) (17), unidentified perpetrators (13), Mouvement pour l'unicité et le jihad en Afrique de l'Ouest (MUJAO) (1) and the Malian armed forces (23). Most children were recruited in the Kidal (112) and Gao (74) regions. Children were used in combat roles (120) and support roles and were subjected to sexual violence. In addition, the recruitment and use of 170 children (137 boys, 33 girls) which occurred in previous years was verified at a later date. Perpetrators were Platform (84) (GATIA (38), Ganda Koy (18) and other Platform members (28)), CMA (44) (MNLA (31) and other CMA members (13)) and other armed groups (42).

108. Eleven boys were arrested by the Malian Defence and Security Forces (10) and Operation Barkhane (1)<sup>14</sup> for alleged association with armed groups. They were released after periods ranging from 1 to 21 days, except for one boy held by the national authorities for five months. Of the 17 children held in government detention since 2019, 15 remained detained as at December 2020.

109. A total of 173 children (115 boys, 52 girls, 6 sex unknown) were killed (87) and maimed (86), mostly in the Mopti region (134), as a result of attacks on villages, crossfire, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war. The perpetrators were unidentified (116), Fulani armed elements (19), Dogon armed elements (8), Dozo traditional hunters (7), Dan Nan Ambassagou (DNA) (6), Jama'a Nusrat ul-Islam wa al-Muslimin (JNIM) (5), joint JNIM/Islamic State in the Greater Sahara (ISGS) (2), joint Dozo traditional hunters/FLM (1) and ISGS (1). Seven child casualties were attributed to FDSM and the maiming of a boy to Operation Barkhane. In addition, the killing (5) and maiming (2) of seven children by unidentified perpetrators (6) and DNA (1) in previous years was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

110. Sexual violence affected 12 girls, attributed to unidentified perpetrators (10) and the Malian armed forces (2). In addition, sexual violence against 24 girls by GATIA (10), MNLA (9) the Malian armed forces (3) and MSA (2) which occurred in previous years was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

111. A total of 61 attacks on schools (36) and hospitals (25) were verified and attributed to unidentified perpetrators (57) and to JNIM, ISGS, DNA and the Malian armed forces (1 each). In addition, one attack on medical personnel by unidentified perpetrators in 2019 was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

112. Four schools were used for military purposes by unidentified perpetrators (3) and Dozo traditional hunters (1) in the Mopti region.

113. A total of 80 children (48 boys, 32 girls) were abducted by unidentified perpetrators (63), DNA (6), Dogon armed elements (5), Dozo traditional hunters (4) and Fulani armed elements and Malian Defence and Security Forces (1 each) for sexual violence (8), retaliation (3) and unknown purposes (65). Four children were killed. The abduction of two boys by Dozo traditional hunters (1) and FLM (1) which occurred in previous years was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

114. The United Nations verified 199 incidents of denial of humanitarian access by unidentified perpetrators, mostly in the Mopti (60), Gao (39) and Ménaka (35) regions.

Developments and concerns

115. I welcome the Government's issuance of orders to military commanders prohibiting the use of children under 15 and curbing the presence of children around military barracks. I note the release in 2020 of 23 children recruited and used by the Malian armed forces. I call upon the Government to take measures to end and prevent sexual violence against children, to continue reinforcing systems to prevent child recruitment and use by armed forces, and to swiftly finalize the revision of the Child Protection Code, criminalizing the recruitment and use of children, including those aged 15 to 17, as well as to release children detained for actual or alleged association with armed groups.

116. I welcome advances in the implementation of the Safe Schools Declaration, including on a draft law on the protection of education from attacks, the swift adoption and implementation of which I encourage.

117. I am alarmed by the elevated numbers of grave violations against children, particularly recruitment and use, killing and maiming, abduction, attacks on schools and hospitals, and denials of humanitarian access. I urge all parties to immediately prevent and put an end to violations and call upon armed groups to respect the protocol on the release and transfer of children associated with parties signed in 2013. I am gravely concerned by the continued recruitment and use of children by CMA and Platform. I call upon CMA to continue implementing its 2017 action plan, and I call upon Platform to adopt and swiftly implement an action plan addressing child recruitment and use.

118. I reiterate my recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Mali (S/2020/1105).

Myanmar

119. The United Nations verified 1,039 grave violations against 1,012 children (920 boys, 88 girls, 4 sex unknown). In addition, two grave violations against two girls which occurred in previous years were verified at a later date.

120. The recruitment and use of 790 children (778 boys, 12 girls), mainly in Rakhine (698) and Kachin (49) States, was attributed to the Tatmadaw Kyi (726), the Kachin Independence Army (KIA) (62) and the Arakan Army (AA) (2). Of those attributed to the Tatmadaw Kyi, 7 children were recruited and released in 2020, 22 children were recruited between 2010 and 2019 and were still being used in 2020, 697 children were used in Rakhine (689) and Shan (1) States, including as guides or porters, for camp maintenance or agricultural work, or in unsafe mine clearance. With regard to cases attributed to armed groups, 36 children (27 boys, 9 girls) were released by KIA, including 26 children following engagement between KIA and the United Nations.

121. The detention of 8 children (7 boys, 1 girl) for up to 10 months by the Tatmadaw Kyi, for alleged association with AA was verified in Rakhine State. Subsequently, the children were released.

122. The killing (56) and maiming (160) of 216 children (138 boys, 74 girls, 4 sex unknown) was verified and attributed to unidentified perpetrators (152), including from crossfire between the Tatmadaw Kyi and armed groups (20), Tatmadaw Kyi (62), Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) (1) and KIA (1). Child casualties occurred in Rakhine (155), Chin (29), Shan (24), Kayin (5) and Kachin (3) States. Most resulted from landmines and explosive remnants of war (74), shelling (62), air strikes (33) and crossfire (23).

123. The rape of one girl by SSA in Shan State was verified. In addition, the rape of two girls by the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) (1) and the Tatmadaw Kyi (1) that occurred in previous years was verified by the United Nations.

124. The United Nations verified 11 attacks on schools (10) and hospitals (1) attributed to the Tatmadaw Kyi (6) and unidentified perpetrators (5), including resulting from crossfire between the Tatmadaw Kyi and AA (2) in Rakhine (9) and Chin (2) States.

125. The United Nations verified the military use of 30 schools and 1 hospital by the Tatmadaw Kyi in Rakhine (30) and Shan (1) States. Facilities were vacated after one day to a month.

126. The abduction of 17 children (16 boys, 1 girl) by the Tatmadaw Kyi (10), Shan State Army (SSA) (3), Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) (2), AA (1) and KIA (1) in Rakhine (13), Shan (3) and Kachin (1) States was verified. Children abducted by the Tatmadaw Kyi were used, including as human shields (7) and guides (2). All children were released, except one child whose whereabouts remain unknown.

127. Humanitarian access in Rakhine and Shan States deteriorated, despite an informal ceasefire between the Tatmadaw Kyi and AA in Rakhine State in November and December. Movement restrictions in areas affected by the Tatmadaw Kyi-AA conflict in seven townships prevented over 100,000 people from accessing assistance. Continued onerous and unpredictable travel authorization requirements continued, particularly in Kachin, northern Shan and Rakhine States.

Developments and concerns

128. I note the ratification by the Government of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No.138) in June 2020 and the establishment of a national complaint mechanism to eliminate forced labour, prohibiting the recruitment and use of children in February 2020. I call upon all parties to respect international standards on impartiality, victim protection and the best interests of the child in the implementation of these standards.

129. I commend the November 2020 signature of a joint action plan between the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army and the United Nations to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children, the first action plan with an armed group in Myanmar. I am encouraged by the engagement between KIA and the United Nations on recruitment and use resulting in the release of 26 children. I encourage other armed groups to continue to engage with the United Nations to end and prevent grave violations against children.

130. I condemn all grave violations committed against children by all parties to conflict, and reiterate my call for the accountability of perpetrators.

131. I call upon the Tatmadaw Kyi to continue implementing the joint action plan on non-recruitment of children signed in 2012. I am gravely concerned and alarmed by the continued use of children by the Tatmadaw Kyi, predominantly in Rakhine State. I am disappointed at the failure of the Tatmadaw Kyi to immediately cease the use of children and again urge the Tatmadaw Kyi to cease this practice and to comply with the Joint Action Plan by swiftly implementing its road map, in line with the Child Rights Law. While I note the issuance of four military directives on the use of children and the development of a road map by the Tatmadaw Kyi and the United Nations to end and prevent the use of children, I am concerned that these directives have not led to a significant decrease in the use of children during 2020. I urge the release of all children within the framework of the Joint Action Plan, and I welcome the release of 32 children and young men by the Tatmadaw Kyi in 2020. I urge the immediate clearance of 156 pending cases of suspected minors.

132. I am gravely concerned by the increase in the killing and maiming of children, including by landmines, explosive remnants of war and shelling, and the continuous attacks on schools and their use for military purposes. I reiterate my call to the Tatmadaw Kyi to sign a joint action plan with the United Nations to end and prevent sexual violence and the killing and maiming of children. I call upon Myanmar to become a party to the Ottawa Convention and to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration.

133. I am worried by persistent restrictions to humanitarian access and call upon all parties to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access to United Nations and child protection actors.

134. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Myanmar (S/2020/1243), pending a review of the situation in 2021 owing to the brutal violence taking place in Myanmar since February 2021.

Somalia

135. The United Nations verified 4,714 grave violations against 3,810 children (3,038 boys, 772 girls).

136. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 1,716 children (1,655 boys, 61 girls) by Al-Shabaab (1,407); government security forces, including the Somali Police Force (101), the Somali National Army (62) and the National Intelligence and Security Agency (5); regional forces, including Jubaland forces (36), Galmudug forces (31), Puntland forces (21), Jubaland police (3), Puntland police (2) and Galmudug police (1); and clan militia (47). Children were used in support roles (255) or in combat (165).

137. A total of 212 children (211 boys, 1 girl) were detained for alleged association with armed groups by the Somali Police Force (127), the Somali National Army (40), Jubaland forces (27), Puntland forces (8), Galmudug forces (1), Jubaland police (4), Galmudug police (3) and Puntland police (2). Some 128 children were released, whereas 83 remained in detention and 1 child is not accounted for.

138. The killing (206) and maiming (881) of 1,087 children (825 boys, 262 girls) was attributed to Al-Shabaab (329), government security forces (including the Somali National Army (70), the Somali Police Force (56) and the National Intelligence and Security Agency (1)) and regional forces (including Puntland forces (28), Jubaland forces (14), Galmudug forces (1), Puntland police (24), Jubaland police (1), Galmudug police (1), and Southwest forces (8)). Violations were also attributed to clan militia (90), the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) (8), the Ethiopian National Defence Forces (1) and unidentified perpetrators (455) (including from air strikes (4)). The four main causes of child casualties were crossfire between armed forces and groups (318), gunshots (183), improvised explosive devices (173) and physical assault (119). The majority of casualties occurred in Banaadir/Mogadishu (236), Shabelle Hoose (171) and Juba Hoose (155).

139. Some 406 children (6 boys, 400 girls) were raped and were victims of other forms of sexual violence by government security forces, including the Somali National Army (21) and the Somali Police Force (19), and regional forces, including Jubaland forces (8), Puntland forces (4), Jubaland police (2) and Puntland police (2).

Al-Shabaab (60), clan militia (55) and unidentified armed elements (235) were responsible for the remaining incidents. The violations included rape (272), attempted rape (59), forced marriage (44), sexual harassment (20) and sexual assault (11).

140. The United Nations verified 58 attacks on schools (53) and hospitals (5), attributed to Al-Shabaab (55), the Somali Police Force (1), and clan militia (2).

141. A total of 1,430 children (1,348 boys, 82 girls) were abducted by Al-Shabaab (1,413), clan militia (9), unidentified perpetrators (7) and the Westland armed group (1). Children were abducted for recruitment and use (868), alleged association with armed forces (174) and non-compliance with Al-Shabaab-imposed codes (93). Some 136 children were released 52 escaped and 42 were rescued, whereas 1,168 remained held, 6 were killed and 26 are unaccounted for.

142. The United Nations verified 17 incidents of denial of humanitarian access by Al-Shabaab (12), government security forces, including the Somali National Army (2) and the Somali Police Force (1), clan militia (1) and unidentified perpetrators (1).

Developments and concerns

143. I reiterate my call upon the Government to expedite the implementation of the 2012 action plans on ending and preventing the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children and of the 2019 road map, including at the federal member states level. While I recognize the steps taken by the Government in implementing the action plans, I am concerned at the increase in violations attributed to the Somali Police Force and the federal member states forces and especially urge that implementation be expedited, including at the federal member states level.

144. I call upon the Government to provide more information on the integration of Ahl al Sunna wal-Jama'a into the Somali Federal Defence and Police Forces to enable the United Nations to conduct a screening.

145. I am seriously concerned at the staggering numbers of grave violations by all parties to conflict, in particular the recruitment and use, killing and maiming, and abduction of children. I am concerned at the rising levels of sexual violence against children, in particular the cases attributed to the Somali Federal Defence and Police Forces. I urge the Government to immediately cease this violation and request my Special Representative and the United Nations country task force to engage to secure a rapid development, signature and implementation of an action plan to that effect. I call upon all parties to immediately cease all violations and abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

146. I reiterate my call to the Government to treat children formerly associated with armed groups according to the Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups (the Paris Principles), endorsed by Somalia, and to apply the standard operating procedures for the reception and handover of children separated from armed groups to child protection actors, endorsed in 2014.

147. I urge the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child, to fast-track the endorsement of the child rights bill and to ensure that any sexual violence legislation is in line with human rights commitments and meets regional and international standards. In this regard, I call for the immediate adoption of the 2018 sexual offences bill and urge the endorsement by the Cabinet of the juvenile justice bill and the age verification guidelines.

148. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Somalia (S/2020/174).

South Sudan

149. The United Nations verified 165 grave violations against 154 children (125 boys, 28 girls, 1 sex unknown). In addition, 11 grave violations against children that occurred in 2019 were verified at a later date.

150. A total of 62 children (61 boys, 1 girl) were recruited and used by the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Opposition – pro-Machar (SPLA-IO) (55), the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, including the Taban Deng-allied South Sudan People's Defence Forces (6), and the South Sudan National Police Service (1). Violations occurred in Central Equatoria (31), Unity (17), Western Equatoria (9), Western Bahr el-Ghazal (2), Jonglei, Lakes and Warrap (1 each) states. Children were used as combatants, bodyguards and servants.

151. The killing (22) and maiming (41) of 63 children (53 boys, 9 girls, 1 sex unknown) were verified and attributed to unidentified perpetrators (54), including from explosive remnants of war (47); crossfire between the South Sudan People's Defence Forces and armed Misseriya cattle keepers (5) and between SPLA-IO and forces loyal to General Ochan Puot (2); the National Salvation Front (NAS) (6); and SPLA-IO (3). In addition, the maiming of 11 boys by explosive remnants of war in December 2019 was verified at a later date.

152. Rape and other forms of sexual violence against 17 girls were attributed to SPLA-IO (10), the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (4), NAS (2) and forces loyal to General Ochan (1). Four girls were also abducted, and one girl was also recruited and used.

153. Four attacks on hospitals were verified and attributed to NAS (2) and SPLA-IO (2). Incidents included the looting of facilities. In addition, the military use of 10 schools and 1 hospital by the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (10) and SPLA-IO (1) was verified.

154. A total of 17 children (11 boys, 6 girls) were abducted by NAS (10), SPLA-IO (5) and the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (2), including 4 girls who were abducted and subjected to sexual violence. Thirteen children were released or escaped, and four children are missing.

155. Two incidents of denial of humanitarian access were attributed to unidentified perpetrators.

Developments and concerns

156. I welcome the signature on 7 February 2020 of the Comprehensive Action Plan to End and Prevent All Grave Violations against Children by parties to the Revitalized Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan and the establishment of national and state-level committees. I reiterate my call for the implementation of the Action Plan and call upon the Government to budget for its implementation.

157. I note the decrease in grave violations and the cooperation of parties to conflict with the United Nations, including joint efforts with the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission resulting in the release of 44 children in 2020. I call upon the Commission to engage with NAS to ensure the demobilization and reintegration of associated children, and I underline the need for child-sensitive disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and demining processes and encourage international support in this regard.

158. I remain concerned that parties, including government security forces, continue to perpetrate grave violations against children. I call upon the Government and other parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law. I reiterate my concern over escalating intercommunal violence and am concerned over the increase in violations by NAS. I urge all parties to immediately release children recruited or abducted. I encourage the international community to support gender-sensitive and survivor-centred reintegration and assistance programmes, including for survivors of sexual violence.

159. I urge the Government to remedy the prevalent impunity for grave violations and to hold perpetrators accountable. I encourage the Government to endorse the Paris Principles and the Vancouver Principles on Peacekeeping and the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers and to submit its initial report on the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

160. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in South Sudan (S/2020/1205).

Sudan

Darfur

161. The United Nations verified 292 grave violations against 274 children (143 boys, 131 girls). In addition, 24 violations against 19 children (14 boys, 5 girls) in December 2019 were verified at a later date.

162. Thirteen boys were verified as recruited and used by the Sudan Liberation Movement-Transitional Council (SLM-TC) (12) and the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) (1).

163. Seven children (6 boys, 1 girl) were detained for alleged association with armed groups by the Sudanese Armed Forces and later released.

164. The killing (53) and maiming (120) of 173 children (116 boys, 57 girls) was attributed to government security forces (35) (including the Rapid Support Forces (20), the Sudanese Armed Forces (13) and the Sudan Police Force (2)); the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid (SLA-AW) (33) (including SLA-AW splinter groups (32); and unidentified perpetrators (105). Five children were killed (1) and maimed (4) during crossfire in fighting between SLA-AW splinter groups in Jebel Marra and intercommunal violence in West Darfur. In addition, the killing (7) and maiming (9) of 16 children (14 boys, 2 girls) by the Rapid Support Forces was verified at a later date.

165. Rape and other forms of sexual violence against 57 girls were attributed to government security forces (15) (including the Sudanese Armed Forces (12), the Rapid Support Forces (2) and the Sudan Police Force (1)); SLA-AW (15); and unidentified perpetrators (27). In addition, the rape of and sexual violence against three girls in December 2019, attributed to unidentified perpetrators, were verified at a later date.

166. The United Nations verified 13 attacks on schools (6) and hospitals (7), attributed to the Central Reserve Police (1); SLA-AW (1); and unidentified perpetrators (11). In addition, five attacks on schools by the Rapid Support Forces in December 2019 were verified at a later date.

167. The military use of four schools and two hospitals by the Sudanese Armed Forces (4), the Rapid Support Forces (1) and the Central Reserve Police (1) was verified. Except for one school, all facilities continued to be used as at December 2020. The military use of three schools by government security forces (including the Sudanese Armed Forces (2) and SPF (1)), previously verified, continued in 2020.

168. A total of 31 children (14 boys, 17 girls) were abducted by government security forces (12) (including the Rapid Support Forces (9) and the Sudanese Armed Forces

(3)); SLA-AW (11); and unidentified perpetrators (8). Children were abducted for sexual purposes, recruitment or ransom.

169. Five incidents of denial of humanitarian access were attributed to the Sudanese Armed Forces (4) and Military Intelligence (1).

South Kordofan, Blue Nile and Abyei

170. The United Nations verified 25 grave violations against 19 children (15 boys, 4 girls).

171. The killing (13) and maiming (4) of 17 children (14 boys, 3 girls) was attributed to the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (2), unidentified perpetrators (15), explosive remnants of war (8), stray bullets (1) and intercommunal violence between the Ngok Dinka and Misseriya tribes (6).

172. Six attacks on schools (4) and hospitals (2) attributed to unidentified perpetrators were verified, as was the military use of one school by the Rapid Support Forces.

173. The verified abduction of two children (1 boy, 1 girl) was attributed to Misseriya tribe gunmen.

174. I welcome the signing of the Juba Peace Agreement on 3 October 2020 and the improvement of humanitarian access in South Kordofan and Blue Nile states, while noting that access restrictions hindered monitoring and reporting by the United Nations. I take note of the National Plan for the Protection of Civilians, adopted in 2020.

175. I am concerned about the continuing grave violations, in particular the prevalence of the killing and maiming of children by government security forces and armed groups, and the recruitment drives by signatories to the Juba Peace Agreement. I call upon all parties to immediately cease and prevent all grave violations against children and to release all children from their ranks and hand them over to the Ministry of Labour and Social Development in coordination with the United Nations. I further call upon the Government to refrain from any excessive use of force against children, cease the military use of schools and strengthen accountability for perpetrators of grave violations.

176. I call upon the Government to end all grave violations and to engage with the United Nations on a national prevention plan to prevent all grave violations and sustain the gains of the action plan on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children. I encourage the Government to continue to make use of the National Council for Child Welfare and the Technical Committee for the Protection of Children from Violations. I further call upon SLA-AW, including its factions, to engage with the United Nations to sign an action plan, and upon JEM, the Sudan Liberation Army-Minni Minawi and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North Abdelaziz al-Hilu and Malik Agar factions to recommit to their existing action plans with the United Nations through road maps for implementation. I further urge the transitional Government and armed groups to agree upon handover protocols for children associated with them.

177. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan (S/2020/614).

Syrian Arab Republic

178. The United Nations verified 2,388 grave violations against 2,250 children (1,618 boys, 419 girls, 213 sex unknown). In addition, 51 grave violations against 51 children (39 boys, 10 girls, 2 sex unknown) that occurred in previous years were verified at a later date.

179. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 813 children (777 boys, 36 girls) by Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (390); Syrian armed opposition groups formerly known as the Free Syrian Army (FSA) (170); the Kurdish People's Protection Units and Women's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) (119) under the umbrella of the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF); pro-government militia (42); Ahrar al-Sham (31), Nur al-Din al-Zanki (3) and Army of Islam (Jaysh al-Islam) (3), all nominally operating under the umbrella of the opposition Syrian National Army (SNA) since October 2019; the Patriotic Revolutionary Youth Movement (YDG-H) (30); the Internal Security Forces (13); Hurras al-Din (6); ISIL (4); and Syrian government forces (2). Cases were verified mainly in Idlib (477) and Aleppo (119). Of those, 99 per cent (805) were used in combat. In addition, the recruitment and use of 24 children (20 boys, 4 girls) by Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (7), Syrian armed opposition groups formerly known as FSA (6), YPG/YPJ (8), ISIL, pro-government militia and the Kurdish Revolutionary Youth (1 each) were verified at a later date.

180. The deprivation of liberty of 870 children (642 boys, 2 girls, 226 sex unknown) was verified and attributed to SDF (777), the Internal Security Forces (91) and the Syrian government forces (2) in Hasakah (868), Damascus (1) and Dayr al-Zawr (1). In addition, over 64,000 women and children with suspected family ties to ISIL and from an estimated 60 countries of origin continued to be held in the Hawl and Rawj camps in the north-eastern Syrian Arab Republic at the end of 2020.

181. The United Nations verified the killing (512) and maiming (699) of 1,211 children (765 boys, 233 girls, 213 sex unknown) attributed to Syrian government and pro-government forces (568) (including government and pro-government air forces (465)); SDF (37); Syrian armed opposition groups formerly known as FSA (26); ISIL (22); joint operations of Syrian armed opposition groups and Turkish armed forces (10); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (7); and unidentified perpetrators (541). Casualties resulted mainly from air strikes (472); explosive remnants of war (288); improvised explosive device attacks (231); and shelling (139). Most occurred in Idlib (496) and Aleppo (359). The first quarter of 2020 witnessed a spike in child casualties in the north-west. As of March 2020, attacks using explosive remnants of war and improvised explosive devices became the primary cause of child casualties. In addition, the killing (6) and maiming (12) of 18 children (15 boys, 3 girls) by pro-government air forces (11) and unidentified perpetrators (7) were verified at a later date.

182. Seven children (2 boys; 5 girls) were subjected to sexual violence by ISIL (4) and Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (3). In addition, sexual violence committed by ISIL affecting one girl was verified at a later date.

183. The United Nations verified 90 attacks on schools (61) and hospitals (29), including on protected personnel, attributed to Syrian government and pro-government forces (77), including government and pro-government air forces (61), unidentified perpetrators (7), SDF (4), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1) and ISIL (1). Most attacks occurred in Idlib and were conducted by air strikes (62) and shelling (17).

184. The military use of 30 schools and 4 medical facilities was verified and attributed to SDF (15), Syrian armed opposition groups (10), Syrian government forces (6) and Turkish armed forces (3).<sup>15</sup> In addition, the military use of five schools by YPG/YPJ was verified at a later date.

185. The United Nations verified the abduction of 219 children (74 boys, 145 girls) by Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (211), ISIL (4), YPG and YPJ (2), Syrian government forces (1) and Syrian armed opposition groups formerly known as FSA (1). Only 10 children were released or escaped. In addition, the abduction of eight children (6 boys, 2 girls) by YPG/YPJ (6), ISIL (1) and unidentified perpetrators (1) was verified at a later date.

<sup>15</sup> My Special Representative was informed by the Government of Turkey that it had repaired and made 426 schools operational in the Ra's al-Ayn and Tall Abyad area, which provided education for approximately 45,000 students.

186. There were 48 denials of humanitarian access verified and attributed to Syrian government and pro-government forces (9), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (9), joint operations of Syrian armed opposition groups and Turkish armed forces (8), the self-administration in the northern and eastern parts of the country (4), Syrian armed opposition groups formerly known as FSA (4); SDF (2); and unidentified perpetrators (12). Incidents included attacks (24), interference (14) and attacks on or disruption of water facilities (10).

Developments and concerns

187. I note the dialogue between the Government and the United Nations on humanitarian and child protection issues, including on access to education and education curricula in areas outside of government control, and the situation of foreign and Iraqi women and children in the Hawl and Rawj camps. I note the vacating of 11 schools by the Government. I call upon the Government to engage with the United Nations and with my Special Representative to strengthen the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including through the signature of a joint action plan to prevent violations for which the Government is listed.

188. I note the progress in the implementation of the June 2019 action plan signed by SDF that resulted in the disengagement of 150 children from SDF ranks and the screening out of 908 children. SDF established an age assessment committee. A child protection committee and a "child protection office" were created to resolve complaints regarding incidents of recruitment. In December 2020, SDF and the United Nations agreed to a road map to accelerate implementation of the action plan. The former issued a military order to prohibit military use of schools and vacated 18 schools.

189. I note that SNA issued a statement prohibiting recruitment under the age of 18 by its forces, including accountability measures. I encourage armed groups, including those operating under the SNA umbrella, to engage with the United Nations to adopt action plans to end and prevent grave violations against children.

190. I am appalled by the persistent high levels of all violations against children in the Syrian Arab Republic by all parties to the conflict, particularly the continued high numbers of recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals, and related gaps in accountability. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

191. I remain alarmed by the deprivation of liberty of children for their alleged association with parties to conflict. I welcome the access to them provided to child protection actors by SDF and call upon other parties in the Syrian Arab Republic to also facilitate United Nations access to children deprived of liberty. I reiterate my call to treat them primarily as victims, and that deprivation of liberty should be a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate time possible and should be in line with international juvenile justice standards.

192. I remain seriously concerned by the humanitarian situation of women and children in the Hawl and Rawj camps and in places of detention in the north-east. I reiterate my call upon all concerned countries of origin and relevant authorities inside the Syrian Arab Republic to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of women and children currently in these camps, including those with suspected family ties to ISIL, consistent with the principle of non-refoulement and with respect for family unity and the best interest of the child, and in line with the Global Framework on United Nations Support to Member States on Individuals Returned from the Syrian Arab Republic and Iraq, adopted in 2020.

193. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic (S/2021/398).

Yemen

194. The United Nations verified 4,418 grave violations against 1,287 children (944 boys, 343 girls). In addition, 63 grave violations against 54 children (43 boys, 11 girls) which occurred in previous years were verified at a later date.

195. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 163 children (134 boys, 29 girls) by Houthis (who call themselves Ansar Allah) (115), the Yemen Armed Forces (34), the Security Belt Forces (10) and unidentified perpetrators (4). Most children (92) were used in combat roles, and a third of these children were victims of other violations during their association with parties to conflict, including killing and maiming. In addition, the recruitment and use of 9 boys by the Houthis (8) and the Yemen Armed Forces (1) in previous years was verified at a later date.

196. The deprivation of liberty of 14 boys for their alleged association with parties, some for up to two years, was verified and attributed to the Yemen Armed Forces (11), the Houthis (2) and the Security Belt Forces (1).

197. The United Nations verified the killing (269) and maiming (855) of 1,124 children (816 boys, 308 girls) attributed to the Houthis (255), the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen (194), the Yemen Armed Forces (121), the Security Belt Forces (49), Islamic State in Yemen (11), Popular Resistance (8), Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (2) and unidentified perpetrators (484), including in crossfire, mainly between the Houthis and the Yemen Armed Forces (228) and between other parties (43). The main causes for child casualties were mortar and artillery shelling (339), gunshots and crossfire (305), explosive remnants of war (212) and air strikes (150). Most casualties occurred in Hudaydah (242), Ta'izz (239), Ma'rib (132) and Jawf (129) Governorates. In addition, the killing (14) and maiming (27) of 41 children (32 boys, 9 girls) in previous years was verified at a later date and attributed to the Coalition (20), the Houthis (10) and other perpetrators (11).

198. Sexual violence against seven children (3 boys, 4 girls) was verified and attributed to the Houthis (4), the Yemen Armed Forces (1), the Security Belt Forces (1) and the Salafists (1). In addition, incidents of sexual violence affecting three children (1 boy, 2 girls) that occurred in previous years and attributed to the Houthis were verified at a later date.

199. There were 36 verified attacks on schools (16) and hospitals (20) attributed to the Houthis (24), the Yemen Armed Forces (7), Popular Resistance (2), the Coalition (1), the Security Belt Forces (1) and unidentified perpetrators (1). In addition, one attack on a school by the Houthis that occurred in previous years was verified at a later date.

200. The military use of 34 schools and 1 hospital was verified and attributed to the Houthis (30) and the Yemen Armed Forces (5).

201. A total of 55 children (53 boys, 2 girls) were abducted by the Yemen Armed Forces (27), the Houthis (22), the Hadhrami Elite Forces (3), the Security Belt Forces (2) and the Yemeni Islah party (1), including 12 boys also recruited. The abduction of nine boys that occurred in previous years was verified at a later date and attributed to the Houthis (5) and the Yemen Armed Forces (4).

202. A total of 3,033 incidents of denial of humanitarian access to children were verified and attributed to the Houthis (2,502), the Yemen Armed Forces (479) and unidentified perpetrators (52). Incidents included attacks, restrictions of movements in and out of Yemen, and interference in implementation. Incidents were prevalent in Amanat al-Asimah (1,048), Sa'dah (597), Aden (378) and Hudaydah (371) Governorates.

203. I welcome the continued commitment of the Government to protecting children, including through the implementation of the 2014 action plan and the 2018 road map to end and prevent child recruitment and use, and welcome efforts to apply the presidential directive of 12 February 2020 and the military directive of 3 March 2020, including plans to establish child protection units. I note the significant decrease in the recruitment and use of children in 2020. I encourage the Government's engagement with the United Nations on priority actions, including to restore the interministerial committee, to adopt a handover protocol on the release of children and to implement measures to prevent violations against children, such as reinforced training of its Armed Forces in the prevention of violations, including the recruitment and use of children. I am concerned at the noticeable increase in the killing and maiming of children attributed to government forces and urge the Government to put in place immediate measures to mitigate and reduce this trend.

204. I welcome the continued engagement of the Coalition with my Special Representative to sustainably end and prevent grave violations against children in Yemen, and I call upon the Coalition to pursue the implementation of the memorandum of understanding signed in March 2019 and the related programme of time-bound activities endorsed in January 2020. I urge the Coalition to continue to comply with its obligations under international humanitarian law. Although their numbers have decreased, I remain concerned by incidents of air strikes resulting in child casualties, including those being investigated by the Coalition. I commend the Coalition for the swift investigation of two of these incidents that took place in 2020 and I urge it to swiftly conclude these investigations and to ensure that investigations are undertaken for all incidents with child casualties. I also urge the Coalition to expedite justice, accountability and redress to child victims and their families. I welcome the training and high-level workshop on child protection conducted in March and May 2021 by the Office of my Special Representative with the Coalition. Continuous monitoring and engagement to ensure the sustained implementation of the programme of time-bound activities and the further decrease in the number of affected children, as verified by the United Nations, is expected and will be closely observed. Any failure in sustained progress in this regard will lead to relisting.

205. I note the continued dialogue between the Houthis and the United Nations to develop an action plan to end and prevent grave violations against children, and I urge the Houthis to promptly finalize and sign it. I welcome the handover protocol signed in April 2020, as well as the release of 68 children, and urge the protocol's continued implementation and the release of additional children.

206. I am gravely concerned by the continuing rise in the number of grave violations, including the recruitment of children, particularly by the Houthis; by the persistent high numbers of children killed and maimed; and by the increase in denials of humanitarian access. I am also concerned about the persistent level of grave violations by the Government.

207. I urge all parties to abide by their obligations and responsibilities under international humanitarian law and international human rights law. I also urge all parties to end and prevent violations and to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access to children.

208. I call upon parties to the conflict to declare a nationwide ceasefire and to continue their engagement with my Special Envoy for Yemen towards the resumption of an inclusive political process to reach a comprehensive negotiated settlement, with a view to ending the conflict and bringing lasting peace to Yemen. I also call upon them to include child protection concerns in the peace process.

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

Burkina Faso

209. The United Nations verified 171 grave violations against 83 children (45 boys, 37 girls, 1 sex unknown). Most violations occurred in the East (62), Central North (52) and Sahel (36) regions.

210. Four children, all boys, were recruited and used by unidentified perpetrators in the Sahel region.

211. Ten boys, including nationals of Mali, the Niger and Nigeria (1 each), have been detained in Ouagadougou since 2018 for alleged association with armed groups. One boy associated with an armed group was released and placed in a transit centre.

212. The United Nations verified the killing (24) and maiming (30) of 54 children (27 boys, 26 girls, 1 sex unknown) attributed to JNIM (29), unidentified perpetrators (17), ISGS (5), the Defence and Security Forces (2) and Volontaires pour la défense de la patrie (1). Child casualties resulted from gunshots (33), including 22 during crossfire between the Defence and Security Forces and armed groups, and improvised explosive devices (15).

213. Rape and other forms of sexual violence affecting three girls were verified and attributed to JNIM (2) and unidentified perpetrators (1).

214. A total of 80 attacks on schools (70) and hospitals (10) were verified and attributed to unidentified perpetrators (30), ISGS (44) and JNIM (6).

215. A total of 22 children (14 boys, 8 girls) were abducted for unknown purposes by unidentified perpetrators (16), JNIM and ISGS (3 each). Twenty of the children were released.

216. The United Nations verified eight incidents of denial of humanitarian access attributed to unidentified perpetrators (4), JNIM (3) and ISGS (1).

Developments and concerns

217. I welcome the development of a handover protocol between the Government and the United Nations for the transfer of children allegedly associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors, and I call upon the Government to endorse and implement it, in cooperation with the United Nations, and to release all children from detention. I also call upon the national authorities to treat these children primarily as victims and to uphold international juvenile justice standards.

218. I am alarmed at the elevated number of attacks and threats of attacks against schools and hospitals and protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals by armed groups. I call upon the parties to conflict to end such attacks.

219. I am concerned by the killing and maiming of children. I urge all parties not to target children and to minimize the effect of their operations on children. I call upon all parties to engage with the United Nations to end and prevent violations. I urge the Government to ensure that perpetrators of grave violations against children are held accountable.

Cameroon

220. The United Nations verified 285 grave violations against 232 children (118 boys, 92 girls, 22 sex unknown), in the Far North (161), North-West (83) and South-West (41) Regions.

221. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 15 children (10 boys, 5 girls) in the Far North by Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups (15), including Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati Wal-Jihad (JAS) (3) and unidentified affiliated or splinter groups (12). Eight boys were used in hostilities and seven children as carriers of improvised explosive devices.

222. A total of 16 boys were detained by security forces on national security-related charges in the South-West (11), North-West (3), West (1) and Far North (1) Regions. The United Nations could not establish their status as at December 2020.

223. A total of 165 children (87 boys, 66 girls, 12 sex unknown) were killed (77) and maimed (88) by Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups (97), including JAS (37) and unidentified affiliated or splinter groups (60); unidentified armed groups in the North-West (3); unidentified perpetrators (50) (including 5 during crossfire between armed groups and the Cameroon Armed Forces); and the Cameroon Armed Forces (15). Casualties occurred in the Far North (97), South-West (35) and North-West (33) Regions and resulted from gunshots, suicide attacks and explosive remnants of war.

224. The attempted rape of one girl by unidentified perpetrators was verified in the North-West Region.

225. A total of 26 attacks on schools (20) and hospitals (6) were verified in the North-West (18), South-West (4) and Far North (4) Regions and were attributed to unidentified perpetrators (22) (including 1 that occurred during crossfire between armed groups and the Cameroon Armed Forces) and to Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups (4), including JAS (2) and unidentified affiliated or splinter groups (2).

226. The United Nations verified 19 incidents of military use of schools attributed to the Cameroon Armed Forces in the Far North. Schools continued to be used as at December 2020.

227. The United Nations verified the abduction of 68 children (32 boys, 26 girls, 10 sex unknown) attributed to Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups (45), including JAS (37) and unidentified affiliated or splinter groups (8), and to unidentified perpetrators (23), occurring in the Far North (45) and North-West (23) Regions. Of those, 32 children were released or escaped, while the status of 36 children is unknown.

228. Ten incidents of denial of humanitarian access were verified and attributed to unidentified perpetrators (8) (including 1 during crossfire between armed groups and the Cameroon Armed Forces) and to the Cameroon Armed Forces (2).

229. I welcome the creation of a commission of inquiry following the attack in Ngarbuh, North-West Region, on 14 February 2020, which resulted in 14 children killed. In June 2020, the Government announced the arrest of two Cameroon Armed Forces soldiers and a gendarme, whose trial began in December. I also welcome the conviction of members of a vigilante committee for the killing in April 2015 of two children allegedly associated with Boko Haram in the Far-North Region. I call upon the Government to pursue its efforts towards accountability for all grave violations against children.

230. According to the Government, 72 children (34 boys, 38 girls) formerly associated with Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups, were released in 2020 and transited through a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration centre in Méri, Far North Region. I welcome this development and call upon the Government to transfer the children to civilian child protection actors and to ensure that children have access to child- and gender-specific disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes and that their rights are protected.

231. I am concerned about the detention of children for their alleged association with armed groups and on national security-related charges. I call upon the Government to treat all children formerly associated with armed groups as victims, in line with international juvenile justice standards, including the use of detention as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, and to release all detained children. I urge authorities to adopt a protocol for the handover of children allegedly associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors.

232. The brutality of grave violations perpetrated by JAS and other Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups remains a grave concern, notably the use of children, particularly girls, as carriers of improvised explosive devices. I am deeply concerned by the grave violations in the North-West and South-West Regions, including denial of humanitarian access and attacks on schools and protected persons in relation to schools, resulting in the killing and maiming of children. I urge all parties in Cameroon to immediately cease all violations against children.

India

233. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of two boys by unidentified perpetrators. The United Nations is reviewing reports of the use of three boys by Indian security forces for less than 24 hours.

234. Four children were detained by Indian security forces in Jammu and Kashmir for alleged association with armed groups.

235. A total of 39 children (33 boys, 6 girls) were killed (9) and maimed (30) by pellet guns (11) and torture (2) by unidentified perpetrators (13) (including resulting from explosive remnants of war (7), crossfire between unidentified armed groups and Indian security forces (3), crossfire between unidentified armed groups, and grenade attacks (3)), Indian security forces (13), and crossfire and shelling across the line of control (13).

236. The United Nations verified the use of seven schools by Indian security forces for four months. Schools were vacated by the end of 2020.

237. The United Nations did not verify grave violations in the context of the Naxalite insurgency.

Developments and concerns

238. I welcome the positive engagement of the Government with my Special Representative to put in place national preventive and accountability measures for all grave violations.

239. I remain concerned by grave violations against children in Jammu and Kashmir and call upon the Government to take preventive measures to protect children, including by ending the use of pellets against children, ensuring that children are not associated in any way to security forces, and endorsing the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles. I am alarmed at the detention and torture of children and concerned by the military use of schools. I urge the Government to ensure that children are detained as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, and to prevent all forms of ill-treatment in detention. I also urge the Government to ensure the implementation of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015, to address the use of children for illegal activities and the situation of detained children.

Lake Chad basin

240. The United Nations verified 762 grave violations against 685 children (382 boys, 260 girls, 43 sex unknown) in the Lake Chad basin region, namely in the Far North Region of Cameroon (161), Lac Province in Chad (145), Diffa Region in the Niger (206) and north-east Nigeria (250). Violations were perpetrated primarily by Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups.<sup>16</sup> Information on violations in the Far North Region of Cameroon and north-east Nigeria is included under the respective country sections.

241. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 73 children in Chad (40: 35 boys, 5 girls) and the Niger (33: 26 boys, 7 girls) by Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups.

242. A total of 21 children were detained by the respective Governments in Chad (11) and the Niger (10) for alleged association with armed groups. In Chad, the whereabouts of the detained children remain unknown. In the Niger, three boys were detained for 11 months.

243. The United Nations verified the killing (46) and maiming (13) of 59 children in Chad (28: 2 boys, 26 sex unknown) and the Niger (31: 21 boys, 10 girls) attributed to Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups (55). A case of maiming was attributed to the Niger Armed Forces (1). Three casualties were attributed to unidentified perpetrators during crossfire between unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups and armed forces in the Niger (2) and Chad (1).

244. The United Nations verified rape and other forms of sexual violence perpetrated by Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups, against 23 girls in Chad (6) and the Niger (17). In the Niger, the 17 girls were also abducted.

245. The United Nations verified seven attacks on schools (1) and hospitals (6) in the Niger, all attributed to Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups.

246. A total of 188 children (95 boys, 85 girls, 8 sex unknown) were abducted in Chad (70) and the Niger (118) by Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter groups (149), and by unidentified perpetrators in Chad only (39). The whereabouts of most of the children are unknown, although 13 children were rescued by the Chadian National Army (9) or escaped (4).

247. The United Nations verified one incident of denial of humanitarian access in Chad by Boko Haram, including unidentified affiliated or splinter group.

Developments and concerns

248. I welcome the interest and action of the Government of the Niger in relation to the protection of schools, and I note the efforts undertaken by the Government of Chad to train armed forces during 2020 and ask that these efforts be sustained. I call upon the Government of Chad to release all children in detention, in line with the protocol for the handover of children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors adopted in September 2014, and to provide access for the United Nations to children detained or in centres. I note the adoption in 2017 of the handover protocol in the Niger and call upon the Government to continue implementing it, including through the release of all children in detention. Children actually or allegedly associated with armed forces and groups must be treated primarily as victims, with detention as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, in line with international juvenile justice standards.

249. I am gravely concerned at the scale of grave violations perpetrated by Boko Haram, including affiliated or splinter groups in the Lake Chad basin region, notably the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children, sexual violence and abduction. I call upon the groups to immediately cease all grave violations and release all children.

Nigeria

250. The United Nations verified 250 grave violations against 208 children (114 boys, 92 girls, 2 sex unknown) in North-East Nigeria. Most violations occurred in Borno State.

251. Seven children (4 boys, 3 girls) were recruited and used by Boko Haram-affiliated or splinter groups, including JAS (4) and Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) (1); and by the Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) (2). Two girls were used in combat. Two boys were used by CJTF at a checkpoint.

252. The Nigerian authorities released 230 children (215 boys, 15 girls) held for periods ranging from one week to several years for alleged association with armed groups. Nine other children (4 boys, 5 girls) remain detained as at December 2020. The United Nations was unable to verify the number of children in detention, as access to detention facilities was denied.

253. The United Nations verified the killing (77) and maiming (47) of 124 children (83 boys, 39 girls, 2 sex unknown) by JAS (46); ISWAP (30); unidentified perpetrators (27), including 9 in crossfire between the Nigerian Security Forces/CJTF joint operations and ISWAP; and the Nigerian Security Forces (21).

254. Ten girls were raped by JAS (9), following their abduction, and by CJTF (1).

255. The United Nations verified 15 attacks on schools (5) and hospitals (10) attributed to JAS (9) and ISWAP (6).

256. A total of 76 children (27 boys, 49 girls) were abducted by JAS (63) and ISWAP (13) for sexual violence (9) and unknown purposes (67). The whereabouts of 73 children are unknown, while 3 children escaped.

257. The United Nations verified 18 incidents of denial of humanitarian access attributed to ISWAP (11), JAS (5) and unidentified perpetrators (2).

258. I commend CJTF efforts to implement the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children, including the separation of 2,203 children in previous years, and I note the significant decrease in recruitment. I welcome the Government's constructive role in the implementation of the action plan. I encourage CJTF to ensure the sustainability of the action plan, by creating child protection units in all its formations, instituting accountability mechanisms and enforcing zero tolerance of child recruitment and use. I note the Government's investigation into the sexual violence case attributed to CJTF.

259. While the release of 230 children is encouraging, I am concerned about the children remaining in detention for alleged association with armed groups. I reiterate my call upon Nigerian authorities to treat all children formerly associated with armed groups as victims, with detention as a measure of last resort, and to release all children in its custody. I reiterate my call upon the Nigerian authorities to adopt a protocol for the handover of children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors, and to immediately provide access for the United Nations to all detained children.

260. I remain seriously concerned about grave violations perpetrated by JAS and ISWAP, in particular the abduction of children, attacks on schools and the killing and maiming of children. I urge all parties to end and prevent violations and to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access to children.

Pakistan

261. A total of 39 children (6 boys, 6 girls, 27 sex unknown) were reportedly killed (8) and maimed (31) by unidentified perpetrators in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (16), Pakistan-administered Kashmir (13) and Balochistan (10). Incidents included clashes across the line of control (13) and improvised explosive devices (6).

262. One attack on a school was reported in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province when unidentified perpetrators placed an improvised explosive device. The Global Polio Eradication Initiative reported 127 incidents by unidentified armed elements.

Developments and concerns

263. I welcome the engagement of the Government with my Special Representative to develop preventive measures to protect children. I reiterate my call for the Government to better protect children through the endorsement of international commitments such as the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles.

Philippines

264. The United Nations verified 60 grave violations against 57 children (34 boys, 23 girls). In addition, nine grave violations against nine children (5 boys, 4 girls) that occurred before the reporting period were verified at a later date.

265. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 12 children (5 boys, 7 girls) attributed to the New People's Army (NPA) in Misamis Oriental (4), Davao Oriental (2), Negros Oriental (2), Leyte (2), Bukidnon (1) and Negros Occidental (1) provinces. At least three of the children were used in combat. All children were separated from the group. In addition, the recruitment and use and the subsequent release of one boy by NPA in Samar province was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

266. The United Nations verified the detention of five children (2 boys, 3 girls) by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) in Misamis Oriental (3) and Zambales (2) provinces. Three children remained detained as at December 2020.

267. The killing (14) and maiming (31) of 45 children (28 boys, 17 girls) were verified and attributed to the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) (14), NPA (6), AFP (9) and unidentified perpetrators (16) as a result of crossfire and shelling between AFP and the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF) (12), explosive remnants of war (3) and improvised explosive devices (1). Child casualties occurred in Maguindanao (15), Sulu (14), Surigao del Sur (5) and other provinces (11). In addition, the killing (2) and maiming (4) of six children (4 boys, 2 girls) by NPA (5) and AFP (1) that occurred in previous years was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

268. No incidents of sexual violence were verified. Sexual violence affecting two girls attributed to AFP (2) that occurred in 2018 and 2019 was verified at a later date by the United Nations.

269. Two attacks on schools were verified and attributed to NPA (1) and unidentified perpetrators (1) in Bukidnon (1) and Agusan del Sur (1) provinces.

270. The United Nations verified the abduction of one boy by NPA in Agusan del Sur province.

Developments and concerns

271. I welcome the adoption by the Government of a protocol on handling children in situations of armed conflict in September 2020. I encourage the Government to implement the Special Protection of Children in Situations of Armed Conflict Act and its Implementing Rules and Regulations. I urge AFP to sign a strategic plan to halt, prevent and respond to grave violations against children in armed conflict, as agreed in November 2019.

272. I am concerned over child casualties in the context of military operations against BIFF, ASG and Islamic State-inspired groups, and over the impact of improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war on children.

273. I call upon the Government to continue its collaboration with the United Nations to address violations against children, to support the implementation of national child protection procedures and guidelines and to facilitate access to conflict-affected areas for child protection actors. I also call upon the Government to implement the Ottawa Convention and become a party to Protocol V to the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons and to endorse the Paris Principles and the Vancouver Principles.

274. I remain concerned about the attacks on schools and protected persons in relation to schools, particularly in indigenous communities. I reiterate my call upon the Government to implement the 2019 National policy framework on learners and schools as zones of peace and to better protect children through the Safe Schools Declaration.

275. I urge NPA and other armed groups to immediately end the recruitment and use of children and to release children. I call upon listed armed groups to engage in dialogue with the United Nations with a view to developing action plans to end and prevent child recruitment and use.

276. I call upon the Government and armed groups to integrate the protection of children into peace negotiations.

277. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Philippines (S/2020/777).

IV. Recommendations

278. I welcome the continued engagement by parties to conflict with the United Nations to develop and implement action plans and commitments to protect children in armed conflict. I reiterate my call upon Member States to continue to support this engagement, including by facilitating United Nations engagement with non-State actors. I encourage Member States to adopt and implement protocols for the handover of children to civilian child protection actors. I request my Special Representative, in support of the country task forces, to engage with parties to prevent grave violations, including through engagement with regional organizations, and to strengthen the monitoring and reporting on children and armed conflict in coordination with United Nations system entities.

279. I call upon the Security Council to ensure that child protection provisions and capacity are included in all relevant mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations and special political missions, in line with the 2017 policy on child protection in United Nations peace operations. I underline the importance of mainstreaming child protection concerns in early warning, conflict analysis, peace processes, transitional justice and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. My Special Representative will continue to disseminate and encourage the use of the Practical Guidance for Mediators to Protect Children in Situations of Armed Conflict.

280. I call upon Member States to respect the rights of the child, including by becoming parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, if they have not yet done so. I welcome the widespread ratification of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), and call upon States parties to implement their obligations under the Convention. I call upon Member States to endorse and implement the Paris Principles, the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles.

281. I remain concerned by the scale and severity of grave violations committed against children. I call upon all parties to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, international human rights law and international refugee law and to immediately end and prevent grave violations.

282. I call for the adoption and implementation of legislation criminalizing violations of the rules of international law pertaining to the protection of children in armed conflict and encourage Member States to adopt national accountability measures and to cooperate with relevant international accountability mechanisms. I call for the inclusion of accountability provisions in action plans signed between the United Nations and parties listed in the annexes, and for their implementation.

283. I am deeply concerned at the numbers of children held in detention, and I reiterate that this should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, that alternatives to detention should be prioritized whenever possible and that children should never be detained solely for their or their parents' association with armed groups. I urge Member States to treat children actually or allegedly associated with armed forces or groups, including those designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, primarily as victims, to give child protection actors access to them and to continue to search for solutions towards voluntary repatriation and reintegration of these children, including those with alleged links to ISIL being held in camps in Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, in line with the Global Framework on United Nations Support to Member States on Individuals Returned from the Syrian Arab Republic and Iraq. I am concerned about the impact of counter-terrorism operations on the protection of children.

284. I call upon all parties to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access, as well as access to services by children, in order to provide assistance to children, and to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and assets. I underline that hospitals, schools and their personnel should be protected. Furthermore, I urge parties to refrain from the military use of schools and hospitals.

285. I am deeply concerned about the adverse impact of the pandemic on conflict-affected children and urge all parties to adhere to my appeal for a global ceasefire. I call upon Member States to take into account child protection concerns in the design of pandemic response measures and in recovery plans.

286. I call upon the donor community to provide urgently needed financial support and technical assistance for sustainable, timely, gender- and age-sensitive, survivor-centred and inclusive reintegration, services and assistance programmes for children, including for survivors of rape and other forms of sexual violence. I encourage the international community to provide funding for monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children.

287. I encourage Member States and regional and subregional organizations to strengthen child protection capacities and to engage with the United Nations in order to improve analysis, develop strategies to prevent grave violations, and foster partnerships on child protection.

V. Lists contained in the annexes to the present report

288. Following an increase in child casualties in Afghanistan, the Afghan National Army has been listed under section B of annex I for the killing and maiming of children; the listing reflects the measures that it put in place during the reporting period aimed at improving the protection of children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, two armed groups have been listed: CODECO has been listed under section A of annex I for the killing and maiming of children and for attacks on schools and hospitals, following a substantial increase of these violations since my previous report, in which they were referred to as the Lendu militia. Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale has been listed for the recruitment and use and the abduction of children, following a substantial increase of these violations since my previous report, in which they were referred to as the Twa militia. I urge both parties to eradicate these practices, including by swiftly engaging with the United Nations through action plans.

289. The following parties were previously listed and have had additional violations added to their listing. In Myanmar, the Tatmadaw Kyi, including the integrated border guard forces, has been relisted under section B of annex I for the recruitment and use of children, following its failure to end and prevent the ad hoc use of children in non-combat roles. I urge the Tatmadaw Kyi to take immediate action to address the implementation gaps of the joint action plan to sustainably end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and to immediately refrain from the continued use of children. The Tatmadaw Kyi will continue to be listed under section A of annex I for the violations of killing and maiming children and rape and other forms of sexual violence against children. I urge the Tatmadaw Kyi to engage in ending these violations, including through the development of a joint action plan to this effect. In Somalia, the violation of rape and other forms of sexual violence against children has been added to the listing of the Somali Federal Defence and Police Forces under section B of annex I, following an increase of this violation. I urge the Government of Somalia to implement the provisions relating to rape and other forms of sexual violence contained in the road map signed in 2019 and in the joint communiqué on the prevention of sexual violence signed in 2013. I further urge the federal member states of Somalia to immediately address the patterns of grave violations against children, specifically the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children committed by the Jubaland, Galmudug and Puntland forces and to engage with the United Nations in developing and implementing a prevention plan. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as a result of the continuous increase in cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence by the Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové armed group, the party has been listed under section A of annex I for this violation.

290. In Afghanistan, the Afghan National Police has been delisted for the violation of recruitment and use of children owing to the sustained progress in the implementation of its action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and to the significant continued decrease in cases under this violation. This delisting is conditioned on the finalization of all pending action plan activities and the continued decrease in the recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Police, failure of which will lead to its relisting in my next report. In Nigeria, the CJTF armed group has been delisted following a significant decrease in the recruitment and use of children through the continued implementation of its action plan, which was signed with the United Nations in 2017. I urge the party to complete its obligations under the action plan, as well as to develop and implement prevention measures in coordination with the United Nations and my Special Representative. Such measures should include swiftly implementing the remaining activities of the action plan, namely establishing child protection units in all CJTF formations in Borno State and training the units on children's rights, establishing accountability mechanisms and subjecting CJTF members to disciplinary measures when standing orders that are in line with the action plan are violated and raising awareness among CJTF and community members through outreach activities. A lack of progress in this regard may lead to the relisting of the party for that violation in my next report.

291. There have been technical delistings of some of the listed parties following their dissolution or cessation of activities. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Kamuina Nsapu and the Bana Mura militias have been removed, as these armed groups are no longer active. I urge the Government and relevant partners to ensure the swift demobilization of all children formerly associated with these groups, or with their residual elements, and to ensure accountability for those who committed violations against children. Nduma défense du Congo has been removed, as the armed group is no longer active and its former leader, Ntabo Ntaberi Sheka, was convicted by a Congolese military court in November 2020. The Union des patriotes congolais pour la paix (also known as Mai-Mai Lafontaine) has been removed, as the group ceased to exist. In Mali, the Mouvement pour l'unification et le jihad en Afrique de l'Ouest has been removed, as the armed group ceased to exist.

292. Other modifications to the list have resulted from changes in the landscape of armed conflict in the respective situations or from changes in measures taken by parties to protect children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain armed group will be listed in section B of annex I, following the signing of a road map in 2020 to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations. Both the Mai-Mai Mazembe and Raia Mutomboki armed groups have been relisted under section A of annex I, the former for the recruitment and use, killing and maiming, and abduction of children and the latter for the recruitment and use and the abduction of children; both groups have been relisted owing to the lack of action in implementing signed commitments and because the parties were the main perpetrators of grave violations against children in 2020.

293. Modifications to terminology and to names of parties resulting from changes on the ground are aimed at reflecting the name of parties more accurately. In Myanmar, the Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council armed group is now listed as Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council to accurately represent the party's name. In the Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North armed group is now listed as two separate entities, namely the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North Abdelaziz al-Hilu faction and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North Malik Agar faction, to accurately represent the separate chains of command of the two groups. I urge both parties to grant access to the United Nations to the areas under their respective control and to implement the action plan signed in 2016, which is now applicable to both. In the Syrian Arab Republic, Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham led by the Nusra Front (Levant Liberation Organization) is now listed as Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham to accurately reflect the name of the armed group in the current context. In Nigeria, Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad, also known as Boko Haram, is now listed as Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups, including Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'awati Wal-Jihad and Islamic State West Africa Province, as it more accurately reflects the structure and organization of the armed group. In Yemen, the Houthis/Ansar Allah (previously the Houthis) is now listed as the Houthis (who call themselves Ansar Allah).

Children and armed conflict

I. Introduction

1. The present report, prepared following consultations and covering the period from January to December 2021, is submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 2427 \(2018\). The report includes trends regarding the impact of armed conflict on children and information on violations committed, as requested by the Council in its resolution 1612 \(2005\) and subsequent resolutions.<sup>1</sup> Where possible, violations are attributed to parties to conflict and the annexes to the present report include a list of parties engaging in violations against children, namely the recruitment and use of children, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, attacks on schools, hospitals and protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals,<sup>2</sup> and the abduction of children.

2. The information contained in the present report was vetted for accuracy by the United Nations. Where information is not verified, it is qualified as such. Where incidents were committed earlier but verified only in 2021, that information is qualified as relating to an incident that was verified at a later date. The information does not represent the full scale of violations against children, as verification depends on many factors, including access. The report presents trends and patterns of violations, and engagement with parties responsible for violations that might lead to behavioural change, including promotion of accountability and inclusion of child protection provisions in peace processes. In the report, it is noted that attacks or threats of attacks on community and civic leaders, on human rights defenders and on monitors of violations against children are a cause for concern and a strain on the monitoring capacity.

<sup>2</sup> For the purposes of the present report, the phrase “protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals”, used in Security Council resolutions 1998 \(2011\), 2143 \(2014\) and 2427 \(2018\), as well as in the statements by the President of the Security Council of 17 June 2013 (S/PRST/2013/8) and 31 October 2017 (S/PRST/2017/21), refers to teachers, doctors, other educational personnel, students and patients.

3. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 \(2005\), my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict adopted a pragmatic approach to promote broad and effective protection for children. Reference to a situation is not a legal determination, and reference to a non-State actor does not affect its legal status. Accordingly, the report documents situations in which apparent violations of international norms and standards are of such gravity as to warrant international concern, given their impact on children. My Special Representative brings these situations to the attention of Governments, which bear the primary responsibility for protecting children, in order to encourage them to take remedial measures. Where measures undertaken by listed parties had a positive impact on children or where ongoing conduct is of concern, this is highlighted. On the basis of enhanced engagement with parties, the annexes distinguish between listed parties that have put in place measures aimed at improving the protection of children during the reporting period and those that have not.

II. Situation of children and armed conflict

A. Overview of trends and patterns

4. In 2021, children in armed conflict suffered a high number of grave violations. The United Nations verified 23,982 grave violations, of which 22,645 were committed in 2021 and 1,337 were committed earlier but verified only in 2021. Violations affected 19,165 children (13,633 boys, 5,242 girls, 290 sex unknown) in 21 situations and one regional monitoring arrangement. The highest numbers of violations were the killing (2,515) and maiming (5,555) of 8,070 children, followed by the recruitment and use of 6,310 children and 3,945 incidents of denial of humanitarian access.<sup>3</sup> Children were detained for actual or alleged association with armed groups (2,864), including those designated as terrorist groups by the United Nations, or for national security reasons.

5. My Special Representative and country task forces made progress in engaging with parties in a number of countries, including Mali, Nigeria, the Philippines, South Sudan, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen to protect children. Engagement with parties to conflict resulted in the release of 12,214 children from armed groups and armed forces.

6. Conflict escalation, the multiplication of armed actors, the use of mines, improvised explosive devices, explosive remnants of war and explosive weapons in populated areas, intensified humanitarian crises, and violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law had a severe impact on the protection of children. Cross-border conflicts and intercommunal violence affected children, in particular in the central Sahel and Lake Chad basin regions, while coups and takeovers aggravated the situation of children in Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Mali, Myanmar and the Sudan.

7. The highest numbers of grave violations were verified in Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. The number of cases of abduction increased by over 20 per cent and cases of sexual violence against children continued to increase, by over 20 per cent. The number of attacks on schools and hospitals increased by 5 per cent in a context of school closures, the military use of schools and disregard for children's right to education and health, and the situation was compounded by the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic. Non-State armed groups were responsible for 55 per cent of violations, State forces for 25 per cent, and the remainder of the violations resulted from crossfire, the use of improvised explosive devices, explosive remnants of war and landmines, or were committed by unidentified perpetrators. Over 25 per cent of child casualties resulted from improvised explosive devices, explosive remnants of war and landmines, for a total of 2,257 child casualties.

8. Whereas 70 per cent of children affected by grave violations are boys, the number of violations affecting boys has decreased, while the number of girls who were casualties of killing and maiming, or subjected to abduction and sexual violence, increased, particularly in the Lake Chad basin. Cases of sexual violence continued to be vastly underreported, owing to stigmatization, the fear of reprisals, harmful social norms, the absence of services, impunity, the lack of humanitarian access and safety concerns (S/2022/272). Children with disabilities and displaced children were particularly vulnerable.

B. Challenges and the way forward

9. Compared with the proportion of casualties among adults, children were disproportionately affected by explosive remnants of war, the use of improvised explosive devices and mines, with a steady increase in the number of children killed or maimed by such weapons (9 per cent increase compared with the previous report, A/75/873-S/2021/437). Afghanistan, Colombia, Iraq, Myanmar, South Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and the Lake Chad basin (areas affected by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups) are particularly affected by the use and impact of such weapons. Efforts must be prioritized to clear explosive remnants of war, improvised explosive devices and mines, provide child-sensitive risk education, and promote assistance to victims. Similarly, indiscriminate and disproportionate attacks using explosive weapons in populated areas have had a severe impact on children, and parties to conflict must avoid the use of explosive weapons in populated areas.

10. The number of attacks on schools continues to rise, including attacks on students and on educational personnel, as well as the military use of schools, depriving children of their right to education and reducing the availability of safe and child-friendly spaces, thus jeopardizing children's future and their access to essential services, as well as making children more vulnerable to other violations. Children are abducted, killed or maimed, and suffer sexual violence, in or on the way to school. Some parties to conflict also use schools as recruitment grounds. In addition, the abduction of girls has increased by 41 per cent. Girls' education has been undermined by targeted attacks on girls' schools and the denial of schooling, particularly in Afghanistan and in the Lake Chad basin region. These attacks further affect girls' already limited access to education in the long term. In Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Mali, Somalia and the Syrian Arab Republic, attacks on schools were devastating for children. The Security Council, in its resolution 2601 (2021), called for measures to protect schools and mitigate the military use of schools.

11. The pandemic aggravated the existing vulnerabilities of children, including by hampering the fulfilment of their rights, reducing child protection activities and safe spaces. The socioeconomic impact of the pandemic exposed children to grave violations and threatens to undo recent gains in the areas of child protection, human rights and the Sustainable Development Goals, by exposing children, their families and communities to renewed risks, including: economic insecurity; exploitative and hazardous relationships; negative coping mechanisms; social isolation; and reduced access to services and humanitarian assistance. In some contexts, girls may never be able to go back to school, because they have to earn an income or were forcibly married to support their families. We should continue monitoring and adapting programmatic and advocacy responses towards child protection, with a particular focus on girls.

III. Information on grave violations

A. Situations on the agenda of the Security Council

Afghanistan

12. The United Nations verified 2,577 grave violations against 2,430 children (1,579 boys, 798 girls, 53 sex unknown). In addition, 35 grave violations that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021. Serious safety and security challenges were faced by the country task force for monitoring and reporting on violations against children, following the takeover of Kabul by the Taliban on 15 August 2021. Parties to conflict affiliated with the government and pro-government parties ceased to exist. Most of the figures presented herein were verified for the period 1 January to 15 August 2021. Reporting by the monitoring and reporting mechanism was temporarily suspended from that moment until 31 December 2021 owing to the lack of access to monitor and verify violations. Reporting resumed in January 2022.

13. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 58 boys, some as young as 12, by the Taliban (34), pro-government militia (16), the Afghan National Police (7), Afghan National Police jointly with the Afghan National Army (1), in the north-eastern (20), south-eastern (14), northern (13), southern (6) central (2), eastern (2) and western (1) regions. Among these boys, 47 were recruited and used prior to 15 August. Children were used in combat, including in suicide attack squads, and support roles, including to make and transport improvised explosive devices for the Taliban.

14. As at mid-August 2021, 166 boys were detained on national security-related charges in juvenile rehabilitation centres. In addition, 168 children (90 boys, 78 girls) were kept in the Kabul female detention centre with their mothers who were detained for alleged or actual affiliation with Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant-Khorasan (ISIL-KP). After August 2021, the Taliban announced the release of all prisoners from Pul-e-Charkhi prison, juvenile rehabilitation centres and National Directorate of Security detention facilities, but the United Nations confirmed the continued presence of unknown numbers of children detained with adults in prisons and juvenile rehabilitation centres.

15. The United Nations verified the killing (626) and maiming (1,713) of 2,339 children (1,491 boys, 795 girls, 53 sex unknown), attributed to armed groups (1,047) (Taliban (690), unidentified armed groups (260), ISIL-KP (94), crossfire between Taliban and ISIL-KP (1), self-proclaimed Da'esh (1), Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan (1)); and to government and pro-government forces (698) (Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (582), joint operations of government and pro-government forces (72), pro-government militia (20), unidentified pro-government forces (15), international forces (9)). The remaining casualties were attributed to unidentified perpetrators (238), crossfire between pro-government forces and armed groups (346) and cross-border shelling from Pakistan (10). Child casualties mainly resulted from ground engagement (912), non-suicide improvised explosive devices (699), explosive remnants of war (261), air strikes (224), targeted killings (79) and suicide attacks (65). Of the total number of casualties, 2,074 casualties occurred before 15 August. In addition, the killing (7) and maiming (10) of 17 children (15 boys, 2 girls) in 2020 by unidentified armed groups (8), pro-government forces (5) and unidentified perpetrators (4) were verified in 2021.

16. Cases of sexual violence perpetrated against 8 children (7 boys, 1 girl) by the Afghan National Police (6), Taliban (1) and the Afghan National Army (1) were verified. Six boys were used as bacha bazi by the Afghan National Police.<sup>4</sup>

17. The United Nations verified 116 attacks on schools (53) and hospitals (63), including attacks on protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, which were attributed to armed groups (65) (Taliban (46), unidentified armed groups (11), ISIL-KP (8)); to government and pro-government forces (32) (Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (26), pro-government militia (3), unidentified pro-government forces (3)); and to unidentified perpetrators (19), including as a result of crossfire between armed groups and government and pro-government forces (17), a grenade (1) and an improvised explosive device (1). Of the total number of attacks, 111 occurred before 15 August. In addition, one attack on a school in 2020 was verified in 2021.

18. As at mid-August, the military use of 35 schools (26) and hospitals (9) by the Taliban (24), and government and pro-government forces (11) (Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (7), pro-government militias (3), pro-government forces operating jointly (1)) was verified.

19. The abduction of 25 children (23 boys, 2 girls) by the Taliban was verified. Twenty children were subsequently released. In addition, the abduction of 17 boys by the Taliban in 2020 was verified in 2021.

20. The United Nations verified 31 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access by the Taliban (16), ISIL-KP (8), unidentified armed groups (6) and a pro-government militia (1). All the incidents occurred before 15 August.

Developments and concerns

21. I appeal to all parties to the conflict to end and prevent grave violations against children. I am concerned by the persistent high number of children killed and maimed, including by landmines, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war, and by the high number of attacks on schools and hospitals. I call for the international community to invest in mine clearance and education. I urge the immediate reopening of schools for children in the sixth grade and above, including for all girls.

22. I am further concerned by the impact of the ongoing economic and humanitarian crisis in terms of exacerbating grave violations against children, such as the recruitment and use of children.

<sup>4</sup> Bacha bazi is a harmful practice whereby boys are used by men for entertainment. The boys are made to dance at parties and are often dressed in female clothes and subjected to sexual violence, as reported by the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in their annual report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.

23. I urge the Taliban, and other parties, to engage with the United Nations to adopt concrete measures and sign an action plan to end and prevent violations against children, including the recruitment and use of children.

24. I call upon the Taliban to release children from detention and to respect international juvenile justice standards.

25. I urge the Taliban to define a child as every human being below the age of 18 years, and to respect the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

Central African Republic

26. The United Nations verified 925 violations against 646 children (344 boys, 302 girls), including 105 children who were victims of multiple violations. In addition, 154 grave violations affecting 151 children (42 boys, 109 girls) that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021.

27. A total of 329 children (262 boys, 67 girls), some as young as 7, were verified as having been recruited and used, by armed groups (293): Coalition des patriotes pour le changement (CPC) (197) (Front populaire pour la renaissance de la Centrafrique (FPRC) (143), joint operations by anti-balaka and Retour, réclamation et réhabilitation (3R) (37), unidentified CPC (8), anti-balaka (6), 3R (3)); Union pour la paix en Centrafrique (UPC) (71); and the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) (25). Some 84 children were used as combatants. A total of 36 children were used by other security personnel (28), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (5), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/internal security forces (2) and the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (1) for intelligence gathering, at checkpoints and to run errands. Most violations (189) occurred in Haute-Kotto Prefecture. In addition, in 2021 the United Nations verified cases of the recruitment and use of 80 children (39 boys, 41 girls), by FPRC (70), jointly by Mouvement patriotique pour la Centrafrique (MPC) and FPRC (7), anti-balaka (2) and unidentified perpetrators (1), which occurred in earlier years.

28. Eight boys were detained by national authorities for alleged association with armed groups. Two remain in detention and the United Nations continues to advocate their release.

29. The United Nations verified the killing (57) and maiming (47) of 104 children (68 boys, 36 girls) caused by gunshots and crossfire (78), shrapnel from an exploded drone (11), mutilations (10), explosive ordnance (3), death resulting from rape (1) and glass shrapnel (1). Violations were attributed to government and pro-government forces (47): other security personnel (18), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (12), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (9) and by anti-balaka elements recruited by the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (8); to armed groups (32): CPC (31) (3R (22); anti-balaka/3R (4), jointly by anti-balaka and UPC (2), anti-balaka, FPRC and FPRC/MPC (1 each)) and UPC (1); and to unidentified perpetrators (25), including 20 in crossfire between parties. Most violations occurred in Ouaka (36), Nana-Mambéré (12) and Lobaye (11). In addition, the United Nations verified the maiming of three children by unidentified perpetrators (2) and unidentified CPC (1), which occurred prior to 2021.

30. Rape and other forms of sexual violence perpetrated against 211 girls were verified and mostly attributed to armed groups (171): CPC (145) (unidentified CPC (52); FPRC (43), 3R (28), anti-balaka (10), UPC (6), jointly by anti-balaka and 3R (4), MPC (2)); LRA (13); UPC/Guenderou faction (7); and unidentified ex-Séléka (6). Twenty violations were attributed to government and pro-government forces: the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (13), other security personnel (6) and special mixed security units (1), unidentified perpetrators (18) and Chadian National Army elements (2). Cases included rape (205) and forced marriage (6). The United Nations verified cases of sexual violence perpetrated against 65 girls by CPC factions (47) (unidentified CPC (22), anti-balaka (13), 3R (5), UPC (3), FPRC and MPC (2 each)); special mixed security units (8); MPC/FPRC (5); UPC/Guenderou faction (2); the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (2); and unidentified ex-Séléka (1), all of which occurred prior to 2021.

31. A total of 52 attacks on schools (26) and hospitals (26), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, were verified and attributed to government and pro-government forces (26): other security personnel (15), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (6), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel/internal security forces (3) and the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (2); to armed groups (21): CPC (21) (unidentified CPC and UPC (7 each), 3R (3), FPRC and anti-balaka (2 each)); and to unidentified perpetrators (5). Incidents involved looting, destruction and threats and attacks against related protected persons. The United Nations verified three attacks on schools (2) and hospitals (1) attributed to anti-balaka/3R, unidentified CPC and unidentified perpetrators, which occurred prior to 2021.

32. A total of 55 schools and 4 hospitals were used for military purposes by the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (23), other security personnel (15), UPC (10), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (5), unidentified CPC (3), 3R (2) and unidentified perpetrators (1). Four schools continued to be used as at December 2021 by the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (2), other security personnel (1) and unidentified CPC (1).

33. The United Nations verified the abduction of 111 children (47 boys, 64 girls) by CPC (76) (FPRC (51), 3R (10), anti-balaka (6), unidentified CPC (6), UPC (3)); LRA (24); unidentified perpetrators (5); by the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic and by other security personnel (2 each); and by UPC/Guenderou faction and by unidentified ex-Séléka (1 each). Most children were abducted for the purposes of recruitment and use and/or sexual violence (94). One child was killed, 15 children were released, 89 children escaped and the status of 6 children is unknown. The United Nations verified the abduction of children by anti-balaka (2) and FPRC (1), which occurred in previous years.

34. The United Nations verified 118 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access, most of which were attributed to armed groups (70): CPC (66) (unidentified CPC (19), anti-balaka and FPRC (12 each), FPRC/UPC (8), 3R (5), UPC (4), FPRC/MPC and MPC (2 each), anti-balaka/MPC and 3R/MPC (1 each)); UPC/Guenderou faction (3); and unidentified ex-Séléka (1). Responsibility for 19 violations was attributed to government and pro-government forces: other security personnel (7), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (6), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (3), internal security forces (2), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/internal security forces (1), and unidentified perpetrators (29). Most incidents involved robberies, extortion, the destruction of property and assaults on humanitarian personnel.

Developments and concerns

35. I welcome the development by the Government of interministerial plans to implement the Child Protection Code. I remain concerned by the surge in the number of violations against children and by the recurrent attacks on and the military use of schools and hospitals and by the increased number child casualties caused by the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic and other security personnel. I call upon the Government to swiftly appoint child protection focal points in the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic, issue command directives applicable to all forces in the country, and, in cooperation with the United Nations, end and prevent grave violations by the Armed Forces and other security personnel. I urge the Government to investigate ongoing violations and hold perpetrators accountable. I continue to urge the Government to adopt a protocol for the handover of children associated with armed groups to civilian protection actors.

36. I urge the Government and other signatories of the Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic to cooperate with the United Nations to develop a national strategy to prevent and eliminate grave violations against children, and I request my Special Representative and the country task force to engage with the Government and signatories of the Agreement in support of this effort.

37. I note that United Nations dialogue with armed groups led to the release of 134 children from FPRC (92) and UPC (42). I am alarmed by the scale of violations attributed to armed groups, particularly CPC, such as the ongoing recruitment and use of children, and a sharp increase in sexual violence, abductions and in the number of attacks on schools and hospitals. I urge FPRC, MPC and UPC, all of which have signed action plans with the United Nations, to comply with their commitments and call upon all parties to adopt concrete measures to cease all grave violations, unconditionally release associated children and respect the civilian character of schools and hospitals.

38. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Central African Republic (S/2021/882).

Colombia

39. The United Nations verified 231 grave violations against 192 children (136 boys, 56 girls), including 26 children who were victims of multiple violations.

40. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 123 children (98 boys, 25 girls), between the ages of 12 and 17. Perpetrators were the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) dissident groups (75), Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN) (17), Autodefensas Gaitanistas de Colombia (AGC) (17), unidentified perpetrators (8) and Los Caparrapos (6). Children were used as combatants and in support roles. During their association, 13 children were killed or maimed and three were victims of sexual violence. Most violations occurred in Nariño (16), Chocó and Antioquia (13 each), Norte de Santander and Caquetá (12 each), and Arauca (10).

41. A total of 70 children (45 boys, 25 girls) were killed (31) and maimed (39) by unidentified perpetrators (44), ELN (8), the Colombian armed forces (7), AGC (6) and FARC-EP dissident groups (5) mostly in Cauca (16), Chocó (13), and Antioquia (9). Child casualties resulted from gunshots (31), landmines, improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war (30), air strikes (6) and torture and inhuman treatment (3).

42. Rape and other forms of sexual violence affected 11 girls and the cases were attributed to FARC-EP dissident groups (6), unidentified perpetrators (3), ELN (1) and the Colombian armed forces (1). Most violations (7) occurred in Nariño Department.

43. Nine attacks on schools (6), hospitals (3) and protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals were verified and attributed to FARC-EP dissident groups (5), unidentified perpetrators (2), and ELN and Los Caparrapos (1 each). Incidents involved the killing and abduction of, and threats against, protected personnel, and damage to facilities.

44. Three schools were used by the Colombian armed forces (2) and AGC (1) in Arauca (2) and Chocó (1) Departments. The Colombian armed forces vacated the schools after a few hours.

45. A total of 16 children (11 boys, 5 girls) were abducted by ELN (7), Los Caparrapos (6) and FARC-EP dissident groups (3), mostly for recruitment purposes. Twelve of the children were released.

46. Two incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were verified and attributed to FARC-EP dissident groups and unidentified perpetrators in Arauca and Norte de Santander.

Developments and concerns

47. In January, the Government launched a strategy for the local implementation of the policy to prevent the recruitment and use of children and sexual violence against children. The programme, entitled “Súmate por mí” (Join Up for Me), continued in 209 municipalities, aimed at preventing child recruitment and use by armed groups. I commend these initiatives and encourage the Government to allocate adequate resources for their implementation, particularly at the local level and in vulnerable areas. I encourage the Government to continue demining and mine risk education activities. I urge the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration and to end the military use of schools. I request my Special Representative and the country task force to further engage with the Government so as to support its protection and prevention efforts.

48. I welcome the fact that 180 children (126 boys, 54 girls) who were separated from armed groups entered the protection programme of the Colombian Family Welfare Institute. I also welcome the fact that the Institute is providing training to the Colombian armed forces on child rights.

49. I am concerned by the continued increase in the number of grave violations against children, notably in the cases of recruitment and use and abduction of children by armed groups, particularly by FARC-EP dissident groups and ELN. I urge armed groups to immediately end violations, unconditionally release children and adopt measures to end grave violations. I reiterate my call upon all parties to take all necessary measures to protect children during operations.

50. I urge all parties to end and prevent sexual violence. I commend the Government for investigating and prosecuting perpetrators, including members of the Colombian armed forces, and urge it to continue to do so. I further call upon the Government to ensure that adequate programmes are accessible to all survivors, including child-friendly and safe reporting and response mechanisms.

51. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Colombia (S/2021/1022).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

52. The United Nations verified 3,546 violations against 2,979 children (2,090 boys, 889 girls). In addition, 790 grave violations against 238 children (162 boys, 76 girls) which occurred prior to 2021 were verified during the reporting period. At least 650 children were victims of multiple violations.

53. The United Nations verified the new recruitment and use of 565 children (487 boys, 78 girls), all of whom were separated in 2021, by Nyatura (120), Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS) (101), Mai-Mai Mazembe (80), the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) (60) and other armed groups (198). Six children were used as spies by the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (5) and in hostilities (1). Cases were verified in North Kivu (385), Ituri (105), South Kivu (56), Maniema (13) and Tanganyika (4). Two children were recruited in Burundi and Uganda and trafficked into the Democratic Republic of the Congo for use by the Forces nationales de libération and ADF, respectively. Of the total, 241 children were used in combat and 324 children were used in support roles. In addition, 42 girls were also used for and subjected to sexual violence. Furthermore, the recruitment and use of 128 children (121 boys, 7 girls) by Raia Mutomboki (46), Mai-Mai Mazembe (31), Nyatura (13) and other armed groups (38), which occurred in previous years, were verified in 2021.

54. In addition, 1,298 children (1,168 boys, 130 girls), recruited in previous years, were used until their separation in 2021 by Nyatura (237), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (168), Mai-Mai Mazembe (159), Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové (NDC-Rénové) (118), APCLS (106), Mai-Mai Bilonze Bishambuke (57), Raia Mutomboki (50) and 34 other armed groups (403) in North Kivu (773), South Kivu (231), Tanganyika (229), other provinces (63) and in Rwanda (2). Some 714 children were used in combat and 584 children were used in support roles. Two boys and 54 girls were also used for and subjected to sexual violence.

55. The United Nations verified the detention of 160 children (142 boys, 18 girls) by the armed forces (152) and the Congolese National Police (8); 151 children were released.

56. The United Nations verified the killing (285) and maiming (157) of 442 children (272 boys, 170 girls) mostly by armed groups (353): ADF (101), Coopérative pour le développement du Congo (CODECO) (95), Front patriotique et intégrationniste du Congo (25), Nyatura (22), Twigwaneho (19), unidentified Mai-Mai groups (16), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (15), APCLS (13), and other groups (47). Government forces were responsible for 62 child casualties ((armed forces (52); police (10)). The remaining 27 casualties were attributed to unidentified perpetrators, including 25 resulting from explosive remnants of war. Attacks against civilians (289), crossfire (64) and explosive remnants of war (32) were the main causes of child casualties. In addition, the killing (20) and maiming (12) of 32 children (21 boys, 11 girls) by armed groups (31) and the armed forces (1), which occurred in previous years, were verified in 2021.

57. The United Nations verified that 436 children (7 boys, 429 girls) were subjected to sexual violence, mostly by armed groups (336): Nyatura (85), CODECO (72), Mai-Mai Malaika (42), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (33), APCLS (18), ADF (13), Raia Mutomboki (12), Mai-Mai Mazembe (11) and other armed groups (50). Government forces were responsible for 100 violations (Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (82), police (17); National Intelligence Agency (1)). Most of the incidents involved rape (268), gang rape (96) and sexual slavery (47). In addition, cases of sexual violence against 121 children (3 boys, 118 girls) by armed groups (96) and government forces (25) (armed forces (18); police (7)), which occurred in previous years, were verified in 2021.

58. The United Nations verified 112 attacks on schools (69), and hospitals (43) and on protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, attributed to government forces (40) (armed forces (39); police (1)), CODECO (31), Mai-Mai groups (21), ADF (18) and other armed groups (2). The incidents included destruction (68), looting (37) and attacks against related protected persons (7). In addition, one attack on a hospital by Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale, from a previous year, was verified in 2021.

59. Four schools were used for military purposes by the armed forces.

60. A total of 684 children (416 boys, 268 girls) were abducted by ADF (181), Nyatura (104), APCLS (64), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (55), CODECO (48), other armed groups (217) and the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (15). The purposes of the abductions included recruitment and use (460) and sexual violence (94). Abductions occurred in North Kivu (308), Ituri (210), South Kivu (83) and other provinces (77), and in neighbouring countries (6). In addition, the abduction of 508 children (434 boys, 74 girls) by Nyatura (118), Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale (67) and other groups (323), which occurred in previous years, was verified in 2021.

61. Nine incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to CODECO (3), unidentified Mai-Mai groups (2), and to the armed forces, Mai-Mai Malaika, NDC-Rénové and Twigwaneho (1 each). Incidents included threats and violence against humanitarian personnel and assets, abductions, checkpoints and extortion.

62. I welcome the commitment of the Government to sustain the gains made in preventing child recruitment and use, including through screening mechanisms. I call upon the Government to pursue those efforts and act to prevent cases of use of children by its armed forces.

63. I further call upon the Government to redouble efforts to end and prevent sexual violence against children, including by its forces, which are responsible for a persistently high number of violations. I reiterate my call upon the Government to implement the 2012 action plan and other commitments to address conflict-related sexual violence and prioritize access to services for survivors.

64. I commend the Government for its efforts to hold perpetrators of grave violations accountable and urge them to continue to do so, including for cases of child recruitment and use, and for cases of sexual violence.

65. I am troubled by the staggeringly high number of violations against children, particularly those committed by armed groups, and amid rising intercommunal violence, hate speech and attacks on civilians. I am concerned by the increase in the number of violations by government forces, particularly the killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals, mostly in Ituri and North Kivu Provinces. I urge all parties to cease and prevent violations against children, to protect children during operations and immediately and unconditionally to release children. I call upon the Government to implement the Safe Schools Declaration, which it endorsed in 2016.

66. I call upon the Government to release children detained for alleged association with armed groups and to treat them in line with the 2013 governmental directives and international juvenile justice standards.

67. The signature by six commanders of unilateral commitments to protect children, following United Nations advocacy, and the release of 430 children, are welcomed. I urge groups that have not done so, including ADF, CODECO, and Mai-Mai groups operating in the Hauts Plateaux (South Kivu) to cease violations, immediately and unconditionally release children, and to engage with the United Nations to end and prevent violations.

68. I welcome the new disarmament, demobilization and reintegration community and stabilization programme and urge the Government to give children special consideration in the implementation thereof. I call upon international partners to support and fund reintegration programmes for children separated from armed groups.

Iraq

69. The United Nations verified 288 grave violations against 167 children (131 boys, 32 girls, 4 sex unknown). In addition, 16 grave violations against 16 children (4 boys, 12 girls), which occurred in previous years, were verified in 2021.

70. No cases of the recruitment and use of children were verified during the reporting period. The recruitment and use of one boy by Da'esh (in 2017) was verified in 2021.

71. As at December 2021, 1,267 children (1,251 boys, 16 girls) remained in detention on national security-related charges, for up to five years, including for their actual or alleged association with armed groups, primarily Da'esh.

72. A total of 159 children (127 boys, 28 girls, 4 unknown sex) were killed (72) and maimed (87) by unidentified perpetrators (101), Da'esh (37), Iraqi security forces (12), Operation Claw<sup>5</sup> (6) and the Popular Mobilization Forces (PMF) (3). The majority of incidents occurred in areas previously under the control of Da'esh. Child casualties resulted from explosive remnants of war (127), ground engagement (24), crossfire (1) and air strikes (7). In addition, the killing of two boys in 2017 by unidentified perpetrators was verified in 2021.

73. Rape and other forms of sexual violence perpetrated against 6 girls by Da'esh in 2014 were verified in 2021.

74. Three attacks on schools (1) and hospitals (2) were verified and attributed to Da'esh (2) and Operation Claw (1). A total of 33 instances of the military use of schools by the Iraqi police (25), PMF (4), the Iraqi army (3) and the Peshmerga (1) were verified in Kirkuk (29), Ninawa (3) and in Salah al-Din (1) Governorates.

75. The United Nations verified the abduction of 8 children (4 boys, 4 girls) by Da'esh. In addition, the abduction of 7 children (1 boy, 6 girls) by Da'esh in 2014 was verified in 2021.

76. A total of 118 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to Iraqi security forces (89), PMF (16), the Iraqi police (10), Operation Claw (1), national security services (1) and to unidentified perpetrators (1).

Developments and concerns

77. I welcome the absence of cases of the recruitment and use of children attributed to PMF and the engagement between the Government and the United Nations to prevent grave violations, and the progress made towards the development of an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by PMF. I urge the Government to prioritize the adoption and implementation of the action plan. The prompt signature and implementation of the action plan may make PMF eligible for delisting from the annexes to my report on children and armed conflict upon United Nations verification that the terms of the action plan have been fulfilled, including that the violations mentioned therein have ceased, and that measures are in place to prevent their reoccurrence.

78. I am concerned that explosive remnants of war are the leading cause for rising child casualties. I urge the Government to fully implement international legal instruments on mines and explosive remnants of war. I call upon the Government to continue demining, mine risk education and victim assistance, including prior to any movement by internally displaced persons to contaminated areas.

79. I am troubled by the increase in the number of children detained on national security-related charges, including for their actual or alleged association with Da'esh. These children should be treated primarily as victims and in line with international juvenile justice standards. Children should only be detained as a last resort and for the shortest period of time. I call upon the Government to release these children to child protection actors.

80. I welcome the adoption of the Law on Support to Female Yazidi Survivors. I encourage the Government to address the needs of other minorities, of boys and men who are survivors of Da'esh atrocities and of children born of rape.

81. I commend the Government for the repatriation of 336 Iraqi families, including 858 children, from Hawl camp in the Syrian Arab Republic. I welcome the repatriation of 223 children from Iraq to their countries of origin. I reiterate my call upon all countries concerned to facilitate the voluntary repatriation and reintegration of children, in line with the principle of non-refoulement, with respect for family unity and the best interests of the child, and in accordance with international law.

82. I encourage the Government to facilitate the reintegration of all children affected by armed conflict, with the support of the United Nations.

83. I reiterate my recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Iraq (S/2022/46).

Israel and the State of Palestine<sup>6</sup>

84. The United Nations verified 2,934 grave violations against 1,208 Palestinian children and 9 Israeli children (915 boys, 302 girls) in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and Israel.

85. The United Nations verified the recruitment of one Palestinian boy by the Mujahidin Brigades in Gaza. In addition, the recruitment and use of one boy by Hamas' Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades in 2019 was verified in 2021. In Gaza, Palestinian Islamic Jihad's Al-Quds Brigades, Hamas' Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades, Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine Abu Ali Mustafa Brigades and Palestinian Mujahidin Movement Mujahidin Brigades, organized "summer camps" for adults and children as young as 14, exposing them to military content and activities.

86. The United Nations verified the detention of 637 Palestinian children for alleged security offences by Israeli forces in the occupied West Bank, including 557 in East Jerusalem. Among those children, 85 reported ill-treatment and breaches of due process by Israeli forces while in detention, with 75 per cent reporting having experienced physical violence.

87. A total of 88 children (86 Palestinians, 2 Israelis; 64 boys, 24 girls) were killed in Gaza (69), in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (17) and in Israel (2), by Israeli forces (78), Palestinian armed groups (8), unidentified perpetrators and explosive remnants of war (2). All 17 children in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, were killed by Israeli forces using live ammunition mainly during demonstrations (9), and in relation to alleged or attempted attacks on Israeli civilians or forces (7). In Gaza, 59 children were killed by air strikes and 1 by live ammunition by Israeli forces during the escalation of hostilities in May, 6 by rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups, one by Israeli forces during a demonstration at the Israel-Gaza perimeter fence, one by explosive remnants of war and one by unidentified perpetrators. The two Israeli children were killed by rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups.

88. A total of 1,128 children (1,121 Palestinians, 7 Israelis; 850 boys, 278 girls) were maimed in Gaza (661), in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (464) and in Israel (3), by Israeli forces (982), Israeli settlers (28), Palestinian armed groups (46), including Palestinian Islamic Jihad's Al-Quds Brigades (18), Palestinian perpetrators (4), and unidentified perpetrators (68), including by explosive remnants of war (10). The main causes of maiming by Israeli forces were shelling and air strikes (539), tear gas inhalation (153), rubber-coated metal bullets (133) and live ammunition (116). Of the children maimed by Israeli forces in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, 196 were maimed during demonstrations against settlement activities. A total of 43 Palestinian children were maimed by Palestinian armed groups, including Palestinian Islamic Jihad's Al-Quds Brigades (18), in Gaza, by rockets fired during the escalation in May (18), as a result of the explosion of stored weapons (23) and as a result of accidents involving children who were near to military training exercises (2). The 7 Israeli children were maimed by rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups, including Hamas' al-Qassam Brigades, striking Israel (3), and by Palestinian perpetrators during stone-throwing incidents in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (4).

89. The United Nations verified 134 attacks on schools (22) and hospitals (112), including on protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals (61), attributed to Israeli forces (128), Palestinian Islamic Jihad's Al-Quds Brigades (5) and Palestinian armed groups (1), in Gaza (72), the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem (61) and in Israel (1). Incidents involved air strikes (67), attacks on medical personnel (59), the explosion of munitions stored in the vicinity of schools and/or hospitals (5), threats against school personnel (2) and a rocket attack (1). Separately, 156 other interferences with health (54) and education (102) by Israeli forces (152) and Israeli settlers (4) were verified. Most involved Israeli forces firing weapons at health facilities (4), at ambulances and paramedics (45), at or in the vicinity of schools (27) and closures of checkpoints or the denial of teachers' and students' access through checkpoints (45). Of concern, in the context of a subsequent investigation into how to secure a school of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East that had been struck by two Israeli missiles, the existence of a possible tunnel under the school was discovered, for potential use by Palestinian armed groups, with no indication of the existence of any entry or exit points for the tunnel within the premises.

90. The denial of humanitarian access by Israeli forces (1,582) and Palestinian armed groups (1) was verified in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in Gaza. Some 38 per cent of permit applications to Israeli authorities for children to exit through the Erez crossing to access specialized medical treatment outside Gaza were delayed or denied, affecting 1,581 applications (933 boys, 648 girls).

91. I welcome the collaboration extended by Israeli and Palestinian parties to my Special Representative.

92. I am alarmed by the increase in grave violations against children, particularly the dramatic rise in killing and maiming, including in the context of the escalation of hostilities in May 2021, despite commitments by Israeli and Palestinian parties to implement corrective measures and strengthen protection frameworks following consultations with my Special Representative (A/75/873-S/2021/437). I urge the Israeli forces and Palestinian armed groups to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian and international human rights law, including by ensuring that operations are conducted in line with the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and to immediately correct and reinforce existing measures to ensure the protection of children affected by armed conflict. I reiterate my call upon all parties to continue to engage with my Special Representative and the United Nations, including at the country level, to end and prevent grave violations against children and to better protect children and respect international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

93. I am shocked by the number of children killed and maimed by Israeli forces during hostilities, in air strikes on densely populated areas and through the use of live ammunition during law enforcement operations, and by the persistent lack of accountability for these violations. I express serious concern regarding the excessive use of force and reiterate that security forces must exercise maximum restraint and use lethal force only when it is strictly unavoidable in order to protect life and put in place preventive and protective measures to end and prevent any excessive use of force against children. I note the existing procedures, which have been shared with my Special Representative, and I urge Israeli authorities to review and strengthen their procedures to prevent any excessive use of force. I further urge Israel to continue to investigate each case where live ammunition was used, as required by procedure, and to pursue accountability for violations against children. I exhort Israel to better protect schools.

94. I am concerned by the increase in the number of children detained by Israel and by the reports by children of physical violence directed against them during detention. I reiterate my call upon Israel to uphold international juvenile justice standards, including the use of detention as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, to end the administrative detention of children, and to prevent any violence and ill-treatment in detention.

95. I am concerned by the increase in the killing and maiming of children by Palestinian armed groups and by recurrent incidents of recruitment and use of children. I call upon Palestinian armed groups to cease the recruitment and use of children and to abide by their domestic and international legal obligations. I call upon Palestinian armed groups to cease all indiscriminate launching of rockets and mortars from densely populated areas in Gaza towards Israeli civilian population centres. I urge all Palestinian armed groups to protect children, including by preventing them from being exposed to the risk of violence or by abstaining from instrumentalizing them for political purposes.

Lebanon

96. The United Nations verified 55 grave violations against 51 children (45 boys, 6 girls).

97. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 32 boys, between the ages of 11 and 17, by unidentified armed groups (24), Fath al-Islam (3), Hizbullah (2), Jund Ansar Allah (1), Saraya al-Muqawama<sup>7</sup> (1) and Da'esh (1).

98. Children continued to be arrested and prosecuted under military jurisdiction on national security-related charges, with the verified detention of three boys.

99. A total of 19 children (13 boys, 6 girls) were killed (9) and maimed (10) by unidentified perpetrators as a result of armed clashes (12), cluster munitions or explosive remnants of war (7).

100. The United Nations verified four attacks on schools by unidentified perpetrators in Palestine refugee camps.

101. I reiterate my call upon the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

102. I am concerned about the continued detention of children. I urge the Government to release these children to reintegration actors and treat them primarily as victims. The detention of children should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time.

103. I am concerned about the increasing recruitment and use of children and call upon armed groups to cease this practice.

104. I am disturbed by continuing armed clashes in Palestine refugee camps and their negative impact on children. I urge the Palestinian National Security Forces to fully apply their Code of Conduct and Code of Ethics in these camps.

Libya

105. The United Nations verified 63 grave violations against 52 children (32 boys, 20 girls).

106. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of one boy by forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord, which occurred before March 2021.

107. The United Nations verified the detention of 125 children and their mothers, of several nationalities, for their mothers' alleged association with Da'esh, by the Judicial Police, in Judaydah prison (93), by the Deterrent Agency for Combating Organized Crime and Terrorism, in Mitiga prison (22), and by the Libyan National Army (LNA) and affiliated forces (10) in Kuwayfayah prison. Eighteen of the children were repatriated to their countries of origin.

108. The verified killing (17) and maiming (21) of 38 children (28 boys, 10 girls) was attributed to unidentified perpetrators (28), including in crossfire between the Deterrent Agency for Combating Organized Crime and Terrorism and the Stability Support Apparatus (1), and LNA and affiliated forces (10), and were mostly caused by explosive remnants of war (20) mortar shelling (6) and landmines (6).

109. Sexual violence was verified as having been perpetrated against seven girls by the Abu Issa Brigade and Tripoli Revolutionaries Brigade in control of detention facilities of the Department for Combating Illegal Migration.

110. One attack on a school by unidentified perpetrators was verified in Tripoli.

111. The abduction of six children (3 boys, 3 girls) was attributed to forces affiliated with the former Government of National Accord (1) before March 2021, the Internal Security Agency (4) and unidentified perpetrators (1).

112. Ten denials of humanitarian access were attributed to forces affiliated to the Government of National Unity (1) and unidentified perpetrators (9).

113. I welcome the efforts of the Libyan authorities to strengthen the protection of children, in particular the declaration by the Government of National Unity of 25 November 2021.<sup>8</sup> I welcome the establishment of specialized courts for the prosecution of violence against women and children.

114. I am concerned about the prevalence of killing and maiming of children, in particular by explosive remnants of war. I call upon Libya to become party to international legal instruments on mines and explosive remnants of war. I call upon the Libyan authorities to advance the implementation of the ceasefire agreement with an emphasis on the reintegration of children.

115. I encourage the Libyan authorities to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of women and children actually or allegedly associated with Da'esh and call upon all countries concerned to facilitate their voluntary repatriation and reintegration, in line with the principle of non-refoulement and with respect for the best interests of the child and in accordance with international law.

116. I urge the Libyan authorities to engage with my Special Representative and the United Nations to develop and adopt measures to end and prevent violations against children, particularly the denial of humanitarian access to children.

117. I am appalled by reports of abuse of refugee and migrant children, including torture and sexual violence. I urge the Libyan authorities to immediately end child detention, pursue alternatives to detention and facilitate access by the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies to detention centres and disembarkation points.

Mali

118. The United Nations verified 994 grave violations against 648 children (478 boys, 149 girls, 21 sex unknown), including 22 children who were victims of multiple violations. In addition, 42 grave violations affecting 39 boys and 3 girls that occurred in earlier years were verified in 2021.

119. A total of 352 children (288 boys, 64 girls), some as young as 6, were recruited and used by Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad (CMA) (151) (Haut Conseil pour l'unité de l'Azawad (HCUA) (60), Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad (MNL) (57), Mouvement arabe de l'Azawad (MAA)-CMA (19) and unidentified CMA (15)); unidentified perpetrators (66); Dozo traditional hunters (48); Platform (47) (Ganda Izo (24), Mouvement pour le salut de l'Azawad (MSA) of the Dawsahak (13), Groupe d'autodéfense des Touaregs Imghad et leurs alliés (GATIA) (7), Ganda Koy (2), and MAA-Platform (1)); Front de libération du Macina (FLM) (16); Jama 'a Nusrat ul-Islam wa al-Muslimin (JNIM) (10); the Malian armed forces (8); Mouvement pour le salut de l'Azawad (MSA) of the Chamanamas (3); and Islamic State in the Greater Sahara (ISGS) (3). Children were mostly recruited in Kidal (115), Gao (94), Mopti (61), Ménaka (30) and Timbuktu (27) Regions. Children were used in hostilities (39), in support roles and for sexual violence. In addition, in 2021 the United Nations verified earlier cases of the recruitment and use of 42 children (39 boys, 3 girls) by CMA/MNL (22); Platform (15) (Ganda Izo (7), Ganda Koy (5), MSA of the Dawsahak (3)); and Coalition du peuple de l'Azawad (CPA) (5).

120. Seven boys were arrested by national authorities for their alleged association with armed groups. Five boys remain in detention. In accordance with the handover protocol signed in 2013 by the Government of Mali and the United Nations, 10 children captured during military operations were transferred to civilian child protection services.

121. A total of 201 children (132 boys, 56 girls, 13 sex unknown) were killed (73) and maimed (128) by unidentified perpetrators (142), ISGS (40), the Malian armed forces (12), Operation Barkhane (2), Ganda Izo (2), FLM (2) and JNIM (1). Most child casualties resulted from gunshot wounds during attacks on villages and improvised explosive devices or explosive remnants of war (40), and most of them occurred in Gao (79) and Mopti (70) Regions.

122. Sexual violence affected 35 girls, in cases attributed to unidentified perpetrators (30), the Malian armed forces (4) and JNIM (1). Violations occurred mostly in Gao (15) and Mopti (10) Regions and involved rape (17), forced marriage (15), sexual assault (2) and attempted rape (1). No perpetrators were arrested.

123. The United Nations verified 153 attacks on schools (120), hospitals (33) and protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals attributed to unidentified perpetrators (135), JNIM (9), FLM (6), ISGS (2) and Dan Nan Ambassagou (DNA) (1). Incidents involved the abduction of and threats against related protected persons, the destruction and burning of facilities and looting. They occurred mostly in Mopti (60), Ségou (45) and Timbuktu (32) Regions.

124. One school has been used for over two years by Dozo traditional hunters in Mopti Region.

125. Some 94 children (67 boys, 19 girls, 8 sex unknown) were abducted by unidentified perpetrators (76), DNA (8), FLM (6), ISGS (3) and MAA (1), including for forced marriage (12), intelligence gathering (9), recruitment and use (6), as a result of accusations of treason (3) and for sexual violence (1). Most incidents occurred in Gao (41) and Mopti (36) Regions. One child was killed, 5 escaped and 44 were released.

126. The United Nations verified 159 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access by unidentified perpetrators (155) and JNIM (4), mostly in Mopti (71), Gao (30), Timbuktu (21) and Ségou (14) Regions. Incidents involved violence and threats against humanitarian personnel, including killing, abduction, carjacking and robbery.

Developments and concerns

127. I welcome the engagement of the transitional Government with the United Nations to establish a framework between the Malian armed forces and the United Nations to address grave violations against children by armed forces and I call for its endorsement and implementation, including by notifying the United Nations of children associated with the Malian armed forces and releasing them. I call upon the transitional Government to finalize the revision of the Child Protection Code, criminalizing the recruitment and use of children, including those between the ages of 15 and 17, and to work with the United Nations to develop a national prevention strategy on grave violations against children. I request my Special Representative and the country task force to further engage with the transitional Government.

128. I welcome advances in the implementation of the Safe Schools Declaration and in revising the bill on the protection of education from attacks. I call for its adoption and implementation.

129. I welcome the signature by two Platform factions on 26 August of action plans to end and prevent child recruitment and use. Furthermore, CMA and the United Nations organized two workshops to accelerate the implementation of the 2017 action plan. I remain concerned by the continued recruitment and use of children by CMA and Platform and I call upon these parties to prevent further recruitment and use and implement their action plans with United Nations support.

130. I remain alarmed at the elevated number of grave violations against children, notably the sharp increase in attacks on schools. I urge all parties to immediately cease all violations, unconditionally release associated children, protect schools and hospitals and allow the safe and unimpeded access of humanitarian actors to affected populations.

Myanmar

131. The United Nations verified 503 grave violations against 462 children (390 boys, 69 girls, 3 sex unknown). In addition, an earlier violation against one child was verified in 2021. The monitoring and reporting mechanism faced serious safety, security and access challenges following the military takeover on 1 February 2021.

132. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 280 children (260 boys, 20 girls), some as young as 12, attributed to the Tatmadaw (222), Kachin Independence Army (KIA) (50), Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army — South (RCSS/SSA-South) (6), Shan State Progress Party/Shan State Army (SSPP/SSA) (1) and the Arakan Army (AA) (1), in Rakhine (203), Kachin (40), Shan (16), Mon (13) Chin (2), Kayah (1), Magway (1), Mandalay (1), Sagaing (1), Taninthayi (1) states and regions and in Yangon (1). A total of 13 children (10 boys, 3 girls) were released by KIA, following advocacy by the United Nations, civil society or their parents.

133. The United Nations verified the detention of 87 children (75 boys, 12 girls) by the police and the Tatmadaw for their alleged association with armed groups. In addition, a boy who had been detained by the Tatmadaw since September 2020 was released in 2021.

134. The United Nations verified the killing (65) and maiming (104) of 169 children (119 boys, 47 girls, 3 sex unknown), which were attributed to the Tatmadaw (75), Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) (2), Pyu Saw Htee (1) and KIA (1), as well as unidentified perpetrators (90), including as a result of explosive remnants of war (29), improvised explosive devices (21), landmines (17) and crossfire (16), in Shan (41), Rakhine (23), Chin (22), Sagaing (18), Kachin (16), Magway (14), Kayah (12), Kayin (10), Mon (9) and Taninthayi (4) states and regions. In addition, the maiming of one girl by the Tatmadaw in 2020 was verified in 2021.

135. The United Nations verified the rape of one girl by the Tatmadaw.

136. The United Nations verified 27 attacks on schools (14) and hospitals (13), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, attributed to the Tatmadaw (17) and unidentified perpetrators (10), including crossfire between RCSS/SSA-South, Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) and SSPP/SSA (1) in Kayin (7), Shan (7), Kayah (6), Kachin (4), Mon (2) and Chin (1) States.

137. The United Nations verified the military use of 53 schools (51) and hospitals (2) by the Tatmadaw (52) and AA (1) in Rakhine (31), Kayah (7), Kayin (6), Chin (6) and Kachin (3) States.

138. The abduction of 24 children (22 boys, 2 girls) by the Tatmadaw (10), AA (5), KIA (4), SSPP/SSA (3) and RCSS/SSA-South (2), in Shan (7), Rakhine (5), Kachin (4), Kayah (4), Chin (2), Mon (1) States and in Taninthayi (1) was verified by the United Nations.

139. Two incidents of the denial of humanitarian access by the Tatmadaw in Shan State (2) were verified by the United Nations. Administrative impediments, security threats, control and restrictions of passage severely affected the delivery of humanitarian assistance to children. The expansion of armed conflict in new areas and the intensification of clashes in both the north-west and south-east regions increased humanitarian needs.

140. I note the intention of the Tatmadaw to continue implementing the 2012 joint action plan on the recruitment and use of children, but I am extremely concerned by the continued high number of children used, predominantly in Rakhine. I call upon the Tatmadaw to implement all activities of the joint action plan, in close cooperation with the United Nations, in order to immediately cease the use of children and prevent their recruitment and use.

141. I am gravely concerned by the surge in the number of attacks targeting children, and I strongly urge the Tatmadaw to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law. I reiterate my call upon the Tatmadaw to sign a joint action plan with the United Nations to end and prevent the killing and maiming of children and the perpetration of sexual violence against children.

142. I welcome the implementation of the joint action plan on the recruitment and use of children by the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army (DKBA). I welcome the engagement between KIA and the United Nations, leading to the release of 13 children.

143. I note that the National Unity Government<sup>9</sup> reported the development of guidelines and awareness-raising regarding the prevention of grave violations against children.

144. I strongly condemn the violations against children resulting from the military takeover by the Tatmadaw, including the killing and maiming of children, as well as the attacks on and the use of schools and hospitals. I am alarmed by the spread of clashes in new areas, and by the multiplication of the number of armed groups.

145. I condemn the ongoing grave violations and the increase in abductions and attacks on schools and hospitals by all parties to the conflict, and the increase in the military use of schools and hospitals. I remain concerned by casualties caused by explosive remnants of war, improvised explosive devices and landmines. I call upon all parties and those with influence over parties to end and prevent these violations. I reiterate my call for the accountability of perpetrators.

146. I am concerned by the increase in the number of cases of detention of children, and their being denied due process, as well as cases of torture and mistreatment of children. I call for the implementation of the 2019 Child Rights Law, and I urge the Tatmadaw to immediately release detained children and recall that children should be treated primarily as victims. Children should only be detained as a last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time.

147. I am concerned by the severe and increased restrictions to humanitarian access and call upon the Tatmadaw, as well as all other parties, to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access to children.

Somalia

148. The United Nations verified 3,340 grave violations against 2,687 children (2,041 boys, 646 girls), including 604 children who were victims of multiple violations.

149. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 1,161 children (1,116 boys, 45 girls) by Al-Shabaab (854); government security forces (138) (Somali Police

Children were used in support roles (176), in combat (69) or for unknown purposes (916).

150. A total of 195 children (192 boys, 3 girls) were detained for their alleged association with armed groups by the Somali Police Force (101), the Somali National Army (35), Jubbaland forces (20), Jubbaland police (9), Galmudug police (9), the National Intelligence and Security Agency (7), Puntland forces (6), Puntland police (6) and Galmudug forces (2).

151. The killing (200) and maiming (593) of 793 children (573 boys, 220 girls) was attributed to unidentified perpetrators (335); Al-Shabaab (256); government security forces (92) (Somali National Army (54) and Somali Police Force (38)); clan militia (58); regional forces (48) (Puntland police (14), Jubbaland forces (11), Jubbaland police (8), Puntland forces (8), Galmudug forces (4), Galmudug police (1), Hirshabelle police (1) and “Somaliland” police (1)); Da’esh (3); and Westland militia (1). The two main causes of casualties were crossfire between armed forces and groups (263) and explosive devices, including improvised explosive devices, mines and explosive remnants of war (187).

152. Responsibility for the perpetration of sexual violence against 307 children (1 boy, 306 girls) was attributed to unidentified perpetrators (205); Al-Shabaab (50), government security forces (26) (Somali National Army (18) and Somali Police Force (8)); clan militia (18); and regional forces (8) (Puntland police (3), Puntland forces (2), Jubbaland police (2) and Galmudug police (1)). Violations included rape (187), attempted rape (66) and forced marriage (42). Eleven cases were resolved traditionally, 13 perpetrators were arrested, while 283 perpetrators remained at large.

153. The United Nations verified 33 attacks on schools (30) and hospitals (3), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, by Al-Shabaab (30), the Somali Police Force (2) and unidentified perpetrators (1). Most incidents (25) involved the abduction of teachers and students.

154. A total of 1,030 children (933 boys, 97 girls) were abducted by Al-Shabaab (1,012), clan militia (5) and unidentified perpetrators (13). Most children were abducted for recruitment and use (532), owing to alleged association with armed forces (104) and as a result of non-compliance with codes imposed by Al-Shabaab (131). Some were released (123) or escaped (35).

155. The United Nations verified 16 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access by clan militia (8), Al-Shabaab (5), the Somali National Army (1) and unidentified perpetrators (2).

Developments and concerns

156. I welcome the Government’s efforts to implement the 2012 action plans on ending and preventing the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children and the 2019 road map, including at the federal member state level. The establishment of working groups on children and armed conflict at the federal member state level is a positive development and I recommend expanding these to all states. I urge the Government to strengthen and expedite the implementation of its commitments to combat conflict-related sexual violence

157. I reiterate my call upon the Government to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child, fast-track the endorsement of the child rights bill, endorse the juvenile justice bill and age verification guidelines, and adopt the sexual offences bill of 2018. I underline that all legislation pertaining to children and sexual violence should be in line with Somalia's human rights commitments and meet international and regional standards.

158. I am concerned by the continuing high number of children in detention. I urge the Government to immediately release these children and to treat them primarily as victims. Children should only be detained as a last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time. I urge the Government to apply the standard operating procedures for the reception and handover of children separated from armed groups to child protection actors, endorsed in 2014.

159. I am concerned about clashes between Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a and security forces in Galmudug and call upon the group to cease child recruitment and use. I reiterate my call upon the Government to provide information on the integration of Ahl al-Sunna wal-Jama'a into the Somali Federal Defence and Police Forces and enable the United Nations to conduct screening exercises.

160. I am alarmed by the staggering numbers of grave violations committed by all parties to conflict, the majority of which were committed by Al-Shabaab. I call upon all parties to immediately cease and prevent violations and comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

161. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Somalia (S/2022/397).

South Sudan

162. The United Nations verified 196 grave violations against 183 children (148 boys, 35 girls), including two girls who were victims of multiple violations. Violations occurred in Jonglei (51), Central Equatoria (40), Western Equatoria (35), Lakes (20), Western Bahr el-Ghazal (17), Northern Bahr el-Ghazal (13), Unity (10), Upper Nile (9), and Eastern Equatoria (1) States.

163. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 129 children (124 boys, 5 girls), with 30 per cent of the children recruited under the age of 15, by the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, including the Taban Deng-allied South Sudan People's Defence Forces (69), forces loyal to General James Nando (20), the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Opposition – pro-Machar (SPLA-IO) (14), the South Sudan National Police Service (12), forces loyal to General Moses Lokujo (9), the South Sudan Opposition Alliance (SSOA) (4) and the National Salvation Front (NAS) (1). Children were used as combatants, bodyguards and cooks.

164. The killing (12) and maiming (25) of 37 children (21 boys, 16 girls) was perpetrated by the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (2) and unidentified perpetrators (35), including resulting from explosive remnants of war (27) and crossfire between the South Sudan People's Defence Forces and NAS (2), SPLA-IO and armed youths (3) and forces loyal to General James Nando and armed youths (1).

165. Rape and other forms of sexual violence were perpetrated against 9 girls by the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (2), SPLA-IO (6) and NAS (1). In addition, in 2021, the United Nations verified three girls as survivors of sexual violence perpetrated by SPLA-IO prior to 2021.

166. Four attacks on hospitals were attributed to NAS (1) and unidentified perpetrators (3). In addition, the military use of 9 schools and 2 hospitals by the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (10) and SPLA-IO (1) was verified.

167. A total of 11 children (3 boys, 8 girls) were abducted by the South Sudan People's Defence Forces (1), SPLA-IO (5) and NAS (5).

168. Six incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to unidentified perpetrators.

169. I welcome steps towards the implementation of the 2020 comprehensive action plan to end and prevent all grave violations against children and reiterate my call for the expedited implementation of the action plan and for the Government to budget for this accordingly. I underline the importance of the implementation of the Revitalized Peace Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan, including its provisions relating to children.

170. I urge the Government to combat the prevalent impunity for grave violations and to hold perpetrators accountable, including through the designation of a focal point on children and armed conflict in the Ministry of Justice.

171. I encourage the continued cooperation of parties to conflict with the United Nations and the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission. I reiterate the need for child-sensitive disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, for coordinated mine action and for gender-sensitive and survivor-centred reintegration and assistance programmes, including for survivors of sexual violence. I call upon the international community to step up its support in this regard.

172. I welcome the increased access to barracks provided by the Government to the United Nations for age screening exercises, but I remain concerned by the number of children recruited and used, particularly by Government security forces. I call upon the Government and other parties to immediately cease and prevent all violations, to facilitate humanitarian assistance and protect humanitarian personnel, and to release associated children.

173. I am concerned about escalating subnational violence and the impact of climate change across South Sudan, and I request my Special Representative to analyse the impact of these conflict dynamics on children.

Sudan

174. The United Nations verified 202 grave violations against 195 children (137 boys, 57 girls, 1 sex unknown) in the Sudan,<sup>10</sup> including one girl who was the victim of multiple violations. In addition, 8 violations against 4 children (2 boys, 2 girls) that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021.

175. A total of 11 children (8 boys, 3 girls), some as young as 11, were verified as having been recruited and used by the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army-Transitional Council (SLM/A-TC) (8), the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid splinter group led by Ali Hamid “Shakush” (2) and the Sudanese Alliance (1) in Central Darfur (10) and West Darfur (1). The earlier recruitment of one girl by the Justice and Equality Movement was verified in 2021.

176. The killing (54) and maiming (112) of 166 children (128 boys, 37 girls, 1 sex unknown) was attributed to government security forces (27) (Sudanese Armed Forces (26) and Rapid Support Forces (1)); and unidentified perpetrators (139), including due to crossfire between the Sudanese Armed Forces and armed groups, intercommunal violence (83) and explosive remnants of war (41). The maiming of 2 boys by unidentified perpetrators, which occurred prior to 2021, was verified in 2021.

<sup>10</sup> Following the deployment of the United Nations Integrated Transition Assistance Mission in the Sudan (UNITAMS), pursuant to Security Council resolution 2524 (2020), and a reconfiguration of the country taskforce on monitoring and reporting, reporting on children and armed conflict in the Sudan now follows a whole-of-country approach.

177. Rape and other forms of sexual violence were perpetrated against 17 children (1 boy, 16 girls), with responsibility attributed to government security forces (3) (Sudan Police Force (2) and Sudanese Armed Forces (1)); and unidentified perpetrators (14) in North Darfur (11), South Darfur (4), West Darfur (1) and Central Darfur (1). The incidents included gang rape (2), rape (13) and attempted rape (2). Sexual violence perpetrated against one girl by the Sudan Police Force prior to 2021 was verified in 2021.

178. Two attacks on schools (1) and hospitals (1) in South Kordofan and East Darfur were attributed to unidentified perpetrators. In addition, four attacks on schools by the Sudanese Armed Forces, which occurred in previous years, were verified in 2021.

179. The military use of three schools by the Sudanese Armed Forces in West Darfur (2) and South Darfur (1) was verified.

180. The United Nations verified the abduction for sexual violence of one girl by the Sudanese Armed Forces (1) in North Darfur.

181. Five incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to the Sudanese Armed Forces (1), the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North Abdelaziz al-Hilu faction (1), and unidentified perpetrators (3) in East Darfur (2), Central Darfur (1), North Darfur (1) and Blue Nile (1).

Developments and concerns

182. I welcome the collaboration between the transitional authorities and the United Nations to strengthen the protection of children, resulting in the joint commitment by the transitional authorities and signatories to the Juba Agreement for Peace in the Sudan to a road map based on the 2016 action plan on ending and preventing child recruitment and use, and I call for the endorsement of the road map.

183. I reiterate my call upon the transitional authorities to engage with the United Nations on a longer-term national prevention plan to prevent all grave violations and sustain the gains of the 2016 action plan. I welcome the use of child rights and human rights units within the government security forces to address grave violations. I encourage the Juba Peace Agreement signatories to ensure their child protection focal points are embedded in these units. I encourage the transitional Government to continue to engage with the United Nations on ending and preventing grave violations within the framework of the Darfur Permanent Ceasefire Committee.

184. I am concerned about the stalled implementation of the Juba Peace Agreement, uncertainties surrounding the Sudanese transition following the military coup of 25 October 2021, rising intercommunal tensions in the Sudan, particularly in Darfur, and ongoing access restrictions to conflict-affected areas. I urge all parties to conflict to enable unhindered and safe access for the United Nations and humanitarian partners to conflict-affected populations.

185. I call upon the transitional authorities and security forces to refrain from the excessive use of force against children and to cease the military use of schools and hospitals. I urge the transitional Government to investigate all allegations of violations, including in the context of civil unrest, and to hold perpetrators accountable.

186. I am concerned about ongoing violations, particularly the killing and maiming of children and the perpetration of sexual violence against them. I call upon all parties to cease and prevent all grave violations against children. I urge the transitional authorities to ensure the safety of and access for mine action operations. I urge all parties to release associated children and hand them over to reintegration actors in accordance with the national framework on children affected by armed conflict.

187. I urge the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid, including all its factions, to engage with the United Nations in order to sign an action plan, and call upon the Justice and Equality Movement, the Sudan Liberation Army-Minni Minawi and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North Abdelaziz al-Hilu and Malik Agar factions to fully implement their respective action plans and other child protection commitments, including under the 2021 road map.

Syrian Arab Republic

188. The United Nations verified 2,271 grave violations against 2,202 children (1,824 boys, 235 girls, 143 sex unknown). In addition, 74 grave violations against 73 children (58 boys, 14 girls, 1 sex unknown) that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021.

189. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 1,296 children (1,258 boys, 38 girls) by the opposition Syrian National Army (SNA) (569) (Faylaq al-Sham (103), Hamzah Division (48), Ahrar al-Sham (41), Suqur al-Sham (38), Jabhah al-Sharqiyah (23), Sultan Murad Brigade (19), Jabhah al-Shamiyah (16), Jabhah al-Islamiyah (16), Jaysh al-Nusrah (8), Jaysh al-Sharqiyah (7), Samarqand Brigade (5), Dir' al-Furat (4), Hizb al-Turkmani (2), Mu'tasim Brigade (2), Ahrar al-Sharqiyah (1), Jaysh al-Sunnah (1), unidentified factions (235)); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (380); the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) (221) (the Kurdish People's Protection Units and Women's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) (220) and other components of SDF (1)), Syrian government forces and pro-government forces (46); pro-government militias, including the National Defence Forces (NDF) (35); the Internal Security Forces under the authority of the self-administration in northern and eastern Syria (24) (the Internal Security Forces); the Patriotic Revolutionary Youth Movement (10); Nur al-Din al-Zanki (5); Afrin Liberation Forces (2); and unidentified perpetrators (4). Cases were verified mainly in Idlib (591) and Aleppo (401). Most of the children (1,285) were used in combat. In addition, the recruitment and use of 5 children (4 boys, 1 girl) by YPG/YPJ that occurred prior to 2021 were verified in 2021.

190. The deprivation of liberty of 62 children (11 boys, 1 girl, 50 sex unknown) was verified and attributed to the Internal Security Forces (43), SDF (9), Syrian government forces (5), NDF (3), Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1) and opposition SNA (1). At the end of 2021, over 800 children, including foreigners, reportedly remained in detention for alleged association with Da'esh in the north-eastern Syrian Arab Republic. In addition, over 53,000 women and children with suspected family ties to Da'esh and from an estimated 50 countries of origin continued to be held in the Hawl and Rawj camps in the north-eastern Syrian Arab Republic at the end of 2021.

191. The United Nations verified the killing (424) and maiming (474) of 898 children (564 boys, 191 girls, 143 sex unknown) attributed to Syrian government forces and pro-government forces (301) (including pro-government air forces (86)); SDF (55) (YPG/YPJ (26) and other components of SDF (29)), Da'esh (25); opposition SNA (20); Afrin Liberation Forces (17); border area fire from Türkiye (4) and Turkish armed forces operations in support of opposition SNA (2); Internal Security Forces (2); the international counter-Da'esh coalition (1); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1); Youth of Aleppo al-Shahba' Squadron for Special Tasks (1); and unidentified perpetrators (469). Casualties resulted mainly from explosive remnants of war (297), shelling (290), attacks with the use of improvised explosive devices (173), and air strikes (98). Most incidents occurred in Aleppo (291) and Idlib (290). In addition, the killing (24) and maiming (39) of 63 children (54 boys, 8 girls, 1 sex unknown) that occurred in previous years and were attributed to pro-government air forces (4), Internal Security Forces (1) and unidentified perpetrators (58) were verified in 2021.

192. Sexual violence against 4 girls trafficked in 2014 from Iraq by Da'esh was verified in 2021.

193. The United Nations verified 45 attacks on schools (28) and hospitals (17), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, attributed to Syrian government forces and pro-government forces (23), including pro-government air forces (3); SDF (8); the Internal Security Forces (3); opposition SNA (3); Afrin Liberation Forces (1); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (1); and unidentified perpetrators (6). Most attacks occurred in Idlib (18), Dar'a (9) and Aleppo (8) and resulted from shelling (20), assault on or the arrest of protected persons (12), air strikes (3) and raids (3). In addition, an earlier attack on a hospital by pro-government air forces was verified in 2021.

194. The military use of 20 schools (17) and hospitals (3) was attributed to YPG/YPJ (12), the Internal Security Forces (3), NDF (2), Syrian government forces (1), and opposition SNA (2).

195. The United Nations verified the abduction of 8 children (2 boys, 6 girls) by the Patriotic Revolutionary Youth Movement (3) and unidentified perpetrators (5). In addition, the earlier abduction of one girl by Da'esh was verified in 2021.

196. A total of 24 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were verified and attributed to Syrian government forces and pro-government forces (5), including pro-government air forces (2); Internal Security Forces (4); Da'esh (3); SDF (2); opposition SNA (2); Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (2); Afrin Liberation Forces (1); and unidentified perpetrators (5). Incidents included attacks (15), the denial of humanitarian services or disruption to water facilities (7) and the encirclement of areas (2).

Developments and concerns

197. I welcome the dialogue between the Government and the United Nations on measures to end and prevent grave violations against children, the reactivation of the interministerial committee, and the organization of a joint workshop on child protection on 14 March 2022. I note the issuance of law No. 21/2021 on the rights and protections afforded to children and the commitment reaffirmed by the Government to support the humanitarian response by the United Nations and its partners. I urge the Government to increase its engagement with the United Nations, and with my Special Representative, to strengthen the protection of children, including through the signature of concrete time-bound commitments, and I welcome the ongoing development of a draft comprehensive action plan.

198. I note the continuing progress in the implementation of the 2019 action plan by SDF, resulting in the disengagement of a further 182 children from their ranks and the screening out of 568 boys through age assessment procedures. I also note the adoption by SDF of new guidelines for the release and exclusion of children from their ranks, and procedures for protecting children detained for alleged association with Da'esh. The disciplinary measures against SDF personnel who violate the commitments under the action plan are a positive development. However, I remain concerned by the increased number of verified cases of recruitment and use by SDF and I urge SDF to immediately end all violations.

199. I note the engagement between factions of the opposition SNA and the United Nations, including an exchange of letters aiming at the development of an action plan, and the fact that the opposition SNA issued a statement in September 2021 on measures to comply with international humanitarian law to protect children, including the prohibition of child recruitment and use. I urge the opposition SNA to scale up its engagement with the United Nations to end and prevent grave violations and to adopt an action plan.

200. I remain alarmed by the deprivation of liberty of children for their alleged association with parties to conflict. I welcome the access provided by SDF for United Nations partners to visit two detention facilities in Aleppo Governorate and I call upon other parties in the Syrian Arab Republic to also facilitate United Nations access to children deprived of liberty. I reiterate my call to treat children primarily as victims, and that deprivation of liberty should be a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, and in line with international juvenile justice standards and the best interest of the child.

201. I remain seriously concerned by the humanitarian situation of women and children in the Hawl and Rawj camps and in places of detention in the north-east. I reiterate my call upon all concerned countries of origin and relevant authorities inside the Syrian Arab Republic to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of women and children who are currently in these camps, including those with suspected family ties to Da'esh, in line with international law and in full respect for the principle of non-refoulement and with respect for family unity and the best interest of the child, and in line with the Global Framework on United Nations Support to Member States on Individuals Returned from the Syrian Arab Republic and Iraq, adopted in 2020.

202. I am appalled by the persistently high number of violations against children committed by all parties to the conflict, particularly the significant increase in child recruitment and use, and by the continued high number of cases of killing and maiming and of attacks on schools and hospitals, and by widespread impunity. I urge all parties to end and prevent grave violations and comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

203. I call upon the Syrian Arab Republic to become a party to international legal instruments on mines and explosive remnants of war.

204. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic (S/2021/398).

Yemen

205. The United Nations verified 2,748 grave violations against 800 children (652 boys, 148 girls), with 99 of those children being victims of multiple violations. In addition, 209 grave violations against 164 children (120 boys, 44 girls) that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021.

206. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 174 children (172 boys, 2 girls), between the ages of 9 and 17, by the Houthis (who call themselves Ansar Allah) (hereafter “the Houthis”) (131), the Yemen Armed Forces (28), the Security Belt Forces (6), pro-government militias (4), unidentified perpetrators (4) and Islamic State in Yemen (1). Most children (128) served in combat roles. In addition, the recruitment and use of 51 boys by the Houthis (37), the Yemen Armed Forces (12), the Security Belt Forces (1) and Islamic State in Yemen (1) in previous years was verified in 2021.

207. The deprivation of liberty of 10 boys for their alleged association with parties to conflict was verified and attributed to Yemen Armed Forces (5) and the Houthis (5).

208. The United Nations verified the killing (201) and maiming (480) of 681 children (546 boys, 135 girls) attributed to unidentified perpetrators (280), including in crossfire (83), mainly between the Houthis and the Yemen Armed Forces (63) and between other parties (20); the Houthis (180), the Coalition to Support Legitimacy in Yemen (the Coalition) (100), the Yemen Armed Forces (74), the Security Belt Forces (42), Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (3), Islamic State in Yemen (1) and the Hadrami Elite Forces (1). The main causes of child casualties were explosive remnants of war (181), gunshots and crossfire (176), mortar and artillery shelling (172), air strikes (83) and children being run over by military vehicles (68). Most casualties occurred in Ta'izz (137), Ma'rib (132) and Hudaydah (107) Governorates. In addition, the killing (50) and maiming (96) of 146 children (106 boys, 40 girls) that occurred in previous years was verified in 2021 and attributed to the Houthis (46), the Coalition (22), Yemen Armed Forces (21), the Security Belt Forces (5), Da'esh (3), Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (1) and unidentified perpetrators (48).

209. Sexual violence perpetrated against 11 children (6 boys, 5 girls) was attributed to the Houthis (5), unidentified perpetrators (3), the Yemen Armed Forces (2), and jointly to the Security Belt Forces and the Yemen Armed Forces (1). In addition, sexual violence affecting 7 children (3 boys, 4 girls), in cases which occurred in previous years and were attributed to the Houthis (6) and Yemen Armed Forces (1), was verified in 2021.

210. There were 34 verified attacks on schools (18) and hospitals (16), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, attributed to the Houthis (15), the Security Belt Forces (7), the Yemen Armed Forces (6), the Coalition (5) and unidentified perpetrators (1). In addition, two attacks on hospitals by the Houthis (1) and the Security Belt Forces (1) that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021.

211. The military use of 53 schools (49) and hospitals (4) was verified and attributed to the Houthis (46), the Yemen Armed Forces (4) and the Security Belt Forces (3).

212. A total of 35 children (27 boys, 8 girls) were abducted by the Houthis (11), the Security Belt Forces (10), Salafists (3), the Yemen Armed Forces (3), Hadrami Elite Forces (2) and unidentified perpetrators (6). The purposes of the abductions were for recruitment and use (2), sexual violence (2) and unknown purposes (31). The abduction of three boys in earlier years was verified in 2021 and attributed to the Houthis (2) and the Yemen Armed Forces (1).

213. A total of 1,813 incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were verified and attributed to the Houthis (1,448), the Yemen Armed Forces (331) and unidentified perpetrators (34). Incidents included attacks, in-country movement restrictions and interference in the implementation of humanitarian activities. Incidents were prevalent in the Governorates of Amanat Al-Asimah (595), Sa'dah (331) and Aden (306).

214. I welcome the continued commitment of the Government, through the identification of priority activities, to implementing the 2014 action plan and the 2018 road map to end and prevent child recruitment and use. I further welcome the resumption of the interministerial committee activities and the organization of training sessions on child protection. I note the significant decrease in the number of verified cases of child recruitment and use by, and the decrease in the number of child casualties caused by, the Yemen Armed Forces, as well as efforts by the Government to facilitate humanitarian access. I encourage the Government to continue to strengthen the measures in place to prevent child casualties during military operations and implement measures to prevent violations. I note Government efforts to reintegrate children formerly associated with armed forces and armed groups and the recent roll-out of the Act to Protect Children Affected by Conflict campaign in Aden. I call upon the Government to adopt a handover protocol on the release of children.

215. I welcome the continued engagement of the Coalition with my Special Representative to sustainably end and prevent grave violations against children and the progress achieved in the implementation of the programme of time-bound activities endorsed in January 2020. I note the continued decrease in the number of child casualties, and I call upon the Coalition to pursue and deepen the implementation of the 2019 memorandum of understanding and the related programme of time-bound activities. I urge the Coalition to swiftly investigate all incidents involving child casualties and comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law. I also urge the Coalition to expedite justice, accountability and redress to child victims and their families. Continuous monitoring and engagement to ensure the sustained implementation of agreed activities and further reductions in the number of affected children, as verified by the United Nations, is expected and will be closely observed.

216. I welcome the signature of an action plan by the Houthis with the United Nations on 18 April 2022 to end and prevent the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children, as well as attacks on schools and hospitals and other grave violations. I urge the Houthis to implement all the activities of the action plan, including releasing all children from their ranks, and to immediately end and prevent violations. I call upon the Houthis to continue the implementation of the handover protocol of April 2020 and to allow unimpeded access for the United Nations to all places of detention.

217. I am alarmed by the high number of children killed and maimed, especially by explosive remnants of war, by the number of cases of denial of humanitarian access and by the number of cases of the recruitment and use of children and of the military use of schools and hospitals, particularly by the Houthis. I urge the Houthis and all parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law and to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access to children across the country. I urge all parties to step up the clearance of mines and explosive remnants of war, as well as and mine risk education.

218. I call upon parties to put an end to the fighting and engage with my Special Envoy for Yemen towards the resumption of an inclusive political process to reach a comprehensive negotiated settlement. I also call upon them to include child protection concerns in the peace process.

219. I reiterate the recommendations from my report on children and armed conflict in Yemen (S/2021/761).

B. Situations not on the agenda of the Security Council or other situations

Burkina Faso

220. The United Nations verified 653 grave violations against 509 children (230 boys, 235 girls, 44 sex unknown).

221. Some 68 children (62 boys, 6 girls), some as young as 6, were recruited and used by Jama'a Nusrat ul-Islam wa al-Muslimin (JNIM) (59), unidentified perpetrators (7) and Islamic State in the Greater Sahara (ISGS) (2), mostly in the Sahel (22) and North (21) Regions. Most children (48) were used as combatants.

222. A total of 18 boys were detained in the high security prison of Ouagadougou for their alleged association with armed groups, including three who have been in detention since 2018. Three children were released in 2021.

223. The United Nations verified the killing (99) and maiming (128) of 227 children (91 boys, 92 girls, 44 sex unknown) by JNIM (113); unidentified perpetrators (58), including 11 in crossfire between the Defence and Security Forces and JNIM; ISGS (48); the Defence and Security Forces (4) and Volontaires pour la défense de la patrie (4). Casualties resulted mainly from gunshots and physical assault (95 each) and improvised explosive devices (15). Most violations occurred in the Sahel (121) and Centre-Nord (85) Regions.

224. The United Nations verified rape and other forms of sexual violence against nine girls by unidentified perpetrators (5), JNIM (3) and ISGS (1).

225. There were 85 verified attacks on schools (46) and hospitals (39), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals, attributed to ISGS (37); JNIM (37); unidentified perpetrators (10), including four in crossfire between the Defence and Security Forces and JNIM; and the Defence and Security Forces (1), mostly in the East (58) Region. Incidents involved the abduction and killing of related protected persons, threats directed against protected persons, and the destruction, looting and forced closure of schools.

226. Two schools and one hospital were used for military purposes by the Defence and Security Forces (2) and unidentified perpetrators (1).

227. A total of 250 children (88 boys, 159 girls, 3 sex unknown) were abducted by JNIM (187), mostly as punishment for not adhering to JNIM norms, by unidentified perpetrators (55) and ISGS (8). Most violations occurred in the Centre-Nord (177) and Sahel (66) Regions. Among those abducted, 238 children were subsequently released.

228. Seventeen incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to JNIM (8), ISGS (7) and unidentified perpetrators (2) in the Sahel (10), East (4) and North (3) Regions. Incidents included threats and violence directed at humanitarians, the abduction of humanitarians, as well as looting.

Developments and concerns

229. I welcome the fact that the Government progressed with the validation of a handover protocol for the transfer of children allegedly associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors. I call upon the authorities to endorse and implement the protocol, to treat children associated with armed groups primarily as victims and to release all children in its custody.

230. I am deeply troubled by the sharp increase in grave violations. I am alarmed by the scale of abductions, particularly of girls, and by the recruitment and use of children, with JNIM as the main perpetrator. I urge JNIM and other parties to cease all violations and release associated children.

231. I call upon parties to immediately cease the killing and maiming of children and take necessary measures to protect children during operations, and to cease and prevent attacks on schools and hospitals and on protected persons and prevent their military use. I call upon all parties to engage with the United Nations to end and prevent violations and further urge the authorities, including Volontaires pour la défense de la patrie, to prevent grave violations committed during security operations and to pursue accountability.

Cameroon

232. The United Nations verified 174 grave violations against 129 children (62 boys, 57 girls, 10 sex unknown) in the Far North (94), North-West (45) and South-West (35) Regions, including 7 children who were victims of multiple violations.

233. Three boys, some as young as 10, were recruited and used by unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups as spies and to run errands in the Far North Region.

234. Five children (2 boys, 3 girls) were detained in Far North by the Cameroon Armed Forces for their alleged association with armed groups and remained in detention as at December 2021.

235. A total of 75 children (48 boys, 25 girls, 2 sex unknown) were killed (44) and maimed (31) by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups (50), including Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad (JAS) (25) and Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) (2); the Cameroon Armed Forces (14) and unidentified perpetrators (11), including in crossfire between armed groups and the Cameroon Armed Forces (4). Casualties occurred in the Far North (49), South-West (14) and North-West (12) regions and resulted mainly from gunshots (55) and improvised explosive devices or explosive remnants of war (16).

236. Sexual violence perpetrated against one girl by unidentified perpetrators was verified in the South-West Region.

237. A total of 22 attacks on schools (18) and hospitals (4), including protected persons in relation to schools and/or hospitals were attributed to unidentified armed groups in the North-West and South-West (16), ISWAP (2), the Cameroon Armed Forces (2) and unidentified perpetrators (2), including one attack that occurred during crossfire between armed groups and the Cameroon Armed Forces. Incidents were verified in the North-West (11), South-West (8) and Far North (3) Regions and involved attacks and threats against related protected persons, including their killing and abduction, and destruction and damage to facilities.

238. The United Nations verified the military use of 21 schools by the Cameroon Armed Forces in the Far-North for one year. Four schools continued to be used as at December 2021.

239. The United Nations verified the abduction of 55 children (14 boys, 33 girls, 8 sex unknown) by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups (39), including JAS (24) and ISWAP (2), and unidentified armed groups in the North-West and South-West (16). Violations occurred in Far North (39), North-West (12) and South-West (4) Regions. Children were abducted for ransom (16), recruitment and use (3) and for unknown purposes (36). Of the 55 who were abducted, 12 children were rescued or released, 7 remain in captivity, 3 were arrested by the Cameroon Armed Forces, while the status of 33 is unknown.

240. A total of 18 verified incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to unidentified armed groups in the North-West and South-West (14) Regions, the Cameroon Armed Forces (3) and unidentified perpetrators during crossfire between armed groups and the Cameroon Armed Forces (1). Incidents involved the abduction of, and threats and violence against, humanitarian personnel and assets, access restrictions and looting in North-West (10) and South-West (8) Regions.

Developments and concerns

241. I welcome the training of police officers on child protection, including in the North-West and South-West Regions, by the United Nations. I call upon the Government to extend the training to all defence and security forces. I also call upon the Government to ensure that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes consider the specific needs and rights of children formerly associated with armed groups and to allow child protection actors access to all disarmament, demobilization and reintegration centres. I further call upon the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the protection of children, including by ensuring accountability for grave violations against children.

242. I am concerned about the detention of children for their alleged association with armed groups. I call upon the Government to treat these children primarily as victims, with detention as a measure of last resort, and to release all children in its custody. I urge the Government to adopt a handover protocol for children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors.

243. I am deeply concerned about the continued grave violations in the North-West and South-West Regions, particularly the denial of humanitarian access, including the detention of humanitarian personnel and attacks on schools, including the killing and abduction of teachers and students. I urge all parties to immediately cease all violations and protect schools and hospitals and prevent their military use.

244. I urge Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups in the Far North Region to put an end to violations and immediately release associated children.

India

245. The United Nations verified 54 grave violations against 49 children (45 boys, 4 girls).

246. The recruitment and use of 18 boys by armed groups in Jammu and Kashmir was verified.

247. A total of 33 boys were detained by Indian security forces in Jammu and Kashmir for their alleged association with armed groups or on national security grounds.

248. A total of 34 children (30 boys, 4 girls) were killed (5) and maimed (29) by Indian security forces, including by the use of pellets by the Central Reserve Police Force (19), unidentified perpetrators (4), crossfire between armed groups and unidentified perpetrators (7), and crossfire and shelling across the line of control (4).

249. The killing of two teachers by an armed group in Srinagar was verified.

Developments and concerns

250. I welcome the ongoing engagement of the Government with my Special Representative, including the interministerial meeting held in November 2021 and the appointment of a national focal point to identify priority national interventions so as to enhance the protection of children. I further welcome the agreement to a joint technical mission to hold interministerial, technical-level meetings with the United Nations during 2022 to identify areas of enhanced cooperation for child protection. This enhanced engagement may lead to the removal of India as a situation of concern from my next report on children and armed conflict, should all practical measures agreed to in such meetings be fully implemented by that date.

251. I welcome the legal and administrative framework for the protection of children and improved access to child protection services in Chhattisgarh, Assam, Jharkhand, Odisha and Jammu and Kashmir, and progress in the creation of a Jammu and Kashmir commission for the protection of children's rights, but I remain concerned about the risk of child recruitment by armed groups in affected districts.

252. I am concerned by the increased number of violations against children verified in Jammu and Kashmir. I call upon the Government to strengthen child protection, including by ending the use of pellet guns against children and building the capacity of its forces. I am concerned by the detention of children, and I urge the Government to ensure that children are detained as a last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, and to prevent all forms of ill-treatment in detention in line, with the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015.

Lake Chad basin

253. The United Nations verified 928 grave violations against 826 children (393 boys, 425 girls, 8 sex unknown) in the Lake Chad basin region, namely in the Far North Region of Cameroon (94), Lac Province in Chad (166), Diffa Region in the Niger (224) and north-east Nigeria (444). Among those children, 68 were victims of multiple violations. Violations were primarily perpetrated by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups (890), including Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) (222) and Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad (JAS) (243). Information pertaining to violations in Cameroon's Far North and in north-east Nigeria is included under the respective country sections.

254. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 11 boys, some as young as 10, in Chad (8) and the Niger (3) by unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups. Children in Chad were predominantly recruited through abduction and were used in support roles.

255. The United Nations verified the killing (11) and maiming (15) of 26 children (21 boys, 5 girls) in Chad (14) and the Niger (12), by unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups (23) and unidentified perpetrators (3) during crossfire between the Niger security forces and unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups. Most child casualties resulted from improvised explosive devices and explosive remnants of war (15) and gunshots (7).

256. Rape and other forms of sexual violence against two girls were verified and attributed to the Chadian National Army, in Lac Province.

257. Two attacks on hospitals by unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups in the Niger were verified. Incidents involved damage to and the looting of health facilities and equipment.

258. A total of 349 children (167 boys, 182 girls) were abducted in Chad (142) and the Niger (207) by unidentified Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups. Among those abducted, 1 child was killed, 35 were released and 6 escaped, while the status of 307 children is unknown.

Developments and concerns

259. I welcome the commitment by the Government of Chad to the protection of children, including efforts to comply with its action plan on child recruitment and use, which was completed in 2014, and regular training for its armed forces. These efforts should be prioritized, including by incorporating such training into the curricula of military schools. I urge the Government of Chad to pursue accountability for violations against children, including sexual violence.

260. I welcome the efforts of the Government of the Niger to enhance the protection of children, and the fact that children released from armed groups transiting through the anti-terrorist cell in Diffa were increasingly handed over to civilian child protection actors. Authorities in the Diffa Region established a reintegration programme, including for children separated from armed groups.

261. I call upon the Governments of Chad and the Niger to continue to implement their respective handover protocols for children formerly associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors. Children allegedly associated with armed groups must be treated primarily as victims, with detention as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time.

262. The scale of grave violations perpetrated by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups in the Lake Chad basin region remains a serious concern, notably the abduction, killing and maiming of and the recruitment and use of children. I urge these groups to end and prevent all grave violations and immediately release all children.

Nigeria

263. The United Nations verified 444 grave violations against 356 children (165 boys, 190 girls, 1 sex unknown) in north-east Nigeria, including 49 children who were victims of multiple violations.

264. A total of 63 children (9 boys, 54 girls), some as young as 6, were recruited and used by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups: Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad (JAS) (45) and Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) (18) in Borno State, mostly following abduction.

265. A total of 45 boys were detained by the Nigerian Security Forces for their alleged association with armed groups. All but two boys were released following United Nations advocacy. The United Nations was unable to verify the number of children in detention, as access to detention facilities was denied by the Nigerian Security Forces.

266. The United Nations verified the killing (34) and maiming (54) of 88 children (53 boys, 34 girls, 1 sex unknown) attributed to ISWAP (57), unidentified perpetrators (19), the Nigerian Security Forces (7) and JAS (5) in Borno (77) and Yobe (11) States. Child casualties resulted mainly from gunshots.

267. The United Nations verified sexual violence perpetrated against 53 girls, including forced marriage (50) and rape (3), by JAS (44), ISWAP (6) and the Nigerian Security Forces (3) in Borno State.

268. A total of 15 attacks on schools (4) and hospitals (11) were verified and attributed to ISWAP (12), JAS (2) and unidentified perpetrators (1) in Yobe (8), Borno (5) and Adamawa (2) States. Incidents involved destruction and looting.

269. Some 211 children (115 boys, 96 girls) were abducted by ISWAP (110) and JAS (101) in Borno (167), Adamawa (43) and Yobe (1) States. Most of the children (122) escaped or were released, while 89 remain unaccounted for.

270. Fourteen verified incidents of the denial of humanitarian access were attributed to ISWAP (13) and the Nigerian Security Forces (1) in Borno (11) and Yobe (3) States.

Developments and concerns

271. I commend the Civilian Joint Task Force for sustaining the progress on the 2017 action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children, including through a child protection training plan and the establishment of child protection units in Civilian Joint Task Force formations in Borno State, in collaboration with the United Nations.

272. I welcome the signature into law by the Borno State Governor, in January 2022, of the Child Rights Act, which provides a framework for the protection of conflict-affected children.

273. I welcome the Government's commitment to the Safe Schools Declaration, including the hosting of the fourth International Conference on the Safe Schools Declaration.

274. I call upon the Government to urgently endorse and implement the handover protocol for children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors, to provide access for the United Nations to all children in detention and to release all children from detention.

275. I am gravely concerned about the increase in the number of grave violations, particularly abductions and sexual violence, and by the elevated numbers of child casualties of killing and maiming, and of cases of the recruitment and use of children, mostly perpetrated by ISWAP and JAS. I urge all parties to end and prevent violations and release all children.

Pakistan

276. A total of 44 children (17 boys, 2 girls, 25 unknown) were reportedly killed (19) and maimed (25) by unidentified armed elements in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (19), Balochistan (16), Sindh (8) and Gilgit-Baltistan (1). Incidents included the use of improvised explosive devices (18), rockets fired from Afghanistan (8), landmines (8), explosive remnants of war (7) and attacks of unknown origin (3).

277. Two grenade attacks on schools by unidentified armed elements were reported in Peshawar and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa in July.

Developments and concerns

278. I am concerned about incidents in the border areas with Afghanistan.

279. I encourage the Government to deepen its engagement with my Special Representative to develop preventive measures to protect children. I reiterate my call for the Government to endorse the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles.

Philippines

280. The United Nations verified 55 grave violations against 46 children (27 boys, 19 girls). In addition, four grave violations against four children (3 boys, 1 girl) that occurred in previous years were verified in 2021.

281. The United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 27 children (14 boys, 13 girls), attributed to the New People's Army (NPA) (23), the Armed Forces of the Philippines (4), Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) (1), Dawlah Islamiyah-Maute Group (1) in Bukidnon (10), Davao del Norte (7), Agusan del Sur (4), Negros Oriental (2), Negros Occidental (2), Surigao del Sur (2), Agusan del Norte (1) and Sulu (1) Provinces. Two children were recruited and used twice by two different perpetrators. Children were used in combat (1) and support roles (24). In addition, the earlier recruitment and use of one boy by the Dawlah Islamiyah-Maute Group was verified in 2021.

282. The United Nations verified the detention of 24 children (13 boys, 11 girls) by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (9), the Philippine National Police (PNP) (3) and jointly by the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the Philippine National Police (12) in Sulu (11), Bukidnon (7), Lanao del Sur (2), Agusan del Sur (2), Maguindanao (1) and Cebu (1) Provinces. Fifteen children were released.

283. The killing (5) and maiming (16) of 21 children (15 boys, 6 girls) was attributed to the Armed Forces of the Philippines (7), NPA (6), the Philippine National Police (4), unidentified perpetrators (4), including resulting from crossfire between the Armed Forces of the Philippines and Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF) (2) and between the Armed Forces of the Philippines and NPA (1) and from improvised explosive devices (1). Child casualties occurred in Maguindanao (10), Agusan del Sur (2), Albay (2), Masbate (2), North Cotabato (2) and other provinces (2). In addition, the earlier maiming of one girl by NPA was verified in 2021.

284. No incidents of sexual violence were verified. An earlier case of sexual violence (forced marriage) affecting one girl and perpetrated by ASG was verified in 2021 by the United Nations.

285. Five attacks on schools and protected persons in relation to schools by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (2), the Philippine National Police (2) and BIFF (1) were verified in Sultan Kudarat (2), Maguindanao (1), Bukidnon (1) and Cebu (1).

286. One boy was abducted by the Armed Forces of the Philippines in Agusan del Sur Province. In addition, the earlier abduction of a boy by NPA was verified in 2021 by the United Nations.

Developments and concerns

287. I welcome the signature by the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the United Nations of the strategic plan to prevent and respond to grave child rights violations in situations of armed conflict in June 2021 and call for its implementation. I welcome efforts by the Council for the Welfare of Children to ensure the timely intervention and reintegration of children associated with armed groups or detained for alleged association.

288. I welcome the issuance by the Philippine National Police of its child protection policy, which incorporates provisions of the Republic Act No. 11188 (Special Protection of Children in Situations of Armed Conflict Act) and its Children in Situations of Armed Conflict Handling Protocol, to prevent grave violations against children. The training of 3,139 child protection actors by the Government on the Act and its Protocol are welcomed. I encourage the Government to pursue the implementation of its child protection policies, including its national policy framework of 2019 on learners and schools as zones of peace.

289. I welcome the incorporation of the protection of children in situations of armed conflict in the Bangsamoro Children's Code in the Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao. The establishment of a regional reporting system on grave violations in Northern Mindanao by the Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao is welcomed.

290. I am concerned by the increase in the number of cases of the recruitment and use of children, and by ongoing grave violations, in particular the killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and threats against school personnel. I urge all parties to end and prevent violations and reiterate my call upon armed groups to engage with the United Nations to adopt measures, including action plans to end and prevent violations.

291. I encourage the Government to endorse the Principles and Guidelines on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups (the Paris Principles), the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles.

IV. Recommendations

292. I welcome the continued engagement by parties to conflict with the United Nations to develop and implement action plans and commitments to protect children in armed conflict. I reiterate my call upon Member States to continue to support this engagement, including by facilitating United Nations engagement with non-State actors. I encourage Member States to adopt and implement handover protocols for children encountered or detained during military operations to civilian child protection actors. I request my Special Representative and the country task forces to engage with parties to prevent grave violations, including through engagement with regional organizations on prevention modalities, and to strengthen the monitoring and reporting on children and armed conflict in coordination with United Nations system entities.

293. I call upon the Security Council to ensure that child protection provisions and capacity are included in all relevant mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations and special political missions in line with the 2017 policy on child protection in United Nations peace operations, and to ensure that data and capacity on child protection are preserved and transferred during mission transitions. I underline the importance of mainstreaming child protection concerns in early warning, conflict analysis, the pacific settlement of disputes, transitional justice and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

294. I call upon Member States to adopt and implement policies to promote the rights of the child, including by becoming parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, if they have not yet done so. I call upon Member States to endorse and implement the Paris Principles, the Safe Schools Declaration and the Vancouver Principles.

295. I remain concerned by the scale and severity of grave violations committed against children. I call upon all parties to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, international human rights law and international refugee law and to immediately end and prevent grave violations. I urge Member States and parties to conflict to define a child as every human being below the age of 18 years.

296. I call for the adoption and implementation of legislation that criminalizes violations of relevant rules of international law, including on grave violations pertaining to the protection of children in armed conflict, and encourage Member States to adopt national accountability measures and to cooperate with international accountability mechanisms. I call for the inclusion of accountability provisions in action plans signed between the United Nations and parties listed in the annexes.

297. I am deeply concerned at the number of children deprived of liberty, and I reiterate that detention should be used only as a last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, that alternatives to detention should be prioritized and that children should never be detained solely for their or their parents' actual or alleged association with armed groups. I urge Member States to treat children actually or allegedly associated with armed forces or groups, including those designated as terrorist groups, primarily as victims, to prioritize their best interest, to give child protection actors access to them and to continue to search for durable solutions, including voluntary repatriation and reintegration for those with alleged links to Da'esh in Iraq and in the Syrian Arab Republic, in line with international law. I am concerned about the impact of counter-terrorism measures on children and I call upon Member States to ensure their consistency with the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

298. I call upon all parties to allow and facilitate safe, timely and unimpeded humanitarian access, as well as access by children to services, assistance and protection, and to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and assets. I underline that hospitals, schools and their personnel must be protected, in accordance with international humanitarian law. I urge parties to refrain from the military use of schools and hospitals.

299. I call upon the donor community to urgently provide financial support and technical assistance for sustainable, timely, gender- and age-sensitive, survivor-centred and inclusive reintegration programmes for children, including for survivors of sexual violence. I encourage the international community to provide funding for monitoring and reporting on grave violations against children and for strengthening child protection capacities on the ground.

300. I encourage Member States and regional and subregional organizations to engage with the United Nations to improve analysis, develop strategies to prevent grave violations and foster partnerships.

V. Lists contained in the annexes to the present report

301. In Colombia, the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) dissident groups have been listed under section A of annex I for the recruitment and use of children. In Burkina Faso, Jama'a Nusrat ul-Islam wa al-Muslimin has been listed under section A of annex II for the recruitment and use, killing and maiming, and abduction of children. In the Lake Chad Basin region, Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups, including Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad and Islamic State West Africa Province, have been listed for the abduction of children under section A of annex II. These parties are listed following a substantial increase of these violations since my previous report. I request my Special Representative to promote enhanced monitoring capacity in the Central Sahel region and to continue to promote monitoring capacity in the Lake Chad Basin region.

302. In Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, there were substantial rocket strikes by the Palestinian armed groups, especially in May 2021, resulting in a significant increase in the number of cases of violence against children. If the high number of violations against children were to be repeated in 2022, without meaningful improvement, Palestinian armed groups, including Hamas' al-Qassam Brigades and Palestinian Islamic Jihad's al-Quds Brigades, should be listed. Palestinian parties must urgently engage with my Special Representative and the United Nations to prevent any more violations against children, and they must adopt clear and time-bound commitments to prevent violations against children.

303. During the May 2021 escalation of hostilities, there were substantial air strikes by the Israeli armed forces, resulting in a significant increase the number of cases of violence against children. So far this year, we have not witnessed a similar number of violations. However, should the situation repeat itself in 2022, without meaningful improvement, Israel should be listed. Israeli authorities are engaging with my Special Representative and the United Nations to prevent any more violations against children and adopt clear and time-bound commitments.

304. The following parties were previously listed and have had additional violations added to their listing. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, because of the continuous increase in cases of rape and other forms of sexual violence by the Mai-Mai Apa Na Pale and by the Coopérative pour le développement du Congo (CODECO) armed groups, both parties have been listed under section A of annex I for this violation.

305. In Yemen, the Government forces, including the Yemen Armed Forces, have been delisted for the violation of recruitment and use of children owing to progress in the implementation of their action plan and to the significant decrease in the number of cases of this violation. The delisting is conditional upon the finalization of all pending action plan activities and the continued decrease in the recruitment and use of children by the Government forces, including the Yemen Armed Forces. A continued United Nations monitoring and engagement period of 12 months will ensure the sustainability of all existing measures, as verified by the United Nations, and continued engagement with my Special Representative and the United Nations. Any failure in this regard would result in a relisting for the same violation in my next report. In South Sudan, the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, including the Taban Deng-allied South Sudan People's Defence Forces, having signed a comprehensive action plan in 2020 and made progress in its implementation while a decrease in violations has been verified, will be delisted for the violation of attacks on schools and hospitals. I call upon the South Sudan People's Defence Forces, including the Taban Deng-allied South Sudan People's Defence Forces, and other signatories of the action plan to finalize the implementation of all provisions of the action plan and continue to significantly reduce cases of other violations against children.

306. There has been a technical delisting of one of the listed parties following their dissolution or cessation of activities. In Afghanistan, the Afghan National Army has been removed, as these government forces ceased to exist following the takeover of Kabul by the Taliban on 15 August 2021.

307. Other modifications to the list have resulted from changes in the landscape of armed conflict in the respective situations or from changes in measures taken by parties to protect children. In Afghanistan, the Haqqani Network will be listed jointly with the Taliban, as the group is now part of the leadership of the Taliban. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the armed group Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS) will be listed under section A of annex I owing to the lack of action in implementing signed commitments and because the party continued to recruit and use children in large numbers in 2021. In Mali, Platform, including affiliated groups, will be listed under section B of annex I, following the signature of action plans with the United Nations on 26 August 2021. In Somalia, the Somali Federal Defence and Police Forces will be listed as two separate entities for the same violations under section B of annex I. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the Government forces, including the National Defence Forces and pro-government militias, will be listed under section B of annex I for all violations for which they are listed, following engagement with the United Nations on a draft comprehensive action plan and the national measures put in place in 2020 and 2021. This is conditional upon the signature of an action plan with the United Nations on ending and preventing grave violations against children and on the continued decrease in the number of verified cases of recruitment and use. Failure to do so would lead to a reversal of the listing of Government forces, including the National Defence Forces and pro-government militias, under section A of annex I in my next report.

308. The Kurdish People's Protection Units and Women's Protection Units (YPG/YPJ) will remain listed under section B of annex I, however I am concerned by the increase during 2021 of the levels of recruitment and use, despite the signature of an action plan and the promising start of activities in this regard. I urge the Kurdish People's Protection Units and Women's Protection Units to reverse this negative trend, to continue engaging with the United Nations and to implement the provisions of its 2019 action plan. Any failure in this regard would result in being listed in section A of annex I for the same violation in my next report. The opposition Syrian National Army, including Ahrar al-Sham and Army of Islam armed groups (see the change in terminology in para. 310 below), has been listed under section B of annex I with respect to the killing and maiming of children following concrete engagement with the United Nations and the protection measures taken, but will continue to be listed under section A of annex I for the recruitment and use of children owing to the high number of children recruited and used during 2021. I urge the opposition Syrian National Army, including Ahrar al-Sham and Army of Islam, to continue engaging with the United Nations for the development of an action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children.

309. In Yemen, the Houthis (who call themselves Ansar Allah) have been listed under section B of annex I for the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children and for attacks on schools and hospitals, following engagement with the United Nations and the signature of an action plan on grave violations. If the Houthis implement the action plan and if there is a verified significant decrease in the number of grave violations, they should as a result be considered for a delisting in the annexes to my next report. I urge them to commence implementation of the recent action plan.

310. Modifications to terminology and to names of parties resulting from changes on the ground are aimed at reflecting the name of parties more accurately. In the Central African Republic, the local defence militias known as the anti-balaka will be listed as local militias known as the anti-balaka to reflect the fact that they do not always act in self-defence. In Colombia, the dissident groups of the former Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) will be listed as Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) dissident groups to align with other United Nations reporting. In Mali, Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad will be listed as Mouvement national de libération de l'Azawad, part of Coordination des mouvements de l'Azawad. Should the group fail to make significant progress in the implementation of its 2017 action plan by the publication of my next report, I may consider listing the group under section A of annex I. In addition, Ansar Eddine will be listed as Ansar Eddine, as part of Jama'a Nusrat ul-Islam wa al-Muslimin. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the Syrian armed opposition groups (formerly known as the Free Syrian Army) will be listed as the opposition Syrian National Army, including Ahrar al-Sham and Army of Islam, to reflect the composition of these groups. Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) will be listed as Da'esh following the adoption of resolution 75/291 by the General Assembly.

311. In view of the gravity and number of violations reported and, where possible, verified in Mozambique during 2021 (recruitment and use, killing and maiming, rape and other forms of sexual violence, attacks on schools and hospitals, abduction, and denial of humanitarian access), this situation will be added as a situation of concern with immediate effect and will be included in my next report.

312. In view of the gravity of clashes in 2021 between the Ethiopian National Defence and Federal Police Forces, the Tigray People's Liberation Front and other parties, including militias and regional forces, and the killing and maiming of children, rape and other forms of sexual violence, attacks on schools and hospitals, abductions, and the denial of humanitarian access, this situation will be added as a situation of concern with immediate effect and will be included in my next report.

313. In view of the ongoing war in Ukraine, including violations against civilians, including children, because of the high intensity of this conflict, this situation will be added as a situation of concern with immediate effect and will be included in my next report. I request my Special Representative to engage with all parties to the conflict to urgently address child protection issues, including the prevention of violations against children.
