(b) Second, the prohibition in article 49 (6) extends to the voluntary and consensual transfer of civilians from the occupying power to the occupied lands and is not limited merely to an involuntary resettlement (“deportation”) by the occupier of some of its civilian population. Notably, the term “forcible” does not appear in the paragraph, connoting a broader meaning than the prohibition against “forcible transfers” in article 49 (1) of the Convention. It is also apparent that the terms “deport” and “transfer” in article 49 (6) have a distinct meaning, arising from their use elsewhere in the article.⁴³ The International Court of Justice has stated that article 49 (6) should be understood in a broad fashion, as it “prohibits not only deportations or forced transfers of population such as those carried out during the Second World War, but also any transfers taken by an occupying Power in order to organize or encourage transfers of parts of its own population into the occupied territory”;⁴⁴

(c) The third principle is that article 49 (6) permits no exceptions. The broad wording of the prohibition is not circumscribed by subsequent limitations, as with article 49 (1). In addition, the history of the negotiations on the Convention does not contain any

⁴¹ At a conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in December 2001, the international Committee of the Red Cross issued a statement, in which it stated (para. 3): “Being only a temporary administrator of occupied territory, the Occupying Power must not interfere with its original economic and social structures, organization, legal system or demography.”

⁴² See E/CN.4/Sub.2/1993/17, para. 15.

⁴³ Ibid.

⁴⁴ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, para. 120.

expressions of caution or restrictions recommended by the delegates and the votes approving the provision in both committee and plenary meetings were unanimous.⁴⁵ The occupying power is permitted to send military forces and civil servants into the territory in order to administer the occupation, but the transferring of any part of a civilian population as settlers is categorically forbidden.

38. The temporary nature of an occupation and the full preservation of national rights and the territorial integrity of the ousted sovereign – the protected population – lie at the very core of international humanitarian law. In his 1958 commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention, Jean Pictet stated that “the occupation of territory in wartime is essentially a temporary, de facto situation, which deprives the occupied power of neither its statehood nor its sovereignty”.⁴⁶ As for annexation, the Security Council has affirmed on at least 11 occasions since 1967, consistent with Article 2 (4) of the Charter of the United Nations, that the acquisition of territory by war or force is inadmissible.⁴⁷ Neither conquest nor occupation confer title.⁴⁸ The occupying power must administer the occupation in good faith, consistent with international law, and it must seek to fully terminate the occupation as soon as reasonably possible.⁴⁹ The very raison d’être of settler implantation – the creation of demographic facts on the ground to solidify a permanent presence, a consolidation of alien political control and a claim of sovereignty – tramples upon the fundamental precepts of humanitarian law.

International human rights law

39. The logic and the dynamic of settler implantation – rupturing the relationship between an indigenous people and its territory – is the denial of the right to self-determination. Self-determination is both a jus cogens right (a fundamental principle of international law),⁵⁰ and a right erga omnes (a right owed to all).⁵¹ This right has been placed in the opening articles of the Charter of the United Nations, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights precisely to underscore the fact that the realization of all other individual and collective human rights depends upon the ability to exercise this cornerstone right.⁵² Flowing from this cardinal principle, the international community has prohibited the demographic manipulation of a territory through settler implantation because it is incompatible with the fundamental rights of a people to retain its distinct identity and to freely determine its destiny on its own territory.⁵³

40. In addition to self-determination, settler implantation projects frequently violate a range of protected individual and collective rights in international human rights law to which the indigenous population is entitled. As the Special Rapporteur on the human rights dimensions of population transfer, including the implantation of settlers and settlements, for the Commission on Human Rights (and later a judge on the International Court of Justice), Awn Al-Khasawneh, concluded in a 1997 report: “The range of rights violated by population

⁴⁵ See Final Record of the Diplomatic Conference of Geneva of 1949, 6th ed. (Buffalo, New York, William S. Hein & Co., 2005).

⁴⁶ See <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/applic/ihl/ihl.nsf/Comment.xsp?action=openDocument&documentId=C4712FE71392AFE1C12563CD0042C34A>.

⁴⁷ Most recently in resolution 2334 (2016).

⁴⁸ See Christian Tomuschat, “Prohibition of settlements”, in The 1949 Geneva Conventions: a Commentary, Andrew Clapham, Paola Gaeta and Marco Sassoli, eds., (Oxford, Oxford University Press, 2015).

⁴⁹ A/72/556, paras. 32–38.

⁵⁰ See James Crawford, The International Law Commission’s Articles on State Responsibility (Cambridge, Cambridge University Press, 2002), pp. 246–7.

⁵¹ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, para.155.

⁵² Both Covenants state in article 1 (1) that: “All peoples have the right of self-determination.”

⁵³ See Eric Kolodner, “Population transfer: the effects of settler infusion policies on a host population’s right to self-determination”, New York University Journal of International Law and Politics, vol. 27, No. 1 (1994).

transfer and the implantation of settlers places this phenomenon in the category of mass violations of human rights.”⁵⁴

41. These rights, as set out in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights include the freedom of movement, the ability to work, the rights to housing and to own and enjoy property, the inherent right to life, the right to engage in political activity, the right to liberty and security of the person, the right to an adequate standard of living, and the right to be free from arbitrary interference with one’s privacy, family and home.

42. Collectively, the practice of infusing citizens from the dominant power into the homeland of others commonly infringes the rights of the inhabitants to control their natural resources, the right to their own culture, religious practices and heritage, and their right to economic and social development.⁵⁵ A regime of special legal and political entitlements reserved only for the settler population creates a colonial or apartheid-like governing structure, infringing the right of the indigenous population to equality and the right to be free from racial and ethnic discrimination and apartheid.⁵⁶

Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949

43. The designation of settler implantation as a “grave breach” under international humanitarian law was affirmed in 1977 by the adoption of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949. Article 85 of Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 lists the acts of armed conflict which would be considered as “grave breaches”, including, as set out in article 85 (4) (a): “The transfer by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies, or the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory, in violation of Article 49 of the Fourth Convention.”

44. Importantly, Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 elevated the prohibition of settler implantation to a “war crime”. Article 85 (5) states that “grave breaches of these instruments shall be regarded as war crimes”. According to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) commentary on the Protocol of 1987, the elevation of the gravity of the prohibition is because of the “possible consequences for the population of the territory concerned from a humanitarian point of view”.⁵⁷

Customary international humanitarian law

45. Customary international law is the “general practice accepted as law”.⁵⁸ It is among the primary sources of international law. A general practice becomes part of customary international law when the consistent conduct of States over a period of time is accepted by the international community as having established an obligatory rule of behaviour.⁵⁹ In addition, a critical component in the creation of customary international law is the belief by States (opinio juris) that following a particular action has become a legal obligation. Once a general practice has been accepted as part of customary international law, it becomes binding even upon those States who have not accepted the particular practice as a legal obligation.

46. ICRC, in its comprehensive 2005 study on customary international humanitarian law, stated under rule 130 that the prohibition against population transfers and settler implantation has become a part of customary international law.⁶⁰ The ICRC study noted the widespread

⁵⁴ E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, para. 16.

⁵⁵ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 1 and 27, and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 1.

⁵⁶ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 2 and 26.

⁵⁷ Available from <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/applic/ihl/ihl.nsf/Comment.xsp?action=openDocument&documentId=7BBCFC2D471A1EAAC12563CD00437805>.

⁵⁸ Article 38 (1) (b) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

⁵⁹ See Gerhard von Glahn and James L. Taulbee, Law Among Nations. An Introduction to Public International Law, 11th ed. (Abingdon, Oxfordshire, Routledge, 2017), chap. 3.

⁶⁰ Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, eds., Customary International Humanitarian Law (Cambridge, Cambridge University Press, 2005), chap. 38.

adoption of that prohibition through State practice and legislation, in military manuals, through resolutions of various deliberative bodies of the United Nations, through universal ratification and by statements from international organizations.

B. Rome Statute and settler implantation

47. Article 8 of the Rome Statute provides the International Criminal Court with jurisdiction over an extensive list of codified war crimes “in particular when committed as a part of a plan or policy or as part of a large-scale commission of such crimes” during international armed conflict. The list includes all the grave breaches expressly prohibited by the Fourth Geneva Convention and Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949. Among the proscribed war crimes, as detailed in article 8 (2) (b) (viii) of the Rome Statute is: “The transfer, directly or indirectly, by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies, or the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory.”

48. The language of article 8 (2) (b) (viii) is very similar to the language found in article 49 (6) of the Fourth Geneva Convention, with one notable addition. In article 8 (2) (b) (viii), the term “directly or indirectly” is added, which aims to clarify the express scope of the provision to include any active or passive support by the occupying power of a settler implantation project, such as settlement protection measures and economic incentives, subsidies, tax exemptions and discriminatory permits.⁶¹ Legal commentators have taken the view that the addition of the term “directly or indirectly” in article 8 (2) (b) (viii) confirms, and does not add any substantive change to, the already extensive scope of its Geneva antecedents.⁶² Israel voted against the 1998 Statute precisely because of the inclusion of article 8 (2) (b) (viii).

49. Following the adoption of the Rome Statute, the Assembly of States Parties directed a preparatory commission to create an interpretative guide to the crimes enumerated in the Statute. The purpose of the text was to aid the International Criminal Court in the interpretation and application of articles 6 (genocide), 7 (crimes against humanity) and 8 (war crimes) by establishing the material and mental elements necessary to constitute these crimes. The final text of the elements of crime was subsequently adopted in 2000, and the language agreed upon for article 8 (2) (b) (viii) sets out three elements of the crime of settler implantation that must be satisfied in order to establish a breach:

- “1. The perpetrator:
 - (a) Transferred, directly or indirectly, parts of its own population into the territory it occupies; or
 - (b) Deported or transferred all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory.
2. The conduct took place in the context of and was associated with an international armed conflict.
3. The perpetrator was aware of factual circumstances that established the existence of an armed conflict.”⁶³

50. The Assembly of States Parties agreed to leave the interpretation of the term “transfer” to a future court, to be decided in accordance with the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law. That should not be a difficult task. The clarity of the language in the Rome Statute, together with its extensive antecedents in the development of twentieth century international humanitarian law, would invite a liberal and purposive reading. Such a reading would prohibit voluntary as well as involuntary settler implantation enterprises. It would also forbid passive, as well as active, government support by the occupying power for a settlement project, while requiring as a threshold some critical mass of civilian settlers from the occupying power, although not necessarily a particularly large number.

⁶¹ See Ghislain Poissonnier and Eric David, “Israeli settlements in the West Bank, a war crime?”, La Revue des Droits de l’Homme, No. 17 (2020).

⁶² See Michael G. Kearney, “On the situation in Palestine and the war crime of transfer of civilians into occupied territory”, Criminal Law Forum, vol. 28, No. 1 (March 2017).

⁶³ PCNICC/2000/1/Add.2, p. 28.

51. The purposive application of the Rome Statute extends individual criminal liability throughout the senior governmental, administrative and military levels of command of the occupying power for those who knowingly instigated, planned, directed, facilitated, approved, participated in or carried out the settlement project. It would also include those who intentionally or negligently failed to act within the responsibilities of their position to prevent the implementation of the project.⁶⁴

C. Israel, the occupation and the settlements

52. The creation and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory is the State's largest and most ambitious national project since its founding in 1948.⁶⁵ Starting with the very first Israeli settlements that were erected in the months following the war of June 1967, the full apparatus of the State – political, military, judicial and administrative – has provided the leadership, financing, planning, diplomatic cover, legal rationale, security protection and infrastructure that has been indispensable to the incessant growth of the enterprise.⁶⁶

53. In an article in the New York Review of Books, Nathan Thrall succinctly described the indispensable role of the Government of Israel in fostering the settlements:

“... the entire map of West Bank settlements has been meticulously planned by the Israeli government. An executive branch ministerial committee approves the settlements. A legislative branch subcommittee is devoted to advancing their connections to Israel's water, electrical, sewage, communications, and road infrastructure. The legislature passes certain bills that apply solely to the West Bank. The state comptroller supervises government policy in the West Bank, overseeing everything from wastewater pollution to road safety. The attorney general enforces guidelines that direct the Knesset to explain how every new bill passing through the legislature will apply to the settlements. The High Court of Justice – which exercises judicial review over all government bodies and agents, and is the court of last instance for every Israeli and Palestinian, whether citizen or occupied subject – issues rulings that entrench the segregated legal system in the West Bank, where, in the same territory, there is one set of laws and rights for Israeli settlers and another, inferior set for Palestinians. The Justice Ministry oversees local courts in the West Bank that apply Israeli laws to settlers but not to Palestinians. The Israel Prison Service extends its reach across the entire territory, holding both Palestinian subjects and Israeli settlers in jails within the Green Line.”⁶⁷

54. To incentivize Israeli and diaspora Jews to live in its settlements in the occupied territory, the Government of Israel actively offers a range of financial benefits, including advantageous grants and subsidies for individuals and favourable fiscal arrangements for settlements. These include subsidized housing benefits and premium mortgage rates, venture

⁶⁴ Article 25 (3) of the Rome Statute lays out the broad circumstances in which a person shall be criminally responsible for a crime. This includes: (a) the actual commission of the crime, (b) the ordering, soliciting or inducing of the crime, (c) the facilitating, aiding, abetting or otherwise assisting in the crime, and (d) otherwise intentionally contributing to the crime. Article 28 establishes a broad liability for the superior command. Article 33 limits, but does not entirely remove, the defence by a subordinate that he or she was obeying orders issued by a superior.

⁶⁵ See Mordecai Klein, Haaretz (15 June 2019). “Israel's territorial expansion project and control over the Palestinian population is the largest state/national project the country has ever carried out ... Almost the entire state is invested in this project. This does not refer only to the ideological investment and the transfer of settlers into the Palestinian territories. It's also about jobs for hundreds of thousands or millions of Israelis, as well as profits from exporting technological know-how and security products that maintain Israel's control over the Palestinian population and territory.”

⁶⁶ See Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, Lords of the Land: The War Over Israel's Settlements in the Occupied Territories (Nation Books, 2007).

⁶⁷ Nathan Thrall, “A day in the life of Abed Salama”, New York Review of Books (19 March 2021).

benefits for agricultural development, education and welfare benefits and the designation as a national priority area. It also makes available attractive business incentives for industrial zones in the settlements, such as discounted land fees, employment subsidies and reduced corporate taxes.⁶⁸ Beyond this, the settlements are treated as an integral part of the municipal and regional governance system of Israel, with budgetary funding for education, utilities, infrastructure, housing, water, transportation and other services.

55. The spatial placement of the Israeli settlements badly fragments Palestinian contiguity in East Jerusalem and the West Bank. In East Jerusalem, the 12 Jewish settlements are located primarily around the northern, eastern and southern perimeters of the city, blocking any Palestinian territorial continuity with the West Bank. In the West Bank, the settlements are organized into two main settlement blocs. South of Jerusalem is the Gush Etzoin bloc, stretching from Bethlehem to Hebron. The northern bloc is spread out from the Ramallah area to Nablus. There are also smaller settlement blocs just east of Jerusalem and in the Jordan Valley. In order to provide efficient transportation between the settlements and to Israeli urban areas, and to encourage new settlers and settlement expansion, the Government of Israel has invested heavily in building a dense network of highways through the West Bank and East Jerusalem, which is built on confiscated Palestinian lands and services only the settler population.⁶⁹

56. Aside from 150 officially recognized settlements in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, there are another 150 so-called settlement outposts built without formal State authorization and which Israel does not officially recognize.⁷⁰ However, it has granted retroactive authorization to dozens of these outposts and it actively supports virtually all of the other remaining outposts. The 2005 Sasson report, commissioned by the Government, determined that Israeli State bodies had been discreetly funnelling significant public funds for decades to these outposts for housing, roads, education, utilities and security. Although the author of the report observed that this amounted to a “bold violation of laws” and recommended that criminal charges be brought against State officials, no charges were ever initiated and virtually all of the outposts remain thriving settlements today.⁷¹

57. Beyond the expansive support for the settlements provided by the Government of Israel, several significant international private organizations play a seminal role in supporting settler implantation. The Settlement Division of the World Zionist Organization, which is substantially funded by the Government, acts as a government agent in assigning land to Jewish settlers in the West Bank, including settlement outposts.⁷² The Jewish National Fund has actively sought to purchase Palestinian lands in the West Bank and support infrastructure development, tourism and roads in the Israeli settlements.⁷³

58. While the Israeli settlements have flourished and provide an attractive standard of living for the settlers, they have created a humanitarian desert for the Palestinians, reaching every facet of their lives under occupation.⁷⁴ Human rights violations against Palestinians arising from the Israeli settlements are widespread and acute.⁷⁵ and settler violence has created a coercive environment.⁷⁶ There is an apartheid-like two-tier legal system granting full citizenship rights for the Israeli settlers while subjecting the Palestinians to military rule.⁷⁷

⁶⁸ See B'tselem, “This is ours – and this, too: Israel’s settlement policy in the West Bank” (March 2021), available from www.btselem.org/publications/202103_this_is_ours_and_this_too.

⁶⁹ See Israeli Centre for Public Affairs and Breaking the Silence, “Highway to annexation. Israeli road and transportation infrastructure development in the West Bank” (December 2020).

⁷⁰ See B'tselem, “This is ours – and this, too: Israel’s settlement policy in the West Bank”.

⁷¹ Daniel Kurtzer, “Sleight of hand: Israel, settlements and unauthorized outposts” (October 2016), available from www.mei.edu/sites/default/files/publications/PF24_Kurtzer_Israelisettlements_web_0.pdf.

⁷² See Yotam Berger, “World Zionist Organization Settlement Division finances illegal West Bank outposts”, Haaretz, 7 December 2018.

⁷³ See Peace Now, “KKL-JNF and its role in settlement expansion” (April 2020).

⁷⁴ See A/HRC/22/63.

⁷⁵ See A/HRC/40/42.

⁷⁶ See Yesh Din, “Settler crime and violence inside Palestinian communities, 2017–2020” (May 2021).

⁷⁷ See Association for Civil Rights in Israel, One Rule, Two Legal Systems: Israel’s Regime of Laws in the West Bank (October 2014).

Access to the natural resources of the occupied territory, especially to water, is disproportionately allocated to the settlements⁷⁸ and the fragmented territory left to the Palestinians has resulted in a highly dependent and strangled economy, mounting impoverishment, daily impositions and indignities, and receding hope for a reversal of fortune in the foreseeable future.⁷⁹

59. In the immediate aftermath of the 1967 war, the Israeli political leadership engaged in an intense debate over the future of the Palestinian territories that it now occupied. Two distinct but overlapping plans emerged. In the Allon Plan (named after Yigal Allon, the Israeli Labour Minister), the proposal was to settle and eventually annex specific sectors of the West Bank and Gaza, with the heavily-populated Palestinian towns and cities consigned to some future Israeli-Jordanian governance condominium. In the more ambitious but more ambiguous Dayan Plan (named after Moshe Dayan, the Israeli Defence Minister) the proposal was to retain de facto Israeli control indefinitely over the entire Palestinian territories, with a declaration of permanent de jure status to await some opportune moment in the future.⁸⁰

60. What these arguments shared was the desire for Israel to permanently retain significant portions of the Palestinian territories, with intensive Jewish civilian settlement as the prime method for securing its sovereignty claim. As Allon stated in 1969: “Here, we create a Greater Eretz Yisrael from a strategic point of view, and establish a Jewish state from a demographic point of view.”⁸¹ Both plans recognized the constraints of international opinion and sought to establish the facts on the ground discreetly. Neither plan included the intention to offer Israeli citizenship or even a modicum of civil and political rights to the new Palestinian subjects. The authors of both plans disregarded explicit advice from the legal counsel of the Israeli Foreign Ministry in 1967 that civilian settlements in the occupied territories would contravene the Fourth Geneva Convention.⁸² Where the plans diverged was primarily on pragmatism: whether the political and demographic cost of absorbing 1 million unwilling Palestinians was worth the acquisition of all the newly conquered territories. These two plans, with ongoing modifications in response to the progress and challenges of the occupation, have dominated the Israeli political debate on the Palestinian territories and the Israeli settlement project ever since.⁸³

61. In 1978, Matityahu Drobles, a senior official with the Settlement Division of the World Zionist Organization rearticulated the strategy for Israeli settlement development as first proposed by Allon and Dayan, namely to thicken the Jewish settlements through the West Bank in order to forestall the possibility of a Palestinian State and ensure Israeli permanence:

“To minimize the danger of the development of an additional Arab state in this territory. Since it would be cut off by Jewish settlements, it will be hard for the minority population to create territorial contiguity and political unity. There mustn’t be even the shadow of a doubt about our intention to keep the territories of Judea and Samaria [the West Bank] for good ... The best and most effective way of removing every shadow of a doubt about our intention to hold on to Judea and Samaria forever is by speeding up the settlement momentum in these territories.”⁸⁴

62. That strategy has been immensely successful. Three examples will suffice. First is its demographic achievement. At the end of 2019, there were approximately 300 settlements and 665,000 Jewish settlers in occupied East Jerusalem and the West Bank. The settler population

⁷⁸ See A/HRC/40/73.

⁷⁹ See TD/B/67/5.

⁸⁰ See Geoffrey Aronson, Israel, Palestinians and the Intifada (London, New York, Washington, Kegan Paul International, 1990).

⁸¹ See Robert I. Friedman, Zealots for Zion. Inside Israel’s West Bank Settlement Movement (New York, Random House, 1992).

⁸² See Gershom Gorenberg, The Accidental Empire: Israel and the Birth of the Settlements, 1967–1977 (New York, Henry Holt and Co., 2006).

⁸³ Shaul Arieli and others, “Historical political and economic impact of Jewish settlements in the occupied territories” (Israeli European Policy Network, June 2009).

⁸⁴ See Nathan Thrall, “A day in the life of Abed Salama”, citing the Drobles plan.

increase in the West Bank in 2019 was 3.2 per cent, substantially higher than the overall 1.9 per cent growth rate for Israeli citizens and residents.⁸⁵ In 1980, two years after the Drobles plan was first announced, at a time when the Security Council stated in resolution 476 (1980) that there was an “overriding necessity to end the prolonged occupation”, that the settlements were a “flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War”, that Israel was in defiance of previous United Nations resolutions and that it would undertake accountability measures against Israel should it fail to comply with the resolution, there were 12,500 settlers in the West Bank. In 2019, there were 441,600 settlers, 35 times as many.

63. Second is the political achievement of the strategy. In an article for the Financial Times in June 2021, former Secretary-General, Ban Ki-Moon, stated that: “Israel has pursued a policy of incremental de facto annexation ... to the point where the prospect of a two-State solution has all but vanished.” In addition, Mordecai Klein, an Israeli political scientist, has observed that: “The settlements do not only create de facto annexation of the territory, they also constitute a form of control over the Palestinians.”⁸⁶ In order to ensure maximum security a land base for the settlements and the utmost freedom of movement for the settlers, the Government of Israel has confined the 2.7 million Palestinians in the West Bank within a fragmented archipelago of 165 disparate patches of land (areas A and B), completely surrounded by an area under full Israeli control (area C) and hemmed in by hundreds of roadblocks, walls, checkpoints and forbidden zones.⁸⁷ The West Bank and East Jerusalem are increasingly demarcated from each other by intense settlement construction and both areas are separated from Gaza by severe travel restrictions.

64. Third is the diplomatic achievement of the strategy. Among senior diplomats who have worked on the Israel-Palestine file, there has been no serious effort in recent decades to demand that Israel comply with international law and United Nations resolutions by fully dismantling its settlements. Aaron David Miller, a senior American foreign policymaker, wrote in Newsweek magazine in January 2009: “In 25 years of working on the issue for six Secretaries of State, I can’t recall one meeting where we had a serious discussion with an Israeli Prime Minister about the damage that settlement activity – including land confiscation, bypass roads and housing demolitions – does to the peacemaking process.” Indeed, all of the international peace process initiatives over the past three decades, beginning with Madrid-Oslo in 1991, have accommodated the facts on the ground established by the Israeli settlements. Relying on realpolitik rather than international law, every peace proposal submitted by an American President, beginning with Bill Clinton in 2000, has assumed that Israel will retain most, if not all, of its settlement blocks in any final peace agreement.

D. Israeli settlements in international law

65. The illegality of the Israeli settlements is one of the most settled issues in modern international law. Among the international community, there is a virtual wall-to-wall consensus that the settlements violate the prohibition on settler implantation in the Fourth Geneva Convention. The illegality of the settlements has been affirmed by the International Court of Justice in its advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestine Territory, by the General Assembly, the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Human Rights Council in resolutions and reports, by the European Union, by Amnesty International, by ICRC, by the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, by the International Commission of Jurists, by Human Rights Watch, by Al-Haq and by B’tselem.

66. In December 2016, the Security Council, building upon a number of previous resolutions confirming the illegality of the Israeli settlements and the transfer of population, reaffirmed in resolution 2334 (2016) that the establishment by Israel of settlements in the ⁸⁵ See B’tselem, “This is ours – and this, too: Israel’s settlement policy in the West Bank”.

⁸⁶ Mordecai Klein, Haaretz.

⁸⁷ See B’tselem, “This is ours – and this, too: Israel’s settlement policy in the West Bank”. See also Badiil Resource Centre for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights, Israeli Annexation: the Case of Etzion Colonial Bloc (July 2019).

Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including East Jerusalem, had no legal validity, constituted a flagrant violation under international law and a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace.

67. Yet, while the Israeli settlements are prohibited by an authoritative and well-articulated body of international law, the international community has been remarkably reluctant to enforce those laws. In resolution 2334 (2016), the Security Council reiterated its previous demands that Israel must immediately and completely cease all settlement activities. Since early 2017, the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process has reported to the Council on 18 quarterly occasions that Israel has taken no steps to comply with its obligations under the resolution.⁸⁸

E. Do the Israeli settlements violate the Rome Statute?

68. The Rome Statute requires three elements of the war crime of transfer of a civilian population in an occupied territory to be satisfied (see paragraph 49 above). The first two elements constitute the material element of the crime:

- (a) The transfer by the perpetrator of parts of its own population into the occupied territory;
- (b) The conduct took place arising from an international armed conflict.

69. In the case of the Israeli settlements, both the material elements are met. Israel captured the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza in June 1967 as part of an international armed conflict. Virtually the entire international community accepts the designation of the Israeli control of the Palestinian territory as an occupation, to which the full scope of international humanitarian law and international human rights law continues to apply.⁸⁹

70. In addition, the historical and contemporary evidence is abundantly clear that the senior political, military and administrative officials of the Government of Israel, as well as important international private organizations, have actively developed and implemented a practice of transferring hundreds of thousands of Israeli citizens into the occupied Palestinian territory through enabling large-scale housing, commercial and infrastructure construction, providing advantageous State funding and ensuring military security, in order to establish an immovable demographic presence.⁹⁰

71. The third element of the crime is the mental element that the perpetrator was aware of the factual circumstances of the crime of transfer that established the existence of an armed conflict. In other words, the perpetrator has both the intent and the knowledge of the crime.⁹¹

72. In this case, the mental element is satisfied. The political, military and administrative leadership of Israel has directly and knowingly supported the decades-long State policy of encouraging and sustaining the growth of the settlements. Throughout those decades, the leadership has been fully aware of the clear direction from the international community that such activities violate fundamental prohibitions in international law.

73. It is the finding of the Special Rapporteur that the policy of settler implantation meets the definition of “war crime” under international humanitarian law and the Rome Statute. The Special Rapporteur also endorses the view that the Israeli settlements constitute a

⁸⁸ Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, Security Council briefing on the situation in the Middle East, reporting on Security Council resolution 2334 (24 June 2021).

⁸⁹ See, for example, Security Council resolution 2334 (2016) and Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, paras. 101 and 111–114.

⁹⁰ See Ghislain Poissonnier and Eric David, “Israeli settlements in the West Bank, a war crime?”, paras. 72–102.

⁹¹ See Diakonia International Humanitarian Law Resource Centre, “Litigating settlements. The impact of Palestine’s accession to the Rome Statute on the settlement enterprise” (December 2015).

continuing crime and therefore fall within the temporal jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court.⁹²

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

74. In conclusion, the Israeli settlements are the engine of this forever occupation, and amount to a war crime. An occupying power that initiates and expands civilian settlements in defiance of international law and the Rome Statute cannot be serious about peace. Equally, an international community that does not impose accountability measures on a defiant occupying power contrary to international law cannot be serious about its own laws.

75. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government of Israel fully comply with its obligations under international law and completely dismantle its civilian settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory.

76. The Special Rapporteur recommends to the international community that it:

(a) Fully support the work of the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court as it investigates the allegation that the Israeli settlements are in breach of the Rome Statute;

(b) Reiterate its long-standing demand upon Israel to fully dismantle the settlements in compliance with international law;

(c) Develop a comprehensive menu of accountability measures to be applied to Israel should it continue to defy international direction with respect to its settlements;

(d) Ensure the full accountability of Israeli political, administrative and military officials who are responsible for grave breaches of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(e) Call upon all United Nations Member States to implement the injunction of the Security Council in resolution 465 (1980) not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connexion with settlements in the occupied territories.

77. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the High Commissioner for Human Rights regularly update the database of businesses involved in settlements, in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

⁹² See Uzay Aysev, "Continuing or settled? Prosecution of Israeli settlements under article 8 (2) (b) (viii) of the Rome Statute", Palestine Yearbook of International Law, vol. 20, No. 1 (2019).

General Assembly

Distr.: General
12 August 2022

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-ninth session

28 February–1 April 2022

Agenda item 7

Human Rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Michael Lynk*

Summary

In the present report, submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/2 A and Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Michael Lynk, examines the current human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, with a particular emphasis on the question of whether Israeli rule over the Occupied Palestinian Territory can now be called apartheid.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted to the Human Rights Council by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Michael Lynk, pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/2 A and Council resolution 5/1.
2. The Special Rapporteur would like to note that he has yet to be granted access to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and his requests to meet with the Permanent Representative of Israel to the United Nations have not been accepted. The Special Rapporteur notes again that access to the Occupied Palestinian Territory is a key element in the development of a comprehensive understanding of the human rights situation on the ground.
3. The present report is based primarily on written submissions. The Special Rapporteur was unable to travel to the region for further consultations owing to the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic.
4. The Special Rapporteur wishes to express his appreciation for the full cooperation extended by the Government of the State of Palestine. He further acknowledges the essential work of civil society organizations and human rights defenders to create an environment in which human rights are respected and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law are not committed with impunity and without witnesses.

II. Current human rights situation

Civil society

5. Israeli authorities continued to take actions against Palestinian civil society organizations, which contributed to undermining the work of organizations promoting and supporting the human rights of Palestinians. These actions included the use of counter-terrorism legislation and military orders to restrict and criminalize human rights and humanitarian work, the denial of visas for staff with the United Nations and international non-governmental organizations, the use of Pegasus spyware, which was developed by the Israeli company NSO Group, on mobile telephones of Palestinian human rights workers,¹ and arbitrary arrests and criminal prosecution of human rights defenders.
6. On 19 October 2021, the Minister of Defence of Israel announced the designation of six Palestinian human rights and humanitarian organizations² as “terrorist organizations” under the Counter-Terrorism Law of 2016. The designation decisions were based on unsubstantiated links between these organizations and the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, including the alleged diversion of funds. At the time of the drafting of the present report, no evidence proving these allegations had been presented by Israeli authorities despite several requests by the international community and concerned organizations.
7. The potential impact of these designations and subsequent declarations by the Israeli military commander for the West Bank is substantial.³ Both the Counter-Terrorism Law and the Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945 foresee prison terms for membership in or any type of support or cooperation with such organizations, prohibition of activities, confiscation of property and closure of offices.⁴

¹ Amnesty International, “Devices of Palestinian human rights defenders hacked with NSO Group’s Pegasus spyware”, 8 November 2021.

² Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Al-Haq, Bisan Center for Research and Development, Defence for Children International – Palestine, Union of Agricultural Work Committees and Union of Palestinian Women’s Committees.

³ On 3 November 2021, the Israeli military commander for the West Bank declared five of the Palestinian organizations as unlawful associations through military orders. According to Israeli law, the declarations of unlawful associations through military orders are applied in the West Bank and Gaza, while the terrorist designations under the Counter-Terrorism Law are applied in occupied East Jerusalem and Israel.

III. From occupation to apartheid

A. Introduction

8. When the facts change, so must our minds.

9. In the Palestinian territory that Israel has occupied since 1967, there are now 5 million stateless Palestinians living without rights, in an acute state of subjugation and with no path to self-determination or a viable independent State, which the international community has repeatedly promised is their right.⁵ Over the past five decades, Israel has created 300 Jewish-only civilian settlements, all of them illegal,⁶ with 700,000 Israeli Jewish settlers now living in East Jerusalem and the West Bank in the midst of, but apart from, 3 million Palestinians. In Gaza, Israel has barricaded the 2 million Palestinians into what former British Prime Minister David Cameron called “an open-air prison”,⁷ a method of population control unique in the modern world. In recent years, prime ministers of Israel have regularly and openly proclaimed that the country’s rule over the Palestinians and their land is permanent and that no Palestinian State will emerge.⁸

10. The international community has declared time and again that the Israeli rule over the Palestinian territory is an occupation, strictly governed by international humanitarian law,⁹ as well as by international human rights law.¹⁰ By their very nature, occupations are required to be built with wood, not concrete. Accordingly, the occupation by Israel must be temporary, it must be short-term; Israel is prohibited from annexing even a millimetre of occupied territory and any changes to the occupied territory must be as minimal as possible. It must comply fully with international law and United Nations resolutions and cooperate in good faith with the Palestinian leadership to completely end the occupation and realize a genuine two-State solution.¹¹

11. None of this has happened, nor, based on the available cogent evidence, is any of this likely to happen, absent concerted international intervention. The occupation by Israel has been conducted in profound defiance of international law and hundreds of United Nations resolutions, with scant pushback from the international community.¹² Its 55-year-old occupation burst through the restraints of temporariness long ago. Israel has progressively engaged in the de jure and de facto annexation of occupied territory. It insists that the laws of occupation and human rights do not apply to its regime, and its proliferating facts on the ground have virtually extinguished what lingering prospects remain for a genuine Palestinian State. A legal oxymoron has emerged: an occupation in perpetuity.

⁴ Counter-Terrorism Law No. 5766 of 2016, sects. 20–24, 56 and 69–70; Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945, sects. 84–85; Military Order No. 1651 and Military Order No. 101.

⁵ See General Assembly resolution 76/150.

⁶ In its resolution 2334 (2016), the Security Council declared that the Israeli settlements are a flagrant violation under international law.

⁷ BBC, “David Cameron describes blockaded Gaza as a ‘prison’”, 27 July 2010.

⁸ Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu stated in 2018 that the Palestinians could have a “State-minus”, where Israel would maintain security control over all of the Palestinian territory. See Ben Sales, “Netanyahu says he supports a Palestinian ‘state-minus’ controlled by Israeli security”, Jewish Telegraphic Agency, 24 October 2018. In 2022, Prime Minister Naftali Bennett said: “I oppose a Palestinian State, and I am making it impossible to conduct diplomatic negotiations that might lead to a Palestinian State.” See Mazal Mualem, “Bennet, in interview blitz, reacts to Netanyahu criticisms”, Al-Monitor, 31 January 2022.

⁹ See Security Council resolutions 237 (1967) and 2334 (2016), as well as 20 other Security Council resolutions.

¹⁰ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, para. 149.

¹¹ See A/72/556.

¹² See A/74/507 and A/75/532.

12. The inescapable question becomes: has the Israeli occupation curdled into something darker and more ominous? While the laws of occupation continue to apply in full force to the Palestinian territory, they have become an increasingly inadequate legal and political framework by which to accurately understand, let alone effectively regulate and end, the transformative reality that Israel has been imposing on the ground. Even as the protracted Israeli occupation has crossed the bright red line into illegality,¹³ this does not appear to sufficiently capture the full extent of the qualitative changes occurring in the Palestinian territory.

13. Distinguished voices have concluded in recent years that these inexorable facts amount to, or closely resemble, apartheid. Ban Ki-moon, the former Secretary-General of the United Nations, wrote in 2021 that the intent of Israel to maintain “structural domination and oppression of the Palestinian people through indefinite occupation ... arguably constitutes apartheid”.¹⁴ Nobel Laureate Desmond Tutu stated in 2014: “I know firsthand that Israel has created an apartheid reality within its borders and through its occupation.”¹⁵ The Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa, Naledi Pandor, spoke in 2022 about her country’s “significant dismay at the continued apartheid practices of Israel against the long-suffering people of Palestine”.¹⁶ Michael Ben-Yair, a former Attorney General of Israel, said in 2022 that Israel had become “an apartheid regime ... a one state reality, with two different peoples living with unequal rights”.¹⁷ Ami Ayalon, the former Director of Shin Bet, wrote in his memoir: “We’ve already created an apartheid situation in Judea and Samaria, where we control the Palestinians by force, denying them self-determination.”¹⁸ Furthermore, two former Israeli ambassadors to South Africa – Ilan Baruch and Alon Liel – stated in 2021 that the systematic discrimination of Israel “on the basis of nationality and ethnicity” now constituted apartheid.¹⁹

14. If these responsible figures have determined that this reality is apartheid, then it is incumbent upon the rest of us to test, through the tools of international law and human rights, whether these observations accurately reflect what is happening in the Palestinian territory.

15. Palestinians have urged the international community to understand their predicament as apartheid. Palestinian Ambassador Riyadh Mansour stated to the Security Council in February 2022 that apartheid was now entrenched in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.²⁰ Two premier Palestinian human rights organizations – Al-Haq and the Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association – have concluded that Israel was maintaining an apartheid regime over the Palestinian people as a whole.²¹ The Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, another leading Palestinian human rights group, recently reported that the enclosure of Gaza had become an integral part of the apartheid regime of Israel.²²

16. International and Israeli human rights organizations have likewise issued substantive reports that have determined that Israel has created an apartheid rule, either in the West Bank or throughout Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Human Rights Watch stated in 2021: “The Israeli government has demonstrated an intent to maintain the domination of ¹³ See A/72/556.

¹⁴ “Ban Ki-moon: US should back a new approach to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict”, Financial Times, 29 June 2021.

¹⁵ Desmond Tutu, “Presbyterian General Assembly Biennial Meeting: my message on Israel and Palestine”, 16 August 2014.

¹⁶ Tovah Lazaroff, “Israeli apartheid charge: a matter of law, antisemitism or occupation?”, Jerusalem Post, 18 February 2022.

¹⁷ Michael Ben-Yair, “Former AG of Israel: with great sadness I conclude that my country is now an apartheid regime”, thejournal.ie, 10 February 2022.

¹⁸ Ami Ayalon, Friendly Fire (Steerforth Press, 2021), p. 260.

¹⁹ Ilan Baruch and Alon Liel, “It’s apartheid, says Israeli ambassadors to South Africa”, GroundUp, 8 June 2021.

²⁰ See the statement made by the Permanent Observer Mission of the State of Palestine to the United Nations on 23 February 2022 (see S/PV.8973).

²¹ Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Al-Haq, and Housing and Land Rights Network, “Entrenching and maintaining an apartheid regime over the Palestinian people as a whole”, submission to the Special Rapporteur, January 2022.

²² Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, The Gaza Bantustan (2021).

Jewish Israelis over Palestinians across Israel and the OPT.”²³ Amnesty International concluded in 2022: “Israel has perpetrated the international wrong of apartheid, as a human rights violation and a violation of public international law wherever it imposes this system.”²⁴ B’Tselem found in 2021 that Israel had created a “regime of Jewish supremacy from the Jordan River to the Mediterranean Sea” that constituted apartheid.²⁵ Furthermore, Yesh Din issued a comprehensive legal opinion in June 2020 by human rights lawyer Michael Sfard that determined that the crime of apartheid was being committed by Israel in the West Bank.²⁶

17. Israel and its supporters have strongly resisted the labelling of the policies and practices of Israel as amounting to apartheid. In January 2022, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Yair Lapid, responded to the Amnesty International report by stating that its finding of apartheid was “false, biased and antisemitic”.²⁷ The chief executive officer of the American Jewish Committee, David Harris, said that the shortcomings of Israel could not be compared with apartheid in South Africa.²⁸ In a more reflective comment, Michael Koplow of the Israel Policy Forum criticized the use of “apartheid” as conceptually wrong in the context of Israel and Palestine, because it would lead decision makers away from solving the true problem on the ground.²⁹

18. In the following section of the report, the Special Rapporteur examines whether Israeli rule over the Occupied Palestinian Territory can now be called apartheid. The Special Rapporteur acknowledges that a number of human rights groups (Al-Haq, Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International and B’Tselem) have analysed the issue of apartheid in the context of Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory together, taking the view that it was impossible to have democracy here and apartheid there.³⁰ However, consistent with the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, the focus is on the practices of Israel in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza.

B. International law and prohibition of the crime of apartheid

19. The concept of apartheid – the term means “apartness” in Afrikaans – as an oppressive system of rule and a cornerstone legal prohibition of international law arose from the legal, political and social practices developed in southern Africa between the 1940s and the 1990s. It originated in South Africa as a declared State policy in 1948,³¹ and was also implemented in other settler colonies in southern Africa. Today, apartheid has acquired a universal meaning that transcends the specific practices in southern Africa and is applicable wherever it may exist.

20. The legal prohibition against apartheid has become well-established through both customary and conventional international law. It is regarded today as a jus cogens norm, a peremptory norm of international law from which no derogation is allowed.³² Elevating apartheid to the most serious of crimes in international law places it in the same category as war crimes, wars of aggression, territorial annexation, genocide, slavery, torture and crimes

²³ Human Rights Watch, A Threshold Crossed (2021).

²⁴ Amnesty International, Israel’s Apartheid against Palestinians (London, 2022).

²⁵ B’Tselem, “A regime of Jewish supremacy from the Jordan River to the Mediterranean Sea”, 12 January 2021.

²⁶ Michael Sfard, “The Israeli occupation of the West Bank and the crime of apartheid”, position paper (Yesh Din, June 2020).

²⁷ Lazar Berman, “Israel blasts Amnesty UK for ‘antisemitic’ report accusing it of apartheid”, Times of Israel, 31 January 2022.

²⁸ Laurenz Gehrke, “Amnesty International report alleging ‘apartheid’ in Israel draws fierce criticism”, Politico, 1 February 2022.

²⁹ “The strange case of erasing nationalism from a national conflict”, In Koplow Column, Israel Policy Forum, 3 February 2022.

³⁰ See also N. Thrall, “The separate regimes delusion”, London Review of Books (7 January 2021).

³¹ N. Clark and W. Worger, South Africa: the Rise and Fall of Apartheid, 3rd ed. (Routledge, 2016).

³² United Nations, “Draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, with commentaries”, commentary on art. 40 (2001).

against humanity. Furthermore, as a jus cogens norm, this gives rise to obligations erga omnes, creating a legal duty for all States to cooperate in order to end the violation.³³

Customary international law

21. The General Assembly first approved a resolution critical of apartheid in South Africa in 1950,³⁴ and subsequently adopted a volume of resolutions condemning the practice over the following 40 years. In 1968, the General Assembly declared that the policies of apartheid practised by the Government of South Africa were a crime against humanity, stating that it was part of the policy of South Africa to deny the majority population its right to self-determination.³⁵ In its Advisory Opinion on Namibia in 1971, the International Court of Justice ruled that the application of apartheid in Namibia by South Africa was a “flagrant violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter [of the United Nations]”.³⁶ In its resolution 473 (1980), the Security Council stated that the policy of apartheid was a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and was incompatible with the rights and dignity of man, the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Legal scholars have accepted that the prohibition against apartheid has acquired the status of a rule of customary international law,³⁷ meaning that it applies universally, regardless of whether a State has ratified a convention or international instrument outlawing apartheid.

Conventional international law

22. In conventional international law, the prohibition against the crime of apartheid is firmly anchored in the instruments of international human rights law, international humanitarian law and international criminal law.

23. In international human rights law, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination³⁸ was adopted by the General Assembly to combat the scourge of racial supremacy, segregation and separation through the prohibition of discrimination on the basis of race, colour or ethnic origin.³⁹ Article 3 states that States parties particularly condemn racial segregation and apartheid and undertake to prevent, prohibit and eradicate all practices of this nature in territories under their jurisdiction.⁴⁰

24. In international humanitarian law, apartheid has been designated by the high contracting parties to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 as a grave breach under the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I) if committed during circumstances regulated by the Conventions, such as an armed conflict or an occupation.⁴¹ Article 85 (4) defines a series of acts “committed wilfully” as “grave breaches” of the Protocol. Among the specifically listed acts are “practices of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity, based upon racial

³³ See A/CN.4/727.

³⁴ Resolution 395 (V).

³⁵ Resolution 2396 (XXIII) and A/CN.4/727.

³⁶ Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1971, para. 131.

³⁷ See A/CN.4/727; and A. Cassese, International Criminal Law, 2nd ed. (Oxford University Press, 2008), p. 25.

³⁸ Entered into force on 4 January 1969. As at 1 February 2022, 182 States had ratified the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

³⁹ The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination was ratified by Israel in 1979 and by the State of Palestine in 2014.

⁴⁰ In its general recommendation No. 19 (1995), the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination stated that article 3 had universal application and the prohibition applied to all countries.

⁴¹ Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 entered into force on 7 December 1979. As at 1 February 2020, 174 States had ratified the Protocol. Israel ratified the Geneva Conventions of 1949 in 1951, but has not ratified the Protocol.

discrimination”. Additionally, article 85 (5) declares that “grave breaches” are to be regarded as “war crimes” under international humanitarian law.

25. The International Committee of the Red Cross, the guardian of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, considers that the prohibition against apartheid in international humanitarian law has achieved the status of customary international law.⁴² In international criminal law, the General Assembly adopted the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁴³ in 1973. Article 1 of the Convention declares that apartheid is a crime against humanity. Article 2 defines the crime against humanity of apartheid as including similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination as practised in southern Africa, and states that the term “crime of apartheid” is to apply to the following inhuman acts committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group of persons over any other racial group of persons and systematically oppressing them:

(a) Denial to the members of a racial group of the right to life and liberty of person, through such means as murder, serious bodily or mental harm or arbitrary arrest and imprisonment;

(b) The deliberate imposition on a racial group of living conditions calculated to cause their physical destruction, in whole or in part;

(c) Legislative actions calculated to prevent a racial group from full participation in all features of a society’s economic, social, political and cultural life;

(d) Any measures designed to divide the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves or ghettos, the prohibition of mixed marriages or the expropriation of land;

(e) Exploitation of the labour of a racial group;

(f) Persecution of organizations, by depriving them of their fundamental rights and freedoms because they oppose apartheid.

26. In 1998, the international community further developed the criminality of apartheid with the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.⁴⁴ Article 7 (2) (h) of the Rome Statute defines the crime of apartheid as inhumane acts of a character similar to those referred to in paragraph 1, committed in the context of an institutionalized regime of systematic oppression and domination by one racial group over another racial group or groups and committed with the intention of maintaining that regime. Paragraph 1 of article 7 lists a number of inhumane acts, including:

(a) Deportation or forcible transfer of population;

(b) Imprisonment or other severe deprivation of liberty;

(c) Torture;

(d) Persecution against any identifiable group on political, racial, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender or other grounds;

(e) Other inhumane acts of a similar character intentionally causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health.

⁴² “Rule 88: non-discrimination”, Customary International Humanitarian Law database. Available at https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docindex/v1_rul_rule88#:~:text=Apartheid-,Rule%2088.,other%20similar%20criteria%20is%20prohibited.

⁴³ Entered into force on 18 July 1976. As at 1 February 2022, 110 States had ratified the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. The State of Palestine ratified the Convention in 2014. Israel has not ratified it.

⁴⁴ Entered into force on 1 July 2002. As at 1 February 2022, 123 States had ratified the Rome Statute. It was ratified by the State of Palestine in 2015. Israel has not ratified it.

27. In February 2021, the Pre-Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court ruled that it has criminal jurisdiction to hear complaints regarding purported violations of the Rome Statute with respect to the situation in Palestine.⁴⁵

28. Accordingly, the relevant international law establishes that the Occupied Palestinian Territory is a territorial unit where the prohibition against apartheid can be applied to assess whether apartheid practices exist. Among the factors that support this conclusion are the universal application of customary international law, the ratification by both Israel and the State of Palestine of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the ratification by the State of Palestine of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Rome Statute, and the customary international humanitarian law status of the prohibition against apartheid.

Legal definition of apartheid

29. Only the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Rome Statute provide legal definitions of apartheid. The two instruments were drafted and adopted in distinct eras, which likely explains the differences in their respective terminology. The drafting of the Convention in the early 1970s reflected the international community's focus on the specific practices of racial supremacy in southern Africa. When the Rome Statute was drafted and adopted 25 years later, the apartheid era in southern Africa had already ended, and the purpose of the Rome Statute was to provide a forward-looking definition with universal application. In particular, it made no reference to South Africa or southern Africa. Given this approach, there is no reasonable basis to think that the existence of apartheid is limited either in time or in geography. Furthermore, while the historical practice of apartheid in southern Africa provides useful reference points for assessing the possible existence of apartheid elsewhere, such historical and political comparisons are never exact, and cannot be expected to be.⁴⁶ Rather, the legal and political starting point to determine the presence of apartheid in another time and place is the application of a commonly accepted definition, drawn from the Convention and the Rome Statute.

30. In its report, Amnesty International correctly notes that there are two secondary differences between the definition of apartheid in the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and that in the Rome Statute.⁴⁷ First, under the Rome Statute the crime of apartheid requires the existence of an institutionalized regime of systematic oppression and domination by one racial group over any other racial group, with the intent of maintaining that regime. In contrast, the Convention takes a less-specific approach in that it does not refer to an "institutionalized regime". Nonetheless, since the Convention specifically mentions the "similar policies and practices" that were applied in southern Africa during the apartheid era, it stands to reason that these practices amounted to the sort of "institutionalized regime" that the Rome Statute refers to. The second difference goes to the broader list of inhuman acts proscribed in the Convention. However, a purposive reading of the respective lists indicates that there is considerable overlap, and the broad language used in the Rome Statute – that is, "other inhumane acts" – can reasonably be said to include the same prohibited provisions that are found on the list in the Convention.

31. These differences between the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Rome Statute are secondary and reconcilable. Accordingly, the construction of a definition of the "crime against humanity of apartheid" that draws from, and is consistent with, both instruments would be made up of the following three features:

(a) There exists an institutionalized regime of systematic racial oppression and discrimination;

⁴⁵ Situation in the State of Palestine, No. ICC-01/18, Decision, 5 February 2021.

⁴⁶ J. Dugard and J. Reynolds, "Apartheid, International Law and the Occupied Palestinian Territory", European Journal of International Law, vol. 24, No. 3 (September 2013), pp. 867, 883–884.

⁴⁷ Amnesty International, Israel's Apartheid against Palestinians, note 28 at pp. 47–49.

(b) The regime was established with the intent to maintain the domination of one racial group over another;

(c) The regime features inhumane and inhuman acts committed as an integral part of the regime.

This definition has been accepted by scholars and human rights organizations that have assessed the contemporary meaning of apartheid in international law.⁴⁸ It must be noted that all three features are required: examples or patterns of racial discrimination by themselves are insufficient.

Question of “race” and “racial group”

32. The question of race and racial groups in the context of apartheid and domination requires an explanation. Neither the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid nor the Rome Statute defines “racial group”. The initial approach towards “racial group” in the Convention might suggest that it was influenced by the racial categories employed by the apartheid regimes in southern Africa, which focused on black and white skin colour.⁴⁹ However, the understanding of “race” and “racial groups” has evolved significantly in recent decades, such that it has been recognized for some time that “race” and “racial group” are social constructs rather than a biological determination based on skin colour and/or assumptions regarding inherent racial differences.⁵⁰ Indeed, article 1 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination – which preceded the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and is specifically mentioned in the preamble to that Convention – provides a broad definition of “racial discrimination” that goes beyond “race” and “colour” to include ethnicity, descent and national origin, that is, any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin that has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms.⁵¹

33. Therefore, in the context of the actions of Israel towards the Palestinians living in the occupied territory, Jewish Israelis and Palestinian Arabs may be understood as distinct racial groups distinguished by their nationality, ethnicity, religion, ancestry and descent.⁵² As social constructions, racial identities should be seen as a matter of perception, particularly in the eyes of a dominant group that distinguishes itself from other groups based on these various social markers. In the present case, the Government of Israel has determined the allocation, and the denial, of rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory through a series of laws, practices and policies that define who is a Jew and who is not a Jew (the non-Jewish population being overwhelmingly Palestinian). The important point in international law is not what these respective groups represent in terms of any purported fixed identity, but rather how these respective groups are treated because of their perceived identity and classification.

⁴⁸ J. Dugard and J. Reynolds, “Apartheid, international law and the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, note 51; Human Rights Watch, A Threshold Crossed, note 27; Amnesty International, Israel’s Apartheid against Palestinians, note 28; and International Human Rights Clinic at Harvard Law School and Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, “Apartheid in the Occupied West Bank”, joint submission to the United Nations Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and Israel, February 2022.

⁴⁹ C. Lingaas, “Jewish Israeli and Palestinians as distinct ‘racial groups’ within the meaning of the crime of apartheid?”, EJIL:Talk!, 6 July 2021.

⁵⁰ C. Lingaas, The Concept of Race in International Criminal Law (Routledge, 2019).

⁵¹ This definition was applied by the International Court of Justice in Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1971, note 40, para. 131.

⁵² International Human Rights Clinic at Harvard Law School and Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, “Apartheid in the Occupied West Bank”, note 53; and R. Falk and V. Tilley, “Israeli practices towards the Palestinian people and the question of apartheid”, Palestine and the Israeli Occupation, No. 1 (Spring 2017), pp. 1–65.

Laws of occupation and legal prohibition against apartheid

34. The crime against humanity of apartheid is capable of being committed during an occupation that is governed by international humanitarian law. First, article 3 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination obligates States to prevent, prohibit and eradicate all practices of this nature (i.e. “racial segregation and apartheid”) in territories under their jurisdiction. This definition, drafted in the shadow of apartheid during the illegal rule of South Africa over Namibia, would capture the practices of any alien rule by a State beyond its recognized borders. Second, Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 expressly prohibits apartheid, meaning that the high contracting parties anticipated that the crime could be committed during an occupation. Third, the application of one body of law does not displace the operation of the other, except in cases of express contradiction. The application of lex specialis – a traditional approach in international humanitarian law that postulates that, if two laws govern a particular situation, the more specific law overrides the more general law – must be interpreted carefully in these circumstances, in order not to deny the intended beneficiaries the robust protection of these laws.⁵³ The ascendent legal view is that different bodies of laws can apply simultaneously to a given situation where they may provide complementary and concurrent protection.⁵⁴ This applies equally to the laws of occupation and the prohibition against apartheid.⁵⁵

C. Application of the apartheid test to the Occupied Palestinian Territory

35. Since the beginning of the occupation in June 1967, the rule of Israel over the Palestinian territory has been epitomized by two core features. The first is the establishment of designed-to-be irreversible “facts-on-the-ground”: the creation of 300 civilian settlements, with 700,000 Jewish settlers, meant to demographically engineer an unlawful sovereignty claim through the annexation of the occupied territory while simultaneously thwarting the Palestinians’ right to self-determination. The second is the development of an oppressive system of military rule over the 2.7 million Palestinians in the West Bank, a shrunken and tenuous range of residency rights for the 360,000 Palestinians living in East Jerusalem, and a medieval military blockade of the 2 million Palestinians in Gaza.

36. These two features are deeply intertwined: it is impossible for an acquisitive occupying Power to settle hundreds of thousands of its citizens into occupied territory, create for them attractive living conditions equivalent to the home territory, and expropriate and alienate huge swaths of land and resources for their benefit and security, without also immiserating the indigenous people and triggering their perpetual rebellion. The past 70 years has taught us that a covetous alien Power has two choices: either to abandon the fever dream of settler colonialism and recognize the freedom of the indigenous people or instead to double down with increasingly more sophisticated and harsher methods of population control as the inevitable consequence of entrenching permanent alien rule over a people profoundly opposed to their disenfranchisement and destitution.

37. Israel has chosen the second path. Kofi Annan described this as a “prolonged and sometimes brutal occupation”.⁵⁶ Ban Ki-moon has written that “indefinite occupation” by Israel has been imposed by “inhumane and abusive acts”.⁵⁷ Barack Obama has criticized the “slow-motion annexation” of Palestinian land by Israeli settlements.⁵⁸ We must ask ourselves: has this occupation now congealed into apartheid?

⁵³ M. Jackson, “Expert opinion on the interplay between the legal regime applicable to belligerent occupation and the prohibition of apartheid under international law”, paper prepared for the Diakonia International Humanitarian Law Centre, 23 March 2021.

⁵⁴ See Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

⁵⁵ M. Jackson, “Expert opinion on the interplay between the legal regime applicable to belligerent occupation and the prohibition of apartheid under international law”, note 58; and Al-Haq, Addameer Support and Human Rights Association, and Housing and Land Rights Network, “Entrenching and maintaining an apartheid regime over the Palestinian people as a whole”, note 25.

⁵⁶ K. Annan, Interventions: a Life in War and Peace (Penguin, 2012), p. 268.

⁵⁷ Ban Ki-moon, “Ban Ki-moon: US should back a new approach to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict”.

⁵⁸ B. Obama, A Promised Land (Crown, 2020), p. 632.

Institutionalized regime of systematic racial oppression and discrimination

38. At the heart of the settler colonial project of Israel is a comprehensive dual legal and political system that provides comprehensive rights and living conditions for the Jewish Israeli settlers in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, while imposing upon the Palestinians military rule and control without any of the basic protections of international humanitarian and human rights law.⁵⁹ Against the grain of the twenty-first century, Israel assigns, or withholds, these rights and conditions on the basis of ethnic and national identity.

39. Politically and legally, Jewish Israeli settlers enjoy the same fulsome citizenship rights and protections as Israeli Jews living inside the country's borders of 1949. The 475,000 Israeli settlers in the West Bank, all of whom live in Jewish-only settlements, have the full panoply of laws and benefits of the citizenship of Israel extended to them personally and extraterritorially. Like Israelis in Tel Aviv or Eilat, the West Bank settlers have the same access to health insurance, national insurance, social services, education, regular municipal services and the right of entry into and out of Israel and around much of the West Bank. They also received targeted benefits and incentives from the Government of Israel to live and work in the settlements.⁶⁰ The settlers are an integrated part of a wealthy society with a European standard of living.⁶¹ The utilities and services that the settlements enjoy – water, power, housing, access to well-paid jobs, roads and industrial investment – are far superior to those available to the Palestinians. If settlers are charged with a crime, they are tried in an Israeli court with the full protection of Israeli criminal law. These settlers have the right to vote in Israeli elections, even though Israeli laws formally restrict the ability of Israeli citizens who live outside the country's territory to vote. To be sure, there are some citizenship rights possessed by a citizen of Israel that are not automatically extended territorially to the West Bank settlers, particularly regarding property, planning and building laws. However, Israeli military orders have been created to assign these rights to the local and regional settler councils in the West Bank, which effectively bridges the gap. These settler councils are regarded by Israel as equivalent to municipal councils inside Israel, and they are allocated substantial benefits and budgets by the Government of Israel accordingly. The major para-statal institutions that have been given the authority to operate in the occupied territory – the Jewish National Fund, the Jewish Agency for Israel, the World Zionist Organization and a multitude of foreign charities – work solely for the benefit of consolidating the presence of Israeli Jews in the settlements.

40. In sharp contrast, the 2.7 million Palestinians living in the West Bank enjoy none of the rights, protections and privileges possessed by the Israeli Jewish settlers living among them. They can vote in elections (when they are held) for the Palestinian Authority, but it has exceptionally limited powers. They have no democratic or political rights to hold the occupying Power – which exercises overwhelming control over their lives – accountable. The ubiquitous barriers to freedom of personal and commercial movement throughout the occupied territory have resulted in a structurally de-developed economy. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development has estimated that Israeli closures, the confiscation of land and resources, rapacious settlement growth and military operations have cost the Palestinian economy $57.7 billion in arrested development since 2000.⁶² Yet, notwithstanding the travails of the occupation, Palestinian society has become highly literate and quite well educated.⁶³ The result is a dynamic and talented population whose economy has become depleted and impoverished by a protracted military occupation, which is heavily ⁵⁹ International Human Rights Clinic at Harvard Law School and Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, "Apartheid in the Occupied West Bank", note 53; N. Thrall, "The separate regimes delusion"; Amnesty International, Israel's Apartheid against Palestinians, note 28; Association for Civil Rights in Israel, One Rule, Two Legal Systems (October 2014); Human Rights Watch, A Threshold Crossed; Al-Haq and others, note 25; and D. Kretzmer and Y. Ronen, The Occupation of Justice, 2nd ed. (Oxford University Press, 2021).

⁶⁰ B'Tselem, This Is Ours – and This, Too (2021).

⁶¹ According to the World Bank, Israeli gross domestic product per capita in 2020 was $44,168.

⁶² See A/76/309.

⁶³ Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, Palestine in Figures 2020 (2021).

dependent on international aid and which has only one thirteenth the gross domestic product per capita of Israel.⁶⁴

41. The lives of the Palestinians in the West Bank are governed by more than 1,800 military orders issued since 1967 by the Commander of the Israel Defense Forces, covering such issues as security, taxation, transportation, land planning and zoning, natural resources, travel and the administration of justice. In particular, Israel has imposed a military legal system in the West Bank that applies to Palestinians but not the Jewish settlers. The focus of the military legal system is the regulation of security, which covers such offences as participating in protests and non-violent civil disobedience, standard criminal acts, traffic violations, terrorism, membership in over 400 banned organizations, taking part in political meetings and engaging in civil society activities. Palestinians arrested for security offences can be detained without charge for a much longer period of time than Israeli settlers. The military legal system is presided over by Israeli military judges and trials are conducted in Hebrew (which many Palestinian detainees do not speak). The system offers few of the procedural and substantive protections of a purposive criminal legal system, while the prisoners' lawyers are significantly restricted in their access to evidence and the conviction rate is over 99 per cent.⁶⁵ Even more draconian, there are at any one time hundreds of Palestinians imprisoned indefinitely through administrative detention, where they are incarcerated without the façade of a formal proceeding, that is, without charges, evidence, a trial or a conviction, and whose detention can be extended indefinitely. Investigations by the military into deaths and serious injuries rarely result in any accountability.

42. A central strategy of Israeli rule has been the fragmentation of the Palestinian territory into separate areas of population control, with Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem physically divided from one another. The West Bank itself is further splintered into 165 disconnected enclaves. This strategic fragmentation – divide et impera – is geographically enforced by Israel through an elaborate series of walls, checkpoints, barricades, military closure zones, Palestinian-only roads and Israeli-only roads.⁶⁶ Israel closely monitors Palestinian society through advanced cyber-surveillance and its full control over the Palestinian population registry. The Occupied Palestinian Territory lacks any secure land, sea or air access to the outside world, with Israel controlling all of its borders (with the exception of the Rafah crossing between Gaza and Egypt). Palestinians require difficult-to-obtain special permits from the Israeli military to travel between the West Bank, East Jerusalem and Gaza.⁶⁷ This geographic division severs the Palestinians under occupation not only from each other socially, economically and politically, but also from Palestinians living in Israel and the wider world.⁶⁸ As the Special Rapporteur previously observed: “No other society in the world faces such an array of cumulative challenges that includes belligerent occupation, territorial discontinuity, political and administrative divergence, geographic confinement and economic disconnectedness.”⁶⁹

43. In the West Bank and East Jerusalem, Palestinian lands – the single most important natural resource in the territory – are being steadily expropriated by Israel for Jewish-only use and settlement, buttressed by discriminatory planning laws and military orders. Since 1967, Israel has confiscated more than 2 million dunams of Palestinian land in the West Bank,⁷⁰ which has been used to build settlements, Israeli-only highways and roads, recreational parks, industrial centres and military bases and firing zones, all for the purpose

⁶⁴ According to the World Bank, Palestinian gross domestic product per capita in 2020 was $3,239. (The World Bank measures only the West Bank and Gaza; it excludes East Jerusalem.)

⁶⁵ War on Want, Judge, Jury, Occupier (London, 2021).

⁶⁶ Regarding the separate highway system, see Israeli Centre for Public Affairs and Breaking the Silence, Highway to Annexation (2020).

⁶⁷ Sari Bashi and Eitan Diamond, Separating Land, Separating People: Legal Analysis of Access Restrictions between Gaza and the West Bank (Tel Aviv-Jaffa, Gisha, 2015).

⁶⁸ Former Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu explained in 2019 that “maintaining a separation between the PA in the West Bank and Hamas in Gaza helps prevent the establishment of a Palestinian state”. See Lahav Harkov, “Netanyahu: money to Hamas part of strategy to keep Palestinians divided”, Jerusalem Post, 12 March 2019.

⁶⁹ A/71/554, para. 41.

⁷⁰ A metric dunam is 1,000 square metres.

of cementing a permanent and immovable demographic presence. Israel has employed three primary methods for land confiscation: (a) the appropriation of land for “military needs”, some of which was later converted for civilian Jewish settlements, (b) the designation of land for “public needs”, with the purpose of primarily or exclusively Jewish Israeli use, and (c) the declaration of “State land”, with the ultimate aim of using these lands primarily for Jewish Israeli purposes. According to Peace Now in 2018, the allocation of 99.76 per cent of State land was for the exclusive use of Israeli settlements.⁷¹ Unlike Jewish settlers, Palestinians have no representation or voice in decision-making over zoning and property use throughout most of the West Bank. The United Nations has observed that, because permits for construction for Palestinian homes and property in East Jerusalem and Area C of the West Bank “are nearly impossible to obtain”, Palestinians often build without one. In turn, the Israeli military frequently orders the demolition of Palestinian homes and property built without a permit: the number of structures demolished in 2021 and 2020 are the second and third highest since these figures were first recorded in 2009.⁷² In addition, outside of official expropriation policies are the tolerated actions of Israeli settlers, whose violence has been regularly employed to seize Palestinian land or to make its use untenable.⁷³

44. In East Jerusalem, the 360,000 Palestinians have a more enhanced social and legal status than Palestinians in the West Bank, but their position is still greatly inferior to the 230,000 Jewish settlers who live among them in Jewish-only settlements. The Jewish settlers are regarded by Israel as residing in sovereign Israeli territory (arising from its two-stage illegal annexation of East Jerusalem in 1967 and 1980)⁷⁴ and, as such, they enjoy full citizenship rights, benefits and privileges. Almost all East Jerusalemite Palestinians possess residency status as opposed to Israeli citizenship; while this entitles them to some Israeli social rights (including health insurance), this residency status can be cancelled if they leave Jerusalem for a period of time, a threat that Jewish Israelis do not face. Approximately 75 per cent of Palestinian families in East Jerusalem live below the poverty line, compared to 22 per cent of Jewish families. About 38 per cent of land in East Jerusalem – mostly private Palestinian land, but some of it public land – had been expropriated by 2017 by the Government of Israel for Jewish-only use, leaving Palestinian Jerusalemites with a diminished land base to accommodate their growing population.⁷⁵ The Palestinian neighbourhoods in East Jerusalem live with significant shortages in schools, higher housing congestion, the discriminatory application of zoning and housing permits, and poorer access to municipal services (including sewage and water) than the Jewish settlers in their midst. About 120,000–140,000 Palestinian Jerusalemites have been forced to live on the West Bank side of the separation wall, physically separated from access to the city and its services.⁷⁶ The intentionally discriminatory neglect of Palestinians in East Jerusalem is best illustrated by the Jerusalem Master Plan, in which there is a target of maintaining a Jewish demographic majority with a 60:40 ratio, after an earlier target of 70:30 was not maintained.⁷⁷

45. In Gaza, the apparent strategy of Israel is the indefinite warehousing of an unwanted population of 2 million Palestinians, whom it has confined to a narrow strip of land through its comprehensive 15-year-old air, land and sea blockade⁷⁸ (with further restrictions by Egypt on the southern border of Gaza). Ban Ki-moon has called this political quarantining of the ⁷¹ “State land allocation in the West Bank: for Israelis only”, 17 July 2018.

⁷² Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Data on demolition and displacement in the West Bank”. Available at <https://www.ochaopt.org/data/demolition>.

⁷³ B’Tselem, “State business: Israel’s misappropriation of land in the West Bank through settler violence”, November 2021.

⁷⁴ See Security Council resolutions 476 (1980), 478 (1980) and 2334 (2016).

⁷⁵ United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), Right to Develop: Planning Palestinian Communities in East Jerusalem (2015).

⁷⁶ Association for Civil Rights in Israel, “East Jerusalem: facts and figures”, May 2021.

⁷⁷ International Crisis Group, “Reversing Israel’s deepening annexation of occupied East Jerusalem”, Middle East Report, No. 202 (Brussels, June 2019).

⁷⁸ Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, The Gaza Bantustan; Gisha, “Area G: from separation to annexation” (June 2020); and D. MacIntyre, Gaza: Preparing for Dawn (Oneworld, 2017).

population a “collective punishment”,⁷⁹ which is a serious breach of international law.⁸⁰ The World Bank reported in 2021 that Gaza had undergone a multi-decade process of de-development and deindustrialization, resulting in a 45 per cent unemployment rate and a 60 per cent poverty rate, with 80 per cent of the population dependent on some form of international assistance, in significant part because of the hermetic sealing of the access of Gaza to the outside world.⁸¹ The coastal aquifer, the sole source of natural drinking water in Gaza, has become polluted and unfit for human consumption because of contamination by seawater and sewage, substantially driving up water costs for an already destitute population. Gaza is heavily dependent on external sources – Israel and Egypt – for power, and Palestinians live with rolling power blackouts of between 12 and 20 hours daily, severely impairing daily living and the economy. The entry and export of goods is strictly controlled by Israel, which has throttled the local economy. The health-care system in Gaza is flat on its back, with serious shortages of health-care professionals, inadequate treatment equipment and low supplies of drugs and medicines. Palestinians in Gaza can rarely travel outside of Gaza, which is a denial of their fundamental right to freedom of movement. More acutely, they have endured four highly asymmetrical wars with Israel over the past 13 years, with enormous loss of civilian life and immense property destruction. The suffering was acknowledged by Antonio Guterres in May 2021, when he stated: “If there is a hell on earth, it is the lives of children in Gaza.”⁸²

Established with intent to maintain domination of one racial group over another

46. Across most of the political spectrum in Israel is a widely held consensus: Israel will keep East Jerusalem and either most or all of the West Bank, whether or not there is a peace agreement, and the Palestinians will remain under its permanent security control. Former Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu stated in 2019: “A Palestinian state will endanger our existence ... I will not divide Jerusalem, I will not evacuate any community [settlement] and I will make sure we control the territory west of Jordan.”⁸³ Before he became prime minister, Naftali Bennett stated: “The world does not respect a nation that is willing to give up its homeland. We need to apply Israeli law in Judea and Samaria.”⁸⁴ Minister of Defence Benny Gantz declared in 2019: “We will strengthen the settlement blocs and the Golan Heights, from which we will never retreat. The Jordan Valley will remain our eastern security border.”⁸⁵ Minister for Transportation Merav Michaeli, when campaigning in 2019, stated: “No one thinks that half-a-million settlers will be evacuated from Judea and Samaria.”⁸⁶ Furthermore, before he became Minister for Foreign Affairs, Yair Lapid explained in 2016: “My principle says maximum Jews on maximum land with maximum security and with minimum Palestinians.”⁸⁷ Among recent and current Israeli political leaders, the only debate regarding the Palestinians has come down to tertiary issues: whether the Palestinians will be granted a shrunken statelet with its own postage stamps and a seat at the United Nations or, alternatively, kept in their present state of statelessness. Either way, the intent is for the Palestinians to be encased in a political ossuary, a museum relic of twenty-first century colonialism.

⁷⁹ Haaretz, “UN chief Ban Ki-moon calls for Israel to end ‘collective punishment’ blockade of Gaza”, Reuters, 29 June 2016.

⁸⁰ Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, art. 33.

⁸¹ These are among the highest rates of any economic unit in the world monitored by the World Bank. See World Bank, “Economic monitoring report to the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee”, 17 November 2021.

⁸² UN News, “Gaza children living in ‘hell on earth’, UN chief says, urging immediate end to fighting”, 20 May 2021.

⁸³ Haaretz, “Netanyahu says will begin annexing West Bank if he wins Israel election”, 7 April 2019.

⁸⁴ Alex Traiman, “On AIPAC sidelines, Israeli ministers express support for settlements”, Jewish News Syndicate, 6 March 2018.

⁸⁵ Haaretz, “Benny Gantz, Netanyahu rival, gives campaign launch speech”, 30 January 2019.

⁸⁶ Tovah Lazaroff, “Michaeli: no one thinks half a million settlers will be evacuated”, Jerusalem Post, 9 March 2019.

⁸⁷ Gil Stern Hoffman, “Lapid: US helped Iran fund its next war against Israel”, Jerusalem Post, 26 January 2016.

47. Except for a few weeks immediately following its 1967 occupation of the West Bank, East Jerusalem and Gaza, Israel has never accepted the international community's wall-to-wall consensus that the Palestinian territory is occupied, that the Geneva Conventions of 1949 apply, and therefore the strict rules of international humanitarian law apply.⁸⁸ The refusal by Israel to accept the international community's direction is not an honest difference in views over the interpretation of international law, but the obfuscation of an acquisitive occupier determined to maintain permanent control over the land and its indigenous population. Within a few months of the Six-Day War, the Israeli Cabinet was debating not whether to return the territory, but whether to either keep all of it or return only the major Palestinian cities to Jordan in a condominium arrangement.⁸⁹ In the summer of 1967, Israel initiated the construction of its first civilian Jewish settlements, covertly at first, and then openly. The most reliable route for an alien Power that covets the territory it occupies is to establish irreversible facts on the ground through the creation of civilian settlements. This not only establishes a thickening demographic footprint that consolidates the planting of the national flag, but it also generates a growing domestic political constituency that will support the embryonic claim for territorial annexation. The intention of Israel in building the settlements was never primarily about security or increasing the incentive of neighbouring Arab States to negotiate a final peace agreement, but to ensure that it retained as much of the land as possible. As the Minister of Labour of Israel at the time, Yigal Allon, a leading proponent of the settlements, explained in 1969: "Here, we create a Greater Eretz Israel from a strategic point of view, and establish a Jewish state from a demographic point of view."⁹⁰ Today, 10 per cent of Jewish citizens of Israel live in settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and the political constituency among Israeli Jews in support of settlement expansion continues to grow ever larger.

48. In 2018, the Israeli Knesset enacted the Basic Law: Israel – the Nation State of the Jewish People.⁹¹ While Israel does not have a constitution, it has adopted a series of Basic Laws that have acquired a quasi-constitutional status. The Nation State Law entrenches constitutional inequality and racial-national discrimination into Israeli law by distinguishing the rights of Jewish Israelis from those of Palestinians and other non-Jewish citizens of Israel.⁹² Senior American foreign policy scholar David Rothkopf has written in Haaretz that the Nation State Law "creates an apartheid society in which ethnic identity trumps fundamental human rights".⁹³ The Nation State Law is consistent with the regular proclamation by Israeli political leaders, including Benjamin Netanyahu, that "Israel is the national state, not of all its citizens, but only of the Jewish people".⁹⁴ The constitutionality of the Nation State Law was upheld by the Israeli High Court in July 2021.⁹⁵ For the purposes of the present report, article 7 proclaims that "the State views the development of Jewish settlement as a national value, and shall act to encourage and promote its establishment and consolidation".

49. The reach of the Nation State Law is not limited to the pre-1967 boundaries of Israel, as the Law refers to "the Land of Israel", a broader and more flexible term applying to areas of historic Jewish settlement, including the Occupied Palestinian Territory. As Israel considers the Jewish settlements in East Jerusalem and the West Bank to be part of the country, it is to be expected that article 7 will be employed by Israel in the future to justify

⁸⁸ T. Meron, "The West Bank and international humanitarian law on the eve of the fiftieth anniversary of the Six-Day War", American Journal of International Law, vol. 111, No. 2 (April 2017).

⁸⁹ I. Zertal and A. Eldar, Lords of the Land (Nations Books, 2007).

⁹⁰ R. Friedman, Zealots for Zion (Random House, 1992).

⁹¹ Law No. 5778 of 2018.

⁹² Adalah: Legal Center for Minority Arab Rights in Israel, "Israel's Jewish Nation-State Law", 20 December 2020.

⁹³ David Rothkopf, "Why it's now every American Jew's duty to oppose Israel's Government", Haaretz, 5 August 2018.

⁹⁴ Bill Chappell and Daniel Estrin, "Netanyahu says Israel is 'Nation-State of the Jewish people and them alone'", National Public Radio, 11 March 2019. The Minister of the Interior of Israel, Ayelet Shaked, made similar remarks. See Joseph Krauss, "Israel renews law to keep out Palestinian spouses", 11 March 2022.

⁹⁵ Netael Bandel, "Israel's top court rules the Nation-State Law is constitutional, denies petitions against it", Haaretz, 8 July 2021.

further settlement expansion and the related methods to achieve that, including the expropriation of Palestinian land and resources.

Inhumane and inhuman acts committed as an integral part of the regime

50. The administration of the occupation by Israel has been replete with a range of inhumane and inhuman acts prohibited by the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Rome Statute. In summary, these acts include the following:

(a) Denial of the right to life and liberty. The rule by Israel is requiring increasingly more violence and confinement to be maintained: between January 2008 and February 2022, 5,988 Palestinians were killed in the context of the occupation and conflict (262 Israelis died during the same time period). For Palestinians, 2021 was the deadliest year since 2014.⁹⁶ State-sanctioned extrajudicial killings by Israel continue to be part of its toolbox, including the killings of civilians posing no immediate threat to Israeli troops, and with little or no internal accountability.⁹⁷ In addition, the military courts incarcerate thousands of Palestinians on security charges through a judicial system that offers few of the international protections regarding due process or the prevention of arbitrary arrest and detention.⁹⁸ Additionally, hundreds of Palestinians languish in administrative detention under open-ended confinement.⁹⁹ Collective punishment is frequently employed, whether it is the blockade of Gaza, the demolition of family homes of terror suspects or the withholding of bodies.¹⁰⁰

(b) Denial of full participation in all features of a society. Palestinians not only have no voice or vote to hold the military regime that governs much of their lives accountable, but they are also severely restricted through Israeli military orders in the exercise of their inherent rights to freedom of expression, assembly, association and movement within their own society. They are confined in their travel by hundreds of checkpoints and separate roads and by the permit and identification system. They are restricted in their ability to leave and return to Palestine. Their right to work is impeded by a smothered economy, travel restrictions and the fragmentation of their territory. Hundreds of political and civil organizations are banned, and leading human rights organizations have been designated as “terrorist” groups. Israel has imprisoned members of the (dormant) Palestinian Legislative Council. Fragmentation divides Palestinians and ensures more comprehensive control by Israel.

(c) Measures that divide the population along racial lines. Israel has created hundreds of Jewish-only settlements in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, with settlers living separately and apart from Palestinian Arabs. The Israeli settlers enjoy substantially superior rights, benefits, privileges and standards of living. In 2022, the Israeli Knesset adopted the Citizenship Law, which restricts the ability of Palestinians from Israel to marry individuals from the West Bank or Gaza; this does not apply to Israeli Jews.¹⁰¹ The Israeli military application of land, zoning and property rules in East Jerusalem and the West Bank discriminatorily benefits Israeli Jewish settlers and significantly disadvantages Palestinians. Separate settler and Palestinian highways run throughout the West Bank, and Jewish settlers do not encounter the myriad checkpoints and travel obstructions throughout the West Bank. Separate legal systems govern Israeli Jews and Palestinians.

(d) Exploitation of labour of a racial group. Palestinians have become a reserve labour force for Israel and for its settlements. Israel recently announced that it was planning ⁹⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Data on casualties”. Available at <https://www.ochaopt.org/data/casualties>.

⁹⁷ See A/HRC/40/74; and Al-Haq, “Al-Haq sends urgent appeal to UN Special Rapporteur on Israel’s extrajudicial killing of three Palestinian men in Nablus”, 13 March 2022.

⁹⁸ Luigi Daniele, “The Israeli military justice system and international law”, Questions of International Law, vol. 20, No. 31 (November 2017).

⁹⁹ Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, “Administration detention”, July 2017.

¹⁰⁰ See A/HRC/44/60.

¹⁰¹ Noa Shpigel, “Israel just re-banned Palestinian family unification. What does this law do, and how can it be fought?”, Haaretz, 12 March 2022. In supporting the Law, the Minister of the Interior of Israel stated that there was no need to mince words, that the bill also had demographic reasons.

to issue up to 10,000 permits for Palestinians in Gaza to work in Israel.¹⁰² Similarly, about 90,000 Palestinians in the West Bank have permits to work in Israel.¹⁰³ Another 35,000 Palestinians work in the Israeli settlements.¹⁰⁴ Many more work without permits. These jobs are almost all menial unskilled and semi-skilled positions in construction, agriculture and manufacturing. They are at the low end of the labour market in Israel, highly precarious, with no union protection, and involve long journeys each day. Palestinians working in Israel are paid more than their counterparts in the occupied territory, but their working conditions and wages are considerably inferior to those of Israelis in the Israeli labour market and they are subject to an abusive permit brokerage system. In a report from 2022, the International Labour Organization noted the exceptionally harsh impact that the COVID-19 pandemic had on Palestinian employment and working conditions, given that Palestinian society lacked the social shock absorbers possessed by Israel to manage the abrupt labour crisis.¹⁰⁵

(e) Other inhumane and inhuman acts causing great suffering. Although strictly prohibited under international law, torture continues to be used in practice by Israel against Palestinians in detention. Methods of torture include sleep deprivation, beating and slapping, humiliation, unhygienic conditions and extended shackling in contorted positions.¹⁰⁶ Challenges to the Israeli Supreme Court against its use have been unsuccessful.¹⁰⁷ Beatings by Israeli soldiers of Palestinians during arrests are regularly reported, with little accountability.¹⁰⁸

IV. Conclusions

51. International humanitarian law permits differential treatment of an indigenous population during an occupation, but only in a restricted fashion. Such treatment must be anchored in the principle that any infringements to human rights and equality are to be as minimal and proportional as possible during the conduct of an occupation that is both temporary and short-term. This is not the case in the 55-year-old occupation by Israel. Permanent alien rule over occupied territory and its indigenous population is the antithesis of international humanitarian law and, in recent decades, the inexorable Israeli occupation has become indistinguishable from annexation.

52. Is this situation now apartheid? Applying each of the three steps of the amalgamated test from the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Rome Statute, the Special Rapporteur has concluded that the political system of entrenched rule in the Occupied Palestinian Territory that endows one racial-national-ethnic group with substantial rights, benefits and privileges while intentionally subjecting another group to live behind walls and checkpoints and under a permanent military rule sans droits, sans égalité, sans dignité et sans liberté (without rights, without equality, without dignity and without freedom) satisfies the prevailing evidentiary standard for the existence of apartheid.

53. First, an institutionalized regime of systematic racial oppression and discrimination has been established. Israeli Jews and Palestinian Arabs in East Jerusalem and the West Bank live their lives under a single regime that differentiates its distribution of rights and benefits on the basis of national and ethnic identity, and that ensures the supremacy of one group over, and to the detriment of, the other. (The Palestinian Authority exercises restricted jurisdiction and provides services in limited

¹⁰² Emanuel Fabian, "Israel to boost number of Palestinian workers from Gaza, Gantz says", Times of Israel, 1 March 2022.

¹⁰³ Daniel Avis, "Israel to offer more work permits for Palestinians, Bennet says", Bloomberg, 18 January 2022.

¹⁰⁴ International Labour Organization, The Situation of Workers of the Occupied Arab Territories (Geneva, International Labour Office, 2022), para. 16.

¹⁰⁵ Ibid.; and Al-Haq, Captive Markets Captive Lives (Ramallah, West Bank, 2021).

¹⁰⁶ Public Committee against Torture in Israel, "Torture in Israel 2021: situation report".

¹⁰⁷ World Organisation against Torture, "It's now (even more) official: torture is legal in Israel", 21 March 2019.

¹⁰⁸ B'Tselem, "Torture and abuse in interrogation", 11 November 2017.

parts of the West Bank that Israel has no interest in delivering.) The differences in living conditions and citizenship rights and benefits are stark, deeply discriminatory and maintained through systematic and institutionalized oppression.

54. Second, this system of alien rule has been established with the intent to maintain the domination of one racial-national-ethnic group over another. Israeli political leaders, past and present, have repeatedly stated that they intend to retain control over all of the occupied territory in order to enlarge the blocs of land for present and future Jewish settlement while confining the Palestinians to barricaded population reserves. This is a two-sided coin: the plans for more Jewish settlers and larger Jewish settlements on greater tracts of occupied land cannot be accomplished without the expropriation of more Palestinian property together with harsher and more sophisticated methods of population control to manage the inevitable resistance. Under this system, the freedoms of one group are inextricably bound up in the subjugation of the other.

55. Third, the imposition of this system of institutionalized discrimination with the intent of permanent domination has been built upon the regular practice of inhumane and inhuman acts. Arbitrary and extrajudicial killings. Torture. The violent deaths of children. The denial of fundamental human rights. A fundamentally flawed military court system and the lack of criminal due process. Arbitrary detention. Collective punishment. The repetition of these acts over long periods of time, and their endorsement by the Knesset and the Israeli judicial system, indicate that they are not the result of random and isolated acts but integral to the system of rule by Israel.

56. This is apartheid. It does not have some of the same features as practised in southern Africa; in particular, much of what has been called “petit apartheid” is not present. On the other hand, there are pitiless features of the “apartness” rule by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory that were not practised in southern Africa, such as segregated highways, high walls and extensive checkpoints, a barricaded population, missile strikes and tank shelling of a civilian population, and the abandonment of the Palestinians’ social welfare to the international community.¹⁰⁹ With the eyes of the international community wide open, Israel has imposed upon Palestine an apartheid reality in a post-apartheid world.

V. Recommendations

57. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government of Israel fully comply with its obligations under international law and completely and unconditionally end the occupation of the Palestinian territory, with all deliberate speed. Throughout this process and thereafter, it must:

(a) End all discriminatory and apartheid laws, practices and policies that privilege Jewish Israelis living in the occupied territory and subjugate Palestinian Arabs;

(b) Fully respect the national rights and human rights of Palestinians, enable them to exercise their freedom of movement, assembly, expression and association, and remove all arbitrary and inequitable restrictions on family life, property, employment, access to and enjoyment of resources, education and daily life.

58. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the international community accept and adopt the findings by Palestinian, Israeli and international human rights organizations that apartheid is being practised by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and beyond. The international community should:

(a) Assemble a diplomatic menu of accountability measures to bring the Israeli occupation and its practice of apartheid in the Palestinian territory to a complete end;

¹⁰⁹ J. Dugard, Confronting Apartheid: a Personal History of South Africa, Namibia and Palestine (Johannesburg, Jacana Media, 2018).

(b) Support any references or applications to the International Criminal Court and/or the International Court of Justice with respect to the legal consequences of the practice of apartheid in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

59. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the United Nations re-establish the Special Committee against Apartheid to investigate any and all practices of systematic discrimination and oppression purportedly amounting to apartheid anywhere in the world, including the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
28 August 2023

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-third session

19 June–14 July 2023

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Arbitrary deprivation of liberty in the occupied Palestinian territory: the Palestinian experience behind and beyond bars

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Francesca Albanese*

Summary

In the present report, submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/2 A and Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, finds that arbitrary and deliberate ill-treatment is inflicted upon Palestinians not only through unlawful practices in detention but also as a carceral continuum comprised of techniques of large-scale confinement – physical, bureaucratic and digital – beyond detention. These violations may amount to international crimes prosecutable under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and universal jurisdiction. The occupation by Israel has been a tool of settler colonial conquest also through intensified methods of confinement against an entire people who – as any people would – continuously rebel against their prison wardens.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. In the present report, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Francesca Albanese, presents concerns related to the widespread and systematic arbitrary deprivation of liberty in the occupied Palestinian territory.

2. Despite being invited by the State of Palestine, the Special Rapporteur was unable to visit the occupied Palestinian territory before submitting the present report, owing to the continued refusal by Israel to facilitate her entry. She conducted a remote investigation over six months, including a visit to Jordan, and virtual meetings and tours in the occupied Palestinian territory.¹ The report is informed by these consultations, testimonies, stakeholders' contributions and a comprehensive review of primary and public sources.

3. It is not possible to capture the scale and extent of the arbitrary deprivation of liberty in the occupied Palestinian territory within the word limits of the present report. Nor can the report convey the suffering of millions of Palestinians who have, directly or indirectly, been affected. The report provides a bird's-eye view of arbitrary deprivation of liberty as a key instrument of the domination and oppression by Israel, addressing primarily structural issues and the scale of the phenomenon.² Violations of international law by Palestinian authorities are assessed to the extent that they contribute to tightening the grip of the regime imposed by the occupation.

4. The Special Rapporteur clarifies circumstances, norms and processes that lead to arbitrary deprivation of Palestinians' liberty. The reality captured is of an entire occupied population framed as a security threat, often presumed guilty, and punished with incarceration even when trying to exercise fundamental freedoms. This system presents features of persecution, which often involves ill-treatment behind bars and surveillance out of prison. While in-prison confinement is the most acute form of deprivation of liberty imposed on Palestinians, physical, bureaucratic and digital "architectures" further restrict them spatially and psychologically. This wider carcerality, comprising an array of laws, procedures and techniques of coercive confinement, transforms the occupied Palestinian territory into a constantly surveilled open-air panopticon.

5. An examination of this carceral continuum – a system of control composed of multiple and interrelated levels of confinement – underscores the urgency of ending it, as required by international law, and ensuring both accountability for the architects of its most serious violations and reparations for the victims.

II. Rationale of investigating the arbitrariness of deprivation of liberty

A. Magnitude

6. Deprivation of liberty has been a central element of the occupation by Israel since its inception. Between 1967 and 2006, Israel incarcerated over 800,000 Palestinians in the occupied territory.³ Although spiking during Palestinian uprisings, incarceration has become a daily reality.⁴ Over 100,000 Palestinians were detained during the first intifada (1987–

¹ See also the statement of the Special Rapporteur on her "non-visit" to the occupied Palestinian territory, 14 February 2023. Available at <https://www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/countries/palestine/sr-selfdetermination/2023-02-27-Non-Visit-TPs.pdf>.

² Instances where criminalization and detention are not qualifiable as arbitrary, such as in the context of crimes that are covered under the penal laws of all countries or offences against civilians, regardless of who committed the offence, are not discussed in the present report.

³ Smadar Ben-Natan, "The boundaries of the carceral state: accounting for the role of military incarceration", Theoretical Criminology (April 2023), p. 11. This figure may be a conservative estimate; it has been cited for several years.

⁴ Esmail Nashif, Palestinian Political Prisoners: Identity and Community (Routledge, 2008).

1993),⁵ 70,000 during the second intifada (2000–2006),⁶ and over 3,100 in one month (May) during the “Unity Intifada” (2021).⁷ Approximately 7,000 Palestinians, including 882 children, were arrested in 2022.⁸ Currently, almost 5,000 Palestinians, including 155 children, are detained by Israel, 1,014 of them without charge or trial.⁹

B. Gravity

7. Serious abuses against Palestinians in Israeli custody have occurred throughout the Israeli occupation. Confinement in filthy and crowded cells, sleep and food deprivation, medical negligence, severe and prolonged beatings and other forms of ill-treatment have been extensively documented.¹⁰

8. The use of torture and ill-treatment against Palestinian detainees and prisoners has been reported.¹¹ Invoking the “ticking bomb” and “moderate physical pressure” doctrines, the Israeli executive branch has litigated in court the “necessity” of using techniques that may amount to torture to allegedly deter attacks against Israeli civilians.¹² Torture remains available as a method to intimidate, and obtain confessions or information from, primarily, although not exclusively, “security suspects”.¹³

9. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, which has addressed cases concerning Palestinians since 1992, has repeatedly affirmed that widespread and systematic arbitrary deprivation of liberty may amount to a crime against humanity.¹⁴

10. United Nations special procedure mandate holders and leading human rights organizations have identified the widespread and systematic use by Israel of arbitrary arrests, administrative detention, lack of due process, ill-treatment and torture as foundational elements of the apartheid regime imposed upon the Palestinians.¹⁵

C. Layers of repression

11. Since the signing of the Oslo Accords, limited Palestinian self-rule has added a layer of repression to Palestinian life under occupation. Arbitrary arrests and detention carried out by the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and the de facto authorities in the Gaza Strip have contributed to stifling Palestinians’ rights and freedoms.¹⁶

12. The security coordination between the Palestinian Authority and Israel has pioneered a direct connection between Palestinian and Israeli detention apparatuses. This connection is illustrated by what the victims refer to as the “revolving door policy”: a nefarious cycle

⁵ Human Rights Watch, Torture and Ill-Treatment: Israel’s Interrogation of Palestinians from the Occupied Territories (1994), p. 3.

⁶ Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, “Special statistical bulletin”, May 2011, p. 4.

⁷ See <https://addameer.org/ar/media/4408> (in Arabic).

⁸ Addameer, “2022 in review”, 1 January 2023.

⁹ See <https://www.addameer.org/statistics> (accessed on 23 May 2023).

¹⁰ See, for example, Al-Haq, A Nation under Siege (1990); B’Tselem, The Interrogation of Palestinians during the Intifada: Ill-treatment, “Moderate Physical Pressure” or Torture? (1991); and Human Rights Watch, A Threshold Crossed: Israeli Authorities and the Crimes of Apartheid and Persecution (2021), pp. 79–90.

¹¹ Human Rights Watch, Torture and Ill-Treatment, CAT/C/ISR/CO/4 and CAT/C/ISR/CO/5.

¹² Israel, Landau Commission report (1987); Supreme Court of Israel, Public Committee Against Torture v. Israel, case No. HJC 5100/94, Judgment, 6 September 1999; and High Court of Justice, Abu Gosh v. Attorney General, case No. 5722/12, Judgment, 12 December 2017.

¹³ Ardi Imseis, “Moderate torture on trial: critical reflections on the Israeli Supreme Court Judgement concerning the legality of General Security Service interrogation methods”, Berkeley Journal of International Law, vol. 19, No. 2 (2001).

¹⁴ See, for example, opinion No. 61/2021, para. 57.

¹⁵ A/HRC/49/87, para. 50 (a); and Amnesty International, Israel’s Apartheid against Palestinians: Cruel System of Domination and Crime against Humanity (2022), pp. 240–248.

¹⁶ Human Rights Watch, Two Authorities, One Way, Zero Dissent: Arbitrary Arrest and Torture Under the Palestinian Authority and Hamas (2018), pp. 2 and 23.

whereby Palestinians are first arrested, interrogated, detained and often subjected to ill-treatment by the Palestinian Authority and then, upon release, by the occupation forces,¹⁷ or vice versa.

D. Confinement behind and beyond bars

13. The incarceration of Palestinians is only one element of a larger carceral landscape, extending beyond prison as a paradigm of governance of the occupied territory and confinement of its population.¹⁸ This phenomenon has intensified alongside growing Israeli (military and civilian) presence in occupied territory. The presence of illegal colonies exacerbates both discrimination and violence against Palestinians, and their criminalization and imprisonment.¹⁹ In turn, stifling Palestinian movement and freedoms, while furthering fragmentation, surveillance and segregation of their living space, facilitates the expansion of the colonies.²⁰ This creates a suffocating environment that obliterates rights and, by rendering the occupied population arbitrarily punishable, erodes their status of protected civilians.²¹

III. Relevant international law framework

14. The protection of individuals from the “arbitrary exercise of power” is one of the greatest achievements of the post-1945 international order.²² Any authority exercising effective control over a population must respect the prohibition against arbitrary deprivation of liberty. In the occupied Palestinian territory, the unlawfulness of the Israeli occupation negates any legitimate title to exercise authority with respect to Gaza or the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.²³ However, when de facto control is exercised, it must comply with the applicable normative framework.

15. The applicable international legal framework comprises both treaty and customary international law, including international human rights conventions, whose protection “does not cease in case of armed conflict”²⁴ and applies extraterritorially,²⁵ as well as international criminal law. Read together, these bodies of law establish that detention is considered arbitrary when: it is not grounded in any valid legal basis; it violates fundamental guarantees afforded by international law including to a fair trial; and it is used discriminatorily.²⁶

A. International humanitarian law

16. Deprivation of liberty in situations of belligerent occupation is governed by the Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (the Hague Regulations), the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (Third Geneva Convention), the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts

¹⁷ B’Tselem and HaMoked, Backed by the System: Abuse and Torture at the Shikma Interrogation Facility (2015), pp. 44 and 45.

¹⁸ Rashid I. Khalidi, “Israel: a carceral State”, Journal of Palestine Studies, vol. 43, No. 4 (Summer 2014), p. 7.

¹⁹ Eyal Weizman, Hollow Land: Israel's Architecture of Occupation, 2nd ed., (Verso, 2012).

²⁰ Alina Korn, “The ghettoization of the Palestinians”, in Thinking Palestine, Ronit Lentin, ed., (Zed Books, 2008).

²¹ Neve Gordon and Nicola Perugini, Human Shields: A History of People in the Line of Fire (University of California Press, 2020), pp. 81–84.

²² Antonio Cassese, International Criminal Law (Oxford University Press, 2003), p. 1.

²³ Ralph Wilde, “Is the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza ‘legal’ or ‘illegal’ in international law?”, 29 November 2022, para. 111.

²⁴ International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, para. 106; see also paras. 102–105.

²⁵ Ibid., paras. 109–113.

²⁶ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 35 (2014).

(Protocol I) and customary international humanitarian law. The control exerted by Israel over the West Bank, including East Jerusalem and Gaza, meets the tests for the existence of a military occupation.²⁷ The presence of Palestinian authorities does not alter the framework's applicability nor does it absolve Israel of its obligations as the occupying Power.

17. The Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions, integrated and supplemented by customary rules, respectively provide guarantees and procedures for captured combatants and protection for civilians arrested or detained in occupied territory. The internment of protected persons is permitted only if "absolutely necessary" for the security of the occupying Power²⁸ or for "imperative reasons of security", and it must comply with relevant provisions of the Fourth Convention.²⁹ Protected persons can only be deprived of liberty after a fair and impartial trial or appropriate administrative proceedings that respect the presumption of innocence and their right to legal defence. Once detained, they must not be subjected to corporal punishment and must have access to medical care, nutrition and hygiene facilities.³⁰ Customary international humanitarian law strengthens these minimum guarantees, imposing respect for penal safeguards and prohibiting discrimination, torture, cruel treatment and forced labour.³¹ The deliberate violation of these obligations, both through acts and omissions, can amount to a grave breach of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions.³²

B. International human rights law

18. International human rights law establishes the most comprehensive protection against arbitrary deprivation of liberty. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights protects individuals from arbitrary arrest and detention, ill-treatment and torture, and guarantees the rights to humane treatment, fair trial (through an independent and impartial tribunal), effective legal defence, privacy and reputation.³³ Derogations from civil and political rights in time of war or public emergency, where permitted, must be limited to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, non-discriminatory and consistent with other international legal obligations.³⁴

19. The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment prohibits the use of torture (infliction of severe physical or mental suffering to extract information, confession or inflict punishment) in all circumstances, including during war or states of emergency. States must ensure accountability for alleged incidents of torture.³⁵

20. The Convention on the Rights of the Child prohibits deprivation of liberty for children unless as a last resort, for the shortest period necessary, and establishes safeguards specifically applicable to children.³⁶ These include a State obligation to provide access to physical, psychological and social assistance for children to recover from abuse, neglect or situations of armed conflict.³⁷

21. The prohibition against arbitrary deprivation of liberty is a peremptory norm of international law that cannot be derogated from, together with the prohibitions of torture,

²⁷ A/HRC/29/CRP.4, para. 30.

²⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 42.

²⁹ Ibid., part III, sects. III (in particular art. 78) and IV.

³⁰ Ibid., arts. 71–73 and 89–92; and Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, art. 75.

³¹ International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Customary International Humanitarian Law database, rules 87–91, 99–103 and 118–138.

³² Third Geneva Convention, art. 130; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 147.

³³ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 7, 9, 14 and 17; see also Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 32 (2007).

³⁴ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 4 (1).

³⁵ Arts. 1 (1), 2 (2), 4, 9 and 10.

³⁶ Arts. 37 (b) and 40.

³⁷ Art. 39.

racial discrimination and apartheid.³⁸ Procedural rights instrumental to the lawfulness of detention and fair trial must also be respected in all circumstances.³⁹

C. International criminal law

22. Unlawful deprivation of liberty and the denial of the right to a fair trial may amount to crimes against humanity and war crimes under certain circumstances.

23. Under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, imprisonment or other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law constitutes a crime against humanity when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population.⁴⁰ To establish liability for this crime, the unlawful deprivation of liberty must be part of an attack against a civilian population, defined as a “course of conduct involving the multiple commission of the acts referred to in article 7, paragraph 1, of the Statute”.⁴¹ These acts must also be carried out “pursuant to or in furtherance of a State or organizational policy to commit such attack”.⁴²

24. When this attack targets an identified group or its members, the Rome Statute qualifies the intentional and severe deprivation of fundamental rights contrary to international law by reason of the identity of the group or collectivity as persecution, and a crime against humanity.⁴³

25. International criminal law establishes individual criminal responsibility for grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions as war crimes when committed as part of a plan or policy or as part of a large-scale commission of such crimes”.⁴⁴ Such breaches include wilfully depriving protected persons of the rights of fair and regular trial,⁴⁵ that is, depriving “one or more persons of a fair and regular trial by denying judicial guarantees as defined, in particular, in the third and fourth Geneva Conventions”.⁴⁶

IV. Mass incarceration governance

26. Israel has denied the applicability of international law in the occupied Palestinian territory since the outset. By maintaining that the territory is disputed, rather than occupied,⁴⁷ Israel has rejected the sole international legal basis for establishing such a system.⁴⁸ This has led to violations of fundamental principles governing situations of occupation, including the non-acquisition of sovereignty, duties to administer the occupied territory for the benefit of the protected population and temporariness.⁴⁹ By alleging that international human rights law does not apply to the occupied territory, Israel derogates from its international obligations to ensure access to a fair trial, to uphold the jus cogens prohibition against torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and to ensure predictable criminal sanction.

³⁸ A/77/10, p. 16.

³⁹ A/HRC/43/35, para. 14.

⁴⁰ Art. 7 (1) (e).

⁴¹ International Criminal Court, Elements of Crimes (2013), p. 3.

⁴² Ibid.

⁴³ Rome Statute, art. 7 (2) (g).

⁴⁴ Ibid., arts. 8 (1) and 25.

⁴⁵ Ibid., art. 8 (2) (a) (vi); and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 147.

⁴⁶ International Criminal Court, Elements of Crimes, p. 11.

⁴⁷ See, for example, Yehuda Z. Blum, “The missing reversioner: reflections on the status of Judea and Samaria”, Israel Law Review, vol. 3, No. 2 (April 1968), pp. 283 and 293.

⁴⁸ Orna Ben-Naftali, Michael Sfard and Hedi Viterbo, The ABC of the OPT: A Legal Lexicon of Israeli Control over the Occupied Palestinian Territory (Cambridge University Press, 2018), pp. 147–149 and 524.

⁴⁹ A/72/556, paras. 45–63.

A. Jurisdictional fragmentation

27. The rules underpinning the detention of Palestinians in the occupied territory are rooted in remnants of Ottoman, British Mandate, Jordanian and Egyptian laws. This system includes British emergency and counter-insurgency legislation,⁵⁰ Palestinian-enacted laws (in areas where Palestinian authorities operate),⁵¹ and Israeli-enacted laws applied to non-citizens.⁵²

28. Concerning the Palestinian authorities, the Palestinian Basic Law protects fundamental rights and freedoms, yet the outdated Penal Code of 1960 and the Decree-Law on Cybercrime of 2018 define some crimes broadly. For example, defamation, as criminalized by the Penal Code, may include insulting or slandering a public official or a higher authority, libel or inciting sectarian conflict.⁵³ The Penal Procedure Law of 2001 applies to both the West Bank and Gaza, where the Penal Code of 1936 – a British ordinance – is also in force.

29. Concerning the Israeli occupying forces (hereinafter “Israeli forces”), the adoption of British emergency regulations entrenched colonial methods in post-1967 military legislation.⁵⁴ Since 1967 the occupying forces have passed some 2,500 orders controlling the minutiae of Palestinians’ life, including public order and security, natural resource management, education, transportation, administration of justice, fiscal administration, taxation, and planning and zoning.⁵⁵ Remnants of British emergency regulations still apply in occupied East Jerusalem, which was illegally annexed by Israel in 1980, and partly in Gaza where, since 2007, military orders have enforced the illegal blockade.⁵⁶

30. This jurisdictional fragmentation subjects Palestinians to various modes of oppression across different parts of the occupied territory. Israeli forces enforce this system by patrolling Palestinian villages, roads, and movement through Israeli checkpoints in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem and monitoring the Gaza fence and Gaza land, sea waters and airspace. By gathering intelligence and directing undercover operations, the Israel Security Agency (Shin Bet), forms an integral part of the Israeli security establishment.⁵⁷ Palestinian authorities’ security apparatuses operate in the West Bank (mostly Palestinian cities in Area A under the Oslo Accords) and Gaza. Consequently, in the West Bank, Palestinians can be arrested by Israeli forces or the Palestinian Authority; in East Jerusalem, they can only be arrested by Israel; in Gaza, they can be arrested by the de facto authorities and by Israel in the border area and in Gaza sea waters.⁵⁸ Hence, the fate of Palestinians is determined by their location, who apprehends them and for whom their actions are considered a “threat”.

31. For Palestinians in the occupied territory, and them only, legislative, executive and judicial functions are concentrated in the hands of the Israeli forces, with the military promulgating, reviewing and enforcing the laws on deprivation of liberty.⁵⁹ In a structure of institutionalized discrimination, military courts enforce military laws against Palestinians while Israeli courts apply domestic civil law to Israelis, including settlers, who thus become vectors of annexation.⁶⁰ The Israeli military law enforcement system, based on this inherent racial dualism, constitutes a pillar of the settler-colonial apartheid regime, targeting ⁵⁰ Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945.

⁵¹ Penal Code of 1960 (Jordan); and the Palestinian Basic Law of 2002.

⁵² Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law of 2002, applicable to Palestinians from Gaza; and Counter-Terrorism Law of 2016.

⁵³ Penal Code of 1960, arts. 150, 189, 191 and 195.

⁵⁴ Yael Berda, Colonial Bureaucracy and Contemporary Citizenship (Cambridge University Press, 2022), pp. 162–167.

⁵⁵ See <http://orders.arij.org/>.

⁵⁶ Eyal Benvenisti, The International Law of Occupation, 2nd ed. (Oxford University Press, 2012), chap. 8.

⁵⁷ Breaking the Silence, Military Rule: Testimonies of Soldiers from the Civil Administration, Gaza DCL and COGAT, 2011–2021 (2022), pp. 7, 16 and 24.

⁵⁸ Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, Annual Report 2021 (2022), p. 45.

⁵⁹ Luigi Daniele, “Enforcing illegality: Israel’s military justice in the West Bank”, Questions of International Law, vol. 44 (2017), pp. 25–29.

⁶⁰ Ben-Naftali, Sfar and Viterbo, The ABC of the OPT, pp. 371–372 and 377.

Palestinian people only, depriving them of fundamental rights, including equality before the law.⁶¹

B. Offences under military laws: criminalizing fundamental freedoms

32. The practice by Israel of legislating through military orders beyond the limits of an occupying Power under international law⁶² has resulted in the enforcement of thousands of unlawful restrictions on Palestinians. Deprivation of liberty is regulated by emergency regulations and, inter alia, Israel Defense Forces Order No. 101 of 1967 (on incitement and hostile propaganda), and Order No. 1651 of 2009 (on security). These orders set out offences under two main categories: security offences, deemed as threatening the Israeli military presence in occupied territory; and public order offences, including unauthorized demonstrations and traffic disturbances. Both types of offence carry severe sentences.

33. Intentionally vague definitions result in distinctively authoritarian orders, which are enforceable at the discretion of Israeli soldiers, military prosecutors and judges.⁶³ This system has allowed punishment of Palestinians for merely expressing their opinions or dissent, or peacefully opposing the occupation. For example:

(a) Forms of exercising freedom of assembly are criminalized with 10 years' imprisonment.⁶⁴ The punishment concerns any person organizing holding, or even encouraging the holding of, a "procession, assembly or vigil without a permit".⁶⁵ An assembly is defined as gatherings of 10 or more persons "in which a speech is being made on a political subject, or which may be construed as political";⁶⁶

(b) Forms of civic and political participation, including "flying a flag, displaying a symbol ... voicing a slogan, or any similar explicit action clearly expressing sympathy" for one of the innumerable "hostile organizations" (see para. 33 (f), below) are subject to 10 years' imprisonment;⁶⁷

(c) Membership in any group in which other members commit specific offences, such as holding a weapon without a permit is punishable by life imprisonment.⁶⁸ Palestinians thus endure the harshest form of deprivation of liberty solely based on affiliation, without consideration of their actions, knowledge, or ability to anticipate the actions of others. This violates the fundamental principle that criminal liability should be based on individual responsibility;

(d) Any "act or omission which entails harm, damage ... or danger" to the "security of the region", or simply its "disturbance", is punishable with life imprisonment;⁶⁹

(e) Certain contacts and solidarity among Palestinians are criminalized, and duties of denouncing someone based on mere suspicion are imposed.⁷⁰ Military orders set out punishment for anyone who provides, inter alia, information, shelter, supplies or means of transport in any manner to "any person" when "there is a reasonable basis to suspect" that the person is or was "engaged in any action aimed at harming" public order.⁷¹ Imprisonment is also the punishment for whoever "does not immediately" denounce to the occupying forces

⁶¹ Amnesty International, Israel's Apartheid, p. 31.

⁶² Théo Boutruche and Marco Sassòli, "Expert Opinion on the Occupier's legislative power over an occupied territory under IHL in light of Israel's on-going occupation", 14 July 2017.

⁶³ Daniele, "Enforcing illegality", pp. 36 and 37; and David Kretzmer, The Occupation of Justice: The Supreme Court of Israel and the Occupied Territories (State University of New York Press, 2002).

⁶⁴ Military Order No. 101, art. 10.

⁶⁵ Ibid., article 10 (a).

⁶⁶ Ibid., art. 1.

⁶⁷ Military Order No. 1651, art. 251 (B) (4).

⁶⁸ Ibid., art. 231.

⁶⁹ Ibid., art. 222.

⁷⁰ Ibid., art. 261.

⁷¹ Ibid., art. 245.

any other person when there might be “reasonable grounds to suspect” that the other person is “planning to commit an offense”;⁷²

(f) The vagueness of the criminalization of incitement, defined as any attempt “to influence public opinion ... in a manner which may harm public peace or public order”,⁷³ crushes any form of political speech and expression. This reaches the absurdity of a 10-year prison sentence for even the “intention of ... facilitating the execution of an attempt to influence public opinion”.⁷⁴ This may include expressing opinions (including on social media),⁷⁵ attending peaceful demonstrations, displaying flags or emblems of any political significance, possessing banned books or any publication deemed adverse by the occupying forces, and expressing sympathy for the activities or purposes of any “hostile organization”;⁷⁶

(g) Expressing sentiments against the occupation constitutes an offence, imposing on Palestinians deferential obeisance to Israeli occupation and reverence for Israeli symbols. “Offending” in any way a soldier’s “honour”,⁷⁷ or behaving in an “insulting manner” towards the Israeli army or “one of its symbols” is punishable with one year of imprisonment.⁷⁸ The occupied population is indirectly subjected to a paradoxical and unlawful duty of allegiance to the occupation itself;⁷⁹

(h) Throwing any object, including a stone, is punishable with, in certain circumstances, 10 years’ imprisonment.⁸⁰ Throwing objects “at a moving vehicle with the intent to harm it” is punished with 20 years’ imprisonment,⁸¹ even where there is no intent to harm the driver, and where the target is an armoured military vehicle;

(i) Entering “restricted areas” in the West Bank (i.e. closed military zones), including East Jerusalem, is subject to heavy penalties. Breaking such regulations is punishable by seven years’ imprisonment; persons in the region unlawfully can be punished with 10 years’ imprisonment.⁸² This arbitrarily and severely restricts Palestinians’ movement within the occupied territory, including across their own communities. A case in point is the designation of Masafer Yatta as “Firing Zone 918”, a restricted military area for exclusive use of Israeli soldiers. As a result, around 1,200 Palestinians, half of them children, risk unlawful forcible transfer;

(j) Membership in, having “contacts” with, or possessing materials “related to” a “hostile organization”, is punishable with 10 years’ imprisonment.⁸³ Since 2020, leadership of such groups can be imprisoned for 25 years or for life.⁸⁴ The definition of hostile organizations includes persons or any group of persons “whose aim it is to harm ... the public order in Israel or in a held region”.⁸⁵ The category explicitly encompasses unlawful associations as defined under article 84 of the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, namely: “any body of persons, whether incorporated or unincorporated and by whatsoever name (if any) it may from time to time be known, which (a) by its constitution or propaganda or otherwise advocates, incites or encourages” a number of acts considered unlawful, including “the exciting of disaffection” against the occupying forces. Built around colonial premises, the category of “hostile organization” has been deployed ubiquitously, criminalizing any organization that may oppose the occupation by Israel; close to 400 organizations are ⁷² Ibid., art. 261.

⁷³ Ibid., art. 251 (B) (1).

⁷⁴ Ibid., art. 251 (B). See also Military Order No. 101, art. 7; and Daniele, “Enforcing illegality”, p. 34.

⁷⁵ Bill on preventing incitement on social media.

⁷⁶ Human Rights Watch, Born Without Civil Rights: Israel’s Use of Draconian Military Orders to Repress Palestinians in the West Bank (2019).

⁷⁷ Military Order No. 1651, art. 215.

⁷⁸ Ibid., art. 219.

⁷⁹ Hague Regulations, art. 45.

⁸⁰ Military Order No. 1651, art. 212 (1) and (2).

⁸¹ Ibid., art. 212.

⁸² Ibid., arts. 242 (A) and 299–301.

⁸³ Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945, art. 85, in particular art. 85 (1) (a), (f) and (j).

⁸⁴ Military Order No. 1651, art. 237 A (article added by Military Order No. 1827 of 2020).

⁸⁵ Military Order No. 1651, art. 238.

criminalized, including all major Palestinian political parties, civil society groups and charities.⁸⁶

34. Through the Counter-Terrorism Law of 2016, Israel further expanded the broad grounds to designate Palestinian groups as terrorist organizations,⁸⁷ on the basis of vaguely defined conduct, or mere intentions, labelled as “terrorist acts”.⁸⁸ Identifying with, being a member of, or directing such an organization can carry a sentence of 3, 5 to 7 and 25 years’ imprisonment, respectively.⁸⁹ In 2021, this law was invoked to outlaw six Palestinian human rights organizations, revealing its repressive functions against civil society.⁹⁰

35. This coercive environment has significantly affected Palestinian students and the academic community. Across Palestinian universities, traditional hubs of national-political activities and cultural development,⁹¹ student groups have been outlawed.⁹² The Palestinian Authority in the West Bank has mirrored this pattern, albeit to a lesser extent, detaining students and others for dissenting political opinions, including those shared on social media.⁹³

C. Purpose of the military laws: suppressing the right to self determination

36. Definitions of criminal offences and sentences must adhere to the principle of legality and its inviolable human rights corollaries, and not compromise the safety and dignity of the occupied population. While a Palestinian might actually threaten safety and public order in the occupied territory, the all-encompassing criminalization by Israel shows that the military legislation, rather than safeguarding security, renders every single Palestinian potentially subject to imprisonment for ordinary acts of life.

37. Palestinians in the occupied territory constantly risk being imprisoned. This risk extends to farmers working their land, children going to school across closed military areas, political leaders exercising their mandates, and civil society advocating for human rights. Criminalization and incarceration strip Palestinians of their rights to move freely, work, gather peacefully, express their identity, culture and opinions, pursue their education and live their economic, social and political life. The Palestinian people’s right to self-determination that these restrictions ultimately target appears to be the ultimate “threat” to be suppressed.

V. Mass incarceration procedures

38. Within this authoritarian regime, the evidence of abuse that Palestinians endure throughout the process of deprivation of liberty reveals multiple unlawful patterns. The following sections shed light on the “lawless law” that governs Palestinian life. This coercive environment, accompanied by unwarranted violence, places Palestinians in a permanent state of vulnerability and subjugation that ultimately facilitates their dispossession and displacement.

⁸⁶ See <https://nbctf.mod.gov.il/he/MinisterSanctions/Announcements/Pages/nbctfDownloads.aspx> (in Hebrew, accessed in April 2023).

⁸⁷ Adalah – Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel, “Israel’s 2016 Counter-Terrorism Law and 1945 Emergency Regulations regarding the outlawing of six Palestinian human rights and civil society groups” (23 November 2021), p. 14. Available at https://www.adalah.org/uploads/uploads/Adalah_Expert_Opinion_Palestinian6_Nov2021.pdf.

⁸⁸ E.g., the “intention of promoting” a threat to commit a political act posing an “actual risk of serious harm to property (Counter-Terrorism Law, chap. 1, art. 2).

⁸⁹ Counter-Terrorism Law, sects. 20–24.

⁹⁰ A/77/356, para. 60.

⁹¹ Law for Palestine, “Israel’s arrest policy against Palestinian university students (in the West Bank and Israel)”, 2023, p. 23.

⁹² See <https://nbctf.mod.gov.il/he/MinisterSanctions/Announcements/Pages/nbctfDownloads.aspx> (in Hebrew, accessed in April 2023); and Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945, arts. 84 and 85.

⁹³ Human Rights Watch, Two Authorities, p. 23.

A. Administrative detention

39. In addition to arresting and detaining Palestinians on the basis of all-encompassing criminal offences, Israeli forces often detain individuals without charge or trial.⁹⁴ Approximately 500 Palestinians have been detained “administratively” every year since 1989,⁹⁵ including children, human rights defenders, students and political leaders.⁹⁶

40. Administrative detention is permissible only when “absolutely necessary”, for “imperative reasons of security”,⁹⁷ and must be in line with the protection afforded under international law.⁹⁸

41. Instead, in the occupied Palestinian territory, Israeli military commanders order administrative detention whenever they have “reasonable grounds” to presume that a person must be held in detention for reasons concerning the security of the area or public security.⁹⁹ The pervasive control over, and unlawful alteration of, the area that is internationally recognized as occupied territory undermines the security claims of Israel and the “necessity” to arrest Palestinians.

42. The widespread administrative detention of Palestinians presents other grounds of illegitimacy. First, the vagueness of the concept of “security” provides military commanders with substantial discretionary powers in imposing administrative detention that can be renewed indefinitely.¹⁰⁰ Second, administrative detention fails to uphold international law protections related to arrest, judicial review and custodial conditions.¹⁰¹ Interrogation following the arrest frequently involves coercive methods to extract information, possibly amounting to ill-treatment under international law and, sometimes, torture.¹⁰² The detainee is not informed of the reasons for detention. Orders are in Hebrew and not translated into Arabic.¹⁰³ Lawyers rarely have access to the “secret” evidence, thus cannot challenge it, or cross-examine witnesses.¹⁰⁴ Hearings are typically not open to the public.¹⁰⁵ Judicial review is ineffective owing to both the impossibility of appealing against secret evidence¹⁰⁶ and the lack of separation of powers within the military judicial system. Ultimately, the classification of a “security threat” leading to administrative detention appears to be a pretext to persecute specific individuals who may challenge the occupation.¹⁰⁷

43. While a case-by-case determination is warranted, the violations associated with Israeli forces’ widespread use of administrative detention may amount to a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and the war crimes of unlawful confinement of a protected person and wilful deprivation of their right to a fair trial.¹⁰⁸ The uncertainty faced by those arrested for an unforeseeable period in the absence of a charge, known evidence or trial, may amount

⁹⁴ In the West Bank, this is regulated by Military Order No. 1651, article 285 (A); in Gaza, by the Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law of 2002; and in East Jerusalem, by the Emergency Powers (Detention) Law of 1979.

⁹⁵ Average calculated based on statistics from B’Tselem, available at https://www.btselem.org/administrative_detention/statistics.

⁹⁶ Addameer, Annual Violations Report (2018), pp. 38–39.

⁹⁷ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 42 and 78.

⁹⁸ See section III above.

⁹⁹ Military Order No. 1651, art. 285 (A).

¹⁰⁰ Peter Langford and Triestino Mariniello, Israel’s Administrative Detention in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (2019), pp. 17 and 18.

¹⁰¹ Ibid., p. 13.

¹⁰² CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 11.

¹⁰³ El-Arah et al. v. Central Commander of the Israeli Army and another, HCJ 2775/11 (2013).

¹⁰⁴ Addameer, “Administrative detention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: a legal analysis report”, 4th ed. (2016), pp. 33 and 34.

¹⁰⁵ Military Order No. 1651, art. 291 (A).

¹⁰⁶ Between 2000 and 2012, only one appeal was accepted by a court, yet it was suspended and no detainee was released. (Shiri Krebs, “Lifting the veil of secrecy: judicial review of administrative detentions in the Israeli Supreme Court”, Vanderbilt Journal of Transnational Law, vol. 45, No. 3 (2012))

¹⁰⁷ Amnesty International, Israel’s Apartheid, p. 241.

¹⁰⁸ Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (a) (vi) and (vii).

to ill-treatment.¹⁰⁹ Administrative detention may also constitute a form of persecution, since the procedure discriminates against Palestinians, who are presumed guilty and punished as a collectivity.¹¹⁰ Illustrative is the case of Salah Hammouri, a French-Palestinian human rights defender from Jerusalem. Arbitrarily arrested and placed under administrative detention multiple times since 2000,¹¹¹ he was eventually forcibly deported to France for alleged “breach of allegiance”.

B. Arrest

44. Arrest starts when Israeli forces apprehend Palestinians as part of their military or civilian system of control. Palestinians can be arrested during “law enforcement operations” but also at checkpoints, on the street, on their way to school, while farming their land or in the quiet of their homes. Lacking arrest warrants and charges, the Israeli forces generally fail to inform Palestinians of the reasons for their arrest. Beating, verbal abuse and humiliation are recurrent practices during arrest,¹¹² in addition to the increasing number of killings during “search-and-arrest operations”.¹¹³

45. Proximity to colonies increases the chance for arrest.¹¹⁴ Crossing “red-line” zones – that is, settler-engineered demarcations, which are not always visible – may lead to Palestinians (often while farming their land) being arrested by soldiers upon settlers’ notification.¹¹⁵

46. Mass arrest campaigns are common, particularly during military raids and incursions, often targeting specific groups, including activists and students.¹¹⁶ In 2022 alone, Israeli forces conducted over 9,000 operations in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, over 700 of which occurred in or around refugee camps, at an average rate of 15 per week.

47. Night raids have become a common tactic used to arrest or simply harass and terrify Palestinians.¹¹⁷ Dozens of armed soldiers raid villages, enter homes by breaking doors, ransack, seize property and arrest individuals, including children, without a warrant,¹¹⁸ disrupting the intimacy of Palestinian households and terrifying the residents. According to soldiers’ testimonies, they were to conduct village patrols “to make [their] presence felt”.¹¹⁹ These practices may amount to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

48. Less than 1 per cent of the complaints concerning these raids are investigated and prosecuted.¹²⁰ Similarly, Israel does not provide compensation to individuals who have been arbitrarily arrested or for the extensive property destruction that occurs during raids.¹²¹

¹⁰⁹ A/HRC/37/42, para 17.

¹¹⁰ Langford and Mariniello, Israel’s Administrative Detention, p. 165.

¹¹¹ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/12/israeli-deportation-order-against-french-palestinian-activist-salah-hammouri>.

¹¹² Yesh Din, Physicians for Human Rights – Israel and Breaking the Silence, A Life Exposed: Military Invasions of Palestinian Homes in the West Bank (2020), p. 31.

¹¹³ See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, protection of civilians reports issued in 2022 and 2023. Available at <https://www.ochaopt.org/publications/protection-of-civilians>.

¹¹⁴ Military Court Watch, Annual Report 2021/22 (October 2022), p. 30.

¹¹⁵ Breaking the Silence, “We were told: you have to listen to them” (2014). Available at <https://www.breakingthesilence.org.il/testimonies/database/411355>.

¹¹⁶ Law for Palestine, “Israel’s arrest policy”, p. 21; and Amnesty International, Israel’s Apartheid, p. 17.

¹¹⁷ Yesh Din, Physicians for Human Rights – Israel and Breaking the Silence, A Life Exposed, pp. 7 and 10.

¹¹⁸ In accordance with Military Order 1651, art. 31.

¹¹⁹ See <https://www.breakingthesilence.org.il/testimonies/database/715794>.

¹²⁰ Between 2017 and 2021, only 0.87 per cent; see <https://www.yesh-din.org/en/law-enforcement-against-israeli-soldiers-suspected-of-harming-palestinians-and-their-property-summary-of-figures-for-2017-2021/#:~:text=According%20to%20the%20military's%20figures,known%20cases%20in%20those%200years>.

¹²¹ Yesh Din, Physicians for Human Rights – Israel and Breaking the Silence, A Life Exposed, p. 57.

49. There have also been incidents of Palestinian authorities arbitrarily arresting political opponents, including for non-violent speech.¹²² Arbitrary deprivation of liberty may result from, among others, monitoring critical comments on social media.

C. Interrogations

50. Once arrested by the occupying forces, Palestinians may be taken to Ofer prison (the only Israeli prison located inside the occupied territory) or to prisons and interrogation centres in Israel. About 80 per cent of Palestinian detainees are transferred to Israel, violating the international prohibition on detaining protected persons outside the occupied territory.¹²³ This may amount to the war crime of deportation.¹²⁴

51. During interrogations, Palestinians are rarely informed of their rights, including the right to remain silent. A typical interrogation involves practices that may amount to ill-treatment, and even torture, especially if security charges are involved.¹²⁵ Israeli forces physically and psychologically abuse the detainee, through methods such as beatings, insults, threats¹²⁶ and invasive body searches. They isolate the detainee, prohibiting contact with relatives, attorneys or International Committee of the Red Cross representatives.¹²⁷ They may confine the detainee through solitary confinement as a form of psychological pressure.¹²⁸ They physically weaken detainees by depriving them of physical activity, adequate nutrition and sleep.¹²⁹

52. Forced confessions, inadmissible under international law, are ordinarily used in Israeli proceedings against Palestinian alleged “security” or “terror” suspects¹³⁰. Close to 100 per cent of Shin Bet interrogations result in confessions, and the number of those indicted is much higher than among those investigated by the police.¹³¹

D. Pretrial detention

53. Under international law, persons awaiting trial should not be detained, unless detention is reasonable and necessary, taking into account individual risk factors, such as the possibility of flight or interference with evidence.¹³² Instead, Palestinians are detained without regard to individual circumstances or whether they will be charged. Pretrial detention is commonly imposed until the end of proceedings, which can last for years.¹³³

54. Pretrial detention for interrogations (with no charges) can last up to 90 days, renewable for periods of up to 30 days upon request.¹³⁴ Remand hearings lack substantive ¹²² Human Rights Watch, Two Authorities, pp. 1–5.

¹²³ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 49 and 66.

¹²⁴ Rome Statute, art. 7 (1) (d).

¹²⁵ Michael Sfar, The Wall and the Gate: Israel, Palestine, and the Legal Battle for Human Rights (Metropolitan Books, 2018), pp. 254–256.

¹²⁶ See https://www.fidh.org/IMG/pdf/fidh-pcati_art__15_communication_palestine_crimes_isa.pdf, para. 78.

¹²⁷ Ibid., paras. 29 and 95.

¹²⁸ Addameer, “I’ve been there: a study of torture and inhumane treatment in Al-Moscobiye interrogation center” (2018).

¹²⁹ Public Committee against Torture in Israel and International Federation for Human Rights, “Situation in the State of Palestine”, paras. 83–86.

¹³⁰ Ibid., paras. 34 and 36.

¹³¹ Nery Ramati and Karin Hibler, “The cooperation between the police and the Israeli Security Agency in investigating security offenses”, November 2021 (in Hebrew).

¹³² See Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 35 (2014).

¹³³ Yesh Din, Backyard Proceedings: The Implementation of Due Process Rights in the Military Courts in the Occupied Territories (2007).

¹³⁴ Military Order No. 1651, arts. 37 and 38.

examinations and last approximately three minutes. These processes predominantly occur in the absence of legal counsel.¹³⁵

55. This form of pretrial detention violates both the presumption of innocence and the right to be free from arbitrary and prolonged detention.

E. Semblances of trial

56. Palestinian detentions are reviewed by Israeli military courts. Their personnel, including judges and prosecutors, are members of the same army and often of the same units enforcing the occupation and involved in “hostilities” with the Palestinian people. Even the military court of appeal operates under the supervision of the Military Advocate General. These courts can be neither independent nor impartial.¹³⁶ In fact, military courts are considered unsuitable to try civilians.¹³⁷

57. The exclusive jurisdiction of military courts over Palestinians, who are arrested under military orders that apply solely to them and take precedence over Israeli civil and international law, solidifies the discriminatory legal dualism inherent in apartheid.¹³⁸

58. The trials in military courts lack transparency and limit public access, and proceedings are carried out in Hebrew, usually without interpretation. Lawyers from the occupied territory cannot attend court sessions in Israel owing to the lack of an entry permit.

59. The existence of judges, prosecutors, an appeal court (since 1989) and juvenile military courts (since 2009) create a façade of rule of law that conceals the oppressive nature of the occupation.¹³⁹ High conviction rates (99 per cent of those charged) and the high reliance on plea bargains in military courts¹⁴⁰ (97 per cent of convictions)¹⁴¹ seem to corroborate the failure to uphold the presumption of innocence, among other apparent violations of due process and related guarantees.

F. Custodial conditions

60. Israeli forces commonly detain Palestinians inside Israel. This unlawful deportation triggers a domino effect of violations, ranging from restrictions on family visits to denial of access to legal counsel. The security classification assigned to many Palestinians leads to harsher treatment and is another manifestation of the discriminatory regime applied to them.¹⁴²

61. Within the prison walls, Palestinian prisoners endure relentless abuse. Removed from contact with the outside world, in overcrowded and unsanitary conditions, they typically face deprivation (they are often forced to purchase their own food), medical negligence,¹⁴³ and limited opportunity for education¹⁴⁴ and physical exercise. Documented instances of torture and cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment include sexual assaults; being hooded and blindfolded, forced to stand for long hours, tied to a chair in painful positions, deprived of ¹³⁵ Detainees are to be granted access to legal counsel after 15 days (ibid., arts. 57 and 58). Yet legal counsel is rarely admitted before a detainee’s first court appearance. See also Public Committee against Torture in Israel and International Federation for Human Rights, “Situation in the State of Palestine”, para. 137.

¹³⁶ Lisa Hajjar, Courting Conflict: The Israeli Military Court System in the West Bank and Gaza (University of California Press, 2005).

¹³⁷ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 32 (2007), para. 22.

¹³⁸ Amnesty International, Israel’s Apartheid, p. 18.

¹³⁹ B’Tselem, Presumed Guilty: Remand in Custody by Military Courts in the West Bank (2015), p. 61.

¹⁴⁰ Addameer, “Military courts in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, 2018.

¹⁴¹ Hajjar, Courting Conflict, p. 3.

¹⁴² Law for Palestine, “Israel’s arrest policy”.

¹⁴³ Addameer, “Deterioration in detention conditions: suffocating prisoners”, 29 October 2019; see also https://www.addameer.org/key_issues/medical_negligence.

¹⁴⁴ Addameer, Opened Books on Cuffed Hands: The Cultural and Educational Life of Palestinian Political Prisoners in Israeli Prisons and Detention Centers (2020).

sleep and food, or exposed to loud music for long hours; and being punished with solitary confinement.¹⁴⁵ Such practices may go unreported due to lack of access to legal representation¹⁴⁶ or fear of retaliation.¹⁴⁷

62. Palestinian prisoners often use hunger strikes to protest arbitrary detention policies and practices.¹⁴⁸ This is exemplified by Khader Adnan's fifth hunger strike to protest the arbitrary detention of Palestinians by Israel, which eventually led to his death in prison on 2 May 2023. Mr. Adnan had been detained an astounding 12 times in eight years, mostly without trial or charge.

63. This oppressive picture is exacerbated by custodial conditions in prisons managed by the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza, where human rights groups have documented abusive practices, taunts, solitary confinement and beatings, often to elicit confessions from, punish and intimidate activists.¹⁴⁹ Palestinians suspected of collaborating with Israel face even more severe treatment; in Gaza they can be sentenced to death.¹⁵⁰

G. Minors and other vulnerable groups

64. The gravity of abuses against Palestinians in Israeli custody is an alarming reality. Particularly vulnerable groups warrant specific attention.

Children

65. Israel treats Palestinian children with the same lawlessness as adults.¹⁵¹ Annually, approximately 500 to 700 children, aged 12 to 17, are detained and/or prosecuted in the Israeli military system.¹⁵² Since 2000, approximately 13,000 Palestinian children have experienced institutionalized ill-treatment during arrest, prosecution and sentencing,¹⁵³ and they and their families have been affected by the consequent trauma.

66. Children are commonly arrested, often at night, for stone-throwing or for the authorities to gather information about other Palestinian "wrongdoers". Arrests involve transferring children to interrogation facilities like dangerous criminals: blindfolded and hands tied, in military jeeps. In 2013, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) began documenting the terror of Palestinian children taken violently from their homes, particularly at bedtime.¹⁵⁴

67. During interrogation, Palestinian children endure severe ill-treatment: they are strip-searched, kept blindfolded and tightly bound for long hours, insulted and ridiculed, physically abused and denied basic needs, including access to toilets and medical care, despite injuries

¹⁴⁵ Public Committee against Torture in Israel and International Federation for Human Rights, "Situation in the State of Palestine", pp. 7, 23, 42 and 46.

¹⁴⁶ Addameer, "In the case of the Palestinian People vs. Military Courts" (2021).

¹⁴⁷ Public Committee against Torture in Israel and World Organisation against Torture, "Israel – briefing to the UN Committee against Torture" (2009). Available at https://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/cat/docs/ngos/PCATI_OMCT_Israel42.pdf.

¹⁴⁸ Addameer, "Administrative detention fact sheet", 20 January 2022.

¹⁴⁹ Joint submission by Human Rights Watch and Lawyers for Justice to the Committee Against Torture on Palestine, 2022.

¹⁵⁰ Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, Annual Report 2021, pp. 67–69.

¹⁵¹ B'Tselem, No Minor Matter: Violations of the Rights of Palestinian Minors Arrested by Israel on Suspicion of Stone Throwing (2011).

¹⁵² See https://www.dci-palestine.org/children_in_israeli_detention#:~:text=Number%20of%20Palestinian%20Children%20\(12,the%20Israeli%20military%20court%20system and <http://www.mofa.pna.ps/en-us/mediaoffice/ministrynews/detention-of-palestinian-children>.

¹⁵³ See https://www.dci-palestine.org/military_detention.

¹⁵⁴ UNICEF, "Children in Israeli military detention: observations and recommendations", Bulletin No. 2 (February 2015).

they may have sustained during arrest.¹⁵⁵ A study of 100 testimonies from children detained in the West Bank in 2021 showed that no child was accompanied by a parent or guardian throughout their interrogation, and 76 per cent were denied access to a lawyer prior to interrogation.¹⁵⁶ Parents are rarely informed of their children's whereabouts upon arrest, which may amount to enforced disappearance.¹⁵⁷ Nearly half of the children detained for interrogation between 2021 and 2022 were subjected to solitary confinement for an average of 12.5 days, in windowless cells that were constantly illuminated, causing immense physical and psychological distress.¹⁵⁸ Self-harm and suicide attempts among Palestinian children in Israeli custody are not rare.¹⁵⁹

68. After abusive arrest and interrogation, children appear before military courts in prison uniforms, chains and shackles. The trial lasts three minutes on average. This is when they may see their family and lawyer for the first time.¹⁶⁰

69. Detained Palestinian children are often coerced into becoming informants or collaborators.¹⁶¹ This practice can have long-lasting negative effects on them, leading to feelings of shame and guilt, tarnishing their future. The widespread nature of this practice also creates mistrust towards children who have been detained, compromising their rehabilitation and development.¹⁶²

70. The juvenile justice procedures introduced in 2009 did not alter the system's abusiveness: the term "juvenile military court" is an oxymoron.

71. These unlawful practices deeply traumatize child detainees, their families and communities.¹⁶³ Children report anxiety, depression and other disorders after being detained.¹⁶⁴ The haunting case of Ahmad Manasra exemplifies these harrowing practices. Sentenced to imprisonment as a 14-year-old for allegedly participating in attempted murder of Israeli citizens, Mr. Manasra has been imprisoned since 2016. Despite having developed schizophrenia following violent arrest and detention, he has been held in solitary confinement,¹⁶⁵ most recently since November 2021, where his mental state continues to deteriorate.

72. The mistreatment of Palestinian children, epitomized by these cruel practices, contributes to the subjugation of the Palestinian people, severing the prospects for healthy development of future generations.¹⁶⁶

Gender and sexual orientation

73. Similarly to their male counterparts, Palestinian women and girls are also detained by Israel without trial, exposed to discrimination, harassment and degrading treatment. This includes invasive strip searches, threats¹⁶⁷ and physical abuse, as well as inhumane custodial

¹⁵⁵ Military Court Watch, Annual Report 2021/22, p. 14; CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 36; and Save the Children, "Defenceless: the impact of the Israeli military detention system on Palestinian children" (2020), pp. 15–18.

¹⁵⁶ Military Court Watch, Annual Report 2021/22, pp. 15 and 16.

¹⁵⁷ International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, art. 2.

¹⁵⁸ Military Court Watch, Annual Report 2021/22, p. 18.

¹⁵⁹ Ibid., p. 19.

¹⁶⁰ B'Tselem, No Minor Matter, p. 50.

¹⁶¹ See https://www.dci-palestine.org/child_recruitment.

¹⁶² Hedi Viterbo, Problematizing Law, Rights, and Childhood in Israel/Palestine (Cambridge University Press, 2021).

¹⁶³ Gwyn Daniel, "'The strong do what they can and the weak suffer what they must': Palestinian families under occupation", Context, vol. 164 (August 2019).

¹⁶⁴ Save the Children, "Isolated: the impact of family separation on Palestinian children in military detention" (2022), pp. 12 and 13.

¹⁶⁵ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/07/un-experts-urge-israel-free-ahmad-manasra>.

¹⁶⁶ Nadera Shalhoub-Kevorkian, Incarcerated Childhood and the Politics of Unchilding (Cambridge University Press, 2019).

¹⁶⁷ Public Committee against Torture in Israel and World Organisation against Torture, "Violence against Palestinian women", 2005.

conditions, even during pregnancy.¹⁶⁸ Some women are arrested, threatened, and mistreated just to obtain information or exert pressure on their husbands.

74. Allegations of the use of coercion on gay Palestinian men by Israeli forces, including threats of exposing their sexual orientation, are also of serious concern.¹⁶⁹ These forms of coercion would place these men at serious risk of physical and psychological harm, and violate their fundamental human rights.

Detaining the deceased

75. The deprivation of liberty haunts Palestinians beyond their life. Israeli forces often withhold the bodies of Palestinians deceased in custody or killed for alleged “security reasons”.¹⁷⁰ This practice, which the Israeli High Court of Justice has condoned,¹⁷¹ applies to the bodies of both adults and children.¹⁷² By May 2023, Israeli forces reportedly withheld 125 Palestinian bodies, including 13 deceased detainees. Similarly, the de facto authorities in Gaza are withholding the bodies of two deceased Israeli soldiers.

76. For decades, the bodies of Palestinians who were not returned to their families were buried in graves near military zones known as “cemeteries of numbers” (as each body was assigned a number).¹⁷³ In recent years, Israeli forces have withheld bodies in fridges, impeded identification by relatives, and imposed restrictions on burial upon returning the bodies.¹⁷⁴ Reports suggest that the bodies are often kept in “poor and inhumane conditions”.¹⁷⁵

77. The denial of the opportunity to perform funerary rituals for loved ones is yet another trauma families are forced to experience. This is heightened when the loved one’s body is returned severely disfigured.

78. International law protects burial rituals and gravesites in accordance with the deceased’s religious and cultural customs, and requires the facilitation of the return of mortal remains.¹⁷⁶ Concealing the detention, whereabouts and fate of a person, living or deceased, may amount to enforced disappearance.¹⁷⁷

VI. Open-air prison: a multilayered architecture of confinement

79. Carcerality, conceived as a large-scale system of deprivation of liberty that forces into a condition of captivity entire populations, who are also dispossessed of their lands, is an essential feature of settler-colonialism.¹⁷⁸ Through its practices of collective confinement in ¹⁶⁸ CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 40.

¹⁶⁹ Walaa Alqaisiya, Decolonial Queering in Palestine (Routledge, 2023).

¹⁷⁰ Al-Haq, Law in the Service of Man, “Field report on human rights violations in 2020”, 2021; and Budour Hassan, The Warmth of Our Sons: Necropolitics, Memory and the Palestinian Quest for Closure (Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center), p. 28, available at <https://www.jlac.ps/en/Article/888/The-Warmth-of-our-Sons>.

¹⁷¹ E.g., Supreme Court of Israel, Additional Hearing 10190/17, Israeli military commander of Judea & Samaria (West Bank) v. Muhammad Eliyan, Decision, 19 February 2018 (in Hebrew).

¹⁷² See https://www.dci-palestine.org/no_closure_for_palestinian_families_waiting_for_their_childs_remains.

¹⁷³ Hassan, The Warmth of Our Sons, p. 47.

¹⁷⁴ Noura Erakat and Rabea Eghbariah, “The jurisprudence of death: Palestinian corpses & the Israeli legal process”, Jadaliyya, 8 February 2023.

¹⁷⁵ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/statements/2016/05/end-mission-statement-un-special-committee-investigate-israeli-practices>.

¹⁷⁶ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 130; and Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, art. 34.

¹⁷⁷ International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, art. 1; see also communication ISR 2/2019, available at <https://spcommreports.ohchr.org/TMResultsBase/DownloadPublicCommunicationFile?gId=24312>.

¹⁷⁸ Lorenzo Veracini, Settler Colonialism: A Theoretical Overview (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010); and Amy Nethery, “Incarceration, classification and control: administrative detention in settler colonial Australia”, Political Geography, vol. 89 (August 2021), pp. 3 and 4.

the occupied Palestinian territory, Israel reproduces this pattern.¹⁷⁹ Over time, Israel has expanded its multifaceted hold over the Palestinians as a people, through physical, bureaucratic and digital mechanisms. Behind-bars imprisonment dovetails with confinement techniques that envelop the entire occupied Palestinian territory, accompanying and enabling arbitrary seizure of land and Palestinians' forcible displacement.

80. This has turned Palestinian life into a "carceral continuum",¹⁸⁰ where different levels of captivity co-exist: from the micro level of individual deprivation of liberty, through mass incarceration, to population entrapment in strictly controlled enclaves in which the occupied population is confined as a collective security threat, and any form of resistance to the occupation's territorial expansion and dispossession is repressed.

A. Physical carcerality

81. Physical segregation has historically been used as a settler colonial tool to control and manage native populations, acquire their lands and displace them.¹⁸¹ In the fragmented occupied Palestinian territory, Israel has entrapped the Palestinians within a physical architecture that resembles a prison, but on a much larger territorial and societal scale.

82. The illegal blockade of Gaza is the most well-known example of this physical entrapment, with over 2 million Palestinians subjected to collective punishment since 2007. The heavily militarized fence surrounding Gaza and its "no-go zone" further shrink the enclave by 17 per cent and the agricultural area by 35 per cent, while access to the maritime area is reduced by 85 per cent as a result of the heavily patrolled sea blockade.¹⁸²

83. In the West Bank – 60 per cent of which is under full Israeli military and civil control – the carceral architecture comprises: 270 colonies and military bases encircling Palestinian cities, town and villages, preventing their expansion; closed military zones,¹⁸³ constituting 18 per cent of the West Bank; a wall over 700 kilometres long, largely built inside the West Bank, including in and around East Jerusalem, annexing an additional 10 per cent of Palestinian territory; approximately 65 checkpoints and 75 partial checkpoints, thousands of flying checkpoints and around 70 roadblocks; 17 segregated roads, for a total of around 400 kilometres, for Israelis only; and Israeli-controlled points of entry to and exit from the occupied Palestinian territory.

84. Within this maze, the city of Hebron has reportedly served as a "model" to advance colonization through harsh occupation strategies.¹⁸⁴ To "make space" for around 700 settlers living in heavily fortified areas of the city, Israel has put in place a system of approximately 20 checkpoints with hundreds of soldiers,¹⁸⁵ prohibiting Palestinians from accessing their city's main streets and markets. The system is being replicated in neighbourhoods in Jerusalem targeted for settlement expansion (e.g. the Old City and Silwan).¹⁸⁶

85. More than a spatial by-product of the colonies, walls or checkpoints, the physical architecture of the occupation is instrumental in shrinking Palestinian physical space and erasing their civic and political space.

¹⁷⁹ Nashif, Palestinian Political Prisoners.

¹⁸⁰ Michel Foucault, Discipline and Punish: The Birth of the Prison, Alan Sheridan, translator (Vintage Books, 1995), p. 297.

¹⁸¹ Thalia Anthony and Harry Blagg, "Hyperincarceration and indigeneity". Available at <https://opus.lib.uts.edu.au/bitstream/10453/152391/3/Hyperincarceration%20and%20Indigeneity.pdf>.

¹⁸² Amnesty International, Israel's Apartheid, p. 28.

¹⁸³ See https://www.ochaopt.org/sites/default/files/ocha_opt_firing_zone_map_august_2012_english.pdf.

¹⁸⁴ Idit Avrahami and Noam Sheizaf, directors H2: The Occupation Lab (2023).

¹⁸⁵ B'Tselem, "Hebron city center", 26 May 2019. Available at <https://www.btselem.org/hebron>.

¹⁸⁶ Al-Haq, Occupying Jerusalem's Old City: Israeli Policies of Isolation, Intimidation and Transformation (2019).

B. Bureaucratic carcerality

86. Within the physical boundaries of their confinement, Palestinians must also navigate a maze of bureaucratic barriers made of requirements, permissions and restrictions in the form of Israeli-issued “permits” and “bans”. Dictating much of Palestinian existence, permits and bans transform basic freedoms into privileges arbitrarily granted or denied by the occupying Power.¹⁸⁷

87. Over 100 permits regulate essential activities such as leaving the West Bank and Gaza, building and even residing in certain areas, working, visiting family, receiving medical treatment, worshiping, and entering East Jerusalem, let alone Israel.¹⁸⁸ While the Israeli Civil Administration issues the permits, the ultimate decision rests with Shin Bet, which determines the security classification of every Palestinian.

88. Conversely, bans restrict the ability of Palestinians to receive a permit. Bans can be issued by Shin Bet on “security suspicions”, by the police for suspected criminal activity; or by the Israeli Civil Administration, often indiscriminately.¹⁸⁹

89. The permit system is not only arbitrary; it also lacks transparency, resulting in frequent denials and no meaningful avenues for appeal.¹⁹⁰ The lack of a permit confines Palestinians and even their relatives, preventing them from working, receiving life-saving medical treatment, travelling, studying abroad or visiting family. Lack of a permit can also lead to arrest; this affects, for example, Palestinians working in Israel or colonies, or Palestinians from Gaza living in the West Bank. This deepens the collective captivity of Palestinians, rendering them vulnerable and exploitable.¹⁹¹

90. In 2022, new regulations further restricted entry to and residency in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, for foreign nationals, including Palestinians from the diaspora.¹⁹² These regulations introduce quotas for foreign students and academics, impose limitations on family unification, and allow the Israeli Civil Administration to assess even the sincerity of intimate relationships. These appear to be attempts to further isolate and disconnect Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territory from the outside world.

C. Digital carcerality

91. Under international law, interference with the right to privacy, such as the use of surveillance technologies, must be prescribed by law, imposed only when strictly necessary, proportionate to achieve a legitimate aim, and non-discriminatory, and must respect fundamental rights.¹⁹³ Instead, digital surveillance pervasively entrenches control by Israeli forces over the spaces and lives of the occupied population. Palestinians are constantly monitored through closed-circuit television and other devices at checkpoints, in public places, social gatherings and protests. Their private spaces are often intruded upon without their knowledge, through monitoring of social media, calls and online conversations considered “threatening”,¹⁹⁴ and the tracking of the location and connections of mobile phones to identify networks and potential associations, or even through access to their medical records.

¹⁸⁷ Berda, Colonial Bureaucracy.

¹⁸⁸ Breaking the Silence, Military Rule, p. 15.

¹⁸⁹ Ibid., pp. 22, 29 and 30.

¹⁹⁰ Human Rights Watch, A Threshold Crossed, p. 174.

¹⁹¹ Breaking the Silence, Military Rule, p. 23.

¹⁹² Coordination of Government Activities in the Territories, “Procedure for entry and residence of foreigners in the Judea and Samaria area”, 2022. Available at <https://www.gov.il/en/departments/policies/judeaentry2022>.

¹⁹³ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 17; Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 16 (1988); and A/HRC/39/29, para. 10.

¹⁹⁴ Madalena Santos, “Settler colonial surveillance and the criminalization of social media: contradictory implications for Palestinian resistance”, in Protests in the Information Age: Social Movements, Digital Practices and Surveillance, Lucas Melgaço and Jeffrey Monaghan, eds. (Routledge, 2018).

92. Digital surveillance and automated policing intensify near Israeli colonies and military infrastructure. Colonies are equipped with technologies that enhance identification, arrest, and detention of Palestinians engaging in protests or resisting the expansion of colonies.¹⁹⁵ Digital surveillance ultimately serves to facilitate colonization.

93. In addition to extensive control, the occupation has advanced development by Israel of powerful surveillance technologies, including facial recognition, drones, and social media monitoring¹⁹⁶. Examples of these programmes include Blue Wolf, an app connected to the Wolf Pack, an Israeli database containing imagery, personal information and security ratings of Palestinians in the West Bank; and Red Wolf, a system of cameras equipped with facial recognition that identify Palestinians at checkpoints and interact with and feed information into the main database. This has created a “gamified surveillance” whereby Israeli military units photograph Palestinians without their consent, and even engage in disturbing competitions. In Hebron, the so-called “smart city” initiative has led to audiovisual surveillance of Palestinians across town.¹⁹⁷ Similar forms of control are being deployed in East Jerusalem neighbourhoods (e.g. Silwan and Sheikh Jarrah), enhancing restrictions and ultimately widespread carcerality.

VII. Conclusions

94. Under Israeli occupation, generations of Palestinians have endured widespread and systematic arbitrary deprivation of liberty, often for the simplest acts of life. Since 1967, over 800,000 Palestinians, including children, have been detained on the basis of an array of authoritarian rules enacted, enforced and adjudicated by the Israeli military. Palestinians are often presumed guilty without evidence, arrested without warrants, and detained without charge or trial. Physical and psychological abuse are distressingly common. Without condoning crimes that Palestinians have committed during decades of illegal occupation, most criminal convictions of Palestinians have been the result of a litany of violations of international law, including due process violations, that taint the legitimacy of the administration of justice by the occupying Power. Many such convictions concern legitimate expressions of civil and political rights, and the right to resist an illegal foreign occupier.

95. By depriving Palestinians of the protections afforded by international law, the occupation reduces them to a “de-civilianized” population, stripped of their status of protected persons and fundamental rights. Treating the Palestinians as a collective, incarcerable threat erodes their protection as civilians under international law, deprives them of their fundamental freedoms, and expropriates their agency and ability to unite, self-govern and develop as a polity. Any Palestinian opposing this regime, from peaceful protesters to farmers trying to cultivate their lands, is perceived as a menace and considered detainable. This forces Palestinians into a permanent state of vulnerability.

96. Mass incarceration reinforces the power imbalance between the Palestinians and Israeli institutions and settlers, facilitating settler-colonial encroachment. By shifting from the security of the occupying Power to the security of the occupation itself, Israel has disguised as “security” the permanent control over the territory it occupies and tries to annex. Law enforcement has served as a tool to ensure the imposition of the occupation and racial domination by Israel and the furtherance of its settler-colonial project. This has entrenched segregation, subjugation, fragmentation and, ultimately, the dispossession of Palestinian lands and forced displacement of Palestinians. Intended primarily to secure the establishment and expansion of colonies, this system suffocates Palestinian life and undermines the collective existence of Palestinians.

¹⁹⁵ Amnesty International, Automated Apartheid: How Facial Recognition Fragments, Segregates and Controls Palestinians in the OPT (2023), p. 75.

¹⁹⁶ See <https://7amleh.org/2022/04/21/legal-analysis-for-the-bill-for-preventing-incitement-on-social-media-2021>.

¹⁹⁷ Amnesty International, Automated Apartheid, pp. 40–45 and 69.

97. Through an array of physical, bureaucratic and digital mechanisms, the Israeli regime has turned the occupied territory into a panopticon, where Palestinians are constantly surveilled and disciplined. Within this system, typical of settler-colonial regimes, widespread and systematic arbitrary deprivation of liberty and cruel and degrading treatment on a large scale appear to form part of the State policy pursued by Israel of domination of the Palestinians as a people, which is enforced also through beyond-prison confinement.

98. The widespread and systematic arbitrariness of the occupation's carceral regime is yet another manifestation of the inherently illegal occupation and strengthens the need to hold Israel accountable, while bringing the occupation to an end. It is critical that the international community recognize that the unlawfulness of the occupation cannot be remedied, or humanized, by reforming some of its most brutal consequences. Under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly concerning State responsibility, third States have a duty not to contribute or condone the settler-colonial apartheid imposed by Israel, which criminalizes Palestinians for (re)claiming or refusing to forsake their collective right to exist as a people, and act to realize all conditions that would allow the Palestinian people to realize their rights, including their inalienable right to self-determination.

VIII. Recommendations

99. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the Israeli system of arbitrarily depriving Palestinians of their liberty in the occupied Palestinian territory, emanating from an irredeemably unlawful occupation, be abolished tout court, because of its inherent incompatibility with international law.

100. To achieve this goal, third States should:

(a) Use diplomatic, political and economic measures afforded by the Charter of the United Nations without discrimination;

(b) Not recognize as lawful, aid or assist the occupation by Israel, given its commission of internationally wrongful acts and possible international crimes, and call for the cessation of those acts and for reparations;

(c) Prosecute the commission of international crimes alleged in the present report under universal jurisdiction.

101. The State of Israel, as a first step towards long-term remedies for decades of arbitrary deprivation of liberty of the Palestinian people, should take the following measures:

(a) Declare a moratorium on the detention of minors;

(b) Release all Palestinian detainees, especially children, detained for acts devoid of offensiveness under international law;

(c) Release all withheld bodies of deceased Palestinians and guarantee dignified burials.

102. The Palestinian authorities should fully comply with international norms on the deprivation of liberty. This includes:

(a) Ceasing any form of arbitrary detention, as well as torture and ill-treatment of detainees, ensuring both accountability and reparations to the victims. This also includes the release of the bodies of deceased Israelis withheld in Gaza;

(b) Interrupting security arrangements that may lead to violating fundamental rights and freedoms under international law;

(c) Ensuring effective oversight and accountability measures, including by strategically engaging local human rights organizations.

103. Independent and thorough investigations into the possible commission of international crimes arising from the systematic arbitrary detention of Palestinians should be opened, including through universal jurisdiction. In particular, the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court should examine, as part of the investigation into the situation in Palestine, the possible commission of the international crimes of:

- (a) Wilful deprivation of protected persons' right to fair and regular trial;
- (b) Widespread and institutionalized use of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement;
- (d) Imprisonment or severe arbitrary deprivation of liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law;
- (e) Persecution against an identifiable group or collectivity by reason of its identity;
- (f) Apartheid.

104. The likelihood of the above offences being cumulatively committed as part of a policy of “de-Palestinization” of the occupied territory and of a plan to incrementally annex it must be urgently investigated; such a plan would threaten the right of an entire people to exist as a national group, challenging the very foundations of the international legal order.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
1 July 2024

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-fifth session

26 February–5 April 2024

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Anatomy of a genocide

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Francesca Albanese*

Summary

After five months of military operations, Israel has destroyed Gaza. Over 30,000 Palestinians have been killed, including more than 13,000 children. Over 12,000 are presumed dead and 71,000 injured, many with life-changing mutilations. Seventy per cent of residential areas have been destroyed. Eighty per cent of the population has been forcibly displaced. Thousands of families have lost loved ones or have been wiped out. Many could not bury and mourn their relatives, forced instead to leave their bodies decomposing in homes, in the street or under the rubble. Thousands have been detained and systematically subjected to severe ill-treatment. The incalculable collective trauma will be experienced for generations to come.

By analysing the patterns of violence and Israeli policies in its onslaught on Gaza, the present report concludes that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the threshold indicating that Israel has committed genocide has been met. One of the key findings of the report is that the Israeli executive and military leadership and Israeli soldiers have intentionally distorted jus in bello principles, subverting their protective functions, in an attempt to legitimize genocidal violence against the Palestinian people.

* The present report was submitted to the conference services for processing after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. In the present report, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, Francesca Albanese, addresses the crime of genocide as perpetrated by the State of Israel in the occupied Palestinian territory, specifically in the Gaza Strip, since 7 October 2023. Since Israel prohibits the Special Rapporteur from visiting Gaza, the report is based on data and analyses from organizations on the ground, international jurisprudence, investigative reports and consultations with affected individuals, authorities, civil society and experts.

2. The Special Rapporteur firmly condemns the crimes committed by Hamas and other Palestinian armed groups in Israel on 7 October and urges accountability and the release of hostages.¹ She does not examine those events in the present report, as they are beyond the geographic scope of the mandate.² Nor does she examine the situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

3. Since it imposed the siege on Gaza in 2007, which tightened the closure imposed since 1993, Israel, the occupying Power, has carried out five major assaults before the present one.

4. By the ninth day of the assault, Israel had already caused more deaths (2,670)³ than in its previous deadliest war against Gaza, in 2014 (2,251).⁴ Only a fraction of the mass killings, severe harm and ruthless, life-threatening conditions inflicted on Palestinians over the subsequent five months of the assault can be captured in this report.

5. United Nations independent experts,⁵ scholars⁶ and States,⁷ including South Africa in its case before the International Court of Justice,⁸ have warned that acts committed in the latest onslaught may amount to genocide. The Court found a plausible risk of “irreparable prejudice” to the rights of Palestinians in Gaza, a protected group under the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,⁹ and ordered Israel, inter alia, to “take all measures within its power” to prevent genocidal acts, prevent and punish incitement to genocide and ensure urgent humanitarian aid.¹⁰

6. In its defence, Israel has argued that its conduct complies with international humanitarian law.¹¹ A key finding of the report is that Israel has strategically invoked the international humanitarian law framework as “humanitarian camouflage” to legitimize its genocidal violence in Gaza.

7. The context, facts and analysis presented herein lead to the conclusion that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the threshold indicating the commission of genocide by Israel has been met. More broadly, it is also indicated that Israeli actions have been driven by a genocidal logic integral to its settler-colonial project in Palestine, signalling a tragedy foretold.

¹ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/10/israeloccupied-palestinian-territory-un-experts-deplore-attacks-civilians#:~:text=%E2%80%9CThis%20amounts%20to%20collective%20punishment,amounts%20to%20a%20war%20crime.%E2%80%9D>

² A/77/356, para. 4.

³ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-9>.

⁴ <https://www.ochaopt.org/data/casualties>.

⁵ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/11/gaza-un-experts-call-international-community-prevent-genocide-against>.

⁶ <https://contentingmodernities.nd.edu/global-currents/statement-of-scholars-7-october/>.

⁷ https://www.oic-oci.org/topic/?t_id=40224&t_ref=26858&lan=en; <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20240208-pre-01-00-en.pdf>; and <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aoQeOsgs0Dc>; and <https://au.int/ar/node/43236>.

⁸ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20240111-ora-01-00-bi.pdf>.

⁹ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20240126-ord-01-00-en.pdf>, para. 54.

¹⁰ Ibid., paras. 77–86.

¹¹ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20240112-ora-01-00-bi.pdf>, paras. 6 and 37; and https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Hamas-Israel_Conflict_2023_-_Some_Factual_and_Legal_Aspects_-_Israel_Ministry_of_Foreign_Affairs_\(2_NOV_2023\).pdf.pdf).

II. Contextualizing genocide

A. Genocide as inherent to settler-colonialism

8. Genocide, as the denial of the right of a people to exist and the subsequent attempt or success in annihilating them, entails various modes of elimination.¹² Raphael Lemkin, who coined the term “genocide”, observed that genocide is “a composite of different acts of persecution or destruction”,¹³ ranging from physical elimination to the forced “disintegration” of a people’s political and social institutions, culture, language, national sentiments and religion.¹⁴ Genocide is a process, not an act.¹⁵

9. Genocidal intent and practices are integral to the ideology and processes of settler-colonialism,¹⁶ as illustrated by the experience of Native Americans in the United States of America, the First Nations in Australia and the Herero in Namibia. Since it is the aim of settler-colonialism to acquire Indigenous land and resources, the mere existence of Indigenous Peoples poses an existential threat to settler societies.¹⁷ The destruction and replacement of Indigenous Peoples therefore become “unavoidable” and take place through different methods depending on the perceived threat to the settler group. Such methods include removal (forcible transfer, ethnic cleansing), movement restrictions (segregation, large-scale carceralization), mass killings (murder, disease, starvation), assimilation (cultural erasure, child removal) and birth prevention.¹⁸ Settler-colonialism comprises a dynamic, structural process and a confluence of acts aimed at displacing and eliminating Indigenous groups, of which genocidal annihilation represents the peak.¹⁹

B. Palestine and the context of genocide

10. Historical patterns of genocide demonstrate that persecution, discrimination and other preliminary stages prepare the ground for the annihilation stage of genocide.²⁰ In Palestine, displacing and erasing the Indigenous Arab presence has been an inevitable part of the forming of Israel as a “Jewish State”.²¹ In 1940, Joseph Weitz, head of the Jewish Colonization Department, stated that there was no room for both peoples together in the country; that the only solution was Palestine without Arabs; and that there was no other way but to transfer all of them: not one village, not one tribe should be left.²²

11. Practices leading to the mass ethnic cleansing of the non-Jewish population of Palestine occurred from 1947 to 1949, and again in 1967, when Israel occupied the West Bank, East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip, with mass displacement of hundreds of thousands, killings, the destruction of villages and towns, looting and the denial of the right to return of expelled Palestinians.

¹² Mohamed Adhikari, ed., Civilian-Driven Violence and the Genocide of Indigenous Peoples in Settler Societies (2019), p. 13.

¹³ Raphael Lemkin, Axis Rule in Occupied Europe (1944), p. 92.

¹⁴ Ibid., p. 79.

¹⁵ Penny Green, Thomas MacManus and Alicia de la Cour Venning, Countdown to Annihilation: Genocide in Myanmar (2015).

¹⁶ Alexander Laban Hinton, “The dark side of modernity: toward an anthropology of genocide”, in Annihilating Difference: The Anthropology of Genocide, Alexander Laban Hinton, ed. (2002), pp. 1-40.

¹⁷ Lorenzo Veracini, “Settler collective, founding violence and disavowal: the settler colonial situation”, Journal of Intercultural Studies, vol. 29, No. 4 (2008), pp. 368 and 369.

¹⁸ Patrick Wolfe, “Settler colonialism and the elimination of the native”, Journal of Genocide Research, vol. 8, No. 4 (2006), p. 402.

¹⁹ Lemkin, Axis Rule, p. 92; and Pauline Wakeham, “The slow violence of settler colonialism”, Journal of Genocide Research, vol. 24, No. 3 (2022), pp. 340–346.

²⁰ Gregory H. Stanton, “The ten stages of genocide”, Genocide Watch (1996).

²¹ Rashid Khalidi, The Hundred Years’ War on Palestine (2020).

²² See Uri Davis, “Palestine into Israel”, Journal of Palestine Studies, vol. 3, No. 1 (Autumn, 1973), p. 89.

12. Since 1967, Israel has advanced its settler-colonial project through military occupation, stripping the Palestinian people of their right to self-determination.²³ This has resulted in the segregation and control of Palestinians, including through land confiscation, house demolitions, revoked residencies and deportation.²⁴ Punishing their indigeneity and rejection of colonization, Israel has designated Palestinians as a “security threat” to justify its oppression and “de-civilianization”, namely the denial of their status as protected civilians.²⁵

13. Israel has progressively turned Gaza into a highly controlled enclave.²⁶ Since the 2005 evacuation of Israeli settlers (which the current Prime Minister of Israel, Benjamin Netanyahu, strongly opposed),²⁷ the Israeli settler movement and its leaders have framed Gaza as a territory to be “recolonized” and its population as invaders to be expelled.²⁸ Those unlawful claims are integral to the project of consolidating the “exclusive and unassailable right” of the Jewish people on the land of “Greater Israel”, as reaffirmed by Prime Minister Netanyahu in December 2022.²⁹

14. This is the historical background against which the atrocities in Gaza are unfolding.

III. Legal framework

15. The 1948 Genocide Convention codifies genocide as an international crime, the prohibition of which is a non-derogable peremptory norm (jus cogens). The erga omnes obligation to prevent and punish genocide binds all States under both the Convention and customary international law and requires that all States prevent and prosecute genocidal acts.³⁰ Genocide cannot be justified under any circumstances, including purported self-defence.³¹ Complicity in genocide is expressly prohibited, giving rise to obligations for third States.³²

16. The International Court of Justice and the International Criminal Court have jurisdiction over the crime of genocide, as do State domestic courts.³³ Prior to the establishment of the International Criminal Court, ad hoc international criminal tribunals advanced their interpretation of what constitutes genocide,³⁴ its intent and required evidence.³⁵

²³ A/77/35.

²⁴ <https://badil.org/phocadownloadpap/badil-new/publications/research/working-papers/FT-Coercive-Environments.pdf>.

²⁵ A/HRC/53/59, paras. 80 and 95.

²⁶ Ibid., para. 82.

²⁷ <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2005/aug/08/israel>.

²⁸ Nicola Perugini, “Settler colonial inversions: Israel’s ‘disengagement’ and the Gush Katif ‘Museum of Expulsion’ in Jerusalem”, Settler-Colonial Studies, vol. 9, No. 1 (2019), pp. 44 and 45; see <https://hashiloach.org.il/israels-decisive-plan/>; and <https://www.jpost.com/israel-news/otzma-candidate-ben-gvir-calls-to-return-to-gush-katif-584665>.

²⁹ <https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/netanyahu-set-retake-power-head-far-right-government-2022-12-29/>. See also Basic-Law: The Nation State of the Jewish People (19 July 2018).

³⁰ M. Cherif Bassiouni, “International crimes: jus cogens and obligatio erga omnes”, Law and Contemporary Problems, vol. 59, No. 4 (1996), p. 68; and A/CN.4/L.960/Add.1, conclusions 5 and 17.

³¹ William Schabas, Genocide in International Law: The Crime of Crimes (2009), p. 395; and A/CN.4/L.960/Add.1, conclusions 3 and 17.

³² Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, art. III.

³³ Ibid., arts. V and IX; and Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 6.

³⁴ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/instruments-mechanisms/instruments/statute-international-tribunal-prosecution-persons-responsible> (1993); Security Council resolution 955 (1994); International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Blagojević and Jokić, Case No. IT-02-60-T ICTY, Judgment, 17 January 2005; Prosecutor v. Brđjanin, Case No. IT-99-36-T ICTY, Judgment, 1 September 2004; Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-T ICTY, Judgment, 2 August 2001; and Prosecutor v. Jelisić, Case No. IT-95-10-T ICTY, Judgment, 14 December 1999.

³⁵ International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Popović et al., Case No. IT-05-88-A ICTY, Appeal-Judgment, 30 January 2015; Prosecutor v. Karadžić, Case No. IT-95-5/18-T ICTY, Judgment, 24 March 2016; Prosecutor v. Mladić, Case No. IT-09-92-T ICTY, Judgment,

A. Constitutive elements of genocide

17. The Genocide Convention codifies genocide as “any of the [specified] acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such”.³⁶ Accordingly, the crime of genocide comprises two interconnected elements:

(a) The actus reus: the commission of any one or more specific acts against a protected group, namely:

- (i) Killing members of the group;
- (ii) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
- (iii) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
- (iv) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
- (v) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group;³⁷

(b) The mens rea: the intent behind the commission of one or more of the above-mentioned acts that must be established, which includes two intertwined elements:

- (i) A general intention to carry out the criminal acts (dolus generalis);
- (ii) A specific intention to destroy the target group as such (dolus specialis).³⁸

18. Both components must be satisfied for conduct to legally constitute genocide.³⁹ The perpetrator’s intent to destroy the group in whole or in part distinguishes genocidal acts from other international crimes.⁴⁰ Specific intent may be established by direct evidence, that is, statements by high command or official documents, or inferred from patterns of conduct.⁴¹ In the latter case, the patterns of conduct or the manner in which the acts are perpetrated must be such that they “only point to the existence of such [genocidal] intent”⁴² and the existence of intent results in “the only inference that could reasonably be drawn”.⁴³

19. Evidence of the result is required to establish the commission of three of the underlying acts (killing, inflicting harm and transferring children).⁴⁴ For the remaining two acts (inflicting conditions calculated to destroy the group and preventing births), the evidentiary threshold requires proof of an intent to achieve a given outcome, rather than its achievement.⁴⁵ Accordingly, if displacement, ethnic cleansing or mass deportation are perpetrated with the requisite intent to destroy the protected group as such, this may amount

22 November 2017; and Prosecutor v. Tolimir, Case No. IT-05-88/2-A ICTY, Appeal-Judgment, 8 April 2015.

³⁶ Genocide Convention, art. II.

³⁷ Ibid.; and Rome Statute, art. 6.

³⁸ Kai Ambos, “What does ‘intent to destroy’ in genocide mean?”, International Review of the Red Cross, vol. 91, No. 876 (2009), p. 834.

³⁹ Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2007, paras. 187 and 188.

⁴⁰ Prosecutor v. Kupreškić et al., Case No. IT-95-16-T ICTY, Judgment, 14 January 2000, para. 636.

⁴¹ See https://ccrjustice.org/sites/default/files/attach/2023/11/Declaration_Expert_William_Schabas_w.pdf, para. 16.

⁴² Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, para. 373.

⁴³ Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Serbia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2015, para. 148.

⁴⁴ Schabas, Genocide in International Law, p. 177.

⁴⁵ Ibid., pp. 177, 192 and 195–197; and District Court of Jerusalem, Attorney-General v. Eichmann, Case No. 40/61, Judgment, 11 December 1961, para. 196.

to genocide.⁴⁶ Similarly, these displacement actions can also be evidence of specific genocidal intent.⁴⁷

B. State responsibility and individual criminal liability

20. The crime of genocide gives rise to both individual and State responsibility. The Genocide Convention stresses the need for individual accountability before domestic or international courts⁴⁸ regardless of any official role held by the perpetrator.⁴⁹ Individual criminal liability arises from direct involvement in committing, attempting, conspiring, directly and publicly inciting, planning, instigating, ordering and aiding and abetting (complicity in) genocidal acts, requiring a specific intent to contribute to the destruction of the target group.⁵⁰ This implies knowledge of the possibility that an act will result in destruction of the group in whole or in part.⁵¹ Genocide gives rise to State responsibility when an individual has committed genocide while exercising State authority; in this case the individual's conduct is attributable to the State.⁵²

IV. Genocidal acts in Gaza

21. Genocidal acts can include deliberate actions or omissions, including the failure to protect the group from harm.⁵³ The evidence presented in the following sections suggests that Israel has committed at least three of the acts proscribed in the Genocide Convention.

A. “Killing members of the group”

22. This act encompasses deaths resulting from direct actions or arising from neglect, including deaths caused by deliberate starvation, disease or other survival-threatening conditions imposed on the group.⁵⁴

23. Since 7 October, Israel has killed over 30,000 Palestinians in Gaza, equivalent to approximately 1.4 per cent of its population, through lethal weapons and deliberate

⁴⁶ Joint declaration of intervention of Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, the Netherlands (Kingdom of) and the United Kingdom (2023) (regarding International Court of Justice, the Gambia v. Myanmar), paras. 44–47 (<https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/178/178-20231115-wri-01-00-en.pdf>); opinion of Judge Lauterpacht (regarding International Court of Justice, Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, Provisional Measures Judgement, 1993), para. 123 (<https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/91/091-19930913-ORD-01-05-EN.pdf>); Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, Judgment, 27 February 2007, para. 190. See also International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Karadžić and Mladić, Cases No. IT-95-5-R61 ICTY and IT-95-18-R61 ICTY, Review of Indictments, 11 July 1996, para. 94; and Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-A ICTY, Appeal Judgment, 19 April 2004, paras. 31–33. ⁴⁷ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/178/178-20231115-wri-01-00-en.pdf>, paras. 72–74; and Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-A ICTY, paras. 31–33.

⁴⁸ Rome Statute, art. 6.

⁴⁹ Genocide Convention, art. IV.

⁵⁰ Ibid., art. III; and Rome Statute, art. 25.

⁵¹ Prosecutor v. Popović et al., Case No. IT-05-88-T ICTY, Judgment, 10 June 2010, para. 1178; Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-T, para. 595; and Ambos, “What does ‘intent to destroy’ in genocide mean?”, p. 841.

⁵² General Assembly resolution 56/83, annex, art. 4; and Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, paras. 384, 385, 386 and 396–400.

⁵³ Prosecutor v. Kambanda, Case No. ICTR-97-23-S, Judgment, 4 September 1998, para. 39 (ix); and Schabas, Genocide in International Law, pp. 177 and 178.

⁵⁴ International Criminal Court, Elements of Crimes (2013), p. 13; Prosecutor v. Krnojelac, Case No. IT-97-25-T ICTY, Judgment, 15 March 2002, para. 326; and Schabas, Genocide in International Law, p. 180.

imposition of life-threatening conditions. By the end of February, a further 12,000 Palestinians were reported missing, presumed dead under the rubble.⁵⁵

24. During the first months of the campaign, the Israeli army employed over 25,000 tons of explosives (equivalent to two nuclear bombs)⁵⁶ on innumerable buildings, many of which were identified as targets by artificial intelligence.⁵⁷ Israel also used unguided munitions (“dumb bombs”)⁵⁸ and 2,000-pound “bunker buster” bombs on densely populated areas and “safe zones”.⁵⁹ In the initial weeks, Israeli forces killed around 250 people daily, including 100 children,⁶⁰ in attacks obliterating entire neighbourhoods and essential infrastructure.⁶¹ Thousands were killed by bombing, sniper fire or in summary executions;⁶² thousands more were killed while fleeing using routes and within areas declared “safe” by Israel.⁶³ The victims included 125 journalists and 340 doctors, nurses and other health workers (four per cent of Gaza’s health-care personnel), students, academics, scientists and their family members.⁶⁴

25. As reported, 70 per cent of recorded deaths have consistently been women and children. Israel failed to prove that the remaining 30 per cent, comprising adult males, were active Hamas combatants – a necessary condition for them to be lawfully targeted. By early-December, Israeli security advisers claimed the killing of “7,000 terrorists” in a stage of the campaign when less than 5,000 adult males in total had been identified among the casualties, thus implying that all adult males killed were “terrorists”.⁶⁵ This is indicative of an intent to target members of the group indiscriminately.

26. Moreover, the heightened Israeli blockade of Gaza has caused death by starvation, especially among children, by impeding access to vital supplies.⁶⁶ Lack of hygiene and overcrowded shelters could cause more deaths than bombings,⁶⁷ having created “the perfect storm for disease”.⁶⁸ A quarter of Gaza’s population could die from preventable health conditions within a year.⁶⁹

⁵⁵ <https://www.unrwa.org/resources/reports/unrwa-situation-report-86-situation-gaza-strip-and-west-bank-including-east-jerusalem>.

⁵⁶ <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2023/11/13/palestine-gaza-west-bank-nakba-displacement-israel-catastrophe/>; <https://www.972mag.com/mass-assassination-factory-israel-calculated-bombing-gaza/>; and <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/dec/01/the-gospel-how-israel-uses-ai-to-select-bombing-targets>.

⁵⁷ <https://www.972mag.com/mass-assassination-factory-israel-calculated-bombing-gaza/>; and Omar Yousef Shehabi and Asaf Lubin, “Algorithms of war: military AI and the war in Gaza”, Articles of War, Lieber Institute, 24 January 2024.

⁵⁸ <https://www.washingtonpost.com/national-security/2023/12/14/israel-unguided-dumb-bombs-gaza/>.

⁵⁹ <https://edition.cnn.com/gaza-israel-big-bombs/index.html>; and

<https://www.nytimes.com/2023/12/21/world/middleeast/israel-gaza-bomb-investigation.html>.

⁶⁰ <https://www.savethechildren.org.au/media/media-releases/gaza-10000-children-killed-in-nearly-100-days-of>.

⁶¹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-72>; and <https://www.972mag.com/mass-assassination-factory-israel-calculated-bombing-gaza/>.

⁶² <https://www.un.org/unispal/document/unlawful-killings-in-gaza-city-ohchr-press-release/>; and

<https://www.pbs.org/newshour/world/israeli-strikes-kill-civilians-sheltering-in-northern-gaza-as-assault-on-hamas-intensifies>.

⁶³ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-22>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-45>; and

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/oct/14/gaza-civilians-afraid-to-leave-home-after-bombing-of-safe-routes>.

⁶⁴ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-145>.

⁶⁵ https://www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/israel-has-killed-over-7000-terrorists-no-deadline-for-gaza-war-national-security-adviser/ (9 December 2023); and

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-63>.

⁶⁶ <https://www.wfp.org/news/preventing-famine-and-deadly-disease-outbreaks-gaza-requires-faster-safer-aid-access-and-more>.

⁶⁷ <https://gaza-projections.org/>.

⁶⁸ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2MJFBaUXvYU&ab_channel=MiddleEastEye (6 December 2023); <https://www.bostonreview.net/articles/the-war-on-hospitals/> (20 December 2023); https://www.emro.who.int/images/stories/Sitrep_-_issue_22.pdf?ua=1 (30 January 2024).

⁶⁹ <https://gaza-projections.org/>.

B. “Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group”

27. This act must involve “a grave and long-term disadvantage to a person’s ability to lead a normal and constructive life”.⁷⁰ The harm caused does not need to be permanent or irremediable,⁷¹ and can be brought about by various causes such as torture, inhuman or degrading treatment,⁷² sexual violence,⁷³ persecution,⁷⁴ deportation⁷⁵ or other conditions “designed to cause their degradation, deprivation of their rights as human being, and to suppress them and cause them inhumane suffering and torture”.⁷⁶

28. Since 7 October, Palestinians have suffered relentless physical and psychological harm. Many have endured violence and deprivation, including severe hunger.⁷⁷

29. Israeli forces have detained thousands of Palestinians, mostly men and boys, often refusing to disclose their whereabouts.⁷⁸ Many of them have been severely mistreated, including through torture, at times leading to death.⁷⁹

30. Lethal Israeli weapons and methods have injured 70,000 Palestinians, many with agonizing injuries, in some cases leading to long-term impairment.⁸⁰

31. By causing critical shortages of medical supplies, including antibiotics and disinfectants, Israeli actions have resulted in hazardous health procedures, such as amputations without anaesthetics, including on children.⁸¹ This has also prevented the administration of life-saving treatment to those with medical conditions, including chronic diseases.⁸²

32. The survivors will carry an indelible trauma, having witnessed so much death, and experienced destruction, homelessness, emotional and material loss, endless humiliation and fear.⁸³ Such experiences include fleeing amidst the chaos of war without telecommunications or electricity; witnessing the systematic destruction of entire neighbourhoods, homes, universities, religious and cultural landmarks;⁸⁴ digging through the rubble, often with bare hands, searching for loved ones;⁸⁵ seeing bodies desecrated;⁸⁶ being rounded up, stripped

⁷⁰ Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-T, para. 513; and Prosecutor v. Krajišnik, Case No. IT-00-39-T ICTY, Judgment, 27 September 2006, para. 862.

⁷¹ Schabas, Genocide in International Law, pp. 182 and 184.

⁷² International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Prosecutor v. Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Judgment, 2 September 1998, para. 503.

⁷³ Ibid., para. 731; Prosecutor v. Stakić, Case No. IT-97-24-T ICTY, Judgment, 31 July 2003, para. 516; and Prosecutor v. Karadžić and Mladić, para. 93.

⁷⁴ Prosecutor v. Akayesu, para. 503; and Attorney-General, Israel v. Eichmann, para. 199.

⁷⁵ Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-T, para. 513.

⁷⁶ Schabas, Genocide in International Law, p. 182.

⁷⁷ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/03/un-experts-condemn-flour-massacre-urge-israel-end-campaign-starvation-gaza>.

⁷⁸ https://www.adalah.org/uploads/uploads/Submission_SR_Torture_final-15.2.24.pdf.

⁷⁹ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/02/israelopt-un-experts-appalled-reported-human-rights-violations-against>; <https://www.nytimes.com/2024/01/23/world/middleeast/israel-gaza-palestinian-detainees.html>; <https://www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2023/12/urgently-investigate-inhumane-treatment-and-enforced-disappearance-of-palestinians-detainees-from-gaza>; see also Prosecutor v. Mladić, vol. I, paras. 634–691 and 835–838 and vol. III, para. 3451; and Prosecutor v. Popović et al., paras. 1097, 1120, 1122 and 1177.

⁸⁰ <https://www.msf.org/no-safe-place-gaza-people-are-crushed-continuous-bombing>; <https://amnesty.ca/human-rights-news/israel-opt-identifying-the-israeli-armys-use-of-white-phosphorus-in-gaza/>; and <https://www.who.int/news-room/fact-sheets/detail/white-phosphorus>.

⁸¹ <https://news.un.org/en/story/2024/01/1145332>; <https://www.emro.who.int/media/news/risk-of-disease-spread-soars-in-gaza-as-health-facilities-water-and-sanitation-systems-disrupted.html>; and <https://www.savethechildren.net/news/gaza-more-10-children-day-lose-limb-three-months-brutal-conflict>.

⁸² <https://news.un.org/en/story/2023/12/1145017>.

⁸³ Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-T, para. 596.

⁸⁴ <https://press.un.org/en/2024/sc15564.doc.htm>.

⁸⁵ <https://www.aljazeera.com/gallery/2023/11/10/this-israel-war-has-no-mercy-gaza-civil-rescuers-say>.

⁸⁶ <https://edition.cnn.com/2023/12/23/middleeast/kamal-adwan-hospital-gaza-israel-abuse-allegations-intl-cmd/index.html>.

naked, blindfolded and subjected to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;⁸⁷ and, ultimately, being starved, adults and children alike.⁸⁸

33. The savagery of the latest Israeli assault is best illustrated by the torment inflicted upon children of all ages,⁸⁹ who have been killed or rescued from under the rubble, maimed or orphaned,⁹⁰ and many left without surviving family.⁹¹ Considering the significance of children to the future development of a society, inflicting serious bodily or mental harm to them can reasonably be interpreted as a means to destroy the group in whole or in part.⁹²

C. “Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part”

34. This act involves conduct that does not directly kill members of the group, but is capable of leading, through various means, to its physical destruction.⁹³ This may include starving, dehydrating, forcibly displacing the protected group, destroying objects indispensable for their survival, reducing essential medical services to below the minimum requirement⁹⁴ or depriving them of housing, clothes, education, employment and access to hygiene.⁹⁵

35. By mid-December, Israeli bombs and shells had destroyed or severely damaged most life-sustaining infrastructure, including 77 per cent of health-care facilities, 68 per cent of the telecommunications infrastructure, large numbers of municipal services (72), commercial and industrial sites (76), almost half of all roads,⁹⁶ over 60 per cent of Gaza’s 439,000 homes,⁹⁷ 68 per cent of residential buildings,⁹⁸ all universities and 60 per cent of other educational facilities, including 13 libraries.⁹⁹ Israel has also destroyed at least 195 heritage sites, 208 mosques, 3 churches and the Central Archives of Gaza, containing 150 years of history.¹⁰⁰ By the end of January, over one million civilians had been forcibly displaced southward, their cities devastated.¹⁰¹

36. Sixteen years of blockade had already transformed Gaza into an isolated, densely populated, depleted and nearly “uninhabitable” enclave, when, on 9 October 2023, the Israeli Defense Minister Yoav Gallant, announced a “complete siege (...) no electricity, no food, no water, no fuel”.¹⁰² The Israeli Minister for Foreign Affairs, Israel Katz, then Minister of Energy, went further, stating that no “electrical switch will be turned on, no water hydrant

⁸⁷ <https://www.alhaq.org/advocacy/22337.html>; and <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/un-human-rights-office-opt-disturbing-reports-north-gaza-mass-detentions-ill-treatment-and-enforced-disappearances-possibly-thousands-palestinians>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-73>; and <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-briefing-notes/2024/01/gaza-report-ground>.

⁸⁸ <https://edition.cnn.com/2024/01/30/middleeast/famine-looms-in-gaza-israel-war-intl/index.html>.

⁸⁹ <https://www.savethechildren.net/news/children-s-mental-health-gaza-pushed-beyond-breaking-point-after-nearly-month-siege-and>.

⁹⁰ By January there were 17,000 unaccompanied children, see <https://www.unicef.org/sop/reports/unicef-state-palestine-escalation-humanitarian-situation-report-no17>.

⁹¹ <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2024/02/29/gaza-children-wcnf-orphans/>.

⁹² See <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/178/178-20231115-wri-01-00-en.pdf>, para. 39.

⁹³ Genocide Convention, art. II (c); Rome Statute, art. 6; and Prosecutor v. Akayesu, paras. 505–506.

⁹⁴ Prosecutor v. Akayesu, paras. 505 and 506; Prosecutor v. Rutaganda, ICTR-96-3-T, Judgment (6 December 1999), para. 52.

⁹⁵ Prosecutor v. Stakić, para. 517.

⁹⁶ <https://www.wsj.com/world/middle-east/gaza-destruction-bombing-israel-aa528542>.

⁹⁷ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-70>.

⁹⁸ <https://www.conflict-damage.org/>; <https://unosat.org/products/3793>.

⁹⁹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-145>; and <https://librarianswithpalestine.org/wp-content/uploads/2024/02/LAP-Gaza-Report-2024.pdf>.

¹⁰⁰ <https://www.ica.org/statement-of-the-international-council-on-archives-on-the-destruction-of-the-central-archives-of-the-municipality-of-gaza/>; <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2024/1/14/a-cultural-genocide-which-of-gazas-heritage-sites-have-been-destroyed>.

¹⁰¹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-107>.

¹⁰² <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ZbPdR3E4hCk> (9 October 2023).

will be opened and no fuel truck will enter”.¹⁰³ Deliberately denying essential supplies to an already besieged population was destined to cause deaths “more silent than those caused by bombs”.¹⁰⁴

37. The total siege and near-constant carpet-bombing, along with draconian evacuation orders and ever-shifting “safe zones”, have created an unparalleled humanitarian catastrophe. Over 1.7 million Palestinian have been displaced and forced into overcrowded United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) shelters and cramped quarters in southern Gaza,¹⁰⁵ systematically targeted by the Israeli army, and later into makeshift shelters.¹⁰⁶

38. The Israeli assault has decimated Gaza’s already fragile health-care system.¹⁰⁷ Hospitals, which also shelter displaced Palestinians, have been overwhelmed.¹⁰⁸ By deliberately targeting hospitals,¹⁰⁹ air and ground attacks have gradually turned them into death zones.¹¹⁰ Israeli soldiers have occupied hospitals,¹¹¹ encircling them with tanks and snipers (human or drone).¹¹² By 12 February, only 11 out of 36 hospitals and 17 per cent of primary health-care centres were functioning, and then only partially.¹¹³ Israeli soldiers have arrested, mistreated and tortured medical staff, patients and displaced people¹¹⁴ and have forced them, including even premature babies, out of hospitals, in some cases causing the death of babies.¹¹⁵ The doctors who remained have worked night and day, making “impossible decisions” on which patients to treat based on chance of survival.¹¹⁶

¹⁰³ <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/oct/12/no-power-water-or-fuel-to-gaza-until-hostages-freed-says-israeli-minister> (12 October 2023).

¹⁰⁴ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/11/israel-must-stop-using-water-weapon-war-un-expert>.

¹⁰⁵ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-108>.

¹⁰⁶ <https://www.unocha.org/publications/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-108>.

¹⁰⁷ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/12/gaza-un-expert-condemns-unrelenting-war-health-system-amid-airstrikes>; <https://edition.cnn.com/interactive/2024/01/middleeast/gaza-hospitals-destruction-investigation-intl-cmd>.

¹⁰⁸ <https://forensic-architecture.org/investigation/destruction-of-medical-infrastructure-in-gaza>;
<https://x.com/UNOCHA/status/1719305737782878629?s=20>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-17>; and

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-24>.

¹⁰⁹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-28>;

<https://www.hrw.org/news/2023/11/07/gaza-israeli-ambulance-strike-apparently-unlawful>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-35>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-45>; and

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-119>.

¹¹⁰ <https://www.who.int/news/item/18-11-2023-who-leads-very-high-risk-joint-humanitarian-mission-to-al-shifa-hospital-in-gaza>.

¹¹¹ <https://forensic-architecture.org/investigation/destruction-of-medical-infrastructure-in-gaza>;

<https://www.nytimes.com/2023/11/14/us/politics/gaza-hospitals-cancer-israel.html>;

<https://shifa.forensic-architecture.org/>; <https://indonesian.alhaq.org/>; and

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-121>.

¹¹² <https://www.hrw.org/news/2023/11/14/gaza-unlawful-israeli-hospital-strikes-worsen-health-crisis>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-36>;

https://www.emro.who.int/images/stories/palestine/WHO_Sitrep_13.pdf?ua=1;

<https://indonesian.alhaq.org/>; <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-115>; and <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-87>.

¹¹³ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-128>.

¹¹⁴ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-73>;

<https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-121>;

<https://x.com/HCWWatch/status/1750365056728965214?s=20>;

<https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/gaza-doctor-describes-ordeal-detention-2024-02-04/>; and

<https://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-68513408>.

¹¹⁵ <https://news.un.org/en/story/2023/11/1143497>; <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-34>; and <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2023/12/03/gaza-premature-babies-dead-nasr/>.

¹¹⁶ Mohammed Qandil, “Gaza: providing emergency care under fire”, Emergency Medicine Journal (9 February 2024).

39. The ground invasion and aerial bombardments have destroyed agricultural land,¹¹⁷ farms, crops, animals and fishing assets,¹¹⁸ gravely undermining people's livelihoods, the environment and agriculture.

40. From 8 to 21 October, Israel impeded the entry of all aid into Gaza, subsequently allowing woefully inadequate amounts,¹¹⁹ largely restricted to the south.¹²⁰ No fuel supplies were delivered until 18 November.¹²¹ In January, Israeli-led attacks against UNRWA, the main agency providing a lifeline of support in Gaza, resulted in several States suspending payments to UNRWA, further aggravating the humanitarian situation.¹²²

41. By 7 December, over 90 per cent of Gaza residents were suffering from severe food insecurity.¹²³ By February 2024, Palestinians trapped in northern Gaza resorted to animal feed and grass for sustenance,¹²⁴ with deaths by starvation on the rise.¹²⁵ Between mid-January and the end of February, the United Nations recorded numerous attacks against Palestinians seeking aid.¹²⁶

42. The supply of water was also severely affected.¹²⁷ Fuel scarcity hampered water sanitation, driving people to use water contaminated by sewage, solid waste and seawater.¹²⁸

43. The impact of these conditions on children is well-known:¹²⁹ in Gaza the risk of starvation,¹³⁰ with thousands suffering from wasting,¹³¹ is already a tangible horrific reality.

44. These human-made conditions have put at risk an estimated 50,000 pregnant Palestinian women and 20,000 newborn babies;¹³² miscarriages have increased by up to 300 per cent.¹³³

45. The relentless Israeli targeting of all means of basic survival has compromised the ability of Palestinians in Gaza to live on that land.¹³⁴ This engineered collapse of ¹¹⁷ <https://unosat.org/products/3792>; <https://www.hrw.org/news/2023/12/18/israel-starvation-used-weapon-war-gaza>.

¹¹⁸ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-115>; and <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-125>.

¹¹⁹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-15>.

¹²⁰ <https://news.un.org/en/story/2024/01/1145557>; <https://www.newyorker.com/news/q-and-a/how-israels-inspection-process-is-obstructing-aid-delivery>; and <https://edition.cnn.com/2024/03/01/middleeast/gaza-aid-israel-restrictions-investigation-intl-cmd/index.html>.

¹²¹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-43>.

¹²² <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/02/states-must-reinstate-and-strengthen-support-unrwa-amid-unfolding-genocide>.

¹²³ https://www.ipcinfo.org/fileadmin/user_upload/ipcinfo/docs/IPC_Gaza_Acute_Food_Insecurity_Nov2023_Feb2024.pdf.

¹²⁴ <https://edition.cnn.com/2024/01/30/middleeast/famine-looms-in-gaza-israel-war-intl/index.html>.

¹²⁵ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-129>; and <https://mondoweiss.net/2024/03/un-expert-israel-is-engineering-famine-in-gaza/>.

¹²⁶ <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/un-human-rights-office-opt-un-human-rights-office-strongly-deplores-killing-least-112-palestinians-during-food-aid-distribution-gaza-city-enar>.

¹²⁷ https://reliefweb.int/attachments/a4b1eefa-3717-4407-8101-bba6df81f488/Health_WASH_-_Advocacy_note_on_public_health_catastrophe_-_Final.pdf.

¹²⁸ Ibid.

¹²⁹ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/178/178-20231115-wri-01-00-en.pdf>, paras. 40 and 42.

¹³⁰ <https://www.unicef.org/mena/press-releases/intensifying-conflict-malnutrition-and-disease-gaza-strip-creates-deadly-cycle>; <https://www.savethechildren.net/news/gaza-time-running-out-reports-emerging-children-dying-due-lack-food-save-children>; and <https://twitter.com/AJEnglish/status/1761601918344790340>.

¹³¹ <https://www.wfp.org/news/preventing-famine-and-deadly-disease-outbreaks-gaza-requires-faster-safer-aid-access-and-more>.

¹³² <https://www.who.int/news/item/03-11-2023-women-and-newborns-bearing-the-brunt-of-the-conflict-in-gaza-un-agencies-warn>; <https://www.hrw.org/news/2023/12/01/birth-and-death-intertwined-gaza-strip>; <https://news.un.org/en/story/2024/01/1145677>.

¹³³ <https://twitter.com/CARE/status/1748007265754312767>.

¹³⁴ See, more generally, The Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, paras. 505 and 506.

life-sustaining infrastructure corresponds to the stated intentions to make Gaza “permanently impossible to live in” where “no human being can exist”.¹³⁵

V. Genocidal intent

46. The definition of genocide in the Genocide Convention requires the commission of any of the listed acts with a specific intent. It must be established that the perpetrator, by committing one or more of the prohibited acts, seeks to achieve the total or partial destruction of a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.¹³⁶ This intent must be established either through direct or indirect evidence.¹³⁷

47. As genocide is an organized crime, the commission of which invariably implies a collective dimension,¹³⁸ evidence of a State plan, including through statements and declarations by State officials, is usually decisive in establishing direct intent.¹³⁹

48. Proof of indirect intent can be inferred from facts or circumstances, including the overall context of the acts or omissions, the scale of atrocities, systematic targeting of victims based on their affiliation with a particular group, perpetration of other “culpable acts” directed against the group or the repetition of destructive and discriminatory acts.¹⁴⁰ The International Criminal Court requires that such facts or circumstances take “place in the context of a manifest pattern of similar conduct directed against the group or ... conduct that could itself effect such destruction”.¹⁴¹ International tribunals have also established that indirect intent can consist of a manifest pattern of similar conduct over time.¹⁴² The systematicity with which genocidal acts are committed implies a degree of “preconceived plan or policy”.¹⁴³

49. The nature and scale of the atrocities, if demonstrably capable of achieving the genocidal outcome, are strong evidence of intent.¹⁴⁴ The words of State authorities, including dehumanizing language, combined with acts, are considered to comprise a circumstantial basis from which intent can be inferred.¹⁴⁵ Dehumanization can be understood as foundational to the process of genocide.¹⁴⁶ Evidence of context may help determine intent, and must be considered along with actual conduct: intent should be evident above all from

¹³⁵ <https://www.ynet.co.il/yedioth/article/yokra13625377>, 10 October 2023 (in Hebrew); and <https://balfourproject.org/the-amas-attack-and-israels-war-on-gaza-a-place-where-no-human-being-can-exist/>, 24 November 2023.

¹³⁶ Prosecutor v. Jelisić, Case No. IT-95-10-A ICTY, Appeal Judgment, 5 July 2001, para. 46.

¹³⁷ Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-A, para. 34; Prosecutor v. Brđanin, Case No. IT-99-36-T, Judgment of 1 September 2004, paras. 704–706.

¹³⁸ Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-T, para. 549; Schabas, Genocide in International Law, pp. 242–243 and 250–255.

¹³⁹ Prosecutor v. Jelisić, para. 48; Prosecutor v. Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, Judgment, 21 May 1999, paras. 94 and 276; Schabas, Genocide in International Law, pp. 245–250 and 265.

¹⁴⁰ Prosecutor v. Jelisić, para. 47; Prosecutor v. Krstić, Case No. IT-98-33-A, paras. 27, 34 and 35; Prosecutor v. Popović et al., para. 1178; and <https://ccrjustice.org/israel-s-unfolding-crime-genocide-palestinian-people-us-failure-prevent-and-complicity-genocide>.

¹⁴¹ International Criminal Court, Elements of Crimes (2013), pp. 6–8.

¹⁴² Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, para. 373; Prosecutor v. Kayishema and Ruzindana, para. 93.

¹⁴³ Prosecutor v. Akayesu, paras. 118, 478, 579 and 580; Schabas, Genocide in International Law, p. 248.

¹⁴⁴ Prosecutor v. Muhimana, ICTR-95-1B-T, Judgment, 28 April 2005, para. 498; Prosecutor v. Gacumbitsi, ICTR-2001-64-T, Judgment, 17 June 2004, para. 253; Prosecutor v. Kayishema and Ruzindana, para. 93; Prosecutor v. Seromba, ICTR-01-66-A, Appeal Judgment, 12 March 2008, para. 176.

¹⁴⁵ A/HRC/39/64, para. 85, refers to “broader oppressive context and hate rhetoric; specific utterances of commanders and direct perpetrators; exclusionary policies, including to alter the demographic composition ... and the extreme scale and brutality of the violence committed”; see also Prosecutor v. Muhimana, para. 496.

¹⁴⁶ Penny Green and Tony Ward, State Crime: Governments, Violence and Corruption (London: Pluto Press, 2004); Raz Segal, “A Textbook Case of Genocide”, Jewish Currents (13 October 2023).

“words and deeds” and “patterns of purposeful action”¹⁴⁷ such that no other inference can be reasonably drawn.¹⁴⁸

50. In the latest Gaza assault, direct evidence of genocidal intent is uniquely present. Vitriolic genocidal rhetoric has painted the whole population as the enemy to be eliminated and forcibly displaced.¹⁴⁹ High-ranking Israeli officials with command authority have issued harrowing public statements evincing genocidal intent, including the following:

(a) President Isaac Herzog stated that “an entire nation out there ... is responsible” for the 7 October attack and that Israel would “break their backbone”;¹⁵⁰

(b) Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu referred to Palestinians as “Amalek”¹⁵¹ and “monsters”.¹⁵² The Amalek reference is to a biblical passage in which God commands Saul, “Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass”;¹⁵³

(c) Minister of Defense, Yoav Gallant, referred to Palestinians as “human animals”,¹⁵⁴ and announced a “full offense” on Gaza, having “released all the restraints”, and that “Gaza will never return to what it was”;¹⁵⁵

(d) Israel Forces Spokesperson Daniel Hagari stated that focus should be to “maximize damage”, demonstrating a strategy of disproportionate and indiscriminate violence;¹⁵⁶

(e) Minister of Agriculture Avi Dichter referred to Israeli action as “the Gaza Nakba”;¹⁵⁷

(f) Minister of Heritage Amihai Eliyahu called for striking Gaza with “nuclear bombs”;¹⁵⁸

(g) Member of the Knesset for the Likud party, Revital Gottlieb, wrote on her social media post: “Bring down buildings!! Bomb without distinction!!...Flatten Gaza. Without mercy! This time, there is no room for mercy!”¹⁵⁹

¹⁴⁷ Prosecutor v. Kayishema and Ruzindana, para. 93; and Prosecutor v. Bagilishima, ICTR-95-1A-T, Trial Judgment, 7 June 2001, para. 63.

¹⁴⁸ Croatia v. Serbia, para. 148; Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, para. 373.

¹⁴⁹ <https://law4palestine.org/law-for-palestine-releases-database-with-500-instances-of-israeli-incitement-to-genocide-continuously-updated/>.

¹⁵⁰ <https://www.itv.com/news/2023-10-13/israeli-president-says-gazans-could-have-risen-up-to-fight-amas> (13 October 2023).

¹⁵¹ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IIPkoDk6isc> (28 October 2023).

¹⁵² <https://www.gov.il/en/departments/news/christmas-message-from-pm-netanyahu-24-dec-2023> (24 December 2023).

¹⁵³ Holy Bible (Samuel 15:3).

¹⁵⁴ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ZbPdR3E4hCk> (9 October 2023).

¹⁵⁵ https://www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/gallant-israel-moving-to-full-offense-gaza-will-never-return-to-what-it-was/ (10 October 2023).

¹⁵⁶ <https://www.idf.il/en/mini-sites/hamas-israel-war-24/briefings-by-idf-spokesperson-rear-admiral-daniel-hagari/october-press-briefings/press-briefing-by-idf-spokesperson-rear-admiral-daniel-hagari-october-10th-morning/> (10 October 2023).

¹⁵⁷ <https://twitter.com/hahauenstein/status/1723441134221869453> (11 November 2023).

¹⁵⁸ https://www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/far-right-minister-nuking-gaza-is-an-option-population-should-go-to-ireland-or-deserts/ (5 November 2023).

¹⁵⁹ <https://twitter.com/YehudaShaul/status/1714301964886917631> (17 October 2023).

51. Such calls for annihilatory violence, directed at Israeli troops on duty,¹⁶⁰ constitute strong evidence of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.¹⁶¹ Decades of discourse dehumanizing Palestinians have prepared the groundwork for such incitements.¹⁶²

52. Since 7 October, the proliferation of statements inciting genocide have also involved several sectors of Israeli society, religious leaders,¹⁶³ journalists,¹⁶⁴ artists¹⁶⁵ and various professionals, including doctors¹⁶⁶ and political commentators.¹⁶⁷

53. There is cogent evidence that these statements have been internalized and acted upon by troops on the ground.¹⁶⁸ Israeli soldiers have, including on social media channels run by the Israeli military,¹⁶⁹ referred to Palestinians as “terrorists”, “roaches” and “rats”,¹⁷⁰ and have repeated terms articulated by political leaders, chanting that “there are no ‘uninvolved civilians’”,¹⁷¹ while also calling for the building of settlements in Gaza,¹⁷² “occupy[ing] Gaza ... wip[ing] off the seed of Amalek”,¹⁷³ boasting about killing “families, mothers and

¹⁶⁰ <https://law4palestine.org/law-for-palestine-releases-database-with-500-instances-of-israeli-incitement-to-genocide-continuously-updated/>.

¹⁶¹ Prosecutor v. Muvunyi, ICTR-2000-55A-T, Judgment, 12 September 2006, paras. 502–505; Prosecutor v. Kajelijeli, ICTR-98-44A-T, Judgment, 1 December 2003, paras. 851 and 852; and <https://www.hrw.org/reports/ictr0110webwcover.pdf> 2010, pp. 64–66 and 69–70.

¹⁶² <https://ccrjustice.org/genocide-palestinian-people-international-law-and-human-rights-perspective>; Nurit Peled-Elhanan, Palestine in Israeli School Books: Ideology and Propaganda in Education (2012), p.162; see also <http://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2023/oct/16/the-language-being-used-to-describe-palestinians-is-genocidal>.

¹⁶³ <https://www.middleeasteye.net/news/israel-palestine-war-dozens-israeli-rabbis-endorse-bombing-hospitals-enemies> (1 November 2023); and <https://twitter.com/RavOuryCherki/status/1719713406050066491> (in Hebrew and English) (1 November 2023).

¹⁶⁴ <https://x.com/MiddleEastEye/status/1732639958664356223?s=20> (7 December 2023); <https://x.com/jeremyscahill/status/1737489631199850519?s=20> (20 December 2023); <https://x.com/YehudaShaul/status/1714301988358283769?s=20> (17 October 2023); and <https://twitter.com/dverthaim/status/1710684531114602891> (7 October 2023).

¹⁶⁵ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2bnhWYJh8-I> (20 November 2023); https://twitter.com/gilmishali/status/1710653974397780392?s=46&t=JaT3Sau_ (7 October 2023); and <https://twitter.com/YehudaShaul/status/1739641280462815611> (26 December 2023).

¹⁶⁶ <https://www.phr.org.il/en/physicians-call-eng/> (6 November 2023).

¹⁶⁷ <https://www.instagram.com/middleeasteye/reel/C1elfQ7Nqeh/> (30 December 2023); and <https://x.com/PalestineChron/status/1737491845679128918?s=20> (20 December 2023).

¹⁶⁸ Prosecutor v. Mladić, vol. III, para. 3435; International Court of Justice, South Africa v. Israel, paras. 20–29.

¹⁶⁹ <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/security-aviation/2024-02-04/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-its-admits-staff-was-behind-graphic-gaza-telegram-channel/0000018d-70b4-dd6e-a98d-f4b6a9c00000> (4 February 2024).

¹⁷⁰ Ibid.; https://www.nytimes.com/2024/02/06/world/middleeast/israel-idf-soldiers-war-social-media-video.html?smid=nytcore-ios-share&referringSource=articleShare&fbclid=IwAR1KvmIOixGQNbtAkJRPgU2Y7XyctR5IMWjOxQc6T6la5ODfYWyUT7IBFsA_aem_Aa7puefGHHUwoZuhoXZnJDZJzbGn8LuFsBZh4hLnUDtJN0lcdK2sacwGZKrJ7dGj0HI;%20and%20https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/security-aviation/2024-02-04/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-its-admits-staff-was-behind-graphic-gaza-telegram-channel/0000018d-70b4-dd6e-a98d-f4b6a9c00000, (6 November 2023).

¹⁷¹ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qb_oBSAZjDs (8 December 2023).

¹⁷² https://www.nytimes.com/2024/02/06/world/middleeast/israel-idf-soldiers-war-social-media-video.html?smid=nytcore-ios-share&referringSource=articleShare&fbclid=IwAR1KvmIO%20%20ixGQNbtAkJRPgU2Y7XyctR5IMWjOxQc6T6la5ODfYWyUT7IBFsA_aem_Aa7puefGHHUwoZuhoXZnJDZJzbGn8LuFsBZh4hLnUDtJN0lcdK2sacwGZKrJ7dGj0HI;%20and%20https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/security-aviation/2024-02-04/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-its-admits-staff-was-behind-graphic-gaza-telegram-channel/0000018d-70b4-dd6e-a98d-f4b6a9c00000.

¹⁷³ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qb_oBSAZjDs (8 December 2023).

children”,¹⁷⁴ humiliating detained Palestinians,¹⁷⁵ detonating dozens of homes,¹⁷⁶ destroying entire residential neighbourhoods¹⁷⁷ and desecrating cemeteries and places of worship.¹⁷⁸

54. The Prime Minister and President of Israel have stated that Israel was fighting, on behalf of “all civilized States and ... peoples”,¹⁷⁹ “a barbarism that has no place in the modern world”,¹⁸⁰ and that they “will uproot evil and it will be good for the entire region and the world”.¹⁸¹ This racist rhetoric echoes that of other colonial powers and tries to construe Israeli genocidal violence as legitimate in the light of Palestinians’ alleged “barbarian” and “premodern” character.¹⁸²

VI. Humanitarian camouflage: distorting the laws of war to conceal genocidal intent

55. A core feature of Israeli conduct since 7 October has been the intensification of its de-civilianization of Palestinians, a protected group under the Genocide Convention. Israel has used international humanitarian law terminology to justify its systematic use of lethal violence against Palestinian civilians as a group and the extensive destruction of life-sustaining infrastructures. Israel has done this by deploying international humanitarian law concepts, such as human shields, collateral damage, safe zones, evacuations and medical protection, in such a permissive manner as to gut those concepts of their normative content, subverting their protective purpose and ultimately eroding the distinction between civilians and combatants in Israeli actions in Gaza.¹⁸³

56. Official statements¹⁸⁴ have translated into military conduct that repudiates the very notion of civilian protection. Israel has thus radically altered the balance struck in international humanitarian law between civilian protection and military necessity, as well as the customary rules of distinction, proportionality and precaution. This has obscured one cardinal tenet of international humanitarian law: indiscriminate attacks, which do not distinguish military targets from protected persons and objects, cannot be proportionate and are always unlawful.¹⁸⁵

¹⁷⁴ <https://twitter.com/1717Bazz/status/1712176168823107986> (11 October 2023);

<https://twitter.com/MiddleEastEye/status/1712918166437806294> (13 October 2023);

<https://www.middleeastmonitor.com/20231228-israeli-soldier-says-he-possibly-killed-a-12-year-old-girl/> (28 December 2023).

¹⁷⁵ <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2023-11-09/ty-article-magazine/.premium/growing-number-of-idf-soldiers-are-documenting-and-posting-their-own-abuse-of-palestinians/0000018b-ae60-dea2-a9bf-fefe96070000> (9 November 2023).

¹⁷⁶ <https://twitter.com/QudsNen/status/1737593767752860117> (20 December 2023).

¹⁷⁷ https://www.nytimes.com/2024/02/06/world/middleeast/israel-idf-soldiers-war-social-media-video.html?smid=nytcore-ios-share&referringSource=articleShare&fbclid=IwAR1KvmIO%20%20ixGQNbtAkJRPgU2Y7XyctR5lMWjOxQc6T6la5ODfYWyUT7lBFsA_aem_Aa7puefGHHUwoZuhoXZnJDZJzbGn8LuFsBZh4hLnUDtJN0lcdK2sacwGZKrJ7dGj0HI;%20and%20https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/security-aviation/2024-02-04/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-its-admits-staff-was-behind-graphic-gaza-telegram-channel/0000018d-70b4-dd6e-a98d-f4b6a9c00000 (6 February 2024).

¹⁷⁸ Ibid.

¹⁷⁹ <https://www.gov.il/en/departments/news/pm-netanyahu-meets-with-romanian-pm-marcel-ciolacu-17-oct-2023> (17 October 2023).

¹⁸⁰ <https://www.nytimes.com/2023/11/03/opinion/isaac-herzog-israel-amas-gaza.html?partner=slack&smid=sl-share> (3 November 2023).

¹⁸¹ https://twitter.com/Isaac_Herzog/status/1713661051986678189?s=20 (15 October 2023).

¹⁸² Antony Anghie, Imperialism, Sovereignty and the Making of International Law (2004), pp. 55–57 and 75.

¹⁸³ Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, arts. 48, 51, 52 and 57; Customary International Humanitarian Law Database, rules 1, 7, 14–15.

¹⁸⁴ <https://law4palestine.org/law-for-palestine-releases-database-with-500-instances-of-israeli-incitement-to-genocide-continuously-updated/>.

¹⁸⁵ Customary International Humanitarian Law Database, rule 12; Luigi Daniele, “A lethal misconception, in Gaza and beyond: disguising indiscriminate attacks as potentially proportionate and

62. Nevertheless, Israeli authorities have arbitrarily linked churches,²⁰⁷ mosques,²⁰⁸ schools,²⁰⁹ United Nations facilities,²¹⁰ universities,²¹¹ hospitals and ambulances²¹² with Hamas to reinforce the perception of a population characterized as broadly “complicit” and therefore killable. Significant numbers of Palestinian civilians are defined as human shields simply by being in “proximity to” potential Israeli targets.²¹³ Israel has thus transformed Gaza into a “world without civilians” in which “everything from taking shelter in hospitals to fleeing for safety is declared a form of human shielding”.²¹⁴ The accusation of using human shields has thus become a pretext used to justify the killing of civilians under a cloak of purported legality, whose pervasiveness only admits of genocidal intent.

B. Turning Gaza as a whole into a “military objective”

63. International law stipulates that attacks must be “strictly limited” to objects, which, “by their nature, location, purpose or use make an effective contribution to military action”, whose “total or partial destruction, capture or neutralization” in the circumstances ruling at the time “must offer a definite military advantage”.²¹⁵

64. Israel has misused this rule to “militarize” civilian objects and whatever surrounds them, thus justifying their indiscriminate destruction. According to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, “many ostensibly civilian objects may become legitimate targets”,²¹⁶ losing their protection under international humanitarian law or may become “collateral” damage as a result of Hamas’s choice. The civilian population and the infrastructure of Gaza are presented as obstructions positioned among, in front of and above targets.²¹⁷ Instead of abiding by circumstantial status determinations in line with international humanitarian law for each attack undertaken, as is required, Israel has characterized the whole territory as a military objective.

65. Protected civilian objects can lose their immunity from attacks if and for as long as they are used by combatants in hostilities. However, Israel considers any object that has allegedly been or might be used militarily as a legitimate target, so that entire neighbourhoods can be razed or demolished under fictions of legality.²¹⁸ In the logic used by Israel, civilian objects, such as houses and apartments, become military objectives by proximity, as if the status of “lawful” target is spread through a vicinity by “viral contagion”. For example, residential tower blocks, each comprising dozens of floors and hundreds of (functionally

²⁰⁷ <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2023/10/20/war-crime-israel-bombs-gaza-church-sheltering-displaced-people> - ~:text=War%20on%20Gaza-.Israel%20bombs%20Greek%20Orthodox%20Gaza%20church%20sheltering%20displaced%20people,%27large%20number%27%20of%20people.

²⁰⁸ <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1727059761466650632?s=20>.

²⁰⁹ <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1725683576522334603?s=20>.

²¹⁰ <https://www.cbsnews.com/news/israel-photos-hamas-gaza-weapons-un-facilities-including-schools/>, (8 November 2023); <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1724002788810600946?s=20>.

²¹¹ <https://www.timeshighereducation.com/news/academia-gaza-has-been-destroyed-israeli-educide>.

²¹² <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1725455901824323697?s=20>.

²¹³ Gordon and Perugini, pp.159–169; <https://blogs.icrc.org/law-and-policy/2021/11/18/proximate-human-shields/>.

²¹⁴ Elyse Semerdjian, “A world without civilians”, Journal of Genocide Research, 24 January 2024.

²¹⁵ Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, art. 52 (2); and Customary International Humanitarian Law Database, rule 8.

²¹⁶ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Israel-Hamas_Conflict_2023_FAQs_\(Israel_MFA,_6.12.23\).pdf.pdf): FAQs, pp. 2 and 9.

²¹⁷ Ibid., p. 9.

²¹⁸ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Israel-Hamas_Conflict_2023_FAQs_\(Israel_MFA,_6.12.23\).pdf.pdf): FAQs p.14; <https://www.maariv.co.il/breaking-news/Article-1044157> admitted neighbourhoods attacked “on a large scale and not in a surgical manner” (in Hebrew); and <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3-APSXZy9UI>.

separate and autonomously useable) flats, purportedly become military objectives in their entirety if a single flat or room had allegedly been used by an armed group.²¹⁹

66. Paradigmatic examples are referred to as “power targets”,²²⁰ encompassing all civilian objects, including residential buildings, under the pretext that “ Hamas is everywhere in Gaza”.²²¹ Entire multistorey buildings have been levelled while full of civilians, knowingly killing hundreds in single strikes.²²² In the attack on the Al-Taj tower in Gaza City, bombed on 25 October, 101 people were killed, including 44 children and 37 women, and hundreds were injured.²²³

67. Israel has thus de facto abolished the distinction between civilian objects and military objectives. In the first three weeks of the offensive, entire residential areas across northern Gaza were erased.²²⁴ Meanwhile, neighbourhoods in “safe areas” in the south were already being bombarded.²²⁵ By November, the devastation of cities in northern Gaza far exceeded that of Dresden in 1945.²²⁶

68. Rationalizing patterns of attacks on civilian objects, knowingly killing civilians en masse, has become a military strategy premised upon probable war crimes presented as abiding with international humanitarian law. This strategy reasonably and solely infers a genocidal policy.

C. Indiscriminate killing as “collateral damage”

69. Israel has also sought to provide legal cover for indiscriminate attacks by misusing the notion of “collateral damage”,²²⁷ expanding, without limit, what can be considered “incidental civilian harm”. Examples of indiscriminate attacks include attacks which, by any methods or means, strike multiple lawful targets at once in areas with high concentrations of civilians or civilian objects. To justify killing members of the protected group, Israel has defended such actions as causing only incidental harm to civilians, proportionate to concrete and direct military advantages anticipated.²²⁸

70. By invoking the concept of “proportionate collateral damage” to knowingly shell large numbers of members of the protected group, Israel asserts that when attacks result in more collateral damage than expected, it does not necessarily indicate a violation, since “compliance is conduct-oriented, not result-oriented”.²²⁹

71. However, in all attacks launched against residential towers²³⁰ without warnings, extensive civilian harm has been anticipated as the main outcome. The Al-Taj building was full of families at the time of the 25 October strike, and it must have been anticipated that it was certain to kill or injure all the civilians living there.²³¹ The fact that so many people were killed was entirely predictable – and hence at least indirectly intended – as is evident from

²¹⁹ Declared previously, for example, at: <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1393553534218604552?s=20>; and <https://www.justsecurity.org/76657/the-idfs-unlawful-attack-on-al-jalaa-tower/>.

²²⁰ <https://www.israeldefense.co.il/node/37949>.

²²¹ <https://www.972mag.com/mass-assassination-factory-israel-calculated-bombing-gaza/>.

²²² Ibid.

²²³ <https://airwars.org/civilian-casualties/ispt0587-october-25-2023/>.

²²⁴ <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/oct/27/gaza-before-and-after-satellite-images-show-destruction-after-israeli-airstrikes>.

²²⁵ <https://www.nytimes.com/2023/12/21/world/middleeast/israel-gaza-bomb-investigation.html>.

²²⁶ <https://www.ft.com/content/7b407c2e-8149-4d83-be01-72dcae8aee7b>.

²²⁷ See Daniele, “A lethal misconception”.

²²⁸ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Israel-Hamas_Conflict_2023_-_FAQs_\(Israel_MFA,_6.12.23\).pdf.pdf): FAQs, pp. 4 and 11–13.

²²⁹ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Hamas-Israel_Conflict_2023_-_Some_Factual_and_Legal_Aspects_-_Israel_Ministry_of_Foreign_Affairs_\(2_NOV_2023\).pdf.pdf): Key Legal Aspects, (2 November 2023), p. 10.

²³⁰ <https://ig.ft.com/gaza-damage/>.

²³¹ <https://airwars.org/civilian-casualties/ispt0587-october-25-2023/>.

the images published by the Israeli military itself.²³² The attack on the Jabalia refugee camp on 31 October killed at least 126 civilians, including 69 children, and injured a further 280.²³³ Israeli military personnel affirmed that the target was one Hamas commander in an underground base.²³⁴

72. In order for a proportionality assessment to be lawful, the principle of distinction must first be respected, otherwise the civilian harm anticipated from an attack ceases to be an incidental, unintended consequence of the attack itself.²³⁵ While both indiscriminate and disproportionate attacks appear to have been committed systematically and repeatedly throughout the latest Israeli campaign,²³⁶ the fact that both types of unlawful attacks have been consistently deemed by Israel as lawful suggests that it operates under a policy that condones mass killing.

73. Under international humanitarian law, the concrete and direct military advantage expected from a single attack must be weighed against the foreseeable incidental harm to civilians and civilian objects. However, in its strained proportionality assessments, the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs states that “military advantage [...] may refer to the military advantage anticipated” not from a specific military action but “from an operation as a whole”,²³⁷ alluding to the overall purpose of the war.²³⁸

74. Israeli proportionality assessments have flouted legal requirements by defining military advantage, in each attack, in relation to the destruction of the whole Hamas organization both politically and militarily.²³⁹ It is manifestly illegal to declare as a war aim the destruction of the other side’s political capacity (particularly in the context of a 56-year military occupation that deprives the occupied population of its right to self-determination). But when such an overall “political” purpose of war is taken as the value against which proportionality is to be measured in relation to the anticipated harm to civilians, there is virtually no magnitude of expected civilian harm that could ever be considered “excessive” so long as the unlawful political objective, as defined by the attacker, is not met. In this context, the indiscriminate killing of protected persons and destruction of protected objects will always be represented, by the attacker, as “proportionate” incidental harm,²⁴⁰ despite its manifest illegality.

75. Presenting indiscriminate lethal violence against the protected group as a “proportionate means” to pursue the war aims points to an intent to target the Palestinian population as a whole, consistent with the genocidal statements announcing the campaign. In other words, Israel appears to represent itself as conducting a “proportionate genocide”.

²³² <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1717840051491541077>.

²³³ <https://airwars.org/civilian-casualties/ispt0783-october-31-2023/>.

²³⁴ <https://edition.cnn.com/videos/world/2023/10/31/wolf-idf-spokesperson-gaza-refugee-camp-airstrike-reaction-vpx.cnn>.

²³⁵ Daniele, “A lethal misconception”.

²³⁶ <https://www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2023/10/damning-evidence-of-war-crimes-as-israeli-attacks-wipe-out-entire-families-in-gaza/>.

²³⁷ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Hamas-Israel_Conflict_2023_-_Some_Factual_and_Legal_Aspects_-_Israel_Ministry_of_Foreign_Affairs_\(2_NOV_2023\).pdf.pdf); Key Legal Aspects (2 November 2023), p. 10.

²³⁸ <https://www.justsecurity.org/90789/israels-rewriting-of-the-law-of-war/3>.

²³⁹ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Jb1krYLPLZI> (in Hebrew);

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2yRI-cc-D3w> (in Hebrew); and

<https://twitter.com/QudsNen/status/1723784790682358189>. While such arguments have been tempered over time (see https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Israel-Hamas_Conflict_2023_-_FAQs_\(Israel_MFA,_6.12.23\).pdf.pdf); FAQs, p. 11–12), action on the ground has remained ruthless; see, inter alia, the attacks on the Gaza police while assisting food delivery in northern Gaza, and <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2024/02/22/gaza-aid-deliveries-looting-police-hamas/>.

²⁴⁰ <https://academic.oup.com/jcs/article/29/1/21/7644943>.

D. Evacuations and safe zones

76. Under international humanitarian law, parties to conflict must evacuate the civilian population and remove civilian objects from the vicinity of military objectives.²⁴¹ Evacuations are admissible, as long as they do not displace the protected persons outside the occupied territory; evacuated persons must be transferred back to their homes as soon as hostilities in the area in question have ceased.²⁴² The displaced, wounded and sick should be protected through the creation of “hospital and safety zones” – also called “safe areas” or “safe zones” – which shall “be far removed from military operations” and established through agreement between the parties.²⁴³

77. The mass evacuation order of 13 October – when 1.1 million Palestinians were ordered to evacuate northern Gaza in the span of 24 hours to Israeli-designated “safe zones” in the south²⁴⁴ – was communicated through at least 23 different airdropped leaflets, social media postings,²⁴⁵ text messages²⁴⁶ and recorded phone messages.²⁴⁷ Instead of increasing safety for civilians, the sheer scale of evacuations, amidst an intense bombing campaign, and the haphazardly communicated safe zones system, along with extended communications blackouts,²⁴⁸ increased levels of panic, forced displacement and mass killing.²⁴⁹

78. Immediately after the 13 October evacuation orders and the transformation of southern Gaza into an ostensible “safe zone”, Israel illegally categorized the inhabitants of northern Gaza who had remained (including the sick and wounded) as “human shields”²⁵⁰ and “accomplices” of terrorism.²⁵¹ This policy points to the intention by Israel to “transform” hundreds of thousands of civilians into “legitimate” military targets or collateral casualties through impossible-to-follow evacuation orders.²⁵² The mass evacuation order included a staggering 22 hospitals in the area,²⁵³ putting at risk more than 2,000 patients and displaced people sheltering in the hospitals, and deprived those remaining of life-sustaining services.²⁵⁴

79. The erasure of civilian protections in the evacuated area was combined with indiscriminate targeting of evacuees and inhabitants of the areas designated as safe zones. Since the beginning of its assault, Israel has perfidiously bombarded the designated “safe” areas causing significant casualties.²⁵⁵ Of the roughly 500 2,000-pound bombs dropped by Israel in the first six weeks of hostilities, 42 per cent were deployed in the designated safe

²⁴¹ Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, art. 58 (a).

²⁴² Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

²⁴³ Draft agreement relating to hospital zones and localities, art. 4 (c), as cited in the Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 14.

²⁴⁴ <https://mezan.org/en/post/46293>; and <https://mezan.org/en/post/46287>.

²⁴⁵ <https://x.com/AvichayAdraee/status/1712846493747495223?s=20> (in Arabic); and https://www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/idf-urges-palestinians-to-leave-northern-gaza-strip-by-8-p-m/.

²⁴⁶ <https://www.nytimes.com/2023/10/15/world/middleeast/israel-gaza.html>.

²⁴⁷ <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-67327079>.

²⁴⁸ https://content.forensic-architecture.org/wp-content/uploads/2024/03/Humanitarian-Violence_Report_FA.pdf (7 March 2024), sects. 6.1.2 and 6.1.3.

²⁴⁹ <https://www.aljazeera.com/opinions/2024/1/6/safe-zones-israels-technologies-of-genocide>.

²⁵⁰ <https://www.idf.il/en/mini-sites/hamas-israel-war-24/war-on-hamas-2023-resources/the-idf-continues-the-effort-to-move-the-residents-of-the-gaza/>; and https://www.mezan.org/uploads/files/2024/1/17096645765_november.jpeg (in Arabic).

²⁵¹ https://www.theguardian.com/world/2024/feb/08/israeli-soldiers-idf-gaza-fighting-disaster-area?CMP=share_btn_tw; and https://www.mezan.org/uploads/files/2024/1/1709664576signal-2023-10-22-030620_002.jpeg (in Arabic).

²⁵² Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (Hague Regulations) (1907), art. 26; Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, article 57 (2)(c). The term used in these provisions is “advance warning”; see also Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro, para. 373.

²⁵³ https://www.emro.who.int/images/stories/palestine/WHO_oPt_Sitrep_6s.pdf.

²⁵⁴ <https://www.who.int/news/item/14-10-2023-evacuation-orders-by-israel-to-hospitals-in-northern-gaza-are-a-death-sentence-for-the-sick-and-injured>.

²⁵⁵ <https://edition.cnn.com/gaza-israel-big-bombs/index.html>.

zones in southern areas.²⁵⁶ Israel targeted southern Gaza also with other munitions from air, sea and land, causing large-scale destruction of civilian areas in the “safe zones”.²⁵⁷

80. By 28 October, two weeks after the Israeli mass evacuation order, about 37 per cent of killings occurred in the declared safe areas south of Wadi Gaza.²⁵⁸ By 20 November, 34 per cent of all Palestinians killed in Gaza were in that area,²⁵⁹ and by 22 January, 42 per cent were located in that area, which, by then, held the majority of the population.²⁶⁰ Simply put, “safe areas” were deliberately turned into areas of mass killing.

81. Similar patterns emerge from the Israeli militarization of the “humanitarian corridors” it instructed the population to use in order to evacuate. In contrast with the humanitarian rhetoric through which these “safe routes” were announced,²⁶¹ the corridors were systematically and perfidiously targeted by bombardment, shelling and sniper fire,²⁶² becoming “death corridors”. Israel set up checkpoints for facial scans and identity checks, where fleeing Palestinians were often detained and later mistreated and tortured.²⁶³

82. By the end of November, the Palestinian death toll reached 15,000.²⁶⁴ Responding to mounting international criticism, the Israeli military reconfigured its evacuation mechanisms, introducing a new “humanitarian” tool: the “evacuation grid”.²⁶⁵ The army published a grid map on social media, showing a division of Gaza into 600 blocks and indicating areas to be “evacuated” and “safe” areas.²⁶⁶ The system – introduced when the army had cut off Gaza from all forms of communication²⁶⁷ – threw residents into panic, increasing the level of chaos and, subsequently, the number of deaths.²⁶⁸ From early December, Israel routinely ordered Palestinian civilians in the areas south of Wadi Gaza to move to new zones designated as safe areas according to the grid. Immediately afterwards, the army targeted those “safe zones”.²⁶⁹

83. From the end of December to February, Israel intensified its offensive in the “safe areas” of Al-Mawasi and Rafah, which were sheltering the majority of the displaced population.²⁷⁰ These assaults continued even after the International Court of Justice ordered

²⁵⁶ Ibid.; <https://www.nytimes.com/2023/12/21/world/middleeast/israel-gaza-bomb-investigation.html>.

²⁵⁷ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-34>; https://sheltercluster.s3.eu-central-1.amazonaws.com/public/docs/gsc_opt_gaza_strip_damage_affected_areas_27october2023_a1.pdf?VersionId=bTM7V0miJzKDudKwJL8Dvy1Kdt2uy4kZ; <https://www.alhaq.org/advocacy/22044.html>.

²⁵⁸ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-22>.

²⁵⁹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-45>.

²⁶⁰ <https://english.elpais.com/international/2024-01-22/25000-deaths-in-gaza-why-the-destruction-of-this-war-exceeds-that-of-other-major-conflicts.html?outputType=amp>.

²⁶¹ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-8>; <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/oct/14/gaza-civilians-afraid-to-leave-home-after-bombing-of-safe-routes>; and <https://www.nbcnews.com/news/world/live-blog/israel-hamas-war-live-updates-rcna120252>.

²⁶² <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/pauses-corridors-and-safe-zones-gaza-rhetoric-vs-reality>; and <https://www.ft.com/content/95c5fcf1-c756-415f-85b8-1e4bbff24736>.

²⁶³ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-35>; <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-46>; <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-50>; <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-105>; and <https://www.alhaq.org/advocacy/22452.html>.

²⁶⁴ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-53>.

²⁶⁵ <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/dec/02/israeli-grid-system-makes-life-in-gaza-macabre-game-of-battleships-say-aid-workers>.

²⁶⁶ <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-67630489>.

²⁶⁷ <https://www.savethechildren.net/news/complete-communication-blackout-four-days-and-counting-makes-aid-distribution-gaza-near>; and <https://edition.cnn.com/2024/01/18/middleeast/gaza-communications-blackout-one-week-israel-hamas-intl/index.html>.

²⁶⁸ <https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/israel-says-ground-forces-operating-across-gaza-strip-offensive-builds-2023-12-04/>.

²⁶⁹ Ibid; see also <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JIGmwCMETMs>.

²⁷⁰ https://apnews.com/article/israel-hamas-war-news-12-26-2023-698c895797ccb057d13fe4f68690c98b?taid=658b24eaca93ff0001d4103d&utm_campaign=TrueAnthem&utm_medium=AP&utm_source=Twitter; <https://www.savethechildren.org/us/about-us/media->

Israel to “take[s] all measures within its power” to prevent genocide.²⁷¹ Instead, by February Israel had killed a further 3,135 Palestinians, many of whom were killed while seeking refuge.²⁷²

84. By the beginning of February, 1.4 million Palestinians had been displaced to Rafah, rendering that governorate the most overcrowded area in Gaza with “an average density of over 22,200 per square kilometre, five times its pre-conflict levels”.²⁷³ Continuous bombardment of the “safe areas” targeted premises hosting displaced people²⁷⁴ and medical facilities.²⁷⁵

85. Just as the evacuations and safe zones were being implemented, high-ranking Israeli officials advocated for settler colonial replacement. The Prime Minister advocated for ethnic transfer;²⁷⁶ the Finance Minister expressed support for expelling two million Palestinians from Gaza;²⁷⁷ the Minister of National Security declared the war to be an opportunity to “concentrate on encouraging the migration of the residents of Gaza”; while other cabinet ministers advocated that Palestinians be resettled²⁷⁸ into the Sinai,²⁷⁹ Western countries²⁸⁰ and elsewhere.²⁸¹ The Minister of Communications revealed that the expulsion of the evacuated Palestinians outside Gaza was discussed “at government meetings”.²⁸² On 12 January, a conference for the recolonization of Gaza and the expulsion of Palestinians was attended by Israeli cabinet ministers.²⁸³

86. The pattern of killings of civilians who evacuated to the south, in combination with statements of some senior Israelis declaring an intent to forcibly displace Palestinians outside Gaza and replace them with Israeli settlers, lead, reasonably, to the inference that evacuation orders and safe zones have been used as genocidal tools to achieve ethnic cleansing.

and-news/2024-press-releases/gaza-mostly-children-killed-by-israeli-airstrikes-near-al-mawasi-~:text=4%2C%202024)%E2%80%94Fourteen%20people,aid%20agency%20Save%20the%20Children; <https://www.amnesty.org.uk/press-releases/israelopt-fresh-evidence-probable-war-crimes-israeli-attacks-rafah>; and <https://edition.cnn.com/2024/02/06/middleeast/palestinians-trapped-rafah-israeli-offensive-intl/index.html>; <https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/israel-strikes-rafah-refugee-camp-22-killed-local-health-officials-say-2024-02-12/>.

²⁷¹ International Court of Justice, South Africa v. Israel, para. 86.

²⁷² <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-129>.

²⁷³ <https://www.nrc.no/news/2024/february/gaza-israels-military-operation-in-rafah-would-be-fatal-for-displaced-civilians-and-humanitarian-aid/>.

²⁷⁴ https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-101?_gl=1*11oo43s*_ga*MTEwMzc0OTEwNC4xNzA3ODMyMTQ0*_ga_E60ZNX2F68*MTcwOTQwMDA0OC42LjEuMTcwOTQwMTEyNi42MC4wLjA.

²⁷⁵ <https://forensic-architecture.org/investigation/assessment-israeli-material-icj-jan-2024>.

²⁷⁶ <https://www.israelhayom.co.il/news/geopolitics/article/15002089>; <https://www.trtworld.com/middle-east/live-blog-netanyahu-reportedly-pushes-for-voluntary-migration-from-gaza-16382395> (in Hebrew).

²⁷⁷ <https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/israeli-minister-calls-voluntary-emigration-gazans-2023-11-14/>; and <https://www.timesofisrael.com/smotrich-doubles-down-on-resettlement-of-gazans-rejecting-us-criticism/>.

²⁷⁸ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/ministers-call-for-resettling-gazans-palestinians-building-settlements-in-strip/> (1 January 2024).

²⁷⁹ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/intelligence-ministry-concept-paper-proposes-transferring-gazans-to-egypt-sinai/>.

²⁸⁰ <https://www.wsj.com/articles/the-west-should-welcome-gaza-refugees-asylum-seekers-terrorists-displacement-5d2b5890>.

²⁸¹ https://www.facebook.com/story.php?story_fbid=pfbid036UqRhGJTnem4PTjwWbfen66cwCGAP4zDQsMhcwuWE7PQ5fMJAeEwpaSYyhnR95Cbl&id=100050298347371&paipv=0&eav=AffaYuQI6JO9t5f79-OwyTkI4XyPbjoOR76oXREbhs_jTghukglHjzJy9kKH7cIrHwO&_rdr (in Hebrew); <https://www.timesofisrael.com/israel-in-talks-with-congo-and-other-countries-on-gaza-voluntary-migration-plan/>; and <https://twitter.com/israeltrnsLtd/status/1741891754196901934>.

²⁸² https://www.huffingtonpost.co.uk/entry/israeli-cabinet-minister-says-war-will-lead-to-emigration-from-gaza_uk_659fa54de4b0fbd2bc05cc78 (11 January 2024).

²⁸³ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2024-01-28/ty-article/ministers-from-netanyahus-party-join-thousands-of-israelis-at-resettle-gaza-conference/0000018d-512f-dfdc-a5ad-db7f35e10000>.

E. Medical shielding

87. A final layer of the “humanitarian camouflage” concerns its efforts to provide legal cover for systematic attacks against medical facilities and personnel, causing the progressive collapse of the health-care sector in Gaza.²⁸⁴ Accusing the enemy of using medical facilities as a shield, which Israel then targets, had already been employed as a strategy of “medical warfare” in previous wars.²⁸⁵ In the current assault, Israel has invoked this legal strategy to justify genocide through the complete destruction of Gaza’s life-sustaining infrastructure.²⁸⁶

88. Civilian health care has special protection under international law, and there is a high threshold for the loss of the protected status for civilian medical units.²⁸⁷ International law protects hospitals while prohibiting their use for military purposes or as shields for military activities, such as positioning military targets in their proximity.²⁸⁸ Since the beginning of the hostilities, Israel has framed hospitals in Gaza as Hamas “headquarters”²⁸⁹ and spaces used for shielding military activities,²⁹⁰ aiming to blur the distinction between civilian and military objects, transforming hospitals into “hospital shields”²⁹¹ and legitimizing the destruction of the entire health-care sector.²⁹²

89. In November 2023, Al-Shifa Hospital in northern Gaza was hosting tens of thousands of displaced people when it was besieged and invaded.²⁹³ On 27 October, the Israeli military published a 3D video representing the hospital’s underground as a complex network of tunnels functioning as a “ Hamas command centre”.²⁹⁴ On 2 November, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs published a legal document designating the hospital as a military centre concealing military assets.²⁹⁵ The hospital was subsequently placed under siege and was invaded in mid-November, with Israel accusing Hamas of using medical personnel as “human shields”.²⁹⁶ After days of attacks, the hospital was turned into a “death zone”:²⁹⁷ five newborn babies and 14 patients were injured;²⁹⁸ at least 31 people were killed;²⁹⁹ and parts of the hospital turned into mass graves.³⁰⁰

90. Media reports challenged Israeli allegations that Hamas was using hospitals as shields, asserting that there was no evidence to suggest that the rooms connected to the hospital had

²⁸⁴ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=e8nyroIIXIM>.

²⁸⁵ <https://www.pure.ed.ac.uk/ws/portalfiles/portal/433934921/PeruginiGordonJPS2024MedicalLawfare.pdf>.

²⁸⁶ Ibid.; see also <https://forensic-architecture.org/investigation/destruction-of-medical-infrastructure-in-gaza-20/12/2023>; https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Israel-Hamas_Conflict_2023_-_FAQs_\(Israel_MFA,_6.12.23\).pdf.pdf): FAQs, (6 December 2023) pp. 2, 9, 13–14.

²⁸⁷ Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, arts. 13 (1) and 52 (3); First Geneva Convention, art. 21; Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 18 and 19; and Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, art. 11 (2).

²⁸⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 18 and 19; Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, art. 12 (4).

²⁸⁹ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-ggBF9rnBe0>.

²⁹⁰ <https://www.idf.il/en/mini-sites/hamas-operations-in-hospitals/>.

²⁹¹ Neve Gordon and Nicola Perugini, “‘Hospital shields’ and the limits of international law”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 30, No. 2 (May 2019).

²⁹² <https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/israeli-military-says-hamas-hiding-tunnels-operations-centres-gaza-hospital-2023-10-27/>.

²⁹³ <https://shifa.forensic-architecture.org/>; and <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-16>.

²⁹⁴ <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1718010359397634252?s=20>.

²⁹⁵ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/swords-of-iron-faq-6-dec-2023/en/English_Documents_Hamas-Israel_Conflict_2023_-_Some_Factual_and_Legal_Aspects_-_Israel_Ministry_of_Foreign_Affairs_\(2_NOV_2023\).pdf.pdf): Key Legal Aspects, p. 9.

²⁹⁶ <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2023/nov/12/control-of-al-shifa-hospital-in-gaza-is-a-key-israeli-military-and-political-aim>.

²⁹⁷ <https://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-67462615>.

²⁹⁸ <https://www.reuters.com/world/middle-east/too-close-too-cold-premature-babies-grave-peril-gazas-al-shifa-hospital-2023-11-13/>.

²⁹⁹ Figures provided by WHO office for the Eastern Mediterranean Region, 24 February 2024.

³⁰⁰ https://www.emro.who.int/images/stories/palestine/WHO_Sitrep_13.pdf?ua=1.

been used by Hamas; the hospital buildings (contrary to Israeli military 3D images) were found not to be connected to the tunnel network; and there was no evidence that the tunnels were accessible from the hospital wards.³⁰¹ In addition, Israeli army reportedly rearranged weaponry at the Al-Shifa before the visits of news crews,³⁰² raising further suspicions of fabrication after the Israeli army had claimed that a “list of terrorists” it had found in another Gaza hospital, Al-Rantisi children’s hospital, turned out to be a calendar of the days of the week in Arabic.³⁰³ Whether or not Israeli accusations that hospital shielding at Al-Shifa were true – but still remain to be proven – civilians in the hospitals should have been protected and not subjected to siege and military attack.

91. That the intent behind the “humanitarian camouflage” deployed by Israel in this instance can only be characterized as genocidal is clear for two reasons. First, Israel was aware of the large-scale destruction of the health-care system since the World Health Organization had reported in mid-November that a “public health catastrophe” was developing in Gaza, with 26 of 35 hospitals no longer operational owing to the bombing and siege inflicted by Israel.³⁰⁴ Second, Israel knew that its military operation had resulted in a significant number of wounded people.³⁰⁵ Physical trauma constitutes the predominant cause of excess mortality in Gaza.³⁰⁶ It was predictable that forcibly suspending services at the largest hospital in Gaza would seriously harm the prospects for survival of the injured, the chronically ill and newborn babies in incubators. Therefore, by targeting Al-Shifa Hospital, Israel knowingly condemned thousands of sick and displaced people to preventable suffering and death.³⁰⁷

92. The reliance on the strategy of treating hospitals as medical shields, disregarding their function as indispensable hubs of societal survival for the thousands injured and the many more seeking shelter, exposes yet another aspect of the genocidal logic underpinning the military strategy adopted by Israel.

VII. Conclusions

93. The overwhelming nature and scale of the Israeli assault on Gaza and the destructive conditions of life it has inflicted reveal an intent to physically destroy Palestinians as a group. The present report finds that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the threshold indicating the commission of the following acts of genocide against Palestinians in Gaza has been met: killing members of the group; causing serious bodily or mental harm to groups’ members; and deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part. Genocidal acts were approved and given effect following statements of genocidal intent issued by senior military and government officials.

94. Israel has sought to conceal its eliminationist conduct of hostilities by defending the commission of international crimes as abiding with international humanitarian law. By distorting customary rules of international humanitarian law, including distinction, proportionality and precautions, Israel has de facto treated an entire protected group and its life-sustaining infrastructure as “terrorist” or “terrorist-supporting”, thus transforming everything and everyone into either a target or collateral damage, hence killable or destroyable. In this way, no Palestinian in Gaza is safe by definition. This ³⁰¹ <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2023/12/21/al-shifa-hospital-gaza-hamas-israel/>; <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NIBtJh1fIw>; <https://forensic-architecture.org/investigation/assessment-israeli-material-icj-jan-2024>.

³⁰² https://edition.cnn.com/middleeast/live-news/israel-hamas-war-gaza-news-11-18-23/h_1d70c190adde686e6a2b59e963499e82.

³⁰³ <https://www.france24.com/en/tv-shows/truth-or-fake/20231116-idf-claims-to-find-list-of-hamas-names-but-it-s-the-days-of-the-week-in-arabic>.

³⁰⁴ https://www.emro.who.int/images/stories/palestine/WHO_Sitrep_13.pdf?ua=1.

³⁰⁵ <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-40>.

³⁰⁶ <https://gaza-projections.org/>, p. 10.

³⁰⁷ <https://www.pure.ed.ac.uk/ws/portalfiles/portal/433934921/PeruginiGordonJPS2024MedicalLawfare.pdf>.

has had devastating, intentional effects, costing the lives of tens of thousands of Palestinians, destroying the fabric of life in Gaza and causing irreparable harm to its entire population. It constitutes a pattern of conduct from which the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that there is a State policy of genocidal violence against the Palestinian people in Gaza.

95. The Israeli genocide against the Palestinians in Gaza is an escalatory stage of a long-standing settler colonial process of erasure. For over seven decades this process has suffocated the Palestinian people as a group – demographically, culturally, economically and politically – seeking to displace it and to expropriate and control its land and resources. The ongoing Nakba must be stopped and remedied once and for all. This is an imperative owed to the victims of this highly preventable tragedy, and to future generations in that land.

VIII. Recommendations

96. The Special Rapporteur urges Member States to enforce the prohibition of genocide in accordance with their non-derogable obligations.³⁰⁸ Israel and those States that have been complicit in what can reasonably be concluded to constitute genocide must be held accountable and must deliver reparations commensurate with the destruction, death and harm inflicted on the Palestinian people.

97. The Special Rapporteur recommends that Member States:

(a) Immediately implement an arms embargo on Israel, as it appears to have failed to comply with the binding measures ordered by the International Court of Justice on 26 January 2024, as well as other economic and political measures necessary to ensure an immediate and lasting ceasefire and to restore respect for international law, including sanctions;

(b) Support the action of South Africa in resorting to the Security Council under Article 94 (2) of the Charter of the United Nations following the non-compliance by Israel with the above-mentioned measures of the International Court of Justice;

(c) Act to ensure a thorough, independent and transparent investigation of all violations of international law committed by all actors, including those amounting to war crimes, crimes against humanity and the crime of genocide, including by:

(i) Cooperating with international independent fact-finding/investigative and accountability mechanisms;

(ii) Referring the situation in Palestine to the International Criminal Court immediately, in support of its ongoing investigation;

(iii) Discharging their obligations under the principles of universal jurisdiction, ensuring genuine investigations and prosecutions of individuals who are suspected of having committed, aided or abetted in the commission of international crimes, including genocide, starting with their own nationals;

(d) Ensure that Israel, as well as States which have been complicit in the Gaza genocide, acknowledge the colossal harm done, commit to non-repetition, with measures for prevention and full reparations, including the full cost of the reconstruction of Gaza, for which the establishment of a register of damage with an accompanying verification and mass claims process is recommended;

(e) Within the General Assembly, develop a plan to end the unlawful and unsustainable status quo constituting the root cause of the latest escalation, which ultimately culminated in the Gaza genocide, including through the reconstitution of the Special Committee against Apartheid, to comprehensively address the situation in Palestine and stand ready to implement diplomatic, economic and political measures provided under the Charter in case of non-compliance by Israel;

³⁰⁸ General Assembly resolution 56/83, annex, art. 31.

(f) In the short term and as a temporary measure, in consultation with the State of Palestine, deploy an international protective presence to constrain the violence routinely used against Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territory;

(g) Ensure that UNRWA is properly funded to enable it to meet the increased needs of Palestinians in Gaza.

98. The Special Rapporteur calls on the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to enhance its efforts to end the current atrocities in Gaza, including by promoting and accurately applying international law, notably the Genocide Convention, in the context of the occupied Palestinian territory as a whole.

Assemblée générale

Distr.
GÉNÉRALE

A/HRC/6/17/Add.4
16 novembre 2007

FRANÇAIS
Original: ANGLAIS

CONSEIL DES DROITS DE L'HOMME
Sixième session
Point 3 de l'ordre du jour

PROMOTION ET PROTECTION DE TOUS LES DROITS DE L'HOMME, CIVILS, POLITIQUES, ÉCONOMIQUES, SOCIAUX ET CULTURELS,
Y COMPRIS LE DROIT AU DÉVELOPPEMENT

Rapport du Rapporteur spécial, M. Martin Scheinin, sur la promotion et la protection des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales dans la lutte antiterroriste

Additif

MISSION EN ISRAËL, Y COMPRIS DANS LE TERRITOIRE PALESTINIEN OCCUPÉ

* Le résumé du présent rapport de mission est distribué dans toutes les langues officielles. Le corps du rapport, qui figure en annexe, est distribué uniquement dans la langue dans laquelle il a été présenté.

Résumé

M. Martin Scheinin, Rapporteur spécial sur la promotion et la protection des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales dans le cadre de la lutte contre le terrorisme, s'est rendu en visite officielle en Israël du 3 au 10 juillet 2007, ainsi que dans le territoire palestinien occupé. Dans la section liminaire du présent rapport, le Rapporteur spécial reconnaît la difficulté particulière que pose la lutte contre le terrorisme dans cette région et la violence dévastatrice à laquelle sont confrontés tous les civils qui y vivent. La deuxième section présente le cadre général de la législation applicable dans lequel il convient d'examiner les mesures prises par Israël pour lutter contre le terrorisme, y compris l'interaction entre le droit international relatif aux droits de l'homme et le droit humanitaire. Elle aborde, en outre, l'état d'urgence déclaré par Israël, ainsi que la possibilité d'une évolution positive de la question de la dérogation et de la réforme législative. Cependant, les implications juridiques du fait que les personnes soupçonnées de terrorisme sont considérées comme des « combattants illégaux » sont jugées préoccupantes.

Dans la section III, le Rapporteur spécial examine les problèmes particuliers que posent dans le cadre du système judiciaire israélien les investigations et les poursuites contre des terroristes présumés, par exemple les définitions juridiques du terrorisme; les méthodes d'interrogatoire utilisées par l'Agence de sécurité israélienne et le recours aux tribunaux militaires. Dans la section IV, est examinée de façon critique la construction de la barrière de sécurité – mi-mur, mi-clôture – en Cisjordanie, sous l'angle de sa légalité et de ses conséquences pour la population palestinienne et, en particulier, de ses répercussions sur les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels. La section V met en lumière des aspects très préoccupants de la situation à Gaza. Le Rapporteur spécial, dans la section VI, évoque les opérations menées par les Forces de défense israéliennes, de même que les problèmes posés par l'utilisation de boucliers humains, les démolitions de maisons et les assassinats ciblés, y compris de civils.

La dernière section contient une brève conclusion du Rapporteur spécial, et ses recommandations au Gouvernement israélien. Il recommande, notamment, un certain nombre de mesures ayant trait à la réforme de la législation, et la cessation de pratiques incompatibles avec le droit international. Par ailleurs, il attire l'attention du Gouvernement sur le fait que des mesures antiterroristes ou sécuritaires très mal vécues par la population peuvent facilement avoir des effets contraires à ceux attendus. Le Rapporteur spécial recommande le démantèlement de toutes les colonies juives implantées sur le territoire palestinien occupé et le remplacement de la barrière encore inachevée par un dispositif de sécurité dont le tracé géographique respecterait la Ligne verte, ou sinon serait accepté par les Palestiniens. Il recommande d'agir d'urgence, durant la mise en œuvre de la décision préconisée, pour que le régime des permis, l'administration des postes de contrôle et toutes autres mesures associées au territoire palestinien occupé n'aient pas de répercussions excessives sur l'exercice des droits civils, culturels, économiques, politiques et sociaux dans le territoire.

Annex

Report of the Special RAPPORTEUR ON THE PROMOTION AND PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS WHILE COUNTERING TERRORISM ON HIS MISSION TO ISRAEL, including visit to OCCUPIED palestinian territory (3-10 JULY 2007)

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs	Page
I. INTRODUCTION	1 - 5	5
II. FRAMEWORK OF APPLICABLE LAW	6 - 13	6
A. International human rights and humanitarian law	6 - 9	6
B. Declared state of emergency	10 - 11	8
C. Unlawful combatants	12 - 13	8
III. INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF TERRORIST SUSPECTS	14 - 29	9
A. Definitions	14 - 16	9
B. Interrogation methods	17 - 21	10
C. Arrest and detention of security suspects	22 - 28	12
D. Use of military courts	29	14
IV. CONSTRUCTION OF A BARRIER IN THE WEST BANK	30 - 43	15
A. Legality of the barrier and Israeli settlements in the West Bank	32 - 36	15
B. Impact of the barrier on the Palestinian people	37 - 43	17
V. SITUATION IN GAZA	44 - 46	19
VI. ISRAELI DEFENSE FORCE OPERATIONS	47 - 53	20
A. Use of “human shields”	48	20
B. Demolition of houses	49 - 50	21
C. Targeted killings and the killing of civilians	51 - 53	21

CONTENTS (continued)

	Paragraphs	Page
VII. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS	54 - 62	23
A. Conclusions	54	23
B. Recommendations	55 - 62	23

I. Introduction

1. Pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/80, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, Martin Scheinin, conducted, at the invitation of the Government of Israel, a mission to Israel from 3 to 10 July, when he also visited the Occupied Palestinian Territory.¹

2. The Special Rapporteur met with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel, Tzipi Livni. The Special Rapporteur had meetings on a specialist level with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Justice, the Israeli Defense Force, the Israeli Security Agency, members of the Knesset (Parliament), the Counter Terrorism Bureau and former and current Presidents of the Supreme Court of Israel. He travelled to various parts of Israel, including to the Hasharon and Hadarim prisons where he was able to conduct private interviews of detainees in conformity with the Terms of Reference for Fact-Finding Missions by Special Rapporteurs,² and to the Ofer Military Court, where he observed ongoing proceedings and met with the judges. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, he visited, inter alia, Bethlehem, Ramallah and Nablus, examined the route and impact of the barrier erected by Israel, and met with the President's Office of the Palestinian Authority. He met with lawyers, academics, victims of terrorism and non-governmental organizations from Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. He was also briefed by a number of international organizations, including by United Nations interlocutors.

3. The Special Rapporteur is deeply mindful of the difficulties faced by Israel in its efforts to combat armed attacks and acts of terrorism and of the long history of violence in the region, which has had a devastating effect on the Israeli and Palestinian civilian population. While emphasizing that not all acts of violence committed against an occupying power, particularly when violence is targeted at the military forces of an occupying power, amount to acts of terrorism properly construed, the Special Rapporteur cannot ignore that, since the second intifada of September 2000 and up to October 2007, 1,165 Israelis were killed (71 per cent of whom were civilians) and 8,635 injured in over 300,000 violent attacks characterized by the Israeli Security Agency as terror attacks. Threats of military attack or terrorism against the Israeli people also arise from other parts of the region and further abroad. The Special Rapporteur was touched by the personal accounts of victims of terrorism, who have not only faced the loss of family members and other physical losses, but also struggle to overcome the psychological and fear-inducing consequences of terrorism.

4. Resorting to the methods of terrorism is always a morally inexcusable decision by a person. Despite this, the Special Rapporteur emphasizes that perpetrators of acts of terrorism do not fall into a vacuum in the application of the law, and he is encouraged in that regard by the position of the Supreme Court of Israel that the fight against terrorism must be achieved through compliance with the law, including international law. He is furthermore pleased to receive assurances from Government sources that Israel is not involved in any global programme of extraordinary rendition or secret detention.

¹ The Special Rapporteur conducted his mission assisted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and Dr. Alex Conte of the University of Southampton.

² E/CN.4/1998/45, appendix V.

5. The Special Rapporteur underscores the fact that sustainable security can only be achieved through due respect for human rights. As emphasised by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights at the conclusion of her visit to Israel on 23 November 2006, the entitlement of all individuals to enjoy their rights is not dependent upon there being peace. Respect for human rights for all and the rule of law forms one of the four pillars of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 60/288 in September 2006. It is identified in the Strategy as “the fundamental basis of the fight against terrorism”, thus applicable to all four pillars. Furthermore, the Strategy expressly identifies, in the preambular paragraph to pillar I, that a lack of the rule of law and violations of human rights amount to conditions conducive to the spread of terrorism. In the latter regard, as recognized by the Israeli Security Agency and the Israeli Counter-Terrorism Bureau, high on the list of motivations for carrying out terrorist attacks are those of revenge borne out of the attacker’s personal or familial experience or perceptions of ill-treatment or humiliation. The Special Rapporteur further recalls that the Security Council has directed that all States members of the United Nations combat terrorism in compliance with international law, including international human rights and international humanitarian law.³

II. FRAMEWORK OF APPLICABLE LAW

A. International human rights and humanitarian law

6. The legal framework against which Israeli measures against terrorism are to be addressed is the combined effect of international humanitarian law and international human rights law. This is particularly the case with respect to Israeli conduct in, and the effect of counter-terrorism law and practice on, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which has been under Israeli occupation for 40 years. Although Israel officially rejects the de jure application of the 1949 Geneva Conventions to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, it has undertaken to comply with the humanitarian principles under the Fourth Geneva Convention, which pertains to the protection of civilians during times of occupation.

7. With regard to the applicability of substantive norms of international humanitarian law, the Special Rapporteur agrees with the outcome of the positions of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the Israeli Supreme Court that the norms of this body of law, pertaining to international armed conflict, are applicable. The Special Rapporteur emphasizes that, since the adoption of the Geneva Conventions in 1949, the understanding of the substance and scope of international humanitarian law norms has evolved to the effect that the classification of an armed conflict as an international or non-international one cannot be treated as having major substantive consequences for the international humanitarian law obligations of a State that is a party to an armed conflict. He refers, inter alia, to the ICRC study on customary norms of international humanitarian law, to the undertaking by Israel to respect the humanitarian principles of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and to sources of international humanitarian law that predate the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including The Hague Regulations of 1907. The Special Rapporteur is therefore of the view that, when considering its substantive obligations under international humanitarian law, it is not material whether Israel is a party to Additional

³ See for example Security Council resolution 1624 (2005), para. 4.

Protocol II of 1977 or whether the West Bank was part of a sovereign State prior to the country's occupation of the Territory.

8. The Special Rapporteur notes the Israeli position that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights does not apply beyond its own territory, notably in the West Bank, especially as long as there is a situation of armed conflict there. He reminds Israel that international human rights law continues to apply during occupation or armed conflict. This is a point made clear by the Human Rights Committee in its general comments Nos. 29 and 31 and in its concluding observations on Israel,⁴ and has been confirmed by the International Court of Justice.⁵ As further explained in its advisory opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, the International Court stated that the protection offered by human rights conventions did not cease in case of armed conflict, save through the effect of provisions for derogation of the kind to be found in article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁶ The conduct of Israeli counter-terrorist operations must therefore comply not only with international humanitarian law, but also with applicable international human rights law.

9. Those same bodies, the Human Rights Committee and the International Court of Justice have also confirmed that human rights, including those enshrined in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, are legally binding upon a State when it acts outside its internationally recognized territory.⁷ Therefore, as a State party to the Covenant, Israel is obliged to honour the rights laid down in it - including the absolute prohibition against torture or any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment - of anyone within its power or effective control, even if not situated within the territory of Israel. With regard to the application of the Covenant and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Special Rapporteur therefore concludes that the provisions of both covenants apply to the benefit of the population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, for all operations by Israeli authorities or agents in those territories that affect the enjoyment of

⁴ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 (Nature of the general legal obligations on States parties to the Covenant) in Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifty-ninth session, Supplement No. 40 (A/59/40), annex III; ibid., Fifty-eight session, Supplement No. 40 (A/58/40), vol. I, chap. IV, para. 85 (11).

⁵ Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. 2006 Reports, 226, para. 25.

⁶ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, 136, para. 106. More recently, the Court applied both human rights law and international humanitarian law to the armed conflict between the Congo and Uganda: see Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Merits (2005), I.C.J. Reports, paras. 216-220 and 345 (3).

⁷ See Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth-ninth session, Supplement No. 40 (A/59/40), annex III and Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, 136, at 179 (para. 109).

rights enshrined in the covenants and fall within the ambit of the State responsibility of Israel under the principles of public international law.

B. Declared state of emergency

10. The Special Rapporteur notes with encouragement that Israel is reconsidering its derogation from aspects of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights under a state of emergency, which has been in existence since the establishment of the State of Israel. This reform is long overdue, as the current legal framework for countering terrorism is vague and outdated, partly based on pre-1948 instruments and hardly compatible with the requirement of legality and the country's commitment to democracy. The Special Rapporteur is troubled by the fact that a challenge to the lawfulness of the state of emergency has been pending before the Supreme Court of Israel for more than eight years. The Human Rights Committee has repeatedly expressed its concern with the sweeping nature of measures under the declared state of emergency.⁸ The Special Rapporteur reiterates the Committee's position that recourse to derogations under article 4 must be temporary and exceptional in nature, and that the enunciation of certain rights within the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights already provide for the proportionate limitation of rights as prescribed by law and necessary for the protection of national security or public order, including articles 12 (3), 19 (3) and 21, relating to the freedoms of movement and residence, opinion and expression, and peaceful assembly.⁹

11. The Special Rapporteur was informed that new counter-terrorism legislation is being drafted and is encouraged by advice from the Israeli Ministry of Justice that he will be consulted and invited to comment on this legislation prior to its introduction to the Knesset. The undertaking of this cooperative enterprise should be seen as representing an element of best practice in the development and reform of counter-terrorism law and practice. The Special Rapporteur further notes that Israel is in the process of establishing a written constitution to replace the various basic laws currently in existence, and that it will include a charter of rights. He encourages Israel to use this vehicle as an opportunity to fully incorporate its obligations under international human rights law.

C. Unlawful combatants

12. One troubling development in the counter-terrorist framework of the United States of America and Israel has been the classification of suspected terrorists as "unlawful enemy combatants" who purportedly find themselves in a gap in protection in respect of international humanitarian law or certain parts of it. Most renowned is the use of this classification by the United States in respect of persons detained at Guantánamo Bay, a matter considered in the report of the Special Rapporteur on his mission to the United States. Israel has similarly adopted the terminology in its Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law 2002.

⁸ Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth-eighth session, Supplement No. 40 (A/58/40), vol. I, chap. IV, para. 85 (12).

⁹ Ibid. See also ibid., Fifty-seventh session, Supplement No. 40, vol. I, annex VI, para. 2.

13. The adjective “unlawful” was used together with the noun “combatant” by Allan Rosas, in his treatise The Legal Status of Prisoners of War to describe persons who commit hostile acts in international conflicts without authorization to do so under the law of war.¹⁰ “Unprivileged belligerent” would be a synonymous expression. While such persons may not be entitled to prisoner of war status, they nevertheless enjoy certain minimum protections in respect of detention and trial.¹¹ The Special Rapporteur wishes to make clear that the term “unlawful combatant” is a description of convenience, meaningful only in international armed conflicts and even then only denoting persons taking direct part in hostilities while not being members of the regular armed forces or of assimilated units.

III. INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF TERRORIST SUSPECTS

A. Definitions

14. In its resolution 1566 (2004), the Security Council called on all States to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism and, in doing so, to prevent and punish acts that have the following three cumulative characteristics:

(a) Acts, including those against civilians, committed with the intention of causing death or serious bodily injury, or the taking of hostages;

(b) Irrespective of whether motivated by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature, also committed for the purpose of provoking a state of terror in the general public or in a group of persons or particular persons, intimidating a population, or compelling a Government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act;

(c) Such acts constituting offences within the scope of and as defined in the international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism.

15. In the view of the Special Rapporteur, this cumulative characterization represents the type of conduct that should be acted against in the context of State counter-terrorist law and practice.¹² Terrorism can be distinguished from other crimes or warfare by its use of deadly or otherwise serious violence against “civilians”, i.e. against innocent bystanders, or members of the general population or segments of it, or the taking of them as hostages, in order to cause fear or compel an international organization or Government to act or abstain from acting. Any definition of terrorism must comply with the requirements of legality (accessibility, precision and non-retroactivity), applicability to counter-terrorism alone, and non-discrimination.¹³

¹⁰ Allan Rosas, The Legal Status of Prisoners of War (Turku, Institute for Human Rights, Abo Akademi University, 2005).

¹¹ See also United States Supreme Court ruling in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. (2006), p. 72.

¹² Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, Martin Scheinin (E/CN.4/2006/98), sect. III.

¹³ Ibid, paras. 45-50.

16. In its concluding observations on the second periodic report of Israel under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Human Rights Committee expressed concern about the vagueness of definitions in Israeli counter-terrorism legislation and regulations which, although their application is subject to judicial review, appear to run counter to the principle of legality in several aspects owing to the ambiguous wording of the provisions and the use of several evidentiary presumptions to the detriment of the defendant.¹⁴ The definition of an “act of terrorism” under article 1 of the Prohibition on Terrorist Financing Law 2004, for example, includes acts creating danger to the health or security of the public; serious damage to property; or serious disruption of vital infrastructures, systems or services. The Special Rapporteur takes the view that this definition goes beyond the Security Council’s characterization by including acts the commission of which go beyond causing death or serious bodily injury or the taking of hostages. While the acts described by article 1 would certainly amount to criminal conduct, they should not be treated as terrorist acts in the view of the Special Rapporteur. In contrast, article 144D (2) (b) of the Penal Law 1977 is properly restricted in its definition of “an act of violence or terror” as an offence that causes injury to a person’s body or places a person in danger of death or danger of grievous bodily injury.

B. Interrogation methods

17. Sitting as the High Court of Justice, the Supreme Court of Israel held in 1999 that former governmental guidelines governing the use by the Israeli Security Agency of “moderate physical pressure” during interrogation were invalid.¹⁵ Although the decision of the Supreme Court held that the “necessity defence” under article 34 (11) of Penal Law 1977 could not serve to ex ante allow Israeli Security Agency investigators to employ such interrogation techniques, the Court’s decision left open the possibility that the defence could be available post factum.¹⁶

18. The Special Rapporteur emphasizes that, even when properly applied, the necessity defence does not validate the application of physical or psychological means of torture or any form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. It means, at most, that such wrongful conduct may, in certain very limited circumstances, go unpunished in respect of a particular individual. He further draws attention to the fact that, notwithstanding the operation of this defence, it will never absolve a State of its duty to secure accountability and provide an effective remedy for the human rights violation suffered. This position is consistent with that taken by the Human Rights Committee in its concluding observations to the third periodic report by Israel under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights where, although it welcomed the Supreme Court’s decision, it noted that there was no defence under article 7 of the Covenant to conduct amounting to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, equally prohibited in non-derogable terms by article 7.¹⁷

¹⁴ Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth-eighth session, Supplement No. 40 (A/58/40), vol. I, chap. IV, para. 14.

¹⁵ Public Committee Against Torture in Israel v. The State of Israel (HCJ 5100/94).

¹⁶ Ibid., para. 40.

19. It was therefore troubling to the Special Rapporteur to receive reports of the continued use by Israel of interrogation techniques such as beatings, sleep deprivation, use of the “shabach” position (where a person’s hands are tied behind his back, and he is seated for long periods on a small and low chair tilted forward towards the ground), and excessively tight handcuffs.¹⁸ It is reported that child detainees have been subject to similar treatment, and threats being made of having the child’s family members beaten or their family home destroyed.¹⁹ The Special Rapporteur received assurances that all instances of the use of moderate physical pressure fell within the bounds of the necessity defence, and that no individual interrogator has been the subject of criminal charges since the 1999 Supreme Court decision, despite the existence of mechanisms facilitating the reporting of abuse by persons under interrogation. In that regard, Israel has established a process by which any person under interrogation may make an allegation of ill-treatment, which will then be investigated by a complaints inspector. Although the rules of operation of the Israeli Security Agency do not allow interference with the investigations of the inspector, who reports directly to the State Attorney’s Office, the Special Rapporteur is concerned about the ability of the inspector, as an employee of the Israeli Security Agency, to act truly independently from the Agency and thus vigorously investigate allegations of ill-treatment or torture. According to the statistics given to the Special Rapporteur, since 2000, the inspector has initiated more than 550 examinations, but only 4 have resulted in disciplinary measures and not a single one in prosecution. The Special Rapporteur disagrees with the Supreme Court ruling that article 34 (11) of the Penal Law may be used to permit the exercise of discretion in deciding whether to prosecute an individual interrogator against whom allegations have been made of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.¹⁶ Given the non-derogable and peremptory nature of the prohibition of torture, such determinations should only be made by a court during the course of a criminal trial.

20. In its 1999 decision, the Supreme Court of Israel accepted that the necessity defence could arise in instances of a “ticking bomb”, and that the imminence criteria of the defence could be satisfied even if the “bomb” was set to explode in a few days, or even in a few weeks, provided the act was certain to materialize and that there were no alternative means of preventing it.²⁰ This explanation by the Court is very troublesome and the Special Rapporteur was shocked by the unconvincing and vague illustrations by the Israeli Security Agency of when a “ticking bomb” scenario may be applicable. One such example given concerned the apprehension of a ¹⁷ Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth-eighth session, Supplement No. 40 (A/58/40), vol. I, chap. IV, para. 18.

¹⁸ See for example Public Committee against Torture in Israel, “Ticking Bombs”: Testimonies of Torture Victims in Israel (May 2007), and B’Tselem, “Utterly Forbidden. The Torture and Ill-treatment of Palestinian Detainees” in B’Tselem (May 2007).

¹⁹ Defence for Children International, Palestine Section, Palestinian Child Political Prisoners 2006 Report, p. 5.

²⁰ Public Committee against Torture in Israel v. The State of Israel (HCJ 5100/94), para. 34.

person found in possession of a small laboratory for manufacturing explosives and items capable of being used to perpetrate a kidnapping. Based upon information that the person had previously attempted a kidnapping, although not prosecuted for it, the Israeli Security Agency advised that it took these facts as amounting to a “ticking bomb” scenario, although special interrogation techniques were not actually used.

21. The Special Rapporteur was also concerned by the admission by the Israeli Security Agency officials that, in principle, there was no distinction, in the use of the “ticking bomb” scenario, between a terrorist suspect and a person otherwise holding information about a terrorist incident. He was further troubled by the process by which individual interrogators would, in line with internal guidelines, seek approval from the Director of the Israeli Security Agency for the existence of a “ticking bomb” scenario and the application of special interrogation techniques. This appears to render the use of special interrogation techniques a matter of policy rather than a case-by-case ex post facto defence in respect of wrongful conduct. Properly applied, the necessity defence only applies in respect of an improvised reaction by an interrogator in relation to an unpredictable event.²¹

C. Arrest and detention of security suspects

22. The arrest and detention of Palestinians in the West Bank, with the exception of those from East Jerusalem, is governed to a large extent by military orders. Such orders do not require Israeli authorities to inform the person at the time of arrest of the reasons for their detention, at variance with article 9 (2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Although Israel has notified the United Nations of its intention to derogate from article 9 of the Covenant, any derogation must be both necessary and proportionate. There is no good reason for failing to inform a person of the reasons for their detention at the time of arrest.

23. According to the Criminal Procedures (Non-Resident Detainee Suspected of Security Offense) (Temporary Provision) Law 2006, a suspect may be held for up to 96 hours before being brought before a judge. It also allows a suspect to be held for 35 days without an indictment.

24. The same law permits a security suspect to be detained for up to 21 days without access to a lawyer. Since detainees do not have a right to family visits before an indictment is filed against them, according to article 12 (b) of the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement - Arrests) (Conditions of Detention) Regulations 1997, this creates a situation whereby a detainee may be held without contact with the outside world for periods that could amount to weeks at a time. The Special Rapporteur is gravely concerned about this position, since it is in just this type of circumstance that the risk arises of a detained person being made subject to torture, or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.²²

²¹ Ibid, para. 36.

²² As recognized by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2005/39, para 9.

25. Of further concern to the Special Rapporteur is the use in the West Bank of “administrative detention” authorized under Military Order 1229 (1988). This Order empowers military commanders in the West Bank to detain an individual for up to six months if they have “reasonable grounds to presume that the security of the area or public security require the detention” subject to confirmation by the District Court. Commanders can extend detentions for additional periods of up to six months, and the Military Order does not define a maximum cumulative period of administrative detention, thus meaning that detention can be extended indefinitely. At June 2007, Israel was holding approximately 830 Palestinians in administrative detention, and the Special Rapporteur is aware of cases in which persons have been held for periods of years under administrative detention. The terms “security of the area” and “public security” are not defined, their interpretation being left to military commanders, and thus lack the level of precision required by the principle of legality. Furthermore, much of the information concerning the reasons for such detention is classified, such that the detainee and his or her lawyer have no access to this information, available to the military court confirming the detention, and thereby no effective means of contesting the grounds of the detention. This is at variance with article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which not only guarantees the right to a fair criminal trial, but also requires that fundamental principles of fair trial be respected in any matter dealt with by a judicial body.

26. Detention of persons is also possible under the Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law 2002, which authorizes the Chief of General Staff to detain an “unlawful combatant”, subject to judicial review every six months, along similar lines to the administrative detention regime. Particularly problematic in this regard is not only the use of the term “unlawful combatant”, as discussed earlier in this report, but also its definition, which includes persons who have “indirectly” participated in hostile acts against the State of Israel. The latter term remains undefined and is therefore open to abuse and inconsistent with the principle of legality.

27. Although it would be improper to suggest that the right to liberty of members of political parties should be any greater than others, the Special Rapporteur urges caution in this area to ensure that counter-terrorism is never used as a means of obfuscating the existence or development of democracy. He notes that 45 of 132 members of the Palestinian Legislative Council have been charged with affiliation with, or membership in, a proscribed organization and are currently detained by Israel; 4 of them are being held in administrative detention.

28. Of the 700 Palestinian children arrested in 2006, 25 were held on administrative detention orders.²³ Article 37 (b) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child requires, inter alia, that the detention or imprisonment of a child be used as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time. There are also reports that solitary confinement has been used by prison authorities as a means of encouraging confessions from children, or as a punishment for infractions of prison rules.²⁴ Rule 67 of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice prohibits disciplinary measures against children to include solitary confinement. Furthermore, whereas rule 26 (2) requires child detainees to receive educational care according to their age, it is reported that Hasharon prison, being one of five Israeli prisons at which children are detained, is the only facility providing Palestinian child prisoners with education facilities.²⁵

²³ Defence for Children International, Palestine Section, Palestinian Child Political Prisoners 2006 Report, p.1.

²⁴ Ibid., p. 14.

D. Use of military courts

29. Terrorist and security suspects in the West Bank, who may be either civilians or persons directly participating in hostilities, are normally tried before military courts. In its general comment No. 32, the Human Rights Committee emphasized that the trial of civilians in military or special courts could raise serious problems as far as the equitable, impartial and independent administration of justice was concerned. Therefore, the Committee stressed the need that all necessary measures be taken to ensure that such trials are held under conditions which genuinely afford the full guarantees stipulated in article 14. According to the Committee, trials of civilians by military courts should be exceptional, and the jurisdiction of military courts should be limited to military personnel. The exercise of jurisdiction by a military court over civilians not performing military tasks is normally inconsistent with the fair, impartial and independent administration of justice.²⁶ The Committee has also clearly stated that the right to trial by an independent and impartial tribunal is so central to the due process of law that it is an absolute right that may suffer no exception, and thus not capable of derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.²⁷ In a long line of helpful jurisprudence on the subject, the European Court of Human Rights has spoken of the need for a tribunal to be subjectively free of prejudice or personal bias, and to have an appearance of impartiality from an objective viewpoint.²⁸ While the Special Rapporteur makes no judgement as to the impartiality or otherwise of individual military judges, the fact remains that military courts have an appearance of a potential lack of independence and impartiality, which on its own brings into question the fairness of trials.

IV. CONSTRUCTION OF A BARRIER IN THE WEST BANK

30. Central to the Israeli strategy in the fight against terrorism, and the suppression of suicide bombings in particular, is the continuing construction of a barrier - partly a wall and partly a fenced zone with multiple physical obstacles - between Israel and certain towns in the West Bank. According to Government interlocutors heard during the visit, the existence of this physical barrier makes terrorist operations more difficult, because they require greater coordination among more people; more opportunities for mistakes to be made are thus created ²⁵ Ibid., pp. 12 and 13.

²⁶ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 32 (Article 14: Right to equality before courts and tribunals and to a fair trial) (CCPR/C/GC/32), para. 22. For relevant examples of jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights, see Ocalan v. Turkey (2005) ECHR 282, para. 115 and Incal v. Turkey (1998), ECHR 48, para. 75.

²⁷ See, for example, González del Río v. Peru (CCPR/C/46/D/263/1987), para. 5.2 and Human Rights Committee general comment No. 29, para. 11 and general comment No. 32, para. 6.

²⁸ See, for example, Findlay v. United Kingdom (1997) ECHR 8, para. 75.

and give more time for the detection and interception of terrorist operations. This, combined with reliance upon human intelligence, detection and other technology, has been credited by the Government as resulting in a marked reduction in the incidence of terrorist acts within the territory of Israel proper, from the height of 213 casualties in 2002 to 11 in 2006. According to the statistics provided by the Government, there has been an 85 per cent decline in the number of suicide attacks and an 80 per cent decline in the number of casualties.

31. Notwithstanding the correlation between the construction of the barrier and the reduction in the number of successful terrorist attacks against Israeli civilians, the barrier is having an enormously negative impact on the enjoyment of human rights by the Palestinian people. A considerable part of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including towns and villages, is being separated from the rest of the Territory by the barrier. The winding route of the barrier is creating multiple obstacles for movement between even close-by communities within the Occupied Palestinian Territory and establishing a “seam zone” of land between the Green Line and the route of the barrier, representing approximately 10 per cent of the West Bank. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the Occupied Palestinian Territory reports a dramatic and continuing deterioration in the socio-economic conditions of many parts of the West Bank since the construction of the barrier.

A. Legality of the barrier and Israeli settlements in the West Bank

32. In its advisory opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the International Court of Justice held that the construction of the barrier was contrary to international law, despite the argument that its construction was consistent with the inherent right to self-defence of Israel and with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations.²⁹ The Court determined that Israel was under an obligation to immediately cease the construction of the barrier and to dismantle the structure, and to make reparation for all damage caused by its construction.³⁰ It is very problematic, in that regard, that the route of the barrier does not follow the Green Line but is largely located within the Occupied Palestinian Territory, capturing on its western side, or within so-called “fingers” extending deep into the Palestinian territory, several Israeli settlements located there.

33. Since the occupation of the West Bank in 1967, Israel has established an extensive system of roads and has improved or expanded existing roads. Although Israel explains that this work was, and continues to be, undertaken out of military needs and to improve infrastructure to the benefit of the Palestinian people, many such roads, such as routes 463 and 466, are built for use by Israelis only, and one cannot disagree with the conclusions of non-governmental organizations that this has been done to benefit and encourage the expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank.³¹ Between 1997 and 2004, the number of Jewish settlers in the

²⁹ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, 136, para. 163 (3) (A).

³⁰ Ibid., para. 163 (3) (B) and (C).

³¹ See, for example “Forbidden Roads. The Discriminatory West Bank Road Regime” in B’Tselem (August 2004).

West Bank increased from 152,300 to 232,700, an increase of almost 53 per cent and representing 10 per cent of the entire population of the West Bank (not including East Jerusalem).³²

34. The Special Rapporteur is troubled by the approach of the Supreme Court of Israel, which has rejected the outcome of the decision of the International Court of Justice and instead accepted the legitimacy and continued construction of the barrier on the basis of military necessity and the need to secure the safety of Israeli settlements in the West Bank. The Supreme Court's decisions have addressed the exact route of the barrier and often ordered changes to it but failed to address the legality of Israeli settlements in the West Bank. The International Court of Justice ruled, in that regard, that the policy applied by Israel since 1977 of establishing settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory was contrary to international law.³³ This position is consistent with that taken by the Security Council in response to the establishment of the policy by Israel,³⁴ and with the principle reflected in article 49 (6) of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which provides that an occupying power "shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies".

35. The Special Rapporteur notes that the route of the barrier does not always appear to coincide with the location and protection of Israelis. The wall in Bethlehem, for example (and as affirmed by the Supreme Court), extends through the city to encircle Rachel's Tomb for the purpose of protecting Israeli visitors to the tomb. Furthermore, the route of the barrier in Bethlehem has caused a dramatic collapse in the economy of what was before a relatively prosperous area and centre of commerce for the Palestinian people, and has also resulted in a steep decline in Bethlehem's tourism sector.³⁵

36. The Special Rapporteur heard from Government sources of a long-term plan to replace the current and not yet complete unilaterally-positioned barrier with an agreed international border with a future Palestinian State. Until this is achieved on the basis of genuine negotiations and agreement, the Special Rapporteur emphasizes that no part of the barrier must be treated as a fait accompli or annexation of territory. To do so would amount to an illegal annexation of territory by Israel.

³² See "Perpetual Limbo. Israel's Freeze on Unification of Palestinian Families in the Occupied Territories", in B'Tselem (July 2006).

³³ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, 136, para. 120.

³⁴ Security Council resolutions 452 (1979) and 465 (1980), para. 6.

³⁵ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Costs of Conflict: The Changing Face of Bethlehem (Jerusalem, United Nations, December 2004).

B. Impact of the barrier on the Palestinian people

37. As a physical obstruction, the barrier has an impact on the ability of the people in the West Bank to move from one place to another. Checkpoints at various locations are used for the security screening of people. A feature of these checkpoints is that many are closed without notice, this aimed at disrupting the execution of terrorist attacks. In April and May of 2007, 549 and 537 checkpoints were closed respectively. An average of almost 200 “flying checkpoints” each week were utilized by the Israeli Defense Forces during the same period.³⁶

38. Security measures by Israel must not have a disproportionate impact on the lives of ordinary Palestinian people. Two crucial elements are relevant in this regard in order both to comply with the requirements of international human rights and to counteract the experiences by Palestinians of the barrier causing increasing arbitrariness and oppression. There must be a reduction in the level of hardship to people moving inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The practical implementation of all security measures, including at checkpoints and terminals, must also be by professional, transparent, accountable and, to the greatest possible extent, civilian means. While the civilianization of such work appears to be an important means of reducing tensions in the practical implementation of such measures, it is essential that there be a high level of accountability and professional training of civilian actors, including training on human rights and humanitarian law. The Special Rapporteur was troubled, for example, by the presence of a contracted security civilian at Qalqiliya terminal, who strolled casually outside the facility with his finger permanently on the trigger of his weapon without any sense of discipline or discretion. The need to secure accountability and full compliance by Israel with its international obligations, including as the occupying power, speaks against privatization as the method by which security measures are transferred from the military to civilians.

39. As a result of closures and the system of permits regulating the movement of people from one area to another, the Palestinian people are adversely affected in their ability to gain access to education; health services, including emergency medical treatment; other social services; and places of employment. Access by ordinary Palestinians to their land and water resources, including through the devastation or separation from villages of agricultural land in the course of erecting the barrier, is also being impeded, in some cases to the point of having a devastating socio-economic impact on communities.

40. Delays at checkpoints have complicated childbirth for Palestinian women. This has resulted in the delivery of children at checkpoints and unattended roadside births, putting at risk the health of both child and mother, and leading to numerous miscarriages and the death of at least five mothers.³⁷ These hardships are reported to have contributed to an 8.2 per cent increase in home deliveries.³⁸ The Special Rapporteur was furthermore troubled to hear of three cases in

³⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Closure Update (April 2007).

³⁷ Henrietta Aswad, “Checkpoints Compound the Risks of Childbirth for Palestinian Woman”, 15 May 2007 (available from www.unfpa.org); and World Health Organization internal report, The issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints.

³⁸ Henrietta Aswad, ibid.

April 2007 in which Palestinian ambulance drivers are said to have been harassed and beaten at checkpoints in the Jenin area.³⁹ If true, not only were the civil rights of those individuals violated, as was the right to physical and mental health for all, as guaranteed under article 12 (1) of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, but it would also constitute a violation of international humanitarian law norms, which require that medical personnel be respected and protected at all times.

41. As a result of the barrier, Palestinian children encounter significant obstacles in attending or remaining at educational institutions. It also affects the movement of teaching staff, whether this be as a result of the barrier having been erected between “closed” communities and educational facilities, or the difficulties in obtaining special permits from the Israel Defense Forces to enter areas in which educational facilities are present.⁴⁰ As reflected in article 50 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, it is the duty of an occupying power to cooperate with national and local authorities to facilitate the proper working of all institutions devoted to the care and education of children. The Special Rapporteur was very troubled by reports of incidents involving attacks by the Israel Defense Forces on students, military raids on schools and the destruction of schools and school property.⁴¹

42. The permits regime also has an impact on the integrity of family units and the ability of men and women to marry with people outside their own permit zones. The permits regime, and checkpoint closures and procedures, have also had a negative impact on the ability of families to visit those in detention, whether sentenced prisoners or those held in administrative detention.⁴²

43. In its advisory opinion on the wall, the International Court of Justice, after having found international humanitarian law, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child applicable in respect of the conduct of Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, concluded that various infringements of rights enshrined in those treaties resulting from the wall and its associated regime could not be justified by military exigencies or by the requirements of national security or public order. Hence, the construction of the wall constituted a breach by Israel of various of its obligations under the applicable international humanitarian law and human rights instruments.⁴³ The Special Rapporteur acknowledges that many of the

³⁹ “Abuse of Ambulance Drivers in Jenin Area” (16 April 2007), available from the Al-Haq website www.alhaq.org.

⁴⁰ Defence for Children International, Palestine Section, “Sustained occupation, suspended dreams: an analysis of human rights violations against Palestinian children in 2005”, (Ramallah, 2005), pp. 55-58.

⁴¹ Ibid., pp. 58-62.

⁴² “Barred from contact: violation of the right to visit Palestinians held in Israeli prisons” in B’Tselem (September 2006).

⁴³ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, 136, para. 137.

human rights affected by the barrier and associated security measures, such as freedom of movement (article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights) and the right to privacy (art. 17) are subject to permissible limitations. In addition, during a publicly declared state of emergency, they may also be subject to derogations. As various interlocutors informed him of instances of arbitrariness or unprofessional conduct in the implementation of the security measures, and as the route of the barrier continues to breach international law, the Special Rapporteur is nevertheless convinced that the barrier and its associated regime continues to cause effects that violate the international obligations of Israel under both humanitarian law and human rights law. In respect of the Special Rapporteur's own mandate, it is even more important that the barrier and its associated measures are widely experienced by the Palestinians as unlawful, destructive to normal human life, and humiliating. As a consequence, the barrier has counterproductive effects by contributing to conditions that are conducive to the recruitment to terrorism.

V. SITUATION IN GAZA

44. Under the Disengagement Plan Implementation Law 2005, Israel has withdrawn all 21 Jewish settlements from the Gaza Strip. The Disengagement Plan ends, from the perspective of Israel, its occupation of the Gaza Strip and is in furtherance of a two-State solution in the pre-1948 territory of Palestine. While the Special Rapporteur accepts that the level of control by Israel over Gaza may fall short of occupation within the meaning of article 42 of The Hague Regulations, as a territory actually placed under the authority of a hostile army, Israel still exercises a good deal of control over the situation in the territory. With limited exceptions, Israel has sealed the borders of Gaza, and controls the only sea port in its vicinity. It retains a contingent of military personnel on the border between Egypt and Gaza, for the purpose of preventing the smuggling of arms from Egyptian territory into the Gaza Strip. Without the cooperation of Israel, Gaza is thus isolated from international trade routes and from its West Bank neighbours. The Israel Defense Forces also enforce a fishing limit of 6 nautical miles from the shore of Gaza, in marked contrast with the 20 nautical mile fishing limit under the 1995 Oslo Agreements, thus having a severe impact on the fishing industry of Gaza and its economy.⁴⁴

45. The consequent restriction of movement has resulted in similar consequences as those felt in the West Bank, outlined earlier in this report, particularly heightened in the context of the movement of persons between Gaza and the West Bank. If there is indeed to be a two-State solution in which Gaza and the West Bank are to function as a single State, as envisaged by the General Assembly in its 1948 Partition Plan for Palestine (General Assembly resolution 181 (II)) and under the 1995 Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, an urgent and concerted effort must be made to facilitate the movement of people and goods between the dislocated territories in a manner that has the least possible impact on movement and without the use of an arbitrary and non-reviewable permits regime.

⁴⁴ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "Gaza Fishing: An Industry in Danger" (April 2007).

46. The Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned about the recent deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Gaza, particularly following the numerous military interventions of the Israel Defense Forces since disengagement, including the bombing of the Gaza electricity power station on 28 June 2006, which destroyed six transformers responsible for 43 per cent of the total power capacity in Gaza. The Special Rapporteur is cognizant of the security threats arising from Gaza, heightened by recurring factional violence, and the fact that terrorist factions within the territory continue to repeatedly attack civilians in Israel. He nevertheless reminds Israel that international humanitarian law restricts the use of military force, including through the requirement to distinguish between civilians and military objectives.

VI. ISRAELI DEFENSE FORCE OPERATIONS

47. Particularly problematic to counter-terrorist operations in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory is the overlap between armed conflict and policing. The Israeli Defense Force is a conscripted armed force, with young soldiers facing a daily dilemma between the preservation of their own lives and the legitimate recognition and targeting of threats. This combination has led to many instances of unprofessional conduct, readily acknowledged by senior military staff and civil servants with whom the Special Rapporteur met. Such conduct can serve to undermine the very role of the Israel Defense Forces in seeking to achieve a sustainable end to terrorist activities. This is most palpably evident in the Israel Defense Forces security screening and search procedures at checkpoints, raising concerns about privacy and non-discrimination, particularly heightened in the case of women and children. The Special Rapporteur regrets that the Government of Israel chose not to share with him existing standing orders concerning searches by the Israel Defense Forces of persons, including those at checkpoints.

A. Use of “human shields”

48. Despite a decision of the Supreme Court of Israel in 2005 banning the use of human shields, the Special Rapporteur received allegations supported by videotape recordings of recent incidents in Nablus and Balata that Palestinians, including children, continue to be exposed to violence during the conduct of Israel Defense Forces operations by either forcing them to enter potentially dangerous buildings ahead of Israeli soldiers or to stand in front of military vehicles to stop the throwing of stones against those vehicles. Such unprofessional conduct may be deeply traumatizing for the individuals in question, in particular children, and has the effect of causing frustration and anger among the Palestinian people.

B. Demolition of houses

49. The Special Rapporteur heard from various interlocutors, including the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, of the demolition of housing by Israel. He was told of many such demolitions in response to the construction of houses without a permit or in some other way contrary to building laws, but was troubled to learn of the inconsistent and apparently discriminatory enforcement of such laws, whereby demolition consistently occurs in the case of property owned by Palestinians but rarely in the case of property owned by Israelis. According to reports, in July 2005, the village of

Khirbet Tana in Nablus was almost entirely demolished, including an elementary school which had previously had 40 pupils enrolled, leaving only a mosque and a single building standing.⁴⁵

50. As stated by the Human Rights Committee in its concluding observations on the second periodic report of Israel, the demolition of property and houses of families, some of whose members were or are suspected of involvement in terrorist activities or suicide bombings, contravenes the obligation of Israel to ensure without discrimination the right not to be subjected to arbitrary interference with one's home (art. 17), freedom to choose one's residence (art. 12), equality of all persons before the law and equal protection of the law (art. 26), and not to be subject to torture or cruel and inhuman treatment (art. 7). Although the Government's response to this view was that, in the midst of combat and when dictated by operational necessity, Israeli security forces may lawfully destroy structures used by terrorists, the Special Rapporteur remains concerned that the actual practice of the Israel Defense Forces appears to go well beyond such operational needs and does indeed amount to the breaches of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights noted by the Human Rights Committee.⁴⁶

C. Targeted killings and the killing of civilians

51. The Special Rapporteur is troubled by the decision of the Supreme Court concerning targeted killings, in which the Court correctly noted that, under international humanitarian law, a person directly participating in hostilities may during armed conflict be a legitimate military target, but where it applied an overly broad and vague explanation of what amounted to direct participation in hostilities and paid insufficient attention to the fact that not every instance of terrorist conduct falls under the law of armed conflict.⁴⁷

52. The Court nevertheless qualified its position by stating that such recourse must be by way of last resort and that arrest must always be preferred and actively pursued. It also determined that, in every case of a targeted killing, a thorough and independent investigation must be held as to the precision of the identification of the target and the circumstances in which the killing took place. The Special Rapporteur endorses the Court's decision in this regard, as a matter consistent with the right to life and authoritative jurisprudence concerning the establishment of thorough, independent and impartial investigations into the loss of life caused by State agents.⁴⁸ He is therefore troubled by reports that such investigations are rare, and, when carried out, are conducted internally, by members of the Israel Defense Forces, with details of such investigations and their findings not made public.⁴⁹ As emphasized by the Special Rapporteur on ⁴⁵ See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "Costs of conflict: Nablus after five years of conflict" (December 2005).

⁴⁶ Comments by the Government of Israel on the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee (CCPR/CO/78/ISR.Add.1), part III, para. 2.

⁴⁷ Public Committee against Torture in Israel v. The Government of Israel (HCJ 769/02).

⁴⁸ See, for example, Edwards v. United Kingdom (1992), ECHR 77.

⁴⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, The Humanitarian Monitor (April 2007), p. 4; and, more generally, Al-Haq, "Extrajudicial Killings", Update on Al-Haq's November 2006 extrajudicial executions, it is essential to ensure that the applicable rules of international human rights and humanitarian law are respected even in the midst of crisis, indeed especially in times of crisis.⁵⁰ Furthermore, where violations of law are found to have occurred, adequate reparation must be made.

53. The Special Rapporteur was encouraged to hear from the Israeli Security Agency its position that civilians taking direct part in hostilities may not be attacked if less harmful means, such as arrest and trial, can be employed, consistent with the decision of the Supreme Court. Such an approach, regrettably, does not appear to be borne out by statistics on civilian deaths. A total of 678 Palestinian civilians were killed in 2006, of which 127 were children.⁵¹ Between the start of the intifada in 2000 and the end of 2005, 728 Palestinian children were killed as a result of Israeli military activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, representing the highest number of child fatalities at the hand of Israeli forces in any five-year period since the 1967 occupation of the West Bank.⁵² The Special Rapporteur was alarmed to receive reports of the killing of persons apprehended by Israeli agents in situations where such persons could have been arrested or provided with medical treatment to prevent death.⁵³

VII. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

A. Conclusions

54. The Special Rapporteur is encouraged by the reconsideration by Israel of its derogation from aspects of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and its invitation to him to comment upon new counter-terrorism legislation currently being drafted. He identifies this cooperative enterprise as one to be commended as an element of best practice. He has, in contrast, also identified serious situations of incompatibility of the country's obligations background brief on Israel's extrajudicial killings in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (June 2007).

⁵⁰ OHCHR press release, "Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions calls for accountability for killings in Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel" (12 July 2006).

⁵¹ The casualties in these figures include deaths caused during the course of Israel Defense Forces operations, artillery shelling, search and arrest campaigns, barrier demonstrations, targeted killings and settler violence. The figures do not include events indirectly related to the occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, such as casualties from unexploded ordnance and the like, or where the circumstances of death remain unclear or are in dispute. See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, The Humanitarian Monitor (April 2007), pp. 5-6 and 25 (note 1).

⁵² Defence for Children International, Palestine Section, "Sustained occupation, suspended dreams: an analysis of human rights violations against Palestinian children in 2005" (Ramallah, 2005), p. 21.

⁵³ Al-Haq, "Extrajudicial Killings", Update on Al-Haq's November 2006 background brief on Israel's extrajudicial killings in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (June 2007).

pertaining to human rights and fundamental freedoms with its counter-terrorism law and practice. Such situations include the prohibition of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; the right to life and humanitarian law principles concerning legitimate targeting; the right to liberty and fair trial; and the severe impact of the construction of the barrier in the West Bank and associated measures on the enjoyment of civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights and freedoms in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Addressing the full range of those situations is imperative, not only to secure compliance by Israel with its international obligations but also to address conditions that may be conducive to recruitment to terrorism.

B. Recommendations

55. The Special Rapporteur recommends that Israel, in the development of its counter-terrorism legislation, ensure that definitions of terrorism and security suspects are precise and limited to the countering of terrorism and the maintenance of national security, respectively. Definitions surrounding the countering of terrorism should be restricted to the suppression and criminalization of acts of deadly or otherwise serious physical violence against civilians, i.e., members of the general population or segments of it, or the taking of hostages, coupled with the cumulative conditions identified by the Security Council in its resolution 1566 (2004). All legislation, regulations and military orders must comply with the requirements of the principle of legality with regard to accessibility, precision and non-retroactivity. Having achieved those requirements, the enactment by the Knesset of this new legislation should be accompanied by a repeal or revocation of all current counter-terrorism legislation, regulations and military orders. He further recommends that the Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law be repealed, without replacement.

56. The Special Rapporteur is encouraged by the decision of the Supreme Court of Israel regarding interrogation techniques by the Israeli Security Agency, but recommends that urgent steps be taken to ensure full compliance with that decision and associated international obligations. Since the proper application of the necessity defence under article 34 (11) of the Penal Law cannot validate conduct amounting to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, the Special Rapporteur recommends that steps be taken to establish mechanisms by which victims of such conduct are provided with an effective remedy. Given the concerns that the Special Rapporteur has with the independence of the Israeli Security Agency complaints inspector, the non-derogable and peremptory nature of the prohibitions, and the apparent lack of understanding by Israeli Security Agency officers of the parameters of the necessity defence, he further recommends that all complaints of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment be referred to the Attorney General's office for the immediate filing of criminal charges against the individual interrogator wherever such complaints point to conduct that, if proven, would amount to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and that only the courts may pronounce on the applicability and effect of the necessity defence.

57. With regard to arrest and detention, the Special Rapporteur recommends that Israel take steps to ensure that all persons are informed of the reasons for their detention at the time of their arrest. He recommends the amendment of the Criminal Procedures (Non-Resident Detainee Suspected of Security Offense) (Temporary Provision) Law 2006 to ensure that security suspects are provided with immediate and continued access to legal counsel and, where appropriate, family visits. In the context of administrative detention, he recommends that the terms “security of the area” and “public security”, currently under Military Order 1229, be defined with precision, and that steps be taken, such as the establishment of a panel of security-cleared counsel, to ensure that representations are able to be made to the district court on behalf of a detainee upon the making or extension of administrative detention orders. The practice of military or other courts authorizing administrative detention on the basis of evidence available neither to the detainee nor counsel should be discontinued as incompatible with article 14 (1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

58. The Special Rapporteur urges that care be taken to ensure that counter-terrorism law and practice never be used as a means of preventing or undermining the development of democracy in Palestinian territory. He further urges Israel to ensure that the detention or imprisonment of a child be used as a measure of last resort, that solitary confinement never be used by prison authorities as a means of coercion or punishment of children, and that all facilities in which children are detained provide educational care appropriate to the age of each child.

59. Given the illegality under international law of the existence and continued development of Jewish settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Special Rapporteur recommends that a decision be made immediately to withdraw all such settlements and to replace the still unfinished barrier, extending deep into Palestinian territory, with a security infrastructure that, by its geographical position, respects the Green Line or is otherwise accepted by the Palestinians. During the process of implementing such a decision, the Special Rapporteur recommends urgent action to ensure that the permits regime, the administration of checkpoints, and all other associated measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory do not have a disproportionate impact on the enjoyment of civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights in the territory. He also recommends that security measures be civilianized through means other than their privatization.

60. The Special Rapporteur urges Israel to respect the rules of international humanitarian law, including the fundamental requirement of distinguishing between civilians and military objectives when resorting to the use of force. This must be the case irrespective of whether Israel is responding to an armed attack from Gaza, Lebanon or elsewhere and whether it classifies the attack as terrorism.

61. The Special Rapporteur urges Israel to ensure that any demolition of housing or other destruction of private property conducted as a measure aimed at combating or preventing terrorism is resorted to in strict compliance with international law and is accompanied by adequate reparation. Due to the high emotional impact of such measures easily leading to counterproductive effects in a sustainable fight against terrorism, the Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government of Israel exercise extreme caution in resorting to such measures.

62. While acknowledging that military necessity may dictate the deliberate killing of enemy combatants during an armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur recommends that transparent laws and guidelines on the practice of targeted killings be established, and that they be strictly limited to persons directly participating in hostilities and as a means of last resort after all possible measures to apprehend the person have been taken. All such killings must be followed by a thorough and independent investigation as to the accuracy of the identification of the target, whether alternative means were available, and whether the action was undertaken in a manner ensuring that no civilian casualties were caused. The result of such investigations should be made public and, where violations of law are established, adequate reparation made.

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/10/8/Add.2
12 January 2009

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Tenth session
Agenda item 3

PROMOTION AND PROTECTION OF ALL HUMAN RIGHTS, CIVIL, POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND CULTURAL RIGHTS, INCLUDING THE RIGHT TO DEVELOPMENT

Report of the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Asma Jahangir

Addendum

MISSION TO ISRAEL AND THE OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORY

* Late submission.

 The summary of the present report is circulated in all official languages. The report itself, contained in the annex to the summary, is circulated as received, in the language of submission and in Arabic only.

Summary

The Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief carried out a mission to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory from 20 to 27 January 2008. In the present report she gives an overview of the international legal standards and the domestic legal framework on freedom of religion or belief. She also refers to the religious demography and highlights selected aspects of the status of freedom of religion or belief in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Well aware of the complex situation and the heightened atmosphere of tension and militancy, the Special Rapporteur focuses on the following issues of concern: restricted access to places of worship; the preservation and protection of religious sites; the indication of religious affiliation on official identity cards; matters of personal status; the preferential treatment of Orthodox Judaism; the religious rights of persons deprived of their liberty; advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence; conversions and missionary activities; and further concerns within the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

In the last part of the report, the Special Rapporteur presents her conclusions and recommendations. She notes that the State of Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory are home to a rich diversity of religions or beliefs and host religious sites revered by believers from all over the world. However, liberty of movement, including access to places of worship, is restricted, in particular for Palestinian Muslims and Christians, through the existing system of permits, visas, checkpoints and the Barrier. While the Government of Israel informed the Special Rapporteur that these restrictions were necessary for security reasons, she would like to emphasize that any measure taken to combat terrorism must comply with States' obligations under international law. The Special Rapporteur recommends, inter alia, that all parties - especially in the framework of a possible peace agreement - bind themselves legally to protect the rights of religious minorities and pay particular attention to include comprehensive guarantees for equality and non-discrimination on grounds of religion or belief. Moreover, she recommends that the Government of Israel issue non-selective regulations in order to protect and preserve religious sites on a non-discriminatory basis. Additional recommendations refer to official documents, matters of personal status and training for staff members of the police, military forces and personnel of detention facilities. Lastly, in both the State of Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence should be effectively investigated, prosecuted and punished.

Annex

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL RAPPORTEUR ON FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF, ASMA JAHANGIR, ON HER MISSION TO ISRAEL AND THE OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORY (20-27 JANUARY 2008)

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs	Page
I. INTRODUCTION	1 - 5	4
II. INTERNATIONAL LEGAL STANDARDS	6 - 9	5
III. DOMESTIC LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF	10 - 20	6
IV. RESPECT FOR FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF IN ISRAEL AND THE OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORY	21 - 67	8
A. Religious demography	21 - 23	8
B. Issues of concern	24 - 67	9
V. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS	68 - 85	20

I. INTRODUCTION

1. Following invitations by the Government of Israel and by the Palestinian Authority, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief carried out a mission to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory from 20 to 27 January 2008. During her visit, the Special Rapporteur met with Government officials and political leaders as well as representatives of religious or belief communities, members of civil society and academics. She travelled to Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Daliyat al Carmel, Haifa, Nazareth, Ramallah, Bethlehem, Hebron, Nablus and Qalqilya.
2. The Special Rapporteur wishes to thank both the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority for the cooperation extended to her before, during and after the country visit. In Israel, the Special Rapporteur held talks, inter alia, with the Interior Minister, the Religious Affairs Minister, the Deputy Foreign Minister, the Deputy State Attorney for Special Affairs, the Chairman of the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee of the Knesset, a Supreme Court Justice, the Director General of the Head Rabbinate and the mayor of Daliyat al Carmel. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Special Rapporteur met, inter alia, with the Chief of Staff of the President of the Palestinian Authority, the Director General for International Relations of the Palestinian Authority, the Governor of Nablus, the Director General and Commissioner General of the Palestinian Independent Commission for Citizens' Rights, the President of Al-Najah National University as well as representatives of the Islamic Waqf in East Jerusalem and Hebron.
3. During her visit, the Special Rapporteur talked with religious leaders and representatives of the Baha'is, Christians, Druze, Jews, Muslims and Samaritans. She is also grateful for the information she received from members of various domestic and international civil society organizations as well as from individual academics, journalists and lawyers.
4. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur benefitted from meetings with the United Nations Special Co-ordinator and Deputy Special Co-ordinator for the Middle East Peace Process (UNSCO) as well as with representatives from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM). She sincerely appreciates the outstanding logistical support provided by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.
5. The present report first outlines international legal standards and then gives an overview of the domestic legal framework on freedom of religion or belief. In the third part, the Special Rapporteur refers to the religious demography and highlights selected aspects of the status of freedom of religion or belief in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In the last part, the Special Rapporteur presents her conclusions and recommendations.

II. INTERNATIONAL LEGAL STANDARDS

6. The Special Rapporteur would like to refer to previous reports¹ with regard to the main international legal standards pertinent to her mandate. These include articles 2, 18-20 and 26-27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; article 2 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; article 5 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination; articles 2, 14 and 30 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and article 12 of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families. Apart from the latter, Israel has ratified all of the above-mentioned human rights treaties.

7. Upon ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the State of Israel expressed its reservation with regard to article 7 (b) of the Convention concerning the appointment of women to serve as judges of religious courts where this is prohibited by the laws of any of the religious communities in Israel and with regard to article 16 of the Convention to the extent that the laws on personal status which are binding on the various religious communities in Israel do not conform with the provisions of that article. Upon ratification of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the State of Israel reserved the right to apply the religious law of the parties concerned to the extent that such law is inconsistent with its obligations under the Covenant.

8. The Special Rapporteur is also guided in her mandate by other relevant declarations, resolutions and guidelines of various United Nations bodies, including by the General Assembly, the Human Rights Committee, the former Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council. Of these instruments, most relevant for the mandate are articles 2, 18 and 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.

9. The legal framework of her mandate also includes relevant provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocols. As emphasized for example by the Human Rights Committee, the application of international humanitarian law and of international human rights law is not mutually exclusive, but is complementary.² With regard to the applicability in the Occupied

¹ See E/CN.4/2005/61, paras. 15-20 and E/CN.4/2006/5, annex, as well as the online digest of her framework for communications (www2.ohchr.org/english/issues/religion/standards.htm).

² Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 (2004): “the Covenant applies also in situations of armed conflict to which the rules of international humanitarian law are applicable. While in respect of certain Covenant rights, more specific rules of international humanitarian law may be especially relevant for the purpose of the interpretation of the Covenant rights, both spheres of law are complementary, not mutually exclusive”. See also the joint report on the situation of detainees at Guantánamo Bay (E/CN.4/2006/120, paras. 15-16), where the five Special Procedures mandate-holders refer to the International Court of Justice Advisory Opinions of 8 July 1996 (I.C.J. Reports 1996, page 240, para. 25) and of 9 July 2004 (I.C.J. Reports 2004, page 178, para. 106).

Palestinian Territory of certain rules of international humanitarian law and human rights instruments, the Special Rapporteur would like to refer to the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004, where this issue is discussed in detail.³

III. DOMESTIC LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF

10. Due to its history and various transition provisions, the domestic legal framework is characterised by a mosaic of applicable laws. In addition to laws enacted by the State of Israel during the past 60 years, the legal framework also includes laws from the Ottoman rule (1516-1917) and from the British mandate period (1920-1948) as well as religious laws and English laws, including the “substance of common law and the doctrines of equity in force in England”.⁴

11. Already the League of Nations’ Palestine Mandate of 24 July 1922 prohibited discrimination on religious grounds and addressed issues such as free access to the holy places, religious buildings and sites and the free exercise of worship. Furthermore, the 1922 Palestine Order-in-Council stipulated that all persons in Palestine shall enjoy full liberty of conscience and free exercise of their forms of worship subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals.

12. On 14 May 1948, Jewish communities of the dissolved British mandate of Palestine declared the establishment of a Jewish State, to be known as the State of Israel. This Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel also provides that the State of Israel “will ensure complete equality of social and political rights to all its inhabitants irrespective of religion, race or sex; it will guarantee freedom of religion, conscience, language, education and culture; it will safeguard the Holy Places of all religions”.

13. The 1948 Law and Administration Ordinance No. 1 stipulates that the law which existed in Palestine on 14 May 1948 shall remain in force, insofar as there is nothing therein repugnant to this Ordinance or to the other laws which may be enacted by or on behalf of the Provisional Council of State, and subject to such modifications as may result from the establishment of the State and its authorities.

14. The 1950 Law of Return provides that every Jew has the right to come to Israel as an oleh (immigrant to Israel). An oleh’s visa shall be granted to every Jew who has expressed his desire to settle in Israel, unless the Minister of Interior is satisfied that the applicant is engaged in an activity directed against the Jewish people or is likely to endanger public health or the security of the State or is a person with a criminal past, likely to endanger public welfare. For the purposes of the 1950 Law of Return, “Jew” means a person who was born of a Jewish mother or has become converted to Judaism and who is not a member of another religion.

³ International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, pages 171-181, paras. 86-113.

⁴ Article 46 of the 1922 Palestine Order-in-Council, which was later absorbed into the law of the State of Israel by section 11 of the 1948 Law and Administration Ordinance No. 1.

15. Furthermore, a law of 27 June 1967 protects the holy sites from desecration and any other violation and from anything likely to violate the freedom of access of the members of the different religions to the places sacred to them or their feelings towards those places.

16. Under section 173 of the Penal Law, a person who “publishes any print, writing, picture or effigy calculated to outrage the religious feelings or belief of other persons”, or who “utters in a public place and in the hearing of another person any word or sound calculated to outrage his religious feelings or belief” is liable to imprisonment of one year. Section 144D of the Penal Law prohibits incitement to an act of violence or terrorism and prohibits the possession of publications inciting to violence or terror. Furthermore, hostility based on religion or affiliation to a religious group is to be taken into account as an aggravating factor by the courts when adjudicating criminal offences according to section 144F of the Penal Law. Approval by the Deputy State Attorney (Special Functions) is required to initiate investigations into matters of great public sensitivity, for example concerning hate offences and incitement to violence.

17. According to the 1984 Basic Law “The Judiciary”, judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court, district courts, magistrate’s courts, religious courts and other courts designated by law. The Supreme Court sitting as a High Court of Justice is competent to order religious courts to hear a particular matter within their jurisdiction or to refrain from hearing or continue hearing a particular matter not within their jurisdiction. Moreover, section 1 of the 1992 Basic Law “Human Dignity and Liberty”, as amended, provides that fundamental human rights in Israel are founded upon recognition of the value of the human being, the sanctity of human life, and the principle that all persons are free; these rights shall be upheld in the spirit of the principles set forth in the Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel.

18. Some international agreements and treaties also refer to religious places and related questions of access. For example, in the Fundamental Agreement of 30 December 1993 between the Holy See and the State of Israel, both sides affirmed their continuing commitment to respect the status quo in the Christian holy places and the respective rights of the Christian communities (art. 4). Furthermore, the peace treaty of 26 October 1994 between Israel and Jordan stipulates that “each party will provide freedom of access to places of religious and historical significance” and that “Israel respects the present special role of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in Muslim Holy shrines in Jerusalem” (art. 9).

19. With regard to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Palestinian Legislative Council ratified the Palestinian Basic Law on 29 May 2002, and further amendments were adopted in 2003 and 2005. Article 4 of the Palestinian Basic Law provides that Islam is the official religion in Palestine; that respect and sanctity of all other heavenly religions shall be maintained; and that the principles of Islamic Shari’a shall be the main source of legislation. All Palestinians are equal under the law and judiciary, without discrimination because of race, sex, colour, religion, political views or disability (art. 9). Furthermore, basic human rights and freedoms shall be protected and respected and the Palestinian Authority shall work without delay to become a party to regional and international covenants and declarations that protect human rights (art. 10). According to article 18 of the Palestinian Basic Law, freedom of belief, worship and performance of religious rituals are guaranteed, provided that they do not violate public order or public morals. Moreover, Shari'a affairs and personal status matters shall be assumed by Shari'a and religious courts in accordance with law (art. 101).

20. For marriage, divorce and other personal status matters of Muslims in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the 1976 Jordanian Law of Personal Status is applied in the West Bank, whereas Gazan Muslims are governed by the 1954 Law of Family Rights issued during the Egyptian administration of the Gaza Strip. In East Jerusalem, the personal status jurisdictions of Israeli, Jordanian and Palestinian authorities compete. Furthermore, recognised Christian communities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory apply their own personal status laws in their respective religious courts.

IV. RESPECT FOR FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF IN ISRAEL AND THE OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORY

A. Religious demography

21. According to official data from the Israel Central Bureau of Statistics, the population of Israel numbered 7,111,700 inhabitants as of 31 December 2006. The population of Israel is comprised of Jews (about 75.7 per cent), Muslims (about 16.6 per cent), Christians (about 1.7 per cent Arab Christians and 0.4 per cent non-Arab Christians) and Druze (about 1.6 per cent), while about 4 per cent of the population of Israel has not been classified by religion.

22. Certain religious communities have the status of being a "recognized" religion or religious community, some of them already since Ottoman rule or the British Mandate period. The religious courts of these communities are granted jurisdiction in matters of personal status, such as marriage and divorce. The following religions and denominations have been officially recognized so far: Armenian Catholic, Armenian Orthodox, Baha'i, Chaldaic (Catholic), Druze, Evangelical Episcopal (Anglican), Jewish, Maronite, Muslim, Greek Catholic, Greek Orthodox, Latin (Roman Catholic), Syrian Catholic and Syrian Orthodox. The applications for State recognition of the Ethiopian Orthodox, the Coptic Orthodox and the United Churches Council of Israel are pending. Further religious communities, such as the Baptists, Lutherans, Quaker and Samaritans, operate in Israel without the status as "recognized" religions.

23. With regard to the population in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the 2007 census by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics indicates a total population of 3,761,646 individuals. No disaggregated official data seems to be available concerning the religious demography in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It is estimated that about 98 per cent of Palestinian residents of the Occupied Palestinian Territory are Sunni Muslims and less than 2 per cent are Christians. Furthermore, the small Samaritan religious community counts around 700 members, half of them living on Mount Gerizim near the West Bank city of Nablus and the other half living near the Israeli city of Tel Aviv.

B. Issues of concern

24. The Special Rapporteur would like to highlight selected aspects of the status of freedom of religion or belief in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. She is well aware of the complex situation and the heightened atmosphere of tension and militancy. The Special Rapporteur will focus on the following issues of concern: (1) restricted access to places of worship; (2) preservation and protection of religious sites; (3) indication of religious affiliation on official identity cards; (4) matters of personal status; (5) preferential treatment of Orthodox Judaism; (6) religious rights of persons deprived of their liberty; (7) advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence; (8) conversions and missionary activities; and (9) further concerns within the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

1. Restricted access to places of worship

25. A major issue of concern for the Special Rapporteur's mandate are restrictions on the access of believers to places of worship in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Many of their shrines are located next to each other and some are sacred to believers from different religions.

(a) Situation of Muslims and Christians

26. The Israeli authorities control and restrict Palestinian movement through a system of permits, checkpoints, curfews, visas and the Barrier.⁵ Due to this elaborate system, millions of Muslims and Christians have reportedly been impeded since 1993 from worshipping at some of the sites they consider to be their most holy places in the world, especially in Jerusalem.⁶ This applies, for example, to Palestinians who want to attend religious services at the Al-Aqsa mosque or the Church of the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem. Their movement is also restricted within the Occupied Palestinian Territory, e.g. concerning access to the Ibrahimi mosque/Tomb of the Patriarchs in Hebron or the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported that in April 2008 there were a total of 607 closure obstacles in the West Bank, such as checkpoints, earth mounds, road blocks, trenches and road gates.⁷

27. The closure regime caused difficulties especially during the religious holiday of Ramadan in 2007, when due to the long queues at checkpoints many Muslims could not observe their prayers and break the fast at the mosque of their choice. There may also be an adverse social and psychological impact, for example when Palestinian applicants do not receive travel permits for the celebration of religious festivals, marriages or funeral ceremonies with their family members who live in different cities.

⁵ See the Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 6/19 (A/HRC/8/18, paras. 14-39).

⁶ OCHA, The Humanitarian Impact of the West Bank Barrier on Palestinian Communities – East Jerusalem, Update No. 7, p. 37 (www.ochaopt.org/documents/Jerusalem-30July2007.pdf).

⁷ OCHA, Closure Update May 2008 (www.ochaopt.org/documents/UpdateMay2008.pdf).

28. Furthermore, on several occasions age restrictions have been imposed by the Government of Israel on the access to al-Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount in Jerusalem. During Ramadan in 2007, for example, sometimes only Palestinians over the age of 45 were allowed entrance and at other times only Jerusalem identity cardholders or only residents of the old city over the age of 50 were permitted. On some Fridays, children were allowed to cross Israeli checkpoints with older relatives but on the last Friday of Ramadan in 2007 even young children were reportedly turned back. On 21 September 2007, no access was permitted for Palestinians from the West Bank since all checkpoints were closed for the Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur.⁸

29. The Special Rapporteur's predecessor had also transmitted a communication on 10 June 2004 to the Government of Israel concerning allegations that the renewal of visas for Christian clergy was obstructed by Israeli authorities (E/CN.4/2005/61/Add.1, para. 148). Visas for priests, religious men and women as well as seminarians were allegedly denied or were renewed with severe limitations, including with regard to their validity and the number of permitted entries. The new practice of issuing only single entry visas reportedly hindered the clergy's ability to carry out their pastoral ministry in an effective way. The Latin Patriarchate of Jerusalem for example includes Palestine, Israel and Jordan and it is feared that these different areas will be disconnected if Jordanian clergy are not allowed to move between Jordan and Israel or the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Similarly, the dioceses of several other Christian communities also cover Cyprus, Jordan, Lebanon or Syria. Since a majority of clergy and seminarians is Jordanian, many parishes might ultimately be left without priests and seminaries might be closed. Furthermore, religiously motivated visits for believers living abroad, including pilgrimages to the religious sites in Bethlehem and Jerusalem, are adversely affected by the Barrier which has created a concrete separation between these cities.

30. The Government of Israel informed the Special Rapporteur that all of these restrictions to movement are necessary for security reasons. One of her official interlocutors in Israel stated, from a military perspective, that "before you can guarantee quality of life you have to save lives". The Special Rapporteur would like to reiterate that the State's obligation to protect and promote human rights, including every human being's inherent right to life, requires it to take effective measures to combat terrorism. Several special procedures mandate-holders have publicly shared in the unequivocal condemnation of terrorism but have at the same time voiced their profound concern at the multiplication of policies, legislation and practices increasingly being adopted by many countries in the name of the fight against terrorism which affect negatively the enjoyment of virtually all human rights.⁹ The Special Rapporteur would like to emphasize that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism complies with their obligations under international law, in particular human rights and humanitarian law as detailed further below.

⁸ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor No. 17, September 2007, p. 11 (www.ochaopt.org/documents/HM_Sep07.pdf).

⁹ See for example the joint statement by participants of the tenth annual meeting of special procedures mandate-holders in June 2003 (E/CN.4/2004/4, annex I).

(b) International legal standards

31. With regard to international human rights law, the State must guarantee, inter alia, freedom of religion or belief as well as liberty of movement and must respect the principle of non-discrimination. The importance of the freedom of religion or belief is underlined by article 4 (2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which stipulates that, even in time of public emergency or war, no derogation from article 18 of the Covenant is permissible.¹⁰ Furthermore, freedom to manifest one's religion or belief may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others. This list of permissible limitation grounds does not include the protection of "national security", unlike for example in articles 12 (3), 19 (3) or 21 of the Covenant. A comparison with the text of these articles also reveals that article 18 (3) does not allow restrictions on freedom of religion or belief "for all of the reasons stemming from the concept of ordre public under French civil law but rather only to avoid disturbances to public order in the narrow sense".¹¹ Furthermore, laws imposing limitations on the freedom to manifest one's religion or belief should not be arbitrary or unreasonable and any assessment as to the necessity of a limitation should be made on objective considerations. In addition, the burden of justifying a limitation upon a right guaranteed under the Covenant lies with the State. Consequently, it seems difficult to argue that the practice of imposing age limits for access to some religious places on specific occasions would pass these tests.

32. While the right to liberty of movement according to article 12 of Covenant may be subject to restrictions which are provided by law and are necessary to protect, for example, national security, such restrictions must also be consistent with the other rights recognized in the Covenant. Consequently, freedom of religion or belief and the prohibition of discrimination may be decisive in the evaluation of whether a restriction on the liberty of movement is permissible or not.¹² With regard to multiple forms of discrimination based on grounds such as religion, race or ethnic origin, the Special Rapporteur's predecessor has already emphasized that the identity of many minorities, or even large groups of people, is defined by both racial and religious aspects and that many instances of discrimination are aggravated by the effects of multiple identities (A/CONF.189/PC.1/7, para. 6). The Human Rights Committee emphasized in its general comment No. 27 that it would be a clear violation of the Covenant if the liberty of movement was restricted by making distinctions of any kind, such as on the basis of race or religion.

¹⁰ The Human Rights Committee has addressed the issues of derogations and the state of emergency in Israel in its concluding observations (CCPR/CO/78/ISR, para. 12 and CCPR/C/79/Add.93, para. 11).

¹¹ See Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. CCPR Commentary, Kehl am Rhein (2nd edition, 2005), art. 18, para. 39.

¹² Ibid., art. 12, para. 32.

33. Furthermore, the principle of proportionality requires that restrictive measures must be appropriate to achieve their protective function, must be the least intrusive instrument amongst those which might achieve the desired result, and must be proportionate to the interest to be protected. The various restrictions imposed on the access of Palestinians to religious sites - as documented in the High Commissioner's report on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 6/19 (see A/HRC/8/18, paras. 14-39) - appear to be disproportionate to their aim as well as discriminatory and arbitrary in their application.

34. Moreover, international humanitarian law also protects the freedom to practise one's religion through religious observances, services and rites. With regard to the rights of the civilian population in a period of occupation, the Fourth Geneva Convention provides that the protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for "their religious convictions, and practices and their manners and customs" (art. 27). They must be able to practise their religion freely, without any restrictions other than those necessary for the maintenance of public law and morals. According to article 58 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, the "Occupying Power shall permit ministers of religion to give spiritual assistance to the members of their religious communities". Referring to international humanitarian law, the High Commissioner concluded in her recent report (see A/HRC/8/18, para. 59) that Israel should take the necessary measures to ease existing restrictions on local and foreign clergy and allow unhampered movement and access for spiritual leaders to communicate with members of their faith.

(c) Situation of Jews

35. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, there have been incidents and problems of safe access to religious sites revered by Jews, such as Joseph's Tomb in Nablus or Shalom Al Israel synagogue in Jericho. The Special Rapporteur would like to remind that these two places in the West Bank have been designated as Jewish holy sites according to Annex I of the 1995 Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. According to its article 5, "Joint Mobile Units" should ensure free, unimpeded and secure access to these sites as well as ensure the peaceful use of such sites, prevent any potential instances of disorder and respond to any incident.

36. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur was informed that, according to decisions of the Government of Israel and several court rulings, Jews are not allowed to pray in any overt manner on the al-Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount. In addition, the Chief Rabbinate of Israel has enunciated a prohibition under Jewish law against entering this area and has placed a sign to that effect at the entrance of the pedestrian pathway indicating that "according to the Torah it is forbidden to enter the area of the Temple Mount due to its sacredness". Some rabbis, however, argue that Jewish law permits access of Jews to certain parts of the al-Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount.

2. Preservation and protection of Muslim and Christian religious sites

37. Several legal provisions in Israel (see paras. 15-16 above) aim to safeguard and preserve sacred places from desecration and stipulate criminal sanctions for the violation of a holy site. The Religious Affairs Minister is charged with the implementation of the 1967 Protection of Holy Sites Law and may issue regulations as to any matter relating to such implementation. However, all the 136 places which have been designated as holy sites until the end of 2007 are Jewish and the Government of Israel has so far only issued implementing regulations for Jewish holy sites.¹³ This approach may ultimately have discriminatory effects for the preservation of non-Jewish places and related budgetary allocations since the determination of holy sites also provides state funding to institutions which protect the sanctity of these places and preserve them from damage. Reportedly, there is an urgent need to preserve and protect Muslim and Christian religious sites, many of which have been made inaccessible or neglected since decades. In some cases, such religious sites have been converted into bars, night clubs or stores, which may also offend religious sensitivities.

38. One example for the sensitive issue of religious sites and their preservation is the controversy about excavation works in Jerusalem on the pathway leading from the Western Wall Plaza to the Mughrabi Gate of al-Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount. In February 2007, the UNESCO Director-General decided to dispatch a technical mission to the Old City of Jerusalem. The technical mission recommended in its report that the Government of Israel should be asked to stop immediately the archaeological excavations, to engage immediately a consultation process with all concerned parties and to agree upon a plan of action before taking any further action and decision thereon.¹⁴ In March 2007, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed its concerns about the excavations beneath and around Al-Aqsa Mosque and urged the State of Israel to ensure that the excavations in no way endanger the mosque and impede access to it (CERD/C/ISR/CO/13, para. 36). Another recent excavation project in the area of the Arab neighbourhood of Silwan, which is located a few hundred metres from al-Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount, elicited protests and on 18 March 2008 the Israeli High Court of Justice ordered a halt to the excavations in Silwan (A/HRC/8/18, para. 41).

39. The Special Rapporteur would like to reiterate that places of worship, religious sites and cemeteries have more than a material significance for the religious community attached to them. General Assembly resolution 55/254 calls upon all States to exert their utmost efforts to ensure that religious sites are fully respected and protected as well as to adopt adequate measures aimed at preventing such acts or threats of violence. Furthermore, the General Assembly encourages all States, relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the media to promote a culture of tolerance and respect for the diversity of religions and for religious sites, which represent an important aspect of the collective heritage of humankind. The Special Rapporteur would like to emphasize that the concept of collective heritage of humankind could be used more prominently when addressing on a case-by-case basis the intricate questions of how to preserve and protect religious sites.

¹³ US Department of State, International Religious Freedom Report 2008: Israel and the Occupied Territories (www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2008/108484.htm).

¹⁴ Report of the UNESCO technical mission to the Old City of Jerusalem (176 EX/Special Plenary Meeting/INF.1, paras. 49 and 51).

3. Indication of religious affiliation on official identity cards

40. Every permanent resident of Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory above the age of 16, whether a citizen or not, is required by law to carry an official identity card. There are four kinds of identity cards: Israeli, West Bank Palestinian, Gaza Palestinian and Jerusalem Palestinian identity cards. The Government of Israel started issuing identity cards to Palestinian residents of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip following their occupation in 1967. Subsequent to the Oslo Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, the Palestinian Authority issues its residents with Palestinian identity cards; however, Israeli authorities control the population registry and identity cards of Palestinians are issued on the basis of this registry.

41. The approach with regard to indicating the holders' religious affiliation is different with the four kinds of identity cards. Since 2005, identity cards of Israeli citizens no longer state the holder's ethnic affiliation; however, it can still be determined whether a citizen is Jewish or not when the birth date of Jews are indicated in Hebrew letters according to the Jewish calendar while listing that of others according to the Gregorian calendar. Identity cards of Palestinians with West Bank or Gaza identity cards show whether the cardholder is Muslim or Christian. No other options of religious affiliation are allowed and consequently those who are not believers are classified the same way as their parents. Palestinians holding Jerusalem identity cards were listed until 2002 as "Arab" on their identity card but this approach has been discontinued.

42. The degree of somebody's ability to move in and out of Jerusalem or within the Occupied Palestinian Territory reportedly depends on which type of identity card he or she holds. The Special Rapporteur would like to reiterate that indicating the religious affiliation on official identity cards carries a serious risk of abuse or subsequent discrimination based on religion or belief, which has to be weighed against the possible reasons for disclosing the holder's religion. In case the State wishes to include on official documents an indication of religious affiliation, it would be discriminatory to provide only the possibility to choose from a limited number of officially recognized religions. In addition, any indication of one's religious affiliation on official documents should in general be on a voluntary basis (A/63/161, para. 73).

43. Furthermore, terrorist-profiling practices based on stereotypical assumptions that persons of a certain religion or ethnic origin are particularly likely to commit attacks may lead to practices that are incompatible with the principle of non-discrimination.¹⁵ Consequently, it seems advisable to have no direct or indirect reference to the individual's religious or ethnic affiliation on official identity cards and in related application forms (A/63/161, para. 76).

¹⁵ Concerning terrorist-profiling based on ethnic origin and religion, see the report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism (A/HRC/4/26, paras. 32-62 and 83-89).

4. Matters of personal status

44. In matters of personal status, such as marriage, divorce and, to some extent, maintenance, guardianship and the adoption of minors, jurisdiction is vested in the judicial institutions of the respective religious communities. Problems may arise when the parties to a legal proceeding in matters of personal status belong to different religious communities or when it is not clear if the dispute falls within the jurisdiction of any religious court based on the substantive law of each denomination.

(a) Marriage

45. Under domestic law, more than 250,000 Israeli citizens and residents are currently barred from marrying in Israel. These include people who are unmarriageable according to Jewish law, immigrants who are not recognized by the Orthodox Rabbinat as certain to be Jewish, and Israeli citizens who have no officially recognized religion. The Special Rapporteur was informed that more than 7,000 Israelis married abroad in 2002, which represents about 8 per cent of all Israelis who married in Israel and abroad that year. In a judgment of 21 November 2006, the Supreme Court of Israel confirmed that civil marriages which have taken place between Jewish Israeli residents and citizens outside of Israel are indeed valid in Israel.

46. The Special Rapporteur would like to emphasize that freedom of religion or belief also includes theistic, non-theistic and atheistic beliefs as well as the right not to profess any religion or belief. In order to prevent any discrimination based on religion or belief, the State should provide a civil alternative for those who are currently ineligible for marriage in Israel. In this regard, during the British Mandate period, article 65 A was added to the Palestine-Order-in-Council in 1939, according to which “provision may be made by ordinance for the celebration, dissolution and annulment of marriages of persons neither of whom is a Muslim or a member of a religious community and for the granting by the courts of orders or decrees in connection with the marriages of such persons, their dissolution or annulment”. However, the Mandate authorities never enacted implementing legislation and since 1948 the State of Israel has maintained religious law in matters of personal status and communal jurisdiction. The Government of Israel decided in September 2007 to resume consular marriages for Israeli residents abroad, but this decision only applies when neither partner belongs to a recognized religious community in Israel and if one or both of them are nationals of the country of the consulate in question. Consequently, there is still no domestic solution available for those who are ineligible to marry in Israel as detailed above.

(b) Dissolution of marriage

47. With regard to the dissolution of marriages where the spouses have different religious affiliations or no religious affiliation at all, the 1969 law on Matters of Dissolution of Marriage (Jurisdiction in Special Cases) was amended in July 2005. Spouses with different religious backgrounds wishing to dissolve their marriage no longer need to first apply to the president of the Supreme Court for a determination of jurisdiction but may apply directly to a Family Matters Court. This court can seek the consul of the relevant religious court to determine whether it is necessary to dissolve the marriage according to the religious laws of either spouse for the purpose of remarriage.

48. While the Special Rapporteur welcomes the recent amendments, she notes that the law does not apply to spouses who are both Jews, Muslims, Druzes or members of the same recognized Christian community unless one or both of them are foreigners. Consequently, matters of divorce of such couples have been left in the hands of the religious courts of their respective communities.

(c) Religious courts

49. The 1955 Religious Judges Law and the 1962 Druze Courts Law have been interpreted by Jewish, Muslim and Druze religious leaders to mean that judges in these courts must be male. The Special Rapporteur was informed that no women serve as judges in the religious courts of the various recognized religions and only a small number of municipal religious councils include women. She would like to refer to the concluding comments of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 25), in which the Committee expressed its concerns at the State party's statement that the reservations to articles 7 (b) and 16 of the CEDAW are "unavoidable at this point in time" and its position that laws based on religious values cannot be reformed. It is important to apply a gender perspective and to ensure that women are not discriminated against, including in matters of personal status.

5. Preferential treatment of Orthodox Judaism

50. The State of Israel confers certain powers upon the Chief Rabbinate, which is organized under law and supported by public funding. Concerns have been voiced that preferential treatment is given to the Orthodox Rabbinate to the detriment not only of other religious or belief communities but also of non-Orthodox Jewish groups, such as Reform or Conservative branches. Non-Orthodox Jewish institutions do not have official status and consequently their rabbis cannot officiate at marriages in Israel. Allocations of state resources reportedly favour Orthodox Jewish institutions. Secular or non-observant Jews may also encounter problems if they do not want to be subject to Orthodox religious norms, for example with regard to dietary or burial provisions. The Government of Israel in its initial report to the Human Rights Committee acknowledged that it seems difficult to claim that "freedom from religion" is fully protected, particularly for the Jewish population, due to the interpenetration of religion and Government in several forms, for example by a series of legal institutions and practices which apply Jewish religious norms to the Jewish population (see CCPR/C/81/Add.13, para. 532).

51. The Supreme Court of Israel has ruled on related issues, especially with regard to the recognition of conversions. In 1995, it decided that the Ministry of Interior had no authority to refuse to recognize non-Orthodox conversions to Judaism performed inside Israel for purposes of recognition under the Law of Return. In another decision of 2005, it held that non-Jews living legally in Israel would be able to convert to Judaism by Reform and Conservative religious courts abroad and that State authorities would register their conversion. However, in applying Jewish religious law in matters of personal status, the Orthodox Rabbinical Courts do not recognize persons converted by a non-Orthodox body as Jews which leads to problems as explained above for persons deemed to be unmarriageable in Israel.

6. Religious rights of persons deprived of their liberty

52. Although the Government of Israel confirmed that all detainees must be given the opportunity, to the extent practicable, to observe the commandments of their religion (see CCPR/C/81/Add.13, para. 331), the Special Rapporteur has received reports that the religious rights of detainees are not fully respected. While there are places for prayer for Jewish detainees and rabbis have been appointed for detention facilities, there are no or few religious representatives for Muslim and Christian detainees. The Special Rapporteur would like to reiterate rule 41 of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (see A/60/399, para. 81) which provides that a qualified representative of a religion should be appointed or approved if the institution contains a sufficient number of prisoners of the same religion and that the arrangement should be on a full-time basis if the number of prisoners justifies it and conditions permit.

53. Furthermore, Muslim detainees do not necessarily have access to books of religious observance and instruction of their denomination. Reportedly, collective prayers for Muslims are allowed in detention centres only on some Fridays. With regard to Christian detainees, the Special Rapporteur was informed that members of the prison pastoral team of the Latin Patriarchate of Jerusalem have been visiting foreign detainees in different Israeli prisons for several years and were allowed to celebrate the religious feasts of Christmas and Easter together. While detainees are in principle allowed to receive a special diet on religious grounds, there are reportedly problems also for some Jewish prisoners with regard to the type of kosher meals or threats of harassments based on their religious beliefs.

54. During her mission, the Special Rapporteur visited Hasharon prison on 23 January 2008. While she was given the authorization to speak with detainees, she regrets to report that she could not have “confidential and unsupervised contact with witnesses and other private persons, including persons deprived of their liberty”, as stipulated in the terms of reference for fact-finding missions by Special Rapporteurs (see E/CN.4/1998/45, appendix V). Since some of her female interlocutors were visibly frightened to speak openly and as the accompanying prison personnel would not let the Special Rapporteur and her security officer talk alone to the detainees, she ultimately decided to cut her visit to Hasharon prison short. The Special Rapporteur suggested to the Government of Israel that a visit of independent non-governmental organizations to the women’s section of Hasharon prison should be organised as a follow-up.

7. Advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence

55. The Special Rapporteur was informed about tendencies in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory towards increased radicalization and serious examples for advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.

56. In its Third Periodic Report concerning the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Government of Israel provided several examples of recent indictments and judgments concerning cases of incitement to racism against the Arab population or hate crimes (see CCPR/C/ISR/3, paras. 337-339). However, the Special Rapporteur also received reports about incidents where advocacy of religious hatred or acts of violence by Jewish settlers against Muslims have not been adequately investigated.

57. There have also been worrying reports from the Occupied Palestinian Territory on cases of incitement to religious hatred vis-à-vis Jews. One shocking example brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur was a broadcast in March 2007, in which the interviewer from Al-Aqsa TV in Gaza asked the two young children of a Palestinian suicide bomber “how many Jews” their mother had killed and if they wanted to join her in paradise. Furthermore, some Palestinian schoolbooks allegedly continue to idealize martyrdom and glorify the aspiration to seek a violent death in the name of religion. The Special Rapporteur would like to recall article 20 (2) of the Covenant which requires that any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence shall be prohibited by law.

8. Conversions and missionary activities

58. In Israel, the 1977 Penal Law Amendment (Enticement to Change Religion) Law stipulates that whosoever gives or promises to a person money, money’s worth or some other material benefit in order to induce that person’s conversion is liable to imprisonment for five years or a fine. Furthermore, it is also punishable to receive such benefits in return for a promise to change one’s religion or to cause another person to convert.

59. Religious conversion of children is regulated by the Guardianship and Legal Capacity Law 1962. Children who have not yet reached the age of ten may be converted if both of their parents agree to conversion or if the court approves conversion upon the application of one of the parents. The religious conversion of children who have reached ten years of age requires both an application by their parents and the consent of the children. In this regard, the Special Rapporteur would like to reiterate that the choice of religion is restricted by the parents’ rights to determine their child’s religion up to an age where the child is capable of doing so on his or her own. Such a case-by-case approach is also supported by article 12 (1) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which requests States parties to “assure to the child who is capable of forming his or her own views to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child”.

60. Some small religious communities in Israel have voluntarily refrained from proselytizing or from having a local Israeli community. For example, the founder of the Baha’i faith established the practice that conversion to the Baha’i faith in Israel is neither sought nor accepted. Furthermore, the Baha’is have not established a religious court in Israel although the Baha’i faith is one of the officially recognized religions in Israel. Moreover, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reportedly refrains from domestic proselytizing under an agreement with the Government of Israel.

61. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the few conversions which have taken place, particularly when involving interfaith relationships, have been followed by serious tensions. Suspected incidents of proselytism have even led to violence. For example, on 6 October 2007, the manager of the only Christian bookstore in Gaza city, Rami Khader Ayyad, was kidnapped and subsequently killed. Prior to the kidnapping, his bookstore had been firebombed and the victim had been the target of several death threats. The question of whether Mr. Ayyad was engaging in missionary activities or not is entirely irrelevant since his kidnapping and killing were hideous crimes and also a violation of his right to manifest his religion or belief. With regard to missionary activities and propagation of one's religion, the Special Rapporteur would like to refer to the relevant chapter in her report to the 60th session of the General Assembly (see A/60/399, paras. 55-68).

62. Furthermore, the approximately 2,000 Christians in the Gaza Strip have been openly warned by militants that after June 2007, no missionary activity will be tolerated any longer and that those suspected of trying to convert local Muslims to Christianity will be harshly punished. There are also reports of forced conversions to Islam by Palestinian groups in the Gaza Strip. For example, in August 2007, militants allegedly forced a female professor at Palestine University in Gaza City to convert from Christianity to Islam.

9. Further concerns within the Occupied Palestinian Territory

63. The Special Rapporteur was informed that religious minorities and women face several forms of pressure or violence within the Occupied Palestinian Territory.¹⁶

(a) Honour killings and social pressure on women

64. Women seem to be in a particularly vulnerable situation and bear the brunt of religious zeal. The Special Rapporteur was informed about cases of honour killings carried out in the name of religion with impunity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Reportedly some women in Gaza have recently felt coerced into covering their heads not out of religious conviction but out of fear. These are worrying allegations and the Special Rapporteur would like to emphasize that nobody should be subject to coercion which would impair the freedom to have, or to adopt, a religion or belief of his or her choice. It is vital to safeguard both the positive freedom of religion or belief as manifested in observance and practice and also the negative freedom from being forced to wear or display religious symbols (see E/CN.4/2006/5, paras. 36-60).

(b) Situation of religious minorities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

65. Further apprehensions concerning the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory have been expressed by minority communities, including some small Christian groups, who fear a rising level of religious intolerance. The Special Rapporteur was informed of a significant decrease in recent years in the number of Christians living in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. For example, the Christian proportion of Bethlehem's population has reportedly dropped from 85 per cent (in 1948) and 62 per cent (in 1995) to currently about 15 per cent. Safety concerns, contacts abroad and a relatively high level of education were cited to be the main reasons for the trend of emigration of many Christian families.

¹⁶ In relation to the obligations of the parties - Government of Israel, Palestinian Authority and Hamas - to respect the rules of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, see Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 7/1 (A/HRC/8/17, paras. 4-9).

66. Some of her Christian interlocutors in the Occupied Palestinian Territory expressed that they were living between two fires. They emphasized that they were particularly vulnerable as a “minority within a minority”, suffering both from the effects of occupation and from significant pressure within the Palestinian population. Allegedly, Christians have been harassed or intimidated by militants and the local judiciary has failed to adjudicate seizures of Christians’ property by criminal gangs. There have been several cases of attacks on Christian churches and violence against priests or individuals in Gaza and the West Bank.

67. The Special Rapporteur would like to emphasize that both General Assembly resolution 61/161 and Human Rights Council resolution 6/37 urges States to take “all necessary and appropriate action, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by intolerance based on religion or belief, as well as incitement to hostility and violence, with particular regard to religious minorities”.

V. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Conclusions

68. The State of Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory are home to a rich diversity of religions or beliefs and host religious sites revered by believers from all over the world. Yet, this very diversity, which should have been a blessing, tragically has polarized people on the lines of religion. The conflict has an adverse impact on the right of individuals and communities to worship freely and to attend religious services at their respective holy places. Liberty of movement, including access to places of worship, is restricted in particular for Palestinian Muslims and Christians through the existing system of permits, visas, checkpoints and the Barrier. While the Government of Israel informed the Special Rapporteur that these restrictions are necessary for security reasons, she would like to emphasize that any measure taken to combat terrorism must comply with the State’s obligations under international law. Taking into account the individuals’ freedom of religion or belief and liberty of movement as well as the principles of non-discrimination and international humanitarian law, the intrusive restrictions seem to be disproportionate to their aim as well as discriminatory and arbitrary in their application.

69. The Special Rapporteur’s interlocutors from religious minorities living in Israel have by and large acknowledged that there is no religious persecution by the State. Within the Israeli democracy, she would like to emphasize the important role that the Supreme Court has played in the past and can continue to play for safeguarding freedom of religion or belief. However, groups within the Christian, Jewish and Muslim faiths have experienced different forms of discrimination in the State of Israel, for example with regard to the preservation of religious sites or allocation of public funding.

70. With regard to the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Special Rapporteur is concerned about reports of the rising level of religious intolerance and the vulnerability of religious minorities, including some small Christian communities, against the background of a deficient rule of law.

71. Personal status questions in both Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory show the delicate relationship between State and religion. Even though the various religious courts for historical reasons have the jurisdiction for issues such as marriage and divorce, this does not absolve the authorities from their responsibility to ensure equal treatment and the implementation of human rights for all individuals.

72. The Special Rapporteur was deeply impressed by the guided tour through the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial Museum. She would like to emphasize the importance of documenting the history, preserving the memory of the victims and educating future generations. In her press statement of 27 January 2008, the Special Rapporteur referred to the International Day of Commemoration in memory of the victims of the Holocaust and joined the United Nations Secretary-General in remembering those whose rights were brutally desecrated at Auschwitz and elsewhere as well as in genocides and atrocities since.

73. The Special Rapporteur is encouraged by the engagement of many Israeli and Palestinian civil society organisations which have demonstrated that - despite conflict and religious polarization - people belonging to different religions and beliefs are able to extend respect and tolerance to each other. There also have been promising approaches of inter-faith and intra-faith dialogue on various levels. At the same time, the Special Rapporteur is concerned that many individuals she met during her visit in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory bear deep resentments against other religions and their adherents.

74. A major challenge, which needs to be addressed immediately in order to avoid a further deterioration of the situation, is to effectively sanction any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence. However, impunity for such acts of incitement is a concern both in the State of Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Furthermore, the persistence of violence committed in the name of religion is disturbing, for example with regard to violent acts perpetrated by zealous settlers or even worse in the form of suicide bombings by militant Islamists.

75. It is particularly worrying when children are being incited to express hatred toward those with a different religious affiliation. Education for tolerance, respect and recognition of diversity seems vital to get out of a vicious circle of discrimination, hostility and violence. In addition, long-term confidence building measures are required on all sides and at various levels. The Special Rapporteur would like to refer to the International Consultative Conference on School Education in Relation to Freedom of Religion or Belief, Tolerance and Non-Discrimination, in which both the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority actively participated. The Madrid Final Document (E/CN.4/2002/73, appendix), which was adopted by consensus on 25 November 2001, emphasizes that the young generation should be brought up in a spirit of peace, tolerance, mutual understanding and respect for human rights - especially for the respect of freedom of religion or belief - and that it should be protected against all forms of discrimination and intolerance based on religion or belief. Appropriate measures should be taken against such forms of intolerance and discrimination which manifest themselves in school curricula, textbooks and teaching methods as well as those disseminated by the media and the new information technologies, including the Internet. Furthermore, teachers and students should be provided with voluntary opportunities for meetings with their counterparts of different religions or beliefs.

Recommendations

76. The Special Rapporteur recommends that all parties - especially in the framework of a possible peace agreement - bind themselves legally to protect the rights of religious minorities. Particular attention should be paid to include comprehensive guarantees for equality and non-discrimination on grounds of religion or belief as well as for the preservation and peaceful access to all religious sites. Existing rights in respect of these religious sites should not be denied or impaired and freedom of worship should be safeguarded in conformity with existing rights. Any commitments, especially those which may affect human rights and fundamental freedoms, must be implemented and monitored in an effective and independent manner.

77. With regard to the protection and preservation of religious sites, the Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government of Israel issue as soon as possible non-selective regulations and designate holy sites on a non-discriminatory basis. The unique spiritual and religious dimension of the holy sites and their importance for believers in the whole world need to be appropriately taken into account. Furthermore, Israeli authorities should avoid delays in issuing visas for clergy or seminarians and should not impose limitations which might unduly hinder their ability to carry out religious activities in an effective manner.

78. The relevant authorities in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory should consider discontinuing the indication of the religious affiliation on those official identity cards where this is still the case. In the meantime, the authorities should provide the possibility to indicate “other religion” or “no religion” on identity cards as well as the possibility not to divulge the religious beliefs of the cardholder at all in the application process.

79. Staff members of the police and military forces should be provided with adequate training in order to raise their awareness of multiple forms of discrimination based on grounds such as religion, race or ethnic origin and to enhance sensitivity about their duty to promote and respect international human rights standards, including freedom of religion or belief.

80. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the freedom of religion or belief receive more emphasis in the training of personnel of detention facilities and that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, especially rules 41 and 42, be applied to every prisoner, regardless of his or her religion or belief.

81. Concerning the allocation of public funding for religious bodies, the Special Rapporteur recommends that regulations and criteria for funding be published and applied to all religious groups on an equal and equitable basis.

82. Since the application of religious law to determine matters of personal status and the absence of provision for civil marriage effectively denies a large number of persons the right to marry in Israel, the Government of Israel should consider introducing legal provisions which allow for civil marriages in Israel. Similar concerns with regard to matters of personal status apply to the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

83. Concerning the Government of Israel's reservations on the appointment of female judges of religious courts and concerning religious laws on personal status matters, the Special Rapporteur would like to reiterate the recommendation by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, which urged the State of Israel to consider withdrawing its reservations to articles 7 (b) and 16 because these were contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women.

84. Both in the State of Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence should be effectively investigated, prosecuted and punished. Similarly, any related violent acts should be investigated in a prompt, transparent and independent manner, the perpetrators should be prosecuted and sentenced, and avenues for redress and protection should be offered to the victims.

85. In terms of prevention activities, the Special Rapporteur encourages the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority to promote the principles, objectives and recommendations of the Madrid Final Document. One possible example could be support for, and funding of, voluntary school exchange programmes between pupils and teachers from Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In addition, concrete initiatives of inter-religious and intra-religious dialogue, especially at the grass-roots level, should be fostered and encouraged in order to bridge the divides along religious lines.

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/10/22
29 May 2009

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Tenth session
Agenda item 7

HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN PALESTINE AND
OTHER OCCUPIED ARAB TERRITORIES

Combined report of the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons, the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on the right to education and the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty.*

* The annex to the present report is circulated as received, in the language of submission and in Arabic.

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs	Page
I. INTRODUCTION	1 - 8	3
II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK	9 - 25	4
A. International humanitarian law	9 - 18	4
B. Human rights law	19 - 23	7
C. The continued application of human rights law during armed conflict	24 - 25	9
III. CONTRIBUTIONS BY INDIVIDUAL MANDATE-HOLDERS	26 - 98	9
A. Independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty	26 - 36	9
B. Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context	37 - 44	12
C. Special Rapporteur on the right to food	45 - 53	14
D. Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health	54 - 63	17
E. Special Rapporteur on the right to education	64 - 73	19
F. Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences	74 - 79	21
G. Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons	80 - 88	23
H. Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions	89 - 98	25
IV. RECOMMENDATIONS	99 - 105	27
Annex: Special report on Gaza and southern Israel prepared by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict		30

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-9/1 on the grave violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly due to the recent Israeli military attacks against the occupied Gaza Strip.

2. In its resolution, the Council requested all relevant special procedures mandate-holders, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons, the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on the right to education and the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, to urgently seek and gather information on violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people and submit their reports to the Council at its next session.

3. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 has submitted a separate report to the Council (A/HRC/10/20). The present report is submitted by the other above-mentioned mandate-holders, and includes individual sections submitted by each one as well as a joint introduction, legal analysis and set of recommendations. The section submitted by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict is annexed to the report. Following her visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Southern Israel from 2 to 6 February 2009, the information submitted was compiled by the inter-agency working group on children and armed conflict on the ground, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

4. The mandate-holders solicited information from concerned parties, including relevant Governments, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, and received a significant number of submissions. They extend their sincere thanks for the cooperation they received in gathering information. In view of the extremely limited time available, this brief report cannot do justice to the large volume of information received.

5. The special rapporteurs on violence against women, on the right to education, on the right to food, on the right to the highest attainable standard of health and the independent expert on extreme poverty requested to visit the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Gaza, and to discuss with the relevant Israeli authorities the issues covered by their mandates.

6. The Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly the Gaza Strip, has been affected by protracted conflict and occupation policies for decades. On 27 December 2008, the Israeli military launched a large-scale operation against Hamas in response to rockets fired at populated areas in Israeli territory. According to available estimates, a total of 1,453 people were killed. Of these, 1,440 were Palestinian, including 431 children and 114 women. A total of 13 were Israelis, including 3 civilians and 6 soldiers killed by Hamas, and 4 soldiers killed in friendly fire incidents.¹ This operation also resulted in a dramatic deterioration of the living conditions of the civilian population. At the onset of the recent military operation, the population of the Gaza Strip was already rendered vulnerable following a 20-month-long blockade, which severely restricted the movement of people and goods and the delivery of humanitarian and development assistance. In addition, the discriminatory legislation and policies of the occupying Power in, inter alia, access to housing, health care, food and water systems, have governed for decades the institutional set-up in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, thus aggravating the situation of its residents. An estimated 80 per cent of the population in Gaza, particularly women and children, was already dependent on humanitarian assistance before the recent military operation.

7. Targeted and indiscriminate attacks on public facilities, including medical facilities, water and sanitation networks, Government and municipal buildings, electricity, gas, transportation, agriculture, fisheries and industries further eroded people's access to basic services and goods. Combined with the decreasing ability of the authorities to manage basic public services and the collapse of the local economy, the recent military operation exacerbated the situation of the 1.5 million Gaza residents whose rights, including the rights to education, food, health and housing and to be free from violence, could not be protected. The conflict further exacerbated the desperate situation of those living in poverty in Gaza and pushed even more people into a life of poverty.

8. Even after the ceasefire was declared on 18 January 2009, restrictions on movement of people and goods as well as humanitarian assistance continued, thus hampering efforts for recovery and return to normalcy.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK

A. International humanitarian law

9. The most relevant conventional international humanitarian law standards binding Israel are set out in the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 1949. In addition, Israel is bound by the customary rules of international humanitarian law, which are applicable in the present context. The State's responsibilities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory as the occupying Power are set out in the Convention as well as in the Hague Regulations, which have become part of customary international humanitarian law.² The ¹ In addition to the 1,440, killed, the Palestinian Ministry of Health lists 5,380 Palestinians injured, including 1,872 children and 800 women. In addition to the 13 killed, the Magen David Adom lists 518 Israelis injured, including 182 civilians and 336 soldiers. For additional data on children, see annex. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, The Humanitarian Monitor, Occupied Palestinian Territory, No. 33, January 2009.

² In its advisory opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories of 2004, the International Court of Justice recalled that, while Israel was not a party to the Hague Convention of 18 October 1907 concerning the Laws and Customs of War and Land (Convention IV), to which the Hague Regulations are annexed, the provisions of the Hague Regulations had become part of customary international law.

International Court of Justice has concluded that the Fourth Geneva Convention is applicable in the Palestinian territories, which before the 1967 conflict lay to the east of the Green Line and which, during that conflict, were occupied by Israel. This is also the case for the Gaza Strip despite the unilateral withdrawal by Israel of its forces from the Strip in 2005, as the continuing occupation has been confirmed repeatedly since then by the General Assembly and the Security Council.³

10. Hamas and other armed Palestinian groups are bound by the obligations of common article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and by the applicable rules of customary international humanitarian law, concerning, inter alia, the conduct of hostilities and the treatment of civilians and other protected persons. In the text of the National Unity Government programme delivered by then Prime Minister Ismail Haniya before the Palestinian Legislative Council on 17 March 2007, Hamas accepted that it was bound by its commitment to respect international law and international humanitarian law.

11. The most relevant rules of customary international humanitarian law applicable to the conduct of hostilities in the present context relate to the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution.⁴ These obligations are cumulative; an attack must comply with all of the rules in order to be lawful.

12. First, under the principle of distinction, the parties to a conflict must, at all times, distinguish between civilians and combatants; attacks may be directed only at military objectives, defined as those objects which, by their nature, location, purpose or use, make an effective contribution to military action and whose total or partial destruction, capture or neutralization in the circumstances ruling at the time offers a definite military advantage. The only circumstance in which civilians may be targeted is for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities. Thus, attacks on civilian objects are unlawful unless at the time of the attack they were used for military purposes and their destruction offered a definite military advantage.

13. Indiscriminate attacks are similarly prohibited. They are those that (a) are not directed at a specific military objective; (b) employ a method or means of combat which cannot be directed at a specific military objective; or (c) employ a method or means of combat the effects of which cannot be limited as required by international humanitarian law; and consequently, in each such case, are of a nature to strike military objectives and civilians or civilian objects without distinction. Attacks by bombardment which treat a number of clearly separated and distinct military objectives located in an urban area or rural village as a single military objective are prohibited. The prohibition of indiscriminate attacks must not only determine the strategy adopted for a particular military operation but also limit the use of certain weapons in situations where the civilian population will be affected.

³ See General Assembly resolutions 62/181, 63/96 and 63/98, and Security Council resolution 1860 (2009).

⁴ International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Customary International Humanitarian Law, J.-M. Henckaerts and L. Doswald-Beck (eds.), Cambridge University Press, 2005 (ICRC study). The study was prepared at the request of States at the twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in December 1995 and is based on an extensive analysis of State practice (e.g. military manuals) and documents expressing opinio iuris. Rules 6-9, 11-13, 15-24, 97.

14. Second, under the principle of proportionality, attacks on legitimate military objectives which may be expected to cause incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians, damage to civilian objects or a combination thereof, which would be excessive in relation to the concrete and direct military advantage anticipated, are prohibited.

15. Third, the parties to a conflict must take all feasible precautions to avoid, and in any event to minimize, incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians and damage to civilian objects. This obligation is twofold. Precautions must be taken when planning and conducting attacks. A number of specific precautionary measures are prescribed by humanitarian law, inter alia, the determination of the military character of the objective and the evaluation of compliance with the principle of proportionality. In addition, parties to a conflict are required to give effective advance warning of attacks, which may affect the civilian population, unless circumstances do not permit.

16. Parties to a conflict must also take precautions to protect civilians and civilian objects under its control from the effects of attacks; this includes avoiding placing military objectives within or near densely populated areas and keeping civilians away from military targets. The use of human shields is also prohibited. Contrary to the general principle of precautions against the effects of attacks, this prohibition must be understood to require the specific intent to use civilians to immunize otherwise legitimate military objectives from lawful attack.

17. A violation of the obligation to take precautionary measures vis-à-vis the civilian population or their use as human shields by one side to a conflict does not change the obligations incumbent on the other party to the conflict to evaluate what constitutes an excessive attack in relation to concrete and direct military advantage.⁵

18. With regard to the treatment of protected persons in the occupied territories, article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention forbids collective punishment of civilians for crimes they have not personally committed. The provision of assistance to protected persons and civilian property also benefits from specific protections. Article 53 of the Fourth Geneva Convention prohibits the destruction by the occupying Power of private or public property unless rendered absolutely necessary by military operations. In addition, articles 55 and 59 provide that the occupying Power shall ensure food and medical supplies of the population and at the very least agree to relief schemes on behalf of the population of an occupied territory, and shall facilitate them by all the means at its disposal, if the whole or part of this population is inadequately supplied. Articles 23 and 59 further provide that all contracting parties shall permit the free passage of these consignments and guarantee their protection.⁶

⁵ Article 28 of the Fourth Geneva Convention specifies that the presence of a protected person may not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations.

B. Human rights law

19. Israel is party to the major human rights treaties relevant to the current situation.⁷

20. As regards the territorial scope of application, article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights obliges each State party to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized within it.⁸ In particular, in relation to the responsibilities of Israel under its international human rights treaty obligations with regard to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in its advisory opinion on the Wall, the International Court of Justice concluded that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child were applicable.² United Nations human rights treaty bodies also underscore that, as a State party to international human rights instruments, Israel continues to bear responsibility for implementing its human rights conventional obligations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, to the extent that it continues to exercise jurisdiction there.⁹ The

⁶ In resolution 1860 (2009), the Security Council called for the unimpeded provision and distribution throughout Gaza of humanitarian assistance, including food, fuel and medical treatment.

⁷ They include the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

⁸ The Human Rights Committee has clarified that “a State party must respect and ensure the rights laid down in the Covenant to anyone within the power or effective control of that State party, even if not situated within the territory of the State party”. General comment No. 31 (CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.13), para. 10.

⁹ An examination of the concluding observations of different United Nations treaty bodies confirms this view. In its concluding observations of 2003, the Human Rights Committee reiterated that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provisions apply “to the benefit of the population of the Occupied Territories for all conduct by the State party’s authorities or agents in those territories that affect the enjoyment of rights enshrined in the Covenant”. Similarly, in its 2003 concluding observations, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights reaffirmed its view that “the State party’s obligations under the Covenant apply to all territories and populations under its effective control” (E/C.12/1/Add.90). The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination drew a similar conclusion in its concluding observations of March 2007 (CERD/C/ISR/CO/13), para. 32.

International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women contain no provisions limiting their application to the territory of States parties. In this respect, the International Court of Justice also noted that the obligations of Israel under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights included an obligation not to raise any obstacle to the exercise of such rights in those fields where competence has been transferred to Palestinian authorities.² The unilateral disengagement from the Gaza Strip by Israel, which was formally completed on 12 September 2005, does not dispense Israel from complying with its human rights obligations towards the population of that territory; Israel remains bound to the extent that the measures it adopts affect the enjoyment of human rights of the residents of the Gaza Strip.

21. The Palestinian Authority, as recognized in a number of public undertakings whereby the Palestinian Authority, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the Palestinian Legislative Council have declared their commitment to respect international human rights law, is also bound to abide by international human rights obligations.¹⁰

22. With respect to Hamas, it is worth recalling that non-State actors that exercise government-like functions and control over a territory are obliged to respect human rights norms when their conduct affects the human rights of the individuals under their control.¹¹

23. Although the full body of human rights law is applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the particular relevance of some human rights norms stands out in the current context, namely the right to life and freedom of movement, as well as a number of economic and social rights, particularly the right to an adequate standard of living, including the rights to food and to adequate housing, the right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, the right to work, the rights to education and to the prohibition of discrimination as enshrined in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. These rights impose obligations on States parties: the obligations to respect, protect and fulfil, which in turn incorporates both an obligation to facilitate and an obligation to provide.¹²

¹⁰ PLO chairman Yasser Arafat repeatedly stated that he and his Government were committed to respecting all international human rights standards, for instance, to representatives of Amnesty International on 2 October 1993 and 7 February 1996.

¹¹ For example, in a joint report on Lebanon and Israel, a group of four special rapporteurs concluded that: “Although Hezbollah, a non-State actor, cannot become a party to these human rights treaties, it remains subject to the demand of the international community, first expressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that every organ of society respect and promote human rights. ... It is especially appropriate and feasible to call for an armed group to respect human rights norms when it exercises significant control over territory and population and has an identifiable political structure.” (A/HRC/2/7), para. 19.

¹² Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 13 on the right to education.

C. The continued application of human rights law during armed conflict

24. Human rights law, which consists of the full range of economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights, does not cease to apply in times of war; only certain derogations which are in accordance with precise provisions relating to times of emergency are permissible.¹³

25. More specifically, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other international human rights instruments allow for the possibility, in circumstances that threaten the life of the nation, to derogate from some of its guarantees provided that the measures are strictly necessary and are lifted as soon as the public emergency or armed conflict ceases to exist.¹⁴ Certain guarantees, in particular the prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or the right to life, are non-derogable.¹⁵ Israel remains in the state of public emergency proclaimed on 19 May 1948, four days after its declaration of establishment.¹⁶ With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights does not explicitly allow for derogations in time of public emergency, but the guarantees of the Covenant may, in times of armed conflict, be limited in accordance with its articles 4 and 5 and because of the possible scarcity of available resources in the sense of article 2, paragraph 1.¹⁷

III. CONTRIBUTIONS BY INDIVIDUAL MANDATE-HOLDERS

A. Independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty

26. In situations of armed conflict, the poor always suffer disproportionately. In the specific case of Gaza, the recent conflict and, in particular, the impact that Israeli military operations

¹³ International Court of Justice, “Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons”, advisory opinion of 8 July 1996, ICJ Reports 1996 (I), para. 25; advisory opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, para. 106; “Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda)”, ICJ Reports 2005, para. 219 (finding substantive violations of human rights law during an armed conflict). See also concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee on the second periodic report of Israel in Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifty-eighth Session, Supplement No. 40 (A/58/40), vol. I, para. 11.

¹⁴ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 4, para. 1. See also Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 29 (2001), para. 3.

¹⁵ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 4, para. 2.

¹⁶ CCPR/C/ISR/2001/2, para. 71.

¹⁷ See Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 14 (2000), paras. 28-29.

have had on the infrastructure and the economy have pushed even more people below the poverty line. Poverty has been a long-standing concern in Gaza. Even prior to the recent conflict, 78.9 per cent of Gaza residents were already living below the official poverty line.¹⁸ The recent conflict, the occupation and the 19-month blockade imposed by Israel on Gaza have exasperated this situation and had a devastating effect on the economy and the infrastructure and a profound pervasive impact on the lives of Palestinian people, particularly the poor.

27. While the blockade is the primary cause of poverty in Gaza, the situation has been further exacerbated by the limitation of aid in 2006, insufficient access for humanitarian organizations and the deterioration of the internal security situation owing to the escalation of intra-Palestinian violence. A full assessment is still under way. However, there is no doubt that the three-week military offensive by Israel has compounded the already catastrophic humanitarian situation of the Palestinian people and led to a range of human rights violations.

28. The military operation launched by Israel on 27 December 2008 has not only forced more people into a life of poverty, but also exacerbated the miserable situation of those already living in poverty by creating a need for urgent, massive humanitarian efforts to secure basic rights and minimum standards of living. The almost complete dependency on external aid and reliance on the informal market has further exposed the population to political manipulation affecting the poor disproportionately.

29. The independent expert expresses her grave concern at the fact that poverty in Gaza is a direct consequence of systematic violations of a wide range of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights against Gazan residents, and that poverty in Gaza has also led to specific violations of human rights. Many of these violations are described in other sections of the present report and all are relevant to assessing the situation of the poor. In particular, the poor have suffered greatly from violations of the right to education, food, housing and health, which are described below in detail by other mandate-holders.

1. Cumulative and increasing destruction of livelihoods in Gaza

30. Reports received by the independent expert reveal that, over the years, the damage that the blockade and military incursions by Israel has inflicted upon the land, the environment and industrial infrastructure in Gaza has led to an escalation in unemployment and undermined the ability of the Palestinian people to find basic means of subsistence. The World Bank estimates that 98 per cent of Gazan industrial operations were inactive as a result of the closures. Up to 70,000 workers are reported to have lost their jobs since 2007.¹⁹ In December 2008, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimated that 18 months of closures had caused a 50 per cent increase in unemployment. Women are particularly affected; the female participation in the Gaza job market was only 11.5 per cent in 2007, one of the lowest rates in the world.²⁰

¹⁸ The official poverty threshold is $2.3 per person per day; see World Bank, Palestinian Economic Prospects: Aid, Access and Reform, 22 September 2008. The figure was recorded in 2007; no figures were available for 2008.

¹⁹ Ibid.

31. The lack of regular payment of salaries caused mainly by the suspension of financial aid and the discontinuation of the transfer of taxes and revenues as well as by the tensions between the different political parties controlling services to the Palestinian population caused a steady deterioration in the living conditions of public sector employees that has left them vulnerable to poverty. Restrictions imposed by Israel on the transport of currency have resulted in a liquidity crisis. The lack of currency has seriously compromised the provision of basic social services, including the payment of social allowances, thereby making the poorest fully dependent on aid and informal arrangements to survive.

2. Impact of the recent military operation on the poor

32. Preliminary assessments indicate that, during the recent military operations, health facilities, water and sanitation infrastructure, land and cellular communication networks, schools, universities, mosques, residential buildings, factories, commercial enterprises and farms were deliberately attacked and damaged as a result of fighting.²¹ This has had a disastrous impact on the economy, the infrastructure and the enjoyment of human rights by the poorest Palestinian people.

33. It is reported that, during the military intervention, Israel deliberately obstructed the work of humanitarian personnel leaving the poor without basic medical, food and other services in violation of both international humanitarian and human rights law.²² After the cessation of hostilities, reports suggest that the authorities in Gaza have also obstructed the distribution of humanitarian aid to Gaza and imposed restrictions on the work of civil society organizations and human rights defenders.²³

²⁰ United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People Mid-term Strategic Framework for the period 2008-2011 (2008).

²¹ See UNRWA News, 16 January 2009; the Statement by Commissioner General Karen AbuZayd, 27 January 2009; International Committee of the Red Cross, Operational Update of 25 January 2009; Field update on Gaza from the Humanitarian Coordinator, 24-26 January 2009; Centre on Housing Rights and Evictions, "The collapse of Gaza's water and waste water sector. Grave breaches of international humanitarian law and serious violations of international human rights law", 2009, sects. B, C and E.

²² See "WFP launches Operation Lifeline Gaza to get food to the hungry", 10 January 2009; J. Zarocostas "Agencies call for health workers in Gaza to be respected", British Medical Journal, 7 January 2009; and "The Conflict in Gaza", AI report, January 2009, sect. D.

²³ See Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, Special Reports (February 2009), "Inter-Palestinian Human Rights Violations in the Gaza Strip", 3 February 2009.

34. For the Gazan economy to revive (offering opportunities to people to pull themselves out of poverty), all Gaza entry points must be opened to ensure freedom of movement for all, the free inflow of industrial and agricultural inputs and cash and the export of products from Gaza.²⁴ There is also an urgent need to ensure that there are sufficient quantities of fuel, spare parts for damaged infrastructure (such as the power plant) as well as cement, sand and other construction materials.

35. Recovery will also require that Palestinians be provided with income-generating and work opportunities, including access to work in Israel. Furthermore, Palestinians require access to education at all levels, and students and professionals, such as doctors and teachers, must be able to receive education abroad. Special attention must also be paid to people who have been seriously wounded or disabled; they must be provided with rehabilitation services and have the means to live a dignified life and enjoy an adequate standard of living.

36. In addition to the above-mentioned measures, the independent expert stresses that, to improve the lives of those living in poverty, psychosocial support for those in need, in particular children, is urgently needed. The rights of the victims of human rights violations to have access to remedy and reparations must also be respected.

B. Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context

37. Disregard for the right to adequate housing in the Occupied Palestinian Territory far predates the recent military offensive. Overcrowding, lack of sanitation and other difficult living conditions have been not only the result of demolitions and destruction of homes in the present and previous military offensives, but a permanent urban condition that prevents the people of Gaza from having access to the acceptable minimal standards of adequate housing.

38. The Special Rapporteur on adequate housing has received reports from numerous sources concerning the extensive destruction of homes and civilian property during the Israeli military offensive in Gaza from 27 December 2008 to 24 January 2009. Initial estimates indicate that more than 4,240 residences were destroyed and 44,306 were damaged, most of them rendered uninhabitable without considerable rehabilitation.²⁵ An estimated 2.6 per cent of homes in Gaza ²⁴ On 12 February, a single truck with nearly 50,000 flowers was reportedly allowed to cross out of Gaza through Kerem Shalom for export. According to the same source, it was the first time since 18 January 2008 that Israel had allowed any exports from Gaza; however, it remains unclear as to whether further exports will be allowed. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported that, on 6 February, Israel allowed, for the first time since mid-December 2008, the transfer of NIS 170 million ($42 million) from banks in the West Bank to banks in the Gaza Strip. The new supply would enable the Palestinian Authority to pay the salaries of some 70,000 Gaza-based employees. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Situation Report, No. 21, February 2009.

²⁵ Rapid Shelter/NFI assessment, 11 February 2009.

were completely destroyed, an additional 20 per cent sustained serious damage,²⁶ reportedly forcibly evicting an estimated 80,000 to 90,000 people who have been rendered homeless, many forced to live in open space.²⁷ For buildings that are apparently still intact, it is unclear how much of their internal structure was damaged, which may cause problems in the long term, including collapse or fragility in the event of natural disaster.

39. The massive destruction and damage caused by the Israeli offensive to homes and infrastructure, including roads, water stations and electrical facilities, and the continued restrictions imposed on the urgent transport of reconstruction materials into Gaza could constitute grave violations of the right to adequate housing and are the cause of a severe humanitarian crisis.

40. Reports indicate that Israeli attacks have not always complied with the principle of distinction between civilians and combatants, and that some of the houses and properties attacked did not meet the definition of military objectives.

41. Countless communities in Gaza have been rendered virtually uninhabitable. In urban areas and several refugee camps in the northern part of Gaza, entire neighbourhoods have been flattened. These acts seem to be contrary to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, in particular article 53.²⁸

42. The extensive damage to basic social services and infrastructures has severely eroded the ability of the people of Gaza to live according to the acceptable minimal standards of adequate housing. Many water tanks used by individual homes were also damaged,²⁹ causing 500,000 people to have no access to running water, and the rest of the population only sporadic access during the hostilities.³⁰ Thousands of people have been affected by damaged sewage networks and pumping stations, owing to both repeated bombing and the scarcity of fuel supplies

²⁶ United Nations, Gaza Flash Appeal, January 2009; and Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics.

²⁷ Centre on Housing Rights and Evictions, “European governments and citizens hold the key to imposing accountability on Israel”, 12 January 2009; and Emergency Architects, information flash: “The foundation of Emergency Architects helps with emergency rehousing in Gaza”, 18 February 2009.

²⁸ “Any destruction by the occupying Power of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons, or to the State, or to other public authorities, or to social or cooperative organizations, is prohibited, except where such destruction is rendered absolutely necessary by military operations.”

²⁹ Aid Worker Diary: part 15, 14 July 2009.

³⁰ New York Times, “Israel and Hamas: Conflict in Gaza”, 11 July 2009.

resulting from the closure of the border.²⁶ Unexploded ordnance has been discovered by civilians in residential areas; property and water supplies have been contaminated by sewage spills and reports alleged further contamination by toxic remnants from munitions.³¹

43. At a time when international support for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of homes and neighbourhoods is urgently needed, the Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned about persisting impediments to the entry of reconstruction materials into Gaza, either through their outright prohibition or protracted administrative delays. In addition, she recalls that, according to the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, destruction of infrastructure and houses resulted in the waste of approximately $1.9 billion in international aid dollars given by donors and the international community.

44. The recent attacks have worsened the living conditions of the people of Gaza, who have been confined for decades to a small territory, in overcrowded conditions, with poor housing and sanitation conditions. Problems that have been poorly managed to date. The Special Rapporteur is particularly concerned that the scale of destruction bringing further destitution and the hardship endured by the people of Gaza will only add to the cycle of violence.

C. Special Rapporteur on the right to food

45. The right to food is realized when every man, woman and child has physical and economic access at all times to adequate food or the means for its procurement. This right is violated on a large scale, and on a routine basis, in the Gaza Strip, owing to both recent events and long-standing trends. The breakdown of the food system in Gaza and the lasting damage that has been inflicted on the Gaza food production infrastructure, resulting in the loss of jobs and incomes for many families, further aggravate a situation which, even before the recent military operation of December 2008-January 2009, was intolerable. The chronic restrictions on the movements of goods and people have also had a major impact on the right to food of the people living in Gaza.

1. Destruction of property and means of subsistence

46. According to the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights and the Integrated Regional Information Network, farmland and greenhouses were bombed extensively in Gaza, which has had a devastating impact on the ability of people to produce food for subsistence or trade purposes. The Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics estimated that 80 per cent of agricultural land and crops was damaged during the recent hostilities, as evidenced by 395 impact craters resulting from shelling.³² Arable land has been contaminated by spills of sewage and toxic munitions.³³ The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported that extensive destruction debilitated commercial enterprises and public infrastructure, including the largest flour mill and food processing plants in Gaza. The Special Rapporteur considers that this constitutes a serious violation of customary international humanitarian law, which prohibits attacking, destroying, removing or rendering useless objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population.³⁴

³¹ IPS “Unexploded bombs hold more deaths”, 24 January 2009.

³² UNOSAT damage assessment, 20 January.

³³ The Observer, “Gaza desperately short of food after Israel destroys farmland”, 3 February 2009.

2. Closures and restrictions to free movement of goods, including food aid

47. Even before the recent conflict, recurrent closure of border crossings and other security measures had impeded the passage and delivery of food assistance and of traded foodstuffs. The consequences have been dramatic; for example, the closure of the Karni border crossing for over 46 days in the first quarter of 2006 resulted in severe shortages of food and the depletion of food reserves, and most bakeries in the Gaza Strip were forced to close owing to shortages of flour and fuel, leading to the rationing of bread. The prohibition of the export of agricultural products from Gaza at the height of the harvesting season reportedly led to the waste of hundreds of tons of tomatoes, peppers, cucumbers and strawberries and a loss of millions of dollars.³⁵ Restrictions on the entry of supplies essential for food production, such as fuel, fertilizers, plastics and seeds, have also been imposed over the years by the Israeli blockade.

48. The complete closure of Gaza's borders during the recent armed conflict affected both family-level food production and public and commercial centres. In a situation report from the Humanitarian Coordinator, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported that, in early January, only nine bakeries remained operational, causing many people to wait from 5 to 7 hours a day just to purchase a day's supply of bread. According to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, shortages of nutritious and affordable food have further eroded food security for people in Gaza; meat and many vegetables are scarce and cost three times their regular price.

49. According to the Palestine Monitor Fact Sheet of 18 December 2008, even before the hostilities, approximately 80 per cent of families in Gaza relied on humanitarian food aid in order to survive;³⁵ this number had reached approximately 91 per cent by early February 2009.³⁶ In this context, obstacles to the delivery of urgently needed food aid during the recent hostilities caused by fuel shortages and the closure of the borders resulted in violations of the right to food on a large scale. The continuous bombing of civilian areas further impeded aid agencies from having access to hungry people, who were unable, or too afraid, to meet aid convoys;²² the number of hungry people without access to basic food necessary for their survival soared as a result. Normal caseloads from the World Food Programme and the United Nations Relief and

³⁴ ICRC study, rule 54.

³⁵ A/HRC/4/30/Add.1, para. 37.

³⁶ Save the Children: children of the Gaza crisis, Fact Sheet, 27 January 2009.

Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East have therefore increased, bringing the total number of people dependent on food aid from both organizations to 1,275,300.³⁷

50. Even after the cessation of the hostilities, humanitarian aid convoys still met restrictions on providing for the urgent food and nutritional needs of the population of Gaza, a violation of the obligations of Israel as the occupying Power of the Gaza Strip.³⁸ These obstacles to food aid were further exacerbated by incidents of confiscation of food parcels destined for distribution to beneficiary families reportedly by Hamas police personnel.³⁹ While noting that these food parcels were returned, the Special Rapporteur would like to recall that respecting the right to food entails, inter alia, refraining from taking any measures that result in preventing people's access to food.

3. Impact on the right to food

51. According to the Palestine Monitor Fact Sheet of 18 December 2008, rates of food insecurity rose from 34 per cent in 2006 to 38 per cent in 2008, as 75 per cent of Palestinians reduced the quantity of food purchased and 89 per cent switched to less nutritious diets in 2006 and 2007. This has had a particularly severe impact on children, who are often the first victims of malnutrition.⁴⁰ The Palestine Monitor estimates that, in 2009, the rate of chronic malnutrition of Palestinian children under 2 has reached 10 per cent.⁴¹ Close to half of children of that age group suffer from anaemia. Two thirds of all children reportedly suffer from a lack of vitamin A.⁴² One in 10 girls and boys under the age of 5 evidence stunted growth in Gaza.⁴³

52. Global food price increases have further driven the cost of food in Gaza far beyond the purchasing power of most of the population. According to the Palestine Monitor Fact Sheet, at ³⁷ Ibid., 9 February 2009.

³⁸ "To the fullest extent of the means available to it, the occupying Power has the duty of ensuring the food and medical supplies of the population; it should, in particular, bring in the necessary foodstuffs, medical stores and other articles if the resources of the occupied territory are inadequate." Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 55.

³⁹ UN News, "UN suspends aid operation after second Hamas-linked theft of supplies", 6 February 2009.

⁴⁰ The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Gaza Strip Inter-Agency Humanitarian Fact Sheet, March 2008.

⁴¹ "Why the Gaza disaster is not three weeks old and has not stopped along with the bombs", 22 January 2009. See www.palestinemonitor.org.

⁴² See United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), "Aid for Gaza's Children", 11 January 2009, and Richard Falk, "The Siege of Gaza", 22 December 2008.

⁴³ See Save the Children, West Bank and Gaza at www.savethechildren.org.

the end of 2008, food cost on average 23 per cent more than in 2007. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reports that shops and markets continue to provide limited food supplies at exorbitantly high prices. Shortage of currency further undermines access to food. Because agricultural inputs are prohibitively expensive, many farmers have been unable to invest in the 2009 agricultural cycle. Livestock owners have reportedly been reducing their flock size. Fishing has declined dramatically. The ability of these groups to feed themselves and their families is seriously jeopardized.⁴⁴

53. The destruction of food production capabilities, mounting scarcities and rising costs together with obstructions to the delivery of aid constitute grave threats to the right to food. The ability of the people of Gaza to provide for their food and nutritional needs is essential to overcoming the underlying causes of conflict in the region and to ensuring a life of dignity.

D. Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health

54. The long-standing Israeli-Palestinian conflict and the Israeli military offensive launched on 27 December 2008 resulted in grave violations of the right to the highest attainable standard of health in Gaza. According to article 24 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the right to health encompasses not only access to health care, but also the underlying determinants of health, such as access to clean water and sanitation, food and nutrition, adequate housing and a healthy environment.

55. The prolonged conflict has seriously damaged the health infrastructure in Gaza, which has greatly undermined public health and service delivery throughout the affected area. The health situation has been further aggravated by the long-standing blockade imposed by Israel since June 2007. The blockade has prevented the passage of basic goods, including medical supplies, spare parts and fuel necessary for the normal functioning of medical facilities.

56. The conflict and its exacerbation by the blockade and consequent lack of fuel has resulted in severe electricity shortages. Hospitals were running on back-up generators, and medical personnel worked under tremendous strain, as many of them worked consecutive 12- to 24-hour shifts to attend to medical emergencies.²² The number of hospital beds has been insufficient to cope with the mounting number of injured civilians, causing many health centres to send gravely ill and wounded people home before completing the necessary treatment.

57. The lack of fuel has also affected water supplies, which left approximately a million people without access to safe and potable water.⁴⁵ Waste water pumps repeatedly stopped working, threatening to cause grave environmental hazards. Monitoring and surveillance of water quality has been suspended since the closure of the central public health laboratory on 3 January 2009, thus seriously affecting an already deteriorating public health system. Additionally, the lack of access to clean water and the closure of waste water pumping stations has resulted in exposure to numerous diseases. Farmland and urban areas have been flooded with sewage, and the remains of a number of unrecovered bodies in advanced stages of decomposition has further exacerbated the grave risks to public health in the Gaza Strip.

⁴⁴ See the FAO and emergencies page dedicated to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip at the FAO website (www.fao.org).

⁴⁵ World Health Organization (WHO), Health Action Crisis, Highlights No. 245, 2-8 February 2009.

58. The obstacles faced by humanitarian medical efforts have particularly affected the most vulnerable groups among the civilian population, namely children and women. The discontinuation of preventive health care, including vaccination of children, has further threatened the long-term health of the population in Gaza, rendering the population vulnerable to outbreaks of highly infectious diseases such as measles, polio and hepatitis.⁴⁶

59. Mental health represents an integral part of the right to the highest attainable standard of health. The prolonged conflict, and in particular the latest offensive, has affected the psychosocial well-being of the population and has been particularly challenging for women, children and disabled persons. The state of mental health of the population in Gaza has also been evidenced by a dramatic increase in drug abuse, estimated to affect almost 10 per cent of the young population in the region. Signs of extreme psychosocial distress and related psychosocial conditions have also increased.⁴⁷

60. The denial of access to medical treatment outside of the Gaza Strip for seriously ill Palestinian patients is a long-standing issue (see A/HRC/4/28/Add.1). There are indications of a worsening trend in the denial of access to health care, as evidenced by the decline in the percentage of requests approved for medical permits for patients referred for treatment outside of the Gaza Strip, from 80 per cent in 2007 to 66 per cent in the first half of 2008.⁴⁶

61. The Special Rapporteur notes that under international humanitarian law, all medical personnel and facilities must be protected at all times.⁴⁸

62. The Special Rapporteur strongly condemns the targeting of medical facilities and workers by Israeli forces. For example, 16 medical workers were killed and 25 injured while on duty. Furthermore, 15 hospitals, 43 primary health centres and 29 ambulances were destroyed. In early February 2009, only 44 of 56 primary health-care centres were functioning. Use of primary health-care facilities has significantly declined since the military offensive; WHO estimates that 40 per cent of chronically ill patients no longer turn to public health-care centres for care.

⁴⁶ WHO, Health Situation in the Gaza Strip, 7 January 2009.

⁴⁷ Integrated Regional Information Network, "Drug abuse on the rise in Gaza - specialists", 16 January 2009 at the website www.irinnews.org.

⁴⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 20, and International Committee of the Red Cross study, rules 25, 28 and 29.

63. The material damages caused by the recent hostilities, the border closures resulting in the restricted entry of medical supplies and equipment and the denial of access to health care outside the borders of Gaza constitute grave violations of the right to the highest attainable standard of health.

E. Special Rapporteur on the right to education

64. The blockade on Gaza imposed in June 2007 and the resulting restrictions on movement and goods have resulted in serious violations of the right to education, which was further exacerbated by the Israeli offensive on Gaza that began on 27 December 2008. Consequently, educational facilities have suffered extensive damage and destruction, their repair and reconstruction has been obstructed and students have experienced significant psychosocial distress, all of which pose great challenges to the creation of an environment conducive to the realization of the right to education.

65. The Special Rapporteur on the right to education received numerous reports of Israeli strikes on schools in Gaza, leading to major damage to 7 public schools and partial damage to an additional 236 schools (public, private and kindergarten) and to 36 UNRWA schools.⁴⁹ Israeli shells are reported to have hit two UNRWA schools and landed close to another, al-Fakhura school in Jabaliya refugee camp, which were sheltering displaced families. According to Save the Children Alliance and UNICEF, these incidents resulted in the killing of 47 people, including 15 children. On 17 January, the American International School of Gaza near the northern town of Beit Lahiya was destroyed by aerial bombing, leaving its 220 students without a place to continue their schooling. Warplanes also hit the science and engineering laboratories of the Islamic University in Gaza City, the territory's oldest and biggest facility for higher education, affecting over 20,000 students.⁵⁰

66. The Special Rapporteur deplores the targeting of schools during wartime, an act that - provided the schools are not military objectives - is explicitly prohibited under customary international law,⁵¹ and notes that such an attack has been qualified as a war crime by the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which has been ratified by 108 States.

67. As often occurs during emergencies, educational activities ceased during the weeks of heavy bombing and ground fire and the pervasive insecurity across the Gaza Strip, causing 540,000 students of all educational levels to miss almost one month of classes.²⁶

⁴⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Rapid Needs Assessment Report (Education Cluster), 30 January 2009.

⁵⁰ Associated Press, "Israel-Hamas war deals blow to schools in Gaza", 3 February 2009.

⁵¹ The targeting of civilian objects such as schools is prohibited by the general principle of distinction between civilian objects and military objectives (see section II); in addition, customary law prescribes that special care must be taken in military operations to avoid damage to buildings dedicated to education. ICRC study, rule 38.

Following the ceasefire, there were delays to the restoration of regular schooling, as insecurity persisted, reconstruction was impeded and numerous people continued to seek shelter in school buildings after being displaced by the fighting.⁵²

68. Continued restrictions on the entry of reconstruction materials into Gaza have also posed serious threats to the right to education for Gazan children and youth, as construction materials have repeatedly been denied entry into the region, and Israeli authorities have insisted on case-by-case approval of all reconstruction projects affecting schools, resulting in long administrative delays.⁵³

69. In addition to the particular violations of the right to education caused by the hostilities that began on 27 December 2008, access to safe and adequate educational conditions in Gaza has faced long-standing obstacles that far predate recent events. Overcrowding in the schools in Gaza had already caused a restriction in the hours of schooling, in order to allow for morning and afternoon shifts to accommodate the region's 450,000 students;⁵⁰ this problem has particularly affected the schooling of some 200,000 refugee children in Gaza, who have attended UNRWA schools in the past year.⁵⁴ Efforts by UNRWA to continue the regular school feeding programme have been hampered by repeated restrictions on the entry of supplies. According to UNICEF, power shortages owing to restrictions on the entry of fuel caused students to gather in classrooms that lacked heating and electricity, as well as light bulbs and other basic supplies, such as paper, chalk and essential equipment for teaching, such as printers and overhead projectors. Higher education has also been affected, illustrated by the denial by Israel, in November 2007, of permission for 670 Palestinian scholars to leave Gaza in order to study abroad, including 6 Fulbright scholars.⁵⁵

70. Another concern is the fact that, in August 2008, Gaza lost around half of its teachers in Ministry of Education schools after they were fired for striking. Although new teachers have been recruited and trained, public schools were still lacking maths, science and Arabic teachers for all levels, resulting in fewer hours of teaching in these essential subjects. It is estimated that 250,000 students, more than half of Gaza's student population, in 381 schools were affected by the strike at that time.⁵⁶

⁵² "Displaced Gazans seek shelter from the cold", at www.irinnews.org.

⁵³ Briefing by staff of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs based in Jerusalem, Inter-Agency Consultation on Gaza, United Nations Office at Geneva, 21 January 2009.

⁵⁴ "United Nations moves to counter deteriorating Gaza education levels", 17 September 2007 at www.irinnews.org.

⁵⁵ Human Rights Watch, "Israel Blocks 670 students from studies abroad", 20 November 2007.

⁵⁶ See Tamer Institute for Community Education, Fact Sheet August-October 2008, and Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report No. 276, September 2008.

71. The Special Rapporteur notes with concern a 5.6 per cent decline in enrolment rates for school grades 1 to 10 between 2000-2001 and 2006-2007.⁵⁷ In September 2007, UNRWA reported a failure rate of 80 per cent for grades 4 to 9, with rates of failure as high as 90 per cent in mathematics. The protracted collapse of the economy of Gaza and mounting food insecurity has further impeded the enjoyment of the right to education, as hundreds of children have been forced to search for work in order to contribute to the basic needs of their families at the expense of their schooling.⁵⁸

72. The destruction of schools and restrictions on the entry of supplies necessary to guarantee access to education, as well as the prolonged deterioration of Gazan educational infrastructure, constitute violations of the right to education. The Special Rapporteur recalls that, while education is often interrupted in times of conflict, its restoration is an urgent priority. It is essential to generating a culture of mutual respect, breaking the cycle of hatred and prejudice between the peoples of the region and establishing a lasting peace.

73. As pointed out in the Special Rapporteur's first report, military occupations are an appreciable curb on the human right to education, and the most egregious example is that of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (E/CN.4/2005/50, para. 124). The recent events in Gaza provide an even stronger illustration of the violations of the right to education in a conflict situation.

F. Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences

74. The Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, expresses her grave concern at the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law witnessed during the recent Israeli military attacks against the Gaza Strip. The scale of civilian deaths, injuries and destruction during the offensive was unprecedented by all accounts. Among the casualties, it is estimated that 114 women were killed and 800 suffered injuries.

75. The Palestinian Centre for Human Rights stated that women suffered critical injuries from bombs, artillery shells, rockets and live ammunition as well as from bombs believed to have contained white phosphorous. The Special Rapporteur is particularly concerned by reports of women being killed while inside their own homes trying to protect their children or attempting to escape bombardment, sometimes after having been ordered to leave their houses by the Israel Defense Forces.²³ Some of the injuries sustained by women resulted in maiming, including amputations conducted in inadequate medical facilities.

76. The denial of safe access to pregnant women to appropriate health care and hospitals owing to the constant shelling constitutes a grave violation of human rights. In a press release dated 14 January 2009, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) warned that the continuing violence and displacement presented serious risks to more than 40,000 pregnant women in Gaza, and reported on many cases of premature labour and delivery resulting from shock and trauma from continuous bombing, and the exposure of premature and newborn infants to hypothermia owing to the lack of electricity. UNFPA findings for the period during the crisis showed a 40 per cent increase in cases of miscarriage admitted to maternities, a 50 per cent increase in neonatal deaths and an important increase in the number of premature deliveries. For example, on 10 January 2009, Wafa al-Masrai, 40 years old and 9 months pregnant, left her home in Beit Lahia in north Gaza with her sister, Rada, and attempted to reach her local hospital. While en route to the hospital, she was struck by an Israeli rocket and critically injured. She gave birth to a healthy baby after having one of her legs amputated.²³ Given the primary role of women as caregivers, such a disability will not only adversely reflect on the level and quality of care of children and the family but it will also seriously undermine a woman's "value" in society as a whole.

⁵⁷ Agence France Presse, "Gaza blockade threatens education crisis: UNICEF", 1 February 2008.

⁵⁸ Save the Children, "Crisis Deepens for the Children of Gaza", 30 December 2008 and Oxfam America, "Escalating Humanitarian Crisis in Gaza", 11 March 2008.

77. The Palestinian Centre for Human Rights reported that women and children that had taken shelter inside schools administered by UNRWA suffered shell attacks inside those protected areas. The Special Rapporteur received alarming reports of entire families being hit by Israeli shelling.⁵⁹

78. In addition, the worsening food insecurity in Gaza following the military operation led to a further deterioration in the health and nutritional status of the majority of Gazans, in particular women and children, many of whom are already largely dependent on meagre humanitarian assistance. In addition, the Special Rapporteur would like to highlight the disproportionate effects of house demolitions on women, children and the elderly (see also sections A, C and D above).

79. In 2005, following her visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Special Rapporteur concluded that the protracted conflict and occupation had contributed to creating an integrated system of violence that had a profound impact on Palestinian women. This situation has been aggravated by the recent military attacks. A UNFPA survey of 8 February 2009 on the situation of women in Gaza highlighted the immediate psychological problems endured by women, such as extreme feelings of fear and insecurity, depression and sadness, the debilitating effects of which often made them unable to fulfil their vital role as caregivers. The extent of the destruction in the latest military campaign, which took place in the wake of over a year and a half of severe blockade that brought the Gaza economy to the brink of collapse and has yet again debilitated the coping mechanisms of an already impoverished and traumatized population, will further increase the degree and extent of oppression of the occupation. Without a lifting of the blockade, women will continue to be prevented from having access to vital, sometimes life-saving medical treatment in Israel or neighbouring countries owing to restrictions on their freedom of movement and denial of travel permits. In addition, women will continue to endure the burden of chronic shortages of basic supplies, such as food, fuel, electricity and safe drinking water, when having to provide for their children and families. As highlighted in the Special Rapporteur's mission report, this particularly precarious and traumatic environment is likely to heighten women's vulnerability to violence in the private sphere as well.

⁵⁹ In one case, 22 members of the Al-Sammoni family, including 9 children and 7 women, were killed in Zaytoun, east of Gaza City on 4 and 5 January 2009. The majority of the victims were killed while sheltering inside a house that collapsed after having been struck by three missiles launched by the Israel Defense Forces. See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report, 16-20 January 2009.

G. Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons

80. The occupation policies and practices that Israel has pursued since the 1967 war have infringed on the human rights of Palestinians and resulted in large-scale forced displacement of Palestinians within the Occupied Palestinian Territory, even before the Israeli military incursion into Gaza that began on 27 December 2008.⁶⁰ Displacement is often caused by incursions and military clearing operations, evictions and land appropriation, the illegal expansion of settlements on occupied territory and related infrastructure, the illegal construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, violence and harassment by settlers, the revocation of residency rights in East Jerusalem, discriminatory denial of building permits and house demolitions.⁶¹ Forced displacement is also caused by a system of closures and restrictions on the right to freedom of movement through an elaborate regime of permits and checkpoints that make life untenable for many residents in Palestinian enclaves and force them to leave.

81. The Israeli military incursion into Gaza resulted in further massive forced displacement of Palestinians inside Gaza. On 14 January 2009, at the height of the crisis, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator estimated that up to 100,000 Palestinians could be displaced. The preliminary report of a shelter/Internally Displaced Persons joint rapid needs assessment, conducted in 45 localities in Gaza several days after the ceasefire of 18 January 2008, indicated that 71,657 displaced persons were staying with host families.⁶²

82. As border crossings into Egypt and Israel were closed, large numbers of civilians tried to find refuge in other parts or sites of Gaza. At the height of the conflict, more than 50,000 displaced persons sought refuge in UNRWA schools. Many were also displaced because their homes had been destroyed or become uninhabitable, especially in rural areas.⁶³ On a number of occasions, the Israel Defense Forces also warned or ordered the civilian population to flee areas or sites, which were often attacked shortly thereafter.

⁶⁰ Estimates on the displaced population vary owing to differences in definitions and available data. The non-governmental organization Badil Resource Centre for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights estimated in a survey of September 2007 that 115,000 Palestinians were displaced between 1967 and 2006.

⁶¹ The International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, found that the route of the wall in the West Bank and its associated regime of permits and restrictions was contrary to international law, including applicable norms of international humanitarian law and human rights law. The Court also reaffirmed that "Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (including East Jerusalem) had been established in breach of international law". See also note 2.

⁶² Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Field Update on Gaza from the Humanitarian Coordinator, 30 January-2 February 2009.

83. International law prohibits arbitrary displacement, a notion that includes displacement in situations of armed conflict that is incompatible with international humanitarian law because it is not warranted by the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons.⁶⁴

84. The conduct of the hostilities exacerbated forced displacement within Gaza. The Israel Defense Forces resorted to aerial bombardment and artillery shelling in densely populated areas of Gaza, reportedly disregarding the above-mentioned standards and the general rules of international humanitarian law concerning the targeting of objects (see paragraph 102 below). Incidents of Palestinian combatants placing military installations close to civilians or civilian objects, thereby increasing the danger for the civilian population and triggering their displacement, were also reported.

85. Displaced persons also became victims as a consequence of military attacks. On 6 January 2009, Israeli shelling is reported to have killed 37 persons and injured 55 outside a UNRWA school in Jabalya that sheltered a large number of displaced persons at the time (see annex).

86. When the present report was finalized, thousands of persons remained homeless because their homes had been destroyed or damaged during the fighting; the total number of displaced was unknown. Most displaced persons are staying in poor, overcrowded living conditions with host families who are already overstretched and face shortages of food, non-food items (such as mattresses and blankets), water and electricity. Continuing a 19-month blockade of Gaza, which had created a serious humanitarian crisis even before the military incursion began, Israel still restricts access to Gaza for goods urgently required to address emergency humanitarian needs and to permit rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts. On 9 February 2009, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, in a field update, reported that international agencies had faced unprecedented denial of access to Gaza since 5 November 2008.

87. Some of the recently displaced persons within Gaza, especially in rural areas, are Palestinians belonging to families from Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem. The remainder are Palestinian refugees, who fled or were driven from their homes on the territory inside the State of Israel or their descendants. The renewed displacement of Palestinian refugees inside Gaza creates additional vulnerabilities for them.

⁶³ Initial estimates indicate that over 4,240 residences were destroyed and 44,306 were damaged, most of them rendered inhabitable without considerable rehabilitation.

⁶⁴ Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement (E/CN.4/1998/53/Add.2), principle 6, restating articles 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and customary international humanitarian law (ICRC study, rules 24 and 129-131). See also chapter II.

88. The Representative underscores the fact that being displaced in one's own country or country of habitual residence is a factual state that neither confers a special legal status under international law nor alters a pre-existing special status. Palestinian refugees who suffered secondary displacement inside Gaza retain all rights under international law, including the right of return, as reaffirmed by the General Assembly in its resolution 194 (III). Israel, as occupying Power, and the Palestinian Authority must address the specific assistance and protection needs of all recently displaced persons, whether they are internally displaced in the sense of the description provided by the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement or secondary displaced Palestinian refugees.

H. Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

89. All killings during the Gaza conflict that violated applicable human rights and humanitarian law norms come within the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. For that reason, the major focus is on the principle of accountability.

90. According to available estimates, a total of 1,440 people were killed (see paragraphs 1-8). The principal dispute concerns the proportion of the Palestinian men killed who can be classified as civilians or combatants. Israel has estimated that at least 700 Hamas fighters were among the dead, while the estimate of the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights is closer to 300. The difference relates in part to the status of those members of the civilian police force in Gaza who were not engaged in fighting, and whom Israel apparently intentionally targeted.

91. There are strong and credible reports of war crimes and other violations of international norms. On the basis of the extensive information available, the great majority of observers have concluded that systematic and impartial war crimes investigations must be undertaken. To date, as described below, there is no indication of any credible moves in this direction at the national level; on the contrary, all developments point in the opposite direction.

92. There are, however, also some who have sought to refute or discredit the information gathered and the conclusions drawn in those reports. To take but one example, a group called NGO Monitor in a report entitled "The NGO front in the Gaza war: the Durban strategy continues" of February 2009, called "entirely unfounded" a claim that Israel had committed indiscriminate attacks against civilians, a claim that it attributed to Human Rights Watch, the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, Amnesty International, Al Mezan and a range of other groups. This refutation is based on the argument that the Israel Defense Forces had "legal advisers embedded with combat units making analyses prior to any military action". The assumption is that indiscriminate attacks could never occur given the role of these advisers. Moreover, the non-governmental organizations levelling these charges are said not to "possess military expertise, detailed information on the dispersal of weapons by Hamas", nor to be "privy to Israeli targeting decisions". As a result, the report argues that they can make no "credible evaluation".

93. This exchange goes to the heart of the issue. No amount of legal input into decision-making by lawyers can render post hoc accountability unnecessary. Indeed, such assiduous conduct should make a party more willing to be subject to scrutiny. Similarly, the suggestion that international monitors lack the expertise or the information required to evaluate compliance precisely begs the question. If accepted, such a critique would undermine the entire concept of international accountability and leave States and others as the only ones qualified to judge their own compliance. Rather than the rule of law, this would be the law of the jungle.

94. While the Israeli military operation in Gaza was but one episode in a long-standing, complex and highly contentious conflict, these characteristics make it more, rather than less, imperative that there be full accountability in relation to alleged violations. The alternative is de facto impunity, which mocks the international legal order, makes hollow the international obligations undertaken and reaffirmed by the parties, increases the likelihood of more flagrant violations in the future, and poisons the prospects for an eventual solution to the conflict.

95. The accountability record to date of both sides should give the Council cause for deep concern. The Special Rapporteur has been requesting an invitation to visit the Occupied Palestinian Territory since June 2006. In that year, the Palestinian Authority issued an invitation but Israel has not done so, despite a series of follow-ups. Specific incidents raised in the context of communications from the Special Rapporteur addressed to Israel have generally drawn either no response or an unsatisfactory one.

96. The responses at the national level to calls for accountability have also been disappointing. Hamas, for its part, has given no indication of its willingness to investigate or respond to allegations directed at it. Israel has announced several inquiries into specific incidents, but these are being undertaken by the military authorities themselves, and the track record of the many such inquiries launched in the past is consistently problematic. During the conflict, Israel refused entry to Gaza to journalists and representatives of international non-governmental organizations seeking to monitor the conduct of hostilities. At the end of the invasion, the Prime Minister of Israel, Ehud Olmert, was widely quoted as having promised to provide “State protection” to military personnel who might face foreign war crimes prosecutions, stating that Israel would assist them on that front and defend them. Foreign prosecutions would, however, be both unnecessary and unsustainable if Israel were to honour its obligations to undertake credible investigations and, where appropriate, undertake domestic prosecutions.

97. Several issues of concern that need thorough investigation were brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur. These include, inter alia, violations of the principles of conduct of hostilities, the targeting of Palestinian police and members of the Hamas political wing not taking part in hostilities, and the questionable use of certain weapons in densely populated areas, including white phosphorous shells, 155 mm shells and flechette shells. He is also concerned by credible reports of extrajudicial executions of Palestinians attributed to Hamas security forces during the conflict.

98. The above developments highlight the imperative need for the Israeli authorities and those of Hamas to cooperate fully with international endeavours to establish accountability in relation to the conflict. Recognition of such accountability should also include facilitating a visit by the appropriate special rapporteurs.

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS

99. The recommendations formulated by the mandates whose submissions are included above have been compiled and merged in the section below.

100. The protection of civilians requires immediate action by all parties and the international community.

101. All parties to the conflict should cease all actions violating international human rights and humanitarian law. In particular, the occupying Power should:

- (a) End the blockade on Gaza negatively affecting civilians;
- (b) Allow unimpeded and safe passage and access to Gaza of humanitarian assistance, including food aid;
- (c) Allow the unrestricted imports of medical supplies, foodstuffs and agricultural inputs, fuel and construction materials;
- (d) Grant prompt permission for patients with medical referrals for treatment outside Gaza, especially for expectant and nursing mothers;
- (e) Ensure the free and unimpeded movement of civilians between Gaza and other parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

102. All parties should establish accountability mechanisms providing for law-based, independent, impartial, transparent and accessible investigations of alleged breaches of international human rights and humanitarian law in accordance with their respective obligations. Such investigations must hold perpetrators to account and provide redress to victims where violations are found to have occurred. Investigations should address, inter alia, the following issues:

- (a) Violations of the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution: a significant number of incidents have occurred where the circumstances and the large number of civilians killed in a single attack raise prima facie concerns that the attacks were carried out without respect for these principles;
- (b) Targeting of Palestinian civilian police and members of the Hamas political wing: Israel is accused of having intentionally targeted civilians and civilian objects considered connected to Hamas, but not taking direct part in hostilities;
- (c) Use of human shields and placing civilians at risk: there are credible reports of both Israel and Hamas co-locating military targets near civilians and civilian objects. There are specific reports that Hamas fired rockets and conducted other military offensives from residential areas, and that Israeli soldiers took sniper positions from within Palestinian homes, endangering the lives of residents;
- (d) Extrajudicial executions by Hamas of Palestinian civilians;

(e) Unlawful use of incendiary weapons (white phosphorous artillery shells): the use of white phosphorous during a military offensive may be permissible where it is intended to provide cover for troop movements. There are, however, reports that Israel used such weapons in densely populated civilian areas, with severe consequences for residents. Unlawful use of artillery shells (155 mm): there is reliable evidence that artillery shells, which can have a casualty radius of up to 300 metres, were also used in densely populated civilian areas. Unlawful use of flechettes (4 cm darts): Israel is reported to have used 120 mm shells packed with flechettes in populated residential areas;

(f) Attacks on medical personnel and ambulances as well as hospitals and denial of medical treatment and access to treatment offered by ICRC and the Palestinian Red Crescent Society;

(g) Attacks on schools;

(h) Destruction of vital civilian infrastructure;

(i) Interference with the provision of humanitarian aid.

103. All parties must implement their obligations to respect, protect and fulfil human rights, including, where necessary, by taking any measures needed to:

(a) Ensure the protection of medical workers and facilities and facilitate rehabilitation for seriously wounded patients, as well as psychosocial health support and treatment, especially for children and youth;

(b) Enable the immediate resumption of regular educational activities, make schools zones of peace and ensure that schools are protected from military attacks and from seizure or use as centres for recruitment;⁶⁵

(c) Promote education as a means to reduce psychosocial stress and build the conditions for lasting peace;

(d) Facilitate the prompt repair of greenhouses, farms and centres of food production;

(e) Enable the repair of water and pumping stations;

(f) Enable the import of reconstruction materials needed to build or repair vital infrastructure and housing, and facilitate the full reintegration in dignity and security of the recently displaced (without prejudice to the right of return of Palestinian refugees);

(g) Ensure access to liquidity and financial and other resources needed so that people may resume normal livelihoods;

⁶⁵ See also the “Minimum standards for education in emergencies, chronic crises and early reconstruction”, published by the Inter-Agency Network for Education in Emergencies in 2004.

(h) Take carefully into account the needs of particular groups, including children, women, persons with disabilities, refugees and those displaced by the recent violence.

104. United Nations entities should continue to assess the needs of the Palestinian people with a view to contributing to the wide-scale reconstruction efforts of the international community in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including by continuing its damage assessment by compiling satellite imagery and other detailed data on destruction in Gaza.

105. The international community should actively promote the implementation of the decisions, resolutions and recommendations of the Security Council, the International Court of Justice and the United Nations human rights mechanisms, including treaty bodies and special procedures. In this respect, the mandate-holders recall the obligation of States to cooperate to bring to an end through lawful means any serious breach of an obligation arising from a peremptory norm of general international law. They also recall the obligation of all States to ensure respect for the provisions of international humanitarian law.

Annex

SPECIAL REPORT ON GAZA AND SOUTHERN ISRAEL PREPARED BY THE SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL FOR CHILDREN AND ARMED CONFLICT

1. From the launch of “Operation Cast Lead” on 27th December 2008 until the ceasefire of 17 January 2009, the extensive Israel Defense Forces (IDF) led air and ground operations within Gaza 1,440 people were reported killed, including at least 314 children, as verified by the inter-agency working group, and 5,380 injured, including 1,872 children; up to 200,000 people, including 112,000 children, displaced and movement for the majority of the population severely restricted. In the closely built-up areas of Gaza it became increasingly difficult to obtain accurate and updated information. At times during the 22 days of bombardment, international and local media broadcasts were the only information available to humanitarian or human rights agencies. In periods when there was a lull in air or ground attacks, there were some opportunities for staff of human rights agencies to verify information being received. Since the ceasefire, capacity to verify information has improved and this report is compiled from reliable reports provided by the inter-agency Working Group member organisations. In Southern Israel it is reported that 3 Israelis were killed and 182 people injured, although specific information on children is currently unavailable.
2. Civilian targets, particularly homes and their occupants, appear to have taken the brunt of the attacks, but schools and medical facilities have also been hit. This is despite the fact that, in the case of UNWRA schools, GPS coordinates were provided to the IDF by UNWRA.
3. The intensity of Operation Cast Lead has resulted in many psychosocial difficulties for children; so much so that UNICEF has made psycho-social support one of its emergency priorities in Gaza. This is also true in southern Israel, where the days of conflict resulted in a high incidence of psycho-social complaints on the part of children there.

Children killed and injured

4. 56 per cent of the 1.5 million population, of Gaza, are under the age of 18 years; the latest conflict and preceding 18 months of almost total blockade has had a massive impact on a generation of young people. The Palestinian Authority (PA) Ministry of Health (MoH) reports that at least 431 Palestinian children have been killed since 27th December 2008; independent monitors from the inter-agency working group have verified 314 cases of children killed to date. Work continues to verify final numbers.
5. Many children have been injured during the period of fighting and the PA MoH reports 1,855 children injured while independent monitors report at least 860 children have sustained injuries. Handicap International estimates that up to 50 per cent of people injured have sustained severe injuries that, without proper rehabilitation, could result in permanent disability.
6. During this period, the Magen David Adom, the national emergency medical, disaster, ambulance and blood bank service, reported that 3 Israelis were killed in Southern Israel and 182 people were injured by rocket fire from Gaza. The Inter-agency working group (working group) have been unable to verify this. The lack of greater casualties is most likely attributable to a very effective programme of security awareness training in schools and an early warning system by the Israeli authorities.

7. Violations were reported on a daily basis, too numerous to list: below are just a few examples of the hundreds of incidents that have been documented and verified by the working group.

8. On 3 January, during an IDF operation in Gaza City at 6.30 AM a tank shell landed near a family's house; a father and his two young sons, both aged under 11 years, emerged to survey the situation. As they exited their home, IDF soldiers shot and killed them (at the entrance to their house), with the daughter witnessing. The IDF ordered the mother and daughter to leave the house, refusing the request of the girl to move the bodies. Bulldozers commenced destroying the house with the woman and child still inside; as they exited from the house the woman sustained a broken hip. The mother and child then watched as their home was destroyed; rubble and bodies being bulldozed together. Days later, the child was still in shock and only moving her eyes; the mother has lost the ability to speak.

9. On 7 January, after several days of requesting safe passage to the above-mentioned area of Gaza City, during a three-hour lull in hostilities, an ICRC/Palestinian Red Crescent Society^a medical team was allowed on foot (without ambulances) into the closed military area to evacuate any remaining survivors. According to the ICRC, in one house, the team found four small children next to their dead mothers who were too weak to stand up on their own. Due to the limited time allowed, the team was not able to reach all houses in the area. In all, ICRC/PRCS evacuated by donkey cart 30 Palestinians including 18 wounded. The IDF restricted further access to the area, prompting the ICRC to issue a public statement demanding urgent access and charging the Israeli army with failing to assist wounded Palestinians.

10. On 15 January, as IDF tanks moved into Tal Al Hawa, south-west of Gaza City, families moved from their apartments to the ground floor of the building, bringing bags or personal belongings with them. IDF soldiers entered the building. A number of young people had their wrists tied and eyes covered and were ordered to stand aside. Other children and older women were made to stand on the other side of the room. One of the boys (aged 11 years) was told to open the bags one by one; one of the bags had a lock which a soldier shot at as the child struggled with it, although the boy was uninjured. The boy was then made to accompany the IDF for a number of hours during a period of intense operations. As the group of soldiers moved through the town the boy was made to walk in front. When they entered the building of the Palestinian Red Crescent Society the 11 year old boy was made to enter first, in front of the soldiers. Later while moving through the town the IDF met with resistance and were shot at, the boy remained in front of the group. On arrival at the Al Quds Hospital the boy was at the front but they released him at the entrance to the hospital. This appears to be in direct contravention to a 2005 Israeli High Court ruling on the illegality of the use of human shields and a violation of international law.

^a The Palestinian Red Crescent Society is the recognized Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement in Gaza and is an internationally recognized organization with medical functions. It is the operational partner of the International Committee of the Red Cross in this humanitarian operation, and a member of the International Federation of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

11. There have also been allegations of Hamas effectively using civilians as human shields. In addition there have been reports of Hamas firing from densely populated places and near protected areas. The working group is currently investigating these reports.

12. On Monday 29 December 2008, at about 1:00 a.m., an IDF missile struck Imad Aqel Mosque in the centre of the densely crowded Jabalia camp, damaging the surrounding houses. A family house was hit, and five sisters aged 4-17 years were killed in their sleep when their bedroom was completely destroyed. Four children, aged 2-16 years, were injured in the same attack.

13. On 4 January, IDF foot-soldiers moved members of one extended family, from different houses, into a single residence, ordering them to stay inside. There were over 100 Palestinian civilian family members in the house. Approximately twenty-four hours later, IDF forces shelled the home, killing twenty-three, including nine children aged 8 months-17 years, and seven women. Those who survived and were able walked two kilometres to Salah Ed Din road before being transported to the hospital. An additional seven members of the same family, including three children, were killed in the same area in separate incidents during the military operation.

14. On 28 December 2008, one family was sitting around a fire in farmland near their home in al-Zaitun village. The head of household asked his 7 year old daughter to fetch tea in their home and, as soon as the girl entered the house, it was hit by a missile and reduced to rubble. Family members outside all sustained shrapnel wounds and were transferred to Al-Shifa hospital to be treated for broken bones, cuts and bruises. The young girl's body was found only the next morning, when rescue workers finished clearing the rubble.

15. On 2 January 2009, one 8-year-old boy, his brother (11), and a member of the extended family (11) went to pick some sugar cane from an adjacent property in Al-Qarara. North of Khan Younis, in southern Gaza. Upon returning from the field, they were struck by a missile fired from an Israeli drone aircraft. Two of the boys died at the scene, while the third boy died on the way to hospital.

16. On 3 January 2009, Israeli soldiers entered a family house in the Zeitoun neighbourhood of Gaza City. Standing at the doorstep, they asked the male head of the household to come out and shot him dead, without warning, while he was holding his ID, hands raised up in the air, and then started to fire indiscriminately and without warning into the room where the rest of the family was huddled together. The eldest son was shouting in vain the word "children" in Hebrew to warn the soldiers. The shooting did not stop until everyone was lying on the floor. The mother and four of the brothers, aged 2-12 years, had been wounded, one of them, aged four, fatally.

17. On 18 January, the IDF fired artillery shells that hit a house located on Salah Ad-Din Street in Jabalia Refugee Camp. The shelling killed 3 children, aged 14-17 years, and injured two others from the same family.

Alleged use of white phosphorous weapons in civilian areas by the Israel Defense Forces

18. There have been allegations of white phosphorous being used during the IDF attacks in Gaza. The use of weapons is governed by the general principles on the conduct of hostilities, i.e. the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, as outlined in the legal framework section. In addition, although not specifically banned in any treaty, the use of incendiary weapons is limited by Protocol III^b of the 1980 Geneva Convention.^c

19. The following are two reports on incidents that have been verified:

In Jabalia, on 10 January 2009, white phosphorous shells hit a family house which is located west of the (former) Civil Administration building. Two children were seriously injured from burns (two 16 year old boys). The first boy is in Shaifa Hospital and the other who is suffering from third degree burns has been transferred to a hospital in Egypt.

At 6:30 a.m. 18 January 2009, the IDF fired several shells - some of which appeared to be white phosphorus - which landed in and around the UNRWA Beit Lahia Elem School that sheltered displaced civilians. One shell struck a classroom, where civilians were sheltered. The shell broke through the roof and exploded on the ground, spreading its shrapnel into classrooms. Two children (5 and 7) were killed and their mother was injured. Total number of injuries from this incident was 14. Four of the injured indicated phosphorous burns (including one child) UNWRA has stated that they have evidence of white phosphorous having being fired into their installations, including the UNWRA school in Beit Lahia. This is also supported by video footage of phosphorous shells being used.^d

20. The aftermath of the conflict has left many risks for children in the form of unexploded ordnances, small arms and possible contaminated shrapnel which has already resulted in deaths

^b Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May be Deemed to be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects of 10 October 1980.

^c Israel did not ratify the Third Protocol but its military manuals reflect restrictions on white phosphorus use (A 1998 Israeli military manual states: "Incendiary arms are not banned. Nevertheless, because of their wide range of cover, this protocol of the CCW is meant to protect civilians and forbids making a population centre a target for an incendiary weapon attack. Furthermore, it is forbidden to attack a military objective situated within a population centre employing incendiary weapons. The protocol does not ban the use of these arms during combat (for instance, in flushing out bunkers)."

^d Statement from the Times: The Israeli army has, however, launched an internal inquiry into whether white phosphorus was used in some cases in built-up areas, having eventually admitted that it did use the incendiary substance, which is not illegal as a battlefield smokescreen but is banned from being used in civilian areas. Camera footage from one such attack shows what appears to be white phosphorous raining down on a UN school in Beit Lahiya, where Red Crescent ambulances and their crews were stationed.

to children. On 20 January two children were killed by unexploded ordnances in Az-Zaitoun, in the eastern part of Gaza City. The boy (10) and girl (11) were playing in an area from which the IDF had recently withdrawn.

Attacks on schools and health facilities

21. Seven Ministry of Education schools were destroyed and 157 schools were damaged by air strikes and related bombardment in Gaza, in addition damage to 36 UNWRA schools. In an area where many Gazan schools already operate a double shift system, the provision of education to children will be under exceptional strain.

22. On 6 January 2009, three shells landed outside the UNRWA Jabalia Prep C Boys School, resulting in at least 37 fatalities, including 14 children (three aged 10, three aged 13, three aged 15 and one each of 3, 11, 14, 16 and 17 years of age). There were at least 55 injuries (including 15 children) of which 15 are reported to be in critical condition. Further investigation is required to determine the exact location of where children were injured and killed. The school was being used as a shelter for people fleeing hostilities.

23. In the same period, two schools in Ashkelon, southern Israel were damaged by rocket fire from Gaza. One "Grad" rocket hit the Tzvia school, a religious girl's school and another hit at the entrance to the Newe Dkalm school. Due to preparations made in both schools there were no casualties.

24. During the fighting, damage was reported in 14 of the 27 hospitals in Gaza and at least 38 clinics were damaged by IDF fire. Fata and Al-Wafa rehabilitation hospitals, managed by NGOs, are the only rehabilitation hospitals in Gaza and both were severely damaged. Additionally eight UNRWA health centres sustained light damage. Of the 148 ambulances in Gaza, at least 29 have been damaged or destroyed. Two ambulance stations (Gaza and Jabalia) were also destroyed.

25. Al-Quds Palestinian Red Crescent Society Hospital in south Gaza City, was hit by direct IDF fire. Soldiers surrounded the hospital during the early hours of 15 January and opened fire on the hospital compound. The administrative building and pharmacy adjacent to the hospital were hit and caught fire. Fearing an imminent explosion or the spread of the fire, hospital authorities evacuated all patients to the hospital's ground floor and prepared for a complete evacuation. At least 50 patients, 20 of whom were confined to their beds, waited several hours to be evacuated. Fire-fighters and ambulances were prevented from evacuating the patients for about five hours. Between 27 December and 19 January, 16 health personnel were reported to have been killed while on duty, and an additional 22 injured.

Denial of humanitarian access

26. The 20-month blockade of Gaza had already resulted in a scarcity of many goods and an insufficiency of basic support services. This has impacted upon children in the decreased availability of nourishing foods, and the compromised ability to provide essential services such as health and education. The blockage of basic provisions has not changed since the crisis and continues to limit not only the normal development of children but now recovery from the immense impact of the 22-day conflict.

27. Approximately 91 per cent of Gaza's population - some 1,275,300 people including 14,168 children - are now dependent on food assistance. Despite the severity of the attacks and the immense humanitarian need, there have been no significant changes to access restrictions in Gaza prior to that of 26 December 2008. From 27 December to 21 January 2009, the total number of trucks that entered was an average 95 per day through Kerem Shalom and 56 through Karni, for a total average of 151 per day. Aid experts cite that a minimum of 400 trucks per day are needed to satisfy critical humanitarian needs in Gaza, while emergency reconstruction efforts would necessitate at least 1,500 trucks per day.

28. Without construction materials being allowed into Gaza there can be no significant recovery for the communities. The IDF continues to block the delivery of pipes and fittings, which is having a deleterious impact on the access to safe drinking water. On 25 January UNICEF was informed that a solar refrigerator for vaccines destined for North Gaza was denied entry; this is having a direct impact on children and pregnant women who are unable to receive vaccination at their local Primary Health Clinic.

29. An estimated 3,300 babies were born during the conflict, during which there were reports of premature labour and delivery due to the lack of access to healthcare. Also, primary health care services were reported to have declined by about 90 per cent, and many programmes such as vaccination schemes and neonatal care stopped completely for significant periods.

30. Water, sewer, electricity and education infrastructure and services were also extensively damaged and interrupted; almost certainly compounding obstacles to recovery and rehabilitation for displaced children and their families. For example, at the height of the conflict, nearly all of Gaza's population - including 793,520 children were without electricity, and at any given time during the conflict, some 500,000 people were without water. Around 30,000 babies - or three quarters of Gaza's infants under 6 months of age - are not exclusively breastfed, exposing them to a high risk of infection or malnutrition from using breast milk substitutes prepared with potentially contaminated water.

31. At least 2,200,000 litres of sewage have leaked out of Gaza's waste water system due to damage from shelling, affecting at least 91,727 people, including 51,367 children, this now poses serious health risks, and the impact on children has the potential to be significant.

32. Until the Government of Israel allows an increased range of supplies into Gaza, including construction materials, there can be no meaningful recovery for the children of Gaza. School and health facilities have been badly affected by the attacks. The education system was already under severe strain and now an increased number of schools are without adequate resources to provide education for children. In addition to construction materials, schools need paper for text books, school stationary supplies, recreation and sports kits - all of which have been denied access by the IDF since the end of the 22-day conflict.

Displacement

33. It has been estimated that 200,000 people were displaced, among them 112,000 children, at some point during the conflict. At the peak of displacement on 17 January, UNRWA was accommodating, 50,896 displaced persons in 50 UNRWA shelters. As of 25 January 2009, 510 people (88 families) remained housed in UNRWA run emergency shelters in community based organisation and of the areas so far surveyed 66,000 people are living with host families for a total of 66,510 people.

34. For example, on 04 January 2009 at 15.00 hrs, fighting between militants and the IDF in Al Zatioun resulted in approximately 5,000 persons fleeing their houses and taking refuge into another area. In another incident, on 05 January 2009 at 06:00 hrs, IDF armoured vehicles advanced into the Customs Junction in Beit Hanoun and opened fire repeatedly into the nearby neighbourhoods. About 80 households were forced to evacuate their homes, owing to the IDF offensive, and take refuge in schools which UNRWA had opened to shelter them. Among them were about 150 children. Later, Israeli troops advanced into the aforementioned area and destroyed approximately 20 houses.

35. The situation for many families is now extremely difficult, with at least 4,100 residential structures destroyed and another 17,000 severely damaged; forcing many of the residents, among them thousands of children, to seek shelter elsewhere. The long term impact on children of being homeless increases their vulnerability and decreases their capacity to recover from the ordeal of the 22 days of attacks.

Arrests and detention

36. Reports have been received that children under the age of 18 years have been arrested for security offences along with adults by Israeli security forces in Gaza during the course of Operation Cast Lead. To date the working group has not been possible to verify this.

37. During the period of attacks in Gaza, lawyers have observed that the number of children arrested in the West Bank increased and the number of children brought to the Israeli Military Courts in pretrial hearings in the first two weeks of January was twice as high as in the same period in 2008. During the first two weeks of January alone, DCI-Palestine's legal department received 10 new cases of children for legal representation in the Military Courts compared with a monthly average of 10-15 new cases. Out of these 10 cases, eight were arrested from the street or during demonstrations against the Gaza attacks. DCI-Palestine has not yet been able to take statements from the children nor confirm if they were actively participating in demonstrations.

38. From 19-29 January, six cases of children aged 12-13 arrested for throwing stones at the Wall or in demonstrations, and taken to the Israeli Military Courts have been recorded. Lawyers were unable to obtain their release. These six children are awaiting trial and are likely to be sentenced and imprisoned. Under Israeli Military Order 378, stone-throwing carries a maximum sentence of 20 years, for adults and children. However, children usually serve 3-6 months in prison for throwing stones.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
11 June 2012

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twentieth session

Agenda item 3

Promotion and protection of all human rights, civil,
political, economic, social and cultural rights,
including the right to development

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Frank La Rue

Addendum

Mission to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory* **

Summary

The present report is submitted to the Human Rights Council by the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions 7/36 and 16/4. The Special Rapporteur undertook a mission to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory from 6 to 17 December 2011 to examine the situation of the right to freedom of opinion and expression. In the present report, the Special Rapporteur outlines his main issues of concern in Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza vis-à-vis the respective obligations of the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities.

In Israel, the Special Rapporteur raises his concern regarding recent attempts to diminish the space for criticism within Israel regarding its policies and practices of occupation, including the adoption of a series of restrictive laws by the Knesset. He also notes the discriminatory treatment of Palestinian citizens of Israel and attempts to curtail their right to freedom of opinion and expression.

* The summary is being circulated in all official languages. The report, which is annexed to the summary, is being circulated in the language of submission only.

 Late submission.

In the occupied Palestinian territory, the Special Rapporteur highlights the obstacles faced by journalists in undertaking their work, primarily as a result of restrictions to their freedom of movement imposed by the Government of Israel, and the internal division between the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and the de facto authorities in Gaza.

In the West Bank, the Special Rapporteur express his concern regarding the worrying trend of an increasing number of journalists, human rights defenders and bloggers who are arbitrarily detained and interrogated by the security forces of the Palestinian Authority for expressing critical views. He also highlights undue restrictions imposed on the right to freedom of assembly by the Israel Security Forces as an area of concern.

In East Jerusalem, the Special Rapporteur draws attention to the restrictions imposed by the Government of Israel on the right of Palestinians to seek, receive and impart ideas and opinions.

In Gaza, the Special Rapporteur raises his concerns regarding various restrictions imposed by the de facto authorities on the rights to freedom of expression and of assembly.

The report concludes with recommendations to the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza regarding the main issues of concern.

Annex

[English only]

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression on his mission to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Introduction	1–5	4
II. International legal standards.....	6–8	4
III. International human rights obligations	9–13	5
IV. Main issues of concern in Israel.....	14–45	6
A. Lack of sufficient protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression in domestic legislation	15–20	6
B. Prior censorship on issues related to national security	21–26	7
C. Restrictive bills and laws which threaten the right to freedom of opinion and expression	27–40	8
D. Restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion and expression of minority groups in Israel	41–45	10
V. Main issues of concern in the occupied Palestinian territory	46–96	11
A. Restrictive provisions in the Press and Publications Law of 1995	48–52	12
B. Defamation as a criminal offence	53–55	12
C. Ensuring the independence and effective functioning of the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation.....	56–57	13
D. Restrictions on the distribution of certain newspapers in the West Bank and Gaza.....	58–60	13
E. Restrictions on freedom of movement of journalists and human rights defenders imposed by Israel	61–65	14
F. Attacks against journalists, human rights defenders and bloggers.....	66–75	15
G. Restrictions on the right to peaceful assembly.....	76–89	16
H. Restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion and expression in East Jerusalem imposed by Israel	90–96	18
VI. Conclusions and recommendations	97–118	19
A. Government of Israel	97–108	19
B. Palestinian Authority	109–114	21
C. De facto authorities in Gaza.....	115–118	22

I. Introduction

1. The Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Frank La Rue, carried out a visit to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory from 6 to 17 December 2011, at the invitation of the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority. In Israel, he visited West Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Be'er Sheva and other surrounding villages in the Negev desert. In the occupied Palestinian territory, he visited East Jerusalem, Ramallah, Nabi Saleh and Gaza.

2. The visit was undertaken with a view to contributing, through effective engagement with all interlocutors, to efforts aimed at enhancing the enjoyment of the right to freedom of opinion and expression for all, without discrimination of any kind. The Special Rapporteur thanks both the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority for their invitation and the cooperation extended to him before and during the visit.

3. In Israel, the Special Rapporteur met with the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Intelligence and Atomic Energy, Dan Meridor; Spokesperson of the Prime Minister's Office; Deputy Foreign Minister, Daniel Ayalon; Spokesperson of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Deputy Director General for International Organizations at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Eviatar Manor; Minister of Improvement of Government Services; Spokeswoman for the Minister of Internal Security; Director of the Human Rights Unit at the Ministry of Justice; Director-General of the Ministry of Communications; Minister of Education; Judge Eliakim Rubinstein of the Supreme Court; the Speaker and three Members of the Knesset; State Comptroller (Ombudsman); Deputy Mayor of Tel Aviv; and Head of the Central Command of the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF).

4. In the occupied Palestinian territory, the Special Rapporteur held meetings with the Prime Minister, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Minister of Justice, Minister of Telecommunications and Information Technology, Minister of Women's Affairs, Deputy Minister of Information and Media Affairs, Chief Justice of the Higher Judicial Council, representatives of the Palestinian Broadcasting Authority, members of the Palestinian Legislative Council, Head of Preventive Security, Deputy Minister of Interior, and Head of General Intelligence Services. He also met with the representatives of the de facto authorities in Gaza.

5. In addition, the Special Rapporteur met with journalists, human rights defenders, lawyers, and community leaders in Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory, as well as with representatives from the United Nations country team and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in Ramallah. He wishes to express his sincere appreciation for the outstanding support provided to him by the staff of OHCHR and its office in the occupied Palestinian territory.

II. International legal standards

6. In carrying out his assessment of the situation regarding the enjoyment of the right to freedom of opinion and expression in Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory, the Special Rapporteur is guided primarily by article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which provides that:

- (a) Everyone shall have the right to hold opinions without interference;
- (b) Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or through any other media of his choice;

(c) The exercise of the rights provided for in paragraph 2 of this article carries with it special duties and responsibilities. It may therefore be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:

- (i) For respect of the rights or reputations of others;
- (ii) For the protection of national security or of public order (ordre public), or of public health or morals.

7. In addition, where relevant, given that peaceful assemblies and demonstrations constitute a form of expressing grievances and opinions, particularly in situations where media freedom is limited, article 21 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is also relevant to the mandate of the Special Rapporteur.

8. The legal framework of the mandate also includes relevant provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular the four Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their Additional Protocols. As emphasized for example by the Human Rights Committee in its general comment No. 31 (2004) on the nature of the general legal obligation imposed on States parties to the Covenant, the application of international humanitarian law and international human rights law is not mutually exclusive, but is complementary (para. 11). With regard to the applicability in the occupied Palestinian territory of certain rules of international humanitarian law and human rights instruments, the Special Rapporteur would like to refer to the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004, where this issue is discussed in detail.¹

III. International human rights obligations

9. Israel has acceded to the main United Nations human rights instruments,² including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. With regard to the applicability of the Covenant in the occupied Palestinian territory, the Special Rapporteur underscores that the international human rights obligations of Israel continue to apply in territories under its effective control, as well as during armed conflict.³

10. The Palestinian Authority, the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Legislative Council have made numerous statements and undertakings through which they have declared themselves bound by international human rights obligations.⁴

11. Although control over the Gaza Strip was officially transferred from Israel to the Palestinian Authority in 2005, it has been under the control of the de facto authorities following the Palestinian Legislative Council elections of January 2006. At the same time, despite the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Gaza strip, the legal responsibility of Israel as the occupying power in Gaza has not ceased, as it continues to exercise control over Gazan airspace, territorial waters and land access.

¹ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, paras. 86–113.

² See www.ohchr.org/EN/countries/MENARegion/Pages/ILIndex.aspx.

³ See, for example, concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee, CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 5.

⁴ Reports of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories, A/HRC/8/17, para. 8; and A/HRC/12/37, para. 7.

12. Additionally, the jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank remains limited, as Israel exercises exclusive control over approximately 62 per cent of the territory.⁵ The Palestinian Authority only exercises control over security and civil matters in Palestinian urban areas (“Area A”) and civil matters in Palestinian rural areas (“Area B”), while the remainder of the territories, including bypass roads between Palestinian communities in the West Bank, is under the exclusive control of the Government of Israel (“Area C”).

13. With respect to the de facto authorities in Gaza, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights has stressed that “non-State actors that exercise government-like functions and control over a territory are obliged to respect human rights norms when their conduct affects the human rights of the individuals under their control” (A/HRC/12/37, para. 7). The de facto authorities have also made public statements that they are committed to respect international human rights and humanitarian law (A/HRC/8/17, paras. 8–9).

IV. Main issues of concern in Israel

14. The Special Rapporteur is encouraged by the vibrant media landscape in Israel, where divergent opinions are openly exchanged. However, he underscores the importance of preventing undue media dominance or concentration by privately controlled media groups, as noted by the Human Rights Committee.⁶ He would also like to raise the following issues of concern in Israel.

A. Lack of sufficient protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression in domestic legislation

15. In the absence of a formal constitution, Israel has enacted a set of Basic Laws that set forth the State’s main institutions and fundamental rights. Among these, the most important is the Basic Law on Human Dignity and Liberty (1992), amended in 1994. However, the right to freedom of opinion and expression, as well as a general provision for equality and non-discrimination, are lacking in the Basic Law. Furthermore, the Penal Code of 1977 contains several vaguely and broadly worded definitions of incitement, in contravention of international standards.

16. The Special Rapporteur notes that despite the lack of an explicit reference to the right to freedom of opinion and expression in the Basic Law on Human Dignity and Liberty, the Supreme Court has contributed to safeguarding the right through its case law. For example, in response to the ban imposed by the Israeli Film Board on a film entitled Jenin, Jenin on the premise that it presented a distorted version of events, the Supreme Court in 2003 affirmed that “the fact that the film includes lies is not enough to justify a ban”, and that the film board’s decision “infringes on freedom of expression above and beyond what is necessary”. Nevertheless, the Special Rapporteur underscores that, as a

⁵ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Area C Humanitarian Response Plan Fact Sheet” (2010). Available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_area_c_humanitarian_response_plan_fact_sheet_2010_09_03_english.pdf.

⁶ CCPR/C/GC/34, para.40.

State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Israel is required to fully guarantee this right in its domestic legislation.⁷

17. The Israeli Penal Code contains several provisions that restrict the right to freedom of expression, including expression that constitutes incitement to racism, violence or terror. Publication of materials to incite racism, as well as any calls to “commit an act of violence or terror, or praise, words of approval, encouragement, support or identification with an act of violence or terror”, is subject to five years’ imprisonment (art. 1 A, paras. 144B and 144D2, respectively). Moreover, possession of publication that incites violence or terror is punishable by one year of imprisonment (para. 144D3). Furthermore, if a person “acts by speech in a public place or at a public gathering or by publishing to incite hostile acts against the Government of a friendly state”, the individual is liable to three years’ imprisonment (art. 5, para. 166).

18. In addition, under article 7, paragraph 173, of the Penal Code, a person who “publishes any printed, writing, picture, or effigy calculated to outrage the religious feelings or belief of other persons”, or who “utters in a public place and in the hearing of another person any word or sound calculated to outrage his religious feelings or belief” is liable to one year’s imprisonment.

19. While article 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights requires States to prohibit by law any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, the Special Rapporteur is concerned about the vague and broad terms used in the aforementioned provisions, such as “words of approval” or “identification” with an act of violence or terror, inciting “hostile acts against the Government of a friendly state”, and prohibition of expressions which “outrage the religious feelings or belief of other persons”. Moreover, he finds that making mere possession of a publication which may incite violence or terror an offence punishable by imprisonment is excessive.

20. The Special Rapporteur reiterates that any legislation which restricts the right to freedom of expression must comply with the conditions set out in article 19, paragraph 3, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: the law must be narrowly defined and justified as being necessary and the least restrictive means to serve a legitimate aim. Additionally, an individual whose right to freedom of expression has been restricted must be able to challenge the legal basis of the restriction in an independent court. To avoid arbitrary application of the law, the Special Rapporteur urges the Government to ensure that all domestic legislation which restricts the right to freedom of expression is in compliance with such criteria.

B. Prior censorship on issues related to national security

21. The Israeli Military Censor is a unit in the IDF Directorate of Military Intelligence, which is headed by the Chief Censor, an officer directly appointed by the Minister of Defense. The Chief Censor is mandated to screen and censor materials related to national security issues before publication.

22. According to an agreement signed between the Israeli Editors’ Committee and the Ministry of Defense in 1949, Israeli editors may voluntarily submit articles that relate to specific military issues or strategic infrastructure issues to the Chief Censor. The Special Rapporteur was informed that there were initially 65 topics subject to censorship, but that this has been reduced to 35 in the fifth agreement between the Editors’ Committee and the ⁷ See Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34 on article 19, para. 8.

Ministry of Defense. Foreign journalists are exempt from this agreement and the need to seek prior authorization for publication on national security matters. The Censor's decision may be appealed to the High Court of Justice, and the Censor cannot appeal a court judgment.

23. The Special Rapporteur was informed by the Chief Censor that when materials are submitted by journalists, a threat assessment is undertaken, based on the criterion of "imminent certainty of actual harm to State security". According to the Chief Censor, the list of topics provided to journalists provides sufficient guidance to journalists and editors to determine whether they will need to submit certain articles for prior screening and censorship.

24. Journalists and editors can also reportedly challenge the decision of the Chief Censor by submitting an appeal to an arbitration committee known as the "Committee of Three", which is headed by a former judge. Journalists or editors concerned may also appeal the decision of the Committee to the Supreme Court of Israel.

25. While the Special Rapporteur has been informed that there have been very few articles that have been censored by the Chief Censor, and that foreign journalists are free to report on national security matters without her review, he is concerned by the very existence of such a body for prior censorship. In the view of the Special Rapporteur, such a body should not exist in any country. In addition, the Special Rapporteur would like to remind Israel that any restriction on the right to freedom of expression must be clearly established in law, which must be accessible, unambiguous, drawn narrowly and with precision, and justified as being necessary and the least restrictive means available to protect a specific and legitimate national security interest. He regrets that such a law is currently lacking in Israel.

26. Moreover, he would also like to remind the Government of Israel that journalists should not be held accountable for receiving, storing and disseminating classified data which they obtained in a way that is not illegal, including leaks and information received from unidentified sources (see the thematic report of the Special Rapporteur, A/HRC/20/17). Furthermore, journalists should not be forced to reveal their sources of information.

C. Restrictive bills and laws which threaten the right to freedom of opinion and expression

27. The Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned by various bills and laws that have been proposed or have been adopted by members of the Knesset which contravene international standards on the right to freedom of opinion and expression. These include three laws that have already been adopted, namely the Budget Principles Law (Amendment No. 40) (the Nakba Law); the Law Preventing Harm to the State of Israel by Means of Boycott, 2011 (the Anti-Boycott Law); and the Law on Disclosure Requirements for Recipients of Support from a Foreign State Entity (the Foreign Funding Law).

1. The Nakba Law

28. The Nakba Law, which is an amendment to the Budget Principles Law of 1985, was adopted by the Knesset on 22 March 2011. This amendment empowers the Minister of Finance to fine public bodies that receive public funding, such as schools, universities or local authorities, if they hold events that commemorate "Independence Day or the establishment of the state as a day of mourning". Additionally, fines could also be imposed if such institutions hold events that aim to revoke "the existence of Israel as a Jewish and democratic State".

29. The Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned that this law is inherently discriminatory towards Palestinian citizens of Israel, who refer to Israeli Independence Day as the “Nakba”, meaning catastrophe or tragedy, to commemorate those who died and were displaced following the Israeli Declaration of Independence in 1948. The law severely undermines their right to freely express their opinion, preserve their history and culture, and to their right to commemorate the Nakba, which is an integral part of their history. In this regard, the Special Rapporteur would like to recall that “laws that penalize the expression of opinions about historical facts are incompatible with the obligations that the Covenant imposes on State parties ... Restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion should never be imposed” (Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34, para. 49).

30. Furthermore, given the vagueness and ambiguity of the wording of the law, the Special Rapporteur is concerned that fines could be imposed for holding events at which the Nakba is mentioned, or for criticism of the definition of Israel as a Jewish and democratic State. In order to avoid sanctions, individuals may self-censor themselves or refrain from organizing events which could be in breach of the law.

31. The Special Rapporteur also expresses his regret that, on 5 January 2012, the High Court, in response to a petition challenging the constitutionality of the law, avoided ruling on the matter until a concrete case arises. Given that the mere existence of the law itself encourages self-censorship and that the law itself is incompatible with the international obligations of Israel to fully guarantee the right to freedom of opinion and expression of all individuals, the Special Rapporteur strongly urges that the law be annulled.

2. Boycott Law

32. The so-called Boycott Law, passed by the Knesset on 11 July 2011, makes it a civil offence to call for a boycott against Israel and its products and those produced in the settlements in the West Bank. Parties filing lawsuits do not have to prove that a call to boycott has resulted in actual damages, as courts can order people or organizations calling for a boycott to pay compensation independently of the damages caused. In addition, the law allows the Minister of Finance to revoke the tax-exempt status of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) calling for a boycott. Furthermore, companies or organizations participating in a boycott may also be disqualified from applying for Government contracts.

33. On 29 August 2011, the Special Rapporteur submitted a joint allegation letter regarding this law, together with the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders (see communications report of special procedures, A/HRC/19/44, p. 70).

34. While the Special Rapporteur appreciates the reply received from the Government of Israel dated 15 December 2011,⁸ the Special Rapporteur is of the view that the law violates the right to freedom of opinion and expression, as calling for or participating in a peaceful boycott is a legitimate form of expression which is internationally recognized. Moreover, given that lawsuits can be brought against individuals without any proof of damages, it creates further incentives for self-censorship, including on the Internet, to avoid litigation. The Special Rapporteur is concerned by reports that, since the adoption of the law, the ability of individuals to freely discuss boycott-related issues via social media platforms has diminished significantly.

35. As explained in the response from the Government of Israel, the Special Rapporteur looks forward to the decision of the High Court of Justice regarding the legality of this law.

⁸ Available from https://spdb.ohchr.org/hrdb/19th/Israel_15.12.11_\(7.2011\).pdf.pdf).

3. Foreign Funding Law

36. The law known as the Foreign Funding Law, adopted by the Knesset on 2 March 2011, requires NGOs to report quarterly to the Registrar of Associations on any funding received from foreign Governments or any other foreign entities. While the declared purpose of the law is to increase transparency, it appears redundant, given that every non-profit organization in Israel is already required by law to list its donors and other financial information publicly on its website and to submit annual reports on donations received. The Special Rapporteur expresses concern about the discriminatory impact of the law on Israeli human rights NGOs who rely upon foreign Government funding, while other groups that receive private funding, such as Israeli Jewish settler groups, remain unaffected.

37. Additionally, there are two other bills which have been combined into the Bill on Income of Public Institutions Receiving Donations from a Foreign State Entity, which would deprive NGOs that receive foreign funding of the legal right to be exempted from income tax. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the fact that this bill has been put on hold, given that if adopted, it would have further restricted the work of Israeli human rights NGOs.

4. Amendment to the defamation law

38. The bill on the amendment to the defamation law, which passed its first reading in the Knesset on 21 November 2011, increases the fine for defamation from NIS 50,000 to NIS 300,000 without proof of damages. Due to the dramatic increase in financial penalties, the bill, if adopted, will create a significant chilling effect and will discourage investigative journalists, human rights NGOs and individuals expressing critical views.

39. The Special Rapporteur expresses concern that such initiatives constitute an attempt to undermine the work of Israeli human rights NGOs who are critical of the Government, particularly in relation to the occupation. The Special Rapporteur underscores the importance of facilitating the work of human rights defenders in Israel by creating a conducive environment and enabling them to peacefully exercise their legitimate right to freedom of opinion and expression.

40. Finally, while he has raised these concerns with the Speaker of the Knesset, Reuven Rivlin, and members of the Knesset, Faina Kirshenbaum and Ahmad Tibi, he would like to call upon all members of the Knesset to ensure that any legislative proposals presented to the Knesset are in compliance with the international human rights obligations of Israel. The Special Rapporteur would also like to underscore that all branches of the State – executive, legislative and judicial – and other public or governmental bodies, at whatever level, are in a position to engage the responsibility of Israel for any actions taken in contravention of international norms and standards on the right to freedom of opinion and expression (Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34, para. 7).

D. Restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion and expression of minority groups in Israel

41. The right to freedom of opinion and expression constitutes a key vehicle through which individuals and communities can draw attention to their grievances and combat situations of inequality and discrimination. Hence, the right is particularly important for the empowerment of vulnerable sectors of society, including minorities. In this regard, article 4, paragraph 2, of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities stipulates that States shall take measures to create favourable conditions to enable persons belonging to minorities to express their characteristics and to develop their culture, language, religion, traditions and customs, except where specific practices are contrary to international standards. Additionally, as a State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Israel has a positive obligation under article 19 to promote media pluralism and diversity, including in minority languages.

42. However, as briefly mentioned earlier, the Basic Law on Human Dignity and Liberty does not explicitly guarantee the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and also lacks a general provision for equality and the prohibition of racial discrimination. With regard to the latter, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination has repeatedly called upon the Government of Israel to ensure that the prohibition of racial discrimination and the principle of equality are included in the Basic Law and that a definition of racial discrimination is duly incorporated into the law (CERD/C/ISR/CO/13, para. 16; CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para.13).

43. The Special Rapporteur has been informed that Palestinian citizens of Israel are frequently regarded and treated as “an enemy from within”, given their ethnic and religious ties to the Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territory and the surrounding Arab and Muslim States, and consequently suffer from various discriminatory policies and treatment. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has also expressed concern that “excessive emphasis upon the State as a ‘Jewish State’ encourages discrimination and accords a second-class status to its non-Jewish citizens” (E/C.12/1/Add.27, para. 10; E/C.12/1/Add.90, para. 16).

44. As mentioned earlier, recent legislation passed by the Knesset, in particular the Nakba Law, infringe upon the right of Palestinian citizens of Israel to freely express their opinions and to commemorate a historically significant event. In relation to Arab Members of the Knesset, the Special Rapporteur is concerned about reports that following their participation in public events in defence of the rights of Palestinians and the exercise of their right to freedom of expression, certain parliamentary privileges have been revoked.

45. During his visit to the Negev desert, the Special Rapporteur was informed that the Bedouin community lacks clubs, meeting places and public places of worship to express and develop its culture, religion and traditions. In the city of Be’er Sheva, the Special Rapporteur visited the “Big Mosque”, and was informed that it has been converted into a museum, and that the Israeli High Court ruled in June 2011 that it should be used as an Islamic museum for the Muslim community. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the municipal authorities of Be’er Sheva implement this decision of the court, and also allow it to be used as a site for public prayer to allow the Muslim community to collectively express and maintain their culture and religion.

V. Main issues of concern in the occupied Palestinian territory

46. Individuals living in the West Bank face difficulties in exercising their right to freedom of opinion and expression by the Israeli security forces and by the growing intolerance of criticism by the Palestinian Authority, while those living in Gaza face interference and harassment by the de facto authorities. The situation in the occupied Palestinian territory is further compounded by an unclear domestic legal system which comprises a patchwork of British, Jordanian and Egyptian laws and Israeli military orders, as well as internal inter-factional conflict between the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities.

47. The following section outlines the main issues of concern in the occupied Palestinian territory, and are examined vis-à-vis the respective obligations of the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities.

A. Restrictive provisions in the Press and Publications Law of 1995

48. The Palestinian Basic Law, passed by the Palestinian Legislative Council in 1997 and ratified by the President in 2002, serves as a temporary constitution for the Palestinian Authority, and guarantees basic human rights and liberties. In particular, article 19 of the Basic Law provides that “freedom of opinion may not be prejudiced. Every person shall have the right to express his opinion and to circulate it orally, in writing or in any form of expression or art, with due consideration to the provisions of the law”.

49. In addition, article 27 of the Basic Law guarantees the establishment of all media as a right for all, protects media freedom, and prohibits censorship of the media, by stipulating that “no warning, suspension, confiscation, cancellation or restriction shall be imposed upon the media except by law, and pursuant to a judicial ruling”.

50. However, despite these provisions guaranteeing the right to freedom of expression, the Special Rapporteur is concerned by the existence of provisions that unduly restrict the right to freedom of opinion and expression in the Press and Publications Law of 1995.

51. While the intended purpose of the Press and Publications Law is to provide guidance to the media, guarantee journalists’ right to access information and to ensure every individual’s right to freedom of expression, it contains various provisions which contravene the Palestinian Basic Law and international standards on the right to freedom of opinion and expression. These include excessive Government control over the media, including licensing of print media and censorship of publication, and broad restrictions on the content of what may be published, many of which are vague. For instance, publication materials that contradict principles of freedom, national responsibility, or are “inconsistent with morals” or which may “shake belief in the national currency” are prohibited under articles 7 and 37. Furthermore, materials must be submitted for review by the Government prior to publication, in contravention of article 27 of the Palestinian Basic Law which prohibits media censorship. In addition, the Press and Publications Law provides harsh sanctions, including imprisonment, for breach of its provisions.

52. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the acknowledgement by Government officials of such problematic elements in the Press and Publications Law and efforts made by the Ministry of Information to amend the law in consultation with civil society representatives. He has been informed that the final version of proposed amendments to the Press and Publications Law will be submitted to the President for approval. He would like to reiterate his willingness to provide technical assistance in the reform process to bring the law into conformity with international standards, and to establish a clear regulatory framework for the media which would facilitate the work of journalists in Palestine and prevent any undue or excessive interference with their work.

B. Defamation as a criminal offence

53. The Jordanian Penal Code of 1960, which remains applicable in the West Bank, provides for criminal penalties of up to two years in prison for defamation, including in relation to Government officials (arts. 189 and 191). The Special Rapporteur has consistently called for decriminalization of defamation as a criminal offence, which is inherently harsh and encourages self-censorship. He has also stressed that all public figures are legitimately subject to criticism and should exercise a higher degree of tolerance, given their functions to serve the public.

54. The Special Rapporteur is particularly concerned by recent reports of detention and investigation of individuals who have expressed criticism of Palestinian officials, including unfavourable comments regarding President Mahmoud Abbas posted on Facebook.⁹ Such cases reveal a worrying trend of growing intolerance of criticism and monitoring of Palestinian users' Facebook accounts. Although individuals may not be formally prosecuted and convicted for defamation, the Special Rapporteur stresses that arrests, questioning and investigation themselves constitute a form of intimidation and harassment that engender a climate of fear and discourage individuals from criticizing authorities.

55. The Special Rapporteur thus calls upon the Palestinian Authority to decriminalize defamation and refrain from prosecuting individuals for defamation when it involves expression of opinion or criticism or matters of public interest which, even if false, was done without malicious intent. Moreover, the Palestinian Authority should take measures to promote a culture that is tolerant of diverse views, opinions and criticism.

C. Ensuring the independence and effective functioning of the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation

56. The Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation (PBC) was established in 1993 under the direct control of the Palestinian Authority to offer public television and radio in Palestine, which was forbidden prior to its establishment. As a Government institution, its employees are civil servants and appointed by the Palestinian Authority. However, following a presidential decree of 2009, PBC has been undergoing a series of reforms to become an independent and autonomous public service institution. To this end, the Special Rapporteur was informed that initiatives have been taken to promote cultural diversity in broadcasting and provide airtime for private and independent programmes, including satirical programmes. In particular, he is pleased to note that PBC is willing to provide the space for all individuals to express their opinions regardless of their political affiliation.

57. The Special Rapporteur is cognizant of the difficulties and challenges faced by PBC in transforming into an independent and autonomous body, including the political climate, paralysis of the Palestinian Legislative Council, and resistance from within PBC and from certain sectors of society who deem certain programmes to be contrary to cultural values and traditions. While many of the initiatives have yet to be implemented, including the establishment and appointment of the Board of Trustees, the Special Rapporteur welcomes the gradual transformation of PBC and looks forward to receiving information on the progress of reform. He also hopes that the availability of independent and satirical programmes will create a culture of openness and tolerance towards criticism.

D. Restrictions on the distribution of certain newspapers in the West Bank and Gaza

58. As a consequence of the inter-factional division between the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza following the Palestinian Legislative Elections of 2006, certain newspapers, perceived to be sympathetic towards either Fatah or Hamas, have been banned in Gaza and the West Bank, respectively. For example, Al-Quds al-Arabi, Al-Hayaat al-Jadida and Al-Ayyam are banned in Gaza, while Al-Risala, Falastine and Minbar al-Islah are prohibited in the West Bank.

⁹ Details of these cases will be included in the next joint communications report of special procedures.

59. Restrictions on the distribution of newspapers in Gaza and the West Bank constitute a clear breach of domestic law, including article 27 of the Palestinian Basic Law, which guarantees media freedom and prohibits restriction of publications without legal basis and judicial ruling. The Special Rapporteur reiterates that any restriction on dissemination of information must be based on law and clearly justified as being necessary to pursue a legitimate aim. The banning of newspapers is not only a violation of the right to impart information, but the right of the public to receive information.

60. Moreover, the legitimacy of the prohibition of the aforementioned newspapers is further undermined by the fact that the content of newspapers is available online in both the West Bank and Gaza. As such, the Special Rapporteur recommends that these politically symbolic restrictions be lifted by both parties to create a more conducive environment for dialogue and mutual understanding.

E. Restrictions on freedom of movement of journalists and human rights defenders imposed by Israel

61. Palestinians living in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza face daily obstacles and humiliation to travel both inside and outside of the occupied Palestinian territory, as a result of the construction of the Wall and other barriers, coupled with the imposition of military checkpoints, permit requirements and travel bans by Israel. The work of journalists and human rights defenders in the occupied Palestinian territory is particularly hindered by these restrictions to movement, as documenting and collecting information is central to their work.

62. In this regard, the Human Rights Committee has stressed that it is incompatible with the obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to “restrict the freedom of journalists and others who seek to exercise their freedom of expression (such as persons who wish to travel to human rights-related meetings) to travel outside the State party, to restrict the entry into the State party of foreign journalists to those from specified countries or to restrict freedom of movement of journalists and human rights investigators within the State party” (Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34, para. 45).

63. In addition, the Special Rapporteur is concerned about the imposition of travel bans, which are often justified on the basis of secret evidence. For instance, joint urgent appeals have been sent to the Government of Israel regarding a travel ban imposed on Shawan Jabarin, Executive Director of Al-Haq, a human rights NGO.¹⁰

64. Following his meeting with Mr. Jabarin during his visit, the Special Rapporteur extended an invitation to him to participate in an event at the nineteenth session of the Human Rights Council, which enabled Mr. Jabarin to appeal to the High Court of Israel regarding his travel ban. On 22 February 2012, the State Prosecutor approved a “temporary exception” to the ban to allow Mr. Jabarin to travel to Geneva, albeit with strict conditions. The Special Rapporteur regrets that upon his return to the West Bank on 1 March 2012, the travel ban has been reinstated for an indefinite period.

65. The Special Rapporteur urges the Israeli authorities to lift the travel ban against Mr. Jabarin altogether and carefully review the necessity of travel restrictions imposed on other human rights defenders and journalists so as to enable them to exercise their right to freedom of expression. In the light of the disturbing information that travel bans are justified on the basis of secret evidence, he would like to emphasize that any travel restriction imposed on an individual on the grounds of national security must allow the affected individual the opportunity to challenge the justifications for applying the restrictions, including the evidence supporting it, in a timely and open process.

¹⁰ A/HRC/7/14/Add.1, paras.348-350; A/HRC/14/23/Add.1, paras.1287-1296.

F. Attacks against journalists, human rights defenders and bloggers

66. Local journalists in the occupied Palestinian territory face difficulties in undertaking their work not only as a result of their restrictions to movement as described earlier, but also due to arbitrary arrests and detention, physical attacks and raids of their offices by the security personnel of both Israel and the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and the de facto authorities in Gaza.

67. In the West Bank, the Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned by the actions taken by the Palestinian Authority to arrest journalists and bloggers for critical comments regarding senior political officials, as noted in the preceding section. While the Special Rapporteur welcomes the announcement on 27 March 2012 of an annual press freedom prize recognizing exemplary journalism, he urges the Palestinian Authority to respect media freedom in practice.

68. Journalists in the West Bank are not only subjected to restrictions imposed by the Palestinian Authority, but by Israel, including arbitrary closure of radio and television stations, arbitrary arrests and detention, and attacks while covering demonstrations.

69. Recent cases of interference with Palestinian media include a raid by Israeli security forces on 2 April 2012 of a Palestinian radio, television and online media network established by Al-Quds University in East Jerusalem, when equipment and personal files were confiscated and two employees arrested. Similarly, Israeli security forces carried out night raids on 29 February 2012 of two Palestinian television stations in Ramallah and Al-Bireh, and confiscated broadcasting equipment, over 20 computers, two servers, hard drives containing the channel's archives and physical administrative and financial files. The Special Rapporteur expresses concern that such action may constitute an attempt by Israel to prevent the establishment of free and independent Palestinian media in occupied Palestinian territory. He urges the Government of Israel to refrain from such arbitrary interferences and return any seized equipment without any undue delay.

70. The Special Rapporteur also expresses deep concern over arbitrary arrests of journalists by Israeli security forces, including the recent arrest of Mohammad Anwar Muna on 3 April 2012 in Nablus. He notes with concern that journalists are among those held in administrative detention by the Israeli authorities.

71. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur is concerned by reports of deliberate attacks against Palestinian, Israeli and foreign journalists covering demonstrations in the West Bank by the Israeli security forces. He would like to remind the Government of Israel to allow journalists to perform their functions to monitor and report on demonstrations, and to investigate all allegations of attacks by the Israeli security forces and to bring those responsible to account to prevent impunity.

72. In Gaza, journalists, bloggers and human rights defenders face restrictions on monitoring, documenting and reporting freely on matters such as human rights violations committed by the de facto authorities and calls for Palestinian unity. He has also been informed of cases of attacks against journalists, such as confiscation of their cameras and equipment while covering demonstrations, which in some cases are followed by raids, arrests and beatings, including torture allegedly. For example, following a public assembly in support of Palestinian unity, the security personnel of the de facto authorities raided the offices of Reuters, destroyed equipment, beat two employees and confiscated a camera (see report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, A/HRC/19/20, para. 14). Journalists who are detained or summoned for an interview with the internal security apparatus are often allegedly coerced to sign a document to refrain from acts of incitement against the authorities (ibid.). These forms of harassment have an intimidating effect and constitute a clear breach of article 27 of the Palestinian Basic Law.

73. Additionally, the Special Rapporteur notes that journalists working for local news agencies in Gaza are at particular risk of such forms of harassment and avoid reporting on human rights violations for fear of being summoned or penalized by the Government Press Office of the de facto authorities. Hence, local journalists reportedly tend to make reference to reports or statements already published by human rights organizations to avoid being identified as a major source.

74. Furthermore, the ability of journalists to report freely in Gaza has been threatened by a new practice adopted by the de facto authorities requiring foreign journalists to name a local contact in order to enter Gaza. The Special Rapporteur has been informed by representatives of the de facto authorities that such a requirement has been introduced for security reasons, following the death in April 2011 of an Italian activist, Vittorio Arrigoni. However, the Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned that such practice encourages visiting journalists to avoid reporting on sensitive issues and to apply self-censorship, as the named local may be placed at risk of reprisals.

75. The Special Rapporteur urges the de facto authorities in Gaza to ensure that both local and foreign journalists can carry out their legitimate work without intimidation, harassment and interference by officials from the Internal Security Agency and the General Intelligence Service. This includes halting the practice of short-term detentions; abolishing the requirement for foreign journalists to name a local contact in Gaza; and creating an atmosphere of openness towards criticism.

G. Restrictions on the right to peaceful assembly

76. Peaceful assemblies and demonstrations constitute a means for individuals to publicly express their opinions or to raise legitimate concerns and grievances. As such, undue restrictions on the right to freedom of assembly may also constitute violations of the right to freedom of opinion and expression.

77. In the West Bank, regular demonstrations have been taking place to express grievances against the practices of occupation by Israel in areas under the security control of the Israel Defense Forces (IDF). In such areas, IDF Order No. 101 Regarding Prohibition of Incitement and Hostile Propaganda Actions, also known as Military Order 101, has been used to restrict Palestinians' rights to freedom of expression and assembly.

78. Military Order 101, issued in August 1967 by the then Officer Commanding of the Central Command and Commander of IDF in the West Bank, criminalizes political expression and activities, including organizing and participating in protests; taking part in assemblies or vigils; holding, waving, or displaying flags or other political symbols; and printing and distributing any material "having a political significance". Any breach of the order is punishable by 10 years of imprisonment and/or a fine. One of the main problems with the order is the sweeping prohibition of expression deemed to be "political", which is vague and subject to interpretation. Additionally, the use of "required degree of force" to enforce the order is permitted, which leaves considerable room for discretion and the potential for excessive use of force.

79. The Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned by the IDF practice of preventing peaceful demonstrations from taking place by stopping demonstrators gathering by setting up temporary checkpoints prior to scheduled demonstrations and declaring the area a closed military zone. As a consequence, anyone who enters the area despite the military closure is considered to have violated Military Order 101. Further, protesters are frequently dispersed by IDF using crowd control methods, even though the demonstrations are peaceful. The Special Rapporteur also expresses concern that IDF allegedly intimidate and collectively punish villagers of the site of demonstrations through night raids, using sound or gas bombs aimed at villagers' houses and declaring an entire village a closed military zone.

80. During his mission on 9 December 2011, the Special Rapporteur observed one demonstration in the village of Nabi Saleh in the West Bank. Since 2009, Palestinian, Israeli and international human rights defenders have been peacefully demonstrating against the construction of illegal Israeli settlements and the obstruction of access to Eing al-Qaws spring, which has been used by residents of Nabi Saleh for farming and recreational purposes. Despite the restraining effect that his presence at the site may have had on the large contingent of IDF forces, who withdrew from the main road leading to the village shortly after his arrival, the Special Rapporteur noted the use of tear gas and was informed of a young man who had been injured while he was in a meeting with the villagers in another area. The Special Rapporteur enquired about the fate of the demonstrator with the crew of an ambulance as he was passing the gate of a nearby checkpoint, and was informed that he had already been taken away for medical attention. The next day, the Special Rapporteur was informed that the young man, by the name of Mustafa Tamimi, had died in hospital as a result of his injuries caused by a tear gas canister fired from a short range directly into his face.

81. The Special Rapporteur is alarmed by the use of disproportionate and excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces to repress peaceful protests, including the use of tear gas, rubber-coated metal bullets and stun-grenades. He notes that the Secretary-General has also expressed concern regarding frequent and excessive use of force against unarmed demonstrators by Israeli security forces, including live ammunition and "tear gas canisters being fired as projectiles at protesters, resulting in severe injuries" (report of the Secretary-General, A/66/356, para. 20).

82. The Special Rapporteur raised such concerns during the meeting with Major General Mizrahi, Head of Central Command of IDF, including the specific case of Mr. Tamimi's death. He was informed that there are two ongoing investigations into Mr. Tamimi's death, one of which was to be concluded by 20 December 2011. The Special Rapporteur expressed his interest to receive the results of these investigations, which should also be made public, but regrets that he has not received such information.

83. In addition to the death of Mr. Tamimi, the Special Rapporteur has been informed that since 2003, a total of around 20 individuals have died while participating in demonstrations. The Special Rapporteur urges the Government of Israel to take effective measures to ensure prompt, impartial and effective investigations into every loss of life, which is essential to ensure accountability and to prevent impunity. He also emphasizes that any use of force against demonstrators or rioters must be strictly minimal and proportionate to the threat posed. For example, while the use of tear gas to disperse a crowd may be legitimate under certain circumstances, tear gas canisters should never be used at short range or aimed directly at protesters. While it has been alleged that IDF open-fire regulations prohibit such use, the Special Rapporteur has been informed of repeated infractions by members of IDF, who are rarely sanctioned or criminally held to account.

84. In the West Bank, the Special Rapporteur has also been informed of instances where security officials of the Palestinian Authority forcibly dispersed peaceful protests and journalists, photographers and human rights monitors were assaulted. The Special Rapporteur urges the Palestinian Authority to fully guarantee the rights of the Palestinian people to protest peacefully to express their views, including by investigating all attacks against protesters and journalists and holding perpetrators to account.

85. In Gaza, the Special Rapporteur is concerned by reports of excessive use of force by the security forces of the de facto authorities to disperse peaceful protests, as well as of arbitrary arrests and detention of protesters and journalists monitoring demonstrations. For instance, during a public assembly in support of Palestinian unity on 15 March 2011, at least 100 participants and observers were reportedly beaten, tents were destroyed and approximately 50 individuals were detained. Other smaller demonstrations in support of Palestinian unity during the following days were also allegedly violently dispersed.

86. Moreover, workshops and seminars in Gaza, including on human rights issues, are frequently disrupted by the security forces of the de facto authorities and prevented from taking place. For instance, the internal security personnel prevented the Palestinian Journalists' Syndicate from holding a workshop in commemoration of the International Day to End Impunity on 23 November 2011. The Special Rapporteur is also concerned by information received that organizers of events frequently receive phone calls from the internal security forces prior to the meeting telling them to cancel the event, or there will be "consequences".

87. In other instances, offices of human rights-oriented organizations have been closed by the police, including the offices of Sharek Youth Forum, a non-governmental organization funded by the United Nations Development Programme that seeks to create space for Palestinian youth to engage actively in the development of local communities. On 30 November 2010, the Attorney General of the de facto authorities ordered the offices to be closed on the grounds of "moral misconduct". The Special Rapporteur regrets that the closure order remains in place at the time of submission of the report.

88. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur expresses deep concern over reports of individuals facing reprisals by the security forces of the de facto authorities as a result of participating in academic conferences or workshops outside of Gaza. These include arbitrary detention, summons for interrogation and, in some cases, threats and ill-treatment (A/HRC/19/20, para. 13).

89. The Special Rapporteur stresses that peaceful demonstrations and assemblies should not be viewed as a threat, and urges the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority, and the de facto authorities to promote a culture of tolerance of divergent and opposing views, which is essential for any democratic society.

H. Restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion and expression in East Jerusalem imposed by Israel

1. Loyalty to the State of Israel

90. Palestinians who were residing and physically present in East Jerusalem at the time of illegal annexation by Israel in 1967 (A/66/356, para. 34; Security Council resolution 478 (1980)) were designated permanent residents and issued with different identity documents to Palestinians living in other areas of the West Bank. However, following their election in 2006 to the Palestinian Legislative Council, the residency status of four Palestinian Members of Parliament, Mohammad Totah, Ahmad Attoun, Mohammad Abu Teir, and Khaled Abu Arafah, was revoked due to their affiliation with a "hostile entity". On 8 December 2010, Mr. Abu Teir was forcibly transferred from East Jerusalem to another part of the West Bank by Israeli security forces, while Mr. Attoun was arrested in September 2011 and transferred on 7 December 2011.

91. The Special Rapporteur met with the two remaining members of the Palestinian Legislative Council who have been seeking refuge at the International Committee of the Red Cross, Mr. Totah and Mr. Abu Arafah. He is disturbed by the news that they were arrested by the Israeli police inside the premises of the Red Cross on 23 January 2012. As emphasized by the Secretary-General, the requirement of “loyalty to the State of Israel” is not only a violation of international humanitarian law, which prohibits the imposition of swearing “allegiance to the hostile power”,¹¹ but also undermines the right of Palestinian residents in East Jerusalem to exercise their right to freedom of opinion and expression (see A/66/356).

92. The Special Rapporteur appeals to the Government of Israel to reinstate the residency status of the four members of the Palestinian Legislative Council and enable them to peacefully exercise their right to freedom of opinion and expression in East Jerusalem. He also calls upon the Israeli authorities to fully ensure that all Palestinians living in East Jerusalem are able to peacefully express dissent and criticism of Israel without fear of revocation of their residency status or other forms of reprisals.

2. Censorship of textbooks

93. According to the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, the Palestinian Authority has jurisdiction over educational matters in East Jerusalem. However, the Special Rapporteur has been informed that sections of textbooks used in Palestinian schools have been censored by the Israeli Ministry of Education.

94. The Special Rapporteur emphasizes that Palestinians in East Jerusalem have the right to form their own opinions by following their own curriculum and determining the content of their textbooks. In addition, they should be able to maintain, express and impart their version of historical events.

3. Ban on cultural activities in East Jerusalem

95. Various Arab cultural events and activities in East Jerusalem have reportedly been prohibited by the Israeli authorities. For instance, in 2009, a number of cultural activities were prevented from taking place when Jerusalem was declared the Arab Capital of Culture as part of the Cultural Capitals Programme of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Other examples were brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur during his meeting with community leaders of Silwan, who informed him of various instances where cultural activities organized by the community members were banned by the Israeli authorities.

96. The Special Rapporteur calls on the Government of Israel to ensure that all cultural activities, which are an important element of the right to seek and share information, can be held without undue restrictions in East Jerusalem.

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

A. Government of Israel

97. The Special Rapporteur is concerned by recent threats to openness and acceptance of divergent views in Israel as a result of an increasing emphasis on Israel as a Jewish State and growing intolerance of criticism regarding the policies and practices of occupation. This has been manifested through a series of laws adopted by the members of the Knesset, including the prohibition of the commemoration of the Israeli independence day as a day of mourning; creation of additional, yet redundant, reporting obligations for Israeli human rights NGOs; prohibition of boycotts or calling for a boycott of Israeli products, including those produced in the settlements in the West Bank; and a six-fold increase of financial penalties for defamation.

¹¹ Article 45 of the Regulations concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land (Hague Regulations). Article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention also prohibits the forcible transfer of civilians of an occupied territory, except when necessary to ensure the security of the civilians involved.

98. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the Members of Knesset to refrain from adopting laws that are inconsistent with the obligations of Israel under international human rights law, including article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. While the Supreme Court can rule such laws to be incompatible with Israeli Basic Laws, the proposal and adoption of restrictive laws generates a climate of self-censorship. He would also like to underscore that all branches of the State – executive, legislative and judicial – and other public or Governmental bodies, at whatever level, are in a position to engage the responsibility of Israel for any actions taken in contravention of international norms and standards on the right to freedom of opinion and expression.

99. As recommended by various United Nations treaty bodies, the Basic Law on Human Dignity and Liberty should be amended to include principles of non-discrimination and equality and the right to freedom of opinion and expression.

100. The Special Rapporteur also recommends that the Government amend or repeal the vaguely worded provisions in the Penal Code, as highlighted in Chapter IV, section A.

101. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the post of Chief Censor be abolished in Israel, and that restrictions on the right to freedom of expression on the grounds of national security be prescribed by law. Such law must be accessible, unambiguous, drawn narrowly and with precision, and justified as being necessary and the least restrictive means available to protect a specific and legitimate national security interest. The law should also provide for adequate safeguards against abuse, including prompt, full and effective judicial scrutiny of the validity of a particular restriction by an independent court.

102. The right of individuals in the West Bank to express themselves through peaceful assemblies must be fully respected by the Israeli Security Forces. The Special Rapporteur urges the Government of Israel to repeal Military Order 101, and to ensure that there is no excessive use of force against peaceful protesters. Every injury or death resulting from the use of force by the Israeli security forces must be swiftly investigated and the individual responsible held accountable.

103. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the Government of Israel to ensure that all journalists in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, can perform their professional duties without undue interference. This includes halting the practice of arbitrary raids of and seizure of equipment from media offices, arbitrary arrests and detention of journalists, and deliberate attacks against journalists monitoring demonstrations. He urges the Israeli authorities to return all confiscated equipment without undue delay, release journalists who have been arbitrarily arrested or ensure that they are promptly brought before a court in accordance with international standards on the right to a fair trial, and investigate all attacks against journalists and bring perpetrators to account in order to prevent impunity.

104. The right to freedom of movement is crucial to the work of human rights defenders and journalists to access information and monitor, record and report on human rights violations and other matters of public interest. The Government of Israel has an obligation to justify the continued need for the imposition of travel bans on human rights defenders and journalists, including presentation of evidence to enable individuals to challenge bans in court.

105. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the Government of Israel to ensure that Palestinian citizens of Israel can fully exercise their right to freedom of opinion and expression, including through their own media and language. The requirement of “loyalty to the State of Israel” in East Jerusalem is in clear violation of international law and undermines the right to freedom of opinion and expression and should thus be repealed.

106. The right to freedom of opinion and expression of Arab Knesset members, as with all individuals in Israel, should be fully respected.

107. The Special Rapporteur appeals to the Government of Israel to reinstate the residency status of the four members of the Palestinian Legislative Council and to enable them to peacefully exercise their right to freedom of opinion and expression in East Jerusalem. He also calls upon the Israeli authorities to fully ensure that all Palestinians living in East Jerusalem are able to peacefully express dissent and criticism of Israel without fear of revocation of their residency status or other forms of reprisals.

108. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the Government of Israel to refrain from interfering with the content of text books used in Palestinian schools in East Jerusalem. Moreover, he calls upon the Government of Israel to ensure that all cultural activities can be held without undue restrictions in East Jerusalem.

B. Palestinian Authority

109. While recognizing the difficulties in implementing legislative reforms due to the paralysis of the Palestinian Legislative Council, the Special Rapporteur urges the Palestinian Authority to revise the Press and Publications Law of 1995, in consultation with civil society representatives, for ratification by the President.

110. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the Palestinian Authority to decriminalize defamation. He also urges public officials to exercise a higher degree of tolerance for critical comments and refrain from filing defamation lawsuits.

111. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the Palestinian Authority halt the practice of detaining and interrogating individuals for legitimate criticism of public officials. He also appeals to the Palestinian Authority to ensure that the right to freedom of expression on the Internet is fully guaranteed. Moreover, measures should be taken to promote tolerance of diverse opinions.

112. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the Palestinian Authority facilitate and support the reform of the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation into an independent institution.

113. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the Palestinian Authority to lift the ban on newspapers affiliated with the de facto authorities, and ensure that journalists working for such newspapers can freely undertake their work in the West Bank without fear of harassment or intimidation.

114. Peaceful demonstrations should be allowed to take place in the West Bank without undue restrictions.

C. De facto authorities in Gaza

115. The Special Rapporteur calls upon the de facto authorities to promote a culture of tolerance of divergent views, including criticisms, which is essential for any healthy society. To this end, he urges the de facto authorities to stop the practice of arbitrary arrests, detention and interrogation of individuals expressing critical views, as well as raids of offices, and interference with human rights related conferences and events.

116. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the de facto authorities lift the ban on newspapers affiliated with the Palestinian Authority and that journalists working for such newspapers can carry out their legitimate work in Gaza without any undue interference or harassment.

117. Peaceful assemblies and demonstrations should be allowed to take place in Gaza without undue interference and restrictions, as well as peaceful conferences and workshops.

118. The Special Rapporteur urges the de facto authorities in Gaza to ensure that both local and foreign journalists can carry out their legitimate work without intimidation, harassment and interference by officials from the Internal Security Agency. This includes halting the practice of short-term detention and abolishing the requirement for foreign journalists to name a local contact in Gaza.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
24 December 2012

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-second session

Agenda item 3

Promotion and protection of all human rights, civil,
political, economic, social and cultural rights,
including the right to development

Report of the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, Raquel Rolnik

Addendum

Mission to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory* **

Summary

The Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context carried out a mission to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory from 30 January to 12 February 2012. In the present report she presents her findings and recommendations regarding the protection and promotion of the right to adequate housing in Israel and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

* The summary of the present report is circulated in all official languages. The report itself, contained in the annex to the summary, is circulated in the language of submission and in Arabic only.

 The term Occupied Palestinian Territory, used during the visit of the Special Rapporteur, is being reviewed pursuant to the adoption of General Assembly resolution 67/19.

Annex

[Arabic and English only]

Report of the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context on her mission to Israel and to the Occupied Palestinian Territory (30 January–12 February 2012)

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Introduction	1–4	3
II. Israel	5–41	3
A. Legal framework	8–11	4
B. Housing affordability and adequacy	12–22	4
C. Palestinian minorities in Israel	23–31	6
D. Bedouin communities in the Negev	32–41	8
III. Occupied Palestinian Territory	42–92	10
A. Legal framework	43–49	10
B. East Jerusalem	50–59	11
C. West Bank	60–72	13
D. Settlement activity	73–85	16
E. Gaza	86–92	18
IV. Concluding remarks and recommendations	93–102	19

I. Introduction

1. From 30 January to 12 February 2012, the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, Raquel Rolnik, undertook an official country visit to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT). The purpose of the mission was to assess the situation of the right to housing within Israel and in the OPT.
2. The Special Rapporteur expresses her gratitude to the Government of Israel and the Palestinian National Authority for the invitation and the support provided for her mission. She also thanks the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory for its logistical support for her work.
3. During her visit, the Special Rapporteur met with officials and representatives of the Government of Israel and the Palestinian National Authority, international agencies and non-governmental organizations in Israel and in the OPT. In Israel, she visited Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Jaffa, Haifa, Akko, Sderot, Be'er Sheva and different villages in the Negev and Galilee. In the OPT, she visited East Jerusalem, Ramallah, Bethlehem, Hebron, communities in the Jordan Valley and the Gaza Strip. In her visits to Israeli and Palestinian communities, she met with local residents and saw their housing conditions. The Special Rapporteur thanks all those who met with her and shared information for the preparation of the present report. She is particularly grateful to all those who received her in their homes and communities.
4. The report is divided into three sections. The first describes the main findings of the Special Rapporteur's visit to Israel. The second section describes the findings relating to the OPT. The final section contains conclusions and recommendations.

II. Israel

5. Since the establishment of the State of Israel, adequate housing has been at the center of the Government strategy to absorb immigrants and refugees in order to establish a home for the Jewish community. Israel received successive immigration waves from different regions of the world and was relatively successful in quickly accommodating them in newly developed and expanded urban and rural areas. During the initial decades, the State acted as a major provider of public housing. However, since the 1980s—with a small interruption in the mid-1990s when approximately 500,000 families from the former Soviet Union immigrated to Israel—this approach has changed. Mortgage subsidies have reduced the direct public involvement in the housing sector.
6. The combination of subsidized mortgages policies with few rental options under an unregulated market has led to an exponential increase in housing prices. In 2011, large public demonstrations in Israeli cities underlined the public frustration with the rise in the cost of living, including the lack of alternatives for affordable housing, triggering a review of relevant laws and policies.
7. In addition to contributing to the affordability crisis that affects middle- and low-income quintiles of the overall Israeli population, housing laws and policies appear to have continuously failed to protect and assist Palestinian citizens of Israel (minorities representing 20 per cent of the population, also referred to as “Arab Israelis”, which include Muslims, Christians, Druze and Bedouins). For example, tenure insecurity, overcrowding, evictions and demolitions are often reported among these groups.

A. Legal framework

8. Israel is party to six core international human rights treaties, including, inter alia, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

9. Israel has no formal constitution, but has adopted a series of Basic Laws that guarantee a number of fundamental rights.¹ The Basic Laws do not explicitly protect economic and social rights, such as the rights to adequate housing or access to water, which is an issue that has been the subject of ongoing public debate.² Specifically, the right to adequate housing is not explicitly recognized in any Israeli law. Internal procedures of the Ministry of Construction and Housing are used to regulate the provision of public housing and housing assistance. Additionally, the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty does not explicitly guarantee equality and the prohibition of discrimination.

10. The Basic Law: Israel Lands establishes the principle of national ownership of the land (sect. 1). Currently, 93 per cent of Israel lands are publicly owned and can only be leased, not sold. They are managed by the Israel Land Administration. The Israel Land Council, a body comprised of representatives of Government ministries and of the Jewish National Fund, determines the policy of the Israel Land Administration.³

11. Following the creation of the State of Israel a series of laws were adopted regarding ownership of land, regulating the acquisition and management of private land and amending previous laws, notably from the Ottoman and British mandate periods. A number of these laws, as described below, disproportionately affected the Palestinian population.⁴

B. Housing affordability and adequacy

12. The mass construction of public housing under the framework of a planned development strategy was fundamental to the relative success of Israel in absorbing the successive waves of Jewish immigration. In the late 1960s, 206,000 units of public housing were in place.⁵ Various housing schemes were associated with the creation and expansion of development towns and immigrant neighbourhoods, such as different packages of subsidies and infrastructure projects.

13. Over the initial decades, the State continued to play a central role in providing indirect support for home ownership, particularly through facilitating infrastructure for new residential developments and subsidized credit for home buyers. However, in the mid-

¹ Common core document submitted by Israel (HRI/CORE/ISR/2008), para. 109.

² The Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), Proposed Basic Law: Social Rights (November 2011), available from www.acri.org.il/en/wp-content/uploads/2012/01/social-rights-bill-ENG.pdf. See also The Association for Community Empowerment (YEDID), “YEDID presents a Basic Law of Social Rights to the Trachtenberg Committee”, available from www.yedid.org.il/?id=4395.

³ See www.mmi.gov.il/envelope/indexeng.asp?page=/static/eng/f_general.html.

⁴ Examples include: the Absentees’ Property Law, 5710-1950 and other related legislation; the Land (Acquisition for Public Purposes) Ordinance, enacted in 1943 during the British mandate, and amendments; the State Property Law, 5711-1951; the Prescription Law, 5718-1958, which modified the application of the Ottoman Land Code; the National Parks and Nature Reserves Law, 5723-1963; the Planning and Building Law, 5725-1965; the Land (Settlement of Title) Ordinance; the Land Law, 5729-1969; and the Antiquities Law, 5738-1978.

⁵ ACRI, “Real estate or rights, housing rights and Government policy in Israel” (ACRI, 2008), p. 12.

1990s, a sharp policy shift took place, with a clear reduction of State involvement in providing housing support; the sale of public housing property; and an increasing emphasis on stimulus to enable private housing markets.

14. The strong emphasis on the promotion of home ownership through subsidized mortgages appears to have provoked a distortion in the housing market and contributed to a rise in inequality, as housing price increases have been disproportionately high for the poorest. For example, between 1993 and 1998, it was estimated that 44 per cent of households in Israel purchased a housing unit and the housing price index rose by 90 per cent. The price increase was faster and higher in the lower submarket range (88 per cent) than in the higher submarket range (51 per cent). For the lower wealth quintiles, the rise in housing prices led to an increase in household expenses for housing, while for the upper wealth quintiles it led to a decrease. The rise in real estate prices also seriously affected the rental market.⁶

15. The Special Rapporteur met with various representatives of civil society involved in the 2011 demonstrations, who emphasized that adequate housing had become practically unaffordable for too many Israelis, especially for young people and marginalized groups. Moreover, they stated that in the few cases housing support options were available, those were located in remote areas offering limited work opportunities. The Special Rapporteur also met with Government officials who described initiatives to assess public policies and devise new strategies to improve access to adequate housing in response to the protesters. Authorities indicated that there were prospects of increased budget support, but emphasized that the limited expansion of housing was partially related to stringent planning rules.

16. The number of households in low-rent publicly owned dwellings has fallen dramatically over the last 10 years.⁷ The construction of new public housing units, except for the elderly, has all but stopped and the stock has shrunk to approximately 66,000 units,⁸ mostly concentrated in the periphery and deprived areas. Moreover, in 1998, the Government started selling public apartments to long-time residents at discounted rates. The income generated through the sales was not used in the replenishment of the public housing stock (contradicting the law regulating this process).⁹ This reduction seriously affected the capacity to assist the poorest groups of the population.

17. In this context, rental assistance programmes become the main alternative for the low-income groups. However, public rental assistance initiatives have also been reduced and rent assistance values have not kept up with the drastic rise in rent prices. Moreover, private rental contracts are governed only by general legislation and offer almost no protection as regards legal security of tenure.¹⁰

18. Additionally, the Special Rapporteur was informed that development projects implemented through new public tenders often do not make provision for affordable or public housing. Furthermore, only in 2009 were the laws amended to obligate the allocation

⁶ See G. Ben Shitreet and D. Nahshon-Sharon, Housing Policy in Israel (Jerusalem, The Center for Social Policy Research in Israel, 2003) (in Hebrew only).

⁷ P. Hemmings, "How to improve the economic policy framework for the housing market in Israel", Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Economics Department Working Paper No. 912 (2011), p. 10.

⁸ ACRI, information submitted to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights for consideration during the compilation of the list of issues on the third periodic report of Israel (October 2010), p. 9.

⁹ ACRI, "Real estate or rights", p. 12.

¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 3 and 11.

of portions of publicly tendered land to affordable housing, but this was allegedly not fully implemented.¹¹

19. In response to some of these claims, Government authorities announced an increase in the support for rental assistance and additional initiatives to accelerate the development of residential units accessible to low-income groups.

20. The Special Rapporteur also received complaints regarding inadequate alternatives to public housing, the lack of transparency in the selection process, and deficiencies in criteria for eligibility for housing support. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development also underlined the inadequacy of the various complex point systems used in public housing assignments and rent and mortgage support.¹² The use of criteria such as number of years of marriage, number of children and number of years of military service seems to be ineffective in targeting the poorest groups and particularly reduces the eligibility of minorities, youth and single persons to obtain support.

21. The precarious housing situation of vulnerable groups excluded from all assistance schemes is an issue of grave concern that was also brought to the Special Rapporteur's attention. In particular, she received information concerning asylum seekers and refugees who are denied work permits and access to health and other basic services and find themselves in a very precarious situation. According to the information received, many such persons are homeless for long periods or live in extremely precarious conditions. In a number of cases their health can be at risk, as they often lack warm clothing to protect them from the cold and suffer from poor nutrition.

22. Another element that appears to contribute to the inadequacy of housing support policies is a disregard for specific social and cultural patterns of different groups by planners. The strict land and planning regime appears to have produced not only the clear exclusion of Palestinian groups, as detailed below, but has also affected some Jewish groups. The distribution of migrant waves in peripheral areas of Israel and the adoption of Northern/Western models of urbanization seem to have contributed to the marginalization of non-Western Jewish groups, creating political and economic gaps between Ashkenazi Jewish communities and all other groups. Historically, for example, research has indicated that members of the Ashkenazi communities benefited from better valued properties and received more land per capita than Sephardim (Mizrahi)-dominated localities.¹³

C. Palestinian minorities in Israel

23. Concerns about the prevalent social economic exclusion of Palestinian minorities living in Israel and the persistence of discriminatory laws and practices have already been expressed by international human rights mechanisms.¹⁴ The persistence of these disadvantages over decades is reflected in recurrent reports on violations of the right to adequate housing of Palestinian minorities living in Israel.

¹¹ ACRI, "What happened to us? How did Israel become a country impossible to live in with dignity?", second page. Available from www.acri.org.il/en/wp-content/uploads/2011/08/ACRI-what-happened-ENG-web.pdf.

¹² Hemmings, "How to improve", p. 23.

¹³ A. Kedar and O. Yiftachel. "Land regime and social relations in Israel", in Realizing Property Rights, Swiss Human Rights Book, vol. 1, H. de Soto and F. Cheneval, eds. (Zurich, Rüffer & Rub, 2006), pp. 134-135.

¹⁴ See, for example, the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16) and of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (E/C.12/ISR/CO/3).

24. Throughout her visit to Galilee, the Negev (the situation of Bedouins is addressed below) and Jaffa and in meetings in Tel Aviv, the Special Rapporteur was informed about expropriation of Palestinian lands; inadequate city planning and non-issuance of construction permits, often leading to irregular construction and, in some cases, to eviction and demolition orders due to an absence of construction permits; inadequate financial allocations to address the housing needs of minorities in Israel; and the failure to adopt targeted and culturally adequate solutions to assist minorities.

25. The control by the State of 93 per cent of the land in Israel (achieved in part through the expropriation and acquisition of lands originally owned by displaced Palestinians) deeply affected the capacity of Palestinian communities living inside Israel to develop or expand.¹⁵ The official role of Jewish organizations, such as the Jewish National Fund and the Jewish Agency, in the formal system of planning and development of Israel contributed further to the exclusion of all non-Jewish groups, who were often unable to directly benefit from development initiatives carried out by these agents.

26. The contrast between the effectiveness of planners in establishing new Jewish cities and villages and their failure in promoting the expansion or development of Palestinian areas is therefore stark: it is reported that since 1948, the State has established more than 700 new Jewish communities and not a single minority community (excepting towns established for promoting the forced urbanization of Bedouins).¹⁶

27. As indicated by various studies, not only have no new localities been developed to accommodate non-Jewish citizens, but a significant number of villages hosting Palestinian minorities remain unplanned or have outdated master plans. As all construction, including for the expansion of existing homes, requires a permit to build that is granted only after planning is concluded, the absence of planning often implies the prohibition of further construction to accommodate the natural growth of populations.

28. In this sense, decades of limited or inadequate planning has resulted in the proliferation of irregular constructions in communities hosting Palestinian minorities inside Israel. This places many minority families under great pressure, as building without a permit constitutes a criminal offence and structures built irregularly are often designated for demolition.

29. In Galilee, for example, the Special Rapporteur visited the village of Majd el-Krum, where residents informed her that despite the population having almost tripled over the last three decades, no expansion of the city municipal boundary had been authorized. In this context, most families had built and expanded housing units without official authorization. Some have had their newly built units demolished, while others have received demolition orders. Residents were particularly frustrated as many owned land in areas outside the existing municipal boundary where zoning restrictions had prohibited residential use. Residents pointed out that newer neighbouring villages with Jewish majorities enjoyed better infrastructure and had expanded over the same period of time.

30. In the old city of Akko, Palestinian citizens of Israel who live as protected renters in areas under public custody informed the Special Rapporteur about the impact of the ongoing process of gentrification. Most property in the area is under the control of the Israel Land Administration, which was in the process of privatizing some areas and developing its touristic potential. Residents claimed they were not consulted in this planning process and informed the Special Rapporteur that they were unable to afford to buy the property they currently lived in or cover the costs required for the maintenance of the historic site; therefore they were placed under permanent threat of eviction. The Special Rapporteur observed the same phenomenon in Jaffa, where she visited another group of Palestinian residents under threat of eviction.

¹⁵ Kedar and Yiftachel, "Land regime", pp. 129-146.

¹⁶ Oren Yiftachel, "Ghetto citizenship: Palestinian Arabs in Israel", in N. Rouhana and A. Sabagh, eds., Israel and the Palestinians – Key Terms (Haifa, Mada Center for Applied Research, 2009), p. 59.

31. Uneven public budget allocations are also reported to further contribute to the deterioration of housing conditions of minorities. For example, an analysis of the Israeli State budget for 2012 showed that only 4 per cent of total allocations for city planning reached minority cities and that 99 per cent of the agriculture support was dedicated to Jewish farmers and associations.¹⁷ Half of all budget allocations to assist housing in minority localities are earmarked for the Negev, where the Government pursues a strategy of urbanization of rural Bedouins.¹⁸

D. Bedouin communities in the Negev

32. Among Palestinian minorities, Bedouin inhabiting the Negev face one of the most severe problems of inadequate housing conditions and insecurity of tenure within Israel.

33. Bedouins have had a presence in the region for hundreds of years.¹⁹ While their pastoral activities required travelling, their movements occurred around historic villages, privately owned plots and collective pasture lands. Estimates indicate that in 1948, prior to the creation of Israel, between 60,000 and 90,000 Bedouins inhabited the Negev.²⁰ Since the 1948 war, the groups that remained have been progressively concentrated in the Siyag area in the eastern part of the Negev.²¹

34. Since 1948, Israel has refused to recognize the land ownership of most Bedouin groups or the existence of many Bedouin villages. Israel describes the areas occupied by Bedouins as “the Bedouin dispersal”, claiming that at least 40 per cent of the Bedouin communities live as squatters in “illegal homes” spread over State property.²² The Government also affirms that the rate of population growth of the Negev Bedouin is the highest in the world, which, together with their dispersion over an extensive area, prevents the State from offering public services.

35. Currently, about 180,000 Bedouins live in the Negev. For decades, the State has promoted the urbanization of this population in planned cities, resulting in approximately 100,000 Bedouins inhabiting seven Government-planned cities. The remaining live either in one of the over 40 “unrecognized villages” or one of the 10 villages that were recently recognized by the State.²³ Israel has indicated that it will continue to invest in the development of planned cities that could host Bedouin families that agree to abandon legal claims for territory and settle in those urban areas.

¹⁷ Mossawa Center, “Analysis of the Government State budget 2012: key statistics in land, housing and planning concerning the Arab minority in Israel”, first and second pages. Available from www.mossawa.org/default.php?lng=3&pg=9&dp=2&fl=3.

¹⁸ Ibid., first page.

¹⁹ See Negev Coexistence Forum for Civil Equality et al., “The Bedouin-Arabs in the Negev-Naqab Desert in Israel” (2009).

²⁰ Ibid., p. 2.

²¹ Ibid.

²² Israel Land Administration, “Bedouin in the Negev”, background note, first page. Available from www.mmi.gov.il/static/HanhalaPirsumim/Beduin_information.pdf.

²³ Negev Coexistence Forum for Civil Equality, “Israel’s violation of the [International] Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination with regard to the Negev Bedouin” (2012), p. 3.

36. During her mission, the Special Rapporteur was especially concerned to note the failure of the State to integrate the unrecognized villages, even those located in the outskirts of major urban areas. The unrecognized village of Assir, for example, has a population of about 2,300 living just outside the city of Be'er Sheva (the seventh largest city in Israel). While residents are counted in the city census, the village remains "illegal" for official purposes and has never been provided with basic public services or infrastructure, including water and sanitation connections.

37. The Special Rapporteur visited the unrecognized village of Al-Arakib and met with local residents who had received eviction orders and already had their homes and public buildings demolished on various occasions in previous years. The village leader presented evidence of the longstanding presence of his community in the area, including copies of documentation on land ownership dating from the Ottoman period. However, despite legal action taken by various civil society actors, demolitions are reportedly continuing.

38. On the other hand, the housing situation of Bedouin living in Government-planned towns is also a concern. The seven planned towns reportedly evolved into pockets of deprivation, unemployment, dependency, crime and social tension.²⁴ Despite some State benefits, such as health care and child allowances, the precarious infrastructure and spatial isolation of these areas have greatly restricted opportunities for personal mobility or development, contributing to their impoverishment. The planned urban models, often inspired by Northern/Western cultural patterns, were also considered to be culturally inadequate vis-à-vis the Bedouin family structure and their rural economic vocation, further contributing to the deterioration of the socioeconomic environment.

39. During the mission, the Special Rapporteur met also with Government authorities conducting consultations on a new State plan for the unrecognized villages in the Negev (known as the Praver Plan). The plan was adopted in September 2012 and the Government is currently discussing a legislative proposal to implement it.

40. Serious reservations to the Praver Plan and the proposed legislation for its implementation were expressed by representatives of the Bedouin community, who indicated, for example, that: (a) the plan still does not recognize the right of the Bedouin to ownership of their ancestral land; (b) it would legitimize the displacement, dispossession and eviction of residents in various unrecognized villages; (c) it proposes insufficient and inadequate compensation; and (d) it would strip courts of their power of judicial review and possibility to intervene or protect citizens from unfair State land and planning measures. Civil society also presented an alternative proposal, with indications on how to regularize all unrecognized villages and better integrate them into the existing local infrastructure.

41. The Special Rapporteur notes that Bedouin communities, who self-identify and have also been recognized as indigenous peoples by international human rights mechanisms, present both in Israel and the OPT enjoy land claims based on longstanding land use and occupancy linked to their traditional livelihoods and distinct cultural identity. These claims must be respected by the State, as affirmed by many international human rights bodies and mechanisms.²⁵

²⁴ O. Yiftachel, "Bedouin Arabs and the Israeli Settler State: Land Policies and Indigenous Resistance", in D. Champagne and I. Abu-Saad, eds., The Future of Indigenous Peoples: Strategies for Survival and Development (Los Angeles, University of California Press, 2003), p. 35.

²⁵ See, for example, the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/13), para. 25, and of the Human Rights Committee (CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3), para. 24. See also the report of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples (A/HRC/18/35/Add.1), annex VI.

III. Occupied Palestinian Territory

42. Over the last four plus decades of military occupation of the OPT, successive international reports and studies have underscored the pervasive human rights impact of the multiple restrictions placed on the expansion and development of Palestinian society. At the same time, the expanding presence of Israeli settlers in East Jerusalem and the West Bank have greatly altered the territory's landscape, draining natural resources and fragmenting the connections between pre-existing urban areas. Having undergone almost total physical and political isolation for the last five years, Gaza has suffered an extreme deterioration of its socioeconomic environment—more so than any other area in the territory.

A. Legal framework

43. Regarding the issue of the applicability of certain norms of international humanitarian law and human rights instruments in the OPT, the Special Rapporteur would like to refer to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004,²⁶ as well as, among others, the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,²⁷ the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights²⁸ and the Human Rights Committee.²⁹

44. The obligations of Israel as occupying Power are defined by the pertinent provisions of humanitarian and customary international law, notably the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) and the Regulations concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land (Hague Regulations), which are recognized as part of customary international law. The Special Rapporteur notes that the same international legal framework is also applicable to East Jerusalem, which under international law is considered occupied territory.³⁰

45. In the present context, it is particularly relevant to recall that the occupying Power must generally respect the laws in force in the occupied territory and is prohibited from destroying property except to the extent needed to maintain orderly governance of the territory and for military necessity.³¹ Additionally, humanitarian law prohibits, without exception, the transfer of the occupying Power's own civilian population into the territory it occupies.³²

Administrative division of the occupied territory

46. In 1995, pursuant to the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (Oslo Accords), a temporary administrative division of the West Bank into three zones, referred to as Areas A, B and C, was agreed upon in view of a phased transfer of power from Israeli military and civil administration to the Palestinian National ²⁶ International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, pp. 171-181.

²⁷ CERD/C/304/Add.45, paras. 10-12, CERD/C/ISR/CO/13, para. 32, CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 10.

²⁸ E/C.12/1/Add.69, paras. 11 and 12, E/C.12/1/Add.90, paras. 15 and 31, E/C.12/ISR/CO/3, para. 8.

²⁹ CCPR/CO/78/ISR, para. 11; CCPR/C/79/Add.93, para. 10; CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 5.

³⁰ See International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences, p. 167.

³¹ Hague Regulations, art. 43, Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53.

³² Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

Authority.³³ Area A comprises the major Palestinian cities, and both security and civil responsibilities are under the Palestinian National Authority. Area B corresponds to most Palestinian rural communities, and civil authority is under the Palestinian National Authority while security is shared with the Israeli authorities. In Area C Israel retains authority over law enforcement and control over the building and planning sphere.³⁴ Areas A and B make up roughly 38 per cent of the West Bank; Area C corresponds to approximately 62 percent of the West Bank.

47. The Oslo Accords (annex III, appendix 1, art. 27) specified the responsibilities of planning and zoning, which were eventually to be under the purview of the Palestinian National Authority. Although the Interim Agreement foresaw a gradual transfer of power and responsibility in the sphere of planning and zoning in Area C from the Israeli civil administration to the Palestinian National Authority, this transfer was frozen in 2000.³⁵

48. In Area C of the West Bank, Jordanian planning law, as modified by an Israeli military order, is applied.³⁶ In East Jerusalem, Israeli planning laws have been applied since the unilateral annexation of the area and the expansion of its municipal boundaries in 1967.

49. In Gaza and in Areas A and B of the West Bank, with regards to planning, Jordanian laws as modified by the laws adopted by the Palestinian National Authority are generally applied. Additionally, it is noteworthy that the Palestinian National Authority has adopted the Amended Basic Law of 18 March 2003, which protects the right to property, specifying that property “may not be expropriated except in the public interest and for fair compensation in accordance with the law or pursuant to a judicial ruling” (art. 21, para. 3). It also protects the right to housing and determines that “every citizen shall have the right to proper housing. The Palestinian National Authority shall secure housing for those who are without shelter” (art. 23).

B. East Jerusalem

50. In East Jerusalem, the Special Rapporteur received multiple complaints on issues concerning the Palestinian population, including discriminatory planning, limited access to public services, evictions and house demolitions. Municipal planning procedures appear to disproportionately restrict the expansion and consolidation of Palestinian neighborhoods in the city, while Israeli settlements have proliferated.

51. The Local Outline Plan–Jerusalem 2000, although not finalized or officially approved, is the master plan setting out the municipality’s strategies up to 2020. This plan is the first to include both East and West Jerusalem. While it includes questions of planning and development in the Palestinian neighborhoods of the city, the Local Outline Plan does not plan for enough housing units in the Palestinian areas to sufficiently address current shortfalls or accommodate the projected growth in population. Further, the master plan identifies “Maintaining a solid Jewish majority in the city” as one of its main aims and adds

³³ See, inter alia, Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, occupied Palestinian territory (OCHA-oPt), Humanitarian Factsheet on Area C of the West Bank (July 2011). Available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_Area_C_Fact_Sheet_July_2011.pdf.

³⁴ OCHA-oPt, Area C Humanitarian Response Plan Fact Sheet (August 2010), p. 1. Available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_area_c_humanitarian_response_plan_fact_sheet_2010_09_03_english.pdf.

³⁵ Ibid.

³⁶ OCHA-oPt, Restricting Space: The Planning Regime Applied by Israel in Area C of the West Bank, Special Focus (December 2009), p. 5. Available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/special_focus_area_c_demolitions_december_2009.pdf.

5 square kilometres for the expansion of Israeli settlements in East Jerusalem.³⁷ This policy of “demographic balance”, a stated aim of official municipal planning documents, is discriminatory and thus violates human rights law (see CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 25).

52. In addition, it was reported that municipal planning processes lacked transparency and community consultation.³⁸ In discussions with the Special Rapporteur, Israeli authorities claimed that participation of the Palestinian community was limited because they refused to engage in existing mechanisms as they consider participation would amount to the recognition of the illegal annexation of East Jerusalem by Israel.

53. The situation of the community of Al-Bustan illustrates the challenges posed by planning procedures, even when Palestinian communities attempt to engage with the authorities. There, 750 residents living in 88 homes, some of them predating 1967, are reportedly at risk of being displaced due to a plan by the Municipality of Jerusalem to turn the area into an archaeological park. The Special Rapporteur visited families in Al-Bustan that are being targeted by criminal and civil legal action. She was also shown an alternative urbanization plan prepared by the local leadership and told that that the alternative plan was dismissed by all competent authorities and that they had already exhausted all possible legal mechanisms to challenge the adoption and implementation of the plans of the municipality.

54. Currently, tens of thousands of Palestinians in East Jerusalem and throughout the OPT are estimated to be at risk of their homes being demolished due to unregulated building.³⁹ As the overall number of permits issued is grossly inadequate to meet the housing needs of Palestinians, many Palestinians have built without obtaining a permit. As a result, numerous homes or extensions to homes are considered illegal and thus the inhabitants are in danger of being subjected to eviction orders and the demolition of their houses. Although persons faced with an eviction can institute court proceedings to protect their legal rights, such proceedings have very little chance of success and were perceived as serving mainly to delay the eviction and demolition process.

55. On the first day of her mission, the Special Rapporteur visited precarious housing units that had been demolished that same morning in East Jerusalem. Throughout the occupied territory, eviction and demolitions often appear to be undertaken without provision for relief and relocation.

56. The Special Rapporteur also received information regarding deficiencies in basic infrastructure in East Jerusalem. The situation on the ground is characterized by a visible neglect of services and infrastructure, including deficient sanitation services and dilapidated sewage and drainage infrastructure.⁴⁰ Approximately 53 per cent of the Palestinian residents have no suitable legal connection to water networks.⁴¹ According to an internal Jerusalem

³⁷ OCHA-oPt, East Jerusalem: Key Humanitarian Concerns, Special Focus (March 2011), p. 33.

³⁸ See also OCHA, East Jerusalem: Key Humanitarian Concerns, Special Focus (March 2011).

³⁹ See Al-Haq and The Women’s Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling (WCLAC), “Alternative report on Israel to the pre-sessional working group of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 22-26 November 2010”, para. 6.13; Save the Children UK, Life on the Edge: The Struggle to Survive and the Impact of Forced Displacement in High Risk Areas of the Occupied Palestinian Territory (2009); and WCLAC Forced Evictions: Assessing the Impact on Palestinian Women in East Jerusalem (Jerusalem, 2010).

⁴⁰ Report of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan (A/66/364), para. 14.

⁴¹ Ibid.

government report, 2 billion new sheqalim (NIS) would be required to bring the quality of the sewage infrastructure of East Jerusalem to the level existing in the west of the city.⁴²

57. When asked by the Special Rapporteur about the reason for these deficiencies, municipal authorities alleged that adequate allocations were made to service Palestinian neighborhoods, but service provision was hampered by the hostility of the local population towards municipal service providers.

58. Another issue of concern is the situation of members of Palestinian communities of East Jerusalem who, due to the construction of the barrier, found themselves on the “West Bank side” of the barrier, although they are located within the boundaries of the municipality of Jerusalem. These communities, such as the Shuafat refugee camp, Dahiyat al-Barid, Ras Khamis and Kfar Aqab—which the Special Rapporteur visited—have been cut off from the municipality. Although they continue to pay municipal taxes, they no longer have access to the basic services to which they are entitled as Jerusalem residents (health care, education, etc.) and face increasing difficulties gaining access to Jerusalem, leading to ever-declining living conditions.

59. The Special Rapporteur also visited areas affected by the barrier in the West Bank. In the village of Al-Walaja, for example, the construction of the barrier will completely encircle the city, which would be connected to the rest of the West Bank by a tunnel. Residents explained that the construction of the barrier combined with the expansion of neighbouring settlements would also completely isolate the community from its agriculture land.

C. West Bank

1. Areas A and B

60. The administrative and physical fragmentation of the West Bank into three different areas severely hampers planning and the implementation of housing and urban policies at the local and regional levels.

61. In both Areas A and B of the West Bank, planning and building powers rest with the Palestinian National Authority.⁴³ However, as outlined above, the partial implementation of the Oslo Accords left the major portion of the non-urban areas of the West Bank, known as Area C, under Israeli control. Thus, local authorities in areas A and B have limited possibilities with respect to expanding urban areas, promoting inter-municipal integration and improving the connection of urban areas under their control with all surrounding areas, which hampers their ability to better respond to growing housing demands. The Palestinian National Authority also reported facing particular difficulties in providing adequate water and sanitation due to irregular access to water sources controlled by Israel, depleted infrastructure and the lack of space for waste management and disposal.

62. The Palestinian National Development Plan (2011-13) prioritizes the goals of increasing home ownership and addressing the housing needs of a growing population. The Strategic Plan for the Housing Sector (2011-2013)⁴⁴ was presented by authorities to the ⁴² The Municipality of Jerusalem’s November 2010 Survey of Infrastructure in East Jerusalem report, as cited by OCHA-oPt, indicates that NIS 1.9 billion is required to bring the level of infrastructure in East Jerusalem up to that of West Jerusalem. OCHA-oPt, East Jerusalem, p. 120, endnote 49.

⁴³ Bimkom – Planners for Planning Rights, The Prohibited Zone: Israeli Planning Policy in the Palestinian Villages in Area C (2008), p. 21. Available from http://eng.bimkom.org/_Uploads/23ProhibitedZone.pdf.

⁴⁴ Developed pursuant to the resolution of the Council of Ministers issued at its session on 17 August 2009 and in accordance with the Sectoral and Cross-Sectoral Strategies Preparation Guidelines issued

Special Rapporteur but she was informed it was still pending comprehensive implementation. The Plan highlights that the housing deficit in West Bank and Gaza (to 2010) was estimated by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics to be about 132,759 residential units. It identifies the Israeli occupation and the destruction of homes as challenges for the housing sector, but also lists multiple additional internal problems. These include: lack of monitoring capacity, weakness of the judicial authority in dealing with housing and real-estate disputes, the absence of a database on housing, lack of planning and zoning mechanisms and the absence of official budget lines for investment in the housing sector and the absence of a semi-public institution. The plan also indicates several initiatives to be further developed and pursued, including revising and reforming laws regulating the housing sector, investing in public and private partnerships, promoting public and private investment in housing and developing housing policies for people with low income.

63. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the adoption of the strategy, but expresses her serious concern regarding the lack of implementation. Given the serious impact of poverty among Palestinian communities, the Special Rapporteur was particularly concerned by the absence of any further strategy to promote access to land and housing for low-income families, or to upgrade the living conditions, including in Palestinian refugee camps.

64. On other hand, the Special Rapporteur also visited the Rawabi town construction project⁴⁵ near Ramallah and Bir Zeit, including a large residential housing construction project undertaken through a public-private partnership supported by international aid and a private investor.⁴⁶ A master plan has been drawn up for the residential and commercial urban development, including 5,000 housing units for middle-income persons that will house 25,000 residents.⁴⁷ Given the already described serious resource limitations of the Palestinian National Authority to fulfil its mandate, the Special Rapporteur was concerned to note that international donors and local authorities had decided to focus important public investments in a project targeted mostly at high and middle-income persons, without including any affordable housing for the numerous communities living in inadequate conditions.

2. Area C

65. It is estimated that some 150,000 Palestinians live in Area C, including 27,500 Bedouin and other herders,⁴⁸ two thirds of whom live in localities which are partly located in Areas A and B. According to the information received, since the occupation in 1967 the land made available to Palestinian communities living in Area C has been dramatically restricted through a variety of means.

66. Planning and all decisions on construction permit requests by Palestinians in Area C are made by the Civil Administration's Higher Planning Council, comprised exclusively of by the Ministry of Planning and Administrative Development on August 24, 2009. (Palestinian National Authority, Ministry of Public Works and Housing, Strategic Plan for Developing the Housing Sector in Palestine (January 2010), p. 5).

⁴⁵ Initiated at the Palestine Investment Conference, held in Bethlehem, 21-23 May 2008. See Investment Opportunities – Project and Concept Profiles (2008), available from www.pipa.gov.ps/p_book.pdf.

⁴⁶ The project is being developed by the Bayti Real Estate Company, a joint undertaking of the Qatari Government-owned Qatari Diar and Ramallah-based Massar International. (Rawabi Newsletter, Winter Edition–2012, p. 2. Available from www.rawabi.ps/newsletter/2012/download/en/full.pdf).

⁴⁷ Rawabi Newsletter, p. 2.

⁴⁸ OCHA-oPt, Humanitarian Factsheet, first page.

Israeli officials.⁴⁹ Modifications to Jordanian law introduced by Israel in 1971 eliminated Palestinian community participation in the zoning of Area C.⁵⁰ Palestinian community members retained the possibility of presenting objections to a plan, although this is extremely limited in cases of plans for settlements, as will be seen below.⁵¹

67. Two types of plans can be applied to Palestinian villages in Area C: Special Partial Outline Plans prepared by the Israeli civil administration and the Regional Outline Plans from the British Mandate period.⁵² Special Partial Outline Plans cover less than 1 per cent of Area C land; that land, in practice, is the only part of Area C where Palestinian construction is allowed and much of the area is built up already. Israeli special plans have been approved only for Palestinian communities—no Israeli settlement has a special plan.⁵³ Mandatory Regional Outline Plans are applied to those villages without Israeli special plans. Approved by the British Mandate government of Palestine in the 1940s, such plans designate most of Area C as an agricultural zone, and are no longer adequate to deal with current Palestinian planning needs.⁵⁴

68. About 70 per cent of Area C has been allocated for Israeli settlements, military zones, nature reserves, “State land” and the Seam Zone around the barrier, so possibilities for Palestinians to build are restricted.⁵⁵ In practice, as Palestinian construction is only permitted in approximately 1 per cent of Area C⁵⁶ many residents are forced to build without a permit to meet their housing needs, putting these persons at risk of home demolition and displacement.

69. The Special Rapporteur received information which indicated an increase in the number of demolitions of Palestinian constructions. It was reported that in 2011, a total of 622 Palestinian structures were demolished by Israeli authorities, resulting in 1,094 people displaced, almost double the number for 2010. Between January and June of 2012, 351 demolitions were carried out in Area C, further displacing 615 persons (330 of them children) and affecting over 1900 individuals.⁵⁷ The first half of 2012 saw a 20 per cent increase in the monthly average number of demolitions in the West Bank when compared to the same period in 2011, and a 70 per cent increase compared to 2010.⁵⁸

70. Another issue brought to the Special Rapporteur’s attention is the restriction on movement and access to water, land and basic services. The effect of such measures is particularly severe in the herding communities, such as the Bedouin, which are often located in remote areas, causing their displacement. Destruction of water infrastructure also causes displacement in Area C, where Israeli forces regularly take over or target for destruction cisterns, wells and springs used by Palestinians⁵⁹ or confiscate water tanks.⁶⁰

⁴⁹ Norwegian Refugee Council and Columbia University School of Law Human Rights Institute, individual complaint submitted to the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing on the situation of the al-Rashaydeh Bedouin community in Fasayil al-Wusta, Occupied Palestinian Territory (June 2012), p. 3.

⁵⁰ OCHA-oPt, Restricting Space, pp. 2 and 5.

⁵¹ Bimkom, The Prohibited Zone, p. 43.

⁵² OCHA-oPt, Restricting Space, p. 8.

⁵³ Ibid., p. 9.

⁵⁴ Ibid., p. 10.

⁵⁵ Ibid., pp. 5-6.

⁵⁶ OCHA-oPT, Humanitarian Factsheet, first page.

⁵⁷ United Nations Relief and Works Agency, Demolitions in 2012. Available from www.unrwa.org/etemplate.php?id=1287.

⁵⁸ OCHA-oPt, The Monthly Humanitarian Monitor (July 2012), p. 4. Available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_the_humanitarian_monitor_2012_07_27_english.pdf.

⁵⁹ See OCHA-oPt, How Dispossession Happens: The Humanitarian Impact of the Takeover of Palestinian Water Springs by Israeli Settlers, Special Focus (March 2012); joint parallel report

71. The Special Rapporteur visited the al-Jahalin Bedouin community of Khan al-Ahmar in Area C, which is under the direct control of the Israeli authorities. Having previously been subject to numerous demolitions, the community is now at risk of displacement as a whole, due to its location on what is considered public or State land.⁶¹ In the framework of an approved master plan ordering the expulsion of this community, an Israeli Civil Administration delegation visited the herding community in November 2011 to inform the people about their imminent transfer from the Ma'ale Adumim area.⁶² According to information received by the Special Rapporteur during her visit, this plan was prepared and approved without any consultation or participation of the affected community. The only school in the area, which was built by the community itself, is subject to a demolition order. Although during the time of the visit community leaders were told by authorities that this school would not be demolished in the near future, the demolition order had not yet been repealed.

72. In the Jordan valley, the Special Rapporteur also visited the Al-Hadidiya community and the village of Al-Aqaba. A re-zoning that transformed their living space and the surrounding areas into a dedicated military and settlement area resulted in these communities being deprived of indiscriminate access and full exercise of their in rem usufruct and use rights, for example, access to grazing lands and sources of water, with respect to related and nearby agricultural land—a situation that threatens their livelihoods. The settlers have closed off the land, leaving access only through a gate and allowing the community to enter only at certain hours and for short periods of time. The members of this community are living under extremely harsh conditions, with no access to the most basic services.

D. Settlement activity

73. Throughout her visit the Special Rapporteur heard numerous complaints of discriminatory treatment by Israel in the implementation of the right to adequate housing of the Palestinian community in the OPT, based, to a great extent, on the differential and privileged treatment that is allegedly accorded to settlers in the territory.

74. The Special Rapporteur received information according to which: land with restrictions against use by Palestinians is made available for building and agricultural use by settlers; plans and planning processes involving settlers are, in practice, prepared with the participation of, and following meaningful consultation processes with, the settlers and approved within reasonable periods; the attribution, directly or indirectly, of substantial subsidies and incentives by the Government for settlers to build on and exploit the land in the OPT (and, particularly in the last few years, to expand existing settlements); the provision of ample infrastructure for the exclusive use of settlers, who are often living in areas close to Palestinians who have no access to the infrastructure and live in extremely difficult conditions.

submitted by Al-Haq, Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, BADIL Resource Center for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights and WCLAC to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at its eightieth session, paras. 97–103.

⁶⁰ OCHA-oPt, The Monthly Humanitarian Monitor, p. 4.

⁶¹ Norwegian Refugee Council and Columbia University School of Law Human Rights Institute, individual complaint submitted to the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing on the situation of the Jahalin Bedouin community in Khan al-Ahmar, Occupied Palestinian Territory (June 2012), pp. 2-3.

⁶² Israeli Committee against Housing Demolitions, Nowhere Left to Go: Arab al-Jahalin Bedouin Ethnic Displacement (2011), third page.

75. Additionally, it was alleged that, in stark contrast to the manner in which the authorities dealt with Palestinians found to be in contravention of building laws, illegal construction by settlers often leads to alternative solutions being sought and even, in some cases, the non-execution of eviction orders.

76. Settlement activities are ongoing, and the Government of Israel reportedly continues to plan for the expansion of settlements in the West Bank as well as East Jerusalem.⁶³ While there have been individual decisions to dismantle some settlement “outposts”, others have been formalized and thus have become legalized under Israeli, if not international, law.

77. According to the information received, the nature of the support provided by the Government to the settlements has varied over the years, with a temporary freeze being imposed on some types in 2010. However, such changes do not seem to have had any impact in reducing the settler population in the OPT or halting expansion and construction. A recent report by the Secretary-General notes that plans for construction in settlements in East Jerusalem continue to be submitted and approved and that the settler population (excluding that of East Jerusalem) has over the past decade grown at an average yearly rate of 5.3 per cent, compared to 1.8 percent in the Israeli population as whole (A/67/375, para. 7). In a recent 12-month period alone the settler population increased by 15,579 persons (ibid.).

1. West Bank

78. As at 2008, there were 121 official settlements and 100 outposts in Area C. In contrast, no new Palestinian cities had been created since 1967.⁶⁴

79. In Area C, while little zoning and planning has been carried out for Palestinian communities, the Israeli Civil Administration has developed and approved detailed plans for almost all Israeli settlements in the West Bank, and Israeli settlers are able to participate in the planning process.

80. The 1971 Israeli military order modifying the Jordanian planning law created a separate planning framework for settlements, implemented by a special category of planning committee (a “special local planning committee”) in practice reserved for settlements.⁶⁵ Unlike the Palestinian community, settlers effectively participate in the planning process, notably through the Settlement Subcommittee, which formulates plans for settlements.

81. Israeli Local or Regional Councils are the local authorities that run the settlements. Some 39 per cent of the West Bank is currently under the jurisdiction of such councils. Most of this territory is land that has been declared “State land”, and is not allocated for Palestinian use. Almost all of the area in the Jordan Valley and Dead Sea area falls under the jurisdiction of two Regional Councils.⁶⁶

82. The settlements are provided with generous infrastructure, including water, electricity and roads that are, for the most part, unavailable to Palestinians. The Special Rapporteur also notes particularly that inequality in the amounts of water made available to the Israeli settlements and those made available to the Palestinian population was visible, since neighbouring settlements and villages had entirely different patterns of water supply.

⁶³ Report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 (A/HRC/20/13), para. 3.

⁶⁴ Bimkom, The Prohibited Zone, p. 17.

⁶⁵ Ibid., p. 40.

⁶⁶ OCHA-oPt, Restricting Space, pp. 5-6.

83. Settlement activity is also a regular source of violence and permanent tension. In Hebron, for example, the Special Rapporteur received testimonies from several persons of attacks by settlers on infrastructure, such as water tanks, and other violence against the Palestinian population. The heavy presence of soldiers in the heart of the city to protect the settlers contributes to a climate of fear and mistrust.

2. East Jerusalem

84. Since 1967, Israel has confiscated approximately 35 per cent of the territory in East Jerusalem and its surrounding area and 12 settlements have been constructed on this land. These settlements are some of the largest, with some 200,000 inhabitants. Israel considers these settlements in East Jerusalem (including annexed areas of the West Bank) as part of Israel rather than as settlements.

85. During the mission, information was collected on how settlements, which have been built both within the municipality and in the surrounding areas of East Jerusalem, have led to a decrease in the amount of land and resources available to Palestinians. More than one third of the area of East Jerusalem has been expropriated for construction of Israeli settlements.⁶⁷ The Special Rapporteur visited the neighbourhood of Sheikh Jarrah, where over 60 residents, including 24 children, were forcibly evicted from their homes, which are now occupied by settlers, and a further 25 families are at risk of eviction based on ownership claims dating back to the period prior to the 1948 founding of Israel.⁶⁸ Settlement activity is at times carried out by private settler groups or companies that enjoy the support of the Government of Israel, but who are not held accountable in the same manner as the Government. Palestinian residents are rarely engaged in the planning process.

E. Gaza

86. An almost complete physical and political isolation, combined with successive military operations, has deeply affected the housing situation in Gaza. While Israel withdrew its settlers and military from inside the Gaza Strip in 2005, it remains in control of the borders, including the entry and exit of people and goods, as well as the air space and access to the sea.

87. Since June 2007, the Gaza Strip has been subject to an intensified blockade, with severe restrictions on the movement of people, goods and services, resulting in severe shortages of electricity, fuel and consumer products. The Gaza Strip's isolation and the continued hostilities also have a profound impact in the urban infrastructure. It is estimated that only 10 per cent of the water in the Gaza Strip is safe for human consumption. Severe fuel and electricity shortages result in regular power outages.⁶⁹

88. Housing conditions have been significantly affected by military operations. During the Israeli offensive codenamed "Cast Lead" alone, more than 20,000 homes were destroyed or severely damaged.⁷⁰ It is estimated that approximately 71,000 new housing units are required to cover current housing needs.⁷¹

⁶⁷ OCHA-oPt, East Jerusalem, p. 2.

⁶⁸ Norwegian Refugee Council and Columbia University School of Law Human Rights Institute, individual complaint submitted to the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing on the situation in the Sheikh Jarrah area in East Jerusalem (June 2012), pp. 1-2.

⁶⁹ OCHA-oPt, "Five years of blockade: the humanitarian situation in the Gaza Strip", fact sheet (June 2012), first page.

89. The Special Rapporteur was gravely concerned by information received from representatives of international humanitarian assistance agencies that a large proportion of the projects aimed at improving housing and vital services in Gaza that have been submitted for approval by the international community have not been approved by the Israeli authorities or had suffered from disproportional delays. In the Ezbet Abed Rabbo community (Northern Gaza), for example, the Special Rapporteur visited an area which had been severely damaged during the offensive of 2008/09 and remains in dire need of reconstruction, as international organizations have yet to obtain the necessary authorization from Israeli authorities to import construction materials.

90. The Special Rapporteur raised her concerns with the Israeli authorities, who claimed not to be responsible for all delays and informed her of upcoming measures to ease the entry of goods and construction materials. The Special Rapporteur remains however concerned at the serious and disproportionate impact of the Israel blockade on Palestinians' right to housing and basic services in the Gaza Strip.

91. At the same time, the Special Rapporteur was impressed by the degree of active engagement of Gaza inhabitants in undertaking the reconstructions and amelioration of their living conditions, mobilizing all the means and resources available to them. In this context, recent strategies of self-help reconstruction, making available direct funds to the households to rebuild demolished houses, have a very positive impact. However, the Special Rapporteur also noted her concern that these self-help schemes are available only to those with registered legal titles to the land, so that the most needy, those who are squatting on public land, are left with no alternative other than to wait for the completion of public housing projects, funded by international donors.

92. As noted in the report of the Special Rapporteur focused on the right to adequate housing in post-disaster and post-conflict situations, humanitarian agencies and donors have gained an acute awareness of the long-term impact of hastened early recovery efforts in the past decades (A/HRC/16/42, para. 57). Especially in the area of the right to adequate housing, this awareness must translate into interventions based on community consultations, if not designed by the affected communities themselves, and marked by accountability to the beneficiaries.

IV. Concluding remarks and recommendations

93. The provision of housing has been central to efforts by Israel to integrate successive waves of Jewish immigrants. This policy was based on a highly centralized Government planning and intervention model, which in a number of cases ignored cultural differences and confined marginalized groups to the peripheries of the State.

94. Since the 1990s, the Government of Israel has increasingly disengaged from the housing sector, relying mostly on market incentives. Privatization, deregulation and commercialization of public assets seem to have further undermined the declared foundational goal to provide a safe and adequate home for all Yishuv, regardless of nationality or income level. The massive protests in 2011 highlighted the public frustration with increasing costs of living and in particular with regard to housing.

⁷⁰ Report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 (A/HRC/10/20), para. 8.

⁷¹ OCHA-oPt, "Five years of blockade", first page.

95. Nonetheless, even after the signing of the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, Israel has continuously dedicated important public financial and technical resources to promote the expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The State engagement in the settlement enterprise not only violates international law and seriously worsens the living conditions of Palestinians under occupation, but also ends up depriving Israeli nationals of important resources that could be used to promote access to adequate housing within the internationally recognized boundaries of the country.

96. Throughout her visit the Special Rapporteur witnessed a development model that systematically excludes, discriminates against and displaces minorities in Israel and which has been replicated in the occupied territory since 1967. In very different legal and geographical contexts, from Galilee and the Negev to the West Bank, she received multiple similar complaints from Palestinians, notably concerning a lack of or discriminatory planning, which seriously hampers the urban and rural development of these communities. As a consequence, a disproportionate number of members of such communities live and sometimes work in structures that are “unauthorized” or “illegal” and liable to eviction and demolition.

97. It is estimated that, since 1948, nearly 1,100 Jewish urban and rural communities have been built between the Jordan river and the Mediterranean Sea. At the same time, over 400 Arab villages have reportedly been destroyed and Arabs have been forbidden to build in new localities. The only exception has been the often forced urbanization of Bedouins in the Negev and Galilee.⁷²

98. Thus, the recent plans for relocating Bedouins in the Negev—inside Israel—as well as decades of promotion of Jewish settlements in the West Bank, including in East Jerusalem, are the new expressions of dispossession of traditional inhabitants and control of the territory.⁷³ In this same context, the barrier and the blockade of Gaza are the most visible expressions of a process of de facto segregation that seems to be silently pursued in longstanding planning and zoning strategies both within Israel as well as in the occupied territory.

99. It is also important to underline that the spatial strategy of Israel has also been heavily shaped by security concerns, given the belligerent, conflictive nature of Israel-Palestine relations, marked by waves of violence and terror. But certainly the non-democratic elements in Israeli spatial planning and urban development strategies appear to contribute to the deepening of the conflict, rather than promote peace.

100. It would appear therefore that the Israeli planning, development and land system violates the right to adequate housing not only of Palestinians under Israeli control, but also of low-income persons of all identities, who find it increasingly difficult to obtain adequate and affordable housing under current policies. Both aspects of this discriminatory system should be changed to allow all those living under the control of the Israeli authorities to enjoy the most basic human right to adequate housing, within the framework of dignity and equality.

101. Accordingly, the Special Rapporteur presents the following recommendations to the State of Israel:

⁷² Oren Yiftachel, “Epilogue: Studying Naqab/Negev Bedouins—toward a colonial paradigm?” Hagar Studies in Culture, Polity and Identities, vol. 8, No. 2 (2009), p. 88.

⁷³ See Oren Yiftachel, “‘Ethnocracy’: the politics of Judaizing Israel/Palestine”, Constellations, vol. 6, No. 3 (September 1999).

- (a) Revise and reform the Israeli legal framework relevant to the right to adequate housing:
- (i) Revise and reform the laws of Israel in order to: (a) guarantee the protection of the right to adequate housing in all its elements; and (b) repeal all legislation and regulations relevant to the right to adequate housing that, in their application, do not comply with the principle of non-discrimination as provided in the international human rights instruments to which Israel is a party;
 - (ii) Revise zoning and planning legislation and processes so as to ensure, at a minimum, meaningful consultation with affected populations throughout the planning process. This implies: dissemination by the authorities of relevant information in advance; a reasonable time period for public review of, comments on, and/or objection to the proposed plan; opportunities to propose alternatives; and a decision-making process that is transparent;
 - (iii) In accordance with general comment No. 4 (1991) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, take immediate measures aimed at conferring legal security of tenure upon those persons and households currently lacking such protection, in active and meaningful consultation with affected persons and groups (para. 8 (a));
 - (iv) Review legislation and procedures regarding evictions to bring them into conformity with international human rights norms and standards, in particular to ensure opportunity for genuine consultation with those affected, that alternative solutions and relief for those affected are considered and that evictions do not result in individuals being rendered homeless or vulnerable to the violation of other human rights. Where those affected are unable to provide for themselves, take all appropriate measures, to the maximum of available resources, to ensure that adequate alternative housing, resettlement or access to productive land, as the case may be, is available;⁷⁴
 - (v) Revise legislation regulating private rental in order to ensure adequate protection of private tenants against unreasonable rent levels or rent increases;
 - (vi) Recognize the specific rights of the Bedouin community as indigenous peoples as per the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and revise all relevant policies and laws on this basis, ensuring respect for their land ownership and their cultural traditions;
- (b) Revise public policies for the housing sector within Israel:
- (i) Adopt a comprehensive national strategy and a plan of action on adequate housing, paying particular attention to the situation of groups living in poverty and historically marginalized groups, such as minorities;
 - (ii) Increase investment in the provision of social housing units and rental assistance schemes in order to meet the unserved demand for affordable housing;
 - (iii) Revise all existing criteria for the provision of land or economic support for housing in order to repeal the unfair exclusions and ensure priority assistance for the most marginalized groups. Ensure transparency and participation in the design and implementation of all housing policies;

⁷⁴ See Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 7 (1997) on the right to adequate housing: forced evictions, paras. 15 and 16.

(iv) Adopt and adequately fund a targeted housing strategy in order to assist Palestinian minorities, both in rural and urban areas, ensuring that these are designed, implemented and evaluated through meaningfully participatory processes and are culturally acceptable;

(c) Respect, protect and fulfil the right to housing of Palestinians living under occupation:

(i) Stop immediately all home demolitions and evictions, both in the West Bank and in East Jerusalem, and explore all possible alternatives prior to evictions; consult with the affected persons; and provide effective remedies to those affected by evictions;

(ii) Stop, as a first step, the construction and expansion of all settlements and outposts, and develop a strategy to reverse the development of settlements;

(iii) Lift immediately the blockade of Gaza for all imports of construction materials and facilitate the work of international donors promoting reconstruction.

102. The Special Rapporteur also makes additional recommendations to the Palestinian National Authority and international aid agents:

(a) The Palestinian National Authority must devise and implement a strategy to progressively protect the right to adequate housing of its inhabitants;

(b) The international community must ensure flexibility in reconstruction strategies vis-à-vis ownership documentation, giving priority to those in extreme poverty situations;

(c) International donors should continue to provide the Palestinian National Authority with direct budget support to enable it to fulfil its mandate.

Human Rights CouncilThirty-fifth session

6–23 June 2017

Agenda item 3

Promotion and protection of all human rights, civil,
political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development*Report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, on her mission to the Occupied
Palestinian Territory/State of Palestine* Note by the Secretariat

The Secretariat has the honour to transmit to the Human Rights Council the report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, on the mission she undertook from 17 to 22 September 2016. In the report, the mandate holder examines the gaps and challenges in fulfilling the obligation to eliminate violence against women, its causes and consequences and recommends measures for preventing and combating violence against women and ensuring the enjoyment of human rights by women. The mandate holder will present a separate report on her official visit to Israel (A/HRC/35/30/Add.1), in which she also addresses the gendered impacts of the protracted conflict and prolonged occupation on violence against women.

* The phrase “Occupied Palestinian Territory” in the title is used in accordance with the relevant decisions of the competent principal organs, including General Assembly resolution 71/247 of 21 December 2016, to refer to the geographical area of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the phrase “State of Palestine” in the title is used in a manner that is consistent with General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012 and any other relevant resolutions.

 The present document was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

Report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women,
its causes and consequences, on her mission to the Occupied
Palestinian Territory/State of Palestine* *****

Contents

	Page
I. Introduction	3
II. General context	3
III. Incorporation of the international framework on violence against women	5
IV. Manifestations of violence against women, its causes and consequences	6
V. State responses and measures to address violence against women	12
A. Legislative framework	12
B. Policy framework.....	14
C. Institutional framework.....	15
VI. Conclusions and recommendations	17

 Circulated in the language of submission only.

I. Introduction

1. The present report covers the mission that the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Dubravka Šimonović, conducted from 17 to 22 September 2016. The mission dovetailed with a mission to Israel; the mission reports are being submitted separately, but cross-reference each other, particularly in the section on the general context.
2. On 29 November 2012, the General Assembly adopted resolution 67/19, by which it accorded to Palestine non-member observer State status in the United Nations. In order to reflect that development, the Special Rapporteur refers, in the title of the present report, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory/State of Palestine, without precluding any other use of terminology by the State of Palestine, Israel or others.
3. The Special Rapporteur expresses her sincere gratitude to the Government of the State of Palestine for its full cooperation. During her visit, the mandate holder visited Ramallah, Bethlehem, Hebron, Jericho, East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip, where she met with representatives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Justice, the Chief Justice of the High Judicial Council and the Chief of the sharia courts, as well as judges of the sharia courts, the Attorney General, the Minister and Deputy Minister of Women's Affairs, representatives of the Ministry of Social Development and the national committee on combating violence, the Deputy Minister of Health and the Minister of Education, among others. She also met with members of the Palestinian Legislative Council in Ramallah, including the Chair of its human rights committee, and members of the Palestinian Legislative Council in Gaza and the Independent Commission for Human Rights, and held consultations with civil society organizations, Bedouin women, internally displaced women, and representatives of United Nations agencies. She visited four shelters/safe houses, a refugee camp, a Bedouin community, a school, a health clinic and a safe space for those who have been subjected to gender-based violence, and provided the opening remarks at an international seminar on gender-based violence in the humanitarian context of the Gaza Strip, organized by the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women).
4. In particular, the Special Rapporteur would like to thank the women and girl survivors of violence who shared their experiences with her throughout the visit, placing their trust and some of their hopes in her hands.
5. The mandate holder expresses her gratitude to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the occupied Palestinian territory and its suboffice in Gaza, UN-Women and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), as well as other United Nations agencies and other interlocutors involved in the organization of her visit.
6. She looks forward to a fruitful dialogue with the Government and other stakeholders on the implementation of the action-oriented recommendations included in the present report.

II. General context

7. The visit of the Special Rapporteur took place in a general context of protracted conflict and prolonged Israeli occupation punctuated by frequent incidents of violence and the absence of any prospect of peace, which creates a growing despair and hopelessness among the population. The complicated de jure and de facto situation provides the backdrop for assessing the different forms of violence against women, its causes and consequences in public and private life. This context requires the joint application of international human rights law and international humanitarian law to all persons under the States' jurisdiction or territory under their effective control. International human rights law, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, provides a broad framework for eliminating violence against women and its causes, including violence that is based on inequalities and discrimination against women in war, in peace and in conflict situations, while humanitarian law provides a specific framework for addressing some specific conflict-related forms of violence against women.

8. The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women has consistently held the view that the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and humanitarian law are applicable to all persons under the jurisdiction or effective control of Israel,¹ in line with the jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice² and the positions of other treaty bodies, such as the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,³ the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁴ and the Human Rights Committee.⁵ The Special Rapporteur shares those positions.

9. General Assembly resolution 67/19 and the accession of the State of Palestine to a number of international human rights instruments have not altered the obligations of Israel under human rights law and humanitarian law vis-à-vis the territory under its effective control and people under its jurisdiction.

10. Following her 2004 visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory only, the former Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, highlighted a number of issues of concern related to violence against women that remain unaddressed and unresolved.⁶ Additionally, various United Nations bodies have expressed concern about the human rights, humanitarian and security issues that occupation brings, including with regard to the situation of women.

11. While recognizing the imperatives related to security and stability in the region, the mandate holder highlights the clear linkage between the prolonged occupation and violence against women and notes, like her predecessor, that the occupation does not exonerate the State of Palestine from its due human rights obligation to prevent, investigate and impose punishment and provide remedies for acts of gender-based violence in the areas under its jurisdiction or effective control. The de facto authorities in Gaza also bear human rights responsibilities, given their exercise of government-like functions and territorial control.

12. Under the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip agreement of 1995, the West Bank was divided into Areas A, B and C, each having a different status of governance. In Area A, representing 18 per cent of the territory of the West Bank, the State of Palestine exercises control over security and civil matters. Area B is administered by the Palestinian National Authority, which has control over civil matters, while the Israeli authorities, jointly with the Palestinian National Authority, have control over security. In Area C, which constitutes 62 per cent of the West Bank, the Israeli authorities have full control over security, planning and construction.⁷ Within Area C, Palestinians have limited access to water, electricity, education and other State services.

13. The city of Hebron is divided into two zones: H1, under the control of the Palestinian National Authority, and H2, representing 20 per cent of Hebron, in which Israel retained all authority and responsibilities for internal security and public order under the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.⁸

14. In East Jerusalem, Israeli law provides Palestinian residents with the status of permanent residents of Israel, treating them as immigrants in the occupied territory.⁹ While the law provides such residents with more freedom of movement in comparison to other

¹ See CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 23 and CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 12. See also Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, general recommendation 28 (2010) on the core obligations of States parties under article 2 of the Convention, para. 12, and general recommendation No. 30 (2013) on women in conflict prevention, conflict and post-conflict situations, para. 8.

² Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136 (in particular pp. 171-181) and Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2005, p. 168 (in particular p. 216).

³ CERD/C/304/Add.45, CERD/C/ISR/CO/13 and CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16.

⁴ E/C.12/1/Add.69, E/C.12/1/Add.90 and E/C.12/ISR/CO/3.

⁵ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3; see also CCPR/C/79/Add.93, CCPR/CO/78/ISR and CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4.

⁶ E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.4.

⁷ See www.ochaopt.org/location/area-c.

⁸ See A/71/355, para. 26.

⁹ See A/66/356, para. 34.

Palestinians, it discriminates against them in comparison to Jewish people who immigrate to Israel. The blockade of Gaza has led to a critical socioeconomic and humanitarian situation for Palestinians residing there, particularly women. There is limited access to water, housing, land and property, especially for widowed women, as well as to employment opportunities, higher education and health care.¹⁰

15. The situation is further complicated at the internal level, with a political deadlock characterized by an absence of legislative elections for the past 10 years and a divide between the Government of the State of Palestine and the de facto authority in Gaza since the previous elections.

16. Since October 2015, the security situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel has continued to deteriorate, owing to an increase in violence and clashes between Palestinians and Israelis.

17. The complicated and conflicting political and legal regimes provide an equally or even more complicated and conflicting legal context for victims of violence against women, in which different authorities that share jurisdiction over security and other issues also share a complex due diligence responsibility to prevent violence against women, provide services for victims and punish perpetrators.

18. In this context of Israeli-Palestinian conflict, violence against women is a phenomenon that occurs on both sides of the divide. The Special Rapporteur looks at violence against women against this backdrop and with the conviction that combating and preventing violence against women will ultimately contribute to each society's growth, bridge divided communities and contribute to peace by removing obstacles to the full participation of women in the peace process.

III. Incorporation of the international framework on violence against women

19. In April 2014, the State of Palestine acceded to some of the key human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination; the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict, and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. The Special Rapporteur notes that the State acceded to these instruments without any reservations. She notes as well the State's accession to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and the Geneva Conventions relating to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts and the Protocol additional to the Geneva Conventions, and relating to the adoption of an additional distinctive emblem. The mandate holder welcomes the accession of the State of Palestine to these legal instruments.

20. In particular, the Special Rapporteur commends the accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, through which the State of Palestine has assumed legal obligations to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women, including violence, and to ensure equality between men and women and the protection of the enjoyment by women of their human rights. She is confident that the State's accession to the Convention and the reporting to the monitoring body will play an important role in the ongoing harmonization of the State's outdated legislative framework and in bringing the framework into line with international norms and standards. She welcomes the submission in March 2017 of the State's overdue initial report under that Convention. She also welcomes the national consultations that took place with civil society organizations prior to the submission of the report.

¹⁰ See E/CN.6/2016/6, paras. 7 and 14.

21. The Special Rapporteur also welcomes the standing invitation that was extended to all special procedures.

22. The Special Rapporteur notes with concern a lack of implementation of the recommendations included in the 2011 concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women,¹¹ with many of the concerns remaining valid at the time of her visit and followed up in the recommendations included in the present report. She also notes with concern a similar lack of implementation of other treaty bodies' concluding observations relevant to the context of the present report, including on the practice of torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian children who have been arrested;¹² the legality and use of the "defence of necessity" as a justification for torture; the lack of effective accountability demonstrated, and protection provided, by Israeli authorities with regard to violence perpetrated by Israeli settlers;¹³ and the unequal treatment of Bedouin women and girls,¹⁴ among others.

IV. Manifestations of violence against women, its causes and consequences

23. The Special Rapporteur notes that violence against women occurs both in private and public spheres. Women face multiple sources of discrimination and violence: they suffer the violence of the Israeli occupation, directly or indirectly, and also suffer under a system of violence emanating from the tradition and culture, with embedded patriarchal social norms and multiple outdated legal frameworks. She notes, however, that there are ongoing efforts to revise numerous laws relevant to combating and preventing violence against women, and that the taboo attached to such violence is less than it was at the time of the visit of her predecessor.¹⁵

Femicide or gender-related killings of women, including violence in the name of "honour"

24. The Special Rapporteur notes that many forms of gender-based violence are linked to "honour", including femicide or gender-related killings of women, forced marriage, imprisonment, rape, incest, domestic violence and suicide. She also notes that these patriarchal patterns are reflected in the legislation, which allows for the protection of "honour" in such crimes and provides for "pardoning excuses", in accordance with which, all too often, perpetrators receive a reduced sentence or are not even convicted.¹⁶ The Special Rapporteur, however, notes the recent important legislative changes by which some of those provisions have been repealed (see para. 65 below).

25. The phenomenon of femicide exists and threatens Palestinian women's right to life. The Special Rapporteur notes that no government agency currently collects figures on femicides, but that several Palestinian women's rights groups reported that cases of "honour" crimes and killings of women and girls perpetrated by family members were often brought to their attention. For example, the Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling, which collects such data, recorded 27 cases of the killing of women and girls in 2014, and 15 cases in 2015. In 2016, as at mid-August 18 cases of femicides had been documented by a civil society organization.¹⁷

26. Family honour plays a fundamental role in Palestinian society. Crimes in the name of "honour" have been defined as violent crimes committed against women for "tarnishing the

¹¹ CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/5.

¹² CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4.

¹³ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4.

¹⁴ E/C.12/ISR/CO/3.

¹⁵ E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.4.

¹⁶ Ahmad Al Ashqar, "Murder of women in Palestine under the pretext of honour" (Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights-Occupied Palestinian Territory, 2014).

¹⁷ See Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling, submission sent to the Special Rapporteur.

name and the honour of the family”.¹⁸ In the Palestinian context, they constitute a manifestation of culturally inherited values of inequality that impose upon women socially expected behaviours deriving from patriarchal norms and standards. Women’s transgressions of these social norms are considered violations of the honour of the family and men, which legitimizes violence against women as a disciplinary measure to maintain or restore the family honour.¹⁹ Women are therefore discouraged from reporting abuses by social norms and family members who fear for their reputation. Additionally, in some parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory that are under the jurisdiction of Israel, women face difficulties in reporting incidents to the Israeli police.²⁰

27. The Special Rapporteur received several testimonies from Palestinian women who had found safety in protection programmes and shelters, such as the Mehwar Centre, which she visited. They shared their experiences of being punished for crimes they were the victims of, in a chain of sexual violence, fear and misguided persecution.²¹

28. While there is a lack of official statistics, it is known that the number of women killed under the pretext of protecting “family honour” has dramatically increased within the past years. The Special Rapporteur wishes to highlight the importance of collecting reliable data on femicide, or gender-related killing of women, including “honour” crimes, as a mandatory step towards addressing violence against women.

Domestic/family violence

29. Domestic violence is not specifically prohibited by law, although violence, whether perpetrated against males or females, is illegal and punishable under gender-neutral criminal law. The Special Rapporteur was, however, informed of draft legislation on domestic violence and protection of the family that had undergone national consultation and was reported by the Government to meet international standards.

30. The Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics undertook a survey on gender-based violence in 2011 — its only such survey in 20 years. The results indicate that Palestinian women suffer from violence that emerges from the prevailing patriarchal culture in Palestinian society. The study showed that, of the respondents, about 37 per cent of the married women had been exposed to at least one form of violence by their husbands: 29.9 per cent in the West Bank and 51.1 per cent in Gaza.²² Less than 1 per cent will seek the help of a social worker, a shelter, a civil-society organization or the police. Of those who do seek help from the police, less than one third of the cases will go on to court, where again justice is not guaranteed.²³

31. The percentage of survey respondents who experienced psychological violence at least once was 58.6 per cent, while 55.1 per cent had been subjected to economic violence, 54.8 per cent to social violence, 23.5 per cent to physical violence and 11.8 per cent to sexual violence.²⁴

32. Several testimonies the Special Rapporteur received highlighted that the impact of the economic situation, the level of unemployment and the pressure of the occupation was greater on women and children, making them more vulnerable to domestic violence, in particular in Gaza, due to the constant pressure of the blockade and the recurring cycles of conflict, as well as the overcrowding, which limits their mobility and privacy. It was noted that, in particular in Gaza, the political situation served as a “mitigating circumstance” that made

¹⁸ Palestinian National Authority and UN-Women, Cross-Sectoral National Gender Strategy Booklet: Promoting Gender Equality and Equity 2011-2013.

¹⁹ See E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.4, para. 56.

²⁰ See A/HRC/35/30/Add.1.

²¹ See also Zeina Jallad, “Palestinian women and security: a legal analysis” (Geneva Centre for the Democratic Control of Armed Forces, 2012).

²² See www.pcbs.gov.ps/Portals/_pcbs/PressRelease/el3onf2011_E.pdf.

²³ See <http://palestine.unwomen.org/en/news-and-events/stories/2016/03/path-to-justice>.

²⁴ See www.pcbs.gov.ps/Portals/_pcbs/PressRelease/el3onf2011_E.pdf.

violence against women more acceptable,²⁵ while social norms led to the shaming of women who reported abuse to the police.

33. The Special Rapporteur notes efforts related to the establishment of the government-sponsored shelter and support for shelters run by non-governmental organizations (NGOs), but remains concerned that some shelters do not provide overnight accommodation.

34. The Special Rapporteur also notes that women face discrimination in the areas of inheritance and divorce and that some women may not leave situations of violence because they fear losing custody of their children. A woman can keep her children until a legally determined age but loses them before they reach that age if she remarries.²⁶ After that age, custody becomes the father's legitimate right. In Gaza, widows are now able to maintain custody of their children for an open-ended period of time or until they remarry, which is an important change in interpretation of the strict religious law.

Sexual violence, including rape and incest

35. The mandate holder is concerned about the occurrence of sexual violence, as victims of sexual violence are stigmatized in society. Women and girls who report cases of rape or incest are more likely to incur abuse or even be killed by family members because making the incidents public brings shame to the family. She notes with concern the persistence of article 308 of the Palestinian Penal Code (Law No. 16 of 1961), under which a perpetrator of rape, kidnapping or statutory rape can be exempt from prosecution and punishment if he marries his victim.

36. Marital rape is not criminalized under the current Palestinian legal framework. The Jordanian Penal Code of 1960, in force in the West Bank, defines rape as forced sexual intercourse with a female (art. 292 (1)), and does not specify that the woman can be the perpetrator's wife. With regard to incest, both parties are considered guilty, sometimes even in the case of rape by a family member. When the victim of incest is a minor, the charge is filed by a male family member up to the fourth degree of kinship.

37. Existing laws also criminalize abortion, even if the pregnancy is the result of incest or rape,²⁷ which leads to families forcing the victim to marry in order to legitimize the pregnancy.

Forced/child marriage

38. Legal references to the minimum age for marriage reveal many discrepancies and even discrimination. The Palestinian Child Law of 2004 defines the age of majority as 18. The Jordanian Personal Status Law of 1976, which is enforced in the West Bank, sets the minimum age for marriage at 16 for males and 15 for females; the Egyptian law of 1954 on family rights, which is enforced in Gaza, sets it at 18 for males and 17 for females. A judge may authorize the marriage of a minor if he or she believes that it is in the best interest of the child.

39. The Special Rapporteur notes that there are no reliable statistics on child marriage, but reliable sources informed her that approximately 9 to 10 per cent of weddings involve a bride and groom who are under the age of 18. In the context of the occupation girls are under increased pressure to get married, as marriage is seen as a coping strategy, but also to cover up rape and incest. Such marriages often further cement the cycle of abuse and misdeeds, as marriage protects a rapist from prosecution for the rape. The Special Rapporteur highlights that the risk of violence against women is higher in cases of child marriage, especially when the age difference between the spouses is large, and notes that the lack of an agreed minimum age for marriage undermines the protection of young girls from violence.

²⁵ Catherine Müller and Laila Barhoum, Violence against Women in the Gaza Strip: After the Israeli Military Operation Protective Edge (Alianza por la Solidaridad and Actionaid, 2014).

²⁶ United Nations Development Programme, "A review of Palestinian legislation from a women's rights perspective" (2012), p. 25.

²⁷ See, for example, the Jordanian Penal Code, arts. 321-325.

Polygamy

40. Men are permitted to have multiple wives, even if a man's current wife objects. Under the Egyptian law on family rights and the Personal Status Law, women are able to include conditions in their marriage contract, such as restrictions on polygamy, but in the West Bank this right is rarely respected by judges.²⁸

41. The Special Rapporteur wishes to recall that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its general recommendation No. 24 (1999) on women and health, refers to polygamy as a harmful practice, and that various studies show that a woman who is in a polygamous marriage incurs a higher risk of suffering from violence. Moreover, in its general recommendation No. 21 (1994) on equality in marriage and family relations, the Committee stated that polygamous marriage contravened a woman's right to equality with men, and could have such serious emotional and financial consequences for her and her dependents that such marriages ought to be discouraged and prohibited.

Violence against women in the workplace

42. In 2011, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics conducted a study on gender-based violence in the workplace, in partnership with the International Labour Organization and the Institute of Women's Studies at Birzeit University. Of the 186 women (22.8 per cent of respondents) who reported having been exposed to gender-based violence in the workplace, 4.5 per cent claimed to have suffered unwanted sexual attention at least once, while 3.5 per cent said they had been victims of sexual coercion.²⁹ The survey revealed that the main perpetrators of gender-based violence at work were clients and co-workers, and showed that there were fewer incidences of such violence in Gaza than in the West Bank.

Groups of women particularly at risk

43. Among the adult population, the prevalence of women with disabilities is 3.7 per cent. It is not possible to establish exactly how many women with disabilities suffer from acts of violence per year, since women with disabilities are invisible in the national statistics.³⁰ Persons with disabilities have a higher risk of incurring violence or abuse due to their impaired ability to report such crimes and their placement within institutions; women with disabilities are particularly vulnerable to sexual violence or abuse. The Special Rapporteur was informed of several cases of violence against women with disabilities, which clearly show a pattern of impunity for perpetrators, made possible by the lack of adequate legislation protecting women and girls with disabilities. She notes a lack of access to protection services, including a lack of adequate shelters suitable for providing assistance to women with disabilities.

44. Bedouin women are particularly vulnerable to gender-based violence, including sexual violence, with some living in a context of fear of forced transfer by Israeli authorities.³¹ Since 1997, livestock-dependent Palestinian Bedouin refugees from the Jahalin tribe living in Area C have been forcibly transferred to Jabal. Since the construction of the Wall between Abu Dis and Jerusalem, Bedouin women are physically cut off from employment prospects, leaving them with very few options for supporting themselves financially. Women excluded from the job market are more likely to marry, and women suffering from domestic violence are less likely to report it if it means losing their only source of income.

45. Internally displaced women suffer from a similar lack of access to the job market. Entry into East Jerusalem by Palestinian women who were relocated to one refugee camp is restricted owing to the Wall between Area A, where the majority of the camp is located, and Area C (controlled by Israel), where some of its periphery is located. The Special Rapporteur observed that the lack of access leads to a higher incidence of gender-based violence in itself, ²⁸ Jallad, "Palestinian women and security".

²⁹ See www.ilo.org/beirut/publications/WCMS_236942/lang--en/index.htm.

³⁰ QADER for Community Development and Stars of Hope Society, submission to the Special Rapporteur.

³¹ A/HRC/35/30/Add.1.

on top of the already established fact that displacement increases vulnerability to and instances of gender-based violence.

46. Women and girls living in refugee camps are exposed to particular forms of violence that result from their confinement to the household, which isolates them and limits their ability to interact in society.

Access to justice

47. The implementation of existing laws condemning violence is hampered by the absence of a formal governmental authority in some areas. In this regard, the occupation is a real obstacle to the State's due diligence obligation to prevent violence against women in some areas where it does not have full jurisdiction, owing to the fragmentation of areas under the control of different authorities³² and the political divide between the de facto authority in Gaza and the Government of the State of Palestine.

48. The Special Rapporteur notes that several critical steps have been taken in the justice chain to improve access to justice for victims and to fight against impunity for perpetrators.

49. Since 2008, family protection units in the Palestinian civil police force have been established in all districts of the West Bank and work in close cooperation with shelters. Units are specialized in and sensitive to gender-based issues; to file cases, units collaborate with the specialized public prosecutor on protecting families from violence, a position established in February 2016 in the Public Prosecution Office in order to improve protection for women victims of violence and ensure accountability. The Special Rapporteur notes that the units have increased women's trust in the police but that women still face obstacles to gaining access to the police, including the lack of police stations in women's residential areas and the inability to afford transportation costs. Another obstacle discouraging women from filing complaints is the lack of confidentiality, as units are located within police stations, which increases the risk of social stigmatization.³³ Privacy issues and the inability of the units to provide immediate protection to women are further impediments.

50. The Office of the Attorney General has established several gender units, which began operating in 2012 with the objective of integrating gender in the work of the public prosecution services and developing specialized services on violence against women. A new Chief Prosecutor was appointed in 2014 to work closely with the gender experts to institutionalize gender in the work of the services and improve access to justice. In 2014, the Attorney General assigned 15 specialized public prosecutors at various district offices to investigate cases of violence against women, with an emphasis on confidentiality, sensitivity and rapid legal procedures. Together with the new public prosecutor on protecting families from violence, specialized prosecution services investigate, litigate, prosecute, and appeal and monitor the enforcement of decisions in cases of violence against women and children in both the public and private spheres, and are specialized in dealing with sexual and electronic crimes. There are currently 23 specialized prosecution services in 10 districts. The Special Rapporteur was informed that, while they included women police officers, the services were understaffed. The services provided include core child protection services, psychosocial assessment, risk education and outreach for vulnerable families and children. The Special Rapporteur was appraised of the future plans of the gender units, which included developing a legal strategy to increase prosecution rates and punishment in violence against women cases and building the capacity of the public prosecution services with regard to the application of international treaties, such as the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in litigation.

51. Among the main obstacles identified by the public prosecution services themselves, however, are the absence of a special law on gender-based violence, an outdated criminal code, the absence of a law on electronic crimes, the absence of protection orders, the absence of a specialized judiciary on violence against women, and a lack of use by lawyers of constitutional tools and treaties in litigation.³⁴ Additionally, the issue of enforcing court decisions when, for example, a husband flees to Area C is acute, as in those cases the Palestinian authorities lose jurisdiction and thus their power to enforce court decisions.

³² Prosecution under the Palestinian justice system is possible only in Areas A and B.

³³ Euro-Mediterranean Human Rights Network, "Palestine: report on violence against women in the context of conflict". Available from <http://euromedrights.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/EMHRN-Factsheet-VAW-Palestine-EN.pdf>.

52. The Special Rapporteur observes that some judges still have traditional views and apply gender stereotypes to violence against women, which affect their verdicts in domestic violence cases. Judges often exercise their judicial discretion in ways that are unfavourable to women victims of violence.

53. There is no system that institutionalizes legal aid in a sustainable way and supports the coordination of legal aid and quality service delivery. Currently, most legal aid services are provided through civil society organizations and university legal clinics, which are primarily donor funded. Only a few women's rights organizations are in a position to support women victims by providing free legal assistance. The Special Rapporteur notes the draft bill of 2016 on legal aid for those in need, which includes a provision explicitly stating that women are to be given priority with regard to the allocation of such aid.

Women's empowerment: education, employment and political participation

54. Decades of Israeli occupation, in parallel with the continuation of patriarchal attitudes in Palestinian society, have led to women's roles becoming more subordinate, have exposed women to continuing violence and have marginalized women, hampering their ability to play an active role in political life, to engage in economic and social life and ultimately to make their own decisions.

55. Important factors that underpin violence against women include a lack of education and employment for women. Because of the conflict, young girls' education has been compromised. For example, UNRWA students in the West Bank lost 83 days of school between 1 October 2005 and 9 March 2016 due to raids and incursions in the vicinity of schools.³⁵ Children's right to education is further affected by high levels of harassment and attacks by Israeli soldiers.³⁶ On their way to school, it is not uncommon for girls and boys to witness or be the victim of violence or to be impeded at the checkpoint from accessing school facilities. Thus, many parents prevent their children, especially their daughters, from attending school. In 2015, 286 incidents of education-related violations were recorded by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

56. A long-standing view on women's employment, in line with the patriarchal perception that a woman's rightful place is in the house to provide and care for male members of the family, is that Palestinian women should seek and be granted employment as a last resort and that women's employment is not perceived as a human right. This perception, coupled with limited work opportunities, has led to a striking employment gap in the Palestinian labour market. Palestinian women account for 17.4 per cent of the formal labour force (14.7 per cent in Gaza, 18.9 per cent in the West Bank) compared to 69.1 per cent for men, one of the lowest levels of labour force participation in the world. They account for 20.9 per cent of the formal labour force in rural communities, 16.8 per cent in urban communities and 15.7 per cent in refugee camps. A total of 32.9 per cent of Palestinian women are unemployed (25.3 per cent in the West Bank, 50.1 per cent in Gaza), compared to 20.5 per cent of Palestinian men (17.3 per cent in the West Bank, 26.8 per cent in Gaza). In 10 years, women's overall unemployment rate has almost doubled, from 17 per cent in 2002 to 32.9 per cent in 2012, while for men the rate has decreased from 33.5 per cent to 20.5 per cent over the same time period.³⁷

57. It has been observed that social, cultural and institutional barriers to women's labour market participation are exacerbated by Israeli restrictions that impede mobility and ³⁴ Information provided by the Attorney General and Public Prosecutor.

³⁵ See www.unrwa.org/sites/default/files/content/resources/children_in_distress_briefing_note.pdf.

³⁶ See A/HRC/35/30/Add.1.

³⁷ See <http://palestine.unwomen.org/en/what-we-do/economic-empowerment/facts-and-figures#sthash.V8HZCP1D.dpuf>.

perpetuate weak demand for labour in the formal economy, resulting in substantial loss of economic potential, particularly in view of the high levels of educational attainment of Palestinian women.³⁸

V. State responses and measures to address violence against women

A. Legislative framework

58. The Palestinian Basic Law, promulgated in 2003 and last amended in 2005, functions as a temporary constitution. Although the Basic Law establishes important rights that are to be enjoyed on the basis of equality and non-discrimination (arts. 9-33), such as equality before the law without distinction based upon sex, many laws, including penal legislation and the Personal Status Law, are not in compliance with the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of sex and the principle of equality between men and women. The guardianship clause in the Personal Status Law promotes the dependency of women, considering them incapable of making decisions. The Special Rapporteur notes the requirement under article 4 of the Basic Law that the principles of Islamic sharia shall be a principal source of legislation.

59. The Special Rapporteur received information that the Government had recently established a committee to harmonize the laws of the State of Palestine, and that the committee had started to review the penal legislation.

60. The Special Rapporteur was informed that work on a draft constitution for the State of Palestine was ongoing but that there was no clarity yet in the process or on the issue of the transposition of international law into domestic law (with respect to a monist or dualist model). She is concerned about the prospects for equal participation of women, including women representatives of civil society, in this process.

61. The current legislative frameworks in the West Bank and Gaza are comprised of a combination of unified laws promulgated by the Palestinian Legislative Council and ratified by the President; where no unified law has been promulgated, existing Jordanian and Egyptian laws continue to apply.³⁹ In East Jerusalem, considered under international law as occupied territory,⁴⁰ Israeli law has been applied. As noted by the former mandate holder, this multiplicity of laws has led to a lack of consistent and uniform Palestinian legal references.⁴¹

62. The legal framework on gender equality is limited and has yet to be adapted to become fully in line with human rights standards. The principles of non-discrimination and equality between women and men have not been embodied in national laws, hence they have not been extended to either the public or private spheres. The lack of gender-sensitive legislation, the outdated legal frameworks, discriminatory laws and the inaccessible justice system are some of the main issues that women and girls face.

63. Relevant laws are spread across legislation adopted under multiple legal regimes, including Palestinian laws, laws of the British Mandate, Jordanian and Egyptian laws and even laws from the Ottoman Empire. Combating violence against women is therefore hampered by an outdated, non-harmonized legal system that contains discriminatory provisions.

64. The main legal references for criminal offences are the Jordanian Penal Code, applicable in the West Bank, and the Criminal Code of 1936, applicable in Gaza. The Special Rapporteur notes in that regard that the penal legislation contains several discriminatory

³⁸ See International Labour Office, The Situation of Workers of the Occupied Arab Territories (2015), report of the Director-General, appendix, para. 33.

³⁹ See www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/reports/opt1106webwcover_0.pdf.

⁴⁰ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136 (in particular p. 167).

⁴¹ E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.4.

provisions based on sex, age and marital status.⁴² In 2003 a new penal code was presented, but the mandate holder was informed that its adoption had been delayed due to the current internal Palestinian political division and the resulting paralysis of the legislative process. The Palestinian Legislative Council has not been able to meet since the last parliamentary election, held in January 2006, and the political division between the West Bank and Gaza has led to the restriction of Palestinian National Authority rule to the West Bank. The Special Rapporteur was, however, informed that, under article 43 of the Palestinian Basic Law, presidential decree can be used to legislate in the West Bank until the Palestinian Legislative Council reconvenes and reviews the legislation adopted by presidential decree. She notes that the President has resorted to this provision, including for accession in April 2014 to a number of international treaties, and that in those cases, members of the Palestinian Legislative Council were consulted informally. While 140 laws were issued by Presidential decree between June 2007 and the end of 2015, only 2 per cent of those were issued in relation to women's rights. None had a clear impact with respect to addressing violence and discrimination against women.⁴³ This reveals a normative sociocultural structure that places women and girls in a subordinate position to men simply because they are women.

65. In 2011, the Palestinian President issued a decree amending some provisions of the Jordanian Penal Code and the Criminal Code of 1936 with a view to deterring "honour" killings. The Decree abrogated article 340 of the Jordanian Penal Code and its equivalent in the Criminal Code of 1936, which allowed for pardon or mitigated sentences against men accused of "honour" crimes, and article 98 of the Jordanian Penal Code, which effectively allowed perpetrators to plead "honour" as a mitigating factor in crimes against women. Article 18 of the Criminal Code of 1936 on pardoning excuses, under which "honour" killings had been had legally legitimized, was amended with the addition, at the end of the article, of the phrase "not including the murder of women on the grounds of 'family honour'".⁴⁴

66. Despite these positive steps, the mandate holder expresses concern regarding the resort by defence lawyers to articles 99 and 100 of the Jordanian Penal Code, the application of which mitigates the penalty of killing, including if the victim belongs to the same family as the perpetrator. The sentence is then left to the discretion of the judge in accordance with the circumstances of the act. The Special Rapporteur was informed that most court rulings are based on these two provisions of the law, thereby denying women victims access to justice⁴⁵ and undermining the impact of the legislative amendments that were meant to act as a deterrent for crimes of killing women under the pretext of honour. She is particularly appalled by a two-year sentence delivered by a criminal court in Nablus for the killing of a wife by her husband, the judge having applied far-reaching discretionary powers under articles 99 and 100.⁴⁶ The case is emblematic of the patriarchal mindset of the judiciary when handling crimes of this nature, which has led to extremely lenient sentences for perpetrators of such crimes.

67. Additionally, violence against children by their parents is still justified under article 62 of the Jordanian Penal Code in the name of discipline, where the act of violence is permitted by law and by general custom. The Special Rapporteur was informed that this provision is often used in defence of a perpetrator who justifies abusing and/or killing his daughter as "discipline".

68. The Special Rapporteur notes with concern the lack of a specific law that directly addresses violence against women. She was informed of a process under way to draft a family protection act that would criminalize violence against women and provide for measures to protect against such violence. Due to the current gaps in the capacity of service providers and government-sponsored shelters, women victims of violence often have no alternative place

⁴² For a thorough analysis of the penal laws, see Khadeeja Hussein Naser, "Palestine and the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women: implications of ratification" (Independent Commission for Human Rights, 2013).

⁴³ Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling submission to the Special Rapporteur, referring to a study on the laws and legislations issued since 2007.

⁴⁴ Al-Ashqar, "Murder of women", p. 7.

⁴⁵ Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling, submission to the Special Rapporteur.

⁴⁶ Ibid.

to live, and thus remain in their houses. Moreover, female victims of violence are subject to patriarchal traditions and social norms that prevent them from seeking protection from violence outside the family.

69. Domestic violence is not defined as a specific crime and is handled under the general abuse articles of the Jordanian Penal Code (arts. 333-337). The 2003 draft penal code establishes domestic violence as a crime punishable by a two-year prison sentence, but legal action against the perpetrator could only be taken if the victim herself, or a relative to the fourth degree for minors under the age of 15, filed a complaint. The Special Rapporteur observes that family honour constitutes a direct impediment to this system of denunciation, as members may pressure the female victim to not come forward if she is of age, or refuse to file the complaint if she is under 15. The Special Rapporteur is also concerned about the fact that the Personal Status Law requires a male relative (wali) to file a complaint on behalf of the victim if she is under the age of 18. This becomes especially difficult when a family member is the perpetrator; shelters and government institutions have no legal capacity to accompany a minor to file a complaint.⁴⁷

70. At the time of writing, under article 308 of the Jordanian Penal Code, a case may be dismissed if the perpetrator of the rape or sexual violence marries his victim. Female victims are often pressured to accept the marriage proposal to preserve the family “honour”, to avoid social stigma or even to save their life. Under 304 of the Code a man who deflowers a virgin, promising to marry her, can be punished. However, women rarely report those cases, again because of social values related to “honour”.⁴⁸

71. Sexual harassment is not currently criminalized; the draft penal code provides for its criminalization.

72. Other problematic areas of law persist. Among the key areas that need reform are property rights, inheritance rights, marriage, divorce and guardianship. The Personal Status Law and the Egyptian law on family rights grant only men the power to file for marriage and the right to guardianship and trusteeship. A man is considered responsible for supporting his wife, so she must obey him and accept his decisions with regard to changing their place of residence or preventing her from working. A man has the legal right to divorce with no conditions or restrictions, while a woman’s right to request divorce is conditioned on presenting justifications and the consent of the sharia judiciary.⁴⁹ The Special Rapporteur notes some encouraging efforts, made in 2012, to reform the Personal Status Law, but also notes that most provisions still contravene articles 15 and 16 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

B. Policy framework

73. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the establishment in 2013 of Takamol, the national referral system to connect women victims of violence with legal, health and social services. The system is based on a 2009 initiative developed by civil society organizations, namely, the Women’s Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling and Juzoor for Health and Social Development. She notes that its use is now mandatory for all centres providing services to battered women, for the police and in the health and social affairs sectors.

74. There are only three anti-violence shelters in the West Bank, and only one in Gaza; a national consultative committee has been established for shelters. In Gaza, there are currently two women’s health centres — in Jabalia and Bureij. They are managed by professional female staff who provide women with health, reproductive, psychological and recreational services. The centres are both active members of a coalition, supported by the United Nations Population Fund, that brings together 20 NGOs from all over Gaza. The centres serve as models, following an approach in which women help to shape the services they are provided with.

⁴⁷ Jallad, “Palestinian women and security”, p. 8.

⁴⁸ Ibid., p. 9.

⁴⁹ For a thorough analysis of the personal status laws, see Naser, “Palestine and the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women: implications of ratification”.

75. Most of the existing hotlines and shelters for battered women are managed by the Ministry of Social Development. The Mehwar Centre is the first national multipurpose centre; in addition to being a shelter for women and their children, the centre combines prevention, protection, empowerment and community-awareness activities and offers social, psychological and legal counselling services.

76. Only a few civil society organizations, such as the Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling, operate emergency protection shelters and provide social and legal services to women victims of violence. Various other women's organizations provide counselling services, psychological support and empowerment services, with funding from foreign donors and in coordination with the Ministry of Social Development and the Ministry of Women's Affairs.

77. Implementing proactive services for women is made difficult by the lack of infrastructure. Particularly in marginalized areas, transportation and better facilities are needed. Economic hardship only deepens the challenge faced by women victims of violence seeking protection facilities. Furthermore, few shelters and safe houses are willing to provide protection to women with disabilities.⁵⁰

78. The Special Rapporteur is concerned that no nationwide statistics on cases of violence against women exist, including data on domestic violence, rape, incest, femicide and honour-related crime. Moreover, no systematic analysis is being conducted with a view to identifying shortcomings of the system, prioritizing the end of violence against women at all levels and finding concrete solutions.

79. A lack of awareness of their rights is another reason why women continue to face violence on such a large scale. The Special Rapporteur notes that several national awareness campaigns on ending violence against women are being implemented by local women's rights and human rights organizations, and that the Ministry of Women's Affairs has conducted several awareness campaigns over the past three years. However, she also notes that more educational/awareness programmes addressed to women of all ages are needed and should be created.

80. The Palestinian civil police force provides training for public officials on women's rights and protection of battered women, and provides safe referral mechanisms for service providers in the social service and health sectors. While it was reported that the training programmes have been successful in changing perceptions of violence against women, the Special Rapporteur notes that the training is not conducted in accordance with a comprehensive strategy of capacity-building in the prevention of violence against women.

C. Institutional framework

81. The Ministry of Women's Affairs works to combat violence against women and aims to develop a governmental commitment to enhance the role of women and guarantee their political, economic and social rights. As the ministry in charge of implementing the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Ministry of Women's Affairs is committed to harmonizing laws and policies. It faces many challenges in its work, including a lack of accurate statistics that it could use to influence politicians and increase public awareness. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the news that, to address this issue, the Ministry plans to establish in 2017 a national observatory on violence against women, in collaboration with the Ministry of Social Development and the Ministry of Health, the police and a number of civil society institutions. She notes that such an observatory, which is in line with the call she made in 2015⁵¹ and her thematic work on the issue, would have the potential to provide powerful and compelling support for decision makers with respect to making the necessary changes in the laws and policies to protect women.

⁵⁰ Stars of Hope Society, submission to the Special Rapporteur.

⁵¹ See www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=16796.

82. Due to the internal Palestinian political division, the governmental mechanisms put in place in the West Bank do not have parallels in Gaza. The de facto authorities in Gaza have taken a number of measures and opened some channels of coordination with local women's organizations but, on the whole, the measures have been very limited. The response mainly takes the form of humanitarian and development interventions that support local organizations providing services that respond to gender-based violence.

83. In August 2016, under the leadership of the Ministry of Women's Affairs, a national action plan on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) was adopted. The Special Rapporteur commends the Government for the adoption of the plan, which sends a strong signal to Palestinian women and girls that the Government recognizes their key role in advancing the peace and security agenda, as well as its own responsibility in responding to their needs.

84. The Ministry of Women's Affairs adopted the cross-sectoral National Strategy to Combat Violence Against Women 2011-2019 and established a technical committee to review femicides and to review legislation from a gender perspective. The Strategy is aimed at promoting the rule of law on the basis of women's rights and strengthening institutional mechanisms by improving social protection, social support and health services offered to female victims of violence.

85. The Cross-Sectoral National Gender Strategy serves as a political road map for the Government to address gender-related issues and supports the implementation of the national action plan. It is hoped that the Strategy will serve as a reference point for the development of appropriate and gender-responsive policies that will guarantee women's rights

86. The Special Rapporteur observes that there are not enough social programmes promoting women's rights. The Ministry of Social Development, which as part of its mandate raises awareness and empowers women economically, also provides women with permits and reports to enable them to gain access to shelters. However, the shelters usually do not have enough social workers or a good follow-up system that can be accessed outside of official working hours, forcing some women to wait in police stations until the shelters open the next day. The gaps in the system and the lack of protective laws mean that women must seek help from outside of formal protective frameworks.

87. Another key mechanism for combating violence against women is the National Committee to Combat Violence against Women, established in 2008 by the Council of Ministers and led by the Ministry of Women's Affairs. The Committee is responsible for following up on and monitoring the implementation of the National Strategy to Combat Violence against Women. Its wide-ranging membership includes a variety of key line ministries and other governmental institutions, as well as NGOs represented by the NGO forum for combating violence against women (Al-Muntada) and the General Union of Palestinian Women.

88. The mandate of the Independent Commission for Human Rights, which is the national human rights institution, includes receiving complaints from individuals regarding violations of human rights; reporting on the national human rights situation, on specific matters or through thematic reports, and on violations of any human right, including cases of killings of women; making recommendations to the Government, the parliament and other competent bodies on matters concerning legislative or administrative provisions; promoting the harmonization of national laws and practices with the international obligations of the State of Palestine and the implementation of recommendations of international human rights mechanisms; engaging with the international human rights system; conducting public education and awareness; and monitoring prisons and detention centres. The Commission reported positive developments, such as the openness of the Palestinian authorities to discuss human rights issues and the training and capacity-building provided to Commission officials, and noted positive legislative initiatives, for example the adoption by presidential decree in February 2016 of a juvenile protection law that unified and updated the legislative framework in that area and recognized minors as victims in need of protection, rehabilitation and reintegration into society, rather than as criminals deserving of punishment.⁵² However, the ⁵² See www.dci-palestine.org/president_abbas_signs_into_law_long_gestating_juvenile_protection_bill.

Commission reported a continued overall lack of State accountability for human rights violations.

89. Civil society organizations have been delivering services, raising awareness, carrying out advocacy and lobbying to end violence against women. They work in collaboration with official institutions, such as the Ministry of Women's Affairs, the Ministry of Social Development and the Ministry of Justice, to provide psychological counselling and legal aid services to women victims of violence. Jointly with official institutions, civil society organizations have undertaken policy-level responses, such as the Palestinian National Development Plan 2014-2016, which promotes a rights-based, gender-sensitive and more inclusive, integrated and sustainable social protection system to alleviate poverty, marginalization and social exclusion, and which is also aimed at empowering Palestinian women to enjoy more protection and better participation in the labour market and public life.

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

90. During the visit, the Special Rapporteur noted that violence against women occurred in both the private and public spheres. Women face multiple sources of discrimination and violence: they suffer the violence of the Israeli occupation, directly or indirectly, and also suffer from a system of violence emanating from the tradition and culture, with embedded patriarchal social norms and multiple outdated legal frameworks. She notes, however, the State's ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and ongoing efforts to harmonize and revise numerous laws relevant to combating and preventing violence against women, and that the taboo attached to such violence is less than it was at the time of the visit of her predecessor.

91. With respect to the observed gaps in the fulfilment of the State's obligations, including the due diligence obligations to prevent violence against women, to protect and provide remedies to women who have been subjected to violence and to prosecute and punish the perpetrators, the Special Rapporteur would like to put forward the recommendations below.

92. With regard to law and policy reform, the Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government:

(a) Urgently repeal discriminatory provisions that are at the root of violence against women and that perpetuate and reinforce the subordination and inferiority of women. As stressed throughout the visit, women's rights cannot wait and specific laws to address gender-based violence need to be adopted urgently, while laws that perpetuate violence against women and discrimination need to be urgently repealed in compliance with international human rights law, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination general recommendation No. 19 (1992) on violence against women. The use of presidential decrees to do so should be encouraged;

(b) Consider including in its new Constitution a provision making the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women directly applicable, and urgently ensure that the composition of the constitution committee is gender balanced and includes representatives of civil society;

(c) Urgently take all legal, administrative and legislative action necessary to amend penal legislation so as to repeal or amend discriminatory provisions that help perpetuate violence against women. More specifically, the Government should repeal or amend articles 99 and 100 and any other legal loopholes in the Jordanian Penal Code to ensure that such provisions are not applicable in cases of violence against women, and adequately define and criminalize different forms of violence against women, including marital rape, or adopt a unified penal code in line with the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and international standards;

(d) Adopt a unified personal status law by which equality and non-discrimination in family relationships are guaranteed, including provisions establishing the minimum legal age of marriage for girls and boys, with or without parental consent, at 18 years;

(e) Adopt the draft legislation on domestic violence/family protection and ensure that it is in line with accepted international standards on women's rights set out in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, that it addresses prevention, protection of victims and prosecution of perpetrators and that it provides for protection orders and a sufficient number of shelters;

(f) Ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

(g) Provide mandatory training to law enforcement officers and members of the judiciary, including judges and prosecutors, on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the general recommendations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee's jurisprudence on violence against women;

(h) Strengthen efforts to combat discriminatory gender stereotypes among society, including in the media;

(i) Conduct campaigns and programmes, including in cooperation with the public defender and civil society, to increase awareness and understanding among the general public, including women of all ages, of the different forms of violence and to raise women's awareness of their rights and avenues of redress.

93. With regard to investigations, prosecution support services and protective measures, the Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government:

(a) Increase the number of police stations in residential areas and continue its efforts to facilitate women's reporting of incidents to the police, including by taking measures to ensure privacy and confidentiality;

(b) Strengthen and ensure the sustainability of both the specialized public prosecutors and the family and justice protection units and adequate representation of women on the staff of both;

(c) Consider establishing specialized courts or judges for hearing cases of violence against women;

(d) Provide the judiciary with specialized training on gender-based violence; improve access to justice, and incorporate into the programmes of public service training institutions, including for the judiciary, modules on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and national provisions on gender equality and domestic violence, including recent amendments to penal legislation;

(e) Conduct awareness-raising campaigns and training for law enforcement officials, the judiciary, health-care providers, social workers, community leaders and the general public, to increase the understanding that all forms of violence against women are human rights violations;

(f) Provide a sufficient number of adequate shelters for women who are victims of, or at risk of, violence, for both the short and long term (emergency shelters and alternative housing solutions) and services, including financial and legal assistance; particular attention should be paid to women with disabilities;

(g) Ensure implementation of the national action plan on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1325 (2000), with a focus on the full inclusion of women in any peace and development efforts, and adequate budget allocation for the realization of the plan;

(h) Engage in a constructive dialogue with the Israeli authorities on the issues relating to violence against women under joint responsibility.

94. The Special Rapporteur recommends that national human rights mechanisms and civil society support and strengthen their cooperation with the Independent Commission for Human Rights and civil society organizations to increase their capacity to monitor and report on the Government’s international obligations in the area of women’s human rights generally and violence against women in particular, and continue their collaboration in the elaboration and adoption of new laws, such as the law on domestic violence/protection of the family, which requires a consultative process that incorporates the opinions of civil society and victims/survivors, in dialogue with practitioners who will apply and enforce the laws;

95. With respect to the collection of data on femicide and other forms of violence against women, the Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government:

(a) Establish a system of standardized collection and analysis of data, disaggregated by sex, race, age, ethnicity and other relevant characteristics, in order to understand the magnitude, trends and patterns of violence against women. Monitoring and evaluation tools must also be developed to assess, in a clear and systematic way, progress made in eradicating violence against women;

(b) Establish a “femicide watch” or “gender-related killing of women watch” and annually collect and publish data on the number of femicides (all cases, including family related) and establish a separate body for, or entrust an existing body with, analysing each case of femicide in order to identify any failure of protection, with a view to improving and further developing preventive measures.

96. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the international community:

(a) Provide technical assistance to support legislative processes and the reform of the national framework to harmonize it with international standards, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and provide capacity-building programmes for lawyers, judges, prosecutors, police officers and other law enforcement officials on the Convention and on women’s human rights;

(b) Ensure better coordination between donors and NGOs to avoid duplication and overlapping of projects and policies aimed at ending violence against women; the area of prevention of violence against women should be better funded and the availability and capacities of service providers enhanced;

(c) Include a gender perspective in the projects funded and strengthen financial support for shelters and other services for victims.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
17 July 2024

Original: English

Seventy-ninth session

Item 71 (b) of the provisional agenda*

Promotion and protection of human rights: human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

Right to food

Note by the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General has the honour to transmit to the General Assembly the report of the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Michael Fakhri, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 78/198 and Human Rights Council resolution 52/16.

* A/79/150.

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the right to food,
Michael Fakhri

Starvation and the right to food, with an emphasis on the Palestinian people's food sovereignty

Summary

The present report establishes the relationship between the right to food and starvation prevention in a way that contributes both towards the common goal of ensuring that everyone has the power to determine what is adequate food for their community and to access that food. In the present report the Palestinian people's food sovereignty is emphasized since the Palestinian liberation struggle exemplifies how starvation is a human rights issue.

I. Introduction

1. On 9 October 2023, Israel announced its starvation campaign against Gaza. By December, Palestinians in Gaza made up 80 per cent of the people in the world experiencing famine or catastrophic hunger.¹ Never in post-war history had a population been made to go hungry so quickly and so completely as was the case for the 2.3 million Palestinians living in Gaza.²

2. In the present report, there is an emphasis on the Palestinian people's food sovereignty, since the Palestinian liberation struggle exemplifies how starvation is a human rights issue. Food sovereignty is an expression of communities' and Indigenous Peoples' power to determine how they grow, prepare, share and eat food and a reflection of their relationship to land and water. The more that power is equitably shared among all people in a food system, the more likely people will have access to adequate food; and the more that people's relationship with land and water is based on care and reciprocity, the easier it is for people to establish relationships with each other based on care and reciprocity.

3. Starvation is one of the most brutal ways to attack the food sovereignty of a community or people. Starvation methods include blockades, water deprivation, food system destruction and the general destruction of civil infrastructure. Starvation often leads to forced mass internal displacement and forced migration. Unfortunately, the prevalence of starvation around the world is increasing.

4. Like in Palestine, the famine in the Sudan was possible because of a protracted crisis and long-standing structural issues in its food system.³ The famine in the Sudan is causing an unprecedented number of people to suffer.⁴ Over 25 million civilians in the Sudan and fleeing the Sudan are being starved and require urgent humanitarian assistance because of the war between the Sudanese Armed Forces and Rapid Support Forces.⁵ Both parties are using food as a weapon against civilians, committing crimes against humanity and creating a risk of genocide.⁶

5. Globally, over 281.6 million people face high levels of acute food insecurity in approximately 41 countries or territories.⁷ For example, Mali, Palestine, South Sudan and the Sudan remain at the highest concern level. Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (eastern provinces), Myanmar, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen are of very high concern. Burkina Faso, the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Lebanon, Malawi, Mozambique, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Zimbabwe and Zambia are hot spots with precarious food systems.⁸

6. In the present report, the relationship between the right to food and starvation prevention is established in a way that contributes both towards the common goal of

¹ See <https://www.ipcinfo.org/ipcinfo-website/alerts-archive/issue-97/en/>.

² Food Security Information Network and Global Network against Food Crises, Global Report on Food Crises 2024: Joint Analysis for Better Decisions (Rome, 2024), p. 7.

³ Joshua Crazem Kholood Khair and Raga Makawi, "Sudan starves", The New York Review of Books, 23 June 2024.

⁴ See <https://www.wfp.org/news/sudan-facing-unprecedented-hunger-catastrophe-say-un-agency-chiefs>.

⁵ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/06/using-starvation-weapon-war-sudan-must-stop-un-experts>.

⁶ Human Rights Watch, "The Massalit will not come home: ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity in El Geneina, West Darfur, Sudan", 2024.

⁷ Food Security Information Network and Global Network against Food Crises, Global Report on Food Crises 2024.

⁸ World Food Programme and Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, "Hunger hotspots: FAO–WFP early warnings on acute food insecurity: June to October 2024 Outlook". Rome, 2024.

ensuring that everyone has the power to determine what is adequate food for their community and to access that food. The report focuses on the right to food, but starvation also denies people's rights to water, health and housing, among others. The Special Rapporteur would like to thank all States, civil society organizations and experts who provided input and is especially grateful to those in Gaza who spoke to him directly.

7. Words cannot capture certain aspects of the horror of Palestinian life during the current starvation campaign by Israel. Nor do words alone adequately provide a vision for a better future for the Palestinian people and the world. The Special Rapporteur has therefore prepared a graphic report, illustrated by Omar Khouri, a renowned artist. The illustrations are essential to the present report and can be found on the Special Rapporteur's United Nations web page.⁹

8. The Special Rapporteur thanks all the United Nations staff who supported the use of graphic reporting in the spirit of promoting universal human rights. Based on prior approval, he integrated these graphics into the report. He was, therefore, disappointed to be notified, after the submission of the report, that the Secretariat would not allow the inclusion of artwork in any part of the report. This decision caused delays in its issuance. The Special Rapporteur recalls that the content of the report is, and should remain, the sole responsibility of the mandate holder, constituting an essential part of his independent work and assessment. The Special Rapporteur requests the Secretary-General to clarify the application of the existing rules related to maps, figures and photographs to enable the use of artwork, such as illustrations, comics and graphic art, in official United Nations documents.

II. Framing famine and starvation

A. What is at stake

9. The world produces enough food to feed 1.5 times the current population, and yet prevalence of hunger, malnutrition and famine are on the rise.¹⁰ Hunger and famine are not production problems, they are always caused by acts and omissions which deny people access to food. Famines are most often triggered by conflict, economic shocks and drought. But these triggers reflect underlying social relationships based on dependency and extraction. Ultimately, the concentration of power and absence of accountability in food systems increases the risk of famine.

10. Famines should therefore always be understood as a political problem; they are human-made and are always the result of one group starving another. This also means that famines are predictable and preventable. The consensus is that the increasing prevalence of famine reflects an international system that does not promptly and adequately respond to warnings and evidence. The Special Rapporteur warns against States and other actors waiting to act until there is an official "declaration" of famine. Moreover, he reminds States and others of their duty to prevent starvation.

11. What is usually at stake in starvation campaigns is power over land. As such, starvation is often used as a technique of displacement, dispossession and occupation. The relationship that people have with the land determines the realization of their right to food (see A/HRC/52/40, paras. 74–77, and A/78/202, paras. 96–100). Starvation was a common tactic of colonial Powers of the past, and those same tactics are used today to colonize, conquer or dominate different territories. Businesses also raise serious concerns when they acquire control over growing amounts of land and territory, heightening the risk of famine.¹¹

⁹ See www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/food/2024-08-27-visuals-palestinian-people-food-sovereignty.pdf.

¹⁰ Eric Holt-Giménez and others, "We already grow enough food for 10 billion people ... and still can't end hunger", Journal of Sustainable Agriculture, vol. 36, No. 6 (2012).

12. Famine is usually framed in the international system as a humanitarian crisis, in part because armed conflict is the leading trigger of famine. While humanitarian aid is necessary during famine, framing famine as a humanitarian crisis does not provide sufficient guidance to prevent starvation and to tackle its root causes. In his previous work, the Special Rapporteur has outlined the limits of international humanitarian law in preventing starvation since it is a legal regime designed to organize violence, not end violence (see A/HRC/52/40, paras. 63–67).

13. The degree to which international criminal law acts as a deterrent or a source of justice remains unclear. This is even more true for starvation, since this crime has never been prosecuted at the International Criminal Court. For the first time ever, however, the Court Prosecutor is seeking to charge alleged perpetrators with starvation by requesting arrest warrants against Israeli officials.

14. It is therefore important to analyse armed conflict within the context of protracted crises in food systems (A/HRC/52/40). States have recognized that protracted crisis usually arises through some combination of conflict, occupation, insurgency, disasters, climate change, inequality, pervasive poverty and governance factors – all of which lead to acute food insecurity and malnutrition.¹²

15. The Special Rapporteur outlines herein how starvation is always part of a protracted crisis and is international, structural and long-lasting. He then explains how starvation is best understood as a human rights issue, including a matter of genocide, crime against humanity and torture.

B. Famines are international, structural and long-lasting

16. As explained, famines are political. The politics, however, almost always include an international dimension. Generally, third parties who are involved directly or indirectly in national protracted crises may be complicit in starvation. For example, the war in the Sudan is between two national parties, however, third-party States and foreign businesses have played a significant role in the protracted crises that have led to the current conflict. Thus, some of these external actors are likely complicit in starvation in the form of genocide and crimes against humanity. The famine in Yemen was caused, to some degree, by opposing factions in the civil war using food as a weapon, but primarily driven by the externally-led blockade that was supported with weapons from third-party States (see A/HRC/52/40, paras. 57–60).

17. More specifically, perpetrators of starvation are usually supported by foreign States and corporations, making those third parties complicit in starvation. For example, in Gaza, third-party countries and businesses are not only responsible for the illegal supply of weapons for Israel’s starvation campaign and genocide, but businesses have been complicit for years in the illegal destruction of the Palestinian food and water systems, and the illegal settlements of Palestinian territories.¹³ Another example is the Lachin corridor, connecting the region of Nagorno-Karabakh to Armenia, which remained blocked for several months in 2023. The blockade caused severe shortages of food and basic supplies for the population, resulting in malnutrition and instances of starvation. Despite the presence of Russian peacekeeping forces deployed to protect the Lachin corridor, no effective measures were undertaken to alleviate the crisis.¹⁴

¹¹ Submission from FoodFirst Information and Action Network (FIAN).

¹² Committee on World Food Security, “Framework for Action for Food Security and Nutrition in Protracted Crises”, paras. 2 and 3.

¹³ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/02/arms-exports-israel-must-stop-immediately-un-experts>; <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/06/states-and-companies-must-end-arms-transfers-israel-immediately-or-risk>; <https://www.somo.nl/business-as-usual-in-palestine-human-rights-due-diligence/>; submission from People’s Water Forum.

18. In sum, starvation has unfortunately become a common tactic, as it has been widely used by competing major Powers and their allies as a weapon of warfare. This may explain why the international community has been slow to name and respond to famines.

19. Starvation is structural, in that there are certain political economic conditions and legal frameworks that make it possible for actors to effectively starve or try to starve a population. Food systems create conditions that make people vulnerable to famine when the system includes endemic cases of oppression, exploitation and occupation. Some signs of fragile food systems include high concentration of corporate power; high concentration of land ownership; significant dependency on imports or exports especially for cereals; dependency on humanitarian aid or charity; weak labour laws that do not adequately protect workers; weak farmers' rights that do not guarantee the freedom to freely save, use, exchange and sell seeds; weak land tenure rights that do not adequately protect the right to land of peasants and other peoples living in rural areas; or weak Indigenous Peoples' rights that do not adequately protect their territorial rights and right to free, prior and informed consent.

20. Moments of famine are usually triggered by external shocks that are symptoms of long-standing underlying issues; in turn, famine has a long-term impact. As such, famine is a form of slow violence. Famine causes lasting physical and psychological harm to survivors; studies also suggest that famine affects gene transmission and may harm the health of descendants for generations.¹⁵ Famine is also a social trauma that reverberates across an entire community, passing through future generations. Survivors of famine experience the unique shame of having had to make existential choices of whom to feed or not, whom to share food with or deny it to, in times of profound destitution. The fact that there are so few public famine memorials reflects the difficulty of commemorating this particular horror. Moreover, many starvation tools – such as the destruction of the food system – have long-term environmental and infrastructure consequences.

C. Starvation is a human rights issue

21. Starvation reflects a State's fundamental abandonment of its human rights obligations. The right to food includes the right to be free from hunger, thus free from starvation. Put in terms that address the root causes of hunger and starvation, it means the right to be free from oppression, exploitation and occupation. Therefore, realizing the right to food, cooperating around the right to food and tracking right to food violations are the most effective ways that States meet their obligation to prevent starvation. When a State or any other actor systemically violates the right to food, this is an early warning that indicates some degree of intention to starve a population – thereby triggering a duty to prevent starvation.

22. The best way to prevent starvation is to actively listen to affected communities and prioritize the perspective of vulnerable people. The Special Rapporteur provides two contexts – sexual and gender-based violence, and displacement – that can provide an early warning that there is a famine or a high risk of famine. He also explains why the first death of a person, especially a child, from malnutrition or dehydration confirms that there is a famine.

¹⁴ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/08/un-experts-urge-azerbaijan-lift-lachin-corridor-blockade-and-end>.

¹⁵ See https://www.cell.com/cell/fulltext/S0092-8674\(14\)00806-X?_returnURL=https%3A%2F%2Flinkinghub.elsevier.com%2Fretrieve%2Fpii%2FS009286741400806X%3Fshowall%3Dtrue00806-X?_returnURL=https%3A%2F%2Flinkinghub.elsevier.com%2Fretrieve%2Fpii%2FS009286741400806X%3Fshowall%3Dtrue).

1. Sexual and gender-based violence

23. Mass starvation and sexual and gender-based violence are mutually reinforcing atrocities (A/HRC/54/55, para. 50).¹⁶ Moreover, tolerating discrimination against women in the workplace invites violence and harassment. Working in male-dominated environments or, as is often the case on farms and plantations, in workplaces managed solely by male supervisors also increases the risk of violence. Many employers use their power to hire and fire to demand sexual favours from workers, especially seasonal workers, as a condition for employment or for renewal of their employment contracts. Physically isolated workers, such as plantation workers, are exposed to more risk of bodily harm due to a poor working environment and conditions (A/HRC/52/40, paras. 50–56).

2. Displacement

24. There is a direct correlation between displacement and hunger and malnutrition. The highest number of children suffering from acute malnutrition are in countries with the largest internally displaced populations.¹⁷ Mass displacement not only indicates an imminent risk of famine because of the inherent food insecurity of displaced people, but because it is usually connected to attacks that prevent access to productive land in food systems.¹⁸ For example, in Tigray, Ethiopia, at least 700,000 people currently remain displaced without sustained and unhindered access to humanitarian aid, unable to access fields during the planting and harvest seasons (meher).¹⁹ In South Sudan, the timing of certain attacks and seasonality of organized violence during the planting and harvest periods was used to force displacement, exacerbated the preexisting situation of hunger, and led to additional months of food insecurity (A/HRC/45/CRP.3, para. 9). Similarly, in Gaza, repeated directives to evacuate en masse, likely constituting forced displacement,²⁰ have affected at least 67 per cent of the territory, forcing the abandonment of cultivated land and other food production means.²¹ Thus, directions for mass evacuation for entire areas, even if permissible or even required under international humanitarian law, are in tension with the right to food.

3. Mortality

25. The most popular mechanisms for measuring famine are the Integrated Food Security Phase Classification and the Famine Early Warning System Network, which use compatible metrics. The Integrated Food Security Phase Classification requires very high thresholds of hardship and death to be reached, erring on the side of ¹⁶ Submission from CARE; Dyan Mazurana and others, “Sex, gender, age, and mass starvation” in Accountability for Mass Starvation, Bridget Conley and others, eds. (Oxford, Oxford University Press, 2022).

¹⁷ See <https://www.fsinplatform.org/sites/default/files/resources/files/GRFC2024-focus-displacement.pdf>.

¹⁸ Submission from Yousuf Syed Khan.

¹⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Ethiopia: Situation Report, 10 June 2024. <https://reports.unocha.org/en/country/ethiopia>.

²⁰ See <https://www.justsecurity.org/89617/the-directive-to-evacuate-northern-gaza-advance-warning-or-forced-displacement>.

²¹ See <https://www.securitycouncilreport.org/whatsinblue/2024/02/briefing-on-food-security-risks-in-gaza.php>.

avoiding false positives.²² Moreover, they are limited by a dark irony given that the required data are harder to collect and confirm in hostile conditions, especially where access is restricted and humanitarian aid is blocked, i.e. under conditions where there is the highest risk of famine.

26. From a human rights perspective, the surest sign that there is a starvation campaign is when the first individual is reported to have died from malnutrition or dehydration. This is because these deaths are always preventable and reflect weakened health, social, economic, cultural and political structures. During starvation campaigns, it is always the most vulnerable in a community that are initially killed, such as children, older persons, people with disabilities and displaced people. Of the most vulnerable, children are often the first to be killed by starvation campaigns. The death of the first child from malnutrition and dehydration is the clearest indication that a community's core structures have been critically attacked, that there is a famine and that the right to food is grossly violated.

D. Starvation as a tactic of genocide, extermination or torture

27. Starvation is perpetrated at all scales, ranging from the starving of individuals and small groups to the starving of entire communities and peoples. Starvation is made possible through social relations of dependency and control. Since starvation is political, international, structural and long-lasting it is always intentional through acts or omissions. Therefore, every instance of mass starvation is a form of genocide or extermination, and every instance of starving an individual is torture.

28. Starvation is common as a form of torture especially in prisons, where there is a high degree of control over individuals and their food system.²³ Similarly, the European Court of Human Rights has recognized the vulnerability of refugees and asylum-seekers and their dependence on the authorities of the host State, thereby finding that starving them amounts to ill-treatment.²⁴

29. In the context of genocide, starvation always causes serious bodily and mental harm to members of a group; starvation is a sure way of deliberately inflicting conditions of life on the group, calculated to bring about physical destruction in whole or in part; and sometimes starvation can be a measure intended to prevent births within the group.²⁵ When starvation is a crime against humanity it is understood as a deprivation of food, medicine and other items essential to life that is an intentional inflection of conditions of life calculated to bring about the destruction of part of a population.²⁶

30. Certain actions inherently increase the risk of starvation and indicate intent to starve a population.

²² Daniel Maxwell and Peter Hailey, "Analysing famine: the politics of information and analysis in food security crises", Journal of Humanitarian Affairs, vol. 3, No. 1 (2021).

²³ United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, rule 22.1; article 5 of the Resolution on the Right to Food and Nutrition in Africa; Human Rights Committee, Raul Sendic Antonaccio V. Uruguay, Decision of 28 October 1981, Communication No. R.14/63; European Court of Human Rights, Moisejevs V. Latvia, Application No. 64846/01, Judgment of 15 June 2006; www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/food/statements/20240214-com-statement-venezuela-sr-food-en.pdf.

²⁴ European Court of Human Rights, M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece, Application No. 30696/09, Judgment of 21 February 2011.

²⁵ Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, article II.

²⁶ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, articles 7 (1) (b); 7 (2) (b).

31. The most well-recognized starvation act is the weaponizing of humanitarian aid.²⁷ This can be the restriction and blocking of humanitarian aid, or it can be using humanitarian aid as leverage for political negotiations or means to control local populations.

32. Occupation always increases the risk of starvation and often accompanies a starvation campaign, whether it is Russia's occupation of Ukrainian and Georgian territory, Israel's occupation of Palestinian territory, or corporate land grabs displacing local communities and Indigenous Peoples.

33. When food systems are attacked, whether in times of peace or war, this indicates a clear intent to starve, for this not only creates an immediate crisis but also has long-term impact. This includes acts such as razing or polluting agricultural lands; destroying agro-food facilities; destroying or poisoning water sources; or systemically targeting peasants, pastoralists and fishers. This is happening not only in Gaza and the West Bank, but also in Ukraine, the Syrian Arab Republic and Lebanon.²⁸ Relatedly, the wide-scale destruction of civil infrastructure, including roads, ports and educational facilities, inherently weakens food systems. Environmental pollution and destruction also raise the risk of famine. For example, "sacrifice zones" – which are extremely contaminated areas through which communities are exposed to pollution and hazardous substance – in effect starve local communities by completely denying them access to a clean and healthy environment (A/HRC/49/53).

34. Blockades are unfortunately becoming more popular. These can arise in the form of economic blockades or unilateral coercive measures. Or they can be in the form of sieges, meaning that they are part of a campaign to attack or occupy – as in Gaza, Palestine; Mariupol, Ukraine (A/HRC/55/66);²⁹ Madaya, Aleppo and Ghouta, Syrian Arab Republic (A/HRC/31/68; A/HRC/34/64 and A/HRC/38/CRP.3);³⁰ and Yemen (A/HRC/52/40, paras. 57–60). Sieges are technically lawful under international humanitarian law if directed at combatants. But since military, humanitarian and civilian supply chains are interlinked, it is almost impossible for modern sieges to be lawful. In sum, blockades in any form increase the risk of starvation; sieges always indicate an intent to starve a population.

35. Often these actions are used together: first, a siege is laid against civilians; second, civilian infrastructure is attacked; and third, the food system is attacked.³¹

III. Starvation as a tactic in Gaza

36. Israel made its intentions to starve everyone in Gaza explicit, implemented its plans and predictably created a famine throughout Gaza. Tracking the geography of Israel's starvation tactics alongside Israeli officials' statements confirms its intent. Israel opened with a total siege that weakened all Palestinians in Gaza. Then, Israel used starvation to induce forcible transfer, harm and death against people in the north, pushing people into the south, only to starve, bombard and kill people in newly created refugee camps in the south.

37. What is at stake is nothing less than Israel's attempt to annex Gaza, as the current Government has indicated on multiple instances. Israel has considered the annexation of Gaza on at least two occasions prior to 2023: during the Lausanne conciliation ²⁷ Security Council resolution 2417 \(2018\).

²⁸ Submissions from Badil, eyewitness, Pax, Global Rights Compliance, among others.

²⁹ Submission from Global Rights Compliance.

³⁰ Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic, "Sieges as a weapon of war: encircle, starve, surrender, evacuate".

³¹ Submission from Global Rights Compliance.

talks in 1949 and after the 1967 war (see A/HRC/56/CRP.4, paras. 30–32).³² In fact, on 30 October 2023 the State of Israel awarded 12 licences to six companies for natural gas exploration off of Gaza’s coast, violating Palestinian sovereignty.³³

38. The Special Rapporteur first provides an account of how Israel is using starvation as a tactic in the current moment of its genocide against the Palestinian people in Gaza. He then explains how Israel had made starvation a possible tool by outlining the current political economy of starvation and genocide in Gaza.

39. It is important to note that Israel is not only attacking Palestinians in Gaza, but is also increasing its attacks against Palestinians in the West Bank, East Jerusalem and refugee camps in the region by undermining their right to food and food sovereignty.

40. In 2023, Israel seized more Palestinian land than in any given year in the past 30 years.³⁴ Concurrently, it was also the highest level of Israeli settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, causing a record number of Palestinians to be displaced. The forcible transfer of Palestinians, many of whom were farmers and herders, was mostly caused by settler violence and access restriction with the approval or acquiescence of the Israeli authorities.³⁵

41. On 18 January 2024, the Israeli authorities informed United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) that 12 out of 30,000 UNRWA staff were allegedly involved in Hamas’ 7 October attacks. Based on this unsubstantiated claim, and with no further evidence, 16 of the largest donors to UNRWA immediately threatened to withhold their future funding. Since UNRWA is the main source of humanitarian aid in Gaza, this immediately increased the risk of starvation in Gaza.³⁶ And since more than 1.5 million individuals live in 58 recognized Palestine refugee camps in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, this was clearly an act of collective punishment against the Palestinian people as such, with food and other essentials of life and dignity, like education and water, made precarious.³⁷ Moreover, UNRWA continues to hold some of the most comprehensive records of Palestinian refugee properties. These deeds evidence private claims to repossess homes and plots of land and are inherently connected to the Palestinian people’s communal right to return. It is therefore important to understand that attempts to undermine and potentially terminate UNRWA are usually part of an attack against the Palestinian people’s right of return and a campaign to undermine the ability of the United Nations to repatriate people back to Palestine.

³² Reuters, “Israeli ministers join ultranationalist conference urging Gaza resettlement”, 26 January 2024.

³³ Murat Temizer, “Israel grants gas exploration license in areas considered to be within Palestine’s maritime boundary”, Anadolu Agency, 15 February 2024.

³⁴ Julia Frankel, “Israel turbocharges West Bank settlement expansion with largest land grab in decades”, The Associated Press, 3 July 2024.

³⁵ See <https://www.unocha.org/publications/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/over-4000-palestinians-displaced-west-bank-2023>; <https://www.ohchr.org/en/documents/country-reports/flash-report-human-rights-situation-west-bank-including-east-jerusalem-7>; <https://palestine.un.org/en/262773-un-human-rights-chief-deplores-new-moves-expand-israeli-settlements-occupied-west-bank>; <https://www.hrw.org/news/2024/04/17/west-bank-israel-responsible-rising-settler-violence>.

³⁶ See <https://www.unrwa.org/newsroom/official-statements/statement-commissioner-general-unrwa-general-assembly>.

³⁷ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/05/relief-agency-unrwa-targeted-politically-over-partiality-claims-funding-must>.

A. Starvation as a genocidal tactic

42. Israeli security forces started carrying out air strikes in the Gaza strip in the early hours of 7 October 2023, in response to the Hamas-led attack into Israel that same day. On 8 October, Israel announced the commencement of a major military operation. On 9 October, Israel announced and implemented a total siege against Gaza and immediately blocked the entry of all food, water, electricity and fuel into Gaza (see A/HRC/56/CRP.4, paras. 266–273).

43. There is clear evidence that Israeli officials have used starvation both as a war crime and as a crime against humanity (A/HRC/56/26).³⁸ Israel has failed to enable and ensure the unhindered provision of urgently needed basic services and humanitarian assistance, as well as medical supplies and medical care, to the Palestinian people in the Gaza Strip. Accordingly, the International Criminal Court prosecutor is seeking a warrant for the arrest of Benjamin Netanyahu, the Prime Minister of Israel, and Yoav Gallant, the Minister of Defence of Israel, both for starvation war crimes and for extermination, including in the context of deaths caused by starvation as a crime against humanity.³⁹ There is also clear evidence that Israel has committed genocide against the Palestinian people since at least October 2023 (A/HRC/56/26).⁴⁰

44. The Special Rapporteur highlights how Israel has used starvation with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Palestinian people by “(b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to Palestinian people; (c) Deliberately inflicting on the Palestinian people conditions of life calculated to bring about their physical destruction in whole or in part” (Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, art. II).

45. This is evidenced through the mass destruction that Israel has wrought in Gaza causing gross and systemic violations of the Palestinian people’s rights to food, water, housing and health.

46. The Special Rapporteur has received direct accounts of the destruction of the food system, which is also well documented⁴¹ and recognized by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Committee on World Food Security.⁴² Moreover, Israel has created a buffer zone along its border into Gaza and along the middle of the strip, encroaching on 32 per cent of territory in Gaza.⁴³

47. By destroying and poisoning agricultural land, decimating ports and fishing vessels, Israel has destroyed approximately 93 per cent of the economy of the agriculture, forestry and fishing sector.⁴⁴ Military necessity can in no way justify such ³⁸ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/statements-and-speeches/2024/02/turk-calls-end-carnage-gaza>.

³⁹ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/news/statement-icc-prosecutor-karim-aa-khan-kc-applications-arrest-warrants-situation-state>.

⁴⁰ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/statements-and-speeches/2024/02/turk-calls-end-carnage-gaza>.

⁴¹ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/01/over-one-hundred-days-war-israel-destroying-gazas-food-system-and>; <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2024/feb/27/un-israel-food-starvation-palestinians-war-crime-genocide>; <https://www.hrw.org/news/2023/12/18/israel-starvation-used-weapon-war-gaza>; <https://forensic-architecture.org/investigation/ecocide-in-gaza>; <https://www.washingtonpost.com/investigations/interactive/2024/gaza-israel-agriculture-food-fisheries/>; <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/longform/2024/7/2/how-israel-destroyed-gazas-ability-to-feed-itself>.

⁴² <https://openknowledge.fao.org/server/api/core/bitstreams/ea99cfa4-a841-44b3-928c-823eca7c3da7/content>; https://www.fao.org/fileadmin/templates/cfs/CFS51/Report/Endorsed_Report_CFS51/CFS_51_Final_Report_Nov_2023.pdf; <https://www.csm4cfs.org/urgent-call-for-action-to-address-the-genocide-and-starvation-in-gaza/>; <https://www.fao.org/cfs/resources/detail/en/c/1679727/>.

⁴³ <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2024/5/31/israel-has-encroached-on-32-of-gaza-al-jazeera-investigation-shows>.

⁴⁴ <https://thedocs.worldbank.org/en/doc/ce9fed0d3bb295f0363d690224d1cd39-0280012024/original/Palestinian-Econ-Upd-May2024-FINAL-ENGLISH-Only.pdf>, p. 6.

destruction, since the intended and achieved result has been a complete halt of the production of agricultural products, forcing the entire population to depend on humanitarian assistance for food.⁴⁵ In turn, Israel then used humanitarian aid as a political and military weapon to harm and kill the Palestinian people in Gaza.

48. The destruction of Gaza's food system inherently weakens the ability of Palestinians in Gaza to feed themselves for decades into the future, profoundly undermining the Palestinian people's right to food, making the economic, social and political cost of a dignified life egregious for decades to come. In more general terms, the World Bank and United Nations economic agencies have noted that the shock to Gaza's economy caused by the current siege is one of the largest observed in recent economic history and will require the largest recovery effort since 1945.⁴⁶

49. Prior to 7 October 2023, approximately half of the people in Gaza were food insecure and more than 80 per cent relied on humanitarian aid; the total siege was an immediate catalyst for starvation. Coupled with repeated dehumanizing statements and calls for the total annihilation of Gaza by Israeli officials, Israel's starvation campaign fulfilled the actus reus and mens rea of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and thereby triggered all States' obligation to prevent genocide.⁴⁷

50. From 9 to 21 October 2023, the total siege on the Gaza Strip imposed by Israel and the closure of the Rafah border by Egypt effectively blocked all aid and commercial traffic coming into the territory and vastly reduced the aid and humanitarian deliveries entering the Gaza Strip (A/HRC/56/CRP.4, para. 282). Kerem Shalom, the main point of entry from Israel to the Gaza Strip, was closed by Israel from 7 October to 17 December 2023. Following intense international pressure, Israel announced that it had opened the crossing for aid trucks. Senior Israeli political and military officials indicated on several occasions that the siege and other restrictions had been imposed deliberately and punitively, while Israel also used humanitarian relief as a bargaining chip throughout the siege.⁴⁸

51. Aid resumed mostly to southern and central Gaza after 21 October. It has been reported to the Special Rapporteur by humanitarian workers that Israel's inspection and control of humanitarian relief had been slow, opaque and absurd (see A/HRC/56/CRP.4, paras. 284–295). Israel has not only denied and restricted the delivery of humanitarian aid and violated its obligations to ensure that the aid that is let through reaches the population, it has also created a climate of horror by targeting humanitarian workers and civilians seeking humanitarian aid (see A/HRC/56/CRP.4, paras. 230–255).⁴⁹

⁴⁵ <https://thedocs.worldbank.org/en/doc/14e309cd34e04e40b90eb19afa7b5d15-0280012024/original/Gaza-Interim-Damage-Assessment-032924-Final.pdf>, p. 15.

⁴⁶ <https://thedocs.worldbank.org/en/doc/14e309cd34e04e40b90eb19afa7b5d15-0280012024/original/Gaza-Interim-Damage-Assessment-032924-Final.pdf>; <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2024/5/2/gaza-will-need-largest-post-war-reconstruction-effort-since-1945-un-says>; <https://unctad.org/publication/preliminary-assessment-economic-impact-destruction-gaza-and-prospects-economic-recovery>.

⁴⁷ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/10/gaza-un-experts-decry-bombing-hospitals-and-schools-crimes-against-humanity>.

⁴⁸ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/03/un-experts-condemn-flour-massacre-urge-israel-end-campaign-starvation-gaza>; A/HRC/55/28, para. 20; A/HRC/56/26, para. 53; <https://news.sky.com/story/israeli-body-says-it-would-get-aid-into-gaza-if-its-government-opened-more-border-crossings-13088587>.

⁴⁹ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/03/un-experts-condemn-flour-massacre-urge-israel-end-campaign-starvation-gaza>; <https://www.un.org/unispal/document/un-human-rights-office-pr-1mar24/>.

52. From 8 to 15 October, Israel completely shut off all three water pipelines to Gaza, almost 75 per cent of Gaza's supply of potable water. By the end of October water was restored, but in very limited amounts and only to central and southern Gaza, denying people in northern Gaza potable water. The Israeli Minister for Energy and Infrastructure stated that restoring the water supply to the south of Gaza and depriving people in the north of water "will push the civilian population to the southern [part of the] Strip".⁵⁰

53. On 13 October, Israel ordered the 1.1 million people in northern Gaza to evacuate. The Secretary-General of the United Nations responded by stating that "moving more than one million people across a densely populated warzone to a place with no food, water, or accommodation, when the entire territory is under siege, is extremely dangerous – and in some cases, simply not possible".⁵¹ The World Health Organization described the order as a death sentence.⁵²

54. By December, every person in Gaza was hungry, and famine was spreading across the entire strip; northern Gaza was still under total siege and closest to disaster. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs described Gaza as "apocalyptic".⁵³

55. Meanwhile, on 29 December, South Africa commenced proceedings at the International Court of Justice, claiming that Israel was committing genocide against the Palestinian people in Gaza, requesting the Court to pronounce emergency provisional measures and order Israel to take all measures within its power, including the rescinding of relevant orders of restrictions and/or of prohibitions, to end the starvation.⁵⁴

56. On 26 January, the Court took note of the situation of death, despair and starvation in Gaza, the incriminating statements made by Israeli officials and the alarm raised by the United Nations human rights system.⁵⁵ The Court considered the deteriorating and "catastrophic humanitarian situation in the Gaza Strip"⁵⁶ and therefore ordered in part that Israel "shall take immediate and effective measures to enable the provision of urgently needed basic services and humanitarian assistance to address the adverse conditions of life faced by Palestinians in the Gaza Strip".⁵⁷ The Court also found that there was a plausible case that the Palestinian people's right to be protected from genocide was at stake, thereby heightening the alarm for the risk of genocide.⁵⁸

57. Israel ignored the Court's orders, and attacks against humanitarian convoys continued (A/HRC/56/CRP.4, paras. 237–239). Owing to the lack of security for both the aid workers and recipients, the World Health Organization had to stop delivering medical supplies to northern Gaza's largest hospital, Al-Shifa, on 22 January; UNRWA, which delivers the bulk of the relief supplies in Gaza, had to stop aid on ⁵⁰ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/israel-says-it-is-restarting-water-supply-to-southern-gaza-strip/>.

⁵¹ See <https://www.un.org/sg/en/content/sg/speeches/2023-10-13/secretary-generals-remarks-the-press-the-situation-the-middle-east>.

⁵² See <https://www.who.int/news/item/14-10-2023-evacuation-orders-by-israel-to-hospitals-in-northern-gaza-are-a-death-sentence-for-the-sick-and-injured>; https://www.ipcinfo.org/fileadmin/user_upload/ipcinfo/docs/IPC_Gaza_Acute_Food_Insecurity_Nov2023_Feb2024.pdf.

⁵³ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-61>.

⁵⁴ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20231228-app-01-00-en.pdf>; para. 144.

⁵⁵ Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide in the Gaza Strip (South Africa v. Israel), Request for the indication of provisional measures, Order, International Court of Justice, 26 January 2024, General List No. 192.

⁵⁶ Ibid., para. 72.

⁵⁷ Ibid., paras. 72 and 86.

⁵⁸ Ibid., paras. 54, 58 and 59, 86.

23 January; the World Food Programme (WFP) suspended deliveries on 20 February.⁵⁹ One day later, WFP resumed aid to Gaza, Israeli security forces killed 112 people and wounded another 760 who were seeking humanitarian aid, mostly flour; the “flour massacre” was the apotheosis of attacks against humanitarian aid since October 2023 (see A/HRC/56/CRP.4, paras. 240–255).⁶⁰

58. In March, humanitarian aid to the north was sporadic.⁶¹ Most concerning, earlier that month, Israel solidified its separation of northern Gaza from the rest of the Strip. It had completed the Netzarim corridor, which was a roughly 6.5 km stretch of a militarized road buffered by razed land just south of Gaza City, stretching from the Israeli border to the Mediterranean Sea.⁶²

59. Because Israel was continuing its starvation campaign, on 28 March 2024 the International Court of Justice issued a second set of provisional measures, this time focusing on starvation and famine. The Court observed that Palestinians in Gaza were no longer facing only a risk of famine, but that famine was setting in.⁶³ Most notably, the Court framed the entirety of its orders on Israel’s obligations under the Genocide Convention, in terms of “in view of the worsening conditions of life faced by Palestinians in Gaza, in particular the spread of famine and starvation”. The Court was implicitly holding the State of Israel responsible for not preventing the starvation of the Palestinian people in Gaza in the context of a plausible genocide. The underlying legal argument was therefore that starvation was central to a plausible genocide.

60. Israel allowed for more humanitarian aid to enter Gaza in April and withdrew from southern Gaza, but maintained its troops in the north.⁶⁴ Nevertheless, in late April and early May, officials from the United States of America and the Executive Director of WFP recognized the fact that there was a “full-blown famine” in northern Gaza because of the denial of humanitarian aid.⁶⁵

61. Days after the statement by WFP, Israel invaded the Rafah crossing in the south, taking control of border crossing. Kerem Shalom was technically open but no humanitarian aid was going through, leaving all of Gaza under a total siege again.⁶⁶ This marked a new phase in Israel’s tactics, to inflict further harm on all the ⁵⁹ See <https://www.voanews.com/a/un-if-no-cease-fire-widespread-famine-in-gaza-is-near-certain/7505522.html>.

⁶⁰ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/03/un-experts-condemn-flour-massacre-urge-israel-end-campaign-starvation-gaza>.

⁶¹ https://www.wfp.org/news/wfp-food-deliveries-northern-gaza-face-further-setbacks?utm_source=twitter&utm_medium=organicpost&utm_campaign=newsrelease&utm_content=staticimage; <https://news.un.org/en/story/2024/03/1147482>; <https://x.com/antonioquterres/status/1771653572846870970>; <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-us-canada-68715254>.

⁶² <https://www.newarab.com/news/what-israels-netzarim-corridor-splitting-gaza-two>; <https://www.cnn.com/2024/03/08/middleeast/israel-building-road-splitting-gaza-cmd-intl/index.html>; <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2024/05/17/gaza-israel-netzarim-corridor-war-hamas/>.

⁶³ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20240328-ord-01-00-en.pdf>, para. 21.

⁶⁴ https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2024-04-07/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-withdraws-from-southern-gaza-after-four-months-of-fighting/0000018e-b8ac-db6c-a9ee-fcbc97880000?utm_source=mailchimp&utm_medium=Content&utm_campaign=israel-at-war&utm_content=bd0f540546.

⁶⁵ <https://www.devex.com/news/exclusive-usaid-officials-say-israel-breached-us-directive-on-gaza-aid-107545>; <https://apnews.com/article/gaza-israel-famine-humanitarian-aid-children-8a4cb5736c42caf50b6e204f40d83a91>.

⁶⁶ <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-68975398>; <https://press.un.org/en/2024/db240508.doc.htm>.

Palestinians in Gaza, the vast majority of whom had been forcibly transferred, corralled and concentrated in southern Gaza.

62. For all of May, very little to no aid entered Gaza.⁶⁷ On 24 May 2024, the Court issued a third order on provisional measures, ordering Israel to immediately stop its military operations in Rafah Governate, ensure humanitarian assistance and provide access to Gaza for United Nations-mandated commissions of inquiry in order to prevent genocide.⁶⁸

63. Instead, two days after the Court issued its provisional measures, Israel forces set ablaze a tent camp sheltering displaced people in a designated safe zone in Rafah, killing at least 46 Palestinians and causing international outcry.⁶⁹ On 8 June, Israeli forces killed at least 274 people and injured more than 500 by the Nuseirat refugee camp in southern Gaza.⁷⁰

64. At the time of the present report in July 2024, some aid delivery to the north has improved, but aid is still not adequately entering Gaza and Israel's starvation campaign shows no sign of abating.⁷¹ The United Nations independent experts declared a famine spreading across the entire Gaza Strip on 9 July.⁷²

B. Political economy of hunger and genocide

65. A political economic understanding of genocide can help to explain what is unfolding in Gaza.⁷³ The total siege that began on 9 October 2023 was a continuation of Israel's 24-year blockade, and 75-year attack against Gaza's food system. The total siege of October began two weeks after the Israeli Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, delivered a speech at the General Assembly about the "New Middle East", during which he held up a map, purportedly of Israel, that suggested an annexation of Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem.⁷⁴

66. After the 1967 war, Israel not only occupied Palestinian territory but also created an economic system that increasingly disconnected Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem from one another, making Palestinians increasingly dependent on the State of Israel, further undermining their food sovereignty.

67. Following the first intifada, which began in 1987, Israel began strangling access in Gaza, depriving the inhabitants of objects indispensable to their survival, deliberately making conditions of life increasingly difficult. Starting in 1991, Israel placed restrictions on the movement of Palestinian people and goods between Israel, Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem.

⁶⁷ <https://www.unrwa.org/resources/reports/unrwa-situation-report-108-situation-gaza-strip-and-west-bank-including-east-jerusalem>; <https://www.unocha.org/news/ocha-appeals-security-council-end-humanitarian-catastrophe-gaza>; <https://thecradle.co/articles-id/25087>.

⁶⁸ <https://www.icj-cij.org/sites/default/files/case-related/192/192-20240524-ord-01-00-en.pdf>.

⁶⁹ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/05/un-experts-outraged-israeli-strikes-civilians-sheltering-rafah-camps>.

⁷⁰ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/06/un-experts-condemn-outrageous-disregard-palestinian-civilians-during-israels>.

⁷¹ See <https://news.un.org/en/story/2024/05/1150486>; <https://media.un.org/unifeed/en/asset/d321/d3213549>; <https://press.un.org/en/2024/db240619.doc.htm>; https://www.ipcinfo.org/fileadmin/user_upload/ipcinfo/docs/IPC_Gaza_Strip_Acute_Food_Insecurity_MaySept2024_Special_Snapshot.pdf.

⁷² See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/07/un-experts-declare-famine-has-spread-throughout-gaza-strip>.

⁷³ See <https://lpeproject.org/blog/genocide-and-political-economy-reconstructing-the-relationship/>.

⁷⁴ See <https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/2023/10/16/new-new-middle-east-israel-region-saudi-relations-future/>.

68. In response to the second intifada, Israel tightened its grip and began its blockade in 2000, significantly restricting the movement of goods and people into and out of Gaza. While sporadic closures were placed on Gaza from 1991, post-2000 the closure became the new normal, with the implementation of a complete, “hermetic closure”, during certain periods. To clamp down on Palestinian resistance, Israel’s military destroyed between 10 and 20 per cent of Gaza’s agricultural land, uprooted 226,000 trees and restricted fishers’ access to the sea.⁷⁵ Accordingly, the number of children that suffered from malnutrition doubled from 2000 to 2002.⁷⁶

69. Israel’s policy up until the early 2000s was to use its military to occupy Gaza and use its economic power to impose an illegal blockade and weaken the Palestinian people in Gaza. With the end of the second intifada in 2005, Israel withdrew its troops from Gaza and dismantled the illegal settlements. Israel, however, continued its illegal blockade.⁷⁷ The difference now was that Israel claimed that it no longer occupied Gaza, even though such an argument contravened international law. Israel granted itself more power to restrict the movement of people and goods by treating its border with Gaza as an international one and people in Gaza as foreigners.⁷⁸ In 2007, after the election of Hamas, Israel described Gaza in war-like terms as “hostile territory”.⁷⁹ Describing the blockade as a “siege” after 2005 does not suggest that Israel no longer occupied Gaza but rather highlights the precise means through which the occupation of Gaza was carried out and how the State of Israel considered most Gazans as an enemy.

70. After 2005, Israel controlled Gaza’s borders (except for the Rafah crossing, controlled by Egypt), exercising almost-complete control over conditions of life in Gaza. Most Gaza-bound food, fuel and aid was checked through Israeli-controlled crossings. Israel created a buffer zone from the border 150 to 500 metres into Gaza, destroying agricultural land. According to Israel’s policy, farmers and herders were permitted to enter the strip of land between 100 and 300 metres from the fence. In practice, Israel created a buffer zone of approximately 1.5 kilometres from the border, covering approximately 62.6 km² – approximately 35 per cent of Gaza’s cultivable land and 85 per cent of its maritime area – making these areas totally or partially inaccessible to Palestinians.⁸⁰

71. The siege included using food as a weapon. According to Dov Weisglass, an adviser to the Prime Minister of Israel at the time, Ehud Olmert, “the idea is to put the Palestinians on a diet, but not to make them die of hunger”.⁸¹ Between 2007 and 2010, Israel’s policy was to allow only enough goods to enter Gaza so that it made people hungry but did not cross a “red line” and trigger a humanitarian crisis. The Ministry of Health calculated the calories needed for different age and gender groups in Gaza, then used this to determine the quantity of staple foods that it would allow into the Strip every day, as well as the number of trucks needed to carry this quantity.⁸² It was also a policy to deny people their dignity since Israel allowed only limited

⁷⁵ Neve Gordon and Muna Haddad, “The road to famine in Gaza”, New York Review of Books (30 March 2024); <https://www.peasantjournal.org/news/agrarian-annihilation/>.

⁷⁶ See <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1172086/>.

⁷⁷ See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/opt-un-envoy-says-gaza-siege-breaks-human-rights-law>.

⁷⁸ Submission from Neve Gordon and Muna Haddad.

⁷⁹ See <https://www.un.org/unispal/document/auto-insert-195603/>.

⁸⁰ <https://features.gisha.org/closing-in/>; <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2011/07/systematic-human-rights-violations-continue-occupied-territories-says-un?LangID=E&NewsID=11271>.

⁸¹ Conal Urquhart, “Gaza on brink of implosion as aid cut-off starts to bite”, The Guardian, 15 April 2006.

⁸² Mya Guarnieri Jaradat, “Government releases ‘Red Lines’ document detailing Gaza food restrictions”, +972 Magazine, 17 October, 2012; <https://www.gisha.org/UserFiles/File/publications/redlines/red-lines-presentation-eng.pdf>.

quantities of what it listed as “basic food items” and banned foods such as chocolate, coriander, olive oil, honey and certain fruits.⁸³

72. Things changed when Israel killed 10 activists on the Mavi Mara, a ship that was part of the solidarity Gaza Flotilla breaking the Israeli siege and bringing 10,000 tons of humanitarian aid to Gaza. Afterwards, Israel allowed for civilian goods to re-enter Gaza to improve its international image. It continued its siege through a system of designating and restricting certain items as “dual use”, that is items that could be used for civilian and military purposes. The problem, however, was that the list of what is “dual use” was and remains broad, vague and ever-changing.⁸⁴

73. Since 2014, Israel has frequently levelled, bombed, cleared and bulldozed agricultural land in Gaza. It has also routinely sprayed herbicides and other chemicals from the air on the lands, killing vegetation and agricultural crops located in the buffer zone, damaging and destroying vast areas of land and Palestinian farmers’ crops over the years, using military arguments to justify serious right to food violations.⁸⁵ To appreciate the attacks against Palestinian food sovereignty in Gaza, turn to the graphic report, “Gaza fishers”, available on the website.⁸⁶

74. The graphic report summarizes and illustrates the first-hand testimony of Zakaria Fadel Hasan Baker, an activist and specialist in Gaza’s fishing sector: like in any coastal community, life in Gaza is defined by the sea. Small-scale fishers are the heart of that life. Before October 2023, Gaza’s fishing community was made up of 4,500 regular workers, approximately 1,500 seasonal workers, 1,050 motorboats and 900 rowboats. They had five marinas at which to dock their fishing boats: North Gaza, Gaza City, Deir el Balah, Khan Younes and Rafah. Since 7 October, Israel has denied all fishers access to the sea and destroyed over 75 per cent of the fishing sector. All this destruction is yet another way that Israel is committing genocide against Palestinians since 1991. Under the Oslo Accords, Palestinians were supposed to be able to fish within 20 nautical miles from the shore. Israel, through the blockade, limited fishers to about 6 nautical miles from the shore, where fishing was not easy due to shallow waters with sandy and rocky sea floors. They were also regularly shot at and arrested by Israeli forces simply for fishing in Palestinian territorial waters. The life of fishers tells you a lot about a place. In Gaza, it is telling us that the starvation of the Palestinian people is not a sudden and unpredictable consequence of the latest aggressions by the occupation forces but a gradual and deliberate strategy that was set in motion many years ago.

C. Solidarity

75. Acts of solidarity not only respond to immediate human needs but also aim at working around or disrupting the power structures that enable the starvation in the first place. Localized mutual aid is often the most effective means to provide support against starvation, as in the Sudan with Emergency Response Rooms and in Palestine with the Union of Agricultural Work Committees and the Arab Group for the Protection of Nature. The Freedom Flotilla Coalition is an internationally coordinated effort to attempt to deliver humanitarian aid defying the Israeli siege. Seed libraries like the Palestine Heirloom Seed Library exemplify how saving, sharing and growing heirloom seeds is an act of steadfastness, protecting against starvation and genocide.

⁸³ Gordon and Haddad, “Road to famine”.

⁸⁴ See <https://gisha.org/en/checking-the-dual-use-list-twice/>.

⁸⁵ Al-Mezan Center for Human Rights, The Gaza Bantustan: Israeli Apartheid in the Gaza Strip, 2021.

⁸⁶ Available at www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/food/2024-08-27-visuals-palestinian-people-food-sovereignty.pdf#page=2.

76. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the global trade union support of Palestinian workers.⁸⁷ The Special Rapporteur commends States that have combined their recent humanitarian assistance with political, diplomatic and legal action supporting the Palestinian people's right to self-determination, including their right to food and food sovereignty.⁸⁸

IV. Palestine

A. What is at stake

77. Israel's recent siege and attack against Gaza is best understood within the broader context of the question of Palestine. The Palestinian people's food sovereignty arises from the people's long-standing and continuous relationship to the territory of Palestine. The question of Palestine has been and remains: which Governments – and what forms of government – should rule the territory of Palestine. To understand Palestinian food sovereignty, it is important to contextualize it within the history of the continuous wrongdoing against the Palestinian people.⁸⁹

78. Over the past 76 years, the State of Israel has continuously dislocated and dispossessed Palestinians from their land, regularly expanding its own occupation and settlements. The corollary is that Israel has created a complex set of different legal regimes that not only denigrate and discriminate against Palestinians, but also fragment Palestinians into legal categories such as: Israeli citizen; East Jerusalemites living under occupation; West Bank Palestinians living under occupation and military rule spread across Areas A, B and C; Palestinians in occupied Gaza living under siege; displaced Palestinians in Israel, East Jerusalem, West Bank or Gaza; international refugees living in camps or otherwise.

79. The Special Rapporteur provides an account of how starvation, and the creation of a constant risk of starvation, is a structural element of the State of Israel's genocidal logic integral to its settler-colonial project in Palestine (A/HRC/55/73, para. 7). Even before the current crisis, over 1.8 million Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territories were food insecure, covering 53 per cent of the population in Gaza and 11 per cent in the West Bank.⁹⁰ In Gaza, over 80 per cent relied on humanitarian aid.⁹¹ Nevertheless, Palestinians still remained steadfast and asserted some degree of power over their food system.⁹²

80. The State of Israel has deployed the full range of techniques of hunger and starvation throughout its entire history, perfecting the degree of control, suffering and death that it can cause through food systems, leading to this moment of genocide. What is notable about Israel is that the techniques and rhetoric that it has used to deny Palestinians their freedom from hunger are the same techniques used by colonial Powers pre-Second World War to control local populations and dislocate and dispossess peoples from their land and territory. The portrayal of Indigenous land as "empty", "under-utilized" and "dead" and the attempt to legitimize colonialism by

⁸⁷ See <https://www.iuf.org/wp-content/uploads/2024/05/Global-Unions-Palestine-Solidarity-Mission-Final.pdf>.

⁸⁸ Submissions from Chile, Indonesia, Luxembourg, Spain and Switzerland.

⁸⁹ Zeina Jallad and Arnulf Becker Lorca, "Beyond genocide", London Review of International Law, <https://doi.org/10.1093/lril/lrae012> (2024).

⁹⁰ See <https://openknowledge.fao.org/server/api/core/bitstreams/12b7b28d-db65-4acd-9445-45a850a76bce/content>.

⁹¹ See <https://views-voices.oxfam.org.uk/2023/11/world-cannot-stand-by-starvation-gaza/>.

⁹² See <https://openknowledge.fao.org/server/api/core/bitstreams/12b7b28d-db65-4acd-9445-45a850a76bce/content>.

invoking the supposed productivity and improvement of the land by settlers has been a recurring feature of settler colonialism from Australia to Turtle Island and from Hawaii to Palestine. All those techniques of hunger and starvation are commonly used today by different actors and should be familiar to all communities and Indigenous Peoples experiencing significant levels of hunger and malnutrition, even if they are not facing an immediate risk of starvation.

B. Palestine pre-1967

81. The first wave of European Jewish emigration to Palestine began during the rule of the Ottoman in the late nineteenth century. From the beginning, agriculture and food were central to Zionist colonial techniques, mimicking agricultural colonies in Algeria, Egypt and Tunisia, triggering conflicts between Palestinian peasants defending their grazing rights against settlers asserting a right to access farmland.⁹³

82. Starting in 1905, Zionists in Europe used their newly created Jewish National Fund and Palestine Land Development Company (today, the Israel Land Development Company) to begin purchasing Palestinian land for settlement. Pre-dating any independent State structure, Zionist corporations purchased land from absentee landlords who had amassed relatively large tracts in Palestine.⁹⁴ The result of those land grabs was that Indigenous Palestinian peasants were pushed off their territory, their local land tenure rights ignored, in favour of private property rules and foreign capital – much like land grabs today. Starting in 1910 and throughout the British mandate, Zionists settlers began to arrive and establish kibbutzim as agricultural settler outposts.⁹⁵ In the final years of the British mandate, kibbutzim provided important recruitment and bases for Zionist paramilitary groups.⁹⁶

83. During the First World War, the French and British Governments secretly divided up parts of the declining Ottoman among themselves through the 1916 Sykes-Picot Agreement. In 1917, the British took military control of and occupied Palestine until 1920. Also in 1917, Lord Balfour, in his capacity as the British Foreign Secretary, issued a statement on behalf of the Government indicating support for a “national home for the Jewish people” in Palestine, referring to Indigenous Palestinians merely as “non-Jewish communities” who would retain civil and religious rights. The Balfour Declaration, as it has come to be known, forever changed the region, aligning the British Empire with Zionism. The political purpose of the Sykes-Picot Agreement and dictates of the Balfour Declaration were formalized when the League of Nations granted mandatory powers to Great Britain over Palestine and to France mandatory power over Syria and Lebanon.

84. Soon after the end of the Second World War, the British Government requested the United Nations to answer the question of how Palestine was to be governed after the British mandate ended. In 1947, the General Assembly adopted resolution 181 \(II\) and recommended the partition of the territory of Palestine into a “Jewish State” and “Arab State”, with Jerusalem placed under international administration.

85. Because of the political boundaries and economic interdependence, the Arab State would have been inherently subordinate to and dependent on the Jewish State. Although people of the Jewish faith comprised only 33 per cent of the population of Palestine at this point (the majority of whom were recent immigrants), the proposed Jewish State was 67 per cent of mandatory Palestine. What made the United Nations

⁹³ Victor Kattan, From Coexistence to Conquest (London, Pluto Press, 2009), p. 22.

⁹⁴ Rashid Khalidi, The Hundred Years' War on Palestine (New York, Metropolitan, 2022), p. 27.

⁹⁵ Areej Sabbagh-Khoury, Colonizing Palestine (Stanford, Stanford University Press, 2023).

⁹⁶ Alison M. Bowes, “The experiment that did not fail: image and reality in the Israeli kibbutz” International Journal of Middle East Studies, vol. 22, No. 1 (February 1990), p. 85.

proposal even more unfair was the fact that 84 per cent of agricultural land was to go to the Jewish State, leaving only 16 per cent to the Arab State.⁹⁷

86. The General Assembly's partition plan immediately triggered riots between Palestinians and Zionist Jews, setting the conditions for the Nakba. Because of the Nakba and the creation of Israel in 1948/49, between one half to two thirds of the Palestinian people became refugees and have been denied their right to return to their villages, towns and cities of origin ever since. The new State of Israel ultimately expelled about 90 per cent of its Indigenous Arab population, and a quarter of those who remained within the new State of Israel were internally displaced.⁹⁸

87. Until 1966, Israel governed all Palestinians within its borders under military rule, controlling the minutiae of daily life. Palestinian refugees and residents in Gaza were in effect under Egyptian governance. Refugees and residents in the West Bank and East Jerusalem were in effect under Jordanian governance. Other Palestinian refugees were scattered to nearby Arab countries.

C. Creating a food system denying Palestinians the right of return

88. In 1948, in the midst of the Arab-Israeli war, the General Assembly recognized all displaced Palestinians as refugees, recognized their right to return to their homes or to choose to receive equitable compensation. Despite the Nakba and Palestinian refugee crisis, Israel was granted membership by the United Nations in May 1949. In less than a year after its creation, it was clear that Israel was already starving Palestinian refugees. In December 1949, the General Assembly created UNRWA because it was now "necessary to prevent conditions of starvation and distress" among all refugees of Palestine in the region.⁹⁹

89. Nevertheless, Israel ensured that Palestinians refugees would always be precarious and live with the risk of starvation by denying them a right of return, erasing them from the land and disconnecting them from neighbouring Arab countries and communities. Israel did this in large part by converting Palestinian land into Israeli land for Jewish settlement. In 1945, Jews owned 5.6 per cent of property within the bounds of Mandatory Palestine; by 1949, 93 per cent of what was Israel was taken from Palestinian hands.¹⁰⁰

90. Israel began this process by deeming Palestinian refugees as "absentee", thereby converting private Palestinian property to Israel State-owned property to be sold exclusively to Jews.¹⁰¹ Meanwhile, Israel pushed remaining Palestinians off their land by preventing Palestinians from cultivating their agricultural land, and in turn seizing those lands that Israel labels as "wastelands" or "dead" and providing those lands to Israeli settlers.¹⁰²

91. Israel also continues to create food systems and natural habitats that dispossess Palestinians from their land by creating monocrop agricultural systems,¹⁰³ imposing ⁹⁷ Kattan, Coexistence, p. 152.

⁹⁸ Khalidi, Hundred Years, p. 58; Kattan, Coexistence, p. 170; <https://www.alhaq.org/advocacy/21510.html>.

⁹⁹ General Assembly resolution 302 (IV), para. 5.

¹⁰⁰ Ardi Imseis, The United Nations and the Question of Palestine (Cambridge, Cambridge University Press, 2023), p. 129.

¹⁰¹ Emergency Regulations (Absentee's Property) (1948).

¹⁰² Noura Erakat, Justice for Some (Stanford, Stanford University Press, 2019), p. 56; Alexandre Kedar and others, Emptied Lands (Stanford, Stanford University Press, 2018); Cultivation of Wastelands (1948); Land Acquisition Law (1953).

¹⁰³ Whitney Bauck, "They kept us alive for thousands of years: could saving Palestinian seeds also save the world?", The Guardian, 29 March 2024.

strict foraging laws,¹⁰⁴ and using conservation management as means of Palestinian dispossession.¹⁰⁵

92. Israel has also denied Palestinians access to land through citizenship laws that still apply today. It automatically grants citizenship to any Jewish person in the world, thereby granting them the right to settle on seized Palestinian property. In turn, Israel makes it virtually impossible for Palestinian refugees to seek Israeli citizenship.

D. Governance since 1967 and the Oslo Accords

93. After the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, Israel occupied the remaining Palestinian territories, proceeded to expropriate land and establish settlements shortly afterwards. Today, Israel is illegally occupying the 1967 Palestinian territories of Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (A/77/328).¹⁰⁶ It is well documented that the State of Israel has today created a regime of racial discrimination and oppression – an apartheid regime – that governs the entire territory of Palestine (E/ESCWA/ECRI/2017/1 and A/77/356).¹⁰⁷ In 2018, the Israeli legislature passed the Basic Law: Israel as the Nation-State of the Jewish People in which it claimed that the “land of Israel” is the historic homeland of the Jewish people and that the State of Israel is the uniquely the expression of Jewish self-determination. This is a claim to convert the entire territory of Palestine to an exclusively Jewish territory and State.

94. The most recent political conditions that enabled this claim were the Oslo Accords and consequent regulatory frameworks. The Accords brought Palestinians under further subjugation, effectively handing over direct and indirect control of Palestinian territory and economy to Israel, managed through the Palestinian Authority. The Accords also deepened the social fragmentation and inequality amongst Palestinians in Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem (the latter of which was left out of the Accords).

95. The Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements (Oslo I Accord) (1993) outlined the framework for peace. The Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (Oslo II Accord) (1995) allocated governing powers over territories and the economy, and incorporated the 1994 Protocol on Economic Relations (Paris Protocol). The underlying logic of the Oslo Accords was that Palestinians would be given part of historic Palestine back in return for denouncing armed resistance – “land for peace”. The reality proved to be otherwise.

1. Land

96. The Oslo Accords further divided the West Bank into non-contiguous Areas A, B and C. Area A constitutes 18 per cent of the West Bank and is under Palestinian

¹⁰⁴ <https://www.oxfordsymposium.org.uk/wp-content/uploads/2020/06/Eghbariah.pdf>; <https://www.adalah.org/en/content/view/9794>; <https://www.adalah.org/he/content/view/9935> in Hebrew; <https://static.parks.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2023/01/AKUBIT-GALGAL.pdf> in Hebrew; <https://www.parks.org.il/new/origanum-syriacum/> in Hebrew.

¹⁰⁵ Irus Braverman, Settling Nature: The Conservation Regime in Palestine-Israel (Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 2023).

¹⁰⁶ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2023/07/international-community-must-act-end-israels-annexation-occupied-west-bank>.

¹⁰⁷ See <https://www.un.org/unispal/document/ceirpp-legal-study2023/>; <https://www.alhaq.org/advocacy/16183.html>; <https://www.mezan.org/uploads/files/16381763051929.pdf>; https://www.btselem.org/publications/fulltext/202101_this_is_apartheid; <https://www.amnesty.org/en/latest/campaigns/2022/02/israels-system-of-apartheid/>; and <https://www.hrw.org/report/2021/04/27/threshold-crossed/israeli-authorities-and-crimes-apartheid-and-persecution>.

administrative and police control. The Palestinian Authority exercises administrative control over Area B (22 per cent), but shares security control with Israeli authorities.

97. Most land available for development and agriculture is within Area C (60 per cent) and is administered by Israel. The land in Area C has been systematically rendered unsuitable for farming, putting Palestinians in an even more precarious situation, because most springs, wells and agricultural land are in Area C. Palestinians require permits from the Israeli authorities to access land and water in Area C.¹⁰⁸

98. Restrictions in Area C that deny access for Palestinian herders to more than 85 per cent of their pre-1967 pastures have led to an unsustainable ratio of livestock per dunum, resulting in overgrazing and environmental degradation. Israel's control over Area C denies Palestinians the ability to tackle desertification, including barring them from accessing water resources and banning afforestation.¹⁰⁹

99. The Oslo II Accords created a 50-metre buffer zone within the Gaza Strip, but in practice Israel has created a 1.5 km buffer zone throughout the border region by attacking civilian individuals and property in the buffer zone. This has effectively denied and restricted Palestinians access to approximately 35 per cent of Gaza's cultivable land and 85 per cent of its maritime area.¹¹⁰

2. Trade

100. The Paris Protocol granted Israel a great deal of control over Palestine's borders. Movement restrictions have caused Palestinian farmers to suffer huge financial losses due to restricted movement of goods and the closing of trade crossing points.¹¹¹

101. Since 2007, Israel has banned all export from Gaza, including shipments to the West Bank, international and Israeli markets, with the exception of a limited number of seasonal agricultural crops that were permitted for export to Europe as part of an aid initiative. On 6 November 2014, Israel allowed the sale of Gaza's agricultural products in the West Bank. The average monthly export of agricultural products from the Gaza Strip in 2015 was 13.5 truckloads, mainly strawberries and vegetables that were exported to European markets. The monthly average of goods exported from Gaza in 2016 was only 17 per cent of the quantity of goods exported before the imposition of the blockade.¹¹²

102. As the occupation denies Palestinians 63 per cent of the West Bank's agricultural resources, including the most fertile land and best grazing land, they are forced to import goods, 85 per cent of which come from Israel. Israel's control over planning and building also prevents Palestinians from constructing vital water storage and irrigation systems needed for agriculture.¹¹³

103. Israel also allows for the labelling and export of products made in the occupied Palestinian Territories as Israeli products, with Palestinian farmers receiving little to ¹⁰⁸ See https://www.undp.org/sites/g/files/zskgke326/files/2022-11/resilience_series_-_agriculture_in_area_c_-_final.pdf.

¹⁰⁹ See https://www.undp.org/sites/g/files/zskgke326/files/2022-11/undp-papp-research-prc_building_resilience_in_area_c_2.pdf.

¹¹⁰ Al-Mezan Center for Human Rights, "The access-restricted areas ("Buffer-zone" in the Gaza Strip). Factsheet.

¹¹¹ See <https://paltrade.org/uploads/15951034871868344640.pdf>; https://www.undp.org/sites/g/files/zskgke326/files/2022-11/resilience_series_-_agriculture_in_area_c_-_final.pdf.

¹¹² See <https://paltrade.org/uploads/15951034871868344640.pdf>.

¹¹³ See https://www.undp.org/sites/g/files/zskgke326/files/2022-11/undp-papp-research-prc_building_resilience_in_area_c_2.pdf.

none of the profits. The inability to brand Palestinian produce reduces its marketability, especially elsewhere in the Middle East.¹¹⁴

V. Dignity despite suffering

104. Today, people in Gaza are still expressing their dignity through how they cook and eat and in how they continue to celebrate holidays even when surrounded by suffering. The Special Rapporteur received an account from Um Ahmad in Gaza wherein she described how she continued to cook summaqiyyah, a quintessential Gazan festive dish dating back to the eleventh century CE, with indigenous sumac berries (after which the dish is named). To feed people during Eid al-Adha, she had to improvise without access to most of the usual ingredients. People like Um Ahmad, who carry and create recipes like this, hold knowledge about a people's ongoing relationship to the land, territory and history. This knowledge comes from the struggle of cooking and feeding one's family and community, regenerating life itself. This knowledge is critical for the realization of people's right to food.

105. To understand what is at stake, turn to the graphic report, "Dignity despite suffering".¹¹⁵ In the graphic report, the Special Rapporteur shares the stark difference between two ingredient lists from two recipes for summaqiyyah before and after this war in Gaza.

106. The ingredients currently available in Gaza markets are acquired at exorbitant prices. These recipes, like many recipes, are embedded in knowledge about the Palestinian people's ongoing relationship with their land, territory and history.¹¹⁶ Collecting and sharing recipes is so much more than developing a cooking guide since it is a practice that preserves local knowledge, and changes as more people cook. Cooking, along with the collecting and sharing of recipes, is also a practice of being steadfast and adaptable in moments of profound pain and suffering while expressing one's sense of dignity, reciprocity, care and self-determination.

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

107. The graphic report, "Palestinian people's food sovereignty", summarizes the specificities of the Palestinian people's food sovereignty and the universal struggle for the realization of the right to food. It is available on the website.¹¹⁷

108. The graphic report illustrates the following account: how States and international institutions are responding to Gaza is redefining the very nature of international law. In parallel, an extraordinary global wave of solidarity movements supporting the Palestinian people's right to self-determination is rolling across the world. Millions of people recognize that the tools and techniques that will free the Palestinian people from occupation, oppression and exploitation will ultimately be the same ones that can free us all. By fighting Israel's starvation campaign against the Palestinians, people are in effect also fighting for their own freedom from hunger. Most of the world's population

¹¹⁴ See <https://www.wilsoncenter.org/article/food-insecurity-palestine-future-farmers>.

¹¹⁵ Available at www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/food/2024-08-27-visuals-palestinian-people-food-sovereignty.pdf#page=6.

¹¹⁶ Laila Haddad and Maggie Schmitt, The Gaza Kitchen (Washington D.C., Just World Books, 2021).

¹¹⁷ See www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/food/2024-08-27-visuals-palestinian-people-food-sovereignty.pdf#page=9.

suffer under food systems that harm or kill them through slower forms of violence than in Gaza today.

109. People want to transform these systems to become based on care and reciprocity. The challenge with transformation does not lie in a scarcity of solutions. We already know what States must do to realize the right to food – agrarian land must be redistributed more fairly, while recognizing and respecting strong tenure and territorial rights. Labour laws should be enacted and enforced to ensure dignity in the workplace. Territorial markets should be supported so that local communities and regions are better connected and less vulnerable to global markets. Solidarity economic enterprises should be supported because they prioritize social purpose over profits. Solutions abound.

110. The main challenge lies in stopping corporations and States from continuing to amass great amounts of power, which they use to manufacture scarcity and cause harm through food systems. Viewing the current “war” from that perspective, we can understand that Israel is not “defending itself” against a “terrorist organization” but is attacking the Indigenous Palestinians as a people. This past year, Israeli settlers and armed forces inflicted record rates of violence against peasants and pastoralists in the occupied West Bank. As a result, peasants were not able to harvest their olives. Olives are of course an important source of food and livelihood. But the Palestinian people’s relationship to olive trees, which can live for hundreds of years, is also about their relationship to their ancestors and to their future, just as small-scale fishing is an integral part of a life of harmony with the sea and not only a means to gather food, or foraging for wild za‘tar is not just a culinary choice but a practice that retains an inherent connection to the land.

111. Food sovereignty means that the Palestinian people, as a people, have the right to their lands, territories and resources to compensate for a long history of illegal and unjust dispossession. The power of food sovereignty does not derive from the political form of a State or a national authority. It arises from people’s long-standing relationship with the land, with the rivers and the sea, and their capacity to feed their own communities, in opposition to the prevailing, yet cracking, international system in place today. Once this cracking system crumbles, what might we build from the salvage?

112. The General Assembly should recognize that:

(a) Every instance of mass starvation is a form of genocide or extermination, and every instance of starving an individual is torture;

(b) The right to be free from hunger means the right to be free from oppression, exploitation and occupation;

(c) The Palestinian people’s right to return to Palestine is a precondition to fulfil their right to food and food sovereignty;

(d) Israel has engaged in an intentional starvation campaign against the Palestinian people which evidences genocide and extermination.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
23 August 2024

Original: English

Seventy-ninth session

Agenda item 71 (b) of the provisional agenda*

Promotion and protection of human rights: human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedom

Global threats to freedom of expression arising from the conflict in Gaza

Note by the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General has the honour to transmit to the General Assembly the report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Irene Khan, submitted in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 43/4.

* A/79/150.

 The present report was submitted after the deadline to reflect the most recent information.

Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Irene KhanSummary*

In the present report, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression examines the impact of the conflict in Gaza on freedom of expression globally. She highlights attacks on journalists and media restrictions, endangering access to information about the conflict globally; suppression of protests and dissent and undermining of academic and artistic freedoms in polarized political environment; and restrictions on legitimate political expression in the name of fighting terrorism and antisemitism. She assesses the compliance of States, social media companies and other private actors with international human rights standards, online and offline, and finds an extensive pattern of unlawful, discriminatory and disproportionate restrictions on advocacy for the rights of Palestinian people. Emphasizing the importance of freedom of opinion and expression – enjoyed on an equal basis by all sides – as an invaluable tool for fighting hate and encouraging mutual respect and dialogue, the Special Rapporteur calls on States, social media companies and other private actors to reject double standards on human rights and makes concrete recommendations for them to uphold the right to freedom of opinion and expression equally for all.

I. Introduction

1. The conflict in Gaza has unleashed a global crisis of freedom of expression. Rarely has a conflict challenged freedom of opinion and expression so broadly and so far beyond its borders. The global and grave nature of the challenges are the subject of the present report.

2. Hamas' attack on Israel on 7 October 2023, the intensity of Israel's military response, the alarming level of civilian casualties in Gaza, especially of children and women, the massive destruction of infrastructure and the humanitarian catastrophe pushing the population to the brink of famine have outraged people around the world. Public opinion is highly polarized, in support of or in opposition to Palestinian rights and Israel's action. So too are the positions of States and private actors, shaped by their different understanding of the fraught history of the region, the situation in the occupied Palestinian Territory, Israel's military operation in Gaza and their own national interests.

3. The right to freedom of opinion and expression is caught in the crosshairs of this challenging situation. The unprecedented level of killing of journalists, attacks on media infrastructure and restrictions on foreign media have made reporting difficult and dangerous, affecting the right to information of people in Gaza as well as audiences around the world. Social media platforms have played an important role as the main conduit of information to and from the besieged population but have also been a major vector of disinformation and hate speech, sowing hatred, violence, fear and distrust among and within communities and countries.

4. Antisemitism, Islamophobia and anti-Palestinian racism have surged online and offline since 7 October. Confusion over what constitutes antisemitism, poorly drafted and badly implemented national laws, opaque policies and practices of social media platforms and vested political interests have combined to complicate, undermine and weaponize the task of combating hate speech.

5. Around the world, large-scale demonstrations have erupted in solidarity with the Palestinian people and against genocide and occupation. Although largely peaceful, the protests and dissent have been suppressed harshly in several countries. Some private actors, such as universities, cultural institutions and funders, even media outlets, have played a disturbing role, intimidating, isolating and silencing voices that differ from theirs.

6. The Special Rapporteur has identified three distinct challenges to freedom of opinion and expression emanating from the conflict in Gaza directly and indirectly: first, attacks on journalists and media, endangering access to information about the conflict globally; second, the suppression of Palestinian voices and views in a discriminatory and disproportionate manner, undermining academic and artistic freedom as well as freedom of expression more generally; and third, the blurring of the boundaries between protected and prohibited speech. None of these challenges are new but have become more intense over the past year.

7. The Special Rapporteur examines the practices of States, social media and other private actors in relation to these three challenges and analyses their compatibility with international human rights and, where applicable, humanitarian law. While touching on the situation in the occupied Palestinian Territory, the geographic and thematic scope of the report is global, in line with the mandate of the Special Rapporteur.

8. The Special Rapporteur draws on consultations, written submissions from stakeholders and desk research. The Special Rapporteur thanks all those who provided inputs to the report.¹

II. International legal standards

9. At the core of all human rights is the right to non-discrimination.² It has two important implications for the right to freedom of opinion and expression. First, everyone has an equal right to exercise their freedom of opinion and expression. Second, the equal enjoyment of freedom of expression means that it cannot be used as a licence to incite discrimination, hostility and violence against others.

10. Enshrined in articles 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in key regional instruments, freedom of opinion and expression guarantees the right to hold opinions without interference, and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, true or false, offensive or enlightened, regardless of frontiers or choice of media. It protects, among other things, media freedom; discourse on political and public affairs; criticism of government officials, policies or institutions; intellectual discourse; advocacy of human rights; and cultural and artistic expression.³ These issues are relevant to the challenges discussed in the present report.

11. Freedom of expression may be restricted in accordance with article 19 (3) of the Covenant. Restrictions must be provided by law that is precise, public and does not give undue discretion to the authorities, and it must be necessary to meet the legitimate objective of ensuring respect for the rights or reputation of others, or for protecting national security, public order, public health or public morals. The principle of necessity incorporates the notion of proportionality and the use of the least restrictive means to achieve the purported aim.⁴ Because of the fundamental role this right plays in empowering people and enabling them to exercise other rights, any restriction must be construed narrowly and must not impair the right itself.

12. International human rights law, born in the aftermath of the Holocaust, provides clear standards for addressing hate speech. While international law does not use the term “hate speech”, under article 20 (2) of the International Covenant States must prohibit by law “the advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.” Advocacy of hatred is not sufficient by itself to justify prohibition and must amount to incitement which is likely to result in discrimination, hostility and violence.

13. The Rabat Plan of Action on the prohibition of advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence provides valuable guidance on the factors that should be considered in assessing the appropriateness of prohibiting and criminalizing speech. The criteria include the social context, the speaker’s status and intent, the content and form of the speech, the nature of the audience, the reach of the communication and the imminence of harm. By their very nature, these criteria require a contextual analysis of each situation rather than a blanket ban, whether of antisemitism, Islamophobia or other forms of hate speech.

¹ Written submissions are available at www.ohchr.org/en/calls-for-input/2024/call-submissions-thematic-report-special-rapporteur-freedom-expression.

² Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34 (2011) on the freedoms of opinion and expression, para. 26.

³ Ibid., para. 11.

⁴ Ibid., para. 22.

14. Incitement to discrimination, hostility and violence on the grounds of race is also prohibited under article 4 (a) of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. Contextual analysis, similar to the Rabat Plan of Action, is required to determine racist expression that must be punishable by law.

15. International criminal law places an important limit on expression. Direct and public incitement to genocide is an international crime.⁵ Such speech must be intended, understood and communicated publicly as a call to commit genocide; the context, content and speaker are highly relevant in determining liability.⁶

III. Journalists under fire

16. The right to freedom of opinion and expression provides the international legal basis for uncensored and unhindered news media and the right of journalists to work safely and without fear. International humanitarian law is also applicable to the safety of journalists in the occupied Palestinian Territory.

A. Occupied Palestinian Territory

17. There is serious concern that the pattern of killings and arbitrary detention of journalists and destruction of press facilities and equipment in Gaza indicates a deliberate strategy of the Israeli military to silence critical reporting and obstruct documentation of possible international crimes.⁷

18. Under international humanitarian law, journalists enjoy protection as civilians. The deliberate killing of a journalist is a war crime.⁸ Journalists may only become a legitimate military objective if they participate directly in hostilities or incite war crimes or other international crimes. While Israel has made claims in the media about some journalists reportedly participating in hostilities, none of the claims has been substantiated.

19. As of 13 August 2024, 113 Palestinian journalists and media workers had been killed and many more injured, making Israel's military action since October 2023 the deadliest conflict for journalists and media workers globally in the past three decades.⁹ In addition, three journalists were killed in Israeli shelling near the border of Lebanon. Four Israeli journalists were killed by Hamas in the 7 October attacks.

20. Journalists, wearing clearly identifiable jackets and helmets marked as "Press" and travelling in well-marked press vehicles, have been attacked by the Israeli army under circumstances that indicate they may have been targeted.¹⁰ Investigations into an incident in Gaza in which two journalists were killed and another in southern Lebanon in which several journalists were injured and one killed led to the conclusion

⁵ Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, art. III(c); Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 25(3)(e).

⁶ A/HRC/55/73, paras. 50–52.

⁷ International Court of Justice, application instituting proceedings, South Africa v. Israel, 29 December 2023, para. 119.

⁸ Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, arts. 51.3 and 79.2.

⁹ See Committee to Protect Journalists, "Journalist casualties in the Israel-Gaza war", 13 August 2024, available at <https://cpj.org/2024/08/journalist-casualties-in-the-israel-gaza-conflict/>.

¹⁰ See communication ISR 12/2023. All communications mentioned in the present report are available from <https://spcommreports.ohchr.org/Tmsearch/TMDocuments>. See also www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/08/expert-denounces-killing-two-more-journalists-gaza-and-demands-full.

that the Israeli military had known or should have known that they were attacking journalists.¹¹

21. Silencing journalists by killing them is the most egregious form of censorship.¹² Despite the international obligation to conduct prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations into all unlawful killings, impunity has persisted for decades in Gaza or the West Bank.¹³ The failure of Israel to investigate, prosecute and punish serious crimes against journalists not only denies justice to the victims' families, it emboldens perpetrators to continue and can have a chilling effect on other journalists.

22. Media facilities are considered civilian objects under international law and therefore are protected from military attacks. Nonetheless, there has been large-scale destruction of press facilities in Gaza. According to the Palestinian Journalists' Syndicate, around 70 press organizations, including local radio stations, news agencies, transmission towers and journalist training institutes, have been partially or completely destroyed in Gaza since October 2023. Cameras filming live from the Gaza strip and buildings housing press organizations have been destroyed by the Israeli military. According to one report, "by targeting all press facilities and equipment, the Israeli military not only cuts off any source of images and information in Gaza, but also compromises the logistics journalists need to carry out their mission."¹⁴

23. Access to the Internet has been acknowledged as a human right¹⁵ and is vital for all civilians, including journalists, in conflict-affected contexts.¹⁶ Reporting and access to information have been severely hampered by disruptions to Internet connectivity in Gaza, resulting from a combination of factors, including widespread destruction of civilian telecommunications infrastructure, deliberate restrictions on access to electricity and technical disruptions to telecommunications services.

24. Reports of harassment, intimidation and violence by the Israeli authorities against journalists and media workers in the occupied Palestinian Territory have increased since 7 October attacks. Dozens of Palestinian journalists have been arbitrarily detained allegedly by Israeli forces in Gaza and the West Bank.¹⁷ Journalists covering the conflict have repeatedly faced obstruction, incommunicado detention,¹⁸ confiscation of equipment and physical attacks by the Israeli military.¹⁹ Some Palestinian journalists have reported receiving threats from the Israeli authorities to halt their coverage of the war.²⁰

25. Israel has refused to grant unhindered access to foreign media in Gaza, despite repeated requests. It reduces media diversity and affects access to information. As a result, local journalists carry the burden of reporting what is happening in the Gaza Strip. Despite the psychological toll of the death of colleagues, friends and families and the destruction of their homes, offices and media facilities, they have continued to work valiantly, putting their lives on the line to deliver their mission while enduring

¹¹ See L. Loveluck et al, "Drone footage raises questions about Israeli justification for deadly strike on Gaza journalists", Washington Post, 19 May 2024; and submission of Human Rights Watch.

¹² A/HRC/50/29, para. 29.

¹³ See communication ISR 14/2022.

¹⁴ See <https://forbiddentories.org/the-destruction-of-press-infrastructure-in-gaza-a-strategy-to-blind-the-public/>.

¹⁵ Human Rights Council resolution 47/16; and General Assembly resolution 77/150.

¹⁶ A/77/288, para. 91.

¹⁷ See Committee to Protect Journalists, "Arrests of Palestinian Journalists Since Start of Israel-Gaza War", 25 July 2024, available at <https://cpj.org/2024/07/arrests-of-palestinian-journalists-since-start-of-israel-gaza-war/>.

¹⁸ See communication ISR 12/2023.

¹⁹ Submission of IFEX.

²⁰ Submission of PEN International.

the enormous hardship that has been inflicted on all civilians in Gaza. According to one AFP reporter “we see more horrors than anyone else”.²¹

B. Media freedom elsewhere

26. The media environment inside Israel appears to have worsened following the October attacks by Hamas and the government military action in Gaza. Some journalists in Israel are afraid to express dissenting views.²² There have been mob attacks on journalists,²³ as well as reports of intimidation by the authorities.²⁴

27. In April 2024 the Israeli Parliament adopted the Foreign Media Law, which gives wide powers to the Executive to ban foreign media and impose other restrictions without prior judicial review.²⁵ The Special Rapporteur communicated her concern to the Government of Israel that banning a media outlet constitutes an unnecessary and disproportionate restriction of freedom of expression, inconsistent with international human rights standards. It affects not only the freedom of expression of journalists but also the public’s right to information from diverse sources, and therefore should be reviewed and repealed. In May 2024 the Government used the Foreign Media Law to temporarily ban Al-Jazeera, citing concerns of national security, incitement and its support for Palestinian factions.²⁶ The ban was made permanent following an amendment of the law.

28. The space for media freedom in the Middle East region has long been limited.²⁷ Following the onset of the recent conflict in Gaza, some Governments have reacted harshly against journalists for their coverage of Israeli or Palestinian issues. For instance, Jordan applied its Cybercrimes Law to detain and interrogate hundreds of individuals, including journalists, for their use of social media posts.²⁸ The media regulator in Egypt banned the website “Mada Masr” for six-months for “publishing false news” and summoned its editor following the publication of a report on the displacement of Gaza residents to Egypt.²⁹

29. In some Western countries, media companies took retaliatory measures against their own journalists, usually Arab or Palestinian, for expressing their personal views online or offline. There are numerous reports of termination, resignation and reassignment of journalists for posting on personal social media accounts, signing petitions in solidarity with the Palestinian people or criticizing the conduct of Israel regarding the war at public events. The overall effect has been to chill diverse views.

30. The Los Angeles Times reportedly banned 38 employees from covering issues related to Israel or Palestine after they signed a letter condemning the killing of journalists in Gaza.³⁰ Twenty journalists at the Sydney Morning Herald and The Age were reportedly banned from participating “in any reporting or production relating to ²¹ See “Death, exhaustion and suspicion: AFP journalists on the horrors of Gaza”, AFP, 8 February 2024.

²² See Emma Goldberg, “Some Israeli Journalists Express Fear About Conveying Dissenting Views”, New York Times, 21 October 2023, available at www.nytimes.com/2023/10/21/business/media/israel-journalists-hamas-war.html.

²³ Submission of PEN International.

²⁴ Submission of ARTICLE 19.

²⁵ See communication ISR 15/2024.

²⁶ See <https://network.aljazeera.net/en/press-releases/israel-shuts-down-al-jazeera-offices>.

²⁷ See <https://cpj.org/2021/01/ten-years-after-arab-spring-media-threats-press-freedom-trends/>.

²⁸ Submissions of ICNL and ARTICLE 19.

²⁹ Submission of ARTICLE 19.

³⁰ See National Writers Union, “Red lines: Retaliation in the media history during the war on Gaza” (2024), available at https://drive.google.com/file/d/10fUJL7dpmWIYyT-LvzAu-YF-7xb_z6Vd/view?pli=1.

the war” after they signed an open letter criticizing how Australian media has covered Israeli military action in Gaza. It has also been reported that the BBC launched an investigation into six of its Arabic Service journalists for bias. Although none of them were found to have violated BBC editorial policies, they were disciplined and one senior journalist resigned.³¹ While media companies may legitimately wish to address bias or perceptions of bias among its journalists, all such action should be done in a non-discriminatory, proportionate and transparent manner.

31. In a refreshing contrast to the action of traditional media outlets noted above, the board of the Pulitzer Prize commended student journalists at Columbia University in the United States of America for their work “to document a major national news event under difficult and dangerous circumstances and at risk of arrest”.³²

IV. Suppression of protest and dissent

32. State practice has shown a tendency to suppress protests, advocacy and critical expression in a disproportionate and discriminatory manner against Palestinian groups. While this practice has been apparent in the past, the recent conflict in Gaza has expanded its scope and gravity.

A. Public protests

33. Israel’s assault on Gaza sparked a wave of public protests in countries across the world, including Algeria, Australia, India, Indonesia, Japan, Mexico, Malaysia, Nigeria and South Africa. The protests have been particularly strong in the Middle East, and although peaceful, were restricted, banned or disrupted with force in several countries in the region.³³

34. Several European Governments imposed specific restrictions, blanket bans or pre-emptive bans on demonstrations in support of Palestinian people, justifying their actions on grounds of “risk to public order and security”, countering “support of terrorism” and “preventing antisemitism”.³⁴ The responses are arbitrary, unfairly equating Palestinian advocacy as antisemitic or in support of terrorism, and discriminatory as no demonstrations in support of Israel appear to have encountered any specific restrictions.

35. In Germany, the response was among the toughest, imposing a blanket ban on all demonstrations in support of Palestinian people from 7 to 21 October 2023, and pre-emptively banning several such gatherings and explaining its action was to prevent “public celebration of the Hamas terrorist attacks”. On 12 October 2023, the Government of France announced a complete ban on all Palestinian rallies as potentially disturbing the public order, but was overruled by the Conseil d’État, the highest administrative court of France, on the grounds that such decisions should be made by local authorities on a case-by-case basis.³⁵ There have been reports of arbitrary detention and excessive use of force by the police in relation to pro-Palestinian demonstrations in several countries, including Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Greece, Italy and the Kingdom of the Netherlands.³⁶ Jewish

³¹ Submission of PEN International.

³² See www.pulitzer.org/news/statement-pulitzer-prize-board-3.

³³ Submissions of Gulf Centre for Human Rights, Pen International and International Centre for Non-Profit Law.

³⁴ See Amnesty International, “Under protected and over restricted the state of the right to protest in 21 European countries” (London, 2024).

³⁵ Ibid.

³⁶ Ibid., and submission of Canadian Lawyers for International Human Rights.

protestors who participated in Palestinian protests complained that the authorities failed to protect them from pro-Israeli counter-protestors.³⁷

36. In the United States, over 10,000 demonstrations were organized between October 2023 and June 2024 in support of Palestinian people. Ranging from mass street protests and public rallies to student encampments on campus, vigils and other public assemblies, most events were held peacefully. Nevertheless, the authorities resorted to repressive measures, including widespread police action against the demonstrators and stigmatization of Palestinian advocacy as inherently dangerous. In addition, State and federal lawmakers have proposed over 45 pieces of legislation aimed at restricting street protests in support of Palestine, punishing student protestors and stigmatizing their Palestinian advocacy as “terrorism”.³⁸

37. The right to peaceful assembly, protected under article 21 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, is closely related to freedom of expression.³⁹ States have an obligation to allow peaceful assemblies, including peaceful civil disobedience, to take place without unwarranted interference, as well as an obligation to protect the participants. The possibility that a peaceful assembly may provoke adverse or even violent reactions from some members of the public is not in itself sufficient reason to prohibit or restrict the assembly.⁴⁰ Authorities are obliged to take reasonable measures to protect protestors and safely separate counter-protestors.

B. Assault on academic freedom

38. Academic freedom, rooted in a number of rights, including freedom of opinion and expression, signifies the right of members of the academic community, including students and scholars, to enjoy, individually and collectively, the freedom to develop, pursue and share knowledge and ideas without censorship, and to express, debate and challenge issues peacefully, without discrimination, fear or censorship.⁴¹ Academic freedom also includes the autonomy and self-governance of academic institutions.⁴²

39. In the context of Palestinian advocacy following Israeli military operations in Gaza, academic freedom of students and scholars, as well as the autonomy of institutions, have come under scrutiny and attack in several western countries, affecting both Jewish and Palestinian members of the academic communities. A major concern has been the failure of the university authorities to uphold their autonomy and respect the principle of non-discrimination and equal protection of the rights of all students and scholars.

40. Thousands of students, including many Jewish students, have demonstrated on campuses in Europe and North America since October 2023. In April 2024, encampments were set up by students to express solidarity with Palestinian civilians in Gaza, call for a ceasefire and demand that their universities divest from corporations profiting from the conflict and occupation of the Palestinian territories. In the United States, mass encampments were set up in colleges and universities in more than 25 states. While the protests were largely peaceful, some Jewish student groups reported feeling fearful and complained of antisemitism, antisemitic attacks, marginalization and discrimination, as well as tensions within the Jewish student community between those who participated in Palestinian protests and others who did ³⁷ Submission of Jøder for Retfærdig Fred (af 5784).

³⁸ Submission of International Centre for Non-profit Law.

³⁹ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 37 (2020) on the right of peaceful assembly, para. 5.

⁴⁰ Ibid., para. 27.

⁴¹ E/C.12/1999/10, para. 39.

⁴² A/75/261, para. 9.

not.⁴³ There are also claims that police failed to protect protestors in support of Palestine from counter-protestors.⁴⁴ Jewish students and Jewish student groups participating in Palestinian advocacy have been accused of being “antisemitic”.⁴⁵

41. The responses of some university administrations and local authorities in the United States were particularly harsh and disproportionate.⁴⁶ Despite the largely peaceful nature of protests, many of the encampments were removed by police on the grounds of maintaining public order, at the request of the university administrations. In several cases, it led to excessive use of force, including the deployment of riot units. Students and faculty members were assaulted, handcuffed and arrested. More than 2,000 people, including students and professors, were reportedly detained by police on university campuses, mainly for trespassing.⁴⁷

42. The universities are taking disciplinary measures against the students who participated or planned to participate in the protests, including suspension, possible expulsion, eviction from campus housing and the threat of deportation of some foreign students, which could jeopardize their scholarships and future careers.⁴⁸ In some cases, the protestors have been identified publicly by unknown groups in a process called “doxing”. Some students have had their employment offers withdrawn because of their activism on Palestine.

43. Contravening the generally accepted principle of respecting the independence and autonomy of academic institutions, United States legislators and private donors put political pressure on universities to suppress student protests and dismiss faculty and administrators. Some of the top academic institutions appear to have succumbed to that pressure, putting the United States at the risk of becoming “an exporter of bad models” of academic freedom.⁴⁹

44. Many scholars believe that the measures, on-campus and off-campus, have had a chilling effect on public discourse, academic research and policy expertise on Middle East issues.⁵⁰ Students, researchers and faculty members complain about a culture of intimidation in European and North American institutions in which they are afraid to express their views for fear of being deemed “antisemitic”, harassed, threatened, fired from their jobs or denied research funds.⁵¹ Scholars, faculty and students have complained of being investigated by their institutions about their social media posts and of being targeted by online smear campaigns, doxing and harassment.⁵² Israeli scholars have also reported being isolated from conferences on the basis of their perceived association with the actions of Israel.⁵³

⁴³ Submission of the European Union of Jewish Students.

⁴⁴ See communications OTH 71/2024 and USA 12/2024.

⁴⁵ See www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/education/statements/20240510-stm-eom-sr-education-usa.pdf; meeting with student leaders in Geneva, July 2024.

⁴⁶ See Inter-American Commission of Human Rights, “United States must respect peaceful protest and academic freedom on campuses”, 9 May 2024, available at www.oas.org/en/iachr/jsForm/?File=/en/iachr/media_center/preleases/2024/095.asp.

⁴⁷ See communications OTH 71/2024 and USA 12/2024; and submissions of Human Rights Watch and Defending Rights and Dissent.

⁴⁸ See www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/07/usa-free-speech-campus-needs-be-protected-not-attacked-say-experts; and communication USA 12/2024.

⁴⁹ Observations on recent events on United States campuses (May 2024), Scholars at Risk Network.

⁵⁰ See www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/education/statements/20240510-stm-eom-sr-education-usa.pdf.

⁵¹ Ibid.; see also Nader Hashemi, “Teaching the Middle East after October 7: Reflections on Academic Freedom, Antisemitism, and the Question of Palestine”, POMEPS Studies 51, April 2024.

⁵² Submission of ELSC.

⁵³ See Marc Lynch, “The Middle East and Middle East Studies After Gaza”, POMEPS Studies 51, April 2024.

45. Scores of courses, lectures, seminars or panel discussions about Palestine have been cancelled, and some adjunct faculty members have not had their appointments renewed because they spoke out in solidarity with Palestinians.⁵⁴ The level of obstruction of independent thought is illustrated by one instance in which, for the first time ever, the website of the well-known Columbia Law Review was shut down by the journal's board in an attempt to deter the publication of an article by a Palestinian legal scholar.⁵⁵

C. Intolerance of artistic freedom

46. Artistic freedom thrives in open multicultural societies, nourished by the democratic values of tolerance and diversity. The banning of books, films and artwork, retaliation against artists and writers, and demanding that social media platforms take down content or punishing users for posting critical content are practices usually carried out in authoritarian States but appear to have been emulated by public and private institutions in Western Europe and North America in relation to the Israel/Palestine situation. The justification, as in the case of protests and academic freedom, has been the protection of public order and the fight against hate speech. The practices have targeted both those expressing sympathy with Israel and those advocating for Palestinian rights.

47. One manifestation of this behaviour has been “deplatforming”, also colloquially known as “cancel culture”. In effect it is censorship by exclusion. Literature festivals have disinvited guest speakers.⁵⁶ Major exhibitions have been cancelled.⁵⁷ Music concerts have been cancelled or musicians threatened.⁵⁸ Art galleries have dropped long-standing clients over their political views.⁵⁹ Artistic agencies have terminated relationships with some clients.⁶⁰ Writers who criticize Israel have found themselves isolated and excluded.⁶¹

⁵⁴ See www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/documents/issues/education/statements/20240510-stm-com-sr-education-usa.pdf; www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2024/07/usa-free-speech-campus-needs-be-protected-not-attacked-say-experts; National Writers Union, “Red Lines: Retaliation in the media history during the war on Gaza”, 6 May 2024.

⁵⁵ See Prem Thakker, “Columbia Law Review Is Back Online After Students Threatened Work Stoppage Over Palestine Censorship”, The Intercept, 6 June 2024, available at <https://theintercept.com/2024/06/06/columbia-law-review-palestine-gaza-rejects/>.

⁵⁶ See P. Oltermann, “Palestinian voices ‘shut down’ at Frankfurt Book Fair, say authors”, The Guardian, 15 October 2023, available at www.theguardian.com/world/2023/oct/15/palestinian-voices-shut-down-at-frankfurt-book-fair-say-authors.

⁵⁷ See D. Cassidy, “German Photography Biennial Cancelled After Curator’s Social Media Posts Are Called ‘Antisemitic’”, ARTnews, 22 November 2023, available at www.artnews.com/art-news/news/biennale-fur-aktuelle-fotografie-cancelled-freedom-fo-speech-and-antisemitism-1234687537/.

⁵⁸ See “Argentine judiciary cautions Roger Waters against making anti-Semitic remarks”, Buenos Aires Herald, 21 November 2023, available at <https://buenosairesherald.com/society/argentine-judiciary-cautions-roger-waters-against-making-anti-semitic-remarks>.

⁵⁹ See K. Burke, “Melbourne’s Anna Schwartz gallery drops artist Mike Parr after political piece on Israel-Gaza war”, The Guardian, 8 December 2023, available at www.theguardian.com/culture/2023/dec/08/melbourne-gallery-drops-mike-parr-performance-artist-israel-amas-war-piece-anna-schwartz.

⁶⁰ See A. Horton, “Susan Sarandon dropped by talent agency after remarks at pro-Palestine rally”, The Guardian, 21 November 2023, available at www.theguardian.com/film/2023/nov/21/susan-sarandon-pro-palestinian-remarks-uta-dropped.

⁶¹ See J. Schuessler, “92NY Pulls Event With Acclaimed Writer Who Criticized Israel”, New York Times, 21 October 2023, available at www.nytimes.com/2023/10/21/arts/92ny-viet-thanh-nguyen-israel.html.

48. These are just some examples of the many ways in which artistic freedom is being censored and intellectual discourse diminished by private actors in collusion with State authorities.

V. Censorship online

49. Companies have a responsibility under international law to respect human rights and avoid causing or contributing to “adverse human rights impacts”. They have an obligation to prevent or mitigate such impacts by adopting human rights policies, undertaking due diligence and impact assessment and providing remedial processes.⁶²

50. As in other armed conflicts, social media platforms play a dual role in Gaza. On the one hand, they provide a communications lifeline, enabling people in Gaza to share information among themselves and with the outside world. Social media has been central to disseminating information on Gaza, playing a “vital, not complementary, role” given that access to traditional media in Gaza is severely curtailed.⁶³ Young social media “influencers” went from posting entertaining content to being suddenly thrust into a serious role of a source able to convey the reality of Gaza to the world. Women in Gaza have been at the forefront, voicing their situation in a way not done by mainstream media.⁶⁴

51. At the same, the platforms have removed Palestinian content excessively, inadequately addressed hate speech against both sides and enabled information manipulation, disinformation and misinformation. The large platforms have tended to be more lenient regarding Israel and more restrictive about Palestinian expression and content about Gaza, as compared with their policies and practices relating to the invasion by the Russian Federation of Ukraine and Ukrainian expression.⁶⁵

A. Content moderation

52. Following the October 7 attacks, disproportionate censorship of content on Palestinian rights and views has increased significantly across platforms, including Meta, X, Google and Telegram.⁶⁶ Measures have included monitoring and removal, suspension or disabling of accounts, restricting the ability to engage with posts (such as “liking”, commenting or sharing) or to follow or tag other accounts, and “shadow-banning” or decreasing the visibility of user content without notification or adequate justification. Documented cases of censorship include not only Palestinian-generated Arabic language content, but also pro-Palestine, English-language content originating ⁶² Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights; see also A/77/288, paras. 74–99.

⁶³ See A. Walker, “How Instagram Cat Influencers Are Helping Break News in Gaza”, The Daily Beast, 12 December 2023, available at www.thedailybeast.com/how-instagram-cats-and-skincare-influencers-help-break-news-in-gaza.

⁶⁴ See B. Ferrari, “Pro-Palestine TikTok Creators Aren’t Backing Down”, Vice, 13 December 2023, available at www.vice.com/en/article/pkav5y/pro-palestine-tiktok-gen-z-digital-activism.

⁶⁵ See “Meta’s Ongoing Efforts Regarding Russia’s Invasion of Ukraine”, 26 February 2022, available at <https://about.fb.com/news/2022/02/metas-ongoing-efforts-regarding-russias-invasion-of-ukraine/>. See also “Meta’s Ongoing Efforts Regarding the Israel-Hamas War”, 13 October 2023, available at <https://about.fb.com/news/2023/10/metas-efforts-regarding-israel-hamas-war/>.

⁶⁶ See communications USA 8/2024; OTH 19/2024; OTH 20/2024; OTH 21/2024; and OTH 22/2024.

from over 60 countries around the world.⁶⁷ Users typically have few functional or meaningful ways to appeal these restrictions.⁶⁸

53. The disproportionate censoring of Palestinian content by platforms is not a new problem. For instance, an independent due diligence review commissioned by Meta in 2021,⁶⁹ as well as the findings of its Oversight Board, identified significant shortcomings in relation to Palestinian content. The company committed itself to addressing the flaws, but its response to the situation in Gaza indicates that many of the problems persist.⁷⁰

54. In one study in December 2023 of 1,050 English-language takedowns by Meta, 1,049 involved peaceful content in support of Palestine that was censored or otherwise unduly suppressed, while only one case involved the removal of content in support of Israel.⁷¹ Phrases such as “From the River to the Sea, Palestine will be free”, “Ceasefire Now”, and “Stop the Genocide” have been repeatedly removed by Meta’s platforms as “spam”.⁷² The “emoji” of the Palestinian flag has been hidden as “potentially offensive”, and phrases such as “Palestinian” and “praise be to God” have been translated as “Palestinian terrorists”.⁷³ There have been complaints about inconsistent Arabic translation. There also appears to be inconsistent moderation of the same content in Arabic and Hebrew. For instance, Meta immediately censored the Arabic hashtag #iron_swords (# طوفان_الاقصى) on October 7 but did not censor the parallel hashtag in Hebrew (# חרבות_ברזל).⁷⁴

55. Meta’s “dangerous individuals and organizations” policy, which has underpinned the widespread takedown of pro-Palestine content, is problematic.⁷⁵ The policy’s vague and overly broad interpretation of what constitutes “glorification” or “support” of terrorism has led to takedowns of legitimate political expression and journalistic coverage of Gaza as claims of support for Hamas.⁷⁶ Meta updated the policy in January 2024 to “allow for more social and political discourse,” just months before the Oversight Board undertook to review it and found that the policy “substantially and disproportionately restrict(ed) free expression”.⁷⁷

56. Erroneous and inconsistent implementation of community standards relating to “adult nudity and sexual activity,” “violent and graphic content” and “spam” have constrained the sharing of vital information on alleged human rights violations or possible war crimes in the occupied Palestinian Territory on Meta’s platforms. Newsworthiness exceptions were repeatedly ignored and failed to take context into account, resulting in the disruption of reporting on episodes of torture and ill-treatment and of the destruction of hospitals. The censorship has affected Palestinian journalists, activists and human rights defenders, as well as a range of news outlets.⁷⁸ However, despite these problems, it is important to acknowledge that Meta allows a

⁶⁷ See Human Rights Watch, Meta’s Broken Promises, Systemic Censorship of Palestine Content on Instagram and Facebook, 21 December 2023.

⁶⁸ Submission of Human Rights Watch.

⁶⁹ See Business for Social Responsibility, “Human Rights Due Diligence of Meta’s Impacts in Israel and Palestine in May 2021”, September 2022.

⁷⁰ See communication OTH 20/2024.

⁷¹ See Human Rights Watch, “Meta’s Broken Promises”.

⁷² Submission of Human Rights Watch.

⁷³ Some of the moderation measures led the company to apologize. See also communication USA 8/2024.

⁷⁴ See communication USA 8/2024.

⁷⁵ Dangerous Organizations and Individuals (DOI) Policy Update, Meta Transparency Center, 23 January 2024.

⁷⁶ See communication USA 8/2024; and www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/Documents/Issues/Opinion/Legislation/Case_2021_009-FB-UA.pdf.

⁷⁷ See communication USA 8/2024.

⁷⁸ Submission of Access Now.

significant amount of pro-Palestinian expression and denunciations of Israeli government policies.

57. Other platforms have also taken down content disproportionately and extensively. For instance, Google's YouTube faced internal scrutiny after it allowed a pro-Israeli military song "HarbuDarbu" on the platform with lyrics such as "One, Two, Shoot!" and descriptions of rodents emerging from tunnels in Gaza, but it labelled an age-restricted content warning on a prominent rapper's tribute to a six-year-old Palestinian girl killed by Israeli forces in Gaza City.⁷⁹ YouTube was criticized by its own staff for its lack of balance in content moderation on Gaza, as compared to the Russian Federation-Ukraine conflict.

58. X in general has taken a more permissive approach to Gaza-related content, although there have been reports of throttling or suspension of pro-Palestine accounts such as the United States chapter of the activist group, "PalAction". Following documented reports of takedowns of "graphic" content on human rights violations, X updated its rules in January 2024 to allow exceptions for graphic content that is "documentary or educational" for evidence preservation.⁸⁰

59. Platforms appear to have taken a deferential position when confronted with tens of thousands of take-down requests from Governments, including that of Israel.⁸¹ Companies have varying levels of transparency regarding government requests. For instance, twice a year, TikTok publishes data for government takedown requests, which indicates that it received 260 requests from Israel in the second half of 2023, involving 10,191 pieces of content and 529 accounts, 98.2 per cent of which were removed.⁸² There is often little transparency as to the scope of government-sponsored requests, and users typically have no way of knowing whether their content has been taken down as a result of State-initiated complaints.⁸³ Meta's Oversight Board recommended that the company review State actor takedown requests for systemic biases, and Meta is now in the process of developing such a system.⁸⁴

60. Overly restrictive, unbalanced content moderation or censorship of Palestinian speech on social media platforms seem to be the result of inherently biased policies, opaque and inconsistent content moderation, heavy reliance on automated tools to moderate and translate and a permissive approach to State requests for content removal. Some platforms, notably Meta, acknowledge the distinct challenges of balancing "voice" and "safety" during crises and took temporary, salient measures to address rapidly changing events in the Gaza conflict, most of which have now ended.⁸⁵ Overall, there appears to be an absence of heightened human rights due diligence on a consistent basis by platforms in conflict related situations, as recommended by the United Nations business and human rights working group.⁸⁶

⁷⁹ See Paresh Dave, "YouTube's Rulings on Gaza War Videos Spark Internal Backlash", Wired, 2 July 2024, available at www.wired.com/story/youtube-israel-gaza-moderation/.

⁸⁰ 7amleh, "The Impact of Platform's Content Moderation Policies on Palestinian Digital Rights".

⁸¹ Israel says over 90 per cent of requests were honoured over the period. See Israeli Ministry of Justice, "Fighting Incitement Online", 26 November 2023, available at www.gov.il/en/pages/news-26-11.

⁸² See TikTok Transparency Center, "Government Removal Requests Report", 6 June 2024, available at www.tiktok.com/transparency/en-us/government-removal-requests-2023-2/.

⁸³ Human Rights Watch, "Meta's Broken Promises".

⁸⁴ See letter from Meta to OHCHR, 6 May 2024.

⁸⁵ Ibid.

⁸⁶ A/75/212.

B. Harmful content

61. There has been an alarming spike in hate speech in the context of Hamas' attacks on 7 October and the conflict in Gaza.⁸⁷ Content curation algorithms create a profit incentive for platforms to push harmful or false content to generate more "clicks", worsening the problem.⁸⁸ While Jews, Jewish Israelis and Palestinians have all been targeted online, the responses of the platforms show a biased and discriminatory approach towards Palestinians.

62. Most hate speech, incitement to violence, online harassment and smear campaigns targeting Palestinians have appeared on Facebook, X and Telegram.⁸⁹ X has been a particularly egregious offender. Over 99 per cent of tracked violent Hebrew-language content appeared on its platform, including statements by Israeli government officials describing Palestinians as "human animals", "Amalek" and "children of darkness", among other dehumanizing terms, in apparent violation of X's own policies. Such language may amount to incitement to genocide.⁹⁰

63. Telegram, which is known for its "hands off" approach to moderation, has allowed both antisemitic content as well as hate speech against Palestinians. It hosts several Hebrew-language, publicly viewable channels that actively incite violence against Palestinian individuals, share graphic content from Gaza, propagate hate, publish personal information about individuals without consent (doxing) and call for their elimination.⁹¹ Threats of doxing often pose a disproportionate threat to women during times of conflict and constitute a form of gender-based violence online.⁹² Despite repeated complaints, Telegram has failed to act against the channels.

64. Platforms have allowed advertisements dehumanizing Palestinians, including from State actors, even when they appear to violate the terms of service of platforms. YouTube reportedly accepted $7.1 million in advertisements sponsored by the Government of Israel, primarily targeted at audiences in Belgium, France, Germany, Switzerland, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States.⁹³ Some of them could constitute incitement to violence, labelling Palestinians as "barbaric terrorists" and featuring graphic, bloody material. Meta reportedly approved ads from the Government of Israel that called for a "holocaust for the Palestinians" and wiping out "Gazan women and children and the elderly".⁹⁴

65. The International Court of Justice has called on Israel to "take all measures within its power to prevent and punish the direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to members of the Palestinian group in the Gaza strip."⁹⁵ If platforms provide the means to distribute information that constitutes incitement to war crimes or genocide, they may trigger the application of international criminal law or humanitarian law to their operations. Company personnel may incur liability on the basis of their direct action or corporate complicity.⁹⁶

66. As noted by the Special Rapporteur, conflicts heighten the risks of information manipulation, including online disinformation and misinformation.⁹⁷ The conflict in ⁸⁷ Human Rights Council resolution 55/28.

⁸⁸ A/78/288, para. 101.

⁸⁹ See communications OTH 20/2024; OTH 21/2024; and OTH 22/2024.

⁹⁰ See communication USA 8/2024; and A/HRC/55/73 paras. 50–54.

⁹¹ See communication OTH 21/2024.

⁹² A/78/131, para. 67; and A/HRC/50/29, para. 46.

⁹³ See communication OTH 19/2024.

⁹⁴ See communication OTH 20/2024.

⁹⁵ International Court of Justice, Order of 26 January 2024.

⁹⁶ A/77/288, para. 75.

⁹⁷ A/77/288.

Gaza has fuelled widespread instances of disinformation and misinformation on various online platforms, in addition to artificial intelligence-generated deepfakes that increase fears about artificial intelligence-powered models fostering misleading information.⁹⁸ Meta discovered a coordinated network of fake profiles originating in the Islamic Republic of Iran posted in Hebrew in Israel, across a number of services, including Meta, Telegram, YouTube, X and TikTok. It also found a network between its platform, X and YouTube, originating from Israel and targeting Canadian and United States audiences with pro-Israel content related to the Gaza conflict.⁹⁹

67. There are rising concerns that activity and information posted on social media, including private information, are possibly being used for purposes of military targeting in artificial intelligence-driven systems.¹⁰⁰ These issues require further investigation and transparency by the platforms, as they have grave and uncharted humanitarian implications.

VI. Protected and prohibited expression

68. Many States and companies that have restricted or prohibited speech, symbols, slogans and protests related to Palestine claim to have done so to combat support for terrorism or antisemitism. The present section contains an analysis as to whether the line between protected and prohibited speech is being correctly drawn in accordance with international human rights law.

A. Terrorism, incitement and genocidal intent

69. Unlike the United Nations, many States have designated Hamas as a terrorist organization under their national anti-terrorism laws. Social media companies cite these laws and the designation of Hamas as a terrorist organization in their national jurisdictions to justify their policies on moderation of Palestinian content.¹⁰¹

70. Counter-terrorism laws fall under the legitimate objective of national security as grounds for restricting freedom of expression under article 19 (3) of the Covenant. However, the offences under those laws – such as “glorifying”, “praising”, “supporting” or “encouraging” “terrorism” or “extremist activity” – that form the basis for restricting freedom of expression are often vague and poorly defined and fail to meet the international requirement of legality. They leave a lot of room for misuse, which often leads to the silencing of legitimate human rights advocacy.¹⁰² In the aftermath of the 7 October attacks by Hamas on Israel, these vague and overly broad offences were used by some States to ban demonstrations to support civilians in the Gaza conflict.¹⁰³

71. Some States have banned and criminalized the display of Palestinian symbols, such as the national flag and the keffiyeh (traditional black and white scarf) as signs of antisemitism and support for Hamas.¹⁰⁴ Such general bans do not meet the ⁹⁸ See communication USA 8/2024.

⁹⁹ See Meta, “Adversarial Threat Report”, First Quarter 2024.

¹⁰⁰ See “Urgent need to investigate role of technology, social media companies in killing Gazan civilians”, Euro-Med Human Rights Monitor, 21 April 2024, available at <https://euromedmonitor.org/en/article/6274/Urgent-need-to-investigate-role-of-technology,-social-media-companies-in-killing-Gazan-civilians>.

¹⁰¹ See letter from Meta, 6 May 2024.

¹⁰² See A/73/361, A/74/335, and A/77/288, para. 63.

¹⁰³ See ARTICLE 19, “From the River to the Sea: Protecting freedom of expression in public discourse on the conflict in Israel and Palestine”, 22 May 2024.

¹⁰⁴ Submissions by Canadian Lawyers for International Human Rights and Access Now.

requirements of necessity and proportionality under article 19 (3) and therefore violate the right to freedom of expression. As general symbols of Palestinian identity, they should be regarded as legitimate forms of expression. Whether or not they are being used in a specific situation to signify intolerance or hatred against Jews or to incite violence or to indicate support for terrorism must be assessed on case-by-case basis, with careful contextual analysis to determine if they should be restricted.¹⁰⁵

72. Blanket bans of Palestinian symbols, by linking Palestinians as a people to terrorism or antisemitism, demonize and stigmatize them and seek to delegitimize their liberation struggle. Equating advocacy of Palestinian rights with terrorism or antisemitism is not only a disproportionate response, but may indicate an underlying institutional racism against Palestinians, violating fundamental human rights. Restricting the use of the Palestinian flag is a denial of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which has been recognized by the General Assembly and the International Court of Justice.¹⁰⁶

73. “From the River to the Sea, Palestine Will Be Free”, the most recognizable chant in many Palestinian marches, has been the subject of blanket restrictions by some States and private actors on the grounds that it is a sign of support for Hamas and shows genocidal intent or incitement to violence against Jews. That interpretation of the slogan has been challenged by scholars, human rights experts and Palestinian advocates, including many Jewish groups and scholars who see it as a call for the right to self-determination of Palestinians. Over the past year, the slogan has been used widely during protests in solidarity with Palestinians. In some Western countries, the use of the slogan has been criminalized or otherwise sanctioned. In some others, the courts and law enforcement agencies have recognized the different meanings of the slogan and have refused to impose blanket bans on it.¹⁰⁷

74. A general ban or criminalization for the mere utterance of the slogan in all circumstances is disproportionate and not in line with international human rights law. Incitement requires credible proof of intent to incite, as well as the likelihood that it would lead to the intended objective, rather than just arousing feelings of fear, offence or insult. Whether or not in certain specific situations such intent and likelihood exists and prohibition of the slogan is justified should be assessed in accordance with international standards and contextual analysis outlined in the Rabat Plan of Action.

B. Antisemitism and protection of political expression

75. In the context of States’ responses to Palestinian advocacy, there has been a tendency to confuse and conflate criticism of the policies of Israel, which is a legitimate exercise of freedom of expression, with antisemitism, which is racial and religious hatred against Jews that must be condemned.

76. An example of such conflation is the response of some States to the global “boycott, divest and sanctions” movement. The latter makes three demands on Israel: “ending the occupation; ensuring full equality of all citizens and not privileging the rights derived from Jewish identity; and respecting and allowing the right of return for Palestinian refugees.”¹⁰⁸ All three are aligned with the international obligations of ¹⁰⁵ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 37 (2020) on the right of peaceful assembly, para. 51.

¹⁰⁶ Legal Consequences arising from the Policies and Practices of Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, Advisory Opinion, 19 July 2024, para. 274; and General Assembly resolution 78/192.

¹⁰⁷ ARTICLE 19, “From the River to the Sea”.

¹⁰⁸ H.M. Hauge, “Evaluating the Practice of Lawfare against Pro-Palestinian Groups”, Middle East Policy, 2024, pp. 1–16, available at <https://doi.org/10.1111/mepo.12764>.

Israel, which it has so far failed to uphold.¹⁰⁹ Many civil society organizations and individuals, including some Jewish groups, support and participate in the movement. A key demand of the campus demonstrators, which included many Jewish groups and students, was the divestment of their universities from Israel-linked companies. Nevertheless, the movement is regarded in some Western countries, including Germany and the United States, as being discriminatory and antisemitic.

77. In a case relating to boycott, divest and sanctions protestors in France, the European Court of Human Rights found that a boycott is a legitimate means of expressing political opinion.¹¹⁰ The court held that differential treatment undertaken with the purpose of ensuring substantive equality and in a proportionate manner does not necessarily amount to inciting discrimination. The Court drew a distinction between expression that serves as a call for antisemitism and is not protected by international law, and political expression, such as the boycott, divest and sanctions movement, which aims to condemn a Government and is unquestionably protected by international law. This decision vindicates the movement as a valid means of protest and pressure on Governments.

78. Antisemitism is a serious form of religious and racial hatred, and States and private actors must take all necessary measures to fight it. The weeks following October 2023 have seen a surge in complaints of antisemitism around the world, compared with the same period the previous year.¹¹¹ It is vital that the fight against antisemitism be framed according to international human rights standards, so that there is a shared understanding of the problem and its root causes and, consequently, more effective responses to eradicate it. Otherwise, there is a risk that discrimination against one vulnerable group will be replaced with discrimination against another group, which, far from reducing antisemitism, will fuel more hatred and intolerance.

79. As noted by the European Court of Human Rights, antisemitism should be clearly distinguished from political expression. It is of serious concern that the “working definition” of antisemitism of the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance contravenes this critical international standard of freedom of expression, and yet is being promoted heavily by various entities and Governments. It has been adopted by 43 States and is used in practice as a quasi-legal basis to restrict expression on the grounds of antisemitism.¹¹² Its adoption across Europe has been a source of serious concern in relation to freedom of expression and other human rights.¹¹³ The previous Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance found the “working definition” to be “divisive” and “politically instrumentalized”.¹¹⁴ Counter-proposals to “the working definition” have been developed by Jewish scholars and experts on antisemitism.¹¹⁵

80. The “working definition” was never intended to be used as a framework for regulating expression¹¹⁶ and does not meet the international legal standards for restriction or prohibition of speech laid out in the Covenant. First, it is overly broad,

¹⁰⁹ Ibid. See also CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4; and A/HRC/20/17/Add.2, para. 34.

¹¹⁰ See Baldassi and Others v. France, European Court of Human Rights, 15271/16, 15280/16, 15282/16 et al., 11 June 2020.

¹¹¹ Submission of the World Jewish Congress.

¹¹² See Rebecca Ruth Gould, “Legal Form and Legal Legitimacy: The IHRA Definition of Antisemitism as a Case Study in Censored Speech”, Law, Culture and the Humanities, vol. 18 (1), 2022.

¹¹³ A/77/512, para. 74, footnote 4.

¹¹⁴ Ibid., paras. 71–79.

¹¹⁵ See Jerusalem Declaration on Antisemitism, 25 March 2021.

¹¹⁶ See written testimony of Kenneth S. Stern, United States House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary, 7 November 2017.

vague and equivocal,¹¹⁷ and fails the test of legal certainty, required under article 19 (3) of the Covenant. The overly broad and vague definition of antisemitism offered by the “working definition” is harmful because it can lead to wrongful accusations and damage reputations, distort statistics on antisemitic incidents and divert attention from addressing the real causes of antisemitism. Second, it does not include the element of incitement, as required for prohibition of speech under article 20 (2) of the Covenant. Third, its “illustrative examples” deal not only with the impact of speech on individuals but also on Israel, which contravenes international human rights law and in particular the right to freedom of expression, which permits criticism of all States. Fourth, it is unnecessary as there are universally accepted international standards to address racial and religious hatred, including antisemitism.

81. The central conceptual flaw of the “working definition” is the inherent conflation of Zionism, a political ideology, with antisemitism. The practical consequence is the suppression of legitimate criticism of Israel, not the enhancement of protection of Jews from racial and religious hatred and intolerance. Jewish groups and individuals who engage in anti-Zionist protests have been labelled as antisemitic.¹¹⁸ When Jews celebrating Jewish festivals in solidarity with Palestinians were attacked by pro-Israel supporters, the incident was not considered to be antisemitic.¹¹⁹

82. Zionism is not an inherent characteristic of an individual or group, and so it is wrong to equate anti-Zionism with antisemitism. Where there is concern in a specific situation that the term “Zionist” is being used as a proxy for hate speech against Jews, then a contextual analysis should be made on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the universally applicable standards laid out in articles 19 (3) and 20 (2) of the Covenant and the guidance in the Rabat Plan.¹²⁰

VII. Conclusions and recommendations

83. The main conclusion of the present report is that the most fundamental principle of human rights – that all persons have an equal right to enjoy all human rights – has been endangered by an extensive pattern of unlawful, discriminatory and disproportionate restrictions and repression of freedom of expression, primarily of Palestinian activists and their supporters in Western Europe and North America. This trend did not emerge with the Israeli assault on Gaza but has become more widespread in the past year, from the targeted killing of journalists in Gaza to the banning of Palestinian protests, speech and symbols in various countries, especially in North America and Europe.

84. Such repression is particularly disturbing in the light of the recent advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, which reaffirms the right to self-determination of Palestinians and finds that the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory is unlawful, with an obligation placed on all other States to ensure that “impediments” to end it are removed. In the opinion, the Court vindicates the ¹¹⁷ Opinion of Geoffrey Robertson KC, “Antisemitism, the IHRA definition and its consequences for freedom of expression”, para. 2. Available at https://prc.org.uk/upload/library/files/Anti-Semitism_Opinion_03.09.18eds.pdf.

¹¹⁸ See National Writers Union, “Red Lines: Retaliation in the media history during the war on Gaza”, 6 May 2024.

¹¹⁹ Submission of Jøder for Retfærdig Fred (af 5784).

¹²⁰ Meta has revised its policy to restrict speech only where the term “Zionist” is deemed to be a proxy for Jewish people. See Meta Transparency Center, “Update from the Policy Forum on our approach to ‘Zionist’ as a proxy for hate speech”, 9 July 2024. Civil society organizations, like Access Now, are concerned whether Meta will be able to enforce a nuanced policy given its automated decision-making tools and previous history of overenforcement of Palestinian content.

legitimacy of Palestinian advocacy for human rights, including the right to self-determination, and creates an imperative for all States to change their laws, policies and practices restricting or prohibiting such advocacy.

85. People have the right to express their views and to protest peacefully. States have a duty to respect, protect and facilitate those rights on an equal basis for all persons. Civil disobedience or non-violent protests aimed at challenging unjust proscriptions, as well as campaigns to boycott, seek divestment and promote sanctions, are legitimate forms of political expression that should not be prohibited or criminalized.

86. In recent years, many western Governments have taken a restrictive approach to public protests, viewing them through the lens of security, law enforcement, countering terrorism and violent extremism, that is not in line with human rights standards. Blanket prohibition of Palestinian protests, slogans or symbols is inherently incompatible with international human rights law. Any restriction of freedom of expression must respect scrupulously the requirements of legality, legitimate aims and the necessity and proportionality of measures to achieve those aims, as set out in international law.

87. Antisemitism is a serious form of racial and religious hatred that must be condemned. However, the fight against antisemitism should not be instrumentalized and politicized to protect Israel or block criticism of the political ideology of Zionism. The “working definition” of the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance on antisemitism is inconsistent with international human rights law and should not be used to define policy or regulate speech.

88. International human rights law draws a clear line between political criticism, from which no State can be shielded, and antisemitism as a serious form of religious and racial hatred, which must be condemned. The genocide in Gaza, the violation of human rights in the occupied Palestinian Territory and the failure of Israel to respect its international legal obligations, including the occupation of Palestinian territory, are matters of global public interest. There is no scope for restricting freedom of expression on such matters.

89. Access to information is vital during conflicts, both for civilians trapped in the conflict zone as well as the world outside, which makes the safety of journalists and unhindered access of foreign media to Gaza crucial. The allegations of targeted attacks on media as part of a strategy to cover up evidence of war crimes makes the establishment of international mechanisms to investigate crimes against journalists all the more vital.

90. Not only States, but also organs of society, such as companies, universities and cultural and philanthropic organizations, have reneged on their responsibility to respect freedom of opinion and expression on a non-discriminatory basis. The failure of some of the best academic institutions in the world to ensure equal protection of all members of their academic communities, whether Jewish, Palestinian, Israeli, Arab or Muslim, was disappointing. Academic leaders must do some soul-searching as to what went wrong and how they can put it right.

91. Experience shows that, in highly polarized contexts, freedom of opinion and expression – enjoyed on an equal basis by all sides – is an invaluable tool for fighting hate, overcoming prejudice, building mutual respect and encouraging dialogue to resolve disputes. That should be a strong incentive for all stakeholders – States, private actors, civil society and international organizations – to reject double standards and ensure the full and equal protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression of all persons.

A. Recommendations for States

92. States must respect, protect and fulfil the right to freedom of opinion and expression without discrimination against any individual or groups on the grounds of race, religion, political beliefs or other protected characteristics. Any restriction of expression, including in relation to counter-terrorism laws or antisemitism, must follow strictly the criteria set out in articles 19 (3) and 20 (2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

93. States must refrain from blanket prohibitions of demonstrations, slogans, symbols or other forms expression in support of the Palestinian people. Any decision to prohibit such acts or expressions on the grounds of incitement must be done on a case-by-case basis, taking into account international legal standards as well as specific contextual and other factors, as articulated in the Rabat Plan of Action on the prohibition of advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.

94. In the light of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice issued in July 2024, States should repeal – or refrain from adopting – laws and policies that penalize opposition to or impede advocacy against Israeli occupation and segregation, such as laws against the boycott, divest and sanctions movement.

95. States must not restrict expression in support of Palestinian self-determination. Advocacy of Palestinians' human rights, including the right to self-determination, is legitimate expression.

96. States must condemn antisemitism, anti-Arab racism, particularly anti-Palestinian racism, and Islamophobia, and the use of dehumanizing language by any State official or entity and take all measures in line with international human rights law to combat them, including prompt, thorough, effective, independent and impartial investigation and prosecution of hate crimes against Muslim and Jewish persons.

97. The “working definition” of antisemitism by the International Holocaust Remembrance Association is incompatible with international standards on freedom of expression. States should rescind their adoption and application of it and refrain from promoting it.

98. States should promote an environment conducive to diverse views, debate and discussion, using inclusive consultative processes and programmes to promote equality, intercultural dialogue, understanding and tolerance among and within the affected communities, and combat negative stereotypes of Jews, Muslims, Palestinians and Arabs.

99. Israel must ensure the safety of all journalists and must refrain from targeting them or destroying media facilities in Gaza. Israel should grant full and free access of foreign media to Gaza.

100. Israel should investigate all attacks on journalists in the occupied Palestinian Territory promptly, effectively, independently and impartially, in line with the Minnesota Protocol on the Investigation of Potentially Unlawful Death.

101. All States, including Israel, as well as social media companies and media outlets, must respect the provisional order of the International Court of Justice to preserve all evidence of atrocities committed in occupied Palestinian Territory.

102. States should not ask platforms to remove content or to enforce measures that do not conform with international human rights standards.

B. Recommendations for companies

103. Companies should carry out heightened human rights due diligence and trigger enhanced risk management strategies in the occupied Palestinian Territory, with adequate resources, language and contextual expertise, and the engagement of civil society. Due diligence processes should incorporate a robust analysis of the impact of the companies' operations, products and services on the specific dynamics of conflict, occupation and segregation, as well as the human rights situation.

104. Companies should address the overenforcement of Palestine-related content, including by ensuring that content moderation policies and enforcement are aligned with international human rights law, providing transparency about the use of automation and machine learning to moderate or translate Palestine-related content, sharing information on the classifiers programmed and used and their error rates, and conducting independent audits of content curation and ranking and recommender systems.

105. Companies should develop predictable, consistent and effective frameworks for addressing hate speech, disinformation and other information manipulation, in line with international human rights and humanitarian law, and ensure user security.

106. In the light of the order of the International Court of Justice on the plausibility of a real and imminent risk of genocide, companies should be vigilant about their own liability and ensure appropriate policies and processes to remove content with genocidal intent. They should take particular care to preserve all evidence of atrocities for future accountability processes.

107. Companies should ensure effective and swift remedy and redress to affected individuals, including easily accessible, transparent reporting mechanisms to appeal content moderation decisions within reasonable, predictable timelines.

C. Recommendations for academic and cultural institutions

108. Academic institutions should respect the freedom of opinion and expression of students, faculty and staff without discrimination, and should not permit the use of force to disperse peaceful advocacy, protests or civil disobedience on campuses.

109. Academic institutions should abstain from retaliation against students and other members of the academic community for their peaceful advocacy and protests, including non-violent civil disobedience, or participation in boycott movements.

110. Academic institutions should actively promote an inclusive, safe and enabling environment for academic, evidence-based enquiry, debate and discussion on the Israel-Palestinian question.

111. Academic institutions should condemn hate speech, including antisemitism, Islamophobia and anti-Palestinian racism. If they have adopted the International Holocaust Remembrance Association’s “working definition” of antisemitism, they should review their policy in the light of the serious human concerns regarding the definition.

112. Cultural and artistic institutions and events sponsors should not discriminate against individuals or deny their participation purely on account of their support or political views regarding Israel or Palestine. The artistic community should reject the “cancel culture”, which chills artistic freedom and encourages discrimination, and use the arts as a means to promote intercultural understanding and fight stereotypes.

D. Recommendations for the international community

113. The International Criminal Court should prioritize its investigation into the killing of journalists in the occupied Palestinian Territory.

114. The discriminatory and disproportionate responses by State and private actors to protect human rights, including freedom of expression, of the Palestinian people and those who support them raise serious concerns about anti-Palestinian racism that cut across the mandates of several Special Procedures and engage a wide range of stakeholders. The Human Rights Council should consider a cross-mandate, multistakeholder discussion to strengthen the equal protection of human rights for vulnerable groups in this highly polarized environment.

3. Further calls upon Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from its repressive measures against them and from all other practices mentioned in the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories;

4. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and have no legal effect;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, the competent United Nations organs, the specialized agencies, international and regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations and to give it the widest possible publicity, and to report on this matter to the Human Rights Council at its fourth session, due to be held in March/April 2007;

7. Decides to continue the consideration of the human rights violations in the occupied Syrian Golan at its fourth session.

*31st meeting
27 November 2006*

[Resolution adopted by a recorded vote of 32 to 1, with 14 abstentions. See chap. III.]

2/4. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Security Council and the General Assembly, most recently General Assembly resolution 60/106 of 8 December 2005 in which it reaffirmed, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1), and its conclusion that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (including East Jerusalem) have been established in breach of international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004,

Recalling further its attachment to the implementation by both parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (S/2003/529, annex), and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around Occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activity undermines the realization of a two-State solution,

Noting the dismantlement of settlements in the Gaza Strip and parts of the northern West Bank,

Expressing grave concern about the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 (E/CN.4/2006/29 and A/HRC/2/5) and calls upon the Government of Israel to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur to allow him fully to discharge his mandate;

2. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention; settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) The Israeli so-called E1 plan aimed at expanding the Israeli settlement of Maale Adumim and building the wall around it, thereby further disconnecting occupied East Jerusalem from the northern and southern parts of the West Bank and isolating its Palestinian population;

(c) The new Israeli plans to construct more than 900 additional housing units in different Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank;

(d) The implications on the final status negotiations of Israel's recent announcement that it will retain the major settlement blocs in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(e) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the Occupied Palestinian Territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent, in which case, it would be tantamount to de facto annexation;¹

(f) The Israeli decision to establish and operate a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev in violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

¹ See International Court of Justice, Advisory Opinion of 9 July 2004 in the case concerning the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1, para. 121).

(g) The continued closures of and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the restriction of the freedom of movement of people and goods, including the repeated closure of the crossing points of the Gaza Strip, which have caused an extremely precarious humanitarian situation for the civilian population as well as impaired the economic and social rights of the Palestinian people;

(h) The continued construction, contrary to international law, of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem;

3. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of the existing settlements, including “natural growth” and related activities;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories;

4. Urges the full implementation of the Access and Movement Agreement of 15 November 2005, particularly the urgent reopening of Rafah and Karni crossings, which is crucial to ensuring the passage of foodstuffs and essential supplies, as well as the access of the United Nations agencies to and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

5. Demands that Israel implement the recommendations regarding the settlements made by the then United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in her report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-seventh session on her visit to the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel, Egypt and Jordan (E/CN.4/2001/114);

6. Calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

7. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the Advisory Opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

8. Welcomes the Palestinian truce initiative and its acceptance by the Israeli side that came into effect on 26 November 2006 and urges all parties to maintain this truce, which could pave the way for genuine negotiations towards a just resolution to the conflict;

9. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo Accords and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

10. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its fourth session.

*32nd meeting
27 November 2006*

[Resolution adopted by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, with 1 abstention. See chap. III.]

2/5. Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights

The Human Rights Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/78 of 21 April 2004,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the continuing efforts of the Member States of the United Nations, the human rights treaty bodies, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Secretary-General to improve the effectiveness of the treaty body system, and encourages further such efforts;

2. Encourages the High Commissioner to undertake a study on various options for reforming the treaty body system, and to seek the views of States and other stakeholders in this regard and to report thereon to the Human Rights Council.

*33rd meeting
28 November 2006*

[Resolution adopted without a vote. See chap. III.]

B. DECISIONS

2/101. Situation of human rights in Kyrgyzstan

At its 23rd (closed) meeting, on 2 October 2006, the Human Rights Council decided, without a vote, to make public the text it adopted relating to its consideration of the human rights situation in Kyrgyzstan under the procedure established in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1503 [XLVIII] of 27 May 1970:

“The Human Rights Council,

“Having examined the material relating to the human rights situation in Kyrgyzstan brought before it under the 1503 procedure in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/3, alleging the use of excessive force against demonstrators and the use of arbitrary arrest and detention against protestors in order to stifle political opposition,

7/18. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly, most recently General Assembly resolution 62/108 of 17 December 2007 in which the Assembly reaffirmed, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I),

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and its conclusion that “the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (including East Jerusalem) have been established in breach of international law”,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory constitute very serious violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein and undermine international efforts, including the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors’ Conference for the Palestinian State, aimed at invigorating the peace process and establishing a viable, contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State by the end of 2008,

Recalling its attachment to the implementation by both parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (S/2003/529, annex), and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity,

Expressing its grave concern at the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around Occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activity undermines the realization of a two-State solution,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the route of the wall has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 (A/HRC/7/17) and calls upon the Government of Israel to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur to allow him to discharge his mandate fully;

2. Deplores the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they undermine the peace process and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State, and are in violation of international law and pledges made by Israel at the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007;

3. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention; settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) The Israeli so-called E-1 plan aimed at expanding the Israeli settlement of Maale Adumim and building the wall around it, thereby further disconnecting occupied East Jerusalem from the northern and southern parts of the West Bank and isolating its Palestinian population;

(c) The implications for the final status negotiations of the announcement by Israel that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(d) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the Occupied Palestinian Territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent and would be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(e) The Israeli decision to establish and operate a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev, in violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(f) The continued closures of and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the restriction of the freedom of movement of people and goods, including the repeated closure of the crossing points of the Gaza Strip, which have created an extremely precarious humanitarian situation for the civilian population and impaired the economic and social rights of the Palestinian people;

(g) The continued construction, contrary to international law, of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem;

4. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of the existing settlements, including “natural growth” and related activities;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories;

5. Urges the full implementation of the Access and Movement Agreement of 15 November 2005, particularly the urgent reopening of the Rafah and Karni crossings, which are crucial to the passage of foodstuffs and essential supplies, as well as the access of United Nations agencies to and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

6. Demands that Israel implement the recommendations regarding the settlements made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in her report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-seventh session on her visit to the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel, Egypt and Jordan (E/CN.4/2001/114);

7. Calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

8. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

9. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process in line with the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo Accords and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

10. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its session of March 2009.

*40th meeting
27 March 2008*

Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1. The voting was as follows:

In favour: Angola, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Cameroon, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovenia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uruguay, Zambia; Against: Canada.

See chapter VII.

7/19. Combating defamation of religions

The Human Rights Council,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 60/1 of 24 October 2005, in which the Assembly emphasized the responsibilities of all States, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language or religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, and acknowledged the importance of respect and understanding for religious and cultural diversity throughout the world,

9. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, the competent United Nations organs, specialized agencies, international and regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report on this matter to the Council at its thirteenth session;

10. Decides to continue the consideration of the human rights violations in the occupied Syrian Golan at its thirteenth session.

*43rd meeting
26 March 2009*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 33 to 1, with 13 abstentions (see part II, chap. VII). The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

Canada;

Abstaining:

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cameroon, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Republic of Korea, Slovakia, Slovenia, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.]

10/18

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly, reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem, and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva

Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and its conclusion that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were established in breach of international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory constitute very serious violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein and undermine international efforts, including the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007 and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State of 17 December 2007, aimed at invigorating the peace process and establishing a viable, contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State by the end of 2008,

Recalling its attachment to the implementation by both parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (S/2003/529, annex), and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlements building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activity undermines the realization of a two-State solution,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the route of the wall has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 (A/HRC/10/20), and calls upon the Government of Israel to cooperate with all relevant special rapporteurs in accordance with Council resolution S-9/1 to allow them to discharge their mandates fully;

2. Deplores the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they undermine the peace process and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State and are in violation of international law and Israeli pledges at the Annapolis Peace Conference;

3. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention, and recalls that settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) The Israeli planned settlement construction in the vicinity of the Adam settlements in the occupied West Bank, which constitutes a new settlement block;

(c) The increasing number of newly built structures, in 2008 amounting to 1,257, including 748 permanent buildings and 509 mobile structures, which obstruct the efforts of the international community to advance the Middle East peace process;

(d) The implications for the final status negotiations of the announcement by Israel that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(e) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones in the Occupied Palestinian Territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent and would be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(f) The continued closures of and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and the restriction of the freedom of movement of people and goods, including the repeated closures of the crossing points of the Occupied Gaza Strip, which have created an extremely precarious humanitarian situation for the civilian population as well as impaired the economic and social rights of the Palestinian people;

(g) The continued construction, contrary to international law, of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem;

(h) The latest Israeli plan to demolish more than 88 houses in the Al-Bustan neighbourhood of Silwan, which will result in the displacement of more than 1,500 Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem;

4. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of the existing settlements, including “natural growth” and related activities;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories;

5. Urges the full implementation of the Agreement on Movement and Access of 15 November 2005, particularly the urgent reopening of the Rafah and Karni crossings, which are crucial to the passage of foodstuffs and essential supplies, as well as the access of United Nations agencies to and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

6. Calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

7. Also calls upon Israel to implement the recommendations regarding the settlements made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in her report to the Commission on Human Rights on her visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Israel, Egypt and Jordan (E/CN.4/2001/114);

8. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

9. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process in line with the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973), and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo accords and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

10. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirteenth session in March 2010.

*43rd meeting
26 March 2009*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions (see part II, chap. VII). The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

Canada.]

10/19

Human rights violations emanating from the Israeli military attacks and operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles and objectives of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Guided also by the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of land by the use of force, as enshrined in the Charter,

Affirming the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Affirming also the applicability of international human rights law to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing serious concern at the lack of implementation by the occupying Power, Israel, of previously adopted resolutions and recommendations of the Council relating to the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Condemning all forms of violence against civilians and deploring the loss of human lives in the context of the current situation,

Recognizing that the Israeli military attacks and operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory have caused severe violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein and undermine international efforts towards achieving a just and lasting peace in the region based on the two-State solution,

Recognizing also that the Israeli siege imposed on the occupied Gaza Strip, including the closure of border crossings, leads to disastrous humanitarian, economic and environmental consequences,

1. Demands that the occupying Power, Israel, end its occupation of the Palestinian land occupied since 1967, and to respect its commitments within the peace process towards the establishment of the independent sovereign Palestinian State, with East Jerusalem as its capital, living in peace and security with all its neighbours;

2. Strongly condemns the Israeli military attacks and operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly the recent ones in the occupied Gaza Strip, which have resulted in the killing and injury of thousands of Palestinian civilians, including a large number of women and children, and also condemns the firing of crude rockets on Israeli civilians;

3. Demands that the occupying Power, Israel, stop the targeting of civilians and the systematic destruction of the cultural heritage of the Palestinian people, in addition to the destruction of public and private properties, and the targeting of United Nations facilities, as laid down in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, cease immediately all current excavations beneath and around the Al-Aqsa Mosque compound, and refrain from any act that may endanger the structure or change the nature of the holy sites both Islamic and Christian, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in and around Jerusalem;

5. Calls for immediate protection of all civilians, including an international protection for the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in compliance with international human rights and humanitarian law, both applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

6. Also calls for the immediate cessation of all Israeli military attacks and operations throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory and of the firing of crude rockets by Palestinian combatants against southern Israel;

7. Demands that the occupying Power, Israel, immediately stop its illegal decision to demolish a large number of Palestinian houses in the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Al-Bustan in the Selwan area, near the Al-Aqsa Mosque, which will result in the displacement of more than 1,500 Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem;

8. Demands that the occupying Power, Israel, release Palestinian prisoners and detainees;

9. Calls upon the occupying Power, Israel, to lift checkpoints and to open all crossing points and borders in accordance with international agreements;

10. Urges all parties concerned to respect the rules of international human rights and humanitarian law and to refrain from violence against civilian populations;

11. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirteenth session in March 2010.

*43rd meeting
26 March 2009*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 35 to 4, with 8 abstentions (see part II, chap. VII). The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Switzerland, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

Canada, Germany, Italy, Netherlands;

Abstaining:

Cameroon, France, Japan, Republic of Korea, Slovakia, Slovenia, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.]

10/20

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) on 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights (A/CONF.157/23), and in particular part I, paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the latest being resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirteenth session in March 2010.

43rd meeting

26 March 2009

[Adopted without a vote. See part II, chap. VII.]

10/21

Follow-up to Council resolution S-9/1 on the grave violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly due to the recent Israeli military attacks against the occupied Gaza Strip

The Human Rights Council,

Recalling its resolution S-9/1 of 12 January 2009,

Recalling also its decision to dispatch an urgent, independent international fact-finding mission, to be appointed by the President of the Council, to investigate all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law by the occupying Power, Israel, against the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in the occupied Gaza Strip, due to the latest aggression, and that it called upon Israel not to obstruct the process of investigation and to fully cooperate with the mission,

Expressing with regret that resolution S-9/1 has not been fully implemented to date,

1. Requests the President of the Council to continue his tireless efforts to appoint the independent international fact-finding mission;
2. Calls upon the occupying Power, Israel, to abide by its obligations under international law, international humanitarian law and international human rights law;
3. Demands that the occupying Power, Israel, fully cooperate with all relevant special procedures mandate holders in the discharge of their mandates;
4. Also demands that the occupying Power, Israel, facilitate and provide unhindered access to the members of the independent international fact-finding mission;
5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*43rd meeting
26 March 2009*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 33 to 1, with 13 abstentions (see part II, chap. VII). The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

Canada;

Abstaining:

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cameroon, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Republic of Korea, Slovakia, Slovenia, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.]

10/22 Combating defamation of religions

The Human Rights Council,

Reaffirming the pledge made by all States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 60/1 of 16 September 2005, in which the Assembly emphasized the responsibilities of all States, in conformity with the Charter, to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind, and acknowledged the importance of respect and understanding for religious and cultural diversity throughout the world,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of all religions to modern civilization and the contribution that dialogue among civilizations can make towards improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

General Assembly

Distr.: General
14 April 2010

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine
and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

13/7

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly, reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem, and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

* The resolutions and decisions of the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its thirteenth session (A/HRC/13/56), chap. I.

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and its conclusion that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were established in breach of international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, constitute very serious violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein and undermine international efforts, including the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007 and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State of 17 December 2007, aimed at invigorating the peace process and establishing a viable, contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State by the end of 2008,

Recalling its attachment to the implementation by both parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (S/2003/529, annex), and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around Occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activity undermines the realization of a two-State solution,

Expressing grave concern about the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian Territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the Council of the European Union conclusions on the Middle East peace process of 8 December 2009, in which the European Union Council of Ministers reiterated that settlements, the separation barrier where built on occupied land, demolition of homes and evictions are illegal under international law, constitute an obstacle to peace and threaten to make a two-State solution impossible, and particularly its urgent call upon the Government of Israel to immediately end all settlement activities, in East Jerusalem and the rest of the West Bank and including natural growth, and to dismantle all outposts erected since March 2001;

2. Welcomes with appreciation the statements made by the majority of the States Members of the United Nations on the illegality of settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territories, including East Jerusalem, and reaffirming the urgent calls by the international community upon the Government of Israel to immediately stop all settlement activities, including in East Jerusalem;

3. Deplores the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they undermine the peace process and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State, and are in violation of international law and Israeli pledges at the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007;

4. Condemns the new Israeli announcement on the construction of one hundred and twenty new housing units in the Bitar Elite settlement, and thousand six hundred new housing units for new settlers in the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Ramat Shlomo, and calls upon the Government of Israel to immediately reverse its decision which would further undermine and jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final settlement compliant with international legitimacy, including the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention, and recalls that settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) The Israeli planned settlement construction in the vicinity of the Adam settlements in the occupied West Bank, which constitutes a new settlement block;

(c) The increasing number of newly built structures, in 2008 and 2009, amounting to several thousand, including a large number of permanent buildings and structures, which undermine the efforts of the international community to advance the Middle East peace process;

(d) The so-called E-1 plan aimed at expanding the Israeli settlement of Maale Adumim and building the wall around it, thereby further disconnecting occupied East Jerusalem from the northern and southern parts of the West Bank and isolating its Palestinian population;

(e) The implications for the final status negotiations of Israel's announcement that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(f) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the Occupied Palestinian Territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent and would in that case be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(g) The Israeli decision to establish and operate a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(h) The continued closures of and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the restriction of the freedom of movement of people and goods, including the repeated closure of the crossing points of the Gaza Strip, which have created an extremely precarious humanitarian situation for the civilian population as well as impaired the economic and social rights of the Palestinian people;

(i) The continued construction, contrary to international law, of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem;

(j) The latest Israeli plan to demolish hundreds of houses in occupied East Jerusalem, including its decision to demolish more than eighty-eight houses in the Al-Bustan neighbourhood of Silwan, which would result in the displacement of more than two thousand Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem, in addition to the Israeli decision to evacuate Palestinian families from their houses in the Al-Sheikh Jarrah area of East Jerusalem and to replace them by Israeli settlers;

6. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of the existing settlements, including “natural growth” and related activities including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

7. Urges the full implementation of the Access and Movement Agreement of 15 November 2005, particularly the urgent reopening of Rafah and Karni crossings, which is crucial to ensuring the passage of foodstuffs and essential supplies, as well as the access of the United Nations agencies to and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

8. Calls upon Israel to implement the recommendations regarding the settlements made by the then United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in her report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-seventh session on her visit to the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel, Egypt and Jordan (E/CN.4/2001/114);

9. Also calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

10. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the Advisory Opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

11. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process in line with the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors’ Conference for the Palestinian State and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo Accords, the Arab Peace initiative and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

12. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its sixteenth session.

41st meeting
24 March 2010

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Madagascar, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
13 April 2011

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Sixteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

16/31

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly, reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

* The resolutions and decisions adopted by the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its sixteenth session (A/HRC/16/2), chap. I.

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and its conclusion that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were established in breach of international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, are illegal under international law and constitute very serious violations of the international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein, and undermine international efforts, including the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007 and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State of 17 December 2007, aimed at invigorating the peace process and establishing a viable, contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State by the end of 2008,

Recalling the statement made by the Quartet on 21 September 2010 and its attachment to the implementation by the parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict,¹ and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activities,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around Occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activities undermine the realization of a two-State solution,

Expressing grave concern about the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the Council of the European Union conclusions on the Middle East Peace Process of 8 December 2009, in which the European Union Council of Ministers reiterated that settlements, the separation barrier where built on occupied land, demolition of homes and evictions are illegal under international law, constitute an obstacle to peace and threaten to make a two-State solution impossible, and particularly its urgent call upon the Government of Israel to immediately end all settlement activities, in East Jerusalem and the rest of the West Bank and including natural growth, and to dismantle all outposts erected since March 2001;

¹ S/2003/529, annex.

2. Welcomes with appreciation the statements made by the majority of the States Members of the United Nations on the illegality of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and reaffirming the urgent calls by the international community upon the Government of Israel to immediately stop all settlement activities, including in East Jerusalem;

3. Condemns the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they undermine the peace process, constitute a threat to the two-State solution and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State, and are in violation of international law, and calls upon the Government of Israel to immediately reverse its decisions, which would further undermine and jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final settlement compliant with relevant United Nations resolutions;

4. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention, and recalls that settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) Planned Israeli settlement construction in the vicinity of the Adam settlements in the occupied West bank, which constitutes a new settlement block;

(c) The increasing number of newly built structures, in 2008, 2009, 2010 and 2011 amounting to several thousand, including a large number of permanent buildings and structures, which undermine the efforts of the international community to advance the Middle East peace process;

(d) The so-called E-1 plan aimed at expanding the Israeli settlement of Maale Adumim and building the wall around it, thereby further disconnecting occupied East Jerusalem from the northern and southern parts of the West Bank and isolating its Palestinian population;

(e) The implications for the final status negotiations of Israel's announcement that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including the settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(f) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the occupied Palestinian territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent, in which case it would be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(g) The Israeli decision to establish and operate a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(h) The continued closures of and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the restriction of the freedom of movement of people and goods, including the repeated closure of the crossing points of the Gaza Strip, which have created an extremely precarious humanitarian situation for the civilian population, as well as having impaired the economic and social rights of the Palestinian people;

(i) The continued construction, contrary to international law, of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem;

(j) The latest Israeli plans to demolish hundreds of houses in occupied East Jerusalem, including their decision to demolish more than eighty eight houses in the Al-Bustan neighbourhood of Silwan, which would result in the displacement of more than two thousand Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem, in addition to the Israeli decision to evacuate Palestinian families from their houses in Al-Sheikh Jarrah and Beit Hanina areas of East Jerusalem and to replace them with Israeli settlers;

5. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of the existing settlements, including “natural growth” and related activities, including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

6. Urges the full implementation of the Access and Movement Agreement of 15 November 2005, particularly the urgent reopening of the Rafah and Karni crossings, which is crucial to ensuring the passage of foodstuffs and essential supplies, as well as the access of United Nations agencies to and within the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

7. Calls upon Israel to implement the relevant resolutions and recommendations of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council relating to the situation of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

8. Also calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

9. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

10. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process in line with the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors’ Conference for the Palestinian State, and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973 and 1850 (2008) of 16 December 2008. and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo Accords, the Arab Peace initiative and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

11. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its nineteenth session.

48th meeting
25 March 2011

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, with no abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Ecuador, France, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Hungary, Japan, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovakia, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uruguay, Zambia

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
10 April 2012

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Nineteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

19/17

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied

* The resolutions and decisions adopted by the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its nineteenth session (A/HRC/19/2), chap. I.

Palestinian Territory, and its conclusion that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were established in breach of international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, are illegal under international law and constitute very serious violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein, and undermine international efforts, including the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007 and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State of 17 December 2007, aimed at invigorating the peace process and establishing a viable, contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State by the end of 2008,

Recalling the statement made by the Quartet on 21 September 2010 and its attachment to the implementation by the parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activities,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around Occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activity undermines the realization of a two-State solution,

Expressing grave concern about the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian Territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the conclusions of the Council of the European Union on the Middle East peace process of 8 December 2009, in which the Council reiterated that settlements, the separation barrier where built on occupied land, demolition of homes and evictions are illegal under international law, constitute an obstacle to peace and threaten to make a two-State solution impossible, and particularly its urgent call upon the Government of Israel to immediately end all settlement activities, in East Jerusalem and the rest of the West Bank, and including natural growth, and to dismantle all outposts erected since March 2001;

2. Welcomes with appreciation the statements made by the majority of the States Members of the United Nations on the illegality of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem, and reaffirming the urgent calls by the international community upon the Government of Israel to stop immediately all settlement activities, including in East Jerusalem;

3. Condemns the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the West Bank and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they undermine the peace process, constitute a threat to the two-State solution and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State, and are in violation of international law, and calls upon the Government of Israel to reverse immediately its decisions, which would further undermine and jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final settlement compliant with international legitimacy, including relevant United Nations resolutions;

4. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention, and recalls that settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) The increasing number of newly built structures, in 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011 and 2012 amounting to several thousands, including a large number of permanent buildings and structures, which undermine the efforts of the international community to advance the Middle East peace process;

(c) The implications for the final status negotiations of Israel's announcement that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including the settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(d) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the occupied Palestinian territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent, in which case it would be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(e) The Israeli decision to establish and operate a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of the existing settlements, including "natural growth" and related activities, including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

6. Calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

7. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

8. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process in line with the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State, and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 478 (1980) of 20 August 1980, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 1850 (2008) of 16 December 2008, and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo Accords, the Arab Peace initiative and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

9. Decides to dispatch an independent international fact-finding mission, to be appointed by the President of the Human Rights Council, to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, with a mandate ending on submission of a report to the Council, and calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, not to obstruct the process of investigation and to cooperate fully with the mission;

10. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide all administrative, technical and logistical assistance to enable the mission to fulfil its mandate promptly and efficiently;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution at its twentieth session;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*53rd meeting
22 March 2012*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 36 to 1, with 10 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Congo, Cuba, Djibouti, Ecuador, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Libya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda, Uruguay

Against:

United States of America

Abstaining:

Cameroon, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Guatemala, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Spain]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
12 April 2013

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-second session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

22/26.

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied

* The resolutions and decisions adopted by the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its twenty-second session (A/HRC/22/2), chap. I.

Palestinian Territory, and its conclusion that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were established in breach of international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, are illegal under international law and constitute very serious violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein, and undermine international efforts, including the Annapolis Peace Conference of 27 November 2007 and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State of 17 December 2007, aimed at invigorating the peace process and establishing a viable, contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State by the end of 2008,

Recalling the statement made by the Quartet on 21 September 2010 and its attachment to the implementation by the parties of their obligations under the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activities,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement building and expansion in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law and relevant United Nations resolutions, including plans to expand and connect Israeli settlements around Occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State,

Expressing its concern that continuing Israeli settlement activity undermines the realization of a two-State solution,

Expressing grave concern about the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution impossible to implement and which is causing the Palestinian people further humanitarian hardship,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of the Government of Israel to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian Territories occupied since 1967,

1. Welcomes the conclusions of the Council of the European Union on the Middle East peace process of 8 December 2009, in which the European Union Council of Ministers reiterated that settlements, the separation barrier where built on occupied land, and the demolition of homes and evictions are illegal under international law, constitute an obstacle to peace and threaten to make a two-State solution impossible, and particularly its urgent call upon the Government of Israel to immediately end all settlement activities, in East Jerusalem and the rest of the West Bank, and including natural growth, and to dismantle all outposts erected since March 2001;

2. Welcomes with appreciation the statements made by the majority of the States Members of the United Nations on the illegality of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and reaffirming the urgent calls by the international community upon the Government of Israel to stop immediately all settlement activities, including in East Jerusalem;

3. Condemns the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the West Bank and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they undermine the peace process, constitute a threat to the two-State solution and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State, and are in violation of international law, and calls upon the Government of Israel to reverse immediately its decisions, which would further undermine and jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final settlement compliant with international legitimacy, including relevant United Nations resolutions;

4. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, in violation of international law, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 of that Convention, and recalls that settlements are a major obstacle to the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace and to the creation of an independent, viable, sovereign and democratic Palestinian State;

(b) The increasing number of newly built structures, in 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011 and 2012 amounting to several thousands, including a large number of permanent buildings and structures, which undermine the efforts of the international community to advance the Middle East peace process;

(c) The implications for the final status negotiations of Israel's announcement that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including the settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(d) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the occupied Palestinian territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accompli on the ground that could well be permanent, in which case it would be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(e) The operation by Israel of a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Urges Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including "natural growth" and related activities, including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

(c) To immediately reverse its decision to unfreeze the planning process on the E-1 plan which, if implemented, would seriously undermine the prospects of a negotiated resolution of the conflict by jeopardizing the prospects of a contiguous and viable Palestinian State and of Jerusalem as the future capital of two States, and could also entail the forced transfer of the Palestinian civilian population;

6. Calls upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

7. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

8. Urges the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process in line with the Annapolis Peace Conference and the Paris International Donors' Conference for the Palestinian State, and to implement fully the road map endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003, with the aim of reaching a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 478 (1980) of 20 August 1980, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 1850 (2008) of 16 December 2008, and other relevant United Nations resolutions, the principles of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, held in Madrid on 30 October 1991, the Oslo Accords, the Arab Peace initiative and subsequent agreements, which will allow two States, Israel and Palestine, to live in peace and security;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution at its twenty-fifth session;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*50th meeting
22 March 2013*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 44 to 1, with 2 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, Congo, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Ecuador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Gabon, Germany, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Libya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Montenegro, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

United States of America

Abstaining:

Côte d'Ivoire, Kenya]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
11 April 2014

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-fifth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council

25/28.

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Mindful that Israel is a party to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable de jure to Palestinian and all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and recalling the declaration adopted by the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

GE.14-13482

* 1 4 1 3 4 8 2 *

Please recycle The recycling symbol, consisting of three chasing arrows forming a triangle.

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, as well as the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Taking note also of the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, undermine regional and international efforts aimed at the realization of the two-State solution of Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and security within recognized borders, on the basis of the pre-1967 borders,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically the Quartet's call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001, and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012, by which, inter alia, Palestine was accorded the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations, and taking note of the follow-up report thereon of the Secretary-General,²

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the forced displacement of Palestinian civilians, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

Expressing grave concern at the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions, the agreements reached between the parties and obligations under the Quartet road map, and in defiance of the calls by the international community to cease all settlement activities,

Expressing grave concern in particular at the construction and expansion by Israel of settlements in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, thus threatening the creation of a contiguous Palestinian State, as well as at the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city and ongoing settlement activities in the Jordan Valley,

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² A/67/738.

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction, contrary to international law, by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, is fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, and could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Deploring settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, as well as any activities involving the confiscation of land, the disruption of the livelihood of protected persons, the forced displacement of civilians and the de facto annexation of land,

Gravely concerned at the rising number of incidents of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including historic and religious sites, and agricultural lands,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights,³ which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and urge States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas,

Reaffirming the fact that the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War undertook to respect and ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances, and that States should not recognize an unlawful situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses, ³ A/HRC/17/31, annex.

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately and completely cease all of its settlement activities in all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and calls in this regard for the full implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980 and 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and in particular article 49 thereof;

6. Also condemns the recent Israeli announcements of the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the West Bank and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they seriously undermine the peace process and jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final settlement compliant with international legitimacy, including relevant United Nations resolutions, constitute a threat to the two-State solution and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign, independent Palestinian State, and are in violation of international law and would entail the forced transfer of Palestinian civilians, and calls upon Israel to immediately reverse its decisions;

7. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The increasing number of newly built structures over the past years and to date, undermining the efforts of the international community to advance the Middle East peace process;

(b) The implications for the final status negotiations of Israel's announcement that it will retain the major settlement blocks in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including the settlements located in the Jordan Valley;

(c) The expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones on the occupied Palestinian territory rendered inaccessible behind the wall, which create a fait accomplish on the ground that could well be permanent, in which case it would be tantamount to de facto annexation;

(d) The operation by Israel of a tramway between West Jerusalem and the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Zeev, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

8. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and discard its E-1 plan;

(b) To immediately cease construction of the new illegal settlement highway (the "Begin Highway") in the neighbourhood of Beit Safafa in occupied East Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law;

(c) To put an end to the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(d) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies or practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, to the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, and to the application of a two-tier legal system;

(e) To put an end to measures resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for, and preventing, all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian populations;

9. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union from 2014 onwards;

10. Encourages all States and international organizations to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect of their obligations under international law with regard to all illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly Israeli settlements;

11. Urges all States:

(a) To ensure that they are not taking actions that assist the expansion of settlements or construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to take appropriate measures to encourage businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, and to refrain from committing or contributing to gross human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards;

(c) To provide information to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, as well as the possible abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including economic and financial activities, the provision of services in settlements and the purchasing of property;

12. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

13. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

14. Welcomes the decision of the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises to issue a statement before the twenty-sixth session of the Human Rights Council, in follow-up to Council resolution 22/29;

15. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to present a report detailing the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian People throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-eighth session;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution at its twenty-eighth session;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*56th meeting
28 March 2014*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Czech Republic, Estonia,

Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Germany, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Maldives, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco, Namibia, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), Viet Nam

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
10 April 2015

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-eighth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council

28/26. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, and recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014,

Noting the recent accession by Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

GE.15-07548 (E)

* 1 5 0 7 5 4 8 *

Please recycle The recycling symbol, consisting of three chasing arrows forming a triangle.

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, and the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Recalling the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Noting that Israel has over the years been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001 and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012, by which, inter alia, Palestine was accorded the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations, and taking note of the follow-up report thereon of the Secretary-General,²

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the forcible displacement of Palestinian civilians, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources, the conduct of economic activity for the benefit of the occupying Power, the disruption of the livelihood of protected persons, the de facto annexation of land and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, undermine regional and international efforts aimed at the realization of the two-State solution of Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and security within recognized borders, on the basis of the pre-1967 borders,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely limiting the possibility of a

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² A/67/738.

contiguous territory and the ability to dispose freely of natural resources, both of which are required for the meaningful exercise of Palestinian self-determination,

Noting that the settlement enterprise continues to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights,

Condemning the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions, the agreements reached between the parties and obligations under the Quartet road map and in defiance of the calls by the international community to cease all settlement activities,

Expressing grave concern in particular at the construction and expansion by Israel of settlements in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city and ongoing settlement activities in the Jordan Valley,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, is fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, and could prejudice future negotiations by creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Gravely concerned at the incidents of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians and their properties, which are a long-standing phenomenon that appears to be aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Stressing the need for Israel to investigate all acts of settler violence against Palestinians and their properties and to ensure accountability for these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Noting that the agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of the dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets owing to the construction, consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Reaffirming the fact that the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War undertook to respect and to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances, and that States should not recognize an unlawful situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Calling upon all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned about economic activities that allow the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, and aware that the conditions of harvesting and production for products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and calls in this regard for the full implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980 and 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion of Palestinians and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 thereof;

6. Also condemns the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the West Bank and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they seriously undermine the peace process, jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final and just peace solution compliant with international legitimacy, including relevant United Nations resolutions, and constitute a threat to the two-State solution;

7. Expresses its grave concern at, and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The operation by Israel of a tramway linking the settlements with West Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, declarations of so-called “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing Palestinians from full participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

8. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its E-1 plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies or practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers who reside illegally in the said territory, to the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, and to the application of a two-tier legal system;

(d) To cease the requisition and expropriation of Palestinian land and the allocation of “State land” for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all measures and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring a halt to all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian populations;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

9. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union from 2014 onwards;

10. Encourages all States and international organizations to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect of their obligations under international law with regard to all illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly Israeli settlements;

11. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

12. Urges all States:

(a) To ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize or assist the expansion of settlements or construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing or contributing to gross human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards;

(c) To provide information to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks and the possible abuses of the rights of individuals of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including economic and financial activities, the provision of services in settlements and the purchasing of property, and to consider informing businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights;

13. Encourages business enterprises to take transparent action to comply with the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights with respect to their activities relating to

Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid contributing to the establishment or maintenance of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

14. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

15. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011 on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

16. Takes note of the statement of the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises in follow-up to Human Rights Council resolution 22/29;

17. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to present a report detailing the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian People throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to the Human Rights Council at its thirty-first session;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution at its thirty-first session;

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*57th meeting
27 March 2015*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, with 1 abstention. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Botswana, Brazil, China, Congo, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, El Salvador, Estonia, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Maldives, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco, Namibia, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), Viet Nam

Against:

United States of America

Abstaining:

Paraguay]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
20 April 2016

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-first session

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 24 March 2016

31/36. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, and recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014,

Noting the recent accession by Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

GE.16-06472(E)

Please recycle

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, and the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Recalling the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Noting that Israel has over the years been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001, and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012, by which, inter alia, Palestine was accorded the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations, and also of the follow-up report thereon of the Secretary-General,²

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the forcible displacement of Palestinian civilians, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources, the conduct of economic activity for the benefit of the occupying Power, the disruption of the livelihood of protected persons, the de facto annexation of land and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, undermine regional and international efforts aimed at the realization of the two-State solution of Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and security within recognized borders, on the basis of the pre-1967 borders, and stressing that the continuation of these policies seriously endangers the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization,

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² A/67/738.

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely limiting the possibility of a contiguous territory and the ability to dispose freely of natural resources, both of which are required for the meaningful exercise of Palestinian self-determination,

Noting that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its existence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Condemning the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions, the agreements reached between the parties and obligations under the Quartet road map, and in defiance of the calls by the international community to cease all settlement activities,

Expressing grave concern in particular at the construction and expansion by Israel of settlements in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the Jordan Valley,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, is fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, and could prejudice future negotiations by creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Gravely concerned at all acts of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including homes, agricultural lands and historic and religious sites, and the acts of terror carried out by several extremist Israeli settlers, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Expressing concern at ongoing impunity for acts of settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their properties, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Noting that the agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of the dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets owing to the construction, consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Reaffirming the fact that the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, undertook to respect and to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances, and that States should not recognize an unlawful situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Calling upon all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, and aware that the conditions of harvesting and production for products made in settlements involve the breach of applicable legal norms, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and calls in this regard for the full implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980 and 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the expulsion and displacement of Palestinians, including entire communities and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 thereof;

6. Also condemns the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the West Bank and around occupied East Jerusalem, as it seriously undermines the peace process and jeopardizes the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final and just peace solution compliant with international law and legitimacy, including relevant United Nations resolutions, and constitutes a threat to the two-State solution;

7. Expresses its grave concern at, and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The operation by Israel of a tramway linking the settlements with West Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance and the creation of unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, declarations of so-called “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing Palestinians from full participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

8. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its “E-1” plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, to the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called “State land”, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all measures and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

9. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

10. Encourages all States and international organizations to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect of their obligations under international law with regard to all illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly Israeli settlements;

11. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949;

12. Urges all States:

(a) To ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, including with regard to the issue of trading with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing or contributing to gross human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking all necessary steps;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses, and abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, procurements, loans and the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

13. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights and to avoid contributing to the establishment or maintenance of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

14. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹ and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

15. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

16. Takes note of the statement of the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises in follow-up to Human Rights Council resolution 22/29;

17. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in close consultation with the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹ and as a necessary step for the implementation of the recommendation contained in paragraph 117 thereof, to produce a database of all business enterprises involved in the activities detailed in paragraph 96 of the afore-mentioned report, to be updated annually, and to transmit the data therein in the form of a report to the Council at its thirty-fourth session;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution, with particular emphasis on the human rights and international law violations involved in the production of settlement goods and the relationship between trade in these goods and the maintenance and economic growth of settlements, at its thirty-fourth session;

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*66th meeting
24 March 2016*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 32 to 0, with 15 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Bangladesh, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Botswana, Burundi, China, Congo, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Maldives, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Namibia, Nigeria, Panama, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Switzerland, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), Viet Nam

Abstaining:

Albania, Belgium, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Latvia, Netherlands, Paraguay, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Slovenia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland]

Human Rights Council*Thirty-fourth session

27 February–24 March 2017

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 24 March 201734/31. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, and recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014,

Noting the accession by Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, and the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Recalling the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001, and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012, by which, inter alia, Palestine was accorded the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations, and also of the follow-up report thereon of the Secretary-General,²

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the destruction of property, including homes and projects funded by the international community, the forcible displacement of Palestinian civilians, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources, the conduct of economic activity for the benefit of the occupying Power, the disruption of the livelihood of protected persons and the de facto annexation of land, and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² A/67/738.

Affirming that the Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, undermine regional and international efforts aimed at the realization of the two-State solution of Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and security within recognized borders, on the basis of the pre-1967 borders, and stressing that the continuation of these policies seriously endangers the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization, and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely limiting the possibility of a contiguous territory and the ability to dispose freely of natural resources, both of which are required for the meaningful exercise of Palestinian self-determination,

Noting that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Condemning the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in East Jerusalem, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions, the agreements reached between the parties and obligations under the Quartet road map, and in defiance of the calls by the international community to cease all settlement activities,

Deploring in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city and ongoing settlement activities in the Jordan Valley, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, is fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, and could prejudice future negotiations by creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Gravely concerned at all acts of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including homes, agricultural lands and historic and religious sites, and the acts of terror carried out by several extremist Israeli settlers, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Expressing concern at ongoing impunity for acts of settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their properties, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Noting that the agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of the dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets owing to the construction, consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements,

Aware that numerous Israeli policies and practices related to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, create a system that privileges Israeli settlements and settlers, against the Palestinian people and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Reaffirming the fact that the High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, undertook to respect and to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances, and that States should not recognize an unlawful situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and calls in this regard for the full implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the forcible transfer of Palestinians, including entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and constitute a violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 49 thereof;

6. Also condemns the construction of new housing units for Israeli settlers in the West Bank and around occupied East Jerusalem, as they seriously undermine the peace process and jeopardize the ongoing efforts by the international community to reach a final and just peace solution compliant with international law and legitimacy, including relevant United Nations resolutions, and constitute a threat to the two-State solution;

7. Expresses its grave concern at declarations by Israeli officials calling for the annexation of Palestinian land, and reaffirms the prohibition of the acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force;

8. Also expresses its grave concern at, and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The operation by Israel of a tramway linking the settlements with West Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance and the creation of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of so-called “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing Palestinians from full participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

9. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its E-1 plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, to the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called “State land”, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all measures and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves, and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for, and preventing, all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

10. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

11. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect of their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

12. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949;

13. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the inmitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence, with a view to promoting accountability;

14. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

15. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

16. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

17. Takes note of the statement of the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises in follow-up to Human Rights Council resolution 22/29;

18. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council at its thirty-seventh session;

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*58th meeting
24 March 2017*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 36 to 2, with 9 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, China, Congo, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Netherlands, Nigeria, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Slovenia, South Africa, Switzerland, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Togo, United States of America

Abstaining:

Albania, Croatia, Georgia, Hungary, Latvia, Panama, Paraguay, Rwanda, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland]

Human Rights Council

Thirty-seventh session

26 February–23 March 2018

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 23 March 2018*37/36. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize an unlawful situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, and the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Recalling the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001, and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012, by which, inter alia, Palestine was accorded the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations, and also of the follow-up report thereon of the Secretary-General,²

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the destruction of property, including homes and projects funded by the international community, the forcible displacement of Palestinian civilians, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources, the conduct of economic activity for the benefit of the occupying Power, disruption to the livelihood of protected persons, the de facto annexation of land and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights,

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² A/67/738.

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely limiting the possibility of a contiguous territory and the ability to dispose freely of natural resources, both of which are required for the meaningful exercise of Palestinian self-determination,

Noting that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploing in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the Jordan Valley, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Gravely concerned at all acts of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including homes, agricultural lands and historic and religious sites, and the acts of terror carried out by several extremist Israeli settlers, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Expressing concern at ongoing impunity for acts of settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their properties, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Noting that the agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of the dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets owing to the construction, consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements,

Aware that numerous Israeli policies and practices related to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers, against the Palestinian people and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and calls in this regard for the full implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the forcible transfer of Palestinians, including entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Expresses its grave concern at declarations by Israeli officials calling for the annexation of Palestinian land, and reaffirms the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force;

7. Also expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The operation by Israel of a tramway linking the settlements with West Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance and the creation of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

8. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its so-called E-1 plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

9. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

10. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

11. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

12. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the inmitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

13. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

14. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

15. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

16. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report to the Human Rights Council on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution at its fortieth session;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*56th meeting
23 March 2018*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 34 to 4, with 8 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Afghanistan, Angola, Belgium, Brazil, Burundi, Chile, China, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Germany, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Australia, Hungary, Togo, United States of America

Abstaining:

Croatia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Georgia, Panama, Rwanda, Slovakia, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland]

Human Rights CouncilFortieth session

25 February–22 March 2019

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council
on 22 March 2019*40/24. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize as lawful a situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, and the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Recalling the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001, and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012, by which, inter alia, Palestine was accorded the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations, and also of the follow-up report thereon of the Secretary-General,²

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the destruction of property, including homes and projects funded by the international community, the forcible displacement of Palestinian civilians, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources, the conduct of economic activity for the benefit of the occupying Power, disruption to the livelihood of protected persons, the de facto annexation of land and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely limiting the possibility of a contiguous territory and the ability to dispose freely of natural resources, both of which are required for the meaningful exercise of Palestinian self-determination, and deeply concerned that the magnitude, persistence and character of the settlement enterprise suggest that the occupation has been established with the intention of making it permanent, in violation of the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force,

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² A/67/738.

Noting also that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploring in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the Jordan Valley, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Gravely concerned at all acts of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including homes, agricultural lands and historic and religious sites, and the acts of terror carried out by several extremist Israeli settlers, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Expressing concern at ongoing impunity for acts of settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their properties, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Noting that the agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of the dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets owing to the construction, consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements,

Aware that numerous Israeli policies and practices related to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers, against the Palestinian people and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard, including the obligation to ensure respect for the Fourth Geneva Convention,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and to cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, the forcible transfer of Palestinians, including entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Expresses its grave concern at declarations by Israeli officials calling for the annexation of Palestinian land, and reaffirms the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force;

7. Also expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The operation by Israel of a tramway linking the settlements with West Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance and the creation of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

8. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its so-called E-1 plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

9. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

10. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

11. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

12. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the immitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

13. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

14. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

15. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

16. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report to the Human Rights Council on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution at its forty-third session, with particular emphasis on the policies and practices linked to the settlement enterprise that discriminate against the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*54th meeting
22 March 2019*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 32 to 5, with 10 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Afghanistan, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Cuba, Egypt, Eritrea, Fiji, Iceland, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Tunisia, Uruguay

Against:

Australia, Denmark, Hungary, Togo, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland

Abstaining:

Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Croatia, Czechia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Slovakia, Ukraine]

Human Rights CouncilForty-third session

24 February–13 March and 15–23 June 2020

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 22 June 2020*43/31. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 19/17 of 22 March 2012, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize as lawful a situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Deeply concerned that the wall's route has been traced in such a way to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Taking note of the recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party, and the recent reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

Recalling the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,¹

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Recalling the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and emphasizing specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity, including so-called natural growth, and the dismantlement of all settlement outposts erected since March 2001, and the need for Israel to uphold its obligations and commitments in this regard,

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the destruction of property, including humanitarian relief items, homes, community infrastructure and projects funded by the international community, the forcible displacement of Palestinian civilians or threat thereof, including Bedouin families, the exploitation of natural resources, the conduct of economic activity for the benefit of the occupying Power, disruption to the livelihood of protected persons, the de facto annexation of land and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population and the civilian population in the occupied Syrian Golan that are contrary to international law,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely limiting the possibility of a contiguous territory and the ability to dispose freely of natural resources, both of which are required for the meaningful exercise of Palestinian self-determination, and deeply concerned that the magnitude, persistence and character of the settlement enterprise suggest that the occupation has been established with the intention of making it permanent, in violation of the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force,

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

Noting also that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploring in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Gravely concerned at all acts of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including homes, agricultural lands and historic and religious sites, and the acts of terror carried out by several extremist Israeli settlers, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Expressing concern at the ongoing impunity for acts of settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their properties, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources, including the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Noting that the agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of the dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets owing to the construction, consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements,

Aware that numerous Israeli policies and practices related to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers, against the Palestinian people and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 22/29 of 22 March 2013, in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard, including the obligation to ensure respect for the Fourth Geneva Convention,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and to cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property, including humanitarian relief consignments, the forcible transfer of Palestinians, including entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Also condemns the declarations made by Israeli officials calling for the annexation of Palestinian land, and reaffirms the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force;

7. Expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The operation by Israel of a tramway linking the settlements with West Jerusalem, which is in clear violation of international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance and the creation of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

8. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, which may be contrary to international law, to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its so-called E-1 plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

9. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

10. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

11. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

12. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the immitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

13. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

14. Requests that all parties concerned, including United Nations bodies, implement and ensure the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and endorsed by the Human Rights Council through its resolution 22/29, in accordance with their respective mandates;

15. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

16. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to prepare a report on the consequences of the intensification of settlement activity and other steps taken towards formal annexation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in and around East Jerusalem and the so-called E-1 area, for the contiguity of the Palestinian Territory and their implications for the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people, and to present the report to the Human Rights Council at its forty-sixth session;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*46th meeting
22 June 2020*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 36 to 2, with 9 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Afghanistan, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Burkina Faso, Chile, Denmark, Eritrea, Fiji, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Libya, Mauritania, Mexico, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Uruguay, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Australia, Marshall Islands

Abstaining:

Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Czechia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Slovakia, Togo, Ukraine]

Human Rights CouncilForty-sixth session

22 February–24 March 2021

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 24 March 2021*46/26. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also all relevant United Nations reports, including reports by mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, and calling upon all duty bearers and United Nations bodies to pursue the implementation of the recommendations contained therein,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (Fourth Geneva Convention), to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize as lawful a situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, thereby causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Expressing its grave concern also at the calls made by Israeli officials for the annexation of Palestinian lands,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, supporting and encouraging the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely undermining the exercise of Palestinian self-determination, and deeply concerned that the magnitude, persistence and character of the settlement enterprise suggest that the occupation has been established with the intention of making it permanent, in violation of the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force,

Noting also that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of the Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploping in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes and eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Gravely concerned about all acts of terror, violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the confiscation of land, denial of access to farmers and the dispossession of their land and crops, the forced diversion of water resources, the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic consequences in this regard, including the loss of livelihoods in the agricultural sector, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Aware also that numerous Israeli policies and practices relating to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers against the Palestinian people, and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard, including the obligation to ensure respect for the Fourth Geneva Convention,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and to cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the transfer of its nationals into the occupied territory, the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation and de facto annexation of land, the demolition of homes and community infrastructure, disruptions to the livelihood of protected persons, the confiscation and destruction of property, including humanitarian relief consignments, the forcible transfer of Palestinian civilians or the threat thereof, including of entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The conduct of economic activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, for the benefit of the settlement enterprise and associated activities;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance, including projects funded by the international community, and the creation of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological sites” to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

7. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, which may be contrary to international law, to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, to prevent any new installation of settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem, and to discard its so-called E-1 plan;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and the enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage to, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

8. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

9. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

10. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

11. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the immitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, the importation of settlement products, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

12. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

13. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

14. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council at its forty-ninth session;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*51st meeting
24 March 2021*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 36 to 3, with 8 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Argentina, Armenia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Burkina Faso, China, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Denmark, Eritrea, Fiji, France, Gabon, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Libya, Mauritania, Mexico, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Uruguay, Uzbekistan and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Czechia, Marshall Islands and United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland

Abstaining:

Austria, Bahamas, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Malawi, Togo and Ukraine]

Human Rights CouncilForty-ninth session

28 February–1 April 2022

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 1 April 2022*49/29. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also all relevant United Nations reports, including reports by mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, and calling upon all duty bearers and United Nations bodies to pursue the implementation of the recommendations contained therein,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (Fourth Geneva Convention), to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize as lawful a situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary international law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, thereby causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining its viability, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Expressing its grave concern also at the calls made by Israeli officials for the annexation of Palestinian territory in whole or in part, and recalling that such measures are internationally wrongful and are not to be recognized, aided or assisted,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, facilitating and promoting the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely undermining the exercise of Palestinian self-determination, and deeply concerned that the magnitude, persistence and character of the settlement enterprise suggest that the occupation has been established with the intention of making it permanent, in violation of the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force,

Noting also that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating Israel's belligerent occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploing in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes, livelihoods and community infrastructure, including those structures provided as humanitarian relief by State-donors and independent humanitarian agencies, the eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Gravely concerned about all acts of terror, violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the appropriation of land, denial of access to farmers and the dispossession of their land and crops, the forced diversion of water resources, the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic and humanitarian consequences in this regard, including the loss of livelihoods in the agricultural sector, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Aware also that numerous Israeli policies and practices relating to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers against the Palestinian people, and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard, including the obligation to ensure respect for the Fourth Geneva Convention,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements, thereby contributing to the economic incentive structure perpetuating the occupation and its illegal manifestations throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and to cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the transfer of its nationals into the occupied territory, the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation and de facto annexation of land, the demolition of homes and community infrastructure, disruptions to the livelihood of protected persons, the confiscation and destruction of property, including humanitarian relief consignments, the forcible transfer of Palestinian civilians or the threat thereof, including of entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The conduct of economic activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, for the benefit of the settlement enterprise and associated activities;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance, including projects funded by the international community, and the creation of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions by Israel in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological” sites to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of Israel’s obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

7. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, which may be contrary to international law, to reverse and redress the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the establishment of new settlements and the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, and to discard any and all plans to install settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties and to afford all victims of settler violence access to justice and effective remedy without discrimination in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

8. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

9. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that either recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

10. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

11. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the inmitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, the importation of settlement products, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

12. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

13. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

14. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council at its fifty-second session;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*58th meeting
1 April 2022*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 38 to 4, with 5 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Argentina, Armenia, Benin, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), China, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kazakhstan, Libya, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mexico, Montenegro, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Pakistan, Paraguay, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Malawi, Marshall Islands, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America

Abstaining:

Brazil, Cameroon, Honduras, Lithuania, Ukraine]

Human Rights CouncilFifty-second session

27 February–4 April 2023

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 4 April 2023*52/35. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also all relevant United Nations reports, including reports by mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, and calling upon all duty bearers and United Nations bodies to pursue the implementation of the recommendations contained therein,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (Fourth Geneva Convention), to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize as lawful a situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies constitutes a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary international law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of settlements and the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern in particular at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, thereby causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining the viability of a Palestinian State, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Expressing its grave concern also at the calls made by Israeli officials for the annexation of Palestinian territory in whole or in part, and recalling that such measures are internationally wrongful and are not to be recognized, aided or assisted,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, facilitating and promoting the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermining the physical possibility of its realization and entrenching a one-State reality of unequal rights, and constitute an attempted acquisition of sovereignty over territory through the denial of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely undermining the exercise of Palestinian self-determination, and deeply concerned that the magnitude, persistence and character of the settlement enterprise suggest that the occupation has been established with the intention of making it permanent, in violation of the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force,

Noting also that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating the prolonged and belligerent occupation by Israel of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploping in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes, livelihoods and community infrastructure, including those structures provided as humanitarian relief by State donors and independent humanitarian agencies, the eviction of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city, and ongoing settlement activities in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Gravely concerned about all acts of terror, violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, which are a long-standing phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, displacing the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements, and stressing the need for Israel to investigate and to ensure accountability for all of these acts,

Aware of the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the appropriation of land, denial of access to farmers and the dispossession of their land and crops, the forced diversion of water resources, the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic and humanitarian consequences in this regard, including the loss of livelihoods in the agricultural sector, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Aware also that numerous Israeli policies and practices relating to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers against the Palestinian people, and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and call upon States to provide adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas, including by ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve, inter alia, the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard, including the obligation to ensure respect for the Fourth Geneva Convention,

Aware that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Aware also of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements, thereby contributing to the economic incentive structure perpetuating the occupation and its illegal manifestations throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and to cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the transfer of its nationals into the occupied territory, the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation and de facto annexation of land, the demolition of homes and community infrastructure, disruptions to the livelihood of protected persons, the confiscation and destruction of property, including humanitarian relief consignments, the forcible transfer of Palestinian civilians or the threat thereof, including of entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The conduct of economic activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, for the benefit of the settlement enterprise and associated activities;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forcible transfer and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance, including projects funded by the international community, and the creation by Israel of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological sites” to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

7. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, which may be contrary to international law, to reverse and redress the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards the dismantlement of the settlement enterprise, to stop immediately the establishment of new settlements and the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, and to discard any and all plans to install settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination, and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of separate roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements, and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and which are isolating Palestinian communities into separate enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties and to afford all victims of settler violence access to justice and effective remedy without discrimination in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

8. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union Guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

9. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

10. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

11. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, including not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories with regard to, inter alia, the issue of trade with settlements, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate measures to help to ensure that businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the inmitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, investments, purchases, the importation of settlement products, procurements, loans, the provision of services, and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, to inform businesses of these risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability;

12. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards with respect to their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to avoid the adverse impact of such activities on human rights, and to avoid contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

13. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011, on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

14. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council at its fifty-fifth session;

15. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*57th meeting
4 April 2023*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 38 to 4, with 5 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Chile, China, Costa Rica, Côte d’Ivoire, Cuba, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Honduras, India, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco, Nepal,

Pakistan, Paraguay, Qatar, Senegal, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan and Viet Nam

Against:

Czechia, Malawi, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and United States of America

Abstaining:

Cameroon, Georgia, Lithuania, Romania and Ukraine]

Human Rights Council*Fifty-fifth session

26 February–5 April 2024

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 5 April 2024*55/32. Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable instruments,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem,

Recalling also all relevant United Nations reports, including reports by mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, and calling upon all duty bearers and United Nations bodies to pursue the implementation of the recommendations contained therein,

Noting the accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties and the core humanitarian law conventions, and its accession on 2 January 2015 to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (Fourth Geneva Convention), to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Recalling the declarations adopted at the Conferences of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, held in Geneva on 5 December 2001 and 17 December 2014, and reaffirming that States should not recognize as lawful a situation arising from breaches of peremptory norms of international law,

Affirming that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies, and the forcible transfer of the protected Palestinian population, constitute grave breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary international law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Expressing grave concern at the continuing construction by Israel of its illegal settlements and the illegal wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, in violation of international law, and expressing its concern, in particular, at the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, and in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, thereby causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline in socioeconomic conditions for the Palestinian people, fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory and undermining the viability of a Palestinian State, creating a fait accompli on the ground that could be tantamount to de facto annexation in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949 and making the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law,

Expressing its grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relevant to Jerusalem,

Expressing its grave concern also at the calls made by Israeli officials for the annexation of Palestinian territory in whole or in part, and recalling that such measures are internationally wrongful and are not to be recognized, aided or assisted,

Noting that Israel has been planning, implementing, facilitating and promoting the establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967, through, inter alia, the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers,

Affirming that the Israeli settlement policies and practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, seriously endanger the viability of the two-State solution, undermine the physical possibility of its realization, entrench a one-State reality of unequal rights and constitute an attempted acquisition of sovereignty over territory through the denial of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Noting in this regard that the Israeli settlements fragment the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, into isolated geographical units, severely undermining the exercise of Palestinian self-determination, and deeply concerned that the magnitude, persistence and character of the settlement enterprise and explicit statements made by Israeli officials confirm that the occupation has been established with the intention of making it permanent, in violation of the prohibition of acquisition of territory resulting from the use of force,

Noting also that the settlement enterprise and the impunity associated with its persistence, expansion and related violence continue to be a root cause of many violations of Palestinians' human rights, and constitute the main factors perpetuating the prolonged and belligerent occupation by Israel of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, since 1967,

Deploping in particular the construction and expansion of settlements by Israel in and around occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan, which aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate occupied East Jerusalem, the continuing demolition of Palestinian homes, livelihoods and community infrastructure, including those structures provided as humanitarian relief by State donors and independent humanitarian agencies, the forcible transfer of Palestinian families from the city, the revocation of Palestinian residency rights in the city and ongoing settlement activities in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, all of which further fragment and undermine the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Gravely concerned about all acts of terror, violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers and groups of armed settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, against Palestinian civilians, including children, and their properties, including historic and religious sites and agricultural lands, which constitute a long-standing and State-sponsored phenomenon aimed at, inter alia, accelerating the forcible transfer of the occupied population and facilitating the expansion of settlements,

Expressing grave concern at the impunity for acts of settler violence and terrorism, stressing the failure of Israel to properly investigate and ensure accountability for all of those acts, despite knowledge of the identities of settlers engaged in acts of violence, intimidation or terror against Palestinian civilians, often with military support and under the protection of and with the participation of Israeli occupying forces, and stressing also the need for international investigations in this regard,

Gravely concerned by the detrimental impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially as a result of the appropriation of land, denial of access to farmers and the dispossession of their land and crops, the forced diversion of water resources, the destruction of orchards and crops and the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers, and of the dire socioeconomic and humanitarian consequences in this regard, including the loss of livelihoods in the agricultural sector, which precludes the Palestinian people from being able to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Acknowledging that numerous Israeli policies and practices relating to settlement activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, amount to blatant discrimination, including through the creation of a system privileging Israeli settlements and settlers against the Palestinian people, and in violation of their human rights,

Recalling the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which place responsibilities on all business enterprises to respect human rights by, inter alia, refraining from contributing to human rights abuses arising from conflict, and calling upon States to take appropriate steps to prevent, investigate, punish and redress human rights abuses through effective policies, legislation, regulations and adjudication, including by providing adequate assistance to business enterprises to assess and address the heightened risks of abuses in conflict-affected areas and ensuring that their current policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures are effective in addressing the risk of business involvement in gross human rights abuses,

Noting that, in situations of armed conflict, business enterprises should respect the standards of international humanitarian law, and concerned that some business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

Emphasizing the importance for States to act in accordance with their own national legislation on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law with regard to business activities that result in human rights abuses,

Concerned that economic activities, including the production and trade of settlement goods, facilitate the expansion and entrenchment of settlements, thus strengthening and perpetuating the Israeli occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Aware that the conditions of harvesting and production of products made in settlements involve the breach of applicable legal norms, including international humanitarian law, human rights, permanent sovereignty over natural resources and the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and calling upon all States to respect their legal obligations in this regard, including the obligation to ensure respect for the Fourth Geneva Convention,

Aware also that products wholly or partially produced in settlements have been labelled as originating from Israel, and concerned about the significant role that the production and trade of such products plays in helping to support and maintain the settlements,

Recognizing that States permitting the entry of settlement products into their markets risk rendering aid or assistance in maintaining the illegal situation created by the presence of the settlements and contributing to the economic prosperity and growth of the settlements, to the extraction of natural resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the denial of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Aware of the role of private individuals, associations and charities in third States that are involved in providing funding to Israeli settlements and settlement-based entities, contributing to the maintenance and expansion of settlements, thereby contributing to the economic incentive structure perpetuating the occupation and its illegal manifestations throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Welcoming the fact that a number of business enterprises have decided to disengage from relationships or activities associated with the Israeli settlements owing to the risks involved,

Expressing its concern at the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal under international law, and constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, and to economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan, to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49 thereof, and to comply with all its obligations under international law and to cease immediately all actions causing the alteration of the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease all settlement activities, without preconditions, in all the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions, including, inter alia, resolutions 446 (1979) of 22 March 1979, 452 (1979) of 20 July 1979, 465 (1980) of 1 March 1980, 476 (1980) of 30 June 1980, 497 (1981) of 17 December 1981, 1515 (2003) of 19 November 2003 and 2334 (2016) of 23 December 2016;

4. Also demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with its legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, including to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated, to repeal or render ineffective forthwith all legislative and regulatory acts relating thereto, and to make reparation for the damage caused to all natural or legal persons affected by the construction of the wall;

5. Condemns the continuing settlement and related activities by Israel, including the transfer of its nationals into the occupied territory, the construction and expansion of settlements, the expropriation and de facto annexation of land, the demolition of homes and community infrastructure, disruptions to the livelihood of protected persons, the confiscation and destruction of property, including humanitarian relief consignments, the forcible transfer of Palestinian civilians or the threat thereof, including of entire communities, and the construction of bypass roads, which change the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, constitute a violation of international humanitarian law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and of international human rights law, and undermine the viability of the two-State solution;

6. Expresses its grave concern at and calls for the cessation of:

(a) The conduct of economic activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, for the benefit of the settlement enterprise and associated activities;

(b) The expropriation of Palestinian land, the demolition of Palestinian homes, demolition orders, forcible transfer and “relocation” plans, the obstruction and destruction of humanitarian assistance, including projects funded by the international community, and the creation by Israel of a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions in areas identified for the expansion and construction of settlements, and other practices aimed at the forcible transfer of the Palestinian civilian population, including Bedouin communities and herders, and further settlement activities, including the denial of access to water and other basic services by Israel to Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, and including the appropriation of Palestinian property through, inter alia, the declaration of “State lands”, closed “military zones”, “national parks” and “archaeological sites” to facilitate and advance the expansion or construction of settlements and related infrastructure, in violation of the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Israeli measures in the form of policies, laws and practices that have the effect of preventing the full participation of Palestinians in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and prevent their full development in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

7. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power:

(a) To end without delay its occupation of the territories occupied since 1967, to reverse and redress the settlement policy in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, to dismantle the settlement enterprise, including, as a first step, by immediately stopping the establishment of new settlements and the expansion of existing settlements, including so-called natural growth and related activities, and to discard any and all plans to install settlers in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem;

(b) To put an end to all of the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially of the right to self-determination and non-discrimination and to fulfil its international obligations to provide adequate, effective and prompt remedy and reparations for victims;

(c) To take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate all policies and practices that discriminate against and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, by, inter alia, putting an end to the system of segregated roads for the exclusive use of Israeli settlers, who reside illegally in the said territory, the complex combination of movement restrictions consisting of the wall, roadblocks and a permit regime that only affects the Palestinian population, the application of a two-tier legal system that has facilitated the establishment and consolidation of the settlements and other violations and forms of institutionalized discrimination;

(d) To cease the requisition and all other forms of unlawful appropriation of Palestinian land, including so-called State land, and its allocation for the establishment and expansion of settlements, and to halt the granting of benefits and incentives to settlements and settlers;

(e) To put an end to all practices and policies resulting in the territorial fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are isolating Palestinian communities into segregated enclaves and deliberately changing the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(f) To take and implement serious measures, including the confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of ensuring full accountability for and preventing all acts of violence by Israeli settlers, to take other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties and to afford all victims of settler violence access to justice and effective remedy without discrimination in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(g) To bring to a halt all actions, including those perpetrated by Israeli settlers, harming the environment, including the dumping of all kinds of waste materials in the

Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which gravely threaten their natural resources, namely water and land resources, and which pose an environmental, sanitation and health threat to the civilian population;

(h) To cease the exploitation, damage, cause of loss or depletion and endangerment of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the occupied Syrian Golan;

8. Welcomes the adoption of the European Union guidelines on the eligibility of Israeli entities and their activities in the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 for grants, prizes and financial instruments funded by the European Union since 2014;

9. Urges all States and international organizations to ensure that they are not taking actions that recognize, aid or assist the expansion of settlements or the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to continue to actively pursue policies that ensure respect for their obligations under international law with regard to these and all other illegal Israeli practices and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

10. Reminds all States of their legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 9 July 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall, not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction, and to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in the Fourth Geneva Convention;

11. Calls upon all States:

(a) To distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967, and not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in these territories, including by taking steps towards ceasing the importation of any products originating in settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, consistent with their obligations under international law;

(b) To implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to take appropriate steps to prevent, investigate, punish and redress human rights abuses by businesses domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, through effective policies, legislation, regulations and adjudication in order to ensure that those businesses refrain from committing, contributing to, enabling or benefiting from the human rights abuses of Palestinians, in accordance with the expected standard of conduct in the Guiding Principles and relevant international laws and standards, by taking appropriate steps in view of the immitigable nature of the adverse impact of their activities on human rights, including suspension of their operations in the context of the settlements;

(c) To provide guidance to individuals and businesses on the financial, reputational and legal risks, including the possibility of liability for corporate involvement in gross human rights abuses and the abuses of the rights of individuals, of becoming involved in settlement-related activities, including through financial transactions, including foreign direct investments, purchases, the importation of settlement products, procurements, loans, the provision of services and other economic and financial activities in or benefiting Israeli settlements, from within their countries, to prevent those financial transactions, to inform businesses of those risks in the formulation of their national action plans for the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and to ensure that their policies, legislation, regulations and enforcement measures effectively address the heightened risks of operating a business in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

(d) To increase monitoring of settler violence with a view to promoting accountability, and to take steps towards implementing targeted individual sanctions, including travel bans and asset freezes, against individuals identified as perpetrators of violations of international human rights law or international humanitarian law;

12. Calls upon business enterprises to take all measures necessary to comply with their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and relevant international laws and standards, foremost by terminating their activities in or in relation to the Israeli settlements and the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to withdraw from settlements in order to cease the unmitigable adverse impact of their activities on human rights, and to cease contributing to the establishment, maintenance, development or consolidation of Israeli settlements or the exploitation of the natural resources of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

13. Calls upon relevant United Nations bodies to take all measures and actions within their mandates necessary to ensure full respect for and compliance with Human Rights Council resolution 17/4 of 16 June 2011 on the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, and other relevant international laws and standards and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

14. Requests the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and Israel to prepare a report on the identities of settlers, as well as settler groups and their members, that have engaged in or continue to engage in acts of, violence, intimidation, harassment or terror against Palestinian civilians and the actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, and by third States to ensure accountability for violations or abuses of international law in this regard, and to present the report to the Human Rights Council at its fifty-ninth session;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to allocate the resources necessary to prepare the requested report;

16. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council at its fifty-eighth session;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*56th meeting
5 April 2024*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 36 to 3, with 8 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Brazil, Burundi, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gambia, Ghana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Montenegro, Morocco, Netherlands (Kingdom of the), Qatar, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam

Against:

Malawi, Paraguay, United States of America

Abstaining:

Albania, Argentina, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Georgia, Germany, Lithuania, Romania]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
7 February 2013

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-second session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 19/17, in which the Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the human rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

* The annexes to the present report are circulated as received, in the language of submission only.

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Introduction	1–9	3
A. Mandate	1–2	3
B. Terms of reference and methods of work	3–9	3
II. Applicable law	10–17	4
III. Context	18–30	6
IV. Implications of Israeli settlements on the rights of Palestinians	31–99	8
A. Right to self-determination	32–38	8
B. Equality and right to non-discrimination	39–95	10
C. Impact of businesses	96–99	20
V. Conclusions	100–111	21
VI. Recommendations	112–117	22
Annexes
I. Timeline: Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem		24
II. Locations of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem ..		39

I. Introduction

A. Mandate

1. In its resolution 19/17, the Human Rights Council decided to establish an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

2. On 6 July 2012, the President of the Human Rights Council appointed three high-level experts as members of the fact-finding mission: Christine Chanet (Chairperson), Asma Jahangir and Unity Dow.

B. Terms of reference and methods of work

3. The members of the mission convened for the first time in Geneva in August 2012, and held meetings with the representatives of concerned permanent missions and other relevant stakeholders. The mission adopted its terms of reference in the light of the mandate conferred on it by the Human Rights Council, which it considered had clearly instructed it to investigate all the human rights implications of the Israeli settlements for the Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The mission interpreted its mandate to require it to conduct its investigations within the legal framework of international human rights law, together with other relevant bodies of international law. The mission notes that the Israeli settlements also have other implications, including for the rights of those residing inside the settlements and in Israel.

4. For the purpose of its work, the mission understands “Israeli settlements” to encompass all physical and non-physical structures and processes that constitute, enable and support the establishment, expansion and maintenance of Israeli residential communities beyond the Green Line of 1949 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see annex I).¹ The mission did not differentiate between “settlements”, “settlement blocks”, “outposts” or any other structures that have been erected, established, expanded and/or appropriated or any land or natural resources appropriated.

5. Guided by the principles of “do no harm”, independence, impartiality, objectivity, discretion, transparency, confidentiality, integrity and professionalism, the mission carefully analysed all available information that it considered relevant and credible.

6. To ensure the greatest availability of such information, the mission issued a public call for written submissions, which it also directly shared with representatives of Israeli settler communities. In response to the call, it received 62 submissions. The mission analysed information received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, international and national non-governmental organizations, professional bodies, academics, victims, witnesses and the media. The mission did not receive any testimony or submission on an anonymous basis. All information received was treated with due confidentiality.

7. The mission had expected to undertake field visits to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory in order to observe directly the situation on the ground. It addressed five requests for cooperation to the Government of Israel through the Permanent Mission of Israel in Geneva. The Government did not respond to the mission's requests. The mission regrets the fact that the Government did not respond and that, consequently, it did not have access to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Alternative arrangements were made to obtain direct and first-hand information in the form of a series of meetings held with a wide range of interlocutors from 3 to 8 November 2012 in Jordan.

¹ These include, inter alia, the “wall” (denoting the physical barrier constructed by Israel since 2002); checkpoints, closure obstacles, bypass roads, tunnels and the permit system; legal systems; commercial and industrial infrastructure; and planning and zoning regimes. See annex II.

8. During its visit to Jordan, the mission listened to and collected information on a wide range of relevant issues from more than 50 people affected by the settlements and/or working in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel. It met with victims of human rights violations, officials from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Jordan, officials from the Palestinian Authority, and representatives of international and non-governmental organizations and United Nations agencies. The mission kept a record of all testimony given.

9. The present report is the result of the mission's consideration and analysis of all the submissions and information it received and gathered.² The mission points out that a number of interlocutors requested explicitly that their identity not be disclosed. The mission is grateful to all those who extended their cooperation to it.

II. Applicable law

10. The international legal framework applicable to the issue before the mission is primarily provided for in international human rights law and international humanitarian law.

11. Israel is bound to respect, protect, promote and fulfil the full range of the social, economic, cultural, civil and political human rights of all persons within its jurisdiction as a result of its being party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict, and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. Israel is also bound by relevant international human rights rules that are a part of customary international law.

12. The rights protected by human rights treaties must be available to all individuals in the territory of or subject to the jurisdiction of Israel, except where the State has lawfully derogated from them. The treaty bodies of the United Nations that monitor the implementation of the applicable human rights treaties have consistently concluded that the treaties to which Israel is a party are applicable with regard to acts carried out by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.³ This was confirmed by the International Court of Justice in 2004.⁴ Furthermore, the human rights obligations of Israel apply in both peace and times of armed conflict. In the latter situation, they continue to apply alongside international humanitarian law to provide complementary and mutually reinforcing protection.

² For a list of sources consulted by the mission in the course of its work, see www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/HRC/RegularSessions/Session19/Pages/IsraeliSettlementsInTheOPT.aspx.

³ For a compilation of selected conclusions and recommendations made by human rights mechanisms, see www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/HRC/RegularSessions/Session19/Pages/IsraeliSettlementsInTheOPT.aspx.

⁴ Advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory of 9 July 2004 (see A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1), paras. 109-113.

13. A situation of military occupation prevails in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. As the occupying Power, Israel is bound under international humanitarian law by a set of obligations which are provided for in the Hague Regulations of 1907, annexed to the Convention with Respect to the Laws and Customs of War on Land, which are recognized as part of customary international law, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 1949 (Fourth Geneva Convention), to which Israel is a High Contracting Party.

14. The applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to the Occupied Palestinian Territory was decisively established by the International Court of Justice,⁵ and has been recognized and consistently reaffirmed by, inter alia, the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and the General Assembly.⁶ Under the Fourth Geneva Convention, Palestinians living under occupation are “protected persons” and thus the focus of the obligations of Israel under humanitarian law therein.

15. International humanitarian law establishes obligations on Israel concerning, inter alia, humane treatment and physical integrity of the Palestinians as protected persons; respect for their basic rights to education, a fair trial, family, health, religion, and work; maintenance of public order and safety; respect for existing laws; respect for and protection of real and personal property; and the management of public property, including natural resources.

16. Article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention also prohibits the occupying Power from transferring parts of its own civilian population into the territory that it occupies. This prohibition has attained the status of customary international law. The mission notes that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, violate this provision and are, thus, illegal under international law.⁷

17. The mission also considered, where necessary, other international law frameworks and principles. In a situation of prevailing impunity, the law on State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts, including third-State responsibility, is relevant. International criminal law enables the pursuit of individual criminal responsibility for conduct that amounts to international crimes. In this regard, on 3 December 2012, Palestine addressed identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council. Citing article 8(2)(b)(viii) of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, it stated that “Israeli settlement activities” constitute war crimes, and that Israel must be held accountable for such acts.⁸

⁵ Ibid., para. 101.

⁶ See for example Commission on Human Rights resolutions 6 (XXIV), 6 (XXV) and 2001/7; Human Rights Council resolutions 7/18, 10/18 and 19/17; Security Council resolutions 271 (1969), 446 (1979), 641 (1989), 681 (1990) and 799 (1992); and General Assembly resolutions 2546 (XXIV), ES-10/2, 36/147 C, 54/78, 58/97, ES-10/18 and 66/225.

⁷ See for example the advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, para. 120; Security Council resolution 471 (1980); General Assembly resolutions 3092 (XXVIII), 47/172 and 66/225; Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/8; Human Rights Council resolutions 13/7 and 16/31; and Council of the European Union, Conclusions on the Middle East Peace Process, 3166th Foreign Affairs Council Meeting, 14 May 2012.

⁸ A/ES-10/573 - S/2012/899.

III. Context⁹

18. Israeli settlements are located beyond the Green Line of 1949 and include structures in East Jerusalem and in Area C of the West Bank. The Oslo Accords established Area A, comprising approximately 18 per cent of the West Bank and encompassing urban Palestinian areas under the full control of the Palestinian Authority; Area B, representing some 22 per cent of the vast majority of Palestinian rural areas, under Palestinian civil control, while the Israeli army has security control; and Area C, comprising an estimated 60 per cent of the territory, under full Israeli control for security, planning and construction purposes. Settlements are generally located among the more vulnerable sections of Palestinian society, predominantly agrarian villages.

19. The mission was informed that settlers may be divided broadly into three categories. The first are those who have moved on quality-of-life grounds and live in settlements close to Jerusalem and Tel Aviv. The second, ultra-Orthodox Jews, who constitute more than 25 per cent¹⁰ of the settler population, live in settlements largely isolated from other Israelis; ultra-Orthodox Jews seem also to be motivated by economic incentives and cheaper housing and are generally found in settlements closer to the Green Line. A third group seems to be motivated by political and religious ideologies; they live in the central part of the West Bank, often very close to Palestinian communities.

20. Since 1967, the Governments of Israel have openly led and directly participated in the planning, construction, development, consolidation and/or encouragement of settlements by including explicit provisions in the fundamental policy instrument (basic policy guidelines), establishing governmental structures and implementing specific measures. These specific measures include (a) building infrastructure; (b) encouraging Jewish migrants to Israel to move to settlements; (c) sponsoring economic activities; (d) supporting settlements through public services delivery and development projects; and (e) seizing Palestinian land, some privately owned, requisitioning land for “military needs”, declaring or registering land as “State land” and expropriating land for “public needs”.

21. Government investment in the settlements has not been made explicit in the public budget, but allocated through hidden provisions in a process described by the former Head of the Israeli Civil Service Commission, Itzhak Galnoor (1994-1996), as (in 2007) “partially secretive” and (in 2011) as “a political tool”. Government investment, excluding military expenses, has fluctuated over the years, with an estimated peak of $795.8 million in 2005.¹¹ Quasi-governmental organizations, funded by the Government, including the World Zionist Organization, also provide funds to the settlements.

22. A governmental scheme of subsidies and incentives has been put in place to encourage Jewish migrants to Israel to move to settlements and to boost their economic development. Settlements have been defined as “national priority areas”, and benefit from housing and education subsidies and direct incentives to the industrial, agricultural and tourism sectors.

23. Various sources refer to settlement master plans, including the Allon Plan (1967), the Drobles Plan (1978) – later expanded as the Sharon Plan (1981) – and the Hundred Thousand Plan (1983). Although these plans were never officially approved, they have largely been acted upon by successive Governments of Israel. The mission notes a pattern whereby plans developed for the settlements have been mirrored in Government policy instruments and implemented on the ground.

⁹ See also annex I.

¹⁰ Dror Etkes and Lara Friedman, “The Ultra-Orthodox Jews in the West Bank”, October 2005, available from <http://peacenow.org.il/eng/content/ultra-orthodox-jews-west-bank>.

¹¹ Jeremy M. Sharp, “U.S. Foreign Aid to Israel”, Congressional Research Service report, 12 March 2012, available from www.fas.org/sgp/crs/mideast/RL33222.pdf.

24. The first settlement established was Kefar Ezyon, in September 1967. In the early years, the establishment of settlements followed a typical pattern. The settlers had access to the highest ranking Government officials, played on their emotional ties to the land and encouraged these officials to lead and participate in establishing and expanding settlements through, inter alia, the seizure of land for “military purposes”.

25. In June 1967, Israel illegally annexed 70 km² of land incorporating East Jerusalem and a number of nearby Palestinian villages into the expanded boundaries of the Jerusalem municipality of Israel. It promptly built 12 Israeli “neighbourhoods” that enveloped nearby Palestinian quarters and villages. An outer layer of settlements beyond the municipal boundaries were then built, thereby severing the geographical continuity of the city from the rest of the West Bank. Since the 1970s, the Jerusalem municipality of Israel has openly pursued a policy of “demographic balance”, most recently seen in the city master plan also known as “Jerusalem 2000”. The master plan calls for a 60/40 demographic balance in favour of Jewish residents.

26. Studies on settlements commissioned by the Office of the Prime Minister in 2005 (the Sason report) and 2012 (the Levy report) document the Government’s authorization in the establishment and expansion of settlements up to 1992, and indicate that settlements built afterwards with no Government authorization (“outposts”) were established with the “full knowledge of all [authorities], starting with the government ministers and prime minister, and until the lowest enforcing agencies (...) the denial had but one goal only: to withstand criticism by various factors, mostly international”.¹² Sason concluded that “unauthorized outposts violate[s] standard procedure, good governing rules (...) endanger the principle of the rule of law [and thus] urgent measures must be taken to change [this] reality”.¹³ In contrast, the findings of the Levy report suggested the retroactive authorization of “outposts”.

27. In September 2005, through the “disengagement plan”, Israel dismantled 21 settlements in the Gaza Strip (and four in the West Bank), evacuated the settlers residing there and withdrew the army, while maintaining exclusive control of the airspace of Gaza and continued to conduct military activities in the territorial waters of the Gaza Strip. The “disengagement plan” was presented in Israel as an essential step to preserve its control over the settlements in the West Bank. Former Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has been quoted as saying “in the framework of the ‘disengagement plan’, Israel would strengthen its control of those parts of the land that will constitute an inalienable part of the State of Israel in any future agreement.”¹⁴

28. Since 1967, some 250 settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, have been established, either with or without Government authorization. The number of settlers is estimated at 520,000¹⁵ (200,000¹⁶ in East Jerusalem and 320,000 in the rest of the West

¹² Yehudit Karp, “A harsh indictment”, Haaretz, 27 November 2012.

¹³ Talya Sason, “Summary of the Opinion Concerning Unauthorized Outposts”, 10 March 2005. Available from www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Law/Legal+Issues+and+Rulings/Summary+of+Opinion+Concerning+Unauthorized+Outposts+-+Talya+Sason+Adv.htm.

¹⁴ Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, Lords of the Land: the War for Israel’s Settlements in the Occupied Territories, 1967-2007 (New York, Nation Books, 2007).

¹⁵ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “The Humanitarian Impact of Israeli Settlement Policies”, Update December 2012. Available from Bank). According to the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, over the past decade, the settler population has grown at a much higher rate than the population in Israel itself, with a yearly average growth of 5.3 per cent (excluding East Jerusalem), compared with 1.8 per cent in Israel.

29. After years of court orders, the Migron and Ulpana “outposts” were evacuated in 2012. Settlers responsible for appropriating private Palestinian land without Government authorization were, however, provided after the evacuation with new homes in nearby settlements. The Government paid for the transfer of their property and the rental on the new homes.

30. The Government in office since April 2009 has contributed to the consolidation and expansion of settlements. Government spending on the settlements during 2011 was 38 per cent more than in 2010.¹⁷ On 14 November 2012, the Minister for Finance, Yuval Steinitz, stated “we’ve doubled the budget for Judea and Samaria [the West Bank]. We did this in a low-profile manner, because we didn’t want parties either in Israel or abroad to thwart the move.”¹⁸

IV. Implications of Israeli settlements on the rights of Palestinians

31. The mission notes that the impact of settlements on the human rights of the Palestinians is manifested in various forms and ways. These are interrelated, forming part of an overall pattern. The structure of the report is intended to reflect this reality.

A. Right to self-determination

32. The mission notes that, in its resolution 67/19, the General Assembly reaffirmed “the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to independence in their State of Palestine on the Palestinian Territory occupied since 1967”.

33. In a report on the issue, the Secretary-General warned that (the demographic and territorial presence of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory was put at risk by the continued transfer by Israel, the occupying Power, of its population into the occupied territory, observing that Israel had transferred approximately 8 per cent of its citizens into the Occupied Palestinian Territory since the 1970s. He also recalled that the International Court of Justice concluded that the construction of the wall, coupled with the establishment of Israeli settlements, was altering the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and thus was severely impeding the exercise by the Palestinian people of their right to self-determination.¹⁹

34. The establishment of the settlements and the creation of dozens of enclaves have also caused the fragmentation of the West Bank. The mission heard that the establishment

<http://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/ocha%20opt%20settlements%20FactSheet%20December%202012%20english.pdf>

¹⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “East Jerusalem: Key Humanitarian Concerns”, Update December 2011. Available from

www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_Jerusalem_FactSheet_December_2011_english.pdf

¹⁷ Chaim Levinson, “Israeli government spent NIS 1.1 billion on settlements in 2011, reports show”, Haaretz, 31 July 2012.

¹⁸ “Like a thief in the night” Haaretz editorial, 14 November 2012.

¹⁹ A/67/375, para. 12.

of Ma'ale Adummim and its expansion has had a much wider significance than the local impact of most settlements by severing territorial continuity between Palestinian communities.²⁰ The Wall “where it is built or planned, truncates and chops up Palestinian space with ‘fingers’ extending deep into the West Bank. (...) Its “route threatens to divide the West Bank into two separate areas and cut off East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank”.²¹

35. The Government of Israel has full security and administrative control over the settlement areas, and effectively controls the external borders of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Regional councils composed exclusively of representatives of Israeli settlers exercise planning functions in settlement areas. Neither the Palestinian Authority nor local Palestinian communities have any control over the governance, administration and planning of these areas.

36. The settlements, including the associated restrictions, impede Palestinian access to and control over their natural resources. In his report, the Secretary-General noted that Palestinians had virtually no control over the water resources in the West Bank.²² Eighty-six per cent of the Jordan Valley and the Dead Sea is under the de facto jurisdiction of the settlement regional councils. Settlements exploit mineral extraction and fertile agricultural lands, denying Palestinians access to their natural resources.

37. In December 2012, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported that, while the fenced areas of settlements cover only 3 per cent of the West Bank, in reality 43 per cent of the territory is allocated to local and regional settlement councils.²³ There are approximately 150,000 Palestinians living in Area C in close proximity to more than 320,000 Israeli settlers. In East Jerusalem, some 200,000 settlers have been introduced into Palestinian areas with a Palestinian population of about 390,000. The negative impact of Israeli settlements on the right of self-determination of the Palestinian people extends, however, to the Palestinian people as a whole.

38. The mission considers that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, including the right to determine how to implement self-determination, the right to have a demographic and territorial presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the right to permanent sovereignty over natural resources, is clearly being violated by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of the settlements. The transfer of Israeli citizens into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, prohibited under international humanitarian law and international criminal law, is a central feature of the practices and policies of Israel.

²⁰ “The Hidden Agenda: The Establishment and Expansion Plans of Ma’ale Adummim and their Human Rights Ramifications”, B’Tselem, December 2009, available from www.btselem.org/download/200912_maale_adummim_eng.pdf.

²¹ See “Arrested Development: the Long Term Impact of Israel’s Separation Barrier in the West Bank”, October 2012 (available from http://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/201210_arrested_development_eng.pdf), and “By Hook and by Crook: Israeli Settlement Policy in the West Bank”, B’Tselem, July 2010 (available from www.btselem.org/download/201007_by_hook_and_by_crook_eng.pdf).

²² A/67/375, para. 14.

²³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “The Humanitarian Impact of Israeli Settlement Policies” (see footnote 15).

B. Equality and right to non-discrimination

1. Inequality and discrimination in the application of the law

39. Information presented to the mission demonstrates that distinct legal systems exist in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and are applied separately to Israeli settlers and Palestinians. Broadly, Israelis in Area C are subject to Israeli domestic law enforced by the police and courts in Israel. A patchwork of Israeli military orders and Ottoman, British and Jordanian legislation is applied to Palestinians, who are also subject to a military court system with a wide jurisdictional reach.

40. By “channelling” Israeli civil law into the territory of settlements, “legal zones” have been established within the West Bank where Israeli laws apply to settlers in order, for example, to regulate the status and authority of governmental institutions within settlements. These laws do not apply to Palestinians. Other Israeli laws are applied personally to Israelis in the West Bank, giving them preferential legal status over Palestinians. A matrix of military orders applies personally, by law or by practice, only to Palestinians to regulate and control most aspects of daily life, including by restricting an extensive range of rights. Israelis and Palestinians are also treated differently by the same laws; for instance, some military orders designate areas in the Occupied Palestinian Territory as “closed military zones/areas”. With the exception of military training or firing zones, only Palestinians are prohibited from entering such areas unless they have a permit, even if the area encompasses Palestinian land, thereby denying Palestinians access to or ownership of land. The so-called “seam zone” is closed to Palestinians, while Israelis and foreign visitors have unrestricted access. Certain other Israeli laws expressly discriminate against Palestinians. In 2012, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination reiterated its concern about the Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (Temporary Provision) that suspends, with rare exceptions, family reunification between an Israeli citizen and a person residing in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, with a severe impact on family rights.

41. The mission again noted the extraterritorial personal application of Israeli legislation, with the application of Israeli criminal law to Israelis in the West Bank with respect to offences they allegedly committed there.

42. According to the Secretary-General, lack of accountability permeates all types of acts of violence committed by Israeli settlers against property and persons.²⁴ The situation today closely resembles that described by the inquiry conducted in 1984 into action taken with regard to settler violence headed by the then Israeli Deputy Attorney General, Yehudit Karp. According to Yesh Din, an Israeli non-governmental organization that monitored 869 cases between 2005 and 2012, more than 91 per cent of all investigations concluded into complaints of criminal offences against Palestinian persons and property in the Occupied Palestinian Territory were closed without an indictment being served, mostly owing to investigative failures.²⁵ This is despite the fact that attacks and intimidation by settlers against Palestinians are often carried out in daylight and in the presence of Israeli army or police personnel, who frequently do not stop the violence or are ineffective.

43. The mission was informed that, when acts of violence are committed by Palestinians against settlers, these are appropriately addressed, indicating that the lack of law enforcement experienced by Palestinians is largely a matter of political will. Between 90 to 95 per cent of cases against Palestinians are investigated and go to court.

²⁴ A/67/375, para. 39.

²⁵ Yesh Din, “The impact of the settlements on Palestinian rights in the West Bank”, November 2012, available from www.yesh-din.org/userfiles/file/Position%20Papers/Yesh%20Din%20Position%20to%20UN%20FF%20Mission.pdf.

44. The failure to conduct effective investigations and prosecutions of settler violence impedes Palestinians' access to an effective remedy. This is compounded by the multiple barriers presented to Palestinians by the court system, including time, cost, language and procedural barriers coupled with inadequate notification of relevant orders and declarations. Fear and lack of confidence in the courts also act as deterrents to seeking redress. Palestinians are also significantly limited from seeking compensation from the State of Israel for certain conduct by its agents pursuant to the Civil Torts (Liability of the State) Law 2005, as amended in 2012.

45. The Supreme Court of Israel sitting as the High Court of Justice does not offer Palestinians a clear avenue for recourse. The High Court has consistently deferred to the Government of Israel on matters relating to the settlements, and has rendered the question of the legality of the settlements non-justiciable. While on occasion the Court has found in favour of Palestinian petitioners, it has both substantially limited its oversight role and provided a legal space in which the settlements have been developed. Additionally, where judicial rulings have favoured the Palestinian petitioners, there is a consistent lack of enforcement of them.

46. Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory endure a discriminatory application of a military court system that does not comply with international standards of fair trial and administration of justice.²⁶ In testimony to the mission, a witness explained that "two individuals in the West Bank may commit the same offence. One is investigated by the police in the West Bank and brought before a military court, and can be detained up to eight days without seeing a judge. The Israeli who has done the same is investigated and brought before a civilian judge, and enjoys all the safeguards of a modern criminal process. Both face different penalties. The prevailing legal systems in Occupied Palestinian Territory translate into stark inequality before the law.

47. Palestinians are routinely subject to arbitrary arrest and detention, including administrative detention, mass arrests and incarceration. It is estimated that more than 700,000 Palestinians, including children, have been held in Israeli military detention since the beginning of the occupation, many in prisons located within Israel.²⁷ In 2012, approximately 4,100 Palestinians were in Israeli military detention, of whom 143 were aged between 16 and 18 years, and 21 were below 16 years old.²⁸ It is well documented that the military court system does not ensure Palestinians basic fair trial guarantees, including minimum standards of independence, clear evidentiary or procedural rules, the presumption of innocence or the duty to hear witnesses or examine all material evidence.

48. Most children are arrested at friction points, such as villages near settlements or on roads used by the army or settlers and that run by a Palestinian village. From point of arrest, they face multiple violations of their rights to liberty and security and fair trial through interrogation, arbitrary detention and abuse, trial and sentencing. Approximately 90 per cent of children plead guilty and are given custodial sentences. The mission heard testimony that "in short, pleading guilty is the quickest way out of the system, whether the ²⁶ See CCPR/CO/78/ISR, para. 12, and CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 7.

²⁷ A/HRC/7/17, para. 45. See also B'Tselem, "Statistics on Palestinians in the custody of Israeli security forces" (2008 to 2012).

²⁸ B'Tselem, "Statistics on Palestinians" (see footnote 27).

offence was committed or not.” Approximately 60 per cent of Palestinian children serve their sentences inside Israel.²⁹

49. The legal regime of segregation operating in the Occupied Palestinian Territory has enabled the establishment and the consolidation of the settlements through the creation of a privileged legal space for settlements and settlers. It results in daily violations of a multitude of the human rights of the Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including, incontrovertibly, violating their rights to non-discrimination, equality before the law and equal protection of the law.

2. Settlers violence and intimidation

50. All spheres of Palestinian life are being significantly affected by a minority of settlers who are engaged in violence and intimidation with the aim of forcing Palestinians off their land. There was consistency in testimonies with regard to the following facts: attacks and intimidation regularly take place during daylight hours; the identity of perpetrators are well known, or perpetrators could easily be identified; the frequent presence of police and army at the scene; the involvement and presence of settlement security officers; the frequent existence of video and photographic footage of the incidents; and the lack of accountability for the violence.

51. The mission heard testimonies on incidents of settler violence and intimidation dating back to 1973. A report of the Security Council Commission established under resolution 446 (1979)³⁰ drew attention to settler attacks on property and acts of intimidation that restricted access to water and obstructed children’s schooling. The Commission noted that the intent of these attacks was to pressure Palestinians to leave the land. Palestinian deaths and injuries as a result of settler attacks have been recorded since 1980; the mission notes the statistics compiled by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs that show that, in the period from 1 July 2011 to 30 June 2012, Israeli settlers injured 147 Palestinians, including 34 children.

52. The mission heard numerous testimonies on violent attacks by settlers, including physical assaults, the use of knives, axes, clubs and other improvised weapons, as well as shootings and the throwing of Molotov cocktails. The testimonies also recounted the psychological impact of intimidation by armed settlers trespassing on Palestinian land, at Palestinian water springs or in the midst of Palestinian neighbourhoods in Hebron and East Jerusalem. In some cases, testimonies described years of violence and intimidation directed at the same Palestinian family living in proximity to settlements that had pushed it to abandon its properties.

53. The mission heard testimony of the impact of settler violence on children, and notes an increasing trend in their death and injuries. In a submission to the mission, Defence of Children International –Palestine had documented 127 cases in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, including four fatalities, since 2008. Settler attacks on schools and harassment of children on their way to school has followed an upward trend since 2010. Testimonies from residents of the village of Al Twanyi describe how children must have Israeli army escorts on their way to and from school to protect them from settler attacks. These escorts are not always provided by the Israeli army or, when provided, are often erratic.

²⁹ See Defense for the Children International – Palestine Section, “Children prosecuted in Israeli military courts: update”, 2 October 2012, available from www.dci-palestine.org/documents/children-prosecuted-israeli-military-courts-%E2%80%93update.

³⁰ S/13679.

54. The mission also notes the impact of violence and intimidation on the lives and livelihoods of Palestinian farmers, by preventing the access of Palestinians to their land close to settlements through violence and intimidation; burning, uprooting and attacking Palestinian crops; settlers taking over the land and planting their own crops; and fencing off and building on Palestinian agricultural lands. The olive industry is a primary source of income for Palestinian farmers; the olive harvest is therefore a particularly vulnerable period of the year for Palestinian farmers and their crops.³¹ From 2005 to 2012, Yesh Din monitored 162 investigations into vandalism against Palestinian trees (predominantly olive trees); only one investigation led to an indictment.³² Figures for 2012 (until mid-October) show that, during that period, more than 7,500 trees had been damaged or destroyed by settlers.³³

55. The mission heard testimonies on “price-tag” attacks, a phenomenon considered distinct from other forms of settler violence. The attacks aim at exacting a price on the Palestinian population living close to settlements for any political or legal move that the settlers interpret as being contrary to their interests. The mission understands that the intent is to deter Israeli authorities from taking any action perceived to be against settlers’ interests while at the same time to provoke Palestinians into a reaction. An-Najah University identified 119 price-tag incidents from 2008 to September 2012.³⁴ The attacks most commonly involve vandalism and the burning of property, cars and houses, and are often accompanied by racist graffiti. The Department of State of the United States of America categorized three price-tag attacks on mosques and a Muslim cemetery as terrorist incidents.³⁵

56. The mission is concerned that specific programmes devised to deal with the impact of settler violence on physical and mental health have had to be developed by non-governmental organizations as a result of the failure of Israeli authorities to stop settler violence and of the persistence of impunity in this regard. The mission notes with particular concern the situation of children and the impact on their development.

57. Violence, verbal and physical abuses, inhumane and degrading treatment, forced evictions, land and property grabbing, the destruction of property and housing and many of the issues for which testimonies and information was gathered gravely affect the right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health. Depression, anxiety, symptomatic stress, mood disorder and behaviour problems, and post-traumatic stress disorders are some of the most current conditions reported by specialists. Impunity, a feeling of injustice, the recurrence of events and anticipation of renewed abuses, especially on relatives and children, compound these conditions.

³¹ The Palestinian Ministry of Agriculture estimates that 3.5 million olive trees have been destroyed since the second intifada.

³² Yesh Din, “Police investigation of vandalization of Palestinian trees in the West Bank”, October 2012, available from www.yesh-din.org/userfiles/file/datasheets/DS%20Trees%20Oct,%202012%20Eng.pdf.

³³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Olive Harvest Factsheet, October 2012, available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_olive_harvest_factsheet_october_2012_english.pdf.

³⁴ An-Najah University, “Outposts and Price Tag Violence: A Blow upon a Bruise”, September 2012, available from www.najah.edu/sites/default/files/shared-uploads/outposts_and_price_tag_violence_-_a_blow_upon_a_bruise_-_sept_2012.pdf.

³⁵ United States Department of State, Country Reports on Terrorism 2011, available from www.state.gov/j/ct/rls/crt/2011/.

3. Restrictions on religious freedom and related intolerance

58. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Jerusalem, Hebron, Bethlehem and Nablus all host places of considerable religious significance for Christianity, Judaism and Islam. While the impact of settlements is manifested in various forms throughout the West Bank, the mission notes that both Jerusalem and Hebron have been targeted by particularly aggressive settlement policies and practices owing to their religious significance. Settlements have been established in the heart of both cities, disrupting the lives and the development of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians. In addition, major settlement infrastructure has been built around Jerusalem and, to a lesser extent, Hebron, enveloping them and severing social and economic ties with the rest of Palestinian society, while linking the various settlements and the territory of the State of Israel.

59. The mission was also informed about archaeological excavations being conducted in and around the Old City of Jerusalem and the construction there of a network of underground tunnels, including those connecting settlement installations in the Palestinian neighbourhood of Silwan with the Old City. It has been alleged that these archaeological excavations are intended to emphasize Jewish cultural heritage while disregarding – or worse undermining – the rich heritage of other cultures that have contributed to the millenary history of the city.

60. The mission received numerous reports of Palestinians being denied access to places of worship. Limited entry through checkpoints and area closures during holy days prevents Palestinians from attending holy rituals at appointed times at places of worship. The mission also learned that, since 2008, mosques and Christian churches have been targeted in price-tag attacks, including at least nine price-tag arson attacks against Palestinian mosques and 21 incidents where graffiti was used to desecrate mosques, churches and burial grounds with provocative slogans of a racist or a sacrilegious nature, intended to inflame the situation.³⁶

61. The mission is concerned that policies and acts aimed at altering the composition of Jerusalem and Hebron by erasing cultural heritage on the basis of religious affiliation, together with redrawing municipal boundaries, are being carried out with the involvement of the Government of Israel, with pernicious effects. It is further concerned that the Palestinians' right to freedom of religion is being restricted by the settlements.

4. Dispossession and displacement

62. Dispossession and displacement featured in most of the submissions, reports and testimony received by the mission. The information brought to light a number of different mechanisms exploited to seize Palestinian land, as well as a discriminatory planning and zoning policy that favours the development of settlements and, as the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination concluded, breaches a range of fundamental rights of Palestinians.³⁷

63. Since the beginning of the occupation, Palestinians have seen over 1 million dunams³⁸ of their land seized, enabled by a combination of military orders and selective interpretation of the Ottoman Land Code that ruled land tenure throughout the Ottoman, Mandatory and Jordanian periods. In particular, land has been lost through seizure for military needs, absentee property laws and the declaration of State lands.

³⁶ An-Najah University, "Outposts and Price Tag Violence" (see footnote 34).

³⁷ CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 25.

³⁸ One dunam equals 1,000 m².

64. Seized lands are placed within the jurisdictional boundaries of local and regional settlement councils, used not only for urbanization but also as buffer zones surrounding settlements or turned into recreational and nature areas to which Palestinians have no access.

65. While the issue is critical throughout the West Bank, the mission notes the large number of demolitions, demolition orders, forced evictions and “relocation” plans in zones identified for the consolidation of settlements, including around Bethlehem and the E-1 project, aimed at creating an urban continuum between East Jerusalem and Maale Adumim. In this area, the Jahalin Bedouin community in Khan Al-Akhmar, which in the past has experienced several demolitions, lives under the threat of forcible displacement. “Relocation” plans are currently under discussion, including to a location near a landfill site where, in 1996, Bedouins had already been relocated in connection with earlier settlement expansions.

66. Bedouin communities in general are particularly vulnerable to displacement and dispossession. Eighty per cent of them live in the Jordan Valley, the Dead Sea area and around Hebron, constituting the majority of the population in closed military training and firing zones. Many of these communities have already experienced multiple displacements. Many are food insecure, do not have access to basic services, and are not connected to the electricity grid, the road network or water systems. More than 90 per cent face water scarcity, living with less than one-quarter of the minimum standards set by the World Health Organization (WHO).³⁹ The Israeli army routinely demolishes their shelters and property, including those provided by or built with the assistance of aid agencies and international donors. In the South Hebron hills, eight villages are at risk of eviction to make way for a new firing zone.

67. The processes of dispossession and displacement in the vicinity of settlements and the seam zone include preventing access of Palestinians to their agricultural lands, the takeover and demolition of springs and wells, and movement restrictions. Settler violence and intimidation also play a significant role.

68. In East Jerusalem, multiple factors, such as discriminatory building regulations, the large number of demolition orders, residence permit restrictions, the acute housing shortage and violence and intimidation from settlers, put enormous pressures on the city’s Palestinian population. Cases of forced eviction in East Jerusalem, such as in the Sheikh Jarrah neighbourhood, were also reported to the mission, including following successful appeals by settler organizations, some of which linked to Jewish property claims based on their pre-1948 ownership. Numerous testimonies spoke of settlers taking over individual houses inside the Old City.

69. Absence of proof of registration (land registration was discontinued by military order in 1968) makes it extremely difficult for Palestinians to obtain recognition of tenure or permits. Besides, Palestinians are excluded from consultative decision-making processes and are not represented in the special planning committees, which are made up of settlers and are entitled to issue and enforce building permits.

70. Testimonies confirmed that building permits are rarely if ever granted; in the past 20 years, 94 per cent of permit applications were denied. Building without a permit is an offence under military orders, and the execution of a demolition order is accompanied by a large fine. The mission heard in this regard about “self-demolitions”, namely, of residents demolishing their own houses to avoid having to pay a fines. Self-demolitions are not recorded in statistics on demolitions.

³⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “The Humanitarian Impact of Israeli-declared ‘Firing Zones’ in the West Bank”, August 2012, available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_firing_zone_factsheet_august_2012_english.pdf.

71. As corroborated by testimonies, many Palestinians are forced to build without a permit, thus living under the constant threat that their home or property may be demolished. Many families and entire communities are at risk of displacement. In East Jerusalem alone, where 33 per cent of Palestinian homes lack building permits, at least 93,100 residents are potentially at risk of being displaced.⁴⁰

5. Restrictions on the freedom of movement

72. The mission received information according to which the vast majority of restrictions on the freedom of movement of Palestinians seem to be directly linked to the settlements, and include “restrictions aimed at protecting the settlements, securing areas for their expansion, and improving the connectivity between settlements and with Israel itself.”⁴¹ The restrictions themselves come in many forms, including settler-only roads, a regime of checkpoints and crossings (closure obstacles), impediments created by the wall and its gate and permit regime, as well as administrative restrictions. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reports more than 540 closure obstacles in 2012.⁴² Although there have been significant easing measures in recent years (which have improved connectivity between the main Palestinian cities and towns), movement restrictions reportedly remain in place in areas around settlements.

73. The mission notes that restrictions on freedom of movement have a detrimental impact on the access of Palestinians to their land, and have direct consequences for their ability to work and earn a livelihood. The outer expanses of many settlements incorporate Palestinian private property, and access to this land is regulated through the “prior coordination” regime whereby the Palestinian landowners are granted a permit for access to their land for a limited number of days each year, normally coinciding with harvest time and based on prior coordination with the Israeli authorities. This regime is in place for Palestinian landowners in some 90 communities with land in the environs of some 55 settlements.⁴³ In some cases, the prior coordination regime is applied to private Palestinian land that has been unilaterally fenced off by settlers without authorization by the Israeli authorities. The widespread access restrictions in and around the wall in the form of gate and permit regimes particularly affect access to agricultural land in the seam zone and, as previously noted, these restrictions only apply to the Palestinian population (see paragraph 40 above).

74. Israel has extended the prior coordination regime to situations where Palestinians face potential settler violence and intimidation. This response has been ineffective in preventing settler violence, while it places the burden of restricting access to land on the victims of settler violence.

75. The mission notes that discrimination is particularly evident in the movement restrictions in Hebron and the Jordan Valley, where large Palestinian populations are subjected to permit regimes and areas off limits to traffic and, in some cases, pedestrian ⁴⁰ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “East Jerusalem: Key Humanitarian Concerns” (see footnote 16).

⁴¹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, West Bank Movement and Access Update, September 2012 (available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_movement_and_access_report_september_2012_english.pdf), p. 2.

⁴² Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Humanitarian Impact of Israeli Settlement Policies” (see footnote 15).

⁴³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “West Bank Movement” (see footnote 41).

transit. In the H2 area of Hebron, there are 123 movement obstacles are in place to facilitate the movement of approximately 550 Israeli settlers in Hebron and 7,000 in the nearby settlement of Kiryat Arba, at the expense of the Palestinian population (170,000).⁴³ The mission notes that the presence of these settlements has a direct impact on Palestinian livelihoods, as military orders have led to the closure of 512 Palestinian businesses, while at least another 1,100 have closed owing to the restricted access of customers and suppliers.⁴³

76. The human rights treaty bodies have expressed their deep concern at restrictions on freedom of movement, describing them as being targeted at a particular national or ethnic group and amounting to gross violations of economic, social and cultural rights.⁴⁴

6. Restrictions on freedom of expression and peaceful assembly

77. The mission notes that the settlements, including the wall, are the subject of Palestinian demonstrations in places such as Bili'in and Nabi Saleh, where the vast majority of demonstrators are reported to be acting in a non-violent manner. The Israeli authorities often respond to these demonstrations with restrictions on assembly, declaring areas closed military zones, and employing violent means to suppress demonstrations by firing tear gas, rubber bullets and, on occasion, live rounds. As in the case of closure obstacles that restrict freedom of movement, restrictions on expression and assembly have at their core the aim of ensuring that the daily life of Israeli settlers continues without interruption.⁴⁵

78. The mission heard testimony that, since 2009, residents of Nabi Saleh, a village of 600 people, have protested every Friday against the takeover by nearby settlers of the village's water spring. The witness described a litany of violent attacks by the Israeli army on peaceful demonstrators that have resulted in one person being killed and more than 400 people being injured, including 195 children. On certain occasions, the army has reportedly stopped demonstrations before they have begun by firing tear gas inside the village, forcing all villagers to flee.⁴⁶

79. The mission was informed that Israeli politicians, academics and civil society actors voicing criticism of the settlements are discredited in public discourse. An example of this includes the targeting of veteran combatants who have served in the Israeli military in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and who voice dissent with the official line of the establishment. The mission acknowledges the valuable contribution made by members of Israeli civil society in highlighting the denial of human rights to the Palestinians by the presence of the settlements.

7. Restrictions on the right to water

80. Information and testimonies corroborate the impact of settlement expansion on the right to water of Palestinians, including, as pointed out by, inter alia, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the great discrepancy between water allocation for Palestinians and settlers, and inequitable access.

81. The capacity of the Palestinian Water Authority to develop new water resources is hampered by the water management arrangements governed by the Interim Agreement and the Joint Water Commission that it established, in which "fundamental asymmetries – of power, of capacity, of information" give Israel predominance in the allocation of West

⁴⁴ CERD/C/ISR/CO/13 and E/C.12/1/Add.69.

⁴⁵ A/67/375, para. 40.

⁴⁶ B'Tselem, "Human Rights in the Occupied Territories" 2011 Annual Report (available from www.btselem.org/download/2011_annual_report_eng.pdf), p. 50.

Bank water resources, of which it withdraws 90 per cent.⁴⁷ The mission learned that a large number of Palestinian projects are rejected by the Commission. In Area C, additional approval is required from the Israeli Civil Administration, even for such small-scale projects as wells or rainwater collection cisterns.

82. The ability of the Palestinian Water Authority to transfer water to areas facing water shortages is severely inhibited by territorial fragmentation, since almost every project implies movement through Area C. The mission received testimony about water resources damaged or destroyed by the construction of the wall or lost to the seam zone, cutting off villages from their wells, springs and cisterns. In the Jordan Valley, deep-water drillings by Mekorot, the Israeli national water company, and Mehadrin, an agro-industrial company, have caused Palestinian wells and springs to dry up. Eighty per cent of the total water resources drilled in the area is consumed by Israel and the settlements.

83. The lack of availability of Palestinian water resources has led to chronic shortages among Palestinian communities in Area C and a dependence on Mekorot, to which authority over the West Bank water resources was transferred from the military in 1982.

84. Mekorot supplies almost half the water consumed by Palestinian communities. The mission heard that Palestinians do not have access to Israeli recycled water available to settlements, and have to use water from the more expensive drinking water supply for irrigation purposes. In the event of a water shortage, valves supplying Palestinian communities are closed; this does not happen for settlements.

85. The mission heard of situations where villagers must travel several kilometres to retrieve water when closer water resources serve neighbouring settlements. Settlements benefit from enough water to run farms and orchards, and for swimming pools and spas, while Palestinians often struggle to satisfy their minimum water requirements. According to testimonies received, some settlements consume around 400 litres per capita per day (l/c/d),⁴⁸ whereas Palestinian consumption is 73 l/c/d, and as little as 10-20 l/c/d⁴⁹ for Bedouin communities, which depend on expensive and low-quality tanker water. In East Jerusalem, houses built without a permit cannot connect to the water network.

86. Water shortages are further exacerbated by restrictions on movement, the destruction of infrastructure, expropriations, forced evictions and settler violence, which also largely contributes to diminishing access to water for Palestinians.

87. Forcible takeovers and vandalism by settlers increasingly impede access to water. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, in March 2012, 30 springs in the vicinity of settlements were completely taken over by settlers and 26 were at risk, with settlers fencing them off and threatening villagers. Some of the springs seized have become “tourist attractions” or recreational sites, and receive support from the Government of Israel.

88. According to testimony received, the destruction of water infrastructure, including rainwater cisterns, by Israeli authorities has increased since the beginning of 2010, doubling in 2012 the number of acts committed in 2011. The denial of water is used to trigger displacement, particularly in areas slated for settlement expansion, especially since these communities are mostly farmers and herders who depend on water for their livelihoods. A number of testimonies highlighted that the cutting off from water resources often precedes dispossession of lands for new settlement projects.

⁴⁷ World Bank, “West Bank and Gaza Assessment of Restrictions on Palestinian Water Sector Development”, April 2009, para. 130.

⁴⁸ The minimum recommended by WHO is 100 l/c/d.

⁴⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “The Humanitarian Impact of Israeli-declared ‘Firing Zones’” (see footnote 39).

8. Impact on economic rights

89. The agricultural sector, considered the cornerstone of Palestinian economic development, has not been able to play its strategic role because of dispossession of land and the denial of access for farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and domestic and external markets. This has led to a continuous decline in the share of agricultural production in GDP and employment since 1967.

90. The expansion of settlements and the development of relevant infrastructure have eroded Palestinian agricultural assets. Dwindling water resources, high transaction and transport costs and shrinking markets have led to a decline in the size of agricultural holdings. It has also resulted in a shift from irrigated to less profitable rain-dependent crops and a decrease in productivity, given that the import of fertilizers into the West Bank is banned for Palestinians. Besides the demolitions carried out by the authorities, villagers suffer recurrent attacks from nearby settlements (especially during the olive harvest season), the destruction of trees, water installations and livestock, putting them under additional pressure to relinquish agricultural activities.

91. The wall has divided villages, cut off farmers from their lands and water and curtailed trade with traditional markets, stifling the local economy. One example of this pattern is the village of Nazelt Issa, where half of pre-existing businesses were destroyed to build the wall, while other activities closed down, given that most of their trade was with neighbouring villages now cut off by the wall. With few income-generating prospects left in the village, unemployment is high, and young people leave to seek work.

92. The mission was informed by testimony received that “Israeli settlement agriculture is blooming”. In the Jordan Valley, settlements set up in the 1960s and 1970s as farming communities on land formerly cultivated by Palestinians have developed into a high-technology irrigation agricultural zone and become major contributors to Israeli exports of date palm fruits. In the central West Bank, many agricultural settlements have been developed over the past decade, cultivating olives and grapes for winemaking in Israel. Many Israeli cultivated areas correspond to lands that were cultivated by Palestinians until the second intifada (2000-2005).

93. The inability of the Palestinian economy to expand and offer opportunities, high unemployment rates and falling wages in the Palestinian labour market, inflation and increasing poverty are factors that drive Palestinians to seek employment in the settlements and in Israel, where wages are about twice as high as in the Palestinian private sector. A stringent system of permits and quotas that determines employment in Israel and the settlements lends itself to abuse by contractors and middlemen. Palestinians employed in the settlements work primarily in the manufacturing industry and the construction sector. Women are mostly engaged in domestic work and agriculture.⁵⁰

94. While wages might be higher, employment conditions in the settlements remain precarious. Workers claiming their rights are easily dismissed, and supervision of employers by the Israeli authorities in the settlements remains largely absent. In an audit conducted in June 2011, the State Comptroller noted the “lack of substantial supervision and enforcement in the field of safety and hygiene”, even in factories holding and using dangerous materials. It was noted that, between 2006 and 2010, only four audits were conducted in the 20 industrial zones/settlements operating in the West Bank.

⁵⁰ International Labour Organization, “The situation of workers of the occupied Arab territories”, June 2012 (available from www.ilo.org/ilc/ILCSessions/101stSession/reports/reports-submitted/WCMS_181071/lang--en/index.htm), para. 87.

95. The employment conditions of Palestinian workers in settlements are subject to a system characterized by legal uncertainties. Palestinians are contracted under the far less favourable pre-1967 Jordanian labour laws, while Israeli citizens in the West Bank are employed under Israeli labour laws. Although the High Court of Israel ruled in 2007 that Israeli labour laws also applied to Palestinian workers, the ruling – which left open the possibility for the parties to agree otherwise – is often not enforced. Numerous interlocutors told the mission that this “cheap labour” from the numerous Palestinian villages within convenient commuting distance represented an additional incentive for enterprises to move to the settlements.

C. Impact of businesses

96. Information gathered by the mission showed that business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the settlements. In addition to the previously mentioned violations of Palestinian worker rights, the mission identified a number of business activities and related issues that raise particular human rights violations concerns. They include:

- The supply of equipment and materials facilitating the construction and the expansion of settlements and the wall, and associated infrastructures
- The supply of surveillance and identification equipment for settlements, the wall and checkpoints directly linked with settlements
- The supply of equipment for the demolition of housing and property, the destruction of agricultural farms, greenhouses, olives groves and crops
- The supply of security services, equipment and materials to enterprises operating in settlements
- The provision of services and utilities supporting the maintenance and existence of settlements, including transport
- Banking and financial operations helping to develop, expand or maintain settlements and their activities, including loans for housing and the development of businesses
- The use of natural resources, in particular water and land, for business purposes
- Pollution, and the dumping of waste in or its transfer to Palestinian villages
- Captivity of the Palestinian financial and economic markets, as well as practices that disadvantage Palestinian enterprises, including through restrictions on movement, administrative and legal constraints
- Use of benefits and reinvestments of enterprises owned totally or partially by settlers for developing, expanding and maintaining the settlements

97. It is with the full knowledge of the current situation and the related liability risks that business enterprises unfold their activities in the settlements and contribute to their maintenance, development and consolidation. Industrial parks in settlements, such as Barkan and Mishor Edomim, offer numerous incentives, including tax breaks, low rents and low labour costs. Economic activities in these zones are growing. A number of banks provide mortgage loans for home buyers and special loans for building projects in settlements. They also provide financial services to businesses in settlements and, in some cases, are physically present there.

98. The mission noted that some enterprises had withdrawn from settlements because it harmed their image and might entail legal consequences.

99. The mission also noted that Israel labels all its export products as originating from “Israel”, including those wholly or partially produced in settlements. Some companies operating in settlements have been accused of hiding the original place of production of their products. This situation poses an issue of traceability of products for other States wishing to align themselves with their international and regional obligations. It also poses an issue with regard to consumers’ right to information. The mission notes that these issues are increasingly being addressed by States, regional organizations and some private businesses.

V. Conclusions

100. The facts brought to the attention of the mission indicate that the State of Israel has had full control of the settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory since 1967 and continues to promote and sustain them through infrastructure and security measures. The mission notes that, despite all pertinent United Nations resolutions declaring that the existence of the settlements is illegal and calling for their cessation, the planning and growth of the settlements continues of existing as well as of new structures.

101. The establishment of the settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (see annex II), is a mesh of construction and infrastructure leading to a creeping annexation that prevents the establishment of a contiguous and viable Palestinian State and undermines the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination.

102. The settlements have been established and developed at the expense of violating international human rights laws and international humanitarian law as applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, as recognized notably by the International Court of Justice in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004.

103. The settlements are established for the exclusive benefit of Israeli Jews, and are being maintained and developed through a system of total segregation between the settlers and the rest of the population living in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. This system of segregation is supported and facilitated by a strict military and law enforcement control to the detriment of the rights of the Palestinian population.

104. The mission considers that, with regard to the settlements, Israel is committing serious breaches of its obligations under the right to self-determination and certain obligations under international humanitarian law, including the obligation not to transfer its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Rome Statute establishes the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court over the deportation or transfer, directly or indirectly, by the occupying Power of parts of its own population into the territory it occupies, or the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside that territory. Ratification of the Statute by Palestine may lead to accountability for gross violations of human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law and justice for victims.

105. The existence of the settlements has had a heavy toll on the rights of the Palestinians. Their rights to freedom of self-determination, non-discrimination, freedom of movement, equality, due process, fair trial, not to be arbitrarily detained, liberty and security of person, freedom of expression, freedom of access to places of worship, education, water, housing, adequate standard of living, property, access to natural resources and effective remedy are being violated consistently and on a daily basis.

106. The volume of information received on dispossession, evictions, demolitions and displacement points to the magnitude of these practices. These are particularly widespread in certain areas and acute in East Jerusalem.

107. The mission noted that the identities of settlers who are responsible for violence and intimidation are known to the Israeli authorities, yet these acts continue with impunity. It is led to the clear conclusion that institutionalized discrimination is practiced against the Palestinian people when the issue of violence is addressed. The mission believes that the motivation behind this violence and the intimidation against the Palestinians and their properties is to drive the local populations away from their lands and allow the settlements to expand.

108. The mission is gravely concerned at the large number of children who are apprehended or detained, including for minor offences. They are invariably mistreated, denied due process and a fair trial. In violation of international law, they are transferred to detention centres in Israel.

109. Children endure harassment and violence, and encounter significant obstacles in attending educational institutions, which limits their right to have access to education. The occupying Power, Israel, is failing in its duty to protect the right of access to education of the Palestinian children and failing to facilitate the proper working of educational institutions.

110. Information gathered by the mission showed that some private entities have enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the settlements, either directly or indirectly.

111. Women alone in their homes, the Bedouins and other vulnerable groups are easy targets for settler violence, creating a sense of insecurity in Palestinian society in general.

VI. Recommendations

112. The mission calls upon Israel to, in compliance with article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, cease all settlement activities without preconditions. In addition it should immediately initiate a process of withdrawal of all settlers from the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The mission also urges Israel to ensure adequate, effective and prompt remedy for all Palestinian victims for the harm suffered as a consequence of human rights violations that are a result of the settlements in accordance with that State's international obligation to provide effective remedy. Where necessary, steps must be taken to provide such remedy in concurrence with the representatives of the Palestinian people and the assistance of the international community.

113. The mission calls upon Israel to put an end to the human rights violations that are linked to the presence of settlements.

114. The mission calls upon Israel to ensure full accountability for all violations, including for all acts of settler violence, in a non-discriminatory manner, and to put an end to the policy of impunity.

115. The mission urges Israel to put an end to arbitrary arrest and detention of the Palestinian people, especially children, and to observe the prohibition of the transfer of prisoners from the Occupied Palestinian Territory to the territory of Israel, in accordance with article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

116. The mission calls upon all Member States to comply with their obligations under international law and to assume their responsibilities in their relations with a State breaching peremptory norms of international law, and specifically not to recognize an unlawful situation resulting from Israel's violations.

117. Private companies must assess the human rights impact of their activities and take all necessary steps – including by terminating their business interests in the settlements – to ensure that they do not have an adverse impact on the human rights of the Palestinian people, in conformity with international law as well as the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.⁵¹ The mission calls upon all Member States to take appropriate measures to ensure that business enterprises domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, that conduct activities in or related to the settlements respect human rights throughout their operations. The mission recommends that the Working Group on Business and Human Rights be seized of this matter.

⁵¹ A/HRC/17/31, annex.

Annexes

Annex I

[English only]

Timeline: Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

1948

- The “Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel” is issued. It equates Eretz-Israel (in Hebrew “the Land of Israel”) to the territory of British Mandate Palestine¹, in contrast to the provisions of 1947 United Nations General Assembly Resolution 181 on the partition of the British Mandate of Palestine into two Independent Arab and Jewish States with a special international regime for the City of Jerusalem².
- The “Israeli Proclamation” is issued. It creates a legislative authority: the Provisional Council of State, which unilaterally revokes the British Parliament Decision 6019 (the White Paper of 1939)³. The White Paper of 1939 indicates that “the terms of the (Balfour) Declaration [sic] (...) do not contemplate that Palestine as a whole should be converted into a Jewish National Home, but that such a Home should be founded IN PALESTINE.[sic] (...) His Majesty's Government (...) now declare unequivocally that it is not part of their policy that Palestine should become a Jewish State (...) Jewish immigration during the next five years will be at a rate which, if economic absorptive capacity permits, will bring the Jewish population up to (...) one third of the total population (...) some 75,000 immigrants (...) After the period of five years, no further Jewish immigration will be permitted unless the Arabs of Palestine are prepared to acquiesce in it. (...) there is now in certain areas no room for further transfers of Arab land, whilst in some other areas such transfers of land must be restricted.”⁴
- The Law and Administration Ordinance 5708-1948 is enacted. Article 15 indicates that: “(a) ‘Palestine’, wherever appearing in the law, shall henceforth be read as

¹ The document is found on the Israeli MFA website:

<http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Peace+Process/Guide+to+the+Peace+Process/Declaration+of+Establishment+of+State+of+Israel.htm>

² A/RES/181(II)[A-B]

³ David M. Sassoon, “The Israel Legal System” in The American Journal of Comparative Law, Vol. 16, No. 3, Summer, 1968. Pages 405-415 (<http://www.jstor.org/stable/838665>) and Yvonne Schmidt “Foundations of civil and political rights in Israel and the occupied territories” Doctoral Thesis / Dissertation, 2001

⁴ Parliament Decision 6019 was considered a British policy paper. Full original text consulted on http://avalon.law.yale.edu/20th_century/brwh1939.asp ‘Israel’”⁵ disregarding 1947 UN Resolution 181 partitioning British Palestine into two States, Arab and Jewish⁶.

1950

- The “Absentee Property Law” 1950 enables the Israeli Government to transfer the property left behind by Palestinians after the 1948 War for the exclusive use by Israel. The Law defines any Palestinian who ‘left his ordinary place of residence’ for a place outside the nascent state as an ‘absentee’. The definition is broadly interpreted and includes Palestinians who are deemed to have been absent, even though they are present within the territory of Israel. Such persons are termed “present absentees”.

1965

- Planning and Building Law No. 5725 is enacted by the Knesset.⁷ It establishes a hierarchy of planning bodies (national, regional and local) responsible for land-use planning. The law requires development plans to be prepared, approved, and kept up to date. A permit may be refused if the development conflicts with a plan; penalties for unpermitted development may include, in extreme cases, demolition⁸ (Article 212 allows the State to demolish homes considered “a public nuisance”⁹). The Law is used by Israeli Governments to justify a large amount of demolitions of Palestinian houses, notably in Jerusalem after the Six-Day War.¹⁰

1967

- The Six-Day War. (5-10 June)
- Military Order No 59 Regarding Government Property (Judea and Samaria [West Bank]) 5727-1967 defines “State Lands” as any land belonging to an “enemy state”, or registered in its name. It authorizes the person delegated by the Commander of Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) in the Region to take possession of “enemy state’s” properties and to manage these at his discretion. The Order is used through 1979 to seize control of land registered in the name of the Jordanian Government.¹¹ (7 June)

⁵ Law and Administration Ordinance No. 1 of 5708-1948, Full text and amendments consulted on: <http://www.geocities.com/savepalestinenow/israellaws/fulltext/lawandadministrationord.htm>

⁶ A/RES/181(II)[A-B]

⁷ Planning and Building Law, 5725—1965, Full text and amendments consulted on <http://www.israelawresourcecenter.org/israellaws/fulltext/planningbuildinglaw.htm>

⁸ Amnesty International, “Israel/Occupied Territories: Demolition and dispossession: the destruction of Palestinian homes”. 8 December 1999

⁹ Human Rights Watch, “Sample Judicial Demolition Order” [Translated by HRW from the Hebrew original Beer Sheva Magistrate Court BS 008759/05], March 2008 <http://www.hrw.org/reports/2008/iopt0308/15.htm>

¹⁰ ICAHD submission to the Fact-Finding Mission <http://icahd.org/node/429>

¹¹ B’Tselem, Land Grab, 2002.

- Article 11 of the Law and Administration Ordinance is amended to indicate that: “The law, jurisdiction and administration of the State shall extend to any area of Eretz Israel designated by the Government by order.”¹² (27 June)
- Israel illegally annexes 70 km² of land, incorporating Palestinians living in East Jerusalem and a number of villages in the West Bank.¹³ (27 June)
- Yigal Allon, Israeli Defence Minister and chair of the Ministerial Committee on Settlements, presents a plan to Prime Minister Levi Eshkol for the creation of “security” borders by establishing Israeli settlements on unpopulated Arab areas of the West Bank (along the Jordan Rift Valley, the expanded Jerusalem and parts of the Judean Desert). The plan is not officially approved but is subsequently implemented.¹⁴ (26 July)
- Theodor Meron, legal counsel of the Foreign Ministry, provides a legal opinion on the legality of civilian settlement in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip at the request of the PM’s Office: “civilian settlement in the administered territories contravenes the explicit provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention.”¹⁵ (18 September)
- The first Israeli settlement in the OPT is established, Kefar Ezyon.¹⁶ (September)
- The UN Security Council adopts Resolution 242 and calls for Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip, the Sinai Peninsula, the Golan Heights, and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. The Resolution emphasises the “inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war.”¹⁷ (22 November)

1968

- The Jerusalem 1968 Master Plan, and subsequent plans provides for the building of a belt of 12 Israeli ‘neighbourhoods’ enveloping and bisecting the Palestinian neighbourhoods in the city.¹⁸
- The first of a series of expropriations of private land in Jerusalem takes place. The land is used to build the settlements such as French Hill, Gilo, Pisgat Ze’ev and Ramot Allon. In the great majority of known cases the owners of the expropriated land are Palestinians.¹⁹

¹² Amendment of 1967 to article 11 of the Law and Administration Ordinance No. 1 of 5708-1948 also available at:

<http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Foreign+Relations/Israels+Foreign+Relations+since+1947/1947-1974/13+Law+and+Administration+Ordinance+-+Amendment+No.htm?WBCMODE=PresentationUnp?DisplayMode=print>

¹³ B’Tselem, A Policy of Discrimination: Land Expropriation, Planning and Building in East Jerusalem, May 1995.

¹⁴ Senior Foreign Policy Analyst, Dan Diker “Israel’s return to Security-Based Diplomacy”, Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs, <http://www.jcpa.org/text/security/diker.pdf>

¹⁵ Israel State Archives, 153.8/7921/3A. Legal opinion numbered as document 289-291, with unnumbered cover notes <http://southjerusalem.com/settlement-and-occupation-historical-documents/>

¹⁶ Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, “Lords of the Land”, 2005.

¹⁷ S/RES/242

¹⁸ Eyal Weizman, Hollow Land. 2007

¹⁹ B’Tselem, A Policy of Discrimination: Land Expropriation, Planning and Building in East Jerusalem, May 1995.

- Kiryat Arba settlement (the first in Hebron) is established. Ninety *dunums*²⁰ of Palestinian land are seized for “military purposes”; Palestinians are evicted, vineyards uprooted and 250 housing units for the settlement are built in their place.²¹
- Military Order No. 291 concerning Land and Water Settlement (Judea and Samaria) provides the basis for the suspension of land registration in the West Bank and enables tens of thousands of hectares of the West Bank to be declared “State land” making it difficult for Palestinians to obtain security of tenure or pursue land development (as proof of registration is often a first requirement), while at the same time increasing the amount of land available to build settlements.²² (19 December)

1969

- Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir (1969-1974) presents her basic policy guidelines to the Knesset, mirroring the 1967 Allon Plan’s main objective by referring to “security” civilian borders on strategic areas in the occupied territories.(15 December)

1971

- Military Order No 418 is issued. The order “amends” Jordanian Law No 79 of 1966 as it creates High Planning Councils (HPC) appointed by the Israeli Army Commander, dissolving the Palestinian planning committees and later establishing six regional and village HPCs in the West Bank and two in the Gaza Strip. The order transfers the authority to make all significant decisions on permits and plans in the OPT from the district level to the HPC, a body of the Israeli Army. It allows the HPCs to prepare, amend, cancel, disregard, or dispense any plan or permit and to exempt persons from obtaining the necessary license. The Military Order restricts Palestinian urban growth and limits Palestinian construction by refusing building permits and reducing the land earmarked for industrial and economic projects, thereby depriving a functioning Palestinian economy. It also allows to set aside for future use vast areas of land for settlements in the OPT.²³ (March)
- The UN General Assembly mandated Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories refers in 1971 to the Israeli Ministerial Committee for Settlement of the Territories and notes that “the very existence of such a committee headed by a person of ministerial rank shows, beyond doubt, that it is a policy of the Government to settle the territories occupied as a result of the hostilities of June 1967.”²⁴ (5 October)

²⁰ One dunum equals 1000 m2.

²¹ Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, “Lords of the Land”, 2005.

²² Order Regarding Government Property (Judea and Samaria)(No. 59)

²³ Amnesty International, “Israel/Occupied Territories: Demolition and dispossession: the destruction of Palestinian homes”. 8 December 1999

²⁴ A/8389

1974

- A group of prominent settler activists form the Gush Emunim movement (in Hebrew the “Bloc of the Faithful”) to advance the cause of establishing settlements throughout the West Bank.²⁵
- Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin’s (1974-1977) in a Cabinet Communiqué confirms the existence of a settlement policy: “Settlements in the Administered territories are established solely in accordance with the government’s decisions (...) The Prime Minister and the Minister of Defence are authorized to implement this policy.”²⁶ (26 July)

1977

- Thirty-one settlements have been established in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem), most of them within the outlines of the Allon Plan including in the Jordan Valley (the prime agricultural land of the West Bank), in the Ezyon bloc, in the southern Hebron hills and the Judean Desert. The settler population in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem) reaches about 4,500.²⁷ Some 50,000 Israelis live in settlements in East Jerusalem.²⁸
- Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin (1977-1981) presents his basic policy guidelines to the Knesset. Paragraph 9 indicates the Government’s support for the development of Israeli settlements throughout a land that goes beyond the green line: “Settlement in Eretz Yisrael is a right as well as an integral part of the nation’s security. The Government will act to achieve the strengthening, the widening and the development of Jewish settlement...”²⁹ (20 June).
- Israeli Prime Minister Begin’s Government statement anticipates the Droblis Plan. It outlines the mixed high-ranking structure, involving the Government and World Zionist Organization (WZO), responsible for granting legal status to new settlements. “[N]o part of Judea and Samaria [the West Bank] should be handed over to foreign rule (...) the Ministerial Committee on Settlements, conferred legal status on three settlements in the West Bank established during the previous government’s term of office (...) The joint Government-World Zionist Organization Settlement Affairs Committee today decided to recognize Ma’aleh Adumim, Ofra and Elon Moreh as full-fledged settlements, and charged the settlement institutions with granting them commensurate treatment.”³⁰ (26 July)

²⁵ Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, “Lords of the Land”, 2005.

²⁶ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “17 Cabinet communiqué on settlements in the West Bank- 26 July 1974- and statement in the Knesset by Prime Minister Rabin- 31 July 1974, 26 Jul 1974, VOLUME 3: 1974-1977” www.mfa.gov.il

²⁷ B’Tselem’s report, Land Grab, May 2002

²⁸ B’Tselem’s report, Land Grab, May 2002

²⁹ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “Basic guidelines of the government- 20 June 1977, 20 Jun 1977, Volume 4-5: 1977-1979” www.mfa.gov.il The 9th paragraph of policy guidelines presented in 1977 is quoted to in the presentation of Begin’s policy guidelines in his second tenure in office on 5 August 1981.

³⁰ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “23 Government statement on recognition of three settlements- 26 July 1977, Volumes 4-5: 1977-1979” www.mfa.gov.il

1978

- The WZO, co-member of the Ministerial Committee on Settlements, publishes the Drobls Plan to build settlements on the central mountain ridge around Palestinian population centres. The plan shifts away from the Allon Plan in that the later had focused on agricultural settlements in unpopulated Arab areas, whereas the former focuses on urban settlements which are relatively easy to set up, market and populate in the midst of populated Arab areas. (October)

1979

- By 1979 there are 43 settlements and 10,000 settlers in the West Bank, excluding East Jerusalem.³¹
- The UN Security Council adopts Resolution 446 affirming “that the Fourth Geneva (...) is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem” and determining that “the policy and practices of Israel in establishing settlements in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 have no legal validity and constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.”³² The resolution also provides for the establishment of a commission to examine the situation in relation to the settlements in the occupied territories including Jerusalem, which submits a report³³ to the Security Council. (22 March)
- Military Order 783 5739 “Concerning the Administration of Regional Councils” is issued. The order establishes the actual area controlled by settlements which can be modified at the discretion of the Israeli Military Regional Commander “‘Area of a settlement’ – the area bearing the settlement’s name is circumscribed by a line on the map of the regional council which is signed by the regional commander (...) The regional commander has the right to alter (...) the boundaries on the map (...)”³⁴ (25 March)
- Israeli Defence Ministry, Ezer Weizman, declares that some 61,000 dunums had been seized for military needs since 1967, with more than 40,000 dunums of private land given to the establishment of settlements.³⁵
- The High Court decision on the Elon Moreh case rules against the temporary seizure of land for military purposes. The testimony of retired military personnel that the land seized for the Elon Moreh settlement served no military purposes in addition to the testimony of the settlers themselves that they, along with the Israeli Prime Minister, saw the Elon Moreh settlement as a permanent settlement served to convince the High Court that the land was not legitimately seized for military purposes.³⁶ (22 October)
- Israeli Prime Minister Begin, in a Cabinet communiqué on settlements which mirrors the Drobls Plan, confirms that the Government has been implementing

³¹ Figures from Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, B’Tselem Land Grab May 2002

³² S/RES/446

³³ S/13450; S/13679

³⁴ Quoted by Hagit Ofra and Dror Etkes “And Thou Shalt Spread ...” Construction and development of settlements beyond the official limits of jurisdiction A special report presented by the “Peace Now” Settlement Watch. Jerusalem, June 2007

³⁵ Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, “Lords of the Land”, 2005

³⁶ Duweikat v. Government of Israel, HCJ 390/79, 22 October 1979 (Elon Moreh case) settlement activities in the OPT. It also indicates the new basis (declarations of “State Land”) to continue with this endeavour after the ruling in the Elon Moreh case: “Settlement activities were carried out in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza region (...) the allotment of land for existing settlements or those settlements whose establishment was previously decided upon in Judea and Samaria [the West Bank] (...) Givon will be established partly on land belonging to state and partly on land owned by Jews, which will be purchased from its owners for this purpose (...) Beit Horon will be established on state lands (...) Efrat will be established on state lands (...) Elkana and Kedumim will be expanded by additional of state land (...) An inter-ministerial committee will be established which will examine the situation in the settlements of Ophra and Kedumim, and which will recommend solutions for their problems in the framework of government policy.”³⁷ (14 October)

1980

- Military Order 892 Concerning the Administration of Local Councils is issued. The order regulates the issue of larger settlements which have been awarded the status of “local councils”, and defines the manner in which the area of the council is defined at the discretion of the Israeli Army Regional Commander: (1 March)
- The UN Security Council adopts Resolution 465 which follows Resolutions 446 and 452, determining “that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, or any part thereof, have no legal validity and that Israel’s policy and practices of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constitute a flagrant violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention (...) and a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.”³⁸ (1 March)
- Between 1980 and 1984 over 800,000 dunums of land is confiscated through the selective use of the Ottoman Land Law of 1858. The method is largely devised by the director of the Civil Department at the State Prosecutors Office, Plia Albek, with the backing of her superiors: Attorneys General Aharon Barak and Yitzhak Zamir (both later Supreme Court Justices)³⁹. The West Bank was surveyed by air and on the ground to identify uncultivated land. This would then be cross checked with land records and any lands not under private ownership would be declared as State Land. The onus is placed on those liable to be injured by the declaration to appeal to a military committee within 45 days.⁴⁰

1981

- The Defence Minister (1981-1983) Ariel Sharon prepares a plan (the Sharon Plan) covering areas he believes are vital for Israel’s security and which should be annexed. Only a small number of enclaves densely populated by Palestinians are not

³⁷ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “50 Cabinet communiqué on settlements- 14 October 1979 VOLUME 6: 1979-1980” www.mfa.gov.il

³⁸ S/RES/465

³⁹ Idith Zertal and Akiva Eldar, “Lords of the Land”, 2005

⁴⁰ B’Tselem’s report, Land Grab, May 2002

considered. While the plan is not officially adopted by the government, it provides the basis for future settlements.⁴¹

- Israeli Deputy Attorney General Yehudit Karp is appointed to head a team looking at investigations and legal actions taken with regards to Israeli settler violence and intimidation in OPT. The report's findings identified: an unusually high number of files closed for reasons of "perpetrators unknown"; an indulgent and forgiving attitude from the police towards the settlers; in some cases no sincere efforts to find culprits; no questioning of witnesses; unreasonable lengths of time and a lack of sensitivity in investigations. The report observes that, "Israeli residents of the territories are given to understand that they are soldiers to all intents and purposes. [...] Israeli residents of Judea and Samaria [West Bank], explicitly relying on this assurance, refuse to cooperate with the police or provide information; they reject any contact with the police, basing themselves on 'high-level policy' and declaring that they are under no obligation to cooperate in this matter."⁴² The report is not released by the Government of the day, only appearing in truncated form in 1984, 20 months after its submission by the Karp team.

1982

- Prime Minister Menachem Begin (1981-1983) presents the basic policy guidelines of his second tenure in the Government. The document largely mirrors the Sharon Plan and the plan to confer a permanent nature to settlements in the OPT: "any suggestion for the dismantlement or removal of any settlement in which Israeli citizens and members of the Jewish people have settled and reside, will be rejected."⁴³ (3 May)

1983

- The Israeli Ministry of Agriculture publishes the Hundred Thousand Plan aiming at building settlements in the West Bank through 2010. It includes an implementation plan 1983-1986. The plan aims at attracting 80,000 Israelis to live in 43 new Israeli settlements which would bring the total settler population to 100,000. Along with the construction of settlements, up to 450 km of new roads for settlers are to be paved.⁴⁴

1984

- Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres (1984 - 1986) presents his basic policy guidelines to the Knesset in line with the Hundred Thousand Plan. The fourth point of the document establishes that "there will be no change in the sovereignty over Judea, Samaria [West Bank] and the Gaza District except with the consent of the

⁴¹ B'Tselem's report, Land Grab, May 2002

⁴² The Karp Commission, Report on Investigations of Suspicions Against Israelis in Judea and Samaria: Conclusions (25 May 1982)

⁴³ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs "44 Statement in the Knesset by Prime Minister Begin upon the Presentation of his Second Government- 5 August 1981, 5 Aug 1981, VOLUME 7: 1981-1982" www.mfa.gov.il

⁴⁴ Ministry of Agriculture and the Settlement Division of the World Zionist Organization, "Master Plan for Settlement for Judea and Samaria, Development Plan for the Region for 1983-1986" (Jerusalem, April 1983)

Alignment and the Likud”. Other points include: “(A) The existence and development of settlements set up by the governments of Israel will be ensured, and the extent of their development will be determined by the government; (B) 5-6 settlements will be established within a year (...); (D) The establishment of new settlements will require approval by a majority of the cabinet ministers.”⁴⁵ (13 September)

1986

- Prime Minister Designate Yitzhak Shamir (1986 - 1988) addresses the Knesset to present the national unity Government in its second period and confirms the economic support to settlements: “the government will seek to forge a ‘Zionist Economy.’ An economy that will not be based only on solid economic principles, but also on the Zionist values which must be our guide, and among them the supreme value of settlement throughout Eretz-Israel.”⁴⁶ (20 October)

1988

- During the period 1988-1992, settlement activities accelerate rapidly and the number of settlements increase by more than 60% in line with the Hundred Thousand Plan.⁴⁷
- Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir (1988 - 1990) presents to the Knesset his basic policy guidelines, mirroring provisions of the Hundred Thousand Plan. Point 15 elaborates on the settlement policy as follows “The existence and development of settlements set up by the governments of Israel will be ensured. An attached appendix ... elaborates on various issues, whose execution will be agreed upon together with other issues in this framework. b. Between five and eight settlements will be established within a year. ... c. The settlements elaborated on in attached appendix will be established in subsequent years as per a timetable to be determined in an agreement between the prime minister and the vice premier, toward the conclusion of the first year. Point 20 refers to settlements as “national preferential areas” for Government support “20: The Government will assist sectors of national-social preference, including the settlement sector (within the framework of the Recovery Plan), and [will assist] the populace of development areas.”⁴⁸ (22 December)

1992

- By 1992, following wide-scale confiscation of Palestinian land, the number of settlements had risen sharply to 120 inhabited by 100,500 settlers.⁴⁹

⁴⁵ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “Basic Policy Guidelines of the Government's Program, 13 September 1984. Volume 9-10: 1984-1988” www.mfa.gov.il

⁴⁶ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “196 Statement in the Knesset by Prime Minister Designate Shamir- 20 October 1986, Volume 9-10: 1984-1988” www.mfa.gov.il

⁴⁷ Applied Research Institute, Jerusalem (ARIJ) “Undermining Peace: ‘Israel’s Unilateral Segregation Plans in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”” 2003.

⁴⁸ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “Basic Policy Guidelines of the Government's Program- 22 December 1988, Volume 11-12: 1988-1992” www.mfa.gov.il

⁴⁹ Figures from Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, B'Tselem Land Grab May 2002

- Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin (1992-1995) presents to the Knesset his basic policy guidelines, revisiting the previous policy to establish new settlements in the OPT while at the same time guaranteeing the existence of settlements already established through public services' delivery, promoting the consolidation of the settlements. The revision in the establishment of new settlements is perceived in Israel as a virtual freeze on settlement expansion (13 July)
- As a result of Prime Minister Rabin's virtual freeze on settlement construction, there is a reduction in the frequency and the amount of declarations of "State Land"⁵⁰
- A Committee led by Haim Klugman, director-general of the Israeli Ministry of Justice, examines the transfer of expropriated Palestinian property in East Jerusalem from the State to settler organisations like Elad and Ateret Cohanim. The report found that the Custodian for Abandoned Properties effectively served as an institution to dispossess Palestinians of their land and property.

1993

- The Oslo I Accords are signed. Permanent issues including Israeli settlements are deliberately left to future negotiations.⁵¹ (13 September)

1994

- The Shamgar Commission report into the killing of twenty-nine Palestinian worshippers praying inside the Ibrahim Mosque (or Mosque of Abraham) at the Cave of the Patriarchs site in Hebron also reviews in general law enforcement on Israeli citizens in OPT and describes actions in this regard as "too slow, too little and too late."

1995

- The Oslo II Accords are signed. They divide the West Bank and Gaza into three areas, allow Palestinian election and for Israel to legally close crossing points into Israel if deemed necessary.⁵² (28 September)
- Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is assassinated by a militant Israeli allegedly in retaliation for undermining the pace of Jewish settlement expansion in the OPT.⁵³ (4 November)

1996

- Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu (1996-1999) presents to the Knesset the basic policy guidelines of his first tenure in Government. The sixth strategic goal (out of

⁵⁰ B'Tselem, By Hook and By Crook: Israeli Settlement Policy in the West Bank, 2010

⁵¹ Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, The Oslo Accords Between Israel and Palestine, 13 September 1993

⁵² The Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, "Oslo 2" 28 September 1995

⁵³ Haaretz, "Settler rabbi: Time has come to apologize for Rabin assassination. In memorial evening in West Bank, Tekoa's Menachem Froman says: We vow not to repeat the dance of hatred. By Chaim Levinson, 7 Nov 2012

ten) is entitled “Settlement”. Whether inside or outside Israel, settlements are identified as a national priority and, as such, recipients of preferential Government support. The document puts particular emphasis on supporting settlements beyond the green line: “1. Settlement in the Negev, the Galilee, the Golan Heights, the Jordan Valley, and in Judea, Samaria [West Bank] and Gaza is of national importance, to Israel's defense and an expression of of [sic] Zionist fulfillment. 2. The Government will alter the settlement policy, act to consolidate and develop the settlement enterprise in these areas, and allocate the resources necessary for this. The Government of Israel will safeguard its vital water supplies, from water sources on the Golan Heights and in Judea and Samaria.” (18 June)

- Settlements with no Government authorization (“outposts”) begin to be established on the hills east of Itamar, in Amona east of Ofra and on Givat Hadagan north of the settlement of Efrat.⁵⁴

1998

- The Israeli Government approves Decision No, 3292, which defines certain towns and villages as National Priority Areas (NPA) “A” and “B”. Many settlements are defined as NPA “A”, which entitles them to a number of benefits in housing, a wide-ranging benefits in education as well as for industry and agriculture, grants and subsidies, indemnification for the taxes imposed on their produce by the European Union; tax levels significantly lower than those established for communities inside the Green Line, and larger balancing grants to the settlements to cover deficits.⁵⁵ (15 February)

1999

- More than 50 new settlements without Government authorization (“outposts”) are reported to have been established by the end of Prime Minister Netanyahu first tenure in Government (May).⁵⁶
- Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak (1999-2001) presents to the Knesset his basic policy guidelines. The third strategic line (out of twelve) is entitled “Settlement” and indicates the Government support to continue developing settlements already established in the West Bank and Gaza, while indicating that no new settlements will be built: “4.1 The Government views all forms of settlement as a valued social and national enterprise (...); 4.2 Until the status of the Jewish communities in Judea, Samaria [West Bank] and Gaza is determined (...) no new communities will be built and no existing communities will be detrimentally affected; 4.3 The Government will work to ensure the security of the Jewish residents in Judea, Samaria [West Bank] and Gaza, and to provide regular Government and municipal services -- equal to those offered to residents of all other communities in Israel. The Government will offer a response to the on-going development needs of existing communities. Socio-

⁵⁴ Peace Now, First petitions against the outposts. <http://peacenow.org.il/eng/content/first-petitions-against-outposts>

⁵⁵ Adalah Position Paper “On the Israeli Government’s New Decision Classifying Communities as National Priority Areas”, February 2010, Adalah - The Legal Center for the Arab Minority Rights in Israel, See also B’Tselem “By Hook and By Crook: Israeli Settlement Policy in the West Bank.” July 2010, Summary

⁵⁶ Peace Now, “Hayovel and Haresha - Illegal construction” HCJ 9051/05 - September 2005 <http://peacenow.org.il/eng/content/hayovel-and-haresha-illegal-construction> economic standards will be equally applied to all communities everywhere.”⁵⁷

(6 July)

2001

- Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon (2001-2006) presents to the Knesset his basic policy guidelines. The eighth national goal (out of ten) is: “To strengthen, expand, and promote settlement throughout the country.” The settlement policy follows the same line of the prior Government: “2.9 During its term of office, the Government will not establish new settlements. The Government will provide for ongoing needs in the development of existing settlements.”⁵⁸ (7 March).
- Fifty one new settlements with no Government authorization (“outposts”) are reported to have been built between March 2001 and June 2004.⁵⁹
- The US led Sharm El-Sheikh Fact-Finding Committee Report, known as the “Mitchell Report”, is presented. It says that “[d]uring our last visit, we observed the impact of 6,400 settlers on 140,000 Palestinians in Hebron and 6,500 settlers on over 1,100,000 Palestinians in the Gaza Strip (...) we note that many of the confrontations (...) occurred at points where Palestinians, settlers, and security forces protecting the settlers, meet (...) restrictions on the movement of people and goods in the West Bank and Gaza Strip (closures) [have resulted in the] destruction by Israeli security forces and settlers of tens of thousands of olive and fruit trees and other agricultural property. The closures have had other adverse effects, such as preventing civilians from access to urgent medical treatment and preventing students from attending school.
- The report recommends that the Government of Israel “freeze all settlement activity, including the "natural growth" of existing settlements (...); lift closures, transfer to the PA all tax revenues owed, and permit Palestinians who had been employed in Israel to return to their jobs; and should ensure that security forces and settlers refrain from the destruction of homes and roads, as well as trees and other agricultural property in Palestinian areas, [and that it] take all necessary steps to prevent acts of violence by settlers.”⁶⁰ (30 April)

2002

- The total reported number of settlements built with no Government authorization (“outposts”) increases to 93.⁶¹ (July).

⁵⁷ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “Guidelines of the Government of Israel, Basic Guidelines of the Government of Israel, Jerusalem, July 6, 1999” www.mfa.gov.il

⁵⁸ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs “Guidelines of the Government of Israel, Basic Guidelines of the Government of Israel, Jerusalem, March 7, 2001” www.mfa.gov.il

⁵⁹ Foundation for Middle East Peace, “Settlement Outposts Continue to Thrive under Sharon Administration”, Settlement Report, Vol. 14 No. 4, July-August 2004

⁶⁰ Sharm El-Sheikh Fact-Finding Committee Report “Mitchell Report” April 30, 2001. By Suleyman Demirel, Thorbjørn Jagland, Warren B. Rudman, Javier Solana and George J Mitchell (Chairman).

⁶¹ Peace Now, First petitions against the outposts. <http://peacenow.org.il/eng/content/first-petitions-against-outposts>

2003

- The basic policy guidelines in the second tenure of Prime Minister Ariel Sharon (2003-2006) remain the same. The eighth national goal (out of ten) continues to refer to the strengthening, expansion and promotion of settlements throughout the country, with the Government support to continue developing established settlements and its aim of not establishing new settlements.⁶² (28 February)

2004

- International Court of Justice issues its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. (9 July)

2005

- The Office of the Prime Minister's report (Sason report) on "unauthorized outposts" describes them as a "continuation of the settlement enterprise in the territories." The report documents the active participation of the Government in the promotion and expansion of settlements up to 1992 and accounts for the "unofficial" continuation of such involvement between 1992 and 2005, including land confiscation and illegal construction with the "unauthorized aid" of the Ministry of Housing and the WZO, as well as "overlooking" and "actual encouragement and support" by the political echelon. The report concludes that "unauthorized outposts violate[s] standard procedure, good governing rules (...) endanger the principal of the rule of law [and thus] urgent measures must be taken to change [this] reality".⁶³ (8 March)
- In accordance with the "Disengagement Plan", 9,480 Jewish settlers from 21 settlements in Gaza and four settlements in the northern West Bank are evacuated. (16 – 30 August)

2009

- Israeli media unveils the Baruch Spiegel "secret database" of Israeli settlements in the OPT, a project developed by the Israeli Ministry of Defence. The database provides details on location and population size of the settlements; status of ownership of the land including details on over 30 settlements that were to some extent built on private Palestinian land; construction violating planning regimes and building permit requirements; details on authorisation agreements between the State and those building settlements. (February)
- The Knesset enacts the "Economic Arrangements Law" with an additional section entitled the "National Priority Areas" to apply to settlements in the OPT. (14 July)
- Israel announces a ten-month moratorium on settlement activity (up to September 2010). The moratorium is in effect a partial freeze on approval of new construction.

⁶² Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs "Basic Guidelines of the 30th Government of Israel, 28 Feb 2003" www.mfa.gov.il

⁶³ Talya Sason, Summary of the Opinion Concerning Unauthorized Outposts, Israeli Prime Minister's Office, Communications Department, 8 March 2005.

It excludes East Jerusalem and “natural growth” in existing settlements, which grow three times as fast as “natural growth” in Israel. (November)

- The Government approves Decision No. 1060 “Defining Towns and Areas with National Priority”, following request of additional time to implement the Supreme Court rulings HCJ 2773/98 and HCJ 11163/0 on 1998 decision on National Priority Areas (NPAs). The new decision falls under the new “Economic Arrangements Law” and classifies various settlements in the OPT as NPAs further designating settlements under the criterion of “level of security threat.” In addition, every settlement in the OPT defined as a NPA is also entitled to receive on an individual basis the associated additional budgetary grants and benefits in fields to be defined by ministers. In contrast, towns and villages located within the Green Line and also defined as NPAs receive smaller benefits at the district and regional level only.⁶⁴ (13 December)

2010

- Israel joins the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). During the discussions of accession, Israel indicates that the Government applies the investment incentives under 1984 Law of Encouragement of Capital Investment (which is also reported as not covering the OPT) to certain industrial areas in the West Bank. Israel indicates that foreign-owned enterprises may be established in those areas of the West Bank and are eligible for grants under that Law.⁶⁵ (10 May)

2011

- A letter signed by 38 members of the Knesset (out of 120 members) is addressed to Israeli Prime Minister Netanyahu. The letter refers to orders to “demolish tens or hundreds of (...) outposts in Judea and Samaria [the West Bank]” and indicates that “[t]his directive must be changed”. The letter further stresses that “we should openly declare that Judea and Samaria are ours”.⁶⁶ (11 October)

2012

- Israeli Government retroactively legalises three outposts. (April)
- The findings of the Levy Committee, established to investigate the legal status of the unauthorized settlements in the West Bank (“outposts”), are published. The report documents that settlements built with no formal Government authorization were established with the knowledge, encouragement and tacit agreement of Government Ministers, including the Prime Minister, public authorities, the Civil Administration and the regional councils. It goes on to recommend, that given the real true will of the Israeli Government was to establish outposts, it should therefore legalise them. No in-depth analysis is made on the methods used to establish the so-called

⁶⁴ Adalah Position Paper “On the Israeli Government’s New Decision Classifying Communities as National Priority Areas”, February 2010, Adalah - The Legal Center for the Arab Minority Rights in Israel

⁶⁵ OECD “Accession of Israel to the OECD: Review of international investment policies” <http://www.oecd.org/israel/49864025.pdf>

⁶⁶ Foundation for Middle East Peace “MKs to Bibi - Keep the Outposts” Settlement Report, Vol. 21 No. 6, November-December 2011

unauthorized outposts and no reference to the 2.5 million Palestinian living in the West Bank is included.⁶⁷ (9 July)

- The Judea and Samaria Council for Higher Education grants for the first time a full-fledged University recognition to a Centre located beyond the green line, Ariel University Centre, despite opposition by the planning and budget committee of the State's Council for Higher Education⁶⁸. The University is open to all Israeli citizens, including Arab-Israelis but closed to Palestinians residing in the West Bank.⁶⁹ (17 July)
- The UN General Assembly votes for Palestine to become a non-member state with observer status. (29 November)
- PM Netanyahu authorises the building of 3,000 new housing units in East Jerusalem and the West Bank. (30 November)
- In analysis of building in settlements for the year 2012, it was revealed that plans for 6,676 residential units were approved in 2012⁷⁰. This represents an increase from 1,607 housing units approved for construction in 2011 and the several hundred housing units approved in 2010. Among the housing construction plans approved were 3,500 residential units intended for the E-1 corridor, 523 for the new settlement of Gevaot and more than 500 in Itamar. Construction began on 1,747 housing units in West Bank settlements last year, the Peace Now report also says. More than a third of the construction in the settlements was east of the West Bank separation fence, according to the report. Four new outposts went up in 2012: Nahlei Tal near the Palestinian city of Ramallah, Tzofin Tzafon (Tzofin North) near the Palestinian city of Qalqilyah, Nahalat Yosef near Nablus and Hill 573 as part of an expansion of the Itamar settlement. Altogether, 317 new housing units were built in settlement outposts without building permits, which is against the law.⁷¹

⁶⁷ B'Tselem, "Levy Committee Report: Where are the Palestinians?" 11 July 2012.

⁶⁸ Haaretz, "Ariel academic center recognized as first Israeli university beyond Green Line. Decision on West Bank campus made despite opposition by Israel's Council for Higher Education." By Talila Neshet, 17 July 2012

⁶⁹ <http://digitaljournal.com/article/328824#ixzz2DhMH1Jcf> and <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-18879786>

⁷⁰ Peace Now "Summary of Year 2012 in Settlements" report.

⁷¹ Haaretz, "Approval for settlement plans jumped 300% in 2012, says Peace Now." By Chaim Levinson, 16 January 2013

Annex II

[English only]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
12 February 2014

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-fifth session

Agenda item 7

Human Rights situation in Palestine
and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the Secretary-General*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 22/26 on the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan. The report highlights the impact of the settlement-related activities and planning policies of Israel on Palestinians' human rights. It describes instances when the Government of Israel has failed to maintain public order, and stresses the almost complete lack of accountability regarding settler violence.

* Late submission.

GE.14-10903

* 1 4 1 0 9 0 3 *

Please recycle The recycling symbol, consisting of three chasing arrows forming a triangle.

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Introduction	1–3	3
II. Legal background	4–5	3
III. Overview	6–10	4
IV. Israeli planning policy in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and its impact on the human rights of Palestinians	11–20	6
V. Impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the economic and social rights of Palestinians.....	21–36	11
VI. Failure to maintain public order, settler violence and lack of accountability	37–47	15
VII. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan	48	17
VIII. Conclusions and recommendations	49–55	18

I. Introduction

1. In its resolution 22/26, the Human Rights Council affirmed that Israeli settlements and activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were illegal under international law and constituted very serious violations of international humanitarian law and of the human rights of the Palestinian people therein, and undermined international efforts aimed at invigorating the peace process and the realization of a two-State solution. Furthermore, the Council expressed grave concern at the continuing Israeli settlement and related activities, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, and the confiscation and destruction of property, which changed the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem and the occupied Syrian Golan. The Council called upon Israel to take and implement serious measures, including confiscation of arms and enforcement of criminal sanctions, with the aim of preventing acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and other measures to guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians and Palestinian properties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

2. The present report addresses progress made in the implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 22/26 during the reporting period, from 22 March 2013 to 30 October 2013. Important information from November 2013 is included in instances where it is particularly relevant. The information contained in the report is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and information provided by other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The report also contains information received from Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and media sources. It should be read in conjunction with previous reports of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements.¹

3. Previous reports outlined continuing Israeli settlement activities (A/HRC/20/13) and analysed various elements of the impact of Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and settler violence on the human rights of Palestinians. The most recent report to the General Assembly (A/68/513) focused on the leading role played by the Government of Israel in the creation and expansion of settlements and the impact of such actions and of related legislation and public policies, on Palestinians' human rights. The present report also addresses the expansion of settlements during the reporting period, as relevant to the Council's call (see para. 1 above) in resolution 22/26, with particular attention to paragraphs 3 and 5. The report further complements the analysis in the Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly on Israeli settlements (A/68/513) by focusing on Israeli planning policy in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the impact thereof on the human rights of Palestinians. Moreover, the report considers the impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the economic and social rights of Palestinians. Finally, in relation to paragraph 6 of resolution 22/26, the report provides an update on violent acts committed by Israeli settlers against Palestinians and their property, and stresses the lack of law enforcement and accountability in relation to such acts.

II. Legal background

4. Israel, as the occupying Power in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, is bound by international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including as contained in international customary law. In particular, Israel is bound by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) and the Hague Regulations.² Article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention establishes that the occupying power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies. The Security Council,³ the General Assembly,⁴ the Human Rights Council⁵ and the International Court of Justice⁶ have all confirmed that the construction and expansion of Israeli settlements and other settlement-related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory are illegal under international law.

¹ A/HRC/20/13, A/68/513, A/67/375, A/66/364, A/65/365, A/64/516 and A/63/519.

5. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, Israel must comply with obligations contained in the international human rights treaties that it has ratified, including the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Violence against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child. This has been confirmed by the International Court of Justice⁷ and human rights treaty bodies.⁸

III. Overview

6. As stated in previous reports of the Secretary-General, Israeli settlements are an obstacle to the creation of a future Palestinian State.⁹ Despite the expressed commitment of Israel to freeze all settlement activity under the Quartet road map as well as multiple calls made by the international community for Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, to be stopped, the Government of Israel has continued to play a leading role in their creation and expansion, in violation of international law. During the reporting period, Israeli settlements continued to expand and new settlements were approved. According to the Israeli NGO Peace Now, during the reporting period, plans for 8,943 new settlement units were promoted by the Government of Israel, including 6,521 in the West Bank, excluding East Jerusalem, and 2,422 in East Jerusalem.¹⁰ The NGO estimated that this would mean housing for more than 44,000 new Israeli settlers, assuming that the average size of a settler family is 5 persons.¹¹ Further, it appears that new settlement construction increased by 70 per cent in the first half of 2013, with the construction of ² The Hague Regulations are annexed to the Hague Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 18 October 1907 (Convention IV). The International Court of Justice has stated that even though Israel is not a party to this Convention, the Hague Regulations are applicable to Israel, as they have become part of customary law. See Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory of 2004 (A/ES-10/273 and Corr. 1), paras. 89-101.

³ Security Council resolution 465 (1980).

⁴ General Assembly resolution 65/104.

⁵ Human Rights Council resolution 22/26.

⁶ The Court concluded that Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, have been established in breach of international law (A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1, (note 2 above), para. 120).

⁷ A/ES-10/273 and Corr. 1 (note 2 above), paras. 102-113.

⁸ CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 10, CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 3. See also A/68/513, para. 5.

⁹ A/64/516, para. 12; A/67/375, para. 6.

¹⁰ Peace Now uses the term "promote" to indicate support from the Government of Israel in advancing new settlement units in the multi-stage planning process. Information provided by Peace Now.

¹¹ See peacenow.org/Bibis%20Settlements%20Boom%20-%20March-November%202013%20-%20FINAL.pdf.

1,708 units, 180 of them in outposts,¹² as compared with 995 units built during the same period in 2012.¹³

7. In addition, in October 2013 the Government of Israel announced the construction of 5,000 new units in Israeli settlements located in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.¹⁴ According to the media, the aim of this measure was to neutralize negative reactions towards the release of Palestinian prisoners in the context of the peace talks.¹⁵ In November 2013, the media reported that the Prime Minister of Israel, Benjamin Netanyahu, had ordered the Minister of Housing and Construction, Uri Ariel, to reconsider construction plans for more than 20,000 housing units in Israeli settlements,¹⁶ including in the E-1 block,¹⁷ reportedly in order not to create an unnecessary confrontation with the international community.¹⁸ However, as of 20 November 2013, those plans had not been withdrawn.

8. The population in Israeli settlements continues to grow. According to the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, the growth rate of the settler population in 2012 was 5 per cent, almost three times higher than the national growth rate, which was 1.9 per cent.¹⁹ Estimations of the current settlement population in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, range between 500,000 and 650,000.²⁰

9. Israeli settlement activity, security measures adopted to protect settlers and their movement, and the violence committed by Israeli settlers against Palestinians and their property are behind most of the human rights violations against Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.²¹ For example, settlements have given rise to multiple restrictions imposed by Israel on Palestinian construction, in particular in Area C,²² making it virtually impossible for Palestinians to obtain building permits for homes and infrastructure.²³ As noted below, these restrictions often leave Palestinians with no other option than to build without permits, risking eviction and the demolition of their structures and their subsequent displacement (see paras. 11-20 below). As previously reported, in many cases, the demolition of Palestinian homes lacking building permits is linked to settlement expansion.²⁴ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian

¹² Outposts are settlements which, although often established with some kind of Government support, are not officially recognized under Israeli law.

¹³ See peacenow.org.il/eng/Jan-Jun-2013.

¹⁴ Mainly for the expansion of the Ramat Shlomo settlement and the construction of a national park on Mount Scopus.

¹⁵ See www.haaretz.com/news/diplomacy-defense/.premium-1.555373 www.timesofisrael.com/5000-new-settlement-units-said-to-be-in-the-works/ www.yourmiddleeast.com/news/israel-planning-another-3360-settler-homes_19078.

¹⁶ See peacenow.org/entries/updated_new_peace_nowapn_report_bibis_settlements_boom_-_even_bigger_than_was_known#more.

¹⁷ Area of the West Bank within the municipal boundary of Ma'ale Adumim settlement, adjacent to East Jerusalem. Plans to construct settlements in E-1 would create an urban block between Ma'ale Adumim and Jerusalem, exacerbate the isolation of East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank, and interrupt the territorial contiguity of the West Bank. See www.btselem.org/settlements/20121202_e1_human_rights_ramifications.

¹⁸ See www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-24919030.

¹⁹ See www.jpost.com/National-News/2012-West-Bank-settler-population-growing-almost-three-times-as-fast-as-national-rate-326309.

²⁰ A/68/513, para. 10.

²¹ A/68/513, para. 12; A/66/364.

²² The Oslo Accords divided the West Bank into Areas A, B and C. Area C comprises approximately 61 per cent of the West Bank and is under almost full Israeli military and civilian authority.

²³ A/68/513, paras. 31-33.

²⁴ A/HRC/22/63, paras. 62-71; A/67/375, para. 8; A/66/364, para. 11.

Affairs of the United Nations, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, 392 Palestinian structures were demolished in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, during the reporting period, displacing 588 people, including 272 children.²⁵

10. The situation in East Jerusalem remains an issue of concern. Between November 2012 and October 2013, 99 Palestinian structures were demolished, displacing 320 people, including 161 children.²⁶ In addition, new housing units in settlements situated in East Jerusalem were approved. For example, in August 2013, the Jerusalem Municipality Local Planning and Construction Committee approved the building of 58 housing units in the Pisgat Ze'ev settlement. The media reported that the Mayor of Jerusalem had voiced his support for a government plan to construct 793 new homes: including 400 in Gilo, 210 in Har Homa and 183 in Pisgat Ze'ev.²⁷ In November 2013, demolition orders for 10 apartment buildings in the Ras Khamis neighbourhood were issued. If implemented, they would result in the displacement of some 1,500 Palestinians.²⁸ Residents of Silwan have affirmed that they also received several demolition orders around the end of October.²⁹

IV. Israeli planning policy in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and its impact on the human rights of Palestinians

Nature of planning policy, law³⁰ and practice

11. The establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, is associated with a complex system of policies that negatively affect the human rights of Palestinians.³¹ The planning policy which regulates the construction of housing and structures in the West Bank,³² including East Jerusalem, is extremely problematic.³³ The Secretary-General³⁴ and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination³⁵ have previously noted the discriminatory nature of Israeli planning policy. For instance, in East Jerusalem, Israeli authorities have planned and zoned only 13 per cent of the city, most of which is already built up, for Palestinian construction. In addition,

²⁵ Information provided by OCHA.

²⁶ Ibid.

²⁷ See www.jpost.com/Diplomacy-and-Politics/Jerusalem-Municipality-approves-construction-in-Pisgat-Zeev-328324.

²⁸ Information provided by OCHA.

²⁹ See www.haaretz.com/news/diplomacy-defense/.premium-1.556071 and www.maannews.net/eng/ViewDetails.aspx?ID=643164.

³⁰ For the purpose of this report the term "law" includes regulation through military orders.

³¹ A/66/364, para. 8.

³² The planning regime in the West Bank is governed by a system of laws which were in force before 1967, when Israel occupied the West Bank. This system comprises three layers: the Ottoman, the British Mandate and the Jordanian Law. Israel has amended the system mainly through military orders. See www.yesh-din.org/postview.asp?postid=254.

³³ Planning and development in East Jerusalem is governed by Israeli national planning institutions. See "Planning to fail: the planning regime in Area C of the West Bank: an international law perspective", Diakonia International Humanitarian Law Resource Centre Legal Report, September 2013, available from: www.diakonia.se/documents/public/ihl/publications/Planning-to-fail-reportsept2013.pdf.

³⁴ See A/66/364.

³⁵ In 2012, the Committee expressed concern regarding the discriminatory planning policy of Israel and urged it to reconsider it entirely in order to guarantee Palestinian and Bedouin rights to property, access to land, access to housing and access to natural resources (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 25).

Palestinians undergo a long and costly process before a building permit within this area may be granted. Even if requirements to obtain a building permit in West Jerusalem are similar, underinvestment by the Municipality in public infrastructure and the inequitable allocation of budgetary resources in East Jerusalem make it very difficult for Palestinians to fulfil all requirements to obtain a permit.³⁶ As a result, at least 33 per cent of Palestinian homes in East Jerusalem lack Israeli-issued building permits, placing at least 93,100 residents at risk of eviction, demolition of their homes and displacement.³⁷

12. In Area C of the West Bank, Palestinians are not allowed to build on approximately 70 per cent of the land mass and are subject to severe restrictions regarding construction in the remaining 30 per cent.³⁸ Less than 1 per cent of Area C has been planned for Palestinian urban development.³⁹ Palestinians are not represented in the planning process, unlike Israeli settlers.⁴⁰ The combination of these factors makes it virtually impossible for Palestinians to obtain a permit to construct homes or infrastructure in Area C. Many Palestinians therefore build without building permits, putting them at risk of eviction, demolition of their homes and displacement.⁴¹ According to the Israeli Civil Administration (ICA), between 2009 and 2012, only 2.3 per cent of the permit applications by Palestinians in Area C were approved.⁴² Between 30 November 2012 and 30 October 2013, 477 Palestinian structures were demolished in Area C, which caused the eviction and displacement of 644 people, half of them children.⁴³

13. In contrast, Israeli authorities have provided settlements with detailed planning and established preferential policies, including granting incentives and benefits to settlers, allocating settlements land for expansion and connecting them to public services and infrastructure.⁴⁴ In addition, the strict application of planning laws to Palestinian communities, which causes a large number of evictions and demolitions of Palestinian structures, contrasts with the flexibility shown by the planning authorities towards Israeli settlements.⁴⁵ The widespread lack of enforcement of laws granting the power to evict and demolish structures when they are violated by Israeli settlers further highlights the differentiated application of planning policy.⁴⁶ For instance, in Area C, in the period 2010–2012, 2,418 demolition orders were issued for Palestinian buildings, while only 1,143 demolition orders were issued for Israeli settlement buildings.⁴⁷

14. Israeli planning policy is thus discriminatory against Palestinians as compared with Israeli settlers. As illustrated above, even if the planning laws in principle do not establish different requirements for Palestinians and Israeli settlers, they impose unachievable conditions for Palestinian construction. In contrast, Israeli settlers do not face such difficulties, for instance regarding the allocation of building permits and participation in the ³⁶ A/66/364, paras. 13-15.

³⁷ See www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_Jerusalem_FactSheet_December_2012_english.pdf.

³⁸ A/68/513, paras. 30-33.

³⁹ See www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_area_c_factsheet_January_2013_english.pdf.

⁴⁰ A/68/513, para. 32. See also B'Tselem – The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, “Acting the landlord: Israel’s policy in Area C” (June 2013), p. 13. Available from www.btselem.org/download/201306_area_c_report_eng.pdf.

⁴¹ A/68/513, paras. 30-33 and A/66/364, para. 19.

⁴² Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁴³ Ibid.

⁴⁴ A/68/513, paras. 23-29 and 34.

⁴⁵ See Land Grab, Israel’s Settlement Policy in the West Bank, May 2002, available from: www.btselem.org/download/200205_land_grab_eng.pdf.

⁴⁶ A/68/513, para. 34. See also: “The road to dispossession – a case study: the outpost of Adei-Ad”, Yesh Din, 18 April 2013, available from www.yesh-din.org/postview.asp?postid=254.

⁴⁷ Information provided by ICA to OCHA.

planning process.⁴⁸ This is in clear contravention of the international human rights obligations of Israel, in particular the principle of non-discrimination in relation to the right to adequate housing contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,⁴⁹ which has been ratified by Israel. By not upholding that principle, Israel is violating an international obligation of immediate effect.⁵⁰ Furthermore, it is violating the rule of law by virtue of a discriminatory application of the law against Palestinians, in this case the planning regime. In this respect, Israel is violating articles 2 (non-discrimination and equality before the law) and 26 (equal protection of the law) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which it is also a party.⁵¹

Impact of planning policy, law and practice on the human rights of Palestinians

15. The planning policy undermines one of the most important components of the right to adequate housing, namely security of tenure. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has established that everyone should possess a degree of security of tenure which guarantees legal protection against forced eviction, harassment and other threats.⁵² The Committee has also affirmed that States must take immediate measures aimed at conferring legal security of tenure upon those persons and households lacking such protection, in genuine consultation with affected persons and groups.⁵³ Israel is not complying with this obligation, since it is not taking any steps to protect the security of tenure of Palestinians. On the contrary, its planning policy, law and practice expose them to constant risks of forced eviction, demolition and displacement, which interferes directly with their enjoyment of the right to adequate housing. In addition, as previously reported, Palestinians cannot participate in the planning process,⁵⁴ in violation of the right to participate in public decision-making.⁵⁵

16. Land ownership and possession is another element of the right of Palestinians to adequate housing which is affected by Israeli planning policy and, more broadly, by Israeli settlement-related activities.⁵⁶ As stated by the former Special Rapporteur on the right to ⁴⁸ According to B'tselem, despite the fact that the same legal and institutional system is responsible for planning in Palestinian areas and in the settlements, the criteria applied are diametrically opposed. See Land Grab, Israel's Settlement Policy in the West Bank (note 45 above), p. 88.

⁴⁹ Article 11 consecrates the right to an adequate standard of living, which includes the right to adequate housing, food and clothing.

⁵⁰ Under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, States have the obligation to achieve progressively the rights contained in the Covenant, it being recognized that the realization of economic, social and cultural rights may take some time, owing to resource implications. However, some principles and components of such rights are of immediate effect, notably the principle of non-discrimination.

⁵¹ While examining Israel, the Human Rights Committee expressed concern regarding “the discriminatory municipal planning systems, in particular in ‘area C’ of the West Bank and in East Jerusalem, disproportionately favouring the Jewish population of these areas”, CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3; A/66/364, para. 7.

⁵² Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 7 (1997) on forced evictions.

⁵³ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 4 (1992) on the right to adequate housing.

⁵⁴ A/68/513, para. 32.

⁵⁵ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 4, para. 9.

⁵⁶ While land-related rights are a fundamental element of the right to adequate housing, there is no recognition of a human right to land. See UN Habitat, “The Right to Adequate Housing”, Fact Sheet adequate housing, this element is often essential to understanding the seriousness of the violations of the right to adequate housing.⁵⁷ Israel has been using different methods to seize land for settlements amounting to almost half of the West Bank.⁵⁸

17. Israeli control of land, and the takeover of land by Israeli settlers, often have as a consequence that Palestinians are dispossessed of their land. The case of the Israeli settlement outpost of Adei Ad illustrates the infringement of the right to adequate housing of Palestinians as a result of the takeover of land by settlers and the failure to enforce planning laws. Adei Ad was founded in 1998 by Israeli settlers who invaded a hilltop next to the villages of Turmusaya, Al-Mughayyr, Jalud and Qaryut in the West Bank. The outpost was established in contravention of Israeli planning law. It was built without a government decision to establish it, without its jurisdiction being delineated by an order of the Commanding Officer of the Central Command, without a detailed plan by virtue of which building permits can be issued and, consequently, without a building permit.⁵⁹ In spite of the illegality deriving from the violation of these laws, the outpost was and continues to be supported by government bodies, including the Settlement Division of the World Zionist Organization,⁶⁰ through funding and allocation of land, as well as by the Israel Electric Corporation and Mekorot (Israel National Water Company) through the provision of services.⁶¹ Although it is reported that the Israeli Civil Administration issued 81 demolition orders against structures in Adei Ad, only very few have been enforced.⁶²

18. It appears that various criminal and administrative offences have been committed by settlers against Palestinians in the area surrounding the outpost of Adei Ad, including fencing and cultivating land, trespassing, vandalism of Palestinian property and evicting Palestinians or preventing them from accessing their plots, sometimes through harassment and violence. In addition, the Israel Defense Forces (IDF) defined extensive non-entry zones for Palestinians, who, in many cases, are required to coordinate with IDF to gain access to agricultural areas.⁶³ As a result, Palestinians often have no access to agricultural lands they cultivated before the establishment of the outpost.⁶⁴ This has had an impact on their right to work, as their economies and way of life were based on agriculture.⁶⁵ Moreover, this situation has hindered their access to basic means of livelihood and services, which are essential elements of the right to housing and are linked to the fulfilment of the

No. 21 (Rev. 1), available from:

www.ohchr.org/Documents/Publications/FS21_rev_1_Housing_en.pdf.

⁵⁷ A/HRC/4/18, para. 25.

⁵⁸ A/68/513, paras. 17-22.

⁵⁹ "The road to dispossession" (note 46 above), pp. 7-8.

⁶⁰ The Division's role is to assist the Government in establishing Israeli settlements in the West Bank.

Its budget comes entirely from the State treasury. See www.mfa.gov.il/mfa/aboutisrael/state/law/pages/summary%20of%20opinion%20concerning%20unauthorized%20outposts%20-%20talya%20sason%20adv.aspx; A/68/513, para. 9.

⁶¹ "The road to dispossession" (note 46 above), pp. 44-56.

⁶² Ibid., p. 79.

⁶³ www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_al_mughayyir%20_case_study_2013_10_22_english.pdf

⁶⁴ Adei Ad is built on both unregistered Palestinian land and State land. See "The road to dispossession" (note 46 above), p. 8.

⁶⁵ According to the Palestinian Institute for the Study of Economic Policy (MAS), 34 per cent of Palestinian agricultural land in the West Bank is not accessible to its owners. The study indicates four main causes: settlements, the Wall, closed military zones and methods of enclosure. See MAS, Food Security Bulletin, Issue 7 (2012), cited in "Israeli settlers' agriculture as a means of land takeover in the West Bank", Kerem Navot, 2013.

rights to food, water, health and education and, generally, to an adequate standard of living (see paras. 21-29 and 34-36 above).⁶⁶

19. The case of Adei Ad illustrates the impact of Israeli planning policies on the enjoyment of economic, social, civil and political rights by Palestinians.⁶⁷ The obligations of Israel under international law include the duty to respect human rights by refraining from interfering with enjoyment of these rights, for instance, by refraining from denying Palestinians security of tenure and from implementing eviction and demolition orders based on discriminatory planning policies, laws and practices. In addition, protecting human rights entails ensuring law enforcement and accountability for settler violence to prevent third parties from interfering with Palestinians' enjoyment of their rights (see paras. 42-47 below). Finally, the fulfilment of Palestinians' rights requires, for example, amendment of the planning regime in order to eliminate discriminatory practices, while guaranteeing Palestinians full participation in the definition and implementation of planning policies.

20. Similarly, Israeli planning policies do not comply with the country's obligations under international humanitarian law. Israel amended the Jordanian planning law in force at the beginning of the occupation to such an extent that it exceeded the competence afforded to it, as occupying Power, to legislate.⁶⁸ The amendment eliminated Palestinian participation in the planning process while creating special planning bodies exclusively for Israeli settlements (Local Planning Councils). Moreover, Israeli planning policies have important long-term implications for the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the Palestinian population therein, which are not reconcilable with the temporary nature of occupation.⁶⁹ In addition, the occupying Power should look after the welfare of the population in the occupied territory.⁷⁰ The large number of evictions and demolitions suffered by the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, as well as the negative human rights impact thereof, indicate that such measures have not been aimed at ensuring the welfare of the Palestinian population.⁷¹

⁶⁶ See also A/68/513, paras. 36-41.

⁶⁷ In its general comment No. 4, paragraph 9, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights highlighted the relationship between the right to adequate housing and civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights: "the full enjoyment of other rights – such as the right to freedom of expression, the right to freedom of association (such as for tenants and other community-based groups), the right to freedom of residence and the right to participate in public decision-making – is indispensable if the right to adequate housing is to be realized and maintained by all groups in society. Similarly, the right not to be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with one's privacy, family, home or correspondence constitutes a very important dimension in defining the right to adequate housing".

⁶⁸ A/68/513, para. 32.

⁶⁹ According to the International Committee of the Red Cross, the temporary nature of occupation is one of the most important principles governing occupation. See www.icrc.org/eng/resources/documents/misc/634kfc.htm.

⁷⁰ See, in particular, article 43 of the Hague Regulations, on the obligation to ensure public order and the safety of the occupied population, and article 27 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Convention), on the obligation of protecting the rights of protected persons. According to the Israeli Supreme Court, the military commander must consider two factors in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: ensuring military or security needs and ensuring the welfare of the local population (HCJ 393/82, Jamait Askan et al. v. IDF Commander of Judea and Samaria et al, 37(4) PD, p. 785 (1983), in particular para. 27). See also David Kretzmer, "The law of belligerent occupation in the Supreme Court of Israel", International Review of the Red Cross, Vol. 94, no. 885, 2012, pp. 216-222.

⁷¹ Diakonia, "Planning to Fail", (note 33 above) pp. 22-23.

V. Impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the economic and social rights of Palestinians

Access to land and water

21. Settlements occupy a sizeable part of Palestinian land, making it impossible for Palestinians to develop or maintain their natural resources in any meaningful or sustainable manner. Of the land in the West Bank, 43 per cent has been allocated to settlements.⁷² This situation, coupled with the fact that Israel has responsibility for planning and zoning throughout Area C, greatly hampers the exercise by Palestinians of a wide range of economic and social rights (see paras. 15-20 above).

22. Israel controls all sources of water in the West Bank and effectively prevents Palestinians from adequately maintaining or developing water resources. Israel obtains approximately a third of the water it uses from the Jordan River,⁷³ while Palestinians are denied access to the riverbanks. Israel also extracts a significant portion of its water from the Mountain Aquifer, the largest water resource in the region.⁷⁴

23. The Israel national water company, Mekorot, owns all water supply systems in the West Bank and supplies approximately 50 per cent of the water available to Palestinian communities. Mekorot reportedly significantly reduces the Palestinian water supply during the summer months, in order to meet consumption needs in Israel and in the settlements.⁷⁵ One emblematic example is that of the village of Kufr al-Deek, near Ariel, one of the largest Israeli settlements in the West Bank. When supplies of water are low in the summer months, Mekorot closes the valves that supply Kufr al-Deek so as not to affect Ariel's water supply. Ariel also discharges wastewater inappropriately, resulting in contamination of the spring wells on which residents of Kufr al-Deek rely both for drinking water and for agriculture.⁷⁶

24. Because of these severe water cuts and the limited coverage of the water network in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, many Palestinian communities are forced to purchase water delivered by water tankers at a cost which is reportedly eight times or more what settlers are paying. This is the case even though much of the water may have originally been extracted from Palestinian sources.⁷⁷ Israeli settlers consume a daily average of 369 litres of water for domestic use, while Palestinians have access to only 70 litres per person per day.⁷⁸ According to the World Health Organization, 100 litres or more per person per day provides optimal access, whereas between 50 and 100 litres of water per person per day are needed to ensure that most basic needs are met and few health concerns arise.⁷⁹

⁷² A/68/513, para. 36.

⁷³ Al Haq, Water factsheet 1: "Geography and hydrology of water Resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory" (22 March 2013).

⁷⁴ Ibid.

⁷⁵ A/HRC/22/63, para. 84; A/61/500/Add.1, para. 29.

⁷⁶ Palestinian Hydrology Group, "Wastewater from Ariel settlement pollutes Palestinian water supply in Salfit" (2010).

⁷⁷ The water purchased from contractors costs as much as three times the highest price of water for household consumption in Tel Aviv. See www.btselem.org/water/restrictions_in_area_c.

⁷⁸ A/68/513, para. 38.

⁷⁹ See OHCHR, Human Rights Fact Sheet No. 35, "The right to water", available from www.ohchr.org/Documents/Publications/FactSheet35en.pdf.

See also World Health Organization, "Domestic water quantity, service level and health" (2003), available from: www.who.int/water_sanitation_health/diseases/WSH03.02.pdf.

25. In addition, many cases have been documented of settlers forcibly taking over Palestinian water resources, through violence, threats and intimidation. Settlers also erect physical obstacles, such as fences, preventing Palestinians from accessing wells.⁸⁰ In the case of 40 out of 56 water springs surveyed by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the course of 2011, Israeli settlers had even begun to develop the surrounding areas as a “tourist attraction”, installing signs, picnic tables and other recreational infrastructure. Many of those initiatives are promoted and funded by Israeli governmental or semi-governmental institutions.⁸¹

Right to an adequate standard of living

26. Besides being a vital element of Palestinian culture, olive farming is a mainstay of the Palestinian economy. According to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, olive production accounts for as much as 25 per cent of the total value of agricultural income in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, with approximately 100,000 families dependent to some extent on olive farming for their livelihoods.⁸² The majority of olive trees in the West Bank are rain-fed, making olive farmers vulnerable to drought. Irrigation techniques could improve the situation significantly; however, as described above, Palestinians lack meaningful access to most water resources and must purchase water from the drinking water supply for irrigation purposes. Only 6.8 per cent of the cultivated land in the West Bank is irrigated.⁸³

27. Israeli settlements, on the other hand, are supplied with ample water and many engage in cultivation of crops that require large amounts of water, such as bananas. Palestinian producers are unable to compete in these conditions, which results in settlement products dominating Palestinian markets.⁸⁴

28. Settlers often attack Palestinian agricultural lands and destroy olive trees. During the reporting period, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 270 incidents in the context of settler-related violence leading to the injury of 103 Palestinians and damage to around 6,660 trees owned by Palestinians. During the same period in 2012, 249 incidents affecting Palestinians were documented, resulting in injury to 97 Palestinians and damage to 6,150 trees.⁸⁵ A damaged 50-year-old olive tree requires five years to bear fruit again, and 20 years to reach a significant level of production. For each damaged 50-year-old tree, there are associated average costs of US$ 750.⁸⁶ Settler violence is also often directed at the herds of herding communities (see para. 42 below).

29. The situations described above affect the right to work of those Palestinians whose way of life is based on agriculture. In addition they hinder their access to means of livelihood, affecting several of their human rights (see paras. 15-20 above).

⁸⁰ The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “How dispossession happens: the humanitarian impact of the takeover of Palestinian water springs by Israeli settlers” (March 2012).

⁸¹ Ibid.

⁸² FAO, “Overview of the Olive Sector in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip” (October 2013).

⁸³ Emergency Water Sanitation and Hygiene in the occupied Palestinian territory (EWASH), Fact Sheet 14: “Water for agriculture in the West Bank” (March 2013).

⁸⁴ Ibid.

⁸⁵ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁸⁶ FAO Food Security Unit 2013, cited in Protection Cluster Working Group, “Update on settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem” (October 2013).

Environmental pollution caused by settlements

30. Israeli settlements in the West Bank have exacerbated existing environmental concerns. In a joint study,⁸⁷ official Israeli sources found that 81 out of 121 Israeli settlements are connected to waste treatment facilities. Nonetheless, 5.5 million cubic meters of raw wastewater continues to flow from settlements into the West Bank.⁸⁸ Furthermore, 80 per cent of solid waste generated by settlers is dumped at dumping sites not designed as sanitary landfills, located in the West Bank.⁸⁹

31. Israel transfers electronic waste (e-waste)⁹⁰ from Israel and Israeli settlements to areas near Palestinian communities in the West Bank.⁹¹ For instance, many irregular e-waste workshops in Idhna, Hebron, operated by backyard recyclers, are located near water wells, resulting in toxic chemicals and toxins such as mercury leaking into the ground and contaminating the water supply. Many workshops are located in the vicinity of agricultural lands, posing a threat to the agro-biodiversity and to the quality of agricultural products. According to local physicians, there appears to be a link between e-waste and the rise in various forms of cancer affecting Palestinians.⁹²

32. Human rights organizations have reported and warned of the impact of dumping industrial and chemical waste from industrial Israeli settlements, such as the Barqan Industrial Park and chemical factories⁹³ in the West Bank. For example, the settlement of Ariel dumps liquid waste sewage and industrial waste into a stream and on agricultural land, rendering it contaminated and unworkable.⁹⁴ Ariel's treatment plant ceased functioning in 2008 and the settlement's wastewater has been flowing into the Al Matwi stream and Salfit⁹⁵ and then west, through agricultural land to the villages of Bruqin and Kufr al-Deek,⁹⁶ passing near a domestic artesian well.⁹⁷

33. As noted above (see sect. IV), Israel applies restrictive policies, laws and practices to Palestinian structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. This also applies to ⁸⁸ The majority of the 81 settlements are connected to waste water facilities which are dysfunctional, defective and/or do not meet the standards required in Israel. See B'Tselem, "Foul play" (note 87 above).

⁸⁷ By the Israel Nature and Parks Authority Environment Unit, the Water and Streams Department in the Ministry of Environmental Protection and the environmental-protection staff officer in the Civil Administration. See B'Tselem, "Foul play: neglect of wastewater treatment in the West Bank" (June 2009,) available from www.btselem.org/download/200906_foul_play_eng.pdf.

⁸⁹ Jad Isaac and Jane Hilal (2011), "Palestinian Landscape and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict", International Journal of Environmental Studies, Vol. 68, No. 4, 413-429, August 2011, p. 426.

⁹⁰ According to EU Directive 2002a, E-waste, or waste electrical and electronic equipment (WEEE) is "electrical or electronic equipment which is waste including all components, subassemblies, and consumables, which are part of the product at the time of discarding", see United Nations Environment Programme, E-waste Vol. 1 (2007), available from

www.unep.org/ietc/Portals/136/Publications/Waste%20Management/EWasteManual_Vol1.pdf

⁹¹ Applied Research Institute – Jerusalem (ARIJ) in cooperation with the Sunflower Association for Human and Environmental Protection, "The impacts of electronic waste disposal on the environment and public health in the occupied Palestinian territory: a case study from Idhna, Hebron Government" (2012), pp. 4-5.

⁹² Ibid., pp. 9-10.

⁹³ Isaac and Hilal (note 89 above), pp. 426-427.

⁹⁴ Friends of the Earth International observer mission to the West Bank, "Environmental Nakba: environmental injustice and violations of the Israeli occupation of Palestine (2012), p. 11.

⁹⁵ Ibid.

⁹⁶ B'Tselem, "Foul play" (note 87 above), p. 29.

⁹⁷ Isaac and Hilal (note 89 above), pp. 413-429.

waste management infrastructure projects, which has resulted in the curbing of Palestinian projects, especially in Area C.⁹⁸ As Areas A and B are already mostly built up, the suitable locations for waste treatment sites are in Area C. The situation appears to be aggravated by delays in the Israeli approval and licensing process, which can last for over a decade.⁹⁹ In addition, Israel has also made the development of projects on serving settlements,¹⁰⁰ which worsens the situation, as the Palestinian Authority systematically refuses to engage with settlements, to avoid giving legal recognition to them. For instance, Israel refused a construction licence to a German-funded project in 2009 for the construction of a water treatment plant for Salfit in Area C. The rejection was premised on the interest of Israel in a joint project which would include treatment of Ariel's wastewater. The proposal entailed the untreated wastewater travelling 12 kilometres through the villages of Bruqin and Kufr al-Deek towards the Green Line, where the proposed plant would be erected.¹⁰¹

Right to education

34. Cases have been documented of groups of settlers attacking schools in Palestinian villages. For example, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) documented five incidents of attacks on schools in the village of Urif, south of Nablus, and close to the settlement of Yitzhar, from January to June 2013.¹⁰² These attacks usually led to clashes between the settlers and the residents, followed by interventions by the Israeli Security Forces (ISF) using tear gas, rubber-coated metal bullets and live ammunition to disperse Palestinians.

35. In a case documented by OHCHR, on 24 October 2013 a group of approximately 30 settlers, most of them masked, attacked the school in Jalud village. Some threw stones at the school, while others attempted to enter the schoolyard from the main gate and through the fence. The teachers locked the door from the inside, in order to protect the children. The settlers proceeded to destroy the cars parked in and around the school, and subsequently set fire to olive groves nearby. As a result of the attack, five cars were destroyed and more than 350 olive trees burned. Jalud is surrounded by six Israeli settlements, in addition to an IDF camp, and is the target of frequent settler violence, especially during the olive harvest. According to the information available to OHCHR, the Israeli police subsequently arrested four suspects for this attack.

36. Besides attacking schools, settlers also often engage in violent attacks on children on their way to or from school, including throwing stones at school buses. In some locations on the West Bank, ISF provide escorts for children to ensure their safety; however, these escorts are often unreliable and frequently fail to show up.¹⁰³

⁹⁸ "Building and administrative restrictions imposed by the Israeli authorities impede the establishment of new solid and sewage waste facilities to help to alleviate waste disposal issues", from "Barrier impacts on waste management", Barrier Monitoring Unit (BMU) and ARIJ, 2012.

⁹⁹ On 31 October 2013, the Minister of the Palestinian Water Authority stated that delays in approval of projects entail changing the locations several times, often causing the loss of funding. For instance, in 2010, Israel approved a water treatment project for West Nablus submitted in 1997. See also B'Tselem, "Foul play" (note 87 above), pp. 19-21.

¹⁰⁰ Barrier Impacts on Waste Management (note 98 above); and B'tselem, Foul Play (note 87 above), pp. 21-22.

¹⁰¹ The Current Environmental Situation in Salfit, ARIJ, 2008, p. 1, available from http://www.poica.org/editor/case_studies/salfit-enviro.pdf (in Arabic).

¹⁰² Information obtained through the Monitoring and Reporting Mechanism on Grave Child Rights Violations.

¹⁰³ A/HRC/22/63, para. 53.

VI. Failure to maintain public order, settler violence and lack of accountability

37. Israeli settlers continued to attack Palestinians and their property in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, during the reporting period. The lack of effective accountability and protection from such incidents by the Israeli authorities continues to be of serious concern.¹⁰⁴ The enduring failure of Israel to comply with its legal obligations in this regard is part of wider systemic failures to guarantee Palestinians' human rights.¹⁰⁵ This has allowed settler violence to continue unabated and even, at times, to flourish (see para. 39 below).

38. Israel is obliged under international law to protect Palestinians and their property from acts of violence by settlers, to ensure accountability for crimes committed, and to provide a remedy for any violations suffered. This derives from the obligations of Israel as an occupying Power, including its obligations to protect Palestinians in the occupied territory and guarantee their rights,¹⁰⁶ which entails taking action to prevent individuals or groups, including settlers, from interfering with the enjoyment of rights by Palestinians.

Settler violence: figures and trends

39. Incidents of settler-related violence continue to be recorded at an alarming rate. During the reporting period, OCHA recorded 270 such incidents, leading to the injury of 103 Palestinians, an increase in comparison with the same period in 2012, when 249 incidents were registered, resulting in injury to 97 Palestinians. During the reporting period, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs also recorded 30 incidents of violence perpetrated by Palestinians against settlers, in which two settlers were killed and 41 others injured, which also indicates an increase in violence against Israeli settlers, compared with the same period in 2012, when 27 incidents, leading to the injury of 38 settlers, were recorded.

40. In 2013, there has also been an increase in settler or Israeli violence against Palestinians and their property in East Jerusalem. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 58 such incidents during the reporting period in 2013, compared with 41 in the same period in 2012. On 14 August 2013, OHCHR documented a case in which Israeli religious students from a Talmudic school in East Jerusalem attacked a Palestinian family. According to the family, more than 40 students were hiding behind a building near to the family house, and attacked them with wooden sticks, metal bars and chains. The mother and two of her sons were hospitalized as a result of their injuries.

41. On 18 August 2013, in a case monitored by OHCHR, a 47-year-old Palestinian shepherd from the village of Mikhmas, near Ramallah, was taking his sheep through a water drainage tunnel under Road 60 to graze on privately-owned Palestinian land near the partially evacuated settler outpost of Migron, built on privately-owned Palestinian land.

¹⁰⁴ A/66/364, A/67/375 and A/68/513; The Karp Report: An Israeli Government Inquiry into Settler Violence against Palestinians in the West Bank (Institute for Palestine Studies, 1984); reports of the Shamgar Commission (1994) and the committee headed by Talia Sasson (2005); Yesh Din, "Law Enforcement upon Israeli Civilians in the West Bank", Data sheet, March 2012.

¹⁰⁵ A/68/502, paras. 29-43.

¹⁰⁶ Hague Regulations, article 43; Fourth Geneva Convention, articles 4, 27 and 55; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 6; Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 (2004) on the nature of the general legal obligation imposed on States parties to the Covenant, paras. 15-18; ICJ: A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1 (note 2 above).

Residents of Mikhmas, who have experienced repeated violence by settlers from surrounding outposts and settlements, had only recently begun using the tunnel again, after hearing that the settlers had been made to leave Migron by the Israeli authorities – although the outpost had only been partially evacuated. As the shepherd passed through the tunnel, he encountered six male settlers, who beat him with metal pipes. The settlers also attacked his herd of sheep, killing two of them and causing five pregnant sheep to lose their lambs. The shepherd was eventually found unconscious next to the tunnel and taken to Ramallah Medical Complex, where he remained for four days, receiving 70 stitches in his head. Similar incidents of physical assault by settlers have been documented by OHCHR and other organizations.¹⁰⁷

Law enforcement and accountability

42. Attacks by settlers have occurred repeatedly in the same areas and often at the same times of year, raising concerns about the effectiveness of action by the Israeli authorities to prevent such violence.¹⁰⁸ For example, Palestinian residents of Burin and neighbouring villages in the Nablus governorate have repeatedly faced attacks on their person and property by settlers from the nearby Yitzhar and Bracha settlements.¹⁰⁹

43. These trends have been thoroughly documented by the United Nations and other organizations. However the Israeli authorities still fail to protect Palestinian communities from such incidents.¹¹⁰ The large and increasing number of injuries to Palestinians caused by ISF in settler-related incidents indicates that, in the context of settler violence, security forces commonly intervene to disperse Palestinians, rather than to protect them from attacks.¹¹¹ These continuing failures heighten concerns previously expressed by the Secretary-General about the willingness of Israeli security forces to undertake law enforcement in a non-discriminatory manner.¹¹²

44. This situation is compounded by the persistent absence of effective accountability for attacks by settlers.¹¹³ In practice, not much has changed since the Secretary-General's previous report to the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/20/13), with the Israeli authorities continuing to fail to investigate cases effectively as required by international law. In figures recently released by the NGO Yesh Din, a staggering 97.9 per cent of cases of damage to Palestinian trees and agricultural crops between 2005 and 2013 were closed without ¹⁰⁷ See www.alhaq.org/documentation/weekly-focuses/732-palestinian-shepherd-beaten-with-metal-rods-by-settlers; www.btselem.org/settler_violence/20131030_assault_on_naasan_family.

¹⁰⁸ The highest numbers of incidents are recorded each year in areas close to settlements, notably Nablus, Hebron and Ramallah governorates (Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs figures).

¹⁰⁹ See

www.unrwa.org/sites/default/files/olive_harvest_continued_settler_attacks_against_refugee_livelihoods.pdf. See also A/67/375, paras. 31-33 and A/68/513, paras. 44-47; Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs map, Palestinian villages affected by violence from Yitzhar Settlement and Outposts, available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_yitzhar_map_february_2012_map_english.pdf.

¹¹⁰ For cases on 16 March, 30 April, 3 May and July 2013, see www.btselem.org/settlers_violence/20130529_sf_fail_to_protect_palestinians_from_settlers www.btselem.org/settler_violence/20131022_settlers_harras_faber_family www.btselem.org/settler_violence/20130806_settler_assault_omar_hushiyah.

¹¹¹ According to figures provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

¹¹² A/67/375, paras. 30-36.

¹¹³ A/68/513, paras. 42-52; A/67/375, paras. 37-39; A/66/364, paras. 21-33.

indictment; in two cases the files were lost and in four cases an indictment was filed, out of an overall total of 197 cases.¹¹⁴

45. Victims interviewed by OHCHR have reported that the police have not kept them informed of any progress in investigations. For example, in a case documented by OHCHR, a man beaten unconscious by settlers and whose skull was fractured with metal piping and stones, near Silwad, Ramallah governorate, on 11 April 2013, filed a complaint on 21 April at the police station in Binyamin settlement. At the time of preparation of the present report, the police had reportedly failed to provide him with any information pertaining to his case.

46. This lack of action is in stark contrast with investigations conducted into violence against Israeli citizens in the West Bank. For example, the response to the injury of an Israeli girl in Psagot settlement on 5 October 2013 saw IDF conduct thorough search operations in the neighbouring Palestinian town of Al-Bireh, resulting in the arrest of two men on 8 October 2013.¹¹⁵

47. The Israeli authorities have announced some positive initiatives, including the formation of a special police unit to combat nationalistic hate crimes and “price tag”¹¹⁶ attacks. Unfortunately, this has not been accompanied by any reduction in the number of settler-related incidents and, in fact, this type of crime is on the rise.¹¹⁷ There is also a mechanism for seeking compensation for such crimes through the Ministry of Defense. However, the necessity for effective criminal accountability mechanisms remains evident. Without fundamental changes in the approach of the Israeli authorities to these types of incident, Palestinians will continue to be vulnerable to settler attacks.

VII. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

48. Israel continues to occupy the Syrian Golan despite numerous resolutions of the Human Rights Council, for example, resolution 22/26, and of the Security Council calling for an end to the occupation, including resolution 497 (1981), in which the Security Council decided that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying power, rescind forthwith its decision. In resolution 497 (1981), the Security Council also called upon Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and in particular to desist from the establishment of settlements. In this regard, the Secretary-General has, in previous reports, expressed concern regarding the approximately 20,000 Israeli settlers who live in 33 settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan, and about the ongoing exploitation by Israel of natural resources in the occupied Syrian Golan, including gas, oil, wind and water (see A/68/513). It is noted that, during the universal periodic review of Israel on 29 October 2013, a number of stakeholders reiterated calls for an end to the construction of all Israeli settlements in the occupied Arab territories, including the occupied Syrian Golan.

¹¹⁴ www.yesh-din.org/userfiles/file/datasheets/data%20sheet%20oct2013/Yesh%20Din%20-%20Netunim%2010_13%20English.pdf. See also A/68/513, para. 52.

¹¹⁵ OHCHR interviews with residents of Al-Bireh. See also www.jpost.com/National-News/Nine-year-old-Israel-girl-shot-in-West-Bank-327944.

¹¹⁶ Strategy whereby Israeli settlers attack Palestinians and sometimes IDF in response to events or actions affecting them, such as evacuation of outposts or killings of settlers.

¹¹⁷ See www.globalprotectioncluster.org/_assets/files/field_protection_clusters/Occupied_Palestinian/files/oPt_PC_Update_Settler_Violence_October_2013_EN.pdf.

VIII. Conclusion and recommendations

49. Israeli settlement-related activities and settler violence are at the core of most of the violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. By virtue of the interdependence of human rights, Israeli settlements and settler violence violate Palestinians' economic, social, civil and political rights.

50. Israel, as the occupying Power, must abide by its international treaty and customary obligations by ensuring that the Palestinian population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory is afforded the protection provided for under international humanitarian law, and by respecting, protecting and fulfilling Palestinians' rights so as to enable them to fully enjoy their rights under international human rights law.

51. Israel is obligated to comply with its commitments as set out in the Quartet road map, including by immediately ceasing the transfer of its population to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and by ending and reversing all settlement activity.

52. Israel should cease all settlement activity and exploitation of natural resources in the occupied Syrian Golan, implement relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolution 497 (1981), and withdraw from territories occupied in 1967.

53. It is incumbent on Israel to cease the violations of Palestinians' human rights resulting from discriminatory and unlawful planning policies, laws and practices. Israel has to, in compliance with international law, amend the planning legislation and processes in order, in particular, to ensure the security of tenure and the full participation of Palestinians. Israel must also refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders based on discriminatory and illegal planning policies, laws and practices.

54. Israel must, as a matter of urgency, enhance its efforts to combat settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. It must take all necessary measures, including preventive measures, to protect Palestinians and their property, and to ensure that Palestinians have regular and unhindered access to their land, particularly, but not exclusively, in areas where the patterns of reported incidents show that Palestinians are especially vulnerable. Any law enforcement or protection measures must be carried out in a non-discriminatory manner.

55. Israel is obligated to ensure that all acts of violence committed by Israeli settlers against Palestinians and their property are investigated promptly, thoroughly, effectively, independently, impartially and in a non-discriminatory manner. Investigations should be subject to public scrutiny and allow for victims' participation. Victims should be kept regularly and promptly informed of the progress and developments in investigations. Individuals who are responsible for violations should be prosecuted and victims should be provided with an effective remedy.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
9 March 2015

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-eighth session

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the Occupied Syrian Golan*

Report of the Secretary-General

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 25/28 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan. The report highlights new developments concerning the role of Israel in the establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. It also analyses the difficulties faced by Palestinians in gaining access to their agricultural land and the impact of Israeli settlements on the economic, social and cultural rights of Palestinians. Lastly, it addresses the issues related to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan, including exploitation of natural resources.

* Late submission.

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Introduction	1 – 4	3
II. Legal background	5 – 6	3
III. Overview	7 – 15	4
IV. Impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the human rights of Palestinians	16 – 38	7
V. Failure to maintain public order, settler violence and lack of accountability	39 – 53	12
A. Overview	39 – 41	12
B. Cases of settler violence	42 – 46	13
C. Failure to protect	47 – 49	14
D. Accountability	50 – 51	15
E. Attacks on Israelis, and differentiated standards of due process.....	52 – 53	15
VI. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.....	54 – 56	16
VII. Conclusions and recommendations	57 – 60	17

I. Introduction

1. In the present report, which covers the period from 1 November 2013 to 31 October 2014, the Secretary-General addresses the progress made in the implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 25/28. In that resolution, the Council demanded that Israel, as the occupying Power, cease immediately and completely all of its settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan. It also condemned the continuing settlement and related activities, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, and the confiscation and destruction of property. The Council called upon Israel to end human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements and to fulfil its international obligations to provide effective remedy for victims.

2. The information presented in the present report is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and information provided by other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The report also contains information received from Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations and media sources. It should be read in conjunction with previous reports of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements to the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly (A/HRC/20/13, A/HRC/25/38, A/63/519, A/64/516, A/65/365, A/66/364, A/67/375/, A/68/513 and A/69/348).

3. In past reports, the various types of impact of settlements on the rights of Palestinians and the key role played by the State of Israel in the creation and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, were analysed. In his previous report on settlements submitted to the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/25/38), the Secretary-General focused on the discriminatory nature of Israeli planning policy, law and practice, which is contrary to international law and has a negative impact on the human rights of Palestinians.

4. In the present report, the Secretary-General analyses the impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the economic, social and cultural rights of Palestinians, and provides an update on settler violence against Palestinians and their property, as well as on the general lack of law enforcement and accountability for settlers in such cases.

II. Legal background

5. International humanitarian law and international human rights law apply, inter alia, in relation to Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (A/HRC/25/38, para. 4 and A/69/348, para. 4). Israel, as the occupying Power, is bound by the Fourth Geneva Convention and the Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (Hague Regulations).¹ Article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention establishes that “the occupying Power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies”. The construction and expansion of Israeli settlements, as well as other settlement-related activities such as the construction of the wall violate this provision, and are illegal under international law. This was confirmed by the Security Council in its resolution 465 (1980), the General Assembly in its resolution 68/82, the Human Rights Council in its resolution 25/28 and the International Court of Justice (A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1, para. 120).

¹ In its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1, paras. 89-101), the International Court of Justice found that, even if Israel is not a party to the Hague Regulations, they are nonetheless applicable to Israel as customary law.

6. In addition to its obligations under international humanitarian law and under customary international law, Israel, as the occupying Power, must also comply with the obligations arising from the international human rights treaties it has ratified, with respect to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/25/38, para. 5). As much was confirmed by the International Court of Justice (A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1, paras. 102-113), and by the human rights treaty bodies monitoring the implementation of international human rights obligations resulting from such treaties (see CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 5, and CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 3). The accession by the State of Palestine to several human rights treaties does not affect the obligations of Israel under international human rights law and international humanitarian law (A/69/348, para. 5).

III. Overview

7. During the period under review, Israel continued to expand existing settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and to approve plans for new ones. According to an Israeli non-governmental organization, between 1 November 2013 and 31 October 2014, 4,554 housing units were tendered in Israeli settlements in the West Bank (2,856), including East Jerusalem (1,698), and 10,183 housing units were promoted,² 6,042 in the West Bank and 4,141 in East Jerusalem. As previously reported, on 4 June, the Government of Israel announced the issuing of tenders for more than 1,400 new settlement housing units in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (A/69/348, para. 6). In September 2014, the plan to build 2,610 units in the Givat Hamatos settlement in East Jerusalem was approved by the relevant planning committee, opening the path for the issuance of tenders.³ If constructed, it would be the first government-led new settlement in East Jerusalem since the construction of Har Homa in the late 1990s,⁴ and would sever the territorial continuity between the Palestinian neighbourhoods of southern East Jerusalem and the southern West Bank.⁵

8. The Secretary-General notes the drop in the initiation of new construction in settlements in 2014 when compared to 2013,⁶ a year when an exceptional amount of new construction was recorded.⁷ The figures of 2014 are similar to the average number of new building projects initiated in 2011 and 2012 (250-300 housing units per quarter). The marketing of housing units in the settlements was, however, reportedly on the rise (by 866%) during the first seven months of 2014.⁸

² Peace Now uses the term “promote” to indicate support from the Government of Israel in advancing new settlement units in the multi-stage planning process.

³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, September 2014.

⁴ Ir Amim, “Jerusalem 2014: the rising cost of peace”, February 2014.

⁵ Peace Now, “Why is Givat Amatos so significant?”, 2 October 2014. See also Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, September 2014.

⁶ According to the Central Bureau of Statistics of Israel, between April and June 2014, the building of 235 housing units were initiated in Israeli settlements in “Judea and Samaria” (West Bank), as against 801 housing units started during the same period in 2013.

⁷ As reported by Peace Now.

⁸ Marketing of housing units denotes when Israeli authorities sign an agreement with a buyer who won a bid to construct a house or building. See Peace Now, “When marketing of units increases by 866%, CBS data shows 70% drop in construction starts”, 9 September 2014.

9. New outposts were also established during the period under review.⁹ Following the kidnapping on 12 June of three Israeli youths, who were later found murdered (see paras. 39 - 53 below and A/HRC/28/80/Add.1), four outposts were established in the same area where the incident took place, in the southern West Bank.¹⁰ The media reported that some Israeli right-wing groups declared that at least one of the outposts had been established in response to the kidnapping and killing of the three Israelis.¹¹ The creation of the outposts was reportedly supported by the municipalities of nearby settlements, which supplied trailer homes and basic electricity and water infrastructure.¹² Two of the outposts were dismantled shortly afterwards by the Israeli authorities for being “illegal” under Israeli law. At the time of writing, the other two outposts were reportedly still in place (see A/HRC/28/80/Add.1).¹³

10. New housing units also advanced in East Jerusalem. On 27 October 2014, media reported that the Israeli Prime Minister’s office had advanced plans for 660 housing units in the Ramat Shlomo settlement and 400 in the Har Homa settlement.¹⁴ According to an Israeli non-governmental organization, the construction of additional housing units in Ramat Shlomo would reduce the buffer area between the settlement and the Palestinian neighbourhood of Beit Hanina. In early November, the Jerusalem District Planning and Building Committee approved the Ramat Shlomo plan, with the number of housing units reduced from 660 to 500.¹⁵ New housing units in Har Homa would effectively link the areas of this settlement and Givat Hamatos (see para. 7 above).¹⁶

11. During the night of 29 September 2014, Israeli settlers moved into six buildings in the Palestinian neighbourhood of Silwan in East Jerusalem, below the Old City. This appears to have expanded the settler presence in Silwan by about 100 new settlers, an increase of 35 per cent. It was reported that the buildings had been purchased, although OHCHR is aware that some of the Palestinian owners are taking legal action, claiming that they did not sell their property to the settlers. It is reported that Israeli security forces allowed private security guards hired by the settlers to protect their move to the buildings in the middle of the night. At the time of writing, the Israeli Police were protecting the new settlers from possible attacks from Palestinians.¹⁷ The new influx of settlers and the additional presence of the Israeli security forces in an area where the settlement presence has been expanding in recent years contribute to general tensions between Palestinians and Israeli settlers (A/69/348, paras. 31-32).

12. During the period under review, Israel undertook significant steps to enable further expansion of settlements. Following an earlier declaration of State land west of Bethlehem in April 2014 (ibid., para. 19), on 25 August 2014, the Israeli Civil Administration announced the declaration as State land a further 3,799 dunums (930 acres) around the settlement of Gva’ot, also in the vicinity of Bethlehem.¹⁸ According to the Israeli media, the ⁹ Outposts are settlements that, although often established with some kind of government support, are not officially recognized under Israeli law.

¹⁰ As reported by the non-governmental organization Kerem Navot.

¹¹ “Settlers set up new outpost in honor of murdered teens”, Times of Israel, 1 July 2014.

¹² Peace Now, “Alarming Developments on the Ground”, 7 July 2014.

¹³ Kerem Navot reported that the outposts dismantled were Ramat Ha-shlosha and Tekoa E. The remaining outposts are Givat oz Vegaon and Givat Sorek, both in the Southern West Bank.

¹⁴ Barak Ravid and Nir Hasson, “Netanyahu orders plans be advanced for 1,060 new East Jerusalem housing units”, Haaretz, 27 October 2014.

¹⁵ Nir Hasson, “Jerusalem planners approve construction of 500 settlement homes”, Haaretz, 3 November 2014.

¹⁶ Ir Amim, newsletter October 2014.

¹⁷ Peace Now, “Settlers Take Over 6 Houses in Silwan”, 30 September 2014.

¹⁸ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, June – August 2014.

declaration was made in response to the killing of the three Israeli teenagers in June 2014.¹⁹ The affected areas are adjacent to the Green Line within the boundaries of five existing Palestinian villages. Once the process is complete (see A/69/348, paras. 18-21 and A/68/513, para. 20), it is expected that the area will be incorporated into the Gush Etzion Regional Council, possibly as a new illegal settlement.²⁰ This action reportedly constitutes the largest appropriation of Palestinian land in 30 years.²¹

13. The settler population continued to grow during the period under review. According to the official umbrella organization representing settlements (quoting figures obtained from the Ministry of the Interior), during the first six months of 2014, the settler population grew by 2 per cent and is expected to grow to 4 per cent by the end of the year, twice the nationwide population growth rate of Israel.²² A report issued in 2014 indicated that, over the past two decades, the population in Israeli settlements had grown by 240 per cent, outstripping growth rates within Israel.²³ Estimates of the current settlement population in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, range between 500,000 and 650,000 (A/HRC/25/38, para. 8).

14. In past reports, the Secretary-General noted that Israel played a leading role in the construction and expansion of settlements, including through the granting of benefits and incentives to settlers (see A/68/513). During the period under review, public funds continued to be allocated to settlements. In October 2014, the Israeli cabinet reportedly approved the allocation of some $34.7 million to the settlement division of the World Zionist Organization for the purposes of “developing agricultural and rural settlement”.²⁴ Although it was not specified which part of this amount would be invested in settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (ibid., para. 9), it might be surmised that the final amount would be considerable, given the role of the division in assisting the Government in establishing Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.²⁵ Reportedly, in 2012, the Government invested more per capita in settlements than within Israel, mainly for education and welfare services.²⁶

15. With regard to action intended to counter the growth of settlements, the European Union decided to ban dairy and other products of animal origin produced in Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which reportedly was to come into force in January 2015.²⁷ In a statement issued on 6 June 2014, the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and ¹⁹ Chaim Levinson and Jack Khoury, “Israel appropriates massive tract of West Bank land”, 31 August 2014.

²⁰ See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, June – August 2014. The Head of the Gush Etzion Regional Council is reported as having stated that “the announcement paves the way to establishing the new city of Gva’ot”; see Elijor Levy and Itay Blumental, “Israel recognizes 4,000 dunam in gush Etzion as state land”, ynetnews.com, 31 August 2014. According to Peace Now, Gva’ot was established as a military base in 1984.

²¹ Peace Now, “Unprecedented land confiscation of 4,000 dunams near Bethlehem”, 31 August 2014.

²² Josef Federman, “Israel’s settler group in the West Bank boast strong population growth”, CTV news, 16 September 2014.

²³ Dr. Shlomo Swirski and Ety Konor-Atias, “Inequality in Central Government Transfers to Municipalities”, Adva Center, 9 September 2014.

²⁴ Nimrod Bousso, “Israel to allocate $35m to World Zionist Organization’s settlement division”, Haaretz, 23 October 2014.

²⁵ See Talya Sason, Summary of the Opinion concerning Unauthorized Outposts, Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 10 March 2005.

²⁶ Swirski et al., “Inequality in Central Government Transfers” (see footnote 23).

²⁷ Gianluca Mezzofiore, “EU bans Israeli dairy products made in occupied West Bank settlements from January”, International Business Times, 10 October 2014.

other international enterprises reiterated that companies engaged in the Occupied Palestinian Territory should assess the human rights impact of their activities, also in the light of the heightened risks of negative human rights impact in a conflict-affected area, and take all necessary measures to ensure that they did not have an adverse impact on human rights, in conformity with international law and the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (see also A/HRC/22/63, paras. 96-99 and 117). In 2012, the Secretary-General emphasized that the business and human rights agenda of the United Nations and the said Guiding Principles should be an integral part of global efforts to bridge existing governance gaps and safeguard protection and respect for human rights in the context of economic activities (A/HRC/21/21, para. 92).

IV. Impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the human rights of Palestinians

16. Israeli settlements and acts of violence committed by Israeli settlers against Palestinians continue to underpin a broad spectrum of human rights violations against Palestinians (see A/HRC/25/38, A/68/513 and A/69/348).

Denied or restricted access to agricultural land

17. As highlighted in previous reports, the access of Palestinians to agricultural lands is severely restricted and often completely denied for a number of reasons, including intimidation and attacks by Israeli settlers against Palestinians (A/67/375, paras. 19-21); physical obstacles erected by the settlers themselves (A/67/375, paras. 19-21); the imposition of military or security areas off limits to Palestinians, for instance, closed military zones and fenced-off areas around settlements (A/64/516, paras. 30-31; A/65/365, para. 16,); physical movement restrictions, such as the wall, in particular with respect to the farm lands located in the seam zone (A/65/365, para. 33); and settlement roads that impede access to agricultural lands (A/63/519, paras. 16 and 30-36).

18. In response to the difficulties faced by Palestinian farmers in gaining access to Palestinian-owned land located in fenced-off areas around Israeli settlements and in areas witnessing frequent incidents of settler violence, the Israeli authorities have, in recent years, applied the “prior coordination” regime. This mechanism allows registered Palestinian farmers to have access to their land for a limited number of days each year through settlement gates, or to work in the fields under the protection of Israeli security forces (A/67/375, para. 20). According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, about 90 Palestinian communities in the West Bank that have land inside or in the vicinity of 55 Israeli settlements and settlement outposts may have access to their land only through “prior coordination” with the Israeli authorities.²⁸

19. “Prior coordination”, which has mostly been applied during the olive harvest, does not prevent attacks on trees and crops, which can occur at any time (A/67/375, para. 20). Access to private Palestinian land at times when no “prior coordination” is available remains uncertain and dangerous for farmers, particularly in areas with recurrent incidents of settler violence. Another shortcoming of the mechanism is that it is mainly applied for the olive harvest, not for other harvests. In a case documented by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Israeli security forces officers refused to protect

²⁸ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “The Impact of Israeli Settler Violence on the Palestinian Olive Harvest: The Case of Al Mughayyir Village”, October 2013.

Palestinian farmers when they were picking almonds, asserting that the “prior coordination” was only for olives, even though the almond trees were in the same field.²⁹

20. Furthermore, incidents have also been recorded in which Palestinian farmers have been denied access to their lands even during the time allowed by “prior coordination”; for example, on 20 October 2014, Palestinian farmers were reportedly denied access to their olive orchards located in the village of Deir Istiya (Governorate of Salfit) by security personnel from the settlement of Revava.³⁰

21. Another way of restricting access of Palestinians to agricultural land is the permit regime established by Israeli authorities for access to farming land in the seam zone, the closed area located between the wall and the Green Line.³¹ Israeli authorities often cite security reasons or claim that the portion of land is too small to qualify for a permit to deny Palestinians such permits (according to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, in the past four years, the approval rate in the northern West Bank is 50 per cent).³² For those who manage to obtain a permit, access is nonetheless frequently restricted. In 2013, there were 81 gates designated for access to agricultural lands in the seam zone; however, only nine of them were kept opened every day, while another nine were kept opened for only one or few more days per week. The majority (63) was kept opened only during the olive harvest season, which lasts approximately 45 days.³³

22. Palestinian farmers also see access to their private land restricted and often denied by the civilian security coordinators and guards who operate in the Israeli settlements and outposts in the West Bank. These coordinators and guards are drawn from residents of settlements and outposts, and charged with guarding the settlements and outposts on behalf of the Israeli army.³⁴ They are trained and equipped with weapons by the Israel Defense Forces, and are subject to the Military Justice Law.³⁵ At the same time, they are appointed by and act as the representatives of the settlements. As such, the civilian security coordinators identify with the goals of their communities, the illegal settlements, which seek to expand their boundaries, even if construction is on Palestinian-owned land. OHCHR found that the lack of adequate supervision by the Israel Defense Forces and of clearly defined powers leads to daily friction between the security coordinators and the Palestinians.

23. Civilian security coordinators and guards have been granted police and law enforcement powers, including the powers to detain, search and arrest persons they deem, based on “reasonable grounds”, pose a security threat, have committed or are about to commit an offence.³⁶ As a result, civilian security coordinators and guards have de facto a considerable margin of discretion in the conduct of their activities. As observed by Yesh Din, this has enabled them to obstruct arbitrarily the access of Palestinian farmers to their private land located in the vicinity of settlements and outposts. Reportedly, there have been

²⁹ Ibid.

³⁰ Information provided by Premiere Urgence – Aide Medicale Internationale.

³¹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “10 Years since the International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion”, 9 July 2014.

³² Ibid.

³³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, February 2014, p. 11.

³⁴ Military Order No. 432. See also Eyal Hareuveni, The Lawless Zone: the Transfer of Policing and Security Powers to the Civilian Security Coordinators in the Settlements and Outposts (Yesh Din, Tel Aviv, June 2014), pp. 4 and 11.

³⁵ OHCHR and the Protection Cluster, “Update on settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem”, October 2014, p. 5.

³⁶ Hareuveni, “The lawless zone” (see footnote 34), pp. 12-13.

instances where civilian security coordinators and guards have denied Palestinians access to farming plots located nearby a settlement or an outpost to prevent alleged attacks. In addition, cases of Palestinians being injured or having their property confiscated by these bodies while attempting to gain access to agricultural plots have been reported.³⁷

24. In 2009, a series of military orders defined the “guarding zones” areas, in which civilian security coordinators and guards operate, in the vicinity of settlements and outposts, in the West Bank.³⁸ The borders of these areas are wider than the municipal boundaries of the settlements, which allows civilian security coordinators and civilian guard squads to act beyond the jurisdiction of the settlements³⁹ and dramatically expands the impact of the settlements on the freedom of movement of Palestinians, as well as on their right to work their land and earn a living from it.⁴⁰

25. The access of Palestinian farmers to their lands is also impeded by attacks and harassment by Israeli settlers. Documented cases of violence appear to be aimed at spreading fear among Palestinian farmers and to deter them from farming their lands, in particular in areas near settlements (A/67/375, para. 19). The phenomenon of settler violence, and the general failure of Israel to ensure accountability for Israeli settlers who break the law and to protect Palestinians against attacks to their person and property, have been thoroughly analysed by the Secretary-General in previous reports (A/69/348, paras. 36-44; A/HRC/25/38, paras. 37-47).

26. About two-thirds of the land in the West Bank, including the majority of Area C, is unregistered, mainly because of the suspension by Israel of the land registration process in the West Bank at the beginning of the occupation in 1968.⁴¹ Combined with all of the above-mentioned factors that impede the access of Palestinians to agricultural land, this facilitates the dispossession of Palestinians of their land, in particular in Area C of the West Bank. An added factor in Area C is the application of the Ottoman Land Code, which establishes that unregistered land belongs to the ruling Power unless a legitimate private claim to the land arises. Entitlement for such a claim arises over unregistered land that has been cultivated without interruption for a 10-year period, in the absence of which the land is assigned to the ruling Power.⁴² Given the multiple obstacles faced by Palestinians to cultivating their land, it is difficult to comply with the requirement of uninterrupted cultivation for 10 years, which would allow Palestinians to register the land in their name.⁴³ In the absence of land registration, Israel has subsequently claimed much of the ³⁷ Ibid., pp. 40-43.

³⁸ Ibid., pp. 15-25.

³⁹ Ibid., p. 19.

⁴⁰ OHCHR, “Update on settler violence” (see footnote 35), p. 6.

⁴¹ See B’Tselem, “Land grab, Israel settlement policy in the West Bank”, May 2002, p. 54. According to Kerem Navot, another form of land registration regime also exists; the “first registration” or self-initiated land registration, established in 1964 under Jordanian rule, which in principle allows both Israeli settlers and Palestinians to register small portions of land in the West Bank. Owing to the expenses incurred in taxes, lawyers and the elaboration of maps required to use the register, few Palestinian farmers can afford to register their land, while Israeli settlers, often supported by settler organizations, are better placed to take advantage of it. See also B’Tselem, “Under the Guise of legality: Israel’s Declarations of State Land in the West Bank”, February 2012.

⁴² Kerem Navot, “Israeli Settler Agriculture as a Means of Land Takeover in the West Bank”, August 2013, annex II, p. 107. The Ottoman Land Code also establishes that the State may take possession of land (held on the basis of a land deed or kushan) that is not cultivated for three consecutive years. See also Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, April 2014, and B’Tselem, “Under the Guise of Legality” (see footnote 41) pp. 25-26.

⁴³ Under the “first registration” or self-initiated land registration (see footnote 41).

unregistered land as government property and declared it State land.⁴⁴ Once declared State land, it is often allocated to settlements (A/69/348, para. 20).⁴⁵

27. The above circumstances create a situation of insecurity of tenure for Palestinian landowners, which in turn create the conditions for Israeli settlers to take over land by cultivating it and eventually registering it under their name.⁴⁶

28. According to the Voluntary Guidelines on the Responsible Governance of Tenure of Land, Fisheries and Forests in the Context of National Food Security of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), States should remove and prohibit all forms of discrimination related to tenure rights, including registration of land.⁴⁷ Furthermore, States are to recognize informal land tenure in a manner that respects existing rights and in ways that recognize the reality of the situation and promote social, economic and environmental well-being. The Palestinians, who have long been present on and have cultivated land in the West Bank, should have their legitimate tenure rights recognized and be protected against dispossession of their land. This is in line with the obligation of Israel, as the occupying Power, to protect the population in the occupied territory and their property.⁴⁸

29. Attacks by Israeli settlers against Palestinians and their property, and the denial or restriction of access to agricultural land, undermine Palestinians' right to an adequate standard of living (A/HRC/25/38, paras. 26-29), as set out in article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to which Israel is party. The right to an adequate standard of living encompasses the right of everyone to continuous improvement in living conditions; however, it is evident that, rather than improving, the living conditions of Palestinians are deteriorating as a consequence of Israeli settlement activities and settler violence, while the settlements continue to prosper (see A/HRC/25/38, A/68/513, A/69/348).

30. Before the occupation, agriculture was the main source of labour and resources for Palestinians. Palestinian agriculture has, however, been adversely affected by measures taken by Israel as the occupying Power, in particular land seizures and restrictions on access to land and water resources (A/68/513, para. 40). From 1965 to 1994, cultivated areas shrank by 30 per cent from 1965 to 1994, and Palestinian agricultural production was reduced, from 50 per cent in 1968 to 4.9 per cent of GDP in 2013.⁴⁹

31. Agriculture constitutes the largest sector of the economy of Israeli settlements (A/68/513, para. 41). Settlers do not face the same restrictions as Palestinians in their access to agricultural land, and receive the protection and support of Israel. This generally allows them to invest in new technologies and more efficient farming methods, which is reflected in their productivity (A/HRC/22/63, paras. 22, 89-92; A/68/513, para. 28; A/69/348, paras. 28-32). Every year, Israeli settlers export some $285 million worth of agricultural products, against only $19 million by Palestinians.⁵⁰

⁴⁴ B'Tselem, "Under the Guise of Legality" (see footnote 41), p. 33.

⁴⁵ State land is automatically placed within the settlement's regional and local councils and then allocated for settlement development or military training. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, April 2014.

⁴⁶ Using the self-initiated registration regime. Kerem Navot, "Israeli Settler Agriculture" (see footnote 42), p. 108. See also A/69/348, paras. 29-31.

⁴⁷ See also International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 2.2.

⁴⁸ Hague Regulations, art. 43; Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 4, 27 and 55.

⁴⁹ Emergency Water and Sanitation/Hygiene (EWASH), Fact Sheet 14, 2013; and Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, "Palestine in Figures 2012", March 2013.

⁵⁰ Who Profits, "Made in Israel: Agricultural Exports from Occupied Territories", April 2014.

Case study: the olive harvest

32. Almost half of the agricultural land in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (48 per cent) is planted with 8 million olive trees, with the majority located in the West Bank. The olive oil industry accounts for 25 per cent of all agricultural income of the Occupied Palestinian Territory; it is estimated that about 100,000 families depend to some extent on the annual olive harvest for their livelihood (A/HRC/25/38, para. 26).⁵¹ Between 90 and 95 per cent of the olive harvest is used to produce olive oil. Production of olive oil depends on the yield cycle, and accordingly fluctuates between 6,000 and 34,000 tons a year.⁵²

33. The restriction or denial of access for Palestinian farmers to olive orchards has a negative impact on the production of olives, in particular in areas in the vicinity of settlements, in the seam zone (where some 40,000 dunums (9,884 acres) of olive groves are located), and in those areas where incidents of settler violence are recurrent. Olive orchards require maintenance all year round. Restrictions on and delay or prevention of performance of agricultural maintenance activities have an adverse impact on productivity and value of the harvest. According to FAO, each olive grove requires a total of 133 days of work a year to adequately maintain it, including tasks such as land clearing, fertilizing, ploughing, pest control and harvesting. Owing to the restrictions imposed, most Palestinian farmers have access to their olive orchards for just a few days a year, mainly confined, through the “prior coordination” mechanism, to the harvest period, which is far less than the 133 days required to adequately maintain the orchards.

34. Restrictions on access to olive orchards located in the seam zone have a negative impact on the production and the value of the harvest. Data collected in the northern West Bank since 2010 showed that olive trees in the seam zone had a reduction in yield of between 40 and 60 per cent when compared to equivalent trees in areas where maintenance activities could be carried out freely on a regular basis.⁵³

35. Settler violence also has a negative impact on Palestinian agricultural productivity. Attacks and intimidation against Palestinian farmers and the destruction of their property take place on a regular basis, affecting their rural livelihoods. According to information from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the period under review, 8,482 Palestinian-owned trees were damaged in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Although there has been a reduction in the number of trees affected in comparison with 2013, the number of trees uprooted and damaged remains high.⁵⁴

36. Settler violence usually increases during the olive harvest (A/67/375, para. 19).⁵⁵ During the first month of the olive harvest, in October 2014, 15 incidents of settler violence, resulting in damage to 277 trees, were recorded.⁵⁶ For example, on 14 October, 21 Palestinian-owned olive trees were reportedly cut and damaged by settlers from the Bait

⁵¹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin Monthly Report, September 2014, p. 2.

⁵² Ibid., p. 4.

⁵³ Ibid., February 2014, pp. 11-12.

⁵⁴ Between January and September 2014, 7,342 trees were damaged. During the same period in 2013, the number of trees affected was 8,615.

⁵⁵ See the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, “Olive harvest: continued settler attacks against refugee livelihoods”, October 2013.

⁵⁶ In 2013, 33 incidents were reported during the whole period of the olive harvest (October – December 2013), which resulted in damage to 1,522 trees.

Ayin settlement, in the Bethlehem Governorate.⁵⁷ On 22 October, a field of olives was set alight, allegedly by Israeli settlers from the Yitzhar settlement in the Nablus Governorate.⁵⁸

37. Statistics indicate that most attacks by Israeli settlers on Palestinian individuals and on Palestinian-owned trees reportedly go unpunished. , Of the 246 investigations opened between 2005 and 2014 monitored by Yesh Din, only four ended with an indictment and 223 were closed owing to possible investigative failures, such as a failure to identify suspects or to collect evidence.⁵⁹ The establishment of an anti-nationalistic crimes unit within the “Judea and Samaria” (West Bank) police seems to be ineffective. Out of the 35 cases of damage by settlers to Palestinian trees documented by Yesh Din in 2013, 23 cases were closed, apparently because of investigation failures, with no indictments issued.⁶⁰

38. Physical attacks against Palestinian farmers were also recorded during the 2014 olive harvest. On 11 October, in the village of Kafr al-Labad, Tulkarem Governorate, Israeli settlers reportedly injured a 45-year-old Palestinian man and his 9-year-old son who were picking olives with their family on land that does not require prior coordination for access to it. Three Israeli settlers holding knives reportedly attacked them. The settlers allegedly stole the harvest equipment and personal belongings, and seized five sacks of olives, amounting to approximately 250 kg.⁶¹ In another incident on the same day, a 27-year-old Palestinian woman was injured by Israeli settlers when picking olives on a grove located near the settlement of Kfar Tappuah, Salfit Governorate.⁶²

V. Failure to maintain public order, settler violence and lack of accountability

A. Overview

39. The persistent and troubling phenomenon of settler violence is directly related to the continued existence, proliferation and expansion of illegal settlements inserted in and between Palestinian communities throughout the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, as described above and in previous reports of the Secretary-General (see A/69/348, paras. 36-44).

40. Settler violence is one of the clearest and most direct negative consequences of the settlements. It affects the enjoyment by Palestinians of their basic rights, including their rights to freedom of movement, an adequate standard of living, work, and education, as they face difficulty in having access to schools or their land for fear of attack by settlers (A/68/513, paras. 12-14).⁶³ Repeated calls by the international community for the Israeli authorities to address the problem have generally not succeeded in prompting positive action to improve the situation (CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4, para.16 and A/69/348, paras. 36-44).⁶⁴

⁵⁷ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Protection of Civilians (Weekly), 14 –20 October 2014, p. 2.

⁵⁸ Information provided by Premiere Urgence – Aide Medicale Internationale.

⁵⁹ See Yesh Din, “96.6 Percent of Investigations into Attacks on Palestinian Trees are Closed due to Police Failings. Indictments in Only Four Cases”, 13 October 2014, and “Law Enforcement on Israeli Civilians in the West Bank”, Yesh Din Monitoring 2005-2013, 24 July 2013.

⁶⁰ Yesh Din, “96.6 Percent of Investigations into Attacks” (see footnote 59).

⁶¹ Information provided by Premiere Urgence – Aide Medicale Internationale.

⁶² See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Protection of Civilians, 30 September – 13 October, and “Settlers beat woman picking olives with her children near Salfit”, Ma’an News Agency, 12 October 2014.

⁶³ OHCHR and the Protection Cluster, “Update on settler violence” (see footnote 35), pp. 3-4.

⁶⁴ Ibid., pp. 5-6.

Between 1 November 2013 and 27 October 2014, 207 Palestinians were recorded as injured in settler-related incidents, including 88 by settlers themselves and 119 by Israeli security forces. According to information received from OHCHR, five Palestinian fatalities were recorded in settler-related incidents, including three killed by Israeli security forces and two by Israeli settlers. During the same period, six Israelis were reportedly killed and 62 injured by Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (see also paras. 52-53 below).

41. In this context, Israel has repeatedly failed to prevent or halt attacks on Palestinians as it is obliged to do under international law.⁶⁵ This failure is underpinned by a long-standing lack of accountability in cases involving settlers, whether in relation to physical assaults or attacks on Palestinian property (see table below). As stated in previous reports, Israel has an obligation to bring perpetrators to justice under international human rights law (A/HRC/25/38, para. 38 and A/68/513, paras. 42-52), as a key component of ensuring protection, justice for victims and non-repetition of similar incidents.

Impact of settler violence: 2009-2014 (January to September)

	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
Incidents resulting in casualties	37	55	105	71	79	88
Injuries caused by settlers	106	76	144	115	121	142
Injured caused by Israeli security forces	49	204	95	42	172	79
Incidents resulting in property damage	69	145	232	183	240	166
Trees/saplings destroyed or damaged	2 075	3 910	8 033	6 565	8 615	7 342

Source: Protection Cluster in the occupied Palestinian Territory (October 2014)

B. Cases of settler violence

42. Incidents of settler violence against Palestinians and their property continued throughout the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. The kidnapping and murder of three Israeli teenagers, Naftali Fraenkel, Gilad Shaer and Eyal Yifrah, near Hebron in June 2014 sparked a wave of racist attacks by Israelis, including settlers, on Palestinians, particularly in East and West Jerusalem but also across the West Bank. This culminated in the abduction and murder by Israelis, including one settler, of Palestinian teenager Mohammad Abu Khdeir from East Jerusalem, which in turn sparked violence by Palestinians against Israelis (see A/HRC/28/80/Add.1).

43. Such cases recorded in Jerusalem included physical attacks, “price tag” hits (see A/HRC/25/38, para. 47) and damage to property. The attacks were perpetrated by both settlers and other Israelis, but were all part of an increase in attacks in Jerusalem during the period under review. In one case monitored by OHCHR, on 10 February 2014, several cars were allegedly painted with “anti-Arab” graffiti and their tyres flattened in the Palestinian neighbourhood of Silwan in East Jerusalem.

⁶⁵ Israel has a positive obligation to protect Palestinians from settler violence and, as the occupying Power, also the obligation to maintain public order and safety in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including by providing Palestinians with all the guarantees accorded to protected persons under international humanitarian law. Fourth Geneva Convention, in particular, arts. 4 and 27; CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.13, para.8, and Hague Regulations, art. 43.

44. In another case monitored by OHCHR, on 12 April 2014, at around midnight, three Palestinians from the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Beit Hanina went to withdraw money from an automatic teller in the adjacent Pisgat Zeev settlement. As they were leaving, they were blocked by some 25 settlers who reportedly declared that it was “a Jewish neighbourhood” and that “Arabs are not allowed in”, and then severely beat them. When the settlers left, the Palestinians informed an Israeli police patrol of the incident. The police searched the area and arrested three suspects. On 13 April, the victims identified one of the alleged perpetrators among those arrested. A few days later, however, the victims, inquiring about the case, were informed that it was closed.

45. Incidents were also recorded in other areas of the West Bank. In a case monitored by OHCHR, on 23 May 2014, two Palestinians were allegedly attacked by a group of four settlers on road #457 when they stopped their car near the Ma’ale Mikhmas settlement. One was beaten with metal pipes for about 15 minutes. He suffered three fractures to his skull and spent three days in intensive care. The other Palestinian, the driver, was stabbed in the arm by one of the settlers, and wounded his hand when attempting to grab the knife. He managed to drive off to look for help. When he returned to the site accompanied by three Palestinian cars, the settlers fled the scene.

46. During the period under review, cases of Palestinians throwing stones – and in some cases Molotov cocktails – at Israeli vehicles in the West Bank, resulting in material damage and a number of injuries, were recorded. Assaults by Palestinians against Israelis, including against settlers, were also reported (see section below).

C. Failure to protect

47. The failure of Israeli forces to protect and enforce the law against settlers has been well documented (see A/HRC/25/38, paras. 42-47). While past initiatives have led to increased protection for Palestinians and their property, for the most part the violence continues unabated. Concerns persist in two primary respects: incidents in which the Israeli security forces are present at the scene of an incident involving violence by a settler, but fail to intervene to prevent or stop the attack, including by failing to make arrests; and a more general failure to provide adequate protection at known trouble spots and during periods of heightened risk.

48. Past reports included information on several cases in which Israeli soldiers appeared to stand by while settlers committed offences (A/66/364, paras. 23-25; A/67/375, paras. 30-32; A/68/348, para. 40), despite having the authority and obligation to respond in cases where the Israel Defense Forces are on the scene before the Israeli police.⁶⁶ The State Comptroller, responsible for, inter alia, auditing acts of Israeli institutions, in a report of 2013 raised similar concerns regarding the failure of the Israel Defense Forces to detain suspects and to ensure the integrity of a potential crime scene.⁶⁷

49. Recurrent incidents of settler violence in specific geographic areas have been broadly documented.⁶⁸ Accordingly, the authorities are aware of the locations and times of year when greater protection is necessary. In 2012, the Office for the Coordination of ⁶⁶ See Yesh Din, Shadow report to the fourth periodic report of Israel, Human Rights Committee, 8 September 2014 (available from www.yesh-din.org/infoitem.asp?infocatid=628), pp. 19-20.

⁶⁷ Ibid., p. 20.

⁶⁸ See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, map of Palestinian communities at risk of Israeli settler violence, September 2012. See also A/69/348, paras. 38-44 and A/68/513, paras. 46-47.

Humanitarian Affairs estimated that 315,000 people in 110 communities were at high or moderate risk of settler violence.⁶⁹ They included Palestinian villages close to Yitzhar and Bracha settlements in the Nablus area where, for example, 1,974 olive trees were reportedly damaged between January 2013 and the end of September 2014.⁷⁰

D. Accountability

50. Where there is a willingness on the part of the Israeli authorities to enforce the law, they are able to do so effectively. For example, as previously reported, following an attack by Israeli settlers on an Israel Defense Forces post on 8 April 2014 sparked by the demolition of some structures in Yitzhar settlement, the Government of Israel adopted a position of “zero tolerance” and five arrests were reportedly made (A/69/348, para. 41). The stationing of a border police company in Yitzhar appears to have led to a decrease in settler violence incidents in the surrounding Palestinian villages since May 2014.⁷¹ Furthermore, there have been some cases of arrest of Israelis for committing “price tag” attacks,⁷² an anti-nationalistic crimes unit has been created within the “Judea and Samaria” (West Bank) police, and perpetrators are now reportedly classified as belonging to “illegal associations”.⁷³ The number of cases that actually lead to any kind of accountability is, however, negligible.⁷⁴

51. Overall, settlers committing violent acts against Palestinians are rarely prosecuted, providing little deterrence against similar attacks. An examination of complaints of settler violence since 2005 has revealed a lack of accountability in the vast majority of cases. Indictments were served in only 72 of the 970 processed cases monitored between 2005 and 2014. A total of 887 files (or 91.4 per cent) of complaints were closed without an indictment being served, of which 593 because the “offender was unknown”, 195 because of “insufficient evidence” and 76 due to the “absence of criminal culpability”.⁷⁵ This reinforces a sense and culture of impunity for perpetrators, and exacerbates Palestinians’ sense of insecurity and lack of confidence in the Israeli judicial system.

E. Attacks on Israelis, and differentiated standards of due process

52. According to information provided by OHCHR, between 1 November 2013 and 27 October 2014, six Israelis (including two children) were killed, and 62 were wounded in attacks committed by Palestinians - a worrying increase when compared with previous years (see A/HRC/25/38, para. 39). The means deployed to investigate such incidents appear to be greater than those for attacks against Palestinians. When the victims are Israeli, large-scale arrest and detention campaigns are typically carried out by the Israel Defense Forces throughout the West Bank, and by the Israeli police and border police in East Jerusalem, in order to apprehend the suspects (A/66/364, para. 31). By contrast, ⁶⁹ 31 per cent in the North, 34 per cent in the Centre and 35 per cent in the South of the West Bank; see Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Monthly Humanitarian Monitor, August 2012.

⁷⁰ OHCHR and the Protection Cluster, “Update on settler violence” (see footnote 35), p. 6.

⁷¹ Ibid., p. 5.

⁷² See “Seven Jewish teens arrested for ‘price tag’ attacks near Jerusalem”, ynetnews.com, 5 May 2015, and Ben Hartman, “Husband and wife from Yitzhar arrested for Umm al-Fahm Price Tag attack”, Jerusalem Post, 1 May 2014.

⁷³ See Tovah Lazaroff, “US: Price tag attacks against Palestinians ‘largely un-prosecuted’”, Jerusalem Post, 30 April 2014.

⁷⁴ See Daniel Estrin and Josef Federman, “In West Bank, teen offenders face different fates”, AP, 20 April 2014.

⁷⁵ Yesh Din, “Law Enforcement on Israeli Civilians in the West Bank”, November 2014.

investigations of attacks against Palestinians tend to raise serious questions about their effectiveness in bringing perpetrators to account.

53. The difference witnessed in the justice systems applied is also matter of concern. Most Palestinians accused of attacks against Israelis are tried by the Israeli military justice system, while Israeli civilians, including settlers, accused of crimes are tried by civilian courts.⁷⁶ The Israeli military court system imposed on Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, does not afford suspects some of the fundamental guarantees of the right to a fair trial, in particular the independence and impartiality of the tribunal (A/67/372, para. 27).

VI. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

54. An estimated 21,000 Israeli settlers currently live in the occupied Syrian Golan in 33 settlements heavily subsidised by Israel. These settlements enjoy a number of financial incentives as well as a disproportionate allocation of water resources, which contributes to a higher agricultural yield for settlers. By contrast, approximately 20,000 Syrians, the majority from the Druze community, live in six villages dependent primarily on agricultural income, but disadvantaged by restricted water supplies at higher prices and fewer economic opportunities.⁷⁷ The exploitation of natural resources in the occupied Syrian Golan, in violation of international law, has continually been supported by the Government of Israel, and includes permits and licences granted to extractive multinational corporations involved in oil and gas mining (A/HRC/25/38, para. 48, and A/68/513, paras. 53-54). The Government's latest five-year development plan, announced in January 2014, aims to provide better water infrastructure systems and accelerate de-mining efforts to support settler farming communities in the occupied Syrian Golan (A/69/348).

55. The beneficiaries of such developments may include the Israeli wine industry. A total of 14 Israeli wineries, mostly founded in the late 1990s or early 2000s, are based in Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan, and produce their wine from grapes grown in the occupied territory. The oldest of the wineries based in several settlements in the occupied Golan, Golan Heights Wineries, founded in 1983, produces an estimated 5.4 million bottles of wine annually. Many of the wineries, which market their produce globally, reportedly do not label the origin of the grapes accurately on their bottles.⁷⁸

56. The Government is also reportedly focusing on investing in education for the benefit of settlers in the occupied Syrian Golan. In August 2014, it was reported that an Israeli academic institution, Ohalo College, based in Katzrin settlement in the occupied Syrian Golan, was offering a wide range of financial incentives to prospective students in order to increase enrolments.⁷⁹ The Secretary-General reiterates that the Security Council, in its resolution 497 (1981), reaffirmed that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law, and relevant Security Council resolutions, and decided that the decision of Israel to impose

⁷⁶ The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination recommended that Israel ensure equal access to justice for Palestinians and Israelis, including settlers; see CERD/C/ISR/CO/14, para. 27.

⁷⁷ Patrick O. Strickland, "Residents in occupied Golan Heights fear creeping Israeli presence", 12 February 2015.

⁷⁸ Forbidden Fruit: the Israeli Wine Industry and the Occupation (Tel Aviv, Who Profits, April 2011). On the labelling of products from settlements in the West Bank, see A/HRC/22/63, para. 99.

⁷⁹ "As world watched Gaza, Israel announced 1472 new settlements in West Bank", Mondoweiss, 30 August 2014.

its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect.

VII. Conclusions and recommendations

57. During the period under review, Israel continued to play a leading role in the establishment and the expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in violation of international law, in particular article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The settlements continue to be a central source of multiple human rights violations of Palestinians. In this context, Israel still largely fails to comply with its international obligation to protect the Palestinian population from violent acts committed by Israeli settlers, and to effectively prevent, and ensure accountability for, settler violence. Israeli policies and practices regarding access to Palestinian land have a negative impact on the rights of Palestinians, in particular their rights to an adequate standard of living and to work.

58. Israel must stop obstructing and restricting the access of Palestinians to agricultural land in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Disproportionate restrictions, mostly related to settlements, are putting Palestinian livelihoods at a great risk. Effective measures should be taken to ensure that Palestinians are able to have access to and cultivate their land on a continuous basis, beyond ad hoc mechanisms such as “prior coordination”. In addition, security of land tenure must be ensured, including by means of measures allowing Palestinians to register without discrimination the land they have been using for long periods of time.

59. Israel, as the occupying Power, is obliged to take all reasonable measures to prevent violent attacks by Israeli settlers against Palestinians. Israel must ensure that all acts of violence committed by Israeli settlers against Palestinians and their property are investigated independently, impartially, thoroughly, promptly, effectively and in a non-discriminatory manner. Investigations should be open to public scrutiny and allow for the participation of victims. Alleged perpetrators should be prosecuted and victims should be granted an effective remedy.

60. Israel must cease all settlement activity in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, as well as in the occupied Syrian Golan, and implement relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolution 497 (1981), and withdraw from the territories occupied in 1967. Israel must also immediately cease the exploitation of natural resources from these territories.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
8 January 2016

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-first session

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

Summary

The present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 28/26, provides information on the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

The report addresses continued Israeli settlement activity; settler violence and lack of accountability; issues related to Palestinian detainees, including children in Israeli custody; and business and human rights in relation to the settlements.

I. Background

1. In its resolution 28/26 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, the Human Rights Council requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to present a report to the Council at its thirty-first session, specifying the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/22/63).

2. The present report, submitted pursuant to resolution 28/26, contains information gathered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). In it, reference is made to reports of the Secretary-General, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 and the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories. Reference is also made to submissions received from Member States on the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the fact-finding mission.

3. The report covers the period between November 2014 and November 2015. It should be read in conjunction with the report of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan (A/HRC/31/43) and other recent reports of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner on the situation of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.¹

II. Overview of the recommendations of the fact-finding mission

4. In paragraphs 112-115 of its report, the fact-finding mission made recommendations, of which several were addressed to Israel. Recalling article 49 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), the mission called upon the Government of Israel:

- (a) To cease all settlement activities without preconditions;
- (b) To immediately initiate a process of withdrawal of all settlers from the Occupied Palestinian Territory;
- (c) To ensure adequate, effective and prompt remedy to all Palestinian victims for the harm suffered as a consequence of human rights violations resulting from settlements. In that regard, the fact-finding mission noted that, where necessary, steps should be taken to provide such remedy in concurrence with the representatives of the Palestinian people and the assistance of the international community;
- (d) To put an end to the human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements;
- (e) To ensure full accountability for all violations, including all acts of settler violence, in a non-discriminatory manner, and to put an end to the policy of impunity;

¹ A/HRC/31/40 and Add/1, A/70/351 and A/70/421.

(f) To put an end to arbitrary arrest and detention of Palestinians, especially children, and to observe the prohibition of the transfer of prisoners from the Occupied Palestinian Territory to the territory of Israel, in accordance with article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

5. In paragraph 116 of its report, the fact-finding mission called upon all Member States to comply with their obligations under international law and to assume their responsibilities in their relations with a State breaching peremptory norms of international law. The mission specifically urged Member States not to recognize the unlawful situation resulting from the violations by Israel.

6. Lastly, in paragraph 117 of its report, the fact-finding mission recommended that private companies must assess the human rights impact of their activities and take all necessary steps — including by terminating their business interests in the settlements — to ensure that they do not have an adverse impact on the human rights of the Palestinian people, in conformity with international law and the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. In that regard, the mission called upon all Member States to take appropriate measures to ensure that business enterprises domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, that conduct activities in or related to the settlements, respect human rights throughout their operations. The mission recommended that the Working Group on and the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises be seized of the matter.

III. Status of implementation of the recommendations of the fact-finding mission

A. Israeli settlement activity

7. As noted in the report of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan submitted to the General Assembly at its seventieth session (A/70/351), a pause in settlement advancement in East Jerusalem, which started in November 2014, ended on 27 April 2015 when tenders were issued for 77 residential units in the settlements of Pisgat Ze'ev and Neve Ya'akov. Furthermore, settlement activities were under way early in May 2015, building on significant developments in relation to Ramat Shlomo, Har Homa and Givat Hamatos, reported previously, and significantly affecting the make-up of East Jerusalem (see A/HRC/28/44, paras. 7-10).

8. Between the beginning of 2015 and July of that year, tenders for 634 housing units were issued in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In July 2015, the Government of Israel approved plans to build 300 new homes in a settlement in the West Bank. On 29 July, the Secretary-General condemned the approval by the Prime Minister of Israel of the construction of 300 housing units in the Beit El settlement, near the Palestinian city of Ramallah, in the West Bank. The Secretary-General also condemned the planning and construction of nearly 500 housing units in a number of settlements in East Jerusalem. He reiterated that settlements are illegal under international law, an impediment to peace and cannot be reconciled with the stated intention of the Government of Israel to pursue a two-

State solution. He urged the Government to halt and reverse such decisions in the interest of peace and a just final status agreement.²

9. According to the Israeli non-governmental organization Yesh Din, since May 2011 approximately a quarter of the 100 unauthorized outposts in the West Bank have either been retroactively approved or are in the process of retroactive approval by the Civil Administration's Supreme Planning Committee. Following the elections in Israel, in March 2015 the new coalition Government committed to establishing an interministerial committee tasked with proposing a framework to promote the legalization of outposts (see A/70/351, para. 14).

10. As reported by the Secretary-General, the retroactive legalization of outposts is considered as another arm of settlement expansion, alongside the planning, tendering and construction process, and the support given to outposts at their outset, such as the security provided by Israel Defense Forces soldiers upon establishment of an outpost. This policy effectively rewards settlers for grabbing land in the West Bank in a process that "frequently involves violations of the rights of Palestinians". The lack of enforcement of the rule of law and the rewarding of illegal activity further encourage settlement expansion, creating additional obstacles to the objective of a negotiated two-State solution, and the right of Palestinians to self-determination, thereby undermining possibilities of peace (see A/70/351, para. 15).

11. During the reporting period, demolition of Palestinian property continued, accompanied by the forcible displacement of Palestinians, including Bedouins. Despite increased and concerted efforts and advocacy by the United Nations and the international community, the demolitions actually increased. On 18 August 2015, the Israeli Civil Administration carried out demolitions in a Palestinian Bedouin refugee community in Area C, near East Jerusalem. A total of 22 structures were demolished in four communities, located in and around the area of the planned E-1 settlement: Khan al-Ahmar Abu Falah, Wadi Sneysel, Bir Miskoob and Az Zayyem Bedouin. This led to the displacement of 78 Palestinians, including 49 children — mainly Palestine refugees. Many of those refugee families had been displaced four times in the last four years. The four communities are among 46 located in the central West Bank, which is included in Israeli plans to transfer Palestinian Bedouin communities to three designated sites.

12. On 19 August, following the demolitions, the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator for the Occupied Palestinian Territory expressed grave concern, and called for an immediate freeze on demolitions in the West Bank.³ He highlighted the strategic implications of those demolitions, which were occurring in parallel with settlement expansion. He also stressed that the relocation plan for those communities would effectively remove Palestinian presence in and around the planned E-1 settlement project, and warned that the project anticipated the construction of thousands of new Israeli housing units in the West Bank, on the outskirts of Jerusalem. The Humanitarian Coordinator recalled that the E-1 project had long been opposed by the international community as an obstacle to the realization of a two-State solution and a violation of international law.⁴

13. The Secretary-General has stated on several occasions that the implementation of the proposed "relocation" would amount to forcible transfers and forced evictions,

² "Secretary-General condemns Israeli approval of settlement building in West Bank, urges reversal of decision for sake of peace, 'just' final status agreement" (29 July 2015). During the reporting period, the Secretary-General deplored the advancement of settlement activities on several occasions, for instance on 15 May 2015 (see statement at www.un.org/sg/statements/index.asp?nid=8632).

³ "UN officials call for an immediate demolitions freeze in the West Bank" (18 August 2015).

⁴ Ibid. See also A/HRC/28/43, para. 11.

contravening the obligations of Israel as an occupying power under humanitarian and human rights law.⁵

14. According to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, August 2015 saw the highest number of demolitions of Palestinian structures in a single month, since January 2013. During that month alone, Israeli authorities demolished 145 structures, including at least 54 residential units and 16 donor-funded structures. The overwhelming majority of the demolitions occurred in Area C, mainly affecting the already vulnerable Bedouin herding communities.

B. Recourse to remedy for Palestinians

15. In the 10 years since the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion dated 9 July 2004 (A/ES-10/273 and Corr.1), concluded that the construction of the wall in occupied territory and the settlements were illegal, the settler population in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, has increased substantially (see A/69/348, para. 10). The Court noted that the wall had been traced in such a way as to include within that area the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (see A/ES-10/273, para. 119).

16. By way of example, in August 2015 work on construction of the wall continued in Cremisan Valley, in Beit Jala village, despite protests by the Palestinian population. Reportedly, earth movers were uprooting olive trees to break the ground for the construction of the wall. The approval to take measures to construct the wall was granted on 8 July 2015 by the High Court. The wall, when fully constructed, will separate the West Bank city of Beit Jala from the settlement of Har Gilo and the village of Walaja. The planned route runs through the Cremisan Valley on land owned by 58 Christian Palestinian families, close to a monastery and its sister convent and school.

17. In 2007 the General Assembly decided, by its resolution ES-10/17, to establish the United Nations Register of Damage Caused by the Construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is mandated to record damage caused to all natural and legal persons concerned as a result of the construction of the wall by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem.

18. The registration of damage is a technical, fact-finding process of listing or recording the fact and type of the damage caused as a result of the construction of the wall. It thus entails a detailed process that includes the submission of a statement setting out the alleged damage, eligibility for registration and the causality between the construction of the wall and the damage sustained. The Registry is not, however, a compensation commission or a claims-resolution facility, nor is it a judicial or quasi-judicial body. The act of registration of damage, as such, does not entail an evaluation or an assessment of the loss or damage (see A/ES-10/294, para. 1).

19. During the reporting period, the Registrar continued to collect, process and consider claim forms for inclusion in the Register in accordance with the rules and regulations governing the registration of claims. Since the Registry was launched in 2008, outreach efforts have covered 226 communities with a population of approximately 909,000 in the governorates of Jenin, Tubas, Tulkarem, Qalqiliya, Salfit, Ramallah, Hebron and Bethlehem, as well as in and around East Jerusalem.⁶ As at 19 June 2015, more than 48,048

⁵ United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, "UN officials call for an immediate demolitions freeze" (19 August 2015).

⁶ See A/ES-10/683 for details on work carried out between 20 June 2014 and 19 June 2015.

claims and over 800,000 supporting documents had been collected in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. At the time of writing, 18,845 of the collected claims had been considered by the Board of the Register and deemed valid for inclusion in the Register.⁷

C. Settler violence and lack of accountability

20. As reported by the Secretary-General, settler violence against Palestinians continued largely unchecked and without adequate protection or accountability on the part of the Israeli authorities (see A/70/351, para. 22).

21. According to data collected by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the period between 1 January and 2 November 2015, 207 incidents of settler violence against Palestinians and/or Palestinian property occurred in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem,⁸ compared with 278 incidents during the same period in 2014.⁹ However, between 29 September and 26 October 2015, the number of incidents of settler violence increased significantly, with 54 cases in about one month.¹⁰ The increase in violence coincided with the heightened tensions between Palestinians and Israeli security forces and an increased number of attacks against Israelis throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in East Jerusalem, since mid-September 2015.¹¹

22. In October 2015, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories observed that continuing settlement expansion in the occupied West Bank and East Jerusalem was inextricably linked with a combination of restrictive planning policies for Palestinians, demolition orders on “illegal” Palestinian homes and structures built without permits and the oppressive and “coercive environment” fostered by settler violence. The Committee further noted that it was apparent from the testimonies it had received that the root cause of the escalating violence was the continuing policy of settlement expansion and the climate of impunity relating to the activities of the settlers (see A/70/406 and Corr.1, para. 11).

23. Lack of accountability for settler violence remains a major preoccupation. According to Yesh Din, most incidents of settler violence perpetrated against Palestinians and/or Palestinian property are poorly investigated and remain unpunished. During the period from 2005 to 2015, Yesh Din monitored 1,014 investigation files related to complaints about settler violence against Palestinians and their property in the West Bank. As of October 2015, an indictment had been issued in only 7.3 per cent of all cases concluded. The rest of the cases had been concluded without an indictment (91.6 per cent)

⁷ See www.unrod.org.

⁸ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, protection of civilians weekly report for 27 October–2 November 2015, available from www.ochaopt.org/poc27october-2november-2015.aspx.

⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, protection of civilians weekly report for 28 October–3 November 2014, available from www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_protection_of_civilians_weekly_report_2014_11_07_english.pdf.

¹⁰ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, protection of civilians weekly reports for 29 September–5 October 2015, 6 October–12 October 2015, 13 October–19 October 2015 and 20 October–26 October 2015.

¹¹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Casualties in the Occupied Palestinian Territories and Israel” (1–31 October 2015), available from https://www.ochaopt.org/documents/wb_casualties_october_2015.pdf.

or the files had been lost (11 files).¹² A total of 624 files were closed on the grounds that the offender was unknown, which indicates that the police failed to locate and identify suspected offenders even though there was evidence that a criminal offence had been committed, and 208 files were closed owing to insufficient evidence.¹³

24. One case illustrating the lack of accountability for offences against Palestinians committed by Israeli settlers relates to the attack on the home of the Dawabsha family, in the West Bank village of Duma, on 31 July 2015. In his report to General-Assembly, the Secretary-General referred to this case as the most egregious example of settler violence, which led to the murder of Ali Dawabsha, a Palestinian toddler, and severely injured members of his family. Both of Ali's parents died from wounds in the ensuing weeks. The Secretary-General also noted that the incident led to violent demonstrations, resulting in clashes between Palestinians in the West Bank and the Israel Defense Forces, as well as attacks on Israeli civilians by Palestinians (see A/70/354-S/2015/677, para 31).

25. On 22 October 2015, in his briefing to the Security Council, the Deputy Secretary-General noted that the shocking murders of the Dawabsha family and the lack of progress in arresting the perpetrators were a critical trigger of the escalation in violence in October 2015. He underscored that the incident reflected an increasing sense of critical exposure among Palestinians in the face of settler violence and reinforced their feeling of injustice.¹⁴ He stressed that it was imperative for Israel to take action to empower Palestinian institutions to protect vulnerable communities, and stressed that Israel must vigorously address the perceived impunity for settler violence by expediting investigations and prosecutions of the Dawabsha family's killers.¹⁵

D. Palestinian detainees, including children in Israeli custody

26. As concluded by the fact-finding mission, the existence of the settlements has a heavy impact on a wide range of Palestinians' human rights, including their rights to equality, due process, fair trial, not to be arbitrarily detained and liberty (see A/HRC/22/63, para. 105).

27. Moreover, Palestinians are routinely subject to arbitrary arrest and detention, including administrative detention, mass arrests and incarceration. Most children are arrested at "friction points" such as villages near settlements or on roads that are used by the army or settlers and run by a Palestinian village. From the moment of arrest, Palestinians face multiple violations of their rights to liberty and security and to a fair trial through interrogation, arbitrary detention, abuse, trial and sentencing.

28. According to the Palestinian non-governmental organization Addameer, 6,700 Palestinians were in Israeli detention as at 9 November 2015. Of that total, 450 were held in administrative detention on security grounds, in other words without charge or trial, and 320 were children.¹⁶ The total number of Palestinian prisoners and detainees held by Israel

¹² Yesh Din, "Law enforcement on Israeli civilians in the West Bank: Yesh Din monitoring update 2005-2015" (October 2015). Available from www.yesh-din.org/userfiles/Datasheet_English_Oct%202015.pdf.

¹³ Ibid.

¹⁴ "Deputy Secretary-General's briefing to the Security Council on the situation in the Middle East" (22 October 2015). Available from www.un.org/sg/dsg/statements/index.asp?nid=674.

¹⁵ Ibid.

¹⁶ See www.addameer.org/statistics. Some Palestinians are held in Israeli detention centres and the Ofer prison in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, while others are transferred to Israeli interrogation was reportedly up by some 1,000 persons compared with September 2015.¹⁷ During the escalation of tension and violence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory in October 2015, there was a spike in arrests of Palestinians. In October alone, the Israeli security forces arrested 1,195 Palestinians, including 177 children and 16 females.¹⁸

29. During the reporting period, several Palestinian detainees in Israeli detention went on hunger strike in protest against administrative detention and the treatment to which they were being subjected. In July 2015, the Knesset approved the “prevention of damage by hunger-strikers bill”, which would allow the head of the Israel Prison Service to submit a motion to a district court and request permission to force-feed a prisoner on hunger strike. Should a judge rule that force-feeding is permitted in a particular case, medical personnel could feed persons on hunger strike against their will, and use force to do so (see A/70/406, para. 42).

30. Using threats, coercion, force or physical restraints to feed individuals who have opted to adopt the extreme measure of going on hunger strike in protest against their detention is, even if intended for their benefit, tantamount to cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment.¹⁹ Prisoners have the right to resort to peaceful protests. The Secretary-General has consistently called for persons in administrative detention to be formally charged or released without delay (see A/HRC/28/43, para. 6). The use of administrative detention under international humanitarian law is allowed under exceptional circumstances and for short periods of time only.

31. In relation to the military detention of children, the working group on grave violations against children, which is led by the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF), has gathered 24 affidavits (sworn testimonies) of children aged between 14 and 17 years reporting ill-treatment by the Israel Defense Forces, the Israeli police, the Israel Border Police, the Israel Security Agency and the Israel Prison Service while in Israeli security detention in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Of the children who submitted affidavits, 16 boys reported being subjected to at least 10 different types of violations, including painful hand-ties, leg-ties, blindfolding, strip-searching, verbal abuse, physical violence, the absence of notification of their rights and the absence of a lawyer or parent during interrogation. Two children reported being held in solitary confinement for 6 and 14 days respectively, in Al-Jalame and Petah Tikva detention centres in Israel.

32. In addition, 17 of the 24 boys were transferred outside the West Bank to detention facilities inside Israel (Hasharon and Megiddo), in contravention of the Fourth Geneva Convention.²⁰ As reported by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, an estimated 60 per cent of Palestinian child detainees from the Occupied Palestinian Territory are held in prisons and detention facilities inside Israel, in violation of article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention (see A/HRC/28/78, para. 59).

33. Since publishing “Children in Israeli military detention: observations and recommendations” in March 2013, UNICEF has been engaged in a dialogue with the Israeli authorities on the implementation of its recommendations. UNICEF reported that, in centres and several prisons within Israel, in contravention of the Fourth Geneva Convention (see para.4 above).

¹⁷ See http://www.addameer.org/sites/default/files/publications/october_2015_newsletter.pdf.

¹⁸ Ibid.

¹⁹ Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, “UN experts urge Israel to halt legalization of force-feeding of hunger-strikers in detention” (28 July 2015).

²⁰ See www.unicef.org/oPt/UNICEF_-_State_of_Palestine_-_Second_quarter_of_2014_CAAC_bulletin_-_Final\(1\).pdf.pdf).

October 2013 the Central Command of the Israel Defense Forces announced that it would conduct a pilot test of summonses of children in lieu of night arrests. In early February 2014, the Israeli authorities started the pilot programme in Nablus and Hebron governorates, with cases now being reported throughout the West Bank. The launch of the summons pilot test is an important operational measure to halt the practice of night arrests and tackle some of the protection concerns that arise during the first 48 hours of arrest.²¹

E. Business and human rights in relation to the settlements

34. In its resolution 25/28, the Human Rights Council reiterated the call it had already made in its resolution 22/29 for the relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures and actions within their mandates to ensure full respect for and compliance with the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international laws and standards, and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, which provides a global standard for upholding human rights in relation to business activities that are connected with Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The international fact-finding mission recommended that the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises remain seized of the matter of corporate engagement with settlements (see A/HRC/22/63, para. 117).

35. Actions taken by the Working Group were reported in the previous report of the High Commissioner (A/HRC/28/43 and Corr.1).

36. In its report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported on information it received that several companies were profiteering, directly or indirectly, from a wide range of illegal Israeli practices. The Special Committee noted that such activities took an enormous toll on the daily lives of Palestinians and that private companies had allegedly played a major role in funding, facilitating and supporting the Israeli occupation (see A/70/406 and Corr.1, para. 18).

37. In that same report, the Special Committee grouped the activities of corporations involved in settlements into three broad categories (para. 19): (a) Israeli industry engaged in the construction of Israeli settlements, in production in settlements or in the provision of services to settlements; (b) control of the Palestinian population by constructing the wall and checkpoints, and the provision of private security or specialized equipment, such as surveillance and crowd control weapons; and (c) economic exploitation by using Palestinian workers, Palestinian natural resources or the Palestinian captive market. In addition, it referred to corporate activities of concern from a business and human rights perspective in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan.

38. To exemplify the different categories, a number of case studies were presented to the Special Committee, for instance on financing the Israeli occupation, the exploitation of natural resources, corporate interdependency and the mislabelling of settlement products (see A/70/406 and Corr.1, paras. 20-27).

39. The Special Committee stressed that corporate actors needed to be held accountable for the impact of their activities on human rights. Both Governments and businesses played a role in and were responsible for protecting and respecting the human rights of the Palestinian people. Moreover, the Special Committee stressed that third countries too should be held responsible for ensuring corporations' respect for human rights and that they should cease to fund or enter into commercial transactions with organizations and bodies involved in settlements or the exploitation of natural resources in the occupied territories.

²¹ Ibid.

40. The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly call on the State of Israel to inform Israeli and multinational corporations working in the occupied territories of their corporate social responsibility to act with heightened due diligence and of the international legal ramifications of business activities with negative human rights impacts, and to take appropriate measures to prevent, investigate, punish and provide redress for corporate abuse and/or exploitation of resources in the occupied territories through, inter alia, effective policies, legislation, regulations and adjudication.

IV. Submissions by Member States pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 28/26

41. On 19 October 2015, OHCHR addressed notes verbales to all Permanent Missions to the United Nations Office and other international organizations in Geneva, requesting information on any steps their Governments had taken, envisaged taking or were otherwise aware of to implement the recommendations of the fact-finding mission, in particular those contained in paragraphs 116 and 117 thereof (see also paras. 5-6 of the present report).

42. On 19 October 2015, separate notes verbales were addressed to the Permanent Mission of Israel and the Permanent Observer Mission of the State of Palestine. OHCHR requested the Government of Israel to provide information on any steps that it had taken or envisaged taking to implement the recommendations of the fact-finding mission. It also requested the Government of the State of Palestine to present relevant information concerning the status of the same recommendations. At the time of the preparation of the present report, no information had been received from the Permanent Mission of Israel or the Permanent Observer Mission of the State of Palestine.

European Union

43. In a note verbale dated 1 December 2015, the Permanent Mission of the European Union to the United Nations Office and other international organizations in Geneva provided an update to its contribution of 24 November 2014, which was reflected in the report of the High Commissioner on the same subject matter, presented in March 2014 (A/HRC/25/43).

44. The European Union reaffirmed its commitment to its long-standing position not to recognize the sovereignty of Israel over territories occupied in 1967, namely, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Syrian Golan.

45. The European Union referred to the Council of Europe conclusions of 20 July 2015 on the Middle East peace process, in which the European Union recalled that settlements were illegal under international law and reiterated its strong opposition to the settlement policy of Israel and actions taken in that context, such as building the separation barrier beyond the 1967 line, demolitions and confiscation (including of assets provided through European Union-funded projects), evictions, forced transfers (including of Bedouins), illegal outposts, settler violence and restrictions of movement and access.

46. The European Union further stated that settlement activity in East Jerusalem seriously jeopardized the possibility of Jerusalem serving as the future capital of both States. The European Union reiterated that it would continue to closely monitor developments on the ground and their broader implications and that it remained ready to take further action in order to protect the viability of the two-State solution.

47. The European Union and its member States remained committed to ensuring continued, full and effective implementation of existing European Union legislation and bilateral agreements applicable to settlement products. Furthermore, it expressed its commitment to ensuring that — in line with international law — all agreements between the State of Israel and the European Union must unequivocally and explicitly indicate their inapplicability to the territories occupied by Israel in 1967.

48. The European Union noted that on 11 November 2015 the European Commission adopted an interpretative notice on the indication of origin of goods from the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
20 January 2016

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-first session

Agenda item 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the Occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the Secretary-General

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 28/26 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan. In the report, developments concerning the establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, are highlighted. An update and analysis is also provided of the effects of related house demolitions, evictions, settlement expansion, settler violence, discriminatory zoning and planning policies on the economic, social and cultural rights of Palestinians. Lastly, in the report, the Secretary-General addresses issues related to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 28/26 and covers the period from 1 November 2014 to 31 October 2015.
2. The report is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and on information provided by other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It also contains information received from Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations. It should be read in conjunction with previous reports of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements to the Council and the General Assembly (in particular A/HRC/20/13, A/HRC/25/38, A/HRC/28/44, A/63/519, A/64/516, A/65/365, A/66/364, A/67/375, A/68/513 and A/69/348).
3. In the report, the Secretary-General provides an update on the Israeli authorities' policies and practices aimed at creating or expanding settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, including through retroactive legalization of unauthorized outposts under Israeli law, the declaration of "State land" and zoning and planning policies. He also examines settler violence and steps taken by the Israeli authorities to address impunity of Israeli settlers involved in violent attacks against Palestinians. Finally, he examines the impact of continued settlement expansion and related policies on Palestinian communities, through an analysis of developments in Palestinian Bedouin and herder communities at risk of displacement.

II. Legal background

4. An analysis of the applicable legal framework and the basis for the obligations of Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and occupied Syrian Golan can be found in previous reports of the Secretary-General (see A/69/348, paras. 4-5, and A/HRC/25/38, paras. 4-5).

III. Settlements as a driver of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law

5. The presence and continued development of Israeli settlements lie at the root of a broad spectrum of human rights violations in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. This has been documented extensively, including in previous reports of the Secretary-General, and by the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (see A/HRC/22/63).
6. The settlements have resulted in the gradual fragmentation of the West Bank, restricted Palestinian access to natural resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the subsequent impediment to the Palestinian people's right to self-determination (see A/HRC/22/63, A/70/351 and Council resolution 25/28).
7. Current Israeli practices related to the presence and expansion of settlements, which persisted during the period under review, similarly continue to have a profound impact on land and housing rights, the right to water and sanitation and freedom of movement, and result in restrictions on the right to education (see CCPR/CO/78/ISR, A/67/372 and A/HRC/28/55).

8. Successive reports by the Secretary-General have shown that the presence of settlements results in violations of the rights to life and to security of the person. The failure to address violent acts also renders individuals' right to a remedy illusory and promotes impunity.

IV. Settlement expansion

A. Overview

9. During the reporting period, Israeli authorities continued to expand settlements, to retroactively formalize unauthorized outposts in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and to approve plans for new settlements. Steps were also taken to enable the expansion of settlement-controlled areas through the declaration of "State land" and allocation of land in the West Bank for farming and construction purposes. As of the end of 2014, the total population in Israeli settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem was approximately 570,700. Overall, the settlement population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory has continued growing at a steady rate, with the latest available data showing an average growth rate of 14,600 people per year between 2002 and 2014.

10. The construction of settlements continued despite a slowdown in the planning and tendering of new housing units in settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. The planning of infrastructure related to settlements, such as roads, was not halted. These policies persisted despite the elections and the formation of a new Government on 14 May 2015. In the new Government, the pro-settlement Jewish Home party lost control of the Ministry of Housing and the Finance Committee chairmanship, both key for settlement activities. However, it gained other positions that are useful for promoting settlements, including in the Ministry of Justice and authority over the Settlements Division of the World Zionist Organization, a body attached to the Prime Minister's Office that channels significant funding to settlement activities. Additional concessions, including budgetary allocations to bolster local settlement authorities and measures to enable retroactive legalization, under Israeli law, of unauthorized outposts, were also included in the coalition agreement with the Jewish Home party.¹

11. Sustained monitoring and pressure from the international community has had a mitigating effect on efforts by the Israeli authorities to implement the full range of settlement expansion initiatives presented by the Government of Israel during its first months in power. Diverging agendas within the governing coalition also served to rein in aspects of the pro-settlement agenda. Joint action by members of the Kulanu party, headed by Minister for Finance, Moshe Kahlon, together with Members of the Knesset from the ultraorthodox parties, prevented the inclusion of 61 West Bank settlements under a new system regulating income tax benefits for Israeli municipalities, although as part of a compromise, Hebron settlements remained on the list.² Those parties also played a role in blocking several pro-settlement legislative initiatives promoted by the Jewish Home party. Similarly, the Israeli High Court of Justice continued to play a role — albeit limited — in curbing aspects of settlement activity, particularly where Palestinian private land was concerned. Since the formation of his new Government, the Prime Minister, Benjamin

¹ Coalition agreement for the establishment of the thirty-fourth Government of the State of Israel, reached on 7 May 2015, between the Likud and Jewish Home parties.

² Moti Bossak and Zvi Zrahiya, "Government rejects plan to give 61 West Bank settlements tax benefits", Haaretz, 26 October 2015.

Netanyahu, has come under increasing pressure from settlement constituencies, including from his own party, to stop what they call a “de facto settlement freeze”.

12. The escalation in violence in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, starting in September 2015, led to the hardening of the government position with regard to settlement expansion. A point of particular concern has been the response by the Government to political pressure from pro-settlement lawmakers and settler organizations to increase settlement construction in retaliation for acts of violence by Palestinians: namely, settlement expansion announcements by the Prime Minister regarding the retroactive legalization of settlement outposts around Itamar³ and the promotion of particularly controversial plans for settlement expansion in the Muslim Quarter of the Old City and in the Ramat Shlomo settlement in East Jerusalem (detailed below).

13. Previous reports of the Secretary-General have detailed the range of practices resulting in the expansion of settlement control by the Israeli authorities over land in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see A/69/348 paras. 33-35, and A/70/351, paras. 33-36). Construction of housing units is but one way of measuring such expansion. Indeed, the control of land through agriculture, the declaration of archaeological sites, national parks, infrastructure development, and the authorities’ support for informal initiatives for settlement expansion all contribute to the growth and reinforcement of the presence of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Government of Israel has continued to support and promote the gradual takeover of land and resources through these methods.

B. Construction, tenders and plans

14. Israeli settlement construction and administrative steps enabling further expansion of settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, continued during the period under review. While the data available from the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics points to a slight decrease in construction being started between 2013 and 2014,⁴ the rate of construction for 2014 (2,705 construction projects started) remained above the annual average of 2,303 builds started per year over the previous 10-year period.

15. In October 2015, the Israeli non-governmental organization Peace Now reported on wide-ranging plans for West Bank settlement expansion and related settlement activity based on information obtained from the Ministry of Housing. From the disclosed documents, it appears that plans were promoted and partially implemented under previous Minister for Housing, Uri Ariel, from the Jewish Home party. The Prime Minister has subsequently publicly disavowed elements of these plans.⁵ However, documents obtained by Peace Now detail funding by the Ministry of residential construction, as well as infrastructure and public structures, in various settlements between 2012 and 2015. This included funding for the construction of over 4,000 housing units, public structures (including the expansion of the Beit Romano and Beit Betar settlements in Hebron) and financial support (roughly US$ 460,000) disbursed in 2014 to municipal authorities in the West Bank towards public campaigns encouraging Israelis to move to settlements.

³ On 1 October 2015, two Israeli citizens, Eitam and Na’ama Henkin, from the settlement of Neria, were killed in a drive-by shooting attack on the road between the settlements of Itamar and Elon Moreh in the West Bank.

⁴ Information from Peace Now, based on Central Bureau of Statistics data, provided to OHCHR by e-mail dated 3 November 2015.

⁵ Itamar Eichner, “Netanyahu: settlement construction plan led by Uri Ariel”, Ynet, 30 December 2015.

C. Other means of settlement control over land

(a) National parks and archaeological sites

16. The Government of Israel has continued the practice of declaring and developing archaeological sites and parks as a means to expand control over land in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In several cases, the sites selected for development were located in close proximity to existing settlements, enabling either the expansion of lands under settlement control, or located in such a way that contiguous areas under settlement control could be made areas of strategic significance.⁶ Israeli authorities have been directly involved in this practice, either through zoning and planning processes, funding the development of sites or granting leases and management privileges to private settler organizations.

17. In July 2015, the Jerusalem municipality posted signs in the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Issawiya, stating that the area reserved for a national park at Mount Scopus had been put under a “vacant lot landscaping order”, signifying the intention of municipality leaders to landscape and build facilities. The approval of the establishment of the Mount Scopus Slopes National Park in 2013, encompassing roughly 73 hectares on the eastern side of Mount Scopus, has been opposed by residents of the adjacent Issawiya and At-Tur neighbourhoods, on the grounds that it precludes the possibility of implementing much-needed urban development plans for those two areas.⁷

18. The Secretary-General and others have voiced concerns regarding the discriminatory urban planning regime in East Jerusalem (see A/HRC/25/38, paras. 11-14, and CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 25), and the limitation of Palestinian development in the city as a result of the takeover of land for inclusion within national parks (A/70/351, para. 42).

19. On 7 June 2015, the Appeals Subcommittee of the National Planning Council approved plans for the development of the Kedem Compound in Silwan, promoted by the Elad settler organization to construct a major tourist site in the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Silwan, some 20 metres from the walls of the Old City. Following objections submitted by Silwan residents and civil society organizations, the Subcommittee ruled to reduce the original plans by at least half.⁸ These developments took place in the context of continued settlement expansion in the area. In three incidents between May and October 2015, Israeli settlers, under police escort, evicted six Palestinian families from their homes in the heart of the Palestinian neighbourhood of Silwan, following a ruling by an Israeli court in favour of the settlers who claimed ownership over the properties. In two additional incidents in August and September 2015, Israeli settlers, under police escort, moved into five residential buildings in Silwan that were previously vacated by their Palestinian residents. The buildings occupied are believed to have been sold by the ⁶ See case study on Khirbet Silhoun (A/70/351, paras. 63-66); Kedem Compound, City of David Visitors Centre and Spring House tourist centre; and Tel Rumeida excavations and ancient site (see A/69/348, paras. 34-35). Following legal proceedings led by Hebron residents and the Israeli organizations Emekh Shaveh and Breaking the Silence, the Israeli Civil Administration decided to delay the opening of the Tel Rumeida “archaeological park” in Hebron, and rescinded an agreement with a private settler organization for the transfer of management rights of the site. According to archaeologists at Emek Shaveh, “the archaeological park is expected to increase the presence of Israelis in Hebron, add a national-historic site to the Jewish part of the city, and form a key tool in the settlers’ drive to influence public opinion”.

⁷ The park had been in planning since 2005 and was approved despite the position of then Minister for Environmental Protection, Amir Peretz. See B’Tselem, “Mount Scopus Slopes National Park and the harm it causes to al-‘Esawiya and a-Tur”, 20 July 2015.

⁸ Ir Amim Newsletter, 10 September 2015.

Palestinian owners. The Secretary-General has previously expressed concerns that the implementation of the plans for the Kedem Compound risks accelerating settlement expansion in Silwan, with repercussions for the human rights situation in the area (see A/70/351, para. 36).

20. On 10 August 2015, Israeli planning authorities in the West Bank approved plans for the development of a major archaeological and tourism site at Khirbet Seilun, on the lands of the Palestinian village of Qaryut. The site is located inside the boundaries of the Shilo settlement and is being promoted by Israeli authorities as “Tel Shiloh”.⁹ The planning body stopped short of providing full approval for the original master plan, but granted the Archaeology Staff Officer, within the Israeli Civil Administration the authority to approve individual structures on a case-by-case basis, including for tourism and commercial use. In a reversal of current practice, planning authorities required that Palestinian visitors be allowed entry without permits to the ancient site. At the time of writing, Palestinians still required permits to enter the area.¹⁰

(b) Expansion of “State land” boundaries

21. A further indicator of the expansion of land under settlement control has been evidenced in the activities of the Israeli Civil Administration’s Task Force for the Survey of State Land Boundaries (the Blue Line task force). The Blue Line team is tasked with inspecting and defining the boundaries of land designated as State property, or so-called “State land” by Israeli authorities since 1970 (see A/HRC/22/63, para. 63). The declaration of State land constitutes a crucial step in the process of allocating land to settlements. According to the task force’s operating guidelines, its activities are intended to settle claims of irregularities and remedy violations of the rights of landowners whose lands were unjustly seized.¹¹ The Civil Administration has argued before the High Court of Justice that land demarcations conducted by the Blue Line task force did not constitute formal declarations of State land, and were mere technical corrections of surveying mistakes. However, since 2009, the revisions conducted by the Blue Line task force have resulted in the expansion of State land boundaries by some 120,000 dunams (12,000 hectares).¹²

22. Until August 2015, the Blue Line task force re-drew State land boundaries without public announcements, thereby effectively preventing Palestinian landowners from laying claim to the surveyed land and granting no right of appeal. This practice was challenged before the Israeli High Court of Justice by Israeli human rights organizations and Palestinian landowners from the villages of Zawiya, Luban Al-Sharqiya and Qaryut, in the northern West Bank, following the expansion of State land boundaries by the Blue Line task force for the settlement of Eli in 2012.

23. Upon the request of the High Court of Justice, the Civil Administration issued revised guidelines on 11 August 2015, requiring prior notification of affected villages where any revisions of State land boundaries are intended, and granting a right of appeal within 45 days. Human rights organizations advocating for Palestinian landowners have expressed concern that the level of technical capacity and prohibitive costs required to ⁹ See case study in the report of the Secretary-General (A/70/351, paras. 63-66).

¹⁰ Emek Shaveh, press release, 12 August 2015.

¹¹ Revised guidelines of the Task Force for the Survey of State Land Boundaries, issued by the Head of the Israeli Civil Administration on 11 August 2015.

¹² Information from Dror Etkes (founder of Kerem Navot, an Israeli non-governmental organization that monitors settlement activity), based on Israel Defense Forces data, provided to OHCHR by e-mail dated 16 November 2015.

establish a claim against a revision of boundaries render the new guidelines meaningless for most affected landowners.

D. “Legalization” of unauthorized outposts

24. In 2014, the Secretary-General expressed concerns about steps taken by the Israeli authorities to retroactively formalize some 25 outposts in the West Bank (see A/70/251). During the period under review, the Israeli authorities pursued measures to retroactively legalize illegal outposts in the West Bank. These steps mostly follow the legal rationale and set of recommendations proposed by the government-appointed “Levy Committee” of 2012,¹³ and are being promoted at the executive, military and legislative levels.

25. In the context of legal proceedings before the High Court of Justice, the Government of Israel declared its intentions to retroactively formalize a string of settlement outposts adjacent to the settlement of Shilo, in the southern Nablus governorate: Adei Ad, Esh Kodesh, Ahiya and Kidah. To that end, and as per the stated policy of Israel to retroactively legalize unauthorized settlement construction erected on so-called State land, the Blue Line task force has initiated the process of examining and redrawing State land boundaries in the area. By the Israeli authorities’ own admission, these outposts are a hotbed for unlawful settlement activity and settler violence.¹⁴ The human rights and humanitarian impact of the presence and expansion of the Shilo outposts on Palestinian communities has been examined in detail by the Secretary-General (see A/70/351).

26. On 21 October 2015, the Prime Minister approved a retroactive urban building plan for the settlement of Itamar and, on 29 October, he endorsed retroactive blueprints for three other settlements — Shvut Rachel, Sansana and Yaqir.¹⁵

27. In July 2015, the Prime Minister appointed a professional committee tasked with formulating recommendations for the retroactive “legalization” — under Israeli law — of settlement outposts.¹⁶ This initiative came in an apparent response to pressure from settler groups following the rulings of the Israeli High Court of Justice ordering the evacuation of outposts and settlement neighbourhoods built on privately owned Palestinian land. On 21 July 2015, the Minister of Justice, Ayelet Shaked (of the Jewish Home party), stated: “It’s time to clear the legal fog and let [Israeli] residents who live in [the West Bank], most of them in communities set up by various Israeli governments, stop worrying about a constant threat to the ownership of their homes”.¹⁷ At the time of writing, the committee had not submitted its recommendations.

¹³ In its July 2012 report, the “Levy Committee”, established by the Government of Israel to investigate the legal status of the unauthorized settlements in the West Bank (“outposts”), recommended the legalization of the outposts. The report was not formally adopted by the Government of Israel (see A/HRC/22/63, annex I, p. 37).

¹⁴ State’s response dated 12 October 2015; High Court of Justice, case 8395/14, Head of Turmusayya Village Council et al. v. Minister of Defense et al. (available in Hebrew only).

¹⁵ B’Tselem, “Retroactive ‘laundering’ of Itamar, Shvut Rachel, Sansana and Yaqir part of government policy to annex Palestinian land to State of Israel”, 22 November 2015.

¹⁶ The committee is tasked with the “formulation of an outline for regularizing structures and neighbourhoods in Jewish communities in [the West Bank] that were built with the involvement of the authorities”. It is chaired by Cabinet Secretary, Avichai Mendelbit, and comprised of representatives of the Ministries of Agriculture and Defence. Information from a communication from the Prime Minister’s Office, 19 July 2015.

¹⁷ Revital Hovel, “New Israeli Panel Eyes Legalizing West Bank Outposts”, Haaretz, 22 July 2015.

28. In October 2015, Likud Member of the Knesset, Yoav Kisch, proposed a bill aimed at enabling the “regulation” (retroactive legalization, under Israeli law) of settlement construction on private Palestinian land through the confiscation of land from their owners, in return for compensation.¹⁸ According to his proposal, confiscated property would be allocated to the Settlement Division of the World Zionist Organization, which would subsequently allocate the land for the needs of retroactively “regulated” settlements. The proposals put forward in the bill circumvent the rulings of the Israeli High Court of Justice in a number of high-profile cases (see below), which ordered the demolition of illegal settlement construction on privately owned Palestinian land. A debate on the bill in the Ministerial Committee for Legislation was postponed at the last minute, apparently due to diplomatic pressure on the Government of Israel. In a comment published by the Knesset Channel website, Yoav Kisch stated that the bill had been suspended pending a review of its legality under international law. A similar bill had been rejected by the Knesset in 2012.

E. Court judgements and demolition of settlement structures

29. During the reporting period, the Israeli High Court of Justice issued rulings to uphold Palestinians’ right to private property in the West Bank. This has been borne out in a number of high-profile rulings, including in the cases of Amona, Ofra, Beit El and Givat Zeev, as well as in the course of court proceedings regarding the construction on Qaryut lands in the settlement of Derekh Ha’Avot and the use of farmland by settlers in the Jordan Valley.

30. On 29 July 2015, Israeli security forces demolished two settlement apartment buildings, the “Dreinoﬀ” buildings, which had been under construction on the outskirts of the settlement of Beit El, on privately owned land belonging to a resident of the adjacent Palestinian village of Dura al-Qara. The demolitions were carried out upon the orders of the Minister of Defence, pursuant to High Court judgments issued in September 2014 and June 2015, after lengthy legal proceedings and repeated attempts by the Israeli authorities and settlers to have the buildings retroactively approved.

31. Violent clashes erupted between hundreds of settlers and security forces in the days leading up to the scheduled demolition, as settler leaders and youth moved to occupy the buildings and confronted Israeli forces so as to prevent the demolition of the settlement structures. Unrest then spread to other areas in the West Bank. Developments in this case elicited strong reactions from factions of the Government of Israel, ultimately causing tensions within the governing coalition. Senior government officials of the Jewish Home party publically protested against the demolition, and Minister for Education, Naftali Bennett, addressed settlers and sympathizers gathered at the Dreinoﬀ buildings, criticizing Ministry of Defence orders to deploy security forces to the site on the day before the scheduled demolition.¹⁹ On the day of the demolitions, the Prime Minister approved the construction of 300 additional housing units in the Beit El settlement.²⁰

¹⁸ Regulation Draft Law No. P/1973/20, 2015 (authors: Yoav Kisch, Bezalel Smotrich, David Bitan, Nava Boke, Israel Eichler, Eli Cohen, Machluf Miki Zohar, Avraham Naguisa, Robert Ilatov and Sharon Gal).

¹⁹ Ministers Uri Ariel, Ze’ev Elkin and Yariv Levin released a joint statement: “We came here to express our support for the residents of Beit El, their desire to build up their community, and their protest against the unnecessary demolition.” See Chaim Levinson, “Hundreds of Young Settlers Clash Violently With Police at Beit El”, Haaretz, 28 July 2015.

²⁰ Stuart Winter and Judah Gross, “As two buildings torn down at Beit El, Netanyahu approves 300 more”, Times of Israel, 29 July 2014.

32. The Secretary-General notes with concern the repeated requests by the State for delays of court-ordered demolition deadlines. Indeed, in the few cases of evictions of settlers and demolitions or residential settlement construction in recent years, Palestinian landowners have yet to regain full access to their plots. Palestinian claimants have seen few if any improvements in terms of access to land and the protection of their private property.

V. Settler violence and failure to maintain public order

A. Overview and trends

33. Settler violence is directly related to the continued existence and expansion of illegal settlements throughout the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and has far-reaching implications for the rights of Palestinians (see A/HRC/28/44, paras. 39-46, and A/69/348, paras. 36-44).

34. During the period under review, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 253 incidents of settler-related violence, of which 101 resulted in injury to Palestinians, with the remainder causing damage to Palestinian property. This compares to 207 reported cases of casualties during the previous year, including five Palestinian fatalities (two killed by settlers and three killed by Israeli security forces) in settler-related incidents. The number of violent incidents related to settlements that resulted in injury to Israelis or to their property increased during the reporting period, to 123 incidents, of which 75 resulted in injury. By contrast, 96 incidents were reported during the previous 12-month period, including 69 injuries. The Secretary-General has repeatedly condemned all attacks against civilians and their property, which further fuel the cycle of violence.

35. In a case that garnered widespread international condemnation, in the early hours of 31 July 2015, the home of the Dawabsheh family, in the Palestinian village of Duma, was set on fire in an apparent attack by Israeli settlers. An 18-month-old child was killed in the attack and his parents later died of their wounds. A 4-year-old child of the couple remained hospitalized at the time of writing. On 31 July 2015, the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General to the Palestinian Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Authority stated that he was outraged by the vicious arson attack by suspected Jewish extremists in the occupied West Bank village of Duma near Nablus, which killed Palestinian toddler, Ali, critically injured his mother and father and injured his 4-year-old sibling, and called for a full and prompt investigation to bring the perpetrators of this terrorist crime to justice.

36. While OHCHR monitoring of the case indicates that efforts have been made by Israeli law enforcement authorities to conduct an investigation into the incident, no indictments had been served at the time of writing, and the investigation was ongoing. On 10 September 2015, Israeli news media reported that “Israel’s defense establishment knows who is responsible for the arson attack that killed three members of [the Dawabsheh family], but has chosen to prevent legal recourse in order to protect the identity of their sources”. According to the same report, three Israelis were held in administrative detention in connection with the case.²¹

37. The climate of impunity enjoyed by violent settlers, combined with reports of an overall increase in the number of settler attacks inside Palestinian villages during the period under review,²² underscores the persistent climate of fear and insecurity experienced by Palestinians living in proximity to illegal settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

²¹ Jonathan Lis and Chaim Levinson, “Israel Has Identified Duma Arson Suspects but Won’t File Charges Yet, Says Defense Minister”, Haaretz, 10 September 2015.

38. A spike in settler violence was recorded in October 2015 in the context the wave of violence that erupted in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. An increase in incidents took place during the first days of October, following the killing of an Israeli couple by Palestinians in the West Bank on 1 October, and generally in the City and Governorate of Hebron where, according to data from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, there were at least 30 settler attacks against Palestinians and Palestinian property. The attacks took the form of stone-throwing at Palestinian houses in the areas of the Wadi al-Hussein, Jabari and Al-Rajabi Quarters located in the vicinity of the settlement of Kiryat Arba. On 29 October, restrictions in the Israeli-controlled part of Hebron were further tightened when Israeli security forces closed off the area around the Tel Rumeida settlement, pursuant to a military closure order. While the onus of restrictions falls on Palestinians, Israeli settlers are allowed to move about freely throughout the area.²³

39. Settler attacks and intimidation targeting volunteers and the representatives of international humanitarian organizations providing a protective presence and documenting human rights violations in the Israeli-controlled part of Hebron and in the southern Nablus governorate were reported during October 2015. The Secretary-General is concerned at these deliberate attacks against human rights defenders in the area. These attacks were compounded by restrictions on movement imposed by Israeli security forces, particularly at all checkpoints and on the road to Qurtuba School in Hebron, which links two settlements.

B. Israeli measures to address settler violence: accountability and prevention

40. In an effort to address the failure to protect and enforce the law against settlers, a specialized unit within the Israel Police West Bank District was established in early 2013. The Nationalistic Crimes Unit is charged with responding to ideologically motivated crimes committed by Israeli civilians, in coordination with the Israel Security Agency, the Israel Defense Forces and the Ministry of Justice. According to the Israeli Ministry of Justice, in 2014, the operationalization of the unit resulted in an increase of 64 per cent in the number of indictments filed against Israeli suspects.²⁴

41. The Secretary-General welcomes the aforementioned steps taken by the Israeli authorities to address settler violence. However, cases handled by the Nationalistic Crimes Unit include criminal offences perpetrated against Israeli security forces and Israel Defense Forces property, as well as against Palestinians. According to data released by the Israeli police in January 2015, out of 83 indictments served by the Unit, only 25 per cent related to cases where the complainant was Palestinian.²⁵ A concern therefore remains that efforts by the Israeli authorities have not yet translated into significant improvements in the performance of law enforcement where the victims are Palestinian.

²² Yesh Din, "Data sheet: Law Enforcement on Israeli Civilians in the West Bank", October 2015.

²³ Protection Cluster, "Protection concerns and humanitarian impacts of settlement activity in Hebron city", April 2014.

²⁴ Response to Yesh Din report, "Mock Enforcement", from the Legal Counseling and Legislation Department (International Law) in the Ministry of Justice, 23 December 2014. See Yesh Din, "Mock Enforcement", May 2015, p. 148.

²⁵ Information released by the Israeli Police to Yesh Din following freedom of information procedures, provided to OHCHR in correspondence dated 9 December 2015.

42. Israeli authorities continue to make use of administrative measures against Israelis suspected of violent, ideologically motivated acts, in efforts to stave off such crimes. Steps included the administrative detention of three Israelis,²⁶ as well as the issuance of at least 36 administrative restraining orders, 16 of which were issued against minors. The latter mainly aimed at restricting movement of suspects in the West Bank.²⁷

43. The use by Israel of administrative detention against Palestinians and Israelis alike has been condemned by the Secretary-General (see A/69/347, para. 29).²⁸ Where criminal charges cannot be brought, Israeli authorities should consider the use of alternative measures, such as restraining orders, and implement them in accordance with human rights obligations, including adequate judicial review and due process.

VI. Impact on Palestinian communities at risk of forcible transfer

(a) General overview

44. The Secretary-General voiced concerns at the deteriorating human rights and humanitarian situations facing Palestinian Bedouin and herder populations affected by home demolitions and Israeli plans for “relocation” of entire communities.²⁹

45. The Secretary-General has previously noted the Israeli zoning and planning policy in the West Bank, which regulates the construction of housing and structures in Area C, is restrictive, discriminatory and incompatible with requirements under international law (see A/HRC/25/38, paras. 11-20). The planning system favours Israeli settlement interests over the needs of the protected population and makes it practically impossible for Palestinians living in Area C (approximately 300,000, according to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs) to obtain building permits. Severe restrictions on Palestinian planning in Area C further prevents the development of communities, which are effectively denied basic services and infrastructure under the current policy.

46. This impossibility of building safely creates enormous pressure on communities, particularly those targeted for relocation, as they know that within the current system there is no long-term protection from demolition and destruction of their property, creating a coercive environment that effectively drives communities off the land they have inhabited for decades.

47. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, in a decrease compared with last year’s reporting period, between 1 November 2014 and 31 October 2015, Israeli authorities demolished 554 Palestinian structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, of which 137 were residential, inhabited structures. These demolitions resulted in the displacement of 712 Palestinians, and affected the livelihoods of communities throughout the West Bank.³⁰ During the previous year (1 November 2013 to 31 October 2014), the Office recorded demolitions of 628 Palestinian structures, which resulted in the displacement of 1,263 Palestinians.

²⁶ Gili Cohen, “Ya’alon: Administrative Detention Used on Jewish Extremists to Prevent Future Attacks”, Haaretz, 10 September 2015.

²⁷ Based on Israeli media reports between November 2014 and October 2015.

²⁸ See also 9 August 2015 Security Council briefing on the situation in the Middle East including the Palestinian question by Under-Secretary-General Jeffrey Feltman.”

²⁹ See statement by the spokesperson for the Secretary-General, New York, 8 September 2015.

³⁰ Information from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (unpublished), provided by correspondence dated 26 November 2015.

48. August 2015 saw the highest number of demolitions of Palestinian structures in a single month since June 2010, with some 140 Palestinian structures demolished and over 200 Palestinians displaced. The overwhelming majority of the demolitions were in Area C, mainly affecting already vulnerable Bedouin herding communities.

49. At the same time, activities by the Government of Israel aimed at relocation of Bedouins and herder communities progressed during the period under review. The planned relocation of the Bedouin and herder communities in Area C gives rise to serious concerns under international law. The Secretary-General reiterates concerns that the implementation of proposed relocations may amount to individual and mass forcible transfers. Except for temporary transfers for the security of the population or for imperative military reasons in the context of hostilities, forcible transfers violate human rights law and are prohibited under international humanitarian law. Under article 147 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, the unlawful transfer of protected persons constitutes a grave breach of its provisions, and potentially incurs the individual criminal responsibility of officials engaged in forcible transfers. In addition, the transfer of Palestinian Bedouin communities would contravene the obligations of Israel under international human rights law, particularly regarding the rights to freedom of residence and to adequate housing (see A/67/372, para. 37, and A/HRC/24/30, para. 29).

(b) Risk of forcible transfer of Susiya residents – South Hebron Hills

50. Susiya, a Palestinian community located in the Hebron governorate in the southern West Bank, is currently home to 55 Palestinian families, who have been living in this location for decades, on land they claim as their private property. The homes of half of these families and all the community's public structures are located in Area C, where Israel maintains full control over planning and zoning, and the remainder in Area B.³¹ There are outstanding demolition orders for all the village's 170 structures located in Area C, which include 32 residential tents and shacks, 26 animal shelters and 66 family utility structures, 20 cisterns and 20 latrine units, 2 clinics, 1 school and 1 kindergarten, among others. Approximately half of these structures have been funded by international donors and provided as humanitarian assistance.

51. The nearby Israeli settlement of Susiya, established in 1983 in contravention of international law, has a population of nearly 1,000, some of whom live in an unauthorized outpost erected in 2002, on the original site of the Palestinian village of Susiya, on land that had been declared an archaeological site. By the end of the 1990s, the Israeli authorities had allocated over 1,500 dunams of land to the development of Susiya settlement (the "municipal boundaries"), an area that is over five times larger than its current built-up area. The Susiya settlement has been granted an outline plan that allows for the development of housing and infrastructure. While an adjacent settlement outpost was established without permits, the authorities have connected it to the water and electricity networks and refrained from enforcing pending demolition orders.

52. Owing to systematic settler violence and intimidation, Palestinian residents of Susiya village have limited or no access to over 2,000 dunams of their land, which constitute about two thirds of the community's farming and grazing area. This has a serious impact on their right to livelihood. In 2014 alone, some 800 olive trees and saplings owned by Palestinian residents of Susiya were vandalized and damaged, allegedly by Israeli settlers.

³¹ In 1986, the Israeli authorities declared the main residential area of Susiya an archaeological site and evicted all of its residents. Most of those who relocated to what was later designated Area C, on plots of land adjacent to the original site of the village, were displaced again in the context of two waves of demolitions, in 2001 and in 2011, on the grounds of lack of building permits.

53. The Israeli planning authorities have repeatedly rejected zoning and planning schemes submitted by the residents of the village of Susiya, which would allow the issuance of building permits on land that they own. On 4 May 2015, the Israeli High Court of Justice rejected the community's request for an interim injunction freezing demolitions in the village, thereby rendering 28 families vulnerable to imminent evictions and displacement.³² In the course of legal proceedings before the High Court of Justice, the Israeli authorities further expressed their intention to "relocate" the community to a nearby site, adjacent to the Palestinian town of Yatta.

54. Over the summer of 2015, concerted efforts by the international community, including the United Nations and Member States, were successful in staving off Israeli demolition plans at the site. However, long-standing access restrictions to basic services and grazing land at Susiya, combined with systematic intimidation by Israeli settlers, has created a coercive environment, which raises concerns about forcible transfer in violation of international law.³³ In a High Court of Justice hearing on 3 August, both sides agreed to postpone the discussion in order to allow time for a negotiated solution. A mediation process between the residents and the Israeli authorities is currently ongoing.

(c) Bedouin relocation plan – central West Bank, including the Jerusalem periphery

55. During the reporting period, Israeli authorities advanced plans presented in April 2014 by Major-General Yoav Mordechai, the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories, for the "relocation" of some 46 Palestinian Bedouin communities in the Jerusalem periphery.³⁴ These plans foresee the removal of Palestinian communities in and around strategic areas earmarked for Israeli settlement infrastructure throughout the central part of the West Bank, including the planned E1 settlement project. The project has long been opposed by the international community as an obstacle to the realization of the two-State solution.³⁵

56. The transfer plans of Israel place the Bedouin communities, currently residing in rural locations throughout the central West Bank in Area C, at risk of forcible transfer to three urbanized townships planned by the Israeli Civil Administration in Al-Jabal, Nweima and Fasayil. The relocation sites are being developed with the expressed purpose of "regulating Bedouins",³⁶ finding a "solution to the population residing in the area of the Adumim Bloc – western road No. 1"³⁷ and "settling permanently those Bedouin who are ³² Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "Susiya: a community at imminent risk of forced displacement", fact sheet, June 2015.

³³ Ibid.

³⁴ On 27 April 2014, Major-General Yoav Mordechai formally presented these plans to the Subcommittee on Judea and Samaria of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, chaired by Mordhay Yogev. The plans are outlined in a Powerpoint presentation entitled, "Infrastructure and Supervisory Units" referred to in the minutes of the Subcommittee meeting.

³⁵ Settlement construction plans in E1 would exacerbate the isolation of East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank and interrupt the territorial contiguity of the West Bank (see A/HRC/25/38).

³⁶ Powerpoint presentation of the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories, slide entitled, "Regulating Bedouins" from the presentation "COGAT takes steps to advance a number of plans to regulate the Bedouin population".

³⁷ Powerpoint presentation of the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories, slide entitled, "Programmes in the area of Ma'ale Adumim-Abu Dis – for a solution to the population residing in the area of the Adumim Bloc – western Road No. 1: Western Jahalin – programme operative, there”.³⁸ The implementation of these plans would hence entail the transfer of approximately 7,500 Palestinian Bedouin to the planned urban townships adjacent to Jericho, near the Jerusalem municipal landfill and in the Jordan valley.

57. The Bedouin, many of whom manage livestock as a traditional means of earning a livelihood, expressly oppose transfer to the proposed townships, as this would destroy their traditional pastoral economy, social fabric and rural way of life.³⁹ As an occupying Power, Israel has the duty to provide for the welfare of the protected population, and must take into account the Bedouins’ rights, interests and needs.

58. The construction of one of the sites, Al-Jabal West, started in February 2015 as an expansion of the existing Al-Jabal township, and groundwork was completed in September 2015. On 6 September 2015, the Israeli Subcommittee for Planning and Licensing granted the Israeli Civil Administration approval, in principle, to issue building permits for 17 of 35 plots of land.⁴⁰ The Israeli Civil Administration has also advanced plans for the development of the Nweima township. In April 2015, Bedouin communities brought a legal challenge against the steps taken in the planning process.⁴¹ At the time of writing this report, legal proceedings were still under way, and plans for a third township in Fasayil have not yet advanced.

59. Since April 2015, the Israeli Civil Administration has specifically targeted the Abu Nwar Bedouin community for transfer to Al-Jabal West. The land of Abu Nwar is located on the southern part of the E1 settlement construction project.⁴² On 28 April, 2015, a government-appointed liaison officer informed the Abu Nwar community that they would be slated for full relocation and that 34 families should sign up to the Jabal site within one month. The mediator stressed that the Israeli Civil Administration would not permit the Abu Nwar community to remain in its current location. Overall, some 200 demolition orders have been issued for Abu Nwar since 1998, many of which remain allegedly enforceable at the discretion of the authorities. Only the orders issued in 2015 are currently protected by a temporary injunction order.⁴³

60. In the context of the restrictive and discriminatory zoning and planning system, demolitions and eviction, or threats thereof, contribute to a coercive environment expected to leave little genuine choice to the affected communities but to leave, potentially, to at least one of three Israeli designated sites (see A/69/348, paras. 12-15). As previously stated by the Secretary-General (A/69/348, para. 16), Israeli “relocation” plans for Bedouin implementation tender soon. Afforested Jahalin – in process towards an environmental impact survey”. The “population” referred to is the Bedouin communities.

³⁸ Minutes of the meeting of the Judea and Samaria Region Subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, the Nineteenth Knesset, 27 April, 2014. Benjamin Weil, Meeting Minutes, p. 52.

⁴⁵ In April 2014, several Bedouin families of the Jahalin tribe, who have been designated for relocation by the Israeli authorities, issued a “letter to the international community” in which they expressed their absolute rejection to the relocation plans of the Israeli Civil Administration.

⁴⁰ Information from Bimkom – Planners for Human Rights.

⁴¹ The final objections hearing cannot be heard until there is a decision from the High Court of Justice on the petition, now pending a response from the Israeli Civil Administration, as this decision will impact the whole of the Nweima township plan.

⁴² The outline plan for the E1 settlement construction project was approved by the Israeli Higher Planning Council in 1999. According to Bimkom – Planners for Human Rights, a detailed plan for the development of 1,500 settlement housing units on the 389 dunams of land where Abu Nwar currently sits is being developed.

⁴³ A court order prohibiting an action by a party to a lawsuit until there has been a trial or other court action.

communities in Area C would constitute forcible transfer in violation of international law, except where the affected persons provide their genuine and fully informed consent.

(d) Southern Jerusalem periphery

61. Continued expansion of the Gush Etzion settlement bloc, in the Bethlehem District, and the consequent access restrictions in the area, pose a risk of increased fragmentation and isolation of nine Palestinian villages from the Bethlehem urban centre, in addition to the existing separation from East Jerusalem.⁴⁴ This continuing consolidation of extensive Bethlehem areas into the Israeli “Greater Jerusalem” in the southern periphery expands deeply into the West Bank and cuts these areas off from East Jerusalem, undermining once again the territorial contiguity of the West Bank and, therefore, the viability of a Palestinian State.

62. As a result, the Palestinian villages of Al-Walaja, Battir and Wadi Fukin, in the Bethlehem Governorate, face fragmentation, including the seizure of land for potential settlement expansion or for the construction of the wall, restrictions of movement owing to the wall, and settler violence. In August 2014, the Israeli army expropriated large land areas from the Bethlehem Governorate, including the declaration of 400 hectares of “State land”⁴⁵ earmarked for the expansion of the Gva’ot settlement. For Wadi Fukin alone, the confiscated land represents between a third and a half of the village land, including land used for agricultural purposes, as well as land in the immediate vicinity of the local school. The expropriation is expected to have an immediate negative impact on livelihoods in the village and to complicate efforts to construct additional classrooms for the local student population. In addition, groundwork recently started for the construction of 218 settlement units in the area, further isolating Wadi Fukin village, whose only remaining access road is likely to be demolished to allow for this new extension.

63. Over the past few years, repeated settler violence incidents and environmental pollution have been documented by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in the Wadi Fukin area on Palestinian land, as well as regular visits of armed settlers to the irrigation pools, intimidating farmers. Israeli authorities have failed to prevent or reduce settler attacks or to hold perpetrators accountable. In addition, on 11 June 2015 the community witnessed a new instance of bulldozing and the demolition of two wells.

VII. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

64. As mentioned by the Secretary-General in his report on the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan (see A/HRC/28/44, para. 54), an estimated 21,000 Israeli settlers currently live in the occupied Syrian Golan in 33 settlements, heavily subsidized by Israel. These settlements enjoy a number of financial incentives, as well as a disproportionate allocation of water resources, which contributes to a higher agricultural yield for settlers. In October 2015, reports indicated that Israel intends to expand the size of its settlements over the next five years by adding an additional 100,000 settlers to the region.⁴⁶ On the other hand, reports also refer to challenges faced by the Syrian population, which has grown from 7,000 in 1968 to approximately 25,000 people in 2015,⁴⁷ in the construction of new houses and infrastructure.⁴⁸

⁴⁴ In January 2015, the Israeli High Court removed petitions against the construction of the barrier in Battir from its caseload following a statement by the Israeli Government that the Barrier in these areas was no longer a priority.

⁴⁵ See statement by the Secretary-General on the matter, available from www.unmultimedia.org/radio/english/2014/09/un-chief-alarmed-by-israel-seizure-of-land-in-west-bank/#.VpardfnhBj0.

65. Reportedly, major Israeli and international companies continue to exploit natural resources in the occupied Syrian Golan.⁴⁹ The Secretary-General reiterates that the Security Council, in its resolution 497 (1981), reaffirmed that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and relevant Security Council resolutions, and decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect.

VIII. Conclusions and recommendations

66. Israeli settlement activities remain at the core of many of the violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The Secretary-General reiterates that the settlement enterprise represents the most serious obstacle to a viable Palestinian State.

67. The Israeli authorities must halt and reverse the creation and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in the occupied Syrian Golan. In addition, Israel must immediately cease using land control mechanisms aimed at expanding the area effectively occupied by settlements, such as the designation of firing zones, archaeological parks and agricultural land. Israel must also immediately cease the exploitation of natural resources from these territories.

68. Displacement and relocation to alternative residential areas, as a result of demolition orders, and a coercive environment could amount to individual and mass forcible transfer and forced evictions, contrary to the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian and human rights law.

69. The Government of Israel must urgently cease discriminatory and unlawful planning processes in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, as they result in violations of Palestinians' rights, inter alia, to access water and services, including health and education.

70. The Secretary-General reiterates that the Israeli authorities must ensure full criminal accountability for perpetrators of acts of settler violence.

71. Moreover, the Government must revoke all laws and policies and halt practices that directly or indirectly lead to the forcible transfer of Bedouin and herder communities. Specifically, the authorities must cease the demolition of Palestinian homes and private property and refrain from any initiative to relocate Bedouin and other herder communities in Area C, which is in contravention of international law.

⁴⁶ Mint Press, "Israel takes advantage of Syrian civil war to expand illegal Golan Heights settlements", 13 October 2015.

⁴⁷ For details on exploitation on natural resources, see A/70/36139, para. 76.

⁴⁸ Al-Marsad, Arab Human Rights Center in Golan Heights, "Landmines in the Occupied Golan and Israel's obligation under international human rights and humanitarian law".

⁴⁹ For instance, see Mint Press, "Israel takes advantage of Syrian civil war".

72. The Government of Israel must implement all relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions pertaining to territories occupied since 1967.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
13 April 2017

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-fourth session

27 February-24 March 2017

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan*

Summary

The present report has been prepared pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan. The report contains information on trends in settlement expansion, land designation for Israeli use in the West Bank and policies and practices pertaining to the Israeli settlement enterprise. It examines the human rights and international humanitarian law violations arising from the continued settlement expansion and land designation policy of Israel, including the implications of the coercive environment affecting Palestinian communities at risk of forcible transfer. The report also provides an analysis of violations relating to the production of and trade in settlement goods.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is being submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 and covers the period between 1 November 2015 and 31 October 2016. It should be read in conjunction with previous reports of the Secretary-General on Israeli settlements submitted to the General Assembly and the Council.¹
2. The report illustrates the persistence of the Israeli settlement enterprise, which includes settlement expansion and efforts to exert control over land in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, as Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory enters its fiftieth year and as that of the occupied Syrian Golan enters its forty-fourth year.
3. The report highlights how the policies relating to settlement activities remain at the core of a range of human rights violations in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. It examines how such policies create a coercive environment in areas under Israeli control, placing affected Palestinian communities at risk of forcible transfer. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 31/36, the report includes an analysis of the human rights and international law violations involved in the production of settlement goods and the relationship between trade in those goods and the maintenance and economic growth of settlements.

II. Legal background²

4. Israel bears responsibility for implementing in the Occupied Palestinian Territory the human rights obligations enshrined in the seven core human rights treaties and conventions it has ratified. International humanitarian law imposes obligations on Israel as the occupying power. It is obliged to respect the fundamental rights of the protected population in all circumstances.³

Transfer of the population of the occupying power to the territory it occupies

5. In its resolution 70/89, the General Assembly reaffirmed the illegality of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan.
6. The same determination has been made by both the Security Council, in its relevant resolutions,⁴ and the International Court of Justice, as regards settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁵ Settlements amount to the transfer of the population of Israel into the territory it occupies, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law. The transfer of an occupying power's population to a territory it occupies amounts to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.⁶

Prohibition against the forcible transfer of protected persons

7. International humanitarian law prohibits "individual or mass forcible transfers" of protected persons within the occupied territory, as well as deportations outside of the ¹ See A/HRC/28/44, A/HRC/31/43 and A/71/355, which covers the first months of the period under review, and A/69/348 and A/70/351.

² See A/HRC/28/44, paras. 5-6, A/HRC/31/43, para. 4, A/69/348, paras. 4-5, and A/HRC/25/38, paras. 4-5.

³ Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 27.

⁴ Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016).

⁵ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 134.

⁶ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

occupied territory, regardless of their motive.⁷ Such unlawful transfers constitute a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention (art. 147) and potentially incur the individual criminal responsibility of officials engaged in such acts.⁸ While other international humanitarian law provisions may be violated within the context of forcible transfer (e.g. the prohibition of the destruction of private and public property⁹), such transfers may imply the violation of several human rights, such as the right to adequate housing, including the prohibition of forced evictions,¹⁰ the right to non-interference with family and home,¹¹ the right to freedom of movement¹² and the right to education.¹³

Private property and natural resources

8. International humanitarian law provides certain protections for private and public property in occupied territories.¹⁴ Accordingly, Israel, as the occupying power, is prohibited from destroying public and private property except where it is rendered absolutely necessary by military operations. In addition, it is limited in how it may use public property; and the property of municipalities must be treated in the same way as private property.¹⁵ Moreover, the water and other natural resources of the occupied territory must be administered in accordance with the applicable rules of international humanitarian law and may not be damaged or depleted.¹⁶

Extraterritorial application of domestic laws

9. Israel applies a substantial part of its domestic laws to Israeli settlers living in the occupied territories, while Palestinians living in the West Bank are subject to Israeli military rule.¹⁷ The extraterritorial application of Israeli domestic law to settlers creates two different legal systems in the same territory, on the sole basis of nationality or origin. Such differentiated application is discriminatory and violates the principle of equality before the law, which is central to the right to a fair trial.¹⁸ In addition, the occupying power is required to respect the laws in force in the occupied territory, unless it is absolutely prevented from doing so.¹⁹

III. Settlement enterprise: expansion, land takeover and denial of Palestinian development

10. With the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territory now in its fiftieth year, illegal settlement activity continues to advance apace. Through continued expansion of illegal settlements and parallel efforts to consolidate Israeli control over the West Bank, successive Israeli governments since 1967 have overseen the steady growth of the settler population

⁷ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49. International Committee of the Red Cross, “Customary law”, International Review of the Red Cross, vol. 87, No. 857 (March 2005), rule 129.

⁸ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, arts. 7 (1) (d), 8 (2) (a) (vii) and 8 (2) (b) (viii).

⁹ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53, and Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 46.

¹⁰ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11. See also Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights general comment No. 7 (1997) on forced evictions.

¹¹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 17.

¹² Ibid., art. 12.

¹³ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 13.

¹⁴ Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 46-47 and 52-56, and Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 33, 46 and 53.

¹⁵ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 43, 53, 55 and 64.

¹⁶ Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 55.

¹⁷ This is not relevant to East Jerusalem, which, since its illegal annexation by Israel, has been subject to the Israeli legal system. It is recalled that the Security Council, in its resolution 252 (1968), reaffirmed that acquisition of territory by military conquest was inadmissible, a position reiterated in subsequent resolutions.

¹⁸ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 2 and 14.

¹⁹ Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 43.

and the unilateral takeover of large swaths of West Bank land reserves, in violation of international law.

11. The settler population in Area C and East Jerusalem has doubled since the Oslo Accords, reaching over 594,000 people (including an estimated 208,000 in East Jerusalem) by the end of 2015²⁰ living in some 130 settlements and 100 outposts. That number is expected to rise further given the advancement of new construction in settlements. The existence of Israeli settlements and the designation of land for exclusive Israeli use have resulted in the gradual fragmentation of the West Bank, demographic changes and the illegal exploitation of natural resources, while restricting Palestinians' access and denying possibilities for Palestinian development.

12. In July 2016, the Middle East Quartet questioned the long-term intentions of Israel given its continued efforts to exert control over the West Bank.²¹ The Quartet cited the Israeli policy of settlement construction and expansion, designating land for exclusive Israeli use and denying Palestinian development as key elements in the steady erosion of the viability of the two-State solution, which undermines hopes for peace.

13. The policies and practices of Israel detailed in the sections below raise serious concerns. The impact of the Government's settlement policy on the human rights situation of Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, has been devastating, as highlighted by the significant developments that occurred during the period under review.

A. Designation of land for exclusive Israeli use

14. Since Israel began its occupation of the Palestinian territory in 1967, a central feature of its settlement policy in the West Bank has been the gradual takeover and designation of land for exclusive Israeli use. This has been done through various measures, including the designation of certain areas as "State land", closed military zones, national parks and archaeological sites, State support for the informal takeover of land and the encouragement of economic activities in the settlements. As a consequence of such policies, approximately 70 per cent of Area C land is off-limits for Palestinian construction and development and the situation in East Jerusalem has been profoundly altered.²²

Designation of "State land" and allocation of land for settlements

15. Over one third of Area C has been formally designated as public land (referred to as "State land" by Israel), following a process of land registration initiated under Jordanian rule and, since 1967, by the Israeli authorities. The vast majority of "State land" designations took place before the start of the Oslo peace process in the early 1990s. "State land" has been allocated exclusively for use by Israel and its citizens, rather than for the benefit of the local population, as required under international law.²³

16. Land allocations to 24 Israeli regional and local settlement councils, comprising 126 settlements on approximately 63 per cent of Area C, typically encompass (in addition to built-up settlement areas) farmland, industrial zones, parks, access roads and security perimeters or buffer zones.²⁴ Such allocations result in a footprint that vastly exceeds built-up settlement areas, which amount to only around 2 per cent of Area C.²⁵

17. During the reporting period, the Israeli authorities declared over 200 hectares south of Jericho as "State land". The Blue Line team in the Israeli Civil Administration tasked ²⁰ Israel, Central Bureau of Statistics.

²¹ Report of the Middle East Quartet of July 2016, pp. 5-6. Available from www.un.org/News/dh/infocus/middle_east/Report-of-the-Middle-East-Quartet.pdf.

²² Area C comprises approximately 60 per cent of the West Bank and includes most of the land reserves for a future Palestinian State.

²³ B'Tselem, By Hook and By Crook: Israeli Settlement Policy in the West Bank (July 2010), pp. 21-35. Available from www.btselem.org/download/201007_by_hook_and_by_crook_eng.pdf.

²⁴ Yesh Din, "Land takeover practices employed by Israel in the West Bank" (September 2016), p. 2.

²⁵ Ibid.

with inspecting and amending or validating the boundaries of land previously designated as “State land” continued its activities. In a number of cases, this process has enabled the retroactive authorization of prior settlement construction carried out without the permits required under Israeli law.²⁶

Impunity and support for the informal takeover of land

18. Incidents of violence against Palestinians, trespassing and the forceful takeover of land have often been conducted as part of a calculated effort by settlers to expand Israeli control beyond settlement jurisdiction areas.²⁷ Such actions have become effective ways of taking over land,²⁸ notably owing to the passivity of the Israeli authorities in addressing them.²⁹ Indeed, Israeli settlers in the West Bank have historically enjoyed impunity for trespassing and committing violent attacks against Palestinians, and orders against agricultural invasions, whereby settlers take over and cultivate private Palestinian land, remain almost entirely unenforced.³⁰

19. The period under review witnessed the continuation of a significant decline in incidents of settler violence resulting in Palestinian casualties or damage to property, from 397 incidents in 2013 to 81 incidents between January and 31 October 2016.³¹ During the reporting period, the severity of settler violence also declined compared with 2015.

20. This positive trend has been linked to preventive measures implemented by the Israeli security forces, including enhanced presence in friction areas and known hotspots for settler violence and increased issuance and enforcement of administrative measures against known violent settlers — primarily restraining orders barring them from the West Bank and, in some instances, administrative detention orders. Resort to such measures reportedly intensified following the murder of three members of the Dawabsheh family in Duma, in July 2015, for which two Israeli citizens were indicted.³²

Designation of land for use as national parks, archaeology sites and tourism destinations as a means to entrench Israeli presence in the West Bank

21. The designation of national parks and archaeological sites and their promotion for Israeli and international tourism continues to contribute to consolidating Israeli civilian presence and control over land in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Approximately 14 per cent of Area C land has been designated for use as national parks, and the tourism heritage site development rooted in the illegal annexation of East Jerusalem has profoundly altered the shape and character of the areas surrounding the Old City, creating footholds for residential settlement expansion in Palestinian neighbourhoods.³³ The management of such ²⁶ See A/HRC/31/43, paras. 21-23, and A/71/355, para. 13.

²⁷ See A/70/351, paras. 52-60.

²⁸ Talya Sason, in “Summary of the opinion concerning unauthorized outposts” (10 March 2005), writes:

The expansion of the unauthorized outposts phenomenon began in the mid-nineties, after the building in Judea, Samaria and Gaza was frozen by the Rabin Administration in 1993. Building in settlements was still approved, but the approval rate went decreasing as the negotiations with the Palestinian representatives accelerated. The unauthorized outposts phenomenon began expanding, in light of the government’s position opposing the authorizing of the building of settlements in the territories.

²⁹ As documented by Talya Sason in “Summary of the opinion concerning unauthorized outposts”, privately led settlement expansion efforts have also received direct support from the Israeli authorities, despite an official position opposing settlement construction. See also Yesh Din, The Road to Dispossession: a Case Study — the Outpost of Adei Ad (February 2013).

³⁰ Yesh Din, “Land takeover practices employed by Israel in the West Bank”. See also the following reports commissioned by the Government of Israel addressing historic law enforcement failures in the West Bank: Talya Sason, “Summary of the opinion concerning unauthorized outposts”; Meir Shamgar, “Commission of inquiry into the massacre at the tomb of the patriarchs in Hebron (26 June 1994); and Yehudit Karp, “The Karp report: investigation of suspicions against Israelis in Judea and Samaria, Jerusalem” (1982).

³¹ Figures provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat.

³² See A/71/355, para. 19.

³³ See A/70/351, paras. 29-36 and 63-66.

sites restricts Palestinians' freedom of movement and prevents equal enjoyment of cultural life and heritage.³⁴

22. The management of archaeological and tourism sites by private settler groups came under scrutiny following the intervention by senior officials of the Ministry of Justice on behalf of the settler group Elad. Elad successfully reinstated the original plans for Kedem Compound, a large tourist facility proposed in Silwan, East Jerusalem, after Jerusalem planning bodies had significantly reduced the scope of the plans.³⁵ A report of the Israeli State Comptroller highlighted the lack of poor oversight by government authorities in relation to Elad's management of tourism and ancient sites and the lack of transparency in relation to links between the organization's management and government entities.

Designation of occupied land for economic activities

23. In the report on Israeli settlements submitted to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session (see A/71/355, para. 4), it was noted that the encouragement of economic activities, including industrial and agricultural activities, within and around settlements represented an additional way for Israel to support settlement expansion besides the allocation of land for settlement homes and infrastructure.³⁶

24. Through financial incentives, the Government of Israel has continued to actively encourage commercial development by Israeli and international businesses in and around the settlements. Almost all settlement industrial zones are designated as national priority areas, which carries benefits such as reductions in the price of land, grants for the development of infrastructure and tax breaks for individuals and business enterprises.³⁷ In its recent report on settlement businesses, Human Rights Watch noted that the physical footprint of Israeli business activity in the West Bank was larger than that of residential settlements. According to Human Rights Watch, industrial zones (1,365 hectares) and agricultural land (9,300 hectares) exploited by Israel in the West Bank occupy a surface area 1.7 times greater than the built-up area of residential settlements (6,000 hectares).³⁸

B. Settlement construction and expansion

25. The Israeli policy of construction and expansion of settlements and related infrastructure, and support to privately led settlement expansion initiatives throughout the West Bank continued, and an overall acceleration in settlement expansion was observed during the reporting period. Following a period of significant slowdown in planning and tendering since mid-2014, an overall acceleration in settlement expansion was reported during 2016, as measured against the main indicators of government-led settlement activity: the number of new constructions rose compared with previous years, with the highest number of new constructions in three years recorded during the second quarter of 2016. Moreover, there was an uptick in plans advanced in both East Jerusalem and Area C.³⁹ Similarly, settler-led initiatives continued to enjoy State support, as evidenced by the

³⁴ See A/70/351.

³⁵ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-1.745359.

³⁶ In its resolution 31/36, the Human Rights Council requested the Secretary-General to report on the human rights and international law violations involved in the production of settlement goods and the relationship between trade in these goods and the maintenance and economic growth of settlements.

³⁷ See <https://www.hrw.org/report/2016/01/19/occupation-inc/how-settlement-businesses-contribute-israels-violations-palestinian>.

³⁸ Ibid.

³⁹ According to the Israel Central Bureau of Statistics, construction started on 1,723 housing units during the first three quarters of 2016, an increase of 25 per cent compared with the same period in 2015. In Area C, 24 settlement plans involving the construction of 2,264 housing units were put forward without reaching the final approval stage. Fourteen additional plans reached a final approval stage (710 units). The figures represent an increase over 2015 but a decrease compared with 2014. Similarly, in East Jerusalem, plans for 1,572 units were put forward during 2016 compared with 1,285 units in 2015, which represented a significant decrease compared with the 3,300 units proposed in 2014.

growth in privately led East Jerusalem settlement enclaves (see para. 31 below) and continued efforts to retroactively legalize unauthorized Area C outposts.

Housing and infrastructure

26. There were significant developments in planning and construction during the period under review, particularly in East Jerusalem, including the issuance by the Israeli authorities, in November 2015, of a tender for 438 housing units in the settlement of Ramat Shlomo, in the northern periphery of the city.⁴⁰

27. In July 2016, the Israeli media reported on a rare, court-mandated approval of a plan for 600 housing units in the Palestinian village of Beit Safafa.⁴¹ It also reported on advances made in the construction of 560 settlement units in Maale Adumim and of 240 such units in East Jerusalem, which were soon followed by the issuance of tenders for an additional 323 units in those settlements.⁴²

28. Other key developments in East Jerusalem included advances in the planning and construction of residential buildings and infrastructure in the southern perimeter of the city by municipal planning authorities. Non-governmental organizations monitoring settlement expansion have highlighted those developments as part of broader efforts by the Israeli authorities to further the establishment of a contiguous Israeli-controlled corridor connecting the Gush Etzion settlement bloc, located in Bethlehem Governorate, to Jerusalem. In that regard, construction began on a new road facilitating access between Gush Etzion and Jerusalem;⁴³ proposals for housing plans and tenders continued to advance in Gilo settlement,⁴⁴ which was expected to enable the expansion of the settlement southward, towards Beit Jala; the construction of the wall resumed south of Beit Jala and west of Al Walajeh; and the construction of a visitors' centre started in an adjacent area located in Beit Jala's agricultural hinterland, which had been designated as a national park in 2013. Furthermore, the construction of a road leading to an undeveloped parcel in nearby Givat HaMatos C raised concerns as an indication of possible future construction plans in the area.⁴⁵

29. An acceleration in the implementation of settlement-related policies and measures in the southern periphery of Jerusalem and in Bethlehem Governorate resulted in the fragmentation of the area, the shrinking of space available for Palestinian development and the separation of rural hinterlands from urban areas. Key concerns emanating from these developments include the impact on the rights of Palestinian residents of the area to freedom of movement, an adequate livelihood and the enjoyment of natural resources.⁴⁶

Support to privately led settlement initiatives in East Jerusalem

30. Israeli civil society organizations reported on the growth of privately led settlement efforts in East Jerusalem, particularly in the city's "historic basin", which saw a 25 per cent increase in the total number of settlers between 2009 and October 2016, to approximately 2,500 settlers.⁴⁷ The initiatives are supported by government funding, including through a ⁴⁰ See www.peacenow.org.il.

⁴¹ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/1.728768.

⁴² See <https://www.un.org/sg/en/content/sg/statement/2016-07-04/un-secretary-general-israeli-decisions-regarding-new-construction>.

⁴³ Ir Amim newsletter available from www.altro.co.il/newsletters/show/8617?key=08df354b3dd7853bae6cc333e526b2dd&value=9a3cdcd0e38da468aea5b504ce87c7a2d1ce4fef:1260978.

⁴⁴ As part of the announcement for the tender of 323 units (see para. 27 above).

⁴⁵ While not yet approved at the time of writing, the parcel in question has been designated for 800 housing units. See Ir Amim newsletter available from www.altro.co.il/newsletters/show/9056?key=ebb7138f916d1c7391aeed8ed6e1c804&value=c2e4bb0d506603c6a015881780b407ec41d90f70:1284691.

⁴⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "Bethlehem Governorate: fragmentation and humanitarian concerns", factsheet (January 2015).

⁴⁷ Ir Amim and Peace Now, Broken Trust: State Involvement in Private Settlement in Batan Al-Hawa, Silwan (May 2016), p. 5.

security budget allocated by the Ministry of Construction and Housing, totalling approximately US$ 25 million in 2015.⁴⁸

31. Intensified efforts by Israeli settler groups to take control of East Jerusalem properties, often located deep within Palestinian neighbourhoods, have generated an increased risk of evictions of Palestinian families (see also para. 56 below).

Retroactive legalization of outposts in Area C

32. Successive reports to the General Assembly have detailed Israeli support to settlement outposts (erected by settlers without official approval from the Government of Israel) through the provision of funds, infrastructure and security, and through the lack of any action to remove them.

33. While no outpost has been legalized since May 2014, efforts to retroactively approve such settlements took a new form during the period under review, as a draft bill was introduced to avert the impending court-mandated 25 December 2016 deadline for the evacuation and demolition of the outpost of Amona, erected on the private lands of residents of Silwad, Ein Yabroud and Taibeh. The “regularization bill” envisaged the retroactive “regularization” of settlement houses built on private Palestinian property, which would remove key legal obstacles to the retroactive legalization of dozens of unauthorized outposts.⁴⁹

C. Production of and trade in settlement goods

34. The production of and trade in settlement goods raises concerns about the human rights impact on Palestinians caused and exacerbated by business enterprises and States. The human rights obligations of Israel within the Occupied Palestinian Territory stem from the jurisdiction and effective control it exercises as the occupying power. That includes the obligation to protect individuals and communities from adverse human rights impacts by third parties, such as business enterprises, operating in territory under its effective control. Under article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, States parties have to respect and ensure respect for the Conventions. Accordingly, third States are under the obligation not to recognize the unlawful situation resulting from Israeli settlements, nor to aid or assist in the violations committed by Israel.⁵⁰

35. The European Union is the main trading partner of Israel, with trade worth over 32 billion euros in 2015. The Government of Israel has reportedly estimated that the annual value of industrial goods produced in settlements and exported to Europe is US$ 300 million. Agricultural production provides the main source of income for settlements in the Jordan Valley, with 66 per cent of their produce being exported.

36. Products that are wholly or partially produced in settlements are frequently labelled as coming from Israel, obscuring their actual origin. That allows the exports to be covered under preferential trade agreements with the European Union that exclude settlements. Some measures have been taken to address that issue. During the reporting period, the European Union issued new labelling guidelines for products coming from the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Golan Heights. Under those guidelines, any product originating from a settlement must not be labelled as “Made in Israel” but must clearly be labelled as having been produced in a settlement.

37. While States have a primary duty to protect human rights, there is an independent corporate responsibility to respect human rights applicable to all business enterprises, irrespective of where they operate. That has been recognized in the Guiding Principles on ⁴⁸ Ibid, p. 12.

⁴⁹ See A/HRC/31/43 and A/71/355. See also www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=21003&LangID=E.

⁵⁰ See Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, paras. 157-159, and International Committee of the Red Cross, 2016 commentary on article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, para. 163.

Business and Human Rights, which are based on existing responsibilities under international law and have been unanimously endorsed by all the States members of the Human Rights Council (see, in particular, A/HRC/17/31, annex, principle 11).

38. The role of Israeli and foreign businesses in supporting and maintaining the existence of the settlements has already been highlighted (see A/67/379 and A/68/376). In its 2013 report, the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, concluded that business enterprises had directly and indirectly enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the settlements and that businesses contributed to the maintenance, development and consolidation of the settlements with full knowledge of the liability risks (see A/HRC/22/63, paras. 96-97).

39. Since the fact-finding mission's report, increasing attention has been paid to the activities of business enterprises in relation to settlements. In 2014, the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises emphasized that businesses connected to Israeli settlements needed to be able to demonstrate that they neither supported the continuation of an international illegality nor were they complicit in human rights abuses; that they could effectively prevent or mitigate human rights risks; and that they were able to account for their efforts in that regard. The Working Group added that where companies could not prevent or mitigate the risks of being involved in human rights violations through their operations and business relationships, they might need to consider terminating their operations.⁵¹

IV. Coercive environment resulting from settlement policies and consequent risk of forcible transfer

40. The impact of settlement policies on the living conditions of Palestinians, including their increased risks of individual and mass forcible transfer, continues to be a concern.

41. Moreover, Israel, as the occupying power, may be increasing pressure on Palestinians to move out of their areas of residence through practices and policies that contribute to the creation of a coercive environment in areas under full Israeli control. In previous reports, the Secretary-General has outlined the existence of a coercive environment in parts of Area C and Hebron's H2 and highlighted factors constituting a coercive environment with respect to East Jerusalem.⁵² He has also raised concerns about cases where forcible transfer appears to have taken place.⁵³

42. The impact of a coercive environment on individuals and communities depends on their specific circumstances and experience. A coercive factor alone or in combination with others may be sufficient to determine the existence of a coercive environment in a given case and its connection with the grave breach of forcible transfer. The list of coercive factors below is not exhaustive.

A. Factors contributing to a coercive environment in the West Bank

43. The factors below contribute to the creation of a coercive environment in areas of the West Bank under full Israeli control.

⁵¹ See www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Business/OPTStatement6June2014.pdf.

⁵² See A/HRC/24/30, para. 27, A/HRC/31, paras. 46 and 68, A/70/421, para. 36, A/69/348, paras. 12-16, A/HRC/28/80, para. 24, A/HRC/31/43, para. 54, A/69/348, paras. 12-16, A/HRC/25/40, para. 22, and A/71/355, paras. 24-33.

⁵³ See A/67/372, para. 39, A/HRC/25/40, paras. 18-20, A/69/347, para. 26, and A/71/355, paras. 61-64.

“Relocation” plans and evictions

44. The publicly stated intention of the Government of Israel to relocate or evict thousands of Palestinians currently residing in Area C is a principal source of pressure and coercion for the communities and individuals concerned. In previous reports it was highlighted that the implementation of such plans would entail forcible transfers, except where the individuals affected expressed genuine consent to move.⁵⁴ This relates in particular to Israeli plans to relocate some 7,500 Palestinian Bedouin and herders to between three and nine centralized sites⁵⁵ and to evict some 1,000 Palestinians living in eight villages in the Massafar Yatta area for the enforcement of a firing zone.⁵⁶ It also applies to other eviction and relocation plans affecting 55 Palestinian families in Susya⁵⁷ and other communities targeted for relocation outside their areas or residence, such as Dkaika,⁵⁸ in southern Hebron Governorate.

45. A history of forced evictions and transfers of entire communities by Israeli authorities places additional pressure on the individuals and communities targeted by these plans.⁵⁹

46. The Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 have pointed to the seizure of Palestinian homes and forced evictions (and the risk of such seizures and evictions taking place) to make way for settlers to move in, as factors suggesting a coercive environment in East Jerusalem.⁶⁰ According to the ⁵⁴ See A/HRC/25/40, paras. 18-21 and 78, A/67/372, para. 36-37, and A/HRC/24/30, para. 29.

⁵⁵ See A/HRC/31/43, paras. 56-60. On 14 June 2016, the Deputy Head of the Israeli Civil Administration, Col. Uri Mendez, referred to nine relocation sites during the “Judea and Samaria” subcommittee meeting.

⁵⁶ See A/HRC/24/30, para. 28.

⁵⁷ See A/HRC/31/43, paras. 50-54.

⁵⁸ The Bedouin community of Dkaika has a population of approximately 450, most of whom are Palestine refugees. The Israeli Civil Administration has proposed relocating the community to one of the nearby villages, in line with the State’s official position expressed on 13 May 2009 and 23 March 2016 in response to a petition submitted to the High Court of Justice by Dkaika residents demanding planning and zoning rights for the community. On 2 November 2016, the High Court ordered that Dkaika residents and the State enter into discussions for 90 days to find a solution regarding planning for the village residents. A temporary protection order against demolitions is in place. While it remains unclear whether planning in that location will be an option for the State, the High Court criticized the State’s proposed relocation plan on the grounds that there was no public need or benefit to transfer residents. See <http://rhr.org.il/eng/2016/11/update>.

⁵⁹ Between 1997 and 2007, the Israeli authorities transferred in three waves some 150 Bedouin families in Jerusalem Governorate to the Al Jabal site despite their opposition to the relocation. See United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, “Al Jabal: a study on the transfer of Bedouin Palestine refugees” (2013). Experts have assessed that these three waves of displacement amounted to forcible transfer under international humanitarian law. See Théo Boutruche and Marco Sassoli, “Expert opinion on the displacements of Bedouin communities from the central West Bank under international humanitarian law” (September 2014). In 1999, the Israel Defense Forces moved some 700 Palestinian herders out of 12 villages in the Massafar Yatta area, in Hebron Governorate, on the grounds that the area had been designated as a military firing zone. Affected Palestinians were reportedly placed in trucks and removed by force out of the area. See www.acri.org.il/en/2013/03/07/918-whats-the-deal-2. See also A/HRC/24/30, para. 28, and Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Life in a firing zone: the Massafar Yatta communities” (May 2013). In 1986, 25 families were expelled from the residential area at Susya in southern Hebron Governorate on the grounds that the land had been designated an archaeological site. A second transfer took place from the new site in 2001. See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Susiya: a community at imminent risk of forced displacement” (June 2015), Rabbis for Human Rights (<http://rhr.org.il/eng>) and B’Tselem, “Khirbet Susiya: a village under threat of demolition” (7 August 2016).

⁶⁰ See A/70/351, paras. 25-51, and A/HRC/16/71, paras. 20-22. See also the letter dated 30 April 2015 from the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in

Israeli non-governmental organizations Ir Amin and Peace Now, at least 55 families were evicted from their homes in 2015 and 2016, and some 300 Palestinian families are under threat of eviction or imminent house demolition in the “historic basin” of the Old City of East Jerusalem.⁶¹ In most cases, the evictions have been initiated by Israeli settler organizations on the basis of landownership claims, as well as claims that the residents are no longer “protected tenants”. As a result, 818 Palestinians, including 372 children, are at risk of displacement.⁶²

Demolitions

47. Demolitions,⁶³ the threat of demolitions⁶⁴ and the lack of long-term protection against demolitions have been identified as key elements contributing to a coercive environment in the West Bank. Demolitions have been identified as a key coercive factor, in particular for Area C communities targeted for relocation,⁶⁵ communities in closed military zones⁶⁶ and communities located near Israeli settlements.⁶⁷

48. During the reporting period, the highest number of demolitions of Palestinian homes and structures was recorded in the West Bank, with 874 structures demolished in Area C in 2016, compared with 456 in 2015, and 190 demolitions taking place in East Jerusalem, compared with 79 in 2015, the highest demolitions rate on record.⁶⁸ Between 1988 and 2016, the Israeli Civil Administration issued 14,929 orders to demolish around 16,000 Palestinian-owned structures in the West Bank, excluding East Jerusalem, which had been built without permits from the Israeli authorities.

49. The pace of demolitions in East Jerusalem also accelerated to an alarming rate, reaching 190 between 1 January and 31 October 2016, compared with 79 in 2015.⁶⁹

Pressure from government officials

50. Pressure, including threats and harassment during repeated visits from Israeli Civil Administration and other government officials, including members of the Israeli security forces, continued to be documented as an ongoing form of coercion.⁷⁰ During visits, in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 (https://spdb.ohchr.org/hrdb/30th/public_-_UA_Israel_30.04.15_\(1.2015\)_pro.pdf_pro.pdf)).

⁶¹ Ir Amim newsletter available from www.altro.co.il/newsletters/show/9436?key=d50319441ca2cdd8d7e87ceb1028269&value=c2e4bb0d506603c6a015881780b407ec41d90f70:1284691.

⁶² Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “East Jerusalem: Palestinians at risk of evictions”, 3 November 2016.

⁶³ See A/68/513, paras. 30-34, A/HRC/25/38, paras. 11-20, and A/HRC/31/43, para. 44.

⁶⁴ See A/HRC/28/80, para. 24, and A/69/348, para. 13.

⁶⁵ See A/HRC/31/43, paras. 46 and 68, A/67/372, para. 55, A/HRC/24/30, A/69/348, para. 13, A/HRC/25/40, paras. 18-20, and A/HRC/28/45, para. 53.

⁶⁶ Approximately 18 per cent of Area C has been designated by the Israeli authorities as “firing zones”; 38 Palestinian communities are located in such zones. Because the Israeli Civil Administration prohibits construction in firing zones, wide-scale demolitions frequently take place. During 2016, at least five communities located in areas designated as firing zones experienced demolitions, including Halaweh and Jinba, in the Massafer Yatta area of Hebron, and are at risk of being forcibly transferred to allow implementation of firing zone 918; Ein ar Rashash (Ramallah, firing zone 906); Al Jiftlik-abu al Ajaj (Jericho Governorate) and Khirbet Tana in the northern Jordan Valley (firing zone 904). Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Wide-scale demolitions in Khirbet Tana”, 4 March 2016.

⁶⁷ See A/HRC/28/45, para. 45, A/HRC/22/63, paras 32-38, and A/HRC/67/375, paras. 10-11.

⁶⁸ The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs began collecting data on demolitions in 2009.

⁶⁹ Ir Amim newsletter available from www.altro.co.il/newsletters/show/9502?key=86ffe4a161ed2848474b99ff41b71bac&value=c2e4bb0d506603c6a015881780b407ec41d90f70:1284691.

⁷⁰ In Khirbet Tell el-Himma (northern Jordan Valley), the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has documented regular harassment by officials of the Israeli security forces and settlers during visits to the community following the demolition of homes and other structures in September particular following demolitions, officials have reportedly solicited the relocation or removal of the affected individuals outside their area of residence and have threatened to transfer them out forcibly.⁷¹

51. Even where individuals may express consent to relocate, including formal expressions of consent, the transfer would be forcible, and in violation of international law, unless the affected individuals express genuine consent.⁷²

Impact of military operations and settler violence

52. In Hebron's H2, the general sense of insecurity caused by the heavy military presence and security operations, which often involve the use of force by Israeli security forces, as well as harassment and arbitrary arrests, contribute to the creation of a coercive environment.⁷³ Meanwhile, Area C communities located inside and around areas defined by Israel as "firing zones" continued to experience a coercive environment, notably as a result of military training exercises, including with live fire. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has documented such training exercises causing displacement during the reporting period.⁷⁴

53. For communities located in close proximity to settlements and known hotspots of settler violence, violence and harassment by settlers exacerbate the coercive nature of the environment. Nonetheless, the frequency of reports of such incidents dropped notably during the reporting period.⁷⁵

Restrictions on freedom of movement and access to essential services

54. As noted by the Middle East Quartet, the policy of denial of Palestinian development has extended to the "complex system of physical and administrative restrictions on the movement of people and goods, which Israel justifies as necessary for security", including closures, checkpoints, limits to access to natural resources and agricultural land, and impediments to accessing basic services, including medical care and education.⁷⁶

55. Those restrictions and their impact have previously been identified as directly contributing to the coercive environment that exists in areas under full Israeli control.⁷⁷ Similarly, interference by Israeli authorities in the provision of humanitarian assistance and 2016. See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Monthly Humanitarian Bulletin (October 2016). In January 2016, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights recorded the testimonies of Abu Nwar residents referring to threats received from Israel Civil Administration officials and a liaison officer following the demolition of five residential and other structures on 6 January 2016, leaving 26 refugees, including 17 children, of whom 4 were living with disabilities, displaced and without a home in the middle of winter. In the following days, on 10 and 14 January, humanitarian materials donated by the international community as part of the post-demolition response were confiscated by the Administration.

⁷¹ For further reports on intimidation and threats related to communities in the outskirts of Jerusalem, see A/70/421, para. 46, and A/HRC/31/43, para. 59. See also www.unrwa.org/newsroom/official-statements/unrwa-condemns-demolition-homes-palestine-refugee-bedouins-families.

⁷² See A/67/372, para. 37.

⁷³ See A/71/355, paras. 25-50.

⁷⁴ Al-'Aqaba community in the northern Jordan Valley was exposed to sustained live fire inside the residential area for two days while an Israeli military training exercise was being conducted in the vicinity. Residents of the nearby community of Humsa al-Bqai'a were also temporarily displaced as a result. See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin — Occupied Palestinian Territory (October 2016).

⁷⁵ Systematic intimidation by Israeli settlers has created a coercive environment in Susiya. See A/HRC/31/43, para. 54, and footnote 79 above. Incidents of intimidation and physical violence by settlers and Israeli security forces against Bedouins in Umm al-Khair have been documented (see A/68/513, para. 37).

⁷⁶ Report of the Middle East Quartet of July 2016, p. 6. Available from www.un.org/News/dh/infocus/middle_east/Report-of-the-Middle-East-Quartet.pdf.

⁷⁷ See A/71/355 and A/HRC/31/43.

the destruction of such assistance in Area C has heightened the risk that affected communities will be forcibly transferred.⁷⁸

Additional factors contributing to a coercive environment

56. Other factors contributing to a coercive environment include the strict residency regime for East Jerusalem residents and restrictions on family unification between residents of East Jerusalem and other parts of the West Bank.⁷⁹

57. Similarly, policies and practices in the context of the five-decade-long Israeli occupation can contribute to a coercive environment, notably the confiscation by the Government of Israel of Palestinian land and restrictions on access to and control over natural resources, including water, which impede the development of the Palestinian economy; restrictions on the freedom of movement of Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem; the lack of access to effective legal remedies; and the implementation of collective punishment measures such as punitive demolitions.

V. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

58. Settlement expansion and land appropriation by the Government of Israel in the occupied Syrian Golan continued in direct violation of international law. In October 2016, the Government reportedly approved the construction of 1,600 new homes in the illegal settlement of Katzrin.⁸⁰ As noted in previous reports, Israeli settlements in the Golan are encouraged through financial incentives and a disproportionate allocation of water resources, contributing to a higher agricultural yield for settlers.⁸¹ The Government is also reportedly seeking to appropriate approximately 20,000 acres of occupied land to create Hermon national park. The land in question is currently used for agriculture and housing by the inhabitants of the nearby Syrian towns of Majdal Shams and Ein Qynia.⁸² The appropriation of the land would severely restrict the development and expansion of the town of Majdal Shams.⁸³

59. The Israeli authorities reportedly demolished a home in the Syrian Golan for the first time on 7 September 2016. The house was in the village of Majdal Shams and it was demolished on the basis that it had been built without the necessary permit.⁸⁴ Discriminatory land, housing and development policies established by the Israeli authorities have made it difficult for Syrians to obtain building permits, with the result that Syrian towns and villages are increasingly overcrowded.⁸⁵ The human rights organization Al-Marsad reported that a number of Syrian homeowners had received demolition notices; the organization expressed concern that the first demolition could mark the beginning of a new policy of home demolitions.⁸⁶

60. Of further concern are reiterations by senior Israeli government officials, including the Prime Minister, during 2016 that Israel would never give up its claim to the Golan Heights. The Secretary-General has repeatedly reaffirmed the continuing validity of Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council decided that the Israeli ⁷⁸ Approximately 170 European Union humanitarian structures were demolished between 2009 and mid-2016, of which 91 were demolished in the first six months of 2016. See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/1.733729 and www.unrwa.org/newsroom/official-statements/un-officials-call-immediate-revocation-plans-transfer-palestinian.

⁷⁹ See www.btselem.org/jerusalem/revocation_of_residency.

⁸⁰ See www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/israel-okays-1600-new-homes-in-golan-heights.

⁸¹ See A/HRC/28/44, para. 54, and A/HRC/31/43, para. 64.

⁸² See <http://golan-marsad.org/al-marsad-calls-on-international-community-to-act>.

⁸³ See <http://golan-marsad.org/press-release-al-marsad-submits-objection-to-hermon-national-park-plan>.

⁸⁴ See <http://golan-marsad.org/press-release-israeli-authorities-demolish-home-in-majdal-shams-in-the-occupied-syrian-golan/>

⁸⁵ Ibid.

⁸⁶ Ibid.

decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect.

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

61. Israeli settlement activity is incompatible with the obligations of Israel under international law. Settlement activity is a key driver of need for humanitarian assistance in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and lies at the core of a range of human rights violations. Israeli settlement activity further constitutes one of the main obstacles to a viable Palestinian State. The significant role that the production of and trade in settlement goods plays in helping to support and maintain settlements is also of concern.

62. Israel must implement all relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolution 497 (1981), and withdraw from territory it has occupied since 1967. To meet its obligations under international law, Israel must stop building settlements, reverse any settlement development activity and make full reparations to the individuals and communities concerned.⁸⁷

63. Within the scope of its obligation to respect and ensure respect for human rights within the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Government of Israel has the duty to protect the Palestinian population against human rights abuses by third parties, including business enterprises. It should implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and, in particular, take the legislative, administrative policy and remedial actions necessary to prevent, investigate, punish and redress abuses. The Israeli authorities must rescind all policies and practices that, directly or indirectly, are likely to lead to the forcible transfer of Palestinians, including policies and practices that contribute to the creation of a coercive environment that forces people to leave their communities. Specifically, the Israeli authorities must:

(a) Refrain from any initiative to relocate communities from Area C in contravention of international law;

(b) Cease the implementation of a planning and zoning regime that is discriminatory and restrictive and that facilitates the construction and expansion of settlements and the wall, in violation of international law;

(c) Cease the demolition of the homes and private property of Palestinians and take all measures to prevent violence and other coercive measures perpetrated by public officials or settlers;

(d) Ensure that any incident of violence by private actors, including settlers, against Palestinians and their property are investigated, that perpetrators are prosecuted and, if convicted, punished with appropriate sanctions, and that victims are provided with effective remedies in accordance with international standards.⁸⁸

64. Third States should provide guidance on implementing the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights to business enterprises domiciled in their territory or within their jurisdiction that operate in conflict-affected areas, including in the context of military occupation, such as in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

65. Business enterprises should undertake human rights due diligence in order to identify, prevent, mitigate and account for how they address any adverse human rights impact on Palestinians they may cause or contribute to, or which may be directly linked to their operations, products or services.

⁸⁷ Draft articles 30 and 31 of the draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, see Yearbook of the International Law Commission 2001, vol. II (Part Two), p. 28.

⁸⁸ See CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 16.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
6 March 2018

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-seventh session

26 February-23 March 2018

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

In the present report, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights describes the expansion of the settlement enterprise of Israel, examines the existence of a coercive environment in occupied East Jerusalem, and addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan. The report covers the period from 1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the latest developments.

I. Introduction

1. The present report, submitted to the Human Rights Council pursuant to its resolution 34/31, provides an update on the implementation of that resolution from 1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017. It is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and on information provided by other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and from Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations and civil society in the Occupied Syrian Golan. It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and of the High Commissioner to the General Assembly and to the Council (A/72/564, A/72/565, A/HRC/37/38 and A/HRC/37/42). The quarterly updates of the Secretary-General presented to the Security Council on the implementation of Council resolution 2334 (2016) also provide relevant information.¹

2. During the period under review, the Israeli settlement enterprise continued unabated in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, with significant new developments. Settlement expansion accelerated, doubling the settlement housing advancement in Area C and East Jerusalem when compared with the previous reporting period, despite a slowdown in the commencement of new construction. The Government of Israel declared that establishing settlements in the West Bank was a natural right of Israeli citizens.² Conditions contributing to a coercive environment, including a large number of demolitions, forced evictions and acts of settler violence, remained a serious concern. The High Commissioner examines the developments on settlement expansion and the creation of a coercive environment in occupied East Jerusalem.

II. Legal background

3. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are concurrently applicable in the occupied Palestinian territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In particular, Israel is bound by the obligations of an occupying Power as set out by international humanitarian law. A detailed analysis of the legal framework in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan is contained in recent reports of the Secretary-General (A/HRC/34/38 and A/HRC/34/39).

III. Activities related to settlements

4. During the period under review, a sharp increase in settlement planning was witnessed, despite a slowdown in the actual commencement of new construction. Significant political proposals, including draft laws aimed at “regularizing” settlement outposts and changing the boundaries of Jerusalem, were presented, advanced or adopted. Demolitions and evictions of Palestinians in Area C continued.

A. Settlement expansion

1. Land designation, planning, zoning and tenders

5. Settlement planning accelerated, with plans for almost 10,000 housing units advanced for construction in Area C and East Jerusalem – more than double the number during the previous reporting period. Also included in the plans were some 6,500 housing units in

¹ Available from the webpage of the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle-East Peace Process at <https://unsco.unmissions.org/security-council-briefings-0>.

² The preliminary response of the Government of Israel submitted to the High Court of Justice on 21 August 2017 to the petition against the “Regularization” Law is available from <https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/הסדרה+תוקף+response+to+regulation+law+petition.pdf> (in Hebrew).

Area C, about 300 of them reaching the final stage of approval. In East Jerusalem, some 3,100 housing units were advanced, about 800 of which reached the final stage of approval.

6. According to information obtained from the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, during the period under review, 18 tenders for a total of 3,166 housing units in West Bank settlements were announced, as against only five tenders for 673 housing units during the previous reporting period. As at December 2017, only two of the tenders for a total of 49 units had been published and opened for bidding. No tenders were issued for East Jerusalem settlements. Ir Amim, a non-governmental organization, informed OHCHR that Israeli authorities conditionally approved building permits for 176 housing units in Nof Tzion, in the heart of the East Jerusalem neighbourhood Jabal Al Mukkaber, pending documentation proving land ownership. If approved, the expansion would make Nof Tzion the largest settlement within a Palestinian neighbourhood in East Jerusalem.

7. On 28 May 2017, the Government of Israel established a new settlement, Amihai, advancing hundred housing units for 41 families evicted from the Amona outpost (A/72/564, para. 6). The Government is expected to spend 160 million shekels on the project, including 40 million in compensation to the evicted settlers.³

8. In October, media sources reported that Israel had approved building plans for 31 settlement units in the Beit Romano settlement in Hebron old city. If realized, it would be the first time Israeli settlements are built within the city area in 15 years. Also in October, the Israeli Civil Administration approved the construction of a new settlement of 86 housing units outside Kochav Yaacov settlement, for the settlers of Migron, an evacuated outpost.⁴

2. Settlement construction

9. According to data obtained from the Israeli Bureau of Statistics, the rate of construction starts in Area C settlements witnessed a decline of more than 50 per cent during the first three quarters of 2017 (1,120 units in nine months) as against 2016 (3,027 units in 12 months). In East Jerusalem, building permits were issued for the construction of 770 housing units in Gilo and for constructions in Ramat Shlomo, Pisgat Ze'ev and Ramot.⁵

B. Consolidation of settlements

1. Unilateral changes to the boundaries of the Municipality of Jerusalem

10. In addition to the consolidation and expansion of settlements in the West Bank, which undermine the future implementation of a two-State solution (A/HRC/34/38, para. 15), Israeli lawmakers continued to promote legislative steps to change the boundaries of the Municipality of Jerusalem. An amendment to the Basic Law: Jerusalem, Capital of Israel passed a first reading in the Knesset on 27 July 2017.⁶ The bill further constrains territorial concessions of any part of Jerusalem to a "foreign entity" by requiring a qualified majority of two thirds in the Knesset. At the same time, the bill encompasses further amendments to the Basic Law that would, inter alia, allow future changes to the municipal borders of Jerusalem, including the placing of Palestinian neighbourhoods under separate municipal authorities.

11. Another legislative initiative with direct implications for the boundaries of Jerusalem is the "Jerusalem and its Daughters" bill,⁷ which aims at including the settlements of Ma'aleh Adumim, Beitar Illit, Gush Etzion, Efrat and Givat Ze'ev under the ³ Yotam Berger, "Israel's PM seeks huge budget hike for relocation of West Bank settlement", Haaretz, 18 August 2017.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle-East Peace Process, Security Council briefing 20 June 2017 (2334).

⁶ On 2 January 2018, a modified version of amendment No. 2 to the Basic Law passed the second and third readings.

⁷ As at November 2017, the bill was pending a vote before the Ministerial Committee for Legislation.

jurisdiction of Jerusalem Municipality as “sub-municipalities”. The bill would also extend the status of sub-municipalities to the Palestinian neighbourhoods of Shu’fat Refugee Camp, Anata and Kufr Aqab, all part of the Jerusalem Municipality but located beyond the wall. Discussion of the bill by the Government was blocked by the Prime Minister in October 2017, citing the need to maintain “coordination” with the United States of America.⁸ If passed into law, it would not only effectively change the demographic balance in the Municipality of Jerusalem in favour of a Jewish majority, but also amount to a de facto annexation of some of the largest settlements in the West Bank.⁹

2. Hebron

12. On 31 August 2017, Israel issued military order No. 1789 establishing a “civil services administration” for settlements in the area of Hebron under Israeli control, H2. By upgrading the status of settlements, the order confers legal personality to the new administration and specific powers, such as the power to purchase and renovate property, provide municipal services, and legally represent the settlers. This amounts to a consolidation of the settler presence in Hebron, in violation of international humanitarian law.¹⁰

13. Impediments to Palestinians’ freedom of movement were further consolidated in the H2 area of Hebron with the addition of new closures and the fortification of existing checkpoints. This has led to a sharp deterioration in the living conditions and an increased coercive environment for affected Palestinians in the H2 area of Hebron (A/71/355, para. 25). According to information gathered by OHCHR, at least three families (18 people) have left since May 2017 because of the coercive factors in the area (A/71/355, paras. 60-64).

14. On 26 July 2017, settlers moved into the second and third floors of a house belonging to the Abu Rajab family, in the H2 area of Hebron. In 2012 and 2013, other settlers had taken over parts of the house, claiming that a settler-run estate company had purchased them. At the time, the High Court of Justice had ordered the prompt evacuation of the settlers, on the grounds that ownership deliberations were ongoing. On 27 August 2017, the Court decided that the presence of the settlers in the house was illegal and that they should be evicted. On 3 September 2017, however, the Supreme Court suspended the eviction order until further notice. Since the house has been occupied by settlers, the area witnessed an intensification in the presence of Israeli security forces and settlers, and of related violence (see para. 22 below).

3. Regularization of outposts

15. On 22 October 2017, the High Court of Justice confirmed a 2016 ruling that 15 settlement units in the outpost of Netiv Ha’avot in Gush Etzion, built on private Palestinian land, had to be demolished. The State of Israel intends to legalize under national law 43 units in the outpost, built without the State’s approval but on State land (see para. 22 below). A new outpost was created outside Halamish settlement a few days after a Palestinian killed three Israelis in the settlement, on 21 July 2017, but it was later dismantled.¹¹

16. No outposts were legalized during the period under review. Israel last legalized an outpost in May 2014. In February 2017, however, the Knesset adopted the so-called “regularization law”, which could allow for the retroactive legalization of outposts built on private Palestinian land. If implemented, the law would apply to more than half of existing Israeli outposts and approximately 3,000 additional housing units built illegally within existing settlements (A/72/564, paras.14-15). As at November 2017, the law had yet to be

⁸ Becca Noy, “Pressure from Washington behind Greater Jerusalem bill vote delay”, Jerusalem on Line, 29 October 2017.

⁹ See also Nir Hasson and Jonathan Lis. “Israeli minister to push plan aimed at reducing number of Arabs in Jerusalem”, Haaretz, 29 October 2017.

¹⁰ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

¹¹ Jacob Magid, “Work starts on new outpost outside Halamish after deadly terror attack”, Times of Israel, 23 July 2017.

implemented following petitions filed against it with the High Court of Justice and a temporary injunction issued by the Court on 17 August 2017.¹²

17. The Israeli Attorney General has publicly opposed the regularization law and requested the court to suspend its application pending a final decision. At the same time, however, he confirmed an alternative way to expropriate privately owned Palestinian land.¹³ In a legal opinion issued on 7 November 2016, the Attorney General approved the use of Military Order No. 29 (1967) to legalize settlement constructions built on private Palestinian land, when built in good faith, based on the assumption that it was on State land, and with adequate compensation to the lawful landowners.¹⁴ The regularization law might therefore not be necessary for Israel to achieve the retroactive legalization under national law of a large number of houses in settlements and of many outposts built on privately owned Palestinian land.¹⁵

C. Settlement infrastructure

18. On 25 October 2017, the Prime Minister of Israel vowed to promote an 800 million shekel plan for bypass roads in the West Bank. According to the non-governmental organization Peace Now, the purpose is to connect settlements in the West Bank with Israel and the main West Bank traffic arteries, while reducing the need for settlers to drive through Palestinian towns and villages. The organization warns that projects of this kind have entailed the confiscation of private Palestinian land.¹⁶

19. Construction of the East Jerusalem ring road between the Palestinian communities of Al-Za'ayyim and Anata commenced in September 2017. The road is separated by a wall, with a road for Palestinians on one side and a road for Israelis on the other. Once completed, it will play a significant role in the development of the E1 settlement infrastructure (A/70/351, para. 18). Construction of the wall continued south of Jerusalem, through the Cremisan Valley – at imminent threat of being cut off from the West Bank – and around the village Al-Walaja, further isolating this Palestinian village situated near the settlements of Gilo and Har Gilo.

D. Settler violence

20. Settler violence has increased since the previous reporting period, reaching a peak during the first half of 2017. During the period under review, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs documented 147 incidents of settler violence, as against 104 in the previous reporting period. The incidents resulted in Palestinian casualties (three killed and 75 injured, including 19 children), and 110 of the incidents led to damage to Palestinian property.

21. On 6 September, 16-year-old Usama Daghlas was, according to the victim, attacked 500 m from his house, in Burqa village, by 10 to 20 settlers who beat him unconscious.

¹² Besides delaying the application of the law, the injunction halts the enforcement of demolition orders on illegal settlement construction on private Palestinian land in the West Bank.

¹³ In his response to the High Court of Justice to the petitions against the law submitted on 22 November 2017, the Attorney General, while opposing the law, explained that other more proportionate tools could be used to achieve the same goals, referring to his legal opinion of 8 November 2017, where he asserted that, on the basis of a recent decision of the High Court of Justice, privately owned Palestinian land could be expropriated for public purposes in settlements where only the settlers can benefit from it. See <http://peacenow.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2017/11/AG-response-expropriation-law.pdf> (in Hebrew).

¹⁴ On 19 November 2017, the Government of Israel relied on the opinion in a petition pending before the High Court of Justice to justify the expropriation of 45 dunams of private Palestinian land.

¹⁵ See Haaretz, Yotam Berger, “Israel’s Attorney General paves way for legalization of at least 13 West Bank outposts”, 19 November 2017; and “Israeli attempt to ‘legalize’ settler homes built on private Palestinian land gets legal backing”, 23 November 2017.

¹⁶ Peace Now, “800 million shekel plan for bypass roads in the West Bank approved by Netanyahu”, 26 October 2017.

Over the course of approximately an hour, the settlers stripped him naked and dragged him over a hillside. A shepherd found him two hours later, unconscious and bruised. Even though a complaint was filed, the investigation was soon closed by the police given that the perpetrators remained unidentified.

E. Discriminatory law enforcement

22. Since the Abu Rajab house was occupied in the H2 area of Hebron on 25 July 2017, the area has witnessed an increase in settler presence and specific incidents of settler violence. According to monitoring by OHCHR, the week after the settlers took over the house, 12 Palestinians were injured by settlers. On 4 August 2017, OHCHR documented a group of settlers throwing stones at Palestinians along the road between Kiryat Arba settlement and the Abu Rajab house; two Palestinians sustained head injuries, and one had a broken hand. According to witnesses, Israeli Security Forces did not intervene to protect the two injured Palestinians, but arrested them, without first ensuring their access to medical assistance. The Palestinians were released an hour later, then transferred to a Palestinian ambulance. According to monitoring by OHCHR, on 9 September 2017, settlers attacked a 55-year-old Palestinian woman living in the Abu Rajab house while she was in the courtyard. Witnesses stated that settlers threw stones from the roof of the three-story building, hitting the woman twice on the head; she was subsequently hospitalized. Although the family filed a complaint with the police, as at November 2017, OHCHR was not aware of any developments in the case.

23. As the occupying Power, Israel has the obligation to uphold public order and safety in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and to protect the Palestinian population from all acts of violence.¹⁷ Israel also has the obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate, prosecute, punish and remedy any harm caused to Palestinians (A/HRC/34/38, paras.13, 36-37). It is common, however, for the Israeli Security Forces neither to prevent incidents nor to react to attacks occurring in their presence (A/72/564, paras. 20-22). Israel has also repeatedly failed in its obligation to do its utmost to investigate cases of settler violence and prosecute perpetrators. Settler violence impedes the enjoyment of numerous human rights by the Palestinian population affected (A/71/355, para. 50; A/HRC/34/38, para. 36).

F. Impact of settlements on Palestinian communities at risk of forcible transfer

24. The publicly stated intention of the Government of Israel to relocate thousands of Palestinians residing in Area C remains a key concern, as well as a source of pressure contributing to a coercive environment (A/HRC/34/39, para. 44; A/72/564, paras. 36-57). Some 7,500 persons belonging to 46 Bedouin communities, mostly refugees, are at particular risk. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the period under review, 488 Palestinian-owned structures were demolished, including 319 in Area C, in the West Bank, causing the displacement of 684 people (including 414 in Area C), including 383 children (236 children in Area C).

25. On 24 September 2017, the Israeli Civil Administration informed the community of Khan al Ahmar that it would be relocated by mid-2018. Around 140 Palestinians live in this severely underserved village in the Jerusalem periphery and are at risk of forcible transfer. In September, the Minister of Defence of Israel warned that plans to demolish Susya, a Palestinian village located in Area C and the target of multiple demolitions in the past, were proceeding.¹⁸

¹⁷ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (Hague Regulations), arts.43 and 46; Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

¹⁸ Yotam Berger, "After heavy diplomatic pressure, Israel moves to delay demolition of Palestinian village of Sussia", Haaretz, 2 November 2017.

IV. Impact of settlements: a case study of the coercive environment in East Jerusalem

26. Since the occupation of East Jerusalem by Israel in 1967, more than one third of the territory of East Jerusalem has been expropriated for the construction of Israeli settlements (A/66/364, para. 13). Jerusalem has 323,700 Palestinian residents, accounting for 37 per cent of the population of the city. According to sources, in East Jerusalem, 210,000 Israeli settlers live in large settlement blocs, while another 2,000 to 3,000 live in small enclaves in the heart of Palestinian neighbourhoods.¹⁹ Unlike settlements in the West Bank, those in East Jerusalem are located within densely populated Palestinian neighbourhoods, causing significant friction and violence.

27. The Secretary-General has previously voiced concerns about the impact of settlement policies on the living conditions of Palestinians, including the increased risk of individual and mass forcible transfer (A/HRC/34/38, para. 23; A/HRC/34/39, para. 40; A/72/564, para. 27). There is a concern that Israel, as the occupying Power, is increasing pressure on Palestinians living in areas under full Israeli control through practices and policies that contribute to a coercive environment, compelling them to move out of their areas of residence (A/HRC/34/39, paras. 40-42).

28. International humanitarian law prohibits the transfer of a population by an occupying State into an occupied territory, and individual or mass forcible transfer or deportation of the population of an occupied territory, regardless of the motive.²⁰ Such a transfer amounts to a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and is therefore a war crime.²¹ Forcible transfer does not necessarily require the use of physical force by authorities; it may be triggered by specific factors that give individuals or communities no choice but to leave, amounting to what is known as a “coercive environment”. Any transfer without the genuine and fully informed consent of those affected is considered forcible. Genuine consent to a transfer cannot, however, be presumed in an environment marked by the use or threat of physical force, coercion, fear of violence, or duress (A/HRC/34/38, para. 28; A/HRC/34/39 para. 41). Human rights, such as the rights to freedom of movement, privacy and family life,²² in addition to economic, social and cultural rights (A/HRC/16/71, para. 24), are usually violated within the context of forcible transfer.

A. Discriminatory planning and zoning

29. Municipal planning practices differ in the case of Israelis in West Jerusalem, Palestinians in East Jerusalem and Israeli settlers in East Jerusalem. As reiterated in previous reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the planning regime adopted by Israel is discriminatory and incompatible with requirements under international law (A/HRC/25/38, paras. 11-14; A/HRC/31/43 paras. 18 and 45; A/HRC/34/38, para. 25; CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 25). Its planning policies and processes in East Jerusalem and Area C contravene the principle of non-discrimination in relation to the right to an adequate standard of living, including the right to housing.²³

30. Israeli authorities have allowed for the planning and zoning of only 13 per cent of East Jerusalem for Palestinian residential construction, most of which is already built up. According to the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), for more than a decade, local and district planning authorities have not advanced a single outline plan in the Palestinian neighbourhoods despite the fact that, over the same period, the Palestinian population in East Jerusalem increased by more than 25 per cent.²⁴ In areas where ¹⁹ Daniel Seidemann, The Israeli Settlement Enterprise in East Jerusalem, 1967-2017 (Jerusalem, 2017), p. 15. ²⁰ See Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

²⁰ See Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

²¹ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 147; Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

²² International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 12 and 17.

²³ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11. See also A/72/564, para. 25.

²⁴ See http://jerusalemstitute.org.il/upload/yearbook/2007_8/shnaton%20C0106.pdf.

construction is permitted, the application process for building permits is prohibitive for many Palestinians owing to, inter alia, the high costs involved, the difficulty of providing proof of land ownership, and the criteria of requisite access roads and other infrastructure often missing in Palestinian neighbourhoods. The process can take several years, and the actual prospects of a permit being granted are low.²⁵ According to the non-governmental organization Bimkom, there are approximately 32,000 legal housing units for the 323,700 Palestinians in Jerusalem, a result of the municipality having issued only 5,000 construction permits since 1967 and built little public housing for Palestinians. Consequently, a third of Palestinian homes in East Jerusalem have been built without the required Israeli permit, a fact that makes them subject to demolition orders, putting at least 100,000 Palestinians at risk of displacement.²⁶

31. The planning, zoning and settlement policies in East Jerusalem prevent the normal development and natural growth expansion of Palestinian families, sometimes forcing people to move to other neighbourhoods or to leave Jerusalem owing to the lack of available housing. The shrinking physical space for Palestinians to live in East Jerusalem is compounded by the contraction of public and cultural public space. According to the Jerusalem Legal and Human Rights Centre, 24 Palestinian civil society organizations and cultural institutions have been closed by the Israeli authorities since 2001 on the basis of allegations of relations with political parties or the Palestinian Authority. During the period under review, at least eight cultural or political Palestinian events were prohibited in East Jerusalem.

32. While the planning and construction laws are enforced on Palestinian communities, illegal construction by settlers in the same neighbourhoods has been tolerated by the municipality. One example is Beit Yonatan, an illegally built six-story building in Silwan. Proceedings by the legal adviser of Jerusalem municipality led to an order to evacuate the building, upheld by the High Court. The mayor of Jerusalem has, however, refused to implement the ruling.²⁷

B. Home demolitions and forced evictions, or the threat thereof

33. The Secretary-General and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 previously noted that the seizure of Palestinian homes and forced evictions, and the risk thereof, often to allow settlers to move in, contributed to a coercive environment in East Jerusalem (A/HRC/16/71, paras. 20-22; A/HRC/34/39, para. 46; A/70/351, paras. 25-51). Demolitions leading to forced evictions also violate the right to an adequate standard of living, including the right to housing (A/72/564, para. 26).²⁸ Demolitions carried out by the Israeli authorities in the context of discriminatory planning or for punitive purposes are unlawful under international law, given that they lead to forced evictions. They also violate international humanitarian law, which expressly prohibits the destruction or confiscation of private property (see A/HRC/34/38, paras. 21-22).²⁹ If not justified by military necessity, and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, the extensive destruction and appropriation of property amounts to a grave breach of article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and constitutes a war crime.³⁰ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the ²⁵ Aviv Tatarsky and Architect Efrat Conhen-Bar, Deliberately Planned: A Policy to Thwart Planning in Palestinian Neighborhoods of Jerusalem, Ir Amim and Bimkom, February 2017, p. 9.

²⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "Significant increase in risk of displacement in East Jerusalem". Monthly Humanitarian Bulletin, August 2017.

²⁷ Seidemann, The Israeli Settlement Enterprise (see footnote 19), p. 103. See also Ronen Medzini, "Barkat delays Beit Yonatan eviction", ynetnews.com, 26 December 2010. ²⁸

International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11. See also Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 7 (1997) on forced evictions.

²⁸ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11. See also Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 7 (1997) on forced evictions.

²⁹ See Hague Regulations, art. 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 53 and 56.

³⁰ See also the statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (a) (iv).

period under review, 157 constructions were demolished in East Jerusalem, leading to the displacement of 241 people, including 138 children.

34. OHCHR followed the case of East Jerusalem residents Saleh Ibrahim Turk and his family, who were displaced twice owing to demolitions, and relocated to Shuafat refugee camp, an area beyond the wall, within the Jerusalem municipal border. The family's first house in 'Anata, East Jerusalem, was demolished in 2007 because it was on the route of the wall. After buying land in Isawiya, East Jerusalem, the family built a house without a permit, as they were unable to secure one. They received a demolition order in 2013; despite their efforts to postpone the demolition and the payment of heavy fines, the house was demolished on 14 February 2017, without further warning. The family of 10 currently lives on the ninth floor of an unfinished building, in Shuafat refugee camp. Owing to the insecurity of the building and the many stairs, the mother and several of her children rarely leave the house. Their livelihood has been considerably affected, given that they previously relied on farming and livestock, and their movement is restricted because of the checkpoint and the frequent closures linked to clashes.

35. OHCHR monitored the situation of another family that moved from East Jerusalem to another part of the West Bank after the demolition of their house in early 2017. Although their house was located in a zone designated for construction, the area did not have a zoning plan and the house was therefore built without a permit. After the demolition of their house, the family moved to Area C in the West Bank, also owing to the lack of other housing options. The children have to commute an additional hour, including through a checkpoint, to reach their school in Jerusalem. The family now risks the revocation of its Jerusalem residency status as it lives outside the municipal border, which would lead to their permanent displacement from Jerusalem.

36. Both cases of displacement due to house demolition are the direct consequence of the implementation by Israel of a discriminatory planning and zoning regime in East Jerusalem, notably in violation of the right to an adequate standard of living, including the right to housing. Such cases of displacement may also amount to forcible transfer.

37. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the majority of families whose homes were demolished in East Jerusalem between 2012 and 2016 stayed in the same community; 20 per cent of the families moved from the East Jerusalem side of the wall to the other side; of these, 65 per cent moved to Jerusalem municipality areas, while the rest moved to other parts of the West Bank. Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem who relocate outside the municipality of Jerusalem risk the definitive loss of their East Jerusalem residency, which is afforded on the condition that the centre of their life is effectively there (see para. 56 below).

38. An Israeli local government audit found that some 140,000 residents live in the eight Palestinian neighbourhoods that lie within the Jerusalem municipality border defined by the Israeli authorities but in areas separated from the rest of East Jerusalem by the wall.³¹ The neighbourhoods severely lack basic infrastructure, municipal services and law enforcement, and suffer from poor living conditions,³² although the communities themselves are under the authority of the municipality of Jerusalem and pay municipal taxes.

39. As at 31 October 2017, eviction cases had been filed against at least 180 families (about 800 people) in East Jerusalem, including 21 households in the Old City. Most cases were initiated by settler organizations aiming at gaining control of Palestinian properties by claiming ownership prior to 1948 or challenging the "protected tenant" status of some families.³³ As previously reported, private settler initiatives have significantly increased in East Jerusalem since 2009, particularly in the neighbourhoods surrounding the Old City, where 2,500 settlers are located. Such initiatives are supported by funding of the Government of Israel (A/HRC/34/39, para. 30). The Absentee Property Law has been often evoked to transfer properties to settler organizations in East Jerusalem, mainly to Elad and Ateret Cohanim (A/70/351, paras. 29-36).

³¹ See Association for Civil Rights in Israel, East Jerusalem: Facts and Figures 2017, 21 May 2017. The areas comprise Qalandia, Kufr Aqab, Shuafat refugee camp and surrounding area (including Ras Khamis and Ras Sheheda) and parts of Im Shirayat, Abu Emgheyreh, Al Shayyah, Ber Owna and As Sawariya.

³² UNDP, Jerusalem Communities behind the Wall: "Area X", Resilience Series, March 2017, p. 7.

³³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "East Jerusalem: Palestinians at risk of eviction", 3 November 2016. The status of "protected tenants" was granted to Palestinians who were renting properties in East Jerusalem as administered by Jordan after 1948.

40. Lawsuits based on a claim of previous Jewish ownership have been a frequent strategy for settler organizations to acquire properties in East Jerusalem. Since 2014, there has been an increase in settler takeovers in the neighbourhoods surrounding the Old City, primarily through purchase and claims of prior ownership before 1948.³⁴ The combination of three laws enacted by Israel since 1948 allows Jews to claim ownership rights to properties on the basis of alleged pre-1948 Jewish ownership; Palestinians who owned land or property in areas before 1948 that are now part of the State of Israel are not, however, granted any reciprocal right (A/71/355, para. 7).³⁵

41. Tourism heritage development in East Jerusalem has also profoundly changed the shape and character of Palestinian neighbourhoods, creating footholds for further residential settler expansion (A/HRC/34/39, para. 21; A/70/351, para. 33); according to a report issued by the State Comptroller (annual report 67A) in 2016, archaeological tourism sites in East Jerusalem are managed by private settler groups, with little transparency or government oversight.

42. Settlers have apparently managed to purchase properties from Palestinians, often through Palestinian middlemen, in neighbourhoods where the coercive environment is strongest, such as the Old City and Silwan.³⁴ Information about such sales is very limited, given that they are illegal under Palestinian law and are strongly condemned by Palestinian society.

43. Since the early 1970s, the Palestinian refugee community in Sheikh Jarrah has been the target of forced evictions raised in Israeli courts by settler organizations that claim pre-1948 ownership. In November 2017, 66 families were facing eviction proceedings.³⁶ On 5 September, the Shamasneh family (eight members, including a child) was forcibly evicted from its home in Sheikh Jarrah, which was handed over to Israeli settlers; the first eviction in the neighbourhood in eight years. Although the family had lived in the house since 1964, it had become the subject of eviction proceedings after the house was transferred to settlers claiming to represent the original owners.

44. Forced evictions resulting from demolitions are a violation of human rights, including the rights to adequate housing, water, sanitation, health and education (A/72/564, para. 49). The most direct impact of house demolitions is homelessness, in violation of the right to adequate housing as protected by article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Demolitions generally have a disproportionate impact on women, who are often the primary caregivers for extended families and manage household livelihoods.³⁷

C. Right to life, liberty and security of person

45. To ensure the security of settlers, armed private security guards, Israeli police, border police and temporary checkpoints are deployed. The friction caused by the heavy presence of settlers, Israeli security guards and police in densely populated Palestinian ³⁴ Seidemann, The Israeli Settlement Enterprise (see footnote 19), p. 71. ³⁵ Eyal Raz and Aviv Tatarsky, Broken Trust: State Involvement in Private Settlement in Batan al-Hawa, Silwan, Ir Amim and Peace Now, May 2016, p. 8.

³⁵ Eyal Raz and Aviv Tatarsky, Broken Trust: State Involvement in Private Settlement in Batan al-Hawa, Silwan, Ir Amim and Peace Now, May 2016, p. 8.

³⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "East Jerusalem: Palestinians at risk of eviction", available from www.ochaopt.org/sites/default/files/evictions_community_sum_ej_2016_final_1_11_2016.pdf.

³⁷ United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), International Legal Accountability Mechanisms: Palestinian Women Living under Occupation, December 2016.

neighbourhoods frequently leads to clashes, which in turn serve as a justification for police raids and arrests.

46. During the unrest in Jerusalem in July 2017, following the killing of two Israeli policemen near the Al-Aqsa mosque compound and the subsequent measures taken by Israeli police at the entrances to the holy site, OHCHR and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs documented a spike in excessive use of force, during which 13 Palestinians were injured by live ammunition and two were killed in clashes in East Jerusalem.

47. The heavy security measures taken by Israeli authorities in these crowded neighbourhoods often have an impact on bystanders; children are especially vulnerable. For instance, according to monitoring by OHCHR, on 9 July 2017, 13-year-old Nour Ayman Hamdan was standing on the balcony of his house in Isawiya as Israeli Security Forces entered his neighbourhood, called to intervene in a dispute between Palestinians. He was struck with a sponge-tipped bullet in his left eye, causing permanent loss of sight.

48. In East Jerusalem settlements, the Ministry of Defence of Israel contracts private security companies to protect settlers. According to the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, the security guards are de facto private police forces at the exclusive service of Jewish residents, unlike the regular police which, in principle, must serve all inhabitants without discrimination and is subject to public accountability.³⁸

49. OHCHR monitored two cases that demonstrated how the settler takeover of houses in the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Batan al Hawa in Silwan has increased tensions and violence. On 17 December 2016, Mousa Ali Qarra'een was attempting to de-escalate an argument between Palestinian youths and Israeli security guards outside a settler's house in Batan al Hawa when a private guard drew his weapon and opened fire, shooting Qarra'een in the leg. When he arrived at the hospital, Israeli Security Forces delayed his treatment for 40 minutes to interrogate him. While Qarra'een was charged with assault, OHCHR is not aware of any investigation or charges raised against the guard.

50. On 9 September, 61-year-old Fayez al Rajabi, who lives 15 m from houses occupied by settlers in Batn al Hava, was looking for his son and granddaughter when he heard that tear gas grenades were being shot during scuffles. When he reached the street, Israeli Security Forces threw three sound grenades at him from a distance of 10 m, the explosions hitting his legs and face. His hearing was affected and he was hospitalized for 10 days with internal brain bleeding.

51. Residents of Batan al Hawa in Silwan reported to OHCHR that the neighbourhood was quieter before the first of the two houses was taken over by settlers in 2014. Since then, there has been a heavy presence of Israeli Security Forces and frequent clashes, at times on a daily basis. Al Rajabi and his wife Ayda are worried about the impact on their family, especially their three sons, aged between 15 and 22 years. One of their sons has been imprisoned for stone-throwing and another arrested for allegedly insulting police officers. Batan al Hawa is considered one of the most vulnerable neighbourhoods in East Jerusalem, with 62 households at risk of eviction and 309 persons risking displacement because of ownership claims.

52. Human rights organizations have continued to raise concern at the arrest of Palestinian children in East Jerusalem (A/70/351, para. 48).³⁹ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 1,092 Palestinians, including 409 children, were arrested in East Jerusalem during the period under review. Palestinian children are mainly arrested in areas with a high settler presence, especially in the Old City, Silwan and Ras al Amud.

³⁸ See www.acri.org.il/en/wp-content/uploads/2011/10/E-Jlem-Petition-Security-guards-ENG.pdf.

³⁹ B'Tselem and HaMoked, Unprotected: Detention of Palestinian Teenagers in East Jerusalem, October 2017.

D. Collective punishment

53. Collective punishment is expressly prohibited by international humanitarian law and has a negative impact on several human rights (A/HRC/34/38, para. 33).⁴⁰ It is also a coercive factor (A/HRC/34/39, para. 57). In East Jerusalem, OHCHR has monitored and documented practices that raise concern with regard to collective punishment, including the punitive sealing of houses and demolitions, the revocation of residency status and the withholding of bodies; for instance, as documented by OHCHR, the family home of Fadi al Qunbar, who killed four Israeli soldiers when he rammed a truck into them on 8 January 2017, was punitively sealed on 22 March 2017, leading to the forcible eviction of his wife and four children in the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Jabal Al Mukkaber (A/72/565, para. 19). After the attack, approximately 240 households in that neighbourhood received a notice of planning or zoning violations, exposing them to the risk of demolition and forced eviction (para. 23). The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the period under review, counted 13 cases of punitive demolition and the sealing of houses in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including four in East Jerusalem, affecting 39 Palestinians, including 18 children.

54. In January 2017, Israel resumed its practice of punitive revocation of East Jerusalem residency status as a form of collective punishment (A/72/565, paras. 21-25). Even when not carried out as a punitive measure, this would be a violation of the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose residence (A/HRC/34/38, paras. 62-66).⁴¹ Following the above-mentioned attack on 8 January 2017, 11 members of the Qunbar family had their residency status in East Jerusalem revoked, on 25 January 2017 (A/72/565, paras. 21-22).

E. Residency regime

55. The strict residency regime for East Jerusalem residents and restrictions on family unification between residents of East Jerusalem and of other parts of the West Bank is another factor contributing to the coercive environment (A/HRC/34/39, para. 56). In Jerusalem, while Palestinians may apply for Israeli citizenship, the overwhelming majority reject that option and therefore only have “permanent residency”, which can be revoked – unlike Palestinians in Israel who have Israeli citizenship. Since 1967, Israel has revoked the residency status of 14,595 Palestinian residents of Jerusalem.⁴² Since 1995, Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem are required by Israel to continuously prove that Jerusalem is their “centre of life” to keep their residency status (A/HRC/31/44, para. 29). Residency is not automatically passed on to children, but has to be proven by their parents. If residents lose their residency permits, they become effectively stateless and have no legal status to reside in Jerusalem, thereby risking displacement to the West Bank. OHCHR monitored the case of Shifa Shalludi who, after living 19 years in Jerusalem, lost her permit to live in the city following her divorce. She had no choice but to move with her children to Kafr Aqab, an area on the other side of the wall, but within the Jerusalem municipal boundary, so that her children could retain their eligibility for Jerusalem residency. She lost her job and network in Jerusalem, and now struggles to secure an income and care for the children in a severely underserved area. Besides being discriminatory, the residency permit regime in Jerusalem violates the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose residence.⁴³ It also has a profound impact on the exercise of economic, social and cultural rights, such as the rights to work, to health and to education (A/HRC/31/44, para. 6).

⁴⁰ Hague Regulations, art. 50; Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 33.

⁴¹ See International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 12. In September 2017, the Israeli High Court of Justice ruled against the revocation of the East Jerusalem residency status of four members of the Palestinian Legislative Council on the grounds of “breach of loyalty”; see Adalah, “After 10 years of litigation, Israeli Supreme Court rules interior minister cannot revoke Palestinian parliamentarians’ Jerusalem residency for ‘breach of loyalty’”, 13 September 2017.

⁴² Human Rights Watch, “Israel: Jerusalem Palestinians stripped of status”, 8 August 2017.

⁴³ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 12.

F. Access to services

56. East Jerusalem faces a lack of essential services, such as health care, welfare services, educational facilities and basic infrastructure. According to the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, only 59 per cent of residents are connected legally and properly to the water grid.⁴⁴ The public education system is underfunded and neglected, with a shortage of around 2,000 classrooms. The Municipality estimates the cumulative dropout rate at 32 per cent.⁴⁵

57. The lack of access to services, often compounded by restrictions on the freedom of movement, contribute directly to the coercive environment in areas under full Israeli control (A/HRC/34/39, paras. 55-57).⁴⁶ According to Ir Amim, approximately 8 to 10 per cent of the budget of the Jerusalem Municipality is allocated to Palestinians in East Jerusalem, even though they account for 37 per cent of the city's population. In recent years, while municipal officials have claimed in media reports that there was an increase in budget allocation to Palestinians neighbourhoods, no comprehensive data have been released to substantiate these claims.⁴⁷ The discriminatory service provision and resource allocation that favours West Jerusalem and settlers in East Jerusalem severely affects the quality of life of the Palestinians residing in East Jerusalem (A/HRC/31/43, para. 18). According to a poverty report prepared in 2016 by the National Insurance Institute, 73 per cent of the residents of East Jerusalem lived below the poverty level. The average poverty rate in Israel is 22 per cent.⁴⁸

58. The wall severely impedes freedom of movement and access to municipal services in neighbourhoods that are part of Jerusalem municipality but on the other side of the wall. Many students who attend learning facilities on the other side of the wall endure delays and difficulties in reaching these facilities.⁴⁹ Similarly, access to health care is impeded by the crossing of checkpoints, causing delays that can prove fatal in cases of emergency. According to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Israeli ambulances are unwilling to enter the areas of East Jerusalem lying beyond the wall, and Palestinian ambulances are not allowed to cross the wall.⁵⁰

59. With regard to services, the situation is even worse in the areas of East Jerusalem situated beyond the wall, where there is a lack of schools, medical facilities and waste collection, and road infrastructure is of poor quality. A decision by the Government of Israel of 28 May 2017, allocating nearly 180,000 NIS ($50,000) for improving waste collection and sewage infrastructures in Palestinian neighbourhoods in East Jerusalem, explicitly excluded the areas beyond the wall, citing "ongoing interministerial" discussions on addressing the challenges in those areas.⁵¹

60. Since the construction of the wall, Israeli law enforcement has almost completely withdrawn from the areas, while the Palestinian police does not have jurisdiction there, creating a severe gap in law enforcement that encourages high rates of crime and violence.⁵² Construction in these areas is rampant, with a lack of enforcement of building safety regulations. The consequence is that many buildings could be unsafe, especially in ⁴⁴ See www.acri.org.il/en/wp-content/uploads/2017/05/Facts-and-Figures-2017.pdf.

⁴⁵ Ibid. See <http://m.knesset.gov.il/Activity/committees/Education/Pages/CommitteeProtocols.aspx> (in Hebrew).

⁴⁶ Middle East Quartet Report, July 2016 (see <http://fmep.org/wp/wp-content/uploads/2016/07/Quartet-Report-2016.pdf>), p. 6.

⁴⁷ According to one source, the development budget of Palestinian neighbourhoods grew almost tenfold between 2004 and 2015; see Elhanan Miller, "City Hall almost done mapping East Jerusalem", Times of Israel, 20 February 2015.

⁴⁸ See www.btl.gov.il/Publications/oni_report/Documents/oni2016.pdf (in Hebrew). See also Association for Civil Rights in Israel, East Jerusalem (see footnote 31).

⁴⁹ UNDP, Jerusalem Communities behind the Wall (see footnote 32), p. 16.

⁵⁰ Ibid.

⁵¹ See www.pmo.gov.il/MediaCenter/SecretaryAnnouncements/Pages/govmes280517.aspx (in Hebrew).

⁵² UNDP, Jerusalem Communities behind the Wall (see footnote 32), p. 8.

the event of natural disaster.⁵³ In May 2017, the first of six planned police stations in Palestinian neighbourhoods of East Jerusalem was opened in the Shuafat refugee camp, as part of a $287 million government initiative to improve law enforcement and security in East Jerusalem.⁵⁴

61. In addition to its obligations under international human rights law, including concerning the rights to an adequate standard of living and to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health,⁵⁵ Israel has the responsibility, as an occupying Power, to ensure proper access to health-care facilities and services to the Palestinian population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, without discrimination.⁵⁶

62. The persistence of settlement expansion, settler violence, demolition of homes and livelihood structures and the restrictions on freedom of movement have high costs for Palestinian women, including in East Jerusalem (E/CN.6/2016/6). Furthermore, the impact of the restrictive residency regime and denial of family unification requests, such as separation from family members, has a disproportionate impact on women.⁵⁷

G. Forced to leave

63. All the above-mentioned factors in East Jerusalem create a coercive environment that places Palestinians under pressure to leave. Like in other areas of the West Bank, namely Area C or the H2 area of Hebron, Palestinians may have no other choice than to leave the very area where they have been living for decades or generations. As described above, a number of Palestinians have felt pressured to move, mainly by forced evictions or the revocation of residency status. Continuing discriminatory practices by the Israeli authorities put hundreds of Palestinians at risk of forcible transfer in East Jerusalem.

64. Such displacement is also evidenced by the growing population of East Jerusalem neighbourhoods situated behind the wall. Residents of East Jerusalem displaced by a demolition or other factors contributing to the coercive environment, often relocate to these areas. According to UNDP, migration trends show that poorer Palestinians move out of central Jerusalem to areas where rent is lower and there are fewer restrictions on housing expansion.⁵⁸ It is also the only place where Palestinians with residency status in Jerusalem can live with spouses from the West Bank without losing their status. This is an extremely worrisome trend, particular given the lack of services and law enforcement, and the numerous hazardous and unsupervised constructions rising in these neighbourhoods.

V. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

65. Illegal settlement expansion and land appropriation by the Government of Israel in the occupied Syrian Golan continued during the period under review, in violation of the State's obligations under international law.⁵⁹ According to the civil society organization Al-Marsad, the 34 Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan have a population of about 26,000.⁶⁰ The estimated 25,000 Syrian residents of the Golan are restricted to living in five overcrowded villages.⁶¹ Owing to discriminatory land, housing, and building and permit

⁵³ Ir Amim, Displaced in their own city: the impact of Israeli policy in East Jerusalem on the Palestinian neighborhoods of the city beyond the separation barrier, June 2015, p. 45. In stark contrast to other East Jerusalem neighbourhoods, according to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, few house demolitions are carried out in the areas Jerusalem beyond the wall, accounting for only 9 per cent of all buildings demolished by Jerusalem Municipality.

⁵⁴ Daniel K. Eisenbud, "First police station opens in East Jerusalem's Shuafat refugee camp", Jerusalem Post, 7 May 2017.

⁵⁵ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, arts. 11 and 12.

⁵⁶ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 56.

⁵⁷ UN-Women, International Legal Accountability Mechanisms (see footnote 37), p. 14.

⁵⁸ UNDP, Jerusalem Communities behind the Wall (see footnote 32), p. 6.

⁵⁹ General Assembly resolution 72/86, para. 1.

⁶⁰ See <http://golan-marsad.org/january-2018-universal-periodic-review-of-israel/>.

⁶¹ See <http://golan-marsad.org/wp-content/uploads/Al-Marsad-UPR-submission-for-Israel.pdf>, para. 2.

requirements, the Syrian villages are increasingly overcrowded, infrastructure is strained, and no expansion to accommodate the needs of the population is possible. Since the first demolition was reported in the occupied Syrian Golan in September 2016, there are concerns that the demolition of homes may become common (A/HRC/34/39, para. 59).⁶²

66. In August 2017, the non-governmental organizations Adalah and Al-Marsad stressed the continued presence of mines around the village Majdal Shams that poses a serious danger to an estimated 11,000 people. They called upon the Israeli authorities to remove the mines and the related military outposts reportedly directly adjacent to residential homes, and situated on land belonging to the residents of Majdal Shams. Both organizations noted that the mines often drift beyond the marked minefields, and that some had exploded in the heat of the summer. They estimated that, since 1967, 69 civilian residents of the Golan Heights had been wounded by land mines and that 18 had consequently died, including nine children.⁶³

67. The High Commissioner reaffirms the continuing validity of Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council stated that the decision by the Government of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect.

VI. Conclusions

68. During the period under review, a significant increase in settlement activity, including in East Jerusalem and Hebron, was witnessed. In Hebron, several factors led to a deterioration in the living conditions and to an increased coercive environment.

69. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by Israel, including the legal and administrative measures that it has taken to provide socioeconomic incentives, security, infrastructure and social services to citizens of Israel residing in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, amount to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law.⁶⁴ The transfer of the population by an occupying State into an occupied territory is a grave breach of article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and therefore a war crime.⁶⁵ Several international bodies have confirmed the illegality of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan, including the International Court of Justice, the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.⁶⁶

70. Palestinians in Area C, the H2 area of Hebron, and East Jerusalem are subject to discriminatory practices, as well as reduced living space, increased tensions, violence and arrests due to the existence and growth of settlements.

71. Palestinians in East Jerusalem face a restrictive planning, permit and construction regime, a lack of public services and shrinking public space. The lack of housing permits leads to the constant threat of demolition and displacement. These factors violate several rights and contribute to a coercive environment in East Jerusalem. Palestinians living in such a coercive environment may have no other choice but to leave, as previously documented in Area C and the H2 area of Hebron

⁶² See <http://golan-marsad.org/press-release-israeli-authorities-demolish-home-in-majdal-shams-in-the-occupied-syrian-golan/>.

⁶³ Adalah, "Adalah, Al-Marsad demand Israel remove army outposts and minefields from occupied Syrian town on Golan Heights", 2 August 2017.

⁶⁴ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

⁶⁵ See also the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

⁶⁶ International Court of Justice, Legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, para. 120; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

(A/HRC/31/43, para. 60; A/71/355, paras. 61-64), in contravention of the international prohibition of forcible transfer.

VII. Recommendations

72. On the basis of his findings, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Halt immediately and reverse all settlement development and related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including occupied East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan, including through the discontinuation of support for private settler organizations' initiatives aimed at the seizure of Palestinian properties and the forced eviction of their residents, in compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

(b) End immediately all activity contributing to the creation of a coercive environment and/or increasing the risk of forcible transfer;

(c) Review planning laws and policies to ensure that they are compliant with the obligations of Israel under international human rights and international humanitarian law;

(d) Refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders on the basis of discriminatory and illegal planning policies and practices that may lead to forcible transfer, including of Bedouin and herder communities;

(e) Take all steps necessary to ensure that Palestinians in East Jerusalem and Area C of the occupied West Bank are not denied access to, or discriminated against in the provision of, essential services, including electricity, water and sanitation, and natural resources, including land for agricultural purposes;

(f) Remove immediately all mines and minefields in the occupied Syrian Golan, which pose a risk to the local civilian population.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
30 January 2019

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fortieth session

25 February–22 March 2019

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan*

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

Summary

In the present report, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights describes the expansion of the settlement enterprise of Israel and its negative impact on the human rights of Palestinians. The focus of the report is on the effects of settler violence on Palestinians' access to land and freedom of movement. It also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan. The report covers the period from 1 November 2017 to 31 October 2018.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report, submitted to the Human Rights Council pursuant to its resolution 37/36, provides an update on the implementation of that resolution from 1 November 2017 to 31 October 2018. It is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and on information provided by other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society in the occupied Syrian Golan. It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the General Assembly and to the Human Rights Council.¹ The quarterly updates and reports of the Secretary-General presented to the Security Council on the implementation of Council resolution 2334 (2016) also provide relevant information.²

2. During the period under review, the Israeli settlement enterprise continued unabated in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Settlement housing advancement in Area C and East Jerusalem declined compared with the high numbers of the previous reporting period (1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017). Since the beginning of 2018, settler violence has been at a concerning high.

II. Legal framework

3. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are concurrently applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In particular, Israel is bound by the obligations of an occupying Power as set out by international humanitarian law. A detailed analysis of the legal framework in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan is contained in reports of the Secretary-General.³

III. Activities related to settlements

4. During the period under review, planning for settlements continued, while the actual commencement of construction decreased. Conditions and acts contributing to a coercive environment, including demolitions and forced evictions, remained a serious concern and acts of settler violence reached the highest level since 2015. In the present report, the High Commissioner examines general developments related to settlements, including outposts,⁴ with a specific focus on settler violence and its effect on the human rights of Palestinians living in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

A. Settlement expansion

Land designation, planning and tenders

5. Advancement of plans for settlement construction continued at a high rate, with plans for 6,300 housing units advanced for construction in Area C and East Jerusalem, following some 10,000 housing units in the previous reporting period. Included in the plans for this reporting period were some 5,300 housing units in Area C, about 2,300 of them

¹ A/73/410, A/73/420, A/HRC/37/38, A/HRC/37/42 and A/HRC/37/43.

² Available from the web page of the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process at <https://unsco.unmissions.org/security-council-briefings-0>.

³ A/HRC/34/38 and A/HRC/34/39.

⁴ Outposts are unauthorized settlements illegal even under Israeli law. Both outposts and settlements are illegal under international law.

reaching final stages of approval. In East Jerusalem, some 1,000 housing units were advanced, about 200 of which reached the final stage of approval.

6. Tenders were issued by the State for 3,500 units in Area C settlements, compared with 3,200 during the previous period. In East Jerusalem, one tender was announced for 600 units in Ramat Shlomo – the first tender announced in East Jerusalem settlements in over two years.⁵

7. Official data on settlement construction starts in Area C indicate a decline compared with the previous reporting period.⁶

8. During the reporting period, one outpost was legalized (see para. 15) and there were no declarations of State land. Settlers established seven new outposts, three in the southern West Bank and four in the central West Bank,⁷ compared with five established in the previous reporting period.⁸ In January 2018, the Israeli Minister of Defence called for the legalization of the outpost of Havat Gilad/Gilad Farm in response to the killing of an Israeli inhabitant of the outpost by a Palestinian.⁹ The legalization process has not moved forward. According to a media investigation published during the reporting period, the World Zionist Organization,¹⁰ a non-State entity which receives funding from the Israeli State, provided dozens of loans over two decades to fund the establishment of 26 unauthorized outposts and other illegal structures in authorized settlements across the West Bank.¹¹

Consolidation of settlements

9. On 14 October 2018, the Government of Israel allocated NIS 21.6 million for the construction of 31 settlement housing units in the Israeli-controlled area of Hebron, Hebron H2.¹² The new construction will replace an Israeli military base called Plugat Hamitkanim located on a Palestinian bus station off Shohada Street. This will be the first time Israeli settlements are built in H2 in 16 years.¹³ On 31 October 2018, the Minister of Defence ordered other plans for a new settlement compound in H2 as an expansion of the Avraham Avinu settlement to move ahead.¹⁴

10. On 16 October 2018, the Israeli authorities inaugurated the Tel Rumeida archaeological site in H2. According to Peace Now, the archaeological excavations undertaken by the Israeli Antiquities Authority and the University of Ariel settlement at the site are used to promote an exclusively Jewish narrative of the city's history.¹⁵ As in East Jerusalem, tourism development in H2 is one of the tools used to change the character of Palestinian neighbourhoods and ensure continued settlement expansion.¹⁶

11. On 9 October 2018, the Israeli High Court of Justice rejected two petitions submitted by an Israeli NGO against the establishment of the Amihai settlement (the settlement established for inhabitants of the Amona outpost evacuated in 2017) partly on private Palestinian land. While the Court did not rule on whether the establishment of the settlement had been illegal in the first place, it did consider the petitioners' claim that the ⁵ Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process.

⁶ Data are available only for the period 1 November 2017–1 October 2018 (1,659 units) and 1 November 2016–1 October 2017 (2,269 units).

⁷ Givat Eitam, Mishol Hamaayan Farm, Negohot Farm, Ras Karkar Farm, Kochav Hashahar East, Pnei Hever, South and Gadi Base.

⁸ Peace Now, data on file.

⁹ Yotam Berger, "Israel's Defence Minister aims to legalize outpost near where settler killed last week", Haaretz, 15 January 2018.

¹⁰ See www.wzo.org.il/world-zionist-organization.

¹¹ Yotam Berger, "Revealed: Israeli taxpayers helped bankroll illegal West Bank outposts for decades", Haaretz, 25 October 2018.

¹² A/71/355, paras. 25–64.

¹³ A/HRC/37/43, para. 8.

¹⁴ Yotam Berger, "New residential building for Jewish settlement in Hebron gets go-ahead", Haaretz, 1 November 2018.

¹⁵ Peace Now, "A new touristic settlement opens in Tel Remeida in Hebron", 16 October 2018.

¹⁶ A/73/410, para. 8.

State had not provided adequate notice of the Blue Line task force finding that their land fell within the boundaries of declared “State land”, which would have allowed for a genuine opportunity to object.¹⁷ It is of concern that the Court considered that the methods of publication provided, without a notice delivered to the owners, were sufficient. In addition to the implied violations as regards private property,¹⁸ the Court’s decision is a further measure to allow the establishment of illegal settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

B. Legislative developments

12. During the reporting period, a number of additional legislative steps pertaining to settlements were advanced, further contributing to the de facto annexation of the West Bank. The amendment to the Basic Law: Jerusalem, Capital of Israel, adopted on 2 January 2018, eases the process for the modification of Jerusalem’s municipal boundaries, facilitating the possible inclusion of some of the largest settlements within the municipality of Jerusalem.¹⁹ The extension of the jurisdiction of some Israeli authorities to the West Bank, such as the Council of Higher Education in February 2018, as well as of the Jerusalem Administrative Court in July 2018,²⁰ represent additional steps blurring the distinction between Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In addition, the Attorney General issued a directive requesting that all legislative bills systematically address the question of their applicability to settlements.²¹

13. In qualifying “the complete and undivided city of Jerusalem” as the capital of Israel, the Nation State Law adopted on 19 July 2018 reaffirms the illegal annexation of East Jerusalem, in violation of various Security Council resolutions.²² In stating that “the State of Israel considers the development of Jewish settlement to be a national value and will act to further encourage and promote its establishment and consolidation”, the law appears to justify the expansion of Israeli settlements in East Jerusalem, considered by Israel as part of its territory.²³ It remains to be seen whether this provision will be used to further justify illegal settlement expansion in the rest of the West Bank.²⁴

Regularization of outposts

14. Israel has been promoting the retroactive authorization of outposts built without official approval since 2011. So far, 13 outposts have been retroactively approved and 20 are in different stages of the approval process (out of 116 outposts).²⁵ During the reporting period, steps were taken within the Government to implement the recommendations of the committee that was set up to resolve issues of landownership related to Israeli settlements in the West Bank. Created in 2017, the committee submitted its report, which includes recommendations to legalize thousands of unauthorized Israeli structures in the West Bank, including those built on private Palestinian land, in February 2018.²⁶

¹⁷ Case Nos. H CJ 5470/17 and 8055/17, Basma Haj Mohammad et al. v. Minister of Defence et al., Judgment of 9 October 2018.

¹⁸ Hague Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 46 and 56; Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 53; and International Committee of the Red Cross, Customary International Humanitarian Law, rule 51.

¹⁹ A/HRC/37/43, paras. 10–11.

²⁰ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_20_september_2018_2334.pdf.

²¹ A/73/410, paras. 9–11.

²² See, e.g., Security Council resolutions 252 (1968), 476 (1980) and 478 (1980).

²³ A/HRC/34/38, para. 10.

²⁴ There is no indication of the geographical scope of the quoted provision in the law.

²⁵ Yesh Din and The Rights Forum, Under the Radar: Israel’s Silent Policy of Transforming Unauthorized Outposts into Official Settlements (2015).

²⁶ A/73/410, para. 13.

15. On 28 August 2018, the Jerusalem District Court applied Military Order No. 59 (1967)²⁷ to legalize the outpost of Mitzpeh Kramim, which was built on private Palestinian land, based on the alleged good faith assumption that it was located on State land.²⁸ This decision is the first use of the military order and seems to confirm the existence of alternatives to the controversial “Regularization Law”, which aims to retroactively legalize outposts built on private Palestinian land and housing units built illegally in existing settlements.²⁹ There are hence strong concerns that this ruling would serve as a precedent to regularize more than a thousand illegal housing units within outposts and settlements.

16. During the reporting period, the Government of Israel promoted a bill that would give the World Zionist Organization the authority to manage land in the West Bank.³⁰ If adopted, the bill would validate a long-standing practice of management by the Settlement Division of the World Zionist Organization of most of the State land in the West Bank, which has proven problematic for its lack of both transparency and governmental supervision. The Settlement Division is reported to have previously allocated private Palestinian land as State land for settler use, including in Mitzpeh Kramim.³¹

C. Impact of settlements on Palestinian communities at risk of forcible transfer

17. The publicly stated intention of the Government of Israel to relocate thousands of Palestinians residing in Area C remains a key concern, and contributes to a coercive environment.³² According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the reporting period, 402 Palestinian-owned structures were demolished in the West Bank, displacing 453 people including 216 children and 111 women. Approximately 60 per cent of the structures demolished were in Area C and 40 per cent in East Jerusalem. Four schools in Area C were demolished or confiscated. In Area C and East Jerusalem, 48 schools were under threat of demolition as of 31 October 2018.

18. Some 7,500 Palestinian Bedouins and herders, mostly refugees, belonging to 46 communities are at particular risk of forced eviction. This includes the Bedouin community of Khan al-Ahmar-Abu al-Helu, composed of some 180 individuals, half of whom are children.³³ On 24 May 2018, the Israeli High Court of Justice issued a ruling which allowed for the demolition of the community’s structures, putting the residents at risk of forcible transfer and setting a dangerous precedent for many other communities under similar threat. On 5 September 2018, the Court issued a final ruling, in which it upheld its previous decision and rejected all petitions made by the community. On 23 September 2018, the Israeli Civil Administration requested the residents to carry out self-demolitions of their homes by 1 October 2018, which they refused to do. On 20 October 2018, the Office of the Prime Minister announced the suspension of the demolitions until further notice, allegedly in order to exhaust negotiations and proposals received from various sources. As at the end of the reporting period, the demolitions had not taken place. The constant threats of demolition issued by Israeli authorities exacerbated the pressure on the community to move, adding to the coercive environment.

19. In November 2017, the Israel Defense Forces ordered the “removal of all properties” from specific zones in Area C inhabited by Palestinian herding communities, including Ein al-Hilwe and Um al-Jamal in the northern Jordan Valley and Jabal al-Baba in the Jerusalem Governorate. The latter falls within the area slated for the E1 settlement plan, designed to

²⁷ A/HRC/37/43, para. 17.

²⁸ An appeal against the decision is pending before the Israeli Supreme Court.

²⁹ Adopted in February 2017, the law remains unimplemented to date, following petitions to the High Court of Justice; see A/73/410, para. 12.

³⁰ The amendment (Administration and Allocation of Land in the Judea and Samaria Area by the Settlement Division) was brought before the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee of the Knesset for preparation for first reading on 29 October 2018.

³¹ Peace Now, “Preliminary approval for settlement division bill”, 16 June 2018.

³² A/HRC/34/39, para. 44; and A/72/564, paras. 36–57.

³³ A/HRC/37/43, para. 25; and A/73/410, para. 22.

link Ma'ale Adumim with Jerusalem. A total of 520 structures, a quarter of which are donor funded, are at risk of demolition or confiscation and 419 people, about half of them children, are at heightened risk of forcible transfer.³⁴

20. During the reporting period, the Bedouin community of Abu Nuwar located in the E1 settlement plan area was subject to several demolitions. In December 2017, Israeli authorities demolished two European Union-funded classrooms in Abu Nuwar, which served 26 students. The European Union had partly replaced the seven structures of the community primary school that were demolished in 2016.³⁵ On 4 July 2018, the authorities demolished another 19 structures, displacing 51 people, including 33 children.³⁶ Such confiscations and demolitions result in violations of the right to an adequate standard of living, the right to adequate housing and the right to education. Furthermore, demolitions carried out by the Israeli authorities in the context of discriminatory planning structures are unlawful under international law and constitute forced evictions.³⁷ The compounded effects of these ongoing violations, along with the constant threat of additional demolitions,³⁸ contribute to a coercive environment that puts the community at risk of forcible transfer.³⁹

21. Thirty-four Palestinian residents of four buildings were evicted by settlers in East Jerusalem, compared with 24 Palestinians evicted from three buildings in East Jerusalem in the previous reporting period.⁴⁰ In April 2018, the Israeli police evicted residents of three apartments in two buildings in Silwan in East Jerusalem, affecting 15 members of an extended family. One of the owners of the buildings had been killed in an unsolved murder three years previously, leaving accumulated debts. According to his lawyer and members of his family, the general custodian (responsible for, inter alia, managing property that belongs to persons who went into bankruptcy) transferred the deceased owner's property to the settler organization Elad, which obtained a court ruling to evict the residents of the three apartments despite the deceased being one of several heirs to the buildings among his siblings and cousins. A court case was ongoing at the time of the eviction, in which the family was protesting the legality of the transfer of ownership. The court cancelled the eviction, but it was nevertheless carried out by the police. The family is not allowed to return to its apartments while the case is pending.

22. While settlers vacated the occupied Abu Rajab house in H2 in March 2018, in the same month settlers took over the al-Zaateri house, also in H2, which is also the subject of a pending legal case regarding its ownership.⁴¹ On 29 October 2018, settlers escorted by the Israeli security forces occupied two other houses in the H2 area of Hebron. The houses, which belong to two Palestinian families from Hebron, were closed by military orders in 2000, after which the security forces installed a military base on the rooftops.

23. Settlement expansion, restrictions on freedom of movement and the continued threat of demolitions add to the coercive environment of Al-Walaja, a community of 2,671 individuals. In 2018, new plans were proposed that, if approved,⁴² would double the size of the settlement of Har Gilo, encircling the village. This would further isolate Al-Walaja residents from both Jerusalem and Bethlehem.⁴³ In March 2018, sewage emanating from this settlement flowed into the village, near its only health centre.⁴⁴ In January 2018, an Israeli national park visitor centre was opened at the Ein Haniya spring, central to the community life of Al-Walaja.

³⁴ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, West Bank Demolitions and Displacement: An Overview, November 2017, on file.

³⁵ Ibid., February 2018.

³⁶ Ibid., July 2018.

³⁷ A/72/564, paras. 26 and 49.

³⁸ Including through weekly inspections in the community by the Israeli Civil Administration.

³⁹ A/HRC/34/39, para. 47.

⁴⁰ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁴¹ A/73/410, para. 7.

⁴² The proposal is pending approval by the Industrial Cooperation Authority. Yotam Berger, "Israel pushing plan to expand settlement toward Bethlehem", Haaretz, 26 June 2018.

⁴³ A/HRC/37/43, para. 19.

⁴⁴ United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

IV. Impact of settler violence on human rights

24. Settler violence adversely affects Palestinian society, violating a range of rights, including the rights to security of person, freedom of movement, an adequate standard of living, work and education.⁴⁵ Furthermore, settlers often use violence as part of a calculated effort to expand Israeli control beyond the settlement jurisdiction areas.⁴⁶ Settler presence and violence have reduced Palestinians' access to land, resulting in a de facto settlement expansion.⁴⁷ Settler violence is also a factor of the coercive environment that may leave some Palestinians no other choice than to leave their places of residence. Such involuntary moves would increase the risk of forcible transfer, a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and a war crime.⁴⁸

A. Right to life, liberty and security of person

25. In the reporting period, 4 Palestinians were killed by settlers in the West Bank (2 in the context of alleged stabbing attacks) and 98 were injured. There were 176 incidents of property damage by settlers. At least 7,360 Palestinian-owned fruit trees were destroyed, marking a 22 per cent increase compared with the previous reporting period. The average number of incidents of settler violence per month rose in 2018, representing a 57 and 175 per cent increase compared with 2017 and 2016 respectively. Approximately 40 per cent of the recorded incidents in the West Bank took place in the Nablus area. Most of the physical attacks targeted farmers and herders and a number of attacks were in the presence of Israeli security forces, who did not uphold their obligations to protect the Palestinian population.

26. During the reporting period, there were 37 incidents of settlers entering and/or attacking Palestinian communities, accompanied by Israeli security forces and triggering clashes between Palestinians and Israeli security forces. These incidents resulted in 2 Palestinians killed and 446 injured. The majority of these clashes occurred in communities in the Nablus Governorate. The number of clashes with Israeli forces following settlers entering Palestinian communities increased significantly this year compared with previous years.⁴⁹

27. Seven Israeli civilians were killed and 37 were injured by Palestinians in the West Bank, compared with 3 killed and 64 injured in the previous reporting period.⁵⁰

28. On 14 February 2018, some 15 Israeli civilians physically assaulted a 20-year-old Palestinian man near his house in the Old City in East Jerusalem, causing him serious injuries. According to the victim and video footage, the attack was in the presence of Israeli police who prevented other Palestinians from providing first aid to the victim. According to the victim's lawyer and based on surveillance camera footage, the police arrested three Israeli suspects and opened an investigation. As at 31 October 2018, the lawyer of the victim had not been informed of any progress in the investigation.

29. Settler violence in the H2 area of Hebron was a growing concern in the reporting period, with 35 incidents of attacks injuring 24 Palestinians, including 10 children. This is a noticeable increase compared with 18 incidents and 14 injured Palestinians in the previous reporting period.⁵¹ For example on 29 July 2018, four settlers attacked a Palestinian man as he was walking in H2 with his wife and nephew, spraying him with pepper spray in the presence of the Israeli security forces. When the man picked up a stone to fend off the ⁴⁵ A/68/513, paras. 12–14; A/71/355, para. 50; A/HRC/28/44, para. 40; A/HRC/34/38, para. 36; and A/HRC/37/43, para. 23.

⁴⁶ A/HRC/31/43, para. 33; and A/HRC/34/39, para. 18.

⁴⁷ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Three case studies of the humanitarian impact of de facto settlement expansion, 2016–2017, on file; and A/70/351, para. 58.

⁴⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 147; and Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

⁴⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁵⁰ Ibid.

⁵¹ Ibid.

attackers, Israeli security forces intervened by pointing their guns at him, at which time the settlers left. On 12 September 2018, two settlers in their teens attacked two Palestinian boys aged 10 and 12 with pepper spray. The Israeli police apprehended the assailants and the families of the boys filed a complaint with the police. As at the end of the reporting period, none of the victims had been informed whether investigations had been opened.

30. Some of the peaks in settler violence against Palestinians recorded this year occurred within two or three days after the killing of settlers by Palestinians and were presumably perpetrated in retaliation.⁵² Other incidents have been attributed to a practice known as “price tag”, aimed at punishing Palestinians for the removal, by the Israeli authorities, of structures in settlement outposts. Since the beginning of 2018, a number of such removals were reported in small settlement outposts associated with radicalized settler youths in Nablus Governorate.⁵³

B. Freedom of movement and access to land and confiscation of private property

31. A range of factors restrict Palestinians’ access to and use of their land and property and facilitate gradual takeover of land, such as violence or threats by settlers or civilian security coordinators, settler agriculture and herding on Palestinian land and Israeli security force restrictions on access to areas near settlements.

32. In August 2018, the Government announced its intention to triple the size of the jurisdiction of the new settlement of Amihai⁵⁴ to include the outpost of Adei Ad as a way of retroactive authorization.⁵⁵ Adei Ad is a part of the “Shiloh corridor” in the northern West Bank, composed of several settlements and outposts from which Palestinians were driven away through settler violence, intimidation and unlawful activity that resulted in multiple human rights violations.⁵⁶ Should the corridor be completed, it will further prevent Palestinian farmers from accessing their lands, restrict their freedom of movement and obstruct territorial continuity of the West Bank.⁵⁷

33. Adei Ad, placed partially on private Palestinian land, has been a centre of settler violence in the area for many years.⁵⁸ In the reporting period, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and Yesh Din combined reported 12 incidents of settler violence against property or Palestinians in the villages of Turmusaya, Jalud and Mughayir, all of which are close to the outpost. In October 2018, settlers destroyed 280 olive trees in three different areas, which Palestinians can only access after “prior coordination” with Israeli authorities (see para. 36), due to their proximity to Adei Ad. Yesh Din documented how settlers unofficially annexed land around Adei Ad in 28 instances by fencing plots, preventing access or expelling Palestinian farmers from their land, and cultivating plots while trespassing without the knowledge or agreement of the owners. This took place over a number of years on land that Palestinian owners could no longer access due to Israeli security forces restrictions or for fear of settler attacks.⁵⁹ Consequently, some Palestinians had to move away. According to the Jalud village council, 60 people left the village after the Shiloh settlement and surrounding outposts progressively ⁵² Ibid., Humanitarian Bulletin: Occupied Palestinian Territory, October 2018.

⁵³ Removals of structures took place in Ma’oz Ester, Havat Ma’on, Geulat Zion and Rosh Yosef. Ibid, note 33.

⁵⁴ Amihai was established for the settlers evacuated from the illegal settlement of Amona in the northern West Bank. See para. 11.

⁵⁵ Yotam Berger, “Israel seeks to triple size of isolated West Bank settlement in order to legalize outpost”, Haaretz, 8 August 2018.

⁵⁶ A/70/351, paras. 52–69.

⁵⁷ Yesh Din, The Road to Dispossession: A Case Study – The Outpost of Adei Ad (2013), p. 45.

⁵⁸ Monitoring by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and OHCHR; and Yesh Din, ibid. Adei Ad outpost is placed partially on lands belonging to the villages of Turmusaya, Qaryut, Al Mughayir and Jalud.

⁵⁹ Yesh Din, ibid., p. 58.

took over most of their lands in 2010. The legalization of Adei Ad outpost would send a concerning signal of rewarding violent behaviour.

34. In January 2018, the Israeli Minister of Defence declared his intention to legalize the outpost of Havat Gilad/Gilad Farm,⁶⁰ established on some 450 dunams of land belonging to Palestinians from the villages of Far'ata, Tal and Jit. According to residents and human rights organizations, the settlers expanded their outpost through violence and vandalism, with no demolitions of the illegal structures since 2003.⁶¹ A Palestinian man from Far'ata recounted how the outpost gradually expanded onto his land and how settlers made access to his land more difficult, including by attacks, the construction of two structures on his land and destruction of trees. Eventually, the Israeli Civil Administration imposed rules allowing him to access his land only twice a year. This greatly reduced his ability to protect his land from vandalism and theft, and to rehabilitate the land and damaged trees.⁶² According to the farmer, settlers destroyed trees and stole the fruit, so that there was nothing to harvest when he was granted access.⁶³ As of 31 October 2018, the legalization of Havat Gilad had not moved forward.

35. The Israeli military began closing off Palestinian farmlands and denying Palestinian farmers access to their own lands around 2000, purportedly to maintain public order and to protect them from frictions caused by settlers in such areas. Despite an Israeli Supreme Court ruling of 2006 stating that military commanders should refrain from closing areas in a manner that prevented Palestinian inhabitants from accessing their land for their own protection,⁶⁴ the military continues to close these farmlands, under the pretext of establishing a "coordination mechanism".⁶⁵ In practice, the "coordination mechanism" acts as a tool for placing restrictions on the Palestinian farmers, severely violating their rights to property, food and freedom of movement.⁶⁶ Palestinian farmers are forced to plant crops that do not require constant tending and are unable to maximize the economic potential of their land. Moreover, the lack of access throughout most of the year and the absence of continuous cultivation impede the farmers' capacity to minimize potential damage caused by extreme weather, fires or vandalism.

36. Approximately 90 Palestinian communities own land within or near 56 Israeli settlements and settlement outposts where "prior coordination" is now required to access the land. The coordination mechanism, run by the district coordination offices, is purportedly designed to allow Palestinian farmers to cultivate their lands that are located near settlements, or where settlements are built on their grounds. In reality, Palestinians are usually allowed to access their land only twice a year, during the harvest and ploughing seasons, for a limited and pre-set number of days. Although these procedures have the stated aim of protecting Palestinian farmers and their property, 26 settler attacks resulting in injuries or property damage were recorded in coordination areas in 2018.⁶⁷ Furthermore, the military often denies Palestinians even the limited access afforded by the coordination mechanism.⁶⁸

37. Palestinian farmers' access to their private land near settlements is also restricted and denied by the civilian security coordinators who operate in the Israeli settlements and outposts in the West Bank. These coordinators are usually residents of settlements and ⁶⁰ The decision was reportedly in response to a murder of a resident of the outpost. Peace Now, "Why Israel must not authorize the Havat Gilad outpost", 1 February 2018.

⁶¹ B'Tselem, "Adding insult to injury: Israel officially recognized Gilad Farm settlement outpost", 27 February 2018.

⁶² In 2006, he was banned from having an international protective presence during his visits to the land.

⁶³ For olive harvest-related human rights violations, see A/HRC/28/44, paras. 32–38; and Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Occupied Palestinian Territory, 15 December 2017.

⁶⁴ Case No. HCJ 9593/04, Morar v. IDF Commander in Judea and Samaria, Judgment of 26 June 2006.

⁶⁵ These procedures have the stated aim of protecting Palestinians farmers and their property. See Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin: Occupied Palestinian Territory, October 2018, p. 11.

⁶⁶ A/HRC/22/63, paras. 73–74.

⁶⁷ Humanitarian Bulletin: Occupied Palestinian Territory, October 2018.

⁶⁸ Yesh Din, Yitzhar – A Case Study (2018), p. 17.

outposts trained and armed by the Israel Defense Forces and funded by the Ministry of Defence to guard the settlements and outposts on behalf of the Israel Defense Forces. Civilian security coordinators have policing powers, which include the power to detain, search and arrest.⁶⁹ A lack of adequate supervision by the Israel Defense Forces and of clearly defined powers contribute to daily friction between the civilian security coordinators and Palestinians.⁷⁰ According to Yesh Din, guards have participated in settler attacks themselves or escorted settlers who were attacking Palestinians or Palestinian property. They have also prevented Palestinians from accessing lands, including grazing lands. During the reporting period, Yesh Din documented an incident of a civilian security coordinator from Mehola settlement taking part in violence against Palestinians and three incidents in which the Yitzhar civilian security coordinator was present during violence or vandalism against Palestinians.

38. In June 2018, a civilian security coordinator obstructed the access of a Palestinian family from the village of Kifl Haris to their agricultural land that had been included within the boundary of the adjacent Ariel settlement in the northern West Bank. The family had been able to access their land through Ariel's main entrance since the establishment of the settlement in 1978 but in June 2018, a new civilian security coordinator obstructed the family's access. On 15 August 2018, during a peaceful protest by several family members outside their land, a Palestinian was attacked and injured by the civilian security coordinator. After this incident, the family managed to negotiate coordinated access for a few members until the end of the olive harvest; however, they missed the harvest time for other fruit trees on the land. The family's future access to the land is uncertain, as they were again barred access at the end of October 2018.

39. During the reporting period, settlers established seven new outposts, six of them farms⁷¹ where settlers' sheep or cattle take over large areas of land and prevent Palestinians from accessing it by means of threats, attacks, fencing and cultivation. This appears to be part of an official policy whereby the Government has encouraged takeovers of land by settlers through agricultural projects.⁷² According to Peace Now, agricultural outposts are funded by local authorities of the settlements and the Gush Emunim settler organization.⁷³

40. The constraints faced by Palestinians in accessing their agricultural land put them at great risk of seeing their land declared State land and used for the expansion of settlements. Indeed, according to the Israeli interpretation of the Ottoman land laws that are still in effect in the West Bank, cessation of cultivation for extended periods could result in loss of title to the land.⁷⁴ Israel uses this to unilaterally declare "State land", which has been allocated exclusively for settlements use by Israel and its citizens rather than for the benefit of the local population, as required under international law.⁷⁵ In effectively preventing Palestinians from accessing their land, settler violence serves as a tool for the expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank.⁷⁶

41. The denial of Palestinians' access to land by settlers through violence or intimidation, or by the Israeli security forces to "protect" Palestinians from areas with settler and settlement presence, violates Palestinians' freedom of movement. Such a violation in turn affects other rights, such as the right to work and property.⁷⁷ Furthermore, official or unofficial confiscation of land and limiting access through coordination measures violate the prohibition on confiscation of private property enshrined in international ⁶⁹ A/HRC/28/44, paras. 22–23.

⁷⁰ A/HRC/28/44, para. 22.

⁷¹ Out of 25 outposts established since 2012, 15 are agricultural farms. Peace Now, source on file.

⁷² A/69/348, para. 28.

⁷³ Peace Now; see also Amira Hass, "How settlers use flocks of sheep to take over Palestinian Land", Haaretz, 13 October 2018.

⁷⁴ A/HRC/28/44, paras. 26–27. See also B'Tselem, Under the Guise of Legality: Israel's Declarations of State Land in the West Bank (2012), p. 28.

⁷⁵ A/HRC/34/39, para. 15.

⁷⁶ Yesh Din, Yitzhar, p. 13.

⁷⁷ A/69/348, para. 11; A/HRC/25/38, para. 29; and A/HRC/28/44, para. 40.

humanitarian law.⁷⁸ Limitations on freedom of movement and constraints on access to natural resources and agricultural land have been identified as coercive factors that ultimately may force people to leave.⁷⁹ In the cases presented in the present report, the Israeli security forces failed to uphold their obligation to protect the Palestinian population and property, as well as to keep public order and safety.⁸⁰ Such failure allows the Israeli State and private settlers to take over more Palestinian land in the West Bank, in violation of the law of occupation.

C. Access to health and education

42. Israeli settlements and settler violence continued to violate a range of Palestinians' human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights such as the rights to health and education.⁸¹ In Hebron H2 and the nearby access-restricted areas, some 7,000 Palestinians rely on medical services available in H1 and on Palestinian Red Crescent Society ambulances for urgent cases. The Secretary-General has previously reported incidents of ambulances not being allowed into the area, forcing Palestinian patients to cross checkpoints on foot, which can cause life-threatening delays.⁸²

43. During the reporting period, there were at least three cases of settler attacks against Palestinian ambulances in H2 in the presence of Israeli security forces. For instance, on 11 August 2018, settlers in H2 blocked a Palestinian Red Crescent Society ambulance transporting an elderly Palestinian woman injured by settlers. Despite the arrival of Israeli security forces at the scene, the settlers were not dispersed. Instead, after an hour, the Israeli security forces forced the ambulance crew to turn back and use another road, which the settlers then tried to block, causing further delay. Eventually the ambulance managed to pass. The inability of the Israeli security forces to guarantee the ambulance access to the H2 area, which results in the lack of access to health-care facilities and services for the persons living in this area, constitutes a violation of the right to health. The Palestinian Red Crescent Society submitted some 100 complaints to the Israeli authorities during 2018 related to access issues, including settler attacks, but as at the end of the reporting period no action had been taken.

44. Violence and harassment by settlers targeting schools often results in injuring children and teachers and disrupting classes. This affects access to education, quality of education, student well-being, and performance and completion rates.⁸³ Moreover, it results in increased school dropout rates and the decision of families to keep their children at home.⁸⁴ Fear of settler-related violence has been reported as one of the reasons why some families prevent girls from going to school, particularly in Area C.⁸⁵

45. The secondary boys' school in Urif has over the past two years been subjected to increasing settler attacks due to its proximity to Yitzhar settlement, from where many settler attacks originate. The school reported three settler attacks on the school on 14, 17 and 18 October 2018 respectively, causing the school to suspend teaching. Settlers hit teachers with stones while they were evacuating the children. The school staff reported visible psychological effects on the children. During the school year 2017/18, 24 out of 230 students dropped out of school, the majority of them because of the parents' fear for the ⁷⁸ Hague Regulations, arts. 46 and 56; Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53; and Customary International Humanitarian Law, rule 51.

⁷⁹ For more information on the coercive environment, see A/71/355, paras. 60–64; A/72/564, paras. 36–57; A/73/410, paras. 26–58; A/HRC/34/39, paras. 44 and 54–55; and A/HRC/37/43, paras. 26–64.

⁸⁰ Hague Regulations, art. 43; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27 (1)

⁸¹ For more information on settlements' impact on economic, social and cultural rights, see A/68/513, paras. 36–41; A/HRC/25/38, paras. 21–36; and A/HRC/28/44, paras. 16–38.

⁸² A/71/355, para. 57.

⁸³ A/HRC/25/38, paras. 34–36.

⁸⁴ A/71/355, para. 51.

⁸⁵ OHCHR, "Update on settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem", October 2013, p. 4. safety of their children due to the settler attacks. It was reported that families with resources moved their children to schools in nearby villages, while others kept the children home.

46. In some rural areas, Palestinian children's commute to school exposes them to the risk of settler attacks. For example, in the southern West Bank, students in the Tuba area have since 2002 faced repeated settler attacks on their way to/from their school, located in the nearby village of Tuwani, as they use a road that borders the settlement of Ma'on and its associated outpost Havot Ma'on. In 2004, after settler attacks on children and protective presence observers deployed by NGOs, the Israeli District Coordination Office issued a verbal order to the Israel Defense Forces to provide a daily escort to the schoolchildren of Tuba⁸⁶ – the only known case of the Israel Defense Forces escorting Palestinian children for their protection. However, local residents reported that the Israel Defense Forces sometimes arrive late or not at all, leaving the children vulnerable. For instance, on 9 September 2018, as the escort did not arrive, the children travelled accompanied only by an international protective presence. On their way, a settler attempted to prevent the group from passing by blocking their passage and scaring them, until the Israel Defense Forces reached the scene and let the group through.

47. The situation of threats against schoolchildren has persisted in the area for at least 12 years, with the full awareness of Israeli authorities, indicating that the authorities have not sufficiently addressed the settler violence in the area.⁸⁷ A similar case was previously reported in the rural Jordan Valley, where the threat of settler violence was one factor contributing to families sending their children to a bigger city to avoid the commute.⁸⁸

48. Settler violence, and the climate of fear and intimidation created by repeated violence and harassment, has a serious psychological impact on victims of and witnesses to violent attacks and affects the psychosocial well-being of everyone in affected communities. Organizations providing mental health responses to victims of settler violence reported effects such as strong feelings of frustration (particularly for men), constant feelings of fear and insecurity, eating disorders, sleep disturbances (particularly for children), anxiety (particularly for women), depression and behavioural problems. These symptoms lead to aggressiveness, violence, social withdrawal, and academic deterioration and poor school performance for children.⁸⁹

49. While men and boys are more directly exposed to settler violence, it also directly and indirectly affects the lives of women and girls. Continued exposure to settler violence has a psychological impact on women, who report suffering from anxiety and constant fear for themselves and their children. The increased pressure adds further stress and tensions to family life. Moreover, women and girls may be restricted from working or studying outside the home because of the threat of settler violence. The experiences of men are exacerbated by a perceived failure to provide a safe haven for their families in accordance with traditional gender roles.⁹⁰

D. Settler violence and displacement

50. Settler violence can be a significant factor contributing to a coercive environment⁹¹ and a decisive factor forcing Palestinians to leave their place of residence.⁹² According to a ⁸⁶ The Knesset Committee for Children's Rights later confirmed this order.

⁸⁷ A/73/410, para. 16.

⁸⁸ Ibid., para. 41.

⁸⁹ OHCHR, "Update on settler violence", p. 3; and Médecins du monde, "Burin case study", 5 June 2018, on file.

⁹⁰ OHCHR, "Update on settler violence"; and Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling, Women's Voices: In the Shadow of Settlements (2010). See also the Centre's submission to the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences on Israeli settler violence in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, 16 September 2013.

⁹¹ A/70/351, paras. 25–51; A/71/355, paras. 46–50; A/73/410, paras. 40–43; A/HRC/31/43, para. 54; A/HRC/34/39, para. 52; and A/HRC/37/43, para. 45.

⁹² A/73/410, para. 55.

survey by the Protection Cluster, 21 communities affected by settler violence, often along with other coercive factors, experienced a decrease in population in the course of 2017.⁹³ Première urgence internationale, an NGO, identified three cases during the reporting period of people moving from Burin and Urif due to recurrent settler violence, either to other villages or within their village.⁹⁴

51. In August 2018, a Palestinian family of four was forcibly evicted by settlers and had their houses demolished in the Beit al-Baraka compound, south of Bethlehem. The family had lived in small houses within the compound premises since the 1970s as they worked for previous owners, an American Christian association. In 2010, the compound was reportedly sold to settlers through a shell company posing as a Scandinavian church. Settlers moved into the compound in 2015 and began harassing the family, and prevented two sons from living there. The family submitted seven complaints of harassment to the Israeli police, who reportedly did not take any action. The family also appealed to the Jerusalem Magistrate Court. In 2016, the court ruled in favour of the family, stating that it was allowed to live in the compound and that the settlers could not restrict their access.

52. However, on 6 August 2018, settlers tricked the father into leaving his house by claiming that their dogs had attacked his sheep, refused to allow him to return and removed his daughter from the house by force. The settlers then demolished their two houses without allowing them to retrieve their possessions. The Israeli police arrived just after the eviction, but the only action they took was to arrest the daughter following the settlers' claim that she had attacked them. She was detained for three days and eventually released without charges. The family members now live in nearby Arroub refugee camp. Due to the Israeli State's failure to take all appropriate action to provide legal protection to the family, including against demolition and forced eviction, there appear to be violations of the rights to housing and security of tenure. Furthermore, the arrest of the daughter raises concerns of arbitrary arrest and detention.

E. Failure to protect and lack of accountability

53. As previously documented, the Israeli security forces, in numerous instances which appear to indicate a pattern, have failed to prevent settler attacks and repeatedly failed to protect Palestinians when attacks occurred in their presence.⁹⁵ For instance, the village of Burin in the Nablus area is among the most affected by settler violence in the West Bank, as it is surrounded by the settlements of Har Bracha and Yitzhar and six outposts,⁹⁶ known as sources of serious settler violence. Burin residents and human rights defenders reported attacks on Palestinians and their property every Saturday, and sometimes also on Fridays, in the presence of Israeli security forces.

54. During clashes between Palestinians and settlers around Burin, the Israeli security forces only targeted Palestinians with crowd dispersal methods and arrests.⁹⁷ Video material of several incidents during the reporting period shows Israeli security forces failing to interfere with stone-throwing settlers and, in some instances, using crowd dispersal means towards Palestinians while settlers threw stones. Adding to the climate of impunity, the frequency of settler harassment seems to have become normalized among some Palestinian communities: such incidents have reportedly become so much a part of Palestinians' daily lives in Burin that they rarely report them anymore.⁹⁸

55. As the occupying Power, Israel has the obligation to uphold public order and safety in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and to protect the Palestinian population from all acts

⁹³ Source on file.

⁹⁴ Première urgence internationale and Médecins du monde, The Case of Burin: Escalation of Settler Violence in the West Bank (2018), p. 3.

⁹⁵ A/72/564, paras. 20–22; and A/73/410, para. 18.

⁹⁶ Shalhevet Farm, Hill 725, Lehavat Yitzhar, Mizpeh Yitzhar, Bracha A and Sneh Ya'akov.

⁹⁷ A/72/564, para. 22. See also Yesh Din, Yitzhar, p. 23.

⁹⁸ Première urgence internationale, The Case of Burin, p. 3.

of violence.⁹⁹ Israel also has the obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate, prosecute, punish and remedy any harm caused to Palestinians.¹⁰⁰ OHCHR has on many occasions reported on the climate of impunity enjoyed by violent settlers, as well as those taking over private Palestinian land.¹⁰¹ In a report issued in October 2018, the Israeli Ministry of Justice stated that Israeli authorities had made considerable efforts to enhance law enforcement in the West Bank in recent years. According to the report, between January and July 2018, the Israeli police opened 35 investigations related to settler violence against Palestinians, of which 4 led to the indictment of suspects, 4 were closed and the rest were still ongoing.¹⁰² During the same period, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 219 incidents of settler violence. Despite these steps, it appears that in a number of cases Israel has failed to take necessary action to investigate cases of settler violence and to prosecute perpetrators. The repeated failure to investigate cases of settler violence and prosecute perpetrators¹⁰³ also discourages Palestinian victims of settler violence from filing complaints.¹⁰⁴

V. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

56. Syrian residents of the occupied Syrian Golan continued to face challenges due to discriminatory planning and zoning policies that favour illegal Israeli settlements. These policies make it nearly impossible for Syrian residents to build, plan or expand their homes and village infrastructure. The more than 25,000 Syrian residents live in 4 villages, while the estimated 23,000 Israeli settlers live in 34 Israeli settlements. Israeli settlers and the Israeli military reportedly control 95 per cent of the land in the occupied Syrian Golan.¹⁰⁵

57. On 30 October 2018, Israel for the first time held municipal elections for the local village councils in the occupied Syrian Golan. Syrian residents were given the right to vote, but not to run for office unless they held Israeli nationality. This indicates that Israel appears to be increasing pressure on residents to obtain Israeli citizenship. The International Labour Organization noted that these elections, among other measures, constitute an emerging threat to Syrian identity in the occupied Syrian Golan.¹⁰⁶ At present, an estimated 10 per cent of the Syrian population in the Golan have taken Israeli nationality.¹⁰⁷ Residents and local organizations have reportedly raised concerns that Israel was using the elections to strengthen its claim to, and influence in, the occupied Syrian Golan, and announced their intention to boycott the elections.¹⁰⁸

58. In the lead-up to the elections, a number of Syrian candidates with Israeli nationality who had decided to run for office withdrew. On the eve of the election, Druze community elders reportedly announced a prohibition against standing for election or voting. On the day of the election, hundreds of Syrian residents of Majdal Shams, the largest Syrian village in the occupied Syrian Golan, reportedly protested in front of the local polling place. Israeli police cleared the area, including by using tear gas.¹⁰⁹

⁹⁹ Hague Regulations, arts. 43 and 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

¹⁰⁰ A/HRC/34/38, paras. 13 and 36–37.

¹⁰¹ A/HRC/31/43, para. 37; and A/HRC/34/39, para. 18.

¹⁰² Israeli Ministry of Justice, “Israel’s investigation and prosecution of ideologically motivated offences against Palestinians in the West Bank”, October 2018, p. 1.

¹⁰³ A/71/355, para. 50; A/HRC/34/38, para. 33; and A/HRC/37/43, para. 23.

¹⁰⁴ A/73/410, para. 18.

¹⁰⁵ International Labour Office, The Situation of Workers of the Occupied Arab Territories, document ILC.107/DG/APP (2018), para. 147.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid., para. 151.

¹⁰⁷ Ibid., para. 148.

¹⁰⁸ See <https://golan-marsad.org/al-marsad-warns-of-the-political-agenda-behind-israels-elections-in-the-occupied-syrian-golan/>; and Nour Samaha, “Syrians in Golan Heights to boycott municipal election by Israel”, Al Jazeera, 21 June 2018.

¹⁰⁹ Stephen Farrell and Suleiman Al-Khalidi, “Druze on Golan Heights protest against Israeli municipal election”, Reuters, 30 October 2018; and Jack Khoury and Noa Shpigel, “Hundreds of Druze protest municipal elections in Israel’s Golan Heights”, Haaretz, 30 October 2018.

59. Concerns have previously been raised about the presence of mines in the occupied Syrian Golan.¹¹⁰ In July 2018, Israeli authorities reportedly began to clear a minefield around an Israeli army post near Majdal Shams.¹¹¹

60. In May 2018, the Israeli Minister of Intelligence told Reuters that his Government was expecting the United States of America to recognize Israeli sovereignty over the occupied Syrian Golan in the coming months.¹¹²

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

61. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by Israel amount to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law.¹¹³ The transfer of an occupying Power's population to a territory it occupies amounts to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.¹¹⁴ Several international bodies have confirmed the illegality of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan, including the International Court of Justice, the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.¹¹⁵

62. The advancement of plans for further housing units in settlements continued unabated, while the rate of construction starts decreased.

63. Palestinians remained subject to a restrictive planning, permit and construction regime, placing many of them under threat of demolition of structures and displacement. It also limits access to their land and to the public services. Access to land is further impeded by incidents of settler harassment and Israeli security forces behaviour. These factors contribute to a coercive environment and individually amount to violations of human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights.

64. The exacerbation of a coercive environment had a highly detrimental impact on the human rights of Palestinians. There was a significant increase in settler violence during the reporting period. In Hebron, Area C and East Jerusalem, several factors led to a deterioration in the living conditions of Palestinians.

65. Settler violence had adverse effects on Palestinian society, violating a range of rights. Furthermore, such violence, as well as settler cultivation of land, Israeli security forces practices, coordination areas and civilian security coordinator violence, may gradually prevent Palestinians from accessing their lands, which then risk becoming part of settlement perimeters, effectively constituting unofficial settlement expansion.

66. The High Commissioner recalls Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect.

67. On the basis of her findings, the High Commissioner recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Halt immediately and reverse all settlement development and related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including occupied East Jerusalem,

¹¹⁰ A/HRC/37/42, para. 66.

¹¹¹ See <https://golan-marsad.org/israeli-authorities-finally-start-mine-clearance-in-majdal-shams/>.

¹¹² See www.reuters.com/article/us-mideast-crisis-syria-israel-usa-exclu/exclusive-israeli-minister-says-us-may-soon-recognize-israels-hold-on-golan-idUSKCN1IO2YU.

¹¹³ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

¹¹⁴ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹¹⁵ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, para. 120; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

and in the occupied Syrian Golan, including through the discontinuation of support for private settler organizations' initiatives aimed at the seizure of Palestinian properties and the forced eviction of their residents, in compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

(b) End immediately all activity contributing to the creation of a coercive environment and/or increasing the risk of forcible transfer;

(c) Review planning laws and policies to ensure that they are compliant with the obligations of Israel under international human rights and international humanitarian law;

(d) Refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders on the basis of discriminatory and illegal planning policies and practices that may lead to forcible transfer, including of Bedouin and herder communities;

(e) Take all steps necessary to protect the Palestinian population, including preventing attacks by settlers, and ensure accountability in cases of settler violence against Palestinians and their property;

(f) End policies and practices within the occupied Syrian Golan that may lead to discrimination against the Syrian population.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
30 January 2020

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-third session

24 February–20 March 2020

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

In the present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 40/24, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights provides an update on the implementation of resolution 40/24 from 1 November 2018 to 31 October 2019. She describes the expansion of the settlement activities of Israel and its negative impact on the human rights of Palestinians. The report focuses on the developments that have exacerbated the prevailing coercive environment in parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory to the extent that it may have led to forcible transfer. The High Commissioner also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

* Agreement was reached to publish the present report after the standard publication date owing to circumstances beyond the submitter's control.

I. Introduction

1. In its resolution 40/24, the Human Rights Council requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of resolution 40/24 at its forty-third session, with particular emphasis on the policies and practices linked to the settlement enterprise that discriminate against the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The report, which covers the period from 1 November 2018 to 31 October 2019, and also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan, is submitted to the Council pursuant to that request.

2. The report is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and on information provided by other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations and civil society in the occupied Syrian Golan. It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports submitted by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to the General Assembly and to the Human Rights Council (A/74/357, A/HRC/40/39, A/HRC/40/42 and A/HRC/40/43). The quarterly updates and reports of the Secretary-General presented to the Security Council on the implementation of Security Council resolution 2334 (2016) also provide relevant information.¹

3. During the period under review, the Israeli settlement expansion accelerated in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Settlement housing advancement in Area C of the West Bank doubled, while in East Jerusalem the numbers remained approximately the same compared to the previous reporting period (1 November 2017 to 31 October 2018). The construction of outposts,² the demolition of Palestinian property and the resulting displacement continued at a rapid rate, as did settler violence and the lack of accountability for them.

II. Legal framework

4. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are concurrently applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In particular, Israel is bound by the obligations of an occupying Power as set out by international humanitarian law. A detailed analysis of the legal framework in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan is contained in reports of the Secretary-General (A/HRC/34/38 and 39).

5. References to discriminatory Israeli policies and practices further to Human Rights Council resolution 40/24 do not affect the legally separate issues of the status of occupied territory or its population, the applicability and scope of international humanitarian law, nor the rights of and protections afforded to protected persons and the obligations of the occupying Power as defined in the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention).

III. Activities related to settlements

6. During the period under review, advancements of plans for settlements more than doubled, while tenders for settlement construction and the actual commencement of construction both decreased. The rapid pace of establishment of outposts witnessed during the previous period under review continued. Conditions and acts contributing to a coercive environment, such as demolitions and forced evictions, increased, and acts of settler violence reached the highest level seen since 2013. On 28 January 2019, the Government of Israel announced its decision not to renew the mandate of the Temporary International Presence in Hebron as of 30 January 2019 (see A/74/357, para. 54).

¹ Available from <https://unsc.unmissions.org/security-council-briefings-0>.

² Outposts are unauthorized settlements that are illegal even under Israeli law. Both outposts and settlements are illegal under international law.

A. Settlement expansion: land designation, planning and tenders

7. Advancement of plans for settlement construction more than doubled; plans for some 13,600 housing units in the West Bank advanced or approved by the Israeli authorities, compared to 6,300 in the previous period. Of the units, 11,600 were located in Area C and 2,000 in East Jerusalem.³

8. Israeli authorities issued tenders for some 1,300 units in Area C settlements, as against 3,500 issued during the previous period. In East Jerusalem, tenders for some 600 units were issued, approximately the same number as in the previous reporting period.⁴

9. The official data available for November 2018 to September 2019 indicate a decrease in the commencement of new settlement construction in Area C (1,504 units as against 2,014 during the previous period).

10. On 15 September 2019, the Israeli cabinet retroactively legalized a new settlement, Mevo'ot Yericho, an outpost located in the Jordan Valley, 650 metres from Area A of Jericho. The decision entailed the legalization of existing housing units and the construction of more.⁵ In the past two years, outpost construction has escalated drastically; settlers established 12 new outposts in current period under review,⁶ and 11 in the previous period (by comparison, in the 10 previous years, 1.7 outposts were established on average per year).⁷ The majority of the outposts established during the current period under review, as in previous years, were of a herding or farming nature. The establishment of outposts appear to be part of an official policy whereby the Israeli authorities encourage the takeover of land by settlers through agricultural projects (A/69/348, para. 28; A/HRC/40/42, paras. 31 and 39).

11. On 30 July 2019, the Israeli Security Cabinet discussed the advancement of 6,000 units in Israeli settlements.⁸ In a rare development, 715 housing units for Palestinians in Area C were also discussed. On 27 August 2019, the Prime Minister of Israel gave instructions to submit a plan for 300 housing units for the Dolev settlement after a bomb allegedly detonated by Palestinians killed a 17-year-old Israeli girl and injured her father and brother at a spring near the settlement four days earlier.⁹

12. In September 2019, settlers established a new outpost, Keidar East, east of Jerusalem. In protest, Palestinians set up a tent a dozen metres from the outpost. In a seemingly discriminatory enforcement of Israeli law, Israeli authorities demolished the tent two days later, but did not dismantle the outpost.¹⁰ Even when demolition orders targeting Palestinian and settler populations are comparable in percentages, Palestinians seem to be disproportionately affected, given the discrepancy in the amount of land allocated to Palestinian and settlement construction.¹¹

³ Information provided by the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ "Cabinet Approves Mevo'ot Yericho, the 6th New Official Settlement since Oslo", Peacenow, 15 September 2019.

⁶ Asael West, Tkoa E, Nofei Prat South B324, Susiya East, Mitzpe Hatora, Rimoni North, Maskiyor South, Nili West, Makhrou Outpost, Halamish East, Mitzpe Kramim East, Keidar East Jabal Muntar.

⁷ Peace Now, data on file.

⁸ https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_27_august_2019_0.pdf.

⁹ Tovah Lazaroff, Anna Ahronheim. "Netanyahu approves 300 new housing units in Dolev in response to attack", Jerusalem Post, 27 August 2019.

¹⁰ "While Israelis Went to the Polls, Settlers Built a New Outpost near Ma'ale Adumin", Peace Now, 26 September 2019.

¹¹ "In the Spotlight. Under Threat: Demolition Orders in Area C of the West Bank", September 2015, Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, pp. 12–13.

B. Consolidation of settlements

13. According to the statistics of the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, there were more than 600,000 settlers in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, at the end of the period under review.¹² As part of national election campaigns in April and September 2019, the Prime Minister of Israel vowed on several occasions to declare sovereignty over settlements and to annex the Jordan Valley¹³ and other parts of the West Bank.¹⁴ Moreover, several government officials called for applying Israeli law and “sovereignty” in Area C.¹⁵

14. For decades, settlers have received economic and other incentives to relocate to the West Bank (A/HRC/28/44, para. 14; A/HRC/34/39, para. 24),¹⁶ which amounts to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory (A/67/375, para. 10). While the Government of Israel has implemented extensive infrastructure projects to facilitate the movement of settlers, the movement of Palestinians in the West Bank has been restricted in a manner that severely infringes upon their freedom of movement and access to services and livelihoods (A/73/410, paras. 39–43; A/HRC/37/43, paras. 38, 56–58; A/HRC/40/42, para. 35).

Legal developments, including regularization of outposts

15. On 13 December 2018, the Attorney General of Israel issued an opinion allowing the Government to initiate steps to retroactively legalize settlement units built “in good faith”, including on private Palestinian property that, at the time of construction, was mistakenly believed to be “State land” under Israeli law (A/74/357, para. 17).

16. On 30 June 2019, the High Court of Justice of Israel approved Military Order No. 1789 establishing a “civil services administration” for settlers in the H2 area of Hebron, which is under Israeli control. The new administration has, inter alia, the power to purchase property and thereby to consolidate the settler presence in Hebron (A/HRC/37/43, para. 12). On 26 August 2019, the Legal Adviser General of the Ministry of Defense issued a legal opinion permitting the construction of a new settlement in the wholesale market complex in H2.¹⁷

C. Impact of settlements on human rights

1. Settlement-related violence

17. During the period under review, incidents of settler violence continued at a high level, with an increase in the severity of attacks on and injuries to Palestinians. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the number of incidents of settler violence reached its highest level since 2013, rising to 352 incidents from the 254 reported during the previous period, and 147 during the period before that. OHCHR has previously reported on the gendered impact of settler violence (A/HRC/40/42, para.49).

¹² See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/jerusalem> and <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/population>.

¹³ Noa Landau and Yotam Berger, “Netanyahu says Israel will annex Jordan Valley if reelected”, Haaretz, 10 September 2019; Toi Staff, “Netanyahu: If I’m re-elected, I’ll extend sovereignty to West Bank settlements”, Times of Israel, 6 April 2019.

¹⁴ Toi Staff, “Netanyahu: After Jordan Valley and settlements, I’ll annex other ‘vital areas’”, Times of Israel, 16 September 2019.

¹⁵ Omri Nahmias, “Hotovely: Time to apply Israeli law in Area C”, Jerusalem Post, 18 June 2019; Gil Hoffman, “Gilad Erdan: Time for Abbas to go”, Jerusalem Post, 18 June 2019; https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_20_september_2019_2334_0.pdf.

¹⁶ By Hook and by Crook: Israeli Settlement Policy in the West Bank, B’Tselem, July 2010; One Rule, Two Legal Systems: Israel’s Regime of Laws in the West Bank, Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), October 2014.

¹⁷ http://peacenow.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2019/08/MOD_opinion_wholesale_market_Hebron_2018.pdf (in Hebrew).

18. Lethal incidents in this context have slightly dropped, even as general levels of violence have increased. Two Palestinians were killed by settlers in the West Bank, compared to four during the previous period under review (A/74/357, paras. 22 and 46). Three Israeli civilians, including one child, were killed by Palestinians in the West Bank, compared to seven during the previous period. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the number of Palestinians injured by settlers increased from 96 during the previous period to 121, including at least 11 by live ammunition (three during the previous period). A total of 46 Israeli civilians were injured by Palestinians in the West Bank, as against 38 during the previous period under review.

19. Attempts by settlers to enter and/or attack Palestinian communities also continued to cause friction between Israeli security forces and Palestinians, leading to clashes that resulted in two Palestinians being killed and 255 injured.

20. On 30 June 2019, a 70-year-old Palestinian man was attacked by three young settler men close to his house, near Ein al Jadida water spring, in the H2 area of Hebron. The man was working on his land when settlers surrounded him and wounded him in the arm with a sharp object. His son arrived and fended off the settlers, followed by the Israeli police and army arriving at the location. The victim was hospitalized. Three Israeli settlers were arrested, as was the victim's son, who was released around 24 hours later with no charge. He reported that the settlers' daily use of the spring close to his house prevented Palestinians from using it, and resulted in restrictions to his family's movements, especially those of women and children, who would leave the house only when accompanied by male family members. As at the end of the period under review, the man had not heard from the police concerning the complaint he filed.

21. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, documented 7,275 trees damaged or vandalized by settlers (7,360 during the previous period), including by fire. For example, video footage dated June 2019 shows Israeli settlers attacking a school in the Palestinian village of Jalud, in the area of Nablus. It was also reported that, minutes after the attack, and raising concerns of arson, a fire began in the same location, which spread over 300 dunums. Around 900 olive trees belonging to 21 Palestinian families were burned.¹⁸

22. Settler violence often peaks during the olive harvest (A/HRC/28/44, paras. 32–38). On 19 October 2019, a group of 30 to 40 settlers attacked Palestinians picking olives in the outskirts of Burin village (Nablus). The settlers, some of them armed, threw stones at and attacked the Palestinians with clubs, injuring at least four, including the landowner, who had to be hospitalized. Clashes between Palestinians and settlers ensued, with settlers setting fire to trees, shooting at Palestinians and stealing bags of olives before Israeli security forces dispersed the settlers and Palestinians.

23. Early in 2019, settlers set up Halamish East outpost A on the lands of Jibya village, north of Ramallah, after establishing their presence by herding cows in the area. Through violent attacks, they made some 550 dunums inaccessible to their Palestinian owners from Jibya and restricted the use of one of the rare recreational spaces for Palestinians in the area.

24. In February 2019, settlers from Beit al Barake compound twice attacked Palestinians in their homes near Arroub refugee camp in an attempt to forcefully evict them. According to the information received, Israeli security forces escorted the settlers and took part in the attacks. The second time, settlers confronted a man at his house, after which around 10 soldiers beat him, and sprayed his mother with pepper spray. After kicking, punching and hitting the man with rifle butts in front of his family, the soldiers detained him, accusing him of trying to take their weapons. The man was released five days later without having been brought before a court or had charges brought against him. At the end of the period under review, the victim had not been informed about any investigation by Israeli security forces into the incident.

¹⁸ Amira Hass, "A fire racks a Palestinian village. Israeli firefighters act only when it nears a settlement", Haaretz, 15 June 2019. See also www.btselem.org/video/20190807_routine_settler_violence_fully_backed_by_military_in_june_2019#full.

25. As the occupying Power, Israel has the obligation to take all measures in its power to restore and ensure, as far as possible, public order in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and to protect the Palestinian population from all acts or threats of violence.¹⁹ Israel also has the obligation to respect, protect and fulfil the human rights of the Palestinian population, including their right to life and security of person (A/HRC/34/38, paras. 13, 36 and 37).

2. Discriminatory law enforcement

26. In numerous cases during the period under review, Israeli security forces was present during settler harassment of or attacks against Palestinians, but appeared to take no action to protect them. Instead, in some cases, Israeli security forces reportedly took active part in settler attacks against Palestinians. In other cases, Israeli security forces arrested Palestinians during or following settler attacks for reacting to attacks, for example by throwing stones.

27. Apart from isolated cases of steps taken towards accountability, violent settlers and those taking over private Palestinian land enjoyed a general climate of impunity (A/74/357, para. 27). In a report issued in August 2019, the Ministry of Justice of Israel listed 118 investigations into alleged crimes by settlers against Palestinians for the period from January 2017 to June 2019. While 11 indictments were filed, including for cases opened in previous years, and two cases reached trial, none of them resulted in a conviction.²⁰ During the same period, 559 incidents of settler attacks against Palestinians were reported to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. No information was available on the number of complaints filed by Palestinians. In October 2019, an Israeli suspect in a case of arson in 2015 that killed a Palestinian family in Duma was convicted for “membership in a terror group” in addition to the charge of “conspiracy to commit a crime motivated by a racist motive”, previously accepted in a plea deal. The conviction did not, however, add any time to the maximum sentence of five and a half years agreed to in the plea deal (see A/74/357, para. 27).

28. During the period under review, action was taken on settler violence directed at Israeli security forces. In October 2019, the Prime Minister of Israel and other Israeli officials condemned attacks by settlers from Yitzhar settlement against Israeli security forces.²¹ In October 2019, the Israel Defense Forces issued an administrative order banning a settler from Yitzhar from access to the northern West Bank for three months because of his alleged participation in attacks against Palestinians and Israeli security forces. No criminal process was initiated against the settler.²²

29. As noted in past reports, Israeli settlers are tried under Israeli criminal law in civilian courts in Israel, while Palestinians are generally prosecuted in military courts under Israeli military law for security offences and other crimes as defined by military orders. Israeli domestic law, applicable to settlers, provides suspects with more substantive and procedural guarantees, while the military law applicable to Palestinians does not include adequate fair trial guarantees (A/HRC/37/42, para. 8). The application of two different legal systems in the same territory, on the sole basis of nationality or origin, is inherently discriminatory. It also violates the principle of equality before the law, which is central to the right to a fair trial (A/HRC/34/38, para. 40).

3. Demolitions, forced evictions and displacement

30. Israeli zoning and planning policies in Area C and East Jerusalem are discriminatory and considered incompatible with requirements under international law, and render it almost impossible for Palestinians to obtain building permits (ibid., para. 26). In addition, the ¹⁹ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (Hague Regulations), arts. 43 and 46; Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

²⁰ See <https://mfa.gov.il/ProtectiveEdge/Documents/IdeologicalOffencesAgainstPalestinians.pdf>, p. 8.

²¹ See Michael Bachner and Jacob Magid, “Netanyahu, Gantz condemn settler violence against IDF soldiers” and Judah Ari Gross and Jacob Magid, “ISF, Shin Bet, police to work together to find settlers who attacked troops”, Times of Israel, 20 October 2019.

²² See Elisha Ben Kimon, “Israel bans ‘dangerous’ settler from northern West Bank home”, Ynet, 9 November 2019, and “Yitzhar resident served with administrative order”, Honenu, 2 October 2019.

imposition of Israeli law in East Jerusalem and the modifications brought to the previous planning and zoning regime in Area C are incompatible with the obligation of the occupying Power to respect the laws in force in the occupied territory (ibid., para. 40; A/68/513 para. 32).²³ Palestinians therefore virtually have no choice but to build without permits and thereby expose themselves to the risk of demolition, which represents a significant coercive environment factor (A/74/357, para. 28).

31. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the period under review, 599 Palestinian-owned structures were demolished in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, leading to the displacement of 756 people, including 357 children and 208 women, as against the 403 structures demolished during the previous period that led to the displacement of 453 people. Approximately 58 per cent of the structures demolished were in Area C and 38 per cent in East Jerusalem.²⁴

32. In July 2019, Military Order No. 1797 regarding Removal of New Structures came into effect. The order applies to structures in Area C deemed as new, and expands the authority of the Israeli Civil Administration to remove such structures within 96 hours of the issuance of a removal order. The order has been implemented in nine recorded incidents since it came into effect.²⁵ In October 2019, an amendment to the planning and building law came into effect, enabling expedited demolitions in East Jerusalem.²⁶ There is serious concern that these measures may accelerate demolitions on the basis of the discriminatory Israeli zoning and planning regime, and further limit opportunities for legal recourse.

33. The publicly stated intention of the Government of Israel to relocate thousands of Palestinians residing in Area C remains a key concern and contributes to a coercive environment (A/HRC/34/39, para. 44; A/72/564, paras. 36–57). Some 18 communities in and around East Jerusalem are at particular risk of forced eviction, including the Bedouin community of Khan al-Ahmar-Abu al-Helu, comprising some 190 individuals (A/73/410, para. 22; A/74/357, para. 36; A/HRC/37/43, para. 25).

34. On 22 July 2019, Israeli authorities demolished 10 buildings comprising approximately 70 housing units in Sur Baher, citing security concerns deriving from their proximity to the wall.²⁷ Seven of the buildings demolished were in Areas A and B of the West Bank under civil control of the Palestinian Authority, although on the Jerusalem side of the wall. The demolition caused the displacement of 24 people and affected 220 more. The destruction of private property in occupied territory is only permissible where rendered absolutely necessary for military operations, which did not appear applicable in this case.²⁸

35. In East Jerusalem, 877 Palestinians were at risk of eviction by the end of 2019. Most evictions are initiated by settler organizations, which invoke Israeli laws that discriminate against Palestinians to gain control of Palestinian properties, by claiming ownership prior to 1948 or challenging the “protected tenant” status of some families (A/37/43, paras. 39–40). According to information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the period under review, such cases raised by settlers led to the eviction of 15 Palestinian residents of three buildings in East Jerusalem.

36. Silwan, one of the communities in the Old City basin heavily affected by demolitions, came under increasing pressure from forced evictions and tourist development projects initiated by Israeli authorities in coordination with settler organizations (see A/HRC/34/39, para. 22 and A/HRC/37/43, para. 41). On 30 June 2019, the so-called “Path of the Pilgrims”, ²³ Hague Regulations, art. 43.

²⁴ The remaining demolitions were in Areas A and B.

²⁵ As at October 2019, four structures had been demolished and demolition orders had been issued regarding five others.

²⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Humanitarian Bulletin: occupied Palestinian territory, September 2019, p. 5.

²⁷ Demolitions were expedited on the basis of a 2011 military order citing security concerns and prohibiting construction within 300 metres on either side of the wall. On 11 June 2019, the High Court of Justice rejected a petition challenging the order.

²⁸ Thus amounting to forced evictions contrary to international law; see www.ochaopt.org/content/un-officials-statement-demolitions-sur-bahir.

a tunnel excavated under Palestinians' homes at the initiative of a settler organization, was inaugurated.²⁹ At least five Palestinian families were reported to have left their houses owing to the damage caused during excavation of the tunnel.³⁰ On 3 June 2019, the Israeli National Infrastructure Committee rejected a series of objections against a controversial plan to construct a cable car connecting West Jerusalem to the Kerem Compound, and submitted the plan to the Government for approval.³¹ Building the cable car over houses in Silwan will involve further confiscation and demolition of Palestinian property, and will intensify the coercive environment.

IV. Coercive environment resulting from settlement policies and consequent risk of forcible transfer

A. Prohibition of forcible transfer of protected persons

37. International humanitarian law prohibits "individual or mass forcible transfers" of protected persons within an occupied territory, as well as their deportations outside of the occupied territory, regardless of motives, although an occupying Power may undertake the total or partial evacuation of a given area if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand.³² Unlawful transfer constitutes a grave breach of article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, thus amounting to a war crime.³³ Forcible transfer may also entail the violation of other provisions of international humanitarian law (for example, the prohibition of the destruction of private and public property), and may involve violations of international human rights law, such as the right to adequate housing, the right to family life and the right to freedom of movement.

38. According to the jurisprudence of international criminal tribunals, the prohibition of forcible transfer, which aims at preventing the forced removal of protected persons,³⁴ is to be interpreted broadly, taking into account the vulnerability of the civilian population. Forcible transfer does not necessarily require the direct use of physical force, as it may result from indirect measures creating a coercive environment, where people are forced to leave against their genuine will.³⁵ Forcible transfer can stem from "the threat of force or coercion, such as that caused by fear of violence, duress, detention, psychological oppression or abuse of power or by taking advantage of a coercive environment".³⁶ The International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia has exemplified measures, such as "dismissals from employment, house searches, and the cutting off of water, electricity, and telephone services" and

²⁹ Nir Hasson, "U.S. Envoys Break Open Tunnel Running Under Palestinian Village in East Jerusalem", Haaretz, 30 June 2019.

³⁰ <https://peacenow.org.il/en/the-disputed-tunnel-in-silwan-inaugurated-with-american-support>.

³¹ https://alt-arch.org/en/jm_cable_car_en/.

³² Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49, and Rule 129 of Customary International Humanitarian Law, International Committee of the Red Cross.

³³ See also Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

³⁴ See PCNICC/2000/1/Add.2. According to the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, the legal values protected by deportation and forcible transfer are the "right of the victim to stay in his or her home and community and the right not to be deprived of his or her property by being forcibly displaced to another location". Therefore, "the location to which the victim is forcibly displaced is sufficiently distant if the victim is prevented from effectively exercising these rights". International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Simić et al., Case No. IT-95-9-T, "Judgement", 17 October 2003, para. 130.

³⁵ International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Naletilić (aka "Tuta") and Martinović (aka "Stela"), Case No. IT-98-34-T, Trial Chamber, 2003, para. 519; Prosecutor v. Krajišnik, Case No. IT-00-39-T, Trial Chamber, 2006, para. 724.

³⁶ PCNICC/2000/1/Add. 2, Article 6 € , para. 1, footnote 5. See also references made extensively in the case law of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, such as Prosecutor v. Krajišnik, Case No. IT-00-39-T, Appeal Chamber, 2009, para. 319; Prosecutor v. Stakić, Case No. IT-97-24-T, Appeals Chamber, 2006, para. 281; and Prosecutor v. Krnojelac, Case No. IT-97-25, Appeals Chamber, 2003, paras. 229 and 233.

“widespread discrimination”, creating “severe living conditions” where it is “practically impossible [...] to remain”.³⁷

39. In previous reports and the first part of the present report, the severe impact of continued settlement expansion on the living conditions of Palestinians has been described, with the creation of a coercive environment that forces Palestinians in several areas of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, to leave (see A/HRC/34/39). Concern over cases where Palestinians appear to have been forcibly transferred has also been raised by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in previous reports (A/67/372, para. 39, A/HRC/25/40 and Corr.1, paras. 18-20, A/69/347, para. 26 and A/71/355, paras. 61-64).

40. The impact of a coercive environment on individuals and communities is specific to their own circumstances and experience (A/HRC/34/39, para. 42). In the sections below, the High Commissioner highlight how different Israeli policies and measures adopted in East Jerusalem, the H2 area of Hebron and Area C of the West Bank have continued to drive Palestinians out of their homes and communities, in parallel with settlement expansion.

1. East Jerusalem

41. The Israeli zoning and planning policy in East Jerusalem is inherently discriminatory and constitutes a key factor of a coercive environment (A/HRC/40/42, para. 20), forcing Palestinians to leave communities they have lived in for generations (A/HRC/25/40, paras.18-20; A/HRC/37/43, paras. 34-35; A/73/410, para. 20).

42. Israeli authorities have zoned only 15 per cent of the area illegally annexed in 1967 for the housing needs of Palestinians,³⁸ compared to 38 per cent allocated to settlement construction.³⁹ Data provided by the Jerusalem Municipality show that while Palestinian residents account for 38 per cent of the overall population of Jerusalem, between 1991 and 2018 only 16.5 per cent of building permits were issued for construction in Palestinian neighbourhoods, mainly for small-scale private projects. By contrast, 37.8 per cent of permits were issued for settlement construction in East Jerusalem. Discriminatory planning, coupled with costly and complicated procedures, make it almost impossible for Palestinian residents to obtain building permits. As a result, at least one third of all Palestinian homes in Jerusalem were built without an Israeli-issued permit.⁴⁰

43. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, increased settlement expansion (A/HRC/34/39, para. 25; A/HRC/37/43, para. 5; A/74/357, para. 5) was mirrored by a sharp rise in demolitions in East Jerusalem (A/72/564, para. 23). The record number of demolitions witnessed in 2019 (see para. 30 above) - the largest number in the past 15 years⁴¹ - led to the displacement of 330 Palestinians, including 88 girls and 84 boys. The number of self-demolitions to avoid heavy fines by the Jerusalem Municipality continued to rise (59 during the period under review, as against 31 during the previous period).⁴²

44. Demolitions conducted in the context of the discriminatory planning system are unlawful and amount to forced evictions (A/HRC/42/40, para. 20; A/72/564, paras. 26 and 49). They may also result in violations of the rights to an adequate standard of living, to adequate housing and to education. Women and children suffer disproportionately from the practice of demolitions and other forced evictions, which can also make them vulnerable to acts of violence and sexual abuse when they are rendered homeless.⁴³ In one case monitored

³⁷ Prosecutor v. Krajišnik, Case No. IT-00-39-T, International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Trial Chamber, 2006, para. 729-730.

³⁸ Aviv Tatarsky and Architect Efrat Cohen-Bar, Deliberately Planned: A Policy to Thwart Planning in the Palestinian Neighbourhoods of Jerusalem, Ir Amim and Bimkom, February 2017.

³⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the occupied Palestinian territory, Occupied Palestinian Territory: Humanitarian Facts and Figures, 2017 (available from www.ochaopt.org/sites/default/files/factsheet_booklet_final_21_12_2017.pdf), p. 14.

⁴⁰ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the occupied Palestinian territory, Humanitarian Bulletin, occupied Palestinian territory, May 2019.

⁴¹ www.btselem.org/planning_and_building/east_jerusalem_statistics.

⁴² See also A/74/357, para. 31.

⁴³ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 7 (1997) on forced evictions, para. 10.

by OHCHR, a female head of household reported being exposed to gender-based violence while seeking alternative accommodation following the demolition of her home. In other cases, women reported an adverse impact on their private life, including having to be veiled at all times after moving into the homes of extended families.

45. OHCHR monitored the case of a family of six, including four children, who, following the demolition of their house in Beit Hanina, Al Ashqarieh neighbourhood, were forced to relocate to Shu'fat refugee camp, on the West Bank side of the wall, within the Municipality of Jerusalem. On 24 September 2019, citing the lack of a building permit, Israeli authorities demolished the house, reportedly without prior notice and at a time where the whole family was not present and could not therefore retrieve belongings prior to the demolition. After their home was destroyed, the family, given the financial constraints they faced and the high cost of renting a house in East Jerusalem, moved with the father's parents to Shu'fat refugee camp, an area that is severely underserved and plagued by a high criminality rate. Since being displaced, the father has not been able to maintain his work attendance due to the need to accompany his children through the checkpoint to and from their school in Shu'fat.

2. H2 area of Hebron

46. Since 1994, after an Israeli settler opened fire in the Ibrahimi Mosque (Tomb of the Patriarchs), killing 29 Palestinians and injuring 125 others, Israeli authorities have imposed a range of restrictions and discriminatory measures on Palestinians in Hebron, particularly the H2 area, where 35,000 Palestinians live.⁴⁴ As at December 2019, there were five settlement compounds and approximately 700 settlers in H2. Israeli authorities have cited the need to prevent security incidents to justify extensive restrictions, which only apply to Palestinians and not to settlers living in the area. Israeli security forces are heavily present (estimated at 6,000 soldiers) to enforce restrictions and provide for the security of settlers.

47. The settlements and related Israeli policies have had a serious negative impact on the human rights of Palestinians, including their personal security, freedom of movement, access to livelihood, education, health and justice services, as well as their right to family life. These conditions have created a distinctively coercive environment, which has caused many Palestinians to leave (see A/71/355). Surveys conducted in the so-called "restricted areas" of H2, adjacent to settlements, and partially or totally closed to Palestinian vehicular and/or pedestrian traffic, found that more than 1,000 housing units – between one third and 41 per cent of Palestinian homes⁴⁵ – in these areas had been vacated since 2000.

48. Palestinians who remain in H2 face very difficult and insecure living conditions. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 30 Palestinians (including two girls and six boys) were killed by Israeli security forces between October 2015 and October 2019 in H2,⁴⁶ including one man during the period under review (A/74/357, para. 64). Most Palestinians were killed by Israeli security forces in the context of attacks or alleged attacks. OHCHR documented many of these cases and identified situations of unnecessary and disproportionate use of force, in some cases possibly amounting to extrajudicial executions (A/71/355, paras. 36–43; A/71/364, paras. 8–9; A/72/565, para. 9). The sense of insecurity caused by the presence of Israeli security forces and security operations, including frequent house raids, harassment and arbitrary arrests, constituted a core element of the coercive environment in H2 (A/HRC/34/39, para. 52; A/71/355 paras. 25–50), which particularly affected children's safety and education (A/74/357, paras. 64–68). Between 1

⁴⁴ In 1997, under the Protocol concerning redeployment in Hebron, the city was divided into H2 (20 per cent of the city), placed under full Israeli control, and largely coinciding with the Old City, while the remaining H1 was placed under Palestinian control. See A/71/355, para. 26.

⁴⁵ See B'Tselem, Ghost Town: Israel's Separation Policy and Forced Eviction of Palestinians from the Center of Hebron, May 2007, p.14. A survey conducted in 2015 by the Hebron Rehabilitation Committee found that out of 3,369 housing units surveyed in the area, almost a third (1,079 housing units) were empty; see Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the occupied Palestinian territory, The Humanitarian Situation in the H2 Area of Hebron City: Findings of Needs Assessment, April 2019, p. 16.

⁴⁶ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, a male Israeli settler was also killed in the same period.

November 2018 and 30 September 2019, there were 66 incidents of interference in education by Israeli security forces in H2, including one incident of the military use of a school, which affected 9,526 children (including 461 girls).⁴⁷ In the same period, Israeli security forces detained 23 boys who were commuting to or from school, mostly on allegations of stone throwing.

49. Daily acts of violence and harassment of Palestinians by settlers, most often carried out with impunity (see A/74/357, paras. 55–57), compound a coercive environment. While the number of incidents had decreased in previous years, settler violence intensified following the removal of Temporary International Presence in Hebron observers in January 2019 (ibid., para. 54). According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the number of settler attacks causing Palestinian casualties and/or property damage in the doubled to 40 during the period under review.

50. Since late 2015, heightened movement restrictions have further isolated H2. As at April 2019, there were 121 physical obstacles and 21 permanently staffed checkpoints in an area of approximately four square kilometres. Six of them, controlling Palestinian access to the “restricted areas”, were fortified with towers, turnstiles, revolving doors and metal detectors.⁴⁸ According to a survey conducted in 2019 by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 5,600 Palestinians living in H2 restricted areas must cross one of these checkpoints on foot to reach their homes. Approximately 6,200 (89 per cent of the residents) cannot reach their home by vehicle.⁴⁹ Movement and access restrictions are particularly taxing for Palestinians in Tel Rumeida and Ash-Shuhada streets. Since they were designated a “closed military area” in November 2015, only residents registered with Israeli authorities have access to the area. The designation was officially lifted in May 2016, and the checkpoints leading to Tel Rumeida have since been equipped with facial recognition cameras, purportedly to expedite the passage of residents who have an ID registration number. However, residents informed OHCHR that procedures at checkpoints remain uncertain, and that, depending on the Israeli security brigade operating the checkpoint, they may be let through by only showing their ID or may be additionally requested to pass through a metal detector, or be subjected to a humiliating body search.⁵⁰ Access procedures are often applied arbitrarily by Israeli security forces to non-residents.

51. Representatives of a women’s organization operating in H2 informed OHCHR that movement restrictions and risk of harassment at checkpoints and at the hands of settlers have limited women’s access to education, work opportunities and health care, compounding negative aspects of traditional gender roles. Girls are often pressured into early marriage as a means of “protection”, including by leaving H2. In cases monitored by OHCHR, female residents reported they would not leave their homes unless accompanied by men, particularly on Jewish Shabbat, fearing attacks by settlers. In other cases, women reported having to miss medical appointments to avoid crossing checkpoints to and from H1, where most services have relocated.

52. The compounded effect of factors described above creates a coercive environment in H2, where Palestinians are forced to leave their homes and community in the old city. In such circumstances, their decision to leave cannot be considered genuinely “free”, thus raising concerns of forcible transfer.

53. OHCHR and other organizations have previously documented cases of Palestinians leaving their homes in H2, including Tel Rumeida (A/71/355, para. 62; A/73/410, para. 19).⁵¹ It gathered information according to which at least 6 Palestinians families moved from Tel

⁴⁷ Data verified by United Nations entities monitoring children affected by armed conflict.

⁴⁸ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, The Humanitarian Situation in the H2 Area of Hebron City, p. 5.

⁴⁹ Ibid.

⁵⁰ See also Badil Resource Center for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights, Brief – Forced Population Transfer: the Case of the Old City of Hebron, October 2016, pp. 30–31.

⁵¹ See also Eyal Hareuveni, Playing the Security Card: Israeli Policy in Hebron as a Means to Effect Forcible Transfer of Local Palestinians, B’Tselem, September 2019, p. 23; and Simon Reynolds, Coercive Environments: Israel’s Forcible Transfer of Palestinians in the Occupied Territory, Badil Resource Center for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights, February 2017, p. 15.

Rumeida between October 2018 and August 2019 owing to coercive factors. This was the case of Fawaz Abu Eisheh who, on 8 December 2019, moved with his spouse and three children (aged 2, 8, and 10 years) to the H1 area of Hebron. He told OHCHR that the long-standing movement restrictions and, above all, the fear for the safety of his children, had forced him to leave H2.

54. Fawaz was born in Tel Rumeida. Upon marriage, he convinced his wife, from H1, to join him in Tel Rumeida. He owned a house located at the opposite end of the street leading to the Ramat Yishai settlement, where several Palestinians have been killed by Israeli security forces. Israeli security forces are permanently stationed only 10 metres from his house to ensure safe passage of settlers. The checkpoints and the inability to reach his home by car affected all aspects of the family's life. In 2015, after Fawaz witnessed the killing by Israeli security forces of 18-year old Hadeel Hashlamoun (A/71/355, para. 36)⁵² and other Palestinians in Tel Rumeida, he and his family decided to leave. He stated that his wife had started to suffer from insomnia, his children had begun to soil their beds, and there was shooting at night. The family sold all it could and began to build a house in H1, with current debts of 150,000 shekels.

3. Communities in Area C and other communities bordering settlements in the West Bank

55. Previous reports have identified factors that have created a coercive environment in Area C of the West Bank and areas adjacent to Israeli settlements, including demolitions in the context of the unlawful and discriminatory zoning and planning regime, and the threat of demolitions (A/HRC/34/39, para. 47; A/74/357, para. 28; A/HRC/40/42, paras. 17-20, A/68/513 para. 32), Israeli plans to relocate entire Palestinian communities (coupled with history of past evictions of entire communities by Israeli authorities) (A/HRC/34/39, paras. 44-45; A/HRC/40/42, para. 17; A/72/564, paras. 36-57), exposure to military training in and around Israeli-defined firing zones (A/HRC/34/39, para. 52), intimidation and harassment from Israeli security forces and government officials (ibid., para. 50), and settler violence committed with impunity (ibid., para. 24; A/74/357, para. 38). It has also been noted that one factor alone can be sufficient to create a coercive environment (A/HRC/34/39, para. 42) and to trigger concerns of forcible transfer.

56. As in East Jerusalem, the implementation of discriminatory zoning and planning policies has led to extensive destruction of Palestinian property, placing individuals and communities at risk of forcible transfer. Israeli authorities fully control planning and construction in Area C, which covers more than 60 per cent of the West Bank. Through measures such as the designation of "State land" and "firing zones", Israeli authorities have allocated 70 per cent of Area C to exclusive Israeli use (ibid., para. 14.),⁵³ including the construction and expansion of settlements, and made building permits in remaining areas nearly impossible for Palestinians to obtain.⁵⁴ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, during the current period under review, seizures or demolitions in Area C led to the displacement of 361 people, including 171 children.

57. Settler violence and harassment can also put pressure on people living in communities in proximity to settlements to move (A/HRC/40/42, para. 50), including in Areas A and B, where settler violence, seemingly often tolerated by State officials, is used as a tool to take over additional land and further expand Israeli control beyond the jurisdiction of settlements

⁵² An enquiry conducted by the Israeli security forces found that her death was unnecessary and avoidable. The incident led to incidents during which Palestinians were killed in attacks, or alleged attacks.

⁵³ See also Yael Stein, Fake Justice: The Responsibility Israel's High Court Justices Bear for the Demolition of Palestinian Homes and the Dispossession of Palestinians, B'Tselem, February 2019, pp. 7-9.

⁵⁴ Less than one per cent of Area C is planned for Palestinian construction. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the occupied Palestinian territory, Humanitarian Facts and Figures, 2017, p. 8.

into areas under Palestinian control (A/HRC/34/39, para. 18).⁵⁵ A flashpoint for settler violence remained the Nablus Governorate, which alone recorded 60 per cent of all Palestinian casualties from settlers' attacks in 2019.⁵⁶ Six Palestinian villages surrounding Yitzhar settlement continued to be targeted by repeated and apparently organized settler violence, prompting several Palestinian families to leave their homes and relocate.⁵⁷

58. OHCHR documented the cases of two families forced to leave their homes on the outskirts of Urif village, in 2019, under the pressure of continued incursions by settlers from Yitzhar settlement. In one case, a divorced woman decided to leave her house, located 600 metres from Yitzhar, to protect her nine children from repeated settler attacks. She and her former husband had endured several settler attacks in previous years.⁵⁸ She decided to leave after two consecutive attacks, on 5 and 9 May 2019, and after her ex-husband had moved out of the house. During both incidents, a group of settlers stormed the house with stones while the children were inside. On 9 May, the incursion of settlers was followed by the intervention of Israeli security forces and a settler security guard, who fired a tear-gas canister then live ammunition at neighbours who had intervened to protect the children. The woman left her house the day after the attack and moved into a tent with her children outside the village. In a separate case, in June 2019, after settlers repeatedly targeted their property with stones, a couple and their three small children sold their house in the outskirts of Urif and relocated to the opposite end of town.

59. In previous reports, the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have stressed that, contrary to the obligations of Israel as the occupying Power to ensure the safety and security of the occupied population, settlers largely enjoy impunity for attacks against Palestinians (see A/HRC/31/43, para. 37; A/HRC/34/39, para. 18; and A/HRC/40/42, para. 55).

V. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

60. On 25 March 2019, the President of the United States of America issued a proclamation recognizing Israeli sovereignty over the occupied Syrian Golan. Within a week of the proclamation, reports emerged that Israel was planning to transfer 250,000 people to the occupied Syrian Golan by 2048, to build 30,000 new homes and to create 45,000 new jobs.⁵⁹ Shortly after the proclamation, the Government of Israel announced the establishment of a new settlement town in the northern part of the occupied Syrian Golan.⁶⁰ At a meeting of the Security Council on 27 March 2019, the Under-Secretary-General for Political and Peacebuilding Affairs reiterated the position of the United Nations on the occupied Syrian Golan, as reflected in the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions, notably Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 497 (1981).⁶¹

61. In parallel to these plans for the expansion of settlements, Israel continued to maintain extremely restrictive zoning and building policies, with an impact on the Syrian population. These include the issuance of demolition orders and a recent process aimed at zoning some of the only viable land for expansion of Syrian villages as a national park.

62. The occupied Syrian Golan continues to be used for Israeli renewable and non-renewable energy industry expansion. In a submission to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in relation to the periodic report of Israel, Al-Marsad, a non-governmental human rights organization active in the area, asserted that the Israeli energy ⁵⁵ See also Yonatan Yanonich, "Yitzhar, A Case Study: Settler violence as a vehicle for taking over Palestinian land with state and military backing", Yesh Din, August 2018.

⁵⁶ Information provided by the West Bank Inter-Cluster Coordination Group; data on file.

⁵⁷ At least three families moved from Burin and Urif villages in 2018; see A/HRC/40/42, para. 50.

⁵⁸ OHCHR documented two attacks, on 25 and 29 April 2017. In one attack, the woman's ex-husband was injured with multiple fractures.

⁵⁹ "Al-Marsad Rejects New Illegal Settlement Plan for the Occupied Syrian Golan", Al-Marsad, 3 April 2019.

⁶⁰ "Golan Heights: Israel unveils 'Trump Heights' settlement", BBC News, 16 June 2019.

⁶¹ S/PV.8495, p.2.

industry was involved in the exploitation of natural resources, while residents of the occupied Syrian Golan were unable to develop their own energy industries owing to Israeli restrictions.⁶²

63. Developments affecting the Syrian population of the occupied Syrian Golan were noted during the period under review in relation to the “Clean Wind Energy Project”; a renewable energy project, which is expected to have a significant impact on the livelihoods, culture, health and environment of Syrian residents.⁶³ Reportedly, the 31 wind turbines planned, which can reach a height of 220 metres, will be built on Syrian agricultural lands and in proximity to Syrian population centres. It is expected to occupy some 4,300 dunums of land, almost a quarter of the agricultural land remaining in the possession of the residents of the occupied Syrian Golan. Al-Marsad estimated that Syrian landowners would receive about 1 per cent of the total profits of the project once it is operational.⁶⁴ It also noted that the project could have a severe impact on health and the environment, while further limiting the possibility for Syrian village expansion and undercutting the important cultural ties that residents of the occupied Syrian Golan maintain to the land.⁶⁵ The project was reportedly advanced without the free, prior and informed consent of Syrian residents, who have filed a local petition with 5,000 signatures opposing the project.⁶⁶

64. During the period under review, Al-Marsad was repeatedly targeted by a smear campaign for its activities opposing the energy project. The energy company filed under the anti-boycott law of Israel a lawsuit against Al-Marsad for a report it had published outlining the implications of the project for the Syrian community. The company demands that Al-Marsad retract and apologize for allegedly slanderous material it has published on the project. This is the first time that a non-profit human rights organization registered in Israel⁶⁷ has been sued under the anti-boycott law, and could set a concerning precedent that would have a widespread impact on civil society in Israel.

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

65. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory amounts to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law.⁶⁸ The transfer of an occupying Power’s population to a territory it occupies amounts to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.⁶⁹ A number of international bodies have confirmed the illegality of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan, including the International Court of Justice, the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.⁷⁰

66. Plans for further housing units in settlements increased, while the announcement of tenders and the rate of construction starts of settlement housing decreased. Incidents of settler violence continued at a high rate and the severity of attacks and injuries to Palestinians increased, without any decisive action by Israeli authorities to protect the Palestinian population in accordance with their obligations as the occupying Power.

⁶² http://golan-marsad.org/wp-content/uploads/AM-AH_Joint-Parallel-Report-to-the-CESCR-Israel-2019.pdf, para. 23.

⁶³ Ibid., para. 26.

⁶⁴ Ibid., para. 27.

⁶⁵ Ibid., para. 28.

⁶⁶ http://golan-marsad.org/wp-content/uploads/Al-Marsad_Urgent-Appeal-to-UN-Experts.pdf.

⁶⁷ Israel applies its domestic law also within the occupied Syrian Golan, and therefore requires local non-governmental organizations to be registered with the Government of Israel.

⁶⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

⁶⁹ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

⁷⁰ See Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

Cases in which the Israeli security forces appeared to have used force against the protected population instead of protecting it are of utmost concern.

67. Settler violence continued to adversely affect Palestinian society, violating a range of rights. Such violence, coupled with settler cultivation of land, and the practices of Israeli security forces, may gradually prevent Palestinians from having access to their lands, which then risk becoming part of the unofficial expansion of settlement perimeters.

68. Palestinians in Area C, the H2 area of Hebron and East Jerusalem continue to be subjected to restrictive and discriminatory policies and practices, and to increased tension and violence due to the existence and growth of settlements. These policies and practices violate several rights and contribute to a coercive environment. Palestinians living in such an environment may have no practical choice but to leave their places of residence. Displacement and relocation to alternative residential areas as a result of a coercive environment could amount to forms of forcible transfer, contrary to the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian and human rights law.

69. The High Commissioner recalls Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council decided that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void, and without international legal effect.

70. On the basis of the findings presented in the present and in previous reports, the High Commissioner recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Halt immediately and reverse all settlement development and related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, in compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

(b) Rescind all policies and practices contributing to the creation of a coercive environment and/or increasing the risk of forcible transfer;

(c) Review planning laws and policies to ensure that they are compliant with the obligations of Israel under international human rights and international humanitarian law;

(d) Refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders on the basis of discriminatory and illegal planning policies and practices that may lead to forcible transfer, including of Bedouin and herder communities;

(e) Take all steps necessary to protect the Palestinian population, including to prevent attacks by settlers, and to ensure accountability in cases of settler violence against Palestinians and their property;

(f) End policies and practices within the occupied Syrian Golan that may lead to discrimination against protected persons.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
15 February 2021

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-sixth session

22 February–19 March 2021

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

In the present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 43/31, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights provides an update on the implementation of resolution 43/31 from 1 November 2019 to 31 October 2020. The High Commissioner describes the expansion of Israeli settlement activities and their negative impact on the rights of Palestinian people and on the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in and around East Jerusalem. The High Commissioner also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 43/31, in which the Council requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the resolution at its forty-sixth session, with particular emphasis on the consequences of the intensification of settlement activity and other steps taken towards formal annexation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in and around East Jerusalem and the so-called E1 area, for the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and their implications for the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people. In the report, which covers the period from 1 November 2019 to 31 October 2020, the High Commissioner also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

2. The report is based on monitoring and other information-gathering activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and on information provided by governmental sources, other United Nations entities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations, and civil society in the occupied Syrian Golan. It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports submitted by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to the General Assembly and to the Human Rights Council.¹ The quarterly updates and reports of the Secretary-General presented to the Security Council on the implementation of Security Council resolution 2334 (2016) also provide relevant information.²

3. During the period under review, Israeli settlement expansion continued at a rapid pace in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Policies and acts contributing to a coercive environment, including demolition of Palestinian property and resulting displacement, reached the highest levels since 2016 despite the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic. High levels of settler violence persisted, as well as a significant lack of accountability for such acts.

4. These developments took place against a backdrop of intensified political rhetoric of annexation.³ Following the announcement of the United States of America Peace to Prosperity Vision in January 2020, the Prime Minister of Israel stated that “Israel will apply its laws to the Jordan Valley, to all the Jewish communities in Judea and Samaria, and to other areas that the plan [of the Government of the United States] designates as part of Israel and which the United States has agreed to recognize as part of Israel.”⁴ On 20 April 2020, the new coalition Government of Israel agreed to put forward to the Knesset the proposal to annex parts of the occupied West Bank from 1 July 2020. On 22 April 2020, the President of the State of Palestine rejected any annexation and on 19 May 2020, he announced that the State of Palestine was no longer bound by its political agreements with Israel.⁵ On 13 August 2020, a joint announcement by Israel, the United Arab Emirates and the United States stated that “Israel will suspend declaring sovereignty” over the West Bank, as part of the normalization deal with the United Arab Emirates.⁶

5. If implemented, annexation of any part of the West Bank would constitute a most serious violation of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations.⁷ It would also severely impede the exercise by the Palestinian people of their right to self-determination.⁸ Such a step, which has no legal validity and constitutes a flagrant violation

¹ A/74/357, A/75/376, A/HRC/40/39, A/HRC/40/42, A/HRC/40/43 and A/HRC/43/67.

² See <https://unsco.unmissions.org/security-council-briefings-0>.

³ A/74/357, paras. 12–13.

⁴ See <https://trumpwhitehouse.archives.gov/briefings-statements/remarks-president-trump-prime-minister-netanyahu-state-israel-joint-statements>.

⁵ See www.timesofisrael.com/abbas-threatens-to-rip-up-accords-with-israel-us-if-annexation-plans-proceed and www.theguardian.com/world/2020/may/20/palestinian-leader-mahmoud-abbas-ends-security-agreement-with-israel-and-us.

⁶ See <https://il.usembassy.gov/joint-statement-of-the-united-states-the-state-of-israel-and-the-united-arab-emirates>.

⁷ S/2020/596, annex I; and A/75/376, para. 13.

⁸ A/75/376, para. 13.

under international law, would entrench the establishment of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.⁹

II. Legal framework

6. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are concurrently applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In particular, Israel is bound by the obligations of an occupying Power as set out in international humanitarian law. A detailed analysis of the legal framework in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory is contained in two reports of the Secretary-General, A/HRC/34/38 and A/HRC/34/39.

III. Activities related to settlements

7. During the period under review, tenders for settlement construction accelerated, while the advancement of plans and construction starts for settlements slowed. There were 4 new outposts established during the period under review, down from 12 in the previous reporting period.¹⁰ Policies and acts contributing to a coercive environment, such as demolitions and forced evictions, increased and acts of settler violence continued at a high rate.

A. Settlement expansion: land designation, planning and tenders

8. Plans for some 9,300 housing units were advanced or approved in West Bank settlements, including approximately 400 in East Jerusalem.¹¹ During the previous reporting period, some 13,600 housing units in the West Bank, including, 2,000 in East Jerusalem, were advanced or approved by the Israeli authorities and 6,300 in the period before that.¹²

9. On 27 February 2020, the Higher Planning Council of the Israeli Civil Administration approved 12 plans in 11 settlements with 1,737 housing units. The plans include a new industrial park south of Qalqilya.¹³ On 14 and 15 October, in one of the largest collective advancements in recent years, Israeli authorities advanced some 5,000 housing units in Area C, approximately 80 per cent of which are planned in settlements in outlying locations, deep inside the occupied West Bank.¹⁴ On 25 October 2020, Israeli authorities informed the Jerusalem District Court of the imminent issuance of a building permit for the construction of 31 settlement units in Hebron H2.¹⁵

10. Israeli authorities announced tenders for a total of 3,200 units, compared with 1,900 units during the previous reporting period, more than half of them in East Jerusalem. They include tenders related to two plans in the strategic area of E1, which would significantly disrupt the contiguity of territory between East Jerusalem and the West Bank and disconnect

⁹ Security Council resolution 2334 (2016), para. 1.

¹⁰ Peace Now, on file. The new outposts are Amihai South, Har Eival, Um Zaitun and Asfar South. See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/population>.

¹¹ Information provided by the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process.

¹² A/HRC/43/67, para. 7.

¹³ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/1739-settlement-units-promoted-eli-settlement-housing-legalized-new-industrial-park>.

¹⁴ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/4948-settlement-units-advanced-at-october-2020-higher-planning-council-sessions>. The advancements are in: Mishor Adumim Industrial Area, Maale Adumim, Alfei Menashe, Karnei Shomron, Efrat, Shima, Patzuel Motor Park, Maale Efrayim, Beit El, Har Gilo, Telem, Einav, Barkan, Pduel, Yakir, Maale Shomron, Yizhar, Eli, Kfar Adumim, Maale Michmash, Geva Binyamin (Adam), Kochav Yaacov, Shilo, Nili, Psagot, Pnei Kedem, Ariel, Bracha, Rimomim, Kfar Eldad, Asfar, Kerem Reim and New Givon.

¹⁵ See http://peacenow.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2020/10/state_update_permit_Hebron_251020.pdf (in Hebrew only).

Ramallah and the northern West Bank from Bethlehem and the southern West Bank (see sect. IV).¹⁶

11. The official data available for the period from 1 November 2019 to 31 September 2020 indicate a decrease in the commencement of new settlement construction in Area C (837 units compared with 1,504 during the previous period).

12. With regard to land designations, for the first time in 35 years, the Israeli Civil Administration issued expropriation orders on 4 September 2020 for two archaeological sites in the West Bank, which are on privately owned Palestinian property in Deir Sam'an and Deir Kala' adjacent to the Leshem and Peduel settlements.¹⁷ Under international humanitarian law, cultural property must be protected and its misappropriation is prohibited.¹⁸ Furthermore, private property must be respected and cannot be confiscated, unless the seizure is required by imperative military necessity.¹⁹

B. Consolidation of settlements

13. According to the latest data available from the Central Bureau of Statistics of Israel, there were 220,000 settlers in East Jerusalem as at 31 December 2018 and 441,600 settlers in the rest of the West Bank as at 31 December 2019.²⁰ For decades, Israel has granted benefits and incentives to settlers,²¹ which amounts to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory.²² While the Government of Israel has implemented extensive infrastructure projects to facilitate the movement of settlers, the movement of Palestinians in the West Bank has been restricted in a manner that severely infringes upon their freedom of movement and access to services and livelihoods.²³ Furthermore, during the reporting period, there were significant political developments pertaining to plans to annex occupied territory (see para. 4 above).

14. In September 2020, Israeli media reported that the Government of Israel had allocated 20 million new shekels to survey and map unauthorized Palestinian construction in Area C.²⁴ The budget was allocated to the newly founded Ministry of Settlement Affairs rather than the Israeli Civil Administration.

15. On 29 September 2020, following objections from the Hebron Municipality to issue a permit, the planning and licensing subcommittee of the Israeli Civil Administration approved the construction of a lift at the Ibrahimi Mosque (Tomb of the Patriarchs) for the stated reason of facilitating access for persons with disabilities. In addition to being based on an unlawful planning and zoning regime,²⁵ this decision seizes the municipal planning authority over the ancient site from the Palestinian Hebron Municipality and it will allow the Israeli Civil Administration to expropriate land that belongs to the Islamic Waqf. The occupying Power is obligated to respect the laws in force in the occupied territory,²⁶ and shall

¹⁶ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_30_march_2020_2334.pdf and https://peacenow.org.il/en/netanyahu-promotes-the-construction-in-e1#inbox/_blank.

¹⁷ See <https://alt-arch.org/en/expropriation-orders-west-bank>.

¹⁸ Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, art. 4.

¹⁹ Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, annex: Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (The Hague Regulations), arts. 46 and 56. See also International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Customary International Humanitarian database, rules 40 and 51 (https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule40 and https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule51).

²⁰ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/population>.

²¹ A/HRC/28/44, para. 14; Eyal Hareuveni, By Hook and by Crook: Israeli Settlement Policy in the West Bank (Jerusalem, B'Tselem, 2010); and Limor Yehuda and others, One Rule, Two Legal Systems: Israel's Regime of Laws in the West Bank (Tel Aviv, Association for Civil Rights in Israel, 2014).

²² A/67/375, para. 10.

²³ A/73/410, paras. 39–43; A/HRC/37/43, paras. 38 and 56–62; and A/HRC/40/42, para. 35.

²⁴ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israel-settlement-ministry-gets-6m-to-survey-unauthorized-palestinian-construction-1.9147627?Lts=1600066433905.

²⁵ A/HRC/31/43, paras. 45 and 60.

²⁶ The Hague Regulations, art. 43.

be regarded only as administrator and usufructuary of public buildings situated in the occupied country and abstain from introducing irreversible changes, particularly if detrimental to the rights and prerogatives of the occupied population.²⁷

C Legal developments, including regularization of outposts

16. On 9 June 2020, the High Court of Justice of Israel struck down as unconstitutional the Judea and Samaria Settlement Regulation Law (the “Regularization Law”), which would have allowed legalization of outposts and settlements on private Palestinian land. The Court found that the law infringed on the right to property, equality and dignity of Palestinians.²⁸ Despite this positive decision, serious concerns remain due to the existing alternative legal mechanisms available to legalize outposts and settlements, some of which the Attorney General of Israel has promoted during and after the legal process.²⁹ In a legal opinion issued on 7 November 2016, the Attorney General approved the use of Military Order No. 59 (1967) to legalize settlement constructions built on private Palestinian land, when built in good faith, based on the assumption that it was on State land, and with adequate compensation to the lawful landowners.³⁰

17. On 27 August 2020, the Supreme Court of Israel ruled to overturn the decision of the Jerusalem District Court to apply Military Order No. 59 (1967) to legalize the outpost of Mitzpe Kramim that was built on private Palestinian land. This decision overturns the first use of Military Order No. 59 (1967) as interpreted in the Attorney General’s legal opinion of November 2016 to bypass the striking down of the Regularization Law.³¹ The Court ruled that, within 36 months, the land must be vacated and returned to its Palestinian owners, after the State finds proper and appropriate alternative solutions for the settlers. On 28 August 2020, Israeli media reported that the Prime Minister of Israel had stated that “all avenues will be explored to keep the residents where they are and we are convinced that we will succeed in this”.³²

18. In October 2020, as part of the 4,948 units advanced by the Higher Planning Council, 253 units in outposts became retroactively legal under Israeli law – 133 units in Tapuach West, south of Nablus, and 120 units in Pnei Kedem, north east of Hebron, by recognizing the outpost as a “neighbourhood” of the Asfar (Metzad) settlement, despite the two areas of construction being non-contiguous.³³ This is an example of the alternative mechanisms used to retroactively legalize outposts.

D Impact of settlements on human rights

1. Settlement-related violence

19. Incidents of settler violence continued at the high level of the previous reporting period. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), there were 339 incidents of settler violence,³⁴ compared with 325 incidents reported during the ²⁷ Ibid., arts. 43 and 55; and Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 47. See also High Court of Justice, Dwaikat et al. v. Government of Israel, HCJ 390/79, PD 34 (1), Judgment, 22 October 1979, 428. See also Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, art. 5.

²⁸ High Court of Justice, Silwad Municipality et al. v. Knesset et al., HCJ 1308/17, Judgment, 9 June 2020.

²⁹ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-gantz-nissenkorn-tell-staff-to-find-way-to-legalize-buildings-on-palestinian-land-1.8917013.

³⁰ A/73/410, para. 12; and A/HRC/37/43, paras. 16–17.

³¹ Adopted in February 2017, the Law remains unimplemented to date, following petitions to the High Court of Justice (A/73/410, para. 12).

³² See www.jpost.com/israel-news/court-orders-evacuation-of-homes-in-mitzpe-kramim-outpost-640240.

³³ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/4948-settlement-units-advanced-at-october-2020-higher-planning-council-sessions>.

³⁴ Incidents of settler violence resulting in casualties, damage to property or both.

previous period and 254 during the period before that. A total of 142 Palestinians were injured during such incidents, including 25 children and 6 women. Moreover, a total of 8,700 trees and 477 vehicles were vandalized. The most affected areas were in and around Nablus, Hebron and Ramallah. Notably, the violence occurred while Israeli and Palestinian authorities had imposed significant restrictions on movement, including full lockdown measures due to the COVID-19 pandemic, starting in March 2020. According to an Israeli source, 58 Israeli civilians were injured by Palestinians in the West Bank.³⁵

20. OHCHR has previously reported on the gendered impact of settler violence.³⁶ During the reporting period, there were worrying incidents of settler violence targeting persons in vulnerable situations, including children, persons with disabilities and older persons (also documented in A/75/376). Settler violence targeting children is not a new phenomenon and OHCHR has previously reported on its impact on the right to education.³⁷

21. Numerous settler attacks against children monitored by OHCHR occurred in the presence of Israeli security forces. In the period under review, there were at least seven such attacks targeting children in the H2 area of Hebron. For example, on 23 November 2019, in Wadi al-Hussein, four adult settlers pepper sprayed, kicked and slapped a 9-year-old boy. The boy suffered bruises, burns and psychological distress. Israeli security forces stationed nearby did not take action to prevent the attack. On 11 March 2020, settlers physically assaulted a 15-year-old Palestinian boy and his 25-year-old sister on Shuhada Street. Two adult settlers drove their vehicle towards the boy at close range. The driver pulled over, stepped out of the car and kicked, pushed and punched the boy, while the other settler repeatedly pushed the boy's sister. A soldier in the Israeli security forces stationed nearby had been watching the incident from a military cabin at Checkpoint 55. The young woman approached the Israeli soldier and asked him to intervene. As she returned to defend her brother, who in the meantime had started to fight off the settlers, she was pushed and kicked by a settler. The soldier rushed to the scene and violently pulled the boy away, while allowing the assailants to drive away. On 5 September 2020, more than 50 settlers armed with batons and pepper spray repeatedly threw stones at and physically assaulted residents of three Palestinian houses in Tel Rumeida for several hours. An elderly woman and a 14-year-old girl sustained deep bruises from stones thrown at them. Although present in the area, Israeli security forces failed to provide security for the Palestinian residents. The conduct of Israeli security forces in the cases above raises concerns that they failed to ensure public order and, in particular, the safety and security of the protected population as required by international humanitarian law.³⁸

22. Incidents of settler violence targeting young children were also reported in other parts of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. For example, on 10 March 2020, Israeli settlers entered the outskirts of Turmusaiya and asked a Palestinian family to show their identification. The family refused and a quarrel ensued, during which a settler snatched a 2-year-old Palestinian toddler from the arms of his grandfather. The settlers physically assaulted the family and damaged their vehicle, but the toddler's father and grandfather were able to get the toddler back and leave.

23. As in previous years, settler violence increased during the olive harvest.³⁹ In a large number of incidents, groves were damaged and crops stolen. On 13 October 2020, a group of settlers threw stones at six Palestinians (four children aged between 8 and 12, one man aged 72 and one woman aged 35) while in their olive groves in Ni'lin. Settlers physically assaulted the man, who lost consciousness while bleeding from the head and was hospitalized with bleeding in the brain, two cuts 5–10 cm long on his head and bruising on his back and ³⁵ Source: Rescuers without Borders Israel. This figure has not been verified by the United Nations.

³⁶ A/75/376, paras. 19–21; and A/HRC/40/42, para. 49.

³⁷ A/HRC/40/42, paras. 44–47.

³⁸ The Hague Regulations, art. 43; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

³⁹ A/HRC/28/44, paras. 32–38; and A/HRC/43/67, para. 22. In the first three weeks of the harvest, between 5 and 24 October 2020, Yesh Din reported to the Protection Cluster (under the Humanitarian Coordination Structure in the Occupied Palestinian Territory) 32 incidents leading to injury or damage to property.

arm. The family and a witness reported that some settlers used pepper spray against other Palestinians who were approaching. The family filed a complaint with the Israel Police.

24. Severe restrictions imposed by Israeli authorities on access to land for Palestinians seeking to harvest remained in place,⁴⁰ exacerbated by the halt in coordination between the Palestinian and Israeli authorities and the absence of international protection actors due to the restrictions on travel due to COVID-19. On 17 September 2020, just before the beginning of the olive harvest, 162 military orders were issued declaring 18,048 dunums of agricultural lands in the Governorates of Bethlehem, Hebron, Nablus, Qalqilya and Ramallah as closed military areas until the end of 2020.⁴¹ In a positive development, on 25 October 2020, the Government of Israel revoked regulations issued in November 2019, which had restricted the number of times each year that Palestinian farmers could access their lands in the seam zone, located between the wall and Israel.⁴²

2. Accountability for settler violence

25. Despite a few high-profile convictions and some steps taken towards accountability, violent settlers and those taking over private Palestinian land enjoyed a general climate of impunity.⁴³ In a report issued in August 2020, the Ministry of Justice of Israel listed 93 investigations into alleged crimes by settlers against Palestinians for the period between January 2019 and July 2020 (compared with 118 in the previous 18-month period). Two indictments were filed, including for cases opened in previous years, and five defendants were convicted, all for incidents that had taken place in 2014 and 2015.⁴⁴ Between January 2019 and July 2020, OCHA recorded 341 incidents of settler attacks against Palestinians,⁴⁵ including 2 killings and 113 injuries. In the report, the Ministry of Justice did not provide information on the number of complaints submitted by Palestinians, therefore there is no indication of the number of investigations opened compared with the number of complaints.

26. In January 2020, Yesh Din published a data sheet on law enforcement regarding ideologically motivated crimes against Palestinians in the West Bank based on data provided by Israeli authorities.⁴⁶ Yesh Din's monitoring of investigation files opened by the Judea and Samaria District Police (the Israel Police district for the West Bank) between 2005 and 2019 shows that 91 per cent had been closed without indictments and that the Israel Police had failed in the investigation⁴⁷ of 82 per cent of the files opened. As demonstrated by data from 2017–2019, the establishment of the Nationalistic-Motivated Crimes Unit within the Israel Police in 2013 does not appear to have produced significant improvements in the quality and outcomes of police investigations. Only 4 per cent of all files investigated between 2017 and 2019 resulted in indictments, while the failure rate in these investigations was 77 per cent. These findings raise serious concerns with regard to the effectiveness of law enforcement and accountability for settler violence in the West Bank.

27. On 2 May 2020, Israeli media reported that Lod District Court in Israel had ruled to allow a child suspected of killing a Palestinian woman, Aysha Arabi, in October 2018, to return to his home in the West Bank settlement of Kokhav Hashahar, pending his trial. The Israel Security Agency (Shin Bet) and State prosecutors objected to the decision, expressing ⁴⁰ A/75/376, para. 23.

⁴¹ According to information provided by the Palestinian Land Research Center.

⁴² See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israel-says-revoked-limits-on-palestinian-farmers-access-to-lands-near-green-line-1.9266801.

⁴³ A/74/357, para. 27.

⁴⁴ Israel, Ministry of Justice, "Investigation and prosecution of ideologically motivated offences against Palestinians in the West Bank" (August 2020). See also <https://mfa.gov.il/ProtectiveEdge/Documents/IdeologicalOffencesAgainstPalestinians.pdf>.

⁴⁵ For data on incidents of settler violence resulting in casualties, damage to property or both, see OCHA, Protection of Civilians database. Available at www.ochaopt.org/data/casualties.

⁴⁶ See www.yesh-din.org/en/data-sheet-december-2019-law-enforcement-on-israeli-civilians-in-the-west-bank.

⁴⁷ Ibid. Investigation failure includes: insufficient evidence (241 cases), offender unknown (736 cases) and files lost and never investigated (8 cases).

concerns that he would be further radicalized. On 20 October 2020, the trial for manslaughter at the Lod District Court began behind closed doors.⁴⁸

28. On 18 May 2020, Amiram Ben-Uliel was convicted by the Lod District Court of three counts of murder and two counts of attempted murder for the killing of the Dawabsheh family in their home, in the West Bank town of Duma, south of Nablus, in 2015. The Court acquitted him of being a member of a terrorist organization, and sentenced him on 14 September 2020 to 3 cumulative life sentences, in addition to 17 years in prison for attempted murder and 10 years for arson, and ordered him to pay 994,000 new shekels as compensation for the victims. The defence indicated that it would appeal the convictions to the Supreme Court. On 16 September 2020, the second accused, who was 17 years old at the time of the attack, was convicted for being a member of a terrorist organization and for conspiring to set fire to the home of the Dawabsheh family for racist motives, as well as for his involvement in other hate crimes not linked to the Duma incident. He was sentenced to 3 1/2 years in prison, followed by 18 months of probation, and ordered to pay 25,000 new shekels as compensation for the victims.

3. Demolitions, forced evictions and displacement

29. According to OCHA, during the period under review, 726 Palestinian-owned structures were demolished, including 131 donor-funded structures and 70 water and sanitation structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. These demolitions led to the displacement of 1,028 persons – 523 children, 255 women and 250 men – which is a significant increase from the 599 structures demolished and the displacement of 756 persons during the previous period. Approximately 75 per cent of the structures demolished were in Area C and 23 per cent in East Jerusalem.⁴⁹

30. Demolitions of Palestinian-owned structures increased by 27 per cent during the reporting period, despite a state of emergency having been declared across the West Bank since March 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The demolition of residential homes, water, sanitation and hygiene facilities, as well as health facilities, during a public health crisis further exposed many Palestinians to risks associated with the pandemic. On 26 March 2020, Israeli security forces dismantled and confiscated structures in Ibziq, Tubas, including a clinic and residential shelters. On 21 July 2020, during a period of significant daily increases of COVID-19 cases across the West Bank, with 80 per cent of active cases in Hebron,⁵⁰ Israeli authorities demolished a building that was being prepared as a COVID-19 screening and sample-collection centre in the city.⁵¹ In addition to violating the clear prohibition of destruction of property,⁵² these incidents could amount to a violation by the occupying Power of its obligation to ensure and maintain public health under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.⁵³

31. The impact of demolitions extends beyond the affected households. The operations of Israeli security forces to enforce demolitions led in some cases to clashes in which they responded by using force. For example, on 18 August 2020, Israeli security forces entered Jabal al-Mukabber in East Jerusalem and demolished a building under construction. Locals threw stones at Israeli security forces who responded by firing live ammunition, sponge-tipped bullets, stun grenades and tear gas. A 24-year-old man who was standing in a street about 100 metres away from the demolition site, who was not involved in any violence, was shot by Israeli security forces in the abdomen with live ammunition. He was taken to Al Makassed Islamic Charitable Society Hospital by ambulance. Shortly afterwards, Israeli security forces raided the hospital in which he was undergoing surgery in an attempt to arrest him. The man was discharged after 19 days and was summoned by Israeli security forces and interrogated about stone throwing. He was released on the questionable basis of five days'

⁴⁸ See also www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-trial-of-israeli-minor-accused-of-killing-of-palestinian-woman-begins-1.9248062.

⁴⁹ See OCHA, Database of West Bank Demolitions. Available at www.ochaopt.org/data/demolition.

⁵⁰ Data of the Palestinian Ministry of Health.

⁵¹ OCHA, Database of West Bank Demolitions.

⁵² Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53.

⁵³ Ibid., art. 56; and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 12.

house arrest and made to pay 3,000 new shekels. He suffers from pain and reduced mobility and has not been able to work since the incident.

32. The acceleration of demolitions of newly built Palestinian structures appears to be linked to two legislative amendments.⁵⁴ On 14 April 2020, the commander of the Israel Defense Forces amended Military Order No. 1797 to extend its enforcement period until 30 April 2021.⁵⁵ Military Order No. 1797 authorizes the Israeli Civil Administration to remove new structures in Area C within 96 hours of notice being issued; residential structures are considered new if these have been inhabited for less than 30 days. On 4 August 2020, Military Order No. 1252 regarding the removal of mobile structures was amended to allow the Israeli Civil Administration to seize, without prior notice, mobile structures in Area C within 90 days of construction, instead of 60 days.⁵⁶ Both military orders were extended and broadened, limiting opportunities for legal recourse. The Israeli Civil Administration itself, reporting to the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee⁵⁷ on “government activities to prevent the Palestinian Authority from taking over Area C”, touted the success of those amendments. For example, the head of the Israeli Civil Administration noted that Military Order No. 1797 had allowed them to remove 242 Palestinian structures in the first eight months of 2020.⁵⁸

33. On 30 April 2020, a new amendment to the procedure for submitting building permit applications in Area C was approved.⁵⁹ The amendment seeks to enable the outright rejection, on technical grounds, of applications, by claiming that they do not meet the new criteria, namely the requirement that every single inheritor of a plot of land must sign an application.⁶⁰

4. Communities at risk of forcible transfer

34. Palestinian communities across Area C remain at risk of forcible transfer as a result of a coercive environment, as reflected in the publicly stated intention of the Government of Israel to relocate thousands of Palestinians residing in Area C.⁶¹ At particular risk are Bedouin and herder communities, including 18 communities in and around East Jerusalem,⁶² communities in the Jordan Valley and those located in lands designated by Israel as closed military zones.

35. Settler organizations play a significant role in generating political and legal pressure on the Government of Israel to implement demolition orders. The head of the Israeli Civil Administration noted that coordination among various groups, including settlers that report immediately on Palestinian construction, has improved greatly. The former head of the Knesset Subcommittee for Civil and Security Issues in Judea and Samaria of the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee described, at the time it was still head of the Subcommittee, one of the settler organizations, Regavim, as an “intelligence officer” of the Subcommittee.⁶³

⁵⁴ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-knesset-committee-39-of-west-bank-suffices-for-palestinian-construction-1.9147990.

⁵⁵ Military Order No. 1846.

⁵⁶ Order regarding the transfer of goods (Judea and Samaria) (No. 1252), 5748-1998, Regulations regarding the transfer of goods (transportation of portable structures) (Amendment No. 4, 5720-2020).

⁵⁷ On 29 July and 13 August 2020.

⁵⁸ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-knesset-committee-39-of-west-bank-suffices-for-palestinian-construction-1.9147990.

⁵⁹ Cities, Villages and Buildings Planning Regulations (Request for Permit and Conditions) (Judea and Samaria), 5760-2020.

⁶⁰ After a military order issued in 1968, the land registration process was halted, leaving 60 per cent of land in the West Bank unregistered. Documentation regarding the ownership of land is incomplete in many cases, and there are often a large number of possible inheritors, of whom not all are involved in the current attempts to register land. This makes it extremely difficult to submit a complete application.

⁶¹ A/72/564, paras. 36–58; and A/HRC/34/39, para. 44. Regarding Khan al-Ahmar/Abu al-Helu, also A/74/357, paras. 12 and 36.

⁶² A/73/410, para. 22; A/74/357, para. 36; A/HRC/37/43, paras. 24–25; and A/HRC/43/67, para. 33.

⁶³ Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, “The Palestinian takeover of Area C”, minutes of the meeting of 13 August 2020. Available at https://fs.knesset.gov.il/23/Committees/23_ptv_581852.doc (in Hebrew only). See also www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-knesset-committee-39-of-west-bank-suffices-for-palestinian-construction-1.9147990.

Since June 2019, Regavim has been requesting the High Court of Justice of Israel to order the implementation of the demolition order for Khan al-Ahmar/Abu al-Helu, which comprises some 190 residents, pending since the Court approved the demolition on 5 September 2018. The ruling sets a precedent that may put dozens of other Bedouin communities at risk of demolition and possible forcible transfer across the West Bank.⁶⁴

36. Communities in Massafer Yatta, located in an area designated by Israel as closed for military training, continue to be at risk of demolition and possible forcible transfer. In June 2020, the High Court of Justice of Israel decided to exclude seven structures from an interim injunction that protects many community structures from demolition. In the same month, following the court decision, the Israeli Civil Administration demolished two structures in Jinba and, on 28 October 2020, Israeli authorities cut a donor-funded pipe supplying water to 14 herding communities in the Massafer Yatta, home to about 1,400 persons. During the pandemic, depriving these communities of water significantly worsens the pre-existing coercive environment in the area and could have particularly grave health consequences.

IV. Settlement expansion, its impact on the contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and implications for human rights of the Palestinian people, particularly in and around East Jerusalem

A. Settlement expansion and its impact on contiguity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory

37. Settlement expansion accelerated in East Jerusalem and surrounding areas following the announcement of the Peace to Prosperity plan by the United States, in January 2020, and calls from members of the Government of Israel to annex parts of the occupied West Bank. Around 5,600 units were advanced in East Jerusalem and surrounding areas. Some of the advancements were in the most sensitive areas, such as the E1 area for which plans have been frozen since 2012. The Secretary-General has previously expressed grave concern⁶⁵ and stated that the plans for settlements in East Jerusalem and surrounding areas, including in the E1 area, are of particular concern as they would isolate East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank and threaten to fragment the contiguity of the West Bank.⁶⁶

38. On 27 November 2019, construction work commenced on 176 new housing units in the East Jerusalem settlement of Nof Tzion, located in the centre of Jabal al-Mukabber. Upon completion, Nof Tzion will become the largest settlement located in the midst of a Palestinian neighbourhood in Jerusalem.⁶⁷

39. On 19 November 2019, the Jerusalem District Planning and Building Committee approved a plan outlining the construction of 290 housing units within the settlement of Gilo. The Committee rejected objections submitted by a Palestinian family who claimed ownership of the land and was currently residing in a home located on a portion of the land in question. The Committee refused to discuss the dispute over land ownership on the basis that it was beyond its purview and authority.⁶⁸

40. On 9 February 2020, a plan to create a new large settlement of 9,000 units in the area of the old Qalandiya/Atarot airport, north of Jerusalem, was submitted for initial approval.⁶⁹ The construction would disrupt the contiguity of territory between East Jerusalem and the Ramallah area. On 24 February 2020, tenders were announced for 1,077 housing units in a ⁶⁴ A/74/357, para. 36.

⁶⁵ See A/67/738.

⁶⁶ A/75/376, para. 61.

⁶⁷ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israel-begins-work-on-what-will-become-largest-settlement-in-east-jerusalem-1.8192737.

⁶⁸ See www.ir-amim.org.il/en/node/2373.

⁶⁹ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/plan-advanced-for-a-new-settlement-in-atarot-in-the-heart-of-palestinian-east-jerusalem>.

new settlement in Givat Hamatos, in the southern part of East Jerusalem.⁷⁰ Settlement advancements in Givat Hamatos and Gilo and the ongoing work to broaden Road 60 could completely isolate Beit Safafa from the rest of East Jerusalem, enclaving the Palestinian village of approximately 12,000 inhabitants.

41. On 9 March 2020, two plans for settlements were advanced at the Higher Planning Council for the construction of more than 3,412 housing units in the E1 area, which measures 12 km² and is adjacent to the Maale Adumim settlement, between East Jerusalem and Jericho.⁷¹ If advanced, as many as 3,000 Palestinians living in the area would be at risk of forced eviction and possible forcible transfer. Settlement plans advanced in February 2020 would create a contiguous, Israeli built-up area extending from Jerusalem through E1 to the Maale Adumim settlement, 11 km beyond the Green Line. This would significantly disrupt the contiguity of territory between East Jerusalem and the West Bank and disconnect Ramallah and the northern West Bank from Bethlehem and the southern West Bank.⁷² On the same day, the Minister of Defence of Israel announced his approval of a planned Palestinian-only road to allow movement between the two parts of the West Bank that would be severed by the construction of E1. The road would bypass the E1 area and thereby bar Palestinians from entering the area.⁷³

42. Settlement plans advanced by the planning and building authorities in East Jerusalem and E1 during the first half of 2020 also include the advancement of master plans for adding 6,100 housing units in the settlements of Har Homa and Givat Hamatos, the approval of two detailed outline plans for a total of 144 housing units in two settlement compounds in the Palestinian neighbourhood of Beit Hanina, a dormitory for dozens of yeshiva students in Sheikh Jarrah, and the advancement of nine detailed outline plans for a total of 2,870 housing units inside the built-up area of East Jerusalem settlements.⁷⁴

43. On 28 October 2020, the Jerusalem District Planning and Building Committee approved plans to construct a high-tech area in the Wadi al-Joz area of East Jerusalem. According to the municipality, approximately 200 Palestinian-owned industrial buildings would be demolished if the plan were to be implemented and tenants would be moved to complexes in Al-Issawiya and Umm Tuba in East Jerusalem.⁷⁵

44. Settlement advancements aimed at further consolidating a ring of settlements around Jerusalem not only sever East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank, but also result in further fragmentation of the West Bank. Fragmentation by large settlement blocs and their network of bypass roads and the wall has in effect segmented Salfit Governorate into three enclaves of village clusters.⁷⁶ Other examples include Wadi al-Khazark, Umm al-Rihan and Barta'a ash Sharqiya in Jenin,⁷⁷ Kafr Thulth and Azzun Atma in Qalqilya,⁷⁸ as well as around Bethlehem, including the isolation of multiple villages near Bethlehem.

45. On 6 May 2020, the Minister of Defence of Israel announced the advancement of 7,000 units in Bethlehem, in the area known as E2, as part of the Efrat settlement.⁷⁹ If built, they would effectively cut off 14 southern West Bank villages from their natural connection with Bethlehem and further cut off the city from Road 60, the main road connection to the ⁷⁰ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_30_march_2020_2334.pdf. This tender was originally published in February 2020 and delayed twice, in May and August 2020, before finally opening with 1,257 units on 15 November 2020. See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_30_march_2020_2334.pdf and <https://peacenow.org.il/en/a-new-opening-date-to-givat-hamatos-tender>.

⁷¹ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_30_march_2020_2334.pdf and https://peacenow.org.il/en/netanyahu-promotes-the-construction-in-e1#inbox/_blank.

⁷² Ibid.

⁷³ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_30_march_2020_2334.pdf and <https://peacenow.org.il/en/road-allow-e1-construction-is-being-promoted>.

⁷⁴ See www.ir-amim.org.il/en/node/2505.

⁷⁵ See www.jpost.com/israel-news/silicon-wadi-hi-tech-park-approved-in-east-jerusalem-647655.

⁷⁶ See www.jlac.ps/userfiles/Salfit-%20JLAC_pub.pdf.

⁷⁷ See www.jlac.ps/userfiles/Dhar%20A1%20Maleh%20Appeal.pdf.

⁷⁸ See www.jlac.ps/userfiles/Qalqilya-%20JLAC-%20EU%20feb%202020.pdf.

⁷⁹ A/75/376, para. 44.

southern West Bank, including Hebron. They would also prevent Bethlehem's development southward – the only direction that is not yet blocked by Israeli settlements or infrastructure.⁸⁰

46. The expansion of Har Gilo settlement is planned on the lands of the Palestinian village of Al-Walaja, covering 199 dunums and 560 housing units. Har Gilo has already all but severed the territorial connection between Bethlehem and the village of Al-Walaja. The 560 new housing units will form a new neighbourhood larger than the existing settlement. The expansion will use the land cut off by the wall to further fragment western Bethlehem, including the land connecting Al-Walaja and the town of Battir, as well as Battir and Bethlehem. The same land is some of the only uninhabited fertile land around Bethlehem. The expansion forms part of a larger plan that would extend the borders of Har Gilo to the Israeli-established Jerusalem municipal boundary and leave dozens of Palestinian homes under threat of demolition.⁸¹ Har Gilo West, a new settlement bloc within the planned expansion, would complete the encircling of Al-Walaja from all directions, effectively isolating the village of about 2,800 inhabitants.⁸² During this reporting period, 13 structures were demolished in Al-Walaja, including 1 donor-funded structure, displacing 10 Palestinians. On 27 May 2020, the High Court of Justice of Israel issued a decision to halt the demolition of 38 houses in the neighbourhood of Ein Jweizeh of Al-Walaja until the Jerusalem District Planning and Building Committee considers a master plan for Al-Walaja submitted by village residents in an effort to legalize buildings slated for demolition.⁸³ Nevertheless, 56 demolition orders have been issued for buildings in Al-Walaja, all of which have interim injunctions in place.

47. On 22 October 2020, the Israeli Civil Administration deposited for public review two plans⁸⁴ for the construction of roads connecting settlements around Jerusalem to the city. The planned expansion of Road 385 would link the settlement of Har Gilo to Jerusalem and link Jerusalem to the settlements of the Gush Etsion Regional Council in the Bethlehem area and eventually the settlement of Har Gilo West.

B. Impact on the rights of the Palestinian people

48. International humanitarian law prohibits the occupying Power from deporting or transferring parts of its own population into the territory it occupies. The settlements and related Israeli policies have had a serious negative impact on the human rights of Palestinians, including their personal security, freedom of movement, access to livelihood, education, health and justice, as well as their right to family life. These conditions have created an environment for many Palestinians that coerces them to leave their homes. The present section will focus on the right to housing due to the alarmingly high rate of demolitions in and around East Jerusalem.

49. During the reporting period, Israeli authorities undertook or ordered 165 demolitions in East Jerusalem, resulting in the displacement of 415 Palestinians, including 214 children, 94 women and 96 men, compared with the 230 structures demolished during the previous period that resulted in 323 Palestinians being displaced. Notably, while the overall number of demolitions decreased, the number of inhabited structures demolished increased.⁸⁵ The number of self-demolitions almost doubled to 46 per cent from 26 per cent during the previous reporting period.

⁸⁰ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/peace-now-submits-petition-to-block-allocation-of-a-nahla-e2-land-to-build-settlement>.

⁸¹ See <https://fmep.org/resource/settlement-annexation-report-october-16-2020/#harhoma> and www.timesofisrael.com/israel-to-advance-plans-for-over-4400-new-settlement-homes.

⁸² See <https://mailchi.mp/ir-amim/one-week-after-advancement-of-settlement-plans-in-greater-jerusalem-plans-for-road-infrastructure-in-the-area-are-deposited?E=91ae84f2f2>.

⁸³ See www.wafa.ps/ar_page.aspx?Id=kfiyuua876796740732akfiyuu (in Arabic) and www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-jerusalem-illegally-razes-four-palestinian-buildings-clearing-way-for-a-new-park-1.8910272.

⁸⁴ TPS YOSH-938 and TPS YOSH-926-1.

⁸⁵ OCHA, Database of West Bank Demolitions.

50. Palestinians in East Jerusalem are forced to carry out self-demolitions, as it is almost impossible for them to obtain building permits due to the discriminatory Israeli zoning and planning regime⁸⁶ and the imposition of large fines and charges should the municipality carry out the demolition instead.⁸⁷ The amendment to the Planning and Building Law enacted in 2017, which started to apply to all structures as of October 2019, limits the possibility of freezing demolition orders to one year, and only in exceptional circumstances, making the retroactive legalization of construction impossible. The amendment further limits legal recourse against demolitions, reinforcing the discriminatory nature of the zoning and planning regime.⁸⁸ Such an amendment exceeded the competence of Israel, as the occupying Power, to legislate, according to article 43 of The Hague Regulations.

51. One of the many human rights implications of this situation is that it severely limits the ability of households in East Jerusalem to adapt to the specific needs of persons with disabilities. For example, in August 2020, a family self-demolished extensions to their home in Sur Baher, East Jerusalem, built to accommodate the needs of a family member with severe physical and psychosocial disabilities. The extensions included a wheelchair-accessible room and shower and two paved pathways to allow persons with reduced mobility to enter and exit the home. The family received a “stop work” order during construction in 2006. Following advice from their lawyer that they had a valid justification, the family restarted construction and completed the extensions. In 2007, the family was fined 25,000 new shekels for building without a permit and was required to obtain a building permit within a year. Despite recruiting a specialized engineer for assistance in obtaining a building permit, the family was unsuccessful as the extensions were close to an existing road. The family received a final demolition order in 2014. In mid-January 2015, they removed the roof of the room extension as the family member with disabilities had passed away. On 28 July 2020, municipality staff ordered the family to self-demolish the room extension and two paved pathways. As the family could not afford the cost of demolition by the municipality or additional fines, they self-demolished the room extension. The pathways were left intact as they remain crucial for another family member with limited mobility. The family fears additional penalties from not demolishing these pathways.

52. Demolitions of private property in the Palestinian Occupied Territory in the context mentioned above, including those conducted in the context of an ultra vires and discriminatory planning system, are unlawful⁸⁹ and amount to forced evictions. They may also result in violations of the rights to an adequate standard of living and to adequate housing and have a negative impact on the enjoyment of the right to education.⁹⁰

53. Approximately 200 Palestinian households in East Jerusalem, comprising 877 persons, including 391 children, face a similar risk of forced eviction due to cases filed in Israeli courts, primarily by Israeli settler organizations.⁹¹ As highlighted in previous reports, settler organizations have primarily used the Absentee Property Law⁹² and the Legal and Administrative Matters Law⁹³ as a basis to evict Palestinians from their properties in East Jerusalem.⁹⁴ Nearly 100 families, comprising around 700 Palestinians residing near the Old City of East Jerusalem, in Silwan, are embroiled in similar legal processes with the settler organization Ateret Cohanim. It was revealed, through a lawsuit filed on 11 October 2020, that the Jewish National Fund’s 30-year-long eviction lawsuit against the Sumarin family in ⁸⁶ A/68/513, para. 32; and A/HRC/34/38, para. 26.

⁸⁷ According to the regulations, fines may reach up to 300,000 new shekels. The owners may be charged extra sums for any additional days of use, as well as the cost of the demolition itself, if this is carried out by the municipality.

⁸⁸ See the concerns raised by the High Commissioner in A/HRC/43/67, para. 32.

⁸⁹ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53.

⁹⁰ A/72/564, para. 49; and A/HRC/37/43, para. 44.

⁹¹ A/75/376, para. 55.

⁹² Unofficial English translation available at www.adalah.org/uploads/oldfiles/Public/files/Discriminatory-Laws-Database/English/04-Absentees-Property-Law-1950.pdf.

⁹³ A/75/376, paras. 51–52 and 64.

⁹⁴ Ibid., paras. 51–55.

Silwan has been funded and managed by Elad.⁹⁵ Elad has attempted to take over the property since the early 1990s through four litigations,⁹⁶ three of which were dismissed by the Jerusalem District Court as partially based on falsified documents.⁹⁷ Demolitions and forced evictions violate the rights to adequate housing and to privacy, and other human rights; they are a key element of a coercive environment that may lead to forcible transfer, which is a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention.⁹⁸

V. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

54. In March 2019, the President of the United States signed an order recognizing the sovereignty of Israel over the occupied Syrian Golan, fundamentally shifting what was seen as the country's 52-year-old consistent policy on the issue – namely, to consider the Golan as occupied territory.⁹⁹ Members of the Security Council criticized this decision, stating that they did not recognize Israeli sovereignty over the Syrian Golan occupied since 1967 and formally annexed in 1981.¹⁰⁰ On 25 March 2019, the Secretary-General reiterated, through his spokesperson, that the status of the Golan had not changed and that the policy of the United Nations on the Golan was reflected in the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, and that policy, again, had not changed.¹⁰¹ On 27 March 2019, the Under-Secretary-General for Political and Peacebuilding Affairs reiterated the position of the United Nations on the occupied Syrian Golan, as reflected in the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and General Assembly, notably Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 497 (1981).¹⁰² On 19 November 2020, the United States Secretary of State visited a number of settlements in the West Bank and the occupied Syrian Golan. During his visit, he declared that the “Golan Heights were a central part of Israel”.¹⁰³

55. Restrictive zoning policies continued to be imposed on the population in the occupied Syrian Golan, particularly on lands that are fertile and vital for the population's urban expansion. During the reporting period, plans in relation to a clean wind energy project have continued: in January 2020, the Government of Israel gave its approval for the construction of 24 wind turbines on farmland in close proximity to the three remaining Syrian villages in the occupied Syrian Golan. The project, if implemented, would further encroach on the limited farmland available to those Syrian villages and occupy more than a quarter of arable land available to Syrian residents. It would also have serious effects on their environment and livelihoods. The project was reportedly advanced without the prior approval of residents, whom it will most likely affect.¹⁰⁴

56. Al-Marsad – The Arab Centre for Human Rights in the Golan Heights, the only human rights organization operating from the occupied Syrian Golan, reported that it continued to face threats in relation to its opposition to the clean wind energy project. The energy company had filed a lawsuit, under the anti-boycott law of Israel, against Al-Marsad because of its active opposition to the project.¹⁰⁵ Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the case has been postponed numerous times since February, but there are serious concerns that the threats aim to limit or halt the organization's activities.

⁹⁵ According to the agreement between the Jewish National Fund and Elad, the latter finances and manages the eviction proceedings and, in return, it receives the property after the Palestinian family is evicted. See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/a-new-proceeding-reveals-that-elad-is-using-the-jnfs-name-to-conduct-the-eviction-proceedings-of-the-sumarin-family>.

⁹⁶ A/75/376, para. 52.

⁹⁷ Jerusalem District Court, cases HC 325/96, TA 1185/96 and TA 1544-09.

⁹⁸ A/74/357, paras. 35 and 77; and A/HRC/34/39, para. 46, with references.

⁹⁹ See www.theguardian.com/us-news/2019/mar/21/trump-us-golan-heights-israel-sovereignty.

¹⁰⁰ See www.dw.com/en/trumps-golan-proclamation-gathers-international-condemnation/a-48070628.

¹⁰¹ See www.un.org/press/en/2019/db190325.doc.htm.

¹⁰² S/PV.8495, p. 2.

¹⁰³ See www.bbc.com/news/av/world-middle-east-55009178.

¹⁰⁴ See <https://golan-marsad.org/amid-new-threats-against-project-opponents-energix-continues-to-develop-its-illegal-windfarm-in-the-occupied-golan>.

¹⁰⁵ Ibid.

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

57. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory amounts to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law.¹⁰⁶ The transfer of an occupying Power's population to a territory it occupies amounts to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.¹⁰⁷ A number of international bodies have confirmed the illegality of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan, including the International Court of Justice, the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.¹⁰⁸

58. Plans for further housing units in settlements advanced at a rapid pace, the announcement of tenders accelerated, including in the strategic E1 area, which is of particular concern as this would isolate East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank and threaten to fragment the contiguity of the West Bank. While the rate of construction starts of settlement housing decreased, demolitions of Palestinian-owned structures increased significantly, despite the COVID-19 pandemic.

59. Incidents of settler violence continued at a high rate without any decisive action by Israeli authorities to protect the Palestinian population in accordance with their obligations as the occupying Power. Cases in which the Israeli security forces appeared to have used force against the protected population instead of protecting it are of utmost concern.

60. Settler violence continued to adversely affect Palestinian society and a wide range of human rights. Such violence, coupled with settler cultivation of land, damage to Palestinian farmland and property, and the practices of Israeli security forces, may gradually prevent Palestinians from having access to their lands, which then risk becoming part of the unofficial expansion of settlement perimeters.

61. Palestinians in Area C, the H2 area of Hebron and East Jerusalem continue to be subjected to restrictive and discriminatory policies and practices, and to increased tension and violence due to the existence and growth of settlements. Palestinian villages isolated due to settlement expansion are also disproportionately affected. These policies and practices violate several rights and contribute to a coercive environment. Displacement and relocation to alternative residential areas as a result of a coercive environment could amount to forms of forcible transfer, contrary to the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

62. The High Commissioner recalls Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council decided that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void, and without international legal effect.

63. On the basis of the findings presented in the present and in previous reports, the High Commissioner recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Halt immediately and reverse all settlement development and related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

(b) Rescind all policies and practices contributing to the creation of a coercive environment and/or increasing the risk of forcible transfer;

¹⁰⁶ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

¹⁰⁷ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹⁰⁸ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

(c) Review planning laws and policies to ensure that they are compliant with the obligations of Israel under international human rights law and international humanitarian law;

(d) Refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders on the basis of discriminatory and unlawful planning policies and practices that may lead to forcible transfer, including of Bedouin and herder communities;

(e) Take all steps necessary to protect the Palestinian population, including to prevent attacks by settlers, and ensure accountability in cases of settler violence against Palestinians and their property;

(f) End policies and practices within the occupied Syrian Golan that may lead to discrimination against protected persons.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
28 April 2022

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-ninth session

28 February–1 April 2022

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 46/26 and provides an update on the implementation of the resolution from 1 November 2020 to 31 October 2021.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 46/26. It is based on direct monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and on information provided by governmental sources and by other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the General Assembly and to the Human Rights Council.¹ The quarterly updates and reports of the Secretary-General presented to the Security Council on the implementation of Security Council resolution 2334 (2016) also provide relevant information.²

2. The present report, which covers the period from 1 November 2020 to 31 October 2021, contains an update on settlement activities, illegal under international law, and their impact on the human rights of Palestinians. Section IV focuses on restrictions imposed by Israel, including through use of force, on the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly of Palestinians protesting against the settlement-related activities and the wider context of the occupation. The report also addresses issues relating to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

3. During the reporting period, Israeli settlement expansion continued at a rapid pace in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Settlers established 13 new outposts, continuing a decade-long trend of increase. Demolitions of Palestinian property and incidents of settler violence reached the highest levels ever recorded by the United Nations and settler violence became more severe. In most settler violence incidents monitored, the Israeli security forces failed to protect the Palestinian population, and in many cases used excessive force³ against Palestinians. Furthermore, in many instances, the Israeli security forces used excessive force when Palestinians protested against settlement expansion and outposts. Widespread impunity for settler violence and for the excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces remained a serious concern. These developments further exacerbated the coercive environment in many Palestinian communities described in previous reports and increased the risk of forcible transfer.⁴

II. Legal framework

4. International human rights law and international humanitarian law apply concurrently in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. In particular, Israel is bound by the obligations of an occupying Power as set out in international humanitarian law. A detailed analysis of the relevant legal framework is contained in two reports of the Secretary-General.⁵

¹ A/76/333, A/76/336, A/HRC/49/25 and A/HRC/49/83.

² See <https://unsco.unmissions.org/security-council-briefings-0>.

³ The term “excessive use of force” is used in the present report to refer to incidents in the context of law enforcement operations in which force was not used in accordance with the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials. Such incidents may entail situations in which force was used unnecessarily and/or disproportionately, and/or in pursuit of an illegal law enforcement objective and/or in a discriminatory manner.

⁴ A/76/336, sect. IV; A/HRC/46/65, para. 48; and A/HRC/46/22, para. 4.

⁵ A/HRC/34/38 and A/HRC/34/39.

III. Activities related to settlements

A. Settlement expansion

Land designation, planning and tenders

5. During the reporting period, the number of new tenders and construction starts increased, while the advancement or approval of new plans decreased. Israeli authorities issued tenders for a total of 3,600 units in West Bank settlements, including almost 300 in East Jerusalem, compared with 3,200 units during the previous reporting period. Plans for some 7,100 housing units in West Bank settlements, including approximately 500 in East Jerusalem,⁶ were advanced or approved, compared with some 9,300 units during the previous reporting period.⁷ Official data on settlement construction starts indicated a 40 per cent increase, with an average monthly rate of 142 units, compared with 101 units during the previous reporting period.⁸

6. Settlement advancements continued with the aim of further consolidating a ring of settlements around occupied East Jerusalem continued. On 20 May, the Jerusalem District Planning Committee approved the Har Homa E plan for 540 additional housing units, which would connect the existing Gilo and Har Homa settlements. On 13 October, the Jerusalem Local Planning Committee approved the designation of land for Gi'vat Hamatos, which would be the first new settlement built over the Green Line in Jerusalem in over two decades. On 4 and 18 October, the Israeli Civil Administration held hearings on objections to plans for nearly 3,500 units in the strategic E1 area.⁹ This area is home to Palestinian Bedouin communities, including some 7,500 residents whom Israeli authorities had already expressed an intention to forcibly displace under previously attempted relocation plans.¹⁰ The completion of the plans for Givat Hamatos, Har Homa E and the E1 area would create a contiguous built-up area of Israeli settlements along the southern and eastern perimeters of East Jerusalem, sever the connection between the northern and southern West Bank and detach East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank, thereby seriously undermining the possibility of a viable and contiguous Palestinian State.¹¹

7. In mid-October, construction of a new residential compound in the Jewish settlement in Hebron began. On 24 October, the Israel Land Authority announced tenders for some 1,350 settlement housing units, half of them in the settlement of Ariel, in the middle of the northern West Bank, with serious implications for future Palestinian development in the area.¹² On 27 October, the High Planning Committee of Israel advanced plans for some 3,100 housing units in Area C.

8. On 29 November 2020, in a potential precedent for several other pending cases, the High Court of Justice of Israel “legalized” 224 dunums of land for the settlement of Kokhav Ya'aqov,¹³ which is built on private and traditional village lands of the Palestinian town of Kafr Aqab. On 17 January 2021, Israel declared as “State land” 286 dunums between the ⁶ Information provided by the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process.

⁷ A/HRC/46/65, para. 8.

⁸ Information provided by the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process.

⁹ A/75/376, para. 43; <https://www.ir-amim.org.il/en>; and <https://unsco.unmissions.org/security-council-briefing-19-october-2021>.

¹⁰ A/HRC/31/43, paras. 46 and 68; and A/67/372, para. 55. See also A/70/421, para. 43.

¹¹ A/75/376, para. 61.

¹² S/2021/1047, para. 5.

¹³ See

<https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts\17\260\054\r42&fileName=17054260.R42&type=4> (in Hebrew); and <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israeli-high-court-rejects-petition-against-declaring-west-bank-area-state-land-1.9338816>.

settlements of Modi'in Illit and Kfar Haoranim, and 71 dunums near the settlement of Na'aleh,¹⁴ apparently with the intention to allocate land for settlement expansion.¹⁵

9. Settlers established 13 new outposts,¹⁶ illegal also under Israeli domestic law, continuing a decade-long trend of increase.¹⁷ Of the total, nine were unauthorized agricultural farms, which have a devastating impact on surrounding Palestinian communities.¹⁸ Israeli authorities demolished one outpost and evacuated another, pending an Israeli land survey to determine the status of the land (see para. 43).¹⁹ On 11 May, the Israeli High Court of Justice ordered the eviction of Israeli settlers from 170 dunums of land in Shiloh Valley, near the settlement of Shevot Rahel, by 1 October, but later postponed the eviction until 1 February 2023.²⁰ Four plans retroactively regularizing outposts were advanced.²¹ On 16 December 2020 and 10 May 2021, the Knesset advanced, in preliminary votes, bills aimed at legalizing approximately 65 outposts and mandating that they should be treated as authorized settlements in the interim, with their residents receiving all municipal services.²² On 18 July, the Israeli High Court of Justice dismissed a 2019 petition to stop the transfer of State funds to the Amana settler organization, which finances settlement activity, including unauthorized outposts.²³

Consolidation of settlements

10. Israel continued to unlawfully consolidate settlement blocs with networks of bypass roads and the Wall, endangering the viability of a two-State solution and having a severe impact on the rights of Palestinians. While Israel has implemented extensive infrastructure projects to facilitate the movement of settlers, the movement of Palestinians in the West Bank continued to be restricted, severely infringing upon their freedom of movement and access to services and livelihoods.²⁴ Construction began on the Qalandiya underpass highway,²⁵ which would connect Jerusalem to a cluster of settlements deep inside the West Bank. Private Palestinian land would be seized to construct the highway.²⁶ Four other plans for roads in the West Bank were advanced.²⁷

11. A key current issue in settlements and human rights is land registration. In May 2018, the Government of Israel decided that 50 per cent of land ownership in occupied East Jerusalem should be registered by the fourth quarter of 2021 and the rest by the end of 2025.²⁸ As at 31 October, the registration had begun for 70 plots of land throughout occupied East Jerusalem, including Beit Hanina, Sur Baher, Sheikh Jarrah, Issawiya, Hizma and At-Tur.²⁹ As the occupying Power, Israel is prohibited from applying its domestic laws in occupied

¹⁴ Information provided by Peace Now.

¹⁵ A/76/336, para. 41. See also https://f35bf8a1-b11c-4b7a-ba04-05c1ffae0108.filesusr.com/ugd/cdb1a7_04c9fe5f2c954d17953d9c5114041962.pdf.

¹⁶ Information provided by Peace Now.

¹⁷ A/76/336, para. 9.

¹⁸ Ibid., sect. IV; A/75/376, para. 10; and A/HRC/40/42, para. 39.

¹⁹ Information provided by Peace Now.

²⁰ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium.HIGHLIGHT-israel-s-top-court-delays-settler-evacuation-until-after-jewish-farming-sabbatical-1.10302191>.

²¹ Information provided by Peace Now.

²² See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_21_december_2020_2334.pdf.

²³ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-high-court-rejects-petition-to-halt-public-funds-to-settlement-movement-1.10012528>.

²⁴ A/HRC/46/65, para. 13.

²⁵ See <https://mailchi.mp/ir-amim/civil-administration-advances-huge-road-construction-plans-pushing-forward-the-de-facto-annexation-of-greater-jerusalem?e=f7e1245427> and <https://peacenow.org.il/en/works-begun-on-paving-the-qalandiya-underpass>.

²⁶ See <https://mailchi.mp/ir-amim/civil-administration-advances-huge-road-construction-plans-pushing-forward-the-de-facto-annexation-of-greater-jerusalem?e=f7e1245427>.

²⁷ Information provided by Peace Now.

²⁸ See https://www.gov.il/he/departments/policies/dec3790_2018. For further information, see https://www.ir-amim.org.il/sites/default/files/3790%20Monitor%20Report_May%202021_English_0.pdf.

²⁹ Information provided by the Norwegian Refugee Council.

East Jerusalem, being occupied territory, and may not extend its sovereignty to, or acquire permanent ownership over, land it occupies there.³⁰ The settlement of titles constitutes an irreversible act of sovereignty by a permanent regime, and so subverts the principle that occupation is inherently temporary.³¹ The recent action taken in this regard in occupied East Jerusalem is illegal under international law.³² It also increases the risk of illegal appropriation of property and of forcible transfer.³³

12. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, have no legal validity and are flagrant violations of international law. In addition, outposts are considered illegal under Israeli domestic law. Such establishment and expansion of settlements amount to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law.³⁴ Such transfers amount to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.³⁵

B. Impact of settlements on human rights

Settlement-related violence

13. Settler violence reached the highest level since the United Nations began publicly reporting statistics on it in 2017.³⁶ There were 502 incidents of settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, resulting in injury, death and/or property damage³⁷ compared with 339 incidents during the previous reporting period. The severity of attacks also intensified: of particular concern were incidents of armed settlers carrying out attacks inside Palestinian communities, sometimes in the proximity of the Israeli security forces, and of the Israeli security forces attacking Palestinians alongside settlers. Six Palestinians (four men and two women) were killed in such attacks – four by settlers and two by either settlers or accompanying Israeli security forces. Settlers also injured 170 others, including at least 83 men, 32 children and 11 women. Settlers vandalized 12,800 trees and 242 vehicles. According to Israeli sources, two Israelis known or believed to be settlers were killed and 98 were injured by Palestinians.³⁸

14. In December, settler violence surged across the West Bank following the deaths of two settlers in violent incidents.³⁹ There was a further serious surge starting in April, seemingly driven by the threat of evictions in Sheikh Jarrah and Silwan for the benefit of settler organizations (see sect. IV below). Confrontations and nationalistically motivated incitement and violence spread across East Jerusalem and, in the course of May, to the entire Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel, and triggered the largest escalation in hostilities between Israel and Palestinian armed groups in Gaza since 2014.⁴⁰

15. In several cases documented during the reporting period, the Israeli security forces were recorded attacking Palestinians alongside settlers, including with firearms. On 14 May, about 20 to 30 settlers and at least 6 Israeli security forces personnel raided Urif village near Nablus. Young Palestinians threw stones at them and, in clashes that followed, settlers and ³⁰ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 43 and 55; and <https://www.icrc.org/en/doc/assets/files/other/customary-international-humanitarian-law-i-icrc-eng.pdf>, rule 51.

³¹ A/76/336, para. 13. See also the Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 43 and 55.

³² International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136.

³³ See A/75/376, sect. IV; A/HRC/46/65, sect. IV; and A/HRC/37/43, para. 36.

³⁴ A/HRC/46/65, para. 57; and Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 49 (6).

³⁵ A/HRC/46/65, para. 57; and Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

³⁶ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

³⁷ Ibid. The figure excludes the number of Palestinians injured by the Israeli security forces in the context of settler related incidents.

³⁸ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

³⁹ A/76/336, para. 21.

⁴⁰ Ibid., para. 22.

the Israeli security forces fired live ammunition. A 32-year-old Palestinian man was hit with two bullets to his chest and abdomen and died of his injuries. Eyewitnesses identified a guard of Yitzhar settlement as the shooter, and he was photographed shooting alongside the Israeli security forces. At least three other Palestinians were injured with live ammunition.

16. Settlement guards also appeared to play an active role in violent attacks. Settlement guards are usually settlers, often trained and armed by the Israeli security forces, and have the authority to detain and search, including without a warrant, using any reasonable means, until the military or police arrive.⁴¹ On 28 April, a settlement guard physically assaulted a Palestinian man with disability in the Wadi Hilweh neighbourhood of Silwan, causing injuries and bruises to his head and face. Surveillance cameras showed the guard using pepper spray against the victim directly in the face, pushing him to the ground, strangling him and punching him repeatedly in the head. Palestinian neighbours called the police, who never arrived.

17. Settler violence increased again during the olive harvest in October. Between 4 and 31 October, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 52 incidents of settler violence, including 2,956 trees and 37 cars vandalized or destroyed.⁴² Palestinians faced restrictions in accessing olive groves by settlement guards, the Israeli security forces and settlers. Nablus and Ramallah Governorates were the most affected. In many cases documented by OHCHR, the Israeli security forces did not respect their duty to protect Palestinians.⁴³ On 13 October, the Israeli security forces were responding to settlers uprooting olive trees in Al-Mughayyir, when a number of settlers, some masked, used pepper spray on their military vehicle, slightly injuring two soldiers, and attempted to hit a Palestinian man with a metal rod. On 14 October, the Israeli Minister of Defence called on the Israel Defense Forces to “act systemically, aggressively and uncompromisingly ... against all forms of violence, against Palestinians, Jews and of course against security forces”.⁴⁴ Yet, on 23 October, when approximately 20 masked settlers attacked Palestinian farmers picking olives with their families in Turmus’ayya, the Israeli security forces instead responded by shooting tear gas and rubber-coated metal bullets towards the Palestinians.

18. On 28 September, some 70 masked settlers carrying stones, batons and pistols attacked the Palestinian villages of Umm Fagarah, Ar Rakeez and At Tuwani. In Umm Fagarah, the settlers injured eight Palestinians in the presence of the Israeli security forces, including a 3-year-old boy who was hit in the head with a large rock and severely injured. The settlers also killed five sheep, damaged 10 homes, 13 vehicles, two tractors, and several solar panels, water pipes and tanks. According to eyewitnesses, Palestinian residents threw stones, attempting to keep the settlers away. The Israeli security forces, present at the scene from the beginning, did not intervene. Instead, they responded by firing tear gas and stun grenades at the residents. In related clashes, 20 Palestinians were injured by the Israeli security forces and 1 Israeli soldier was injured.

19. As the occupying Power, Israel has the obligation to take all measures in its power to restore and ensure, as far as possible, public order and life in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and, in all circumstances, to protect the Palestinian population against all acts or threats of violence.⁴⁵ Israel also has the obligation to respect and ensure the human rights of the Palestinian population, including their rights to life and security of person.⁴⁶ It is required to protect the life of persons in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, from all reasonable foreseeable threats, including from threats emanating from private

⁴¹ See <https://www.yesh-din.org/en/the-lawless-zone-the-transfer-of-policing-and-security-to-the-civilian-security-coordinators-in-the-settlements-and-outposts/>.

⁴² Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁴³ See <https://mailchi.mp/c106b3db21b6/state-re-opens-investigation-into-2010-severe-injury-of-unarmed-civilian-demonstrator-4841926?e=c3c0aff43a>.

⁴⁴ See https://www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/gantz-instructs-idf-to-act-uncompromisingly-against-settler-violence/.

⁴⁵ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 43 and 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

⁴⁶ See International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004. See also A/HRC/34/38, paras. 6–9.

persons and entities.⁴⁷ Instead, systematic and increasingly severe settler violence – with the acquiescence or, on occasion, practical support of the Israeli security forces – is contributing to the worsening of the coercive environment for Palestinians.⁴⁸

Accountability for settler violence

20. The Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights have repeatedly reported on the prevailing climate of impunity with regard to settler violence.⁴⁹ The climate of impunity continued⁵⁰ despite the increased severity of attacks and public calls for accountability by Israeli officials. For example, following the attack on 28 September in Umm Fagarah, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel condemned the attack and said that Israel had a responsibility to bring the attackers to justice. Israeli authorities arrested seven Israelis.⁵¹ While five of them were released, two settler children, aged 15 and 17 years, were indicted on 21 October for participating in the attack, but neither of them for the actual assault of Palestinians.⁵²

21. On 19 November, three Israelis, including two children, were indicted for attacking Palestinians harvesting their olives a month earlier.⁵³ On 29 December, the Attorney General of Israel filed an indictment against two Israelis, one of them a child, in relation to planning a “price tag” operation.⁵⁴ On 23 February, Israeli authorities indicted a 17-year-old Israeli boy for throwing stun grenades into Palestinian homes in Sartah.⁵⁵ On 1 September, the juvenile court in Jerusalem acquitted five Israeli children of charges of violence and terrorism relating to their participation in a so-called hate wedding in 2015.⁵⁶ One was convicted of wilful property damage. On 14 October, the Attorney General appealed.⁵⁷

22. Accountability measures remained gravely deficient in cases where settlers, or the Israeli security forces alongside settlers, killed Palestinians.⁵⁸ There was no information publicly available about any investigation into the killing on 5 January of a 25-year-old Palestinian man by a settler in Gush Etzion. In respect of a settler killing a 32-year-old Palestinian man in Ras Karkar on 5 February, Israeli police decided not to launch a criminal investigation into the killing.⁵⁹ Regarding the killing of a 32-year-old Palestinian man in Urif on 14 May,⁶⁰ a military police investigation was announced on 16 July.⁶¹ However, on 7 October, media reported that the Israel Defense Forces had failed to take steps against the masked person suspected of the killing. The Israel Defense Forces spokesperson said that he ⁴⁷ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2019), para. 18.

⁴⁸ A/76/336, para. 19.

⁴⁹ Ibid., para. 26; and A/74/357, para. 27.

⁵⁰ A/76/336, para. 27. See also https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/מא+2021+נייר+עמדה+בתוך+ישובים+inside+Palestinian+communities_EN.pdf.

⁵¹ See <https://www.haaretz.co.il/news/law/.premium-1.10314884> (in Hebrew).

⁵² See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-jewish-teens-from-west-bank-charged-with-rioting-in-palestinian-village-1.10315594>.

⁵³ See <https://www.timesofisrael.com/three-israelis-indicted-for-assaulting-palestinians-during-olive-harvest/>.

⁵⁴ See <https://www.srugim.co.il/521483-%D7%9B%D7%AA%D7%91-%D7%90%D7%99%D7%A9%D7%95%D7%9D-%D7%A0%D7%92%D7%93-%D7%A9%D7%A0%D7%99-%D7%A6%D7%A2%D7%99%D7%A8%D7%99%D7%9D-%D7%A9%D7%AA%D7%9B%D7%A0%D7%A0%D7%95-%D7%AA%D7%92-%D7%9E%D7%97%D7%99%D7%A8> (in Hebrew). See also A/HRC/40/42, para. 30.

⁵⁵ See <https://unsco.unmissions.org/security-council-briefing-25-march-2021-unscr-2334>. See also <https://www.timesofisrael.com/israeli-17-indicted-for-stun-grenade-attack-on-palestinians-vandalism/>.

⁵⁶ See <https://www.haaretz.co.il/news/law/1.10171777> (in Hebrew).

⁵⁷ See <https://www.haaretz.co.il/news/law/1.10294297> (in Hebrew).

⁵⁸ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-settlermasked-person-filmed-shooting-at-palestinians-as-israeli-soldiers-watch-1.10006087> and <https://www.972mag.com/joint-attacks-israeli-settlers-soldiers/>.

⁵⁹ See <https://www.timesofisrael.com/man-said-to-have-shot-infiltrator-dead-already-on-trial-for-shooting-palestinian/> and A/76/336, para. 30.

⁶⁰ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-settler-masked-person-filmed-shooting-at-palestinians-as-israeli-soldiers-watch-1.10006087>.

⁶¹ See <https://www.972mag.com/joint-attacks-israeli-settlers-soldiers/>.

was an off-duty soldier who lived in the area and that no complaint had been submitted against him.⁶² Regarding a Palestinian man killed on 14 May by settlers in Ar-Rihyah, on 23 July Israeli media reported that the victim's family had filed a complaint. As at 31 October, the Israeli police had not opened an investigation.⁶³ In respect of a 27-year-old man killed in Iskaka on 14 May and a 37-year-old woman killed near Kiryat Arba on 19 May in circumstances where both settlers and the Israeli security forces had used force, no information on any accountability steps was available. Regarding the events on 26 June where a settler was recorded shooting at Palestinians with live ammunition with a weapon of an Israeli soldier near the Havat Maon outpost, Israeli police opened an investigation in September. However, the settler was not summoned for questioning and the army decided not to file an official complaint against him.⁶⁴ On 17 October, the Israel Defense Forces announced that a deputy battalion commander who was recorded physically attacking Palestinians and Israeli activists twice in September would, as a consequence, not be promoted for the next three years.⁶⁵

23. Failure to protect Palestinians and deficiencies in the justice system to hold settlers accountable for violence against Palestinians include: the application of different legal systems to settlers and Palestinians; the persistent and prevailing lack of thorough and impartial investigations; the low rate of indictments and convictions; frequently delayed processes; and lenient charges. Overall, these deficiencies exacerbate a climate of impunity for settler violence, encouraging attacks to continue.⁶⁶

Demolitions, forced evictions and displacement

24. In the highest number since the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs started recording demolitions in 2009, Israeli authorities demolished 967 Palestinian-owned structures⁶⁷ in the West Bank (83 per cent), including East Jerusalem (17 per cent), displacing 1,190 Palestinians (656 children, 261 women and 273 men). The structures demolished by Israeli authorities included 243 donor-funded structures provided as humanitarian aid, 86 water, sanitation and hygiene structures, despite the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic,⁶⁸ and two schools, affecting 643 children.⁶⁹ Israeli authorities demolished 70 structures by applying Military Order No. 1797, which authorizes the removal of new structures in Area C within 96 hours of notice.⁷⁰ In occupied East Jerusalem, Palestinians were increasingly forced to carry out self-demolitions, as it is almost impossible for them to obtain building permits due to the discriminatory Israeli zoning and planning regime and the imposition of large fines and charges should the municipality carry out the demolition instead.⁷¹ Self-demolitions accounted for 98 demolitions, compared with 74 during the previous reporting period.⁷²

25. At least 218 Palestinian households in East Jerusalem, comprising 970 persons, including 424 children, remained at imminent risk of forced eviction owing to cases filed in Israeli courts, primarily by Israeli settler organizations, at the end of the reporting period.⁷³ In February, Jerusalem Municipality rejected a master plan for the Al Bustan area of the Silwan neighbourhood in East Jerusalem, submitted as part of ongoing negotiations to create

⁶² See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-the-israeli-military-spotted-a-settler-shooting-at-palestinians-but-did-nothing-1.10273450>.

⁶³ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-two-weeks-on-police-haven-t-begun-probing-alleged-settler-killing-of-palestinian-1.9931965>.

⁶⁴ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israel-police-stall-in-probe-of-settler-who-fired-soldier-s-weapon-at-palestinians-1.10331978?lts=1640245559380>.

⁶⁵ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium.HIGHLIGHT-idf-officer-barred-from-promotion-for-3-years-after-attacking-leftists-palestinians-1.10301506>.

⁶⁶ A/76/336, para. 31.

⁶⁷ Israeli authorities demolished 964 structures during the previous reporting period.

⁶⁸ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁶⁹ Information provided by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

⁷⁰ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁷¹ A/76/336, para. 34. See also https://www.alhaq.org/cached_uploads/download/2021/09/14/weekly-focus-ola-ag-final2-sp-1631603444.pdf.

⁷² Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁷³ A/76/336, para. 34. See also S/2021/584.

a housing solution for the residents.⁷⁴ The Municipality also opposed a request to extend a demolition freeze to 68 homes. In March and August, the Jerusalem Local Affairs Court granted extensions to 52 freezes, currently until 10 February 2022, pending the planning process with the Municipality. It leaves out 16 homes in Al Bustan, which are at an imminent risk of demolition.⁷⁵ In the Batan Al Hawa section of Silwan, as many as 85 families remain at risk of eviction pending a ruling of the Supreme Court of Israel in appeals against eviction rulings of lower courts.

26. Palestinian communities in Masafer Yatta, south of Hebron, have been subjected to several waves of demolitions and have demolition and eviction cases pending with Israeli courts, affecting some 1,300 Palestinians.⁷⁶ The Norwegian Refugee Council provided legal representation to the families with pending demolition orders and on 24 December secured an interim injunction until 60 days after the ruling of the High Court of Justice on the eviction case. The Rural Council of Masafer Yatta requested to join the proceedings in the eviction case to present evidence that the residents had been living in the area before its declaration as a firing zone, and a hearing is scheduled for March 2022. Another location where up to 300 Palestinians are at imminent risk of displacement is Al Walajeh, on the southern border of Jerusalem, where 36 residential and 9 uninhabited structures have pending demolition orders against them. An interim injunction protecting 38 homes from demolition was still in effect at the end of October.⁷⁷ On 31 October, the District Court issued a decision allowing the community to submit a new plan.

27. These demolitions and forced evictions entail numerous human rights violations, exacerbate the coercive environment and may lead to forcible transfer, a grave breach of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention). Pursuant to international humanitarian law, private property in occupied territory must be respected and cannot be confiscated by the occupying Power,⁷⁸ which is also prohibited from destroying property and institutions dedicated to education.⁷⁹

Communities at risk of forcible transfer

28. Palestinians across Area C, in East Jerusalem and in the H2 area of Hebron remain at risk of forcible transfer as a result of a coercive environment.⁸⁰ At particular risk are Bedouin and herder communities, including 18 communities in and around East Jerusalem, among them Khan al-Ahmar/Abu al-Helu⁸¹ and communities in the Jordan Valley and on lands designated by Israel as military firing zones.⁸² On 29 September, the High Court of Justice of Israel granted a request by the State of Israel to postpone until March 2022 its response to a petition to implement eviction orders against Khan al-Ahmar/Abu al-Helu. In its request, the Government cited the COVID-19 pandemic and the “current diplomatic-security situation”, adding that there had been “significant progress” towards an agreement to avoid mass demolition.⁸³

29. The homes and livelihood structures of the Bedouin community of Humsa al Bqai’a located in the Israeli designated military firing zone 903 were subjected to eight mass demolition and seizure operations during the reporting period.⁸⁴ Decade-long petitions and appeals by the community against the demolitions ended without a final verdict from the ⁷⁴ See <https://www.ir-amim.org.il/en/node/2627>. Information provided by the Norwegian Refugee Council.

⁷⁵ Information provided by the Norwegian Refugee Council. See also <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/west-bank-demolitions-and-displacement-august-2021>.

⁷⁶ A/76/336, para. 51.

⁷⁷ See <https://mailchi.mp/ir-amim/al-walajeh-under-heightened-risk-of-mass-demolition-after-state-files-motion-to-dismiss-appeal?e=%5bUNIQID%5d>.

⁷⁸ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 46.

⁷⁹ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 49 and 147; and Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 46 and 56. See also A/HRC/34/38, paras. 21 and 33.

⁸⁰ A/76/336, para. 37. See also A/72/564, paras. 36–58.

⁸¹ A/73/410, para. 22; A/74/357, para. 36; A/HRC/37/43, para. 25; and A/HRC/43/67, para. 33.

⁸² A/76/336, paras. 37–57.

⁸³ S/2021/1047, para. 11.

⁸⁴ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

High Court of Justice when, in early November 2020, Israeli authorities verbally ordered the community to leave the area, and the demolitions and confiscations were carried out without time for any further legal action.⁸⁵ Between November and July, Israeli authorities demolished 196 structures, including 112 donor-funded structures, some of which had been provided as humanitarian assistance in response to previous demolitions, displacing 365 Palestinians, including 209 children. Israeli authorities also confiscated personal belongings, including food, milk for children, clothes, hygiene materials and toys. Livestock, which constitutes the community's main source of income, was left without food, water or shelter.⁸⁶ Reportedly, two families (12 persons) left their homes in Humsa al Bqai'a after the demolitions in November 2020 and moved to Froush Beit Dajan, near Nablus, where they remained as at 31 October. Other families moved just outside the firing zone and, on 21 February, the High Court of Justice of Israel issued a temporary order against the demolition of their structures at this location, which was at a distance of about 1,400 metres from their previous homes within the firing zone. As at 31 October, nine families (86 persons) reportedly remained at this location, and two families (11 persons) remained in the firing zone. The actions by Israel placed the community under extreme pressure to move and appear to have led to at least 11 families (98 persons) leaving their homes. In testimonies given to OHCHR on 12 July, residents stated their unwillingness to relocate to the Israeli designated relocation sites. Forcible transfer is a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and thus amounts to a war crime.

IV. Israeli suppression of Palestinian protests against settlement activities

30. In a significant spike, the Israeli security forces killed 70 Palestinians (51 men, 3 women and 16 boys) and injured 14,090 in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, during the reporting period. Of them, 10 (4 boys and 6 men) were killed and 10,867 injured (including 795 with live ammunition) in the context of mainly peaceful protests against settlements and settlement-related issues and the wider context of the occupation. Particular tensions occurred in East Jerusalem, where Palestinians protested against the threat of evictions in Sheikh Jarrah and Silwan for the benefit of settler organizations, and in Nablus Governorate, where Palestinians protested against settler presence and the establishment of illegal outposts. In both contexts, examined further below, OHCHR documented numerous cases of discriminatory law enforcement, intimidation of protesters and journalists, mass arrests and use of excessive force against mainly peaceful protesters, including use of lethal force as a crowd control measure. This raised serious concerns of human rights violations by the Israeli security forces, including against the rights of Palestinians to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, and their rights to life and security of person.⁸⁷

Sheikh Jarrah, East Jerusalem

31. During the reporting period, Israeli police injured at least 265 Palestinians in East Jerusalem in the context of demonstrations, including 5 with live ammunition.⁸⁸ The Israeli security forces used force against entirely peaceful demonstrators, human rights activists and journalists in violation of international norms and standards. Law enforcement appeared to be carried out in a discriminatory manner and several arrests, including of journalists, raised concerns of arbitrary arrest and of hindering the work of journalists.

32. In East Jerusalem, over 200 Palestinian households had eviction cases pending in Israeli courts at the end of the reporting period, affecting almost a thousand Palestinians. The ⁸⁵ A/76/336, para. 39.

⁸⁶ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. Following a mass demolition on 7 July, humanitarian organizations were denied access to the site until 14 July, in contravention of article 59 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

⁸⁷ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, arts. 19–20; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 6 (1), 9 (1), 19 and 22; Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

⁸⁸ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

cases are based on the application of the Absentee Property Law and the Legal and Administrative Matters Law, which allow Jewish Israelis who owned properties in East Jerusalem prior to 1948 to reclaim their property.⁸⁹ The application of these laws in East Jerusalem is inconsistent with the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian law.⁹⁰ There are no similar laws allowing Palestinians to reclaim their property, rendering them inherently discriminatory.⁹¹ In the East Jerusalem neighbourhood of Sheikh Jarrah, a total of eight families – approximately 75 persons – faced the threat of eviction for the benefit of settler organizations at the end of the reporting period. In this case, the Nahalat Shimon settler organization claims ownership of the land following their acquisition of the properties and has filed eviction lawsuits against the Palestinian families. These claims are disputed by the Palestinian families, some of whom have resided in these homes for nearly 70 years, and they have appealed against the eviction orders. On 10 February, the District Court dismissed the appeals of four of these families, upholding their eviction, and ordering them to vacate their properties by 2 May 2021, placing them at imminent risk of eviction and igniting tensions (see para. 14).

33. For years, Palestinians, supported by Israeli and other activists, have demonstrated against evictions in Sheikh Jarrah. During April the protest movement grew. Palestinian, Israeli and other human rights activists initiated widespread sit-ins in the streets of Sheikh Jarrah and staged near daily protests. The community mobilized actively on social media, documenting events with the hashtag #SaveSheikhJarrah, which gained international attention. A recording of a settler telling one of the families under threat of forced eviction “if I don’t steal it [their house] someone else will steal it” circulated widely and became a symbol of the settlement activities.⁹² In an apparent bias in the moderation of online expression, content by Palestinian users about Sheikh Jarrah was increasingly restricted and taken down at the behest of the Israeli authorities.⁹³ On 14 September, Facebook’s Oversight Board recommended an examination into the moderation of Palestinian and pro-Palestinian content.⁹⁴

34. The protests spread from Sheikh Jarrah to other parts of Jerusalem, coinciding with the start of Ramadan and several Israeli holidays. Ethnically and nationalistically motivated tension and violence grew and, with it, significant movement restrictions and use of force against Palestinians. In some cases, Israeli police used unnecessary force, including at the Al-Aqsa compound, against peaceful protesters. For example, on 7 May, the Palestine Red Crescent Society reported 205 Palestinian injuries, the majority at the Al-Aqsa compound, including from an incident where Israeli police shot stun grenades into a crowd of Palestinians in the Bab Al-Rahma chapel with limited possibility to escape. The events in Jerusalem ignited, on 11 May, the worst escalation in hostilities between Israel and Palestinian armed groups in Gaza since 2014, and significant violence spread across the West Bank and Israel.⁹⁵

35. Israeli police imposed movement restrictions and set up ad hoc checkpoints at main entry points to Sheikh Jarrah. Palestinians not residing in the area were banned access and residents were ordered to remain indoors. In several documented cases, Israeli police allowed Israelis, some of them armed, to access and protest in Sheikh Jarrah beyond the checkpoints, thus fuelling confrontation or even directly inciting violence.⁹⁶ On 6 May, a member of the Knesset from the Otzma Yehudit party set up a “field office” in Sheikh Jarrah, reportedly to help to ensure that the Israeli police provided proper protection to Israelis in the ⁸⁹ A/75/376, paras. 51–55.

⁹⁰ Ibid., para. 54.

⁹¹ Ibid.

⁹² See <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KNqozQ8uaV8>.

⁹³ See A/HRC/49/83, para. 32. See also <https://7amleh.org/2021/05/21/7amleh-issues-report-documenting-the-attacks-on-palestinian-digital-rights> and <https://www.hrw.org/news/2021/10/08/israel/palestine-facebook-censors-discussion-rights-issues>.

⁹⁴ See <https://www.oversightboard.com/decision/FB-P93JPX02>.

⁹⁵ See A/HRC/49/83 and A/HRC/49/25.

⁹⁶ See also <https://twitter.com/i/status/1389469783247163398>.

neighbourhood⁹⁷ and, on 8 May, he called for the police to be given more powers to use firearms to confront Palestinians. On 8 May, at least 23 Palestinians active in civic and political activities in Jerusalem were arrested. All were released within the range of a few hours to a couple of days, most on the condition of staying away from Sheikh Jarrah or Jerusalem.

36. On 18 May, Israeli police arbitrarily shot a kinetic impact projectile at the back of a 16-year-old girl from a distance of a few metres as she was obeying orders of the Israeli police to enter her house in Sheikh Jarrah with her father. She fell to the ground severely injured. The police fired another bullet that hit her father in the leg and threw a stun grenade through the bars of their front gate, which exploded between them. Both were hospitalized. Footage of the incident was widely circulated by media⁹⁸ and the Israeli Police Internal Investigations Department opened an investigation. The officer who shot the girl was suspended, while four other officers were reportedly under investigation as at the end of the reporting period.

37. On 4 June, Palestinians held a solidarity marathon from Sheikh Jarrah to Silwan as a form of peaceful protest. As runners – including women, children and older persons – were gathered, singing and dancing, at the finish line in Batn Al-Hawa in Silwan, Israeli police violently dispersed them by firing stun grenades and kinetic impact projectiles. Footage shows Israeli police raiding the event tent and physically assaulting those inside, including with police clubs.⁹⁹ The Palestine Red Crescent Society treated 23 persons injured.¹⁰⁰ Israeli police violently arrested four Palestinians, including a 15-year-old boy. They also physically assaulted a group of journalists and damaged their cameras¹⁰¹ and hit an ambulance with a kinetic impact projectile, shattering its windshield.¹⁰²

38. Israeli police appeared to prevent, intentionally and sometimes with force, journalists from documenting the events. On 5 June, they arrested a female journalist with the Al-Jazeera media network who was reporting on protests in Sheikh Jarrah.¹⁰³ Israeli police asked for her press card and as she was walking to get it from her car, a female officer pushed her against a wall and kicked her, fracturing her arm. The journalist was arrested – accused of assaulting an Israeli officer – but released in the evening following the release of footage of the arrest, which contradicted the allegation. She was, however, required to stay away from Sheikh Jarrah for 15 days and the charge was changed to “non-compliance with the orders of a police officer”.¹⁰⁴ Several other female journalists were physically assaulted and arrested during the tensions in East Jerusalem¹⁰⁵ and, in several other documented cases, journalists were denied access.¹⁰⁶

39. Amid the tension, on 9 May, the Supreme Court issued a stay order against the eviction of the four families, following the expressed readiness of the Attorney General of Israel to consider intervening in the pending leave to appeal at the Supreme Court. On 4 October, the Supreme Court proposed a settlement that would give the four families first- or second-generation protected tenancy status, while recognizing the Israeli settler organization’s ownership of the land and paying nominal annual rent to the settlers.¹⁰⁷ On 27 October, the four families and the Nahalat Shimon organization both rejected the proposed

⁹⁷ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-kahanist-lawmaker-closes-makeshift-office-in-east-jerusalem-at-netanyahu-s-behest-1.9783069?lts=1639435045666>.

⁹⁸ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-jerusalem-police-officer-who-shot-palestinian-girl-suspended-after-footage-emerges-1.9845088>.

⁹⁹ See https://twitter.com/JalalAK_jojo/status/1400849842855976969.

¹⁰⁰ See <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2021/6/4/israeli-police-attack-palestinians-running-to-protest-expulsions>.

¹⁰¹ See <https://www.wattan.net/ar/news/342475.html>.

¹⁰² Information provided by the Wadi Hilweh Information Center.

¹⁰³ See <https://www.aljazeera.com/gallery/2021/6/6/the-moment-when-al-jazeera-journalist-was-arrested>.

¹⁰⁴ See سلطات-الاحتلال-الإسرائيلية-تعتقل

¹⁰⁵ See, for example, <https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2021/6/2/palestinian-journalists-on-the-front-line>.

¹⁰⁶ See <https://twitter.com/m7mdkurd/status/1401978033976786950?s=20>.

¹⁰⁷ See

<https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts\21\010\024\e19&fileName=21024010.E19&type=4> (in Hebrew).

settlement. Protests in East Jerusalem continued, though at a lower intensity, through the end of the reporting period.

Beita, Nablus Governorate

40. Most settler-related violence in the West Bank occurs in the vicinity of outposts and there appears to be a correlation between the expansion of outposts and settler attacks against Palestinians.¹⁰⁸ Nablus Governorate has long been a hotspot for settler violence and it was the area the most affected also during the reporting period, with a total of 178 incidents recorded,¹⁰⁹ including of physical violence and shooting live ammunition. The violence occurred particularly within the 25 km² constituting the area surrounding the Yitzhar settlement and its adjacent outposts, along Road 60 and near the ring of outposts from the Itamar settlement west of firing zone 904A.¹¹⁰

41. Two new outposts were established – on Mount Masyaf in Beit Dajan in late 2020 and on Jabal Sabih near Beita in May 2021. Palestinians mobilized in protest and demonstrated in Beita, Beit Dajan, Kafr Qaddum and Ni'lin. The demonstrations were met with harsh means by the Israeli security forces, including lethal force, suppressing freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly of Palestinians, and raising serious concerns of excessive use of force, including arbitrary killings. During the reporting period, the Israeli security forces killed 8 Palestinians, including 2 boys, and injured 6,742 (including 454 children), 348 of whom with live ammunition,¹¹¹ in the context of demonstrations and other protest activities in Nablus Governorate.

42. On 3 May, Israeli settlers re-established the so-called Evyatar outpost on land of the Palestinian villages of Beita, Qabalan and Yatma¹¹² on Jabal Sabih in Area C. In the 1980s, Israeli authorities had temporarily seized this Palestinian-owned land for military purposes. In 2013, 2016 and 2018, settlers attempted to erect an outpost on the land but, each time, Israeli authorities demolished the structures.¹¹³ On 3 May, a day after the killing of a 19-year-old settler in a drive-by shooting by a Palestinian, settlers with support from the Israeli security forces¹¹⁴ rapidly rebuilt the Evyatar outpost. By 31 May, it included some 40 structures housing over 200 settlers.¹¹⁵ According to Israeli media, the reconstruction was carried out at the initiative of the Nahala settlement movement, which provided financial and logistical assistance, along with the Samaria Regional Council.¹¹⁶ According to the settlers, the outpost “prevents the creation of a connection between the villages of Qabalan, Yatma and Beita” and is “a strategic point that strengthens the Jewish presence in the region”.¹¹⁷

43. On 9 June, Israel declared the land a closed military zone and ordered the outpost evacuated. On 2 July, settlers left the outpost following an agreement with the Government of Israel that the Israel Defense Forces would re-establish a presence at the site and an Israeli land survey would be conducted to determine the land status.¹¹⁸ Settlers erected a 13-metre-high iron Star of David facing Beita village with the phrase “we will return” inscribed next to it.¹¹⁹ On 12 August, the Supreme Court of Israel rejected a petition filed on behalf of the ¹⁰⁸ See http://peacenow.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2021/12/settlers_report_eng.pdf.

¹⁰⁹ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

¹¹⁰ See A/74/357, sect. IV; and A/76/336, paras. 45–49.

¹¹¹ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

¹¹² A/76/336, para. 9.

¹¹³ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-in-just-a-month-illegal-settler-outpost-sprouts-up-on-palestinian-lands-1.9882850>.

¹¹⁴ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israel-soldiers-photographed-helping-build-illegal-west-bank-outpost-1.9897082>.

¹¹⁵ A/76/336, para. 9.

¹¹⁶ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-in-just-a-month-illegal-settler-outpost-sprouts-up-on-palestinian-lands-1.9882850>.

¹¹⁷ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-in-just-a-month-illegal-settler-outpost-sprouts-up-on-palestinian-lands-1.9882850?lts=1647864046472>.

¹¹⁸ See <https://www.timesofisrael.com/settlers-vacate-illegal-outpost-as-deal-to-keep-it-intact-goes-into-effect/>.

¹¹⁹ Ibid.

residents, pending the result of the land survey.¹²⁰ The petitioners requested a revocation of the agreement, and the petition included legal documents, inheritance deeds and photographs attesting to ownership by Palestinians.¹²¹ As at the end of the reporting period, the outpost structures remained on site and the Israeli security forces continued to occupy the area.

44. From 3 May, weekly and in some periods daily protests took place in Beita against the Evyatar outpost, the Israeli occupation and settlement activities in general. Protest measures included collective Friday prayers near the outpost, demonstrations and so-called night-confusion activities. Palestinians carried flags, played loud music, blew horns, burned tyres and shot fireworks. Some demonstrators pointed lasers towards the outpost, including at night, and threw stones, including with slingshots, and in some cases Molotov cocktails towards the Israeli security forces. The Israeli security forces responded with live ammunition, rubber-coated metal bullets, tear gas and stun grenades. Between 3 May and 31 October, the Israeli security forces killed 6 Palestinians, including 2 boys in Beita in the context of protests, and injured at least 4,623 Palestinians (of whom 588 were children), including 177 with live ammunition.¹²²

45. On 14 May, as Palestinians held Friday prayers near the Evyatar outpost, the Israeli security forces positioned on the hills fired tear gas towards Palestinians about 100 metres away on lower ground. The Israeli security forces marched towards the Palestinians, who scattered to avoid the tear gas. After 15 minutes, the Israeli security forces began shooting rubber-coated metal bullets and live ammunition towards the young Palestinians who were still on lower ground 100 metres away. The Israeli security forces injured at least 10 Palestinians with live ammunition. One young Palestinian was shot in his shoulder with live ammunition as he was handing out water bottles. Among a group of 20 Palestinians protesting 70–100 metres away from the closest soldiers, some of them throwing stones, a 40-year-old Palestinian man was shot dead with live ammunition in his stomach. As at 31 October, no information was available about any investigation into the killing. The Palestine Red Crescent Society treated 231 other Palestinians injured by the Israeli security forces that day (45 from live ammunition, 40 from rubber-coated metal bullets, 140 from tear gas inhalation and 6 from physical assaults).

46. On 28 May, the Israeli security forces shot and killed a 25-year-old Palestinian man in Beita. According to eyewitnesses, he was standing under a tree with 10 other Palestinians, eating sandwiches. Two armed settlers opened fire at them, injuring two Palestinians. As the group fled the settlers, the Israeli security forces positioned on higher ground approximately 60 metres away shot at them and hit the 25-year-old Palestinian with live ammunition in the chest. The Israeli security forces continued to fire live ammunition at the group as they were evacuating the victim, injuring two other Palestinians with live ammunition in the legs. As at 31 October, there was no information of an investigation into the killing or the use of live ammunition against unarmed individuals. The Palestine Red Crescent Society treated 69 Palestinians injured by the Israeli security forces that day (9 with live ammunition, 17 with rubber-coated metal bullets, 38 from tear gas inhalation and 5 from physical assaults).

47. On 11 June, the Israeli security forces shot in the chest and killed a 16-year-old Palestinian boy during protests in Beita. Several hundred Palestinians had joined the protests after the Friday prayers when the Israeli security forces dispersed the crowd with tear gas. Groups of young Palestinians burned tyres and threw stones, including with slingshots. The boy was with a group of about 10 other young people 500 metres from the outpost. Five soldiers were located 50–100 metres from them, on higher ground, pointing their rifles. After throwing stones, the 16-year-old and his cousin were under a tree facing the soldiers, while other young people continued throwing stones. The Israeli security forces shot and injured the 16-year-old boy and his cousin, who were both hit by live ammunition in the chest while seemingly not posing any threat. The Israeli security forces shot tear gas canisters as villagers attempted to evacuate the boy to an ambulance. The boy had been hit in the heart and died in the hospital. On 23 June, media reported that a criminal investigation had been launched.¹²³ Three other young people were injured with live ammunition in the chest. On that day, the Palestine Red Crescent Society treated 11 Palestinians injured by the Israeli security forces with live ammunition, 16 with rubber-coated metal bullets, 62 from tear gas inhalation and 20 from physical assaults or falls.

¹²⁰ See <https://www.facebook.com/JLACps/posts/10158351432886989> (in Arabic).

¹²¹ See <http://www.jlac.ps/details.php?id=r3wziqa2256ylfc7xtdjf>. See also <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-palestinians-claiming-ownership-of-evyatar-ask-attorney-general-to-block-settler-dea-1.9952576>.

¹²² According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the number of injuries was likely to have been much higher than the figure recorded.

48. On 6 June, the Israeli security forces sealed the main entrance to Beita village with cement blocks, raising concerns of collective punishment measures. On several occasions, the Israeli security forces closed agricultural roads leading to the Evyatar outpost, thereby obstructing the movement of ambulances, and used force against ambulances and medics. For example, on 3 September, the Israeli security forces injured a Palestine Red Crescent Society medic with a rubber-coated metal bullet and damaged four ambulances. On 29 October, the Israeli security forces injured one paramedic and shot at an ambulance.

49. The protests against the occupation, settlement activities and outposts were ongoing as at the end of the reporting period. On 10 August, the chief of staff of the Israel Defense Forces asked senior Central Command officers to take action to reduce the considerable number of shootings of Palestinians by soldiers in the West Bank.¹²⁴ In the following months, the use of live ammunition against Palestinian protesters appeared to decrease, yet there were additional killings and a large number of severely injured Palestinians. The unjustified and illegal recourse to firearms by law enforcement officials against protected persons resulting in their death may constitute a war crime when occurring in the context of a military occupation.¹²⁵

V. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

50. On 11 October 2021, the Prime Minister of Israel announced that the Government intended to significantly increase the number of people living in the occupied Syrian Golan, citing the continued recognition by the United States of America of the northern plateau as Israeli territory. The Prime Minister asserted that the eventual goal would be to increase the Israeli settlers in the occupied Syrian Golan to 100,000 residents, almost four times the current population of approximately 27,000.¹²⁶ According to the proposal, 7,000 housing units would be added to the town of Katzrin by 2026. The proposal is part of a programme, slated for approval in December 2021, to double the population of the Syrian Golan by the end of the decade. In addition to calling for the increase in the number of people living in the Syrian Golan, the plan calls for the creation of two new settlements in current open spaces, new solar energy projects, and industrial, commercial and tourism zones.¹²⁷ Syrians in the occupied Syrian Golan voiced their opposition to the plan through protests held in October 2021.¹²⁸ The Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel also opposed the plan, calling it an exceptional and unreasonable measure.¹²⁹

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

51. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan amount to the transfer by Israel of its own ¹²³ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium.MAGAZINE-reality-of-a-west-bank-outpost-four-dead-palestinians-and-drone-spraying-tear-gas-1.9933446>.

¹²⁴ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-chief-of-staff-asks-senior-officers-to-reduce-shootings-of-palestinians-1.10102726>.

¹²⁵ A/HRC/29/CRP.4, para. 546; and A/HRC/49/25, para. 23.

¹²⁶ See <https://www.timesofisrael.com/bennett-announces-major-drive-to-quadruple-population-of-golan-heights/>.

¹²⁷ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-bennett-pushing-unelected-zoning-board-in-golan-heights-in-bid-to-double-population-1.10458132>.

¹²⁸ See <https://www.middleeasteye.net/news/israel-golan-heights-settlements-quadruple-population>.

¹²⁹ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-bennett-pushing-unelected-zoning-board-in-golan-heights-in-bid-to-double-population-1.10458132>.

civilian population into the territories it occupies, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law.¹³⁰ Such transfers amount to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.¹³¹ A number of international bodies have confirmed the illegality of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan, including the International Court of Justice, the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Human Rights Council.¹³²

52. Settlements have significant adverse effects on the rights of Palestinians, including their rights to life and security of person, freedom of movement, privacy, family life, an adequate standard of living, work and education, and the exercise of their right to self-determination, and they threaten to fragment the contiguity of the West Bank.

53. Discriminatory planning policies and practices, demolitions and forced evictions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including for the benefit of settler organizations, entail numerous human rights violations and are a key factor in the coercive environment that exists. Displacement and relocation to alternative residential areas as a result of such an environment could amount to forms of forcible transfer, contrary to the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.¹³³

54. Settler violence intensified, with the acquiescence or, on occasion, practical support of the Israeli security forces. Israel repeatedly failed in its responsibility as the occupying Power to protect Palestinians and their property,¹³⁴ while in numerous cases the Israeli security forces used excessive force against Palestinians. This contributed to the worsening of the coercive environment for Palestinians, with a climate of impunity prevailing for settler violence and for use of such force by the Israeli security forces.

55. Israel suppressed Palestinians demonstrating against settlements and settlement-related activities. Documented cases of discriminatory law enforcement, intimidation of protesters and journalists, mass arrests and excessive use of force raised serious concerns that Israel committed human rights violations, including against the rights of Palestinians to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, and their right to life and security of person.¹³⁵

56. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights recalls Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council decided that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect.

57. On the basis of the findings presented in the present report and in previous reports, the High Commissioner recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Immediately and completely cease and reverse all settlement development and related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

¹³⁰ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

¹³¹ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹³² International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

¹³³ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6); Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹³⁴ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 43 and 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

¹³⁵ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, arts. 19–20; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 6 (1), 9 (1), 19 and 22; Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

- (b) Rescind all policies and practices contributing to a coercive environment and/or increasing the risk of forcible transfer;
 - (c) Review planning laws and policies to ensure that they are compliant with the obligations of Israel under international human rights law and international humanitarian law;
 - (d) Refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders on the basis of discriminatory and unlawful planning policies and practices that may lead to forcible transfer, including of Bedouin and herder communities;
 - (e) Take all steps necessary to protect the Palestinian population and their property from settler violence, and ensure that all incidents of violence by settlers against Palestinians and damage to their property are promptly, effectively, thoroughly and transparently investigated, that perpetrators are prosecuted and, if convicted, punished with appropriate sanctions, and that victims are provided with effective remedies, including adequate compensation, in accordance with international standards;
 - (f) Protect the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly of Palestinians, refrain from all undue restrictions, including use of force, and create an enabling environment for peaceful protests;
 - (g) End policies and practices within the occupied Syrian Golan that may lead to discrimination against protected persons.
-

General Assembly

Distr.: General
15 March 2023

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-second session

27 February–31 March 2023

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 49/29, provides an update on the implementation of the provisions of the resolution during the period from 1 November 2021 to 31 October 2022.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 49/29, provides an update on the implementation of the provisions of the resolution during the period from 1 November 2021 to 31 October 2022. The report takes stock of developments during the 10 years since the adoption of Council resolution 19/17, by which the Council established the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.¹ It also contains an update on Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan.

2. The advancement of settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the transfer by Israel of its civilian population to the occupied territory, in contravention of international law,² has continued over the decade. This has resulted in numerous systematic violations of the human rights of Palestinians. The report documents patterns of systematic discrimination in law, policy and practice, encompassing almost every sphere of life, and examines, in particular, housing, land and property rights and the right to life, security of person and access to justice. These violations have created a coercive environment which is forcing Palestinians to leave their homes and their lands in possible forcible transfer – a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which may amount to a war crime³ – and the ultimate result of the cumulative effect of the settlement enterprise.

3. The findings in the present report are based on direct monitoring and other information gathering conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and on information provided by government sources, United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The report should be read in conjunction with other related reports of the Secretary-General and of the High Commissioner for Human Rights submitted to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.⁴

II. Legal framework

4. International human rights law and international humanitarian law apply concurrently in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely, Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan. This includes the application of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which is binding upon Israel as the occupying Power. A detailed analysis of the applicable legal framework can be found in previous reports of the Secretary-General.⁵

¹ A/HRC/22/63.

² Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 49.

³ Ibid., arts. 49 (1) and 147; Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii); International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Database on Customary International Humanitarian Law, rule 129; and A/76/336, paras. 39 and 57.

⁴ A/72/564, A/72/565, A/75/376, A/76/336, A/77/493, A/HRC/37/38, A/HRC/37/42, A/HRC/37/43, A/HRC/40/42, A/HRC/43/67, A/HRC/46/65, A/HRC/49/85 and A/HRC/49/25.

⁵ A/HRC/34/38 and A/HRC/34/39.

III. Update on settlement activities

A. Settlement expansion

5. During the past 10 years, the settlement population in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, has grown from 520,000⁶ in 2012 to just under 700,000.⁷ The population lives in 279 Israeli settlements spread across the West Bank, including 14 settlements in East Jerusalem, with a total population of more than 229,000 persons.⁸ Of those settlements, at least 147 are outposts, which are illegal even under Israeli domestic law.⁹ The establishment and the expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, have no legal validity and constitute a flagrant violation of international law. The establishment and expansion of such settlements amount to the transfer by Israel of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law. All measures aimed at altering the demographic composition, character and status of the Palestinian Territory occupied since 1967, including East Jerusalem, violate international humanitarian law and a number of Security Council resolutions.¹⁰

6. Settlement expansion has continued year upon year over the course of the decade. During the present reporting cycle (1 November 2021–31 October 2022), advancement or approval of new settlement plans increased,¹¹ while the number of tenders decreased.¹² Official data on settlement construction approvals indicated an average quarterly rate of 763 units.¹³ On 12 May alone, Israel advanced some 20 plans for the construction of more than 4,000 housing units in Area C settlements, including in particularly sensitive areas across the Green Line.¹⁴ Settlement advancements in and around East Jerusalem also continued, threatening to sever the connection between the southern West Bank and the northern West Bank and further detaching East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank. On 5 September 2022, Israel advanced plans for some 700 units in the planned settlement of Givat Hashaked in East Jerusalem and planning processes moved forward for the expansion of the Har Gilo settlement on the lands of the Palestinian village of Al-Walaja, placing over 304 Palestinian people (151 children, 80 men and 73 women) under imminent risk of forced displacement.¹⁵

Consolidation of settlements and takeover of land and resources

7. Whereas areas under settlement jurisdiction in Area C exceed half a million dunams, accounting for 15.1 per cent of Area C, Israel has expanded de facto control over much larger swathes of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem,¹⁶ through a variety of means. The takeover of land and resources consolidates Israeli presence while severely infringing upon Palestinians' freedom of movement, access to services and livelihoods, in addition to their

⁶ A/HRC/22/63, para. 28.

⁷ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/population> (465,400 in the West Bank) and <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/jerusalem> (229,377 in East Jerusalem).

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Israel, "Summary of the opinion concerning unauthorized outposts", 10 March 2005; and A/72/564, para. 62.

¹⁰ Legal Consequences of Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004 (www.icj-cij.org/public/files/case-related/131/131-20040709-ADV-01-00-EN.pdf), p. 136, and, for example, Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016).

¹¹ Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process: 9,280 units were advanced/approved, including 6,340 in East Jerusalem (7,100 in previous period).

¹² Ibid.: tenders were issued for 400 unit (3,600 in previous reporting period).

¹³ Ibid.: figures between October 2021 and September 2022.

¹⁴ See

https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/report_of_the_secretary_general_on_the_implementation_of_scr2334_-_28_september_2022.pdf.

¹⁵ See www.ir-amim.org.il/en/node/2861 and A/HRC/46/65, para. 46.

¹⁶ See https://s3.eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/over+the+border+2022/Meever+Lagvul_ENG.pdf.

collective right to economic prosperity and the enjoyment of resources,¹⁷ including arable land and water springs.¹⁸

Declarations of “State land”

8. Through the manipulative use of land laws applicable in the West Bank, Israel has declared more than 750,000 dunams of land in the West Bank as “State land”, including lands that would have been classified as private property.¹⁹ Under local laws, land registered as “State land” is intended for public use. Nevertheless, according to Yesh Din, an Israeli human rights organization, 99.76 per cent of the State land allocated for use has been allocated for the benefit of Israeli settlements.²⁰ Under the Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (the Hague Regulations), the occupying power is obliged to safeguard the capital of government and public properties and administer them in accordance with the rules of usufruct.²¹

Infrastructure

9. Israel has spent billions of dollars on consolidating settlement blocs with networks of so-called bypass roads, which are designed to circumvent the Palestinian presence in the West Bank.²² A 1997 Israeli planning document explained that separate roads were a preferred planning model because they “provide a better solution for the issue of segregation”.²³ Indeed, some roads are only for Israeli use, segregating Jewish and Palestinian travellers.²⁴ Even when Palestinians are allowed to travel on some roads, they are primarily designed to connect settlements and outposts to each other, to Israel and to Jerusalem. In addition, an extensive system of checkpoints and roadblocks allows Israel to control access to the bypass roads and the main highways in the West Bank.²⁵ Furthermore, some roads segment Palestinian governorates into isolated enclaves of village clusters,²⁶ hindering connectivity and restricting Palestinians’ movement in the West Bank in a manner that severely infringes upon their freedom of movement and access to livelihoods and services, with negative results. For example, people who experience gender-based violence are not able to access life-saving services and quality care.²⁷

10. Israel further consolidates settlements and outposts by providing them with water and sewerage, communications, power, security systems and educational and health care facilities, promoting connectivity and economic development of the settlement enterprise and normalizing the settler presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.²⁸ As a result of the establishment of Israeli infrastructure, the population of the settlements has grown rapidly.²⁹

¹⁷ A/77/356.

¹⁸ A/HRC/37/39, para. 52.

¹⁹ See www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/sites/default/files2/publication/200205_land_grab_eng.pdf, p. 51; see also www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/sites/default/files2/201203_under_the_guise_of_legality_eng.pdf, p. 6, and A/77/328, para. 33.

²⁰ See http://peacenow.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2018/07/Lands_Allocated_to_Palestinians_ENG.pdf.

²¹ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land (the Hague Regulations), art. 55.

²² A/77/328, para. 25.

²³ See www.breakingthesilence.org.il/inside/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/Highway-to-Annexation-Final.pdf, p. 5.

²⁴ A/77/328, para. 80; see also www.breakingthesilence.org.il/inside/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/Highway-to-Annexation-Final.pdf and <https://peacenow.org.il/en/the-roads-boom-in-2020>.

²⁵ See www.breakingthesilence.org.il/inside/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/Highway-to-Annexation-Final.pdf.

²⁶ See www.jlac.ps/userfiles/Salfit-%20JLAC_pub.pdf and www.jlac.ps/userfiles/Dhar%20Al%20Maleh%20Appeal.pdf; www.jlac.ps/userfiles/Qalqiliya-%20JLAC-%20EU%20feb%202020.pdf.

²⁷ A/HRC/49/85, para. 10.

²⁸ A/77/328, para. 25; see also <http://peacenow.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2021/03/The-Roads-Boom-in-2020.pdf>.

²⁹ See www.breakingthesilence.org.il/inside/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/Highway-to-Annexation-Final.pdf, p. 5.

While occupation is inherently temporary in nature,³⁰ Israel continues to invest in and implement permanent infrastructure projects for the settlers. In 2017, the Prime Minister of Israel announced an 800 million shekel plan for bypass roads, including lighting, cellular reception and protection of buses, for the West Bank settlements.³¹

11. Advancement continued during the current reporting cycle, including the Eastern Ring Road, which is planned to bypass East Jerusalem and to connect the settlements south of Jerusalem with the settlements east of Jerusalem in the Ma'ale Adumim area.³² For that purpose, Israel issued an expropriation order for about 55 dunams of land in the Palestinian village of At-Tur, east of Jerusalem.³³ According to the Israeli organization Peace Now, holders of Palestinian identification will not have access to the road.³⁴

Outposts

12. There are currently 147 outposts in the West Bank, 78 of which have been erected since 2012.³⁵ Of that number, 77 are “farms”, 66 of which have been established in the past decade.³⁶ Although illegal, even under Israeli law, outposts are often strategically placed and play a key role in the takeover of Palestinian land. Israel employs different financial, legal and planning mechanisms to enable the establishment and expansion of outposts.³⁷ Outpost farms are often centred around a single caravan or a few illegal modular structures, gradually taking over the larger area around them for herding or farming. The resources needed to erect the farms are often minimal, enabling settlers to take over very large areas of land in a short period of time.³⁸ In 2021, the head of Amana, a settler organization, discussed the intention of expanding outpost farms in Area C, affirming how they are a more efficient tool for seizing land than settlements.³⁹

13. Most settler-related violence occurs in the vicinity of outposts and there appears to be a correlation between the expansion of outposts and settler attacks against Palestinians.⁴⁰ Israeli security forces play a significant role in ensuring the protection of outposts and settlers.⁴¹ Law enforcement by Israeli security forces is invariably discriminatory, in support of settler communities, including when they attack Palestinians, and against Palestinians attempting to protest against illegal outpost activity⁴². Previous reports⁴³ have also ³⁰ Hague Regulations, arts. 43 and 55, and A/76/336, para. 13.

³¹ See <https://www.israelnationalnews.com/news/237927>; see also A/HRC/37/43, para. 18.

³² See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/confiscation-order-for-the-eastern-ring-road-was-issued#:~:text=The%20southern%20part%20of%20the%20Eastern%20Ring%20Road,by%20the%20Israeli%20government%20%28Resolution%203790%29%2C%20see%20below>.

³³ A/77/493, para. 13.

³⁴ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/confiscation-order-for-the-eastern-ring-road-was-issued#:~:text=The%20southern%20part%20of%20the%20Eastern%20Ring%20Road,by%20the%20Israeli%20government%20%28Resolution%203790%29%2C%20see%20below>.

³⁵ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/settlements-watch/settlements-data/population>.

³⁶ See a76eb4_9d3dee006d0e4decac505bf432bbd56e.pdf (keremnavot.org), p. 16.

³⁷ See

www.btselem.org/press_releases/20210309_new_report_with_keren_navot_this_is_ours_and_this_to_o.

³⁸ See

www.btselem.org/press_releases/20210309_new_report_with_keren_navot_this_is_ours_and_this_to_o.

³⁹ See www.haaretz.co.il/news/politics/.premium-1.9557640?utm_source=mailchimp&utm_medium=email&utm_content=author-alert&utm_campaign=%D7%94%D7%92%D7%A8%20%D7%A9%D7%99%D7%96%D7%A3&utm_term=20210222-10:52 [in Hebrew].

⁴⁰ A/HRC/49/85, para. 40.

⁴¹ A/77/493, para. 49.

⁴² See A/77/493, paras. 7–8, and A/HRC/49/85, paras. 40–49.

⁴³ A/77/493, sect. B, and A/76/336, sect. IV.

documented how outposts are viewed by government officials as a tool to “prevent Palestinian invasions” and acquire Israeli sovereignty over land in Area C.⁴⁴

14. Since 2012, Israel has sought to develop a domestic legal path to enable the retroactive legalization of outposts built without official approval, including those on land privately owned by Palestinians.⁴⁵ The 2012 Levy report, commissioned by Israel, provided the legal rationale for the legalization of most unauthorized settlement outposts.⁴⁶ This was followed by the publication of a position paper by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 2015, according to which the West Bank is not occupied territory and Israel has legitimate claims to it.⁴⁷ In 2016 and 2017, the Attorney General issued two legal opinions, allowing for the retroactive legalization of settlement units built on private Palestinian land when built in good faith, based on the assumption that they were built on State land. This resulted in interference with the property of Palestinian landowners, who are protected persons, and ensured the welfare of Israeli residents.⁴⁸ In 2018, the Zandberg Committee, a technical team tasked with drafting a regularization plan, formulated unprecedented recommendations intended to legalize thousands of unauthorized structures in the West Bank, including those built on privately owned Palestinian land.⁴⁹

15. While a “regularization law”, introduced in 2017 to retroactively legalize outposts built on private Palestinian land and housing units built illegally in existing settlements,⁵⁰ was ruled unconstitutional in 2020, the Supreme Court determined that existing legal tools serve the purpose of regularizing, under domestic law, illegal Israeli construction on private Palestinian land.⁵¹ In 2022, the Supreme Court determined that the Mitzpeh Kramim outpost met the threshold of “good faith”, despite the fact that the land was known to be privately owned.⁵² The decision set a worrying precedent for the retroactive legalization of outposts on private Palestinian land in the West Bank. The establishment of settlements, including outposts, is a flagrant violation of international law, and outposts are also considered illegal under Israeli domestic law.

Areas closed or confiscated for “military purposes”

16. Israel has declared some 1,765 million dunams of land, almost one third of West Bank and over half of Area C, as closed “military areas” for various purposes.⁵³ The areas include, but are not limited to, seam zone areas, special security areas near settlements and closed military firing zones. In addition, closure and seizure orders issued by the Israel security forces prohibit Palestinian construction and severely curtail Palestinian freedom of movement.

17. Since the 1970s, approximately 18 per cent of the West Bank, nearly 30 per cent of Area C, where some 6,200 Palestinians currently live, has been designated by Israel as closed “military firing zones”. Most of that land (78 per cent) is not being used for active military training.⁵⁴ Any Palestinian presence in such zones is prohibited without prior coordination with the Israeli authorities, which is rarely granted. Israel prohibits construction and development of Palestinian infrastructure and regularly orders and carries out the demolition and confiscation of Palestinian-owned property in firing zones.⁵⁵ www.btselem.org/press_releases/20210309_new_report_with_keren_navot_this_is_ours_and_this_to_o, p. 43.

⁴⁴ See

⁴⁵ A/HRC/40/42, para. 14.

⁴⁶ A/68/513 and footnote 15.

⁴⁷ See www.gov.il/en/departments/general/israeli-settlement-and-international-law.

⁴⁸ A/73/410, para. 13, and A/HRC/37/43, para. 17.

⁴⁹ A/HRC/31/43, para. 27.

⁵⁰ A/HRC/40/42, para. 15.

⁵¹ A/HRC/46/65, para. 16.

⁵² See report_of_the_secretary_general_on_the_implementation_of_scr2334_-_28_september_2022.pdf (unmissions.org).

⁵³ See www.keremnavot.org/_files/ugd/a76eb4_affeae08cbc9492fb589419b6348373c.pdf, p. 9.

⁵⁴ See www.keremnavot.org/a-locked-garden, p. 10.

⁵⁵ See www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/sites/default/files/201306_area_c_report_eng.pdf, p. 14.

18. In a decision of 28 February 2022 related to privately owned Palestinian property in Hebron originally requisitioned by Israel security forces but now slated for a new Jewish settlement, the High Court of Justice observed that a “civilian Jewish presence is part of the Israel Defense Forces regional security doctrine in the area”. This ruling represents a departure from a landmark ruling of 1979, which recognized that the expropriation of land by military orders for the construction of settlements contravened international law.⁵⁶ The new judgment risks leading to the further expropriation of private Palestinian land for settlement expansion on the pretext of ensuring security, which is impermissible under international law.⁵⁷

19. Israel has also declared lands within firing zones as “State land”, opening them up to settlement activity. Since the 1980s, over 40 per cent of land in the West Bank that Israel has declared State land is within firing zones.⁵⁸ Previous reports have also documented discriminatory law enforcement between Palestinians and settlers in firing zones.⁵⁹

National parks and archaeology

20. Israel has declared 48 “nature reserves” in the West Bank, covering at least 383,600 dunams of land, equivalent to about 7 per cent of the West Bank. Such nature reserves are effectively inaccessible for Palestinians, including those who may own the land.⁶⁰ During the present reporting cycle, Israel proceeded with plans to declare a nature reserve on approximately 22,258 dunams of land south of Jericho; some 6,070 dunams is on private Palestinian-owned property. The Nahal Og nature reserve is the largest reserve to be declared in 25 years.⁶¹

21. The archaeology policy of Israel appears to be another method used to take over land and expand settlements.⁶² According to the latest available data from the coordinator of government activities in the occupied territories, in 2019, Israel issued 118 demolition orders and warnings for structures allegedly built on archaeological sites in the West Bank.⁶³ The figure represents a 162 per cent increase over a period of two years.⁶⁴ In some cases, archaeological excavations have preceded the establishment of new Israeli settlements that had not yet received permits.⁶⁵

22. During the reporting cycle, Israeli right-wing settler groups succeeded in transferring the responsibility for archaeological sites in Area C from the Staff Office for Archaeology of the Civil Administration to the Israel Antiquities Authority of the Ministry of Culture of Israel,⁶⁶ further politicizing the administration of archaeological sites in the West Bank. The extension of the jurisdiction of Israeli authorities to the occupied territory is inconsistent with international humanitarian law and violates the obligation of Israel as the occupying Power

⁵⁶ A/77/328, para. 32.

⁵⁷ A/77/493, para. 9.

⁵⁸ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA); see also A/72/564, para. 47; and www.keremnavot.org/a-locked-garden, p. 10.

⁵⁹ A/76/336, para. 41; see also www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2021-02-08/ty-article/.premium/israeli-soldiers-expel-palestinians-while-letting-settlers-stay-documents-reveal/0000017f-e8fb-da9b-a1ff-ecffb8d10000; www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-six-lies-about-the-cowboy-outposts-in-the-northern-jordan-valley-1.9539497; and <https://www.akevot.org.il/en/news-item/document-revealed-by-akevot-ariel-sharon-instructed-idf-to-create-training-zone-to-displace-palestinians/>.

⁶⁰ See www.ochaopt.org/content/settlement-expansion-around-israeli-declared-nature-reserve.

⁶¹ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/sg_report_on_the_implementation_of_scr_2334_-_22_june_2022.pdf.

⁶² See <https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/Menachsim+Archeology/Menachsim++Eng++Web.pdf>.

⁶³ See <https://emekshaveh.org/en/appropriating-the-past-israels-archaeological-practices-in-the-west-bank/>.

⁶⁴ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2020-06-23/ty-article/.premium/when-an-archaeological-find-can-evict-palestinians-from-their-home/0000017f-f484-d887-a7ff-fce402bb0000.

⁶⁵ See <https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/Menachsim+Archeology/Menachsim++Eng++Web.pdf> the Past, pp. 20–22.

⁶⁶ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-06-08/ty-article/.highlight/under-settler-pressure-israel-extends-antiquities-authoritys-powers-into-west-bank/00000181-42f8-df72-a5cb-c2ffa4660000.

to support the competent national authorities of the occupied territory in safeguarding and preserving its cultural property.⁶⁷

Settlement of title

23. The examination of land ownership claims and land title registration in the West Bank (“settlement of title” process) was halted at the start of the occupation, in line with the rules of international humanitarian law.⁶⁸ In 2018, in a reversal of its long-standing position, Israel reinitiated the “settlement of title” process in East Jerusalem,⁶⁹ with the procedure largely being implemented in a non-transparent manner,⁷⁰ in areas where the State and/or settlers have a particular interest.⁷¹ On 23 June 2022, the process was initiated in two highly sensitive areas in East Jerusalem, Abu Tor, south of the Old City, where the blocs marked for settlement of title cover much of the neighbourhood and is home to hundreds of Palestinian families, and the Umayyad Palace area, a 20-dunam archaeological site below the Al Aqsa Mosque compound.⁷² In August, the process was completed in the neighbourhood of Um Haroun in Sheikh Jarrah, formally registering the title of properties under the name of Jews who allegedly owned the land before 1948.⁷³ As at the end of the reporting period, the registration had begun in 158 blocs throughout East Jerusalem.⁷⁴

24. In November 2020, the Knesset “Subcommittee for Judea and Samaria” recommended the possibility of renewing the settlement of land titles in the West Bank.⁷⁵

B. Impact of settlements on human rights

Housing, land and property rights

25. For decades, Israeli authorities have ordered the demolition of Palestinian homes and property on the grounds that they lacked a building permit, despite the law of occupation prohibiting destruction of property, except for military necessity.⁷⁶ From 2012 to 2021, Israel demolished 6,821 Palestinian-owned structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (Area C accounting for 77 per cent; East Jerusalem for 21 per cent), forcibly evicting 9,766 Palestinians (5,036 children, 2,483 men and 2,247 women). Structures demolished included 2,525 residential structures, 1,502 donor-funded structures provided as humanitarian aid and 571 water, sanitation and hygiene structures. Twenty schools were affected by demolition or confiscation, affecting the education of 1,297 children.⁷⁷ All but 131 of the total number of demolitions were in Area C or in East Jerusalem, and all but 146 were carried out on the grounds of a lack of Israeli-issued building permits.

26. Alarming levels of demolition continued during the reporting period. Israel demolished 914 Palestinian-owned structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem⁷⁸

⁶⁷ Hague Convention of 1 March 1954 relating to civil procedure, art. 5.

⁶⁸ Hague Regulations, arts. 43 and 55.

⁶⁹ A/77/493, para. 11, A/76/336, para. 13, and A/HRC/49/85, para. 11.

⁷⁰ A/76/336, para. 13.

⁷¹ See www.ir-

amim.org.il/sites/default/files/Settlement%20of%20Title%20in%20East%20Jerusalem%20March%202022.pdf.

⁷² See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-06-26/ty-article/israel-moves-to-register-lands-near-al-aqsa-using-funds-earmarked-for-palestinians/00000181-a154-d19e-ab99-f575f89f0000 and <https://mailchi.mp/ir-amim/in-a-dramatic-development-israel-initiates-settlement-of-land-title-adjacent-to-al-aqsa-across-abu-thor?e=5dfcd834de>.

⁷³ See www.ir-

amim.org.il/sites/default/files/Settlement%20of%20Title%20in%20East%20Jerusalem%20March%202022.pdf.

⁷⁴ See www.gov.il/BlobFolder/news/matmedet-3790-2022/he/%D7%95%D7%A2%D7%93%D7%94%20%D7%9E%D7%AA%D7%9E%D7%93%D7%A%202022.pdfwww.gov.il, p. 55.

⁷⁵ A/76/336, para. 13.

⁷⁶ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53.

⁷⁷ Education Cluster Occupied Palestinian Territory.

⁷⁸ The number was 967 in the previous reporting period.

(717 in Area C (78 per cent) and 166 (18 per cent) in East Jerusalem, forcibly evicting 1,079 Palestinians, including 521 children, 268 women and 284 men.⁷⁹ Demolished structures included 320 residential structures, 138 donor-funded structures provided as humanitarian aid, 50 water, sanitation and hygiene facilities and one school.⁸⁰ As of 31 October 2022, legal aid actors were covering at least 4,208 pending demolition and eviction orders against Palestinian structures,⁸¹ with highest number of orders being in East Jerusalem, followed by Ramallah, Bethlehem and Nablus. Destruction and appropriation of property in the occupied territory, unjustified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, is a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and thus amounts to a war crime.⁸² There are currently 56 schools with stop-work orders facing the risk of demolition across the West Bank and East Jerusalem. Such stop-work orders affect the education of an estimated 6,550 students,⁸³ who also face heightened risk of forced child labour or early marriage,⁸⁴ in breach of the obligations of the occupying Power prohibiting the destruction of institutions dedicated to education.⁸⁵

27. Demolitions and ensuing forced evictions result in numerous human rights violations, with a negative impact on rights to adequate housing, water, sanitation, health, education, family life, residency and freedom of movement.⁸⁶ Protection risks have been heightened, and the coping capacities of communities affected,⁸⁷ with Palestinian women and girls disproportionately affected by distress and trauma.⁸⁸

28. In recent years, Israel has introduced measures limiting the legal recourse for Palestinians in Area C, contributing to a notable deterioration in housing, land and property rights. These measures include Military Order No. 1797 regarding the removal of new structures,⁸⁹ allowing the Israeli Civil Administration to remove “new” structures after 96 hours of the issuance of a removal order. According to information from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the order has been implemented in 158 recorded incidents since it came into effect in 2018 and for 42 structures during the reporting period. Similarly, administrative orders introduced and/or amended in recent years⁹⁰ have resulted in a steady increase in the seizure of structures in Area C: from 6 in 2017, 17 in 2018, 27 in 2019, 33 in 2020 and 82 in 2021. During the reporting period, 131 such seizures were recorded.⁹¹

29. These orders serve to circumvent procedures established under planning legislation, severely restricting the ability of Palestinians to be heard before a judicial body. Further, significant political pressure is being exerted on the Israeli Civil Administration by pro-settlement members of Knesset and leaders of the settler movement to increase the enforcement of demolition orders.⁹²

⁷⁹ Information provided by OCHA.

⁸⁰ Education Cluster Occupied Palestinian Territory.

⁸¹ Norwegian Refugee Council.

⁸² See <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/ihl-treaties/gciv-1949>, art. 147.

⁸³ Education Cluster Occupied Palestinian Territory.

⁸⁴ See www.savethechildren.es/sites/default/files/2021-06/Hope_under_the_rubble_STC.pdf.

⁸⁵ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 49 and 147; Hague Regulations, arts. 46 and 56; and Security Council resolution 1612 (2005).

⁸⁶ A/77/493, paras. 26–27, and A/72/564, paras. 25 and 49–50.

⁸⁷ A/77/493, para. 65.

⁸⁸ See www.globalprotectioncluster.org/sites/default/files/2022-08/opt_protection_analysis_update_westbank_aug2022.pdf; see also CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, paras. 32–33.

⁸⁹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/west-bank-demolitions-and-displacement-july-august-2022; see also A/HRC/46/65, para. 32.

⁹⁰ See www.militarycourtwatch.org/files/server/MO%201651%20.pdf; www.nevo.co.il/law_html/law65/666_038.htm#Seif6; and www.nevo.co.il/law_html/law65/666_038.htm concerning “mobile structures”.

⁹¹ Information provided by OCHA.

⁹² Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee “Palestinian takeover of Area C”, 29 July 2020 and 13 August 2020.

30. It is clear that Israeli planning and zoning regimes in Area C and East Jerusalem are discriminatory,⁹³ rendering it almost impossible for Palestinians to obtain building permits.⁹⁴ Data from the Israeli Civil Administration made public in December 2021 revealed that fewer than 1 per cent of Palestinian construction permits (24 of 2,550) in Area C had been approved between 2016 and 2020.⁹⁵ In contrast, 8,356 permits for Israeli settlement housing units were issued.

31. In occupied East Jerusalem, Israel has zoned only 15 per cent of the area illegally annexed by Israel in 1967 for Palestinian housing needs, compared to 38 per cent allocated for settlement construction.⁹⁶ Data provided by the Jerusalem municipality show that while Palestinian people account for 38 per cent of the overall population of Jerusalem, between 1991 and 2018 only 16.5 per cent of building permits were issued for construction in Palestinian neighbourhoods, mainly for small-scale private projects.⁹⁷ By contrast, 37.8 per cent of all permits were issued for settlement construction in East Jerusalem. As a result, a third of Palestinian homes in East Jerusalem have been built without the required Israeli permit, which makes them subject to demolition orders.⁹⁸

32. Between 2012 and 2021, Israeli authorities demolished 1,407 Palestinian houses in East Jerusalem. Within the reporting period alone, 166 houses were demolished and 86 were demolished by their owners. Demolitions owing to the lack of building permits appear to be on the increase, with the number of structures demolished in East Jerusalem in 2021 (177) totalling approximately the same as the total over the past four years (2017–2020).⁹⁹ Fuelling the recent acceleration in the demolition of newly built Palestinian structures in East Jerusalem is the adoption of amendment 116 to the planning and building law, effective from October 2017, enabling expedited demolitions¹⁰⁰ and further limiting opportunities for legal recourse. The number of Palestinians in East Jerusalem who have been forced to self-demolish their properties is on the rise (16 structures in 2013; 58 in 2019; 89 in 2020; and 101 in 2022). This trend is on the rise since the new regulations came into force in 2018¹⁰¹ – it is the only way to avoid paying the large fines and charges concomitant with the Israeli municipality carrying out the demolition.¹⁰²

33. The Human Rights Committee has concluded that such “systematic practice of demolitions and forced evictions based on the discriminatory policies have led to the separation of Jewish and Palestinian communities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which amounts to racial segregation”.¹⁰³

Additional discriminatory laws in East Jerusalem

34. The right to housing for Palestinians in East Jerusalem is further undermined by the Absentees’ Property Law,¹⁰⁴ enacted in 1950, which allows the confiscation of property from Palestinians in areas where “the law of the State of Israel applies” if the owner of the property fled or was otherwise outside that area after 27 November 1947.¹⁰⁵ Since the illegal annexation of East Jerusalem under international law,¹⁰⁶ property owned by Palestinians

⁹³ A/HRC/37/43, paras. 29–32, A/HRC/25/38, paras. 11–14, A/HRC/31/43, paras. 18 and 45, A/HRC/34/38, para. 25, and CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 25.

⁹⁴ Ibid., para. 26.

⁹⁵ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2021-12-07/ty-article/.premium/demolition-orders-for-palestinians-in-west-banks-area-c-hit-five-year-record/0000017f-f234-d487-abff-f3fef38d0000>.

⁹⁶ A/HRC/43/67, para. 42.

⁹⁷ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/jerusalem-municipal-data-reveals-stark-israeli-palestinian-discrepancy-in-construction-permits-in-jerusalem>.

⁹⁸ Ibid.

⁹⁹ Information provided by OCHA.

¹⁰⁰ A/HRC/43/67, para. 32.

¹⁰¹ Administrative Offenses Regulations 2018, and Planning and Building Law, art. 254 (9).

¹⁰² A/77/493, para. 17, and www.alhaq.org/advocacy/18827.html.

¹⁰³ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 42.

¹⁰⁴ See <https://www.adalah.org/uploads/oldfiles/Public/files/Discriminatory-Laws-Database/English/04-Absentees-Property-Law-1950.pdf>.

¹⁰⁵ A/75/376, para. 51, and A/70/351, paras. 30 and 31.

¹⁰⁶ A/75/376, para. 51.

residing outside the city has been determined to be “absentee property”, which, in some cases, has been transferred or sold to settler organizations.¹⁰⁷ While the Legal and Administrative Matters Law of 1970 permits claims for the restitution of property in East Jerusalem owned by Jewish persons before 1948, it does not allow equivalent Palestinian claims of ownership in West Jerusalem. It is estimated that hundreds of properties have been taken over by settlers in East Jerusalem since the 1980s under the two laws, as well as through archaeological or tourism projects and transactions involving Palestinian property, including fraudulent purchases.¹⁰⁸ By applying the Absentees’ Property Law and the Legal and Administrative Matters Law in East Jerusalem, Israel is exceeding the limited legislative authority that an occupying Power may exercise under international humanitarian law. Both laws are seemingly inconsistent with the obligation that private property in occupied territory must be respected and cannot be confiscated.¹⁰⁹ In addition, confiscations under the laws are carried out solely on the basis of the nationality or origin of the owner, rendering such laws inherently discriminatory.

35. Within occupied East Jerusalem, at least 218 Palestinian households, mostly in the neighbourhoods of Sheikh Jarrah and Silwan, are facing the threat of forced eviction, their residents living in constant fear and anxiety, owing to cases filed in Israeli courts, primarily by Israeli settler organizations.¹¹⁰ The settlement of title procedure coupled with discriminatory legal structure¹¹¹ and settlement expansion plans currently under way¹¹² could cause a significant rise in eviction lawsuits against Palestinians residing in East Jerusalem.

Settlement-related violence

36. Settler violence adversely affects Palestinian society, violating a range of rights.¹¹³ Over the past 10 years, OHCHR has documented how Israeli security forces have not only stood by idly but have actively participated in the violence against Palestinians, including with deadly consequences.¹¹⁴ The settler presence and violence, which appears designed to terrorize Palestinians as part of a calculated and systematic effort to expand Israeli control beyond the settlement jurisdiction areas, has also reduced Palestinians’ access to land and consolidated the presence and expansion of Israeli settlements and outposts.¹¹⁵ The climate of fear and intimidation has had a serious psychological impact on Palestinians¹¹⁶ and the increasingly severe level of settler violence is a key component of the coercive environment, increasing their risk of forcible transfer.

37. Over the past 10 years there have been a total of 3,372 incidents of settler violence verified by the United Nations, including 1,222 people injured (922 men, 102 women and 243 children). OHCHR has documented numerous cases of settlers attacking and terrifying women and girls, including pregnant¹¹⁷ and elderly women, with stones, batons, pepper-spray, Molotov cocktails, dogs and firearms. As an added concern, OHCHR monitoring shows that settler violence has had an impact on women’s freedom of movement and has reinforced negative aspects of traditional gender roles in the Palestinian community.¹¹⁸

¹⁰⁷ Ibid.; see also <https://law.acri.org.il/pdf/unsafe-space-en.pdf>, p. 35.

¹⁰⁸ A/75/376, para. 51, A/70/351, paras. 29–36 and 49–51, and A/HRC/34/39, para. 46.

¹⁰⁹ The Hague Regulations, art. 46, and A/75/376, para. 51.

¹¹⁰ A/HRC/49/85, para. 25.

¹¹¹ See <https://mailchi.mp/ir-amim/strategic-bloc-of-land-between-east-jerusalem-abu-dis-covertly-transferred-into-state-hands-in-parallel-to-completion-of-land-registration?e=5dfcd834de>.

¹¹² See <https://www.ir-amim.org.il/sites/default/files/Settlement%20of%20Title%20in%20East%20Jerusalem%20March%202022.pdf>.

¹¹³ A/HRC/40/42, para. 24.

¹¹⁴ A/77/493, paras. 33–40, A/HRC/49/85, paras. 13–19, A/76/336, paras. 17–23, and A/75/376, para. 17.

¹¹⁵ A/76/336, para. 19, and A/HRC/40/42, para. 24.

¹¹⁶ A/HRC/40/42, para. 48.

¹¹⁷ A/75/376, para. 21.

¹¹⁸ A/HRC/40/42, paras. 48–49, A/77/493, para. 28, and A/HRC/46/63.

38. During the present reporting period, settler violence further intensified, reaching the highest levels ever recorded by the United Nations.¹¹⁹ There were 739 incidents of settler violence in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (502 incidents in the previous period), presenting an 89 per cent increase compared to 2012 when the United Nations recorded 391 incidents. Settlers injured 248 Palestinians (207 men, 19 women and 22 children) and vandalized 10,810 trees and 668 vehicles. The severity of such attacks also intensified. Two Palestinian men were killed by settlers, while two Palestinian boys were killed either by Israel security forces or settlers using firearms simultaneously.

39. Settler violence and intimidation, which peaks during the annual olive harvest, seriously impedes farmers' access to their land and their livelihoods, involves serious physical and psychological harm, which also targets protective-presence volunteers. Violence during the recent harvest season reached an all-time record, with 48 settler attacks involving property damage and 11 incidents resulting in 49 Palestinians injured (45 men, 3 women and 1 boy). During the harvest, 1,400 Palestinian-owned trees were vandalized and approximately 1,000 were harvested by people believed to be Israeli settlers. In addition, 30 Palestinians were injured by the Israeli security forces that intervened following a settler attack – a concerning trend.¹²⁰ On 19 October, some 30 Israeli settlers attacked Palestinian farmers and Israeli activists picking olives near Ma'ale Amos settlement, southeast of Bethlehem. Settlers hit a 70-year-old Israeli woman activist with stones and batons, causing broken ribs and a broken hand.

40. Settlement guards appeared to play an active role in violent attacks. On 21 October, four Palestinian men picking fruit from their olive trees in Burin village in Nablus were attacked with stones and teargas by some 20 Israeli settlers from the Givat Ronen/Sneh Ya'akov outpost. Stone-throwing confrontations ensued between local Palestinians and settlers arriving from outposts near the Har Bracha and Yitzhar settlements. When Israeli security forces intervened, an armed man in an Israeli security forces uniform assisted the settlers in throwing teargas canisters at the Palestinian crowd. He was filmed handing a tear gas grenade to a settler and showing him where to aim.¹²¹ The man was later identified as the settlement guard of Har Bracha settlement. On 25 October,¹²² Israeli media reported that the guard had been suspended pending a probe by the Israel Defense Forces but he was reinstated shortly afterwards, on 31 October.¹²³

41. Settlement guards actively participating in settler attacks have been documented as a trend over the years, including cases of civilian security guards shooting and killing Palestinians with live ammunition alongside settlers and Israeli security forces.¹²⁴ In the West Bank, security guards often live in settlements or outposts, identify as settlers and share a related ideology, while being paid for, trained and armed by the Israeli security forces, seemingly blurring the lines of law enforcement powers between them and the settlers.¹²⁵ In East Jerusalem settlements, the Ministry of Defence contracts security guards to protect settlers.¹²⁶

42. Violence by settlers and the Israeli security forces has become increasingly interwoven and, over the years, their distinction has become increasingly difficult to discern.¹²⁷ Since 2012, OHCHR has documented numerous incidents where settlers were recorded shooting at Palestinians side by side with the Israeli security forces.¹²⁸ That trend

¹¹⁹ OCHA began tracking this behaviour in 2005; see also www.ochaopt.org/content/palestinians-resisting-forcible-transfer-masaffer-yatta#ftn_ref5.

¹²⁰ A/77/493, paras. 33–40, A/HRC/49/85, paras. 13–19, A/76/336, paras. 17–23, and A/75/376, para. 17.

¹²¹ See https://twitter.com/Yesh_Din/status/1583459965846818817.

¹²² See <https://www.haaretz.com/middle-east-news/palestinians/2022-10-26/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-suspends-official-who-helped-settlers-throw-gas-grenades-on-palestinians/00000184-12bd-df0c-a1dc-b3bfaa230000>.

¹²³ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-10-31/ty-article/.premium/israeli-army-reinstates-official-who-helped-settlers-tear-gas-palestinians/00000184-2d71-dc27-a19c-aff3aea20000>.

¹²⁴ A/HRC/49/85, paras. 15 and 16.

¹²⁵ A/77/493, para. 40.

¹²⁶ Ibid.

¹²⁷ A/77/493, para. 36.

¹²⁸ A/77/493, para. 35, A/76/336, para. 44, A/HRC/49/85, para. 54, and S/2022/504.

continued during the present reporting period. On 29 July, Israeli security forces and settlers, operating side by side, shot and killed a 15-year-old Palestinian boy and injured at least three other Palestinian men who were protesting against settler activities in Al Mughayyir village in Ramallah. The child was shot in the back while running away and later died from his wounds. Eyewitnesses and video footage indicate that the Israeli security forces and the settlers were firing live ammunition simultaneously, making it impossible to determine who fired the lethal shots. In addition to raising concerns about unlawful killing and injury of Palestinians, the incident also highlights the role of the Israeli security forces in participating in and providing security cover for settlers carrying out acts that may amount to criminal offences against Palestinians.

43. The incident demonstrates how the Israeli security forces use force to restrict and suppress Palestinian freedom of expression and assembly when demonstrating against the settlement enterprise and occupation. During the last decade, OHCHR has documented numerous cases of discriminatory law enforcement during demonstrations, including intimidation of protesters and journalists, mass arrests and the use of excessive force against mainly peaceful protesters, as well as the use of lethal force as crowd control measure.¹²⁹ In many incidents monitored by OHCHR, the use of firearms by the Israeli security forces appears to have been unnecessary or disproportionate, including using firearms without warning, where there was no threat to life or of serious injury or without first resorting to less extreme means, including less lethal weapons. The use of firearms causing the death of individuals who were not posing a threat to life or serious injury constitutes a violation of the right to life¹³⁰ and may be equivalent to extrajudicial execution. In an occupation situation, such actions may also amount to wilful killings under the Fourth Geneva Convention, which is a war crime.¹³¹

Accountability

44. Over the past 10 years, Israel has failed in its obligation to promptly, effectively and independently investigate and prosecute crimes against Palestinians committed by settlers and related violations by the Israeli security forces and to provide justice to the victims.¹³² The Human Rights Committee delivered pointed criticism on the state of Israeli law enforcement in March 2022.¹³³

45. Failure to protect Palestinians and deficiencies in the justice system to hold settlers accountable for violence against Palestinians, with particular obstacles to access to justice for women and girls, have been reported previously. Few complaints are submitted by Palestinians owing to distrust of the Israeli legal system and fear of reprisals.¹³⁴ Overall, these deficiencies sustain and exacerbate a climate of impunity for settler violence, encouraging the continuation of attacks.¹³⁵ Additionally, the above-mentioned attacks against Palestinians by settlers shooting side by side with the Israeli security forces, add to such a climate. Settler violence against Palestinians serves as a method to take over land in the West Bank.¹³⁶

46. Despite some reported steps taken by Israel in the current reporting period, such as establishment of special teams to address ideologically based offences¹³⁷ and some public calls for accountability¹³⁸, actual accountability measures remain gravely deficient. Little to no information has been made publicly available on investigations into killings of ¹²⁹ A/HRC/49/85, sect. IV, A/77/493, para. 33, and A/HRC/49/85, para. 41.

¹³⁰ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, arts. 19 and 20; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 6 (1), 9 (1), 19 and 22; Hague Regulations of 1907, art. 46; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

¹³¹ See <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/ihl-treaties/gciv-1949>, art. 147.

¹³² A/77/493, para. 78 (d), A/77/493, para. 46, A/76/336, para. 26, and A/HRC/49/85, paras. 20–22.

¹³³ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, paras. 24, 26 and 27.

¹³⁴ A/76/336, para. 31.

¹³⁵ A/77/493, para. 47; A/76/336, para. 31; and A/HRC/49/85, para. 23.

¹³⁶ See www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/publications/202111_state_business_eng.pdf.

¹³⁷ http://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/dynamiccollectorresultitem/hr-0007/he/human-rights-replay_investigation-and-prosecutionof-offences-against-palestinians.pdf, March 2022.

¹³⁸ See www.timesofisrael.com/coalition-members-condemn-settler-attack-with-some-calling-to-raze-outposts/.

Palestinians by settlers, settlement guards or settler-related killings by the Israeli security forces, and obtaining information on status of cases has remained similarly challenging. On 25 August, the State prosecution closed its investigation into the killing of a 27-year-old Palestinian man by a settler on 21 June in the village of Iskaka near the Ariel settlement. Even though the stabbing took place in the presence of the Israeli security forces, the authorities stated that self-defence could not be ruled out.¹³⁹ Regarding the events of 28 September 2021, when dozens of settlers entered Umm Fagarah in Masafer Yatta, attacking residents, homes and vandalizing property, injuring several Palestinians, including a toddler, the State prosecutor filed indictments against only two persons.¹⁴⁰ No information is available of further accountability measures into the killing of Palestinians by settlers during the previous reporting period.¹⁴¹

47. According to the latest report of the Ministry of Justice on the Israeli investigation and prosecution of “ideologically motivated offences” against Palestinians,¹⁴² 87 investigations were opened against Israeli suspects in 2021 while OCHA documented 585 incidents of settler violence in the same year.¹⁴³ Of that number, 49 cases remain under investigation, while 38 have been closed, including 19 indictments reportedly filed. The Ministry of Justice did not provide information on the number of complaints submitted by Palestinians.

48. According to Yesh Din, 92 per cent of settler violence cases that the organization examined between 2005 and 2021 were closed without an indictment, while approximately only 3 per cent of investigations led to convictions.¹⁴⁴ Israelis who harm non-Palestinians in the West Bank are six times more likely to be indicted than if they harmed a Palestinian. From 2018 to 2020, charges were filed in under 4 per cent of settler violence cases.¹⁴⁵ In contrast, between 2018 and April 2021, 96 per cent of investigations of Palestinian violence by the military prosecution ended with a conviction, with 99.6 per cent based on plea deals.¹⁴⁶

C. Coercive environment and forcible transfer

49. The violations described above, including settlement expansion, discriminatory Israeli land and planning policies and measures, demolitions, forced evictions and systematic and increasingly severe settler violence, both individually and cumulatively, create a context whereby Palestinians are often left with no choice but to leave their places of residence.¹⁴⁷ Any population movement caused either through direct demolition of structures or forced evictions or by the implementation of, or failure to protect from, coercive measures that compel protected persons to move could amount to forcible transfer, a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention, constituting a war crime.¹⁴⁸

¹³⁹ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-08-25/ty-article/.premium/israel-closes-case-against-settler-suspected-of-fatally-stabbing-palestinian/00000182-d597-d972-a7d6-dd9f49470000.

¹⁴⁰ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-11-29/ty-article-magazine/.premium/witnesses-werent-questioned-and-cases-were-closed-the-palestinian-villagers-seek-justice/00000184-be27-d05a-a3b4-ff674bb30000.

¹⁴¹ A/HRC/49/85, para. 22.

¹⁴² http://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/dynamiccollectorresultitem/hr-0007/he/human-rights-replay_investigation-and-prosecutionof-offences-against-palestinians.pdf.

¹⁴³ Information provided by OCHA.

¹⁴⁴ See www.yesh-din.org/en/data-sheet-december-2021-law-enforcement-on-israeli-civilians-in-the-west-bank-settler-violence/.

¹⁴⁵ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-02-07/ty-article-magazine/.premium/charges-are-pressed-in-just-4-of-settler-violence-cases/0000017f-e826-df2c-a1ff-fe77f5090000.

¹⁴⁶ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-04-25/ty-article-magazine/.highlight/israels-other-justice-system-has-rules-of-its-own/00000180-6566-d824-ad9e-e7664fa10000.

¹⁴⁷ A/HRC/43/67, paras. 41–59.

¹⁴⁸ A/HRC/43/67, paras. 37–40; Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 49 (1) and 147; Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii); International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11; and Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 7 (1997).

50. As referenced extensively in the jurisprudence of international criminal tribunals, the prohibition of forcible transfer is to be interpreted broadly¹⁴⁹ and may result from indirect measures,¹⁵⁰ including the creation of a coercive environment, whereby people are forced to leave against their genuine will.¹⁵¹ In the past decade, the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have expressed their repeated concern regarding the existence and intensity of a coercive environment in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Risk of forcible transfer and concern over actual cases where Palestinians appear to have been forcibly transferred has been reported on¹⁵² with respect to Area C,¹⁵³ including the Jordan Valley,¹⁵⁴ the H2 area in Hebron¹⁵⁵ and East Jerusalem.¹⁵⁶ During the reporting period, the following three cases monitored by OHCHR have been of particular concern.

Ras al Tin

51. Ras al Tin is a Palestinian herding community¹⁵⁷ of approximately 35 households (240 people, including 150 children), located in Area C, whose seasonally changing residential and herding areas are located in and next to an area that has been designated as a “firing zone”, closed for Israeli military training.¹⁵⁸ The community has unceasingly been subjected to a range of increasing pressures, including demolitions, confiscations of livelihood materials, settler violence and lack of protection from it, and excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces, which, combined, created a coercive environment and presented a risk of forcible transfer for its residents. In 2009, demolition orders were issued against 13 families. In 2015, two homes were demolished, affecting 11 people, including seven children.¹⁵⁹ In 2021, 84 Palestinians, including 53 children, lost their homes when Israeli security forces confiscated 49 structures.¹⁶⁰ According to community members, the Israeli security forces verbally ordered the community, repeatedly, to move to Area B. On 14 June and 6 July 2022, two serious settler attacks occurred; women were particularly affected and several residents were injured. This, combined with the pressures of the past years, including regular harassment by settlers, resulted in 19 households (99 people, including 62 children) deciding to leave the area in July 2022. The families relocated to Kafr Malek village in Area B, where they faced harsh and unsustainable conditions, without access to basic services, such as water, health care, sustained electricity, water and sanitation and hygiene facilities. Further, schools were located at long distances from the village, disproportionately affecting women and children. As of September 2022, OHCHR documented that the families remained in Kafr Malek. Two families who had remained in Ras Al Tin are planning to join them. It appears the families have moved permanently as a result of the accumulation of coercive elements, raising concerns that forcible transfer may have taken place.

Masafer Yatta

52. On 4 May 2022, the High Court of Justice rejected a petition against eviction orders issued to Palestinians belonging to 12 herding communities in the Israeli-designated firing

¹⁴⁹ International Criminal Court, PCNICC/2000/1/Add.2; and International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Case No. IT-95-9-T, 17 October 2003, para. 130.

¹⁵⁰ A/HRC/43/67, para. 38.

¹⁵¹ A/HRC/43/67, para. 40, and A/HRC/34/39, para. 42.

¹⁵² A/77/493, paras. 17–27 and 48–76, A/76/336, paras. 37–57, and A/HRC/49/85, paras. 28–29.

¹⁵³ A/77/493, paras. 20 and 21, A/HRC/43/67, para. 33, A/HRC/34/39, para. 44, and A/72/564, paras. 36–57.

¹⁵⁴ A/73/410.

¹⁵⁵ A/71/355, A/HRC/43/67 and A/73/410, para. 19.

¹⁵⁶ A/HRC/37/43, A/HRC/43/67 and A/73/410, para. 20.

¹⁵⁷ The community has lived in Ras al Tin since 1988 and has been forced to move several times; see also www.haaretz.com/israel-news/twilight-zone/2022-07-21/ty-article-magazine/.highlight/a-palestinian-tribe-is-uprooted-for-the-seventh-time/00000182-228a-d15a-a197-73bf44770000.

¹⁵⁸ Declared a firing zone in 1967; see also OCHA Humanitarian Report: Ras al Tin, 18 July 2022 (<https://www.unocha.org/media-centre/humanitarian-reports>).

¹⁵⁹ OCHA Humanitarian Report: Ras al Tin, 18 July 2022.

¹⁶⁰ Ibid.

zone 918 in Masafer Yatta.¹⁶¹ The petition had been ongoing since 2012.¹⁶² The judgment is inconsistent with international law for its narrow interpretation of the prohibition of forcible transfer to cover only mass transfers and for privileging Israeli military law over international law obligations.¹⁶³ With the Israeli security forces now enabled to implement eviction orders and to use the site for active military training, 1,144 residents (282 men, 293 women, 299 boys, 270 girls) are at imminent risk of forced eviction and forcible transfer.¹⁶⁴

53. Since the court ruling of 4 May, Israel has intensified the coercive environment by carrying out demolitions, issuing demolition and military seizure orders, increasing the military presence and operations and imposing movement restrictions on residents and humanitarian responders, including the establishment of checkpoints and the imposition of detentions, affecting access to education, health care and people's ability to sustain their livelihoods, particularly for female-headed households.¹⁶⁵ Thus far, 25 structures in Khirbet at Tabban have already been demolished, resulting in the forced eviction of 64 people, who now live in tents or shelters provided by the humanitarian community. For some people, this was the third time they had lost their homes in less than a year. A further 35 demolition orders have been issued, affecting 77 structures, including homes. On 18 May, Israeli security forces issued a military seizure order allowing the construction of a two-lane patrol road between Khirbet Bir al 'Idd and communities, which, once complete, threatens to severely hamper the movement of Palestinians and their access to hospitals and other basic services.¹⁶⁶ In June 2022, military training exercises began, resulting in large-scale military deployment and the establishment of more permanent presence of the Israeli security forces through the construction of a military base, with firing ranges emplaced close to inhabited residential areas.¹⁶⁷ On 6 July 2022, the roof of a residential home was damaged by Israeli live ammunition fired during a training exercise while the family was inside the home¹⁶⁸. The Israeli security forces have begun closely monitoring and restricting the movement of people in the area, even on days when training is not taking place, including by going house to house to photograph residents' faces and check their identification documents.¹⁶⁹ In July, there were several cases of members of the community being stopped and detained for hours at newly established flying checkpoints, even outside military training periods. In addition, representatives of humanitarian organizations and United Nations personnel have been stopped, delayed and their cars seized and confiscated. On 29 July, a military seizure order was issued to construct a checkpoint in At Tuwani that would close off the main access road to Masafer Yatta. On 11 August, Israeli security forces placed concrete blocks at the entrance of At Tuwani in preparation for a road gate, which is considered to be part of a larger checkpoint infrastructure.¹⁷⁰

54. The Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have repeatedly voiced deep concern regarding the possible forced evictions and forcible transfer of Palestinian families

¹⁶¹ See <https://supreme.court.gov.il/sites/en/Pages/home.aspx>; see also, on 2 October 2022, the High Court of Justice of Israel rejected a petition to hold additional hearings, available at <https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts/22/440/041/v15&fileName=22041440.V15&type=4> [in Hebrew].

¹⁶² A/76/336, paras. 50 and 51.

¹⁶³ A/77/493, para. 19 and A/76/336, paras. 55 and 56; see also www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/05/un-experts-alarmed-israel-high-court-ruling-masafer-yatta-and-risk-imminent.

¹⁶⁴ A/HRC/49/85, para. 26.

¹⁶⁵ See www.ochaopt.org/content/masafer-yatta-communities-risk-forcible-transfer-june-2022.

¹⁶⁶ Ibid.

¹⁶⁷ OCHA, Humanitarian Report: Masafer Yatta, 17 August 2022 (<https://www.unocha.org/media-centre/humanitarian-reports>).

¹⁶⁸ See www.ochaopt.org/poc/28-june-18-july-2022 and www.haaretz.com/middle-east-news/palestinians/2022-09-21/ty-article-magazine/.premium/in-the-shadow-of-idf-live-fire-training-life-in-masafer-yatta-has-become-unbearable/00000183-5f7a-d722-abd7-5f7f1e380000.

¹⁶⁹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/masafer-yatta-communities-risk-forcible-transfer-june-2022.

¹⁷⁰ OCHA Humanitarian Report, 17 August 2022 (<https://www.unocha.org/media-centre/humanitarian-reports>).

from their homes in Masafer Yatta, urging Israeli authorities to stop all military training to allow community members to stay in their homes in safety and dignity.¹⁷¹

East Jerusalem

55. In Silwan, on 10 and 11 May 2022, demolitions caused the forcible eviction of 33 people, including 18 children. Approximately 74 Palestinians, including 42 children, remain at risk of impending forced eviction and possible forcible transfer following a demolition order in Wadi Qaddum.¹⁷² In Sheikh Jarrah, tensions have remained high over the past years in the context of several rounds of planned forced evictions. In December 2021, the Salem family received an eviction notice based on a settler's claim.¹⁷³ The proposed eviction would displace 12 people, including six children.¹⁷⁴ On 1 March 2022, the Israeli Supreme Court allowed four Sheikh Jarrah families facing eviction orders to stay in their homes as protected tenants until the conclusion of the process of settlement of land title. This ruling may provide a precedent and protect other families similarly facing eviction.

D. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

56. Over the past decade, in the context of the Syrian civil war, Israel has regularly attacked Syrian military personnel and installations and has expanded Israeli settlements on the Golan. Following the recognition of Israeli "sovereignty" over the Golan by the United States of America on 25 March 2019, Israel embarked on an unprecedented plan to double its settler population in the Golan by 2027 and to increase the number of settlements from 34 to 36.¹⁷⁵ As documented in Security Council resolution 497 (1981), the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan is null and void and without international legal effect.

57. Occupied Syrian Golan villages suffer from severe overcrowding. The seizure of lands for Israeli settlements, military zones, nature reserves and commercial activities, including a wind turbine project, continue to limit access of the Syrian population to land and water, in violation of their rights to adequate housing, food and health. The Syrian Government has formally protested the confiscation and appropriation of over six square kilometres of Syrian land for the construction of 42 wind turbines in the villages of Ain El-Hajal, Al Mansura and Al-Thaljiyat, and the imminent confiscation of another four square kilometres of agricultural land to facilitate the construction of another 41 wind turbines in the villages of Madjal Shams, Masada, Buqaata and Ein Qiniya.¹⁷⁶ The Syrian Arab Republic has also expressed concern over the health impacts for its population centres located within 10 kilometres of the 120 metre-tall turbines.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

58. The establishment and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan, authorized or unauthorized under Israeli law, amount to the transfer by Israel of its own civilian population into the territories it occupies, which is prohibited under international humanitarian law,¹⁷⁷ as consistently confirmed by the competent United Nations organs, including the International Court

¹⁷¹ A/77/493, para. 19, A/76/336, paras. 50–57; see also <http://www.ochaopt.org/content/statement- united-nations-resident-and-humanitarian-coordinator-occupied-palestinian-territory-lynn-hastings;> www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/05/un-experts-alarmed-israel-high-court-ruling-masafer-yatta-and-risk-imminent; and https://www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/2022-10/ICC_preventive_intervention_eng.pdf.

¹⁷² See <https://www.ir-amim.org.il/en/node/2867>.

¹⁷³ A/HRC/49/85, para. 32.

¹⁷⁴ A/77/493, para. 25.

¹⁷⁵ See <https://www.gov.il/en>.

¹⁷⁶ Letter from the Permanent Representative of the Syrian Arab Republic to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Michelle Bachelet, 29 July 2022.

¹⁷⁷ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

of Justice.¹⁷⁸ Such transfers amount to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.

59. The systematic takeover of land through various means, including discriminatory Israeli laws and orders, continues to undergird settlement expansion in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. The “settlement of titles” is illegal under international law and increases the risk of illegal appropriation of property and of possible forcible transfer.¹⁷⁹ Over the past decade there has been a significant shift in the position of the Government of Israel and its institutions – characterized by an increasingly emboldened stance aimed at accelerating control over land and resources and imposing Israeli sovereignty.

60. Discriminatory planning policies and practices, demolitions and forced evictions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including for the benefit of settler organizations, entail numerous human rights violations and are a key factor in the coercive environment which currently prevails. Displacement and “relocation” to alternative residential areas as a result of such an environment amounts to forcible transfer, contrary to the obligations of Israel under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.¹⁸⁰

61. Settler violence has reached the highest levels ever recorded by the United Nations. Violence by settlers and the Israel security forces has become increasingly interwoven, including cases of settlers shooting side by side with the Israeli security forces.¹⁸¹ Israel has repeatedly failed in its responsibility as the occupying Power to protect Palestinians and their property.¹⁸² This contributes to worsening of the coercive environment and discrimination against Palestinians, with a prevailing climate of impunity for settler violence and for use of force by the Israeli security forces.

62. The High Commissioner further recalls Security Council resolution 497 (1981), in which the Council decided that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect.

63. On the basis of the findings presented in the present and previous reports, the High Commissioner recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Immediately and completely cease and reverse all settlement development and related activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

(b) Rescind all policies and practices contributing to a coercive environment and/or increasing the risk of forcible transfer of Palestinians;

(c) Review planning laws and policies to ensure that they are compliant with the obligations of Israel under international human rights law and international humanitarian law;

(d) Refrain from implementing evictions and demolition orders on the basis of discriminatory and unlawful planning policies and practices that may lead to the forcible transfer of Palestinians, affecting women disproportionately;

(e) Take all steps necessary to protect the Palestinian population and their property from settler violence and ensure that all incidents of violence by settlers and Israeli security forces against Palestinians and damage to their property are promptly, effectively, thoroughly and transparently investigated, that perpetrators are prosecuted

¹⁷⁸ Legal Consequences of Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

¹⁷⁹ I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136.

¹⁸⁰ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6), and Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹⁸¹ A/77/493, para. 36, and A/HRC/49/85, paras. 15 and 16.

¹⁸² The Hague Regulations, arts. 43 and 46, and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

and, if convicted, punished with appropriate sanctions, and that victims are provided with effective remedies, including adequate compensation, in accordance with international standards;

(f) Protect the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly of Palestinians, refrain from all undue restriction, including use of force, and create an enabling environment for peaceful protests;

(g) End policies and practices within the occupied Syrian Golan that may lead to discrimination against protected persons.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
1 February 2024

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-fifth session

26 February–5 April 2024

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 52/35, provides an update on the implementation of the provisions of the resolution during the period from 1 November 2022 to 31 October 2023.

* The present report was submitted to the conference services for processing after the deadline for technical reasons beyond the control of the submitting office.

I. Introduction

1. The present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 52/35, provides an update on the implementation of the resolution's provisions from 1 November 2022 to 31 October 2023. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights reports on the advancement of Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, effectively transferring the civilian population of Israel to the occupied territory while displacing the Palestinian population from their land, in violation of international law.¹
2. The High Commissioner examines the displacement of Palestinians through settler violence and State violence; a trend that accelerated dramatically in the weeks following the attacks carried out on 7 October 2023 by the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (the armed wing of Hamas) and other Palestinian armed groups on Israel. The High Commissioner provides updates on other developments that could also contribute to acts of forcible transfer, including: the transfer of powers from the military administration to the Israeli civilian government; the consolidation and expansion of Israeli settlements; the establishment of new outposts; impunity for settler violence; forced evictions, demolitions and non-issuance of building permits; settlement of land title; ongoing construction of bypass roads and the wall;² restrictions on movement and access to lands; closure or confiscation of land for military "firing zones"; and restrictions on civil society activities.
3. The findings of the High Commissioner are based on direct monitoring by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and on information provided by government sources, United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations. The report should be read in conjunction with other related reports of the Secretary-General and of the High Commissioner submitted to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.³

II. Legal framework

4. International human rights law and international humanitarian law apply concurrently in the Occupied Palestinian Territory of Gaza, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan. This includes the obligations contained in the international human rights treaties to which Israel is a State party,⁴ as well as the Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 1907 (Hague Regulations) and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), which are binding upon Israel as the occupying Power under international humanitarian law.

III. Update on settlement activity and its impact on human rights

Legal reforms and policy initiatives of the Government of Israel

5. During the reporting period, Israel took steps detailed below to transfer administrative powers, previously under the authority of the military commander in the occupied West Bank (within what is called the Civil Administration), to Israeli government offices whose primary focus is to provide services within the territory of the State of Israel. This raises concerns about the violation of the basic premise of the law of occupation, namely that occupation is

¹ Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 49.

² The wall, as referred to in International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136.

³ A/72/564, A/72/565, A/75/376, A/76/336, A/77/493, A/78/554, A/HRC/37/38, A/HRC/37/42, A/HRC/37/43, A/HRC/40/42, A/HRC/43/67, A/HRC/46/65, A/HRC/49/25, A/HRC/49/85 and A/HRC/52/76.

⁴ See https://tbinternet.ohchr.org/_layouts/15/TreatyBodyExternal/Treaty.aspx?CountryID=84&Lang=EN.

a temporary measure neither causing nor implying any transfer of sovereignty.⁵ The law of occupation is therefore guided by the principle that the occupying Power shall preserve the status quo ante in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁶

6. The policies of the current Government of Israel appear aligned, to an unprecedented extent, with the goals of the Israeli settler movement to expand long-term control over the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and to steadily integrate this occupied territory into the State of Israel. The Government, in its guiding principles, expressly claimed the “exclusive and indisputable right” of the Jewish people to “all parts of the Land of Israel”, including the West Bank and the Syrian Golan.⁷ This position is supplemented by the Basic Law: Israel – The Nation-State of the Jewish People of 2018, in which the right to self-determination is stated to be “unique to the Jewish people”, and the development of Jewish settlements is viewed as a “national value”.⁸ The coalition agreements also indicated that the Government would promote a policy of “application of sovereignty” over the West Bank⁹ through institutional and legislative changes and major settlement expansion, including through the “regularization” of settler outposts.¹⁰

7. On 27 December 2022, the Knesset amended the Basic Law: The Government, enabling the creation of the post of “Additional Minister” within the Ministry of Defence.¹¹ Bezalel Smotrich, the founder of the settler organization Regavim and leader of the far-right Religious Zionism party, who resides in the Kedumim settlement, was appointed as Additional Minister. While the Minister of Defence retains security powers, the Additional Minister, formally under the supervision of the Minister of Defence, assumes governing powers in the West Bank, including land designations, planning, and coordination of demolitions.¹² Among other responsibilities, the Additional Minister supervises a newly created and staffed Settlement Administration unit,¹³ responsible for: (a) managing and directing the Coordination of Government Activities in the Territories unit and the Civil Administration of Israel; (b) regularizing settlements; (c) implementing an “equal citizenship reform” in the West Bank aimed at improving services and infrastructure for settlers only; and (d) updating “security legislation”, which involves implementing reforms through military orders.¹⁴ On 18 June 2023, the Government of Israel delegated the authority of the Minister of Defence to approve interim settlement planning stages to the Additional Minister,¹⁵ enabling the Additional Minister to expedite the approval process for new settlements.

8. These measures, including the transfer of wide administrative powers relating to settlements and land administration from the military authorities to Israeli civilian officials, who are elected and accountable to the population of Israel, could facilitate the annexation of the West Bank in violation of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations. Also, the transfer of powers, such as the power to implement the equal citizenship reform in the West Bank aimed at improving services and infrastructure exclusively for settlers, further ⁵ Hague Regulations, art. 43; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 64. See Jean S. Pictet, ed., Commentary: Fourth Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Geneva, International Committee of the Red Cross, 1958), p. 275. See also Tristan Ferraro, Occupation and Other Forms of Administration of Foreign Territory (Geneva, International Committee of the Red Cross, 2012), p. 7, footnote 1.

⁶ See www.icrc.org/en/doc/war-and-law/contemporary-challenges-for-ihl/occupation/overview-occupation.htm.

⁷ See <https://main.knesset.gov.il/mk/government/pages/coalitionagreements.aspx> (in Hebrew), on file.

⁸ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 10.

⁹ Article 118 of the coalition agreement between the Prime Minister and the Religious Zionism party. See <https://main.knesset.gov.il/mk/government/Documents/CA37-RZ.pdf> (in Hebrew).

¹⁰ Ibid., see, for example, arts. 142–199.

¹¹ See Israel, Basic Law: The Government (Amendment No. 11).

¹² Memorandum of Understanding and Division of Powers and Responsibilities between the Minister of Defence and the Additional Minister in the Ministry of Defence.

¹³ See www.gov.il/he/departments/policies/dec168-2023 (in Hebrew).

¹⁴ Memorandum of Understanding, para. 8.

¹⁵ Jeremy Sharon, “Netanyahu hands Smotrich full authority to expand existing settlements”, The Times of Israel, 18 June 2023; and Government decision 657, available at www.gov.il/he/departments/policies/dec657-2023 (in Hebrew).

institutionalizes long-standing systematic discrimination, oppression and violence against the Palestinian people.

Settlement consolidation and expansion

9. The Israeli non-governmental organization Peace Now reported, in September 2023, that there were just under 700,000 Israeli settlers in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. This total consisted of approximately 465,000 settlers in the West Bank, concentrated in Area C,¹⁶ residing in approximately 300 settlements and outposts, and approximately 230,000 settlers in East Jerusalem, in addition to approximately 3,000 who were residing within Palestinian neighbourhoods in East Jerusalem.¹⁷ The Central Bureau of Statistics of Israel reported that, as of 31 December 2022, there were 468,300 Jewish Israelis in the West Bank, excluding East Jerusalem,¹⁸ compared with 455,700 as of 31 December 2021.¹⁹ On 18 May 2023, Additional Minister Smotrich, doubling as the Minister of Finance, reportedly presented a two-year plan to induce 500,000 more settlers to move to the West Bank.²⁰

10. During the reporting period, the size of existing Israeli settlements expanded markedly. Approximately 24,300 housing units within existing Israeli settlements in the West Bank in Area C were advanced or approved; the highest on record since monitoring began in 2017.²¹ This included approximately 9,670 in East Jerusalem. As an indication of progress in the implementation of approved construction plans to expand existing settlements, Israel published tenders inviting bids from construction firms for approximately 1,350 housing units, including approximately 90 in East Jerusalem.²²

11. According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, construction began for approximately 1,280 housing units in the first half of 2023 in Area C. All of these Israeli settlements are illegal under international law, because they amount to the transfer by Israel of its population into an occupied territory.²³

Outposts

12. During the reporting period, according to data from Peace Now, the number of Israeli settler outposts increased to 162.²⁴ All such outposts and land confiscations are illegal under international humanitarian law, as well as Israeli domestic law.²⁵ Outposts are often strategically placed and play a key role in the takeover of Palestinian land. They can be centred around a single caravan or a few modular structures, gradually taking over the larger area around them for herding or farming. Many outposts expand to communities made up of hundreds of settlers.

13. During the reporting period, an unprecedented nine new Israeli settlement outposts were “legalized” by the Government of Israel, enabling the further development of these ¹⁶ Area C constitutes more than 60 per cent of the West Bank. It is the only contiguous territory in the West Bank, and effectively separates the Palestinian-controlled Areas A and B into more than 160 enclaves surrounded by Israeli security forces. Area C, prior to “gradually” being transferred to Palestinian jurisdiction in accordance with the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (Oslo II Accords), is administered by Israel, which includes near exclusive control over law enforcement, access, movement, planning and construction.

¹⁷ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/30-years-after-oslo-the-data-that-shows-how-the-settlements-proliferated-following-the-oslo-accords>. See also Omer Yaniv and others, “Jerusalem: facts and trends 2023” (Jerusalem Institute for Policy Research, 2023), p. 15.

¹⁸ See www.cbs.gov.il/he/publications/doclib/2023/2.shnatonpopulation/st02_17.pdf.

¹⁹ Ibid.

²⁰ A/78/554, para. 6.

²¹ Monitoring by the Office of the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General to the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Authority (on file).

²² Ibid.

²³ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

²⁴ Information on file with OHCHR.

²⁵ Israel, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, “Summary of the opinion concerning unauthorized outposts”, 10 March 2005.

Israeli settlements.²⁶ These newly “legalized” outposts include approximately 335 housing units spread over 1,100 dunams (approximately 100 hectares) of land.²⁷

14. On 22 March 2023, the Knesset passed Amendment No. 7 to the Law on the Implementation of the Disengagement Plan, removing entry and stay restrictions on Israeli citizens in areas in the north of the West Bank that had previously been evacuated as part of the Disengagement Plan of 2005. Allowing the presence of settlers in these areas will enable the eventual establishment of new Israeli settlements.

15. On 2 August 2023, the High Court of Justice of Israel dismissed a long-standing petition to dismantle an outpost established in the former settlement of Homesh, in the northern West Bank, which had previously been dismantled in 2005 as part of the Disengagement Plan.²⁸ This decision paves the way for the re-establishment of the Homesh settlement. During the reporting period, settlers also re-entered the previously evacuated Evyatar outpost, reportedly endorsed by the Government of Israel.²⁹ The Evyatar outpost has been set up and evacuated multiple times since 2021, and has become symbolic for supporters of Israeli settlement of the West Bank.

Settler violence

16. During the reporting period, there was a dramatic increase in the intensity, severity and regularity of Israeli settler violence against Palestinians, which is accelerating the displacement of Palestinians from their land, in circumstances that may amount to forcible transfer. This violence further spiked following the attacks on 7 October 2023 carried out by the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades and other Palestinian armed groups on Israel and the subsequent military response of Israel in Gaza. Israel continues to fail to comply with its obligations under international humanitarian law³⁰ and international human rights law³¹ to protect Palestinians from acts committed by Israeli settlers, and to effectively prevent and ensure accountability for settler violence. Israeli security forces continue to actively support or consistently collaborate with settlers in such violence.³²

17. Prior to 7 October 2023, settler violence had been increasing across the West Bank. In the first nine months of 2023, an average of three incidents of settler violence occurred each day (totalling 835 incidents), the highest on record, compared with an average of two a day in 2022 (totalling 856 incidents) and one a day in 2021 (totalling 540 incidents, which was then the highest on record since the United Nations started recording data in 2006).³³

18. Between 7 and 31 October 2023, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 203 settler attacks against Palestinians, which increased the daily average to 8.³⁴ OHCHR monitored the killing of eight Palestinians (all males), including one child (a boy), all by the use of firearms by settlers. There were also 142 incidents of damage to Palestinian property. Out of the 203 settler attacks recorded by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, more than one third involved threats with firearms, including shooting. Almost half of all incidents involved Israeli forces accompanying or actively supporting Israeli settlers while carrying out their attacks. United Nations monitoring

²⁶ For how this process works, see A/HRC/52/76, paras. 14 and 15.

²⁷ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/the-security-and-political-cabinet-approved-the-establishment-of-9-new-settlements-by-authorizing-10-illegal-outposts-in-the-occupied-territories>.

²⁸ Tor Wennesland, United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General to the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Authority, briefing to the Security Council on the situation in the Middle East, 21 August 2023, available at <https://unsco.unmissions.org/briefing-security-council-situation-middle-east-delivered-special-coordinator-tor-wennesland>.

²⁹ Tani Goldstein, “2023 sets record for settlement construction and outpost legalization – watchdog”, The Times of Israel, 8 August 2023.

³⁰ Hague Regulations, art. 43.

³¹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 6 (1); and Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 (2004), para. 8.

³² A/75/376, para. 17; A/76/336, paras. 17–23; A/77/493, paras. 13–19 and 33–40; and A/78/554, para. 51.

³³ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

³⁴ Ibid.

highlighted an acceleration in the displacement of Palestinian communities accompanying the increase in settler violence after 7 October 2023, further emptying Area C of the Palestinian population. By 31 October 2023, nearly 900 Palestinians had been forcibly displaced from their homes in the West Bank since 7 October 2023.³⁵

19. On 11 October 2023, between 8 and 10 masked Israeli settlers, 4 of whom were carrying rifles and pistols, attacked the town of Qusra, south of Nablus. During the ensuing confrontations, one settlement security guard shot and injured in the neck 28-year-old Awad Mahmood Ahmed Odeh. His 6-year-old daughter was also injured by firearms fired by settlers. While withdrawing, settlers continued shooting and killed three Palestinians, including a 17-year-old boy. The settlers' use of firearms took place in the presence of Israeli security forces. The following day, settlers, in the presence of Israeli security forces, attacked the funeral procession of the three Palestinians killed the previous day, killing 62-year-old Ibrahim Ahmed Mahmoud Wadi and his 25-year-old son, Ahmed Ibrahim Ahmed Wadi.

20. The increase in settler violence after 7 October 2023 coincided with the olive harvest season in the West Bank. OHCHR documented multiple incidents of settlers attacking, including with firearms, Palestinians harvesting their olives, forcing them to leave their land and in several cases stealing their harvest and poisoning or vandalizing their trees. OHCHR also documented cases of Israeli security forces preventing Palestinian farmers from harvesting and ordering them to leave their lands, claiming "the state of war" as the ground to do so.

21. Prior to 7 October 2023, settler attacks, sometimes labelled as "pogroms" by Israeli authorities,³⁶ had occurred in which mobs of dozens and sometimes hundreds of settlers carried out coordinated attacks, often in retaliation for attacks committed by Palestinians against settlers.³⁷ On 20 June 2023, four Israeli settlers were killed by two armed Palestinian men near the Israeli settlement of Eli in the West Bank. During an intense wave of settler violence that followed between 20 and 25 June 2023, 28 attacks against Palestinian villages across the northern and central West Bank left a Palestinian dead, killed by Israeli security forces, and 54 others injured – 37 by Israeli security forces, 16 by Israeli settlers and 1 undetermined (injured either by Israeli security forces or settlers). In one incident on 21 June 2023, more than 300 Israeli settlers attacked the Palestinian village of Turmus'ayya, north-west of Ramallah. In the ensuing confrontations, one Palestinian was shot and killed by Israeli security forces and eight others were injured following the random firing of live ammunition by Israeli security forces. On the same evening, in Urif, south of Nablus, hundreds of Israeli settlers reportedly attacked Palestinians, their property and other structures, including a school and a mosque. Over the following days, settlers attacked other Palestinian villages between Nablus and Ramallah, including Jalud, Sinjil, Deir Dibwan, Umm Safa, Al Mughayyir and, again, Turmus'ayya.

22. Settlement expansions, promoted by the Government of Israel, accompanied these waves of settler violence. On 26 June 2023, the Higher Planning Committee of the Civil Administration advanced plans for more than 5,500 housing units in Israeli settlements in Area C. Some 750 housing units near Eli were reportedly added to the agenda after the attack of 20 June 2023 there.³⁸ Plans advanced reportedly included the retroactive regularization, under Israeli law, of outposts adjacent to Eli.³⁹ On 23 June 2023, the Minister of National Security of Israel, Ben-Gvir, visited the Israeli settlement outpost of Evyatar and called upon

³⁵ Ibid.

³⁶ "Pogrom" was the term used by Israeli security forces to describe the wave of settler attacks in February 2023; see <https://edition.cnn.com/2023/06/15/middleeast/huwara-west-bank-settler-attack-cmd-intl/index.html>.

³⁷ Such settler attacks included those carried out on 26 February 2023 in Huwwarah: see case study in A/78/554, paras. 54–74.

³⁸ Tor Wennesland, Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General to the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Authority, briefing to the Security Council on the situation in the Middle East, 27 June 2023, available at https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_27_june_2023_scr2334_0.pdf.

³⁹ "Settlers set up several unauthorized outposts in West Bank overnight: report", The Times of Israel, 24 June 2023.

settlers to “run to the hilltops”, in reference to the hilltop settler youth,⁴⁰ adding that, “Here, there should be a full settlement, not only here, but in all the hills around us. We should settle the Land of Israel, and at the same time, launch a military operation, take down buildings and eliminate terrorists. Not just one or two, but dozens and hundreds and, if needed, thousands.”⁴¹

23. There were further concerns that Israeli settler violence was being facilitated by senior ministers of the Government of Israel. In August 2023, the Minister of National Security told the media that: “I am handing out arms to anyone who can defend themselves.”⁴² After 7 October 2023, the Minister of National Security announced that the Government would purchase 10,000 rifles to arm Israeli civilians, including those in West Bank settlements.⁴³ By the end of the reporting period, Israeli security forces had reportedly handed out some 8,000 weapons to “settlement defence squads” and “regional defence battalions” in the West Bank.⁴⁴ OHCHR documented, after 7 October 2023, cases of settlers wearing full or partial Israeli army uniforms and carrying army rifles, and harassing and attacking Palestinians, including shooting them at point-blank range. These developments have also further blurred the line between settler violence and State violence, including violence with the declared intent to forcibly transfer Palestinians from their land.

24. Settler violence often occurred in close proximity to settler outposts. In the first nine months of 2023 (1 January to 6 October), four of the eight Palestinians killed by settlers were killed near newly established settlement outposts, including the case of 18-year-old Qusay Jamal Mohamed Mu’tan in Burqa, east of Ramallah (see below).⁴⁵ Burqa, another Palestinian village north-west of Nablus,⁴⁶ has been particularly negatively affected by the Homesh outpost.⁴⁷ In one incident, on 24 May 2023 during night hours, tens of armed Israeli settlers from the Homesh outpost, accompanied by Israeli security forces, entered Burqa, attacking residents and damaging homes, water tanks and livestock shelters. Three Palestinians were injured by live ammunition and one by shrapnel.⁴⁸ A few hours before the incident, diplomats from the European Union had carried out a solidarity visit to Burqa, following the adoption by Israeli authorities of measures towards the “regularization” of the Homesh outpost. Other settler attacks on the Burqa community, in collaboration with Israeli security forces, occurred on 31 May 2023, with 45 residents treated for inhaling tear gas; and, on 4 June 2023, involving live ammunition hitting properties with families inside and three vehicles being set on fire.⁴⁹

⁴⁰ The hilltop settler youth are young, religious and often violent settlers who regularly come down from their outposts in the West Bank to attack nearby Palestinians. There are concerns that not only does Israel fail to protect Palestinians from this group, but that it actively cooperates with them: see Yuval Abraham, “Revealed: the IDF unit turning ‘hilltop youth’ settlers into soldiers”, +972 Magazine, 3 May 2023.

⁴¹ Hagar Shezaf, “‘Run to the hilltops’: Ben-Gvir calls on settlers to establish more illegal outposts”, Haaretz, 23 June 2023.

⁴² “Israel’s Ben-Gvir: ‘My right to life is more important than Arabs’ freedom of movement’”, Haaretz, 23 August 2023.

⁴³ Joel Gunter, “Palestinians under attack as Israeli settler violence surges in the West Bank”, BBC News, 21 October 2023.

⁴⁴ Civil society organizations also reported that the Minister of National Security had given orders not to enforce laws against settlers who had committed offences against Palestinians; see <https://s3.eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/Urgent+letter+regarding+the+alleged+instruction+not+to+investigate+ideologically+motivated+crime+FINAL+291123.pdf>.

⁴⁵ OHCHR monitoring.

⁴⁶ Distinct from the Burqa community near Ramallah affected by the outpost of Migron.

⁴⁷ See <https://fmap.org/resource/settlement-annexation-report-august-10-2023/#5>.

⁴⁸ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Protection of civilians report, 16–29 May 2023”, 2 June 2023, available at www.ochaopt.org/poc/16-29-may-2023.

⁴⁹ OHCHR monitoring.

25. Palestinian herding communities in the West Bank remained particularly vulnerable to settler violence and forcible transfer.⁵⁰ A total of 1,105 persons from 28 Palestinian herding communities – approximately 12 per cent of the herding community’s population – were displaced from their homes between January 2022 and the beginning of September 2023, citing settler violence and prevention of access to grazing land by settlers as the primary reason. Again, existing trends further accelerated after 7 October 2023. Between 7 October and 31 October 2023, in 15 herding communities across the West Bank, at least 136 households, totalling 878 persons, including 435 children, were displaced through settler violence and access restrictions.⁵¹

26. According to OHCHR monitoring, settler violence after 7 October 2023 often followed a distinctive pattern. It led to the displacement of Palestinian herding communities, which appeared aimed at expanding effective Israeli control in Area C and which may amount to forcible transfer. Settlers arrived masked, armed and sometimes wearing the uniforms of Israeli security forces. They destroyed Palestinians’ tents, solar panels, water pipes and tanks, hurling insults and threatening that, if the Palestinians did not leave within 24 hours, they would be killed. OHCHR monitored the displacement of the 12 remaining families of the Al Ganoub herding community in Hebron, between 9 and 31 October 2023.⁵² A 77-year-old member of the community told OHCHR that: “We used to have settlers attacking us with sticks, while recently they would come into the community in larger numbers and armed with automatic rifles.” Settlers from the Asfar settlement threatened to kill the members of the community if they did not leave. By 1 November 2023, 52 Palestinians, including 31 children, had been forced from their land, leaving the area completely cleared of Palestinians. On 30 October 2023, settlers established a new caravan atop the rubble of a Palestinian house destroyed in an earlier settler attack. OHCHR also monitored other similar cases, including the displacement of the Wadi as Seeq community in Ramallah on 12 October 2023, made up of 30 families, totalling 142 persons, including 40 children; and of the community of Hizma in East Jerusalem, consisting of two families, totalling 17 Palestinians, who left on 8 and 30 October 2023.

27. Prior to 7 October 2023, OHCHR had already been monitoring this trend against Palestinian herding communities in the South Hebron Hills, which raises concerns of forcible transfer through settler violence sanctioned by Israel as the occupying Power, due to the pervasive lack of accountability and of preventive actions by the Israeli security forces. It included a family in Wedadie, which had been subjected to repeated attacks by Israeli settlers from the Havat Meitarim outpost, some 500 metres away. On 19 July 2023, the two households of the Wedadie community left, consisting of 13 persons, including 9 children. The family described how prolonged violence and intimidation from Israeli settlers, which even included reported harassment from drones,⁵³ had driven them from the land that they had lived on “for at least 72 years”.⁵⁴ By the end of October 2023, three more families from the nearby community of Khirbet ar Ratheem had been forced from their land by the same Israeli settlers.

28. OHCHR monitoring revealed how different members of Palestinian herding communities experienced threats and violence from Israeli settlers in different ways. Women from the Wedadie community described gender-based violence, including gender-specific insults aimed at degrading and intimidating them. One of the women forced to leave, who was pregnant at the time, described settlers coming to her house during the day in the spring of 2023, when the men were away herding: “Around 20–50 meters from us, they would start shouting, yelling and curse us with words like ‘bitch, prostitute’ with hand signs, including ⁵⁰ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Displacement of Palestinian herders amid increasing settler violence”, 21 September 2023; and B’Tselem, “The pogroms are working – the transfer is already happening”, 21 September 2023.

⁵¹ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. See also www.btselem.org/settler_violence/20231019_forcible_transfer_of_isolated_communities_and_families_in_area_c_under_the_cover_of_gaza_fighting.

⁵² A/77/493, paras. 48–67, for detailed case study on settler violence and forcible transfer in Al Ganoub.

⁵³ See Gideon Levy and Alex Levac, “Yet another shepherding community is driven out by settler violence”, Haaretz, 22 July 2023.

⁵⁴ OHCHR interview.

pointing to us with the middle finger.” She described how the Israeli settlers “would always come with long weapons and dogs”, leaving her feeling “scared and unsafe”. At night, settlers would enter their houses and vandalize their belongings, violating any sense of privacy or safe space for the women. Scared for herself and her unborn child, she said she had no option but to leave her house and husband behind in Wedadie and move to the town of Al Samu. On moving, the impact on her economic and social rights was immediate: “In Wedadie we used to have water from the wells, but now we must buy and pay for water ... since we moved from Wedadie, we don’t have any source of income, as my husband used to herd the livestock and make a living from it.”

29. OHCHR monitored the case of 26 Palestinian Bedouin families, totalling 132 persons, forced from their land in Ein Samiya, east of Ramallah and adjacent to the Kochav HaShahar settlement.⁵⁵ Collaboration between Israeli settlers and the Israeli security forces extended to the harassment, threats and violence perpetrated.⁵⁶ One member of the community forced off his land in Ein Samiya⁵⁷ described an incident on 15 May 2023 involving the Israel Police and Israeli settlers: “I told the police officer that the sheep were mine, and they were all registered at the Palestinian Ministry of Agriculture as I vaccinate them every year. I said that I could prove that they were mine. The officer answered that the settlers would take them now and once I brought the proof that they were mine, he would bring them back to me.”⁵⁸ When he then tried to prevent the settlers from taking his 75 sheep – 37 of which they took – the police officer handcuffed him and then punched him in the stomach when he continued to resist. The police then arrested and detained him. In other similar cases of collaboration between the State and settlers, on 25 July 2023, in the West Bank villages of Tuba and El Abid in the South Hebron Hills, Israeli soldiers reportedly escorted armed Israeli settlers when they broke into the homes of Palestinians.⁵⁹

Accountability for settler violence

30. Despite the continuing increase in the number and severity of incidents of settler violence during the reporting period, indictments and convictions of perpetrators remained low.⁶⁰ During the reporting period, the non-governmental organization Yesh Din looked at 190 incidents of settler violence, recording that, in 66 incidents (35 per cent of the total), an investigation was opened after Palestinians filed a complaint. Of those investigations, 26 were closed without filing an indictment and 38 incidents were still under investigation. Only two investigations have led to the filing of indictments – 3 per cent of all investigations – with both cases ongoing.⁶¹

31. Of the 123 incidents for which Palestinian victims of settler attacks decided not to file a complaint, 86 reported to Yesh Din that their main reason for not doing so was their lack of faith in the Israeli authorities to apprehend the perpetrators. Thirteen reported fear of retaliation from the Israeli authorities or the Israeli settlers as their primary reason, including fear of further violence or loss of their work permits. After 7 October 2023, access to justice moved even further out of reach, when settlements, within which the police stations that have law enforcement powers over Israelis are located, became off limits for Palestinians due to the restrictions on movement and the increased risk that they would be shot or attacked.

32. The killing of 18-year-old Mr. Mu’tan in Burqa, east of Ramallah, on 4 August 2023 was emblematic of the absence of protection from, and accountability for, violence

⁵⁵ A/78/554, para. 43.

⁵⁶ See also www.youtube.com/watch?v=NkMtI9oI6j8.

⁵⁷ The family finally decided to leave on 22 May 2023, moving from Area C to different locations in Area B.

⁵⁸ OHCHR interviews.

⁵⁹ Hagar Shezaf, “Israeli settlers break into Palestinian homes accompanied by soldiers”, Haaretz, 25 July 2023. See www.youtube.com/watch?v=mfQSovSVCHo and <https://youtu.be/Zczby7LmTVo>. See also www.btselem.org/settler_violence_updates_list?f%5B0%5D=nf_location%3A212898.

⁶⁰ See <https://s3.eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/law+data+dec+22/Law+data+22+ENG.pdf> and <https://s3.eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/LAW+ENFORCEMENT+AGAINST+ISRAELI+SOLDIERS+2017-2021/YeshDin++Data+12.22++English.pdf>.

⁶¹ Information provided by Yesh Din, on file.

committed by Israeli settlers.⁶² He was shot in the neck by an Israeli settler from a distance of 30 metres. Another Palestinian man, aged 47, was shot in his left thigh from a distance of 7 metres – according to the victim, by the same settler who had shot Mr. Mu'tan. Another witness interviewed said the perpetrator was “well known in the area as he had already attacked farmers many times”, and that this had been communicated to Israeli security forces. Earlier in the day, five Israeli settlers from neighbouring outposts had confronted Palestinian farmers and herders on their farmland, threatening to kill them if they did not leave the area. The Minister of National Security justified the killing of Mr. Mu'tan, calling it self-defence,⁶³ despite the incident taking place in the village of Burqa and the police assessment negating the claim of self-defence.⁶⁴ In a public show of support, members of the Knesset visited two of the Israeli settlers suspected of perpetrating the violence, including the main suspect of the murder of Mr. Mu'tan, while they were in detention.⁶⁵ They were both subsequently released, with the main suspect released on house arrest on 15 August 2023, following an order by the Jerusalem District Court.⁶⁶ A source in the Office of the State Prosecutor predicted that no indictment would be filed and that the case would be closed, which suggests that there will be no accountability for the killing of Mr. Mu'tan.⁶⁷

33. The absence of accountability for settler violence is a key factor in the ongoing coercive environment, raising continued concerns about the forcible transfer of Palestinians. The lack of accountability is a manifestation of a dual system of criminal justice that has discriminatory effects on Palestinians. Policing and judicial bodies administered by the Israeli military in the Occupied Palestinian Territory for more than 56 years have steadily entrenched systematic patterns of violation of Palestinians' due process and fair trial rights.⁶⁸ Israel, as the occupying Power, has adopted laws and policies enabling a discriminatory system of administering justice – based on grounds of race and religion – providing Jewish Israelis in the occupied West Bank with access to civilian-administered justice with greater human rights protections compared with the military justice administered to Palestinians.⁶⁹

Forced evictions, demolitions and non-issuance of building permits

34. During the reporting period, Israeli authorities continued to implement eviction and demolition orders against Palestinians based on discriminatory planning policies, laws and practices, including on the grounds that properties lacked building permits. This practice, focused on areas in Area C, Hebron Governorate (particularly, the South Hebron Hills) and East Jerusalem, is in violation of the obligations of Israel under international law, including the law of occupation that prohibits the destruction of property not justified by military necessity.⁷⁰ It also violates the international human rights obligations of Israel, including in relation to non-discrimination⁷¹ and the rights of Palestinians to an adequate standard of ⁶² In violation of the obligations of Israel under article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as articles 43 and 46 of the Hague Regulations and articles 27 and 64 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

⁶³ Troy O. Fritzhand, “Israeli ministers back settler killing of Palestinian during Burqa clashes”, The Jerusalem Post, 6 August 2023.

⁶⁴ See www.haaretz.co.il/news/law/2023-08-11/ty-article/.premium/00000189-e30f-d9cf-a7eb-fb2fe9f50000 (in Hebrew).

⁶⁵ Josh Breiner and Noa Shpigel, “‘He acted in self-defense’: two Israeli lawmakers visit hospitalized settler suspected of murdering Palestinian”, Haaretz, 6 August 2023.

⁶⁶ “Court releases main suspect in killing of Palestinian in Burqa to house arrest”, The Times of Israel, 15 August 2023.

⁶⁷ See www.haaretz.co.il/news/law/2023-08-11/ty-article/.premium/00000189-e30f-d9cf-a7eb-fb2fe9f50000 (in Hebrew).

⁶⁸ Including under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 9, 10, 14, 17 and 26.

⁶⁹ See Kathleen Cavanaugh, “The Israeli military court system in the West Bank and Gaza”, Journal of Conflict and Security Law, vol. 12, No. 2 (Spring 2007); and Luigi Daniele, “Enforcing illegality: Israel's military justice in the West Bank”, Questions of International Law (November 2017).

⁷⁰ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 53 and 147 (“grave breach”). Under article 8 (2) (iv) of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, such acts are subject to prosecution under international criminal law.

⁷¹ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, arts. 2 and 7; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 2 (1) and 4 (1); and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 2 (2).

living.⁷² The Human Rights Committee stated, in 2022, that the systematic practice of demolitions and forced evictions based on discriminatory policies had led to the separation of Jewish and Palestinian communities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which amounted to racial segregation.⁷³

35. For Palestinians in Area C, it remains virtually impossible to acquire a permit from Israeli authorities to build a home, in violation of the principle of non-discrimination.⁷⁴ On 20 July 2023, the head of infrastructure at the Civil Administration stated that, “90–95% of Palestinian requests for permits are rejected ... On the Israeli side, 60–70% of the plans are discussed and approved”.⁷⁵ According to Peace Now, only approximately 2 per cent of Palestinian building applications are approved in Area C.⁷⁶ During the reporting period, Palestinian-owned structures were demolished by Israel at one of the fastest rates on record:⁷⁷ 917 Palestinian-owned structures in the West Bank, including 210 in East Jerusalem, were demolished.⁷⁸ This resulted in the displacement of 1,015 Palestinians. Demolished structures included 285 residential buildings, 117 donor-funded structures and 57 water, sanitation and hygiene facilities.⁷⁹

36. Of the 210 demolitions in East Jerusalem, 89 were self-demolitions by their owners (affecting 107 structures, including 84 residential structures) to avoid paying fines and charges imposed by the Israeli authorities, epitomizing the coercive environment that Palestinians live in.⁸⁰ Most of these self-demolitions – 27 per cent – occurred in Jabal al Mukabbir area in East Jerusalem.

37. Particularly in the Old City and surrounding areas of East Jerusalem, claims continued to be initiated by Jewish settler organizations to forcibly evict Palestinians and take over their property. In one emblematic case, on 11 July 2023, an elderly Palestinian couple were forcibly evicted from their home in the Old City, where they had lived since 1953. The eviction followed a decision by the Supreme Court that the protected tenancy of Nora Gheith, 68 years old, and Mustafa Sub Laban, 72 years old, would be terminated, making way for the property to be seized by Galicia Trust, which had been trying to evict the family since 2010. International humanitarian law prohibits Israel from imposing its own laws in occupied territory, which includes the use of Israeli laws to evict Palestinians from their homes. Furthermore, the laws in themselves are inherently discriminatory against Palestinians, in violation of the international human rights obligations of Israel.⁸¹

Settlement of land title

38. In occupied East Jerusalem, Israeli authorities further advanced the process of settlement of land title, with a view to establishing definitive land ownership registration. According to Israeli non-governmental organizations that monitor this process, as of 31 October 2023, the process had been initiated in some 206 blocks, each of which includes several plots of land, advanced in 58 blocks and finalized in 34 blocks, including 18 that were finalized during the reporting period.⁸²

39. The settlement of land title appears to be used to increase Israeli control over additional territory in occupied East Jerusalem. In particular, it appears to be aimed at areas lined up for settlement expansion or new settlement construction; areas in which Jewish ownership claims have been advanced over Palestinian land; and areas in which the process

⁷² International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11.

⁷³ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 42.

⁷⁴ E/C.12/ISR/CO/4, paras. 50 and 51.

⁷⁵ See <https://main.knesset.gov.il/en/news/pressreleases/pages/press20723r.aspx>.

⁷⁶ See <https://peacenow.org.il/en/approvals-for-palestinians-in-area-c-2009-2020>.

⁷⁷ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁷⁸ The number was 914 in the previous reporting period.

⁷⁹ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁸⁰ A/HRC/52/76, paras. 32 and 50.

⁸¹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 2 (1) and 4 (1); and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 2 (2).

⁸² Data from Ir Amim and Bimkom, on file. See also Ir Amim and Bimkom, The Grand Land Theft (2023).

could lead to the declaration of Palestinian property as “absentee” based on the Absentee Property Law and handed over to the Custodian of Absentee Property. The finalization of this process would therefore place thousands of Palestinians at risk of forced eviction and forcible transfer.

Freedom of movement

40. Israel continued to develop bypass roads in Area C to connect settlements and outposts to each other, to Israel and to Jerusalem.⁸³ In May 2023, the Ministry of Transport and Road Safety committed to spending 3.5 billion new Israeli shekels ($941 million) over the next two years to upgrade and pave new roads serving Israeli settlements. As well as being highly discriminatory in being built to serve the needs of settlements and settlers, they also segment Palestinian governorates into isolated enclaves, undermining the feasibility of a contiguous Palestinian State. Furthermore, those roads hinder connectivity and restrict Palestinians’ freedom of movement in the West Bank in a highly discriminatory and oppressive manner, leading to further human rights violations, including by hampering access to livelihoods and essential services.

41. Following the attacks of 7 October 2023, the violation of Palestinians’ right to freedom of movement in the West Bank worsened drastically after Israeli authorities closed entrances to most Palestinian towns and villages and most checkpoints connecting the West Bank to East Jerusalem, and established new checkpoints across the West Bank. This was combined with an increased presence of Israeli security forces and armed settlers on the roads, further inhibiting Palestinians’ freedom of movement through intimidation and violence and exacerbating the coercive environment, increasing the risk of forcible transfer. The stringent and discriminatory restrictions imposed,⁸⁴ which did not apply to settlers, particularly affected already isolated and vulnerable communities. This included H2 in Hebron, where Israel placed 7,000 Palestinians under a de facto curfew until 21 October 2023 and ordered the closure of all shops and services. From 21 October 2023 to the end of the reporting period, Palestinian residents were allowed to leave H2 to access goods and services only three times a week, two hours a day, while settlers could move freely in and out of the area. In East Jerusalem, Israel imposed further restrictions on Palestinians’ access to the Old City and Al Aqsa Mosque, including through checking personal identification documents and restricting access to the Old City’s residents.

The wall

42. The ongoing construction of the wall, 85 per cent of which runs inside the West Bank carving off around 10 per cent of the territory, is increasingly restricting Palestinians’ freedom of movement and access to land, especially agricultural land, property and natural resources.⁸⁵ The Israeli military is reportedly imposing new obstacles on Palestinians trying to access West Bank lands across the wall, including farmers.⁸⁶ This included new restrictions after 7 October 2023 on Palestinians trying to cultivate their lands inside the seam zone, namely areas in the West Bank trapped between the wall and the Green Line border.⁸⁷ In 2004, the International Court of Justice found the construction of the wall built by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and its associated regime, to be contrary to international law.⁸⁸

Military firing zones

43. Nearly 30 per cent of Area C, primarily in the Jordan Valley, totalling 18 per cent of the West Bank, in which some 6,200 Palestinians currently live, has now been designated by ⁸³ A/78/554, paras. 24–28.

⁸⁴ Still in place at the end of the reporting period.

⁸⁵ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 14.

⁸⁶ See https://hamoked.org.il/newsletters/stand_with_HaMoked_eng.php.

⁸⁷ See <https://hamoked.org/document.php?dID=Updates2382>.

⁸⁸ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, at para. 163.

Israel as closed military “firing zones”.⁸⁹ Palestinians are prohibited from entering the military firing zones without authorization from the Israeli authorities, which is rarely granted, detrimentally affecting rights, including by hindering access to land, housing and livelihoods and by restricting freedom of movement. In those zones, Israel prohibits Palestinian construction, including homes and infrastructure, and regularly demolishes and confiscates Palestinian-owned property, contributing to the forcible transfer of Palestinians.⁹⁰

44. Pressure mounted on some 1,150 residents, including more than 500 children, of 12 Palestinian herding communities in the South Hebron Hills to leave Israeli-designated Firing Zone 918 in Masafer Yatta, following the decision of the High Court of Justice to approve their eviction in May 2022.⁹¹ Israeli authorities demolished or confiscated 33 structures in Masafer Yatta, including a donor-funded school in Isfey al Fauqa. The Jinba, Khirbet al Fakheit and Khirbet al Majaz schools in Masafer Yatta also remain vulnerable to demolition pursuant to the alleged violation of Israeli building permit regulations.⁹² Every structure in Al ‘Aqaba village, in the northern Jordan Valley, remains vulnerable to demolition due to the designation by the Israeli Military Commander that the village is situated within the boundaries of Firing Zone 900.

Restrictions on civil society

45. During the reporting period, civil society actors continued to face retaliation by Israeli authorities for advocating for the human rights of Palestinians, including in the context of Israeli settlement expansion. Their harassment is exacerbated by lengthy legal proceedings in military courts, which detract from their human rights work and further dim the prospects of justice and accountability for victims. Moreover, in Israeli military courts, 96 per cent of cases lead to convictions and 99.6 per cent of those were the result of plea bargains,⁹³ the defendant bearing the burden of proof, rather than the prosecution.⁹⁴ During the reporting period, human rights defenders Sami Hureini, Issa Amro and Nasser Nawajah all faced trials for their work against settlements in the West Bank. On 22 August 2023, following his peaceful participation in a demonstration in Masafer Yatta on 8 January 2021, Mr. Hureini, founder of Youth of Sumud, was convicted of assault and obstruction of a soldier, despite serious concerns about due process. On 25 June 2023, after a seven-year-long legal battle, Mr. Amro, founder of Youth Against Settlements, was exonerated in relation to two of his six convictions in connection with his human rights work – one of only a tiny fraction (0.3 per cent) of cases at military courts that result in exoneration.⁹⁵ Like many others, to avoid lengthy court proceedings and possible heavy sentencing, B’Tselem field researcher Mr. Nawajah, who had been accused of “assaulting a soldier” while documenting a case of settler violence in the South Hebron Hills in September 2021, accepted a plea bargain in July 2023 on the lesser charge of “obstructing a soldier”, which reduced the penalty to a fine and a suspended sentence of one and a half months.

46. The situation of human rights defenders attempting to document settler-related violations worsened further after 7 October 2023, as illustrated by the case of Mr. Amro. On 7 October 2023, Mr. Amro was prevented from accessing his house and the offices of Youth Against Settlements in Hebron H2 by an Israeli settler dressed in an army uniform along with two Israeli soldiers. The settler lives in Hebron H2 and is well known in the community for instigating attacks against Palestinians. Mr. Amro told OHCHR that he was subsequently arrested and detained for a day in a caravan located at a military post in the nearby settlement

⁸⁹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Protection of civilians report, 8–21 August 2023”, 28 August 2023, available at www.ochaopt.org/poc/8-21-august-2023.

⁹⁰ A/HRC/52/76, paras. 16 and 17.

⁹¹ See <https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts/13/130/004/n89&fileName=13004130.N89&type=2> (in Hebrew).

⁹² See also Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “Fact sheet: Masafer Yatta communities at risk of forcible transfer, June 2022”, 6 July 2022, available at www.ochaopt.org/content/masafer-yatta-communities-risk-forcible-transfer-june-2022.

⁹³ See www-meida-org-il.translate.goog/12407?_x_tr_sl=iw&_x_tr_tl=en&_x_tr_hl=iw.

⁹⁴ Naama Baumgarten-Sharon and Yael Stein, Presumed Guilty: Remand in Custody by Military Courts in the West Bank (B’Tselem, 2015), pp. 61 and 62.

⁹⁵ See www-meida-org-il.translate.goog/12407?_x_tr_sl=iw&_x_tr_tl=en&_x_tr_hl=iw.

of Ramat Yashai. During his detention, he described being subjected to ill-treatment and sexual violence at the hands of the soldiers, including being threatened with rape and being repeatedly beaten, kicked and spat on.

IV. Settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan

47. The Israeli plan to double the settler population in the Syrian Golan by 2027 is ongoing – both in terms of an increase in the number of Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan and also in the size of the Israeli settler population. Today, the Israeli settlers are distributed among 35 different settlements.⁹⁶

48. Beside settlement expansion, commercial activity, such as the construction of wind turbines, has been approved. This may have potentially detrimental health effects on the population of the occupied Syrian Golan and further worsen the overall human rights situation and continue to limit the access of the Syrian population to land and water. In addition, the project could affect the right to adequate housing, through land-grabbing and further potential displacement of the members of the Druze community.⁹⁷

49. On 20 June 2023, Israel commenced work on a wind turbine project near the towns of Majdal Shams and Mas'adah in the occupied Syrian Golan. Israel Police provided onsite protection for works reportedly⁹⁸ carried out by the Israeli Energix company. As a result, clashes erupted between Syrians protesting against the construction of the wind turbines and Israel Police officers, reportedly resulting in minor injuries to three protesters and three police officers. As a consequence, by July 2023, the Prime Minister of Israel had postponed the project, acknowledging its unfeasibility given the opposition from Arab villagers.⁹⁹

V. Conclusions

50. The establishment and continuing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan amount to the transfer by Israel of its own civilian population into the territories that it occupies, which is strictly prohibited under international humanitarian law,¹⁰⁰ as consistently confirmed by the competent United Nations organs, including the International Court of Justice.¹⁰¹ Such transfers amount to a war crime that may engage the individual criminal responsibility of those involved.¹⁰² On 30 June 1980, the Security Council reaffirmed the overriding necessity for ending the prolonged occupation of Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.¹⁰³

51. Entering the fifty-sixth year of Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory and the Syrian Golan, Israeli settlements in the West Bank, under laws and policies that are inherently discriminatory against Palestinians, continue to become more expansive, deeply entrenched and increasingly difficult to reverse. The ongoing expansion of Israeli settlements involves numerous human rights violations against Palestinians, including their rights to self-determination, equality and non-discrimination. These violations, which have become more serious over the reporting period, create a coercive

⁹⁶ A/78/127-E/2023/95, para. 113.

⁹⁷ A/78/529.

⁹⁸ Adi Hashmonai and Jack Khoury, “Druze protesters clash with police in Golan Heights over wind turbine construction”, Haaretz, 20 June 2023.

⁹⁹ Adi Hashmonai, Fadi Amun and Jack Khoury, “Netanyahu pauses wind turbine construction after Druze spiritual leader warns of unprecedented ‘consequences’”, Haaretz, 24 June 2023.

¹⁰⁰ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49, sixth paragraph.

¹⁰¹ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136; Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); General Assembly resolutions 71/97 and 72/86; and Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

¹⁰² Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49, sixth paragraph. See also Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹⁰³ Security Council resolution 476 (1980).

environment that displaces Palestinians from their homes and their lands and that could amount to forcible transfer.

52. Despite numerous reports on the question of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and the incompatibility of these settlements with international law, the international community has failed, both individually and collectively, to take adequate, feasible and effective measures to ensure the compliance of Israel with its international obligations.¹⁰⁴

53. The drastic acceleration, particularly after 7 October 2023, of long-standing trends of discrimination, oppression and violence against Palestinians that accompany Israeli occupation and settlement expansion have taken the West Bank to the brink of catastrophe. To address the current crisis and the wider context of occupation, it is critical for States Members of the United Nations, including the primary duty bearer, Israel, to find a viable political solution that finally addresses the associated and underlying human rights violations of the Palestinian people.

VI. Recommendations

54. On the basis of findings presented in the present and previous reports, the High Commissioner recommends that the Israeli authorities:

(a) Immediately and completely cease and reverse the establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, and all other related activity, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolutions 497 (1981) and 2334 (2016);

(b) Rescind all policies and practices that contribute to a coercive environment and increase the risk of forcible transfer of Palestinians;

(c) Cease and reverse the transfer of powers from the military administration to the Israeli civilian government over the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan, and ensure that all measures taken as occupying Power are fully consistent with international law;

(d) Fulfil its obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law regarding the protection of all Palestinians and their housing, land and property from violence by Israeli settlers, and ensure that all allegations of settler violence are promptly, effectively, impartially and transparently investigated, and that perpetrators are prosecuted in accordance with due process and fair trial guarantees and, if found guilty, punished with penalties commensurate with the gravity of the offences;

(e) Ensure that all members of Israeli security forces and the Israel Police alleged to have supported, facilitated or participated in acts of settler violence are investigated and held to account in accordance with international standards;

(f) Ensure that victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law have their right to remedy and reparation upheld;

(g) Reform planning policies, laws and practices that enable discriminatory eviction and demolition orders against Palestinians and that create a coercive environment that forces Palestinians to self-demolish their own properties;

(h) Repeal laws that discriminate against Palestinian residency in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem;

¹⁰⁴ International Law Commission, articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, art. 41 and part three.

(i) Ensure that civil society actors can freely conduct their activities without harassment, including for groups monitoring and reporting on human rights violations caused by Israeli settlements;

(j) Take immediate steps to dismantle the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in line with the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice, as a step towards ensuring Palestinians' full access to their lands and livelihoods and the enjoyment of their right to self-determination;

(k) Cease and reverse the establishment of the dual system of justice that has discriminatory effects on Palestinians, as well as other laws and policies resulting in patterns of systematic discrimination against Palestinians;

(l) End the 56-year military occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan, as part of a broader process towards achieving equality, justice, democracy, non-discrimination and the fulfilment of all human rights for all Palestinians.

10. Encourages the Government of the Sudan to accelerate the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights in the Sudan;

11. Invites relevant United Nations bodies and agencies, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to continue providing support and technical assistance to the Sudan for the implementation of the recommendations of the Group of Experts, and calls upon donors to continue providing financial and technical assistance and required equipment for the improvement of human rights in the Sudan and to continue to provide support for the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement;

12. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to accelerate the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and to establish the remaining commissions, in particular the finalization of the establishment of the national human rights commission, in accordance with the Paris Principles;

13. Expresses particular concern at the fact that perpetrators of past and ongoing serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Darfur have not yet been held accountable for their crimes and urges the Government of the Sudan to address urgently this question, by thoroughly investigating all allegations of human rights and international humanitarian law violations, promptly bringing to justice the perpetrators of those violations;

14. Decides to review the situation of human rights in the Sudan at its session in September 2008.

*40th meeting
27 March 2008*

Adopted without a vote. See chapter IV.

7/17. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights (A/CONF.157/23), and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions which confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the last of which was resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States living side by side in peace and security, Palestine and Israel;

3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its session of March 2009.

*40th meeting
27 March 2008*

Adopted without a vote. See chapter VII.

9. Calls upon the occupying Power, Israel, to lift checkpoints and to open all crossing points and borders in accordance with international agreements;

10. Urges all parties concerned to respect the rules of international human rights and humanitarian law and to refrain from violence against civilian populations;

11. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirteenth session in March 2010.

*43rd meeting
26 March 2009*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 35 to 4, with 8 abstentions (see part II, chap. VII). The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Switzerland, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

Canada, Germany, Italy, Netherlands;

Abstaining:

Cameroon, France, Japan, Republic of Korea, Slovakia, Slovenia, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.]

10/20

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) on 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights (A/CONF.157/23), and in particular part I, paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the latest being resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirteenth session in March 2010.

43rd meeting

26 March 2009

[Adopted without a vote. See part II, chap. VII.]

10/21

Follow-up to Council resolution S-9/1 on the grave violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly due to the recent Israeli military attacks against the occupied Gaza Strip

The Human Rights Council,

Recalling its resolution S-9/1 of 12 January 2009,

Recalling also its decision to dispatch an urgent, independent international fact-finding mission, to be appointed by the President of the Council, to investigate all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law by the occupying Power, Israel, against the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in the occupied Gaza Strip, due to the latest aggression, and that it called upon Israel not to obstruct the process of investigation and to fully cooperate with the mission,

General Assembly

Distr.: General
14 April 2010

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine
and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

13/6

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights (A/CONF.157/23), and in particular part I, paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

* The resolutions and decisions of the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its thirteenth session (A/HRC/13/56), chap. I.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the last of which being resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;
2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;
3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;
4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;
5. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its sixteenth session.

41st meeting
24 March 2010

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 45 to 1. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Madagascar, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uruguay, Zambia;

Against:

United States of America.]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
13 April 2011

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Sixteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

16/30

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular part I, paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

* The resolutions and decisions adopted by the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its sixteenth session (A/HRC/16/2), chap. I.

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the last of which was resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its nineteenth session.

*48th meeting
25 March 2011*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, with no abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Cuba, Djibouti, Ecuador, France, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Hungary, Japan, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovakia, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uruguay, Zambia

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
10 April 2012

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Nineteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

19/15

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples, and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

* The resolutions and decisions adopted by the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its nineteenth session (A/HRC/19/2), chap. I.

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the last of which was resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity, and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Decides to continue consideration of this question at its twenty-second session.

*53rd meeting
22 March 2012*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czech Republic, Djibouti, Ecuador, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Libya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda, Uruguay

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
12 April 2013

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-second session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council*

22/27.

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, thereof relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

* The resolutions and decisions adopted by the Human Rights Council will be contained in the report of the Council on its twenty-second session (A/HRC/22/2), chap. I.

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the last of which was resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, as it is a jus cogens in international law and a basic condition for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity, and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Stresses the need for respect for and the preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its twenty-fifth session.

*50th meeting
22 March 2013*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Angola, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Czech Republic, Ecuador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Gabon, Germany, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Libya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Montenegro, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
11 April 2014

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-fifth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council

25/27.

Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, as well as all other resolutions that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

GE.14-13437

* 1 4 1 3 4 3 7 *

Please recycle The recycling symbol, consisting of three chasing arrows forming a triangle.

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recalling also the resolutions adopted in this regard by the Commission on Human Rights, the last of which was resolution 2005/1 of 7 April 2005,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region of the Middle East,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Noting the decision of the General Assembly, in its resolution 68/12 of 26 November 2013, to proclaim 2014 the International Year of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, and reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity, and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State;
2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;
3. Stresses the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;
4. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;
5. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;
6. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its twenty-eighth session.

*56th meeting
28 March 2014*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 46 to 1. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Czech Republic, Estonia, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Germany, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Maldives, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco,

Namibia, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), Viet Nam

Against:

United States of America]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
9 April 2015

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Twenty-eighth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council

28/25. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, as well as by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, which is a right erga omnes, and considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being further violated by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Also reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Notes that the fragmentation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination and is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and stresses in this regard the need for respect for and the preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Urges all Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination;

6. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirty-first session.

*57th meeting
27 March 2015*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, with 1 abstention. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Botswana, Brazil, China, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, El Salvador, Estonia, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Germany, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Maldives, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco, Namibia, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Paraguay, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), Viet Nam

Against:

United States of America

Abstaining:

Ghana]*

* The delegation of Ghana subsequently stated that there had been an error in its voting and that it had intended to vote in favour of the draft text.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
20 April 2016

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-first session

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 24 March 2016

31/33. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, results in serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

6. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its thirty-fourth session.

*66th meeting
24 March 2016*

[Adopted without a vote.]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
12 April 2017

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-fourth session

27 February–24 March 2017

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 24 March 2017

34/29. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, and reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of common article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirms that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights,¹ and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

¹ A/CONF.157/23.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret about the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and in the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, results in serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 50 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 70 years since the resolution on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Deeply regrets the onset of the fiftieth year of the Israeli occupation, calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

4. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

5. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel's illegal policies and practices;

6. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*58th meeting
24 March 2017*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 43 to 2, with 2 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Albania, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, China, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Mongolia, Netherlands, Nigeria, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Slovenia, South Africa, Switzerland, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Togo, United States of America

Abstaining:

Panama, Paraguay]

Human Rights CouncilThirty-seventh session

26 February–23 March 2018

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 23 March 2018*37/34. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determinationThe Human Rights Council,*

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret about the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and in the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, results in serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 50 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 70 years since the resolution on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and further reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

3. Expresses grave concern at any action taken by any body, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;

4. Expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

5. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

6. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel's illegal policies and practices;

7. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*56th meeting
23 March 2018*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 43 to 2, with 1 abstention. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Afghanistan, Angola, Belgium, Brazil, Burundi, Chile, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland, Togo, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Australia, United States of America

Abstaining:

Democratic Republic of the Congo]

Human Rights CouncilFortieth session

25 February–22 March 2019

Agenda item 7

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council
on 22 March 2019*40/22. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determinationThe Human Rights Council,*

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret about the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and in the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, results in serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 50 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 70 years since the resolution on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;
2. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and further reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;
3. Expresses grave concern at any action taken in contravention of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;
4. Expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;
5. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;
6. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel's illegal policies and practices;

7. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*54th meeting
22 March 2019*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 41 to 3, with 2 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Afghanistan, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Croatia, Cuba, Czechia, Egypt, Eritrea, Fiji, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Senegal, Slovakia, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Togo, Tunisia, Ukraine, Uruguay

Against:

Australia, Denmark, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland

Abstaining:

Cameroon, Democratic Republic of the Congo]

Human Rights CouncilForty-third session

24 February–13 March and 15–23 June 2020

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 22 June 2020*43/33. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determinationThe Human Rights Council,*

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret about the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and in the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, results in serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 50 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 70 years since the resolution on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Also reaffirms the need to achieve a just, comprehensive and lasting peaceful solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, in conformity with international law and other internationally agreed parameters, including all relevant United Nations resolutions;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and further reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

4. Expresses grave concern at any action taken in contravention of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

6. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

7. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel's illegal policies and practices;

8. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*46th meeting
22 June 2020*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 43 to 2, with 2 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Afghanistan, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Chile, Czechia, Denmark, Eritrea, Fiji, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Libya, Mauritania, Mexico, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Senegal, Slovakia, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Togo, Ukraine, Uruguay, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Australia, Marshall Islands

Abstaining:

Cameroon, Democratic Republic of the Congo]

Human Rights CouncilForty-sixth session

22 February–24 March 2021

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 24 March 2021*46/25. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determinationThe Human Rights Council,*

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret about the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and in the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, results in serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 50 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 73 years since General Assembly resolution 181 (II) on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Also reaffirms the need to achieve a just, comprehensive and lasting peaceful solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, in conformity with international law and other internationally agreed parameters, including all relevant United Nations resolutions;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and further reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

4. Expresses grave concern at any action taken in contravention of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are the result of Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

6. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

7. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by

Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel's illegal policies and practices;

8. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

*51st meeting
24 March 2021*

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 42 to 3, with 2 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Denmark, Eritrea, Fiji, France, Gabon, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Libya, Mauritania, Mexico, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Ukraine, Uruguay, Uzbekistan and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Czechia, Marshall Islands and United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland

Abstaining:

Cameroon and Malawi]

Human Rights CouncilForty-ninth session

28 February–1 April 2022

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 1 April 2022*49/28. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determinationThe Human Rights Council,*

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples, and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret at the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, result in grave breaches of international humanitarian and serious violations of international human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 55 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 75 years since General Assembly resolution 181 (II) of 29 November 1947 on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Also reaffirms the need to achieve a just, comprehensive and lasting peaceful solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in conformity with international law and other internationally agreed parameters, including all relevant United Nations resolutions;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to reverse and redress any impediments to the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Palestine, and reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

4. Expresses grave concern at any action taken in contravention of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from Israel's continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

6. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

7. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel's illegal policies and practices;

8. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

58th meeting

1 April 2022

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 41 to 3, with 3 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Argentina, Armenia, Benin, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Brazil, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kazakhstan, Libya, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mexico, Montenegro, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Pakistan, Paraguay, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of)

Against:

Marshall Islands, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America

Abstaining:

Cameroon, Honduras, Lithuania]

Human Rights CouncilFifty-second session

27 February–4 April 2023

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territoriesResolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 4 April 2023*52/34. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determinationThe Human Rights Council,*

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples, and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret at the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, result in grave breaches of international humanitarian law and serious violations of international human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 56 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved 76 years since General Assembly resolution 181 (II) of 29 November 1947 on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Also reaffirms the need to achieve a just, comprehensive and lasting peaceful solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in conformity with international law and other internationally agreed parameters, including all relevant United Nations resolutions;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to reverse and redress any impediments to the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Palestine, and reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

4. Expresses grave concern at any action taken in contravention of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from the continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall by Israel, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

6. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

7. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of the illegal policies and practices of Israel;

8. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

57th meeting

4 April 2023

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 41 to 3, with 3 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Chile, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Honduras, India, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco, Nepal, Pakistan, Paraguay, Qatar, Senegal, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan and Viet Nam

Against:

Czechia, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and United States of America

Abstaining:

Cameroon, Lithuania and Romania]

General Assembly

Distr.: General
12 April 2024

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-fifth session

26 February–5 April 2024

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Resolution adopted by the Human Rights Council on 5 April 2024

55/30. Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The Human Rights Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the provisions of Articles 1 and 55 thereof, which affirm the right of peoples to self-determination, reaffirming the need for the scrupulous respect of the principle of refraining in international relations from the threat or use of force, as specified in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory resulting from the threat or use of force,

Guided also by the provisions of article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which affirm that all peoples have the right to self-determination,

Guided further by the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular article 1 thereof, and by the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, and in particular Part I, paragraphs 2 and 3, relating to the right of self-determination of all peoples, and especially those subject to foreign occupation,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 181 A and B (II) of 29 November 1947 and 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, including those adopted by the Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, that confirm and define the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, particularly their right to self-determination,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967, 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973, 1397 (2002) of 12 March 2002 and 1402 (2002) of 30 March 2002,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations, and the provisions of international covenants and instruments relating to the right to self-determination as an international principle and as a right of all peoples in the world, and emphasizing that this jus cogens norm of international law is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East,

Deploring the plight of millions of Palestine refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted from their homes, and expressing deep regret at the fact that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and the diaspora,

Affirming the applicability of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources to the Palestinian situation as an integral component of the right to self-determination,

Recalling the conclusion of the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, which is a right erga omnes, is severely impeded by Israel, the occupying Power, through the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which, together with the Israeli settlement enterprise and measures previously taken, result in grave breaches of international humanitarian law and serious violations of international human rights law, including the forcible transfer of Palestinians and Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land,

Considering that the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people is being violated further by Israel through the existence and ongoing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Noting that the failure to bring the occupation to an end after 57 years heightens the international responsibility to uphold the human rights of the Palestinian people, and expressing its deep regret that the question of Palestine has remained unresolved for 77 years, since the adoption by the General Assembly on 29 November 1947 of its resolution 181 A and B (II) on partition,

Reaffirming that the United Nations will continue to be engaged on the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity and the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Also reaffirms the need to achieve a just, comprehensive and lasting peaceful solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in conformity with international law and other internationally agreed parameters, including all relevant United Nations resolutions;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to immediately end its occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to reverse and redress any impediments to the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Palestine, and reaffirms its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security;

4. Expresses grave concern at any action taken in contravention of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the fragmentation and the changes in the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, which are resulting from the continuing construction and expansion of settlements, forcible transfer of Palestinians and construction of the wall by Israel, stresses that this fragmentation, which undermines the possibility of the Palestinian people realizing their right to self-determination, is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizes in this regard the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem;

6. Confirms that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources must be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination;

7. Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel, in particular of the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force, in order to ensure the exercise of the right to self-determination, and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of the illegal policies and practices of Israel;

8. Urges all States to adopt measures as required to promote the realization of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of this right;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

56th meeting

5 April 2024

[Adopted by a recorded vote of 42 to 2, with 3 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour:

Algeria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Montenegro, Morocco, Netherlands (Kingdom of the), Qatar, Romania, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam

Against:

Paraguay, United States of America

Abstaining:

Albania, Argentina, Cameroon]

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/4/57
23 February 2007

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Fourth session
Item 2 of the provisional agenda

IMPLEMENTATION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 60/251
OF 15 MARCH 2006 ENTITLED “HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL”

The issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints

Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights*

1. The Human Rights Council, in its decision 2/102 of 6 October 2006, requested the High Commissioner for Human Rights to “continue with the fulfilment of her activities, in accordance with all previous decisions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and to update the relevant reports and studies”. On the current issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints, a report was submitted by the High Commissioner to the sixtieth session of the General Assembly (see A/60/324) pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/7 of 14 April 2005. The information in the report remains relevant and has been complemented by a note submitted by the Secretariat to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session (E/CN.4/2006/28). The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) understands decision 2/102 as preserving the previous annual reporting cycle in respect of the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints, until otherwise decided by the Council. The current report to the Human Rights Council accordingly addresses developments in respect of this issue since the last report submitted to the Commission on Human Rights.

2. On 9 January 2007, the Secretary-General addressed notes verbales to the Permanent Mission of Israel and to the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations Office at Geneva, in which he indicated that he would appreciate receiving any comments or observations that they might wish to submit following Commission resolution 2005/7, the subsequent report submitted by the High Commissioner to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session, and the note submitted by the Secretariat to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints.

* The report is submitted after the deadline so as to reflect the most recent information.

3. On 6 February 2007, OHCHR received a report from the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine¹, compiled by the Palestinian Ministry of Health, indicating that since the Al Aqsa intifada in September 2000, Israel had intensified its military occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT) through obstacles and checkpoints at the entry of Palestinian cities and villages, impeding seriously the mobility of civilians. These restrictions imposed on the liberty of movement of Palestinian people were perceived as a form of collective punishment and constitute a violation of article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilians in Time of War of 12 August 1949, which forbids collective penalties and intimidation measures, and of article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which guarantees to everyone the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his/her residence. The Israeli policy of segregation led to the splitting of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank respectively into 3 and 43 isolated areas or units.

4. According to the Information Health Centre of the Palestinian Ministry of Health, from 2000 to 2006, 69 cases of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints had been recorded with peaks reached in 2001 (18 cases), in 2002 (24 cases), in 2003 (8 cases) and in 2004 (9 cases). Of these, 45 took place in the West Bank (out of which 11 cases occurred in Nablus and 9 cases in Ramallah), while 14 cases were registered in Gaza. In 2005, only three cases were reported in the West Bank and Gaza, while two cases occurred in the West Bank and none in Gaza in 2006.

5. As a result of the checkpoints, 10 per cent of pregnant women who wished to give birth in a hospital had been delayed on the road between two to four hours before reaching health facilities, while 6 per cent of them had spent more than four hours for the same journey. Before the intifada, the average time to reach health facilities was 15 to 30 minutes. These hazardous conditions were mainly attributed to impediments faced by ambulances and medical teams when trying to transport women in labour through checkpoints, and to inspections or attacks perpetrated by Israeli forces against ambulances and their patients.

6. According to the figures provided in the same report, 35 newborn babies had died at checkpoints as their mothers did not receive the urgent care required by their condition and five women lost their lives while giving birth. In addition, six pregnant women had been injured at checkpoints as a result of beating, shooting and use of toxic gas by Israeli soldiers. Mention was made of the case of a pregnant woman who had been targeted in her ninth month of pregnancy at a checkpoint by Israeli military, while she was accompanied by her husband and her father. The woman received a wound in her shoulder and the father was injured in the chest; her husband, however, died as a result of multiple gunshot wounds. Most pregnant women belonged to the age groups 21-25 (17 cases), 26-30 (16 cases), 31-35 (15 cases), and 36-40 (9 cases). The fear of such hardships led a significant number of Palestinian pregnant women to choose to give birth at home (with an increase by 8.2 per cent of home deliveries).

¹ This report was received in Arabic and the following information is based on an unofficial translation.

7. At the time of preparation of the present report, no reply has been received from the Permanent Mission of Israel.

8. OHCHR also addressed letters dated 9 January 2007 to the following United Nations entities and specialized agencies represented in the OPT: Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Process (UNSCO), United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), World Food Programme (WFP) and World Health Organization (WHO).

9. Replies were received in late January and early February 2007 from UNSCO, UNRWA transmitting statistics from WHO and the Palestinian Red Crescent Society (PRCS), as well as from UNICEF, UNIFEM and UNFPA. UNSCO indicated that it had no specific contribution to make on the subject. UNRWA mentioned that it did not keep statistics on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women at Israeli checkpoints and that the field staff consulted had no direct knowledge of any cases in 2005 or 2006. The two tables of figures transmitted by WHO are based on the statistics provided by the Information Health Centre of the Palestinian Ministry of Health (see paragraph 4 above). The information given by PRCS noted 10 cases of deliveries in ambulances between January and May 2005 at the El-Toufah checkpoint in the Gaza Strip, which was later dismantled by Israeli forces when they withdrew from Gaza. All the deliveries occurred within delays ranging from one and a half hours to two hours.

10. UNICEF indicated that it had no additional comments or observations, except that it remained determined to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Palestinian women and their children, in particular unobstructed and timely access to health facilities.

11. UNIFEM noted that other United Nations agencies working in the OPT had already reported comprehensively on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints, and focused its contribution on the question of the treatment of pregnant Palestinian female prisoners in Israeli prisons and detention centres.

12. UNFPA expressed deep concern about recent reports of delays at Israeli checkpoints and women in labour, and reiterated the universal right of pregnant women to have access to health care, including delivery, in complex humanitarian situations such as in the OPT. Delays of pregnant women at checkpoints and other blockades had resulted in forced roadside births, and even in the death of some women (68 women, according to Palestinian Ministry of Health statistical reports have in the last six years given birth at a checkpoint, with 34 miscarriages) and infants.² According to 2006 Ministry of Health statistics, there were currently an estimated 117,000 pregnant women in the OPT, including around 18,000 who suffered from difficult pregnancy and birth due to a lack of appropriate and timely antenatal, delivery and post-natal care. In fact, inadequate medical care during pregnancy was the third cause of mortality among Palestinian women of reproductive age.

13. UNFPA thus urged that civilians with urgent needs should have access to health facilities, and that humanitarian organizations be allowed to work freely to alleviate the suffering of the Palestinian people, especially women and children. In this regard, UNFPA had been helping Palestinian women to avoid distress, including from delays at checkpoints. Key interventions included training of health personnel in emergency obstetric care; equipping trained health-care personnel with delivery kits to enable them to provide more effective service delivery in their respective communities; facilitation of the formation of community support teams to assist health providers and to raise community awareness on the availability of delivery services; and procurement of medications and supplies to ensure the continuity of maternal services.

14. The latest Israeli military incursions into the Gaza Strip, which started on 28 June 2006, had compounded the suffering of the Palestinian population in general and women and young people in particular. General damage to infrastructure, power grids and communication services jeopardized provision of adequate health services. UNFPA was concerned about the negative impact of such damage on maternal outcome, including death. In Gaza, the inability to refer properly emergency cases outside of the Strip had been observed as a factor related to maternal death in a recent Ministry of Health descriptive study supported by UNFPA (Maternal Death Study, Ministry of Health, December 2006).

15. Through its network with the Ministry of Health and civil society organizations in Palestine, UNFPA continued to work with its partners on the provision of essential emergency services and supplies, including the restoration of health facilities, as well as psychosocial and clinical services. UNFPA also raised the issue that any birth at a checkpoint or inability to refer a pregnant woman as a result of a military barrier that resulted in birth, death or disability was a breach of human and reproductive rights.

² There is one unit of difference vis-à-vis the statistics submitted by the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine which mention 69 pregnant women delayed at checkpoints and 35 newborn babies.

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/7/44
1 February 2008

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Seventh session
Agenda item 2

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND REPORTS OF THE OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER AND THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

The issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints

Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

1. The Human Rights Council, in its decision 2/102, requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to “continue with the fulfilment of her activities, in accordance with all previous decisions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and to update the relevant reports and studies”. In its resolution 2005/7, the Commission on Human Rights requested the High Commissioner to report on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints owing to denial of access by Israel to hospitals. The Office of the High Commissioner (“the Office”) understands decision 2/102 as preserving the previous annual reporting cycle in respect of this issue, until otherwise decided by the Council. The present report to the Council accordingly addresses the developments that have occurred since the last report on this issue was submitted to the Council at its fourth session.¹
2. On 20 November 2007, the Secretary-General addressed notes verbales to the Permanent Mission of Israel and to the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations Office at Geneva, in which he indicated that he would appreciate receiving any comments or observations that they might wish to submit following Commission resolution 2005/7 and the most recent report submitted by the High Commissioner on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints.¹

¹ A/HRC/4/57.

3. On 11 December 2007, the Office received a reply from the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine indicating that the Israeli practices described in a report compiled by the Palestinian Ministry of Health in early 2007 persist. It also indicates that the number of cases of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints recorded in that report (69 cases) remains the same. The above-mentioned Israeli practices and cases of deliveries at checkpoints were described in detail in the previous report of the High Commissioner.¹
4. At the time of writing, no reply had been received from the Permanent Mission of Israel.
5. In order to gather information on the issue, the Office also wrote on 6 November 2007 to the following United Nations entities and specialized agencies represented in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Process (UNSCO), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Food Programme (WFP) and the World Health Organization (WHO).
6. Replies were received on 23 November 2007 from UNRWA and WHO. Both indicate that since all internal Israeli Defense Force (IDF) checkpoints were dismantled in Gaza in 2005, there were no cases of pregnant women giving birth at checkpoints in Gaza during the reporting period. In addition, WHO reports that since there was no referral for pregnancy-related conditions from Gaza to outside hospitals, no delivery was reported at the Erez checkpoint (currently the only checkpoint where patients can exit Gaza). Neither UNRWA nor WHO replies contain information concerning deliveries at checkpoints in the West Bank. However, on 3 January 2008, OHCHR received information from B'Tselem, the Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, concerning two cases of deliveries of Palestinian women. Both women had been forced to give birth in their respective cars following the refusal of the Israeli soldiers guarding a gate north of the village of 'Azzun 'Atmah, which is cut off from the rest of the West Bank by the Wall, to allow them to pass to get to a hospital in nearby Qalqiliya. A first case occurred on 12 December 2007, in which the delivery took place in the car after a delay of over half an hour at the gate. In the other case, which took place on 15 December 2007, a Palestinian woman from the village began to deliver in her car at 4.30 a.m., following a delay of more than one and half hours at the gate.
7. WHO further reports that, while the number of Palestinian women giving birth at checkpoints is an important indicator, it is not sufficient to assess the accessibility of adequate medical services for pregnant women, the changing patterns of behaviour in response to mobility restrictions and their implications for the right to health. According to studies referred to by WHO,² restricted mobility and increasing poverty have resulted in difficult situations for

² Laura Wick, Birth at the Checkpoint, the Home or the Hospital? Adapting to the Changing Reality in Palestine, Institute of Community and Public Health, Birzeit University, 15 June 2002; Rita Giacaman et al., "The Politics of Childbirth in the Context of Conflict: Policies or de facto Practices?", Health Policy, vol. 72, issue 2, May 2005, pp. 129-139; Laura Wick, "Childbirth

Palestinian pregnant women and limited access to health care. Closures (roadblocks and checkpoints) continue to have economic, medical and psychosocial implications for Palestinian pregnant women as follows:

- (a) Unpredictable access to maternity services due to restrictions on movement is a determinant in medical decisions on induced labour and caesarean sections and it also discourages women from seeking quality post-natal care;
- (b) Obstetricians at West Bank hospitals run by the Palestinian Authority (PA) report that complications have increased due to late arrivals after delays at checkpoints and late referrals from private hospitals for caesarean operations free of charge;
- (c) Mobility restrictions impede continuity of medical care throughout the cycle of pregnancy (prenatal care, a hospital for delivery and post-natal care may not be accessible in the same location) and thus the development of a relationship of trust between medical staff and patients;
- (d) Palestinian pregnant women and their families live with anxiety and stress, especially during the last period of pregnancy, of not being assured that they will be able to reach a maternity facility and to return home. Transport between the home and the hospital is a constant concern;
- (e) Studies indicate that physical accessibility to services, in addition to their availability and affordability, is a factor in Palestinian women's choice of place of birth. According to a Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics (PCBS) survey carried out in 2004, 20 per cent of women interviewed reported that their childbirth location was not the preferred place of delivery; of those, 13.7 per cent stated that access was impeded by IDF measures;
- (f) A drastic change in birth location patterns is reported even if this means a lower standard of health care, e.g. an increase in births attended at home or in doctors' clinics. While eliminating the need for displacement, home births involve high risks if not supported by emergency obstetric care and the ability to access a hospital when needed. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, emergency obstetric care is limited and access constitutes a vital problem with many roads blocked;
- (g) Changes in utilization patterns have also had an impact on the quality of services: the higher caseloads in some maternity hospitals were generally not accompanied by an increase in the number of health providers putting further strain on PA hospitals already suffering from understaffing and overcrowding; in Palestine", International Journal of Gynecology and Obstetrics, vol. 89, issue 2, May 2005, pp. 174-178; Rita Giacaman et al., "The Limitations on Choice: Palestinian Women's Childbirth Location, Dissatisfaction with the Place of Birth and Determinants", European Journal of Public Health, vol. 17, No. 1, February 2007, first published online 23 June 2006.

(h) In order to avoid having access to a maternity facility delayed or denied, pregnant women are reported to move to relatives living in towns (most of the childbirth infrastructure in the Occupied Palestinian Territory is located in urban-based hospitals) a few weeks before the expected delivery;

(i) Mobility restrictions also disrupt social relations depriving pregnant women of psychosocial support by the wider family, which in Palestinian culture and society is especially important. Close family members are not able to accompany pregnant women to hospital or often arrive late.

8. WHO further reports that according to data published in April 2007 by PCBS, the infant mortality rate has slightly increased from 24.2/1,000 live births in 2004 to 25.3/1,000 live births in 2006. The under-five mortality rate has not changed from 2004 to 2006, which is 28.2/1,000 live births.

9. UNRWA reports scarce medical facilities in Gaza, where 7 out of 17 incubators for newborn babies have not been duly maintained due to the lack of spare parts in the local market, which appears to have resulted in a decline in health standards among newborns during the reporting period. According to UNRWA, the number of infant deaths at Gaza's main hospitals - Shifa hospital, Gaza paediatric hospital and the Gaza European hospital - was on average 20 per cent higher during the period of January-October 2007 than during the corresponding period in 2006. UNRWA also expresses concern over the significant delays of the process applicable for Gazans who require permits from the Israeli authorities to exit Gaza through the Erez crossing to receive necessary medical treatment in hospitals outside Gaza. Referring to WHO statistics indicating that it has become more difficult for Gazan patients to receive an exit permit, UNRWA reports that while 89.4 per cent of patients who applied were granted a permit between January and May 2007, during October 2007, only 77.1 per cent of applicants received permits. Long delays are particularly detrimental for patients whose conditions are critical and necessitate immediate treatment outside Gaza.

10. With regard to pregnant women in Gaza, UNRWA reports that health facilities in Gaza can provide treatment to most high-risk pregnancy women. Therefore, the number of high-risk pregnancy cases referred to hospitals in Israel or east Jerusalem from either health centres of the Ministry of Health or health centres operated by UNRWA is not high. Since February 2007, UNRWA reports that it has referred five pregnant women in need of tertiary care to Israeli hospitals. Among these, four cases resulted in maternal mortality.

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/10/35
26 February 2009

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL

Tenth session
Agenda item 2

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND REPORTS OF THE OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER AND THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

The issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints:
report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

1. The Human Rights Council, in its decision 2/102 of 6 October 2006, requested the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner for Human Rights to “continue with the fulfilment of their activities, in accordance with all previous decisions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and to update the relevant reports and studies”. In its resolution 2005/7 of 14 April 2005, the Commission on Human Rights requested the High Commissioner to report on “the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints owing to denial of access by Israel to hospitals”.
2. The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) understands decision 2/102 as preserving the previous annual reporting cycle in respect of this issue, until otherwise decided by the Council. The present report to the Council addresses the developments that have occurred since the submission of the last report on this issue (A/HRC/7/44).
3. On 6 November 2008, the High Commissioner addressed notes verbales to the Permanent Mission of Israel and to the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations Office at Geneva, in which she indicated that she would appreciate receiving comments or observations that they might wish to submit following Commission resolution 2005/7 and the most recent report (ibid.) submitted by the High Commissioner on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints.

4. At the time of writing, no reply had been received from either Mission.
5. In order to gather information on the issue, OHCHR also wrote on 7 November 2008 to the following United Nations entities and specialized agencies represented in the occupied Palestinian territory: the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Process (UNSCO), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the World Health Organization (WHO).
6. Replies were received on 13 November 2008 from UNICEF, on 26 November 2008 from the UNRWA Gaza Field Office, on 1 December 2008 from WHO, on 3 December 2008 from OCHA, on 10 December 2008 from the UNRWA West Bank Field Office and 13 December 2008 from UNFPA and UNIFEM.
7. The United Nations does not maintain a systematic monitoring and reporting mechanism on the issue of Palestinian women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints. UNRWA Gaza and West Bank Field Offices reported that they do not monitor the issue. OCHA noted that births at checkpoints are not an indicator that it monitors or records systematically. Nevertheless, OCHA in its reply mentioned that it reports on births at checkpoints on an ad hoc basis when a casualty results from the incident (i.e., injury or death) in its Protection of Civilians Weekly Reports. In this regard, OCHA pointed out that these reports are not comprehensive as its field staff may not be receiving information on every incident.
8. It should also be noted that limiting the scope of the issue to births at checkpoints fails to account for the consequences of the entire closure regime imposed on the occupied Palestinian territory (e.g., the closure of Gaza, the Wall, as well as other impediments to the freedom of movement of Palestinians, such as roadblocks, trenches, earth mounds, etc.), which severely impact on the daily lives of Palestinian women. The entire closure regime leaves Palestinian women particularly vulnerable with regard to their health-related needs and rights, posing severe difficulties for them in accessing necessary health-care services during childbirth.
9. Impediments to accessing health-care services due to movement restrictions were highlighted in the information provided by WHO. From 25 to 29 July 2008, alongside several military operations, the Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) severely restricted Palestinian movement throughout the Hebron Governorate in the southern West Bank. Restrictions included the closure of two major junctions, Al Fawwar and Al Fahs, for an average of four hours a day. The closure of Al Fawwar junction blocked the only access point for some 150,000 people to Hebron City, while the closure of Al Fahs prevented commercial trucks from entering the industrial zone in Hebron/H2 from accessing Road 60.¹

¹ OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report, 23-29 July 2008, 4 August 2008; see www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_protection_of_civilians_weekly_report_270_2008_07_29_english.pdf.

10. On 27 July 2008, the IDF closed the Beit Kahil Bridge with an earth mound for one day, effectively cutting off the population of Beit Kahil, Tarqumiya and Idhna (with a combined population of 60,000) from Hebron City. Consequently, a 24-year-old woman from Tarqumiya was forced to give birth in a car while waiting for an ambulance to transport her to a hospital.²

11. In the same location, a similar incident occurred on 28 August 2008. A WHO mental-health team witnessed and reported that, due to an earth mound, the IDF closed the only accessible road to the community centre. A woman had to deliver in her husband's car since they could not pass the obstacle to reach the hospital on time due to the closure of the road.

12. Another incident involved a 21-year-old woman, married with one child, resident of Qusra in the Nablus District. On 4 September 2008, seven months pregnant, she started to bleed severely. At close to 1 a.m., she and her husband left for the nearest hospital in Nablus, but Israeli soldiers did not permit them to pass through the Huwara checkpoint because they did not have the requisite permit to cross by car. As a result, she delivered at the checkpoint a stillborn baby.³

13. In January 2009, a 25-year-old pregnant woman from Al A'sawiya (Jerusalem) was delayed by soldiers at Zayem checkpoint, which controls access to East Jerusalem through the Barrier. The woman, who held a Jerusalem ID and was travelling in a car with Israeli plates, informed the soldiers upon arrival that she was in labour. According to the woman, she was delayed for two hours, during which her waters broke. After being allowed through, she delivered in the car while en route to the hospital, where she was rushed into the emergency room.

14. Movement restrictions impact on the lives of Palestinian women not only during childbirth, but also during pre- and post-natal care. In that regard, the situation of the villages of Azzun Atmeh in the Qalqiliya District and Barta' Al Sharqiya in the Jenin District has been highlighted by WHO. In Azzun Atmeh, a village completely surrounded by the Wall whose only access is through a gate guarded by the IDF, the main obstacles impeding access to quality health care and affecting the regular provision of health services is the presence of the Wall and the search procedures that the residents, including patients, are subject to upon entering and leaving the village. Accessing secondary health-care services, especially while the gate is closed, means an added risk of the deterioration of health status in urgent cases and pregnant women. The risk of unattended delivery is also compounded by the fact that no midwife is available in Azzun Atmeh.

² Ibid.

³ Naheel 'Awni 'Abd a-Rahim Abu Rideh gave her testimony to the Israeli human rights organisation B'Tselem; see www.btselem.org/english/testimonies/20080904_Nahil_Ridah_Ridah_forced_to_give_birth_at_checkpoint.asp.

15. Barta' Al Sharqiya is a totally enclosed enclave in the Jenin District in the West Bank, where entry and exit to other districts in the West Bank are accessible through two gates.⁴ Accessing secondary health-care services, especially after the gates are closed (from 9 p.m. to 5 a.m.) is a complicated process. This can pose a life-threatening risk for patients who need urgent lifesaving treatment. Special coordination with the Israeli soldiers at the gates is required for ambulances and patients entering or exiting Barta' Al Sharqiya. This often results in delays in transporting patients and potentially leads to health complications. Moreover, no drugs or vaccinations are allowed into the village without prior coordination with the Israeli soldiers. UNRWA used to provide mobile clinic services but has been facing problems in entering the village due to Israeli search procedures at the entrance gate.

16. According to UNFPA and UNIFEM, an estimated 2,500 births per year face difficulties en route to a delivery facility. Many Palestinian women have developed various higher-risk coping mechanisms in reaction to movement restrictions and for fear of being unable to cross Israeli checkpoints in a timely manner to reach health-care services. Consequently, birth location patterns have been affected drastically. The trend is reported to occur even if it results in a lower standard of health care (e.g., births attended at home or in doctors' clinics). The risks presented by checkpoints, road closures and other obstacles are reported to have led to an increase of 8.2 per cent in home deliveries, further compounding the risk to women's health and to their babies. The Palestinian Ministry of Health has assessed the proportion of deliveries outside health facilities as high as 13.2 per cent.

17. To conclude, the critical impact of the closure regime (e.g., the Wall, checkpoints, road closures, earth mounds, etc.) on Palestinian women's access to adequate prenatal, natal and post-natal medical care remains a matter of serious concern, impairing the fulfilment of the right of everyone to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health.⁵ It should also be noted that Israeli policies on closure may, in certain instances, amount to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under article 16 of the Convention against Torture.⁶ Finally it is reiterated that the issue of pregnant Palestinian women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints must be understood within the context of the broader regime of the Israeli occupation and associated restrictions on movement, impacting as they do on all aspects of life in the occupied territories.

⁴ Barta' and Shaked.

⁵ This right is protected in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 25, as well as in a number of international conventions to which Israel is party, including the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 12; the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, art. 5 (e) (iv); the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, art. 12; and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, art. 24. The position of United Nations human rights treaty bodies is that, as a State party to international human rights instruments, Israel continues to bear responsibility for implementing its human rights conventional obligations in the OPT, to the extent that it continues to exercise jurisdiction in those territories (see A/HRC/8/17). The International Court of Justice adopted a similar position in its 2004 Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, paras. 102-113. The ICJ also noted that Israel's obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights include "an obligation not to raise any obstacle to the exercise of such rights in those fields where competence has been transferred to Palestinian authorities" (para. 112).

⁶ Committee against Torture conclusions and recommendations: Israel (A/57/44, paras. 47-53). See also CAT/C/PER/CO/4, in which the Committee against Torture stated that, where a State party had failed to take steps to prevent acts that put women's physical and mental health at grave risk, it constituted cruel and inhuman treatment.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
17 March 2010

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirteenth session

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints*

* Late submission.

1. In its decision 2/102, the Human Rights Council requested the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to “continue with the fulfilment of their activities, in accordance with all previous decisions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and to update the relevant reports and studies”. In its resolution 2005/7, the Commission on Human Rights requested the High Commissioner to report on “the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints owing to denial of access by Israel to hospitals”.
2. The present report to the Council addresses the developments that have occurred since the last report on this issue was submitted to the Council at its tenth session (A/HRC/10/35).
3. On 12 November 2009, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) addressed notes verbales to the Permanent Mission of Israel and to the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations Office at Geneva, in which it indicated that it would appreciate receiving comments or observations on the basis of Commission resolution 2005/7 and the most recent report submitted by the High Commissioner on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints.
4. At the time of finalization of this report, no reply had been received from either Mission.
5. In order to gather information on the issue, OHCHR also wrote on 12 November 2009 to the following United Nations entities and specialized agencies represented in the occupied Palestinian territory: the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Process (UNSCO), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the World Health Organization (WHO).
6. Replies were received on 20 November 2009 from UNICEF, on 23 November 2009 from UNIFEM and on 24 November 2009 from UNFPA.
7. The United Nations does not maintain a specific monitoring and reporting mechanism on the issue of Palestinian women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints. The most recent known case was that of a 25-year-old woman from Al A’sawiya (Jerusalem) in January 2009, reported on by OHCHR in its last report on this issue.¹
8. According to information provided by UNFPA, it was the assessment of the Palestinian Ministry of Health (MOH) that the absence of births at checkpoints since January 2009 was due to recent measures taken by the Palestinian Authority, including the opening of three new maternity clinics at Qalqiliya, Salfit and Yatha, as well as the training of midwives to assist births in hard-to-reach places in cases of emergency. The MOH also stated that it did not collect information regarding delays suffered at checkpoints by ambulances (or private vehicles) transporting women in labour.
9. The Permanent Mission of Israel has indicated that the absence of births at checkpoints was due to measures that the Israeli authorities have taken to resolve the issue of women giving birth at checkpoints. OHCHR has no independent confirmation of what measures were put in place.

¹ A/HRC/10/35, para. 13.

10. In its response provided to OHCHR, UNIFEM expressed deep concern regarding women living in villages where difficulties in accessing medical facilities are more acute due to both the higher number of checkpoints separating villages from hospitals and the lack of hospitals in nearby rural areas. Even if a village is only a few kilometres from town, the journey can take hours due to the large number of checkpoints, the lack of public transportation and the inadequate conditions of the roads, which make such a journey impossible should labour occur at night.

11. The village of Azzun 'Atma, which was highlighted in a report issued in 2009 by OCHA, illustrates the problem. It is a community of 2,000 residents located between the Wall and the Green Line in the Qalqiliya governorate and thus located in the so-called "seam area". The only method of access to the rest of the West Bank is through a checkpoint controlled by the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF), which closes daily from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. The opening hours are clearly inadequate for expectant mothers in labour. OCHA notes that, "On average, 50 babies are born in Azzun 'Atma annually. There is no hospital or 24-hour medical service available, only a basic primary health-care clinic which operates for 2 hours a day, twice a week. To ensure access to proper medical care, most women leave the village a month before delivery and relocate to relatives' homes outside the community, often returning during the day to look after their families. Between January and early June 2009, 33 babies were born: 20 were delivered outside Azzun 'Atma. The remaining 13 babies were delivered at home, none attended by a trained midwife or a doctor."²

12. UNIFEM cites information received from MOH stating that the amount of time Palestinians spend waiting at border crossings has increased dramatically since the beginning of the second intifada, and that in many cases women are forced, when the delivery approaches, whenever possible and with the support of the extended family, to move to the town closest to the hospital.

13. The Wall and its associated regime significantly restrict the freedom of movement of Palestinians within the West Bank as well as between East Jerusalem and the West Bank. More detailed information on the restrictions on freedom of movement of Palestinians in the West Bank and East Jerusalem is presented in the report of the Secretary-General on Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.³ That report includes information about travel on hundreds of kilometres of roads in the West Bank which continues to be prohibited or sharply curtailed for Palestinians (with no prohibition for vehicles with Israeli license plates). According to information compiled by OCHA, while some "movement obstacles" (primarily earth mounds) were removed in the West Bank during September 2009, at the beginning of November 2009, there were a total of 579 closure obstacles in the West Bank, including 69 permanently staffed checkpoints, 21 "partial checkpoints" (staffed on an ad hoc basis), and 488 unstaffed obstacles (not including 8 Green Line checkpoints).⁴

14. As reported by OCHA, "... the area between the Barrier and the Green Line was declared closed by military order in October 2003. Approximately 10,000 Palestinians in 15 communities, and a number of isolated families, reside in the closed area. Those aged 16 and above require permanent resident permits from the Israeli authorities to continue to live in the closed area. Israeli citizens and the settlers living in the area, tourists, or persons of Jewish origin are exempt from this regulation ... few health and education services are available between the Barrier and the Green Line ... Children, patients and workers have to pass through the Barrier checkpoints to reach schools, medical facilities and workplaces and to maintain family and social relations.”⁵ Because of the long delays and closure at night in Barta’a enclave, Nazlat Issa, Sheika, Khirbet Jubara, Arab al Ramadin al Shamali, Alfie Menashe Enclave, Azzun ‘Atma, N’aman and Beit Yatir, pregnant women often leave these closed areas before delivery.⁶

² OCHA, Five Years After the International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion, a Summary of the Humanitarian Impact of the Barrier, July 2009, p. 17. See http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_barrier_report_july_2009_english_low_res.pdf.

³ A/64/517, paras. 21–28.

⁴ OCHA notes that this number is down from 619 at the end of August 2009. OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, September 2009, p. 6, and October 2009, p. 7.

15. In a press release on 15 January 2009, UNFPA stated that, during the Israeli operation “Cast Lead” in the Gaza Strip, continuing violence and displacement presented serious risks to more than 40,000 pregnant women in Gaza. UNFPA stated that a “lack of access to critical health services, including emergency obstetric care, could mean the difference between life and death for many women and their babies. In normal circumstances, hundreds of pregnant women require care by qualified health-care providers every day in Gaza and 30 women on average undergo a Caesarean section — a procedure not readily available because of the conflict. Stress, trauma and poor nutrition could also result in life-threatening complications for the estimated 41,000 women who are likely to be pregnant at any time in Gaza.”

16. Particularly relevant to the issue of pregnant women at checkpoints are the obligations set out in the Fourth Geneva Convention calling for Parties to guarantee special protection to pregnant women and mothers of small children, who, according to article 38 (5), “shall benefit by any preferential treatment to the same extent as the nationals of the State concerned” and, according to article 16, “... expectant mothers, shall be the object of particular protection and respect”. The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in article 12, paragraph 2, also calls on States parties to ensure access for women to appropriate services in connection with pregnancy.

17. In its concluding observations regarding the fourth periodic report of Israel on the implementation of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Committee against Torture stated that it was “seriously concerned at the many allegations provided to the Committee from non-governmental sources on degrading treatment at checkpoints, undue delays and denial of entry, including for persons with urgent health needs. The State party should ensure that such controls are conducted in accordance with the Convention.”⁷

Conclusions and recommendations

18. As pointed out in the previous report to the Council on this issue, limiting the scope of this report to births at checkpoints fails to take into account the consequences of the entire closure regime imposed on the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT). The issue is best examined in the broader context of the severe restrictions on freedom of movement imposed by Israel on Palestinians in the OPT, and the wide range of rights that Palestinians are unable to exercise due to these restrictions.

19. OHCHR submitted its first periodic report on the implementation of resolution S-9/1, on the grave violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_barrier_report_july_2009_english_low_res.pdf.

⁵ Five years after the International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion, a summary, OHCHA-oPt, July 2009, p. 16.

⁶ Ibid., p. 19.

⁷ CAT/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 31.

to the Council at its twelfth regular session,⁸ and a further report on the follow-up to the ninth and twelfth special sessions of the Human Rights Council to the current session of the Council.⁹ Both reports contain detailed information on the restrictions on freedom of movement and the human rights violations that stem from these restrictions.

20. The number of reported cases of births at checkpoints appears to have declined in recent years, to the extent that there has been no case reported since January 2009.

21. OHCHR had previously interpreted decision 2/102 as extending previous Commission of Human Rights reports and providing for an annual reporting cycle. This interpretation had not received any objections to date, and the Office's interpretation was thus deemed to have received the tacit approval of Member States. However, an objection has been placed on the record this year, and in the context of this specific report. OHCHR has thus further reviewed the said decision, and concludes that with it, the Human Rights Council sought to fill a technical gap by ensuring that reports which were deemed to be submitted to the 62nd session of the Human Rights Commission would be extended by one year, to be submitted to the subsequent substantive Human Rights Council session. With this transition period over, and the objection now on the record to the previous interpretation of annual reporting cycles, if the Human Rights Council wishes to see a continuation of this reporting mandate, a new Human Rights Council resolution or decision on the matter should be tabled. Pending any such resolution, OHCHR will not file any further reports specific to this matter, save that it will cover the issue in its periodic reports.

⁸ A/HRC/12/37.

⁹ A/HRC/13/54.