25. In this regard, the Report of the detailed findings of the independent commission of inquiry established pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1 is pertinent. It noted the little information available regarding steps taken by the State of Palestine and the authorities in Gaza “to conduct investigations into alleged serious violations of international humanitarian and gross violations of international human rights law.”³¹ In July 2016, Amnesty International reported that “in May 2015, the Hamas authorities denied involvement in the summary killings of Palestinians documented by Amnesty International, but said the Attorney General and Ministry of Interior in Gaza were investigating and would publish their findings.” Amnesty International also reported that the Gaza authorities “have not released further information and their investigations are not independent, as the judiciary and Ministry of Interior in Gaza are directed and staffed by Hamas members, some of them closely linked to Hamas’ military wing. There are no indications that they are investigating the rocket and mortar attacks which killed Israeli and Palestinian civilians.”³²

26. Given the apparent absence of any investigations, the second element of the recommendation, requiring redress for victims, also remains unimplemented.

27. Based on the above, the recommendation is therefore assessed as “not implemented”.

B. International engagement

28. The review identified 141 recommendations pertaining to international engagement (15 per cent of the total), some of which call for cooperation of all parties with international human rights mechanisms, and some for the implementation of and compliance with international law in general. The following table provides an overview of the distribution of the issues covered by these recommendations and the percentage within this review.

²⁸ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/1.769915.

²⁹ A/68/502 para. 33.

³⁰ A/HRC/34/36, para. 79.

³¹ A/HRC/29/CRP.4 para. 653.

³² See www.amnesty.org/en/documents/mde15/4199/2016/en/.

Table 4
Overview of recommendations related to international engagement

	Number of recommendations	Percentage in this thematic area	Percentage of all recommendations
General implementation of international standards, recommendations	65	46.1%	7.0%
Cooperation with international mechanisms	10	7.1%	1.1%
Actions conducive to peace	37	26.2%	4.0%
Other	29	20.6%	3.1%
Total	141

29. An illustrative example in this thematic area is the analysis of a recommendation addressed to the international community. In 2009, the report presented by multiple mandate holders to the Human Rights Council, submitted pursuant to resolution S-9/1 on the Occupied Palestinian Territory, recommended that: “The international community should actively promote the implementation of the decisions, resolutions and recommendations of the Security Council, the International Court of Justice and the United Nations human rights mechanisms, including treaty bodies and special procedures. In this respect, the mandate-holders recall the obligation of States to cooperate to bring to an end through lawful means to any serious breach of an obligation arising from a peremptory norm of general international law. They also recall the obligation of all States to ensure respect for the provisions of international humanitarian law.”³³

30. Since 2009, several bodies of the United Nations system have regularly reminded, encouraged, and prompted all parties to cease violations and abide by their obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law. Notably, the Secretary-General, in his latest report on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, noted that “[c]hronic violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law by all parties have persisted,”³⁴ and stated that “All parties must respect international law and comply with their obligations or responsibilities under international human rights law.”³⁵ In December 2016, the Security Council reiterated the call on “both parties to act on the basis of international law, including international humanitarian law [...]”³⁶

31. Member States have actively engaged with Israel and the State of Palestine to promote the implementation of the recommendation and to seek a resolution to the conflict. The most recent efforts included the peace negotiations between Israel and Palestine, facilitated by the United States, which began in July 2013 and collapsed in April 2014, as well as the French-sponsored Conference for peace in the Middle East that took place in Paris on 15 January 2017.

32. The international community has actively promoted the implementation of decisions, resolutions and recommendations of the United Nations, and there have been attempts by states to cooperate. This has not had the effect of ending grave violations of international law by parties to the conflict. As a result, this particular recommendation has been assessed as “partially implemented”.

33. A second illustrative analysis relates to a recommendation addressed to both Israel and the State of Palestine and is examined individually for each duty-bearer. In 2014, the detailed findings of the independent commission of inquiry established pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1 called “upon Israelis and Palestinians to demonstrate political leadership by both refraining from and taking active steps to prevent statements

³³ A/HRC/10/22 105 para.105, <https://documents-dds-ny.un.org/doc/UNDOC/GEN/G09/135/43/PDF/G0913543.pdf?OpenElement>

³⁴ A/HRC/34/38, para. 72.

³⁵ A/HRC/34/38, para. 76.

³⁶ S/RES/2334(2016).

that dehumanize the other side, incite hatred, and only serve to perpetuate a culture of violence.³⁷ This recommendation requires demonstrated political leadership in two ways: a.) abstaining from making statements that incite to hate and dehumanize the other side; and b.) taking action that prevents such statements.

34. In relation to Israel, statements such as those described in the recommendation were made throughout the period covered by this review and increased during times of escalation of violence and hostilities. In November 2014, the Internal Security Minister, Yitzhak Aharonovitch, following an incident in which a Palestinian man rammed a vehicle into pedestrians at a light rail stop in Jerusalem, stated: “A terrorist who attacks civilians deserves to be killed.”³⁸ Derogatory statements were made by Naftali Bennet, then Minister of Economy, and Ayelet Shaked, the current minister of Justice.³⁹ In line with the recommendation’s requirement to take active steps to prevent dehumanization, in July 2015, Prime Minister Netanyahu condemned an arson attack in Douma, in which Israeli settlers killed three Palestinians and gravely injured a five-year-old boy, calling it a “horrific, heinous terrorist act.”⁴⁰ However, in February 2016, when announcing the plan to surround Israel with fences, the Prime Minister said: “In our neighbourhood, we need to protect ourselves from wild beasts,”⁴¹ which clearly dehumanized Palestinians and could incite hatred and violence. While the representatives of some organizations⁴² and the authors of the book Torat Hamelech were arrested for incitement,⁴³ these actions did not result in any indictment. When assessing the above as a whole, despite some positive statements, the balance of the actions are not adequate to qualify as refraining from and taking active steps to prevent statements that dehumanize and incite violence. There is no evidence of systematic condemnation of statements made that would incite violence, and as well no indictments have followed the few arrests made on these grounds. This recommendation is considered “not implemented”.

35. Several reports have documented the Palestinian authorities’ persistent use of statements like those described in the recommendation. In its report of June 2016, the Middle East Quartet noted that “Palestinians who commit terrorist attacks are often glorified publicly as ‘heroic martyrs.’”⁴⁴ It further noted that “ Hamas and other radical factions [...] use media outlets to glorify terrorism and openly call for violence against Jews, including instructing viewers on how to carry out stabbings.”⁴⁵ For instance, in a statement issued in February 2017, Moshir El Masry, a member of the legislative committee of Hamas’ bureau, urged all imprisoned Palestinians to “initiate a stabbing intifada behind bars targeting Israeli soldiers.”⁴⁶ The Middle East Quartet also noted that “Some members of Fatah have publicly supported attacks and their perpetrators, as well as encouraged violent confrontation.”⁴⁷ The Quarter also observed that although the Palestinian Authority leadership had “made statements expressing opposition to violence against civilians, [...] regrettably, [...] Palestinian leaders have not consistently and clearly condemned specific terrorist attacks.”⁴⁸ No actions have been documented indicating efforts

³⁷ A/HRC/29/CRP.4, para. 678.

³⁸ See www.timesofisrael.com/internal-security-minister-calls-for-demolishing-terrorists-home/.

³⁹ See www.jpost.com/Diplomacy-and-Politics/Bennett-under-fire-for-comments-about-killing-Arabs-321467, www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/middleeast/israel/11599932/New-Israeli-justice-minister-notorious-for-anti-Palestinian-rhetoric-given-bodyguard-after-Nazi-death-threats.html.

⁴⁰ See www.timesofisrael.com/netanyahu-condemns-terrible-heinous-terror-attack-on-palestinians

⁴¹ See www.theguardian.com/world/2016/feb/10/netanyahu-plans-fence-around-israel-to-protect-it-from-wild-beasts.

⁴² See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-1.632270.

⁴³ See www.jpost.com/Israel-News/High-Court-No-basis-to-indict-Torat-Hamelech-authors-for-incitement-436795.

⁴⁴ See www.un.org/News/dh/infocus/middle_east/Report-of-the-Middle-East-Quartet.pdf.

⁴⁵ Ibid.

⁴⁶ See www.watania.net/news/101154-ال-خلف-ال-طعن-انتفاضة-لتفعيل-تدعو-حماس.

⁴⁷ Ibid.

⁴⁸ Ibid.

to prevent such statements. The recommendation is therefore considered as “not implemented”.

36. In December 2016, the Security Council called on both parties to “refrain from provocative actions, incitement and inflammatory rhetoric, with the aim, inter alia, of de-escalating the situation on the ground, rebuilding trust and confidence, [...] and creating the conditions necessary for promoting peace.”⁴⁹ Based on this as well as the above paragraphs, the overall recommendation has therefore been assessed as “not implemented” by any of the parties.

C. Arrest and detention

37. The review identified 106 recommendations that concern arrest and detention (11 per cent of the total number of recommendations). Two recommendations have been selected as illustrative examples of recommendations in this category, discussed in detail below. The following table provides an overview of the distribution of the issues covered by these recommendations and the percentage within this review.

Table 5

Overview of recommendations related to conditions of detention

	Number of recommendations	Percentage in this thematic area	Percentage of all recommendations
Treatment of children	52	49.1%	5.6%
Treatment of adults	25	23.6%	2.7%
Administrative detention	15	14.2%	1.6%
Judicial guarantees	14	13.2%	1.5%
Total	106

38. In June 2016, following the review of the report submitted by Israel, the Committee against Torture, “Recalling its previous recommendation (CAT/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 28) [...] call[ed] upon the State party to redouble its efforts with a view to: (a) Ensuring that the deprivation of liberty of minors, irrespective of the charges brought against them, is a last resort, limited to the shortest possible period, and that it is reviewed daily with a view to eliminating it.”⁵⁰

39. Regarding the first part of the recommendation, the Secretary-General noted in May 2016 that the large number of arrests of Palestinian children by Israel seemed incompatible with its use as a last resort.⁵¹ According to official data provided to Israeli NGOs by the Israeli Prison Service, at the end of August 2016, 319 Palestinian minors were being held in Israeli prisons, 10 of whom were in administrative detention. Out of the 319 minors, 168 were being held in pre-trial detention until the conclusion of the judicial proceedings. Israel has since stopped providing such data to civil society organizations despite requests sent based on the 1998 Freedom of Information Law.⁵² According to UNICEF data, the arrest of Palestinian children has continued to increase,⁵³ as has the use of administrative detention.⁵⁴

40. As Israeli authorities have continued to detain children as a regular practice, this element of the recommendation is assessed as “not implemented”.

41. The second part of the recommendation requires that Israel ensure that child detention undergoes judicial review on a daily basis with a view to eliminating it. Military Order 1711 (which came into force in April 2013 and reduced the maximum period of

⁴⁹ S/RES/2334(2016).

⁵⁰ CAT/C/ISR/CO/5.

⁵¹ A/71/86, para. 24.

⁵² See www.militarycourtwatch.org/page.php?id=J5V0bQevz8a19020AWwFbv7lxv2.

⁵³ A/HRC/34/36, para. 25.

⁵⁴ A/HRC/34/36, para. 26.

detention without judicial review for children between 12 and 15 years old but did not modify the period for children aged between 16 and 17 years old) still allows for the detention of Palestinian children for several days before their presentation to a military court judge: 24 hours for children aged 12-13 (plus additional 24 hours for urgent investigations), 48 hours for children aged 14 -15 (plus an additional 48 hours for urgent investigations) and 96 hours for children aged 16-17 years old (as for adults).⁵⁵ Therefore, this part of the recommendation, and taken together with the above information – the recommendation as a whole – is assessed as “not implemented”.

42. In March 2015, the High Commissioner recommended that authorities in Gaza “take all the necessary measures to ensure that the rights of persons deprived of liberty are respected, including by ensuring effective, independent, impartial, thorough and transparent investigations into allegations of torture and ill-treatment, and to ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice and that victims have access to an effective remedy.”⁵⁶

43. Civil society organizations and the United Nations have continued to document cases of torture by Gaza authorities.⁵⁷ In January 2016, the High Commissioner, based on information collected by OHCHR in Gaza, noted violations of due process, as well as torture and ill-treatment during interrogation, and arbitrary arrests, mostly by local police forces, but also corrections officers and members of the internal security apparatus. Some arbitrary arrests have led to prolonged incommunicado detention. OHCHR also received allegations of excessive use of force upon arrest, denial of the right to remain silent, and to have legal representation and contact with family. Political opponents of Hamas, journalists and human rights defenders are often among the victims.⁵⁸

44. Authorities in Gaza have failed to implement the recommendation of the High Commissioner to conduct “effective, independent, impartial, thorough and transparent investigations” of allegations of torture and ill-treatment. In 2012, Human Rights Watch raised concerns of Hamas’ failure to “investigate and prosecute abusive security officials” suspected of torture.⁵⁹ It documented the case of Mr. Mahmoud Eshtewi, a member of the military wing of Hamas, who was allegedly killed in custody in 2016 after being repeatedly subjected to torture during interrogations. Authorities refused to provide any information on the case to Human Rights Watch, and the family’s request for an autopsy was rejected.⁶⁰

45. The 2016-2017 report of Amnesty International on the human rights situation in the State of Palestine⁶¹ stated that “[t]orture and other ill-treatment of detainees remained common and was committed with impunity by Palestinian police and other security forces in the West Bank, and Hamas police and other security forces in Gaza”. According to the report, authorities in the West Bank and in Gaza failed to investigate torture allegations and to hold perpetrators accountable. The recommendation is therefore assessed as “not implemented”.

D. Settlements

46. The review identified 93 recommendations related to Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Most (81) were addressed to Israel, none of which has been implemented. The following table provides an overview of the distribution of the issues covered by these recommendations and the percentage within this review.

⁵⁵ See www.unicef.org/oPt/Children_in_Israeli_Military_Detention_-_Observations_and_Recommendations_-_Bulletin_No._2_-_February_2015.pdf, p.1.

⁵⁶ A/HRC/28/80, para. 72.b.

⁵⁷ See www.hrw.org/news/2016/02/15/palestine-torture-death-hamas-detainee.

⁵⁸ A/HRC/31/40, paras. 69-78.

⁵⁹ See www.hrw.org/news/2012/10/03/gaza-arbitrary-arrests-torture-unfair-trials.

⁶⁰ See www.hrw.org/news/2016/02/15/palestine-torture-death-hamas-detainee.

⁶¹ See www.amnesty.org/en/countries/middle-east-and-north-africa/palestine-state-of/report-palestine-state-of/.

Table 6
Overview of recommendations related to settlements

	Number of recommendations	Percentage in this thematic area	Percentage of all recommendations
Settlement expansion	20	21.5%	2.2%
Zoning and building permits	18	19.4%	1.9%
Forced transfer	20	21.5%	2.2%
Demolitions, displacement	16	17.2%	1.7%
Businesses engagement in settlements	15	16.1%	1.6%
National resources exploitation	1	1.1%	0.1%
Human rights violations linked to settlements	3	3.2%	0.3%
Total	93

47. In January 2016, the Secretary-General made a recommendation that encompasses and combines multiple aspects related to the presence of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: "The Israeli authorities must halt and reverse the creation and expansion of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in the occupied Syrian Golan.⁶² In addition, Israel must immediately cease using land control mechanisms aimed at expanding the area effectively occupied by settlements, such as the designation of firing zones, archaeological parks and agricultural land. Israel must also immediately cease the exploitation of natural resources from these territories."⁶³ A range of evidence was considered when assessing the implementation of this broad recommendation. The below is illustrative of the information taken into account when assessing recommendations related to settlements more generally.

48. In January 2017, the Government of Israel announced the construction of over 6,000 housing units in existing settlements. On 6 February 2017, the Knesset passed the "Settlement Regularization Bill", retroactively legalizing Israeli settlements built on private Palestinian land. Furthermore, in March 2017, the Government announced the establishment of a new settlement in the West Bank - the first in over 20 years.

49. The recommendation calls for the cessation of land control mechanisms aimed at expanding the area occupied by settlements, including "firing zones", archaeological parks and agricultural land. In March 2016, Israel declared "state lands" over 200 hectares of land south of Jericho.⁶⁴ This process is a crucial part of Israel's strategy aimed at expanding the land under the control of settlers, including for agricultural use.⁶⁵ On 15 February 2017, the Israeli army demolished 43 Palestinian structures in Ein Ar Rashash, Ramallah governorate, located in an area designated by the Israeli military as a "firing zone".⁶⁶

50. Finally, the recommendation includes the cessation of the exploitation of natural resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. A United Nations Conference on Trade and Development report of September 2016 noted that Israel was extracting water above the level determined in the Oslo II Accord, and had confiscated 82% of the groundwater in the Occupied Palestinian Territory for its use in Israel and in settlements, while Palestinians needed to import over half of the water they use.⁶⁷

⁶² The review of the implementation regarding the Occupied Syrian Golan is outside the scope of this report.

⁶³ A/HRC/31/43, para. 67.

⁶⁴ A/HRC/34/39, para. 17.

⁶⁵ A/HRC/31/43, para. 3.

⁶⁶ See www.ochaopt.org/content/palestinian-bedouin-community-almost-totally-demolished

⁶⁷ UNCTAD/APP/2016/1*, para. 34.

51. Twenty of the 93 settlement-related recommendations call on Israel to cease the forced transfer and evictions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, as well as actions that can lead to such situations. In November 2014 the United Nations Human Rights Committee recommended that Israel: “Desist from any actions that may facilitate or result in forcible transfer and forced evictions, particularly of the Bedouin communities in the central West Bank, including the eastern Jerusalem periphery, and forced displacement and dispossession of Bedouins residing in the Negev”.⁶⁸

52. In January 2016, the Secretary-General expressed concern that Israel continued planning the relocation of entire communities and demolitions of homes of Palestinian Bedouins and herder populations.⁶⁹ Israel has continued implementing policies resulting in the displacement of Palestinians, including Bedouin communities, in East Jerusalem. As documented by the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), during the first two months of 2017, in East Jerusalem, Israel demolished 24 structures in 18 Bedouin communities in the area designated for the E1 settlement plan and the expansion of the Ma’ale Adumim settlement, causing the displacement of 133 people, half of whom were children.⁷⁰ Between 1 January and 6 April 2017, OCHA documented that Israeli authorities had demolished a biweekly average of 29 Palestinian-owned structures, causing the displacement of a biweekly average of 58 Palestinians.⁷¹ Considering all of the above information next to the elements of the recommendation, the recommendation of the Secretary-General referred to above has been assessed as “not implemented”.

E. Freedom of movement

53. Among the 79 recommendations related to the right to freedom of movement, 76 are addressed to Israel, two to all parties to the conflict and one to the Human Rights Council. Twenty-eight recommendations call for the blockade of Gaza to be lifted, to allow the free movement of people and goods in and out of Gaza, to facilitate reconstruction, and to address the humanitarian and human rights impact of blockade. The following table provides an overview of the distribution of the issues covered by these recommendations and the percentage within this review.

Table 7

Implementation of recommendations related to freedom of movement

	Number of recommendations	Percentage in this thematic area	Percentage of all recommendations
Blockade	29	36.7%	3.1%
Wall	5	6.3%	0.5%
Freedom of movement between Gaza and West Bank	20	25.3%	2.2%
Restrictions impacting humanitarian aid	14	17.7%	1.5%
Restrictions impacting economic development	5	6.3%	0.5%
Enforcement of access restrictions	4	5.1%	0.4%
Residency rights	2	2.5%	0.2%
Total	79

⁶⁸ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 9. The review of the implementation regarding the Negev desert falls outside the territorial scope of this report and will not be assessed.

⁶⁹ A/HRC/31/43, para. 44.

⁷⁰ See www.ochaopt.org/content/tightening-coercive-environment-bedouin-communities-around-ma-ale-adumim-settlement.

⁷¹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/protection-civilians-report-21-march-3-april-2017.

54. A 2013 recommendation from the Committee on the Rights of the Child demonstrates the process and information used in considering implementation of recommendations in this category. The Committee recommended that Israel: “Cease the construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and fully lift the Gaza blockade, and urgently allow entry of all construction materials necessary for Palestinian families to rebuild homes and civilian infrastructures so as to ensure respect for children’s right to housing, education, health, water and sanitation as recommended notably by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 26) and in line with Israel’s Manual on the Laws of War (1998) which prohibits the conduct of a scorched earth policy “with a view to inflicting starvation or suffering on the civilian population.”⁷²

55. In July 2014, OCHA reported that 62 per cent of the planned wall had been constructed, including 200 additional kilometres since the Advisory Opinion had been issued.⁷³ In August 2015, the construction of the wall resumed in Bethlehem after the High Court of Justice, in April 2015, requested the State of Israel to consider alternative routes to ensure access of Palestinians between Bethlehem, Beit Jala and a Cremisan monastery and convent.⁷⁴

56. Regarding the recommendation to fully lift the blockade, OCHA has continued to document⁷⁵ how the blockade undermines Gaza’s economy, resulting in high levels of unemployment, food insecurity and aid dependency. The blockade has continued to negatively impact the quality of health, education, and water and sanitation services available in Gaza. One third of the applications for exit permits for medical treatment outside Gaza submitted in 2016 were rejected or delayed. The volume of imports allowed into Gaza falls short of current needs due to population growth and the devastation from recurrent hostilities. The limited access to construction materials delays the construction, repair and upgrade of homes and infrastructure, and prolongs the displacement of those who have lost their homes. Also, the production of food inside Gaza is affected by the prohibition of access to areas within 300 metres of the perimeter fence (making access to a wide area contiguous to those 300 metres unsafe), which prevents and discourages agricultural activities. Moreover, fishermen are allowed to access less than a third of the fishing areas allocated under the Oslo Accords. Consequently, by mid-2016, the unemployment rate was almost 42 per cent, and stood at 60 per cent among youth and 65 per cent among women; 47 per cent of households in Gaza suffered from moderate or severe food insecurity; and over 70 per cent of the population was receiving some form of international aid, mainly food assistance.

57. The third element of the recommendation demands that Israel urgently allow the entry of all construction materials necessary for private homes and civilian infrastructures. According to OCHA, the partial easing of some of the restrictions since the establishment of the Gaza Reconstruction Mechanism in 2014 has facilitated the entry of some restricted items, but recent import reductions have put a strain on the GRM’s effectiveness and hampered reconstruction efforts. For example, between 3 April and 22 May 2016, Israel did not allow the import of cement to Gaza by the private sector due to allegations that this material was being used to build a tunnel to Israel. While the import of cement has since resumed, the number of trucks has been limited to 90 per day – compared to 120 before April 2016. This generated a backlog demand of 577,000 tons of cement in December 2016, and OCHA calculated it could take nine years for the supply to catch up with the increasing demand. Only four per cent of the cement needed in December 2016 to construct and repair houses for the 33,000 families who were authorized to purchase cement through the Gaza Reconstruction Mechanism was available. Consequently, 10,248 families (about 53,300 people) remained displaced.⁷⁶

⁷² CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 26.c.

⁷³ See www.ochaopt.org/content/spotlight-10-years-international-court-justice-icj-advisory-opinion

⁷⁴ See www.ochaopt.org/content/barrier-construction-bethlehem-resumes.

⁷⁵ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-strip-humanitarian-impact-blockade-november-2016.

⁷⁶ See www.ochaopt.org/content/intensified-restrictions-entry-building-materials-delay-completion-housing-projects-gaza.

58. Due to the insufficient easing of the import restrictions and its limited impact, the scale of the ongoing humanitarian crisis and the failure to lift the blockade, the recommendation is assessed as “not implemented”.

59. In 2009, multiple special procedures mandate-holders asked all parties to “Enable the import of reconstruction materials needed to build or repair vital infrastructure and housing, and facilitate the full reintegration in dignity and security of the recently displaced (without prejudice to the right of return of Palestinian refugees).”⁷⁷ The recommendation addresses all parties; its implementation by the Israeli and Gaza authorities is separately assessed.

60. Israel’s failure to comply with the recommendations and enable the import of sufficient reconstruction materials and its humanitarian impact has been illustrated in previous paragraphs. OCHA has documented how the blockade continues to hinder reconstruction and recovery efforts in Gaza: “[l]ongstanding access restrictions imposed by Israel have undermined Gaza’s economy [...] Restrictions on the import of goods treated by Israel as “dual use” items have impacted on the quality of basic services and impede efforts to address housing needs.”⁷⁸

61. OCHA documented that, beginning on 26 March 2017, Gaza authorities imposed access restrictions which have exacerbated the humanitarian concerns and delayed reconstruction efforts. Restrictions to the entry and exit of persons were established at the Arba Arba checkpoint, which controls access to the Erez Crossing between Gaza and Israel, further reducing the number of Palestinians in Gaza permitted to leave through Erez due to restrictions by Israel, and delaying the implementation of large infrastructure projects due to cancellation of visits by international consultants.⁷⁹

62. As a result of the difficulties affecting reconstruction, 75,000 persons displaced by the 2014 escalation remain in this situation,⁸⁰ preventing their “full reintegration in dignity and security”. As the above information indicates that none of the parties has complied with the recommendation, it has been determined as “not implemented”.

F. Civil and political rights

63. Fifty-eight recommendations (six per cent of the total) are related to other civil and political rights, including 29 that refer to the freedoms of expression, assembly and association. Among those 29, 17 are addressed to Palestinian authorities and 12 to Israel. The following table provides an overview of the distribution of the issues covered by these recommendations and the relevant percentages.

Table 8

Overview of recommendations related to other civil and political rights

	Number of recommendations	Percentage in this thematic area	Percentage of all recommendations
Freedom of expression, assembly and association	34	58.6%	3.7%
Freedom of thought, conscience and religion	10	17.2%	1.1%
Right to protection of family	12	20.7%	1.3%
Palestinian political unity	2	3.4%	0.2%
Total	58

⁷⁷ A/HRC/10/22 105 para. 103(f).

⁷⁸ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-strip-humanitarian-impact-blockade-november-2016.

⁷⁹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/continuing-access-restrictions-de-facto-authorities-gaza-add-humanitarian-concerns.

⁸⁰ See <http://gaza.ochaopt.org/2016/04/gaza-internally-displaced-persons-april-2016/>.

64. Eight of the recommendations mention religious rights, both in terms of access to religious sites and addressing the right to bury relatives in accordance with religious customs. In June 2016, the Committee against Torture recommended that Israel “take the measures necessary to return the bodies of the Palestinians that have not yet been returned to their relatives as soon as possible so they can be buried in accordance with their traditions and religious customs, and to avoid that similar situations are repeated in the future.”⁸¹ The paragraphs that follow illustrate the process that led to assessments of implementation or non-implementation in this category of recommendations.

65. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories expressed concern, in August 2016, that although “many of the bodies” had been returned to the families, many continued to be held by Israel “in poor and inhumane conditions”, and were consequently often “disfigured, sometimes beyond recognition.”⁸² The Secretary-General expressed concern about extensive delays to return the bodies “with punitive intent against the families of the deceased”, despite a commitment from the Government of Israel to release them “within a short space of time.”⁸³

66. Moreover, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories expressed its concern that the then newly appointed Defence Minister, Avigdor Lieberman, had reaffirmed the practice of keeping the bodies of Palestinians killed while conducting attacks against Israelis and burying them in a special cemetery in Israel.⁸⁴ According to Israeli media, in December 2016, the Government of Israel agreed to withhold the bodies of Palestinians killed while carrying out attacks if the deceased belonged to Hamas and return them to their families if no links with Hamas were suspected.⁸⁵ On 1 January 2017, the Israeli Prime Minister’s Office issued a statement saying that the cabinet had “discussed a permanent policy” and decided that the bodies of “Hamas terrorists killed during attacks” would not be returned to their families but “buried”.⁸⁶

67. Therefore, although the bodies of some Palestinians deceased in Israel while carrying out attacks were returned to their families (which could arguably be seen as partially implementing the first element of the recommendation), this occurred after unjustified delays with a punitive intention, contrary to the requirement of a speedy return made in the recommendation (“as soon as possible”). Regarding the second part of the recommendation (avoiding the reoccurrence of the unjustified withholding of the bodies), the publicly-stated “permanent policy” to selectively keep the bodies of persons with links to Hamas shows the intent to continue disregarding its content. The recommendation is therefore assessed as “not implemented”.

68. In 2011, the High Commissioner recommended that the Palestinian Authority should “[e]nsure that civil society organizations, human rights defenders and journalists can carry out their work in an open, safe and secure operating environment, especially in relation to the rights to freedom of association and expression, as well as other applicable international standards.”⁸⁷ In August 2016, Human Rights Watch documented multiple cases where authorities in the West Bank and in Gaza “arrest[ed], abus[ed], and criminally charg[ed] journalists and activists” who were critical of authorities. Human rights violations included torture, and, according to Human Rights Watch, were part of a long-standing pattern of violations of the right to freedom of speech.⁸⁸

⁸¹ CAT/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 43

⁸² A/71/352, para. 46-47.

⁸³ See the case of Ewisat v. The Israel Police et al. (High Court of Justice 2882/16) on 5 May 2016, A/71/364, para.25.

⁸⁴ A/71/352, para.48, www.timesofisrael.com/liberman-orders-moratorium-on-returning-attackers-bodies/, and www.jpost.com/Israel-News/Politics-And-Diplomacy/Lieberman-halts-the-return-of-terrorist-bodies-456369.

⁸⁵ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/premium-1.757959, www.israelnationalnews.com/News/News.aspx/221496.

⁸⁶ See www.pmo.gov.il/MediaCenter/Spokesman/Pages/spokeCabinet010117.aspx.

⁸⁷ A/HRC/16/71, para.60(b).

⁸⁸ See www.hrw.org/news/2016/08/29/palestine-crackdown-journalists-activists

69. In March 2017, the Secretary-General also expressed his concern that “Throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, social media is monitored, and journalists and activists are harassed, arrested, detained and, in some cases, subjected to ill-treatment or torture. Authorities in both the West Bank and Gaza have also restricted peaceful assemblies. These practices denote the rise of a repressive environment and promote self-censorship among the Palestinian population.”⁸⁹ The recommendation has thus been assessed as “not implemented”.

G. Economic, social and cultural rights

70. Seven per cent of the recommendations (63) are dedicated to economic, social and cultural rights: 18 to the right to education, 16 to the right to health, seven to the right to water and sanitation, 14 to the right to an adequate standard of living, and two to the right to development. Most recommendations were addressed to Israel (49), 10 to Palestinian authorities and four to the international community. The following table provides an overview of the distribution of the issues covered by these recommendations and the percentage within this review. Two recommendations have been selected to illustrate the methodology followed to assess their implementation.

Table 9

Overview of recommendations related to economic, social and cultural rights

	Number of recommendations	Percentage in this thematic area	Percentage of all recommendations
Right to health	16	25.4%	1.7%
Right to education	18	28.6%	1.9%
Right to water	7	11.1%	0.8%
Adequate standard of living, food, clothing, housing	14	22.2%	1.5%
Development	8	12.7%	0.9%
Total	63

71. The report of the High Commissioner of March 2013 on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1 recommended that “Israel must ensure that all wounded persons receive the required medical attention with the least possible delay. To this effect, IDF should issue clear instructions that the wounded must receive immediate attention, without discrimination, and staff must refrain from obstructing the work of medical personnel, including Palestinian ambulance crews.”⁹⁰

72. Throughout 2016, OHCHR documented and raised concerns that Palestinians wounded by Israeli security forces were not provided with medical assistance, or that such assistance was significantly delayed, including by blocking Palestinian ambulances and first responders. For example, “witnesses informed OHCHR that an Israeli medic arrived 12 minutes after Hadeel al-Hashlamoun was shot, but that she was not given first aid. Local media reports said Palestinian medics present at the checkpoint were prevented from reaching Ms. Al-Hashlamoun, and she was left bleeding for about 30 minutes.”⁹¹ In another example, “regarding Basil Basim Sidir, two witnesses interviewed by OHCHR stated that, although a medical team had reached the spot within a few minutes, the Israeli security forces did not allow them to attend to the victim for around 15 minutes.”⁹²

73. No information is available indicating that instructions have been issued by the Israeli security forces to its personnel to allow prompt medical attention to wounded

⁸⁹ A/HRC/34/38, para. 70.

⁹⁰ A/HRC/22/35 para. 71.

⁹¹ A/HRC/31/40 para. 16.

⁹² Ibid.

Palestinians. Cases documented between October 2015 and January 2017 by Physicians for Human Rights include instances of Palestinian medical personnel blocked from treating wounded persons accused of conducting an attack. Incidents of tear gas, tear gas canisters and rubber bullets thrown or shot at ambulances were also reported.⁹³ Eight of these cases documented by Physicians for Human Rights were submitted to the investigative authorities for addressing complaints regarding delays in the evacuation of the wounded. At the time of writing, these complaints were closed or no answer had been received.

74. The main indicator to assess the implementation of this recommendation is the continued reoccurrence of documented cases of Palestinian ambulances and first responders delayed and, in some instances, blocked entirely. The lack of clear instructions issued to the Israeli security forces to facilitate prompt medical assistance, and the closure or lack of timely response to the complaints filed constitutes an additional indicator that the recommendation was “not implemented”.

75. In 2009, the report by multiple mandate holders⁹⁴ on the Human Rights situation in Palestine Other Occupied Arab Territories recommended that parties to the conflict “Enable the immediate resumption of regular educational activities, make schools zones of peace and ensure that schools are protected from military attacks and from seizure or use as centres for recruitment.”⁹⁵

76. The recommendation is addressed to both parties to the conflict in the 2009 escalation of hostilities in Gaza: Israel and Hamas. Following the ceasefire of 18 January 2009, and the resumption of education activities, the first part of the recommendation calling for the resumption of educational activities could arguably be considered as “fully implemented”. However, for the purpose of this analysis, it is necessary to note that after 2009, two additional escalations of hostilities took place between Israel and Hamas in 2012 and 2014. During the last escalation, between 8 July and 26 August 2014, “at least 262 schools were damaged in Israeli air strikes. Three public schools were completely destroyed and at least 23 were severely damaged. In addition, 274 kindergartens were damaged.”⁹⁶ Furthermore, “of the 83 school buildings of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) that were damaged owing to Israeli airstrikes and shelling nearby, 7 being used as shelters were hit either directly or by air strikes or shelling, resulting in the death of at least 42 persons, including 16 children, and in the injury of about 230 persons.”⁹⁷ It appears that schools were not considered as zones of peace, and were not protected from attacks by the Israeli security forces.

77. In relation to Hamas, the Secretary-General noted that “during its routine inspections, UNRWA discovered that weapons or weapons components had been placed by Palestinian armed elements in three vacant UNRWA schools in Gaza.”⁹⁸ On 10 November 2014, the Secretary-General decided to establish a United Nations Headquarters Board of Inquiry into 10 incidents which caused death or injury and damage, or during which weaponry was found at United Nations facilities during the conflict. On 27 April 2015, the Secretary-General released a summary of the Board’s findings in a letter to the Security Council. He deplored that at least 44 Palestinians were killed and at least 227 injured as a result of Israeli attacks at United Nations premises that were being used as emergency shelters. The Board concluded that the three schools at which weaponry belonging to Palestinian armed groups was found were empty at the time, not being used as shelters.⁹⁹

⁹³ See www.phr.org.il/en/complaints-concerning-delay-evacuation-wounded-pales, <http://cdn2.phr.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/PHRI-Submission.SR-OPT-7-November-2016-UPDATED.pdf>.

⁹⁴ A/HRC/10/22 <https://documents-dds-ny.un.org/doc/UNDOC/GEN/G09/135/43/PDF/G0913543.pdf?OpenElement>

⁹⁵ A/HRC/10/22 para 103.(b).

⁹⁶ S/2015/409 para. 98.

⁹⁷ S/2015/409 para. 99.

⁹⁸ A/69/926 S/2015/409 para. 102.

⁹⁹ Letter dated 27 April 2015 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, S/2015/286.

78. Given the documented level of destruction of education infrastructure during the 2014 escalation of hostilities and the verified use of schools to store weapons, it is considered that this recommendation is “not implemented” by any of the parties to the conflict.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
1 February 2018

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-seventh session

26 February – 23 March 2018

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Database of all business enterprises involved in the activities detailed in paragraph 96 of the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

Summary

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) has prepared the present report, pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, on producing a database of all business enterprises involved in the activities detailed in paragraph 96 of the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/22/63) (“listed activities”). It describes the state of progress made towards the consolidation of the database, including the methodology adopted by OHCHR, recalls the normative framework used, and makes a preliminary analysis of the most common explanations given by companies for their involvement in the listed activities, and makes recommendations.

I. Introduction

A. Background

1. The present report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights is submitted to the Human Rights Council pursuant to resolution 31/36, on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, adopted by the Council on 24 March 2016. In paragraph 17 of resolution 31/36, the Council requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to produce a database of all business enterprises engaged in certain specified activities related to the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in consultation with the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, and to transmit the data therein in the form of a report to the Council at its thirty-fourth session. The Council also requested that the database be updated annually.

2. On 13 February 2017, the Human Rights Council, pursuant to the recommendation of the High Commissioner, decided to defer consideration of the report to allow for additional time to consider the inputs received in the context of an open call for submissions, and to ensure a fair process for concerned stakeholders (see A/HRC/34/77).

B. Mandate

3. Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 establishing the database follows up the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/22/63). In its report, the fact-finding mission found that business enterprises had directly and indirectly enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the settlements; in paragraph 96 of the report, it provided a list of activities that raised particular human rights violations concerns (“listed activities”). In resolution 31/36, the Council defined the parameters of activities to be reflected in the database by reference to the list compiled by the mission in its report, which comprised:

(a) The supply of equipment and materials facilitating the construction and the expansion of settlements and the wall, and associated infrastructures;

(b) The supply of surveillance and identification equipment for settlements, the wall and checkpoints directly linked with settlements;

(c) The supply of equipment for the demolition of housing and property, the destruction of agricultural farms, greenhouses, olive groves and crops;

(d) The supply of security services, equipment and materials to enterprises operating in settlements;

(e) The provision of services and utilities supporting the maintenance and existence of settlements, including transport;

(f) Banking and financial operations helping to develop, expand or maintain settlements and their activities, including loans for housing and the development of businesses;

(g) The use of natural resources, in particular water and land, for business purposes;

(h) Pollution, and the dumping of waste in or its transfer to Palestinian villages;

(i) Use of benefits and reinvestments of enterprises owned totally or partially by settlers for developing, expanding and maintaining the settlements;

(j) Captivity of the Palestinian financial and economic markets, as well as practices that disadvantage Palestinian enterprises, including through restrictions on movement, administrative and legal constraints.

4. OHCHR notes that six of the 10 listed activities – (a), (b), (d), (e), (f) and (i) – refer to activities that are explicitly linked to the settlements, while the remaining four – (c), (g), (h) and (j) – refer to activities that may not be geographically connected to settlements, but form part of the processes that “enable and support the establishment, expansion and maintenance of Israeli residential communities beyond the Green Line”.¹ For example, OHCHR notes that a company that is operating a quarry on Israeli-confiscated land in the West Bank will be considered to fall under category (g) regardless of whether it is located in or connected to a defined settlement community. Its presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the use of its natural resources for business purposes is sufficient to fall within the scope of the database, as required by resolution 31/36.

5. The parameters of the database encompass local and international companies, whether domiciled in Israel, the Occupied Palestinian Territory or abroad, carrying out listed activities in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Companies engaged in activities related to the occupied Syrian Golan do not fall within the mandate.²

6. The mandate for producing the database established by resolution 31/36 is strictly confined to the 10 activities listed in paragraph 3 above. The database does not cover all corporate activity related to settlements, nor does it extend to all corporate activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory that may raise human rights concerns.³ In addition, while there may be other types of entities engaged in significant corporate activity related to the settlements, only those entities established as business enterprises are considered; non-governmental organizations, charities, sports associations or federations, and other entities are therefore excluded from consideration.

C. Methods of work

7. As with all other mandates, in performing the present mandate assigned to it by the Human Rights Council in resolution 31/36, OHCHR was guided by the principles of independence, impartiality, objectivity, credibility and professionalism. OHCHR formulated its methodology in accordance with these principles, based on best practices, the advice and guidance of the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, and consultations with stakeholders (see paras. 23-25 below).

8. The work conducted by OHCHR in producing the database is in full compliance with resolution 31/36 and does not purport to constitute a judicial process of any kind. OHCHR is mandated to make factual determinations of whether businesses enterprises are engaged in the listed activities.

9. It is the view of OHCHR that the work performed in consolidating and also in communicating the information in the database to the Human Rights Council can assist both Member States and business enterprises in complying with their respective legal obligations and responsibilities under international law, including through constructive engagement and dialogue and by serving as a source of information to promote transparency.

¹ The fact-finding mission defined Israeli settlements as encompassing “all physical and non-physical structures and processes that constitute, enable and support the establishment, expansion and maintenance of Israeli residential communities beyond the Green Line of 1949 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory” (see A/HRC/22/63, para. 4).

² While resolution 31/36 refers to the occupied Syrian Golan, paragraph 17 establishing the mandate to produce a database and the report of the fact-finding mission to which it refers pertain to the Occupied Palestinian Territory only.

³ For instance, the mandate for the database does not extend to companies involved in supplying the Israel Defense Forces with weapons or other equipment used during military operations, nor does it encompass companies involved in controlling access to and from Gaza.

1. Standard of proof

10. OHCHR has determined that where there are reasonable grounds to believe based on the totality of the information reviewed by it that a business enterprise is engaged in one or more of the listed activities, such business enterprise will be included in the database. This standard is consistent with the practice of United Nations fact-finding bodies and is lower than a criminal standard. There are “reasonable grounds to believe” that a business enterprise is engaged in one or more of the listed activities where OHCHR has reviewed a reliable body of information, consistent with other material, based on which a reasonable and ordinarily prudent person would have reason to believe that the business enterprise is involved in such activities.

11. The same standard will be used to make determinations as to whether business enterprises are no longer engaged in one or more of the listed activities; thus, if subsequently, based on the totality of information reviewed by OHCHR, there are reasonable grounds to believe that a business enterprise is no longer engaged in the listed activities, the business enterprise will be removed from the database.

2. Information-gathering process

(a) Initial steps taken to collect information

12. OHCHR examined information relevant to the mandate that was available to it, initially gathered through the following methods:

- A desk review of publicly-available information, including reports by the United Nations, civil society organizations (Israeli, Palestinian and international), media reports, academic writings
- Information received in response to notes verbales sent on 11 October 2016 to all Member States inviting them to provide inputs relevant to the implementation of resolution 31/36
- Information received in response to an open invitation to all interested persons, entities and organizations to submit relevant information and documentation

(b) Screening exercise

13. OHCHR reviewed information pertaining to 307 companies that were named in the notes verbales or in the responses received through the open call for submissions. OHCHR excluded those that met the following criteria:

(a) Business enterprises that were not, on the face of the submissions, covered by the mandate; these included companies that were alleged to have engaged in human rights abuses or supported the occupation through their corporate activity, but were not alleged to have engaged in any of the listed activities;

(b) Business enterprises about which there were insufficient facts in the submissions or in the public domain to support allegations of involvement in the listed activities;

(c) Business enterprises that were no longer engaged in the alleged activities because of corporate restructuring (for example, if a part of the business had been sold), dissolution or other corporate action;

(d) Business enterprises with a minimal or remote connection to the listed activities.

14. Of the 307 companies reviewed, 115 companies were excluded on the basis of the criteria set out in paragraph 13 above. The 192 remaining companies formed the initial group of “screened” companies that were subject to further research and consideration. The majority of these 192 companies are domiciled in Israel or the settlements, followed by the United States of America, Germany, the Netherlands and France.

(c) Further communications

15. OHCHR sent notes verbales on 11 July 2017 to the 21 Member States in which the initial 192 screened companies were domiciled, identifying companies domiciled in that Member State. The purpose was to inform those Member States that information had been received alleging that business enterprises domiciled in their territories and/or under their jurisdiction were engaged in one or more listed activities, and to invite any comments or observations concerning measures taken to ensure implementation of resolution 31/36. Fifteen of the 21 Member States responded by the deadline of 1 September 2017. Five of these Member States expressed a position in the notes verbales or in confidential meetings that supported OHCHR being in direct contact with companies. Six of the 15 Member States did not comment on this point, while four Member States expressed a position in the notes verbales or in confidential meetings that did not support direct contact between OHCHR and companies.⁴

16. In reviewing past practices, consulting with the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, after having duly considered the responses and positions of Member States, considering the complexity of business relationships involved in each situation concerning listed activities, which often encompassed business enterprises domiciled in multiple States, and to offer a procedural safeguard designed to provide fairness, consistency, reasonableness and absence of arbitrariness of potential decisions that may affect the interests of business enterprises, OHCHR decided to communicate with the initial list of all 192 screened companies – not just those domiciled in the States that indicated they were in favour of such an approach – to provide them with an opportunity to respond to the information presented.

17. Of the 192 screened companies, OHCHR first contacted the companies concerning which the strongest allegations of a clear connection to listed activities had been received. To supplement information received in notes verbales from Member States and through the open call for submissions from interested stakeholders, OHCHR conducted further research into this subset of companies. This stage of the research included analysing public annual financial reports, official websites from companies in English and Hebrew, financial websites and media in English and Hebrew, the Israeli and other stock exchange markets, the websites of Israeli government offices⁵ and websites of settlement industrial zones and settlement councils.

18. When contacting companies, OHCHR included in the communications, wherever possible, all relevant entities with respect to that particular situation of concern, including parent companies and their subsidiaries, franchisors and franchisees, local distributors of international companies, partners and other entities in relevant business relationships. In some of these cases, further research by OHCHR revealed relevant business entities, such as parent companies or subsidiaries, that were not initially named in the submissions received in notes verbales from Member States or through the open call for submissions from interested stakeholders. This necessitated adding 14 companies to the initial list of 192 screened companies, resulting in a total of 206 companies reviewed at the time of writing (see table below paragraph 22).

19. OHCHR was given limited resources to carry out the mandate within the anticipated time frame, which required it to calibrate its research and engagement with companies accordingly. Not all companies about which OHCHR had received information could be contacted by the time of submission of the present report. At the time of writing, OHCHR had contacted 64 of the 206 companies involved in 33 different situations concerning the listed activities.⁶

⁴ Notably, one Member State acknowledged awareness of the alleged activity of a company domiciled in its territory, and informed OHCHR that the Government had decided in August 2017 to conduct a baseline study to assess the degree of implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in domestic legislation. OHCHR looks forward to the results of that study.

⁵ These included the Israeli Companies Registrar (<http://havarot.justice.gov.il>), the Bank of Israel (www.boi.org.il/heb/Pages/HomePage.aspx), the Knesset Research and Information Centre (www.knesset.gov.il/mmm/heb/index.asp), the Ministry of Environmental Protection (www.sviva.gov.il) and the Ministry of National Infrastructures, Energy and Water Resources (<http://energy.gov.il/>).

20. In the letters addressed to the companies concerned, OHCHR informed them of the listed activities that they appeared to be engaged in (based on the totality of information reviewed by OHCHR), and set out the basic facts of the companies' involvement in the listed activity or activities. Companies were requested to respond in writing within 60 days for an initial response, providing any clarification or update of the information. Companies were informed that they could request that the substance of their written responses be kept confidential; a number of companies made such a request.

21. OHCHR was also contacted by a number of companies that had not received letters from the Office, but had either seen news of the database in the media or had been informed by their governmental authorities of their inclusion in the notes verbales addressed to Member States on 11 July 2017.

22. Responses from companies included those that (a) objected to the mandate of OHCHR and declined to provide a substantive response to the information presented; (b) rejected the information presented and objected to being included in the database; (c) confirmed the information presented concerning their involvement in one or more of the listed activities, and provided explanations; (d) provided updated information that indicated they were no longer engaged in one or more of the listed activities; and (e) provided additional information and clarifications that will require further discussion and analysis before a determination can be made. OHCHR is considering the responses received to date, and offers preliminary observations to the most common explanations put forth by companies for their involvement in the listed activities (see paras. 50-60 below). Where companies declined to provide a substantive response or failed to respond entirely, this will not prevent a determination as to their involvement in listed activities from being made.

⁶ Not all parent companies or other ownership structures were contacted. For instance, if a company was acquired by a hedge fund or private investment firm, these were not included for reasons of practicality, given the lack of publicly available information concerning their portfolios.

Summary of screening exercise and communication with companies at the time of submission^a

State concerned	Total number of companies reviewed	Number of companies screened from initial list	Number of companies excluded	Number of additional companies screened	Total number of screened companies ^b	Number of companies contacted to date	Number of companies not yet contacted
Israel or Israeli settlements	186	131	43	12	143	45	98
United States of America	54	20	32	2	22	7	15
Germany	21	7	14	--	7	1	6
Netherlands	7	5	2	--	5	3	2
France	8	4	4	--	4	2	2
Republic of Korea	3	3	0	--	3	1	2
Italy	3	3	0	--	3	0	3
United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland	6	3	3	--	3	1	2
Ireland	6	3	3	--	3	1	2
Canada	2	2	0	--	2	0	2
Japan	3	2	1	--	2	1	1
Switzerland	12	2	10	--	2	0	2
Ireland	2	1	1	--	1	0	1
Mexico	1	1	0	--	1	1	0
Denmark	1	1	0	--	1	0	1
Russian Federation	1	1	0	--	1	0	1
Singapore	1	1	0	--	1	0	1
Turkey	1	1	0	--	1	0	1
Sweden	2	1	1	--	1	1	0
Spain	2	1	1	--	1	0	1
Belgium	1	1	0	--	1	1	0
South Africa	1	1	0	--	1	0	1
Others	3	0	3	--	0	0	0
Total	321	192	115	14	206	64	142

(d) Consultations

23. Throughout the process, as mandated by Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 and in preparation for the report, OHCHR carried out five in-person consultations with the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises and exchanged additional written correspondence. The feedback, guidance and advice from the Working Group were critical to the development of the methodology used to implement the mandate.

24. In addition, OHCHR held extensive discussions with Member States and was in regular contact with Israeli, Palestinian and international civil society, think tanks, academics, employer organizations, and other interested parties.

^a Does not include companies that contacted OHCHR proactively (see para. 21 above).

^b Reflects the number of companies screened from the initial list plus the number of additional companies screened after further research (see para. 18 above).

25. A number of Member States, civil society organizations and other entities have repeatedly voiced strong opposition, both publicly and privately, against Council resolution 31/36 mandating the High Commissioner to produce a database. Other Member States have expressed support, along with Israeli, Palestinian and international civil society, academics and think tanks. This includes a petition signed by over 400 members of Israeli civil society, including a former attorney general and former members of the Knesset, retired diplomats, and other prominent individuals;⁷ a joint statement by 56 non-governmental organizations;⁸ and a letter signed by almost 60 Member States addressed to the High Commissioner.⁹

(e) Next steps

26. More resources are required for OHCHR to continue its dialogue with and issue communications to relevant business enterprises, adding information to the database and updating existing information in the database as required by resolution 31/36. Once OHCHR has been in contact with all 206 companies, and subject to determinations of their responses and non-responses, OHCHR expects to provide the names of the companies engaged in listed activities in a future update. Before the determinations on the companies are made public, OHCHR will notify the companies concerned.

II. Normative framework

A. The obligations of Israel as the occupying Power

27. As stated above, the creation of the database is not a judicial process. In this respect, the work of OHCHR is guided by Council resolution 31/36, in which paragraph 17 sets out the tasks given to OHCHR. The preamble to resolution 31/36 reflects the normative framework with regard to Israel as the occupying Power.¹⁰

28. Since the adoption by the Human Rights Council of resolution 31/36, the Security Council, on 23 December 2016, in its resolution 2334 (2016), reaffirmed its position that the establishment by Israel of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had no legal validity, and constituted a flagrant violation under international law. As recognized in numerous reports of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General, continued expansion of settlements not only undermines the possibility of a two-State solution, but is also at the core of many human rights violations in the West Bank (see for example A/HRC/28/80, A/HRC/31/42, A/HRC/31/43 and A/HRC/34/39).

Human rights situation

29. The extensive human rights impact of settlements on the human rights of Palestinians has been well documented in successive reports of the High Commissioner, the ⁷ See “Hundreds of Israelis urge publication of UN settlement database”, Middle East Monitor, 4 December 2017.

⁸ “Joint NGO Statement in Support of the UN Human Rights Database on Business Activities related to Settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, Worldwide Movement for Human Rights, 30 November 2017.

⁹ On file with OHCHR.

¹⁰ In the preamble to resolution 31/36, the Human Rights Council recalls, inter alia, relevant reports of the Secretary-General, OHCHR and the fact-finding mission; relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council and the Security Council reaffirming, inter alia, the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including in East Jerusalem; the advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice, which concluded that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, had been established in breach of international law; the treaty bodies monitoring compliance with the human rights treaties to which Israel is a party; relevant provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention and customary law; and the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.

Secretary-General and the fact-finding mission (see for example A/HRC/22/63, A/HRC/25/38, A/HRC/28/44, A/HRC/31/42 and A/HRC/34/39). The reports detailed how the settlements are extensively altering the demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and fundamentally threatening the Palestinians' right to self-determination. The violations of human rights associated with the settlements are pervasive and devastating, reaching every facet of Palestinian life. Owing to settlement development and infrastructure, Palestinians suffer from restrictions on freedom of religion, movement and education; their rights to land and water; access to livelihoods and their right to an adequate standard of living; their rights to family life; and many other fundamental human rights.

B. Obligations of States for business and human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

30. The Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (A/HRC/17/31), which were unanimously endorsed by all States Members of the Human Rights Council in its resolution 17/4, set out the international human rights law obligations of States concerning business enterprises. They do not create new legal obligations, but rather clarify the implications of relevant existing international human rights standards, and provide practical guidance on how they can be operationalized.¹¹ These include the State duty to protect against human rights abuses by third parties, which includes business enterprises. States may be held responsible for abuse by business enterprises where the conduct can be attributed to them (for example, in the case of a State-owned enterprise) or where States fail to take appropriate steps to prevent, investigate, punish and redress abuse.¹²

31. The Guiding Principles specifically address the issue of business operations in conflict-affected areas, which includes situations of occupation. In conflict-affected areas, the Guiding Principles recognize that the "host State"¹³ may not be able to adequately protect human rights because of a lack of effective control or involvement in abuses itself.¹⁴ In these situations, the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises acknowledges that "home States"¹⁵ of transnational corporations have a crucial role to play. In the context of the Israeli settlements, Israel as the occupying Power is considered to have obligations equivalent to those of a "host State".¹⁶ Given the direct involvement of Israel in establishing, maintaining and expanding the settlements, OHCHR considers that the role of home States of transnational corporations is essential in assisting both corporations and Israel to ensure that businesses are not involved in human rights abuses.¹⁷

32. States' obligations specifically concerning business operations connected to Israeli settlements have been the subject of a number of United Nations reports and resolutions (for example, A/HRC/22/63, para. 117 and A/HRC/34/39, paras. 34-39, and Human Rights Council resolutions 28/26 and 34/31, para. 13 (b)). In its resolution 2334 (2016), the Security Council called upon all States to distinguish between the territory of Israel and the

¹¹ See Frequently Asked Questions about the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (OHCHR, New York and Geneva, 2014), p. 8.

¹² Guiding Principle 1.

¹³ A "host State" is defined as the country in which a business operates. See Frequently Asked Questions about the Guiding Principles (see footnote 11), p. 23.

¹⁴ See Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, statement on the implications of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights in the context of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, 6 June 2014, p. 3.

¹⁵ A "home State" is defined as a State where a company is incorporated or has its headquarters or primary seat. See Frequently Asked Questions about the Guiding Principles (see footnote 11), p. 23.

¹⁶ The Working Group recognized that the term "host State" is ambiguous in situations of occupation, and that it would be more accurate to refer to the State that exercises effective control over an occupied territory as having obligations equivalent to those of a "host State". See statement of the Working Group (see footnote 14), pp. 6-8.

¹⁷ In accordance with the statement of the Working Group, ibid., pp. 3-4 and 7.

territories occupied since 1967. With regard to the role of home States, the fact-finding mission called upon all Member States to take appropriate measures to ensure that business enterprises domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, that conduct activities in or related to the settlements respect human rights throughout their operations (A/HRC/22/63, para. 117).

33. Some States have taken steps towards fulfilling their obligations towards businesses operating in settlements. In November 2015, the European Union issued guidelines on the labelling of products made in Israeli settlements.¹⁸ As at December 2017, 18 States members of the European Union had issued advisories warning businesses of the financial, legal and reputational risks incurred by becoming involved in settlement activities.¹⁹

34. Some States have argued that they do not have an obligation to regulate extraterritorial activities of businesses domiciled in their territory and/or jurisdiction. While States are not generally required under international human rights law to do so, according to the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, there are “strong policy reasons” for home States to clearly set out expectations that businesses respect human rights abroad. States also have additional obligations as economic actors in their own right when it comes to State-owned enterprises. In its report submitted to the Council at its thirty-second session, the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises stated that there were compelling reasons for “greater action on the part of States with regard to State-owned enterprises” so that they lead by example (A/HRC/32/45).

C. Responsibilities of businesses

35. While States remain the primary duty bearers for the protection and promotion of human rights, international law has increasingly evolved to recognize that non-State actors – including business enterprises – also have responsibilities. The Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights set out a “protect, respect and remedy” framework for business and human rights, which recognizes that while States have a duty to protect the rights of all against violations by third parties, there is an independent and complementary corporate responsibility to respect all internationally recognized human rights standards. In addition to human rights, humanitarian law standards also apply to business enterprises in situations of armed conflict.²⁰

36. Under the Guiding Principles, all companies, regardless of size, industry, location, ownership or legal structure, have a responsibility to conduct due diligence to identify, prevent, mitigate and account for how they address their adverse human rights impacts (principle 14). In its statement on the implications of the Guiding Principles in the context of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory of 6 June 2014, the Working Group declared that businesses have a responsibility:

(a) To avoid causing or contributing to adverse human rights impacts through their own activities, and address such impacts when they occur;

(b) To seek to prevent or mitigate adverse human rights impacts that are directly linked to their operations, products or services by their business relationships, even if they have not contributed to those impacts.

37. The Guiding Principles recognize that businesses operating in conflict-affected areas – which include areas under occupation – face heightened risks of involvement in human rights abuses, including gross human rights abuses committed by other actors (Principle 7).

¹⁸ European Commission, Interpretative Notice on indication of origin of goods from the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967 (11 November 2015).

¹⁹ For excerpts of each State’s advisory, see www.ecfr.eu/article/eu_member_state_business_advisories_on_israel_settlements.

²⁰ International Committee of the Red Cross, Business and International Humanitarian Law: an Introduction to the Rights and Obligations of Business Enterprises under International Humanitarian Law, ICRC, Geneva, 2006).

In such situations, the Working Group clarified in the above-mentioned statement that where businesses have an increased risk, “enhanced” due diligence (namely, the “heightened care” with which due diligence processes should be executed) is required. The Working Group also highlighted a number of actions that enhanced due diligence may require, including formally integrating human rights principles into relevant contracts; exercising extreme caution in all business activities and relationships involving the acquisition of assets in conflict zones; and seeking advice from international organizations and mechanisms.

38. As part of the due diligence process, particularly in relation to a complex operating environment like the Occupied Palestinian Territory, businesses enterprises may need to consider whether it is possible to engage in such an environment in a manner that respects human rights. To do so, businesses would have to be able to show that they (in the words of the Working Group in its statement) do not “support the continuation of an international illegality nor are complicit in human rights abuses”, and that they can effectively prevent or mitigate the risks to the human rights of Palestinians. This includes ensuring that businesses are not acquiring resources and property without the “freely given consent of the owner”.²¹

39. In its report, the fact-finding mission emphasized that companies must assess the human rights impact of their activities and take all necessary steps – including by terminating their business interests in the settlements – to ensure that they do not have an adverse impact on the human rights of the Palestinian people, in conformity with international law and the Guiding Principles (A/HRC/22/63, para. 117).²²

40. The scale, scope and immitigability of the human rights impacts caused by settlements must be taken into consideration as part of businesses’ enhanced due diligence exercises.²³ The Guiding Principles do not explicitly require companies to terminate operations where they are involved in human rights abuses; they do stipulate, however, that such companies should be prepared to “accept any consequences – reputational, financial or legal – of the continuing connection.”²⁴

41. OHCHR notes that, considering the weight of the international legal consensus concerning the illegal nature of the settlements themselves, and the systemic and pervasive nature of the negative human rights impact caused by them, it is difficult to imagine a scenario in which a company could engage in listed activities in a way that is consistent with the Guiding Principles and international law. This view was reinforced in Human Rights Council resolution 34/31 on the Israeli settlements, in which the Council referred to the immitigable nature of the adverse impact of businesses’ activities on human rights.

III. Involvement of business in settlements

A. Overview

42. Businesses play a central role in furthering the establishment, maintenance and expansion of Israeli settlements. They are involved in constructing and financing settlement homes and supporting infrastructure, providing services to the settlements, and operating out of them. In doing so, they are contributing to Israel’s confiscation of land, facilitate the transfer of its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and are involved in the exploitation of Palestine’s natural resources (see A/HRC/34/39, para. 11).

²¹ Ibid., p. 22.

²² See also the statement of the Working Group (see footnote 14) and Guiding Principles 17 to 19.

²³ The commentary to Guiding Principle 14 provides that the severity of impact is judged by its scale, scope and irremediable character. See also Guiding Principle 17 on human rights due diligence.

²⁴ Commentary to Guiding Principle 19.

B. How Israeli authorities encourage settlement businesses

43. The Government of Israel actively encourages economic development of and for the settlements through the Israeli and international private sector by creating an attractive financial business market, by providing key financial incentives to companies to operate in the settlements. Ninety settlements have been designated as “national priority areas”, which allows businesses operating within them to benefit from reductions in the price of land, grants for the development of infrastructure, and preferential tax treatment (A/HRC/34/39, para. 24). Businesses in settlements can also take advantage of functional immunity from labour law with respect to the treatment of Palestinian workers.²⁵ According to the fact-finding mission, business owners are able to cut their costs by paying lower rates to Palestinian workers than their Israeli counterparts, with substandard work conditions. This is largely due to a lack of supervision or regulation of employers in the settlements by Israeli officials (A/HRC/22/63, paras. 94-95).

44. Furthermore, Israeli authorities use their permit and licensing regime to encourage international and Israeli business engagement with the settlements. Permits and licenses are readily provided to businesses operating in or servicing settlements, but are rarely granted to companies engaged in providing similar services to Palestinians.²⁶ Israeli and international companies are regularly given quarrying licenses in Israeli-controlled territory in the West Bank, whereas, according to the Palestinian Union of Stone and Marble, no new permits have been issued to Palestinian businesses to open quarries in Area C²⁷ since 1994.²⁸

45. Domestic laws and regulations in Israel also play a role in inducing businesses to serve individuals in the settlements. The Consumer Protection Law (1981) was amended in 2017 in response to alleged discrimination against consumers living in settlements. The revised law makes it mandatory for businesses to state clearly before any transaction is finalized whether they are not willing or able to provide services to settlements. The Prohibition of Discrimination in Products, Services and Entry into Places of Entertainment and Public Places Law (2000), was amended at the same time to include customers’ “place of residence” to the list of prohibited grounds for discrimination. It applies to any business that provides public services, even if it is privately owned, such as transportation services, communications services, entertainment, tourism or financial services intended for public use.²⁹ While these laws do not compel businesses to provide services to individuals in the settlements, they make it more difficult not to do so.

C. How businesses contribute to and benefit from the establishment, maintenance and growth of settlements

46. OHCHR notes that businesses play a key role in facilitating the overall settlement enterprise, contributing to Israel’s confiscation of land and the transfer of its population through commercial development. Some are directly involved in the confiscation of land by carrying out demolitions that make way for settlement residential communities or associated infrastructure, or by financing or executing settlement construction itself. Others provide services that ensure the sustainability of residential settlement communities, such

²⁵ Human Rights Watch, “Occupation, Inc.: How Settlement Businesses Contribute to Israel’s Violations of Palestinian Rights”, 19 January 2016.

²⁶ Ibid.

²⁷ Under the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (Oslo II) of 1995, the West Bank, excluding East Jerusalem, was divided into three temporary administrative zones, referred to as Areas A, B and C. Israel retains almost exclusive control over Area C, including control over law enforcement, building and planning (see www.ochaopt.org/location/area-c).

²⁸ World Bank, “West Bank and Gaza: Area C and the Future of the Palestinian Economy”, Washington, D.C., 2013, para. 30.

²⁹ According to articles 1 to 3 of the Prohibition of Discrimination in Products, Services and Entry into Places of Entertainment and Public Places Law (2000), “financial services” include banking services and the provision of credit and insurance.

as transport services that connect the settlements to Israel proper, tourism activities that contribute to the profitability of the settlements, and telecommunication services. Those that are located in the settlements help to perpetuate their existence through the payment of taxes to settlement regional councils and Israeli authorities and the provision of jobs to settlers, and by occupying confiscated land.

47. The involvement of businesses in the settlements extends across all main industries and sectors, including:

- The banking industry, which helps to finance construction and infrastructure projects in settlements, provide loans and financial services to settlement councils, and provide mortgage loans to home buyers³⁰
- The tourism industry, including tour companies, online accommodation and travel booking sites, and rental car companies, all of which help to make the settlements profitable and sustainable³¹
- The private security industry, which includes companies involved in providing security for companies or residences in settlements, as well as those involved in the checkpoints throughout the West Bank, including East Jerusalem³²
- The technology industry, which provides surveillance and identification equipment for use in the settlements, the wall and checkpoints
- The construction and demolition industries, including heavy machinery suppliers, which help to facilitate and entrench Israel's confiscation of Palestinian land for settlements and associated infrastructure³³
- The real estate industry, including companies involved in marketing, renting and selling properties in settlements, which helps settlements to function as viable housing markets, enabling the transfer of Israel's population³⁴
- The extractive industry, including mining and quarrying, which contribute financially to the sustainability of settlements through the payment of fees to settlement municipalities and the Israeli Civil Administration³⁵
- The telecommunications industry, which includes mobile networks and Internet providers servicing settlements
- The agricultural industry, which includes companies involved in crop and livestock production, the wine industry and export companies
- The transportation industry
- The manufacturing industry, which includes companies that use raw materials from occupied territory
- Others

³⁰ See Who Profits, "Financing Land Grab: The Direct Involvement of Israeli Banks in the Israeli Settlement Enterprise", February 2017, and A/HRC/22/63, para. 97. Owing to the involvement of the banking industry in servicing and supporting the settlements, a number of pension funds in different countries have reportedly withdrawn their investments in Israeli banks; see for example PGGM, "Statement regarding exclusion of Israeli banks", 8 January 2014; Linda Bloom, "Israeli banks on ineligible list for pension agency", United Methodist Church, 13 January 2016; and Middle East Monitor, "Danish pension fund excludes four companies for role in Israeli occupation", 11 October 2017.

³¹ Who Profits, "Touring Israeli settlements: business and pleasure for the economy of occupation", flash report, September 2017.

³² Who Profits, Private Security Companies and the Israeli Occupation, Tel Aviv, January 2016.

³³ Who Profits, Facts on the Ground: Heavy Engineering Machinery and the Israeli Occupation, Tel Aviv, July 2014.

³⁴ Human Rights Watch, "Occupation, Inc." (see footnote 27).

³⁵ Ibid.

48. In addition to the financial benefits provided by the Israeli authorities for operating in the settlements, businesses engaged in certain sectors are able to take advantage of captive Palestinian markets for Israeli goods. According to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Occupied Palestinian Territory operates as a captive market for Israeli exports due to the imbalanced customs arrangements enshrined in the Paris Protocol on Economic Relations and restrictions on movement and other obstacles to trade.³⁶ With regard to the economic consequences of situations of occupation, UNCTAD had noted that they always involved the exploitation, impoverishment, marginalization, displacement and appropriation of resources of the occupied indigenous people. Such acts often deprived the people under colonial rule of the internationally recognized human right to development by confiscating their national resources, preventing them from accessing and utilizing those resources, depriving them of the ability to produce and thus forcing them to consume products produced by the occupier.³⁷

49. An example of how Israeli companies are benefiting from a captive Palestinian market can be seen, for example, in the telecommunications industry. Palestinian mobile and landline companies are prevented from operating fully and effectively in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, owing to restrictions on the import of necessary equipment, which is often identified by Israeli authorities as “dual use”; restrictions on the movement of goods and people; the inability to have independent access to international networks; restrictions on the building of the necessary infrastructure in Area C following the rejection of permit requests; and the provision of limited frequencies by the Israeli authorities.³⁸ Palestinian mobile providers are reportedly prohibited from operating inside Israel and annexed areas, including East Jerusalem, which forces users to rely on Israeli mobile providers.³⁹ Israeli telecommunications operators are authorized under the Oslo Agreement to provide services to settlements and settlement roads, but their infrastructure now covers large areas of the West Bank. According to World Bank estimates, between 10 and 20 per cent of the mobile market share in the West Bank has been captured by unauthorized Israeli operators, largely due to the fact that Palestinian companies do not have access to more than 60 per cent of Area C. In 2014, the Office of the Quartet Representative estimated that the quota captured by Israeli operators was even higher, between 20 and 40 per cent of total market share.⁴⁰

IV. Preliminary observations of responses of business enterprises

50. In communicating with companies and reviewing publicly available information, OHCHR encountered a number of companies that acknowledged some connection to the settlements and provided explanations of their involvement on a number of grounds. A summary of the most common explanations are set out below. OHCHR offers the following observations in response in the interest of continuing the dialogue with companies.

51. A major argument used by companies to explain their involvement in listed activities is that they provide jobs to Palestinian families and help to support the Palestinian economy.

52. OHCHR observes that this argument does not recognize that the presence of the settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is unlawful, serves to depress the ³⁶ Report on UNCTAD assistance to the Palestinian people: Developments in the economy of the Occupied Palestinian Territory (UNCTAD/APP/2016/1), para. 20.

³⁷ Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventieth Session, Supplement No. 35 (A/70/35), annex, para. 6.

³⁸ World Bank Group, The Telecommunication Sector in the Palestinian Territories: A Missed Opportunity for Economic Development (World Bank, Washington, D.C., 2016); see also World Bank, West Bank and Gaza: Area C and the Future of the Palestinian Economy, Washington, D.C., 2014, paras. 52-62.

³⁹ “Israeli mobile companies banned from PA cities”, Ma’an News Agency, 1 April 2010.

⁴⁰ Office of the Quartet Representative, Initiative for the Palestinian Economy: Summary Overview, March 2014 (available at www.quartetrep.org/files/image/initiative.pdf).

Palestinian economy and to reduce opportunities for Palestinian businesses to thrive. As pointed out by the fact-finding mission, the agricultural sector, which lies at the heart of the Palestinian economy, has been in a continuous decline since 1967 owing to the dispossession of land and the denial of access of Palestinian farmers to agricultural areas, water resources and trade markets (A/HRC/22/63, para. 89). According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 70 per cent of Area C is “off limits for Palestinian use and development”, as it falls within the boundaries of regional settlement councils. Palestinian construction is heavily restricted in 29 per cent of Area C, and only the remaining 1 per cent has been planned for Palestinian development.⁴¹ The World Bank has acknowledged that the land allocated for settlement activity in Area C has “significantly reduced land available for use by the Palestinian private sector”.⁴² In East Jerusalem the situation is similar, as 35 per cent of land has been allocated to settlements and only 13 per cent is zoned for Palestinian construction.⁴³

53. The depressed Palestinian economy has had a direct effect on the job market in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. According to UNCTAD, Israel’s full control over Area C, which accounts for over 60 per cent of the area of the West Bank, has contributed to a “permanent unemployment crisis” in the Occupied Palestinian Territory that forces thousands of unemployed Palestinians to seek employment in Israel and in settlements in low-skill, low-wage manual activities (TD/B/63/3, para. 6). In 2017, the International Labour Organization reported that the “stagnating labour market in the West Bank pushes Palestinians to take up work wherever it is to be found.”⁴⁴

54. OHCHR notes that the employment of Palestinians, even on favourable terms, does not exempt businesses of their responsibilities under the Guiding Principles concerning their overall engagement in or with the settlements. The Guiding Principles make clear that, while business enterprises may undertake certain commitments or activities to support and promote human rights, these “do not offset a failure to respect human rights throughout their operations.”⁴⁵

55. Another argument used by some business enterprises to explain their involvement in listed activities was that they did not take a political position in the conflict between Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, nor did they actively support Israel’s occupation of Palestine. OHCHR recalls, however, that the political position of business enterprises is not a relevant consideration in determining whether their actions are consistent with the Guiding Principles or whether their business activities fall within the ambit of Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

56. Some companies that acknowledged operating in or with the settlements highlighted the fact that they were acting in compliance with Israeli national laws and in accordance with all required permits and authorizations.

57. According to the commentary to Guiding Principle 11, the corporate responsibility to respect human rights “exists over and above compliance with national laws and regulations protecting human rights”.⁴⁶ Compliance with the national laws and regulations of a State does not necessarily equate to compliance with the Guiding Principles or international law. In the case of Israel, its national laws and regulations that allow for the establishment, maintenance and existence of the settlements are in direct conflict with ⁴¹ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, Area C of the West Bank: Key Humanitarian Concerns, update August 2014.

⁴² World Bank Group, Prospects for Growth and Jobs in the Palestinian Economy: A General Equilibrium Analysis, November 2017.

⁴³ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, East Jerusalem: Key Humanitarian Concerns, update August 2014.

⁴⁴ International Labour Office, The situation of workers of the occupied Arab territories, report of the Director-General, International Labour Conference, 106th session, 2017, para. 21.

⁴⁵ Commentary to Guiding Principle 11.

⁴⁶ See also Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, statement (see footnote 14), pp. 11-12.

international law, as settlements are widely recognized by the United Nations and the international community as being illegal.

58. Some companies indicated that they had no knowledge or control over the actions of other entities with which they had business relationships, such as distributors, partners or other entities in their value chains, and therefore they should not be held responsible for any harm caused by those entities.

59. According to the Guiding Principles, the responsibility of businesses to respect human rights extends to their business relationships. Guiding Principle 13 states that businesses are responsible for preventing or mitigating adverse human rights impacts directly linked to their operations, products or services through their business relationships, even if they have not contributed to them; this includes impacts caused by both actions and omissions.⁴⁷ The responsibility to conduct due diligence – and in the occupied territory this involves enhanced due diligence (see para. 37 above) – entails taking active steps to identify and assess any actual or potential adverse human rights impacts made as a result of business relationships.

60. Furthermore, in its report, the fact-finding mission stated that business enterprises conduct their activities in the settlements with “the full knowledge of the current situation and the related liability risks” and “contribute to their maintenance, development and consolidation” (A/HRC/22/63, para. 97).

V. Recommendations

61. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights urges all businesses with which OHCHR has been or may be in contact in carrying out its mandate under Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 to cooperate with OHCHR with a view to engaging in constructive dialogue.

62. The High Commissioner acknowledges with appreciation the extension granted by the Human Rights Council for OHCHR to implement the mandate under resolution 31/36. Recognizing that this was the first time OHCHR has been tasked with such a mandate, the High Commissioner is satisfied that significant progress has been made. However, while the dialogue with concerned business enterprises is continuing, the work remains ongoing. For the High Commissioner to update the database as required by resolution 31/36, more resources are required.

⁴⁷ Commentary to Guiding Principle 13.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
21 February 2018

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-seventh session

26 February–23 March 2018

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 34/30 on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. It focuses on the practice of arbitrary detention by Israeli and Palestinian authorities. It covers the period from 1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 34/30, in which the Council requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of that resolution, with a particular focus on the factors perpetuating the arbitrary detention of Palestinian prisoners and detainees in Israeli jails, in consultation with the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention. The High Commissioner also examines the practice of arbitrary detention by the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza. The report is aimed at providing an accurate picture of the various forms of arbitrary deprivation of liberty to which Palestinians are exposed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In his recommendations, the High Commissioner encourages all duty bearers to comply with related obligations under international law.
2. The report covers the period from 1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017. It is mainly based on cases monitored by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), as well as on information obtained by other United Nations entities operating in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and by Israeli and Palestinian non-governmental organizations (NGOs). As per Human Rights Council resolution 34/30, the report was prepared in consultation with the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention.
3. While the present report focuses on arbitrary detention, other reports of the Secretary-General and of the High Commissioner provide a more comprehensive analysis of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including as regards conditions of detention.¹

II. Legal background

4. International humanitarian law and international human rights law apply in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely in Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. The Occupied Palestinian Territory is a territory under belligerent occupation, to which the provisions governing occupation notably apply.² The jurisdiction and effective control exercised by Israel as the occupying Power are the basis for its human rights obligations within the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Those obligations are in line with the obligation of Israel, under the law of occupation, to protect the Palestinian population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Concurrently, the State of Palestine is bound by its human rights obligations regarding the entirety of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The authorities in Gaza also bear human rights obligations given their exercise of government-like functions and territorial control.³
5. Arbitrary detention is prohibited by international human rights law and humanitarian law. Article 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights guarantees the right to liberty and security of person and provides that no one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention.⁴ Considered as arbitrary are deprivations of liberty that are contrary to international law provisions, mostly those relating to the right to a fair trial or other procedural guarantees,⁵ as also provided by the law of occupation.⁶ Unlawful confinement and wilfully depriving a protected person of the rights to a fair and regular trial

¹ See A/HRC/34/38, A/HRC/37/38 and A/HRC/37/43.

² As provided by the 1907 Hague Regulations, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) and customary international law; see A/HRC/34/38, para. 10.

³ See A/HRC/34/38, paras. 3–11, for more details on the applicable legal framework.

⁴ See also Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 9.

⁵ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 9 and 14; see also Human Rights Committee general comment No. 35 (2014) on liberty and security of person; and the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment (A/RES/43/173).

⁶ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 66–75.

amount to grave breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), hence to war crimes.⁷ In addition, protected persons shall only be detained only in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the non-respect of this rule violates the prohibition of forcible transfer; another grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and a war crime.⁸

III. Arbitrary detention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

A. Introduction

6. The Working Group has identified five legal categories relating to arbitrary detention: (a) when there is no legal basis for the deprivation of liberty (category 1), (b) when the deprivation of liberty results from the exercise of fundamental freedoms, (c) when the violations of norms relating to the right to a fair trial are of such gravity as to give the deprivation of liberty an arbitrary character, (d) when migrants are subjected to prolonged administrative custody without the possibility of administrative or judicial review or remedy, and (e) when the deprivation of liberty reflects discrimination, notably based on birth, national, ethnic or social origin, language, religion and political or other opinion.⁹

7. Based on those categories, and in view of the cases monitored by OHCHR during the reporting period, the present report is divided into two parts describing two sets of factors perpetuating arbitrary detention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In the first part, the High Commissioner examines cases of detention without apparent or legitimate grounds, or where the right to a fair trial is not guaranteed (categories 1 and 3). In the second part, the High Commissioner examines cases where individuals have been detained for exercising their fundamental freedoms (category 2).

8. Although of particular relevance to the present context, arbitrary detention on discriminatory grounds (category 5) is not addressed separately in this report, as it is likely to apply to most cases described therein. The Working Group has notably invoked detention on discriminatory grounds in its conclusions pertaining to several cases of detention of Palestinians by Israel.¹⁰ The Secretary-General has also noted how the application of two different legal systems in the same territory, on the sole basis of nationality or origin, is inherently discriminatory and undermines the right to a fair trial.¹¹

B. Detention without grounds or fair trial guarantees

9. This section focuses on cases of detention that are likely to be arbitrary due to the absence of any legal basis justifying the detention, or where there are no prospects for a fair trial. Given the frequent invocation of vague security grounds and the use of secret evidence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, it is often impossible to determine whether the detention is based on a legitimate ground. The practice of administrative detention is also addressed in this section.

1. Detention without legitimate grounds or legal basis

10. To be in conformity with international human rights law, any deprivation of liberty must have a legal basis. Where no reasonable ground is invoked, the detention is considered as arbitrary. Arbitrary detention is practised by Israel, the State of Palestine and the authorities in Gaza.

⁷ Ibid., art. 147; Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (a) (vi).

⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 49 (1), 76 and 147; Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (a) (vii).

⁹ Methods of work of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention (A/HRC/36/38).

¹⁰ See opinions No. 31/2017, No. 15/2016 and No. 13/2016.

¹¹ See A/HRC/34/38, para. 40.

11. During the reporting period, OHCHR monitored cases where residents of Gaza appear to have been arrested and detained by the Israeli authorities without legal basis. The arrest of fishermen off the coast of Gaza remains of particular concern.¹² During the reporting period, 42 fishermen, including 3 children, were reportedly arrested by the Israeli navy (apparently within the Israeli-authorized fishing zone). The circumstances of the arrests, the focus of the interrogations and the fact that most of the fishermen were eventually released without charge strongly suggest that such arrests have no legal basis and are used to collect information about Palestinian groups in Gaza, as exemplified in the cases described below.

12. On 4 December 2016, the Israeli navy arrested two fishermen at sea, reportedly posing no threat to the Israeli navy at the time. One of the men remained in Israeli detention without being officially charged for more than two weeks, while his brother was immediately released. The former was reportedly accused of affiliation to an armed group and subjected to ill-treatment during his interrogation. He had access to legal counsel only 10 days after his arrest. The court ordered his release on 22 December 2016, without any charge. Once back in Gaza, he was summoned by the internal security agency, detained for three days and interrogated regarding his arrest and detention by the Israeli authorities.

13. OHCHR monitored the arrest of nine other fishermen between 21 February and 18 September 2017. All nine were arrested at sea by members of the Israeli navy, who opened fire on them and forced them to undress and jump into the water after intercepting their boats, which were eventually confiscated. Two fishermen sustained injuries during their arrest.¹³ The fishermen were all taken to Ashdod before being transferred to Beit Hanoun/Erez crossing point, where the majority reported being interrogated, notably about Hamas and other groups, including armed groups. None was indicted and all were released on the same day. They all reported that, upon return to Gaza, they were detained and interrogated by the internal security agency for periods varying from a few hours to two days.

14. Most fishermen summoned and detained by the internal security agency following arrest by the Israeli navy reported having been ill-treated. OHCHR monitored another case of possible arbitrary detention for interrogation by the internal security agency during the reporting period, based on political affiliation (see para. 59 below).

15. In the West Bank, detention without legal basis has been reported in cases where Palestinian security forces refused — in violation of the Basic Law for the Palestinian Interim Self-Government Authority — to implement court orders to release detainees.¹⁴ Such orders are often bypassed by rearresting a person on new charges, usually invoking gubernatorial powers under Jordanian law (see para. 25 below). This practice continues to be of concern, as confirmed by the Independent Commission for Human Rights, which reported having received 75 complaints relating to cases of continued detention by the Palestinian authorities despite the issuance of release orders during the reporting period.¹⁵

16. A troubling case of continued detention notwithstanding release orders is the detention, since 25 May 2017, of Shadi Nammoura, from Hebron. He was first detained by the General Intelligence Service in Hebron and then later in Jericho, on the order of the Governor of Nablus. The court ordered his release three times (on 30 May, 13 June and 3 August 2017) and each time, his continued detention — in conditions that gave cause for concern — was requested by the Governor, on the third occasion based on the need to protect the detainee from the Israeli Security Forces. Mr. Nammoura was released on 7 December 2017 and arrested by the Israeli Security Forces 11 days later. The practice of detaining individuals for their own protection, against their will, remains a concern,¹⁶ as also shown by the case of Abuhlayyel Ammar Tawfiq, who was eventually released on 6 February 2017. He had been detained by the Preventive Security Services in Ramallah

¹² See A/HRC/34/36, para. 19; and A/71/364, para. 37.

¹³ See A/HRC/37/38.

¹⁴ See A/HRC/19/20, para. 42.

¹⁵ Independent Commission for Human Rights, monthly reports. Available from <http://ichr.ps/en/1/5>.

¹⁶ See A/HRC/31/40, para. 59; and A/HRC/28/80, para. 47.

since 6 November 2015 to protect him from the Israeli Security Forces after a friend of his reportedly committed an attack against Israelis in the West Bank. Mr. Tawfiq requested to be released on his own responsibility and, along with relatives, signed a waiver in July 2016. He was held against his will for a total of 15 months. Two months after being released by the Preventive Security Service, Mr. Tawfiq was arrested by the Israeli Security Forces.

2. Unlawful administrative detention practices

17. Administrative detention refers to the deprivation of liberty outside the context of criminal proceedings. It is usually based on an order issued by State executive authorities, generally without charges, indictment or trial before a criminal court. While not prohibited as such under international law, administrative detention is permitted only in exceptional circumstances and subject to stringent safeguards to prevent arbitrariness.¹⁷ The Human Rights Committee considers that administrative detention presents severe risks of arbitrary deprivation of liberty.¹⁸ Indeed, the practice may undermine most fundamental fair trial guarantees. Moreover, the uncertainty that such measures imply for the detainee in the absence of any charges, known evidence or trial, as well as of any foreseeable detention period, may amount to ill-treatment. Acknowledging the exceptional character of such measures, the law of occupation provides that a civilian may only be detained for imperative reasons of security.¹⁹ The practice of administrative detention by both the Israeli and the Palestinian authorities is a major factor perpetuating arbitrary detention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.²⁰

Use of administrative detention by Israel

18. Concerns have repeatedly been voiced about the Israeli policy of administrative detention.²¹ In 1998, the Human Rights Committee called on Israel to ensure that administrative detention be brought within the strict requirements of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.²² With no improvement evident by 2010, it called on Israel to refrain from using administrative detention, particularly for children.²³ In 2014, the Committee called on Israel to end the practice of administrative detention.²⁴ The Committee against Torture has also repeatedly concluded that the use by Israel of administrative detention, particularly for inordinately lengthy periods, violates the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,²⁵ and called upon Israel to urgently end this practice.²⁶

19. On 31 October 2017, Israel was reportedly holding 453 Palestinians in administrative detention, including at least 18 individuals detained on the basis of orders that were extended by 18 to 24 months.²⁷

¹⁷ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 9; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 78.

¹⁸ Human Rights Committee general comment No. 35 (2014) on liberty and security of person, para. 15.

¹⁹ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 78; see also the International Committee of the Red Cross commentary thereto, p. 367.

²⁰ Provisions of article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights on the right to a fair trial are applicable where sanctions, because of their purpose, character or severity, must be regarded as penal, even if, under national law, the detention is qualified as administrative (opinion No. 31/2017, para. 30).

²¹ See A/HRC/34/38, paras. 53 and 56; A/HRC/34/36, paras. 22–24; A/71/355, para. 20; A/71/364, paras. 34–35; A/HRC/31/40, paras. 37–43; A/HRC/31/43, paras. 42–43; A/69/347, paras. 28–29; A/HRC/28/45, paras. 49–50; and A/HRC/28/80, paras. 32–33. See also the position of Israel on its practice of administrative detention. Available from www.law.idf.il/602-5089-en/Patzar.aspx.

²² See CCPR/C/79/Add.93, para. 21.

²³ See CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, para. 7 (b).

²⁴ See CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 10 (b).

²⁵ Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, art. 16.

²⁶ See CAT/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 17; and CAT/C/ISR/CO/5, paras. 22–23.

²⁷ See www.hamoked.org/Prisoners.aspx; see also www.btselem.org/administrative_detention/statistics; and joint reporting by Palestinian Prisoners Commission, Addameer Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association, Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and Palestinian Prisoners Club.

20. The main legal basis for administrative detention by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory is Military Order 1651,²⁸ which empowers military commanders to detain a person for a period of time not exceeding six months, if they have reasonable grounds to believe that detention is required for reasons related to regional or public security.²⁹ Detention orders may be extended for additional periods of up to six months, with no legal limit on the number of renewals, hence allowing for the indefinite detention of a person.³⁰ The legal basis for administrative detention can be found in two other Israeli laws: the Emergency Powers (Detention) Law of 1979³¹ and the Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law of 2002.³² While the former is the only one pertaining to East Jerusalem, the latter is generally used to detain Palestinians from Gaza. Both laws grant broad discretionary power to issue detention orders that can be indefinitely renewed.

21. These laws do not conform with international human rights law. Detention should not last longer than absolutely necessary and the overall length of possible detention should be limited.³³ International human rights law also provides that grounds for arrest or detention must be prescribed by law and should be defined with sufficient precision to avoid overly broad or arbitrary interpretation or application.³⁴ The vague and undefined reasons provided by Israeli laws to justify administrative detention effectively allow the Israeli authorities to use administrative detention as an alternative to criminal proceedings, mainly when there is not sufficient evidence to charge an individual, or when the authorities do not reveal the available evidence.³⁵

22. Administrative detention is also used to keep individuals incarcerated following the completion of their sentence, as exemplified by the case of Bilal Kayed. Convicted in March 2003, he was completing a prison sentence of 14 and a half years when a 6-month administrative detention order was issued against him, 6 days before his expected release on 7 June 2016, on the ground that his membership of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine would endanger security. He was eventually released on 13 December 2016, after a 71-day hunger strike.³⁶ As described in previous reports, numerous detainees have resorted to hunger strikes to protest against and raise attention regarding their indeterminate detention without formal charges.³⁷

23. Although Israeli legislation provides for judicial review and guarantees the right to legal counsel, the opportunity to challenge detention is usually undermined by the fact that, in the vast majority of cases, evidence remains classified on grounds of State security.³⁸ Hence, neither the detainee nor the lawyer is informed of the allegations and detention grounds, undermining any effective right to challenge the detention. Human rights law prescribes that the detainee should at least have access to the essence of the evidence on which decisions are taken.³⁹ The High Commissioner remains deeply concerned by the policy of administrative detention by Israel on vague or undisclosed security grounds, in lengthy processes where individuals are deprived of core due process guarantees. In

²⁸ See Military Order regarding Security Provisions [Consolidated Version] (Judea and Samaria) (No. 1651). Available from <http://nolegalfrontiers.org/en/military-orders/mil01/67-security-provisions-chapter9-271-315> (English translation).

²⁹ Ibid., sect. 285 (A).

³⁰ Ibid., sect. 285 (B).

³¹ See www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/1979_emergency_powers_law_detention_0.pdf.

³² See www.hamoked.org/files/2011/240_eng.pdf.

³³ See Human Rights Committee general comment No. 35 (2014), para. 15.

³⁴ Ibid., para. 22.

³⁵ See www.btselem.org/administrative_detention/occupied_territories.

³⁶ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 23.

³⁷ See A/HRC/34/38, para. 53; A/71/364, para. 35; and A/69/347, para. 28.

³⁸ See Military Order regarding Security Provisions [Consolidated Version] (Judea and Samaria) (No. 1651). Available from <http://nolegalfrontiers.org/en/military-orders/mil01/67-security-provisions-chapter9-271-315> (English translation), sects. 290–291; see also Emergency Powers (Detention) Law of 1979, arts. 6 and 8. Available from www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/1979_emergency_powers_law_detention_0.pdf.

³⁹ See Human Rights Committee general comment No. 35, para. 15.

addition, the detention of Palestinians in Israel is in violation of the prohibition of forcible transfer of protected persons outside the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁴⁰

Authority of Palestinian governors to order detention in the West Bank

24. The Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have previously expressed concerns about administrative detention practices by the Palestinian authorities that amount to arbitrary detention.⁴¹ While there is no record of the total number of administrative detainees in the West Bank, the Independent Commission for Human Rights recorded 97 cases of administrative detention during the reporting period.

25. According to Palestinian law, individuals cannot be deprived of their liberty, except on the basis of an order issued by a competent judicial body, as provided by the law.⁴² However, reports of arrests and detentions upon the order of a provincial governor are of continuous concern.⁴³ Indeed, according to the Jordanian Prevention of Crimes Act of 1954, governors have the authority to arrest and detain individuals on the very general basis of maintaining public law and order.⁴⁴ As shown by cases monitored by OHCHR, the authorities have no apparent intention to charge or prosecute those arrested on such basis and may detain them for up to six months without the detention being reviewed by a judge or any other officer authorized by law to exercise judicial power.⁴⁵

26. The routine practice of detention on a governor's authority is inconsistent with international law⁴⁶ and raises concerns of arbitrary detention, not least as governors have apparently been using such power mainly to detain political opponents.⁴⁷

3. Violations of due process guarantees in criminal proceedings

27. Another factor perpetuating arbitrary detention is the violation of the right to a fair trial in criminal proceedings, when it is of such gravity as to give an arbitrary character to the deprivation of liberty. Through trial monitoring, OHCHR has identified several concerns about violations of fair trial rights in the Israeli justice system concerning Palestinians, as illustrated by the case of Mohammad el Halabi.

28. As previously reported,⁴⁸ the Head of the Gaza World Vision office, Mohammad el Halabi, was arrested at Beit Hanoun/Erez crossing point on 15 June 2016 on allegations of diverting humanitarian funds to support armed groups in Gaza. On 3 July 2016, a United Nations Development Programme contractor was also arrested at Beit Hanoun/Erez crossing point on similar grounds. Mr. El Halabi was denied access to a lawyer for almost a month while the United Nations Development Programme contractor's access to a lawyer was reportedly also delayed. Indeed, Israeli law allows investigation authorities to deny an individual arrested on suspicion of committing a security offence the right to meet with a lawyer for up to 21 days.⁴⁹ This provision is applicable to any investigation of security offences, as broadly defined in the law.

29. Delayed access to a lawyer often suggests that the detainee has been held incommunicado. In addition, Israeli law allows for detainees accused of a security offence to be banned from attending hearings.⁵⁰ Hence, they may be held incommunicado for weeks

⁴⁰ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49.

⁴¹ See A/HRC/34/38, para. 54; A/HRC/34/36, paras. 55–58 and 70–74; A/HRC/31/44, para. 78; and A/HRC/31/40, paras. 56–58 and 69–70.

⁴² See Amended Basic Law of 2003, art. 11; and Penal Procedures Law of 2001, art. 29.

⁴³ See A/HRC/34/38, para. 54; A/HRC/34/36, para. 58; and A/HRC/31/40, paras. 56–58.

⁴⁴ Prevention of Crimes Act of 1954, art. 4; Administrative Divisions Regulation No. 1 of 1966.

⁴⁵ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 58.

⁴⁶ In 2014, a petition was submitted to the Palestinian High Court, challenging the constitutionality of the Jordanian law in question, and was reportedly dismissed on procedural grounds.

⁴⁷ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 58.

⁴⁸ Ibid., para. 21.

⁴⁹ Criminal Procedure Law (Powers of Enforcement — Arrest), 1996, art. 35 (b).

⁵⁰ Decisions made in ex parte hearings can also be concealed (Counter-Terrorism Law of 2016, arts. 48–51).

without seeing a judge, lawyer or family member and at the mercy of interrogators. Not only can incommunicado detention in itself amount to torture⁵¹ but it also increases the risk of torture and ill-treatment due to isolation.⁵²

30. During his interrogation, Mr. El Halabi was allegedly exposed to ill-treatment that may amount to torture. He was also reportedly exposed to threats by undercover informers acting as inmates and inducing detainees to confess. Acquisition of evidence under pressure or duress is of concern, as it notably undermines the fairness of the trial. OHCHR further observed how some detainees from Gaza testifying as witnesses in Mr. El Halabi's trial asserted that they had at some point confessed to allegations in similar circumstances. Although Israeli law provides for the audio and video recording of interrogations of detainees suspected of serious offences, the police and security agencies have been exempted from this requirement as regards Palestinians suspected of security offences since 2002, an exemption made permanent in 2017. The exemption has removed a key safeguard against the use of torture and ill-treatment to obtain confessions. According to international human rights law, any information obtained as a result of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment shall not be invoked as evidence in proceedings.⁵³

31. Mr. El Halabi's first hearing took place on 30 August 2016. The trial initially took place behind closed doors and the case was initially subject to a gagging order that also precluded the lawyer from sharing any information. The ongoing trial is public, except for the cross-examination of certain witnesses for alleged security reasons. In addition, an important part of the evidence is being kept secret by the prosecution. The use of privileged evidence, to which not even the detainee's lawyer has access, is of great concern in trials involving Palestinians. In view of the right of defence under international law, the detaining authority should provide all relevant information to the judge and the defence, including exculpatory information.⁵⁴ Mr. El Halabi's lawyers challenged the use of secret evidence in front of the Supreme Court, which — on 12 January 2017 — ordered part of the non-disclosed evidence to be shared with the defence. However, almost one and a half years after the arrest of Mr. El Halabi, the defence lawyer has still not managed to see all of the unprivileged evidence against his client, raising serious concerns as to his right to defence and to a fair trial.⁵⁵

32. Since the beginning of Mr. El Halabi's trial, several additional charges have been brought against him as a part of the same case, following unsuccessful offers of plea bargains by the prosecution. The deals pertain to a few years of imprisonment, on the condition that the accused gives his agreement in that regard before the court starts examining classified evidence. The pressure exercised on suspects to agree to plea bargains — that imply pleading guilty to certain charges in return for what is usually a more lenient sentence — is extremely high.⁵⁶ In view of the minimal rate of acquittals of Palestinians before Israeli courts, lawyers encourage their clients to accept such deals, in order to get a lower sentence and avoid custody during lengthy trials.⁵⁷ Defendants who have continuously pleaded not guilty eventually concede to charges through a plea bargain, as

⁵¹ See www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Torture/UNVFVT/Interpretation_torture_2011_EN.pdf.

⁵² A/HRC/6/17/Add.4, para. 24; See also <http://stoptorture.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2015/10/When-the-Exception-Becomes-the-Rule-2010.pdf>.

⁵³ Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, art. 15; and United Nations Basic Principles and Guidelines on Remedies and Procedures on the Right of Anyone Deprived of their Liberty to Bring Proceedings Before a Court, guideline 12.

⁵⁴ The disclosure of information may be restricted to protect national security but has to be necessary and proportional to the end sought. See United Nations Basic Principles and Guidelines on Remedies and Procedures on the Right of Anyone Deprived of their Liberty to Bring Proceedings Before a Court, guideline 13.

⁵⁵ According to the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the use of secret evidence might affect the right to a fair trial to such extent as to render the detention arbitrary. Communication provided by the Working Group to OHCHR, dated 5 January 2018.

⁵⁶ According to the Israeli State Attorney's 2016 report, 77 per cent of convictions were based on a plea bargain. Available from www.justice.gov.il/Units/StateAttorney/Documents/Annual-Report-2016.pdf (in Hebrew).

⁵⁷ See www.btselem.org/download/201506_presumed_guilty_eng.pdf.

was the case with Waheed al Bursh, who was released on 12 January 2017,⁵⁸ and Khalida Jarrar in 2016 (see para. 55 below).

4. Arbitrary detention of children

33. The detention of Palestinian children is of particular concern. As of 30 June 2017, 318 Palestinian children were in Israeli detention.⁵⁹ Between 1 November 2016 and 30 September 2017, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) documented 135 cases of detained children, including three under administrative detention.⁶⁰ After falling into disuse for almost four years, the Israeli practice of administrative detention of children resumed in October 2015.⁶¹

34. Previous reports on the arrest and detention of Palestinian children reflected concerns relating to the lack of adherence to international standards by Israel.⁶² The military justice system appears particularly problematic regarding respect of procedural guarantees. Interrogations of children are conducted in the absence of parents, close relatives or a lawyer, and are not audio-visually recorded.⁶³ Children detained under military orders are usually not promptly informed, in a language that they understand, of the charges against them, and they may be detained for up to four days before being brought before a military judge.⁶⁴ According to UNICEF, in almost 10 per cent of the cases of detention of children monitored between 1 November 2016 and 31 September 2017, the children reported having been held in solitary confinement for periods ranging from 6 to 20 days. In over 65 per cent of the cases monitored by the NGO Defence for Children International — 66.2 per cent in the West Bank and 88.5 per cent in East Jerusalem — children were shown, or made to sign, documentation written in Hebrew, a language that they usually do not understand.

35. During the reporting period, OHCHR continued to monitor cases where it appears that Palestinian children were arrested and detained in violation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁶⁵ According to the Convention, the detention of children should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, and the best interest of the child should be a primary consideration.⁶⁶ The Secretary-General previously noted that the large number of Palestinian children in Israeli detention seemed incompatible with its use as a measure of last resort.⁶⁷

36. On 19 March 2017, Sofyan, an 8-year-old boy from the Old City of Hebron, was arrested by Israeli soldiers as he was walking in the street near the settlement of Kiryat Arba to retrieve a toy he had dropped on his way to visit his grandparents. He was reportedly approached and grabbed from behind by an Israeli soldier, who then forcibly took him from house to house insisting that he identify alleged stone-throwers.⁶⁸ He was released after an hour.

37. On 7 April 2017, 17-year-old Musa Hammad was arrested at night by the Israeli Security Forces and brought to Ofer Prison, where he was interrogated about a car ramming

⁵⁸ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 21; and www.ps.undp.org/content/papp/en/home/presscenter/pressreleases/2017/01/04/undp-statement-attributable-to-a-undp-spokesperson-on-waheed-al-bursh-case.html.

⁵⁹ Data provided to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) by the Israel Prison Service.

⁶⁰ According to statistics compiled by B'tselem, there were two children in administrative detention at the end of June 2017. Available from www.btselem.org/administrative_detention/statistics.

⁶¹ See A/HRC/31/40, para. 41; A/71/364, para. 34.

⁶² See A/HRC/34/38, paras. 56–57; A/HRC/34/36, para. 19–20 and 25–30; A/HRC/31/40, paras. 38–43; A/71/364, paras. 33–37; and A/70/351, para. 48.

⁶³ See CRC/C/ISR/CO/2–4, paras. 35 and 74.

⁶⁴ Ibid., paras. 73–74; and www.unicef.org/oPt/UNICEF_oPt_Children_in_Israeli_Military_Detention_Observations_and_Recommendations_-_6_March_2013.pdf.

⁶⁵ Convention on the Rights of the Child, art. 37 (b); see A/HRC/34/38, para. 58.

⁶⁶ Convention of the Rights of the Child, arts. 3 (1) and 37 (b).

⁶⁷ See A/71/86, para. 24.

⁶⁸ See Gili Cohen, "Palestinian mother says Israeli soldiers forced 8-year-old son to help nab stone throwers", Haaretz, 23 March 2017. Available from www.haaretz.com/israel-news/1.779173.

attack that his brother had allegedly conducted. Musa, who denied any knowledge of the attack, reported having been ill-treated during his arrest and detention. He was held for two months in administrative detention and consequently missed his high-school exams.

38. During the reporting period, the Working Group issued an opinion concerning the detention of a 12-year-old Palestinian boy from East Jerusalem, concluding that the non-observance of procedural guarantees was of such gravity as to give the deprivation of liberty an arbitrary character.⁶⁹ It is not the first time that the Working Group has qualified as arbitrary instances of Palestinian children detained by Israel.⁷⁰ Child detention by Israel might also be considered as arbitrary as it does not appear to be used as a measure of last resort, as required by the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

39. Between 1 January and 31 October 2017, the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank reportedly arrested and detained 335 children.⁷¹ This high figure raises concerns as to whether child detention is being used as a measure of last resort in the West Bank.

C. Detention for exercise of guaranteed fundamental freedoms

40. The second legal category identified by the Working Group appears to be particularly relevant in the present context. All duty bearers have indeed continued to resort to arbitrary detention during the reporting period, mainly in order to curtail political dissent or the expression thereof and to impede the work of journalists and human rights defenders. Fundamental freedoms, such as the freedoms of expression, peaceful assembly and association, may be restricted, but only as provided by the law and necessary for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others, as well as for the protection of national security, public safety, order, health or morals.⁷²

1. Freedom of expression on social media

41. During the reporting period, numerous Palestinians were arrested and charged by the Israeli authorities for incitement on Facebook.⁷³ Situations underlying these charges range from the posting of a picture of a Palestinian killed by the Israeli Security Forces during clashes, to the use of language that could be classified as hate speech. Based on files examined by OHCHR, it is questionable in a number of cases whether the effective incitement potential and the suspect's criminal intent are sufficiently evident to justify criminal liability. It is not unusual that — shortly before the completion of a sentence for incitement, often based on a plea bargain — a military order is issued to prolong the detention based on security arguments. While some cases may seem justified, it appears that there is a real risk for Palestinians of arrest on grounds of alleged incitement while legitimately exercising their right to freedom of expression on social media.

42. On 24 June 2017, the so-called Palestinian cybercrime law was adopted by Presidential Decree No. 16 of 2017. While it might be a necessary step to regulate the commission of crimes via the Internet, the law raises strong concerns about its potential to curtail free speech. It notably criminalizes the publication of data — and the creation of websites intended to publish such data — that violates public morality and public order, endangers community safety, or insults holy sites, religions and beliefs and family values. Those overly broad terms have the potential to be interpreted to excessively undermine freedom of expression. The law was adopted within a general context of restrictions on

⁶⁹ See opinion No. 3/2017, para. 41.

⁷⁰ See opinions No. 13/2016 and No. 24/2016.

⁷¹ Data provided to OHCHR by the Palestinian police.

⁷² International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 19, 21 and 22; see also Human Rights Committee general comment No. 34, paras. 21–36.

⁷³ According to the Palestinian Prisoners Commission, Addameer Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association, Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and Palestinian Prisoners Club, 470 indictments based on Facebook posts were issued from 1 October 2015 to 31 October 2017 (including 220 in 2017).

freedom of expression⁷⁴ and civil society was not consulted regarding its drafting.⁷⁵ This law served as the basis for the arrest and detention of journalists and human rights defenders (see paras. 51–52 below). During the reporting period, 77 cases of arrests in violation of guaranteed freedoms were referred to the Independent Commission for Human Rights.

43. In Gaza, OHCHR monitored cases of individuals arrested and detained for posting opinions on social media that could be considered to be critical of the Gaza authorities. In all these cases, the individuals were released without charge after a few days or weeks, upon signing commitments to, notably, uphold the law and refrain from public criticism. Most of these cases monitored by OHCHR included allegations of ill-treatment during interrogation.

44. On 30 May 2017, a teacher was arrested by the internal security agency for a post on social media expressing disapproval of an official for stating that Gaza was a prosperous place. He was released after four days. On 4 July 2017, another Palestinian man from Gaza — well known for his critical stance against the authorities in Gaza — was arrested by the internal security agency on accusations of incitement after having called on social media for a protest against the electricity crisis. He was released after 12 days. OHCHR also monitored the case of an individual detained for having allegedly participated in the popular protests against the electricity crisis in January 2017. In another case, on 19 April 2017, Mahmoud Sulieman Mohammad al Ziq, the Secretary-General of the National Work Committee in Gaza, known for his critical position against the authorities in Gaza, was assaulted and kidnapped by unidentified men. He was advised to refrain from talking about politics, including in relation to the electricity crisis, before being released on the same day.

45. On 27 April 2017, a social media activist and member of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine was arrested by the internal security agency, reportedly for having posted an excerpt from a novel by a Palestinian writer about the plight of Palestinian refugees. He was detained for two days. His access to a lawyer and contact with his family were delayed and he was reportedly subjected to ill-treatment.

2. Journalists and human rights defenders

46. All duty bearers have been resorting to the arrest and detention of journalists and human rights defenders. These cases may amount to arbitrary detention as the practice was most likely motivated by the exercise of the individuals' rights to freedom of expression and assembly.

47. Omar Nazzal, a Palestinian journalist and member of the Palestinian Journalists Syndicate, was arrested by the Israeli Security Forces on 23 April 2016, as he was about to cross the Al-Karameh/Allenby/King Hussein Bridge to represent the Syndicate at a meeting in Sarajevo.⁷⁶ The initial administrative detention order was for four months and was extended three times, up to a total of 10 months. Mr. Nazzal was eventually released on 20 February 2017. His detention was based on his alleged affiliation to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine as a threat to the security of Israel. However, he was not only interrogated about his political affiliation, but also about his work as a journalist and his membership of the Syndicate. In a decision issued on 24 May 2016, the military judge approved the administrative detention, based on the fact that the detainee could not be tried under criminal procedure because of the confidential nature of the evidence. This may suggest that administrative detention is used as an alternative to criminal proceedings, in contradiction of international law.⁷⁷

⁷⁴ Twenty-seven websites — mainly linked to Hamas or opposition leader Mohammad Dahlan — were closed by the Attorney General in June 2017 and remain offline at the time of writing (see A/HRC/37/38).

⁷⁵ Following strong criticism by civil society, the Palestinian Authority agreed to revise the law. This process was ongoing at the time of writing.

⁷⁶ See opinion No. 31/2017.

⁷⁷ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 68; and 1958 ICRC Commentary thereto.

48. Hasan Safadi, a Palestinian journalist and media coordinator with the NGO Addameer Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association, remained in administrative detention during the reporting period. His arrest by the Israeli Security Forces, on 1 May 2016, at the Al-Karameh/Allenby/King Hussein Bridge border crossing on his way back from an Arab youth conference in Tunisia, was related to his visit to Lebanon 15 months earlier. As he was set to be released on bail on 10 June 2016, a six-month administrative detention order was issued against him, which was renewed twice during the reporting period even though he had been sentenced to three months' imprisonment on 27 October 2016. Mr. Safadi was finally released on 7 December, having spent more than a year and a half in administrative detention.⁷⁸

49. Another Palestinian human rights defender who remained in Israeli administrative detention during the reporting period is Hassan Karajah, youth coordinator for the Stop the Wall movement. Released in 2014 after serving a 22-month sentence for having visited Lebanon, he was rearrested on 12 July 2016 for alleged affiliation to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and to Al-Hirak al-Shababi, a Palestinian youth movement outlawed by Israel on 11 July 2016 for alleged involvement in terrorist activities against Israel. Mr. Karajah was released on 9 November 2017. Under the cover of legality, it appears that administrative detention is used by Israel to detain Palestinians in order to sanction the exercise of guaranteed freedoms, on the ground that it might prejudice the security of Israel.

50. As stated by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders on 7 July 2017,⁷⁹ the situation of Issa Amro, a Palestinian human rights defender who runs the Youth Against Settlements organization in Hebron, remains of concern. A well-known advocate for non-violence, Mr. Amro has been subjected to regular harassment and arrests by the Israeli Security Forces, most recently on 29 February 2016.⁸⁰ His first hearing at Ofer Military Court took place on 23 November 2016. His indictment includes 18 charges, some of them going back to 2010. Mainly repetitive, the charges include alleged obstruction, insult and assault of soldiers, incitement and participation in assemblies without a permit. The reported facts behind the charges appear ludicrous within the context of peaceful demonstrations and the heavy military presence in Hebron. On 19 February 2017, the court dismissed the defence's claim that prosecuting Mr. Amro on such old charges constituted an abuse of justice designed to halt his activity as a human rights defender. Trial monitoring by OHCHR reveals that the Israeli Security Forces and the military prosecutors do not distinguish between violent and non-violent protest, incitement and the legitimate exercise of freedom of expression and that free speech and peaceful demonstrations are considered as acts disturbing the peace or harming public order.⁸¹

51. On 4 September 2017, while on trial before the Israeli military court — a process which was ongoing at the time of writing — Mr. Amro was arrested under the newly promulgated cybercrime law by the Preventive Security Service. His arrest resulted from his calling into question, on social media, the arrest of the director of Al-Hurriya radio station, Ayman Al-Qawmeh, by the Palestinian Authority. Mr. Amro believes that his arrest might be linked to his exposure of a number of Palestinian officials concerning corruption issues, as well as to his candidacy for the latest Palestinian municipal elections. He was released on bail on 10 September 2017 and — at the time of writing — was awaiting a final court decision. Mr. Amro's case is emblematic insofar as it illustrates the risks that human rights defenders face regarding arrest and prosecution by both the Israeli and the Palestinian authorities.

52. On 9 August 2017, six journalists were arrested by the General Intelligence Service under the cybercrime law in Hebron, Bethlehem and Nablus. They were released six days

⁷⁸ Hassan Safadi was released on 7 December 2017.

⁷⁹ See www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=21855&LangID=E.

⁸⁰ See A/71/355, para. 33; and A/HRC/34/36, para. 47.

⁸¹ Military orders limit freedoms of expression and assembly (Military Order 1651, sect. 251 (b), and Order No. 101 Regarding the Prohibition of Acts of Incitement and Hostile Propaganda.

later, as a result of pressure brought to bear by the Palestinian Journalists Syndicate. They were reportedly interrogated about the publication of information that fell under the broad scope of the cybercrime law and that could affect the security of the Palestinian Authority. However, no indictment was issued against them. Interviewed by OHCHR, the journalists believe their arrest was linked to the political divide between the West Bank and Gaza and to the arrest of a journalist in Gaza as described in the next paragraph.⁸²

53. A Palestinian television reporter was arrested by the internal security agency in Gaza on 16 June, on allegations of collaboration with the Palestinian Authority. His detention for almost two months, as extended by the military prosecuting authority, was not based on any judicial order. He was denied access to a legal representative within the detention facility and first met his lawyer in court one month after his arrest. He was eventually released on $200 bail on 13 August 2017. There were also concerns that he had been subjected to ill-treatment during his detention.

54. After the Gaza authorities announced, on 24 April 2017, that they would take measures against individuals and institutions circulating rumours, a journalist from Gaza City was arrested on 25 April and detained until the next day for allegedly circulating fake information and rumours in the Palestinian media. He was released after undertaking in writing not to undermine law and order by spreading rumours. He also published a corrigendum and apologized to his readers.

3. Political affiliation

55. Palestinian civil society leaders Khalida Jarrar and Khitam Saafin were arrested by the Israeli Security Forces on 2 July 2017, during night raids on their homes, for their alleged membership of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a claim that both women deny. Ms. Saafin is the president of the union of Palestinian women's committees, an organization that works for the community-based economic and social development of women in the West Bank and Gaza. Ms. Jarrar is a member of the Palestinian Legislative Council and an outspoken critic of the Israeli occupation. She is also a member of the board of directors of the Addameer Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association and of a national Palestinian committee for the follow-up with the International Criminal Court. Neither the detainees, nor their lawyers, have had access to the material against them, which is being held secret by the court. Ms. Saafin was released on 2 October 2017, after completing a three-month administrative detention order, Ms. Jarrar's six-month detention order expires on 1 January 2018.⁸³

56. On 9 March 2017, Samira Halayqa, another Palestinian Legislative Council member, was arrested by the Israeli Security Forces during a night raid. Transferred to Ofer Prison, she was reportedly interrogated regarding her alleged affiliation to Hamas during the 2006 election and her political opinions as expressed on social media. She was charged with incitement and participation in activities organized by Hamas. She rejected those charges, which, according to her, were related to her involvement in legitimate activities, such as participation in peaceful gatherings calling for the respect of Palestinians' rights. The court ordered her release twice for lack of evidence. It was only after a third order that she was eventually released on bail on 9 May 2017. At the time of writing, hearings relating to Ms. Halayqa's case were ongoing. There are concerns that she was ill-treated during her arrest and detention and denied proper medication.

57. In the West Bank, there are concerns about the Palestinian authorities arresting individuals who oppose their policies. On 31 August 2017, Wahid Abu Mariya, known for his opposition to the Palestinian Authority, was arrested by the joint Palestinian security forces — on the orders of the Preventive Security Services — at his home in the Hebron ⁸² See A/HRC/37/38, para. 60, for summary of another case of possible arbitrary detention of a journalist.

⁸³ Ms. Jarrar was detained for 14 months between 2015 and 2016, as she was facing trial for alleged membership of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The decision of the military court to release her on bail was reversed following an appeal by the prosecution. She was released in June 2016 after accepting a plea bargain; see also Working Group opinion No. 15/2016.

Governorate. He was detained by the General Intelligence Service, military intelligence and the Preventive Security Services in Jericho, until his release on 21 September 2017, four days after the court ordered his release, without indictment. His arrest and incommunicado detention for four days raise concerns as to ill-treatment, including torture during interrogation.

58. In Hebron, several people were arrested while participating in peaceful demonstrations, mainly for alleged affiliation to the group Hizb ut-Tahrir, an Islamist organization critical of the Palestinian Authority. On 11 February 2017, the Preventive Security Services arrested approximately 50 persons in the context of a demonstration. While forcibly dispersing the crowd, they reportedly assaulted and arrested dozens of participants and passers-by, who were all released within 24 hours. The same day, leading figures of Hizb ut-Tahrir were also arrested at checkpoints while entering the city. They were held by the General Intelligence Service in Hebron and later transferred to Jericho, where they were detained for between 7 and 15 days without being indicted. A similar operation involving the arrest of individuals allegedly affiliated to Hizb ut-Tahrir took place on 24 February 2017, with two individuals reportedly being detained by the General Intelligence Service for over a month.

59. In Gaza, the internal security agency has also been detaining individuals on the basis of their political affiliation. On 13 April 2017, a woman was arrested by the internal security agency and detained for 10 days, during which period she was reportedly interrogated on her political affiliation to Fatah. She was released without being officially charged. The arrest and detention of members of Salafist groups, whose strict version of political Islam is perceived as a threat by the Hamas regime, continued during the reporting period.⁸⁴ In December 2016, the security forces in Gaza launched a campaign and arrested dozens of members of Salafist groups. Other members were arrested during a second campaign launched after a suicide bomb attack on 17 August 2017. Many of them, including children, are currently being held by the internal security agency and some have, to date, not been charged.

60. OHCHR documented the following two cases of arrest based on allegations of affiliation with Salafist groups. On 19 December 2016, a man from Rafah was arrested during a joint operation of the internal security agency and the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades. He appeared before the military court on 12 February 2017, where the prosecutor was not in a position to provide any evidence against him. He was eventually released on 26 April 2017 without being officially charged. He reported having been subjected to ill-treatment during his interrogation. Another man from Gaza City was reportedly arrested on 11 December 2016 by masked men belonging to the internal security agency. Although the military court ordered his release on bail on 20 February 2017, the internal security agency refused to implement the order until 12 April 2017, following the intervention of the Director of the Security Forces. At the time of writing, five hearings had taken place and a decision was pending.

IV. Conclusion and recommendations

61. The present report outlines the high risk that Palestinians face of being arbitrarily deprived of their liberty, both by the Israeli Security Forces and the Preventive Security Services. This is especially the case for Palestinians openly opposing the Israeli occupation, or the policies of their government in the West Bank or in Gaza. Journalists and human rights defenders have been particularly targeted within this context. Cases monitored by OHCHR show how Palestinians risk being arrested for having participated in peaceful protests, questioned acts of their own government — including on social media — or for alleged political affiliation.

62. While Israeli legislation allows for indefinite administrative detention, Palestinian safeguards against the arbitrary deprivation of liberty are bypassed through the use of executive powers. Administrative detention is used by both the Israeli and the Palestinian authorities to circumvent the national criminal justice system in order to detain individuals for vague or undisclosed security reasons, against whom evidence is insufficient, or who are due to be released. Cases monitored by OHCHR reveal how all duty bearers blatantly disregard the principle of fair trial and due process guarantees, particularly when an individual is deemed to endanger national security, public order or political cohesion, or has information of interest to the authorities.

⁸⁴ See A/HRC/28/80, para. 53.

63. Palestinians, including children, are subjected to arbitrary arrest and detention. Detainees' lack of knowledge of the grounds for detention and its length further violates rights inherent to human dignity, in addition to the obligations of Israel — as the occupying Power — to treat the Palestinian population humanely at all times. It is of serious concern that, in most cases, detention appears to be motivated by discriminatory grounds, including religion, national origin, birth or other status and political or other opinion.

64. Human rights law prescribes that anyone who has been the victim of unlawful arrest or detention should have an enforceable right to compensation.⁸⁵ However, there is no realistic way for Palestinian victims of arbitrary detention to seek redress, as their detention is usually covered by the seal of legality of a court ruling or a decision of the executive.

Recommendations to all duty bearers

65. All violations and abuses of the human rights of Palestinians must immediately cease and be promptly, impartially and independently investigated; those responsible must be held accountable and the victims provided with effective redress. All duty bearers and parties must respect international law and comply with their obligations and responsibilities under international human rights law and international humanitarian law.

66. All duty bearers must end their practices amounting to arbitrary detention, in particular they should:

- (a) End the practice of administrative detention and ensure that all administrative detainees are promptly charged or released;
- (b) Ensure that the rights of detainees are respected, including all rights inherent to a fair trial, including the right to defence and not to be tortured or ill-treated;
- (c) Ensure that all children are treated with due consideration for their age and detained only as a last resort and, if so, for the shortest possible time, and for the purpose of rehabilitation;
- (d) Respect, protect and fulfil the rights to freedom of expression, opinion and peaceful assembly and remove all unlawful restrictions to these rights from statutory law;
- (e) Ensure that the rights of journalists and human rights defenders in the Occupied Palestinian Territory are respected and protected and that they can conduct their activities without harassment or being subjected to legal proceedings in violation of international human rights law;
- (f) Ensure that victims of arbitrary detention are provided with appropriate compensation.

⁸⁵ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 9 (5).

General Assembly

Distr.: General
5 April 2018

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-seventh session

26 February–23 March 2018

Agenda item 7

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1

Report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

Summary

The present periodic report, the tenth submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1 covers the period from 1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017. It provides an overview of human rights issues in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in particular, excessive use of force, arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment, restrictions on the freedoms of movement, expression, peaceful assembly and association and the pervasive lack of accountability for violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. The report makes recommendations to the main duty bearers concerned, namely, the Government of Israel, the Government of the State of Palestine and the authorities in Gaza.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. The present periodic report, the tenth submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1 provides an overview of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, covering the period from 1 November 2016 to 31 October 2017. It should be read in conjunction with the latest reports of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on Israeli Practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/72/565) and on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan (A/72/564) and with the reports of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to the thirty-seventh session of the Human Rights Council submitted pursuant to its resolutions 34/30 and 34/31.
2. The information contained in this report is largely drawn from human rights monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The report also reflects information obtained from government sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).
3. The reporting period coincided with the fiftieth year of the Israeli occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the tenth year of the blockade of Gaza. It was marked by an increase in settlement activity and related violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, particularly in Area C of the West Bank, East Jerusalem and the H2 zone of Hebron. Israeli military order No. 1789, issued on 31 August 2017, consolidated the settlements in the H2 zone by upgrading their legal status and was accompanied by a visible increase in the presence of the Israeli security forces, settler violence and movement restrictions that had a negative impact on the enjoyment of economic and social rights.
4. The Israeli blockade of Gaza, which amounts to the collective punishment of the population of Gaza,¹ entered its eleventh year, with continuing violations by Israel of its obligations as the occupying Power, including with regard to human rights. Freedom of movement and access to basic services remained severely compromised, as did the availability of potable water, electricity, fuel, medical supplies and materials needed to reconstruct buildings and homes damaged or destroyed during previous military escalations. Over the spring and summer of 2017, the Palestinian Authority introduced various restrictive measures that exacerbated the difficulties experienced by the population of Gaza. These included reducing payments to Israel for electricity, limiting the number of medical referrals for patients from Gaza to Israel and to the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, cutting the salaries of Gaza's public sector workers and placing many on early retirement. On 12 October 2017, Hamas and Fatah signed a reconciliation agreement in Cairo, which was aimed at ending the 10-year divide between the two organizations and paving the way for a government of national consensus. The indiscriminate firing of rockets by Palestinian armed groups towards Israel remained a concern.
5. Excessive use of force in the context of law enforcement, including possible instances of unlawful killings, remained of serious concern. Attempts by Israel to impose controls over access to the Al-Aqsa Mosque in July 2017, following an attack by Palestinian citizens of Israel, sparked a wave of protests across the Occupied Palestinian Territory that resulted in six fatalities and a large number of injuries among Palestinians due to the response of the Israeli security forces.² The number of incidents of arbitrary detention remained high and OHCHR closely monitored developments around the hunger strike undertaken by a large number of Palestinian prisoners in Israeli prisons for over 40 days, from April to May 2017.³

¹ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 36 and A/HRC/24/30, para. 22.

² See www.ochaopt.org/content/protection-civilians-report-18-31-july-2017.

6. There was a marked restriction of civic space, with limitations on and violations of the rights to the freedoms of opinion and expression, association and peaceful assembly. All three duty bearers, the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the authorities in Gaza, took legal and practical measures to restrict the functioning of independent media outlets and NGOs. Human rights defenders faced harassment, arrest and travel restrictions.

7. A climate of almost-total impunity for past and ongoing human rights violations continued to prevail. A dedicated report reviewing the status of recommendations addressed to all parties since 2009 related to ensuring accountability and justice for violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, was presented to the Human Rights Council in June 2017. It highlighted that, of the 253 recommendations on access to justice and accountability presented to the duty bearers since 2009, only 19 had been fully or partially implemented.⁴ There were no positive developments in that regard during the reporting period.

II. Legal framework

8. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are applicable in the entirety of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. A detailed analysis of the legal obligations of the three duty bearers is contained in a report of the Secretary-General on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, of 13 April 2017, and remained applicable for the duration of the reporting period.⁵

III. Violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by all duty bearers

A. Israel

1. Obligations of the occupying Power under international humanitarian law

9. The situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory is characterized by the systematic disregard by Israel of the law of occupation and its obligations as an occupying Power, including the guiding principle whereby the status quo ante should be preserved as far as possible.⁶ Violations by Israel of the fundamental provisions of the law of occupation continued during the reporting period.

10. Settlement expansion activity accelerated during the reporting period, with almost 10,000 housing units advanced by means of land designation or allocation, planning and zoning, the issuance of tenders and permits, or actual construction starts.⁷ These measures were accompanied by the proposal or advancement of several draft laws in the Knesset aimed at retroactively legalizing the existing outposts, changing the status of Jerusalem, and, through political statements at the highest levels, promising the allocation of resources to consolidate settlements. These developments are described in detail in the report of the High Commissioner submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 34/31.⁸ Settlements amount to the transfer of the population of Israel into the territory it occupies. The transfer of parts of an occupying Power's own civilian population into a territory it

³ Reported in detail in A/72/565, paras. 38–40.

⁴ See A/HRC/35/19, para. 14, table 3.

⁵ See A/HRC/34/38, paras. 3–12.

⁶ See A/HRC/34/38, paras. 13–14.

⁷ See A/HRC/37/43, paras. 5–8.

⁸ See A/HRC/37/43.

occupies is a serious violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) and is considered a war crime.⁹ In addition, settlement expansion is connected to a number of other violations of international humanitarian law and has severe repercussions on human rights, as examined below.

11. During the reporting period, 488 structures were demolished or seized in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, displacing 684 persons, including 383 children.¹⁰ After record high numbers registered in 2016 and during the first quarter of 2017, there was a significant decrease in demolitions and seizures during the latter half of the reporting period. Most of the demolitions were carried out due to the lack of required building permits from the Israeli authorities. In that regard, it is recalled that the Secretary-General has previously noted that the zoning and planning regime in the West Bank, as well as in East Jerusalem, is restrictive, discriminatory and incompatible with requirements under international law,¹¹ making it virtually impossible for Palestinians to obtain building permits. The structures demolished during the reporting period included 125 donor-funded structures provided as humanitarian assistance to vulnerable communities, including three schools demolished at the beginning of the school year, in August 2017.

12. Practices that, in many cases, constitute collective punishment continued. The blockade of Gaza, which amounts to collective punishment of the population of the Gaza Strip,¹² entered its eleventh year. In the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, measures amounting to collective punishment of family members, neighbourhoods and villages of attackers (or alleged attackers) included the withholding of the bodies of attackers or alleged attackers killed in attacks, punitive demolitions and sealing of houses, punitive revocation of work permits or of East Jerusalem residency status, and punitive confiscation of property. Many of these measures were reported in detail by the Secretary-General in October 2017.¹³

13. In an illustrative case monitored by OHCHR, the Israeli authorities took a series of collective punishment measures following the killing of an Israeli Border Police officer, on 16 June 2017, in Jerusalem, by three Palestinians from the village of Deir Abu Mash'al. The attackers were killed by the Israeli security forces, who retained their bodies,¹⁴ blocked all movement into and out of Deir Abu Mash'al for a week and the movement of boys and men aged between 15 and 25 years for a further week, conducted violent raids on houses in the village and confiscated about 60 cars. Moreover, the work permits of approximately 150 relatives of the attackers were revoked, as was a permit allowing the mother of one of the attackers to visit her other son, held in Israeli detention. On 10 and 17 August 2017, the Israeli security forces demolished three houses belonging to the families of two of the attackers, leaving 14 persons, including 5 children, homeless. Punishing family members of attackers and entire communities for acts they did not commit amounts to collective punishment and is expressly prohibited by international humanitarian law.¹⁵ It also violates several human rights, including due process guarantees such as the principle of individual responsibility and the presumption of innocence.¹⁶

⁹ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 49 (6) and 147; Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹⁰ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) data, communication to OHCHR.

¹¹ See A/HRC/34/38, para. 26, with references.

¹² See A/HRC/34/36, para. 36 and A/HRC/24/30, para. 22.

¹³ See A/72/565, paras. 18–27).

¹⁴ The bodies remained held by Israel as of 31 October 2017.

¹⁵ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 50; and Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 33.

¹⁶ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 12, 14 and 17; see also Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 71–73.

14. As of the end of the reporting period, Israel continued to withhold the bodies of 15 Palestinians,¹⁷ despite a ruling issued by the Supreme Court of Israel on 25 July 2017, declaring that the Israeli authorities have no authority to hold bodies.¹⁸

15. Demolitions, collective punishment and other measures, such as forced evictions and restrictions on freedom of movement and the failure to provide protection from attacks by settlers, constitute violations of international law and contribute to the creation of a coercive environment, which may lead to the forcible transfer of the protected population. During the reporting period, such coercive environment factors increased, particularly in the periphery of Jerusalem and in Hebron's H2 zone, heightening the risk of forcible transfer of several communities and individuals.¹⁹

2. Recurring human rights violations

Violations of the rights to life and security of person

16. Excessive use of force, including unlawful killings by the Israeli security forces, remained a serious concern in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. As in previous reporting periods, in several instances, it appeared that the use of firearms was not limited to a measure of last resort in situations posing imminent threat to life or serious injury, as required by international law.²⁰ The recurrence of such cases, as well as the consistent failure to investigate and prosecute those responsible, suggests a permissive policy towards such practices. An additional concern in such cases was reported delays or even denial of medical assistance to those injured which, in some instances, led to the death of victims who might have otherwise survived.

17. In Gaza, the Israeli security forces continued to use live ammunition to enforce restrictions within the Israeli-designated "access restricted areas", on land and at sea. During the reporting period, 5 Palestinians, including 2 children, were killed, and 67 Palestinians, including 16 children, were injured on land by live ammunition. At sea, 1 fisherman was killed and 6 were injured by live ammunition.²¹

18. On 28 July 2017, a 16-year-old, Abed El Rahman Husein Abu Hamisaa, was shot in the chest during a protest at Al-Boureij camp, approximately 50 m from the fence separating Israel and Gaza. He died on his way to hospital. Two of his friends were shot at with live ammunition while attempting to rescue him and both sustained leg wounds. There was no indication that the boys posed any imminent threat to the members of the Israeli security forces stationed at the fence when they were shot.²² In another case, on 9 June 2017, a 19-year-old man was killed, approximately 150 m from the fence east of Jabalia. He was watching the protests taking place at the fence when, without warning, he was shot in the head by an Israel Defence Forces soldier and died instantly.²³

19. On 15 May 2017, a 25-year-old man, Muhammad Majid Fadil Bakr, was killed while working on his fishing boat, approximately three nautical miles off the coast of Gaza. Reportedly, the Israeli navy used a loudspeaker to issue warnings instructing Mr. Bakr to stop the boat, while opening fire. The boat continued moving until a bullet hit the engine. The Israeli navy continued to fire, shooting Mr. Bakr in the back as he was trying to protect the engine. The Israeli security forces immediately took him to the Barzilai medical centre in Ashqelon, where he was pronounced dead.

20. In the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, 50 Palestinians, including 12 children, were killed by the Israeli security forces in the context of law enforcement during the reporting period. Of those persons, 28 were killed while carrying out, or allegedly

¹⁷ OHCHR monitoring and Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Centre, communication to OHCHR.

¹⁸ See www.adalah.org/en/content/view/9167.

¹⁹ See A/HRC/37/43, in particular paras. 12–14 and 24–25.

²⁰ Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, arts. 2–3 and Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, principles 5, 9 and 13–14.

²¹ OHCHR monitoring.

²² OHCHR monitoring.

²³ OHCHR monitoring.

carrying out, attacks against Israelis, mostly members of the Israeli security forces. Moreover, 4 Palestinians were killed by Israeli settlers and 1 Palestinian was killed by the Israeli security forces in Israel in response to a stabbing attack.²⁴

21. There was a peak in casualties in the context of the large-scale protests against the announcement by Israel of restrictions on access to the Al-Aqsa Mosque, in July 2017. The restrictions followed the killing of two Israeli police officers by three Palestinian citizens of Israel in the mosque's compound, on 14 July 2017. While mainly peaceful, some of the protests turned into clashes. The response by the Israeli security forces raises concerns as to the use of excessive force in law-enforcement operations.

22. For example, on 21 July 2017, Palestinian protesters and Israeli Border Police officers clashed in Abu Dis. While most of the protesters fled, a small group of young men and boys clashed with the Border Police officers, throwing stones at them. The officers first responded with stun grenades and rubber bullets and then started firing live ammunition. Seventeen-year-old Mohammed Khalaf Mahmoud Khalaf Lafi, the last protestor to flee the scene, was shot in the back. Footage captured by a surveillance camera shows him running away and being shot at a distance of approximately 50 m from the Border Police, apparently posing no threat to the security forces. The boy was taken to hospital, but died of his wounds.²⁵

23. The Israeli security forces raid on Al-Maqased Hospital in East Jerusalem, on 21 July 2017, is particularly concerning. The Israeli security forces stormed the hospital in an attempt to arrest Muhammad Abu Ghanam, a 20-year-old Palestinian previously wounded by live ammunition fired by members of the Israeli security forces in the context of clashes in the Al-Tur neighbourhood. Numerous Israeli soldiers entered the hospital compound using stun grenades and sponge-tipped bullets to overcome hospital guards and youth in the courtyard. Inside the hospital, medical staff were in the process of transferring Mr. Abu Ghanam to emergency surgery when members of the Israeli security forces entered the corridor and violently struggled with the medical staff during an attempt to seize Mr. Abu Ghanam, physically assaulting a doctor, a paramedic, an administrative employee of the hospital and several bystanders. Medical staff managed to move Mr. Abu Ghanam to an adjacent room and attempted to save his life, before declaring him dead.²⁶ Fearing that the body would be seized by the Israeli security forces, the family reportedly immediately removed it from the hospital over a back fence. The case raises strong concerns as to the excessive use of force in law enforcement operations and interference in medical care that might endanger the life or lead to the death of seriously injured patients, in violation of the right to life and physical integrity.

24. Instances of excessive use of force during the reporting period were not limited to incidents in the context of protests. For instance, on 28 July 2017, at a roundabout near Gush Etzion, 26-year-old Abdallah Taqatqa was shot in the back by the Israeli Defence Forces from a range of approximately 25 m. According to eyewitnesses interviewed by OHCHR staff, as he was lying on the ground injured, a soldier turned him over and shot him in the chest from close range, killing him. The Israeli Defence Forces claimed that the victim had been neutralized during a stabbing attempt. However, two eyewitnesses reported that the victim was walking away from a group of seven or eight Israeli Defence Forces soldiers when first shot and that the soldiers surrounded him before the second shot. They also reported that nothing was found in the hands or in the vicinity of the victim to suggest that he was attempting to stab the soldiers or posed any imminent threat.

25. In a number of cases of settler violence, Israel failed to uphold public order and safety and to protect Palestinians in accordance with its obligations as an occupying ²⁴ OCHA, communication with OHCHR, 15 December 2017.

²⁵ OHCHR monitoring; also see www.dci-palestine.org/israeli_forces_kill_17_year_old_amid_clashes_over_access_to_holy_site.

²⁶ OHCHR monitoring; see also www.btselem.org/press_releases/20170810_police_raid_east_jerusalem_hospital.

Power.²⁷ During the reporting period, there were 147 incidents of settler violence resulting in casualties among Palestinians or damage to their property: 3 Palestinians were killed and 75 injured, including 19 children, in such incidents.²⁸ Although often present at the time of such incidents, the Israeli security forces frequently failed to provide protection. Moreover, in many of the cases, either no investigation was carried out, or investigative proceedings were closed due to apparent shortcomings in their conduct.²⁹ Cases demonstrating the type of violence and the failure by the occupying Power to provide safety and security for the Palestinian population have been described in detail in the report of the High Commissioner submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 34/31.

Arbitrary detention, torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment

26. Arbitrary detention of Palestinians by the Israeli authorities, including the practice of administrative detention, including of children, continued to be a major concern during the reporting period. According to official data provided by the Israel Prison Service, as of 30 June 2017, 5,916 Palestinians, including 318 children, were in Israeli detention. This included 444 individuals in administrative detention, among them 2 children. Official numbers as of 31 October 2017 were not available, but according to joint reports of Palestinian human rights organizations, an estimated 6,300 Palestinians, including at least 250 children, were in Israeli detention at the end of the reporting period, including about 450 in administrative detention.³⁰

27. Concerns related to arbitrary detention are examined in further detail in the report of the High Commissioner to the Human Rights Council on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/37/42).

28. Reported incidents of ill-treatment of Palestinians in Israeli detention remained of concern. While no official statistics are available, the Public Committee Against Torture in Israel, an Israeli NGO, processed 107 allegations of ill-treatment during the reporting period.³¹ In one case documented by OHCHR, on 6 November 2016, the Israeli security forces carried out a raid on the house of a 52-year-old man with disabilities at the Aida refugee camp, near Bethlehem, allegedly in order to put pressure on his son, who was being detained and interrogated by the Israeli security forces at that time. Although the man suffered from paralysis in his limbs and, according to eyewitnesses, did not resist arrest, he was subjected to violent and humiliating treatment, blindfolded and handcuffed. He was questioned about his son and eventually released with the explanation that it was a case of a mistaken identity.³²

29. Frequent night raids and house searches by the Israeli security forces across the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, continued during the reporting period, in particular in communities located near settlements or settler roads and in the villages of alleged attackers or of individuals known for holding demonstrations. In some cases, the raids, typically carried out between 2 and 4 a.m., were conducted with the purpose of making arrests, including of children, often on allegations of stone-throwing. In many other cases, members of the Israeli security forces raided private homes in full combat gear, armed and with their faces covered, without a clear reason, causing panic and terror among the families affected. In addition to raising concerns about the excessive use of force and possible violations of the right not to be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with one's privacy, family

²⁷ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27 (1) and (2); Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 46; see also A/HRC/34/38, para. 36.

²⁸ OCHA data shared with OHCHR.

²⁹ See www.yesh-din.org/en/data-sheet-december-2017-law-enforcement-israeli-civilians-west-bank/.

³⁰ Joint reporting by the Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and the Palestinian Prisoners Club, communication to OHCHR, 5 December 2017.

³¹ Communication between the Public Committee Against Torture in Israel and OHCHR, 5 December 2017. The number includes Palestinians from Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and excludes Palestinian citizens of Israel.

³² OHCHR monitoring.

and home,³³ this practice may also be in contravention of the obligation to treat the protected population humanely.³⁴

Lack of access to justice and accountability

30. In a number of instances of apparent excessive use of force documented in the present and previous reports, the Israeli security forces reportedly launched investigations. However, little information is available on such investigations. OHCHR is not aware of any charges being brought or of any indictments issued related to excessive use of force during the reporting period. With regard to the only recent indictment and sentence for excessive use of force by an Israeli security forces soldier, on 27 September 2017, the Chief of Staff of the Israel Defence Forces announced his decision to reduce by 4 months the 18-month sentence handed down in the case of Sergeant Elor Azaria in January 2017. Sergeant Azaria's sentence for the unlawful killing of a wounded Palestinian, which may amount to an extrajudicial execution, was already excessively lenient given the gravity of the offence.³⁵ Furthermore, it was inconsistent with sentences imposed on Palestinian offenders for comparable offences in recent years. The decision to reduce Sergeant Azaria's sentence further undermines Palestinians' confidence in the Israeli military justice system and reinforces the culture of impunity.³⁶

31. Access to justice and accountability for Gazan victims of international human rights law and international humanitarian law violations remained limited due to restrictive Israeli legislation on State liability and the statute of limitations, the required payment of considerable court guarantees and the ban on the entry of Gazans into Israel in order to attend legal proceedings.³⁷

32. There were no official updates on the status of criminal complaints related to the escalation of hostilities in Gaza in 2014.³⁸ Appeals submitted by Palestinian human rights organizations regarding cases in which criminal investigations were either closed or not opened at all, are still pending before the Israeli courts.³⁹ These include cases of violations that may amount to war crimes, such as the shelling of a location near a United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) school serving as a shelter for civilians in Rafah, which caused the death of 15 persons, including 7 children,⁴⁰ and the case of 4 children killed by a shell while playing on a beach.⁴¹

Restrictions on the rights to the freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly

33. Israel pursued legislative and policy measures that negatively affected the rights to the freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly of those working to defend human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In March 2017, the Knesset approved an amendment to the Entry Into Israel Law, prohibiting the entry into Israel of any foreigner who publicly calls for a boycott of Israel or any area under its control.⁴² For ³³ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 17.

³⁴ Fourth Geneva Convention art. 27; A/HRC/34/38, para. 13.

³⁵ See www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=21221&LangID=E.

³⁶ See A/HRC/35/19, paras. 17–18.

³⁷ See ibid., para. 18; CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 27; and A/71/364, para. 40.

³⁸ See A/72/565, para. 56.

³⁹ Decisions remain pending on 19 cases submitted by the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights and 3 by the Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and the Legal Centre for Arab Minority Rights in Israel.

⁴⁰ Report of the detailed findings of the independent commission of inquiry established pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1, para. 440; see also the appeal presented before the Attorney-General of Israel in October 2016 by the Legal Centre for Arab Minority Rights in Israel and the Al Mezan Center for Human Rights. Available from www.adalah.org/uploads/uploads/UNRWA_Rafah_Appeal_Final.pdf (in Hebrew).

⁴¹ See A/HRC/28/80/Add. 1, para. 36; and Report of the detailed findings of the independent commission of inquiry established pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1, paras. 630–633.

⁴² Amendment No. 27 to the Entry into Israel Law (No. 5712-1952).

example, in October 2017, the amended law was reportedly used to block the entry into the Occupied Palestinian Territory of an employee of Amnesty International USA.⁴³ While each country has the right to control entry into its territory, the amended law raises concerns with regard to restrictions on the freedoms of thought, opinion and expression.

34. The Knesset also continued to promote measures hampering the financing and functioning of NGOs, including conditioning the receipt of volunteers on a minister's approval and denying tax benefits to organizations that "act against the interests of Israel".⁴⁴

35. Arrests, intimidation and harassment of human rights defenders continued. Several Palestinians were detained by the Israeli authorities and, in some cases, subjected to legal proceedings related to peaceful activities, including with regard to peaceful protests denouncing or opposing human rights violations, the occupation, or the settlement enterprise.⁴⁵ Several Israeli and Palestinian human rights organizations reported to OHCHR that they continued to experience severe harassment, including through social media, aimed at discrediting and delegitimizing their work and the character of those working for them. Pressure has been particularly severe on organizations working to bring about international criminal accountability for violations of human rights and humanitarian law.⁴⁶

36. Media outlets also came under pressure, including through what appears to have been an instance of excessive use of force. On 16 August 2017, the Israeli security forces shot and wounded a 33-year-old Palestinian journalist working for Palestine TV. He was hit in the face by a rubber-coated bullet fired from approximately 50 m away while filming an Israeli security forces raid on the village of Kubar.⁴⁷ Consistent with information gathered through OHCHR monitoring, video footage of the incident shows the soldier pointing his gun at the journalist, despite the latter wearing a vest clearly identifying him as a member of the press and the situation surrounding the shooting being calm. No elements justifying the use of such force were apparent.⁴⁸

Restrictions on the freedom of movement and on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights

37. Palestinians' freedom of movement continued to be significantly restricted by a complex and multilayered system of administrative, bureaucratic and physical constraints, including permit requirements, checkpoints and physical obstacles, affecting all aspects of everyday life. Existing restrictions and practices affecting freedom of movement, including the 10-year blockade of Gaza, are described in previous reports of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General.⁴⁹

38. The approval rate of applications for Israeli exit permits from Gaza decreased from 72 per cent during the previous reporting period to 32.8 per cent during the reporting period, with a larger number of outstanding applications pending security review than previously.⁵⁰ Restrictions on movement in and out of Gaza on the grounds of undefined "security reasons" also severely affected United Nations and humanitarian personnel.

39. In May 2017, new movement restrictions were implemented in the Israeli-controlled H2 zone of Hebron, reportedly following the attempted stabbing of an Israeli security

⁴³ See www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2017/10/israel-denies-entry-to-amnesty-international-staff-member/.

⁴⁴ National service law, enacted in March 2017, and the proposed income tax ordinance (Institution acting for the benefit of the State of Israel) before the Knesset as at 31 October 2017.

⁴⁵ OHCHR monitoring.

⁴⁶ See A/HRC/36/31, paras. 38–39.

⁴⁷ The Secretary-General previously raised concerns about the frequent and often unwarranted use of rubber-coated metal bullets, including at short-range, and directed at the upper body. See A/71/364, para. 16 and A/HRC/31/40, para. 26.

⁴⁸ OHCHR monitoring.

⁴⁹ See A/HRC/31/44, paras. 12–31 and A/HRC/34/38, paras. 62–68.

⁵⁰ Palestinian General Authority for Civil Affairs communications to OHCHR, 16 and 18 October 2016 and 26 November 2017.

forces soldier by a Palestinian. Two checkpoints were reinforced and a new fence was installed around the Palestinian neighbourhoods of As-Salaymeh and Gheith. The fence further separates up to 1,800 Palestinians from the rest of the city, forces residents to take long alternative routes that are inaccessible to elderly persons and persons with disabilities and severely limits residents' access to services. The gate is operated irregularly and had become a flashpoint for settler harassment and violence in the last few months of the reporting period, increasing tension and friction in the area.⁵¹

40. The failure of Israel to protect Palestinians in accordance with its obligation, as the occupying Power, to uphold public life order and safety,⁵² and the numerous restrictions on freedom of movement have had a severe impact on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and of the right to family life in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

41. The blockade and closures continued to be the main drivers of Gaza's humanitarian crisis and severely undermined the realization of nearly all economic and social rights. This situation was exacerbated by Palestinian measures described in paragraphs 62–64 below. With regard to the right to an adequate standard of living and the right to work, Gazan exports and imports remained well below the pre-blockade levels, estimated as of late October 2017 at nearly 32 per cent and 92 per cent respectively.⁵³ Restrictions on Gazan imports and exports continued to stifle economic recovery and employment opportunities, with unemployment reaching 46.6 per cent between July and September 2017.⁵⁴ At the end of the reporting period, nearly 80 per cent of the population were reportedly relying on aid provided by humanitarian organizations to survive.⁵⁵ Although notable progress in reconstruction efforts was made, some 24,600 individuals who had been displaced as a result of the destruction of, or severe damage inflicted upon, their homes during the hostilities of 2014, remained displaced at the end of the reporting period.⁵⁶

42. Standard of living, economic growth and employment prospects in the West Bank continued to be directly undermined by the restrictions on movement and limitations on access to land, natural resources and construction. Restrictions on Palestinians' access to agricultural land and to critical natural resources in Area C remained in place and markets in occupied East Jerusalem remained out of reach, severely curbing livelihood opportunities.⁵⁷ The unemployment rate in the West Bank stood at 19 per cent in the third quarter of 2017, in comparison to 4.2 per cent in Israel as of October 2017.⁵⁸

43. The realization of the right to education remained severely compromised due to violence and armed search operations in schools, harassment, intimidation and violence towards students and teachers on the way to and from school, a severe shortage of classrooms and demolition or stop work orders on school buildings. In Gaza, about two thirds of schools (including UNRWA schools) were forced to operate double shifts, with large numbers of children studying in darkened classrooms due to the prevailing electricity crisis.⁵⁹

44. The right to health also remained undermined, as primary health-care clinics and hospitals across the Occupied Palestinian Territory struggled to function and provide services due to prolonged electricity cuts and chronic shortages of stocks of vital medicines, equipment and supplies, including fuel.

⁵¹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/further-restrictions-palestinian-movement-israeli-controlled-h2-area-hebron-city; and OHCHR monitoring.

⁵² Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, arts. 43 and 46.

⁵³ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-crossings-operations-status-monthly-update-october-2017.

⁵⁴ See www.pcbs.gov.ps/site/512/default.aspx?lang=en&ItemID=2904.

⁵⁵ See www.worldbank.org/en/country/westbankandgaza/overview.

⁵⁶ See www.sheltercluster.org/sites/default/files/docs/one_page_factsheet_october_2017.pdf.

⁵⁷ See www.ilo.org/wcmsp5/groups/public/---ed_norm/---relconf/documents/meetingdocument/wcms_554441.pdf.

⁵⁸ See www.pcbs.gov.ps/site/512/default.aspx?lang=en&ItemID=2904 and <https://tradingeconomics.com/israel/unemployment-rate>.

⁵⁹ See, for example, www.unicef.org/oPt/media_12204.html.

45. Moreover, restrictions on movement severely affected access to health care. Out of the 26,986 applications for permits to exit Gaza submitted on behalf of patients during the reporting period, 867 (3.2 per cent) were denied and 12,075 (44.7 per cent) were delayed.⁶⁰ The World Health Organization reported that dozens of patients died while waiting for their applications to be granted or after their applications had been denied.⁶¹

46. For example, on 17 April 2017, a 5-year-old girl with hydrocephalus died while her permit application was still pending under security review, following two previous unsuccessful exit applications. In another case, a 45-year-old woman suffering with breast cancer since 2011 missed five medical appointments in the West Bank between February and June 2017, as her permit applications remained under security review, even though she had been granted exit permits on previous occasions. She died on 8 June 2017.

47. Reports of pressure exercised on patients to obtain security information as a precondition for the granting of access to health care also gave cause for concern. In February 2017, a 36-year-old woman suffering from cancer was denied permission to exit Gaza and missed her appointment in an East Jerusalem hospital. She had been granted an exit permit but refused to provide the members of the Israeli security forces manning the Beit Hanoun/Erez border crossing point with information on a relative allegedly affiliated with an armed group.⁶²

48. In the West Bank, Israeli restrictions on movement, especially in areas affected by the Wall and checkpoints, and delays in related coordination continued to place severe limits on access to health services. Across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Palestinian ambulances and medics were, on several occasions, prevented from carrying out their work or were directly attacked. The Palestine Red Crescent Society reported that, during the reporting period, their ambulances were delayed on 16 occasions, prevented from reaching their destination in 3 instances and from providing first aid to injured Palestinians on 14 occasions and directly attacked 9 times. The Israeli security forces wounded six Palestine Red Crescent Society medics and volunteers.⁶³

B. Palestinian authorities

Violations of the rights to life and security of person

49. The Palestinian security forces appeared to use excessive force to disperse peaceful assemblies and detained participants on several occasions.⁶⁴ In one of the cases monitored by OHCHR, on 12 March 2017, in Al-Bireh, the Palestinian security forces violently assaulted both protesters and journalists and broke equipment used by reporters covering a peaceful protest. A commission of inquiry established by the Palestinian Authority found that the use of force by the Palestinian security forces had been unjustified. It recommended several legal and policy measures to bring the regulations governing the use of force by the Palestinian security forces into line with international standards. It also recommended disciplinary action against the Chief of Police and the commander of the police unit responsible. The implementation of the recommendations was ongoing as of 31 October 2017.

50. Concerns regarding excessive use of force by the Gaza security forces were reported, including in the context of protests. On 12 January 2017, the Gaza security forces forcibly dispersed a protest over the electricity crisis in Jabalia. The protest was organized in response to calls made on social media and escalated into stone-throwing at the premises of the Gaza Electricity Distribution Corporation. The riot police fired live ammunition into the air to disperse protesters and assaulted some with batons. Seven people, including two

⁶⁰ See www.emro.who.int/pse/publications-who/monthly-referral-reports.html.

⁶¹ Ibid.

⁶² OHCHR monitoring.

⁶³ Information provided by the Palestine Red Crescent Society to OHCHR, 13 December 2017.

⁶⁴ OHCHR monitoring.

journalists, were referred to hospitals for medical treatment due to injuries. An undetermined number of protesters were also briefly detained by the Gaza security forces.⁶⁵

51. In another incident documented by OHCHR, a 24-year-old photojournalist was shot and wounded by the Gaza security forces, on 4 April 2017, while covering a police raid on a protest tent in Beit Lahiya. The victim was seriously wounded in the leg, having been shot at close range in circumstances that did not appear to constitute a threat to the lives of the security officers concerned.⁶⁶

Death penalty

52. Six individuals were executed by the Gaza authorities during the reporting period, three on 6 April 2017 and three on 24 May 2017. The latter three were sentenced to death by a special field military court, on 15 May 2017, for involvement in the killing of Hamas leader Mazen al-Faqhaa. The executions raise serious concerns about the extent to which the trials conducted by this court in particular, and by military courts in general, met the minimum international fair trial standards. The three defendants were reportedly denied access to legal representation, subjected to ill-treatment and torture and signed confessions under duress. Furthermore, they were convicted of treason, which does not meet the threshold for “most serious crimes”.⁶⁷ Their executions may amount to extrajudicial killings and, consequently, the arbitrary deprivation of life.⁶⁸

53. During the reporting period, Gaza courts, including military courts, upheld 14 sentences on appeal and handed down 18 new sentences, including those mentioned above.⁶⁹

54. All six executions were carried out without the approval of the Palestinian President, in violation of Palestinian law, and denying the defendants the right to be considered for pardon or commutation of sentence, as foreseen by international human rights law.

Arbitrary detention, torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment

55. Arbitrary arrests and detention by the Palestinian security forces and the authorities in Gaza remained a major concern and the issue is examined in detail in the report of the High Commissioner to the Human Rights Council on the Human Rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/37/42).

56. During the reporting period, the Palestinian Independent Commission for Human Rights registered 511 complaints alleging torture or ill-treatment in Palestinian detention facilities, 263 in the West Bank and 248 in Gaza. While this number refers to complaints and not to verified incidents, OHCHR monitored and documented allegations of ill-treatment and torture both in the West Bank and in Gaza, which are of grave concern and are consistent with the practices reported in the complaints lodged with the Palestinian Independent Commission for Human Rights.

57. For instance, in February 2017, in Tulkarm, a 38-year-old news editor was arrested by the General Intelligence Service and accused of inciting sectarianism. He was initially released on bail by the first instance court but was immediately rearrested without a further arrest warrant. He was transferred to the Jericho central interrogation detention centre of the General Intelligence Service, where he was allegedly subjected to physical and psychological torture that was aimed at forcing him to confess. He claims that he was forced to stand blindfolded and shackled, with his arms tied behind his back, suspended

⁶⁵ OHCHR monitoring.

⁶⁶ OHCHR monitoring.

⁶⁷ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 6 (2) and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, as approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1984/50, which provide that the scope of “most serious crimes” should not go beyond intentional crimes with lethal or other extremely grave consequences.

⁶⁸ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 6 (1).

⁶⁹ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 32 (2007) on the right to equality before courts and tribunals and to a fair trial, para. 22.

from the ceiling by his wrists, beaten with a plastic hose on the soles of the feet and pressured with threats to disclose harmful information about his family. He was not allowed to see a lawyer for a period of 14 days and was denied access to adequate health care. He was eventually released following a plea bargain agreed on by his lawyer with the prosecutor, pleading guilty to the charges. He was sentenced to three and a half months' imprisonment, which was commuted to a fine.⁷⁰

Restrictions on the rights to freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly

58. The reporting period was marked by the shrinking of civic space in the West Bank and Gaza, with restrictions being placed on the rights to freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly.

59. On 15 June 2017, through direct orders to Internet service providers, the Palestinian Attorney-General closed 27 websites hosting content seen as critical of the Palestinian Authority.⁷¹ As of 31 October 2017, these websites remained offline.

60. On 24 June 2017, President Mahmoud Abbas issued a decree on cybercrimes, containing several provisions severely restricting freedom of expression and the right to privacy, as well as overly broad provisions.⁷² The decree was prepared without prior consultations with key stakeholders and despite the Government's promise to review it following an outcry from civil society, including the Palestinian Journalists Syndicate. It immediately entered into force following its publication in the Official Gazette, on 9 July 2017, despite a the Palestinian Authority simultaneously agreeing to review the decree with the participation of civil society and the Independent Commission for Human Rights and with technical advice from OHCHR. As at the end of the reporting period, the decree was under review but remained in force.

61. Several journalists, activists and human rights defenders were summoned by the Palestinian security forces or detained for exercising their right to freedom of expression, including on the basis of the presidential decree on cybercrimes, raising concerns about arbitrary detention.

62. For instance, on 6 July 2017, a 28-year-old journalist was arrested by the Palestinian security forces at an Israeli checkpoint while photographing a Palestinian minister's convoy as it passed. The journalist was accused of suspicious behaviour and released after three days without charge.⁷³ On 8 August 2017, six journalists were arrested across the West Bank under the new decree, allegedly accused of leaking sensitive information to enemy parties. They were all eventually released without charge.⁷⁴ There are strong indications that they were arbitrarily arrested and detained.⁷⁵ Another case of concern was the arrest and detention of a well-known human rights defender, Issa Amro, on 4 September 2017.⁷⁶

63. Despite a slight decline in reported incidents related to freedom of expression,⁷⁷ the Gaza security forces continued to harass journalists and social media activists expressing critical views of the authorities in Gaza. Several journalists and social media activists were arrested by the Gaza security forces, briefly detained, abused in detention and then released without being officially charged.⁷⁸ On 4 June 2017, a journalist was sentenced, in absentia, and without legal representation, to six months' imprisonment and fined 1,000 new shekels

⁷⁰ OHCHR monitoring.

⁷¹ The websites allegedly belonged to supporters of Mohammad Dahlan, a Fatah-faction leader in Gaza, Hamas or Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant. OHCHR monitoring.

⁷² Presidential Decree No. 16 of 2017.

⁷³ OHCHR monitoring.

⁷⁴ OHCHR monitoring.

⁷⁵ See A/HRC/37/42, para. 52.

⁷⁶ See A/HRC/37/42, para. 51.

⁷⁷ The Palestinian Centre for Development & Media Freedoms noted a decrease in the number of violations of the right to freedom of expression, from 46 during the previous reporting period to 30 during the reporting period. See www.madacenter.org/reports.php?s=0&p=13&id=13&lang=1&year=

⁷⁸ A/HRC/37/42, paras. 43–45 and 53–54.

for impersonation, defamation, lack of objectivity and circulating fabricated news. The charges were based on an article she had published in 2016 exposing corruption in the medical referral system in Gaza.⁷⁹

Restrictions on freedom of movement and the enjoyment of economic and social rights

64. From March 2017, adding to the already dire situation caused by the blockade of Gaza, the Palestinian Authority adopted several measures that placed pressure on the authorities in Gaza against the backdrop of a widening political division. These measures included the reduction of salaries and the placement of thousands of employees of the Palestinian Authority in Gaza on early retirement, thereby weakening already financially vulnerable households. The reduction of payments to Israel for electricity provided to Gaza led to a drastic drop in the electricity supply from the already inadequate levels caused by the Israeli blockade. Over the summer months, Gaza was receiving two to no more than six hours of electricity a day. The power shortage left critical installations, such as wastewater treatment plants and hospitals, reliant on backup generators and fuel provided through humanitarian assistance.

65. The Palestinian Authority also reduced the budget allocated to the health sector in Gaza and the percentage of items on the essential drug list that were at zero stock levels increased from 33 per cent in March to 45 per cent in October 2017.⁸⁰ A steady decrease in the number of medical referrals for patients from Gaza approved by the Palestinian Authority was reported, from 2,190 in March to 447 in June 2017. The situation improved somewhat towards the end of the reporting period, with the number of medical referrals approved by the Palestinian Authority reaching 1,297 and 1,077 in August and September respectively. However, it remained well below the previous monthly average of over 2,000 referrals.⁸¹

66. As part of the reconciliation agreement signed on 12 October 2017 between the main Palestinian factions, Hamas and Fatah, the Palestinian Authority committed to lifting the above-mentioned restrictions. The agreement also envisaged that the Palestinian Authority would take control of Gaza's crossings on 1 November 2017, reassuming full security and civil control over Gaza by 1 December 2017, and would integrate Hamas civil servants into Palestinian Authority institutions by no later than February 2018.⁸² However, the restrictions remained in place and the population of Gaza continued to struggle to cope with around four hours of electricity per day and depleted basic services during the reporting period. The restrictions exacerbated the profound sense of isolation and hopelessness among Gazans.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

67. The present report documents violations of international humanitarian law by the duty bearers, and violations of international human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the authorities in Gaza. It confirms patterns of violations previously reported by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner. In addition to the grave nature of these violations, the persistent lack of accountability and the shrinking space for media and human rights defenders are of particular concern.

68. All previous recommendations made by the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations human rights treaty bodies remain pertinent. In particular, the High Commissioner makes the recommendations set out below.

69. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of Israel:

⁷⁹ OHCHR monitoring.

⁸⁰ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-crisis-early-warning-indicators-november-2017.

⁸¹ See www.emro.who.int/pse/publications-who/monthly-referral-reports.html.

⁸² Those officials recruited by Hamas after 14 June 2007.

(a) Ensure that all incidents in which security personnel, including members of the Israel Defence Forces, kill or wound any Palestinian, including in Gaza's "access restricted areas", be promptly subjected to thorough, independent, impartial and effective criminal investigations;

(b) Immediately end all practices of collective punishment, in particular, immediately lift the blockade of Gaza and allow free movement of Palestinians across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, ensure that any restrictions on the transfer of goods to and from Gaza are consistent with international law, with due regard to legitimate security needs, and respect international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(c) Conduct prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations into allegations of violations related to past escalations of hostilities, hold those responsible accountable and ensure redress for victims;

(d) Ensure that the rules of engagement of the Israeli security forces and their application are in line with international standards;

(e) Ensure that firearms are only used in cases of imminent risk of death or serious injury and never as a crowd-control measure, take all necessary measures to prevent incidents of excessive use of force, in particular, regulating the use of live ammunition and adopting appropriate disciplinary and corrective sanctions for security force members who do not respect such regulations, and ensure that security force members are adequately equipped with and trained in the use of non-lethal weapons;

(f) Ensure that assistance and medical aid are provided to any injured or affected persons at the earliest possible moment.

(g) End the practice of administrative detention and ensure that all administrative detainees are promptly charged, if relevant, or released, and that the rights of all those deprived of their liberty are respected, particularly all rights inherent to a fair trial, including the right to defence;

(h) Ensure that conditions of detention are in accordance with international human rights law, that detainees are not subjected to torture or ill-treatment and that any allegations of torture or other ill-treatment are promptly, thoroughly and effectively investigated by an independent and impartial body;

(i) Ensure that all children under the age of 18 years are treated with due consideration for their age and that they are detained only as a last resort and, if so, for the shortest possible time and with a view to their rehabilitation;

(j) Ensure that human rights defenders and journalists are respected, protected and permitted to conduct their activities safely, freely and without harassment.

70. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of the State of Palestine:

(a) Ensure that it fully discharges its human rights obligations towards Palestinians in Gaza and immediately lifts any measures that compound the impact of the Israeli blockade on residents of the Gaza Strip;

(b) Ensure that the reconciliation process is continuously accompanied by, and anchored in, respect for international law and that all institutional and legal reform are guided by the human rights obligations of the State of Palestine;

(c) Announce a formal moratorium on executions;

(d) Ensure that the code of conduct regulating the use of force in the context of law enforcement operations and its application are consistent with international human rights standards;

(e) Ensure that allegations of human rights violations are promptly subjected to thorough, independent, impartial and effective criminal investigation;

(f) End arbitrary detention, including the practices of repeated detention and administrative detention in lieu of criminal charges and either charge or release all individuals currently held in such a manner and immediately end all practices that may amount to ill-treatment or torture;

(g) Respect, protect and fulfil the rights to freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly and remove all unlawful restrictions on freedom of expression from statutory law.

71. The High Commissioner recommends that the authorities in Gaza:

(a) Ensure, along with the Palestinian armed groups in Gaza, respect for international humanitarian law, particularly the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability for grave violations through appropriate investigations and hold perpetrators accountable;

(b) Announce and implement an immediate moratorium on the use of the death penalty and cease the practice of trying civilians before military courts;

(c) End the arbitrary arrest and detention of individuals and immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or ill-treatment;

(d) Ensure that all allegations of torture, ill-treatment and death in custody are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, and that those responsible are brought to justice;

(e) Respect and protect the rights to freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly, including the right of NGOs and media personnel to conduct their activities safely, freely and without harassment.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
10 April 2018

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Thirty-seventh session

26 February–23 March 2018

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

In the present report, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 34/28, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights provides an overview of the implementation of the resolution, with specific reference to the recommendations of the United Nations international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. The present report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 34/28, in which the Council requested the High Commissioner to report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the reports of the independent commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict (A/HRC/29/52 and A/HRC/29/CRP.4), the United Nations independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/22/63), and the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict (A/HRC/12/48).

2. In his report the High Commissioner provides an overview of the most recent developments in relation to the implementation of the recommendations included in the aforementioned reports. He addresses issues related to accountability for alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and violations of international humanitarian law in connection with the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza, including accountability for the excessive use of force within the scope of law enforcement operations within the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In addition, pursuant to paragraph 7 of the resolution, highlighting concerns about human rights defenders and civil society actors advocating for accountability, he examines the situation of human rights defenders, including legislation and actions that have restricted their work during the reporting period. Finally, he examines the responsibility of third States to ensure respect for international human rights and humanitarian law.

3. The present report should be read in conjunction with the detailed report of the High Commissioner entitled “Ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem: comprehensive review on the status of recommendations addressed to all parties since 2009” (A/HRC/35/19). The review revealed that although most of the more than 900 recommendations formulated by international human rights mechanisms between 2009 and March 2017 were addressed to Israel, some were addressed to the Government of the State of Palestine and other Palestinian duty bearers, as well as to the United Nations, States Members of the United Nations, businesses, civil society and the international community (para. 2). The High Commissioner concluded that the overall rate for full implementation of the recommendations by the parties was extremely low: 0.4 per cent for Israel and 1.3 per cent for Palestinian duty bearers (paras. 60–61); the overall rate of full implementation by the international community and the United Nations stood at 17.9 per cent.

4. In the report, the High Commissioner proposed that Israel make full use of the technical assistance available from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) “to help with the implementation of the relevant recommendations, which includes the development of national mechanisms for reporting and following up on recommendations”. He also urged Israel to conduct prompt, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations of international human rights law and all allegations of international crimes (paras. 67 and 69).

5. Similarly, the High Commissioner urged the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations of international human rights law and all allegations of international crimes, and to make full use of OHCHR technical assistance to help with the implementation of recommendations addressed to it (paras. 70–73).

6. The High Commissioner has previously taken note of the preliminary examination launched by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court in January 2015 into the situation in Palestine to establish whether the Rome Statute criteria for opening an investigation have been met, and further notes the latest update by the Office of the Prosecutor on the progress of the preliminary examination (para. 68).¹

7. With respect to the international community, the High Commissioner suggested that the Human Rights Council consider recommending to the General Assembly that it make use of its powers under Article 96 (a) of the Charter of the United Nations in order to specify how all parties could fulfil their obligations in implementing the recommendations reviewed in his report (para. 75).

¹ See www.icc-cpi.int/itemsDocuments/2017-PE-rep/2017-otp-rep-PE_ENG.pdf.

8. In the present report the High Commissioner builds on the comprehensive review provided by his previous report and focuses on the specific issues indicated in resolution 34/28.

II. Update on accountability

A. Accountability for the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza

9. In its resolution the Human Rights Council called upon all duty bearers to pursue the implementation of the recommendations of the independent commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict. Since the publication of the report of the commission of inquiry, the Secretary-General has provided regular updates on the progress, or lack thereof, by the parties to the conflict with respect to its recommendations.²

10. Alleged violations during the 2014 hostilities in Gaza mirror those documented and investigated in 2008/09 and 2012, underscoring the recurrent nature of the violations in Gaza and the failure of efforts to prevent their repetition.³ Three and a half years after the escalation of hostilities, serious concerns persist regarding the lack of accountability by the Israeli and Palestinian authorities for alleged violations of international humanitarian law — including allegations of war crimes — and alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law. The High Commissioner cannot overstate that the overall lack of accountability contributes to fuelling the conflict.

11. The lack of independence, impartiality, promptness and transparency of the Office of the Israeli Military Advocate General is an additional concern. When investigations have taken place, they have rarely resulted in prosecutions, and sentences frequently do not match the gravity of the violation(s) committed by the Israeli security forces.

12. The last public update by the Military Advocate General on the status of criminal complaints related to the 2014 hostilities in Gaza dates back to August 2016.⁴ Out of 500 complaints related to 360 incidents referred to the Military Advocate General in relation to alleged violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, criminal investigations were ordered into only 31 incidents, leading to the indictment of three soldiers for looting. This is the only outcome to date of all the complaints submitted on behalf of Gaza victims. Information received indicates that at least 22 appeals are still pending in relation to incidents that occurred during the 2014 hostilities in Gaza for cases in which a criminal investigation was either closed without charges or not opened at all.⁵ This information notably pertains to the shelling of an area near a United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) school serving as a shelter for civilians in Rafah, which caused the death of 15 people, including 8 children,⁶ and the case of 4 children killed by a shell while playing on a Gaza beach.⁷

13. The number of cases that, despite serious allegations, have not been subject to a criminal investigation and have been closed by the Military Advocate General for lack of

² See, in particular, A/71/364, paras. 40 and 51–55; and A/HRC/34/38, para. 42.

³ See A/HRC/28/45, para. 16.

⁴ See A/72/565, para. 56.

⁵ Of the pending appeals, 19 were filed by the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights while 3 were submitted by the Al Mezan Centre for Human Rights and Adalah: Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel.

⁶ See A/HRC/29/CRP.4, para. 440. See also appeal presented before the Attorney General of Israel in October 2016 by Adalah and the Al Mezan Centre for Human Rights and still pending. See further the statement by UNRWA on the initial closing of the case, available at www.unrwa.org/newsroom/official-statements/record-response-idf-closing-criminal-investigation-shelling-near-unrwa.

⁷ See A/HRC/28/80/Add.1, para. 36; and A/HRC/29/CRP.4, paras. 632–633.

“reasonable grounds for suspicion of criminal behaviour” is of particular concern.⁸ Hence, recommendations made by the commission of inquiry related to investigations and redress for victims remain unimplemented, as evidenced by the failure to open investigations into all credible allegations and the lack of access to justice. The focus of the Israeli military justice system on soldiers, as opposed to higher-level military commanders, enables the closure of cases — before the start of an investigation — for lack of prima facie evidence of a wrongful act committed by the soldier.⁹ However, the responsibility of high-level military commanders remains unexamined, as is the overall responsibility of policymakers.¹⁰

14. The Secretary-General had underlined that “findings suggest a consistent failure by the Military Advocate General, who heads the military justice system, and the Attorney General to open investigations in cases where there is prima facie evidence, including eyewitness testimony, medical reports and audiovisual materials indicating that actions by State agents were unlawful”.¹¹ The failures by the Military Advocate General undermine current and any future efforts to achieve accountability for these specific incidents by creating the misconception that cases were effectively addressed through the military justice system, hence enabling Israel to argue that justice is being pursued.

15. Palestinians face a range of other obstacles that prevent them from gaining access to justice, including to civil remedies. For Gaza victims in particular, a number of challenges remain which limit their ability to access accountability mechanisms, including restrictive legislation on State liability and on statutes of limitations, considerable court guarantees that must be paid and the ban on the entry of Gazans into Israel for legal procedures.¹² Reportedly, the limited prospects for compensation explain the consistent reduction in the number of civil compensation cases filed before Israeli courts in recent years on behalf of Gaza victims. While the Palestinian Center for Human Rights reported having filed 97 such cases in relation to the 2008–2009 hostilities (91 dismissed and 6 still pending as at January 2018), it filed only 5 cases (1 dismissed, 4 still pending) for the 2012 and 2014 hostilities.

16. In particular, the exclusion of the population of Gaza (as residents of an “enemy territory”) from the scope of Israeli civil liability legislation in October 2014 — with retroactive applicability to July 2014 — has exempted Israel from liability for any wrongful act committed by the Israeli Defense Forces during the 2014 escalation.¹³ The constitutionality of the exclusion clause has been challenged within the scope of a tort lawsuit brought to the District Court of Beersheva.¹⁴ In this case, the plaintiffs are arguing that a similar exclusion clause had been ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in 2006.¹⁵ In its response to the court’s decision, the Knesset’s legal adviser supported the State’s position that the clause was constitutional. The decision of the court was still pending as at mid-January 2018. It is expected to affect the outcome of three other cases of Palestinians killed by the Israeli Defense Forces during the 2014 escalation of hostilities that were filed by the Palestinian Center for Human Rights.

⁸ Israeli Defense Forces/Military Advocate General, decisions regarding exceptional incidents that allegedly occurred during operation Protective Edge. See A/71/364, para. 40 and A/HRC/34/38, para. 42.

⁹ See <http://mfa.gov.il/MFA/ForeignPolicy/IsraelGaza2014/Pages/Operation-Protective-Edge-Investigation-of-exceptional-incidents-Update-4.aspx>.

¹⁰ See A/HRC/35/19, para. 20, including references.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 18, including references.

¹² See A/71/364, paras. 40 and 56–57.

¹³ Ibid., paras. 56–57. See Israeli government decree of 26 October 2014 declaring the Gaza strip as “enemy territory” retroactively from 7 July 2014, thereby activating the exemption from damages to “persons who are not citizens or residents of Israel, and are residents of a territory outside Israel that has been declared an ‘enemy territory’ in a governmental decree”.

¹⁴ The case was brought to court by the Al Mezan Centre for Human Rights and Adalah on behalf of Ateyeh Nabaheen and his parents, from Gaza. On 16 November 2014, 15-year-old Ateyeh Nabaheen was shot and seriously wounded (leading to tetraplegia) by the Israeli Defense Forces as he was walking home on his family’s land about 500 m from the Gaza fence.

¹⁵ See Adalah v. Government of Israel, case HCJ 8276/05, decision of 12 December 2006 regarding amendment No. 7 of 2005, which excluded all residents of “conflict zones” as designated by the Minister of Defense.

17. In its report, the independent commission of inquiry also identified violations by the Palestinian Authority, Palestinian armed groups and the authorities in Gaza. The report of the Palestinian Independent National Committee established to follow up on the commission's recommendations addressed to the Palestinian Authority was issued in January 2017. While the Committee's report focuses on Israeli violations, it also elaborates on specific violations by Palestinian actors committed between 2014 and 2015. However, none of the findings specifically address the violations committed by Palestinian actors in Gaza during the 2014 escalation of hostilities, nor indicate what actions might be taken to establish accountability for such violations. To date, there is no information suggesting that any meaningful step has been taken by the Palestinian authorities to address violations by Palestinian actors during the 2014 escalation of hostilities.

B. Accountability for unlawful use of force

18. The independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, called upon Israel to "ensure full accountability for all violations ... in a non-discriminatory manner, and to put an end to the policy of impunity".¹⁶

19. With respect to incidents that occur outside the context of active hostilities, and particularly in cases that pertain mainly to apparent excessive use of force by the Israeli Defense Forces, the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have continuously expressed concerns as to the prevalence of a culture of impunity.¹⁷ They also reported on the conviction for manslaughter of Sergeant Elor Azaria in the death of Abdelfattah al-Sharif, a Palestinian who, while already incapacitated after having allegedly stabbed an Israeli soldier, was shot in the head by another Israeli soldier. This conviction remains exceptional, and the 18-month prison sentence has been described as excessively lenient.¹⁸ While the Military Appeals Court confirmed the conviction and the sentence of 18 months on 30 June 2017,¹⁹ in September 2017 the Israeli Defense Forces Chief of Staff announced his decision to shorten the sentence by four months.²⁰

20. Recent developments in two other cases further undermine confidence in the Israeli military justice system, as they seem to reinforce the culture of impunity. On 9 January 2018, the sentencing of Border Police officer Ben Deri was postponed, after more than three years of proceedings before the District Court of Jerusalem. On 15 May 2014, during a demonstration in Beitunia, officer Deri shot and killed 17-year-old Nadeem Nuwara, despite video evidence presented in court showing that he was not posing any threat.²¹ The officer's criminal conduct was downgraded to negligent manslaughter based on his claim that he was not aware that his weapon contained live ammunition. Mr. Deri later admitted, in a plea bargain with Israeli prosecutors, that he had been guilty of negligence.²² Within the scope of the plea bargain, the prosecution has argued for a sentence ranging between 20 and 40 months' imprisonment, while the defence has pleaded in favour of no additional restriction of liberty. The announcement of the sentence, initially expected in January 2018, was postponed until April 2018. The fact that the proceedings are likely to be concluded with a plea bargain, as well as the downgrading of the criminal conduct, raises concerns that the sentence will not be in line with the gravity of the crime.

21. On 12 January 2018, the media reported that an Israeli soldier who shot into a Palestinian car on 21 June 2016, killing 15-year-old Mahmoud Badran and injuring four

¹⁶ See A/HRC/22/63, para. 114.

¹⁷ See, for instance, A/71/364, para. 66; A/HRC/34/38, paras. 43–44; and A/HRC/35/19, paras. 17–18.

¹⁸ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 78; A/HRC/34/38, para. 48; and A/HRC/35/19, para. 21.

¹⁹ See A/72/565, para. 52.

²⁰ See A/HRC/37/38, para. 30.

²¹ See a video of the event at www.theguardian.com/world/2014/may/20/video-indicates-killed-palestinian-youths-no-threat-israeli-forces.

²² The family of Nadeem Nuwara had previously objected to the plea bargain but lost their appeal in the High Court.

others, including three other children,²³ will not stand trial and will only be dismissed from the army for failure in conduct during the incident.²⁴ Following an initial probe, the Israeli Defense Forces did acknowledge that the car had been “mistakenly” targeted by the soldier,²⁵ upon which they announced the opening of an investigation.²⁶ While information reported by the media regarding the fact that the soldier would not stand trial remains to be confirmed by the Israeli Defense Forces, the failure to prosecute a soldier who opened fire on a car full of individuals who did not represent a threat to life or of serious injury has raised serious concerns with regard to accountability for conduct that blatantly constitutes excessive use of force.

III. Impediments to the work of human rights defenders

22. Of particular concern is that the prevailing atmosphere of impunity and lack of accountability for alleged violations impedes the work of human rights defenders and journalists, who are increasingly being targeted by the authorities for their work. Human rights defenders are particularly targeted when they seek to ensure accountability for alleged violations of international human rights and humanitarian law. The Human Rights Council has denounced all acts of intimidation and threats against civil society actors and human rights defenders involved in documenting and countering violations of international law and impunity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.²⁷

A. Intimidation and threats against civil society actors

23. Harassment of and violence against human rights defenders, as well as journalists, have been continuously reported.²⁸ The High Commissioner has warned against the chilling effect of these attacks on freedom of expression.²⁹

24. Public statements by senior Israeli leaders and politicians maligning human rights organizations are reinforcing this effect, as illustrated by verbal attacks — which may amount to incitement to violence — faced by a number of Israeli non-governmental organizations. For instance, following a briefing at the Security Council in October 2016, the Director of B’Tselem was publicly condemned by senior officials, including the Prime Minister and the Permanent Representative of Israel to the United Nations. The chair of the ruling government coalition called for him to be stripped of his citizenship.³⁰ The High Commissioner has expressed concern that the rhetoric by public figures is contributing to an increasingly repressive environment in which human rights organizations and activists in Israel are seen as legitimate targets for threats and violence.³¹

25. The recent growing intimidation of non-governmental organizations that have been calling for the use of foreign jurisdictions and international justice mechanisms to ensure accountability for Israeli violations is of additional concern. OHCHR has regularly reported on these incidents; specific examples include the anonymous death threats received by a representative of the Palestinian non-governmental organization Al-Haq in Europe in

²³ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 9.

²⁴ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-officer-won-t-be-indicted-for-opening-fire-against-rules-killing-palestinian-boy-1.5730351.

²⁵ See www.theguardian.com/world/2016/jun/21/israeli-troops-mistakenly-kill-palestinian-teenager-stone-throwers; and www.haaretz.com/opinion/premium-palestinian-boy-killed-by-mistake-1.5399928.

²⁶ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/israeli-army-opens-investigation-into-death-of-palestinian-teen-1.5399284.

²⁷ See, for example, resolution 34/28.

²⁸ See A/HRC/31/40, paras. 52–53; and A/HRC/34/36, paras. 39–42.

²⁹ See A/HRC/31/40, para. 53.

³⁰ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 42; and A/HRC/34/38, para. 69. See also www.haaretz.com/israel-news/coalition-chairman-seeks-to-strip-citizenship-of-b-tselem-head-1.5452046.

³¹ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 50.

February 2016.³² Other Palestinian organizations, including Al Mezan, also report having been threatened.³³

26. Increased political tensions linked to the Palestinian political divide have created an environment conducive to human rights abuses and violations by Palestinian authorities, in particular in relation to the rights of freedom of expression and peaceful assembly. Instances of targeting political opponents through harassment, threats, assaults, arbitrary arrests, ill-treatment and torture have also been reported.³⁴ OHCHR regularly receives reports of human rights violations perpetrated by the Palestinian security forces and the authorities in Gaza, particularly against individuals and groups critical of the respective Palestinian authorities.³⁵

B. Arbitrary detention of human rights defenders

27. The arrest and detention of human rights defenders by both Israeli and Palestinian authorities is of concern. In his report to the current session of the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/37/42) the High Commissioner shows, on the basis of cases monitored by OHCHR, that all duty bearers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory resort to this practice. According to the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the deprivation of liberty resulting from the exercise of fundamental freedoms is to be considered as arbitrary.³⁶

28. The freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly are guaranteed by international human rights law.³⁷ While restrictions on the exercise of these rights are permitted, such restrictions must be provided by law and respect the strict conditions of necessity and proportionality.³⁸ The arrest and detention of human rights defenders because of their work not only infringes upon their rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, but also contributes to the creation of a repressive environment and may lead to self-censorship among the population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in Israel.

C. Legislative measures affecting civil society

Israeli legislation

29. Recent legislative measures are likely to result in increased pressure on human rights organizations in Israel. In June 2016, the Knesset adopted the so-called Transparency Law, which requires non-governmental organizations that receive more than 50 per cent of their funding from foreign public sources to declare this publicly. The law is expected to have a disproportionate impact on human rights organizations, as most of their funding comes from abroad.³⁹ The Secretary-General noted that the law contributes to a climate in which the activities of human rights organizations are increasingly delegitimized.⁴⁰ In June 2017, Prime Minister Netanyahu announced his intention to further strengthen the Transparency Law by limiting the amount of donations organizations may receive.⁴¹

³² See www.alhaq.org/advocacy/topics/human-rights-defenders/1026-al-haq-under-attack-staff-members-life-threatened. See also A/HRC/34/26, para. 48; and A/HRC/34/38, para. 69.

³³ See www.mezan.org/en/post/21475/Al+Mezan+Condemns+Continued+Death+Threats+to+Staff+Members+and+Calls+on+the+International+Community+to+Intervene. See also A/HRC/34/70, paras. 39–53.

³⁴ See, for example, A/HRC/37/42, paras. 57–60.

³⁵ See A/HRC/31/40, paras. 66–67; A/HRC/34/36, paras. 51–53; and A/HRC/34/38, para. 70.

³⁶ See A/HRC/33/66.

³⁷ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 19 and 21–22.

³⁸ See A/HRC/37/42, para. 40.

³⁹ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-ngo-law-would-apply-almost-solely-to-human-rights-organizations-1.5390248.

⁴⁰ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 49. See also www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=54438#WlyNc7yWbIU.

⁴¹ See www.timesofisrael.com/netanyahu-confirms-knesset-push-to-limit-ngos-foreign-funding/.

30. The Civil Service Law, which was enacted in March 2017, also raises concern with respect to the operational space of civil society organizations. It will enter into force on 1 April 2018. While this law does not bar foreign-funded non-governmental organizations from accepting national service volunteers, it stipulates that receipt of a volunteer by such organizations has to be specifically approved by the Prime Minister or any other minister authorized by the Government.

31. A bill denying tax benefits to certain organizations considered to act against the State of Israel was, at the time of writing, being promoted in the Knesset.⁴² The proposal seeks to deny tax credit to donors who give money to public institutions that “act against the State of Israel”, defined as including institutions that issue publications in which the State of Israel is accused of committing war crimes or call for a boycott against Israel or its citizens. The proposal also seeks to narrow the definition of “public institution” and to establish that the tax benefit will only be granted to persons who donate to an organization that acts on behalf of the citizens of the State of Israel or the Jewish Diaspora.

32. In March 2017, the Knesset adopted an amendment to the Entry into Israel Law,⁴³ which prohibits the granting of a visa or licence to persons who are not citizens or permanent residents of Israel if they or the organization for which they work has knowingly issued a public call to impose a boycott on Israel, or has committed to participating in such a boycott.⁴⁴ The amendment is worded broadly, automatically prohibiting the issuance of visas in the circumstances stated. The Minister of the Interior is authorized to make exceptions, with reasons provided in writing. The definition of “boycott” is explicitly articulated in the 2011 Boycott Law and includes boycotts aimed at Israeli settlements located in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁴⁵ In early January 2018, media published the so-called boycott divestment and sanctions list, containing the full list of organizations whose members will be barred from entering the country, that was reportedly divulged by the Strategic Affairs Ministry.⁴⁶

33. In November 2017, a bill to amend the 2011 Boycott Law⁴⁷ passed a preliminary reading and was under preparation for first reading at the time of writing the present report. Criminalizing the act of calling for a boycott, the law notably enables the filing of civil lawsuits against anyone who calls for boycott and empowers the court to award compensation, including punitive damages, even if no actual damage is proven. The amendment proposes to limit to NIS 100,000 the amount of compensation when no actual damage is caused, and to NIS 500,000 if the court establishes that the call for boycott is done intentionally, in a systematic and organized manner.

34. As highlighted by the High Commissioner and several United Nations special rapporteurs, such laws will have significant negative effects on civil society space in Israel, the Occupied Palestinian Territory and beyond.⁴⁸ The cumulative effect of this legislation extends beyond the legal barriers created, which seem to predominately affect human rights organizations. According to many human rights organizations, the public discourse which surrounded the drafting and adoption of this legislation has had a detrimental effect on their reputation among Israeli citizens. Possible legal penalties, as well as risks to the reputations of civil society organizations, and particularly human rights organizations, have a chilling effect on their ability to address sensitive issues.

⁴² As at January 2018, the “Income Tax Ordinance (Institutions Acting for the Benefit of the State of Israel)” was being prepared for first reading.

⁴³ Amendment No. 5777-2017.

⁴⁴ See A/72/565, paras. 45–46.

⁴⁵ The Law for the Prevention of Damage to the State of Israel through Boycott (No. 5771-2011) defines boycott as deliberately avoiding all economic, cultural or academic ties with an individual or other body, based solely on affiliation with Israel or any of its institutions or area under its control, in a manner that would cause economic, cultural or academic harm.

⁴⁶ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/1.833502.

⁴⁷ Amendment No. 5771-2011.

⁴⁸ See A/HRC/34/36, para. 49, See also www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=54438#.WlyNc7yWbIU; www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=54319#.WCXEZS196M9; and www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=20177&LangID=E.

Palestinian legislation

35. During the past five years, Palestinian authorities — in both the West Bank and in Gaza — also took a number of legislative steps that narrow the operative space of non-governmental organizations.

36. Following decisions of the Government of the State of Palestine in July 2015 and April 2016, all non-profit companies are required to seek the authorization of the Ministry of National Economy to receive any funding. Further to these decisions, and without prior notification, the bank accounts of a number of non-profit companies were reportedly frozen at the instruction of the Palestinian Monetary Authority and funding was released only after these companies supplied a complete breakdown of their operations to the Government. Some had to wait for several months to get government approval, despite having provided the requested documents.

37. These requirements seem to considerably impede access to funding and the conduct of financial transactions by these non-profit organizations and potentially undermine their autonomy and scope of operation. The measures have also restricted the ability of organizations to deliver crucial social and, in some instances, humanitarian services, including in Gaza.

38. In April 2016, the Gaza offices of non-governmental organizations based in the West Bank were ordered to register with the authorities in Gaza, despite their pre-existing registration with the Palestinian Authority. Among other requirements of registration, the West Bank headquarters offices of those organizations were asked to seek the authorization of the authorities in Gaza to open a branch office there. Despite reservations related to the status of the authorities in Gaza, a number of organizations complied with the requirements out of fear that the Hamas authorities would close down their offices and halt their operations.

39. Within a general context of restrictions on freedom of expression in the West Bank, the so-called Palestinian cybercrime law was adopted by presidential decree on 24 June 2017.⁴⁹ The law criminalizes the publication of data (or the creation of websites to this effect) that violates “public morality” and “public order”, endangers “community safety”, or insults “holy sites, religions and beliefs” as well as “family values”. Based on such overly broad terms, the law could potentially be used to undermine freedom of expression, and has in fact already been invoked to arrest and detain several journalists and human rights defenders.⁵⁰ Despite the commitments expressed by the Government to take into account the concerns raised by OHCHR and of civil society about this law, it remains unchanged and is being applied.

IV. Third-State responsibility

40. In its resolution 34/28 the Human Rights Council called upon all States to promote compliance with international law and all High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) to respect, and to ensure respect for, international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in accordance with article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions.

41. Ensuring respect implies taking measures to prompt States to act in compliance with international humanitarian law.⁵¹ The Security Council, the General Assembly and the majority of States parties to the Geneva Conventions have relied on this obligation when calling upon third States to call upon Israel to respect international humanitarian law.⁵²

⁴⁹ See www.amnesty.org/download/Documents/MDE1569832017ENGLISH.pdf.

⁵⁰ See A/HRC/37/38, paras. 58–59; and A/HRC/37/42, paras. 42 and 50–51.

⁵¹ See A/HRC/34/38, para. 12. See also the commentary of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, 2016, para. 154, available at <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/ihl/full/GCI-commentaryArt1>; paragraph 4 of the declaration of 5 December 2001 of the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention; International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 134, paras. 158–159 and Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 14, para. 220.

42. In resolution 34/28, the Human Rights Council also called upon all duty bearers to pursue the implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. In its report, the fact-finding mission also referred to third-State responsibility concerning situations where a State was breaching peremptory norms of international law. States should not recognize as lawful a situation that violates international law, or render aid or assistance in maintaining that situation. Accordingly, third States should not recognize the unlawful situation resulting from Israeli settlements, or aid or assist Israel in this regard.⁵³ In addition, third States shall also cooperate to bring to an end, through lawful means, any serious breach arising under a peremptory norm of general international law.⁵⁴ Such cooperation is also implied by Article 1 (3) of the Charter of the United Nations to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and freedoms, as expressly recalled by most of the international human rights treaties.⁵⁵

43. Recognizing that “business enterprises have, directly and indirectly, enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the settlements”,⁵⁶ the fact-finding mission also called upon all Member States to take appropriate measures to ensure that business enterprises domiciled in their territory and/or under their jurisdiction, including those owned or controlled by them, that conducted activities in or related to the settlements respect human rights throughout their operations.⁵⁷

44. As provided for in various international law instruments, third States should take measures when States are violating international law. This obligation should be emphasized with regard to the context of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In his comprehensive review on the status of recommendations addressed to all parties since 2009 as pertains to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the High Commissioner identified 141 recommendations pertaining to international engagement.⁵⁸ Of those recommendations, only slightly over 10 per cent have been fully implemented, while over half of them appear not to have been implemented at all.⁵⁹

V. Conclusions and recommendations

45. The High Commissioner has previously expressed “serious concerns regarding the lack of accountability related to past cycles of violence and escalation in Gaza and to incidents in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the access-restricted areas of the Gaza Strip”.⁶⁰ As reflected in the update provided in the present report,

⁵² See, for example, Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 2334 (2016); paragraphs 9 and 10 of General Assembly resolution 70/89; and paragraph 4 of the declaration of 17 December 2014 of the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention.

⁵³ See A/HRC/22/63, para. 116. See also the ICRC 2016 commentary on article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, para. 163; see further Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, paras. 157–159.

⁵⁴ International Law Commission, draft articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, arts. 40 (1) and 41 (1).

⁵⁵ See preamble to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; Convention on the Rights of the Child; Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination; and Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

⁵⁶ See A/HRC/22/63, para. 96.

⁵⁷ Ibid., para. 117.

⁵⁸ See A/HRC/35/19/Add.1, paras. 28–36.

⁵⁹ Ibid., table 1 and paras. 63–81.

⁶⁰ See A/HRC/31/40/Add.1, para. 39.

these concerns remain valid today, particularly, during the period under review, in relation to lack of accountability for continued allegations of excessive use of force by Israeli forces, as well as allegations related to the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza that remain unaddressed.

46. Alongside allegations related to the use of force, the work of human rights defenders is increasingly being challenged. Civil society organizations, journalists and human rights defenders must be permitted space to do their work, including calling for accountability for alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. Measures which seek to hinder this work — for example through arrest and detention or the passage of stigmatizing legislation — raise serious concerns about the exercise of the right to freedom of expression and risk shrinking civic space.

47. Further, the comprehensive review of recommendations aimed at ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, revealed that throughout the reports analysed for the review, general patterns of human rights violations and non-implementation of recommendations were not just symptoms of the conflict but further fuelled the cycle of violence.⁶¹ As emphasized by the Secretary-General, lack of accountability “compromises chances for sustainable peace and security. Tackling impunity must be the highest priority.”⁶² The High Commissioner once again echoes this call.

48. Recalling the follow-up measures described in the comprehensive review, which remain valid, the High Commissioner further:

(a) Calls upon Israel to fully comply with its obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

(b) Urges Israel to conduct prompt, thorough, effective, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular all alleged international crimes, and calls on Israel to ensure that all victims have access to remedies and reparation;

(c) Urges the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, thorough, effective, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular all allegations of international crimes, and calls on the State of Palestine to ensure that all victims have access to remedies and reparation;

(d) Recommends that all parties respect international law, including international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability for grave violations;

(e) Reiterates the calls to all States and to relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures to ensure full respect and compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Human Rights Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council, including resolution 2334 (2016);

(f) Calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Conventions to take measures to ensure respect of the Conventions by all parties.

⁶¹ See A/HRC/35/19, para. 81.

⁶² See A/71/364, para. 6.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
15 March 2019

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fortieth session

25 February–22 March 2019

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report, the eleventh submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1, covers the period from 1 November 2017 to 31 October 2018. It provides an overview of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including ongoing lack of accountability for violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. The report contains recommendations for the Government of Israel, the Government of the State of Palestine and the authorities in the Gaza Strip.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. Submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1, the present report provides an overview of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory for the period from 1 November 2017 to 31 October 2018.

2. The information contained in the report is drawn mainly from human rights monitoring activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It also reflects information obtained from government sources, other United Nations entities, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The report should be read in conjunction with other relevant reports submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly and by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the Human Rights Council.¹

3. During the reporting period, violence resulted in a high number of casualties in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Widespread protests and demonstrations, often escalating into clashes between Palestinians and Israeli security forces, followed the statement of the President of the United States of America, on 6 December 2017, on Jerusalem. Those demonstrations, which continued until the end of February 2018 in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, were met with an often excessive response by Israeli security forces, resulting in the death of 28 Palestinians² and over 7,000 injured.³ A new round of demonstrations, referred to as the Great March of Return, began in Gaza on 30 March 2018 and continued throughout the reporting period. In that context, 169 Palestinian demonstrators were killed and over 24,000 injured by Israeli security forces.⁴ Hostilities between Israel and armed groups in Gaza escalated on several occasions, causing 65 Palestinian fatalities. During the reporting period, 274 Palestinians, including 50 children, were killed by Israeli security forces in the West Bank and Gaza, and 11 Israelis (7 civilians and 4 members of Israeli security forces) were killed by Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁵

4. The Israeli blockade and closures of Gaza entered their twelfth year, with further movement restrictions introduced. Severe punitive measures by authorities of the State of Palestine on Gaza compounded an ever-deteriorating humanitarian situation and worsening de-development. Amid the intra-Palestinian political divide, over 100 alleged Hamas affiliates were arrested and many of them administratively detained in the West Bank at the end of September. In Gaza, the authorities continued to arbitrarily arrest and detain Fatah affiliates.

5. Israel failed to uphold its full human rights and international humanitarian law obligations as the occupying Power. Settlement expansion continued at a fast pace and several communities remained at a risk of forcible transfer. Demolitions and evictions, movement restrictions and practices of collective punishment continued. Settler violence significantly increased, with the Israeli authorities frequently failing to sufficiently protect the Palestinian population or ensure accountability for the perpetrators of violence. Concerns remained over the detention practices of Israel, including the use of administrative detention. Freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly came under increasing pressure, with Israel taking measures to limit a number of critical voices.

6. In the West Bank and Gaza there were serious concerns regarding arbitrary detention and ill-treatment, in some cases amounting to torture, by Palestinian authorities. There was a marked deterioration in protection of the freedom of expression and of assembly. This included the violent dispersal by Palestinian security forces of a peaceful demonstration in Ramallah on 13 June 2018.

¹ A/73/410, A/73/420, A/HRC/40/42 and A/HRC/40/43.

² OHCHR monitoring.

³ See www.palestinercs.org/index.php?langid=1&page=post&pid=24351&catid=4&parentid=11186.

⁴ Figures provided by the Ministry of Health of the State of Palestine.

⁵ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA).

Legal framework

7. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are applicable in the entirety of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely, Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. A detailed analysis of the relevant legal obligations is contained in a report of the Secretary-General on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,⁶ and remained applicable for the duration of the reporting period.

II. Violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by all duty bearers

A. Israel

1. Obligations of the occupying Power under international humanitarian law

8. Advancement of plans for settlement construction continued at a fast pace. Settlements amount to a violation by the occupying Power of the prohibition to transfer parts of its civilian population into territory it occupies. Such transfer is considered a war crime.⁷ Settler violence against Palestinians rose considerably, with the number of incidents in 2018 being the highest since 2015.⁸ These developments are described in the report of the High Commissioner submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 37/36.⁹

9. During the reporting period, Israeli authorities demolished 402 Palestinian structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, including 149 residential structures and a school. Forty-three Palestinians were evicted from four Palestinian structures in East Jerusalem.¹⁰ On 24 May 2018, the Israeli High Court of Justice issued a ruling in the case of the Bedouin community of Khan al-Ahmar/Abu al-Helu, allowing for the demolition of the community's structures. The Court upheld the demolition orders in September 2018 following further petitions. The destruction of private property is prohibited under international humanitarian law unless rendered absolutely necessary by military operations.¹¹ As at 31 October 2018, the demolition had not been carried out, but the community of 180 Palestinians, half of whom are children, remained at imminent risk of forcible transfer.¹²

10. Israeli practices that in many cases constitute collective punishment¹³ continued. The blockade of Gaza entered its twelfth year, with a wide-ranging impact on the rights of Palestinians. Closures were tightened during the second quarter of 2018, reportedly in response to rocket attacks and the launching of incendiary kites and balloons from Gaza into Israel. In a tweet dated 13 October 2018, the Israeli Defense Minister stated that as long as the violent protests continued on the Gaza border, including the launching of incendiary balloons and kites and the burning of tires near Israeli towns, the supply of fuel and gas for Gaza would not be renewed.¹⁴ From July onward, Israel regularly changed the

⁶ A/HRC/34/38, paras. 3–12.

⁷ Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Convention), art. 49; Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (vii).

⁸ Information provided by OCHA.

⁹ A/HRC/40/42.

¹⁰ Information provided by OCHA.

¹¹ Fourth Convention, art. 53.

¹² Individual or mass forcible transfers are prohibited. See the Fourth Convention, arts. 49 (1) and 147, and the Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) (viii).

¹³ A/HRC/34/36, para. 36 and A/HRC/24/30, para. 22.

¹⁴ AvigdorLieberman@twitter.com, available at <https://twitter.com/AvigdorLieberman/status/1051129236805865472>.

fishing limit in waters off Gaza, at times reducing it to as little as 3 nautical miles,¹⁵ reportedly in response to the Great March of Return demonstrations.¹⁶

11. In the West Bank, Israeli security forces punitively demolished five Palestinian houses and sealed two rooms in two other houses, affecting 51 Palestinians. Closures were frequently reported in Palestinian towns and villages, particularly following incidents involving attacks or alleged attacks on Israelis. For example, Israeli security forces imposed a closure on Hizma village between 17 and 29 January 2018, and put up posters in the village implying that the measure was in the nature of collective punishment in response to residents of the village throwing stones at Israeli settlers' cars. The posters depicted the roadblock and a damaged Israeli bus, with text to the effect of: When you inflict damage like that, we respond like this.

12. As at 31 October 2018, Israeli authorities continued to withhold the bodies of 31 Palestinians killed by Israeli security forces, including 4 children.¹⁷ On 14 December 2017, the Israeli High Court of Justice ruled there was no legal basis for Israel to withhold the bodies of Palestinian attackers, and ordered the State to release them within six months unless legislation allowing the practice was enacted. On 18 December 2017, the Israeli Cabinet decided that the bodies would not be returned. The High Court held an additional hearing on 17 July 2018 on the matter, but a decision remained pending as at the end of the reporting period. Withholding from their families the bodies of individuals killed in attacks or alleged attacks amounts to a form of collective punishment. Collective punishment is prohibited by international humanitarian law and also violates several human rights.¹⁸

13. The adoption of the nation-State law, in July 2018, which anchors inherent discrimination against non-Jewish communities in Israel, raised further concern regarding compliance with the law of occupation, insofar as it applies to East Jerusalem and, possibly, to settlements in the rest of the West Bank.¹⁹

2. Civilian casualties in the context of hostilities

14. In 2018, hostilities between Palestinian armed groups and Israel reached the highest level since the 2014 conflict, with concern about the lack of respect for the principle of distinction by all parties. Some 308 rockets and 577 mortar shells²⁰ were fired from Gaza towards Israel, injuring 31 Israelis.²¹ The rockets and mortars fired from Gaza are indiscriminate in nature and therefore in violation of international humanitarian law. Meanwhile, Israeli security forces launched dozens of attacks on Gaza, firing 725 missiles and 207 shells at armed groups' tunnels, military training sites and observation posts and, in several incidents, at buildings in residential areas. This resulted in the deaths of 65 Palestinians, including 3 children and 1 pregnant woman.

15. On 14 July 2018, Israeli security forces conducted air strikes targeting an empty building under construction belonging to the Palestinian Ministry of Culture, in a populated area of Gaza City. Two boys (aged 14 years) were killed and 23 Palestinians were injured. Significant damage was caused to nearby buildings, including the premises of an NGO providing services for children with cerebral palsy. The Israel Defense Forces asserted that the building was being used as a military training site. On 9 August 2018, Israeli security

¹⁵ The fishing zone was reduced four times: on 12 December 2017, 9 and 17 July 2018 and 7 October 2018. On 31 October 2018, Israeli authorities reportedly decided to extend the southern sea border of Gaza from 6 to 9 nautical miles and kept the northern sea border at 6 nautical miles.

¹⁶ "Lieberman orders narrowing of Gaza fishing zone, citing border violence", Times of Israel, 6 October 2018. Available at www.timesofisrael.com/liberman-orders-narrowing-of-gaza-fishing-zone-citing-border-violence/.

¹⁷ Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center, communication sent to OHCHR.

¹⁸ Fourth Convention, art. 33, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts.12, 14 and 17, and A/HRC/37/38, para. 12.

¹⁹ See also A/HRC/40/42, para. 13.

²⁰ Information provided by the United Nations Department of Safety and Security.

²¹ Information provided by OCHA.

forces struck a mosque in Dayr al-Balah, and hit a nearby house, killing a pregnant woman and her 18-month-old daughter.

16. On 28 October 2018, three children, aged 13, 14 and 15 years, were killed by a missile fired from a drone near the fence south-east of Dayr al-Balah. According to information received, Israeli security forces prevented paramedics from approaching the site for approximately two hours. The Israel Defense Forces stated that the soldiers were not aware the victims were children and said they “were observed sabotaging the fence and digging in the ground next to it”.²² According to information received by OHCHR, no ammunition or weapons were found near the bodies.

17. According to Israeli security forces, some of the Palestinians killed close to the Gaza-Israel fence were attempting to plant improvised explosive devices aimed at harming Israeli security forces, while others were attempting to breach the fence to enter Israel. On 17 February 2018, four Israeli soldiers were reportedly injured when an improvised explosive device exploded close to the fence.²³

3. Recurring human rights violations

Violations of the right to life and security of person

18. There were serious concerns of excessive use of force and possible unlawful killings by Israeli security forces during the reporting period, with 274 Palestinian fatalities,²⁴ including 2 women, 48 boys and 2 girls, with a vast majority in Gaza. This marks a significant increase from the previous reporting period, during which Israeli security forces killed 55 Palestinians, including 14 children. Among the victims, 192, including 37 children, were killed in the context of demonstrations, 4 in search and arrest operations carried out by Israeli security forces and 12 in the context of attacks and alleged attacks against Israelis; 3 Palestinians died in Israeli custody.

19. Following the announcement by the President of the United States on Jerusalem, demonstrations broke out across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which in many instances developed into clashes between demonstrators and Israeli security forces. Between 6 December 2017 and 28 February 2018, 28 Palestinians – 22 men and 6 boys – were killed by Israeli security forces in such contexts,²⁵ many in circumstances that did not seem to pose an imminent threat of death or serious injury that would have justified the use of lethal force. While the response of Israeli security forces initially seemed restrained in the West Bank, the forces increasingly used live ammunition against demonstrators starting in January 2018, with 175 injuries from such ammunition recorded since then. In Gaza, the use of live ammunition against demonstrators was observed from 6 December 2017, resulting in over 400 injuries by the end of February 2018.

20. Furthermore, on several occasions, Israeli security forces used force in law enforcement in a manner that led to unnecessary injury and death, including by targeting the head or upper part of the body with live ammunition or rubber bullets. In at least 10 incidents that occurred between December 2017 and February 2018 in the West Bank, 10 victims, including 6 children, were hit in the head with live ammunition or rubber coated metal bullets. Four of the victims, including three children, were consequently killed. In Gaza, during the same period, eight Palestinians, including a 15-year-old boy, were killed when shot with live ammunition in the head or upper part of the body.

²² Judah Ari Gross and agencies, “Army says it didn’t know Palestinians targeted on border were minors”, Times of Israel, 31 October 2018. Available at www.timesofisrael.com/army-says-it-didnt-know-palestinians-targeted-on-border-were-minors/.

²³ Matan Tzuri and others, “4 soldiers wounded near Gaza border as explosive device is set off”, Ynetnews.com, 17 February 2018. Available at www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-5118147,00.html.

²⁴ Including one Palestinian killed by a private security guard.

²⁵ A total of 16 Palestinians, including 3 children, were killed in Gaza, and 12 Palestinians, including 3 children, were killed in the West Bank. Another Palestinian was killed in the West Bank by a private security guard.

21. During clashes in Nabi Salih in the West Bank on 15 December 2017, Israeli security forces shot and seriously wounded a 15-year-old boy in the face at close range with a rubber-coated bullet. The child was reportedly throwing stones at members of the Israeli security forces from the top of an abandoned building. On 11 January 2018 in Iraq Burin, in Nablus, Israeli security forces shot a 17-year-old in the head with live ammunition, killing him. The victim had reportedly thrown stones at a passing Israeli security forces' patrol and was running away when a soldier opened fire from a distance of approximately 40 m. In both cases, the victims did not appear to pose an imminent threat of death or serious injury when they were killed, raising concerns of excessive use of force.

22. On 15 December 2017, during demonstrations near the fence east of Gaza City, Israeli security forces killed a wheelchair user with a bullet to the head. The man was shot approximately 20 m from the fence in circumstances that did not appear to constitute an imminent threat of death or serious injury that would have justified the use of lethal force.²⁶

23. Large-scale demonstrations started on 30 March 2018²⁷ along the perimeter fence between Israel and Gaza, under the banner of the Great March of Return, calling for the right of return for Palestinian refugees and protesting the Israeli blockade on Gaza. In the context of those demonstrations, 169 Palestinians (including 1 woman, 30 boys and 1 girl) and 1 Israeli soldier were killed. Three Israeli soldiers and over 24,000 Palestinians were injured, including over 5,800 with live ammunition.²⁸ The World Health Organization (WHO) estimated that as many as 1,200 of those injured would require long-term limb reconstruction and extensive rehabilitation,²⁹ which might not be available in Gaza.

24. On 30 March 2018, a 19-year-old man was shot dead approximately 400 m from the fence, near Jabaliya. Evidence, including video footage, shows that he was shot while he was carrying a tire and running away from Israeli security forces in circumstances that did not appear to constitute an imminent threat of death or serious injury. On 27 July 2018, Israeli security forces shot an 11-year-old boy in the head, killing him, east of Rafah. Witnesses reported that the boy was watching demonstrators waving flags, burning tires and throwing stones, approximately 30 m from the barbed wire, when Israeli security forces opened fire indiscriminately towards the demonstrators.

25. Israeli security forces killed or injured several medical personnel while that personnel were carrying out their duties, mostly during demonstrations or clashes with demonstrators. According to WHO, Israeli security forces injured 17 health workers in the West Bank while 3 health workers were killed and 496 injured in Gaza. For example, on 1 June 2018, a female paramedic volunteering with the Palestinian Medical Relief Society was killed after being shot with live ammunition in the chest, approximately 25 m from the fence, east of Khan Yunis. Witnesses reported that she was killed while trying to rescue injured demonstrators at the fence.

26. In Gaza and the West Bank, journalists were injured and some were killed by Israeli security forces during demonstrations. In the West Bank, 52 instances of physical attacks against and injuries inflicted on journalists were documented during the demonstrations in December 2017 alone.³⁰ During the Great March of Return demonstrations in Gaza, 2 journalists were killed and 113 journalists were injured by Israeli security forces, including 70 with live ammunition.³¹

27. Throughout the reporting period, Israeli security forces enforced restricted areas at sea off the coast of Gaza by firing live ammunition and confiscating and damaging fishing boats and equipment. A total of 329 shooting incidents were recorded: 1 fisherman was killed and 21 others (including 1 child) were injured with live ammunition. A total of 70

²⁶ See www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=22550&LangID=E.

²⁷ The demonstrations were ongoing at the end of the reporting period.

²⁸ Information provided by OCHA and Palestinian Ministry of Health.

²⁹ See www.emro.who.int/images/stories/palestine/documents/WHO_Health_Cluster_SitRep_23_Sep_-6_Oct_2018.pdf?ua=1.

³⁰ See www.madacenter.org/report.php?lang=1&id=1768&category_id=13&year=2018.

³¹ Communication to OHCHR from Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, 13 December 2018.

fishermen (including 5 children) were detained, while 21 fishing boats were confiscated and 8 damaged.

28. There were also concerns of excessive use of force and interference with medical care during raids and arrest operations in Palestinian towns and villages in the West Bank. On 22 February 2018, shortly after midnight, Israeli security forces raided the centre of Jericho during an arrest operation and clashed with local residents. Israeli security forces shot a Palestinian in the stomach with live ammunition as the man was charging towards the soldiers with a metal bar. As recorded by surveillance cameras, the soldiers kicked and beat the injured man with the butts of their guns as he lay bleeding. Left without medical assistance, he eventually died. Initially, the security forces informed his family he had died from tear-gas inhalation, but the Palestinian forensic doctor who attended the autopsy concluded he had died of haemorrhage.

29. On 3 February 2018, during a night-time search and arrest raid in Birqin, Israeli security forces entered, by force and without prior warning, a house in the village, and according to the 40-year-old owner of the house, released an unmuzzled dog, terrifying his wife and young children. The dog bit the owner in the arm and thigh for at least 10 minutes, with no effort by the soldiers to restrain the dog. A soldier punched the man in the nose, fracturing it. The man was arrested and released eight days later without charges. He had to undergo reconstructive skin surgery and now suffers from severe health complications, including gangrene.

Detention, torture and ill-treatment, and violations of the right to a fair trial

30. Following the announcement by the President of the United States on Jerusalem and the demonstrations and clashes that followed, a spike in arrests of Palestinians was observed in the West Bank. Israeli security forces arrested 926 Palestinians in December 2017, and an average of 750 per month in January and February 2018. The number of arrests before and after this during the reporting period averaged around 450 per month.³² As at 31 October 2018, 5,426 Palestinians were being held in Israeli detention, including 43 women, 218 boys and 2 girls; 41 of the children were under the age of 16. This included 481 Palestinians,³³ including 4 children, held under administrative detention without charge or trial. In Gaza, 175 Palestinians, including 28 children, were arrested by Israeli security forces during the reporting period. As previously noted, this included 70 fishermen arrested at sea.³⁴ Many of the cases raise concerns of arbitrary arrests.³⁵

31. Certain cases have raised concerns of violations of due process and fair trial rights of such gravity as to give an arbitrary character to the deprivation of liberty, such as in the case of the Head of the Gaza World Vision office, Mohammad el Halabi, arrested in June 2016 and detained since then.³⁶ His lawyer was only allowed access to all previously undisclosed evidence one and a half years after the start of the trial and was only permitted to start examining defence witnesses 24 months into the trial, after the prosecution had heard witnesses for over a year and cross-examined the accused for six months. There were concerns that the prosecution might have unduly prolonged the proceedings, in contravention of the basic fair trial requirements outlined in article 9 (3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. In view of such shortcomings, it is of concern that Mr. El Halabi has now been detained for more than two and a half years without receiving a verdict in his case.

32. The use by Israel of administrative detention, including for children, continued. An illustrative example was the continued administrative detention of Palestinian parliamentarian Khalida Jarrar, who was arrested by Israeli security forces on 2 July 2017.³⁷ Ms. Jarrar's current detention order, based on secret evidence, was set to end in February ³² Information provided by the Palestinian Prisoners' Commission and human rights organizations.

³³ See www.btselem.org/statistics/detainees_and_prisoners.

³⁴ Information provided by Al Mezan Center for Human Rights.

³⁵ A/HRC/37/42, paras. 10–14.

³⁶ Ibid., paras. 27–32.

³⁷ A/HRC/37/42, para. 55.

2019. In February 2018, Palestinian administrative detainees started a boycott of Israeli courts to protest their detention and the involvement of Israeli courts in exacerbating this policy. The boycott was provisionally suspended in September 2018, following negotiations with the Israeli intelligence service to place limits on the length of administrative detention orders and their renewal. Administrative detention without charge or trial based on undisclosed evidence for indefinite periods, without an opportunity to meaningfully challenge the detention, raises serious concerns of arbitrary detention. Echoing concerns raised by the Human Rights Committee and the Committee against Torture, the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights have repeatedly called upon Israel to end the practice of administrative detention and to ensure that all administrative detainees are promptly charged or released.³⁸

33. The treatment by Israel of children during arrest and detention remained of particular concern.³⁹ According to accounts collected by the NGO Military Court Watch, of 80 children detained by Israeli security forces in 2017, 65 per cent were arrested in night raids, 94 per cent were hand-tied upon arrest, 78 per cent were blindfolded or hooded following arrest, 65 per cent were subjected to physical abuse, 66 per cent were strip-searched and 81 per cent were denied access to a lawyer prior to questioning.⁴⁰

34. On 19 December 2017, 16-year-old Ahed Tamimi was arrested by Israeli security forces in Nabi Saleh, in the West Bank, following an incident on 15 December 2017 during which she was filmed slapping and kicking two Israeli soldiers in the front yard of her family's house. The girl was arrested in the middle of the night and interrogated without the presence of her parents or lawyer. According to her lawyer, she was subjected to ill-treatment and threats during interrogation, and requests by the lawyer to release her on bail before and during the proceedings were refused. Following closed hearings, she accepted a plea bargain and was sentenced to eight months of imprisonment. She was released on 29 July 2018 after completing her sentence. Children should be detained only as a measure of last resort, for the shortest appropriate period of time, and with their best interests as the primary consideration.⁴¹

35. Ill-treatment of Palestinian detainees, both adults and children, in Israeli detention continued to be of concern. During the reporting period, Israeli civil society received allegations of ill-treatment from 194 Palestinians, including 17 women, 10 children and 1 person with Down's syndrome.⁴² According to one NGO, the Public Committee Against Torture in Israel, out of 120 complaints of alleged ill-treatment and torture it submitted to the Israel Security Agency over five years, 85 per cent of the cases involved sleep deprivation, 58 per cent included threats to hurt or arrest family members, 36 per cent involved stress positions, 27 per cent implied harsh physical violence, 12 per cent involved sexual humiliation and assault, and 8.3 per cent involved refusal of access to toilets, especially during interrogation.⁴³

36. During a night raid in Silwan on 2 July 2018, Israeli security forces arrested a 15-year-old boy along with his adult brother. The child was blindfolded, handcuffed and kicked several times during transport. During the interrogation, he was shackled to a chair and blindfolded by the interrogator, pushed to the floor and kicked in different parts of his body. Both the child and his brother were released the same day without charges.

37. There were reports of medical negligence and inadequate medical care for Palestinian detainees,⁴⁴ as in the case of an 18-year-old from Dayr Nizam, arrested by ³⁸ A/HRC/37/42, para. 18.

³⁹ See also A/HRC/34/38 and A/HRC/37/42.

⁴⁰ See www.militarycourtwatch.org/files/server/BRIEFING%20PAPER%20-%20FEB%202018.pdf.

⁴¹ In accordance with articles 3 (1) and 37 (b) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. See also www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=22590&LangID=E.

⁴² Information provided by the Public Committee Against Torture in Israel.

⁴³ See <http://stoptorture.org.il/wp-content/uploads/2018/07/SitRep2018.pdf>.

⁴⁴ As at mid-2018, a total of 61 Palestinians had died in Israeli custody since 1967 due to medical negligence. See www.addameer.org/publications/joint-report-occupation-forces-arrested-3500-palestinians-during-first-half-2018.

Israeli security forces on 7 April 2018. Although his family informed Israeli security forces that he suffered from a chronic liver and kidney condition and also informed them of his dietary and medication needs, those needs were not provided for while he was in custody. On 14 May, he stopped receiving medication altogether, which led to serious complications and his transfer to hospital, where he was in a coma for three days. He was released from custody on 28 May 2018, suffering from a loss of eyesight, possibly permanent.

38. Some Palestinians reported being arrested to pressure family members to turn themselves in. For instance, on 6 August 2018, in Abu Dis, Israeli security forces arrested a 63-year-old man with a heart condition and reduced mobility, and detained him for several hours to pressure his wanted 23-year-old son. He was released after the son turned himself in following threats by Israeli security forces to keep his father in detention. The NGO B'Tselem reported two similar cases in Abu Dis and Ayzariyah in September 2018.⁴⁵

Lack of access to justice and accountability

39. Lack of access to justice and accountability for Palestinian victims of violations committed by Israeli security forces persists. With the large number of killings at the Gaza fence during the reporting period, it is of particular concern that the internal fact-finding mechanism reportedly used by Israel to examine such incidents might not operate in line with international standards.⁴⁶ Several proceedings relating to older cases of apparent excessive use of force by Israeli security forces were closed with no resulting accountability during the reporting period. For a detailed analysis of accountability-related issues, see A/HRC/40/43.

Restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly

40. Media, civil society and human rights defenders working on the promotion and protection of Palestinian rights continued to operate under increasing pressure from Israeli authorities.⁴⁷ Reprisals against, and attempts to delegitimize and discredit, NGOs and other civil society actors continued. For example, B'Tselem was verbally attacked publicly by high-ranking politicians, including the Prime Minister of Israel.⁴⁸ Several civil society organizations in East Jerusalem were closed or had their closure orders extended on the basis of alleged ties to authorities of the State of Palestine⁴⁹ while legislative developments affected the funding, access and activities of others. Human rights defenders, journalists and media agencies were targeted and subject to harassment by the Israeli authorities and security forces. For example, on 7 May 2018, the Israeli authorities revoked the work visa of the director of Human Rights Watch in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, invoking alleged past involvement in boycott, divestment and sanctions activism. A challenge to this decision was pending in Israeli courts at the time of writing.

41. Journalists came under attack while covering demonstrations and clashes between demonstrators and Israeli security forces. In the West Bank, journalists were targeted with rubber coated bullets, crowd control measures and physical assault, especially during the demonstrations of December 2017.⁵⁰ On 20 December 2017, Israeli security forces arrested a journalist covering a peaceful protest in East Jerusalem. He was released the same day on the condition that he would be banned from certain areas of East Jerusalem for 10 days, thus restricting his ability to work. During the same protest, an Israeli security forces officer used pepper spray on another journalist filming the protest. According to the Palestinian Center for Development and Media Freedoms (MADA), 24 Palestinian journalists were arrested by Israeli security forces during the reporting period, 11 of whom remained in ⁴⁵ See www.btselem.org/routine_founded_on_violence/20181111_palestinians_arrested_to_pressure_relatives.

⁴⁶ A/73/420, paras. 60–61.

⁴⁷ For further information on measures targeting human rights defenders, see A/HRC/40/43.

⁴⁸ See www.timesofisrael.com/netanyahu-denounces-btselem-chiefs-un-speech-as-full-of-lies/.

⁴⁹ Mordechai Sones, "Israel extends ban on PA operations in Jerusalem", Israel National News, 1 February 2018. Available at www.israelnationalnews.com/News/News.aspx/241457.

⁵⁰ See para. 26 above.

custody as at the end of the reporting period, including 4 held under administrative detention.

42. In Gaza, two journalists were killed by Israeli security forces during the reporting period, including 25-year-old Ahmad Abu Hussein, who was shot in the abdomen with live ammunition on 13 April 2018, approximately 300 m from the fence, in Jabaliya. He died from his injuries on 25 April 2018. Evidence, including video footage, shows that when he was shot, he was photographing the demonstrations, wearing a vest marked “PRESS”.

43. In April 2018, Israeli authorities closed the Elia Association for Youth Media, an East Jerusalem-based association that trains youth on working in the media sector. The Minister of Defense of Israel ordered the closure, claiming that the organization had a hidden agenda with activities supporting acts of terrorism.⁵¹ Earlier in 2018, Israeli security forces had prevented the association from holding a press conference in East Jerusalem and arrested two men attending the conference, as well as the director of the association.

44. In July 2018, Israeli security forces arrested the director of Al-Quds TV and two journalists working for the channel after it was banned by the Israeli authorities. The journalists were interrogated about their work, subjected to threats and accused of incitement of violence. They were all released on bail within a few weeks, while the director of the channel was banned for two months from leaving Ramallah and contacting media agencies.

Restrictions on freedom of movement and on the enjoyment of economic and social rights

Gaza

45. Adding to the 11-year Israeli blockade and closures of Gaza, movement restrictions were tightened during the reporting period, with devastating impact on the exercise of the rights to health, education, family life and an adequate standard of living.⁵² Statements by Israeli authorities suggested these additional restrictions were imposed in response to rocket attacks and the launching of incendiary kites and balloons from Gaza towards Israel, raising further concerns of collective punishment.⁵³

46. Patients who need – often urgently – medical treatment continued to face difficulties in obtaining permits to exit Gaza.⁵⁴ Out of the 25,260 requests, submitted mainly by the Palestinian Authority Civil Affairs Office on behalf of patients, 1,741 (6.9 per cent) were denied and 8,544 (33.8 per cent) were delayed up to several months. Palestinians injured during the Great March of Return demonstrations were most affected, with only 22 per cent (74 of 335) of exit applications approved,⁵⁵ compared to the average monthly approval rate of about 58 per cent for other patients.⁵⁶ Some patients died after their permit was denied by Israel, or as they were waiting for its approval.⁵⁷

47. For example, Israeli authorities delayed issuing an exit permit to a cancer patient from Gaza for a medical appointment because he did not provide information about members of armed groups in Gaza.⁵⁸ Following a significant deterioration in his condition, he was eventually allowed to pass through the Erez crossing point but died in hospital 10 days later. A 14-year-old boy who was shot in the chest with live ammunition on 30 May 2018 died on 18 June 2018 after being repeatedly denied an exit permit.

⁵¹ AvigdorLieberman@twitter.com, 16 April 2018, available at <https://twitter.com/AvigdorLieberman/status/985845422739607558> (in Hebrew).

⁵² A/73/420, para. 25.

⁵³ See also para. 10 above.

⁵⁴ See also A/HRC/37/38, para. 45 and A/73/420, para. 19.

⁵⁵ See www.ochaopt.org/content/more-casualties-sustained-during-great-march-return-gaza.

⁵⁶ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-strip-early-warning-indicators-september-2018.

⁵⁷ A/73/420, paras. 20–21.

⁵⁸ Ibid., para. 18.

48. Between 9 July and 14 August 2018, and between 17 and 21 October 2018, Israeli authorities banned altogether the exit of the few types and quantities of goods allowed out from Gaza, resulting in the lowest monthly export levels since 2015.⁵⁹ Entry of all goods except for food, medical supplies and animal fodder was halted. Between 9 July and 14 August 2018, fuel and cooking gas entered irregularly, and were banned again from 12 to 21 October 2018, including United Nations-funded fuel for critical water, sanitation and health facilities.

49. The unemployment rate in Gaza increased to 53.7 per cent in the second quarter of 2018, exceeding 70 per cent among young people and reaching 78 per cent among women.⁶⁰ Per capita gross domestic product decreased to an estimated $410 in the second quarter of 2018, down from $450 in the second quarter of 2017.⁶¹ The situation was compounded by a steady decline in transfer of funds by authorities of the State of Palestine, a decrease in international aid support, and funding cuts to programmes of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

West Bank

50. In the West Bank, Israeli restrictions on the freedom of movement of Palestinians continued, severely affecting a range of rights. A survey conducted by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in July 2018 recorded 705 permanent road obstacles to Palestinian vehicular and, in some cases, pedestrian movement, including checkpoints and roadblocks. OCHA further documented 93 instances of closures of village entrances between January 2017 and July 2018, which affected 30 communities.⁶² While such restrictions can be justified for legitimate security needs, any limitation to the right to freedom of movement has to be necessary and proportional to the end sought and should not amount to collective punishment.

51. Restrictions particularly affected the exercise of the right to health. During the reporting period, 15 per cent of permit applications for Palestinian patients seeking health care in East Jerusalem hospitals or in Israel were rejected. The Palestine Red Crescent Society reported that 84 per cent of its ambulances had been forced to transfer patients to an ambulance with Israeli licence plates at a checkpoint, rather than allowed direct access to transport patients from other parts of the West Bank to East Jerusalem hospitals, causing delays and risking health complications. The Palestine Red Crescent Society reported 30 instances where ambulances were prevented access and 60 assaults by Israeli security forces or Israeli settlers on its ambulances during the reporting period.⁶³

B. Palestinian authorities

Violations of the right to life and security of person

52. Palestinian security forces in the West Bank and Gaza violently dispersed peaceful demonstrators calling for the lifting of measures imposed by authorities of the State of Palestine on Gaza.

53. The authorities in Gaza did not carry out any executions during the reporting period, in comparison to six executions during the previous period. On 29 October 2018, a Gaza appeals court commuted a death sentence to life imprisonment in the case of a woman convicted of murder. Nonetheless, Gaza civilian and military courts handed down eight death sentences (to seven men and one woman). Serious concerns with regard to due process and fair trial guarantees were present in these cases, including the sentencing of

⁵⁹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-crossings-operations-status-monthly-update-september-2018 and www.ochaopt.org/sites/default/files/gaza_crossings_operations_status_october_2018.pdf.

⁶⁰ World Bank, "Economic monitoring report to the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee" (2018), p. 9.

⁶¹ See www.ochaopt.org/content/gaza-strip-early-warning-indicators-september-2018.

⁶² See www.ochaopt.org/content/over-700-road-obstacles-control-palestinian-movement-within-west-bank.

⁶³ See also A/HRC/40/42, para. 43.

civilians by military courts. On 6 June 2018, the President of the State of Palestine signed an instrument of accession to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty. While this is an important step towards the abolition of the death penalty in the State of Palestine, further steps are required for accession to be given full effect.

Detention, torture and ill-treatment and violations of the right to a fair trial

54. There were concerns of arbitrary detention by Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza. Journalists, activists and political opponents were arrested by authorities in both areas for exercising their fundamental freedoms. In September 2018, a wave of political arrests took place throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, with the arrest or summons for interrogation of 50 Fatah affiliates in Gaza, followed by the arrests of over 100 Hamas affiliates in the West Bank, in a coordinated overnight arrest operation.

55. Other Palestinians reported being arrested without legal basis, with some spending weeks and, in some cases, months without being formally charged or having their case reviewed by a competent court. Some stated they had been denied procedural guarantees, including the rights to access legal counsel and to contact family. In other reported cases the presumed or actual sexual orientation of the individual could have been a reason for arbitrary arrest. While homosexuality is not criminalized in the West Bank, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex individuals reported being subjected to arrests and accused of crimes related to collaboration, morality, public indecency or drugs, while being questioned about their sexuality or asked to reveal names of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex individuals before being released without charges. In at least one case, a lawyer claimed having been harassed by the security forces for taking up such a case.

56. Many of those arrested in the West Bank were held in administrative detention based on orders by governors.⁶⁴ Between 1 November 2017 and 30 September 2018, the Independent Commission for Human Rights recorded 173 cases of administrative detention based on such orders, a sharp increase above the 99 cases recorded between 1 November 2016 and 31 October 2017. In some cases, individuals were detained for months without any apparent intention by the authorities to charge them and without a judicial review. In other cases, pretrial detainees released by the court for lack of evidence were immediately rearrested on a governor's orders. This form of administrative detention appeared to be used as an alternative to criminal proceedings, when evidence was lacking, which would constitute arbitrary deprivation of liberty.⁶⁵

57. In Gaza, arbitrary arrests and detention also remained a concern,⁶⁶ as illustrated by an incident in January 2018, when eight children were among those detained by the internal security agency, which is tasked with maintaining security in Gaza, including in relation to alleged collaborators with Israel and dissident political groups. Several of those arrested were reportedly affiliated with Fatah, Salafist groups or other Islamic factions, raising concerns that some of them were detained solely on the basis of their political affiliation. Many of the detainees held under the custody of internal security agency spent significant time, in some cases two or three months, without access to legal aid or family.

58. In both Gaza and the West Bank, detainees continued to report ill-treatment, and in some cases torture, during interrogation, raising strong concerns of extraction of confession under duress. In the West Bank, there was a growing concern over treatment in some detention facilities, particularly over credible allegations of ill-treatment.⁶⁷ Forty-nine detainees interviewed by OHCHR reported having been subjected to some form of ill-treatment; several of the incidents described were of such gravity that they may amount to ⁶⁴ See also A/HRC/37/42, paras. 24–26.

⁶⁵ See also A/HRC/34/38, para. 54, A/HRC/34/36, paras. 55–58 and 70–74, A/HRC/31/44, para. 78, and A/HRC/31/40, paras. 56–58 and 69–70.

⁶⁶ See also A/HRC/37/42, paras. 59–60.

⁶⁷ OHCHR also observed conditions of detention that were very poor, unhygienic and inhumane, including overcrowded cells without proper ventilation and lighting, as well as detainees held in solitary confinement for prolonged periods.

torture. Detainees described the use of shackling; the holding of detainees in stress positions for prolonged periods of time to extract confessions; beatings and other forms of physical violence; prolonged use of solitary confinement; insults; threats; humiliating questioning or threats related to sexuality; sleep deprivation; and insufficient health care for severe mental health problems. Most reports concerned the interrogation period and were documented in particular at the facilities used by the joint operations committee in Jericho.⁶⁸ For example, several detainees reported a practice of assault and severe beating upon arrival at the facilities used by the joint operations committee, and several reported having been repeatedly forced to stand handcuffed and blindfolded, with their legs apart, for up to 10 hours at a time.

59. In Gaza, practices of the civil police and internal security agency involving ill-treatment and torture of detainees continued to be reported. In May 2018, two brothers arrested by the internal security agency over accusations of collaboration with authorities of the State of Palestine were subjected to ill-treatment, including beatings and shabah, which involves being forced to sit with one's hands tied to the back of a chair. One of them was released in September 2018 while the other remained in detention as at the end of the reporting period, awaiting his sentence by the military court.

Restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly

60. Restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly were imposed by authorities of the State of Palestine in the West Bank. Several journalists were arrested on the basis of provisions of the law of 2017 on cybercrime.⁶⁹ For instance, on 3 April 2018, Palestinian journalist Rami Samara was arrested and charged with defamation and slander, on the basis of the law. The charges were based on social media posts criticizing the head of the Media Center at An-Najah National University for the dismissal of 17 journalists who had refused to express support for the Prime Minister on their social media accounts. Although the law was amended and significantly improved in May 2018,⁷⁰ following strong criticism and concerns raised by civil society organizations and the international community, the proceedings against Mr. Samara and other journalists, which started before the amendment of the law, continued. The amended law still contains loosely defined provisions, which pose a risk of undue interference with the exercise of freedom of expression.

61. Amid a deep division between Fatah and Hamas, protests against punitive measures imposed by authorities of the State of Palestine on Gaza broke out in the West Bank. On 13 June 2018, the adviser to the Palestinian President on provincial affairs temporarily banned demonstrations in the West Bank in order to prevent a demonstration set to take place that day in Ramallah. Despite the ban, approximately 200 demonstrators gathered peacefully in the city centre, but were violently assaulted and dispersed by Palestinian security forces and individuals in plain clothes.⁷¹ Fifty-six people were violently arrested and released the next day without charges. A staff member of Amnesty International monitoring the demonstration was among those arrested and reported having been subjected to ill-treatment and having witnessed at least 18 other detainees face similar treatment. At least 12 journalists were threatened or impeded from covering the demonstration, and some were physically assaulted.⁷²

62. In Tulkarm and Nablus, on 27 and 30 June 2018 respectively, two demonstrations took place during which two women journalists were physically assaulted by Fatah supporters and prevented from filming the protest. In one instance, the attack occurred in ⁶⁸ This coordinating body is comprised of several Palestinian security agencies. It conducts joint operations and uses the Preventive Security Service headquarters in Jericho as its main detention and interrogation centre.

⁶⁹ See also A/HRC/37/42, para. 42.

⁷⁰ Presidential Decree No. 10; see also A/HRC/40/43, para. 46.

⁷¹ Violent means included the use of flash grenades, pepper spray and tear gas, in addition to brutal arrests and beatings of protestors by large groups of plain-clothed individuals wearing identical caps and acting in a coordinated manner, including with uniformed officers.

⁷² See www.madacenter.org/report.php?lang=2&id=1799&category_id=13&year= (in Arabic).

the presence of the police, who did not intervene. One of the journalists submitted a complaint to the public prosecution office which, according to available information, had not been addressed by the authorities at the time of writing. Civil society members and activists involved in organizing or monitoring the demonstrations were faced with a wave of summons and harassment by Palestinian security forces.

63. Similar violations were recorded in Gaza, where the security forces continued to arbitrarily arrest and subject individuals to ill-treatment for expressing opinions that could be considered critical of the authorities in Gaza.⁷³ In one incident, the internal security agency reportedly detained a journalist for three days at an unknown location, where he was interrogated about his political views and accused of incitement against the authorities in Gaza by planning popular protests. During interrogation, he was reportedly subjected to ill-treatment that may amount to torture, including beatings with batons and a plastic hose and shabah. He was eventually released without charge.

64. Between 13 and 15 September 2018, a journalist was summoned three times by the Gaza authorities for posting comments on social media questioning the Ministry of National Economy. On 15 September, after threats of arrest, he removed the post and made a public apology to the Ministry on social media. After 27 October 2018, he was summoned several times for questioning by the police and the public prosecution office following accusations of defamation by the Ministry. The charges were later dropped after mediation by the governmental media office.

65. Gaza security forces also continued to restrict the right of civilians to peaceful assembly, sometimes by forcibly dispersing demonstrations and gatherings. On 18 June 2018, they forcibly dispersed a demonstration calling for the lifting of punitive measures imposed on Gaza by authorities of the State of Palestine, despite the fact that previous authorization of the demonstration had been granted. Reportedly, about 50 plain-clothed security personnel, some carrying batons, raided the sit-in and forcibly prevented participants from filming or photographing the event. The phones of some participants were briefly confiscated and then returned to them after footage of the demonstration had been deleted by the security personnel. The Ministry of the Interior of Gaza denied this account of the events, including that participants had been arrested.⁷⁴

III. Recommendations

66. In the present report, the High Commissioner documents violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by Israel, the State of Palestine and the authorities in Gaza. The report shows the persistence of patterns previously reported by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner, which have been the subject of extensive past recommendations by various human rights mechanisms.⁷⁵ The persistent lack of accountability and the shrinking space for civil society continue to be of particular concern.

67. The High Commissioner calls on all duty bearers to comply with their international legal obligations and ensure that all alleged violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, that those responsible are held accountable, and that victims are provided with effective redress.

68. The High Commissioner also makes the recommendations listed below.

69. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of Israel:

(a) Ensure that the rules of engagement of Israeli security forces and their application are fully in line with international standards, in particular, that firearms are used only in cases of imminent threat of death or serious injury; take all measures necessary to prevent incidents of excessive use of force; and provide, at the earliest possible moment, first aid to individuals injured by use of force, while taking no steps to prevent the provision of necessary medical care;

⁷³ See also A/HRC/37/42, paras. 43–45.

⁷⁴ Public statement by the spokesperson for the Ministry of the Interior, 18 June 2018. Available at <https://moi.gov.ps/Home/Post/123353> (in Arabic).

⁷⁵ A/HRC/35/19.

(b) Conduct prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and effective investigations into all incidents of use of force by Israeli security forces that led to death or injury of Palestinians, especially in the access-restricted areas of Gaza, and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable and victims are provided with redress;

(c) Ensure respect for international humanitarian law and conduct prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations into allegations of violations related to past and recent escalations of hostilities, hold those responsible accountable and provide redress for victims;

(d) Immediately end all practices of collective punishment; in particular, immediately lift the blockade and punitive closures imposed on Gaza, allow free movement of Palestinians across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and end punitive demolitions and the policy of withholding bodies of Palestinians;

(e) End practices of administrative detention, and any form of arbitrary detention, ensure that all detainees are promptly charged or released, and fully guarantee the right to a fair trial;

(f) Ensure that conditions of detention are fully in accordance with international human rights law, and that detainees are not subject to torture or ill-treatment and ensure that all allegations of ill-treatment are promptly, thoroughly and effectively investigated by an independent and impartial body;

(g) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected, and that civil society actors and journalists are allowed to conduct their professional activities safely, freely and without harassment.

70. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of the State of Palestine:

(a) Ensure compliance with its human rights obligations towards all Palestinians and immediately cease any measures that violate these obligations or that worsen the humanitarian situation in Gaza;

(b) Ensure that the use of force in the context of law enforcement operations is consistent with international human rights standards;

(c) Announce immediately a formal moratorium on executions while taking all steps necessary to give full effect to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty;

(d) End all practices that amount to arbitrary detention, and fully guarantee the rights to due process and fair trial;

(e) Immediately end all practices that amount to torture or other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, ensure that allegations of such violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, hold perpetrators accountable, and guarantee non-repetition of such practices;

(f) Publish, without delay, the human rights treaties acceded to by the State of Palestine in the official government gazette and take steps to make their provisions known to all Palestinians;

(g) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected, and that civil society actors and journalists are allowed to conduct their professional activities safely, freely and without harassment.

71. The High Commissioner recommends that the authorities in Gaza:

(a) Ensure, along with armed groups in Gaza, full respect for international humanitarian law, particularly as it pertains to the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability, consistent with international standards, for grave violations;

(b) Implement an immediate moratorium on the use of the death penalty and cease the practice of trying civilians before military courts;

(c) Refrain from practices that amount to arbitrary arrest or detention, immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, and ensure that all allegations of violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, and that those found responsible are brought to justice;

(d) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected, and that civil society actors and journalists are allowed to conduct their activities safely, freely and without harassment.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
14 March 2019

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fortieth session

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 37/37. It presents an overview of the implementation of resolution 37/37 and also developments during the reporting period that are of relevance to ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 37/37. In that resolution, the Council requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the implementation of the resolution, in particular with reference to the recommendations contained in the reports of the independent commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict, the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict. The report should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the High Commissioner.¹

2. In the report, the High Commissioner addresses issues related to accountability for alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including in connection with the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza and within the scope of law enforcement operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Pursuant to resolution 37/37, the report also addresses recent developments of relevance to ensuring accountability for international law violations, such as concerns about human rights defenders and civil society actors documenting violations and advocating for accountability by all duty bearers, as well as the responsibility of third States to ensure respect for international human rights law and international humanitarian law.

3. The High Commissioner recalls the obligation of Israel, as the occupying Power, to protect the population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.² She reiterates the call to both Israel and the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law and to make full use of technical assistance from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) to assist with the implementation of recommendations addressed to them.³ With respect to the international community, the High Commissioner suggests that the Human Rights Council consider recommending to the General Assembly that it make use of its powers under Article 96 (a) of the Charter of the United Nations in order to specify how all parties can fulfil their obligations in implementing the recommendations reviewed in the report.⁴ Furthermore, in its resolution 37/37, the Council calls on all parties to cooperate fully with the preliminary examination of the International Criminal Court and with any subsequent investigation that may be opened.⁵

II. Update on accountability

A. Accountability for the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza

4. Over four years since the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza, serious concerns persist with regard to the lack of accountability – by all parties to the conflict – for violations of international humanitarian law, including allegations of war crimes. Since the publication of the report of the independent commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict, the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have provided regular updates on the lack of progress in the implementation of the commission's recommendations and

¹ A/HRC/37/41 and A/HRC/35/19.

² A/HRC/34/38, para. 38.

³ A/HRC/35/19, paras. 67, 69, 71 and 73.

⁴ A/HRC/35/19, para. 75.

⁵ See www.icc-cpi.int/itemsDocuments/181205-rep-otp-PE-ENG.pdf.

highlighted concerns in terms of the lack of accountability by both the Israeli and Palestinian authorities.⁶

5. Particularly worrying is the number of cases that, despite serious allegations and prima facie evidence of international law violations, were closed by the Israeli Military Advocate General without any criminal investigation.⁷ According to the most recent update of the Military Advocate General, dated 15 August 2018, out of 500 complaints related to 360 incidents referred to him,⁸ only 31 were referred for criminal investigation. While one investigation led to the conviction of three soldiers for looting, investigations in 28 cases have been concluded without resulting in criminal charges and 2 cases remain pending. Cases relating to 189 incidents have so far been closed.⁹

6. The most recent update included information on decisions taken by the Military Advocate General since the previous update, such as the decision not to proceed to a criminal investigation of the events in and around Rafah that took place on 1 August 2014 (so-called Black Friday),¹⁰ during which 3 Israeli soldiers and 207 Palestinians, including at least 144 civilians, were killed.¹¹ The Military Advocate General further decided not to take action following preliminary examinations relating to seven other cases involving the deaths of 79 Palestinians, mostly civilians, and damage to a hospital and several residential structures. He also provides information on the decision to close one case involving civilian deaths following a preliminary investigation by the military police, as well as to close eight cases pertaining to the killing of over 50 Palestinians, mostly civilians, following criminal investigations.

7. Concerning events that took place in and around Rafah on 1 August 2014, the Military Advocate General concluded that 114 Palestinians had been killed during the fighting, including at least 42 “military operatives”. He acknowledged that Palestinian civilians might have been incidentally killed during the fighting, but concluded that none had directly been targeted. According to the Military Advocate General, the majority of civilians had been killed as a result of targeted aerial strikes aimed at military targets. In cases related to ground operations, he referred to the low number of civilian casualties to demonstrate respect for the principle of proportionality. In a few cases, he recognized that the civilian presence in the targeted area had been larger than expected by Israeli security forces following an initial assessment, but concluded that that had not affected the proportionality assessment, nor the legality of the use of force. He noted that precautionary measures had been taken whenever appropriate, underlining in a number of cases that warnings to the civilian population had not been possible as they would have undermined the objective of the operation at stake. For all cases examined in the update, he concluded that there had been no grounds for reasonable suspicion of criminal misconduct that would warrant the opening of a criminal investigation. Similar conclusions were reached in other cases, for example regarding two attacks that had occurred on 29 July 2014 that had respectively resulted in the deaths of 35 civilians in Khan Yunis and of 19 persons, of whom a significant majority were civilians, in Bureij camp.

8. The information provided by the Military Advocate General in the most recent update, as in previous ones, is insufficient to support the conclusion that the principles of ⁶ A/HRC/37/41, paras. 9–17, A/HRC/34/38, para. 42, and A/71/364, paras. 40 and 51–55.

⁷ See Israel Defense Forces, “Decisions of the IDF Military Advocate General regarding exceptional incidents that allegedly occurred during Operation ‘Protective Edge’ – update No. 6”, available from www.idf.il/en/minisites/wars-and-operations/operation-protective-edge-legal-updates/). See also A/HRC/37/41, para. 14, A/HRC/35/19, para. 18, and A/71/364, para. 40.

⁸ According to the Military Advocate General, “such incidents include events allegedly resulting in significant and unanticipated civilian harm and events where military activity allegedly resulted in damage to medical or UN facilities” (see www.idf.il/en/minisites/wars-and-operations/mag-corps-press-release-initial-release-sept-2014/).

⁹ See Israel Defense Forces, “Decisions of the IDF Military Advocate General”.

¹⁰ Events on 1 August 2014 involved aerial attacks and a ground operation by Israeli security forces following the killing of two of its soldiers and the kidnapping of another one, who was later pronounced dead.

¹¹ See www.btselem.org/press_releases/20160720_fatalities_in_gaza_conflict_2014.

proportionality and precaution have been effectively respected throughout the military operations under review. Instead, the latest update confirms earlier concerns expressed by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner as to the failure of the Military Advocate General and the Attorney General to consistently open criminal investigations in cases where there is prima facie evidence that State agents have committed unlawful actions.¹²

9. In the 31 cases where criminal investigations were launched by the Military Advocate General, most were closed on the grounds that the attacks complied with Israeli domestic law and international law. This was the reason given, for example, for closing the investigation into the incident in which strikes by Israeli security forces killed four boys, aged 10 and 11, from the Bakr family, who were playing on a beach in Gaza on 16 July 2014.¹³ Information gathered by OHCHR and the independent commission of inquiry raises serious concerns as to whether fundamental principles of international humanitarian law were respected in this case.¹⁴ An appeal against the Military Advocate General's decision to close the investigation, submitted in August 2015 by Adalah: The Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel, Al Mezan and the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights on behalf of the families, is still pending.¹⁵ This case, featuring many eyewitnesses, also raises serious concerns about the ability of the internal investigation mechanism of the Military Advocate General to ensure accountability and provide an effective remedy for victims. The fact that the Military Advocate General provided legal advice to the military before and during the fighting further suggests an inherent conflict of interests faced by the Military Advocate General in his investigative role and calls into question his ability to ensure genuine accountability. The High Commissioner had previously expressed concerns with regard to the independence, impartiality, promptness and transparency of the Office of the Military Advocate General.¹⁶

10. On 14 March 2018, the Israeli State Comptroller, in his capacity as the Ombudsman, published a fourth report on the 2014 escalation of hostilities.¹⁷ In the report, the State Comptroller suggests that international law was taken into account within the scope of the activities of the Israel Defense Forces in Gaza, and that the civilian population received assistance during the hostilities. However, he did not examine the policies and rules of engagement applicable to the conduct of hostilities, including the implementation thereof, that resulted in the killing of almost 1,500 civilians.¹⁸

11. In the report, the State Comptroller further provides an assessment of the General Staff Mechanism for Fact Finding Assessments, to which 220 out of 360 incidents that occurred during the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza were referred for initial factual examination. He concluded that the mechanism was in line with requirements under international law, despite acknowledging its subordination to the Chief of General Staff of the Israel Defense Forces, as well as various gaps and flaws in its work. Those deficiencies included the failure to separate the mechanism from the general staff operational debriefing team, insufficient training for the teams and lack of legal expertise, independence, effectiveness and impartiality.¹⁹ Given the structural and operational issues identified, it is

¹² A/HRC/37/41, para. 14, A/HRC/35/19, para. 18, and A/71/364, para. 40.

¹³ In this case, the Military Advocate General found the following: "The professional discretion exercised by all the commanders involved in the incident had not been unreasonable under the circumstances. However, it became clear after the fact that the identification of the figures as militants from Hamas's Naval Forces was in error. Nonetheless, the tragic outcome of the incident does not affect the legality of the attack ex post facto." (See www.idf.il/en/minisites/wars-and-operations/mag-corps-press-release-update-4-june-2015/.)

¹⁴ A/HRC/37/41, para. 12, A/HRC/28/80/Add.1, para. 36, and A/HRC/29/CRP.4, paras. 631–633.

¹⁵ The decision of 11 November 2018 of the District Court of Beersheba in the Nabaheen case (see para. 25 below) is expected to have a direct influence on the outcome of this case.

¹⁶ A/HRC/37/41, para. 11.

¹⁷ See www.mevaker.gov.il/he/Reports/Report_622/3cdfbe36-04fc-4ff2-b2df-33ce258ae838/dabla-eng.pdf.

¹⁸ See www.ochaopt.org/content/key-figures-2014-hostilities; and A/HRC/29/CRP.4.

¹⁹ Operation "Protective Edge" IDF Activity from the Perspective of International Law, Particularly with Regard to Mechanisms of Examination and Oversight of Civilian and Military Echelons, table 1, highly questionable whether the mechanism fulfils the international law requirements of independence, impartiality and effectiveness.²⁰

12. In addition, the latest public update of the Military Advocate General shows the extent to which he relies on the findings of the mechanism in his decisions. While the mechanism examines compliance with Israel Defense Forces orders and procedures, it does not examine the compatibility of such orders and procedures with applicable international law. In that regard, the reliance of the Military Advocate General on the conclusions of this fact-finding mechanism, with its limited scope of examination and without the tools available to criminal police investigators, raises serious concerns about the adequacy and quality of the Military Advocate General's decisions concerning possible criminal behaviour in relation to the cases referred to him.²¹

13. With respect to Palestinian authorities and armed groups, there continues to be no information made available regarding any steps taken towards ensuring accountability for international law violations committed by them, as also identified by the commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict.²² Other than the engagement of the State of Palestine with the International Criminal Court, no information is available that indicates that any measures have been taken by the Palestinian authorities to address violations committed during the 2014 escalation of hostilities.²³ This complete lack of any accountability is of most serious concern. In accordance with international human rights and humanitarian law, the State of Palestine must investigate allegations of serious violations of international law committed on its territory, and prosecute suspects.

B. Accountability for unlawful use of force

14. The Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have repeatedly expressed concern for the prevailing culture of impunity for the excessive use of force by Israeli security forces outside the context of hostilities.²⁴ A total of 299 Palestinians were killed, including 57 children, and 29,878 were wounded, including 7,242 by live ammunition,²⁵ by Israeli security forces in 2018 throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, amounting to the highest numbers since the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza. The vast majority of the killings and injuries occurred outside the context of hostilities, in which circumstances the use of force is governed by international human rights law and standards regulating the conduct of law enforcement officials. Of particular concern was the use by Israeli security forces of lethal force in the context of the Great March of Return demonstrations along the fence between Gaza and Israel.²⁶

15. On 30 March 2018, the Secretary-General called for an independent and transparent investigation into those incidents.²⁷ That call was echoed on 6 April 2018 by the High Commissioner²⁸ and three special procedure mandate holders.²⁹ On 8 April 2018, the media

“the main findings of the Fact-Finding Assessment Mechanism”, pp. 129–130. Available at www.mevaker.gov.il/he/Reports/Report_622/3cdfbe36-04fc-4ff2-b2df-33ce258ae838/dabla-eng.pdf.

²⁰ In terms of independence and impartiality, although the officers in the mechanism are supposed to be outside the chain of command of the incidents under review, it remains an internal military examination, where the military is examining its own conduct. The effectiveness of the mechanism is also questionable given the lack of results of its previous investigations.

²¹ See Amichai Cohen and Yuval Shany, “Israel’s Military Advocate General terminates ‘Black Friday’ and other investigations: initial observations”, Lawfare, 27 August 2018.

²² See A/HRC/29/52.

²³ A/HRC/37/41, para. 17.

²⁴ See, for example, A/HRC/35/19, paras. 17–18, A/HRC/34/38, para. 48, and A/71/364, para. 66.

²⁵ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), 23,814 persons were wounded in Gaza and 6,064 in the West Bank.

²⁶ A/HRC/40/39, paras. 23–24.

²⁷ See www.un.org/sg/en/content/sg/statement/2018-03-30/statement-attributable-spokesman-secretary-general-situation-gaza.

²⁸ See www.ohchr.org/en/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=22925&LangID=E.

²⁹ See www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=22924.

reported that the Israel Defense Forces had appointed Brigadier General Moti Baruch, Head of the General Staff's Doctrine and Training Division, to lead the investigation into the conduct of the Israel Defense Forces. It appears that the General Staff Mechanism for Fact Finding Assessments, the same mechanism that was mandated to examine events that occurred during the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza, is in charge of that inquiry.³⁰ In the light of the deficiencies of the mechanism described above, this raises concerns as to whether such an internal examination mechanism meets accountability requirements under international law.

16. On 15 and 23 April 2018, five Israeli and one Palestinian human rights organization submitted two petitions to the High Court of Justice regarding the rules of engagement of the Israel Defense Forces and their application during the Great March of Return. The Government of Israel, in its submission to the Court, advanced a novel category of "legitimate targets" of lethal force not sanctioned by international law, by authorizing the use of lethal force against "main rioters" or "key inciters", including when they do not pose an imminent threat to life or of severe bodily harm. The High Court decided that the soldiers present at the fence were acting in accordance with both international law and domestic Israeli law, relying on the Israeli legal principle of broad deference to governmental decisions in military operational matters, and invoking the general presumption in Israeli administrative law that the Government's actions were lawful unless proven otherwise. With regard to the lawfulness of targeting "main rioters" or "key inciters", the Chief Justice, while acknowledging that these amounted to a new category of targetable individuals not recognized in international law, deferred the question of its legality to the General Staff Mechanism for Fact Finding Assessments. This is particularly problematic because – as noted earlier – the mechanism focuses on the implementation of the rules of engagement. The mechanism's mandate does not extend to examining the compatibility or conformity of such orders and procedures with international law.³¹

17. As of the end of 2018, the Israeli security forces announced investigations into eight incidents involving the killing of demonstrators, including five children, during the Great March of Return. Al Mezan and the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights indicated that they had respectively submitted 82 and 56 cases to the Israeli authorities related to individuals killed or wounded at the Gaza fence since 30 March 2018.

18. The lack of accountability for the killing of Palestinians is evident not only in the context of escalations in hostilities in Gaza and of the Great March of Return, but persists also in the context of Israeli military control over and policing of Palestinians in the West Bank. In the past seven years, during which reportedly 114 criminal investigations were opened across the Occupied Palestinian Territory and almost 700 Palestinian civilians were killed by Israeli security forces,³² only four indictments were issued against soldiers for the killing of unarmed Palestinians: three for killings in the West Bank and one for a killing in Gaza.³³ The three West Bank-related indictments were for the killings of Samir Awad in 2013, Nadeem Nuwara in 2014 and Abdelfattah al-Sharif in 2016. All three cases, closely monitored by the OHCHR office in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, were concluded in 2018 and raise serious concerns that justice and redress for the victims have not been delivered in accordance with international standards.

19. Sixteen-year-old Samir Awad was killed on 15 January 2013 by the Israeli security forces. He was struck by live ammunition in his back and head while caught between barbed wire fences near Budrus in the West Bank. After lengthy legal proceedings, on 30 December 2015, two soldiers were charged with reckless and negligent use of a firearm.

³⁰ A/73/420, para. 61.

³¹ See www.lawfareblog.com/supreme-court-israel-dismisses-petition-against-gaza-rules-engagement.

³² According to the OCHA database on casualties, between 2012 and 2018, 692 Palestinians not considered to be members of armed groups, including 212 children, were killed outside the context of escalations of hostilities, including 611 by live ammunition and 23 by non-lethal ammunition (i.e., rubber coated metal bullets, tear gas canisters and tear gas inhalation).

³³ Regarding Gaza, an indictment was issued in relation to the killing of Mohammad 'Atta Abu Jame'a, a 59-year-old farmer, who was shot dead by the Israel Defense Forces east of Khan Yunis on 3 March 2018.

Despite the disparity between the gravity of the conduct and the charges advanced, the State Attorney's Office decided to withdraw the indictments against the two soldiers on 4 June 2018. According to reports, the two soldiers advanced a notion of "selective enforcement" in their defence, on the basis that there had been no indictments in similar cases in which Israeli security forces had shot and killed Palestinians.³⁴ The State Attorney's reasoning for the decision to withdraw the indictment was reportedly based on the fact that the accused soldiers had not actually violated the open-fire regulations that were in force in that particular part of the West Bank at the time of the shooting, as also confirmed by prosecution witnesses.³⁵ The case illustrates the significant concerns regarding the Israeli military justice system, which focuses on the responsibility of soldiers and the closure of cases based on the lack of reasonable grounds for suspicion of criminal behaviour, while overlooking the responsibilities of military commanders and policymakers.³⁶ In addition, the case also raises serious questions as regards the conformity of the applicable open-fire regulations with international law.³⁷

20. On 19 August 2018, the Israeli Supreme Court accepted the State prosecution's appeal against the light sentence imposed on Border Police Officer Ben Deri, charged with killing 17-year-old Palestinian Nadeem Nuwara in 2014 in circumstances where the youth did not pose any threat to Israeli security forces. The Supreme Court doubled the lower court's prison sentence to 18 months. The Supreme Court justified the harsher sentence, inter alia, on the grounds of the officer's intent to cause harm even if he did not face any danger. Despite the Supreme Court decision, the sentence still appears to be incommensurate with the gravity of the offence, namely the killing of a child who did not pose a threat to life or of serious injury to the officer.

21. The case of Sergeant Elor Azaria, an Israeli soldier convicted of manslaughter for shooting the already-incapacitated Abdelfattah al-Sharif in the head after the latter had allegedly stabbed an Israeli soldier in Hebron in March 2016, continues to be of grave concern. His already lenient initial sentence of 18 months' imprisonment issued in February 2017 was reduced to 14 months by the Israel Defense Forces Chief of General Staff in September 2017. On 8 May 2018, the media reported that the sergeant had been granted early release after having served two thirds of his sentence, that is, after nine months.

22. These cases are emblematic of a pattern of killings of Palestinians who did not pose a threat at the time they were shot, as corroborated by eyewitnesses and additional evidence, such as video footage, and in which the perpetrators were known. At the same time, these cases remain exceptions, as they led to an indictment, despite some serious flaws in the investigations.³⁸ The vast majority of investigations into killings of Palestinians by Israeli security forces were closed by the Military Advocate General without further action.³⁹

23. On 18 June 2018, Israeli media sources reported that the Military Advocate General had decided to close the case against the Israel Defense Forces commander who shot into a Palestinian car on 21 June 2016, killing 15-year-old Mahmoud Badran and wounding four others, including three other children.⁴⁰ While the commander of the force had allegedly acted based on the assumption that the occupants of the car were involved in an earlier

³⁴ See www.btselem.org/press_releases/20180610_samir_awad_case_whitewashed.

³⁵ See www.haaretz.co.il/blogs/johnbrown/BLOG-1.6140314 and www.haaretz.co.il/blogs/johnbrown/BLOG-1.6175907 (both in Hebrew); Yotam Berger, "Israeli soldiers indictment over Palestinian's death to be quashed", Haaretz (5 June 2018) (in English); and <https://news.walla.co.il/item/3163565> (in Hebrew).

³⁶ A/71/364, para. 40, A/HRC/34/38, para. 42, A/HRC/35/19, para. 20, and A/HRC/37/41, paras. 9–16.

³⁷ These regulations are not publicly available. See www.adalah.org/en/content/view/9264.

³⁸ As shown by OHCHR monitoring of the trial in the Nuwwara case; for Awad's case, see <https://mekomit.co.il/%D7%9B%D7%AA%D7%91-%D7%90%D7%99%D7%A9%D7%95%D7%9D-%D7%A1%D7%9E%D7%99%D7%A8-%D7%A2%D7%95%D7%95%D7%90%D7%93/> (in Hebrew).

³⁹ See www.btselem.org/publications/summaries/201605_occupations_fig_leaf and https://mfa.gov.il/MFA/AboutIsrael/State/Law/Pages/New_investigation_policy_Palestinian_casualties_IDF_fire_Judea_Samaria_6-Apr-2011.aspx.

⁴⁰ A/HRC/37/41, para. 21.

incident of stone throwing, the military investigation that was launched after an initial probe found that the erroneous identification of the car was “sincere and reasonable” and that the force had “operated appropriately”. At the same time, the Military Advocate General found that the force had committed professional errors, but that those did not warrant legal action due to the “complex operational environment” in which the soldiers were operating. The lack of prosecution of soldiers who opened fire towards a car full of individuals, including four children, who did not present a threat to life or of serious injury, raises serious concerns about the lack of accountability for conduct that appears to amount to excessive use of force.⁴¹ It appears in the decision of the Military Advocate General that the only measure taken in this case was the dismissal of the commander from the Israel Defense Forces.⁴² Such a disciplinary sanction is not considered in itself as a sufficient measure of accountability in a case implying excessive use force that resulted in the killing of children.

24. On 16 September 2018, the case of the killing by an Israeli security forces soldier of Bassem Abu Rahma during a peaceful demonstration in Bil’in in April 2009 was closed without the perpetrator being held accountable, despite the availability of reliable additional evidence, including video footage.⁴³ This decision of the High Court of Justice put an end to more than nine years of legal proceedings, involving three petitions to the High Court and two appeals to the Attorney General. In its decision, the High Court recognized that the Military Police and the Military Advocate General had been negligent, had protracted the investigation over a period of years and had made decisions only under pressure from the petitioners to the High Court. It nevertheless rejected the petition against the Attorney General’s decision to close the investigation, declining to intervene in that decision and also noting difficulties linked to the long time that had passed since the incident. This decision was taken despite the High Court having been petitioned three times in the past to ensure accountability in the case.⁴⁴ This case raises concerns as regards the role of the High Court in overseeing accountability measures against Israeli soldiers involved in the killing of Palestinians.

Civil remedies

25. Palestinians residing in Gaza face numerous obstacles that impede or prevent them from pursuing accountability for alleged violations, including seeking civil remedies. Obstacles to access to justice include restrictive legislation on State liability, with wide exemption for the State from liability for “wartime activity”, the statute of limitations, High Court guarantees to be paid and the difficulties residents of Gaza face to enter Israel to attend legal proceedings.⁴⁵ In particular, the exclusion of the population of Gaza (as residents of an “enemy territory”) from the scope of Israeli civil liability legislation in October 2014 – with retroactive applicability to July 2014 – has exempted Israel from any liability for wrongful acts committed by the Israel Defense Forces since the 2014 escalation.⁴⁶ The constitutionality of this exclusion was challenged in Court in a tort lawsuit brought by Al Mezan and Adalah on behalf of Ateyeh Nabaheen, who was shot and ⁴¹ See Yaniv Kubovich, “Israeli army closes probe into officer’s ‘errant killing’ of Palestinian teen”, Haaretz (11 June 2018).

⁴² See www.idf.il/%D7%9E%D7%90%D7%9E%D7%A8%D7%99%D7%9D/%D7%AA%D7%99%D7%A7-%D7%97%D7%A7%D7%99%D7%A8%D7%94-%D7%A0%D7%A1%D7%92%D7%A8/ (in Hebrew). See also Yaniv Kubovich, “Israeli officer opened fire against regulations, killed a Palestinian boy – but won’t be prosecuted”, Haaretz (12 January 2018).

⁴³ Additional forensic evidence and analysis provided by human rights organizations (Yesh Din, B’Tselem, Forensic Architecture and SITU Research) considerably strengthened the evidence against the soldier. See <http://archive.forensic-architecture.org/investigations/bassem-abu-rahma/> and www.yesh-din.org/en/petition-prosecute-responsible-killing-bassem-abu-rahmeh/.

⁴⁴ See www.yesh-din.org/en/petition-prosecute-responsible-killing-bassem-abu-rahmeh/.

⁴⁵ A/71/364, paras. 40 and 56–57, and A/HRC/37/41, para. 15.

⁴⁶ A/71/364, paras. 56–57. See Israeli government decree of 26 October 2014 declaring the Gaza strip as “enemy territory”, retroactively from 7 July 2014, hence activating the exemption from damages to “persons who are not citizens or residents of Israel, and are residents of a territory outside Israel that has been declared an ‘enemy territory’ in a governmental decree”.

seriously wounded on 11 November 2014 in Gaza, while on his family's property, outside the area of any military activity.⁴⁷ Ateyeh Nabaheen was left quadriplegic and confined to a wheelchair. The District Court of Beersheba issued its decision on 4 November 2018, ruling that the law prohibiting Palestinians living in Gaza from seeking compensation from Israel was constitutional, regardless of the circumstances and the gravity of the injury at stake. This decision is expected to affect the outcome of other cases of Palestinians killed by the Israeli security forces during the 2014 escalation of hostilities still pending before the court, such as the case of the killing of the four boys of the Bakr family (see para. 9 above).⁴⁸ Al Mezan and Adalah have indicated that they will appeal the decision to the Israeli Supreme Court.⁴⁹ Should the decision stand, all Gaza residents would appear to be precluded from seeking redress and remedy in Israeli civil courts, regardless of the circumstances and the severity of the injury or damages claimed.

26. The "enemy territory" exclusion clause is not the only obstacle to obtaining civil remedies. On 3 December 2018, the District Court of Beersheba rejected the lawsuit submitted by Izzeldin Abu El-Eish from Jabaliya, whose three daughters and niece were killed by Israeli security forces during the 2008–2009 escalation of hostilities in Gaza, attributing the responsibility for their deaths to Hamas. The plaintiff, who was seeking recognition by Israel of wrongdoing for the killing of the girls, claimed that there was no fighting in the area at the time of the attack on his home, meaning there was no military purpose for it being targeted. According to the ruling, the home was hit because figures on the roof were suspected of acting as lookouts for terrorist groups and directing fire at Israel Defense Forces, and due to a failure to share information regarding the civilian occupants of the house. The commander of the division testified that if this information had been made available to him, he would not have ordered the shelling. Nevertheless, the court concluded that it had not found any wrongful act and decided to close the case.⁵⁰

III. Impediments to the work of human rights defenders

27. Measures impeding the work of human rights defenders and civil society actors, particularly in their work in documenting and advocating for accountability for alleged international human rights law and international humanitarian law violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, continued to be of serious concern. The prevailing atmosphere of impunity combined with intimidation, threats and arrests of human rights defenders and civil society actors contributed to a shrinking space for civil society and a lack of deterrence for further violations.⁵¹

A. Intimidation of, restrictions on and threats against civil society actors

28. Restrictions by all duty bearers on the rights of freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association continued. This included, inter alia, intimidation, threats, harassment and movement restrictions, as well as assaults, arbitrary arrests, ill-treatment and prosecutions of individual human rights defenders. The activities of human rights organizations were curtailed by systematic delegitimization likely to affect their funding, denials or restrictions on work permits or visas and the closure of a civil society organization by Israel.

⁴⁷ A/HRC/37/41, para. 16.

⁴⁸ This would namely pertain to three cases filed by the Palestinian Center for Human Rights.

⁴⁹ See <http://mezan.org/en/post/23316>.

⁵⁰ Decision of the District Court CC (Beersheba District Court), Abu El Eish v. Israel, case No. 40777-12-10, judgment, 27 November 2018. Available at www.nevo.co.il/psika_html/mechozi/ME-10-12-40777-390.htm (in Hebrew).

⁵¹ A/HRC/37/41, para. 22 ff., and Human Rights Council resolution 37/37, para. 7.

Israel

29. There were numerous statements by high-ranking officials against civil society organizations and human rights defenders, including verbal attacks that might amount to incitement to violence.⁵² Human rights defenders were also subjected to threats, intimidation and attempts to delegitimize them, including with a view to influencing their foreign sources of funding. For example, the organization Breaking the Silence continued to face public condemnation by high-ranking Israeli officials, within the scope of an investigation against Dean Issacharoff, a spokesperson of Breaking the Silence and a former Israeli soldier who had publicly testified on using violence against a Palestinian in Hebron in 2014.⁵³

30. A number of senior Israeli officials also publicly condemned the Executive Director of the Israeli non-governmental organization (NGO) B'Tselem, Hagai El-Ad, following his briefing to the Security Council on 18 October 2018. The Permanent Representative of Israel to the United Nations accused him of defaming his Government, called him a “lousy collaborator” and said that if he had been Palestinian or Bolivian he would “likely end up dead”.⁵⁴ The Deputy Foreign Minister stated that action should be taken to end international funding of B'Tselem.⁵⁵

31. Some organizations have been instrumental in distributing information aimed at discrediting human rights defenders and civil society actors.^{56, 57} The Israeli Ministry of Strategic Affairs has accused the European Union of directly or indirectly funding organizations that promoted the delegitimization of and boycotts against Israel and alleged that European taxpayers’ money was being used to support ties with terrorist organizations.⁵⁸

32. There were increased restrictions on work permits and visas for human rights defenders, including through the enforcement of the amended Entry into Israel Law. The amendment prohibits the granting of a visa to persons who are not citizens or permanent residents of Israel if they or the organization for which they work has knowingly issued a public call to boycott Israel, or has committed to participating in such a boycott.⁵⁹ In early January 2018, a “boycott, divestment and sanctions blacklist” of 20 such organizations was published by the Strategic Affairs Ministry.⁶⁰ There are serious concerns that the amended

⁵² See also A/HRC/37/41, para. 24, and A/HRC/34/36, para. 50.

⁵³ The investigation has been reopened and is ongoing (www.timesofisrael.com/breaking-the-silence-spokesman-cleared-of-beating-palestinian/). See also www.breakingthesilence.org.il/inside/ayelet-shaked-s-private-prosecutor/, www.haaretz.com/israel-news/palestinian-allegedly-beaten-by-breaking-the-silence-spox-called-to-give-testimony-1.5629686 and Chemi Shalev, “To whitewash occupation, Netanyahu crew casts Breaking the Silence whistle-blower as bogeyman: right-wing sadists harass Israeli Ambassador to Germany Jeremy Issacharoff to act against his own son”, Haaretz, 21 November 2017.

⁵⁴ See <http://webtv.un.org/meetings-events/watch/part-1-the-situation-in-the-middle-east-including-the-palestinian-question-security-council-8375th-meeting/5850529585001/?term=> (from minute 58:00).

⁵⁵ See www.timesofisrael.com/netanyahu-denounces-btselem-chiefs-un-speech-as-full-of-lies/. See also the text of a since-deleted Facebook post about Hagai El-Ad attributed to Knesset Member Oren Hazan, and available at www.nad.ps/en/media-room/israeli-incitement-reports/israeli-official-incitement-october-2018.

⁵⁶ See http://policyworkinggroup.org.il/report_en.pdf.

⁵⁷ See <https://apnews.com/0601a79f13e041b9b5b312ec73063c98/covertly-israel-prepares-fight-boycott-activists-online>. See also www.ngo-monitor.org/reports/political-advocacy-ngo-involvement-in-un-humanitarian-aid-clusters/.

⁵⁸ Israel, Ministry of Strategic Affairs and Public Diplomacy, The Money Report: The Millions Given by EU Institutions to NGOs with Ties to Terror and Boycotts against Israel (May 2018).

⁵⁹ A/HRC/37/41, para. 32. See also A/72/565, paras. 45–46. The definition of “boycott” is explicitly articulated in the 2011 boycott law and includes boycotts aimed at Israeli settlements located in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Law for the Prevention of Damage to the State of Israel through Boycott (No. 5771-2011) defines boycott as deliberately avoiding all economic, cultural or academic ties with an individual or other body, based solely on affiliation with Israel or any of its institutions or area under its control, in a manner that would cause economic, cultural or academic harm.

⁶⁰ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/1.833502.

Entry into Israel Law is being used to prevent human rights defenders from entering into Israel, as illustrated by the case of two prominent American human rights lawyers who were denied entry to Israel on 29 April 2018 for their alleged support to the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions movement.⁶¹

33. On 7 May 2018, the work visa of Human Rights Watch's Country Director in Israel and Palestine, Omar Shakir, was revoked by the Israeli Ministry of the Interior based on Mr. Shakir's supposed past involvement in activism with the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions movement.⁶² Following a petition by Human Rights Watch, the Jerusalem District Court issued an interim injunction allowing Mr. Shakir to remain in the country while the court considered the petition. The Government based its position on statements attributed to Mr. Shakir in support of the establishment of a database of businesses, mandated by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 31/36. An amicus brief filed by the organization NGO Monitor and accepted by the court also pointed to social media posts highlighting the support of Human Rights Watch for the database and its general advocacy work at the Council. In January 2019, the Government submitted a response, standing by its decision to deport Mr. Shakir. The case remains pending before the District Court.

34. Continuing restrictions on freedom of movement by Israeli authorities also hampered the work of Palestinian human rights defenders and organizations, as most of them were not allowed to move freely between the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza.⁶³ There were also increasing measures to limit civic space available to Palestinians, in particular in East Jerusalem. Israeli security forces prevented the holding of a press conference organized by the Addar Foundation and Elia Association for Youth on the developments in East Jerusalem, following the statement by the President of the United States of America on Jerusalem of 6 December 2017. On 18 April 2018, Israeli authorities closed Elia Association for Youth in East Jerusalem.⁶⁴

Palestinian authorities

35. Human rights defenders and civil society activists expressing views critical of the human rights record of Palestinian authorities were subjected to harassment, threats and restrictions to their freedom of expression and assembly in the West Bank and Gaza during the period under review. In June 2018, demonstrations were held in the West Bank calling for measures imposed by the authorities of the State of Palestine against Gaza to be lifted.⁶⁵ In addition to curtailing the demonstrations, high-ranking officials insulted and threatened the political opposition, civil society and activists who had organized the demonstration.⁶⁶ The Head of the Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center was harassed, and one staff member was summoned by Palestinian security forces for an alleged role in organizing the demonstrations. An advocate from Addameer Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association, Muhannad Karaja, who has represented several individuals alleging arbitrary arrest, ill-treatment and torture by Palestinian security forces, reported receiving threats, including death threats, and having his car damaged by unknown assailants.

B. Arbitrary arrest, assault and detention of and legal proceedings against human rights defenders

36. The Israeli and Palestinian authorities continued to arbitrarily detain human rights defenders in the reporting period. Deprivation of liberty resulting from the peaceful

⁶¹ See Dina Kraft, "Two leading U.S. human rights activists refused entry to Israel, one for BDS ties", Haaretz, 3 May 2018 and Roger Cohen, "Israel banishes a Columbia law professor for thinking differently", New York Times (4 May 2018).

⁶² See www.hrw.org/news/2018/05/08/israel-orders-human-rights-watch-official-deported; www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/supporting_resources/israeli_governments_response_lawsuit_hebrew.pdf.

⁶³ See A/HRC/40/39, paras. 45–51. See also A/73/420, paras. 8–32.

⁶⁴ A/HRC/40/39, para. 43.

⁶⁵ Ibid., para. 61.

⁶⁶ See www.youtube.com/watch?v=Az_0ePNvIT4 (in Hebrew).

exercise of fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, is considered to be arbitrary.⁶⁷

Israel

37. Abdallah Abu Rahma, a Palestinian human rights defender from the West Bank village of Bil'in, was arrested in May 2016 after having participated in a bicycle ride to mark what Palestinians refer to as Nakba Day⁶⁸ in Bil'in. The participants in the ride were violently dispersed by Israeli security forces, after the area was declared a closed military zone. In April 2018, Mr. Abu Rahma was convicted by the Israeli Military Court of disobeying a closed military zone order and obstructing a soldier. In its judgment, the court described Mr. Abu Rahma as a "leading inciter" who refused to obey the military for purposes of provocation and then forcibly resisted his own arrest. Mr. Abu Rahma was sentenced on 14 November 2018, to eight months of imprisonment, four of which were suspended, in addition to a fine of NIS 2,000.⁶⁹

38. The case against two human rights defenders, Issa Amro and Fareed al-Atrash, has been ongoing in Ofer Military Court since 23 November 2016, despite concerns previously raised by the High Commissioner, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders.⁷⁰ Mr. Amro's indictment includes 18 charges, some of them dating back to 2010, including allegedly obstructing, insulting and assaulting soldiers, incitement and participation in assemblies without a permit.⁷¹ Mr. al-Atrash faces four charges, including participating in an illegal demonstration and assaulting soldiers.

39. Of particular concern is the case of human rights defender Aref Jaber, a well-known activist in the H2 zone in Hebron, who documents human rights violations in that zone, including by photographing and filming the use of force by Israeli security forces and settler violence. Mr. Jaber described to OHCHR the harassment that he and his wife and sons had experienced from Israeli security forces over the past 10 years, including repeated arrests, violent house raids and physical assaults. On 2 June 2018, Mr. Jaber filmed the aftermath of an incident in which Israeli security forces killed a Palestinian man in the H2 zone. Following the incident, Mr. Jaber and his son were arrested, allegedly physically assaulted, and interrogated by Israeli security forces. They were released and ordered to stop filming the security forces. Mr. Jaber was warned that he would be arrested every time he attempted to do so. Later, Israeli security forces stopped him and threatened him with a gun. Mr. Jaber's other son, aged 17, was arrested and interrogated on 23 June 2018. No charges were brought against him, and he was released after a few hours, after paying a fine of NIS 1,000.

Palestinian authorities

40. In the aftermath of demonstrations that took place in June 2018 in the West Bank calling for the lifting of punitive measures imposed by the authorities of the State of Palestine in Gaza,⁷² local human rights organizations reported that 56 people had been arrested, beaten and released the next day by Palestinian security forces.⁷³ A staff member of Amnesty International, Laith Abu Zayed, present to monitor the demonstration, was ⁶⁷ A/HRC/37/42, para. 6. See also A/HRC/36/38.

⁶⁸ Annual day of commemoration of the displacement of Palestinians that preceded and followed the Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel in 1948.

⁶⁹ An appeal was submitted against the sentence.

⁷⁰ See www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=21855&LangID=E.

⁷¹ A/HRC/37/42, paras. 50–51.

⁷² Detailed information regarding the demonstrations is provided in document A/HRC/40/39, paras. 60–62.

⁷³ A/HRC/40/39, para. 61.

among those arrested and reported having been subjected to ill-treatment and having witnessed other individuals facing similar treatment while in police custody.⁷⁴

41. Issa Amro, who is also facing charges in Israel (see para. 38 above), is on trial in the Palestinian courts on charges pertaining to the cybercrimes law prior to its amendment.⁷⁵ Mr. Amro's lawyer has submitted a request to the public prosecution in Hebron in May 2018, seeking closure of the case. The final decision of the Attorney General is pending.

C. Legislative measures affecting civil society

Israel

42. On 16 July 2018, the Knesset passed the so-called Breaking the Silence Law, amending the State Education Law. The law prohibits organizations such as Breaking the Silence from gaining access to schools, but its ramifications are much broader. The law authorizes the Minister of Education to prevent a person or a body whose activity contradicts the State's educational objectives from entering schools. It also blocks access to schools by organizations or persons seeking to take legal or political proceedings outside Israel, either against Israeli soldiers for an action carried out in the course of their duties or against the State of Israel. The Knesset also approved at a late stage a provision applying the law to local organizations that also work abroad to assist institutions that might promote political proceedings against Israel.

43. A bill to amend the Israeli Income Tax Ordinance, denying tax benefits to certain organizations considered to be acting against the State, is being promoted in the Knesset.⁷⁶ It is currently being prepared for a first reading in the Knesset Finance Committee. Acts against the State are defined in the bill as issuing publications that accuse Israel of committing war crimes and calls for a boycott against Israel or its citizens.

44. On 17 June 2018, the ministerial committee for legislative affairs approved the promotion of an amendment to the criminal law. On 20 June, a bill to prohibit the photographing, or documenting of Israel Defense Forces soldiers passed its preliminary reading in the Knesset. The bill stipulates that anyone who films, photographs or records soldiers in the course of their duties, with the intention of undermining the spirit of Israel Defense Forces soldiers and residents of Israel, is liable to five years' imprisonment, whereas anyone intending to harm State security will be sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment.⁷⁷ In addition, the bill prohibits the distribution of photographs or recordings, including through social networks and media, with the same penalties.

45. On 6 June 2018, a bill to amend the 2011 boycott law that allows the filing of a lawsuit for punitive damages against those who call for a boycott, even if no damage is proven, was approved by the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee in preparation for its first reading in the Knesset.⁷⁸

Palestinian authorities

46. In a positive development, the Palestinian cybercrime law, adopted by Presidential Decree No. 16 in June 2017, was amended in May 2018 by Presidential Decree No. 10 following serious concerns raised by civil society organizations and human rights experts.⁷⁹

⁷⁴ See www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2018/06/state-of-palestine-amnesty-staff-member-arbitrarily-detained-and-tortured-by-palestinian-security-officers/.

⁷⁵ A/HRC/37/42, paras. 50–51.

⁷⁶ A/HRC/37/41, para. 31.

⁷⁷ See www.independent.co.uk/news/world/middle-east/israeli-knesset-ban-photographing-filming-idf-soldiers-recording-journalists-robert-ilatov-a8371426.html and <https://7amleh.org/2018/08/14/will-a-new-wave-of-israeli-legislation-diminish-internet-freedoms/>.

⁷⁸ A/HRC/37/41, para. 33.

⁷⁹ The cybercrimes law raised serious concern about its potential to curtail free speech, and was adopted within a general context of restrictions on freedom of expression, in addition to serving as the basis

The amended law reflects significant improvements, though concerns remain in relation to certain loosely defined provisions that could allow the law's possible misuse by the authorities.

47. The impact of prior decisions of the authorities of the State of Palestine continued to hamper the functioning of human rights organizations, in particular in Gaza. Further to a decision issued on 21 April 2016, non-profit entities, including those operating in Gaza, continued to be subject to the requirement to submit all their applications for donations, grants and aid to the Ministry of National Economy for approval, and the receipt and disbursal of funds remained contingent on prior approval by the Cabinet. The 2016 decision continued to undermine the autonomy and scope of operation of non-profit entities across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, given that such organizations are also subject to the scrutiny of authorities in Gaza.

IV. Third-State responsibility

48. In its resolution 37/37, the Human Rights Council refers to article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions relating to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts, and calls upon third States to "ensure respect" for international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Ensuring respect implies taking measures to prompt States to act in compliance with international humanitarian law.⁸⁰

49. Third States are free to choose between different possible measures, as long as those adopted are considered adequate to ensure respect for international humanitarian law, in line with their duty of due diligence.⁸¹ This implies that the repetition of measures that have proven to be ineffective to ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions may no longer be considered adequate. More research and analysis as to the types of measures that are at the disposal of States in this regard would be particularly valuable. Support for national and international efforts to bring suspected perpetrators of serious violations of international humanitarian law to justice has been identified as one such measure. Other such measures could be bilateral diplomatic interventions or public denunciation of unlawful acts.⁸²

50. In September 2018, following the decision of Israel to demolish the Palestinian Bedouin village of Khan al-Ahmar in the West Bank, the European Parliament passed a resolution that called on the Government of Israel to put an immediate end to its policy of threats of demolition and eviction against the Bedouin communities in the occupied West Bank.⁸³ The European Parliament expressed its concern that the demolitions would severely threaten the viability of the two-State solution⁸⁴ and condemned any unilateral decision and action that might undermine the prospects of that solution. The resolution furthermore echoed the joint statement by France, Germany, Italy, Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland⁸⁵ calling on Israel not to go ahead with its plan to demolish the Palestinian village.

for the arrest and detention of journalists and human rights defenders (A/HRC/37/42, para. 42, and A/HRC/37/41, para. 39).

⁸⁰ A/HRC/37/41, para. 41 (with references).

⁸¹ International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), commentary of 2016 on the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field of August 12, 1949, para. 165.

⁸² ICRC commentary of 2016 on article 1, para. 181.

⁸³ European Parliament resolution of 13 September 2018 on the threat of demolition of Khan al-Ahmar and other Bedouin villages, para. 5.

⁸⁴ Statement by the High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, Federica Mogherini, on the latest developments regarding the planned demolition of Khan al-Ahmar, 7 September 2018. Available at https://eeas.europa.eu/headquarters/headquarters-homepage/50237/statement-hrvp-mogherini-latest-developments-regarding-planned-demolition-khan-al-ahmar_en.

⁸⁵ See www.diplomatie.gouv.fr/en/country-files/israel-palestinian-territories/palestinian-territories/events/article/khan-al-ahmar-france-germany-italy-spain-and-uk-joint-statement-10-09-18.

51. Given the obligations of third States not to recognize as lawful a situation violating international law and not to render aid or assistance in maintaining that situation, States should not recognize the unlawful situation resulting from Israeli settlements or aid or assist in maintaining it.⁸⁶ In this regard, having reaffirmed that the establishment by Israel of settlements in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including East Jerusalem, had no legal validity and constituted a flagrant violation under international law, the Security Council, in its resolution 2334 (2016), called upon all States to distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967.

V. Conclusion and recommendations

52. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights has previously expressed serious concerns regarding the lack of accountability related to past cycles of violence and escalation in Gaza and to incidents in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the access-restricted areas of the Gaza Strip.⁸⁷ As reflected in the update provided in the present report, these concerns continued to remain valid during the period under review, particularly in relation to the lack of accountability for continued allegations of excessive use of force by Israeli forces, as well as allegations against all parties to the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza that remain unaddressed.

53. The work of human rights defenders and civil society actors is increasingly restricted. Civil society organizations, journalists and human rights defenders must be permitted the space to do their work, including calling for accountability for alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. Measures that seek to hinder this work – for example through arrest and detention and other forms of intimidation and harassment, or the passage of stigmatizing and criminalizing legislation – raise serious concerns about the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and the shrinking civic space in Israel.

54. The comprehensive review of recommendations addressed to all parties undertaken by the High Commissioner in 2017⁸⁸ aimed at ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. In that review, the High Commissioner found that the general patterns of human rights violations and non-implementation of recommendations that had emerged from the reports analysed for the review were not just symptoms of the conflict but further fuelled the cycle of violence.⁸⁹ As emphasized by the Secretary-General, lack of accountability compromises chances for sustainable peace and security. Tackling impunity must be the highest priority.⁹⁰ The High Commissioner again echoes this call.

55. Recalling the follow-up measures described in the 2017 comprehensive review of recommendations, which remain valid, the High Commissioner further:

(a) Calls upon Israel to fully comply with its obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including its obligations as an occupying Power; urges it to conduct prompt, thorough, transparent, effective, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular all alleged international crimes; and also calls on it to ensure that all victims have access to effective remedies and reparation;

⁸⁶ ICRC commentary of 2016 on article 1, para. 163. See also International Court of Justice, Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports (2004), p. 134, paras. 157–159.

⁸⁷ A/HRC/31/40/Add.1, para. 39.

⁸⁸ A/HRC/35/19.

⁸⁹ Ibid., para. 81.

⁹⁰ A/71/364, para. 6.

(b) Urges the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, thorough, transparent, effective, impartial and independent investigations of all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular all allegations of international crimes, and calls on it to ensure that all victims have access to effective remedies and reparation;

(c) Recommends that all parties respect international law, including international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability for grave violations;

(d) Calls upon all States to take measures to ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions by all parties;

(e) Reiterates the calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures to ensure full respect for and compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
15 January 2020

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-third session

24 February–20 March 2020

Agenda item 2

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 40/13 and provides an overview of the implementation of the resolution between 1 November 2018 and 30 October 2019 and of developments that are of relevance to ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

* Agreement was reached to publish the present report after the standard publication date owing to circumstances beyond the submitter's control.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 40/13 and follows the oral update provided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights during the forty-second session of the Council on the progress made in the implementation of the resolution.¹ It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner.²

2. The report covers the period between 1 November 2018 and 30 October 2019 and addresses issues related to accountability for alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including in connection with incidents of alleged excessive use of force in the context of the large-scale protests related to the Great March of Return along the Gaza-Israel fence and of law enforcement operations in the West Bank and Gaza by all relevant duty bearers. It takes into account the report and recommendations of the independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory established by the Human Rights Council in its resolution S-28/1. It provides an update on accountability measures taken in relation to the three escalations of hostilities in Gaza since 2008. Lastly, it addresses measures linked to the responsibility of third States to ensure respect for international law.

3. The information contained in the present report draws mainly upon human rights monitoring activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It also draws upon information from governmental sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations. OHCHR requested the Government of Israel and the Palestinian National Authority to provide information, by 15 November 2019, on any accountability measures adopted during the reporting period in relation to alleged violations of international human rights and humanitarian law committed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in particular with regard to use of force by their respective security forces that may have led to killings or injuries. The Palestinian National Authority responded with three submissions dated 14 November 2019. The Government of Israel did not respond. OHCHR also requested the States Members of the United Nations for information on the steps taken by them as third States to promote compliance with international law and implement the recommendations addressed to them. As of 15 November 2019, Cuba and the Syrian Arab Republic had responded.

II. Violations of international human rights and humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

4. Serious violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law continued in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in the context of large-scale civilian protests in Gaza. The present section focuses on developments related to possible excessive use of force in the context of law enforcement operations. The report of the High Commissioner on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1³ provides an overview of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law by all duty bearers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and the report of the High Commissioner on the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan⁴ focuses on the violations of international humanitarian law governing occupation, in particular in respect of settlement expansion and its negative impact on the human rights of Palestinians during the same period (1 November 2018–30 October 2019).

¹ www.un.org/unispal/document/human-rights-commissioners-update-on-the-implementation-of-recommendations-of-commission-of-inquiry-on-gaza-protests/.

² A/HRC/35/19 and Add.1, A/HRC/37/41, A/HRC/40/43 and A/74/468.

³ A/HRC/43/70.

⁴ A/HRC/43/67.

5. A total of 131 Palestinians were killed (103 men, 5 women and 23 children) by Israeli security forces during the reporting period throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The vast majority of the killings and injuries happened outside the context of hostilities, in which circumstances the use of force is governed by international human rights law and standards regulating the conduct of law enforcement officials.⁵ During the reporting period, 11 Israelis were killed by Palestinians, including 1 girl.

6. Demonstrations known as the Great March of Return at the Israel-Gaza fence, which commenced in March 2018, continued to take place almost every Friday throughout the reporting period. Protests remained largely peaceful, although on many Fridays demonstrators damaged and breached the fence, threw Molotov cocktails, homemade sound grenades and explosive devices towards the Israeli security forces and launched incendiary objects. In particular, 508 burning kites and incendiary balloons were launched by demonstrators towards Israel, causing significant damage to agricultural land and forests.⁶ The Israeli security forces responded with tear gas, rubber-coated bullets, water cannons, skunk water and sound devices, as well as live ammunition. Thirty-nine Palestinians, including 12 children and 1 woman, were killed by the Israeli security forces in that context, while some 2,078 Palestinians were injured with live ammunition, including 577 children.⁷ Many of those injured sustained permanent disabilities: 55 people, including 4 children and 1 woman, had limbs and/or fingers amputated, 6 were paralyzed and 10 partially lost their vision.⁸ Two Israeli soldiers were injured after an armed individual opened fire at them towards the end of the demonstration on 3 May 2019, east of Al-Boureij.

7. OHCHR monitored several cases related to the killing and injury of demonstrators at the fence. In the large majority of cases, it found no indication that the demonstrators in question would have presented an imminent threat to life or of serious injury. Under international human rights law, the use of potentially lethal force, such as firearms, for law enforcement purposes is an extreme measure that should be resorted to only when strictly necessary in order to protect life or prevent a serious injury from an imminent threat.⁹ Two incidents are particularly illustrative. On 21 December 2018, a 40-year-old man suffering from a physical disability resulting from poliomyelitis was shot dead with live ammunition to his head while approximately 400–600m from the fence, east of Al-Boureij. Witnesses reported that he was shot while walking around the bus parking area. On 8 February 2019, a 13-year-old boy was shot dead with live ammunition to his chest while standing and holding hands with three of his friends approximately 300m from the fence, east of Khan Younis, southern Gaza Strip.

8. Paramedics assisting injured demonstrators and journalists covering the protests were also subjected to live fire from the Israeli security forces. Thus, 110 paramedics and 62 journalists were injured by the security forces, tens of them with live ammunition and shrapnel.¹⁰ On 2 August 2019, a journalist was injured with live ammunition to his left leg as he was covering the demonstrations east of Al-Boureij. Witnesses reported that he was wearing a vest visibly marked “press” and taking photographs 200–300m from the fence when he was shot. On 27 September 2019, a 28-year-old female volunteer first responder, visibly identifiable through a white coat, was shot and injured by the Israeli security forces with live ammunition to her right hand and abdomen as she tried to assist injured demonstrators approximately 100m from the fence, east of Rafah.

9. Of particular concern is the number of children who continued to be exposed to unacceptable levels of violence at the fence. Children accounted for around 31 per cent of the fatalities and 28 per cent of those injured by live ammunition during the reporting period.¹¹ Little effort appears to have been made by the organizers of the demonstrations and ⁵ A/HRC/40/43, para. 14.

⁶ Figures provided by the Department of Safety and Security of the Secretariat.

⁷ Figures provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat.

⁸ Figures provided by the World Health Organization.

⁹ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2018) on the right to life, para. 12.

¹⁰ Figures provided by Al Mezan Center for Human Rights.

¹¹ Figures provided by OHCHR and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat.

the authorities in Gaza to prevent children from being exposed to violence at the fence. While the Israeli security forces bear the primary responsibility for the killing and injury of demonstrators, including children, a considerable number of demonstrators and witnesses contacted by OHCHR during the reporting period noted that the Higher National Commission for the Great March of Return continued to provide buses to shuttle demonstrators, including children, from different places in the Gaza Strip to the five demarcated demonstration sites along the eastern border. Witnesses reported that only on very rare occasions were children prevented from boarding the buses, and then only when the children under the age of 9.

10. On 18 March 2019, the independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory presented its report to the Human Rights Council.¹² It found that, in the vast majority of the cases it had assessed, the use of live ammunition by the Israeli security forces against demonstrators was unlawful and that demonstrators had been shot in violation of their right to life.¹³ The commission of inquiry further determined that certain incidents could potentially amount to war crimes and crimes against humanity.¹⁴ In its recommendations, it urged the Israeli authorities to refrain from using lethal force against civilians posing no imminent threat to life, to ensure that the rules of engagement did not authorize lethal force against “main inciters”¹⁵ and to prohibit targeting persons based solely on their actual or alleged affiliation to any group, rather than their conduct.¹⁶ The commission of inquiry also recommended that the Government of Israel conduct prompt, impartial and independent investigations into every protest-related killing and injury, in accordance with international standards, while ensuring prompt, adequate and effective remedies for those killed or injured unlawfully.¹⁷

11. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, possible excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces – in some cases possibly amounting to arbitrary deprivation of life – continued in the context of law enforcement operations. During the reporting period, 35 Palestinians were thus killed, including 6 children and 1 woman.

12. OHCHR monitored several cases where the Israeli security forces used lethal force, killing or injuring a Palestinian, in circumstances in which lethal force did not appear to be strictly necessary in order to protect life or prevent a serious injury from an imminent threat.¹⁸ For example, on 14 December 2018, an 18-year-old man was shot with live ammunition to his lower back from a distance of 50m while he was running away from Israeli soldiers who were firing tear gas to disperse a group of youth outside Al-Jalazun refugee camp, north of Ramallah. The Israeli security forces did not provide medical assistance to that person and prevented a Palestinian ambulance from approaching by firing sound grenades. After 30 minutes, Palestinian paramedics were allowed to transport the man to Ramallah hospital, where he was pronounced dead. An investigation was opened by the Israel Defense Forces into the incident.¹⁹ On 4 March 2019, in the vicinity of Kafr Nimeh village, west of Ramallah, the Israeli security forces shot and killed two Palestinians and injured a third during an apparent car ramming attack in which two Israeli soldiers were injured. From video footage of the incident, it is possible to hear the sound of ramming followed by a single shot and, after a four-minute interval, three consecutive bursts of fire. Witness testimonies were consistent with the video footage. The Israel Defense Forces spokesperson refused to

¹² A/HRC/40/74.

¹³ Ibid., paras. 94 and 97.

¹⁴ Ibid., paras. 114–115.

¹⁵ The term refers to the category of “key instigators” used by the Israel Defense Forces in a number of submissions and mentioned below in paragraph 34.

¹⁶ A/HRC/40/74, para. 119.

¹⁷ Ibid., para. 125 (a)–(b).

¹⁸ For further illustrative cases, including of possible excessive use of force against children, paramedics and people with disabilities, see A/HRC/43/70.

¹⁹ www.haaretz.co.il/news/politics/1.6766320 (in Hebrew only).

comment on enquiries by Israeli media regarding the delay between the ramming and the shooting.²⁰ The Forces opened an operational inquiry into the incident.²¹

13. In other cases, the use of lethal force led to severe and permanent injuries. On 12 July 2019, the Israeli security forces shot and critically injured a nine-year-old Palestinian boy in the head during the weekly demonstrations in Kafr Qaddum, near Qalqiliya. According to eyewitnesses, protesters were throwing stones at the Israeli security forces about 150 metres away from where the boy was standing at the entrance of a friend's house when he was hit. At the time of reporting, the boy remained hospitalized with around 100 fragments lodged in the brain, unable to speak and with very limited ability to move. Media reported that Israel Defense Forces was investigating the incident, however this has not been officially confirmed.²²

III. Update on accountability

A. Accountability for the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza and other rounds of hostilities

14. Over five years after the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza, lack of accountability remains pervasive for suspected violations of international humanitarian law, including allegations of war crimes perpetrated by all parties to the conflict. Since the publication of the report of the commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict,²³ the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have provided regular updates on the lack of progress regarding the implementation of the recommendations contained in that report, and highlighted concerns about the lack of accountability by both Israeli and Palestinian authorities.²⁴

15. With respect to Israel, the most recent update by the Israeli Military Advocate General was provided on 15 August 2018 and referred to in the previous report of the High Commissioner.²⁵ No notable progress in the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations in the context of the 2014 round of hostilities was registered during the reporting period.²⁶

16. Lack of progress and transparency persists also in relation to accountability efforts linked to previous rounds of hostilities. In particular, since July 2010, no information has been made available by the Government of Israel in relation to progress in the investigation and prosecution of alleged wrongdoing committed by the Israeli security forces in the context of Operation Cast Lead.²⁷

²⁰ www.timesofisrael.com/9-days-after-alleged-car-ramming-eyewitnesses-say-israel-hasnt-contacted-them/.

²¹ www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-palestinian-car-hit-soldiers-they-shot-back-once-four-minutes-later-nine-bullets-followed-1.7045801.

²² www.timesofisrael.com/family-of-palestinian-boy-shot-in-the-head-wants-answers-from-israel/.
²³ A/HRC/29/52.

²⁴ See, in particular, A/HRC/34/38, para. 42, A/HRC/37/41, paras. 9–17, A/HRC/40/43, paras. 4–13, and A/71/364 paras. 40 and 51–55.

²⁵ A/HRC/40/43, para. 5.

²⁶ In particular, of the 500 complaints (relating to 360 incidents) referred to the Military Advocate General, 31 were referred for criminal investigation and most were closed on the ground that the conduct of the Israeli security forces complied with domestic and international law. While one investigation led to the conviction of three soldiers for looting, investigations in 28 cases did not result in criminal charges; two cases remain pending. Cases relating to 189 incidents have so far been closed. See <https://mfa.gov.il/MFA/ForeignPolicy/IsraelGaza2014/Documents/Operation-Protective-Edge-MAG-Corps-Press-Release-Update-6-15-August-2018.pdf> and A/HRC/40/43 paras. 5 and 9.

²⁷ According to the latest available update, 47 military police investigations have been opened and led to the indictment of three Israeli soldiers (two of whom for forcing a Palestinian minor to assist them in a manner that put him at risk and another for killing a Palestinian civilian) and to the conviction of one soldier for the theft of a credit card. See https://mfa.gov.il/MFA_Graphics/MFA%20Gallery/Documents/GazaUpdateJuly2010.pdf.

17. The absence of any significant progress in the investigation of and prosecution for alleged violations confirms the serious concerns previously expressed by the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General regarding the consistent failure of the Israeli Military Advocate General to open criminal investigations in cases of alleged violations of international humanitarian law, including possible war crimes, committed by Israeli security forces in the context of hostilities.²⁸

18. In relation to more recent escalations, on 19 December 2018 the Israel Defense Forces publicly reported that the Military Advocate General had opened an investigation into the killing of two Palestinian children by an Israeli airstrike on 14 July 2018.²⁹ On that day, the Israeli Air Force conducted airstrikes targeting a vacant building belonging to the Palestinian Ministry of Culture, located in Al Katiba yard, in Gaza City, killing two 14-year-old boys and injuring 23 others.³⁰ Israel alleged that the building was being used for militant activity. According to the Israel Defense Forces spokesperson, an internal military investigation had showed that “at the time of the [missile] fire, no people were spotted on the roof of the building”.³¹ This announcement followed the publication of an independent investigation into the case by the Israeli human rights organization B’Tselem and the international non-governmental organization Forensic Architecture, which found that the sequence of video footage of the attacks initially published through the Twitter account of the Israel Defense Forces spokesperson had been edited in relation to the first fatal strike, in an alleged attempt to obscure the unlawful nature of the strike.³²

19. As also underlined by the High Commissioner in previous reports,³³ no information was made available on steps taken to ensure accountability for possible international humanitarian law violations, including possible war crimes, committed by the Palestinian authorities and armed groups in the context of the different rounds of hostilities, as identified by the commission of inquiry on the 2014 Gaza conflict and, before that, by the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict.³⁴ Such lack of accountability remains of the gravest concern.

B. Accountability for unlawful use of force

20. Impunity continues to prevail also in relation to incidents of possible excessive use of force by Israeli security forces outside the context of hostilities, confirming a worrying trend that has been repeatedly highlighted by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner.³⁵ The lack of progress in the investigations related to the widespread use of lethal force by the Israeli security forces in the context of the Great March of Return extends this unacceptable trend.

21. In February 2019, prior to the release of the report of the independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Israel Defense Forces published a document intended to provide information on the nature of the events related to the Great March of Return protests and on the response by the Forces. In large part, the document echoes the position of the Government of Israel expressed in its response to the 2018 Supreme Court petition on the open-fire policy.³⁶

²⁸ A/HRC/35/19, para. 18, A/HRC/37/41, para. 14, A/HRC/40/43, para. 8, and A/71/364, para. 40.

²⁹ www.haaretz.com/israel-news/israel-probing-death-of-two-palestinian-teens-in-gaza-warning-missile-strike-1.6762293.

³⁰ See also A/HRC/40/39, para. 15.

³¹ www.haaretz.com/israel-news/israel-probing-death-of-two-palestinian-teens-in-gaza-warning-missile-strike-1.6762293.

³² www.btselem.org/video/201812_lethal_warning#full.

³³ See, in particular, A/HRC/37/41, para. 17, and A/HRC/40/43, para. 13.

³⁴ A/HRC/29/52 and A/HRC/12/48 and Corr.1.

³⁵ See, for instance, A/HRC/34/38, paras. 43–44, A/HRC/35/19, paras. 17–18, and A/71/364, para. 66.

³⁶ www.idf.il/media/48315/petition-gaza-border-events-summary-of-state-position.pdf and <https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/Gaza+Fire+Regulations+Petition/State+response+Gaza+petition.pdf> (in Hebrew only).

22. In particular, the Israel Defense Forces continue to view the protests as events that cannot be considered detached from the ongoing armed conflict with armed groups in Gaza. Such a view translates into an operational approach that questions the applicability of the law enforcement framework based on international human rights law, as reflected in the claim that “most of the means and methods employed by law enforcement agencies in situations of riots or border incidents are simply ineffective or irrelevant to this scenario”.³⁷ That assessment is inconsistent with the findings of the commission of inquiry and with the information gathered by OHCHR through its continuous monitoring activities on the ground. Both the commission of inquiry and OHCHR have observed that the Great March of Return demonstrations along the Israel-Gaza fence are civilian in nature and, despite some acts of significant violence, do not constitute combat or a military campaign.³⁸ With regard to the use of lethal force, the Israel Defense Forces stress that, according to their standard operating procedures, “in contexts such as the Gaza border events, potentially lethal force may only be used in circumstances in which there is a real and imminent danger to human life or bodily integrity. Dangers that are not as serious cannot be dealt with by the use of such force,” adding that the Forces use “various measures to ensure the use of potentially lethal force is accurate and restrained”.³⁹ OHCHR monitoring activities on the ground, however, continue to indicate a persistent pattern of Palestinians getting killed or severely injured at the fence in circumstances where they do not seem to pose an imminent threat to life or serious injury.⁴⁰

23. According to the Israel Defense Forces, allegations of misconduct by members of the Forces are investigated in an effective and thorough manner.⁴¹ However, 19 months after the start of the Great March of Return, the Israeli military system had delivered only one sentence in relation to possible unlawful acts committed by the Israeli security forces at the fence (see para. 25 below).

24. According to information provided by the Israeli Ministry of Justice, as of 30 July 2019, 226 incidents resulting in the killing of Palestinian demonstrators during the Great March of Return had been referred to the General Staff Mechanism for Fact-Finding Assessments. The Mechanism has completed the investigation of 55 cases. In 10 cases, the Military Advocate General announced the opening of a military police investigation; in 20 other cases, the determination was to conclude the investigation without proceeding any further. The other cases referred to the Military Advocate General by the Mechanism were still pending. In three additional cases, a police investigation was initiated without the involvement of the Mechanism. The High Commissioner has highlighted the shortcomings of the Mechanism in previous reports, raising concerns as to whether such an internal mechanism meets accountability requirements under international law.⁴² The organizations Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and Palestinian Centre for Human Rights have submitted to the Israeli authorities 74 and 177 cases respectively related to individuals killed or injured at the Gaza fence since 30 March 2018.

25. On 29 October 2019, an Israeli military court sentenced an Israeli soldier to one month in prison, to be served by carrying out military-related labour, and to a two-month suspended sentence and demotion for shooting and killing without authorization Othman Hilles, a 14-year-old Palestinian. The killing occurred on 13 July 2018, close to the Israel-Gaza fence, east of Gaza City, and was captured on video. The independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory reviewed the incident and found that the victim had not posed an imminent threat of death or serious injury to Israeli security forces soldiers when he was shot.⁴³ According to the Israel Defense Forces, the conviction

³⁷ Israel Defense Forces, “Gaza border events: questions and answers”, p. 70. Available from www.idf.il/media/48555/gaza-border-events-questions-and-answers.pdf.

³⁸ A/HRC/40/74, para. 32.

³⁹ www.idf.il/en/minisites/questions-and-answers-concerning-the-violent-riots-and-attacks-occurring-on-the-border-between-gaza-and-israel-during-2018-9.

⁴⁰ www.un.org/unispal/document/human-rights-commissioners-update-on-the-implementation-of-recommendations-of-commission-of-inquiry-on-gaza-protests/.

⁴¹ Israel Defense Forces, “Gaza border events”, p. 92.

⁴² A/HRC/40/43, paras. 11 and 15.

⁴³ A/HRC/40/CRP.2, para. 517.

was part of a deal in which the soldier had pleaded guilty to “disobeying an order leading to a threat of life or health”.⁴⁴ Also according to the Forces, the defendant shot the Palestinian boy “without receiving the required permission from his commanders, not in accordance with the rules of engagement and not in accordance with the instructions he had received prior”.⁴⁵ Moreover, the soldier was not convicted of a more serious offence because military prosecutors were unable to collect sufficient evidence connecting his gunshot to the victim’s death.⁴⁶ The offence that forms the basis for the conviction and the leniency of the sentence appear starkly inconsistent with the gravity of the conduct, casting serious doubts on the effectiveness of the Israeli internal investigation and prosecution system to ensure accountability for human rights and international humanitarian law violations in line with international standards. The case appears also to highlight structural limitations inherent to the Israeli military justice system in focusing on the responsibility of soldiers in complying with orders and standard operating procedures, without addressing the legality of those same rules of engagement and the connected responsibility of military commanders.

26. Although not linked to the Great March of Return, on 15 May 2019 the Israeli Military Police Criminal Investigation Division closed the probe opened on 4 January 2018 into the killing of Ibrahim Abu Thoryah during demonstrations at the Gaza fence on 15 December 2017.⁴⁷ A double amputee in a wheelchair, Mr. Abu Thoryah was shot dead with live ammunition to the head. His killing sparked widespread international condemnation, including a statement by the High Commissioner.⁴⁸ According to media reports, the military investigation concluded that there was no evidence that the man had been killed by direct Israeli fire.⁴⁹ The Israel Defense Forces added that they had contacted Palestinian officials to obtain the bullet that had hit Mr. Abu Thoryah to examine it, but that the request had been denied. According to information collected by OHCHR at the time of the incident, there was no indication that Mr. Abu Thoryah had posed an imminent threat of death or serious injury at the moment he was killed. His physical disability must have been clearly visible to the person who shot him, in the front of the head, some 15–20m from the fence.

27. The lack of accountability for the killing and injury of Palestinians is evident in the context of the Great March of Return protests in Gaza as well as in the West Bank. On 17 December 2018, the Israeli Attorney General rejected an appeal submitted by the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI) contesting the Military Advocate General’s decision of April 2016 to close the investigation into the killing of 17-year-old Mohammad al-Qusbah by an Israel Defense Forces officer with three bullets to his upper limbs. The boy was running away from Israel Defense Forces personnel after throwing a stone towards Israeli installations near the village of Ar-Ram, on 3 July 2015.⁵⁰ In justifying the closing of the investigation, the Military Advocate General noted that security personnel had made “a professional error” by firing while the boy was running, adding that the incident occurred in “operational circumstances”.⁵¹ The Attorney General regarded the delay in the promotion of the officer as an “appropriate and proportionate response”.⁵² The failure to prosecute a soldier who had opened fire against an individual (in this case a minor) who, according to information resulting from OHCHR monitoring activities, did not seem to pose a threat to life or serious

⁴⁴ www.timesofisrael.com/in-first-soldier-convicted-over-killing-of-gaza-rioter-gets-1-month-sentence.

⁴⁵ Ibid.

⁴⁶ Ibid.

⁴⁷ www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israel-army-closes-case-disabled-gazan-s-death-citing-no-evidence-soldiers-shot-him-1.7246465 and www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-5066263,00.html.

⁴⁸ www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=22550&LangID=E%2027%20 and www.timesofisrael.com/idf-soldiers-didnt-intentionally-kill-double-amputee-in-gaza-riot/.

⁴⁹ This reflects what was already announced in the Israel Defense Forces initial probe, which indicated that there were “no moral or professional failures” on the part of the Israel Defense Forces in the incident. See www.timesofisrael.com/idf-soldiers-didnt-intentionally-kill-double-amputee-in-gaza-riot/.

⁵⁰ www.btselem.org/press_releases/20160410_muhammad_ali_qusbah_case_closed.

⁵¹ Letter dated 13 December 2018 from the Israeli Attorney General addressed to ACRI. See also www.timesofisrael.com/idf-colonel-cleared-in-shooting-death-of-rock-thrower/ and www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-officer-who-killed-stone-throwing-palestinian-tapped-for-top-post-1.6358286.

⁵² Letter dated 13 December from the Israeli Attorney General addressed to ACRI.

injury, again casts doubt on the effectiveness of the accountability system in place. Concerns also persist in relation to the Attorney General's position that the delay in the officer's promotion represents an appropriate and proportionate punishment for the conduct in question. In March 2019, ACRI and the family of the victim filed a petition with the Israeli High Court of Justice against the decision of the Attorney General.

28. On 27 March 2019, the Public Committee against Torture in Israel (PCATI) appealed to the Israeli Attorney General against the decision of the Military Advocate General to close the investigation into the killing of Aref Jaradat, a 22-year-old Palestinian with Down syndrome who was shot on 4 May 2016 in the abdomen in the context of an operation of the Israeli security forces in Sa'ir, near Hebron. Mr. Jaradat died of his wounds on 19 June 2016. According to the information collected by OHCHR at the time, the man, who was seemingly disoriented by the ongoing operation, was shot while standing with his hands visible some 20m from the Israeli security forces, in an open location, in circumstances where he did not seem to pose any threat. PCATI reported that the Military Advocate General ordered an investigation several months after the complaint had been submitted and the involved soldiers were only interviewed nine months after the incident. The investigation was closed on 25 July 2017 for lack of evidence, with various contradictions and discrepancies between the testimonies of soldiers. The Military Advocate General rejected, on 22 January 2019, a motion by PCATI to reconsider its decision.

29. During the reporting period, the spokesperson for the Military Advocate General announced the closure of the investigations into the killing by the Israeli security forces, in three separate incidents, of Ali Omar Nimer Qinu (aged 17), Layth Haitham Fathi Abu Na'im (aged 16) and Yassin Omar Sliman a-Saeadih (aged 35) during law enforcement operations conducted in the West Bank in the context of clashes in January and February 2018.⁵³

30. The persisting lack of accountability for possible unlawful acts committed against Palestinians perpetuates a cycle of impunity that facilitates the occurrence of further violations. Moreover, by leaving unanswered the quest for redress, justice and truth, the suffering of the affected families is exacerbated. The two cases below are illustrative in that regard.

31. On 20 April 2018, 14-year-old Mohammad Ibrahim Ayoubi was killed by the Israeli security forces with a single shot of live ammunition to his head while running away from the Gaza-Israel fence, some 250–300m from it, at Abu Safia demonstration site, in northern Gaza Strip. An initial Israeli military investigation determined that the boy was attempting to damage the fence.⁵⁴ Video footage, however, showed the boy being shot as he was running away. Eyewitnesses confirmed the circumstances of his killing to OHCHR. In July 2018, the family filed a complaint to the Military Advocate General, with the support of the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, which told OHCHR that the Centre had been informed on 14 March 2019 that an investigation had been opened by the military police and that, on 13 May 2019, the military police had arranged for two witnesses to provide testimony by videoconference. No further update has been received since then. Both of Mohammad's parents have described suffering from continuous psychological distress and his 16-year-old brother, who was present at the demonstration site the day his brother was killed, has suffered from recurring nightmares and episodes of increased aggressiveness. The family has denounced the lack of psychosocial, medical and financial support.

32. On 21 June 2016, 15-year-old Mahmoud Badran was shot and killed by an Israel Defense Forces officer. In the same incident, four other Palestinians, including three children, were injured when the security forces opened fire on the roof of their car as they were driving on an underpass connecting two Palestinian villages along route 443. One of the injured boys told OHCHR that they had been shot without warning by two individuals standing next to a parked car.⁵⁵ Mahmoud's father reported that the family had retained a lawyer to support them in following up on the investigation carried out by the Israeli authorities. Each time the lawyer approached the Military Advocate General, he was told that the investigation was almost completed and that a charge list would be issued soon. On 12 January 2018, Israeli media reported that the Military Advocate General had decided to close the case against the Israel Defense Forces officer.⁵⁶ With the defendant having supposedly acted based on the assumption that the persons in the car were involved in an earlier incident of stone throwing, the military investigators found that the erroneous identification of the car was “sincere and reasonable” and that the forces had “operated appropriately”.⁵⁷ After the investigation was closed, the family proceeded with a civil lawsuit, which was pending as at December 2019. The father has explained that the loss of Mahmoud has had a devastating impact on his family. His younger son avoids leaving the house while his wife suffers from episodes during which she abruptly breaks down in tears or stares in front of her without saying a word.

⁵³ www.btselem.org/press_releases/20191028_mag_corps_closes_3_more_cases_of_palestinian_fatalities.

⁵⁴ www.timesofisrael.com/army-said-to-find-teen-was-trying-to-damage-gaza-fence-when-shot/.

⁵⁵ A/HRC/34/36, para. 9.

Rules of engagement

33. The independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory has stressed that scarce accountability measures arising out of Operations Cast Lead and Protective Edge and public comments by high-ranking public officials cast doubt over the State’s willingness to scrutinize the actions of military and civilian leadership who drafted, approved and supervised the implementation of the rules of engagement governing the actions of Israeli forces at the demonstrations.⁵⁸ The rules of engagement of the Israeli security forces remain largely confidential. The Government of Israel, however, has outlined some of their operational implications in its response to two petitions submitted by six Israeli and Palestinian human rights organizations to the High Court of Justice on 15 and 23 April 2018.⁵⁹

34. The Israel Defense Forces have provided further information on its rules of engagement (referred to as “standard operating procedures”). In particular, they have clarified the notion of “key instigators” or “key rioters”, which had been treated with caution by the High Court of Justice in its judgment on the legality of the open-fire regulation policy in May 2018.⁶⁰ International law does not recognize as such these two categories of individuals in the context of demonstrations. According to Israel Defense Forces instructions, “where the commander assesses that the use of potentially lethal force is required to repel the real and imminent danger posed by a crowd, the commander will order such force only against ‘key instigators’ or ‘key rioters’”.⁶¹ The Forces also note that individuals falling into those two categories “are often conducting activities within the violent riots for a lengthy period of time, and snipers face a challenge in identifying a time which provides the necessary circumstances for carrying out their fire while reducing the risk of hitting above the knee or hitting someone else. For example, snipers may act as a person temporarily moves away from the crowd or rests before continuing his activity”.⁶² Such a conclusion is highly problematic because it excessively broadens the notion of “imminent threat”, particularly in relation to its temporal proximity, an interpretation that does not find support in international human rights law standards or jurisprudence.⁶³ The Israel Defense Forces have provided a list of examples of behaviour that could trigger the use of lethal force against the two categories of ⁵⁶ A/HRC/37/41, para. 21. See also www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-officer-won-t-be-indicted-for-opening-fire-againstrules-killing-palestinian-boy-1.5730351.

⁵⁷ See A/HRC/40/43, para. 23.

⁵⁸ A/HRC/40/74, para. 111.

⁵⁹ www.idf.il/media/48315/petition-gaza-border-events-summary-of-state-position.pdf and <https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/Gaza+Fire+Regulations+Petition/State+response+Gaza+petition.pdf> (in Hebrew only). See also A/HRC/40/43 para. 16.

⁶⁰ High Court of Justice of Israel, Yesh Din v. Chief of General Staff, IDF (case No. 3003/18), judgment of 24 May 2018.

⁶¹ Israel Defense Forces, “Gaza border events”, p. 83.

⁶² Ibid., pp. 87–88.

⁶³ In that regard, the commission of inquiry has stressed that it is clear that the “imminent threat to life” standard – as applied in the rules of engagement – was too far removed from the criteria as understood in international law (A/HRC/40/CRP.2, para. 324).

individuals.⁶⁴ As emphasized by the commission of inquiry, such examples of behaviour cannot in themselves lawfully trigger the use of lethal force under the law enforcement paradigm as framed under international law, unless the victim is simultaneously posing an imminent threat to life or serious injury.⁶⁵

35. Conflicting media reports emerged in July and August 2019 on whether the open-fire regulations employed by the Israel Defense Forces along the Israel-Gaza fence were amended during the reporting period to ensure that soldiers would primarily shoot below the knee and fine-tune the regulations to shooting at the ankle after it emerged in many cases that firing at the lower limbs above the knee led to death.⁶⁶ In a letter addressed to ACRI in August 2019, the Military Advocate General denied that any change or revision of the instructions provided to soldiers at the fence had occurred since the beginning of the large-scale demonstrations in March 2018.⁶⁷ While the Israel Defense Forces have not expressed any official position on the matter, OHCHR findings continue to suggest the persistence of live ammunition injuries to the upper limbs, including the torso and the head, among casualties at the fence, in certain cases leading to fatalities.⁶⁸ Such persistence does not appear to support the notion that any change has been made to the regulations of the Israeli security forces or to manner of their implementation. In addition, no change in the rules of engagement has been reported to prohibit the authorization of lethal force against “key instigators” or “key rioters” as a status.

Civil remedies

36. As highlighted in previous reports of the High Commissioner, Palestinians residing in Gaza face significant barriers that impede or prevent them from seeking civil remedies to pursue accountability for alleged violations.⁶⁹ The reporting period did not witness any amendment to the 2014 clause excluding the Gaza population (as residents of an “enemy territory”) from the scope of Israeli civil liability legislation. The applicability of such a clause has exempted the State from liability for wrongful acts committed by the Israel Defense Forces since the 2014 escalation.⁷⁰

⁶⁴ In particular, reference is made to the following actions: coordinating the tactical placement and setting on fire of tyres; coordinating people to contribute towards pulling back parts of the security infrastructure; moving through the crowd while talking into a radio; pulling wires attached to part of the security infrastructure (barbed wire coils), together with a group of people; inciting a mob, influencing the behaviour of those in the mob or providing the conditions for mass breaches or infiltrations to occur; and connecting wires to the security infrastructure (i.e., barbed wire coils placed by the Israel Defense Forces inside Gaza) so that it may be pulled backwards. See Israel Defense Forces, “Gaza border events”, pp. 84–85. See also A/HRC/40/CRP.2, para. 315.

⁶⁵ A/HRC/40/CRP.2, para. 316.

⁶⁶ www.btselem.org/press_releases/20190724_military_admits_to_killing_protestors_for_no_reason, www.ynet.co.il/articles/0,7340,L-5569938,00.html and www.haaretz.com/israel-news/premium-israel-takes-tactical-risk-in-gaza-to-serve-a-strategic-goal-1.7866444.

⁶⁷ Letter dated 15 August 2019 from the Military Advocate General to ACRI. The Israel Defense Forces stressed that there had been additional restrictions imposed on the use of force over and above what was authorized by the standard operating procedures, but that this had not required any changes to the standard operating procedures (Israel Defense Forces, “Gaza border events”, p. 66). See also www.idf.il/en/minisites/questions-and-answers-concerning-the-violent-riots-and-attacks-occurring-on-the-border-between-gaza-and-israel-during-2018-9/.

⁶⁸ On 26 July 2019, a 22-year-old demonstrator was shot dead with live ammunition to his abdomen, east of Khuza’a; on 31 August 2019, a 22-year-old demonstrator was pronounced dead after being shot in the head with live ammunition the day before, also east of Khuza’a; on 6 September 2019, a 14-year-old boy and a 17-year-old boy died after being shot by live ammunition to their waist and neck at Malaka and Abu Safia demonstration sites; and, on 4 October 2019, a 28-year-old demonstrator was hit by live ammunition to his chest at Abu Safia demonstration site and was pronounced dead later on the same day, upon arrival at the hospital.

⁶⁹ See, in particular, A/HRC/37/41, para. 15, and A/HRC/40/43, paras. 25–26. See also A/71/364, paras. 40 and 56–57.

⁷⁰ A/71/364, paras. 56–57. See Government of Israel decree of 26 October 2014 declaring the Gaza strip “enemy territory”, valid retroactively from 7 July 2014, thereby activating the exemption from damages to “persons who are not citizens or residents of Israel, and are residents of a territory outside Israel that has been declared an ‘enemy territory’ in a governmental decree”. On 3 February 2019, an

C. Accountability for violations by the Palestinian authorities

37. During the reporting period, few developments have been reported in relation to actions undertaken by the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to investigate and prosecute the authors of alleged violations linked to incidents of excessive use of force by the Palestinian security forces.

38. OHCHR sought information, in particular, on the steps taken by the Palestinian Authority to investigate allegations of excessive use of force by Palestinian security forces in the context of the civilian demonstrations held in Ramallah and Nablus on 13 June 2018 to protest against the imposition by the Palestinian Authority of restrictive measures on the Gaza Strip. According to information provided by the Ministry of the Interior, an internal investigation found that the Palestinian security forces had acted according to the law, except for some minor violations, for which disciplinary measures had reportedly been taken. However, as previously reported by the High Commissioner and several independent human rights organizations,⁷¹ first-hand monitoring and verification activities suggest that demonstrators were physically assaulted, that at least 56 people were violently and arbitrarily arrested and that some were subjected to ill-treatment in detention. The Palestinian Authority also informed OHCHR that, during the reporting period, three incidents involving possible excessive use of force by police personnel were referred to the military courts. The status of those proceedings remains unknown. The High Commissioner urges the State of Palestine to ensure that incidents involving possible excessive use of force are promptly, impartially and independently investigated in line with international standards, and that those responsible are held accountable.

39. In the context of Gaza, OHCHR did not receive information indicating any measures taken by the de facto authorities to investigate and prosecute those allegedly involved in incidents of possible excessive use of force by the Gaza security forces during the civilian demonstrations that took place between 14 and 16 March 2019. A considerable number of participants, including women and children, were beaten by Gaza security forces in uniform and by others in plainclothes, and consequently hospitalized. Up to 1,000 demonstrators were arrested and detained, and some of them were subjected to ill-treatment while in detention.⁷² Staff members of the Palestinian Independent Commission for Human Rights who were physically assaulted by Gaza security forces during the March 2019 protests reported having been informally approached by representatives of the comptroller mechanism of the Ministry of the Interior in Gaza, which offered them apologies and a verbal commitment to opening a probe into the incidents. However, as at the end of the reporting period, no information has been published about any concrete steps taken to that effect.

IV. Third-State responsibility

40. In its resolution 40/13, the Human Rights Council called upon all States to ensure respect for international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in accordance with article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions. It also called upon all States to fulfil their obligations with regard to penal sanctions, grave breaches and the appeal was filed by Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and Adalah to the Supreme Court of Israel against the decision of the District Court of Beersheva of 4 November 2018 upholding the constitutionality of the law prohibiting Palestinians living in Gaza from seeking compensation from Israel. The constitutionality of the exclusionary clause was challenged in a tort lawsuit brought by two human rights organizations on behalf of Ateyeh Nabaheen, who was shot and seriously wounded on 11 November 2014 in Gaza, while on his family's property, outside any area of military activity, and who was left quadriplegic and confined to a wheelchair as a result of his wounds. See www.nevo.co.il/psika_html/mechozi/ME-10-12-40777-390.htm (in Hebrew only); A/HRC/37/41, para. 16, and A/HRC/37/41, para. 26.

⁷¹ A/HRC/40/39, para. 61. See also www.alhaq.org/advocacy/6185.html and <https://www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2018/06/state-of-palestine-amnesty-staff-member-arbitrarily-detained-and-tortured-by-palestinian-security-officers/>.

⁷² A/HRC/43/70, paras. 44–45.

responsibilities of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, in accordance with articles 146, 147 and 148 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. Moreover, it called upon all the parties concerned to cooperate fully with the preliminary examination of the International Criminal Court and with any subsequent investigation that may be opened.

41. Third States may take various measures to comply with their obligations under relevant international law, in particular to ensure respect for international humanitarian law.⁷³ Such measures may range from diplomatic interventions and démarches to more significant steps, including supporting domestic and international efforts to bring suspected perpetrators of serious violations of international human rights and humanitarian law to justice, applying measures of retortion or adopting lawful countermeasures.⁷⁴

42. In October 2019, with a view to contributing to the present report, OHCHR sent a note verbale to Member States requesting them to provide information on any steps they may have taken as third States to promote compliance with international law and implement the recommendations addressed to them in the report of the independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Two responses were received, from Cuba and the Syrian Arab Republic. In their responses, both States reiterated their support for Human Rights Council resolution 40/13 and reaffirmed the need for the international community to take decisive steps to end violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, while emphasizing the importance of continuing to document the violations and crimes committed.

43. On 17 September 2019, the District Court of The Hague held an admissibility hearing on a case brought by a dual national of the State of Palestine and the Netherlands, Ismail Ziada, against a former Chief of General Staff of the Israel Defense Forces and a former Commander of the Israeli Air Force, alleging their responsibility as commanders in an airstrike that hit the plaintiff's family house in Bureij refugee camp in Gaza, on 20 July 2014, during Operation Protective Edge⁷⁵ and that resulted in the death of six members of the plaintiff's family. The case has been submitted in accordance with the law of the Netherlands extending civil jurisdiction for citizens unable to initiate legal proceedings elsewhere.

44. While States Members of the United Nations have often supported the adoption of resolutions and declarations by different United Nations bodies enshrining respect for international law principles in relation to the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the degree of compliance with the decisions and recommendations of these bodies remains uneven, as underlined in previous reports of the High Commissioner.⁷⁶

V. Conclusion and recommendations

45. The period under review was characterized by a persistent failure to ensure accountability for allegations of excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces in the context of the large-scale protests in Gaza and law enforcement operations in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Impunity also remained pervasive in relation to allegations against all parties to the 2014 escalation and to previous rounds of hostilities in Gaza. Furthermore, there were concerns about the insufficiency of steps taken to investigate and prosecute the members of Palestinian security forces or of the security forces in Gaza responsible for alleged excessive use of force and other human rights abuses committed against Palestinians.

⁷³ International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), commentary of 2016 on article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, para. 165. See also A/HRC/40/43, para. 49.

⁷⁴ ICRC, commentary of 2016 on article 1, para. 181.

⁷⁵ www.reuters.com/article/us-netherlands-israel-gantz/dutch-court-to-hear-case-against-israels-gantz-idUSKBN1W12JZ.

⁷⁶ A/HRC/31/40/Add.1 and A/HRC/35/19, para. 62. Also, as emphasized by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, the international community possesses a great deal of power to ensure a positive, durable and just solution to the occupation. Indeed, it will not end without the international community acting decisively in support of international law and its common values to compel Israel to fulfil its obligations (A/74/507, para. 76).

46. With regard to the responsibility of third States, and as already emphasized by the High Commissioner, despite the incessant calls made by the international community and the support provided to Palestinian and Israeli authorities in their peace efforts, not enough has been done by the international community to that effect.⁷⁷ In its resolution 2334 (2016), the Security Council stressed that the status quo was not sustainable and that significant steps were urgently needed to stabilize the situation and to reverse negative trends on the ground. In that regard, the Secretary-General has emphasized that a lack of accountability compromised chances for sustainable peace and security, adding that tackling impunity must be the highest priority.⁷⁸ The High Commissioner again echoes those calls.

47. Recalling the follow-up measures described in previous comprehensive reviews of recommendations,⁷⁹ the High Commissioner:

(a) Calls upon Israel to fully comply with its obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; urges it to conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular into allegations of international crimes; and also calls upon Israel to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, reparation and truth;

(b) Urges the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular into allegations of international crimes; and calls upon the State of Palestine to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, reparation and truth;

(c) Recommends that all parties ensure full respect for international law, including international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and that they ensure accountability for grave violations;

(d) Calls upon all States to take measures to ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions by all parties;

(e) Reiterates the calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures to ensure full respect and compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.

⁷⁷ A/HRC/35/19, para. 62.

⁷⁸ A/71/364, para. 6.

⁷⁹ A/HRC/35/19, para. 62.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
20 January 2020

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty third session

24 February–20 March 2020

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report, the twelfth submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1, covers the period from 1 November 2018 to 31 October 2019. It provides an overview of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and highlights, in particular, the shrinking civic space and the restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association. The High Commissioner makes recommendations to the main duty bearers concerned, namely the Government of Israel, the Government of the State of Palestine and the authorities in Gaza.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent developments.

I. Introduction

1. Submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1, the present report provides an overview of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory between 1 November 2018 and 31 October 2019. In accordance with the above-mentioned resolutions, it details violations of international humanitarian law by the occupying Power, Israel, and by Palestinian armed groups, and violations of international human rights law by all three duty bearers, namely the Government of Israel, the Government of the State of Palestine, and the authorities in Gaza.

2. The information contained in the present report relies mainly on the human rights monitoring activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It also reflects information from governmental sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The report should be read in conjunction with other relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly.¹

3. Throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the reporting period was marked by the ongoing shrinking of civic space as the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the authorities in Gaza continued to restrict the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly. Many of those detained for simply expressing their opinion through social media, attending demonstrations or criticizing the authorities reported being ill-treated and, in a number of cases, tortured.

4. Violence continued at high levels. During the reporting period, the Israeli security forces killed 131 Palestinians,² including five women, 21 boys and two girls. Eleven Israelis were killed in attacks by Palestinians, including five soldiers, four civilians during hostilities and two settlers, one of whom was a girl. Of the fatalities, 39 occurred in the context of mass demonstrations along the perimeter fence of Israel with Gaza, with continuing concerns about excessive use of force and absence of accountability. In the West Bank, 35 Palestinians were killed, most of whom in the context of clashes, search and arrest operations or in response to attempted or alleged attacks. These developments are examined in greater detail in the report of the High Commissioner on ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.³ There were several brief but significant escalations in hostilities between Palestinian armed groups and Israel in Gaza, one of which represented the most intense escalation since 2014.

5. In Gaza, the Israeli blockade and closures, which entered its thirteenth year, continued to severely restrict the movement of people and goods in and out of Gaza, as well as access within Gaza to basic services, electricity, fuel and medical supplies. Amid a faltering reconciliation process between Fatah and Hamas, the Palestinian Authority continued to apply punitive measures on the population of Gaza by cutting civil service salaries and forcing early retirement. The authorities in Gaza continued to arbitrarily arrest and detain Fatah affiliates and others; numerous reports were made of ill-treatment of detainees. The authorities also handed down 11 death sentences during the reporting period, seven of which by military courts, including against one woman.

6. In the West Bank, Israel escalated settlement expansion, demolitions and evictions of Palestinian homeowners. The Prime Minister of Israel expressed his intention to annex the Jordan Valley.⁴ Levels of settler violence remained high, as the Israeli authorities continued to frequently fail to protect the Palestinian population and, in some cases, accompanied and protected settlers during attacks against Palestinians. These developments are examined in further detail in the report of the High Commissioner on Israeli settlements

¹ A/HRC/40/39, A/HRC/40/43, A/74/357 and A/74/468.

² Including four men wounded before the reporting period who succumbed to their wounds during the reporting period.

³ A/HRC/43/21.

⁴ www.timesofisrael.com/netanyahu-after-jordan-valley-and-settlements-ill-annex-other-vital-areas.

in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan.⁵ Concerns also remained over the detention practices of Israel, particularly against children, human rights defenders and journalists.

Legal framework

7. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are applicable in the entirety of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. A detailed analysis of the relevant legal obligations is contained in a report of the Secretary-General on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and remained applicable for the duration of the reporting period.⁶

II. Violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by all duty bearers

A. Israel

1. Obligations of the occupying Power under international humanitarian law

8. The Israeli blockade and punitive closures continued to severely restrict the movement of people and goods in and out of Gaza. Other Israeli practices that may amount to collective punishment, including punitive demolitions, closures and withholding of bodies, continued at a high rate. Collective punishment, in addition to being explicitly prohibited by international humanitarian law, violates a range of human rights.

9. On 9 September 2019, the High Court of Justice of Israel reversed its earlier decision of December 2017 and ruled that the Israeli authorities could withhold the bodies of Palestinians killed by the Israeli security forces as a tool for bargaining.⁷ By the end of the reporting period, Israel held the bodies of 303 Palestinians, 253 of whom had been killed during hostilities and buried in graves marked only by numbers. This figure includes a further 20 bodies of Palestinians who were killed and withheld during the reporting period.⁸ Withholding bodies punishes the families of the deceased and thus could amount to collective punishment and violate the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment and the obligations of Israel, as an occupying Power, pursuant to article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.⁹

10. In the West Bank, the Israeli security forces carried out eight punitive demolitions, all in Areas A and B, under Palestinian civilian control.¹⁰ In one case, on 15 December 2018, the Israeli security forces demolished a four-storey building in Al Ama'ari refugee camp that was home to three families, including the family of a man indicted for killing an Israeli soldier. The High Court of Justice of Israel rejected a petition against the demolition order, stating that demolitions could be authorized even if the other residents did not help to perpetrate or were not aware of the intention to commit the attack.¹¹

11. Also of concern was the continued closure of villages by the Israeli security forces following alleged stone-throwing in surrounding areas.¹² In one such case, following the alleged throwing of stones at settlers' vehicles outside Azzun, Qalqilya Governorate, the

⁵ A/HRC/43/67.

⁶ A/HRC/34/38, paras. 3–12.

⁷ High Court of Justice, The IDF Commander in the West Bank v. Alian (case No. 10190/17).

⁸ Information provided by the Jerusalem Centre for Legal Aid and Human Rights Center.

⁹ See also A/71/364, para. 25.

¹⁰ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance of the Secretariat.

¹¹ High Court of Justice, Naji v. the Military commander of the West Bank (case No. 6905/18).

¹² A/HRC/40/39, para. 11.

Israeli security forces closed the main entrance to the town and placed a checkpoint at the secondary entrance for 20 days, starting on 27 March 2019, affecting around 9,000 inhabitants.¹³

12. Between June and October 2019, allegedly in response to stone-throwing, the Israeli security forces conducted frequent arrests and night raids and imposed movement restrictions in Al Isawiya neighbourhood of East Jerusalem. During that period, the Israeli security forces arrested 365 Palestinians, including at least 95 children and 42 women. By the end of September, fewer than 10 of those persons had reportedly been indicted, raising concerns that most arrests and detentions were without legal grounds, which would render them arbitrary.¹⁴ On 29 and 30 July 2019, the Israeli security forces summoned for interrogation the parents of two children, aged 5 and 6, alleging that they had thrown stones at the forces. According to Israeli media, the chief of the Jerusalem District Police stated in September that the arrests in Al Isawiya would continue, “until they stop throwing rocks at every police car driving by”.¹⁵ The stated aim of these continued operations and detentions raise concern about a pattern of collective punishment of the population of Al Isawiya.

13. Advancement of settlement plans and construction continued at a high rate. During the reporting period, the Israeli authorities demolished 957¹⁶ structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem – the highest levels since 2016.¹⁷ Settler violence against Palestinians continued at high levels.¹⁸ According to the results of OHCHR monitoring activities, some families were consequently left with no choice but to leave their homes in East Jerusalem, Nablus and Hebron governorates, raising concerns that these cases may amount to forcible transfer. These developments are described in the report of the High Commissioner submitted to the Human Rights Council at its fortieth session.¹⁹

14. The Israeli security forces continued to use live ammunition to enforce unilaterally declared restrictions at sea in Gaza.²⁰ They injured 18 fisherfolk during 354 shooting incidents. In addition, 42 fisherfolk, including five children, were arrested and 17 fishing boats were confiscated. Along the land perimeter with Israel, Israeli security forces tanks and bulldozers routinely conducted incursions into Gaza to level and excavate farmland. Four farmers were injured by the Israeli security forces during the reporting period.

15. The enforcement methods used by Israel in the restricted areas are not in accordance with international law insofar as they often violate the rules on the use of force by law enforcement officials. In the context of hostilities, the methods used often violate the principle of distinction, which establishes that civilians (in this case, the fisherfolk and the farmers) and civilian objects are not to be targeted.

2. Civilian casualties in the context of hostilities

16. During the reporting period, Palestinian armed groups launched 1,078 rockets and 352 mortar shells towards Israel and Israel fired 848 rockets and 308 tank shells into Gaza, which resulted in the death of four Israeli civilians and 16 Palestinian civilians, including four women and three children, two of whom were infants.²¹ The rockets and mortars launched from Gaza, most of which landed inside Israel, were indiscriminate in nature, violating international humanitarian law through their inability to distinguish between military and civilian objectives. Several Israeli attacks on Gaza raised serious concern with regard to the principles of distinction, proportionality and precautions in attack.

¹³ http://pcbs.gov.ps/Portals/_Rainbow/Documents/QalqiliyaE.html.

¹⁴ www.haaretz.com/middle-east-news/palestinians/israel-police-arrest-25-in-east-j-lem-neighborhood-despite-vow-to-ease-crackdown-1.7883879.

¹⁵ Ibid.

¹⁶ www.ochaopt.org/data/demolition.

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance of the Secretariat.

¹⁹ A/HRC/40/42.

²⁰ A/73/420, para. 33.

²¹ Information provided by the Department of Safety and Security of the Secretariat.

17. In May 2019, during the most intense escalation of hostilities, the Israeli security forces targeted the military sites of Palestinian armed groups, which resulted in 25 fatalities, a number of which were claimed by the armed groups to have been members. The Israeli security forces also struck cultural centres, seaports, commercial buildings and 324 residential buildings and houses located in populated areas. On 5 May 2019, in Beit Lahia, northern Gaza Strip, the Israeli security forces struck a residential tower, killing six Palestinians, including two women and their children, a girl aged 4 months and a boy aged 12 years. Witnesses reported that there was no prior warning of the missile strikes. These incidents also raise concerns with regard to the principles of distinction, proportionality and precautions in attack.

18. OHCHR is not aware of any investigations conducted by Israel into the attacks on residential buildings in Gaza that caused civilian fatalities during the reporting period. Similarly, there is no public information to indicate that the authorities in Gaza have conducted any investigations in response to the indiscriminate firing of rockets towards Israel that resulted in civilian fatalities.

B. Recurring human rights violations

1. Violations of freedom of movement

19. Severe restrictions by Israel on Palestinians' freedom of movement remained in place, including through 705 permanent checkpoints and obstacles, the Wall (which is 465km long),²² barriers and an arbitrary and restrictive permit and identification system. Freedom of movement is guaranteed under international human rights law²³ and is a frequent prerequisite for the enjoyment of many other rights, including the rights to an adequate standard of living, health, education, work and family life.

20. During the reporting period, the Israeli authorities imposed 306 travel bans on Palestinians in the West Bank based on alleged "security grounds", without providing the individuals or their lawyers with the basis for the decision, even in appeal processes.²⁴ In one case, a Palestinian journalist, Majdoleen Hassoneh, was twice interrogated by the Palestinian General Intelligence Services at the border crossing with Jordan, on 6 and 18 August 2019. Following her interrogations, the Israeli authorities issued a ban denying her travel to Jordan. Ms. Hassoneh was summoned by the Israeli security forces for a security interview and presented herself on three occasions, but the Israeli security forces refused to interview her and referred her instead to the Palestinian District Coordination and Liaison Office, where she filed a request to have the ban lifted. She had not received a response by the end of the reporting period.

21. While, in comparison to the previous reporting period, there was a slight increase in the number of persons exiting Gaza, thousands continued to be denied requests to exit through the Israel-controlled Erez crossing and the Egypt-controlled Rafah crossing, or faced delays. Of the 55,950 permit applications submitted to the Israeli authorities by the Palestinian General Authority of Civil Affairs,²⁵ 24,623 (44 per cent) were granted, 15,447 (27.6 per cent) were denied, 14,291 (25.5 per cent) were delayed and 1,539 (2.74 per cent) remained under security review.²⁶ The Rafah crossing was open for 242 calendar days, a noticeable increase compared to the previous reporting period, enabling 75,961 Palestinians to exit Gaza and 64,807 others to enter Gaza.²⁷

²² Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance of the Secretariat.

²³ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 12 (1).

²⁴ Figures provided by Hurryyat.

²⁵ For details on the permit applications, see A/73/420, paras. 11–18.

²⁶ Figures provided by the Palestinian National Authority of General Authority of Civil Affairs, 24 October 2019.

²⁷ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance of the Secretariat.

22. Patients from Gaza requiring specialized medical treatment not available in Gaza continued to face challenges in accessing medical care due to the movement restrictions imposed by Israel. According to the World Health Organization, of the 25,063 patient applications submitted to the Israeli authorities during the reporting period, 16,334 (65 per cent) were approved, 2,050 (8 per cent) were denied and 6,679 (26.6 per cent) were delayed.

2. Violations of the right to life and physical integrity

23. Almost every Friday, Palestinians in Gaza continued to organize demonstrations, known as the “Great March of Return”, at the Israel-Gaza fence, calling for the lifting of the blockade and an end to the Israeli occupation. While the demonstrations remained largely peaceful, on numerous occasions a number of demonstrators damaged and breached the fence and/or threw Molotov cocktails, sound grenades and improvised explosive devices towards the Israeli security forces. Two Israeli soldiers were thus injured during the reporting period. A total of 508 burning kites and incendiary balloons²⁸ were reportedly launched by demonstrators, causing significant damage to agricultural land and forests inside Israel.

24. The Israeli security forces used tear gas, rubber-coated bullets, water cannons and sound devices, and regularly fired live ammunition against demonstrators. Consequently, 39 Palestinians, including 12 children and one woman, were killed in the reporting period. Over 2,075 others,²⁹ including 577 children, were injured by live ammunition fired by the Israeli security forces. Many injuries led to permanent disabilities, with 55 people, including four children and one woman, having limbs and/or fingers amputated, six being paralyzed and 10 partially losing their vision.³⁰ OHCHR monitored numerous cases related to the killing and injury of demonstrators near the fence. In the vast majority of the cases, no indication was found that the demonstrators, including children who were killed or seriously injured by live fire, represented an imminent threat of death or risk of serious injury to either Israeli security forces personnel or others.

25. On 8 December 2018, east of Khan Younis, the Israeli security forces opened fire on a group of demonstrators, fatally injuring a 4-year-old boy. Witnesses reported that the boy was holding his father’s hand at the time of the incident and that he was standing approximately 150–300m from the fence. He was struck with shrapnel in the abdomen and skull and underwent multiple surgeries, but died on 11 December 2018 from mass haemorrhaging. On 11 January 2019, the Israeli security forces shot a 44-year-old woman in the head with live ammunition, approximately 250m from the fence. Witnesses reported that she was watching the demonstrations at the time of her killing. On 8 February, east of Gaza city, the Israeli security forces shot a 17-year-old boy in the neck with live ammunition as he was watching the demonstrations, 300m from the fence. On 6 September 2019, also east of Gaza city and east of Jabalia respectively, two boys, aged 14 and 17, were shot dead in the waist and neck with live ammunition.

26. In the West Bank, the Israeli security forces killed 35 Palestinians: 28 men, one woman, five boys and one girl. The majority of the victims (21) were men under the age of 24 years and boys. In 18 of the incidents, the Israeli security forces alleged an attack had prompted the killings, while in nine of the incidents there were no reports of injuries against the Israeli security forces or anyone else. The Israeli security forces killed 12 persons during clashes, raids, at checkpoints or while driving, seemingly while there was no threat of death or serious injury to them, and five persons during arrest operations. Additionally, settlers killed two Palestinian men in the West Bank.

27. On 27 March 2019, in Bethlehem, the Israeli security forces killed a 17-year-old volunteer paramedic in Ad Duheisha refugee camp while he was carrying out his duties, attempting to reach an injured man. He was clearly identifiable, wearing a marked orange vest, when the Israeli security forces shot him in the abdomen at a distance of 25m with live ammunition.

²⁸ Information provided by the Department of Safety and Security of the Secretariat.

²⁹ Figure provided by the World Health Organization.

³⁰ Ibid.

28. East of Bethlehem, on 18 April 2019, the Israeli security forces twice shot a 16-year-old Palestinian boy in the leg, from behind, with live ammunition, at a distance of 50m. The boy, who was trying to escape the Israeli security forces, was handcuffed and blindfolded. On 31 May 2019, the Israeli security forces shot in the chest and killed an unarmed 16-year-old boy with live ammunition from a distance of 3–4m, as he was climbing a fence attempting to enter East Jerusalem.

29. On 20 February 2019, in Bethlehem Governorate, the Israeli security forces broke into the home of a 47-year-old visually impaired man. While the man was in bed, one soldier repeatedly punched him in the face and hands for several minutes, fracturing one hand and dislocating his jaw. The Israeli security forces, who had searched the apartment above for a wanted man, left without arresting anyone. The case raises serious concerns about the unwarranted use of force against a person with disabilities. The victim filed a complaint; his case was closed by the Israel Defence Forces on 18 November 2019 without further action having been taken.

30. Under international law, the use of force in law enforcement operations must be limited to situations in which it is strictly necessary and in accordance with the principle of proportionality. Lethal force should be used only in situations of last resort, specifically in response to an imminent threat of death or serious injury. Use of force that does not comply with those principles and that results in death amounts to arbitrary deprivation of life. Under international humanitarian law, this may also constitute an act of willful killing.

31. The High Commissioner reiterates that Israel has an obligation under international law to conduct prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations into all use of force by its security forces that results in death or injury.

3. Gender-based violence

32. United Nations experts have in the past observed that femicide threatens Palestinian women's right to life and that legislation to tackle gender-based violence remains inadequate.³¹ Although a high number of gender-based violence cases are reported to service providers, it is likely that such violence is significantly underreported. In November 2019, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics published its 2019 violence survey, in which it was found that 29 per cent of women across the Occupied Palestinian Territory had experienced some form of violence by their husbands at least once.³² According to a recent study published by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA),³³ the increasingly fragile and stressful situation in Gaza was likely to increase the vulnerability of women to violence. During the reporting period, the Women's Centre for Legal Aid and Counselling registered 22 cases of gender-related killings in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: 17 in the West Bank and five in Gaza. Of grave concern is the insufficient response by the responsible authorities in terms of preventive action and of investigating, prosecuting and bringing to justice those responsible for violence in the private sphere.

33. In Gaza, one women's centre reported having received around 1,250 new cases of gender-based violence, with victims requiring services such as legal aid, shelter, and psychosocial support.³⁴ Serious gaps remained in addressing the increasing need for protection and services, with one women's shelter in Gaza reporting it had received approximately 10 cases of violence against women daily.³⁵ Another organization

³¹ A/HRC/35/30/Add.2, paras. 24–25, 29, 66 and 69, and CEDAW/C/PSE/CO/1, paras. 26–27.

³² Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, "Preliminary results of the violence survey in the Palestinian society" (November 2019). Available from <http://pcbs.gov.ps/Downloads/book2480.pdf> (in Arabic and English).

³³ Eugenie Reidy in cooperation with UNRWA, How Does She Cope? Women Pushed to New Limits in the Gaza Strip (October 2019).

³⁴ Information provided by the Centre for Women's Legal Research, Counselling and Protection.

³⁵ Ibid.

documented the death of six women under circumstances suggestive of gender-related killings.³⁶ Although investigations had reportedly been opened, as at the end of the reporting period no case had been brought before a court.³⁷ In one reported case, a 31-year-old woman who had been missing since 17 September 2019 was found killed and buried in the family home on 14 October. The father reportedly confessed to the killing. The younger sister of the victim was placed in a shelter due to protection concerns as she had reported the disappearance and made allegations of past violence by the father towards the victim.³⁸

34. In one case in the West Bank, a 21-year-old woman was admitted to Beit Jala hospital on 10 August 2019 with spinal fractures. The following day, she was released while still in a serious condition at the request of her family. On 22 August, her family brought her dead body to the same hospital. On 29 August, the Palestinian Public Prosecution publicly declared that an investigation had been opened and the police later arrested the victim's two brothers and brother-in-law, who were charged with manslaughter for beating the victim to death, charges that are pending court proceedings. This case raises concern that the response of the hospital staff and the police was inadequate in terms of the support provided and the promptness of the investigation.

35. Many lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons are continuously faced with physical and psychological violence by their families. For example, a lesbian woman in the West Bank who was kidnapped by family members after attempting to leave the country and who was subsequently locked inside the family house reported to OHCHR that her family would repeatedly threaten to kill her, tell her to kill herself and assault her. All victims of such violence reported fearing reprisals from the authorities and their families if they reported the incidents.

4. Restrictions of the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly

36. Throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the civic space continued to shrink, with violations of the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association committed by the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the authorities in Gaza. Human rights defenders, journalists and civil society organizations (Palestinian mainly but Israeli too) continued to be regularly the targets of arbitrary arrest, detention and attacks on their reputations. Human rights defenders in the Occupied Palestinian Territory were particularly affected because of who they were, what they represented or the rights they promoted, for example the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons. Women human rights defenders faced additional and unique challenges.³⁹

*Women human rights defenders*⁴⁰

37. On 19 March, a female staff member of Amnesty International covering demonstrations inside Gaza was interrogated by Gaza security forces for several hours. She was subjected to abusive language and intimidation by four male police officers, including threats of prosecution for working as a foreign agent.⁴¹ In northern West Bank, a woman human rights defender reported having repeatedly received criticisms through social media from the municipality of Qalqilya aimed at preventing an event on women's rights in Azzun, in April 2019. Moreover, the Israeli security forces denied entry to a bus of participants on the day of the event.

38. On 27 September 2019, in East Jerusalem, a group of Palestinian women activists known as Tal'at organized a demonstration under the banner "free homeland, free women"

³⁶ <https://pchrghaza.org/en/?p=13489>.

³⁷ Ibid.

³⁸ Ibid.

³⁹ See A/HRC/16/44 and Corr.1, paras. 32–88, and A/HRC/34/52, para. 22.

⁴⁰ The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders defines women human rights defenders as female human rights defenders and any other human rights defenders who work in the defence of women's rights or on gender issues (A/HRC/16/44 and Corr.1).

⁴¹ www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2019/03/gaza-hamas-must-end-brutal-crackdown-against-protesters-and-rights-defenders.

as part of demonstrations across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Israel and Lebanon. The entirely peaceful demonstration reached Damascus Gate, where some demonstrators raised a Palestinian flag, at which point the Israeli security forces forcibly dispersed the demonstration, pushing the women, confiscating the flag and preventing the demonstration from continuing.

39. In Gaza, a female journalist affiliated with Fatah reported that Gaza security forces had summoned her brother shortly after she had published an article criticizing the Hamas-led crackdown of a Fatah assembly. On 7 January, an officer from the Gaza internal security agency warned the brother that the authorities would take measures against him if he did not convince his sister to stop criticizing the authorities in Gaza.

Attacks on media and journalists

40. The Palestinian Centre for Development and Media Freedoms⁴² received allegations that during the reporting period the Israeli security forces had injured⁴³ 113 journalists, including five women, in Gaza and the West Bank and had arrested or detained 40 journalists. The Israeli security forces reportedly bombed and destroyed two news agencies in Gaza and raided the Wafa news agency⁴⁴ in Ramallah. Palestinian Authority security forces reportedly detained 22 journalists,⁴⁵ which represents a significant decrease in the activities of the security forces since May 2019, after which five detentions and no attempts to prevent coverage by media outlets were reported. The decrease suggests that the new Government of the State of Palestine is making efforts to uphold the promises made to the public to prevent the detention of and attacks against journalists.⁴⁶ The de facto authorities in Gaza reportedly detained 46 journalists, including one woman, prevented media coverage of specific events on five occasions and prevented the distribution of one newspaper.⁴⁷ According to a poll carried out by the Palestinian Centre for Development and Media Freedoms among journalists in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, 90 per cent of the 182 respondents said they exercised self-censorship for fear of reprisals from security forces and nearly the same proportion did so owing to social considerations. The Centre reported that Facebook had closed 142 accounts of journalists in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, citing its own rules.

41. From 25 July 2018, the journalist and writer Lama Khater was detained by the Israeli security forces on charges of being a member of and carrying out activities for a banned group. She reported various forms of ill-treatment, including one month in solitary confinement, 17 days of interrogations lasting 20 hours a day, handcuffing to the back of a small chair and sleep deprivation. Interrogators reportedly threatened her with lengthy detention and the detention of her children unless she provided a confession, which she refused. The interrogations ended on 26 August 2018 and Ms. Khater was released on 26 July 2019 on a plea bargain following charges of being a member of and carrying out activities for a banned group, for served time and a fine. Her 19-year-old son was detained by the Israeli security forces on 2 July 2019 and remains in custody, as part of a group of over 60⁴⁸ students reportedly arrested at Birzeit University in 2019.

42. In the West Bank, a journalist was arrested twice while covering demonstrations in Nablus and Ramallah. Palestinian Authority security forces detained him for 18 days on suspicion of inciting sectarian strife until a court ordered his release on 6 January 2019. He was again arrested for five hours on 15 January and forced to delete footage.

43. On 17 October 2019, the Palestinian Authority Ramallah Magistrate Court blocked approximately 50 web pages, some belonging to popular news outlets, invoking national security, civic peace, public order and morals. Such generic bans on websites are not ⁴² www.madacenter.org/en.

⁴³ Injuries with live ammunition, shrapnel, rubber-coated bullets and direct hits with gas canisters.

⁴⁴ <http://english.wafa.ps/page.aspx?id=2wTHZxa107687996691a2wTHZx>.

⁴⁵ Palestinian Centre for Development and Media Freedoms.

⁴⁶ www.alquds.com/articles/1555229023511210200/ (in Arabic only).

⁴⁷ Palestinian Centre for Development and Media Freedoms.

⁴⁸ Birzeit University “Right to education” campaign.

permissible restrictions to the right to freedom of expression under international human rights law, and content-specific restrictions may not be imposed solely on the basis that the content may be critical of the government.⁴⁹ Such measures raise concern about the use of overly broad provisions in the cybercrime decree law.⁵⁰ On 24 October, the Magistrate Court referred article 39 of the law to the Constitutional Court for an interpretive opinion without changing its original decision. The web pages remained closed as at the end of the reporting period.

44. In March 2019, a man was interrogated by the Gaza internal security agency, which accused him of ties with the Palestinian Authority and Israel for having posted a statement on Facebook criticizing the Great March of Return demonstrations, including Hamas leaders. While in detention, he was blindfolded, beaten, forced into stress positions and threatened with further detention and violence if he continued to criticize Hamas. In a similar case in Gaza, one journalist who posted live feeds on social media during demonstrations was detained for three days. He was severely beaten, interrogated and accused of being instructed by the Palestinian Authority to transmit the demonstrations. He was not officially charged with any criminal offence.

45. In Gaza, on 4 January 2019, unknown assailants who allegedly caused damages worth 170,000 US$ ransacked the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation (PBC). Following a reported investigation, the Gaza Ministry of the Interior announced that five men affiliated with Fatah whose salaries had been cut by the Palestinian Authority, one of whom was allegedly working for PBC, were responsible. Fatah and the Journalists' Syndicate held Hamas responsible for the attack. The authorities in Gaza consequently arrested and detained a 40-year-old journalist for posting a statement blaming Hamas for the PBC attack. During his interrogation, the journalist was blindfolded, beaten with a hose and forced into stress positions.

Freedom of peaceful assembly

46. Across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, all three duty bearers continued to interfere with, prevent and forcibly disperse peaceful assemblies, resorting to arbitrary arrest, detention and ill-treatment of protestors.

47. An incident of particular concern was the brutal crackdown by Gaza security forces, between 14 and 16 March 2019, of demonstrations organized across the Gaza Strip over rising living costs, in response to calls by social media activists. Gaza security forces personnel in uniform and men in plain clothes – many of whom were masked and carrying batons – raided the demonstrations, forcibly dispersed participants and prevented them from filming or photographing. A considerable number of participants, including women and children, were beaten and hospitalized, and up to 1,000⁵¹ of them were arrested and detained, including children. Hundreds of demonstrators were transferred between various detention facilities and security sites, subjected to beatings and forced into stress positions for considerable periods. In some cases, security personnel forcibly shaved off the hair of male demonstrators. In two separate incidents that took place on 16 March, two boys, aged 11 and 15 years, were hospitalized with leg and head injuries after masked men patrolling the streets beat them with batons. While the 11-year-old boy sustained moderate injuries, the 15-year-old boy was hospitalized in intensive care for two days, requiring surgery to his skull.

48. During a house raid in the context of the March demonstrations, a 49-year-old woman was beaten by the Gaza security forces and consequently suffered fractures to her hand and severe bruising on her body. While being treated in the local hospital, she had to flee through a back exit following another raid of the hospital by security personnel. Several injured demonstrators reported arriving at local hospitals for treatment but declined to enter, observing that security personnel had been deployed to arrest them. The Deputy Director and the Coordinator of Complaints and Investigations of the Independent Commission for Human Rights, who were monitoring the demonstrations, were hospitalized after being beaten by the Gaza security forces. Four employees of local human rights organizations attempting to monitor the demonstrations were prevented from doing so and briefly held by the Gaza security forces. During that period, local human rights organizations and the Independent Commission for Human Rights were denied access to the detention facilities where demonstrators and journalists were being held. OHCHR publicly condemned the violence by the Gaza authorities at the time.⁵²

⁴⁹ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34 (2011) on the freedoms of opinion and expression, para. 43.

⁵⁰ A/HRC/40/39, para. 60.

⁵¹ Independent Commission for Human Rights, the national human rights institution of the State of Palestine (<https://ichr.ps/ar/1/26/2629>). See also Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 34.

49. In an alarming development, on 17 August 2019, the spokesperson for the Palestinian police released a statement banning all activities of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex advocacy group Al Qaws, calling on the public to report their members to the police for prosecution. Thousands of messages of hatred and incitement to violence followed on social media, including death threats against persons perceived to be associated with Al Qaws. OHCHR monitored cases of individuals being physically threatened. The police removed the statement from its web page on 19 August 2019 but did not formally retract it nor publicly condemn the incitement to violence and hate speech.

50. In East Jerusalem, based on an order signed by the Israeli Minister of Public Security, the Israeli security forces raided the Burj Al-Luqluq Social Centre Society on 17, 18 and 31 August 2019, and prevented a seminar and football tournament from taking place, alleging they were sponsored by the Palestinian Authority. The Israeli police summoned one staff member of the Centre for questioning, beat the coordinator of the football tournament (who sustained two fractures in his arm) and arrested four staff members for several hours of interrogations before releasing one on unpaid bail and the others with a five-day ban from the Centre.

5. Arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment

51. According to the Palestinian Prisoner Society, the Israeli security forces arrested 5,846 Palestinians during the reporting period, including 901 children and 120 women. As of 31 October 2019, the Israel Prison Service reported that 4,731 Palestinians were in detention, of whom 4,515 were men, 185 were boys and 31 were women, compared with 5,426 during the previous reporting period.⁵³ The number includes 460 persons held in administrative detention, including three boys, compared to 481 in October 2018. The NGO Public Committee against Torture in Israel received 35 allegations of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and torture during the reporting period, seven of which concerned women and six of which concerned boys.

52. A trend of concern is the use of threats of indefinite detention against human rights defenders and journalists in Israeli detention, who are interrogated for long hours in stress positions and sleep deprived. The use of plea bargains at the end of detention under such circumstances further raises concerns of coerced confession.

53. Concerning Palestinian Authority detention centres in the West Bank, the Ministry of the Interior reported that 1,134 persons were detained as of 21 April 2019 and the Independent Commission for Human Rights reported that the Palestinian Authority had administratively detained 213 persons under Governor's orders during the reporting period. In Gaza, Hamas reported holding 1,885 persons in reform and rehabilitation centres as at 23 April 2019.

54. The Independent Commission for Human Rights received 354 complaints of ill-treatment and torture during the reporting period, 172 of which concerned persons under Palestinian Authority detention and 182 of which concerned persons in Gaza, under Hamas' de facto authority. The Commission also reported a decrease in the number of members of the Salafist groups detained in Gaza against a steady increase in the number Fatah members and supporters. On many occasions, victims were summoned and subsequently detained for several days, during which time they were interrogated about their political affiliation and accused of collaborating either with Israel or with the Palestinian Authority, or of having ties with “foreign powers”. In the vast majority of the cases, victims were released without being officially charged.

⁵² www.facebook.com/UNHumanRightsOPT/posts/1082548781933446.

⁵³ A/HRC/40/39, para. 30.

55. On 28 February 2019, a member of the Palestinian Legislative Council of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, who is also an activist for women’s and prisoners’ rights, Khalida Jarrar, was released by the Israeli authorities after having served over 19 months of administrative detention, without trial, based on secret evidence. Ms. Jarrar was released on a plea bargain following charges of incitement and association with the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, for time served, a suspended sentence and a fine, conditions identical to those of the plea bargain she agreed to in June 2016 after 14 months of administrative detention.⁵⁴ On 31 October 2019, the Israeli security forces again arrested her, reportedly on suspicions of involvement in “terror activity”.⁵⁵

56. On 10 December 2018, a freelance journalist and a human rights defender working for the Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center were detained by the Israeli security forces in Tulkarem and Ramallah. Both independently reported having been subjected to interrogations related to their work that lasted 14–20 hours a day, to threats of administrative detention unless they confessed to a crime and to being held in cells that were constantly illuminated and had no windows, leading to sleep deprivation and disorientation. In addition, the journalist was reportedly placed on a low chair during the interrogations, with his hands and feet cuffed to the back legs of the chair. The Israeli security forces reportedly hit the human rights defender’s head with a rifle during the arrest. Both individuals were released on plea bargains, on 16 and 24 January 2019 respectively, for served time, on conditional release and for paying fines. Both reported having falsely confessed, to avoid administrative detention – the journalist to membership of a student council in 2007 and the human rights defender to throwing stones at the Israeli security forces in 2014 and 2015.

57. On 25 August 2019, in Al Issawiya in East Jerusalem, the Israeli security forces arrested Mohammed Abu al-Hummos on the day that he had organized a recreational trip for 450 children. The Israeli security forces accused him of incitement to violence in a video that does not seem to show any incitement. He was released two days later, after refusing a plea bargain, on bail, and was banned from Al Issawiya until 15 September 2019. Previously, in March 2019, the Israeli security forces had arrested him for five hours on the day that he had organized a marathon.

58. On 2 January 2019, the Magistrate Court in Tulkarem acquitted a man, ruling that Facebook posts criticizing a campaign to pledge allegiance to the President of the State of Palestine, Mahmoud Abbas were within his right to freedom of expression, for which he had been detained one month in 2018 and reportedly been subjected to serious ill-treatment. On 28 January 2019, the Palestinian Authority security forces detained him again and interrogated him about Facebook posts in which he protested against the social security law. He was released after three days, without any charges.

59. In 2019, a gay man was interrogated by the Palestinian General Intelligence Service concerning a video posted on social media showing him with a male partner, disclosing his sexual relations and mentioning the names of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex people and activists in the West Bank. He was threatened with further detention if he continued to have sexual relations with men. In another case in 2019, a transgender woman was detained by the Palestinian police for five days with the accusation of possessing narcotics. She was repeatedly kicked, beaten and sexually harassed through the use of derogatory terms about her gender identity, including invasive questions about her sexual life.

60. Arrests and detention seemingly on political grounds by Palestinian Authority security forces continued, raising serious concerns about the lack of basic fair trial guarantees. From 4 to 10 June 2019, Palestinian Authority security forces arrested over 60 affiliates of the Islamic movement Hizb ut-Tahrir for reasons related to their criticism of the Palestinian Authority's decision about when to celebrate the Muslim holiday Eid al-Fitr. All were released by the beginning of July without any charges, raising concerns that their detention contravened the rights to freedom of association, religion and belief.

⁵⁴ A/HRC/37/42, para. 55 and footnote 83, and A/HRC/WGAD/2016/15.

⁵⁵ www.timesofisrael.com/israeli-forces-re-arrest-senior-pfplp-member-in-ramallah.

61. Between 23 and 27 June 2019, three men were arrested by Gaza security forces for trying to organize a cycling race in conjunction with a similar event organized in Israel. They were reportedly moved between different security agencies with varying levels of oversight and interrogated about the race. During the interrogations, they were reportedly subjected to ill-treatment, including through verbal insults that included suggestions that they were traitors, their heads were shaved, they were placed in stress positions and they were held in solitary confinement. None were charged with a criminal offence.

62. On the eve of the fifty-fourth anniversary of Fatah's founding, Gaza security forces summoned over 50 Fatah members and supporters across the Gaza Strip and reportedly forced some of them to sign a declaration stating that they would not participate in any event commemorating the anniversary. The de facto authorities in Gaza prohibited the events from taking place, noting that some 38 Fatah members had been summoned but released shortly thereafter as part of measures to keep order in Gaza. Similarly, on 23 February 2019, Gaza security forces arrested five Fatah members for organizing a sit-in demonstration in support of President Abbas. All were beaten with batons and plastic hoses, interrogated about their affiliation to Fatah and released without charge.

6. Delegitimizing human rights work and interfering with associations

63. Ongoing harassment and denunciations continued with the evident aim to silence and discredit the work of human rights defenders and to discourage support for their work, including by curtailing international funding.

64. In January 2019, the Ministry of Strategic Affairs and Public Diplomacy of Israel published a report in which it called upon the European Union to cease funding certain Palestinian and international NGOs and in which it alleged that the letters from some of those organizations addressed to the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner concerning reviews of business activities in Israeli settlements⁵⁶ constituted examples of promoting boycotts against the State of Israel.⁵⁷ The report of the Ministry appears to stigmatize civil society organizations for their engagement with the United Nations.⁵⁸ The Ministry further claims⁵⁹ that the detention of and travel bans against human rights defenders, dating as far back as the 1980s, and loose allegations of "membership" of groups such as Hamas and the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, constitute connections to terrorist groups. The Ministry's reports also equate the boycott, divestment and sanctions movement with terrorism.⁶⁰ Accusations of terrorism must adhere to a clearly defined legal framework of prohibited actions and respect fair trial guarantees, including the right to judicial review, the principle of legality and the presumption of innocence.⁶¹ State authorities must avoid making stigmatizing statements against human rights defenders⁶²

⁵⁶ Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 31/36.

⁵⁷ Israel, Ministry of Strategic Affairs and Public Diplomacy, The Money Trail: European Union Financing of Organizations Promoting Boycotts against the State of Israel, 2nd edition (2019).

⁵⁸ A/HRC/42/30, para. 61, and annex I, paras. 62 and 65.

⁵⁹ Israel, Ministry of Strategic Affairs and Public Diplomacy, The Money Trail, and Terrorists in Suits: the Ties between NGOs Promoting BDS and Terrorist Organizations (2019).

⁶⁰ See the statement by three Special Rapporteurs made on 25 April 2019 (available from www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=24516&LangID=E). While not taking a position on the boycott, divestment and sanctions movement, the Special Rapporteurs hold that supporting or opposing it is fully guaranteed by the rights to freedom of opinion, expression and association.

⁶¹ A/HRC/16/51/Add.3 and Corr.1, paras. 26–27, and A/61/267, para. 26.

⁶² Human Rights Council resolution 22/6, para. 5, and HRC/13/22, para. 27.

that violate those rights.⁶³ The information in the Ministry's reports was used on 15 July 2019 on a State-run social media account with a photograph of human rights defender Shawan Jabarin, Director of the Palestinian civil society organization Al Haq, which was followed by public comments made on social media calling for him to be killed.⁶⁴

65. The Palestinian NGO Addameer reported that, on 19 September 2019, the Israeli security forces broke into their Ramallah office, confiscated office equipment and left a handwritten, unsigned note containing details of the equipment confiscated. In a similar incident, on 24 September, the Israeli security forces searched the Hebron office of the Union of Palestinian Women's Committees, confiscating office equipment without providing a search warrant or documentation of the confiscation. The Israeli security forces also broke into the Health Work Committees' offices in Al Bireh, on 11 October, and searched for one hour without confiscating anything. These searches of offices of NGOs, all located in Areas A or H1, which are under full Palestinian control, without a warrant, confiscation order or any other official documentation, appear to constitute arbitrary interference with an association and the right to privacy.

66. On 7 May 2018, the Ministry of the Interior of Israel revoked the work visa of the Israel and Palestine Director of Human Rights Watch, Omar Shakir.⁶⁵ Following appeals, the Israeli Supreme Court ruled on 5 November 2019 that the State was within its rights to deport Mr. Shakir. The Court stated that Mr. Shakir's past activism with the boycott, divestment and sanctions movement and his work with Human Rights Watch constituted calls for boycotts against Israel, all of which were aimed at Israeli settlements. The Court held that the meaning of "a public call for boycott against Israel" under the Entry into Israel (Amendment No. 28) Law that would allow for entry to be denied "includes boycott that is based on the identification of the Israeli control in the [Occupied Palestinian] territories as a violation of international law".⁶⁶ The ruling represents a serious deterioration in the situation for international human rights defenders in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, opening the possibility for deportation from Israel or the Occupied Palestinian Territory of any foreign national who calls for sanctions against Israel for its occupation.

III. Recommendations

67. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of Israel:

(a) Ensure that the rules of engagement of the Israeli security forces and their application are fully in line with international standards and, in particular, that firearms are used only in cases of imminent threat of death or serious injury; take all necessary measures to prevent incidents of excessive use of force; and provide, at the earliest possible moment, first aid to individuals injured by the use of force, while taking no steps to prevent the provision of necessary medical care;

(b) Conduct prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and effective investigations into all incidents of use of force by the Israeli security forces that have led to the death or injury of Palestinians, especially in the access-restricted area of Gaza, and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable and victims provided with redress;

(c) Ensure respect for international humanitarian law and conduct prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations into allegations of violations related to past and recent escalations of hostilities, hold those responsible accountable and provide redress for victims;

⁶³ See also Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Criminalization of Human Rights Defenders (2015), paras. 84–89.

⁶⁴ www.facebook.com/4iL.org/posts/2234827600161728 (in Arabic only).

⁶⁵ www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=24516&LangID=E.

⁶⁶ The definition of boycott is stated in the Law for the Prevention of Damage to the State of Israel through Boycott (No. 5771-2011).

(d) Immediately end all practices of collective punishment and, in particular, immediately lift the blockade and punitive closures imposed on Gaza, allow free movement of Palestinians across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and end punitive demolitions and the policy of withholding the bodies of Palestinians;

(e) End practices of administrative detention and any form of arbitrary detention, ensure that all detainees are promptly charged or released and fully guarantee the right to a fair trial;

(f) Ensure that conditions of detention are fully in accordance with international human rights law, immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, ensure that all allegations of such violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, hold perpetrators accountable and guarantee non-repetition of such practices and that victims have access to an effective remedy;

(g) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected and that civil society actors and journalists are allowed to conduct their professional activities safely, freely and without harassment.

68. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of the State of Palestine:

(a) Ensure compliance with its human rights obligations towards all Palestinians and immediately cease any measures that violate those obligations or worsen the humanitarian situation in Gaza;

(b) End all practices that amount to arbitrary detention and fully guarantee the rights to due process and a fair trial;

(c) Immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, ensure that all allegations of such violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, hold perpetrators accountable and guarantee non-repetition of such practices and that victims have access to an effective remedy;

(d) Take all necessary measures to prevent all forms of gender-based violence and ensure that perpetrators of such violence, including gender-related killings, are prosecuted and appropriately sentenced;

(e) Uphold its human rights obligations to protect the rights of all Palestinians without discrimination, including discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity;

(f) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected and that civil society actors and journalists are allowed to conduct their professional activities safely, freely and without harassment.

69. The High Commissioner recommends that the authorities in Gaza:

(a) Ensure, along with armed groups in Gaza, full respect for international humanitarian law, particularly as it pertains to the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability, consistent with international standards, for grave violations;

(b) Take all necessary measures to ensure that the rights of persons deprived of liberty are respected, immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, ensure that all allegations of such violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, hold perpetrators accountable and guarantee non-repetition of such practices and that victims have access to an effective remedy;

(c) Take necessary measures to prevent all forms of gender-based violence and ensure that perpetrators of such violence, including gender-related killings, are prosecuted and appropriately sentenced;

(d) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected and that civil society actors and journalists are allowed to conduct their activities safely, freely and without harassment.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
28 February 2020

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-third session

24 February–20 March 2020

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Database of all business enterprises involved in the activities detailed in paragraph 96 of the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

Summary

The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights has prepared the present report pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan.

* Reissued for technical reasons on 22 July 2020.

 The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to reflect the most recent information.

I. Background

1. The present report is submitted to the Human Rights Council pursuant to its resolution 31/36, on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, adopted on 24 March 2016.¹
2. In paragraph 17 of that resolution, the Human Rights Council requested the production of a database of all business enterprises involved in certain specified activities related to the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, to be updated annually, and to transmit the data therein in the form of a report to the Council.
3. In 2018, a report on the matter was submitted to the Human Rights Council at its thirty-seventh session (A/HRC/37/39). That report contained the methodology used to respond to the request of the Council.
4. Also in that report, it was noted that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) had reviewed information on 321 business enterprises following the transmittal of notes verbales to States, the issuance of an open invitation for submissions and on the basis of its own research. A total of 206 business enterprises were assessed at that time for further consideration.
5. It was also noted that, once OHCHR had been in contact with all 206 companies, and subject to determinations of their responses and non-responses, OHCHR expected to provide the names of the companies engaged in listed activities in a future update. Before the determinations on the companies were made public, OHCHR would notify the companies concerned.

II. Mandate

6. The request for the production of a database made by the Human Rights Council in paragraph 17 of its resolution 31/36 was in follow-up to the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of the Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (A/HRC/22/63). In paragraph 96 of its report, the fact-finding mission set out a list of activities that had raised particular human rights concerns (referred to as “listed activities”). In its resolution 31/36, the Council defined the database by reference to those listed activities, which are the following:
 - (a) The supply of equipment and materials facilitating the construction and the expansion of settlements and the wall, and associated infrastructure;
 - (b) The supply of surveillance and identification equipment for settlements, the wall and checkpoints directly linked with settlements;
 - (c) The supply of equipment for the demolition of housing and property, the destruction of agricultural farms, greenhouses, olive groves and crops;
 - (d) The supply of security services, equipment and materials to enterprises operating in settlements;
 - (e) The provision of services and utilities supporting the maintenance and existence of settlements, including transport;
 - (f) Banking and financial operations helping to develop, expand or maintain settlements and their activities, including loans for housing and the development of businesses;

¹ While the Human Rights Council referred, in its resolution 31/36, to the occupied Syrian Golan, in paragraph 17 of that same resolution it requested the production of a database based on information contained in a report (A/HRC/22/63) that pertains to the Occupied Palestinian Territory only. Business enterprises involved in activities related to the occupied Syrian Golan are not therefore considered for the purposes of the present report.

- (g) The use of natural resources, in particular water and land, for business purposes;
- (h) Pollution, and the dumping of waste in or its transfer to Palestinian villages;
- (i) Captivity of the Palestinian financial and economic markets, as well as practices that disadvantage Palestinian enterprises, including through restrictions on movement, administrative and legal constraints;
- (j) The use of benefits and reinvestments of enterprises owned totally or partially by settlers for developing, expanding and maintaining the settlements.

7. The parameters of the database encompass business enterprises, whether domiciled in Israel, the Occupied Palestinian Territory or abroad, carrying out listed activities in relation to the Occupied Palestinian Territory (A/HRC/37/39, para. 5).

8. The database produced in response to the request made by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 31/36 includes only business enterprises involved in the 10 activities listed above. It does not cover all business activities related to settlements, nor does it extend to other business activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory that may raise human rights concerns. In addition, while there may be other types of enterprises involved in significant business activities related to settlements, only business enterprises are considered; non-business enterprises are excluded from consideration.

III. Definitions

9. The mandate set out in Human Rights Council resolution 31/36 requires the identification of three cumulative elements: (a) “business enterprises”; (b) “involved”; and (c) in one or more listed activities. For the purpose of the present report, each of those elements is understood as set out below.

Business enterprises

10. As OHCHR has already noted (A/HRC/37/39, para. 18):

When contacting companies, OHCHR included in the communications, wherever possible, all relevant entities with respect to that particular situation of concern, including parent companies and their subsidiaries, franchisors and franchisees, local distributors of international companies, partners and other entities in relevant business relationships. In some of these cases, further research by OHCHR revealed relevant business entities, such as parent companies or subsidiaries, that were not initially named in the submissions received in notes verbales from Member States or through the open call for submissions from interested stakeholders.

11. In assessing whether an entity was a “business enterprise”, for the purposes of the present report OHCHR considered the nature and substance of the entity’s functions and activities, irrespective of its specific corporate form or structure or of its characterization in the national law of the State of domicile.

Involved

12. In assessing whether an entity was “involved”, for the purposes of the present report OHCHR considered whether there were substantial and material business activities that had a clear and direct link to one or more of the listed activities, encompassing the following business forms:

- (a) A business enterprise itself engaged in a listed activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory;
- (b) A parent company owning a majority share of a subsidiary engaged in a listed activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (a business enterprise owning a minority share in a subsidiary was not considered to be “involved” for the purposes of the present report);

(c) A business enterprise granting a relevant franchise or licence to a franchisee or licensee engaged in a listed activity in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

13. In temporal terms, OHCHR required the involvement to have taken place during the period from 1 January 2018 to 1 August 2019.

Listed activities

14. As already noted in paragraph 6 above, the Human Rights Council defined the specific activities to be reflected in the database by reference to those set out by the fact-finding mission (A/HRC/22/63, para. 96).

15. Due to the specific formulation of certain listed activities, the additional considerations set out below were taken into account.

Activities listed in paragraph 6 (a), (b), (c) and (d) above: activities of “supply”

16. The activities listed in the report of the fact-finding mission and reproduced in para. 6 (a), (b) and (d) above involve the supply of equipment, services or materials for certain purposes, uses or effects. The notion of “supply” was considered to encompass, as relevant, processes of manufacture, provision and/or distribution of equipment, services and/or materials that have been employed for those purposes, uses or effects.

17. In relation to paragraph 6 (c), the listed activity is formulated more restrictively to indicate that the relevant equipment must be specifically supplied for the particular purpose of demolishing or destroying the forms of property set out in that subparagraph.

Activity listed in paragraph 6 (g) above

18. The activity listed in paragraph 6 (g) above refers to the use of natural resources, in particular water and land, for business purposes. As such, it includes business enterprises that are physically located in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and those that benefit commercially from the use of natural resources located in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, irrespective of their physical presence there.

IV. Methods of work

19. In fulfilling the mandate contained in Human Rights Council resolution 31/36, OHCHR applied the comprehensive methodology already outlined in the previous report on the matter (A/HRC/37/39, paras. 7–25). The work done by OHCHR to produce the database, in full compliance with the above-mentioned resolution, is not and does not purport to constitute a judicial or quasi-judicial process of any kind or to provide any legal characterization of the listed activities or business enterprises’ involvement in them. Rather, it provides the Council with the requested factual determinations as to those business enterprises that were involved in the listed activities (A/HRC/37/39, para. 8).

20. The direct contact held between OHCHR and all screened business enterprises, in consultation with the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, sought to ensure procedural fairness and consistency in the conclusions reached.

21. Since the previous report, a further analysis was carried out of the 206 business enterprises assessed, which in turn resulted in 188 business enterprises being identified for additional consideration. The enterprises that were not included for additional consideration were set aside, in particular, because there was insufficient factual basis in the submissions or in the public domain to support the contentions of their involvement in the listed activities. The 188 business enterprises were contacted between September 2017 and October 2018.

22. By letter, OHCHR informed each of the above-mentioned 188 business enterprises of the listed activities that they appeared to be involved in, based on the totality of information reviewed by it, and set out the basic facts of the enterprises’ alleged involvement in the listed activity or activities. The business enterprises were requested to respond in writing within 60 days with an initial response, providing any clarification or update of the information. Moreover, they were informed that they could request that the substance of their written responses be kept confidential; a number of enterprises made such a request (A/HRC/37/39, para. 20). In some cases, lengthier processes of dialogue developed between OHCHR and business enterprises. In other cases, no response was received.

23. At the conclusion of that process, OHCHR assessed all the information available to it against the definitions of the three necessary elements set out in paragraph 9 above, whether, as a factual matter, the standard of reasonable grounds to believe involvement in the listed activities had been met.

V. OHCHR engagement with business enterprises

24. OHCHR engaged with business enterprises throughout all stages of its work on the database. The direct communication facilitated the exchange of information and offered business enterprises the opportunity to provide views on their alleged involvement in listed activities. In several instances, business enterprises denied any involvement in the listed activities. These business enterprises were not included in the database. Some business enterprises requested further information on the methodology and mandate, to which OHCHR responded.

25. As already noted in the previous report (A/HRC/37/39, para. 22), responses from business enterprises included: (a) objection to the mandate of OHCHR and a refusal to provide a substantive response to the information presented; (b) rejection of the information presented and objected to being included in the database; (c) confirmation of the information presented concerning their involvement in one or more of the listed activities, and the provision of explanations; and/or (d) provision of updated information that indicated they were no longer involved in one or more of the listed activities.

26. OHCHR responded to business enterprises' queries on the mandate and presented, as necessary, further detailed information concerning the alleged involvement in listed activities.

27. All those business enterprises that met the standard of proof for inclusion in the database were informed in writing of their inclusion and of the procedure by which they could be removed. OHCHR invited the business enterprises to continue to engage with it, in line with the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (A/HRC/17/31, annex).

28. OHCHR rescreened all business enterprises prior to the submission of the present report to confirm that the activity or activities for which they were included in the database met the applicable standard of proof during the period under review.

29. A number of business enterprises communicated to OHCHR that they were no longer involved in the relevant activity or that the nature of their involvement had fallen outside the scope of the mandate. In those cases, OHCHR assessed the information provided and discontinued its consideration of those business enterprises no longer assessed to be involved in the listed activities.

30. Where business enterprises did not provide additional information or clarifications, OHCHR relied on desk research to assess the information received from Member States and other stakeholders.

VI. Database of business enterprises

31. OHCHR found that 112 of the 188 business enterprises considered for inclusion in the database met the required standard of reasonable grounds to believe that they were involved in one or more of the listed activities (see table below). The remaining 76 business enterprises did not meet the standard of proof and were not included in the database.²

Business enterprises involved in listed activities

No.	Business enterprise	Subparagraph of listed activity	State concerned
1.	Afikim Public Transportation Ltd.	(e)	Israel
2.	Airbnb Inc.	(e)	United States of America
3.	American Israeli Gas Corporation Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
4.	Amir Marketing and Investments in Agriculture Ltd.	(g)	Israel
5.	Amos Hadar Properties and Investments Ltd.	(g)	Israel
6.	Angel Bakeries	(e), (g)	Israel
7.	Archivists Ltd.	(g)	Israel
8.	Ariel Properties Group	(e)	Israel
9.	Ashtrom Industries Ltd.	(g)	Israel
10.	Ashtrom Properties Ltd.	(g)	Israel
11.	Avgol Industries 1953 Ltd.	(g)	Israel
12.	Bank Hapoalim B.M.	(e), (f)	Israel
13.	Bank Leumi Le-Israel B.M.	(e), (f)	Israel
14.	Bank of Jerusalem Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
15.	Beit Haarchiv Ltd.	(g)	Israel
16.	Bezeq, the Israel Telecommunication Corp Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
17.	Booking.com B.V.	(e)	Netherlands
18.	C. Mer Industries Ltd.	(b)	Israel
19.	Café Café Israel Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
20.	Caliber 3	(d), (g)	Israel
21.	Cellcom Israel Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
22.	Cherriessa Ltd.	(g)	Israel
23.	Chish Nofei Israel Ltd.	(g)	Israel
24.	Citadis Israel Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
25.	Comasco Ltd.	(a)	Israel
26.	Darban Investments Ltd.	(g)	Israel
27.	Delek Group Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel

² With respect to three listed activities (see para. 6 (c), (i) and (j) above), OHCHR did not find any business enterprise satisfying the standard of reasonable grounds to believe involvement consistent with the definitions set out above.

No.	Business enterprise	Subparagraph of listed activity	State concerned
28.	Delta Israel	(g)	Israel
29.	Dor Alon Energy in Israel 1988 Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
30.	Egis Rail	(e)	France
31.	Egged, Israel Transportation Cooperative Society Ltd.	(e)	Israel
32.	Energix Renewable Energies Ltd.	(g)	Israel
33.	EPR Systems Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
34.	Extal Ltd.	(g)	Israel
35.	Expedia Group Inc.	(e)	United States
36.	Field Produce Ltd.	(g)	Israel
37.	Field Produce Marketing Ltd.	(g)	Israel
38.	First International Bank of Israel Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
39.	Galshan Shvakim Ltd.	(e), (d)	Israel
40.	General Mills Israel Ltd.	(g)	Israel
41.	Hadiklaim Israel Date Growers Cooperative Ltd.	(g)	Israel
42.	Hot Mobile Ltd.	(e)	Israel
43.	Hot Telecommunications Systems Ltd.	(e)	Israel
44.	Industrial Buildings Corporation Ltd.	(g)	Israel
45.	Israel Discount Bank Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
46.	Israel Railways Corporation Ltd.	(g), (h)	Israel
47.	Italek Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
48.	J.C. Bamford Excavators Ltd.	(a)	United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland
49.	Jerusalem Economy Ltd.	(g)	Israel
50.	Kavim Public Transportation Ltd.	(e)	Israel
51.	Lipski Installation and Sanitation Ltd.	(g)	Israel
52.	Matrix IT Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
53.	Mayer Davidov Garages Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
54.	Mekorot Water Company Ltd.	(g)	Israel
55.	Mercantile Discount Bank Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
56.	Merkavim Transportation Technologies Ltd.	(e)	Israel
57.	Mizrahi Tefahot Bank Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
58.	Modi'in Ezrachi Group Ltd.	(e), (d)	Israel
59.	Mordechai Aviv Taasiot Beniyah 1973 Ltd.	(g)	Israel
60.	Motorola Solutions Israel Ltd.	(b)	Israel

No.	Business enterprise	Subparagraph of listed activity	State concerned
61.	Municipal Bank Ltd.	(f)	Israel
62.	Naaman Group Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
63.	Nof Yam Security Ltd.	(e), (d)	Israel
64.	Ofertex Industries 1997 Ltd.	(g)	Israel
65.	Omodo Ltd.	(e)	United Kingdom
66.	Bank Otsar Ha-Hayal Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
67.	Partner Communications Company Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
68.	Paz Oil Company Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
69.	Pelegas Ltd.	(g)	Israel
70.	Pelephone Communications Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
71.	Proffimat S.R. Ltd.	(g)	Israel
72.	Rami Levy Chain Stores Hashikma Marketing 2006 Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
73.	Rami Levy Hashikma Marketing Communication Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
74.	Re/Max Israel	(e)	Israel
75.	Shalgal Food Ltd.	(g)	Israel
76.	Shapir Engineering and Industry Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
77.	Shufersal Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
78.	Sonol Israel Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
79.	Superbus Ltd.	(e)	Israel
80.	Supergum Industries 1969 Ltd.	(g)	Israel
81.	Tahal Group International B.V.	(e)	Netherlands
82.	TripAdvisor Inc.	(e)	United States
83.	Twitoplast Ltd.	(g)	Israel
84.	Unikowsky Maoz Ltd.	(g)	Israel
85.	YES	(e)	Israel
86.	Zakai Agricultural Know-how and inputs Ltd.	(g)	Israel
87.	ZF Development and Construction	(g)	Israel
88.	ZMH Hammermand Ltd.	(g)	Israel
89.	Zorganika Ltd.	(g)	Israel
90.	Zriha Hlavin Industries Ltd.	(g)	Israel

Business enterprises involved as parent companies

No.	Business enterprise	Subparagraph of listed activity	State concerned
91.	Alon Blue Square Israel Ltd.	(e), (g)	Israel
92.	Alstom S.A.	(e), (g)	France
93.	Altice Europe N.V.	(e)	Netherlands
94.	Amnon Mesilot Ltd.	(e)	Israel
95.	Ashtrom Group Ltd.	(g)	Israel
96.	Booking Holdings Inc.	(e)	United States
97.	Brand Industries Ltd.	(g)	Israel
98.	Delta Galil Industries Ltd.	(g)	Israel
99.	eDreams ODIGEO S.A.	(e)	Luxembourg
100.	Egis S.A.	(e)	France
101.	Electra Ltd.	(e)	Israel
102.	Export Investment Company Ltd.	(e), (f)	Israel
103.	General Mills Inc.	(g)	United States
104.	Hadar Group	(g)	Israel
105.	Hamat Group Ltd.	(g)	Israel
106.	Indorama Ventures P.C.L.	(g)	Thailand
107.	Kardan N.V.	(e)	Netherlands
108.	Mayer's Cars and Trucks Co. Ltd.	(e)	Israel
109.	Motorola Solutions Inc.	(b)	United States
110.	Natoon Group	(e), (d)	Israel
111.	Villar International Ltd.	(g)	Israel

Business enterprises involved as licensors or franchisors

No.	Business enterprise	Subparagraph of listed activity	State concerned
112.	Greenkote P.L.C.	(g)	United Kingdom

VII. Removal from the database

32. A business enterprise may provide information indicating that it is no longer involved in the relevant listed activity. Should there be reasonable grounds to believe that, based on the totality of the information available, the business enterprise is ceasing or is no longer involved in the relevant activity, the business enterprise would be removed from the database.

VIII. Recommendation

33. With reference to any updating of the database, OHCHR would recommend that the Human Rights Council establish a group of independent experts, with a time-bound mandate, to report directly to the Council for such a purpose.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
15 February 2021

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-sixth session

22 February–19 March 2021

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 43/3 and provides an overview of the implementation of the resolution, and developments that are of relevance to ensuring accountability and justice for all violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The reporting period is from 1 November 2019 to 31 October 2020.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 43/3 and should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.¹

2. In the report, which covers the period between 1 November 2019 and 31 October 2020, the High Commissioner addresses issues related to accountability for alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law committed by all relevant duty bearers in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza. The High Commissioner also provides an update on measures of accountability taken by all relevant duty bearers in relation to possible violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law during escalations of hostilities in Gaza since 2008. As requested by the Council in resolution 43/3, in the present report the High Commissioner addresses how parties can fulfil their obligations in implementing the relevant recommendations previously addressed to them, which were reviewed by the High Commissioner in 2017.² The High Commissioner also outlines measures to be taken by third States to ensure respect by all parties to the conflict for their obligations under international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

3. The report draws on information arising from human rights monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and information from governmental sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations. OHCHR requested Israel and the State of Palestine to provide information, by 15 November 2020, on any accountability measures adopted during the reporting period in relation to alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law committed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in particular with regard to the use of force by their respective security forces that may have led to death or injury, and on allegations of torture or any other ill-treatment in their detention facilities. The State of Palestine responded on 9 November 2020. Israel did not respond. OHCHR also requested other States Members of the United Nations to provide information on the steps taken by them as third States to promote compliance with international law and implement the recommendations addressed to them. No responses have been provided as at the time of writing the present report.

4. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory remained dire during the reporting period. Israeli security forces killed 67 Palestinians (64 males and 3 females), including at least 47 civilians of whom 16 were children. In addition, 3,678 Palestinians were injured by Israeli security forces. One Israeli soldier was killed and 90 other Israelis were injured by Palestinians. Many incidents monitored by OHCHR outside the context of hostilities raised serious concerns of excessive use of force by Israeli security forces,³ in some cases such use may amount to arbitrary deprivation of life, including extrajudicial execution. Continuing lack of respect for international humanitarian law by all parties to the conflict, including in the context of hostilities, remained of concern. The prevailing climate of impunity described in previous reports of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner persisted.⁴

¹ See A/75/336, A/75/376, A/HRC/46/63 and A/HRC/46/65.

² See A/HRC/35/19.

³ The term “excessive use of force” is used in the present report to refer to incidents in the context of law enforcement operations in which force was not used in accordance with the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials (1990). Such incidents may entail situations in which force was used unnecessarily and/or disproportionately; and/or in pursuit of an illegal law enforcement objective; and/or in a discriminatory manner.

⁴ A/75/376, para. 26; A/HRC/34/38, para. 48; and A/HRC/40/43, para. 14.

II. Update on accountability

A. Accountability for the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza and other rounds of hostilities

5. More than six years after the 2014 escalation of hostilities in Gaza, serious concerns persist over the lack of accountability for suspected violations of international humanitarian law, including allegations of war crimes, perpetrated by all parties to the conflict. Since the publication of the report of the independent commission of inquiry established pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1,⁵ the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner have provided regular updates on the lack of progress regarding the implementation of the recommendations contained in the commission's report and highlighted concerns about the lack of accountability by both Israeli and Palestinian authorities.⁶

Israel

6. With respect to Israel, the most recent update by the Military Advocate General of Israel was provided on 15 August 2018.⁷ No further updates have been published since and no notable progress in the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations in the context of the 2014 round of hostilities was made public during the reporting period. During the reporting period, Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, which represented some of the victims, was informed by Israeli authorities that 13 cases related to the killing of Palestinian civilians during the 2014 hostilities had been closed. On 6 April 2020, the Attorney General of Israel rejected an appeal submitted by Adalah: Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel and Al Mezan Center for Human Rights against the decision taken in January 2017 by the Military Advocate General to close the investigation into the killing of five members of the Abu Dahrouj family during an Israeli air strike on 22 August 2014.⁸ Adalah also reported that, on 19 July 2020, the Military Advocate General had notified it that the case related to the killing of three children in the Israeli air strike on the Shuheibar family home, on 17 July 2014, had been closed without further investigation.⁹

7. Similarly, lack of progress and transparency persists in relation to accountability efforts linked to previous major rounds of hostilities in 2008 and 2009 (with no public information made available since July 2010) and in 2012 (with no public updates provided since April 2013).

8. The absence of any significant progress in the investigation of and prosecution for alleged violations confirms the serious concerns repeatedly expressed by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner regarding the consistent failure of the Military Advocate General to open criminal investigations into cases of alleged violations of international humanitarian law, including possible war crimes, committed by Israeli security forces in the context of hostilities.¹⁰

9. On 14 November 2019, Israeli security forces struck, with at least four missiles, two houses belonging to an extended family in Deir El-Balah, killing 9 individuals, including 5 children, and 2 women, and injuring 12 others, including 11 children. Media sources, citing Israeli defence officials, reported that the houses had been hit based on an outdated target

⁵ A/HRC/29/52.

⁶ In particular, A/71/364, paras. 39 and 51–55; A/HRC/37/41, paras. 9–17; A/HRC/40/43, paras. 4–13; and A/HRC/43/21, paras. 14–15 and 19.

⁷ A/HRC/40/43, paras. 5 and 9; and <https://mfa.gov.il/MFA/ForeignPolicy/IsraelGaza2014/Documents/Operation-Protective-Edge-MAG-Corps-Press-Release-Update-6-15-August-2018.pdf>.

⁸ For an assessment of the incident, see www.adalah.org/en/content/view/8990.

⁹ For an assessment of the incident, see the conference room paper containing the detailed findings of the independent commission of inquiry established pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1 (A/HRC/29/CRP.4), paras. 194–200. Available at www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/HRC/RegularSessions/Session29/Pages/ListReports.aspx.

¹⁰ A/71/364, para. 40; A/HRC/34/38, para. 42; A/HRC/37/41, para. 14; A/HRC/40/43, para. 8; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 17.

database and without prior verification of civilian presence at the site.¹¹ However, an internal review of the incident by the Israel Defense Forces determined that the target had been designated as a Palestinian Islamic Jihad military compound in June 2019 and vetted several times, including a few days prior to the attack.¹² It also acknowledged that, while militant activity had taken place at the targeted site in the past, including during the November 2019 escalation, it was not an area from which civilians were excluded and that they had, in fact, been present at the time of the strike.¹³ The incident raises serious concern about the failure by Israel to take all feasible precautions to avoid, and in any event to minimize, incidental loss of civilian life, injury of civilians and damage to civilian objects, in accordance with international humanitarian law.¹⁴

Palestinian authorities

10. As previously and repeatedly underlined by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner,¹⁵ no information was made available on steps taken to ensure accountability for possible violations of international humanitarian law, including possible war crimes, committed by the Palestinian authorities and armed groups in the context of the different rounds of hostilities.¹⁶ Such lack of accountability remains of grave concern. During the reporting period, concerns persisted regarding the continuous indiscriminate launching of rockets and mortar shells towards Israel by Palestinian armed groups in Gaza, some of which resulted in the injury of Israeli civilians and damage to civilian buildings. Incendiary balloons were also launched towards Israel from Gaza, with some reportedly damaging lands and crops in Israel.¹⁷

B. Accountability for unlawful use of force and other violations of international human rights law

Israel

11. Impunity remained pervasive for incidents of possible excessive use of force by Israeli security forces outside the context of hostilities, confirming the alarming trend repeatedly highlighted by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the past.¹⁸ Between 1 January 2017¹⁹ and 31 October 2020, 354 Palestinians²⁰ (including 74 children) were killed by Israeli security forces in the Occupied Palestinian Territory in law enforcement operations. OHCHR is aware of 46 investigations opened in relation to incidents that occurred in this context, of which at least 10 were closed without further action being taken and 4 resulted in indictments, 3 of which led to convictions.²¹

12. In Gaza, the number of Palestinian fatalities and injuries in the context of the Great March of Return sharply decreased compared with the previous reporting period, due to the ¹¹ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-outdated-intelligence-social-media-rumors%20behind-israel-s-killing-of-gaza-family-1.8131101.

¹² See <https://app.activetrail.com/S/eiwixjxejf.htm>.

¹³ Ibid.

¹⁴ International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Customary International Humanitarian Law database, rule 15 (see https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule15); and A/75/336, para. 5.

¹⁵ A/70/421, para. 61; A/HRC/40/43, para. 13; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 19.

¹⁶ See, in particular, A/HRC/29/52 and A/HRC/12/48 and Corr.1.

¹⁷ A/75/336, para. 5.

¹⁸ A/71/364, para. 66; A/75/336, paras. 4 and 9; A/HRC/34/38, para. 48; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 20.

¹⁹ 1 January 2017 represents the beginning of the first reporting period during which the High Commissioner was requested by the Human Rights Council to report on accountability and justice for violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

²⁰ This number does not include those killed in the context of hostilities and those killed in situations in which it was not possible to determine the circumstances. The total number of Palestinians killed by Israeli security forces during the same period amounts to 531.

²¹ One of the convictions refers to the killing of a 14-year-old Palestinian in the context of the Great March of Return demonstrations (A/HRC/43/21, para. 25). For information on the other two convictions, see paras. 15–16 below.

suspension of the weekly demonstrations in December 2019.²² However, the continuing lack of notable progress in the investigations related to the widespread use of lethal force by Israeli security forces against Palestinian demonstrators between 30 March 2018 and December 2019 remained striking.²³ The last update provided by the Ministry of Justice of Israel in relation to progress in the investigations and prosecutions referred to July 2019.²⁴ In September 2020, the human rights organization Yesh Din published a report highlighting that, since the beginning of the Great March of Return, of the 231 incidents that had resulted in the killing of Palestinian demonstrators referred to the General Staff Mechanism for Fact-Finding Assessments of the Israel Defense Forces, only 17 investigations had been opened by Israeli military authorities, resulting in 1 conviction.²⁵ Al Mezan Center for Human Rights and the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights have submitted to Israeli authorities 81 and 186 cases, respectively, related to individuals killed or injured at the Gaza fence since 30 March 2018.

13. Along the Gaza coast, the Israeli Navy continued to enforce unilaterally imposed access restrictions, using live ammunition, rubber-coated bullets and water cannons on Gaza fishers while conducting arrest and seizure operations, often reportedly within the authorized fishing zones.²⁶ In its response to a freedom of information request submitted by the organization Gisha regarding its operations along the Gaza coast, Israel Defense Forces pointed out that “as part of [its] regulations and directives, it has been established that the use of force for the purpose of enforcing the security restrictions will be only as a last resort, carried out gradually and only to the smallest extent required to stop the breach of restrictions or to seize the vessel”.²⁷

14. During the reporting period, Al Mezan Center for Human Rights recorded a total of 294 shooting incidents at sea, resulting in the injury of 11 fishers. In many of the cases monitored by OHCHR, fishers appear to have been subjected to force that may have been unnecessary or excessive, and many of them alleged degrading treatment during seizure and arrest operations. For example, on 14 August 2020, Israeli security forces shot and injured a 22-year-old fisher in his right leg within the Israeli-authorized fishing zone at around 3 nautical miles from the northern Gaza coast. According to information collected by OHCHR, the victim, who sustained heavy bleeding requiring hospitalization, was attempting to communicate to Israeli security forces his right to fish within the authorized fishing zone and did not appear to pose an imminent threat to Israeli security forces at the moment that he was shot. OHCHR is not aware of any investigations being opened by Israeli authorities in relation to any of these incidents.

15. On 15 June 2020, an Israeli military court sentenced an Israeli officer to 45 days in prison, to be served by carrying out military-related labour, for the killing of a 23-year-old Palestinian fisher, Nawaf al-Attar, off the Sudaniyah coast, north of Bayt Lahya, on 14 November 2018.²⁸ According to OHCHR monitoring, after a first warning shot was fired while he was fishing on the Gaza beach, the fisher was shot in the pelvis while he was running away from Israeli security forces, which were located at the Gaza northern maritime border at a distance of 250 metres. The shooting took place in circumstances in which the victim’s behaviour did not appear to present an imminent threat of death or serious injury to anyone. The conviction was based on the charges of “exceeding authority causing a risk to life or health” and “injury through negligence”. Such charges, along with the leniency of the ²² During the reporting period, 3 Palestinians, including 2 children, were killed and 126 Palestinians, including 50 children, were injured with live ammunition in the context of the Great March of Return demonstrations.

²³ Conference room paper containing the detailed findings of the independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (A/HRC/40/CRP.2), paras. 737–758. Available at www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/HRC/RegularSessions/Session40/Pages/ListReports.aspx.

²⁴ A/HRC/43/21, para. 24.

²⁵ Yesh Din, “Killing time: the slow processing of complaints regarding Gaza Great March of Return casualties and the use of the fact-finding assessment mechanism to thwart prosecution of soldiers” (September 2020). See also A/HRC/43/21, para. 25.

²⁶ A/75/336, para. 38.

²⁷ Israeli army response to the Gisha freedom of information request (15 December 2019).

²⁸ See www.mezan.org/en/post/23760.

sentence, appear starkly inconsistent with the gravity of the conduct, reinforcing the serious concerns previously expressed by the High Commissioner regarding the effectiveness of the Israeli internal investigation and prosecution system to ensure accountability for violations of international law in line with international standards.²⁹

16. The ongoing lack of accountability for the killing and injury of Palestinians is also evident in relation to Israeli law enforcement operations in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. On 16 August 2020, the Military Advocate General requested a sentence of three months' military service and three months' suspended sentence for an Israeli soldier who had shot and killed a 23-year-old Palestinian, Ahmad Manasra, as part of a plea bargain agreed to by the soldier, pending ratification by a military court.³⁰ On 20 March 2019, Mr. Manasra had been shot multiple times with live ammunition in the chest and shoulders while helping the family of a Palestinian man, Ala Ghayadeh, who had himself been shot and seriously wounded by Israeli security forces in the immediate aftermath of his car breaking down at a junction near the village of El-Hadar, close to Bethlehem. Monitoring of the case by OHCHR pointed to serious concerns of unnecessary or excessive use of force by Israeli security forces. According to the plea bargain, which refers to the charge of "causing death by negligence", the soldier mistakenly thought that the two men were throwing stones at an Israeli security forces installation located nearby. The soldier was not charged with wounding Mr. Ghayadeh, although the first shooting was included in the initial indictment. On 23 August 2020, the victims' families filed a petition with the High Court of Justice of Israel against the plea bargain and obtained an interim injunction to prevent the military court's issuing a sentence until the petition was discussed.³¹ The charges and leniency of the sentence proposed as part of the plea bargain appear starkly incommensurate with the gravity of the conduct, raising serious concerns that justice and redress for Palestinian victims of alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law have not been delivered in accordance with international norms and standards.

17. On 3 September 2020, the High Court of Justice unanimously rejected a petition submitted in March 2019 by the Association for Civil Rights in Israel regarding the closing of the investigation into the killing of Mohammad al-Qusbah.³² Mr. Al-Qusbah, aged 17, was killed by an Israel Defense Forces officer with three bullets to his upper body, while running away from Israel Defense Forces personnel after throwing a stone near the village of Ar-Ram, on 3 July 2015. The High Court of Justice found no reason to consider that the disciplinary action (delay in promotion) taken against the Israel Defense Forces officer represented an excessively lenient sentence.³³ The High Court of Justice reviewed the rules of engagement and concurred with the position of the Military Advocate General and the Attorney General that the killing had resulted from the officer not acting in accordance with the rules. In a previous report, the High Commissioner noted how the failure to prosecute a soldier who had opened fire against an individual (in this case a child) who was running away from Israeli security forces cast doubt on the effectiveness of the accountability measures put in place.³⁴ These concerns persist in relation to the High Court of Justice upholding the Attorney General's position that a delay in the officer's promotion represented an appropriate and proportionate punishment.³⁵

²⁹ A/HRC/43/21, para. 25.

³⁰ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/premium-israeli-army-seeks-community-service-for-soldier-who-killed-innocent-palestinian-1.9076450.

³¹ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/premium-top-court-to-hear-appeal-against-light-sentence-of-soldier-who-killed-palestinian-1.9124853; and <https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts\20\040\059\o08&fileName=20059040.O08&type=4> (in Hebrew only).

³² The Association for Civil Rights in Israel had contested the decision taken by the Attorney General of Israel in December 2018 to uphold the closing of the investigation by the Military Advocate General in April 2016; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 27.

³³ See <https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts\19\820\017\k09&fileName=19017820.K09&type=4> (in Hebrew only).

³⁴ A/HRC/43/21, para. 27.

³⁵ The officer was chosen to represent the Israel Defense Forces at the Memorial Day ceremony at the Western Wall in Jerusalem, on 27 April 2020.

18. In its decision, the High Court of Justice did not depart from the position of the Military Advocate General and the Attorney General, who stated that the “unique intensity” characterizing “combat” or “operational activity” should be taken into account. In particular, the High Court of Justice noted that the officer performed in a “war-like situation”, which was characterized by a real danger to his life. Such an approach is in clear contradiction of international law, which distinguishes between rules regulating law enforcement operations, governed by international human rights instruments, and those regulating the conduct of hostilities between warring parties in situations of armed conflict, mainly governed by international humanitarian law. Under the law enforcement framework, the use of lethal force by security forces is authorized only as a measure of last resort, when strictly necessary in order to protect life or prevent serious injury from an imminent threat.³⁶ Even in situations of armed conflicts and military occupation, the law enforcement framework applies when security forces, including the military, are interacting with the civilian population.³⁷ On the other hand, the conduct of hostilities refers to the means and methods of warfare that one party to the conflict employs to undermine the military capabilities of the other, including “active combat” or launching attacks, as regulated by the rules of international humanitarian law on the conduct of hostilities.³⁸ In qualifying a context in which Israeli security forces were engaged in a law enforcement operation as “combat activity”, the High Court of Justice seemed to uphold its previous practice of conflating two sets of rules that have been maintained as clearly distinct under international law,³⁹ thereby creating a dangerous situation in which the protection afforded to civilians by their right to life under international law is diminished.

19. On 21 October 2020, the Department of Internal Police Investigations at the Ministry of Justice announced its intention to bring to trial an Israeli border police officer involved in the killing of Iyad Hallaq on a charge of reckless homicide, while the case against his commanding officer would be closed.⁴⁰ According to its statement, “the deceased posed no danger to police and civilians in the area” and the officer who shot him did so against orders and after speaking with the victim. On 30 May 2020, Mr. Hallaq, a 31-year-old Palestinian with autism, was shot and killed by Israeli security forces while walking from his home in the Wadi al-Jawz neighbourhood to a vocational training centre for persons with disabilities in Jerusalem’s Old City.⁴¹ Monitoring conducted by OHCHR raised serious concerns of unnecessary or excessive use of force by Israeli security forces. On 21 September 2020, Mr. Hallaq’s parents had petitioned the High Court of Justice urging the Department of Internal Police Investigations to conclude the investigation of the case and put the two police officers involved in the incident on trial.⁴²

20. No notable progress has been reported in relation to investigations into allegations of ill-treatment, possibly amounting to torture, in Israeli detention facilities, including serious public allegations following the widespread arrests after the Ein Bubin attack of 23 August

³⁶ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2018), para. 12. See also the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials.

³⁷ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, art. 43; A/HRC/40/CRP.2, paras. 85–86. See also ICRC, International Humanitarian Law and the Challenges of Contemporary Armed Conflicts (Geneva, 2015), p. 36. This entails that, even in armed conflicts, the use of force directed against civilians not directly participating in hostilities is subject to human rights-based law enforcement rules. See the report of the Public Commission to Examine the Maritime Incident of 31 May 2010 (Turkel Commission) (Part One – January 2011), paras. 189 and 234.

³⁸ A/HRC/40/CRP.2, para. 94.

³⁹ In particular, the High Court of Justice upheld the stance already confirmed in its decision of May 2019 on the rules of engagement in the context of the Gaza protests (see www.lawfareblog.com/supreme-court-israel-dismisses-petition-against-gaza-rules-engagement).

⁴⁰ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/israeli-cop-who-shot-dead-autistic-palestinian-faces-trial-1.9251419; and www.gov.il/he/departments/news/21-10-2020-01 (in Hebrew only).

⁴¹ A detailed assessment of the incident is provided in A/75/336, para. 8.

⁴² See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-parents-of-autistic-palestinian-shot-by-cops-petition-high-court-to-charge-officers-1.9177147. See also OHCHR in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, “Israeli security forces yet again use lethal force against a Palestinian not presenting an imminent threat of death or serious injury, killing him”, press statement, 2 June 2020.

2019.⁴³ In its response to a freedom of information request submitted by the Public Committee against Torture in Israel, dated 5 July 2020, the Ministry of Justice reported that, in 2019, 36 cases related to complaints of alleged ill-treatment and torture had been opened by the Inspector for Complaints against the Israel Security Agency, and 71 other cases had been transferred to the State Prosecutor's Office. OHCHR is not aware of any further steps having been taken as a result of these proceedings.

Palestinian authorities

21. During the reporting period, there was little progress in relation to actions carried out by the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza to investigate and prosecute the perpetrators of violations linked to incidents of possible excessive use of force or allegations of torture and ill-treatment by Palestinian security forces.

22. In its submission of 9 November 2020, the State of Palestine reported that it had intensified efforts to adopt legislation on the mandate and working methods of the national preventive mechanism to independently investigate allegations of torture and ill-treatment, as required by the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. However, OHCHR notes with concern that, despite the obligation contained in the Optional Protocol, to which the State of Palestine acceded in 2017, the establishment and operationalization of the national preventive mechanism remained pending at the end of the reporting period.⁴⁴

23. With regard to allegations of excessive use of force by Palestinian security forces in the West Bank, OHCHR monitoring of incidents resulting in the killing and injury of Palestinians during the reporting period⁴⁵ confirmed that certain steps had been taken by Palestinian authorities, including the creation of ad hoc inquiries, pledges to compensate the victims' families, and announcements regarding the opening of criminal investigations and the adoption of disciplinary measures against the officers involved. However, no information has been made publicly available regarding the criminal charges filed against those allegedly responsible. OHCHR monitoring also points to the use of informal reconciliation mechanisms to address cases of killing or serious injury resulting from possibly excessive use of force by Palestinian security forces. This raises concerns that such mechanisms may be used instead of judicial proceedings and other disciplinary measures to ascertain the truth and ensure accountability.

24. With regard to allegations of ill-treatment, in some cases possibly amounting to torture, OHCHR monitoring points to very serious concerns with regard to the lack of steps taken to investigate and prosecute individuals possibly responsible for these crimes, as well as the inadequacy of internal disciplinary mechanisms. Of particular concern are a number of credible allegations that detainees had been subjected to intimidation by Palestinian security forces and pressured into not filing complaints against Palestinian law enforcement officers or withdrawing those that had been made, as a condition for release from detention.

25. The High Commissioner reiterates the call upon the State of Palestine to ensure that incidents involving human rights violations are promptly, impartially, independently and thoroughly investigated in line with international standards, and that those responsible are held accountable.⁴⁶ Within this framework, OHCHR intensified its efforts, during the reporting period, to provide technical assistance to the State of Palestine, including on strengthening accountability. This included targeted training for Palestinian security forces aimed at combating arbitrary arrest and detention, and torture and ill-treatment, to accelerate criminal accountability.

26. The Office of the Attorney General of the de facto authorities in Gaza reported having received and investigated complaints related to incidents of possible excessive use of force by the authorities' security forces during the civilian demonstrations held between 14 and 16

⁴³ A/75/336, paras. 14–18.

⁴⁴ OHCHR notes that the international treaties to which the State of Palestine has acceded had not been published in the Official Gazette at the time of writing.

⁴⁵ A/HRC/46/63, para. 22.

⁴⁶ A/HRC/43/21, para. 38.

March 2019.⁴⁷ However, the outcomes of such investigations have not been made public and OHCHR is not aware of any other measure having been taken by the de facto authorities in Gaza to investigate and prosecute those allegedly involved in violations, including possible excessive use of force against demonstrators, arbitrary arrests and ill-treatment and torture in detention.

27. OHCHR monitoring continues to point to widespread allegations of ill-treatment, possibly amounting to torture, in Gaza detention facilities.⁴⁸ Little information has been made public in relation to any steps taken by the authorities in Gaza to investigate these allegations, notwithstanding the Independent Commission for Human Rights having reported that it had received 85 complaints of ill-treatment or torture during the reporting period.

28. The lack of transparency in relation to any steps taken to ensure accountability for serious human rights violations is a matter of utmost concern. In the rare cases in which the authorities in Gaza have formed ad hoc committees or commissions of inquiry to investigate such allegations through a decision by the de facto Ministry of the Interior, their findings have not led to criminal charges or to the adoption of other concrete accountability steps. For example, on 23 February 2020, a 39-year-old man from the Bureij camp, central Gaza, died while in the custody of the de facto Internal Security Agency after being arrested on the charge of “undermining public security” for collaborating with the Palestinian Authority. The de facto Minister of the Interior announced the creation of an ad hoc committee to investigate the incident. On 29 February 2020, the committee released the results of its investigation, pointing out that, while the man did not receive proper medical care in detention, his death had resulted from natural causes. The family of the victim rejected the probe, highlighting that signs of torture had been found on his body.⁴⁹

C. International mechanisms

29. On 20 December 2019, the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court released a statement in which she stated that she had determined that there was a reasonable basis to initiate an investigation into the situation in Palestine, pursuant to article 53 (1) of the statute of the Court, concerning alleged war crimes committed by multiple parties since 13 June 2014 in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza.⁵⁰ However, before opening an investigation, the Prosecutor considered it appropriate to make a request to the Court’s Pre-Trial Chamber for a jurisdictional ruling on the scope of the Court’s territorial jurisdiction in relation to the situation.⁵¹ The matter remains pending.

III. Implementing the recommendations reviewed by the High Commissioner in A/HRC/35/19

30. In its resolution 43/3, the Human Rights Council requested the High Commissioner to report on how all parties could fulfil their obligations in implementing the recommendations reviewed by the High Commissioner in 2017 (A/HRC/35/19), pertaining to accountability in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In that report, the High Commissioner reviewed more than 900 recommendations addressed to all parties since 2009, which had been formulated to improve the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. They essentially pertain to violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, mainly by Israel but also by Palestinian duty bearers and parties. The recommendations were subdivided into seven areas: accountability and access to justice; international engagement; arrest and detention; settlements; freedom of movement; other civil and political rights; and economic, social and cultural rights. In the 2017 report, the High Commissioner showed that the vast majority of the recommendations had not been

⁴⁷ A/HRC/43/70, paras. 47–48; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 39.

⁴⁸ A/HRC/46/63, paras. 62–63.

⁴⁹ See www.alwatanvoice.com/arabic/news/2020/03/01/1318541.html (in Arabic only).

⁵⁰ See www.icc-cpi.int/Pages/item.aspx?name=20191220-otp-statement-palestine.

⁵¹ Prosecution request pursuant to article 19 (3) for a ruling on the Court’s territorial jurisdiction in Palestine, ICC-01/18, 22 January 2020.

implemented, and concluded with follow-up measures addressed to Israel, the State of Palestine and the international community.

31. Given that the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory has not improved materially since the publication of the 2017 report, these recommendations remain valid.⁵² Hence, the High Commissioner reiterates the proposal to both Israel and the State of Palestine to make full use of OHCHR technical assistance, including for the development of national mechanisms to monitor recommendations.⁵³ This suggestion is particularly relevant for Israel, given its publicly stated freeze in relations with OHCHR, in particular in the Occupied Palestinian Territory since February 2020, including in relation to the issuance of visas for international staff.⁵⁴

32. As noted, the vast majority of recommendations reviewed in the 2017 report relate to unlawful conduct by the parties. Continued OHCHR monitoring shows that the concerns expressed in prior reports remain.⁵⁵ In particular, numerous alleged violations of international humanitarian law are attributable to Israel in relation to its conduct during the escalations of hostilities in Gaza. Further violations pertain to the rules on law enforcement operations and those related to belligerent occupation both in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza.⁵⁶ Accordingly, the High Commissioner reminds Israel of its obligations under the international human rights instruments to which it is party, under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and other norms of international humanitarian law, and under customary international law, and reiterates the call upon Israel to fully comply with them in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁵⁷

33. In 2017, the High Commissioner noted the repeated failure of Israel to comply with the calls for accountability made by the entire human rights system.⁵⁸ In view of the continuous lack of steps taken to ensure accountability according to international standards (see sect. II), the High Commissioner reiterates the calls upon Israel and the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, impartial, independent and thorough investigations into all alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including all allegations of international crimes. The High Commissioner also reiterates the call upon all duty bearers to ensure that all victims have access to remedies and reparation.⁵⁹

34. As regards follow-up measures addressed to the international community in the 2017 report, the High Commissioner notably suggested that the Human Rights Council consider recommending to the General Assembly that it make use of its powers under Article 96 (a) of the Charter of the United Nations in order to specify how all parties could fulfil their obligations in implementing the recommendations reviewed in the report.⁶⁰ The High Commissioner reiterates the call upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies to take all measures necessary to ensure full respect for and compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Human Rights Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council, including Security Council resolution 2334 (2016), in which the Security Council reaffirmed that the establishment by Israel of settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, had no legal validity and constituted a flagrant violation under international law.⁶¹ In signing the Charter of the United Nations, States have bound themselves to comply with the decisions of

⁵² See, e.g., A/HRC/37/38, A/HRC/40/39 and A/HRC/43/70.

⁵³ A/HRC/35/19, paras. 67 and 73.

⁵⁴ See www.timesofisrael.com/israel-freezes-ties-with-un-rights-chief-after-release-of-settlement-blacklist.

⁵⁵ See A/HRC/46/63 and A/HRC/46/65.

⁵⁶ In A/HRC/34/38, the Secretary-General summarized the applicable legal framework and referred to the main recurrent violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

⁵⁷ A/HRC/35/19, para. 67.

⁵⁸ Ibid., para. 69.

⁵⁹ Ibid., paras. 69 and 71.

⁶⁰ Ibid., para. 75.

⁶¹ Ibid., para. 80.

the Security Council and are also under an obligation to bring to an end a situation deemed illegal by the Security Council.⁶²

35. Under the principles of State responsibility, the State responsible for an internationally wrongful act must cease that act if it is continuing, in addition to making full reparation for any injury that such act has caused.⁶³ Despite continuous calls over decades for the occupying power to fully respect international law and to comply with its obligations under the law of occupation, violations continue to occur at an alarming pace. The international community could therefore consider further efforts towards bringing the occupation to an end, thereby also putting an end to these associated violations.⁶⁴ The articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts also oblige States to cooperate to bring to an end any serious breach of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law.⁶⁵ Accordingly, the High Commissioner calls upon all States to act collectively to stop the serious violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law that are being perpetrated in the Occupied Palestinian Territory on an ongoing basis and to enable the Palestinian people to exercise their right of self-determination.

IV. Responsibility of third States

36. In its resolution 43/3, the Human Rights Council reiterated its call upon all States to promote compliance with international law and all contracting parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) to respect, and to ensure respect for, international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in accordance with article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions. It further requested the High Commissioner to report on legal measures to be taken by States to ensure that Israel, and all relevant parties, respect their obligations under international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

37. The obligation to respect and ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions, as enshrined in common article 1, is valid in all circumstances.⁶⁶ This duty extends to the entire body of international humanitarian law.⁶⁷ It encompasses both negative and positive obligations: while States are expected to abstain from certain conduct (i.e. they must not encourage, aid or assist in violations of the Geneva Conventions), they must also take proactive steps to bring to end violations by parties to the conflict.⁶⁸ This obligation further imposes a positive

⁶² Charter of the United Nations, Article 25; and Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1971, p. 16, at pp. 53–54, para. 117.

⁶³ Articles 30–31 of the articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts (General Assembly resolution 56/83, annex).

⁶⁴ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 1; and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 1. The International Court of Justice confirmed the erga omnes nature of the right to self-determination in Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, at pp. 171–172, para. 88. See also paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the draft articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts about the right to self-determination being a peremptory norm (Report of the International Law Commission on its fifty-third session, A/56/10 and Corr.1, p. 208).

⁶⁵ Article 41 (1).

⁶⁶ See, e.g., Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 14, at p. 114, para. 220.

⁶⁷ ICRC, Customary International Humanitarian Law database, rule 144 (https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule144); and ICRC, International Humanitarian Law and the Challenges of Contemporary Armed Conflicts: 28th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, 2–6 December 2003 (Geneva, 2003) (www.icrc.org/en/doc/assets/files/other/ihlcontemp_armedconflicts_final_ang.pdf).

⁶⁸ A/HRC/43/35, para. 34. See also, e.g., ICRC, International Humanitarian Law and the Challenges of Contemporary Armed Conflicts: 28th International Conference; Knut Dörmann and Jose Serralvo, “Common article 1 to the Geneva Conventions and the obligation to prevent international humanitarian law violations”, International Review of the Red Cross, vol. 96, No. 895/896, p. 719 (<https://international-review.icrc.org/articles/common-article-1-geneva-conventions-and-obligation-> duty on States to do everything reasonably in their power to stop ongoing violations of international humanitarian law and to prevent those that are foreseeable.⁶⁹

38. It follows that third States must, to the degree possible, exert the influence they possess over the parties to the conflict to ensure respect for international humanitarian law.⁷⁰

39. As discussed in previous reports of the High Commissioner, in complying with their obligation to ensure respect for international humanitarian law, States can choose among different measures considered as adequate. Such measures may range from diplomatic steps to more significant ones, including measures of retortion and the adoption of countermeasures⁷¹ that are appropriate and proportional to the circumstances.⁷² The International Committee of the Red Cross, in its 2016 updated commentary to common article 1, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 and various authors have outlined possible measures that States can take to comply with their obligation to ensure respect for the law.⁷³ The European Union Guidelines on promoting compliance with international humanitarian law present another useful indicative list of measures in this regard.⁷⁴

40. In a note verbal dated 15 October 2020, OHCHR reiterated its request to States Members of the United Nations for information on the steps taken to promote compliance with international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and to implement the recommendations contained in the reports of the relevant independent international commissions of inquiry and fact-finding missions.

41. Some public measures were taken by third States during the reporting period, mainly in relation to the publicly announced plans of Israel to annex the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Several Governments denounced these plans. On 7 July 2020, the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of Egypt, France, Germany and Jordan issued a joint statement calling on Israel not to proceed with its plan to annex parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, asserting that it “would be a violation of international law and imperil the foundations of the peace process”.⁷⁵ On 23 June 2020, 1,080 parliamentarians from 25 European States published a joint letter to European Governments and leaders against the Israeli annexation of the West Bank, asking European leaders to act decisively in response to this challenge.⁷⁶

42. Supporting international efforts to bring to justice suspected perpetrators of violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law is another measure available to third States to comply with their obligations under common article 1. It may include support for ongoing international legal proceedings or the creation of commissions prevent-international-humanitarian-law); ICRC, Commentary on the First Geneva Convention: Convention (I) for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, 2nd ed., 2016, paras. 164–173 (on common article 1); and Théo Boutruche and Marco Sassòli, “Expert opinion on third States’ obligations vis-à-vis IHL violations under international law, with a special focus on common article 1 to the 1949 Geneva Conventions”, 8 November 2016 (www.nrc.no/globalassets/pdf/legal-opinions/eo-common-article-1-ihl---boutruche---sassoli---8-nov-2016.pdf), pp. 13–14.

⁶⁹ A/HRC/43/35, para. 34.

⁷⁰ ICRC, Customary International Humanitarian Law database, rule 144 (https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule144); and ICRC, Commentary, para. 165.

⁷¹ A/HRC/40/43, para. 49; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 41.

⁷² A/74/507, para. 78. In the same report, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 suggested that States should escalate the range of their targeted countermeasures until compliance had been achieved.

⁷³ A/74/507, paras. 72–76; ICRC, Commentary, para. 181; and Dörmann and Serralvo, “Common article 1”, pp. 725–726.

⁷⁴ See https://eur-lex.europa.eu/legal-content/EN/TXT/PDF/?uri=CELEX:52009XG1215\(01\)&from=EN&from=EN).

⁷⁵ See www.diplomatie.gouv.fr/en/country-files/israel-palestinian-territories/peace-process/events/article/joint-statement-of-the-foreign-ministers-of-france-germany-egypt-and-jordan-07.

⁷⁶ See www.scribd.com/document/466688615/Letter-by-European-Parliamentarians-Against-Israeli-Annexation.

of inquiry, fact-finding missions and other international investigative mechanisms. Support may also pertain to proceedings under national justice.⁷⁷

43. States parties to the Geneva Conventions and the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), must provide for universal jurisdiction in their national legislation for the war crimes defined as grave breaches by these instruments.⁷⁸ Accordingly, such third States must investigate and prosecute or extradite alleged perpetrators of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions committed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. They must also investigate other relevant war crimes over which they have jurisdiction and prosecute the suspects, if appropriate.⁷⁹ Given that resorting to penal measures to repress violations of international humanitarian law may also be considered as a means of ensuring respect for the law,⁸⁰ States should consider vesting their national courts with competence – including on principles of universal or extraterritorial jurisdiction, in accordance with international law – to inquire into allegations of breaches of international humanitarian law, wherever they are committed.

44. For instance, in Germany, a preliminary investigation is ongoing for war crimes allegedly committed by members of the Israel Defense Forces within the scope of a strike in Gaza, on 24 July 2014, which killed several members of the same family (Kilani case).⁸¹ In Belgium, Switzerland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, criminal complaints were filed between 2009 and 2017 against senior Israeli officials for alleged war crimes committed during the escalation of hostilities in Gaza in 2008 and 2009.

45. In addition to the responsibility of third States under common article 1 to take reasonable measures to ensure respect for the law, States have an obligation, according to the articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, not to recognize as lawful a situation created by a serious breach of international law, nor render aid or assistance in maintaining that situation.⁸² As highlighted above, States have an obligation to cooperate to bring to an end, through lawful means, any serious breach of international law.⁸³ The duty of cooperation is also implied in the obligation of States, under the Charter of the United ⁷⁷ ICRC, Commentary, para. 181.

⁷⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 146; and Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions, art. 85 (1). A number of international human rights treaties, such as the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, also provide for mandatory universal jurisdiction over certain crimes. See also ICRC, Customary International Humanitarian Law database, rule 157 (https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule157), and the commentary thereto.

⁷⁹ ICRC, Customary International Humanitarian Law database, rule 158 (https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule158). Numerous States require the presence of the accused on their territory to establish jurisdiction.

⁸⁰ Ibid., with reference to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Tadić, case No. IT-94-1, Decision on the Defence Motion on Jurisdiction, 10 August 1995, para. 71.

⁸¹ See www.ecchr.eu/en/case/israeli-airstrikes-in-gaza-justice-in-the-kilani-case.

⁸² Article 41 (2). For instance, States should not recognize the unlawful situation resulting from Israeli settlements or aid or assist in maintaining it (A/HRC/40/43, para. 51).

⁸³ Article 41 (1) of the articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. Considered as serious are breaches by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (article 40 of the articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts). The prohibition of aggression, genocide, slavery, racial discrimination, crimes against humanity and torture, and the right to self-determination, as well as fundamental rules of international humanitarian law, are generally considered peremptory norms under international law (see paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 and paragraph (4) of the commentary to article 40 of the draft articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts (Report of the International Law Commission on its fifty-third session, A/56/10 and Corr.1, pp. 208 and 283, respectively)). See paragraph (3) of the commentary to article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties (Reports of the International Law Commission on the second part of its seventeenth session and on its eighteenth session, A/6309/Rev.1, pp. 76–77).

Nations, to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and freedoms, as also recalled by almost all core international human rights treaties.⁸⁴

V. Conclusion and recommendations

46. The period under review was characterized by a persistent pervasive failure to ensure accountability for allegations of excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces in the context of law enforcement operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Impunity also persisted in relation to allegations against all parties to the 2014 escalation and to previous and more recent rounds of hostilities in Gaza. Furthermore, there were concerns that few steps had been taken to investigate and prosecute the members of Palestinian security forces or of the security forces in Gaza responsible for alleged excessive use of force and other human rights violations committed against Palestinians.

47. With regard to the responsibility of third States, the High Commissioner underlines the obligation of all States to ensure respect for international humanitarian law by taking all necessary measures to that effect.

48. As already emphasized by the High Commissioner, despite the insistent calls made by the international community for compliance with applicable obligations under international law, and the support provided to Palestinian and Israeli authorities in their peace efforts, the steps taken by the international community have continued to remain insufficient to ensure that end.⁸⁵ In its resolution 2334 (2016), the Security Council stressed that the status quo was not sustainable and that significant steps were urgently needed to stabilize the situation and to reverse negative trends. In that regard, the Secretary-General has emphasized that a lack of accountability has compromised chances for sustainable peace and security, adding that tackling impunity must be the highest priority.⁸⁶ The High Commissioner again echoes those calls.

49. Recalling the follow-up measures described in previous comprehensive reviews of recommendations,⁸⁷ as well as all the recommendations reviewed, the High Commissioner:

(a) Calls upon Israel to fully comply with its obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; urges it to conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular into allegations of international crimes; and also calls upon Israel to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, reparation and truth;

(b) Calls upon Israel to resume its cooperation with OHCHR and make full use of OHCHR technical assistance;

(c) Urges the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular into allegations of international crimes; and calls upon the State of Palestine to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, reparation and truth;

⁸⁴ Charter of the United Nations, Article 1 (3). See the preambles of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

⁸⁵ A/HRC/35/19, para. 62.

⁸⁶ A/71/364, para. 6.

⁸⁷ A/HRC/35/19, paras. 63–81.

(d) Recommends that all parties ensure full respect for international law, including international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and that they ensure accountability for grave violations;

(e) Calls upon all States to take all necessary measures to effectively ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions by all parties to the conflict, taking into account the means reasonably available to them and their level of influence on the parties; and, in particular, reminds States with close ties to the parties that they must exert their influence to ensure respect for the law;

(f) Reiterates the calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies to take all necessary measures to ensure full respect and compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
11 February 2021

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-sixth session

22 February–19 March 2021

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report, the thirteenth submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1, covers the period from 1 November 2019 to 31 October 2020. It provides an overview of the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and focuses, in particular, on the realization of the human rights of women and girls by all duty bearers, namely Israel, the State of Palestine and the authorities in Gaza.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. Submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1, the present report covers the period from 1 November 2019 to 31 October 2020.
2. The report is based on monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, governmental sources and information collected by other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations. It should be read in conjunction with other relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly.¹ In the present report, the High Commissioner draws on trends and cases documented by OHCHR to illustrate how Palestinian women are subjected to multiple layers of violence and discrimination, in the public and private spheres, stemming from the Israeli military occupation, prevailing patriarchal norms and practices and gender-based violence. Owing to space constraints, the High Commissioner does not address all issues of concern, nor does it address all cases documented during the reporting period.
3. Following the publication in February 2020 of a report to the Human Rights Council on a database of business enterprises involved in activities linked to Israeli settlements,² the Government of Israel publicly announced a freeze in relations with the High Commissioner and OHCHR, in particular in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. That freeze was extended to cover the issuance or renewal of visas, resulting in international OHCHR staff being obliged to leave Ramallah and Gaza and in new staff being unable to deploy. On 26 October 2020, the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, addressing the Security Council, urged Israel to facilitate the return of international staff members to the Occupied Palestinian Territory.³

II. Legal framework

4. International humanitarian law and international human rights law apply concurrently in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁴ Under international human rights law, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women – to which Israel and the State of Palestine are parties – provides the broadest framework for the protection of women’s rights in times of peace and conflict alike. The Convention sets out clear obligations to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women, direct and indirect, including violence against women and gender-based violence.⁵ Discrimination against women can take multiple forms, including gender-based violence, namely violence directed towards a woman because she is a woman or that affects women disproportionately.⁶ In certain circumstances, gender-based violence, including domestic violence, child marriage and harmful practices, may amount to torture.⁷ The prohibition of gender-based violence is viewed as having evolved into a norm of customary international law.⁸ In addition to affording to women the general protection afforded to all civilians, international humanitarian law provides that the specific protection, health and assistance needs of women must be respected and addresses specific conflict-related forms of violence against women.⁹
5. The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women applies to the Occupied Palestinian Territory in its entirety, namely to Gaza and the West

¹ A/75/336, A/HRC/46/22 and A/HRC/46/65.

² A/HRC/43/71.

³ See https://unsco.unmissions.org/sites/default/files/security_council_briefing_-_26_october_2020.pdf.

⁴ A/HRC/34/38.

⁵ Arts. 1–2, 5, 7, 9–11 and 16.

⁶ Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, general recommendation No. 35 (2017), para. 1.

⁷ Ibid., para. 16. See also A/HRC/31/57, paras. 11 and 55.

⁸ General recommendation No. 35 (2017), para. 2.

⁹ See, e.g., Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27.

Bank, including East Jerusalem.¹⁰ Israel and the State of Palestine bear obligations under the Convention, as well as other human rights treaties, to the extent of their jurisdiction or effective control. The de facto authorities in Gaza also bear human rights responsibilities, given their exercise of government-like functions and territorial control.¹¹

III. Implementation of Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 and S-12/1

6. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory remained dire. During the reporting period, 67 Palestinians (48 male, 3 female), including 16 children, were killed and 3,678 injured by the Israeli security forces. One Israeli soldier was killed and 90 Israelis were injured by Palestinians.¹² Most incidents monitored by OHCHR raised serious concerns about excessive or unwarranted use of force by the Israeli security forces, in some cases possibly amounting to arbitrary deprivation of life, including extrajudicial execution. Lack of accountability for unnecessary or disproportionate use of force and other violations by all duty bearers remained of great concern, as detailed by the High Commissioner in a separate report.¹³

IV. Violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by all duty bearers

A. Israel

1. Obligations of the occupying Power under international humanitarian law

7. The land, sea and air blockade of Gaza, which amounts to collective punishment,¹⁴ entered its fourteenth year. Three times during the reporting period Israel imposed punitive closures of crossings and the fishing zone and halted the entry of fuel and other essential supplies, further aggravating the suffering of the civilian population. Israeli officials cited the launch of rockets, mortars and incendiary balloons as reasons for the closures.¹⁵ Frequent fuel and electricity shortages have a devastating impact on women and girls, who are, due to sociocultural norms, mainly charged with household tasks. Shortages also greatly hamper their access to basic health and education services, including schooling and psychosocial services, which have mostly been provided remotely during the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic.¹⁶

8. International humanitarian law expressly prohibits the punishment of protected persons for acts they have not committed.¹⁷ Under international human rights law, collective punishment violates several rights, notably the presumption of innocence and the right to a fair trial, and may violate the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment.¹⁸

9. Israel withheld the bodies of 18 Palestinian males, including 2 boys, killed in the context of alleged attacks during the reporting period. As of 31 October 2020, Israel held the bodies of 67 Palestinians.¹⁹ On 2 September 2020, the Israeli cabinet formally expanded its

¹⁰ A/HRC/35/30/Add.2, para. 8.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 11. See also A/HRC/34/38, paras. 5–9.

¹² Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat (OCHA).

¹³ A/HRC/46/22.

¹⁴ A/HRC/37/38, para. 4; A/HRC/34/36, para. 36; and A/HRC/24/30, para. 22.

¹⁵ See www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog-august-12-2020/.

¹⁶ See www.ochaopt.org/sites/default/files/sitrep-16-covid-19.pdf.

¹⁷ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 33. See also the Regulations annexed to the Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 1907, art. 50.

¹⁸ A/74/468, para. 21.

¹⁹ Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center. This number does not include the 253 bodies of Palestinians killed in hostilities and buried in graves marked only by numbers.

policy of withholding bodies as a tool for bargaining and stated that the bodies of all alleged attackers should be retained, regardless of their political affiliation.²⁰ On 25 September 2020, the Israeli security forces returned the body of Nayfeh Kaabneh. Ms. Kaabneh had been killed on 18 September 2019 by private security personnel (contracted by the Israeli security forces) while holding a knife but not posing any concrete threat at Qalandia checkpoint. In respect of that incident, OHCHR pointed to concerns of excessive use of force and failure to provide first aid to an injured person. Withholding bodies punishes the families of the deceased and thus amounts to collective punishment. It could also violate the prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the obligations of Israel under article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.²¹

10. Thirteen Palestinian structures, including nine homes, were punitively demolished or sealed by the Israeli security forces, resulting in the displacement of 40 Palestinians, including 13 women and 16 children, in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.²² While upholding the overall practice of punitive demolitions, the High Court of Justice of Israel cancelled two demolition orders during the reporting period. In one case, the Court held that the punitive demolition of the family home would not be “proportional” since it would mostly harm the innocent wife and eight children of Nazmi Abu Bakar, accused of killing an Israeli soldier with a brick during a raid by the Israeli security forces in Ya’bad, on 10 May 2020.²³ The Court authorized instead the sealing of one room in the three-bedroom home, which the forces filled with concrete on 21 October 2020, as the trial was still ongoing. Punitive demolitions are a form of collective punishment, forbidden under any circumstances.²⁴

11. Settlement plans and construction continued unabated during the reporting period.²⁵ Despite the COVID-19 pandemic, the Israeli authorities demolished 726 Palestinian structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, which resulted in the displacement of 1,028 Palestinians, including 255 women and 523 children.²⁶ Settler violence against Palestinians continued at high levels in what the Secretary-General has called a prevailing climate of impunity.²⁷ In previous reports, OHCHR has documented that women and girls have been particularly targeted by settler attacks in their homes when men were absent and that the constant risk of attacks has kept women confined to the domestic environment, thus compounding negative aspects of traditional gender roles.²⁸ The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women has stated that forced evictions and home demolitions, including punitive demolitions, disproportionately affect Palestinian women and girls, particularly female heads of households, and have a devastating impact on their physical and psychological well-being.²⁹

2. Civilian casualties in the context of hostilities

12. In Gaza, Palestinian armed groups launched 580 rockets and 213 mortars towards Israel and Israel fired 591 missiles and 140 tanks shells in recurrent escalations of hostilities.³⁰

13. The Israeli security forces killed 36 Palestinians during three escalations of hostilities with Palestinian armed groups in Gaza and injured 103 (77 male, 26 female).³¹ At least 16 of the Palestinians killed were civilians, including 8 boys and 3 women. In several instances,

²⁰ The decision updates a previous decision of 1 January 2017 by which only the bodies of alleged attackers affiliated with Hamas and those who allegedly committed acts of exceptional gravity should not be returned. In practice, the Israeli security forces were already withholding the bodies of all alleged attackers regardless of their affiliation.

²¹ A/HRC/43/70, para. 9; and A/75/336, para. 35.

²² OCHA.

²³ High Court of Justice, Abu Baher et al. v. Military Commander of the West Bank Area et al., HCJ 4853/20, judgment, 10 August 2020.

²⁴ Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 33 and 53.

²⁵ A/HRC/46/65.

²⁶ OCHA.

²⁷ A/75/376, para. 26.

²⁸ Ibid., para. 21; and A/74/357, para. 42.

²⁹ CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, paras. 32–33.

³⁰ Department of Safety and Security of the Secretariat.

³¹ OCHA.

strikes by the Israeli security forces on or near residential buildings rendered women and children particularly vulnerable to death and injury. On 14 November 2019, Israeli Air Force missiles struck two houses in Deir El-Balah, killing nine members of an extended family: two married couples and five children. Thirteen other children who survived the attack, of whom seven were girls, remained under the sole care of their 70-year-old grandmother.³² During another escalation, following the launch of dozens of incendiary balloons from Gaza that caused extensive fire and damage to farmlands in Israel, the Israeli security forces struck open areas close to residential buildings on 14 and 21 August 2020, injuring four Palestinian children (two boys, two girls). These air strikes raised serious concerns about respect for the international humanitarian law principles of distinction, precaution and proportionality.

14. Serious concerns also remained regarding the indiscriminate launching of rockets and mortars by Palestinian armed groups towards Israel. Forty-three Israeli civilians were reportedly injured in those attacks.³³ At least 29 rockets and mortars dropped short in Gaza,³⁴ resulting in the killing of an 18-year-old Palestinian man on 12 November 2019. The indiscriminate launching of rockets is illegal under international law.

B. Recurring human rights violations

1. Violations of the right to life and physical integrity

15. In line with international law, law enforcement officials should use firearms only as a measure of last resort, in response to an imminent threat of death or serious injury and always in such a manner as to minimize damage and injury and preserve human life.³⁵

16. Serious concerns of unnecessary or disproportionate use of force against Palestinians persisted, although at the Gaza-Israel fence the number of casualties significantly dropped as Great March of Return demonstrations were suspended from 27 December 2019. Three Palestinian males, including two boys aged 16 and 14,³⁶ were killed by the Israeli security forces in the context of the demonstrations. Some 673 Palestinians were injured (644 male, 29 female), including 126 with live ammunition, of whom 50 were children.³⁷ In the vast majority of cases monitored by OHCHR, Palestinians were killed or injured by the Israeli security forces while appearing to pose no imminent threat of death or serious injury.³⁸

17. Women were also victims of unnecessary or disproportionate use of force at demonstrations. On 6 December 2019, east of Al Boureij, a 20-year-old woman was struck in the face by a rubber-coated bullet fired by the Israeli security forces, causing permanent loss of eyesight in her right eye. When she was hit, the woman was standing about 100 metres from the fence in a group of women holding Palestinian flags and not posing any threat to the Israeli security forces. The independent international commission of inquiry on the protests in the Occupied Palestinian Territory found that, although fewer women than men participated in the demonstrations due to the prevailing cultural norms, the protests at the fence provided women and girls in Gaza, who had little access to public spaces, to participate in cultural and social activities.³⁹ Women and girls represented 7.1 per cent of the 36,142 Palestinians injured during the Great March of Return demonstrations.⁴⁰ While injured or disabled women are often expected to continue to fulfil their domestic duties, they may experience reduced decision-making power and their access to medical treatment may be limited by social norms.⁴¹ Reports also highlight the impact on women and girls of the killings and injuries of male family members, such as the increase in female-headed

³² A/75/336, para. 5.

³³ OCHA.

³⁴ Department of Safety and Security.

³⁵ Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials.

³⁶ A/75/336, para. 8.

³⁷ OCHA.

³⁸ A/75/336, paras. 6–7.

³⁹ A/HRC/40/CRP.2, paras. 592–598.

⁴⁰ Injuries were inflicted on 36,143 persons, including 2,040 women and 552 girls (OCHA).

⁴¹ OCHA.

households, in pressure on women as the main caregivers to the injured and in domestic violence.⁴²

18. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Israeli security forces killed 23 Palestinian males, including 5 children and 1 man with autism. Three Palestinians were killed during demonstrations, 8 during search-and-arrest operations and 12 in the context of attacks or alleged attacks against the Israeli security forces or settlers. In several incidents, the Israeli security forces may have resorted to unnecessary or disproportionate use of force resulting in arbitrary deprivation of life, including extrajudicial execution.⁴³

19. Excessive use of force by the Israeli security forces and generalized violence pose a constant threat to the rights to life and physical integrity of civilians, including women and girls. On 22 February 2020, the Israeli security forces injured with live fire a 43-year-old woman during an alleged stabbing attack in the Old City of Jerusalem. The woman told OHCHR that she saw a man being chased by the Israeli security forces. The man had stopped while holding a knife with his back against the wall, a few metres away from the woman, when the Israeli security forces shot him, first with one bullet and then with dozens of bullets from different directions. One of them passed through the woman's left thigh causing serious injury.

20. In another incident, on 7 August 2020, a 23-year-old woman was killed by live ammunition while shutting the windows of her home to prevent teargas from entering during an operation of the Israeli security forces and ensuing clashes with Palestinian residents in Jenin. There were contradictory claims over responsibility for the shooting, with the Israeli security forces and local residents denying the use of live ammunition.

21. United Nations experts have pointed to the severe impact on women and girls of raids and search operations, including night-time home incursions, routinely conducted by the Israeli security forces.⁴⁴ Even when they are not directly victims of physical violence, women experience extreme psychological violence leading to sleeping disorders, anxiety and depression. A study conducted by the organization Yesh Din, which monitored over 158 raids by the Israeli security forces, showed that 88 per cent of home incursions occurred between midnight and 5 a.m. and that in 74 per cent of such incursions homes were invaded by 10 or more soldiers, in 25 per cent violence was used and in 30 per cent property was damaged. In none did the Israeli security forces have a search warrant.⁴⁵ On 23 August 2020, at 3 a.m., some 50 soldiers raided Deir Abu Mashal village and entered the house of a 21-year-old Palestinian to arrest him. The Israeli security forces pepper-sprayed the father, the mother and the grandmother, all of whom resisted the arrest of the young man because he had a medical condition resulting from a previous injury caused by the Israeli security forces. As documented in a video, the soldiers were not wearing surgical masks notwithstanding the COVID-19 outbreak.⁴⁶ For three days, the family remained unaware of the whereabouts of the young man, who was released with no charges or conditions on 26 August 2020.

22. Three Palestinian males, including a 14-year-old boy, were killed and several others were injured in law enforcement operations carried out by Palestinian security forces in the context of a surge in crime and violence in the West Bank and to enforce COVID-19 restrictions. On 23 May, in Ad Duheisha refugee camp, during clashes with residents after attempts to forcefully implement COVID-19 precautions, a Palestinian officer fired several live bullets and injured two persons in the legs in an incident raising concern of unnecessary or disproportionate use of force. On several occasions, Gaza security forces used force to

⁴² See <https://www2.unwomen.org/-/media/field%20office%20palestine/attachments/publications/2020/12/d7-gmr%20report-271120.pdf?la=en&vs=2457>, pp. 12–13 and 17–20; <https://www2.unwomen.org/-/media/field%20office%20palestine/attachments/publications/2020/10/gender%20alert%20analysis%20august%202020%20unw.pdf?la=en&vs=5731>, pp. 7–12; and <https://palestine.unfpa.org/sites/default/files/pub-pdf/Situation%20Report%20Gaza%20-%202018%20-%20Great%20Return%20March%20-%20final.pdf>.

⁴³ A/75/336, para. 8.

⁴⁴ CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, para. 30 (b); and A/HRC/35/30/Add.1, para. 61.

⁴⁵ See https://life-exposed.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/11/Exposed_Life_EN_FINAL.pdf, p. 15.

⁴⁶ See also A/75/336, para. 42.

implement COVID-19-related curfews and movement restrictions, resulting in the injury of Palestinians, including women. In one case, on 4 September, security forces raided several houses in Khan Younis to find individuals who had thrown stones in protest at the use of force in the enforcement of the night curfew and beat a 34-year-old woman in the head, after which she required stitches.

23. Courts in Gaza issued 10 death sentences, 3 of which by military courts. Five other death sentences previously issued were confirmed on appeal, two of them by military courts. Those sentences raise serious concern about due process and fair trial guarantees, including in respect of the sentencing of civilians by military courts.

2. Discrimination and gender-based violence

24. Gender-based violence is a form of discrimination against women and a human rights violation. Moreover, it jeopardizes women's enjoyment of several fundamental rights, including the rights to life and physical integrity, liberty and security of the person.⁴⁷ Under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and other human rights treaties, authorities have the obligation to prevent, prosecute and provide reparations for acts of gender-based violence committed by public officials and in the private sphere.⁴⁸

25. The occupation compounds women's vulnerability to gender-based violence and can pose critical obstacles to the prevention of and punishment for acts of violence against women and girls, particularly in East Jerusalem and in Area C, where the occupying Power, Israel, exercises exclusive jurisdiction over security.⁴⁹ As has been pointed out by United Nations experts, this situation does not exonerate the Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza from fulfilling their due diligence obligations in areas under their effective jurisdiction and control.⁵⁰ In this regard, the multiplicity of authorities, security forces and legal systems poses additional challenges. Women also suffer from violence emanating from patriarchal social norms.⁵¹

26. Six years after accession by the State of Palestine, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women has not been published in the official gazette, a precondition for its domestic application. Very limited progress was made during the reporting period towards repealing laws discriminating against women in the areas of legal capacity and personal status, criminal and family law and passing legislation to protect women from violence. Violence against women is both a cause and consequence of gender inequality.⁵² Despite very high literacy levels, Palestinian women remain severely underrepresented in the workforce (18.1 per cent), national and local government (14 per cent) and areas such as the police (4.9 per cent), the judiciary (18 per cent) and the public prosecution (20 per cent).⁵³

Gender-based violence against women and girls

27. In November 2019, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics found that the 38 per cent of currently married or ever married women in Gaza and 24 per cent of currently married or ever married women in the West Bank had experienced domestic violence, and that only 1 per cent of women who had suffered domestic violence sought psychosocial support or legal counselling or report to the police.⁵⁴ Despite efforts to strengthen the national referral system, the scarcity of gender-sensitive services and mistrust in the system remained major reasons why gender-based violence was underreported.⁵⁵ Stigma, lack of privacy and ⁴⁷ General recommendation No. 35 (2017), para. 15.

⁴⁸ Ibid., para. 24 (b). See also A/HRC/31/57, paras. 11 and 55.

⁴⁹ A/HRC/35/30/Add.1., para. 58.

⁵⁰ Ibid., para. 15.

⁵¹ A/HRC/35/30/Add.2., para. 23.

⁵² Ibid., para. 92 (a).

⁵³ See www.pcbs.gov.ps/Downloads/book2528.pdf.

⁵⁴ See www.pcbs.gov.ps/Downloads/book2480.pdf, pp. 20 and 22.

⁵⁵ United Nations Population Fund, Seeking Protection: Survivors of Sexual Violence and Their Access to Services in Palestine (2020), p. 16.

confidentiality, and the frequent dismissal by law enforcement officials of gender-based violence claims remained obstacles to accessing services. In addition, women with disabilities and other groups most vulnerable to violence, such as drug users, sex workers, those accused of criminal offences and members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex community, remained excluded, either by law or de facto, from protection such as shelters.⁵⁶ Discriminatory laws and the criminalization of adultery, incest, abortion and, in Gaza, the broadly defined “moral misconduct” continue to deter women from reporting gender-based violence for fear of further victimization. A 19-year-old separated woman from the West Bank reported to OHCHR that, in February 2020, the Palestinian Authority police refused to accept her complaint of rape. When the woman refused to stay in a shelter for battered women, the police reportedly detained her under adultery charges.

28. The outbreak of COVID-19 since March 2020, and related movement restrictions, increased the vulnerability of women and girls to domestic violence, while almost all in-person services were halted. Government and civil society service providers recorded a spike in cases of domestic violence in the following months reported through the emergency hotlines that were rapidly established to provide remote services.⁵⁷ The total or partial closure from March to May 2020 of the sharia and family courts dealing with cases of alimony, custody and divorce in the West Bank and Gaza also disproportionately affected vulnerable women.⁵⁸ Government-run shelters in Gaza stopped accepting new cases. In the West Bank, quarantine requirements further reduced access to these life-saving services.

29. Women’s organizations demanded once again that the Government of the State of Palestine immediately adopt legislation to protect women from domestic violence. On 10 May 2020, the Cabinet adopted in first reading a draft family protection bill that had been pending since the early 2000s but the process for the adoption of anti-violence legislation did not advance further. Furthermore, a strong campaign against both the bill and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women was carried out by sharia lawyers, judges, scholars and religious groups on social and other media platforms.

Gender-related killings or femicides

30. The high number of femicides indicates a failure of the authorities to fulfil their obligations to prevent this extreme manifestation of violence against women and to punish those responsible.⁵⁹

31. The Women’s Centre for Legal Assistance and Counselling recorded 35 cases of gender-related killings, suicide and death in suspicious circumstances in the West Bank (20) and Gaza (15), including cases involving two pregnant women and six girls, one of whom was 11 years old and had been beaten to death by her father in Gaza on 19 July 2020.⁶⁰ There was a dramatic increase from the 22 cases recorded during previous reporting period.⁶¹ In several cases, women were reportedly killed purportedly in the name of “honour”, that is, for challenging prevailing patriarchal social norms and traditions.

32. Inadequate responses and impunity for gender-related killings persisted and contributed to a widespread social acceptance of those crimes. The Office of the Attorney

⁵⁶ Ibid., p. 19.

⁵⁷ See https://www2.unwomen.org/-/media/field%20office%20palestine/attachments/publications/2020/5/fianl%20rapid%20assessment%20on%20covid-19%20\(003\).pdf?la=en&vs=5745.pdf?la=en&vs=5745) and <https://palestine.unfpa.org/sites/default/files/pub-pdf/Impact%20of%20COVID19%20outbreak%20and%20lockdown%20on%20family%20dynamics%20and%20domestic%20violence%20in%20Palestine.pdf>.

⁵⁸ See www.wclac.org/files/library/20/07/aoazpvvqscgipswyhc3fqr.pdf and <https://aisha.ps/public/files/1602012326.pdf>.

⁵⁹ A/71/398, para. 27. Despite being a growing phenomenon in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, there is no agreed criteria among governmental and non-governmental entities on how to classify gender-related killings.

⁶⁰ See www.unicef.org/sop/press-releases/unicef-and-un-human-rights-office-call-greater-protection-domestic-violence-children.

⁶¹ Women’s Centre for Legal Assistance and Counselling.

General in the West Bank, where a specialized unit addresses violence against women, indicated that in eight of the cases mentioned above an indictment for homicide was filed against the suspects and that three cases were under investigation. In Gaza, no information was available on the status of the cases. There is concern that cases of reported suicides and deaths in mysterious circumstances are not further investigated.

33. Despite the abrogation by Presidential decree in 2011 of specific legal provisions condoning so-called “honour” killings,⁶² a range of mitigating circumstances – among them the possibility for the victim’s family member to waive the right to prosecution, including following informal justice “reconciliation” – are frequently granted by judges in cases of gender-related killings, resulting in reduced sentences for perpetrators.⁶³ Judicial rulings in these cases, which sometimes take several years to be issued, are often influenced by gender stereotypes that subordinate women to men.⁶⁴ A further challenge to the prosecution of perpetrators of gender-based violence, including killings, was the reported inability of the Palestinian security forces to carry out law enforcement in areas under exclusive Israeli security control, particularly following the suspension of coordination in mid-2020.

34. On 29 May 2020, 21-year-old Madleen Jaraba was brought to hospital in a serious condition, with signs of violence on her body, and died after allegedly having been beaten by her father in Deir El-Balah, Gaza. The father was arrested but then released on 10 July and has remained at large since then, despite new arrest warrants against him.

35. On 17 September 2020, 21-year-old Nawal Hathalin, her fiancé and his sister were shot dead with M16 rifles near Bethlehem. Ms. Hathalin had been hosted in a government shelter fearing for her safety after reportedly having had a relationship with a 21-year-old man from Salfit whom she wished to marry. The woman was killed as she left the shelter, under police escort, to go to her wedding. As at the end of the reporting period, the police had not arrested the suspects from the bride’s family, who were reportedly hiding in Area C.

Child, early and forced marriage

36. Child, early and forced marriage are forms of gender-based violence that violate the rights of children, particularly girls, to enter into a marriage with their full consent and has a detrimental impact on their education and on their physical and psychological health.⁶⁵ Despite some positive developments, the protection against this harmful practice remained fragmented and inadequate, including due to the application of different legal regimes.

37. On 3 November 2019, the President of the State of Palestine issued a law by decree (No. 21 of 2019) raising to 18 years the minimum age of marriage for both sexes while also permitting the chief justices of sharia and other family courts to allow marriages below the age of 18, “if required in the interest of both parties”. The decree is not applied in East Jerusalem, where the minimum age for marriage remains 15 years for girls and 16 years for boys, pursuant to the Jordanian Personal Status Law of 1976.

38. Since the entry into force of the decree on 29 December 2019 until 31 August 2020, the sharia courts in the West Bank received 1,304 applications for exceptions and granted 459 (35 per cent) of them; in most of those cases, the bride was reportedly 17 years old.⁶⁶ International standards stipulate that child marriage is a form of forced marriage, given that one or both parties have not expressed full, free or informed consent.⁶⁷

39. In Gaza, the Egyptian Family Law of 1954, which stipulates that the minimum age for marriage is 18 years for men and 17 years for women, continued to be applied, despite the 2019 Decree. Of some 7,200 marriages registered by the sharia courts from 1 November

⁶² A/HRC/28/80, para. 49.

⁶³ See www.wclac.org/files/library/19/08/wlqwzwcncrxtgwq3yrlwo.pdf, pp. 2–3.

⁶⁴ Ibid., p. 5.

⁶⁵ Joint general recommendation No. 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women/general comment No. 18 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (2019), para. 22.

⁶⁶ Sharia courts in the West Bank.

⁶⁷ Joint general recommendation No. 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women/general comment No. 18 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (2019), para. 20.

2019 to 30 April 2020, 1,279 (17.7 per cent) involved children, with 94.4 per cent of them being girls.⁶⁸

Violence against lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons

40. Palestinian members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex community continued to be subjected to different forms of violence in the public and private spheres. They also faced obstacles in accessing justice, including non-investigation of complaints or breaches of confidentiality, which could expose their sexual orientation and place them at risk of further violence. Palestinian security forces reportedly also questioned and threatened persons detained under criminal charges about individuals and their affiliation to organizations in the West Bank promoting the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons, raising concerns regarding the right to privacy and intimidation of human rights defenders.⁶⁹

3. Violations of the right to freedom of movement and impact on other rights

41. Israel continued to maintain full control and severely restrict the movement of Palestinians between the West Bank and Gaza, access to Jerusalem and travel abroad through a multilayered system of physical, administrative and bureaucratic obstacles, including an arbitrary identification and permit system.⁷⁰ These restrictions violate the right of Palestinians to freedom of movement and prejudice the enjoyment of several other rights. Movement and travel restrictions hinder women's access to health services, education and employment opportunities, which are key factors inhibiting their equal participation in the workforce and public life.⁷¹

42. The outbreak of COVID-19 in March further compounded this situation. While in November 2019 the monthly average of Palestinians exiting Gaza through Erez was 19,404, it dropped to just 278 in March 2020.⁷² Rafah crossing, which operated regularly until 8 March 2020, remained closed until the end of the reporting period, except for seven days.

43. In addition, the suspension by the Palestinian Authority of coordination with Israel in May, after Israel threatened to annex the West Bank, left Palestinians with no formal mechanism to channel applications for medical exit permits until 6 September, when the World Health Organization set up a temporary coordination mechanism. Thousands of patients requiring referrals for specialized medical treatment not available in Gaza had their access to life-saving treatment further reduced. From November 2019 to March 2020, 7,733 applications for medical exit permits were submitted, 5,058 (65 per cent) of which were approved. Due to COVID-19, the new criteria introduced by Israel on 12 March allowing only urgent medical referrals to be processed and the suspension of coordination, the number of applications dropped by 91 per cent to 159 in April and 160 in May.⁷³ OHCHR recorded four cases of Palestinians, including two male infants with heart conditions and a 6-year-old girl with cancer, who died in Gaza between May and September 2020 while waiting for medical care outside Gaza.

Residency rights and family unification

44. The Israeli permit system continued to impose arbitrary restrictions on family unifications between Palestinians from different parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. This separation policy⁷⁴ particularly affects women, as they are usually the ones who move for marriage.

⁶⁸ High Council of Sharia Courts in Gaza.

⁶⁹ A/HRC/43/70, paras. 35–36 and 49.

⁷⁰ A/HRC/31/44 and A/HRC/34/38.

⁷¹ See https://gisha.org/UserFiles/File/publications/Discrimination_by_Default_EN.pdf?mc_cid=a4c5f70336&mc_eid=28f586c7f9; E/CN.6/2019/6, para. 3; and CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, para. 46 (b).

⁷² General Authority for Civil Affairs.

⁷³ Ibid.

⁷⁴ A/75/336, para. 27.

45. Palestinians from East Jerusalem have the status of permanent residents. That status is not automatically extended to their children or spouses. Palestinians from the West Bank married to East Jerusalemites cannot receive permanent residence or citizenship, but can apply for temporary permits, subject to lengthy and restrictive family unification procedures. The Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (Temporary Order), violates the obligations of Israel under several human rights treaties, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,⁷⁵ and compounds women's vulnerability to domestic violence. According to the organization HaMoked, which assists Palestinians in family unification procedures, as women depend on their husbands for their residency status, those in abusive relationships are trapped, choosing to remain in the relationship in order not to be deported and separated from their children. Without an Israeli permit, women cannot access health and social security services and are at risk of arrest and deportation. In a case monitored by HaMoked, the Ministry of the Interior of Israel refused in July 2020 to grant residency status to a Palestinian woman with West Bank identification and her 2-year-old twins born in Jerusalem, after their father had passed away pending family unification application. The woman gave her husband's family official guardianship of the children to resubmit the application, which was again rejected.

46. Palestinians from Gaza are prevented from unifying with their families in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. On the other hand, Palestinians are encouraged to leave the West Bank to unify with their families in Gaza. The organization Gisha monitored and legally challenged an increasing number of cases involving women from the West Bank who were required by Israel, in order to move to Gaza following marriage, to sign forms on "settlement in the Gaza Strip", thereby waiving indefinitely their right to return to live in the West Bank, raising concerns of forcible transfer.⁷⁶

47. By suspending its coordination with Israel, the Palestinian Authority stopped communicating information to update the Palestinian population registry controlled by Israel, further affecting the travel of Palestinians. Several women were prevented from leaving the West Bank to go to Jordan with their newborns holding Palestinian and foreign passports because the babies were not registered in the Israeli population registry. On 26 July 2020, a woman from Ramallah and a woman from Nablus were stopped at the Allenby crossing by the Israeli security forces and prevented from travelling with their babies to the United Arab Emirates where they resided with their husbands. The women were able to register their babies directly with the Israeli authorities with the help of human rights organizations and left the West Bank.

48. Israel, the occupying Power, has the obligation to facilitate freedom of movement of the protected population, including entry and exit from the occupied territory, regardless of the policies of the Palestinian Authority.

4. Restrictions of the rights of freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly

49. The Israeli security forces continued to systematically use force and other means to suppress demonstrations,⁷⁷ including those protesting Israeli threats of annexation and the blockade of Gaza. Palestinian Authority security forces invoked emergency regulations prohibiting gatherings due to COVID-19 to violently disperse and detain protesters demonstrating in Ramallah against corruption on 19 July 2020 and, in a different instance, against the application of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. Palestinian security forces in the West Bank and the security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza summoned and detained journalists and social media activists, including women, on multiple occasions, for posting statements and videos criticizing the authorities and for allegedly spreading misinformation about COVID-19. Violence in public spaces by all three duty bearers, coupled with the prevalent patriarchal norms, has a particularly deterrent effect on the participation of Palestinian women in public and political life.

⁷⁵ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 21; CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 49; CERD/C/ISR/CO/17-19, paras. 24–25; E/C.12/ISR/CO/4, paras. 40–41; and CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, para. 41.

⁷⁶ See https://gisha.org/UserFiles/File/publications/Discrimination_by_Default_EN.pdf?mc_cid=a4c5f70336&mc_eid=28f586c7f9 and A/75/336, para. 28.

⁷⁷ A/HRC/43/70, paras. 23–24; and A/75/336, paras. 6–9.

50. Journalists continued to face attacks by the Israeli security forces while at work, leading to 95 persons being injured, including 1 woman,⁷⁸ as well as arrests and detentions by all duty bearers. The Israeli security forces arrested 32 journalists, including 10 women. The Palestinian Authority arrested 27 journalists, breaking the positive trend seen in May–October 2019.⁷⁹ The de facto authorities in Gaza arrested 16 journalists, some of them repeatedly. All were released without charges.

51. The Israeli security forces intensified the crackdown on Palestinian political figures in East Jerusalem.⁸⁰ Israeli authorities pressured East Jerusalem human rights defenders, activists and journalists by revoking or threatening to revoke their residency rights and limiting their freedom of movement.⁸¹ Palestinian women documenting violations of the status quo at Al-Aqsa compound were also targeted. Hanadi Halawani, a 40-year-old Palestinian teacher, was detained six times by the Israeli security forces for her activism on social media and at Al-Aqsa and for violating previous orders barring her from the compound. For several months, she was barred from accessing the Al-Aqsa compound and from travelling abroad. In addition, her home was searched, her electronic equipment was confiscated and she was fined.

Human rights defenders, including women's human rights defenders

52. Arbitrary arrests and detentions of human rights defenders by all duty bearers continued,⁸² including cases of alleged ill-treatment by the Israeli security forces and the de facto authorities in Gaza. The Israeli authorities also continued to hold human rights defenders under administrative or extended pretrial detention to pressure them to accept convictions based on plea bargains.

53. Women's human rights defenders continued to face distinct and additional challenges. Individuals demanding that the Government of the State of Palestine intervene to stop violence against women became the target of systematic attacks and smear campaigns in the West Bank by non-State actors, including religious and conservative groups, whereas providers of services to victims of gender-based violence reported increasing difficulties in carrying out their work due to community stigma, particularly in rural areas. Increasingly, State and non-State actors targeted women's human rights defenders for their online activities. Those attacks, including arrests of women because of their online activities, further reduced the space available to defenders to carry out their work and restricted their freedom of expression.

54. For example, in June 2020, four women's human rights defenders – a male doctor from the Human Rights and Democracy Media Centre, a female presenter at Ma'an News, a member of Women and Media Development and a member of the Women's Study Centre – received death threats and threats of sexual violence on social media directed at them and their family members after participating in a Palestine TV programme on violence against women. Four of them filed official complaints to the prosecutor's office in the West Bank. Two reported that there had been no substantive developments in their cases by the end of the reporting period. In one case, a man was charged for threatening rape and, in another case, the complainant did not pursue the complaint further. Apart from a few interventions, Palestinian officials did not publicly address expressions of sentiment against the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women or dispel intimidation against women's human rights defenders.

55. In Gaza, on 11 April 2020, the security forces arrested a 22-year-old Palestinian woman for participating, together with seven other activists from the Gaza Youth Committee, in an online meeting between Israelis and Palestinians to promote peaceful coexistence. She ⁷⁸ As reported by the Palestinian Centre for Development and Media Freedoms.

⁷⁹ A/HRC/43/70, para. 40.

⁸⁰ A/75/336, para. 48.

⁸¹ Ibid., paras. 46–47.

⁸² A/HRC/43/70, paras. 3, 55–58 and 61.

was detained for 82 days, 15 of which she reportedly spent in solitary confinement, and was prosecuted by the Gaza military public prosecution, despite being a civilian, for “damaging the prestige of the revolution”. The woman, who had been released on bail in June 2020, was convicted with two other activists on 26 October 2020 and sentenced to time already served.

56. In occupied East Jerusalem, Palestinian cultural and non-governmental organizations, several of them headed by women, continued to be targeted with raids, arrests, confiscation of equipment and closure orders. On 17 May 2020, the organization Volunteer for Hope, which was headed by a woman, was closed by the Israeli authorities for allegedly carrying out activities on behalf of the Palestinian Authority.⁸³ On 29 June 2020, the Israeli security forces arrested the director of the Women’s Association for Development and Empowerment in Beit Hanina and her 18-year-old son, and interrogated them about funding by the Palestinian Authority. The woman was summoned and interrogated four more times, without being charged.

5. Arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment

57. According to the Palestinian Prisoner Society, 4,577 Palestinians were arrested by the Israeli security forces during the reporting period, including 133 women and 587 children. As of 30 September 2020, 4,184 Palestinians (31 women, 157 children) were detained on security-related charges by the Israel Prison Service. The vast majority were held in Israel in violation of international humanitarian law. Of the total, 373 Palestinians were held in administrative detention without having been charged or tried, including 2 boys and 1 woman. Visits by lawyers and family members were suspended from March to June 2020 under COVID-19 emergency regulations;⁸⁴ afterwards, they were strictly limited. Restrictions on the time and duration of lawyers’ visits, delays and restrictions on the number of detainees that could be visited greatly hampered the right to legal counsel. Human rights and prisoners’ organizations repeatedly expressed concern about the lack of preventive measures to protect Palestinian prisoners from COVID-19.⁸⁵ The Palestinian Prisoner Society reported that, as of 31 October 2020, about 40 Palestinian prisoners had tested positive for COVID-19.

58. The Israeli security forces detained dozens of Palestinians after the attack near the Dolev settlement in August 2019, many of whom reported severe ill-treatment possibly amounting to torture.⁸⁶

59. University students, including female students, appear to have been arbitrarily detained and allegedly ill-treated by the Israeli security forces in relation to student activities. Shetha Hassan, the 22-year-old head of the Birzeit University student union, was arrested by the Israeli security forces on 12 December 2019 and held in administrative detention without charge or trial until 21 May 2020 under allegations of student activism tied to the Islamic Bloc student association. Samah Jaradat, a 22-year-old university student, was arrested at her home during the night of 7 September 2019 and imprisoned for nine months. For 21 days she was held incommunicado and subjected to physical and psychological violence possibly amounting to torture, including lengthy interrogations, sleep deprivation, being shackled in stress positions, forced to listen to Palestinian detainees under “military interrogation” and threatened with the same treatment. She also reported sexual harassment by male interrogators. As her colleague Mays Abu Ghosh was,⁸⁷ Ms. Jaradat was convicted of membership in the Progressive Democratic Students Pole, a student association, declared on 21 October 2020 a terrorist organization by military order.⁸⁸ This conviction raises significant questions with regard to the respect of the principle of legality.

⁸³ A/75/336, para. 48.

⁸⁴ Ibid., para. 13.

⁸⁵ Ibid. See also www.alhaq.org/cached_uploads/download/2020/09/03/200820-hrc45-written-submission-on-prisoners-final-1599123626.pdf.

⁸⁶ A/75/336, paras. 14–18.

⁸⁷ Ibid., para. 16.

⁸⁸ From 1967 to July 2019, the Ministry of Defense of Israel classified 411 organizations as “hostile”, “unlawful” or “terrorist” associations, including all major Palestinian political parties and the ruling Fatah party. See www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/report_pdf/palestine1219_web_0.pdf, pp. 37–38.

60. Arbitrary arrests and detention by the Palestinian security forces and the de facto authorities in Gaza, including on political grounds, continued. According to the Independent Commission for Human Rights, 92 Palestinians were administratively detained under Governor's orders. Widespread disregard for basic fair trial guarantees, such as undue restrictions on detainees' access to lawyers and the non-implementation of court release orders, continued.

61. In June 2020, Gaza security forces summoned and detained dozens of Fatah members and supporters across the Gaza Strip in relation to their participation in an event to mark the killing of a Fatah leader by Hamas in 2007. Some of them alleged physical ill-treatment. On 19 July 2020, Palestinian security forces arrested 22 Palestinians involved in a peaceful demonstration in Ramallah against alleged corruption by the Palestinian Authority. They were detained for participating in illegal demonstrations and violating COVID-19 emergency regulations. Most were released at the end of July, reportedly after pledging not to hold demonstrations during the state of emergency and not to publish allegations of corruption on social media without prior consultation with the relevant authorities.

62. The Independent Human Rights Commission received 195 complaints of torture and ill-treatment, including 110 (one of which by a woman) against the Palestinian Authority security forces in the West Bank and 85 (two of which by women) against the security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza. OHCHR documented extremely worrying cases of ill-treatment, several of them possibly amounting to torture, by Palestinian security forces in the West Bank and by the security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza. Reported forms of ill-treatment included the regular, prolonged use of solitary confinement, beating, shackling and suspension to extort confessions or as punishment. In two cases, male victims alleged sexual violence, including rape, and threat of sexual violence. In several instances, the victims were threatened into withdrawing complaints of ill-treatment against security forces in the West Bank, in some cases as a condition for release.

63. In January 2020, the Palestinian Civil Police arrested a Palestinian man in Ramallah accused of robbery. For four consecutive days, he was beaten, shackled with metal chains and suspended for long hours, causing a fractured arm. The man reported that police officers undressed him, put a heater between his legs close to his genitals causing burns. They covered his head, nose and mouth with a hood and poured liquids over his face simulating suffocation. In Gaza, allegations of ill-treatment and torture were often linked to drug-related offences, assumed collaboration with Israel or "moral misconduct", and the alleged affiliation with Fatah and Salafist groups. In April 2020, a 25-year-old man arrested by the Gaza police for drug trafficking was transferred to hospital with bruises on his body and a fractured hand shortly after his arrest. He had reportedly been beaten with an iron pipe while at the police station.

64. The detention of women for sexual offences such as adultery, incest, prostitution and other sexual or "moral misconduct" raised serious concerns of arbitrary detention. Of the 70 female detainees, 14 per cent were held in the West Bank on adultery charges and 49 per cent were held in Gaza on "moral misconduct" charges, including adultery. Laws criminalizing adultery and other "moral misconduct" offences directly or indirectly discriminate against women, thus giving rise to arbitrary detention.⁸⁹ In the West Bank, for example, the law envisages heavier punishments for women accused of adultery, and complaints of adultery can only be filed by men. Many complaints of adultery are made to blackmail or exploit women, for example during divorce proceedings.

65. The detention of pregnant women and mothers with infants was also cause of concern. During the reporting period, at least four pregnant women and four mothers with infants were detained in the Palestinian detention centres of the West Bank and Gaza, in most cases in pretrial detention, including on misdemeanour charges. OHCHR observed that pregnant women and mothers with infants were held in unsuitable conditions, including in overcrowded cells lacking access to outdoor space.

⁸⁹ A/HRC/36/38, para. 8 (e); A/HRC/31/57, para. 14; and www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Women/WG/AdulteryasaCriminalOffenceViolatesWomenHR.pdf.

66. A 34-year-old woman who had left her violent husband was detained under adultery charges in Ramallah, from 8 March to 3 September 2020, while heavily pregnant. In order to be released, the woman agreed to divorce her husband and to waive all her rights under sharia law, including the dowry and visiting and custody rights over her four children. Upon release, the woman had nowhere to go and would not be accepted in a shelter.

67. Recognizing that prisons are not designed for pregnant women and women with children, international standards prescribe that custodial measures in such cases shall be considered as a last resort, when the offence is serious or violent and the woman represents a continuing danger, and subject to the best interests of the child.⁹⁰

V. Conclusions and recommendations

68. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of Israel:

(a) With the occupation remaining the main driver of human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, immediately end all human rights violations and abuses perpetrated against women and girls in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and affecting women disproportionately, including and in particular the unnecessary or disproportionate use of force, home raids not in compliance with international standards, demolitions and forced evictions, settler violence and restrictions to freedom of movement and family life;

(b) Ensure that the rules of engagement of the Israeli security forces and their application are fully in line with international standards and, in particular, that in law enforcement activities firearms are used only in cases of imminent threat of death or serious injury;

(c) Conduct prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and effective investigations into all incidents of use of force by the Israeli security forces that have led to the death or injury of Palestinians, and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable and victims provided with redress;

(d) Ensure respect for international humanitarian law and conduct prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations into allegations of violations related to past and recent escalations of hostilities, hold those responsible accountable and provide redress for victims;

(e) Immediately end all practices of collective punishment, including by lifting the blockade and the punitive closures imposed on Gaza and ending punitive demolitions and the policy of withholding the bodies of Palestinians;

(f) End practices of administrative detention and any form of arbitrary detention, ensure that all detainees are promptly charged or released and fully guarantee the right to a fair trial;

(g) Ensure that conditions of detention are fully in accordance with international human rights law, including the United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-custodial Measures for Women Offenders (the Bangkok Rules) and immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or ill-treatment, ensuring that violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, perpetrators are held accountable and victims have access to an effective remedy;

(h) Introduce the offence of torture in domestic law and provide for its absolute prohibition, in line with international standards;

(i) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected and that journalists and civil society actors, including women's human rights defenders, are allowed to conduct their professional activities safely, freely and without harassment;

⁹⁰ United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-custodial Measures for Women Offenders (the Bangkok Rules), rule 64.

69. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of the State of Palestine:

(a) Uphold its obligations to protect the rights of all Palestinians without discrimination, including discrimination based on gender, sexual orientation or gender identity, and immediately cease any measures that violate those obligations or worsen the humanitarian situation in Gaza;

(b) Announce immediately a formal moratorium on executions while taking steps to give full effect to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty;

(c) Publish human rights treaties it has acceded to, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in the official gazette, and amend legal provisions discriminating, directly or indirectly, against women and girls;

(d) Take all measures necessary to prevent all forms of gender-based violence, and ensure that perpetrators, including of gender-related killings, are prosecuted and appropriately sentenced;

(e) End all practices amounting to arbitrary detention and fully guarantee fair trial rights;

(f) Immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or ill-treatment, ensure that all violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, hold perpetrators accountable and guarantee that victims have access to an effective remedy;

(g) Introduce the offence of torture in domestic law and provide for its absolute prohibition, in line with international standards, establish urgently a national preventive mechanism and apply the Bangkok Rules;

(h) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected and that journalists and civil society actors, including women's human rights defenders, are allowed to conduct their professional activities safely, freely and without harassment.

70. The High Commissioner recommends that the authorities in Gaza:

(a) Ensure, along with armed groups in Gaza, respect for international humanitarian law, particularly the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability for all violations;

(b) Announce and implement an immediate moratorium on the use of the death penalty and cease trying civilians before military courts;

(c) Take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights of persons deprived of liberty are respected, immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or ill-treatment, ensure that all allegations of such violations are promptly, impartially and independently investigated, hold perpetrators accountable and guarantee that victims have access to an effective remedy;

(d) Take all measures to prevent all forms of gender-based violence and ensure that perpetrators, including of gender-related killings, are prosecuted and appropriately sentenced;

(e) Ensure that the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly are respected and protected and that journalists and civil society actors, including women's human rights defenders, are allowed to conduct their activities safely, freely and without harassment.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
15 October 2021

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-eighth session

13 September–1 October 2021

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories

Allocation of water resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was mandated by Human Rights Council resolution 43/32, in which the High Commissioner was requested to prepare a report on the allocation of water resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to recommend measures to ensure the implementation of equitable access to safe drinking water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, in accordance with international law.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 43/32. It draws on human rights monitoring activities conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), governmental sources, and information from United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations.
2. OHCHR requested Israel and the State of Palestine to provide information on any action taken or envisaged concerning ensuring equitable access to safe drinking water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The State of Palestine responded with multiple submissions in May and June 2021, while Israel has not responded. Following publication of the High Commissioner's report A/HRC/43/71 to the Human Rights Council in February 2020, the Government of Israel announced that it would freeze its relations with OHCHR. As a consequence, international staff working with the OHCHR office in the Occupied Palestinian Territory have been obliged to work outside the territory, complicating the critical mandated work on human rights by the United Nations.
3. The present report should be read in conjunction with other relevant reports.¹ The present report illustrates how Israeli occupation policies and practices negatively affect the enjoyment of human rights of the Palestinian people in terms of rights to safe drinking water and sanitation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The report also assesses the Palestinian authorities' policies in the West Bank and Gaza to ensure the same rights in accordance with their obligations under international law.
4. The report assesses various aspects of the allocation of water resources, including measures to ensure the implementation of equitable access to safe drinking water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. Owing to space constraints, the report does not address all issues of concern nor all cases documented.

II. Mandate

5. In its resolution 43/32, the Human Rights Council requested the High Commissioner to prepare a report on the allocation of water resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to recommend measures to ensure the implementation of equitable access to safe drinking water in accordance with international law.

III. Legal framework

6. International human rights law and international humanitarian law are concurrently applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. This includes the application of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), which is binding upon Israel as the occupying Power.

1. International humanitarian law

7. International humanitarian law regulates situations of occupation and is thus applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.² The occupying Power has an obligation to take all the measures in its power to restore, and ensure, as far as possible, public order and civil life in the occupied area, while respecting, unless absolutely prevented, the laws in force in the country.³ This obligation comprises the duty to secure respect for the applicable rules of international human rights law and international humanitarian law.⁴ The occupying Power must maintain public health and hygiene in the occupied territory.⁵

¹ A/HRC/46/22, A/HRC/46/65, A/HRC/46/63, A/HRC/40/73 and A/75/199.

² Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, paras. 101 and 114; and A/HRC/34/38, para. 10.

³ Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, 18 October 1907 (hereinafter referred to as the Hague Regulations), art. 43.

8. The protection of property in international humanitarian law covers private property, as well as movable and immovable public property.⁶ Natural resources such as groundwater constitute immovable public property, and the occupying Power must safeguard the capital of these properties, and administer and usufruct them in accordance with the applicable rules of international humanitarian law.⁷ Water and sanitation infrastructure may also, depending on the circumstances, be regarded as public and/or private property. The occupying Power is prohibited from looting, plundering and exploiting any of the resources and property of the occupied territory,⁸ and must take appropriate measures to prevent such acts carried out by non-State actors.⁹ International humanitarian law further prohibits the confiscation of private property, and provides that requisitions are not to be demanded from municipalities or inhabitants except for the needs of the army of occupation.¹⁰ Destruction by the occupying Power of real or personal property is prohibited, except where such destruction is rendered absolutely necessary by military operations.¹¹ Extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully, may constitute a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and thus amount to a war crime.¹²

9. The transfer of parts of the civilian population of the occupying Power into the occupied territory is prohibited,¹³ as is the additional consequence of such transfers in terms of use of the territory's natural resources, including water, to sustain this civilian population.

10. Where applicable, the law relating to the conduct of hostilities places limits on means and methods of warfare used by the parties to the armed conflict, including specific protections for objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, and for the natural environment.¹⁴

2. International human rights law

11. The rights to water and sanitation are contained in article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in article 14, paragraph 2 (h), of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and in article 28, paragraph 2 (a), of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities,¹⁵ to which Israel and the State of Palestine are parties. As affirmed by the General Assembly, the rights to water and sanitation are “essential for the full enjoyment of life and all human rights”.¹⁶

⁴ Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2005, p. 168, para. 178.

⁵ Hague Regulations, arts. 43 and 46; and Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), art. 56.

⁶ Hague Regulations, arts. 46–47, 52 and 55; and Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 33 and 53.

⁷ Hague Regulations, art. 55. See also A/HRC/34/39, para. 8.

⁸ Hague Regulations, art. 47; Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 33; and Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2005, p. 168, para. 245.

⁹ Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2005, p. 168, paras. 246–248.

¹⁰ Hague Regulations, arts. 46 and 52.

¹¹ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53. See also the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (xiii).

¹² Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 147; and Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (a) (iv).

¹³ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 49 (6).

¹⁴ See https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule54, https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule43, https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule44 and https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule45.

¹⁵ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 15 (2002), paras. 3 ff.

¹⁶ General Assembly resolution 70/169. See also Human Rights Council resolution 18/1. In this regard, the Human Rights Committee has noted that “the duty to protect life also implies that States parties should take appropriate measures to address the general conditions in society that may give rise to direct threats to life or prevent individuals from enjoying their life with dignity ... The measures called for addressing adequate conditions for protecting the right to life include ... to ensure access

12. The right to water entails the water being adequate for human dignity, life and health, and the determination of its adequacy depends on its availability, quality and accessibility.¹⁷

13. States are under an obligation to respect, protect and fulfil the rights to water and sanitation, without discrimination.¹⁸ That is, States must refrain from violating the rights to water and sanitation and must take appropriate measures to prevent, stop and punish any abuse of the rights to water and sanitation by non-State actors.¹⁹ In addition, States parties are under an obligation to fulfil the rights to water and sanitation, that is, to adopt the necessary measures for full realization of those rights.²⁰ The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has held that certain minimum core obligations exist under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to ensure the satisfaction of, at the very least, minimum essential levels of the right to water.²¹ These include the obligation to ensure: (a) access to the minimum essential amount of water; (b) the right of access to water and water facilities and services on a non-discriminatory basis; (c) physical access to water facilities or services that provide sufficient, safe and regular water; (d) that personal security is not threatened when physically accessing water; and (e) equitable distribution of all available water facilities and services.²²

14. The right to self-determination is expressly affirmed in the Charter of the United Nations,²³ and in human rights treaties, such as in article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. As affirmed by the International Court of Justice, it is one of the essential principles of contemporary international law.²⁴ The right includes the ability for people to “for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources”,²⁵ including water. In its Declaration on the Right to Development, the General Assembly affirmed that the human right to development also implies full realization of the right of peoples to self-determination.²⁶

IV. Local water resources

15. The Occupied Palestinian Territory is situated in a generally hot, arid and water-scarce region that has experienced an increase in average temperatures over the past fifty years. Climate change has also modified the water cycle, altering precipitation patterns and seasons. Average monthly precipitation may fall by 8–10 mm by the end of the century and seasonal rainfall patterns may also change, leading to greater aridity. Half of the Palestinian wells in the West Bank have dried up over the last 20 years.²⁷ Climate-related hazards are projected without delay by individuals to essential goods and services such as ... water”; see that Committee’s general comment No. 36 (2018), para. 26, as well as the Committee on the Rights of the Child, general comment No. 7, para. 27. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights recognized that the right to water was a “prerequisite for the realization of other human rights”; see that Committee’s general comment No. 15 (2002), para. 1. See also Committee on the Rights of the Child, general comment No. 7 (2005), para. 27.

¹⁷ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 15 (2002), paras. 10–12.

¹⁸ Human Rights Council resolution 15/9, para. 7.

¹⁹ See, for example, Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 (2004), paras. 6 and 8; and Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 15 (2002), paras. 20–24.

²⁰ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 15 (2002), paras. 25–29; and Human Rights Council resolution 18/1, para. 5.

²¹ Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, general comment No. 15 (2002), para. 37.

²² Ibid.

²³ Article 1 (2).

²⁴ East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1995, p. 90, para. 29.

²⁵ Art. 1 (2) common to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

²⁶ General Assembly resolution 41/128; art. 1.

²⁷ See

<https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 14.

to occur more frequently and be more severe, straining already-constrained water management structures.²⁸

16. Demand for water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory is increasing primarily due to population growth. The population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory is currently estimated at 5.2 million and is expected to increase to 7.2 million by 2030.²⁹ The United Nations Environment Programme projects an annual domestic supply gap for Gaza and the West Bank of approximately 79 and 92 million cubic metres respectively by 2030 unless supply and service options are expanded.³⁰

17. The Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territory has increased land scarcity, territorial fragmentation, and urbanization.³¹ The occupation has also imposed restrictions on access to and control over natural resources, including water.³² Urban populations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory have nearly tripled in the past 25 years, contributing to a reduction of local groundwater recharge. From 1992 to 2015, the land area in the Occupied Palestinian Territory under artificial surfaces increased from 1.4 to 4.3 per cent, while areas under vegetation cover decreased, increasing vulnerability to extreme weather events. In Gaza this phenomenon has also reduced groundwater recharge, where built-up areas have increased from 8.25 per cent (in 1982) to 25 per cent (in 2010).³³

1. Water governance

18. There are three primary sources of natural fresh water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: the Jordan River, the coastal aquifer and the mountain aquifer.³⁴ Following the beginning of the occupation in 1967, Israel placed all water resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory under its military control (Military Order No. 92, of 1967),³⁵ and prohibited Palestinians from constructing new water installations or maintaining existing installations without a military permit. These orders still remain in force and apply only to Palestinians, and not to Israeli settlers, who are governed by Israeli law.³⁶ Mekorot, the government company operating under the Israeli Ministry of Energy and the Water Authority, assumed ownership of all West Bank water supply systems in 1982.³⁷ According to information provided by the State of Palestine, the company continues to operate dozens of wells, trunk lines and reservoirs in Area C that abstract water inside Palestinian territory and provide service instead to the Israeli settlements in the West Bank.

19. In accordance with the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, of 1993 (the Oslo I Accord), and the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, of 1995 (the Oslo II Accords), some water governance powers were devolved to the Palestinian Authority.³⁸ However, Israel did not relinquish its primary control over the waters of the West Bank. In accordance with article 40 of the environmental provisions in the Oslo II Accords, entitled “water and sewage”, approximately 80 per cent of the waters pumped from the aquifers were allocated for Israeli use, and the

²⁸ Ibid.

²⁹ See <https://www.unfpa.org/data/world-population/PS>.

³⁰ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 14.

³¹ See <https://unhabitat.org/urban-issues-palestine>.

³² A/HRC/34/39, para. 57.

³³ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 15.

³⁴ See <https://unispal.un.org/pdfs/47657-GZ.pdf>, at para. 32.

³⁵ See http://www.jmcc.org/documents/JMCCIIsraeli_military_orders.pdf.

³⁶ A/HRC/22/63, para. 40.

³⁷ A/HRC/22/63, para. 83.

³⁸ The Oslo Accords were signed by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in 1993 and 1995 respectively; see <https://www.mdpi.com/2073-4441/13/5/620/htm>.

remaining 20 per cent for Palestinian use.³⁹ The agreement provided that Israel would recognize “Palestinian water rights” in the West Bank, however the issue of ownership of water- and sewage-related infrastructure was to be addressed in permanent status negotiations.⁴⁰

20. The Oslo II Accords remain the key agreement on regulating water use in the West Bank. Although they were intended to be a five-year interim agreement when concluded in 1995, they remain in place today. The Oslo II Accords established the Joint Water Committee, to regulate water and sanitation in the West Bank. The Committee has an equal number of water officials from Israel and the Palestinian Authority.⁴¹

21. The Oslo Accords – including the Oslo interim agreement (the Oslo II Accords, signed in 1995) – also divided the West Bank into Area A (where the Palestinian Authority would fully manage security and civil affairs), Area B (where the Palestinian Authority would manage civil affairs and Israel would manage security) and Area C (where Israel would have exclusive control). In Areas A and B, Palestinian institutions manage civilian governance, including that relevant to the environment.⁴² The Palestinian Authority has no access to Area C (60 per cent of the West Bank), which contains the majority of the agricultural lands, water sources and underground reservoirs of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁴³

2. Water and sanitation infrastructure

22. Functioning, adequate and reliable infrastructure is a necessity and a pre-requisite for the ability to supply water and remove waste. Electricity is a requirement in order to operate this infrastructure – notably wastewater processing, water stations and desalination plants. In Gaza, severe electricity shortages have significantly affected the functionality of the existing infrastructure and the population’s access to clean water. In the West Bank, the already restricted access to water in many locations, including in Area C, has been compounded by an aging water infrastructure and limited physical space to develop water resources or construct new infrastructure.⁴⁴

23. There is also a shortage of infrastructure allowing for the reuse of treated wastewater, with serious environmental consequences. In 2018, it was reported that only one quarter of wastewater generated was collected in sewage networks, and of that, only two thirds (approximately 13 million cubic metres annually) was treated; while 25 million cubic metres of untreated sewage from the West Bank are discharged into the environment annually. Almost none of the treated amount is reused, due to challenges in planning as well as constraints on developing the necessary infrastructure.⁴⁵ This has direct consequences for Palestinians’ health and environment, as water left untreated can enter into waterways and have a detrimental impact on the health of the population.⁴⁶

24. Water-related infrastructure is also subject to confiscation and demolition by Israel.⁴⁷ In 2020, 84 of the 849 structures destroyed in the West Bank by Israel were water and

³⁹ See https://content.ecf.org.il/files/M00261_TheIsraeli-PalestinianInterimAgreement-EnglishText.pdf, appendix 1 entitled “Powers and responsibilities for civil affairs”, art. 40, schedule 10 entitled “Data concerning aquifers”.

⁴⁰ Ibid., appendix 1 entitled “Powers and responsibilities for civil affairs”, art. 40, paras. 1 and 5.

⁴¹ See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 101.

⁴² See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 146.

⁴³ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/palestinians-strive-access-water-jordan-valley>.

⁴⁴ See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. xxxi.

⁴⁵ Ibid., at p. xx.

⁴⁶ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 14.

⁴⁷ A/73/499, para. 22.

sanitation structures. In 2021,⁴⁸ 40 water and sanitation structures had been demolished in the West Bank by Israel.⁴⁹

V. Allocation of water resources and equitable access to safe drinking water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

25. This section assesses the allocation of water resources and equitable access to water and sanitation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in Gaza), taking into consideration the key criteria of availability, quality, accessibility and affordability.

A. West Bank, including East Jerusalem

Water availability

26. Water in the West Bank is unavailable in a sufficient and continuous manner. It is estimated that nearly 660,000 Palestinians have limited access to water,⁵⁰ with 420,000 persons consuming less than 50 litres on average daily per capita,⁵¹ which is well below the 100 litres recommended by the World Health Organization (WHO). Water shortage is a feature of life for all Palestinians, in both urban and rural areas, and is directly linked to a lack of appropriate water infrastructure. Roughly 14,000 Palestinians in approximately 180 communities in Area C have no connection to a water network, are without water infrastructure, and are considered at high risk for water scarcity.⁵²

27. The water arrangements in the Oslo Accords have proven inequitable. This is partially because the Palestinian population has doubled in size since the Oslo Accords were signed, but also because the practical implementation of the Oslo Accords in relation to water presented additional challenges in coordination and collaboration between the two parties.⁵³ Key reported constraints have included Israeli reluctance to agree to projects proposed by Palestinians, technical challenges on the Palestinian side in seeking to exploit the extra resources allocated from the eastern aquifer, movement and access restrictions imposed by Israel, and the Palestinian Authority's withdrawal from the Joint Water Committee for nearly a decade.⁵⁴ These constraints have led to an extremely inequitable distribution of water, whereby, as estimated in 2014, 87 per cent of the mountain aquifer waters were used by Israelis and only 13 per cent by Palestinians.⁵⁵

28. Despite the Palestinian Authority maintaining a degree of autonomy within Areas A and B, it relies on infrastructure projects, including water and sewage pipes, which require

⁴⁸ As at 5 August 2021.

⁴⁹ See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/palestinian-access-water-attacks-wash-structures-area-c> and <https://www.ochaopt.org/data/demolition>.

⁵⁰ See <https://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/WBPC%20article.%20Access%20to%20water.%20Apr%202021.%20FORMATTED%20.pdf>.

⁵¹ As of 2020. See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/challenges-accessing-water-west-bank>.

⁵² See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/how-dispossession-happens-takeover-palestinian-water-springs-israeli-settlers-march-2012>, at p. 14; and A/HRC/40/73, para. 52.

⁵³ See <https://unispal.un.org/pdfs/47657-GZ.pdf>, at para. 39.

⁵⁴ The Palestinian Authority reportedly withdrew on the grounds that the Committee was not facilitating development of the Palestinian water sector as well as on the grounds that Israel held inequitable powers in the Committee. Reportedly, only in 2017 did it agree to reconvening of the Committee. See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 101.

⁵⁵ See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/palestinian-access-water-attacks-wash-structures-area-c>; and <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 101.

Israeli-issued permits or which cross through Israeli-controlled Area C.⁵⁶ Coordination and approvals for such projects are handled through the Joint Water Committee. Although the Joint Water Committee was required to operate by consensus,⁵⁷ reports indicate that in practice, Israeli members of the Committee vetoed projects proposed by the Palestinian Authority, resulting in the effective blocking of Palestinian projects relating to developing and maintaining water infrastructure.⁵⁸ According to the Palestinian Authority, as a result of this imbalance of power in the Committee, its representatives on the Committee have had to sign off on water infrastructure projects for Israeli settlements in order to receive support for their projects.⁵⁹ Additionally, the Israeli Civil Administration in the West Bank reportedly has often blocked agreements reached in the Joint Water Committee.⁶⁰

29. Beyond the challenges noted above, it is estimated that one third of all water supplied to the Palestinian Authority is lost to leakage due to the poor condition of pipelines and water grids linking Palestinian communities in the West Bank.⁶¹ According to the Palestinian Authority, Israel has blocked both maintenance and upgrades, and has also limited the ability to increase water availability by stalling the creation of desalination plants and of advanced irrigation and wastewater recycling systems, as well as approval for deep well drilling, and the deployment of rain-harvesting cisterns.⁶²

30. More than 80 per cent of the annual water supply of the West Bank (91 million cubic metres) is purchased from Mekorot, much of which has been extracted from the mountain aquifer within the West Bank.⁶³ As a result of aforementioned issues with the Joint Water Committee, as well as Israeli policies restricting access to water in Area C,⁶⁴ the Palestinian Water Authority is constrained in improving service delivery. Palestinians in the West Bank therefore suffer severe water shortages, and irregular supply, and often need to place water tanks on their roofs to stock water when there is no running water.⁶⁵

31. In addition, Israeli authorities treat the nearly 450,000 Israeli settlers and 2.7 million Palestinians residing in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem) under two distinct bodies of law, resulting in unequal treatment on a range of issues, including access to water.⁶⁶ Israeli settlements have had a significant impact on Palestinians' access to their natural resources, especially as a result of the diversion of water resources, including the seizure of water wells by Israeli settlers. Israeli settlements have taken over, destroyed or blocked Palestinian access to natural water resources.⁶⁷ Israeli settlements have also appropriated dozens of Palestinian water springs, assisted by the Israeli military. Palestinians who have lost access to their

⁵⁶ See <https://www.hrw.org/report/2021/04/27/threshold-crossed/israeli-authorities-and-crimes-apartheid-and-persecution>.

⁵⁷ As per the Oslo II Accords.

⁵⁸ See

<https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/775491468139782240/pdf/476570SR0P11511nsReport18Apr2009111.pdf>, at para. 130; and

<https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 101.

⁵⁹ Interviews with the Palestinian Authority on 20 May 2021 and with the Palestinian Water Authority on 26 May 2021.

⁶⁰ Ibid.

⁶¹ See <https://www.btselem.org/water>.

⁶² Interviews with the Palestinian Authority on 20 May 2021 and with the Palestinian Water Authority on 26 May 2021.

⁶³ See

https://www.humanitarianresponse.info/sites/www.humanitarianresponse.info/files/documents/files/the_wash_contingency_plan_for_the_west_bank_2021.pdf, at p. 11.

⁶⁴ A/HRC/22/63, para. 82.

⁶⁵ Interview with B'Tselem on 27 May 2021; and see https://www.btselem.org/firearms/20200527_soldiers_shoot_holes_in_water_tanks_at_kafr_qadum; and <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 36.

⁶⁶ A/HRC/22/63, para. 39.

⁶⁷ See <https://www.btselem.org/water>; and A/HRC/22/63, paras. 36, 67 and 82.

springs often have no connection to water networks and had relied upon the springs as their main or only source of drinking water and for agricultural requirements.⁶⁸

32. Mekorot prioritizes Israeli settlements to ensure their permanent water supply, in particular during summer droughts.⁶⁹ Palestinian communities connected to the Mekorot network often suffer lengthy water outages, while neighbouring settlements are largely spared any significant water reduction.⁷⁰ In the settlement of Ma'ale Adumim, for example, Israeli settlers have access to a water supply roughly four times greater than that of Palestinians in East Jerusalem and benefit from well-irrigated farmlands and from water-intensive domestic infrastructure such as swimming pools.⁷¹

33. Aid or assistance on the part of the occupying Power in appropriating water springs and wells, its failure to prevent the destruction of or the blocking of access to water resources and its failure to react to the diversion of water resources by Israeli settlers raise concerns regarding the obligation under international humanitarian law for the occupying power to safeguard the capital of public properties and administer them in accordance with the rules of usufruct, as well as under international human rights law.⁷²

34. Israeli authorities have confiscated and destroyed water infrastructure, including property provided as humanitarian assistance by States.⁷³ For example, in late 2020, the Israeli Civil Administration reportedly cut a water pipe donated by humanitarian organizations which was servicing communities in Masafer Yatta (South Hebron Hills).⁷⁴ In April and May 2020, in the village of Kafr Qaddum (Qalqilyah Governorate, Areas B and C), Israeli security forces reportedly deliberately shot at water tanks on the roofs of Palestinian homes, damaging 24 of them.⁷⁵ Unlawful physical destruction of water tanks and water infrastructure by the occupying Power is contrary to its duty to restore and maintain public order and civil life in the occupied territories, and to respect the rights to water and property.⁷⁶

35. Water is also unequally distributed within the West Bank by municipal water departments, through service providers.⁷⁷ In 2015, the average quantity delivered by West Bank service providers was as little as 26 litres per capita per day in areas such as Dura and Yatta in Hebron Governorate and as high as 242 litres per capita per day in Jericho.⁷⁸ Reportedly, inadequate regulation has led to the industrial and agricultural sectors using water resources at the expense of water being available to individuals and communities.⁷⁹ Related to this situation, a Water Law was enacted in 2014, as part of a water governance reform process intended to clarify the responsibilities of the different ministries involved and

⁶⁸ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/how-dispossession-happens-takeover-palestinian-water-springs-israeli-settlers-march-2012>, at p. 1; and A/HRC/22/63, para. 52.

⁶⁹ See https://www.humanitarianresponse.info/sites/www.humanitarianresponse.info/files/documents/files/the_wash_contingency_plan_for_the_west_bank_2021.pdf, at p. 11.

⁷⁰ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-palestinian-city-parched-after-israel-cuts-water-supply-1.5401178.

⁷¹ See <https://www.amnesty.org/en/latest/campaigns/2017/11/the-occupation-of-water/>.

⁷² Hague Regulations, art. 55.

⁷³ A/73/499, para. 22.

⁷⁴ See https://www.btselem.org/facing_expulsion_blog?nid=213516.

⁷⁵ See <http://vprofile.arij.org/qalqilya/pdfs/vprofile/kafqaddum-vp-en.pdf> and https://www.btselem.org/firearms/20200527_soldiers_shoot_holes_in_water_tanks_at_kafir_qadam.

⁷⁶ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 53. See also the Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) (xiii).

⁷⁷ Municipal water departments operate under the Local Authorities Law of 1997 and report to the Ministry of Local Government. About three quarters of water services are provided by municipal water departments under the Local Authorities Law of 1977. See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 59.

⁷⁸ See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at pp. xxi, 11 and 59–60.

⁷⁹ Interview with a Palestinian civil society representative, on 24 May 2021.

to define legal issues related to water. According to the Palestinian Authority, the law has not been fully implemented to date.⁸⁰

Water quality

36. While groundwater quality in the West Bank was reported in 2016 as being generally acceptable,⁸¹ many wells in the Jordan Valley demonstrated a high concentration of chloride, exceeding the acceptable values in the WHO guideline (250 mg/l).⁸²

37. Israeli settlements and their expansion in the West Bank and East Jerusalem place additional pressure on limited natural resources, further contributing to the pollution of water, as well as of air and soil.⁸³ Freshwater courses and groundwater are being polluted by waste from Palestinian towns and villages as well as from Israeli settlements; untreated wastewater infiltrates into the groundwater of the mountain aquifer, affecting its quality.⁸⁴ One of the most polluted places in the West Bank is Wadi al-Nar (Kidron Valley), in south-east Jerusalem, which has been estimated as receiving over 13 million cubic metres per year of sewage from Jerusalem and Palestinian communities.⁸⁵ In June 2020, Israel began construction of an 800 million shekel project to set up filtration and purification facilities to treat sewage in this area and make it suitable for agriculture and use by Palestinians and Israeli settlers.⁸⁶ However, the project has been criticized as intended primarily to benefit settlers by treating their wastewater and providing them with treated water for irrigation.⁸⁷ As the occupying Power, Israel has an obligation to carry out its responsibilities for the benefit of the occupied population.

38. Industrial and commercial activities located in and around Israeli settlements, as well as specialized industrial zones, have placed additional pressure on limited natural resources and have contributed to the pollution of water, as well as of air and soil.⁸⁸ Israeli companies own at least eight quarries in the West Bank and 11 Israeli industrial complexes are located in the West Bank. In several cases, nearby towns and villages are affected by chemical and wastewater runoff, odours and dust, from industries and quarries.⁸⁹

39. Israel transfers various types of waste – including sewage sludge, infectious medical waste, used oils, solvents, metals, electronic waste and batteries – to West Bank waste

⁸⁰ See https://www.gwp.org/contentassets/7a0a956a3e8147a486a83672f3793c36/govfin_pal_final-report_softcopy.pdf, at pp. 17–18; <http://www.pwa.ps/userfiles/server/law/Water%20Law%20new%202014.pdf>; and <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/736571530044615402/Securing-water-for-development-in-West-Bank-and-Gaza-sector-note.pdf>, at p. 6.

⁸¹ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>; p. 76.

⁸² Ibid., p. 168. Although some data exist on water quality in the West Bank, there are also significant data gaps; further information is needed to quantify the damage caused by overabstraction and pollution in the mountain aquifer.

⁸³ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 13.

⁸⁴ Ibid., p. 14.

⁸⁵ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-israeli-palestinian-cooperation-is-necessary-to-tackle-israel-s-worst-sewage-hazard-1.8965141>.

⁸⁶ Ibid.; see also <https://milkeninnovationcenter.org/news/60-m-deep-tunnel-and-a-joint-wastewater-treatment-facility-this-is-how-the-kidron-river-will-be-restored/>.

⁸⁷ See <https://www.alhaq.org/advocacy/6723.html>.

⁸⁸ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at pp. 14–15. Soil pollution comes from the discharge of raw and untreated wastewater into wadis and agricultural lands, from the remains from stone quarries and the stone and marble industry in the form of dust or slurry, and from the excessive use of pesticides and chemical fertilizers.

⁸⁹ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 15.

treatment facilities.⁹⁰ Although waste treatment is seen as preferable to waste disposal, it still results in substantial pollution. Waste treatment of hazardous waste could, for example, result in health hazards and pollution, including water, air and ground pollution.⁹¹ The creation of such waste disposal facilities in the West Bank, and the transfer of waste from Israel to these facilities, may amount to a violation of the obligations of Israel as an occupying Power and breach its human rights obligations to ensure the right to safe drinking water and public health and hygiene services for everyone within its jurisdiction.

Water accessibility

40. The high pace of Israeli settlement expansion in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, with the consequent confiscation of land and property and the appropriation of essential natural resources, such as water, has impacted the accessibility of water.⁹² Israel, as the occupying Power, has adopted practices and policies creating a coercive environment and unbearable living conditions, including by placing restrictions on access to water in the West Bank.⁹³

41. Palestinians in East Jerusalem face specific constraints in accessing water, since they are linked to several different water systems. Parts of East Jerusalem city are connected to the Water Authority of Israel, while older East Jerusalem houses and structures are not connected to any water grid. Areas where Palestinians live, beyond the separation wall, are connected to a separate water grid, while Palestinians who live in East Jerusalem refugee camps (such as Shuafat) access water through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.⁹⁴

42. Demolitions, confiscation of property and forced evictions have created additional challenges for vulnerable Palestinian communities in accessing water. For example, demolitions and confiscations by Israeli security forces of a total of 158 structures (including mobile water tankers, plastic water tanks and hygiene facilities) and forced evictions carried out in November 2020⁹⁵ and February and July 2021⁹⁶ in the Bedouin community of Humsah al-Buqay'ah have had a detrimental impact on the community's access to water. According to reports in July 2021, 70 people, including 35 children, were displaced.⁹⁷ The destruction of water facilities in this context may violate obligations of the occupying Power to restore and maintain civil life and to respect and ensure the right to water under international human rights law.

Water affordability

43. The scarcity of safe drinking water in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, has led Palestinians to purchase water at extremely high prices through official providers and to a lesser extent from private entities.⁹⁸ The cost of purchased network water can be six times higher than the national price (i.e. $1.50) per cubic metre in Area C. In some Palestinian communities in Area C, water makes up 15 per cent of household expenses. For herder communities, such as Bedouins, the cost of water undermines their ability to maintain their livelihood.⁹⁹ Roughly 10 per cent of Palestinians in the West Bank rely on water purchased from water tankers, and pay up to 400 per cent more per litre than communities connected to ⁹⁰ See https://www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/publications/201712_made_in_israel_eng.pdf, at p. 6.

⁹¹ Ibid., p. 5.

⁹² A/74/356, para. 7.

⁹³ See A/HRC/43/67.

⁹⁴ Interview with B'Tselem on 27 May 2021.

⁹⁵ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/west-bank-witnesses-largest-demolition-years>.

⁹⁶ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/humsa-al-bqaiia-flash-update-7> and

<https://www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=27300&LangID=E>.

⁹⁷ See <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=27300&LangID=E>.

⁹⁸ See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. 6, as well as table 3.3, p. 42.

⁹⁹ See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/palestinian-access-water-attacks-wash-structures-area-c>.

the network.¹⁰⁰ Water purchased from private tankers may be of variable quality in addition to being expensive, as it is not monitored by any official body.¹⁰¹

Rights to water and sanitation during health emergencies

44. The rights to water and sanitation are particularly critical during health crises such as the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic. WHO has identified access to water and sanitation infrastructures and facilities as a critical priority to prevent COVID-19 transmission.¹⁰² Access to water and sanitation is important for hydration, personal hygiene and reducing the risk of infection. Palestinians who have been displaced as a result of Israeli demolitions in Area C have been particularly vulnerable to the pandemic, particularly where water and sanitation facilities were also demolished.¹⁰³

45. The 2020 cut to water piping in Masafer Yatta prevented about 1,400 people, including children, from accessing water and practising adequate hygiene during the COVID-19 epidemic. The actions of Israel in depriving these communities of water significantly worsened the pre-existing coercive environment in the area and could have particularly grave health consequences during the pandemic.¹⁰⁴

46. The obligation of Israel, as the occupying Power, to ensure adequate and safe water and sanitation services for Palestinian communities is particularly important for groups in vulnerable situations, including persons with disabilities, rural and nomadic groups, and those living in communities in vulnerable situations (such as the access-restricted areas, in Gaza; Area C and the seam zone, in the West Bank; and the H2 zone, in Hebron), as well as people in detention.

B. Gaza

Water availability

47. The available water in Gaza does not meet the basic needs of the population. According to the World Bank Group, the water supply in Gaza has been “at crisis levels since 2005”.¹⁰⁵ In 2020, the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) estimated that only 10 per cent of the population in Gaza had direct access to clean and safe drinking water.¹⁰⁶ Overall, about 1 million people – half of the population – are estimated as being in need of water and sanitation interventions.¹⁰⁷

48. Israel has restricted the import of materials and equipment categorized as “dual-use” (materials considered by Israel to be usable both for civil or for military purposes), which include the materials needed to maintain, repair and improve the water and sewage systems.¹⁰⁸ These include materials such as cement and iron, which are essential for repairing water and sanitation infrastructure.¹⁰⁹ Requests for the importation of dual-use items are submitted primarily through the Gaza Reconstruction Mechanism, which receives Israeli approval for a period of one year to import the specific item. Since approvals are only valid for one year, on many occasions approved materials are delayed or held by Israel, resulting

¹⁰⁰ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 78.

¹⁰¹ See <https://www.amnesty.org/en/wp-content/uploads/2021/06/mde150272009en.pdf>, at p. 19; and <https://www.amnesty.org/en/latest/campaigns/2017/11/the-occupation-of-water/>.

¹⁰² See <https://www.who.int/publications/i/item/WHO-2019-nCoV-IPC-WASH-2020.4>.

¹⁰³ See https://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/critical_access_to_water-the_case_of_masafer_yatta_.pdf.

¹⁰⁴ A/HRC/46/65, para. 36.

¹⁰⁵ See <https://openknowledge.worldbank.org/handle/10986/30316>, at p. xvi.

¹⁰⁶ See <https://www.humanitarianresponse.info/en/operations/occupied-palestinian-territory/document/humanitarian-situation-report-no-2-april-june>.

¹⁰⁷ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/humanitarian-needs-overview-2021>, at p. 37.

¹⁰⁸ See <https://gisha.org/project/50shades-en/>.

¹⁰⁹ A/75/199, para. 30.

in a gap between approvals for dual-use materials and actually receiving the materials and using them for water and sanitation projects in Gaza.¹¹⁰

49. Although some materials have been able to enter Gaza via the Gaza Reconstruction Mechanism, its capacity to facilitate the import of sufficient materials to meet the needs of Palestinians living in Gaza has been limited.¹¹¹ As a result of these challenges, the water pipeline system in Gaza remains outdated, is thus prone to losses of water through leakage, and cannot meet the needs of population growth or respond to damage from recurring military escalations. The poor condition of the infrastructure has also increased the risk of communities being affected by the overflow of stormwater facilities and sewage pumping stations.¹¹²

50. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has noted that “States parties should refrain at all times from imposing embargoes or similar measures, that prevent the supply of water, as well as goods and services essential for securing the right to water. Water should never be used as an instrument of political and economic pressure.”¹¹³

51. Water availability is also negatively affected by challenges in operating the existing water management system in Gaza, due to the lack of a consistent power supply. Gaza suffers from a chronic electricity deficit, which has a severe impact on the availability of essential services, particularly health, water and sanitation services, and affects the agricultural and industrial sectors. In 2021, power was available for 13 hours a day on average.¹¹⁴ Electricity shortages have impacted the functioning of local water systems, as well as the operation of approximately 130 critical, local water and sanitation facilities resulting in the continued contamination of the coastal aquifer and the wider environment.¹¹⁵ While three desalination plants supported by the international community produce about 13 million cubic metres of water per year locally in Gaza, desalination requires significant electricity and fuel; as such, acute power shortages and restrictions on the import of materials limit their the plants’ ability to function at capacity or to provide sufficient and continuous access to water.¹¹⁶

52. Recurring escalations of hostilities¹¹⁷ have severely damaged the infrastructure for water, sanitation and hygiene in Gaza.¹¹⁸ The most recent escalation, in May 2021, caused widespread destruction of civilian infrastructure, including water and sanitation facilities, raising serious concerns as to whether these attacks by Israel complied with the principles of distinction and proportionality under international humanitarian law.¹¹⁹ The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has indicated that 290 water and sanitation facilities were damaged or destroyed during this escalation.¹²⁰ In addition, the North Gaza Seawater Desalination Plant stopped operating due to the risk to workers and a damaged electrical supply line, affecting the access of about 250,000 people to drinking water. Approximately 160,000 people from Gaza City had limited access to piped water, due to increased power cuts. The electricity shortage affected water and sanitation facilities in Gaza, including water

¹¹⁰ See <https://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/bn-treading-water-gaza-reconstruction-mechanism-220321-en.pdf>, at pp.8–10.

¹¹¹ See <https://www.nrc.no/globalassets/pdf/briefing-notes/mb-gaza-israel-blockade-civilians-270818-en.pdf>, at p. 4.

¹¹² See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/humanitarian-needs-overview-2021>, p. 38.

¹¹³ General comment No. 15 (2002), para. 32.

¹¹⁴ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/page/gaza-strip-electricity-supply>.

¹¹⁵ See https://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/hno_20_12_2017_final.pdf, p. 8.

¹¹⁶ See <https://gisha.org/en/hand-on-the-switch-whos-responsible-for-gazas-infrastructure-crisis/>.

¹¹⁷ See A/HRC/12/48; A/HRC/22/35/Add.1; A/HRC/29/52; A/HRC/29/CRP.4; A/HRC/40/39, paras. 14–17; and A/HRC/S-30/1.

¹¹⁸ See https://www.rand.org/content/dam/rand/pubs/research_reports/RR2500/RR2515/RAND_RR2515.pdf, at p. ix.

¹¹⁹ See <https://www.un.org/unispal/document/un-high-commissioner-for-human-rights-bachelet-addresses-human-rights-council-special-session-on-the-deteriorating-human-rights-situation-in-opt-statement/>.

¹²⁰ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/response-escalation-opt-situation-report-no-8-8-28-july-2021>.

wells and reservoirs and wastewater treatment plants. Water pipelines were damaged in the Gaza City, Tall al-Hawa and Muntar areas.¹²¹

53. The political division between the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza has negatively affected the governance of water resources and has contributed to reduced availability of water in Gaza.¹²² Water and sanitation in Gaza are managed by several actors – including the Palestinian Water Authority, responsible for water and sewage policy; and the Coastal Municipalities Water Utility, responsible for pumping and distributing water, maintaining and developing infrastructure and rainwater treatment; as well as private entities.¹²³ Additionally, and as noted above, since 2015, all water-related reconstruction projects by international organizations must be managed by the Gaza Reconstruction Mechanism and every project requires the approval of Israel.¹²⁴ Internal political tensions, together with mismanagement and corruption, have reportedly contributed to impeding improvement of the water and sanitation systems through these mechanisms, impacting the ability to improve water availability and the sanitation infrastructure.¹²⁵

54. Strict regulations and penalties on the digging of private wells also contribute to reduced availability of water. In August 2021, the de facto authorities announced a ban on the digging of water wells in all Gaza governorates, in order to address the severe decline in groundwater levels and quality due to overexploitation of the aquifer into which the wells are drilled. Those who had already dug wells were called upon to obtain a special licence.¹²⁶

55. The limited availability of water has a disastrous impact on Palestinians in Gaza as a whole, and a particularly harmful impact on the living conditions of women and girls, who are traditionally responsible for ensuring the basic needs of their families, including water. The gendered impact of a lack of access to clean water and sanitation has a particularly marked effect on women and girls in Gaza, where the lack of access to clean water affects tasks traditionally performed by them, such as cleaning, and preparing food, as well as gender-specific needs, notably menstrual hygiene.¹²⁷

Water quality

56. The quality of water in Gaza is of a low standard and it is generally considered unsafe for drinking. Israeli practices and policies outlined in the present report affecting water infrastructure, its destruction during military escalations, the impact of closures, power shortages, and challenges in water governance, have all contributed to a situation where 96 per cent of households receive water that does not meet drinking water quality standards.¹²⁸

57. Given that water is insufficiently available in Gaza, water from the coastal aquifer has been subjected to overextraction at a rate of almost three times the rate of natural ¹²¹ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/escalation-west-bank-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-3-1200-13-may-2021>.

¹²² See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/humanitarian-needs-overview-2021>, at p. 37.

¹²³ Ibid.

¹²⁴ See <https://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/bn-treading-water-gaza-reconstruction-mechanism-220321-en.pdf>, at p. 6.

¹²⁵ See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>.

¹²⁶ See <https://www.al-monitor.com/originals/2021/08/gazans-fear-worst-after-amas-bans-water-wells> and <http://www.pwa.gov.ps/post/75/%D8%A8%D9%8A%D8%A7%D9%86-%D8%B5%D8%A7%D8%AF%D8%B1-%D8%B9%D9%86-%D8%B3%D9%84%D8%B7%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D9%8A%D8%A7%D9%87-%D9%88%D8%AC%D9%88%D8%AF%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A8%D9%8A%D8%A6%D8%A9-%D8%A8%D8%B4%D8%A3%D9%86-%D8%AD%D9%81%D8%B1-%D8%A2%D8%A8%D8%A7%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D9%8A%D8%A7%D9%87>.

¹²⁷ See <https://blogs.unicef.org/blog/searching-clean-water-gaza/> and <https://www.wclac.org/files/library/19/10/yekz3kqu2vf4q0o3xolozc.pdf>.

¹²⁸ See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/gaza-wash-sector-damage-assessment>.

replenishment by rainfall, leading to increasing seawater intrusion.¹²⁹ The continuous damage to water infrastructure incurred through hostilities as well as the ongoing electricity crisis have led to increased pollution of the sea and groundwater, as the sewage treatment plant cannot operate fully and raw sewage is consistently dumped directly into the Mediterranean Sea.¹³⁰ The sea also flushes large amounts of untreated or insufficiently treated sewage back to the shores of Gaza. According to assessments published by the Palestinian Environmental Quality Authority, 75 per cent of the water along the shores of Gaza is contaminated.¹³¹

58. Water quality is also reduced to some degree due to the method of its supply by Israel. Under the Oslo Accords, Israel must supply Gaza with at least 5 million cubic metres per year.¹³² The Palestinian Authority purchases this water from Mekorot, which streams it through the existing network, where it is then mixed with groundwater, resulting in water that is not fit for human consumption. Although it cannot be used for drinking or cooking, this water is reportedly used for other purposes.¹³³ In 2019, several reports indicated that work was under way to establish a fourth pipeline that would help double the amount of water supplied by Israel to Gaza.¹³⁴

59. Restrictions on the use of water and land and on the importation of materials and technologies have also affected farming practices. As the ability to use irrigation is limited, farmers use excessive amounts of chemical fertilizers and pesticides to increase crop yields.¹³⁵ The intensive use of agricultural pesticides, and the inflow of sewage into the aquifer, has resulted in only 12.4 per cent of wells in Gaza meeting WHO standards for nitrate concentrations and only 19.3 per cent of wells meeting chloride concentration standards, according to a 2015 study.¹³⁶ Special procedures of the Human Rights Council have noted that children in Gaza are particularly susceptible to nitrates in water, which stunt growth and affect brain development, impacting health in ways that have lifelong consequences. High levels of nitrates cause cyanosis, harm pregnant women and increase risks of cancer.¹³⁷ Water-associated diseases account for approximately 26 per cent of childhood diseases in Gaza and are a primary cause of child morbidity.¹³⁸ The combination of poor clean water supplies, limited hygiene practices and insufficient sewage treatment risks further outbreaks of disease.¹³⁹

60. The lack of water and sanitation infrastructure in Gaza has forced individuals increasingly to purchase water from private vendors through tanker trucks in unhygienic

¹²⁹ Mohammed Seyam and others, “Investigation of the influence of excess pumping on groundwater salinity in the Gaza coastal aquifer (Palestine) using three predicted future scenarios”, Water, vol. 12, issue 8 (April 2020), p. 2.

¹³⁰ See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/seawater-pollution-raises-concerns-waterborne-diseases-and-environmental-hazards-gaza-strip>.

¹³¹ A/74/356, para. 53.

¹³² See https://gisha.org/UserFiles/File/publications/infrastructure/Hand_on_the_Switch-EN.pdf, at pp. 11–12; and the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, annex III, art. 40, available at <https://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/ForeignPolicy/Peace/Guide/Pages/THE%20ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN%20INTERIM%20AGREEMENT%20-%20Annex%20III.aspx#app-40>.

¹³³ See https://gisha.org/UserFiles/File/publications/infrastructure/Hand_on_the_Switch-EN.pdf, at pp. 11–12.

¹³⁴ See <https://www.al-monitor.com/originals/2019/07/water-pipeline-israel-gaza-pollution-palestinian-authority.html>.

¹³⁵ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 13.

¹³⁶ Ibid., at p. 77; and see <http://dx.doi.org/10.4236/jwarp.2013.51007>.

¹³⁷ See AL ISR 13/2020, available at <https://spcommreports.ohchr.org/TMResultsBase/DownloadPublicCommunicationFile?gId=25840>.

¹³⁸ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 14.

¹³⁹ See https://www.rand.org/content/dam/rand/pubs/research_reports/RR2500/RR2515/RAND_RR2515.pdf, at p. 41.

conditions, exposing them to significant health risks.¹⁴⁰ It is estimated that 97 per cent of the population rely on informal and unregulated private water tankers and small-scale informal desalination plants for drinking water.¹⁴¹ As aquifer water must be purified in order to be used, dozens of such plants operate. They are required to be licensed, however monitoring is reportedly lax.¹⁴²

Water accessibility

61. Despite the access that Israel has to alternative water resources, special procedure mandate holders have noted that Israel contributes to the inaccessibility of water in Gaza by using 75 per cent of the sustainable groundwater amount each year from the coastal aquifer, leaving little of it available for Gaza.¹⁴³ The water scarcity in Gaza is also augmented by the diversion carried out by Israel of an aquifer from the Jabal al-Khalil mountains in the southern West Bank, which had previously contributed to replenishing groundwater in Gaza.¹⁴⁴ The high population density in Gaza poses an additional challenge as regards access to water and sanitation services.¹⁴⁵

Water affordability

62. Despite its low quality, drinking water has become virtually unaffordable in Gaza, where approximately 64 per cent of the population lives in poverty.¹⁴⁶ An estimated 20,200 families cannot afford to buy safe drinking water and rely on water from public filling points or on unsafe tap water, with a high risk of waterborne diseases, particularly among children under 5 years of age.¹⁴⁷

63. While the General Assembly has recognized that affordable water costs should not exceed 3 per cent of household income,¹⁴⁸ according to surveys, families in Gaza spend up to a third or even half of their income on water.¹⁴⁹

VI. Conclusions and recommendations

64. The occupying Power has an obligation to take all measures in its power to restore, and ensure, as far as possible, public order and civil life in the occupied area, while respecting, unless absolutely prevented, the laws in force in the country. It also has an obligation to respect and ensure international human rights law, including the rights to water and sanitation.¹⁵⁰ Natural resources, such as groundwater, constitute immovable public property, and the occupying power must safeguard the capital of these properties, and administer them in accordance with the rules of usufruct, further to the applicable rules of international humanitarian law.

65. Israel, as the occupying Power, is likely to have acted contrary to these obligations in relation to the allocation and administration of water resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. This has had a severe impact

¹⁴⁰ Ibid., p. 33.

¹⁴¹ See <https://documents1.worldbank.org/curated/en/684341535731512591/pdf/Toward-Water-Security-for-Palestinians.pdf>, at p. xvii.

¹⁴² See https://gisha.org/UserFiles/File/publications/infrastructure/Hand_on_the_Switch-EN.pdf, at p. 11.

¹⁴³ See AL ISR 13/2020, available at <https://spcommreports.ohchr.org/TMResultsBase/DownloadPublicCommunicationFile?gId=25840>.

¹⁴⁴ Ibid.

¹⁴⁵ Ibid. Gaza has one of the highest population densities in the world.

¹⁴⁶ See <https://www.un.org/unispal/in-facts-and-figures/>.

¹⁴⁷ As of 2020. See <https://www.ochaopt.org/content/humanitarian-needs-overview-2021>, at p. 38.

¹⁴⁸ See <https://www.un.org/en/global-issues/water>.

¹⁴⁹ See

<https://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/The%20imperative%20of%20mainstreaming%20gender%20in%20humanitarian%20action%20in%20Palestine%20-%20six%20case%20studies%20from%20Gaza.pdf>.

¹⁵⁰ Hague Regulations, arts. 46–47, 52 and 55; and Fourth Geneva Convention, arts. 33 and 53.

on the enjoyment of Palestinians' rights to water and sanitation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

66. The establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory amounts to the transfer by Israel of its own civilian population into the territory that it occupies, and has had significant impact on water resources. The prioritization by Israel/Mekorot of permanent water supply for Israeli settlements, to the detriment of the Palestinian population, severely affects the enjoyment of human rights of Palestinians, including the rights to water and sanitation. Palestinians face continuing discriminatory practices, which result in them being prevented from enjoying their rights to water and sanitation. This is further aggravated by harm caused to their environment by the exploitation by Israel of natural resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

67. Access to water and sanitation must be addressed urgently to reduce the impact on vulnerable Palestinian communities and to prevent irreversible damage to ecosystems and human health. Recurrent hostilities, and public health emergencies such as the COVID-19 pandemic, have put further stress on the condition of public infrastructure, including the water, sewerage and electricity networks. Climate change will also continue to stress water availability in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and increase the costs of water services. The existing situation, in which the transboundary water systems are interdependent, must be managed in a coordinated manner to ensure that these shared resources are sustainable.¹⁵¹

68. In Gaza, Israeli restrictions on the import of equipment needed to maintain, repair and improve the water and sewage systems, combined with harm caused to these systems by recurring escalations of hostilities between the de facto authorities in Gaza and Israel, have had a disastrous effect on the availability of water. In this regard, the announcement by Israel on 25 August 2021 that it would increase the water supply to Gaza by 5 million cubic metres and allow the entry of construction materials and non-humanitarian goods is a welcome step.¹⁵²

69. The Oslo Accords, which contain clauses regarding water, were designed to be an interim agreement leading to a final status agreement. In the period since adoption of the Accords, the water governance clauses within them, which were intended as interim arrangements pending a final status agreement, have proven inadequate and inequitable. Alongside a doubling of the size of the Palestinian population since the Accords, there have been substantial practical, technical and cooperation challenges in implementing the water governance clauses in the Accords. As 96 per cent of the water in Gaza is currently unsafe for human consumption and Palestinians are unable to access most of their water sources in the West Bank, access to water has become a major impediment to the enjoyment of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

70. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of Israel:

(a) End the blockade and closure of Gaza, lift all restrictions on imports, exports and humanitarian access, and facilitate the rebuilding of its water infrastructure, ensuring respect for international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(b) Immediately address the humanitarian crisis in Gaza, which has been made acute by, inter alia, lack of access to materials essential for repairing water and sanitation infrastructure as well as the lack of a sufficient and reliable electricity supply for the water and wastewater sector;

(c) Establish a functioning and transparent water monitoring arrangement with the Palestinians to manage the shared aquifer systems in order to address the deficiencies in the existing mechanisms, including in the Joint Water Committee;

¹⁵¹ See <https://wedocs.unep.org/bitstream/handle/20.500.11822/32268/SEORP.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y>, at p. 83.

¹⁵² See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/israel-allows-construction-materials-into-gaza-loosening-postwar-blockade-1.10170010>.

(d) Halt the extraction of natural resources, including water, undertaken for the benefit of Israel, the occupying Power, which is inconsistent with international humanitarian law; and address the lack of sufficient access for Palestinians to important natural resources, notably water resources;

(e) Reduce water exploitation and environmental degradation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory caused by settlement activity, by ceasing such activity in compliance with Security Council resolution 2334 (2016);

(f) Immediately end the practice of demolitions, including administrative and punitive demolitions, which include the destruction of water tanks and of water infrastructure, which may negatively affect the enjoyment of the right to water;

(g) Ensure that hazardous waste is disposed of in compliance with international standards, with such disposal not infringing upon the human rights of the protected population to safe and clean water;

(h) Take steps with a view to renegotiating prior agreements on the administration and distribution of water resources with the Palestinian authorities, on the basis of equity and cooperation in the ownership, exploration, distribution and use of water sources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly given the impact of climate change as well as of demographic growth.

71. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of the State of Palestine:

(a) Address unequal distribution of water in parts of Area A of the West Bank, given the existing scarcity in water resources;

(b) Better regulate water distribution and use of water for industrial purposes, in order to increase water availability for personal and domestic use;

(c) Improve the regulation of groundwater extraction in Gaza, in order to reduce overextraction of the coastal aquifer;

(d) Implement the Water Law of 2014, establishing a governmental water company, and enable the independence and the by-laws of the water sector regulatory council.

72. The High Commissioner recommends that the de facto authorities in Gaza:

(a) Comply, and ensure compliance by armed groups in Gaza, with international human rights law and international humanitarian law in relation to the rights to water and sanitation;

(b) Support the Palestinian Water Authority in improving the regulation of groundwater extraction in Gaza in order to reduce overextraction from the coastal aquifer.

73. The High Commissioner recommends that the Government of Israel, the Government of the State of Palestine and the de facto authorities in Gaza increase efforts to harvest, preserve, treat and reuse water in the Occupied Palestinian Territory – including by facilitating rainwater harvesting; reducing losses from the water distribution system; reducing pollution of freshwater watercourses, groundwater and the Mediterranean Sea; increasing the reuse of wastewater; and enhancing wastewater treatment, also in order to maximize the benefits of investment in desalination.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
23 February 2022

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Forty-ninth session

28 February–1 April 2022

Agenda items 2 and 7

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in Palestine and other
occupied Arab territories

Human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the obligation to ensure accountability and justice

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 46/3 and provides an overview of the implementation of the resolution and the developments that are of relevance to the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the obligation to ensure accountability and justice.

* The present report was submitted after the deadline in order to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 46/3 and should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.¹
2. The present report, which covers the period between 1 November 2020 and 31 October 2021, addresses issues relating to accountability for alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law committed by all relevant duty bearers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, encompassing the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. The report also documents relevant measures taken against human rights defenders and civil society actors documenting violations and advocating for accountability by all duty bearers.
3. The present report draws on human rights monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and information from government sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations. OHCHR requested Israel and the State of Palestine to provide information, by 15 November 2021, on any accountability measures adopted during the reporting period in relation to alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law committed in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The State of Palestine responded on 24 November. Israel did not respond. OHCHR also requested other States Members of the United Nations to provide information on the steps taken by them as third States to promote compliance with international law and implement the recommendations addressed to them. As at 30 November, Cuba, Spain and Tunisia had responded.
4. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory deteriorated during the reporting period. There was an increase in violence, including a major escalation of hostilities between Israel and Palestinian armed groups in Gaza from 10 to 21 May, an increase in the use of live ammunition by Israeli security forces in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and an intensification of settler-related violence. These patterns resulted in an increase in the number of Palestinians and Israelis killed and injured. Israeli security forces killed 315 Palestinians, including 197 men, 41 women and 77 children, and injured 17,597 Palestinians, including at least 527 women and 1,472 children, during the reporting period.² Thirteen Israelis, including 2 children, were killed and 824 others were injured by Palestinians.³ In the context of hostilities between Palestinian armed groups and Israel in Gaza, OHCHR monitoring continued to indicate insufficient respect for international humanitarian law by all parties to the conflict. Outside hostilities, OHCHR documented numerous cases that raise concerns with regard to respect by Israel, as the occupying power, for international humanitarian law in the context of occupation and by all duty bearers with regard to their international human rights law obligations. Many incidents of the use of force monitored raised serious concerns that the force used was excessive,⁴ in some cases amounting to the arbitrary deprivation of life, including extrajudicial execution. The prevailing climate of impunity, by all duty bearers, described in previous reports of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner, persisted.⁵

¹ See A/76/333, A/76/336, A/HRC/49/83 and A/HRC/49/85.

² Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

³ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, based on Israeli sources.

⁴ A/76/333, paras. 11–15. The term “excessive use of force” is used in the present report to refer to incidents in the context of law enforcement operations in which force was not used in accordance with the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials. Such incidents may entail situations in which force was used unnecessarily and/or disproportionately, and/or in pursuit of an illegal law enforcement objective and/or in a discriminatory manner.

⁵ A/76/333, paras. 5 and 16; A/HRC/43/21, paras. 17 and 19–20; and A/HRC/46/22, paras. 4–5 and 10–11.

5. The international staff of OHCHR remained outside the Occupied Palestinian Territory during the reporting period due to the non-issuance of visas by Israel.⁶

II. Update on accountability

A. Accountability for the escalation of hostilities in Gaza in May 2021 and previous escalations of hostilities

Hostilities in May 2021

6. From 10 to 21 May 2021, the most significant escalation in hostilities between Israel and Palestinian armed groups in Gaza since 2014 took place. The United Nations verified that 261 Palestinians were killed, including 153 men, 41 women and 67 children (23 girls and 44 boys). At least 130 of those killed were civilians. About 2,200 other Palestinians were injured, including about 685 children and 480 women.⁷ Ten Israeli citizens and residents (five men, three women and two children)⁸ were killed by rockets and mortars launched by armed groups in Gaza and, according to Israeli sources, 710 others were injured.⁹

7. OHCHR documented a number of incidents in which Israeli attacks, having resulted in significant civilian casualties and damages to civilian objects, might have violated international humanitarian law principles of distinction, proportionality and feasible precautions.¹⁰ However, as at 31 October 2021, OHCHR was not aware of any criminal investigation opened into the conduct of Israeli security forces during hostilities in May 2021.¹¹ The Palestinian Centre for Human Rights reported having submitted 57 criminal complaints to the Military Advocate General of Israel and 295 civil complaints to the compensation office of the Ministry of Defense of Israel in relation to incidents involving the killing of 101 Palestinians and the injury of another 100 during the hostilities in May 2021. According to the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, the Military Advocate General of Israel had indicated that, to date, 11 of those complaints had been referred for further examination to the General Staff Mechanism for Fact-Finding Assessments, established in 2014.¹²

8. There are concerns that, despite preliminary examinations carried out by Israel in some cases, the findings regarding possible violations have been shielded from public scrutiny and do not appear to have yet triggered the opening of criminal investigations or any other meaningful accountability steps. For example, on 13 May 2021, Israeli artillery intensively shelled a residential neighbourhood and agricultural area adjacent to the Israel-Gaza fence, near Bayt Lahya. As a result, six people were killed, including a 17-year-old girl and a 9-month-old infant, and several others were injured. The incident raises serious concerns of its compatibility with the prohibition of indiscriminate and disproportionate

⁶ A/HRC/46/63, para. 3.

⁷ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁸ Indirect deaths on both sides are not included.

⁹ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

¹⁰ A/76/333, para. 7 and A/HRC/49/83. See also paragraph 8 of the present report.

¹¹ Media reports indicated that one investigation had been launched into an incident on 12 May 2021 in which Israeli security forces positioned at the Israel-Gaza fence had fired at a group of Palestinian farmers, killing one and wounding two others. Israel Defense Forces reported that disciplinary measures had been taken against the officers involved. See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-commander-soldier-dismissed-for-firing-at-palestinians-during-gaza-op-1.9896397>.

¹² See https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/downloads_eng1/en/ENG_turkel_eng_b1-474.pdf, p. 378; https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/news/spoketurkelcommittee210915/en/documents_reporteng.pdf, pp. 21–23; and <https://www.idf.il/en/articles/operation-protective-edge/idf-conducts-fact-finding-assessment-following-operation-protective-edge/>. See also A/HRC/37/41, para. 11 and A/HRC/40/43, para. 9.

attacks under international humanitarian law.¹³ According to the Israel Defense Forces, following an internal military examination – the findings of which have not been made public – it had learned professional lessons from the incident and instilled them into the unit. According to media reports, as a result of the internal preliminary examination, a number of low-ranking soldiers had been suspended for a limited period of time before returning to their positions, and a battalion officer had been moved to a training position.¹⁴ While such disciplinary measures appear starkly incommensurate with the gravity of the incident and the possible offences committed, the Israel Defense Forces spokesperson indicated that details of the incident were being examined by the General Staff Mechanism for Fact-Finding Assessments.

9. With regard to the Israeli air strike that on 15 May 2021 destroyed Al-Jalaa tower in Gaza City, which hosted, among others, the Associated Press and Al-Jazeera offices and numerous residential units, media reports have pointed towards significant gaps in the process of intelligence gathering that had led to the attack. Reportedly, Israeli security officials were informed of the presence of media outlets' offices in the building prior to the strike, and questions have been raised regarding the necessity of the attack.¹⁵ Given the absence of clear evidence that the strike could offer an effective contribution to military action and a definite military advantage, and the impact of the strike on civilian objects,¹⁶ the attack raises serious concerns in terms of its compliance with the principles of distinction or proportionality under international humanitarian law.¹⁷ According to an Israel Defense Forces internal examination, "the attack on the building caused significant damage to Hamas' capabilities and ... there were no casualties from the attack".¹⁸ No information regarding a possible criminal investigation had been made publicly available as at 31 October 2021.

10. A lack of transparency persists in relation to the existence, status, progress and outcome of any preliminary examination launched by the Israeli army into such incidents. The preliminary response made publicly available by Israeli authorities to possible violations by Israel Defense Forces of international humanitarian law in the context of the hostilities of May 2021 appears to confirm the pattern previously documented by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner regarding the consistent failure of the Military Advocate General of Israel to open criminal investigations into cases of alleged serious violations of international humanitarian law in the context of hostilities.¹⁹

11. Rockets and mortars fired by Palestinian armed groups in Gaza killed and injured Israeli and Palestinian civilians and caused significant damage to civilian objects, such as residential buildings, public facilities and factories.²⁰ In addition to Israeli fatalities, at least 18 Palestinians, including 5 boys, 1 girl and 3 women, were killed seemingly by rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups falling short. On 10 May 2021, an explosion, seemingly provoked by a rocket fired by Palestinian armed groups in Gaza, took place in a densely populated area in Jabaliya, North Gaza, killing 8 people, including 2 children, and injuring many others, including at least 10 children and 2 women. These rockets are indiscriminate

¹³ See https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule12 and https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule14.

¹⁴ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-covered-up-negligent-killing-of-six-gazans-during-recent-conflict-1.10073500?ts=1636456138539>.

¹⁵ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-only-discovered-foreign-media-was-based-in-gaza-tower-after-strike-begun-1.10362300>.

¹⁶ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/israel-revised-intel-biden-answers-gaza-bombing-ap-al-jazeera-1.10395688> and <https://www.haaretz.com/us-news/blinker-i-haven-t-seen-evidence-that-hamas-operated-in-downed-ap-building-in-gaza-1.9815458>.

¹⁷ See https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule8, https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/applic/ihl/ihlweb_eng_1.nsf/docindex/v1_rul_rule12, https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docs/v1_rul_rule14 and https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/applic/ihl/ihlweb_eng_1.nsf/docindex/v1_rul_rule19.

¹⁸ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-idf-only-discovered-foreign-media-was-based-in-gaza-tower-after-strike-begun-1.10362300>.

¹⁹ A/71/364, para. 40; A/HRC/43/21, para. 17 and A/HRC/46/22, para. 8.

²⁰ A/76/333, para. 8 and A/HRC/49/83.

by nature and their use therefore constitutes a clear violation of the prohibition of indiscriminate attacks under international humanitarian law.²¹

12. No information has been made available publicly or directly to OHCHR in relation to any step taken by the State of Palestine or the de facto authorities in Gaza to investigate alleged violations of international humanitarian law by Palestinian armed groups during the hostilities in May 2021. Palestinian human rights organizations have raised concerns regarding the significant challenges Palestinian victims and their families face in filing complaints regarding the actions of the armed groups during hostilities due to fears of reprisal and stigmatization within the local community.

Previous rounds of hostilities

13. OHCHR is not aware of any step taken during the reporting period by any parties to the conflict to ensure accountability in relation to previous rounds of hostilities in Gaza. Serious concerns persist over the lack of accountability for actual or potential violations of international humanitarian law, including alleged war crimes, perpetrated by all parties to the conflict.²²

14. With respect to Israel, the most recent update by the Military Advocate General of Israel was provided on 15 August 2018.²³ No further updates have been published since, and no notable progress in the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations in the context of the hostilities in 2014 was made public during the reporting period. The Palestinian Centre for Human Rights and the Al Mezan Center for Human Rights indicated that they had received communications from the Military Advocate General that no criminal investigation would be pursued in relation to four and nine complaints they had previously submitted, respectively. One of these complaints related to Israeli air strikes hitting adjacent homes in the Al-Shaboura neighbourhood, Rafah, on 2 August 2014, killing eight people, including six children and one woman. Similarly, a lack of progress and transparency persists in relation to accountability efforts linked to previous major rounds of hostilities in 2008/09 (with no public information made available since July 2010) and in 2012 (with no public updates provided since April 2013). Such lack of progress highlights the failure of the General Staff Mechanism for Fact-Finding Assessments to enable the prompt and effective investigation of those serious allegations.

15. No information was made available on steps taken by the Government of the State of Palestine or by the de facto authorities in Gaza to ensure accountability for possible violations of international humanitarian law, including possible war crimes, committed by Palestinian armed groups in the context of the hostilities in 2008/09, 2012 or 2014.²⁴

16. The absence of any significant progress in the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations dating back in some cases to more than a decade calls into question the willingness of Israeli and Palestinian authorities to hold those allegedly responsible duly to account. These escalations and the sporadic hostilities in between them are characterized by long-standing patterns of violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law by all parties, further underscoring their recurrent nature and the climate of impunity and the failure of efforts by all parties to take sufficient steps to prevent their repetition.²⁵

²¹ A/76/333, para. 8; and A/HRC/29/52, para. 33. See also https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/customary-ihl/eng/docindex/v1_rul_rule1 and https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/applic/ihl/ihlweb_eng_1.nsf/docindex/v1_rul_rule12.

²² A/71/364, paras. 39 and 51–55; A/HRC/43/21, paras. 14–15 and 19; and A/HRC/46/22, paras. 5–6.

²³ A/HRC/40/43, paras. 5 and 9; and <https://mfa.gov.il/MFA/ForeignPolicy/IsraelGaza2014/Documents/Operation-Protective-Edge-MAG-Corps-Press-Release-Update-6-15-August-2018.pdf>.

²⁴ A/HRC/46/22, para. 10. See also A/HRC/29/52 and A/HRC/12/48.

²⁵ A/HRC/28/45, para. 16.

B. Accountability for unlawful use of force and other violations of international human rights law

Israel

17. Impunity remained pervasive for incidents of possible excessive use of force by Israeli security forces outside the context of hostilities.²⁶ Between 1 January 2017²⁷ and 31 October 2021, 428 Palestinians²⁸ (including 91 children) were killed by Israeli security forces in law enforcement operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. OHCHR is aware of 82 criminal investigations opened in relation to these deaths, of which at least 13 were closed without further action being taken and 5 resulted in indictments, 3 of which led to convictions.²⁹ These figures appear starkly inconsistent with Israeli investigation policy, applicable since 2011, according to which the Israel Defense Forces are obligated to open an immediate investigation into operations in the West Bank that result in the death of a person, except when the incident involves “actual combat”.³⁰ Despite the frequent initial public statements by Israeli authorities announcing that a killing was under examination, in most cases a criminal investigation is not opened and details of the decision are not made public, despite Israeli law requiring the Military Advocate General to provide reasoning for all decisions, including cases involving “actual combat”. Where a criminal investigation has been opened, the findings and conclusions have been made public only in a few, exceptional cases in which the killing or injury was caught on camera or video and received a high level of public attention.³¹ The lack of transparency regarding the opening of investigations and the absence of progress and outcome of investigations by Israeli authorities is a matter of utmost concern, as the duty to investigate potential unlawful deaths is an important element of the protection afforded to the right to life.³² In the rare cases where investigations result in criminal charges, these are often starkly incommensurate with the gravity of the conduct.³³

18. Throughout the reporting period, Israeli security forces killed 74 Palestinians, including 17 children, 3 women and 54 men, in the context of law enforcement operations. The West Bank, including East Jerusalem, witnessed an increase in the unwarranted and disproportionate use of force by Israeli security forces in the context of demonstrations against the military occupation, settlement expansion and Palestinian evictions, and in response to attacks or alleged attacks by Palestinians against Israelis.³⁴ In the vast majority of cases monitored by OHCHR, the use of force by Israeli security forces did not appear to comply with the requirements of legality, necessity and proportionality, frequently resulting in potentially unlawful killings, including, in some circumstances, possible extrajudicial executions.³⁵

²⁶ A/71/364, para. 66; A/76/333, paras. 5 and 16; A/HRC/43/21, para. 20; and A/HRC/46/22, para. 11.

²⁷ 1 January 2017 represents the beginning of the first reporting period during which the High Commissioner was requested by the Human Rights Council to report on accountability and justice for violations of international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

²⁸ This number does not include those killed in the context of hostilities and those killed in situations in which it was not possible to determine the circumstances. The total number of Palestinians killed by Israeli security forces during the same period amounts to 850.

²⁹ Nineteen investigations were opened into killings during this reporting period. Additionally, OHCHR became aware of 17 further investigations into killings between 1 January 2017 and 31 October 2020. See https://www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/publications/202112_unwilling_and_unable_eng.pdf.

³⁰ Supreme Court of Israel, B'Tselem – The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories v. The Judge Advocate General, Case No. HCJ 9594/03, 21 August 2011. On the problematic character of the wide interpretation of the notion of “combat activity” in the Israeli judicial system, in relation to the protection of Palestinians’ right to life, see A/HRC/46/22, para. 18.

³¹ On 21 June 2021, an indictment based on the charge of reckless homicide was submitted to the Jerusalem District Court against an Israeli border police officer for the killing of Iyad Hallaq on 30 May 2020.

³² Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2018), para. 27; and Minnesota Protocol on the Investigation of Potentially Unlawful Death.

³³ A/75/336, para. 9; A/HRC/40/43, paras. 19–21; and A/HRC/46/22, para. 16.

³⁴ A/76/333, paras. 12–13.

³⁵ See also A/76/333, para. 11.

19. Serious concerns persist in relation to the absence of accountability measures to hold those responsible to account.³⁶ On 14 October 2021, Israeli security forces killed 14-year-old Amjad Abu Sultan, having shot him, reportedly without warning, from a close range while he was attempting to light a Molotov cocktail near the wall in Bayt Jala. OHCHR monitoring indicated that Israeli security forces were likely to have seen the boy in advance, and his intention to throw Molotov cocktails in the location may have been known to the Israeli security forces even from before, as contacts had taken place between the victim and the security forces prior to the incident.³⁷ Nonetheless, Israeli security forces failed to resort to less lethal means to prevent the attack, raising concerns of the excessive use of force resulting in the killing of a child. As far as OHCHR is aware, the Israeli military authorities did not investigate the incident. The High Commissioner has previously expressed concern over the dual role of the Military Advocate General of Israel in providing legal advice before and during operational activity, while investigating operational activity afterwards.³⁸

20. On 25 November 2020, Israeli security forces shot and killed 37-year-old Nour Shqair near Az-Zayyem checkpoint, east of Jerusalem. According to OHCHR monitoring, Shqair had accelerated his car and allegedly hit a border police officer, after Israeli security forces at the checkpoint had challenged his identity documents. As Shqair stepped out of the car at about 300 metres' distance, raising his hands, the security forces running towards him shot him multiple times from a close distance, despite shouts by one of the officers to stop the shooting. The incident raises concern of unlawful killing. On 5 February 2021, the Department of Internal Police Investigations at the Ministry of Justice notified the family of its decision not to open an investigation, indicating that the shooting was carried out in compliance with protocol, while noting the "real and immediate danger" the victim had been posing.³⁹

21. Impunity remains pervasive also in relation to past incidents involving the unnecessary or excessive use of force by Israeli security forces resulting in the killing or injury of Palestinians. According to media reports, in this reporting period, Israeli authorities closed three investigations and one preliminary examination into four cases involving the killing of Palestinians, including one child, without taking any further legal steps.⁴⁰ Among these cases is the killing of Zaid Qaisiya on 13 May 2020 in Hebron. Israeli security forces shot Qaisiya, aged 17 years, in the head with live ammunition as he stood on the rooftop of a four-story building located 200 to 300 metres away from an Israeli security forces arrest operation and, according to multiple eyewitnesses, was not involved in any confrontation.⁴¹ The investigation was reportedly closed on the grounds that it was not possible to determine how the child was killed and whether he had been hit by Israeli security forces fire, despite there being no indication of crossfire on the location at the moment of the incident. For the same reason, Israeli authorities authorized the closing of the investigation into the shooting with live ammunition in the head of 9-year-old Abd el-Shatawi in July 2019 in Kafr Qaddum. This incident, monitored by OHCHR, raises serious concerns of the possible unnecessary use of force by Israeli security forces resulting in the severe and life-changing injury of a child, who currently remains in a vegetative state in an Israeli hospital.

22. Regarding Gaza, the continuing lack of progress in the investigations relating to the widespread use of lethal force by Israeli security forces against Palestinians in the context of the Great March of Return demonstrations between 30 March 2018 and December 2019 remains of equal concern.⁴² OHCHR is not aware of any accountability steps taken by the ³⁶ A/HRC/43/21, paras. 20 and 30; and A/HRC/46/22, para. 11.

³⁷ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-cyberbullying-the-shin-bet-s-new-pastime-in-palestine-1.10417834> and <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-the-premeditated-killing-of-amjad-1.10443238>.

³⁸ A/HRC/40/43, para. 9.

³⁹ See <https://news.walla.co.il/item/3416216> (in Hebrew).

⁴⁰ The other cases closed refer to the killing of 21-year-old Omar Badawi on 11 November 2019, 19-year-old Bader Nafla on 7 February 2020 and 60-year-old Fehmiye Hrb on 1 May 2021. See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium.HIGHLIGHT.MAGAZINE-what-the-israeli-army-does-to-soldiers-who-shoot-palestinians-1.10398852>.

⁴¹ A/75/336, para. 8.

⁴² A/HRC/46/22, para. 12.

Israeli authorities during the reporting period, with the last update provided by the Ministry of Justice of Israel in relation to progress in the investigations and prosecutions dated July 2019.⁴³ The Al Mezan Center for Human Rights indicated that, during the reporting period, it had received communications from the Military Advocate General of Israel that no criminal investigation would be pursued in relation to seven complaints previously submitted regarding the killing of Palestinians during the Great March of Return protests. Among those is the case of 18-year-old Abed el-Nabi, whom Israeli security forces killed on 30 March 2018 in Abu Safya, North Gaza. El-Nabi was shot from the back with live ammunition to his head while he was approximately 400 metres from the fence and running away from it, in circumstances in which he did not seem to pose any imminent threat to the security forces.⁴⁴

23. According to international human rights law, the use of potentially lethal force for law enforcement purposes should be resorted to only when strictly necessary in order to protect life or prevent serious injury from an imminent threat.⁴⁵ States must take all measures necessary to prevent the arbitrary deprivation of life by their law enforcement officials, including soldiers charged with law enforcement missions.⁴⁶ The unjustified and illegal recourse to firearms by law enforcement officials against a protected person, resulting in the person's death, may constitute a war crime when occurring in the context of a military occupation.⁴⁷

Civil remedies

24. The legislative provision introduced in 2014 excluding the population of Gaza (as residents of an "enemy territory") from the scope of Israeli civil liability legislation remained in force.⁴⁸ In addition, on 19 May 2021, the Beersheba District Court rejected a compensation claim filed in 2005, based on the Civil Claims (State Liability) Law, by the family of Iman al-Hams, a 14-year-old girl who was killed in 2004 by Israeli security forces. Member of the security services had fired multiple live ammunition rounds from close range while she was already lying on the ground injured, after having been shot⁴⁹ because she had entered into a security zone near Rafah. Based on the wording of the law as it stood in 2005, the Court ruled that, despite the military forces having acted negligently and in violation of the rules of engagement and international humanitarian law, their conduct had constituted "combat activity", and therefore exempted the State from civil liability.⁵⁰

Palestinian authorities

25. For Palestinians living under the effective control of the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza, the reporting period was also marked by increased violence and conduct by Palestinian security forces, which may amount to violations of right to life and to physical integrity.⁵¹ OHCHR is aware of two Palestinians killed by Palestinian security forces and two by the security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza during this period. The Palestinian security forces justice commission reported having opened six investigations between 1 January and 31 October 2021 into the use of force by Palestinian security forces that had resulted in killing. Regardless, questions remain whether the actions carried out by Palestinian authorities in the West Bank and Gaza to investigate and prosecute the perpetrators of those violations were sufficient to meet international standards.

⁴³ A/HRC/43/21, para. 24. According to Israeli Defense Forces figures provided to B'Tselem in April 2021, of the 233 killings of Palestinians in Gaza referred to the General Staff Mechanism for Fact-Finding Assessments, 35 investigations had been opened by the Military Advocate General of Israel, and one conviction had been obtained. See https://www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/publications/202112_unwilling_and_unable_eng.pdf.

⁴⁴ A/HRC/40/39, para. 24.

⁴⁵ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2018), para. 12.

⁴⁶ Ibid., para. 17.

⁴⁷ A/HRC/29/CRP.4, para. 546.

⁴⁸ A/71/364, para. 57; A/HRC/40/43, paras. 25–26; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 36.

⁴⁹ See <https://www.shovrimshatika.org/testimonies/database/79471> (in Hebrew).

⁵⁰ Beersheba District Court, Al-Hams v. State of Israel, Case No. 5709-12-12, 19 May 2021.

⁵¹ See A/HRC/49/83.

26. On 24 June, Palestinian Authority opponent and Palestinian Legislative Council candidate Nizar Banat, who had been repeatedly arrested by Palestinian security forces, was killed after having been brutally beaten during the course of an arrest operation in the H2 area of Hebron. On the same day, the Palestinian Prime Minister announced the creation of an “investigative committee” chaired by the Palestinian Minister of Justice, which transmitted its findings to the military prosecutor on 30 June.⁵² The military prosecutor indicted the 14 Palestinian security forces officers who had carried out the raid on 5 September with “intentional beating and torture resulting in death”, “abuse of authority” and “disobedience to orders and instructions”. The trial has been ongoing at the Ramallah Military Court since 14 September. The Court has heard testimony of high-ranking security officials who had authorized and supervised the operation (but who had not been indicted). OHCHR documented threats against and harassment, arrests and ill-treatment of Nizar Banat’s family members, including an eyewitness, and some had their houses violently raided during this period. On 15 August, a court in Ramallah convicted, in absentia, his brother, Ghassan Banat, and sentenced him to two years of imprisonment on corruption-related charges. According to Ghassan Banat and his lawyer, the former had not been informed of any charges against him, or summoned for questioning or any hearing. While the sentence had not been executed as at the end of the reporting period, the conviction raises serious concerns of a possible reprisal given that Ghassan Banat had publicly demanded accountability, including at the international level, for the killing of his brother. On 19 September, Palestinian security forces physically assaulted and arrested Hussein Banat, Nizar Banat’s cousin and an eyewitness to the killing. According to Palestinian security forces, Hussein Banat had been arrested on suspicion of a shooting at a house of a Palestinian security forces member in Dura, near Hebron, on 16 September. Hussein Banat reported having been subjected to ill-treatment while in detention, and was released on bail on 7 October. On 28 October, Palestinian security forces arrested and detained Arafat Banat, the brother of Hussein Banat, reportedly for his involvement in the same incident.

27. In Gaza, there were a number of incidents where force used by security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza in the context of law enforcement operations appeared excessive.⁵³ On 23 July, a 27-year-old man was killed after having been shot in the abdomen with live ammunition by security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza after the car in which he had been traveling drove away from a checkpoint east of Gaza City, reportedly without authorization. The de facto authorities decided not to open a criminal investigation into the incident. While the de facto authorities in Gaza continue to indicate that they receive and investigate complaints relating to incidents of the possible excessive use of force by the authorities’ security forces, the outcomes of such investigations have not been made public, and OHCHR is not aware of any further steps taken to investigate and prosecute those allegedly involved.

28. Impunity for gender-related killings remains pervasive in both the West Bank and Gaza.⁵⁴ In the West Bank, more than two years after the murder of 21-year-old Israa Ghrayeb,⁵⁵ the trial at the Bethlehem District Court has yet to be concluded. During the reporting period, the three accused were released on bail pending the conclusion of the trial. During the reporting period, OHCHR recorded 26 cases of possible gender-related killings (16 women and 10 girls) – 15 in the West Bank and 11 in Gaza. Of those, 12 were reported as killings and 14 as either death by suicide, accidental death or death in unclarified circumstances. OHCHR is aware that eight indictments relating to these cases have been issued – five in the West Bank and three in Gaza.

29. The High Commissioner reiterates the call upon the State of Palestine to ensure that all incidents involving possible violations of human rights are promptly, impartially, independently and thoroughly investigated in line with international standards and that those responsible are held accountable.⁵⁶

⁵² See <https://english.wafa.ps/Pages/Details/125158>.

⁵³ See A/HRC/49/83.

⁵⁴ Ibid.

⁵⁵ A/HRC/43/70, para. 34.

⁵⁶ A/HRC/46/22, para. 25.

C. Accountability for violations relating to torture and ill-treatment

Israel

30. OHCHR reiterates persistent concerns that scant accountability has been afforded by relevant Israeli authorities in investigating allegations of ill-treatment, possibly amounting to torture, of Palestinians in Israeli detention facilities.⁵⁷ According to the Public Committee against Torture in Israel, out of more than 1,300 torture complaints submitted on behalf of Palestinians to the Ministry of Justice of Israel since 2001, only two criminal investigations were opened. Both were closed during the reporting period, resulting in no further action. On 24 January 2021, the Attorney General of Israel announced the closing of the criminal investigation into the alleged torture by the Israeli Security Agency interrogators of Samer al-A'rbeed, who is currently on trial for his alleged role in the Ein Bubin attack in 2019. Mr. Al-A'rbeed was hospitalized two days after his arrest with life-threatening injuries due to allegedly having been subjected to severe ill-treatment and torture while in Israeli detention.⁵⁸ According to his statement, "the Attorney-General decided to close the case due to a lack of an evidentiary basis of the commission of an offense".⁵⁹ Israeli authorities have refused to disclose the investigation material, including regarding the "special interrogation methods" used, that was the basis of the decision. The decision not only casts doubts on the effectiveness of the Israeli judicial system in investigating and sanctioning torture in accordance with international norms and standards, but also raises serious concerns as to the validation by the Attorney General of the methods of interrogation used by the Israel Security Agency in disregard for the absolute and non-derogable prohibition of torture under international human rights law. In April 2021 media reports indicated that the Attorney General of Israel decided to close the investigation into two forced genital searches of a Palestinian woman detainee in 2015, which could have amounted to sexual assault.⁶⁰ The investigation was closed reportedly due to the lack of an evidentiary basis, despite the fact that the Israeli security forces officers involved admitted that the search had taken place.

Palestinian authorities

31. With regard to allegations of ill-treatment, in some cases possibly amounting to torture, by the Palestinian security forces in the West Bank, OHCHR continued to document extremely concerning incidents during the reporting period.⁶¹ The Independent Commission for Human Rights received 141 complaints, including 8 from women, of ill-treatment or torture. The Palestinian security forces justice commission reported having opened investigations into five cases of alleged ill-treatment or torture by Palestinian security forces between 1 January and 31 October 2021. Palestinian security forces detained a 45-year-old Palestinian man between September and December 2020 in Jericho and interrogated him over accusations of forgery. He reported having been subjected to severe beatings, stress positions and repeated physical assaults during interrogations. While the prosecutor had ordered a medical check-up after the victim's lawyer had raised concerns over his ill-treatment, Palestinian security forces did not comply. After having been forced to confess, the man was released on bail on 5 December 2020. Despite the constructive dialogue that OHCHR had with a number of concerned institutions of the Palestinian Authority, the response by Palestinian security forces and the action taken by competent judicial authorities in this and a number of other similar cases documented by OHCHR raise serious concerns with regard to the adequacy of the steps taken to investigate and prosecute individuals responsible for these crimes, as well as that of internal disciplinary mechanisms of Palestinian security forces. OHCHR also continued to receive credible allegations that victims of alleged ill-treatment had been subjected to intimidation by Palestinian security forces and pressured into not filing complaints against them, to withdraw complaints already made or to submit to ⁵⁷ Ibid., para. 20.

⁵⁸ A/75/336, para. 15.

⁵⁹ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-case-closed-against-shin-bet-agents-accused-of-assaulting-palestinian-terror-suspect-1.9477634>.

⁶⁰ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium.HIGHLIGHT.MAGAZINE-it-started-with-palestinian-s-arrest-it-ended-with-israeli-officers-probed-for-rape-1.9737766>.

⁶¹ See A/HRC/49/83.

informal reconciliation mechanisms. Despite the public commitment by the Palestinian Authority to follow up on torture and ill-treatment complaints and to establish a national preventive mechanism further to its obligations under the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the establishment of the mechanism remained pending at the end of the reporting period after many years.⁶²

32. OHCHR monitoring also continues to point to widespread allegations of ill-treatment, in some cases possibly amounting to torture, in detention facilities in Gaza.⁶³ The Independent Commission for Human Rights received 164 complaints, including 14 from women, of ill-treatment or torture during the reporting period. On 21 September 2021, security forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza arrested a 34-year-old man in Gaza City. He was first transferred to an unknown military site and then to the premises of the internal security agency of the de facto authorities in Gaza, where he was repeatedly interrogated on accusations of collaboration with Israel, repeatedly beaten, subjected to sleep deprivation and prevented from contacting his lawyer for more than a month. No information has been made public in relation to any steps taken to address this or other similar ill-treatment allegations.

D. International mechanisms

33. On 5 February 2021, the Pre-Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court, which had been previously seized by the Prosecutor of the Court to rule on the scope of the Court's territorial jurisdiction in relation to the situation in Palestine,⁶⁴ decided by majority that the Court possessed territorial jurisdiction, extending to the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, namely Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.⁶⁵ On 3 March 2021, the Prosecutor of the Court announced the initiation of an investigation into the situation in Palestine,⁶⁶ with respect to crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court that are alleged to have been committed since 13 June 2014.

34. On 27 May 2021, the Human Rights Council convened a special session to address the grave human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, at which it decided to establish an ongoing, independent, international commission of inquiry, mandated to investigate all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law leading up to and since 13 April 2021, and all underlying root causes of recurrent tensions, instability and protraction of conflict, including systematic discrimination and repression based on national, ethnic, racial or religious identity.⁶⁷

III. Restrictions and attacks on individuals and organizations promoting human rights and accountability

Israel

35. The long-standing series of actions by Israel to silence human rights defenders and civil society organizations speaking up for human rights of Palestinians and shrink the space in which they operate escalated during the reporting period.

36. In July 2021, two organizations learned that the Israeli military commander for the West Bank had earlier declared them as "unlawful associations".⁶⁸ On 19 October 2021, the

⁶² A/HRC/46/22, para. 22.

⁶³ See A/HRC/49/83.

⁶⁴ A/HRC/46/22, para. 29.

⁶⁵ See <https://www.icc-cpi.int/Pages/item.aspx?name=pr1566>.

⁶⁶ See <https://www.icc-cpi.int/Pages/item.aspx?name=210303-prosecutor-statement-investigation-palestine>.

⁶⁷ See Human Rights Council resolution S-30/1.

⁶⁸ The Union of Agricultural Work Committees and the Health Work Committees had been declared as "unlawful" in January 2020; however, both organizations reported having been unaware of the declarations until July 2021. On 3 November 2021, the Israeli military commander for the West Bank

Minister of Defense designated six Palestinian human rights and humanitarian organizations, namely the Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Al-Haq, the Bisan Center for Research and Development, Defense for Children International-Palestine, the Union of Agricultural Work Committees and the Union of Palestinian Women's Committees, as "terrorist organizations" under the Counter-Terrorism Law of 2016. The organizations have worked for decades to promote human rights and provide critical humanitarian assistance in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and are key partners of the United Nations. The designation decisions were based on vague and unsubstantiated reasons. Some reasonings refer to entirely peaceful and legitimate human rights activities.⁶⁹ The decisions, which were amended after some weeks, state that the organizations are inseparable arms of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and that they obtained financial resources, which reached the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine terror activity. As of the end of the reporting period, OHCHR was not aware of any credible evidence to support these accusations. Israeli security forces also arrested at least 16 human rights defenders, including several staff members of the organizations declared as "unlawful" or "terrorist".⁷⁰

37. The evidence reportedly presented by Israeli officials to Member States and international organizations that are donors to the six organizations, and subsequently made public in the media,⁷¹ appears to include vague allegations against the six designated organizations, provided during interrogations of two former employees of the Health Work Committees, who are currently on trial in Israeli military courts.⁷² So far, no evidence proving either the diversion of funds or the alleged link between the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and any of these organizations has been presented in ongoing trials. According to the lawyer of one of the former employees, whose testimony reportedly represents the main source in the presented evidence,⁷³ his client was subjected to sleep deprivation, lengthy harsh interrogation sessions, stress positions, and made to believe that his family members had been arrested. He was largely kept in incommunicado detention during the 56 days of his interrogation, and his confessions were provided without the presence of a lawyer.

38. The Counter-Terrorism Law has a broad and vague definition of "terrorist acts" and "terrorist organizations", which risks unjustifiable restrictions on human rights.⁷⁴ The designation of these organizations as "terrorist" may have far-reaching consequences. The Counter-Terrorism Law provides for lengthy prison terms for membership or any type of support or cooperation with such organizations, closures of their offices, the prohibition of activities and the confiscation of property.⁷⁵ Additionally, banks may impose restrictions on donors to the organizations, seriously impacting the ability of these organizations to obtain financial resources.

39. Such organizations and their members can object to the designations; however, the due process guarantees under the Counter-Terrorism Law appear deficient, including a lack of independence of the review process⁷⁶ and an extensive possibility of keeping evidence declared the other five organizations – the Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Al-Haq, the Bisan Center for Research and Development, Defence for Children International-Palestine and the Union of Palestinian Women's Committees – that had been declared as "terrorist organizations" on 19 October 2021, as "unlawful associations" under the Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945. See article 85 (b) of the Israeli Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945 and Military Order No. 101.

⁶⁹ On file with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. The decisions were modified on 19 November 2021 and uploaded to <https://nbctf.mod.gov.il/en/Pages/211021EN.aspx>.

⁷⁰ See A/HRC/49/83.

⁷¹ See <https://theintercept.com/2021/11/04/secret-israel-dossier-palestinian-rights-terrorist/>.

⁷² See A/HRC/49/83.

⁷³ Ibid.

⁷⁴ Counter-Terrorism Law, sect. 2. See also Security Council resolution 1566 (2004) and A/HRC/16/51.

⁷⁵ Counter-Terrorism Law, sects. 20–24, 56 and 69–70, available at <https://nbctf.mod.gov.il/en/legislation/Pages/default.aspx> (in Hebrew).

⁷⁶ Counter-Terrorism Law, sects. 7 (b) and 19. The listed entity should have a right to a court review of the decision from an application for delisting or non-implementation of sanctions or an independent competent authority (recommendation 6 of the Financial Action Task Force). See also A/HRC/16/51, para. 35.

secret,⁷⁷ and a person prosecuted under the law cannot challenge the underlying designation itself in criminal proceedings.⁷⁸ Under the Defense (Emergency) Regulations, the broad and vague definition of “unlawful associations” and the wide discretion of the Israeli military commander for the West Bank to declare associations as unlawful with limited opportunity for legal and independent review, as well as the inability to challenge the designation and declaration orders prior to their issuance, also raise serious concerns over undue restrictions on freedoms of expression, association and public participation and over the violation of affected individuals’ due process and fair trial rights.

40. The designations and declarations by Israeli authorities of human rights and humanitarian organizations as “terrorist” and “unlawful” raise serious concerns that counter-terrorism legislation and military orders are being used to halt, restrict or criminalize legitimate human rights and humanitarian work. These concerns are compounded by the lack of compelling evidence to support the allegations against the organizations. These measures, adding to a series of actions undermining civil society organizations working for the human rights of Palestinians, constitute an attack on human rights defenders and seriously inhibit freedoms of association, opinion and expression and the right to public participation.

41. Human rights defenders who previously faced arrest or physical violence from Israeli security forces continued to face challenges in accessing remedies and accountability for possible violations of human rights. On 28 October 2021, the Israeli Ombudsman reportedly indicated that the investigation into the beatings and physical assaults by Israeli police of Mohammad Abu al-Hummos, a human rights defender with disabilities from the Isawiyah neighbourhood in East Jerusalem, entailed “serious flaws”, in relation to the police misconduct unit of the Ministry of Justice having delayed investigating the complaints for nearly two years, having failed to question witnesses and having closed the case on the grounds of insufficient evidence.⁷⁹ Mr. Abu al-Hummos had sustained injuries and required hospitalization from having been physically assaulted by Israeli police officers on 9 November 2019 while he was filming Israeli security forces conduct, while Israeli police had also arrested and physically assaulted Mr. Abu al-Hummos’s nephew. Both had filed a complaint with the Ministry of Justice of Israel against the police. As the Ministry’s police misconduct unit had closed the investigation without further action, Mr. Abu al-Hummos and his nephew resorted to the Israeli Ombudsman of the State Representatives in the Courts.⁸⁰

Palestinian authorities

42. Palestinian human rights defenders continued to come under pressure, including through arrest, prosecution and prolonged judicial processes, from several duty bearers at the same time.⁸¹ On 7 April 2021, the Palestinian Authority’s Hebron Magistrates Court acquitted human rights defender Issa Amro,⁸² who had already been convicted to a three-month suspended sentence by an Israeli military court on 22 March for his activities with the Youth Against Settlements organization,⁸³ of the charges of inciting sectarian strife and publishing material that endangers the integrity of the public order of the State under the Cybercrimes Law after nearly four years of legal proceedings. The charges, issued on 10 September 2017, were based on a Facebook post by Mr. Amro critical of the Palestinian Authority. In the post he had called for the release of a detained journalist. Considering the significant delay between the charge and the judgment, there is a well-founded concern that the State of Palestine failed to uphold Mr. Amro’s right to be tried without undue delay. Mr. Amro’s cases under both duty bearers raise concerns over arbitrary detention, judicial ⁷⁷ Counter-Terrorism Law, sects. 8–9. The principle of equality applies also to civil proceedings and demands, inter alia, that each side be given the opportunity to contest all the arguments and evidence adduced by the other party. See Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 32 (2007), para. 13.

⁷⁸ Counter-Terrorism Law, sect. 19. On the problematic character of these provisions, see Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 32 (2007), para. 30.

⁷⁹ See <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/.premium-watchdog-cites-serious-flaws-in-probe-into-israeli-police-beating-of-palestinians-1.10335012>.

⁸⁰ See https://www.gov.il/en/departments/about/about_natam.

⁸¹ See A/HRC/49/83. See also A/HRC/40/43, paras. 38 and 41.

⁸² A/HRC/37/42, paras. 50–51.

⁸³ A/76/333, para. 19.

harassment and the intentional misuse of the judicial system to disrupt and deter the work of a human rights defender.

43. The Palestinian Authority also took actions that significantly curtailed civic space and demands for accountability. The President of the State of Palestine issued a series of decree laws concerning the impact on the freedom of association, peaceful assembly and expression.⁸⁴ On 28 February 2021, the President issued an amendment to the law concerning charitable associations and civil society organizations.⁸⁵ The amendment requires every non-governmental organization to submit an annual work plan and budget consistent with the plan of the competent ministry, includes limits on these organizations' salaries and expenses, and provides the Council of Ministers with the authority to issue regulations on fundraising by the non-governmental organizations.⁸⁶ The right to freedom of association includes the ability to seek, receive and use resources, while non-governmental organizations should be free to determine their statutes, structure and activities without State interference.⁸⁷ Any restriction on freedom of association must be necessary in the interest of national security or public safety, public order, the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others and proportionate to the interest it seeks to protect.⁸⁸ The sweeping restrictions introduced in the decree law do not appear to serve any protected interest and carry serious consequences for the ability of the organizations to carry out their work freely. Despite pledges by the Palestinian Authority to freeze its implementation,⁸⁹ the decree remained in force as at the end of the reporting period.

44. Between late June and late August 2021, the killing of Nizar Banat⁹⁰ sparked protests in major cities in the West Bank demanding accountability for the killing. On several occasions documented by OHCHR, numerous demonstrators were subjected to physical violence by Palestinian security forces and armed individuals in civilian clothes seemingly acting in coordination with Palestinian security forces, raising serious human rights concerns.⁹¹ Several women and men demonstrators, including political opposition candidates, journalists, human rights defenders and one OHCHR staff member who was monitoring the demonstration, were physically assaulted, and some of them were subjected to gender-based violence and harassment.⁹² According to OHCHR monitoring, 75 people were arrested by Palestinian security forces, of whom at least 40 faced charges seemingly based on their exercise of freedom of peaceful assembly and expression. Some of them reported ill-treatment while in custody. The Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association submitted 11 complaints on behalf of the affected individuals, including seven women, to the Palestinian Military Prosecution and the Public Prosecution. The Association reported having only been informed about investigative steps in one case by the end of the reporting period.⁹³ The Palestinian security forces justice commission indicated that seven investigations had been launched into such incidents. As of the end of the reporting period, no other information had been made available regarding accountability steps taken in relation to other incidents of the alleged excessive use of force during such demonstrations.

⁸⁴ See A/HRC/49/83.

⁸⁵ Palestinian presidential decree law No. 7 of 2021, published in the official Gazette on 2 March 2021.

⁸⁶ Ibid., arts. 2–4.

⁸⁷ Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 13. See also A/HRC/23/39, paras. 8 and 16.

⁸⁸ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 22.

⁸⁹ See <https://www.wattan.net/ar/news/334982.html> (in Arabic).

⁹⁰ See paragraph 26 above.

⁹¹ See <https://www.ohchr.org/en/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=27247&LangID=E>.

⁹² See A/HRC/49/83.

⁹³ The case refers to a member of the Palestinian Presidential Guard who was arrested on 8 September 2021 and indicted for assault and theft committed while acting in civilian clothes against a demonstrator during a protest on 27 June. See <https://www.addameer.org/ar/news/4566?fbclid=IwAR1Ke3A5W5KfruaJ2mLpkVEql38slwUU4eR4MN2y18ngm41cC6I--dxfgTY>.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

45. Despite intensified violence and recurring violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, impunity remained widespread and pervasive. There are serious concerns that steps taken thus far by Israel and the Palestinian authorities to investigate alleged violations of international humanitarian law during the escalation of hostilities in May 2021 have not been sufficient. Impunity also persisted in relation to alleged violations, including possible war crimes, by all parties during previous escalations in 2008/09, 2012 and 2014. There was an almost total failure to ensure accountability for numerous allegations of the excessive use of force by Israeli forces in the context of law enforcement operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, resulting in the killing and injury of Palestinians. With regard to the Palestinian authorities, few steps were documented in the investigation and prosecution of members of Palestinian security forces or of the security forces in Gaza responsible for the alleged excessive use of force and other human rights violations committed against Palestinians.

46. In this climate of impunity, increased restrictions on the freedom of expression, association and assembly of those who defend human rights and call for accountability are a cause for particular concern. Counter-terrorism legislation must not be applied to curtail human rights and humanitarian work, to suppress or deny the right to freedom of association, or to quash political dissent and limit the peaceful activities of civil society.

47. Recalling the follow-up measures described in the comprehensive review of the status of recommendations addressed to all parties since 2009,⁹⁴ the High Commissioner:

(a) Calls upon Israel to fully comply with its obligations under international human rights law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; urges it to conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including into allegations of international crimes; and also calls upon Israel to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, gender-responsive reparation and truth;

(b) Calls upon Israel to revoke the designations against Palestinian human rights and humanitarian organizations as terrorist or unlawful organizations, absent sufficient evidentiary basis for them. Israel must also ensure that human rights defenders are not detained, charged and convicted in relation to their legitimate work to protect and promote human rights and accountability;

(c) Calls upon Israel to resume its cooperation with OHCHR and make full use of OHCHR technical assistance;

(d) Urges the State of Palestine to conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, in particular into allegations of international crimes; and calls upon the State of Palestine to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, gender-responsive reparation and truth;

(e) Recommends that all parties ensure full respect for international law, including international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and that they ensure accountability for grave violations;

(f) Calls upon all States to take all measures necessary to effectively ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 by all parties to the conflict, taking into account the means reasonably available to them and their level of influence on the parties, and reminds States, in particular those with close ties to the parties, that they should exert their influence to ensure respect for the law;

⁹⁴ A/HRC/35/19, paras. 63–81.

(g) Reiterates the calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies to take the measures necessary to ensure full respect and compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
13 February 2023

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-second session

27 February–31 March 2023

Agenda item 2

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the obligation to ensure accountability and justice

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 49/4. It provides an overview of the implementation of the resolution and developments relevant to the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the obligation to ensure accountability and justice.

* Agreement was reached to publish the present report after the standard publication date owing to circumstances beyond the submitter's control.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 49/4 and covers the period between 1 November 2021 and 31 October 2022. It draws on human rights monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and information from governmental sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The international staff of OHCHR continued to remain outside the Occupied Palestinian Territory during the reporting period due to the failure by Israel to grant entry visas.¹

2. For over 55 years, the Occupied Palestinian Territory – the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza – has remained under belligerent occupation by Israel, affecting all rights of Palestinians, including the right to self-determination. The actions of Israel as the occupying Power also affect the protection and fulfilment of rights by the other duty bearers: the State of Palestine and the de facto authorities in Gaza. The present report covers alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law by all duty bearers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and accountability for them. It should be read in conjunction with recent relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.²

3. On 25 November 2022, OHCHR requested Israel and the State of Palestine to provide information on any accountability measures adopted during the reporting period. OHCHR also requested other States Members of the United Nations to provide information on the steps taken by them as third States to promote compliance with international law. As at 28 December, only Qatar had responded.

4. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory continued to deteriorate during the reporting period, particularly in the northern West Bank. There was a sharp increase in the number of Palestinians killed in the West Bank, as well as Israeli fatalities. During the reporting period, at least 161 Palestinians were killed and 10,298 were injured in the Occupied Palestinian Territory by Israeli security forces.³ This includes 30 killed and 383 injured during the escalation of hostilities in Gaza in August 2022, and 131 killed and 9,904 injured in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.⁴ The majority of the casualties were in the two northern Governorates of Jenin and Nablus. Settler violence continued unabated – with 2 Palestinian men killed and 248 injured by settlers – while 2 Palestinian boys were killed either by Israeli security forces or settlers, who both used firearms simultaneously. Twenty Israelis were killed – the majority by individual Palestinian attackers in Israel – and at least 112 injured.⁵

5. In the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, serious concerns persist that Israel continues to violate its international humanitarian law and international human rights law obligations. Many incidents raised serious concerns that the force used was unlawful, often leading to arbitrary deprivation of life, including extrajudicial execution. OHCHR monitoring of incidents during the escalation of hostilities in Gaza between Israel and some Palestinian armed groups indicated insufficient respect for international humanitarian law by all parties to the conflict. The prevailing climate of impunity by all duty bearers, noted previously by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner,⁶ persisted.

¹ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/08/bachelet-deplores-israels-failure-grant-visas-un-human-rights-staff-occupied>.

² See A/77/493, A/76/333 and A/HRC/52/76.

³ Additionally, four West Bank Palestinians were killed by Israeli security forces in Israel.

⁴ Also, 11 children were injured in Gaza, outside of hostilities.

⁵ Information from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, based on Israeli sources.

⁶ A/76/333, paras. 16 and 30; A/HRC/46/22, para. 11; and A/HRC/43/21, para. 45.

II. Human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

A. Civilian casualties and damage to civilian objects during conduct of hostilities

6. Civilians faced the brunt of the escalation of hostilities in Gaza from 5 to 7 August 2022, which resulted in the death of at least 50 Palestinians – 30 killed by Israeli security forces and 16 by Palestinian armed groups; the perpetrator is unclear for the deaths of four persons killed in one incident. OHCHR monitoring indicates that among those killed were 36 civilians (15 men, 12 boys, 5 girls and 4 women), while the status of 6 Palestinians remains undetermined. Of the 383 Palestinians injured (255 men and boys, 128 women and girls), the vast majority were civilians, including 164 children.⁷ No Israelis were killed; according to Israeli sources, 34 Israelis were injured.⁸

7. The escalation began with Israeli air strikes against members of the Al-Quds Brigades, the armed wing of the Palestinian Islamic Jihad, allegedly for “the elimination of a concrete threat”.⁹ On 5 August, a senior Al-Quds commander was killed by Israeli air strikes at an apartment block in Gaza City. While no civilians were killed, over 50 families were left homeless due to building damage. Another senior commander was killed, along with two other armed-group members, in an Israeli attack in Rafah on 7 August. The air strikes destroyed the targeted three-storey building and seven adjacent buildings and also killed 4 civilians, injured 58 more and damaged 117 additional buildings, raising questions about the respect for the prohibition of indiscriminate attacks and the principles of proportionality and precautions in attack. Similar questions of precautions also arise with respect to the killing of a 5-year-old girl, along with another civilian, in an air strike that killed one armed-group member in Shuja’iyah on 5 August.

8. On 7 August, an Israeli air strike on a cemetery in Jabalya killed five boys, including a 4-year-old, and injured four other civilians. According to eyewitnesses, four of the boys had gathered around their grandfather’s tomb with a friend. While the Israeli Defense Forces initially rejected responsibility, senior officials reportedly acknowledged responsibility.¹⁰ This is consistent with OHCHR findings.¹¹ There was no apparent military objective nearby, raising concerns that this could potentially amount to a direct attack on civilians. Under international law, intentionally directing an attack against civilians not taking direct part in hostilities constitutes a war crime.¹²

9. Israeli strikes also hit prima facie civilian objects, causing civilian casualties and damage to civilian objects. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 32 houses were completely destroyed, 126 severely damaged and rendered inhabitable, and 1,445 partially damaged. Approximately 600 Palestinians were rendered homeless.

10. Palestinian armed groups, mainly Al-Quds Brigades, fired hundreds of rockets and mortars towards Israel. Most were intercepted, although some caused injuries and material damage in Israel. Many of the rockets fell short, killing 16 Palestinians (6 men, 6 boys, 3 girls and 1 woman) and injuring others in Gaza. On 6 August, seven civilians, including four boys, were killed after an explosion in a crowded area in Jabalya camp. According to the Gaza Ministry of Health, 37 others were injured, including 24 children. Israeli security forces denied responsibility for the attack.¹³ OHCHR monitoring indicates that the cause of the explosion was a rocket fired by Palestinian armed groups that fell short of the intended target.

⁷ Information from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ <https://www.ynetnews.com/article/h1mtes5p5>.

¹⁰ <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-08-16/ty-article/.highlight/after-initial-denial-israeli-officials-admit-5-palestinian-minors-killed-in-gaza-strike/00000182-a2b6-d825-a5a7-aaf6d3320000>.

¹¹ See also <https://www.amnesty.org/en/documents/mde15/6079/2022/en/>, p. 13.

¹² Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (b) (i); and <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/customary-ihl/v1/rule156>.

¹³ <https://www.ynetnews.com/article/syjgor3a5>.

In another instance, a Palestinian armed group fired a mortar shell that killed a Palestinian woman and a girl in Beit Hanun on 6 August.

11. The rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups are inherently indiscriminate.¹⁴ Their use constitutes a clear violation of the prohibition of indiscriminate attacks under international humanitarian law and may amount to a war crime.¹⁵ The launching of mortars in indiscriminate attacks raises similar concerns.¹⁶

B. Collective punishment

12. Israeli practices that may amount to collective punishment – imposing punitive measures on individuals and communities for offences they did not commit – continued.¹⁷ Collective punishment is expressly prohibited by international humanitarian law¹⁸ and is incompatible with several provisions of international human rights law.¹⁹

13. The land, sea and air blockade and the closure of Gaza, which constitute collective punishment,²⁰ entered its sixteenth year, with extremely detrimental impacts on freedom of movement, and the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, such as the rights to an adequate standard of living, health, education, work and family life.²¹ One significant consequence of the blockade is severe restrictions on access to specialized medical care not available in Gaza. Affected patients require an Israeli exit permit to receive critical and sometimes life-saving care. Such permits are often delayed or denied. Between January and October 2022, OHCHR recorded the death of 11 patients (5 men, 4 boys, 1 woman and 1 girl) who died while waiting for exit permits to receive potentially life-saving care.²²

14. Closures also repeatedly took place in the context of Israeli security forces operations in the West Bank. Some may amount to collective punishment, as they penalized entire communities without regard to individual responsibility. For example, following the killing of an Israeli soldier, Israeli security forces stated it had “implemented blockades and inspections around the city of Nablus and the nearby villages due to the recent rise in terrorism within the city”.²³ Israeli security forces controlled entry and exit into the majority of the city with permanent checkpoints, closed metal gates, and earth mounds.²⁴ These closures from 11 October to 3 November affected almost 200,000 Palestinians, including their access to education and health care. Children and teachers struggled to reach schools, and there was a 20 per cent drop in patients arriving at primary health-care facilities in Nablus. The closures also had a dramatic impact on the economy.²⁵ Disproportionate https://www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/Documents/HRBodies/HRCouncil/CoIGaza/A_HRC_CRP_4.docx, para. 97.

¹⁴

¹⁵ Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (b) and (e).

¹⁶ <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/customary-ihl/v1/rule11>.

¹⁷ A/75/336, para. 23.

¹⁸ <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/ihl-treaties/hague-conv-iv-1907>, regulations: art. 50; <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/ihl-treaties/gciv-1949>, art. 33 and commentary; and <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/customary-ihl/v1/rule103>.

¹⁹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, arts. 12 and 14; and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11.

²⁰ A/HRC/46/63, para. 7; A/HRC/37/38, para. 4; and A/HRC/34/36, para. 36.

²¹ See A/73/420.

²² The numbers are likely underreported, as such deaths are often unknown unless families approach organizations.

²³ <https://www.nytimes.com/2022/10/26/world/middleeast/israel-palestinians-insurgency-blockade-nablus-jenin.html>.

²⁴

<https://static1.squarespace.com/static/54231cc6e4b0d46e9dc0c8c1/t/635ed5454fd8302e389fa2be/1667159365226/20221025+Nablus+interagency+visit+report+Final+.pdf>.

²⁵ <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-10-27/ty-article-magazine/.premium/nablus-residents-putting-the-city-under-economic-siege-will-not-bring-peace/00000184-1531-d4e5-a3e6-f77dc8210000>.

restrictions are inconsistent with the obligations of Israel, as the occupying Power, to ensure that Palestinians enjoy the rights to freedom of movement, health and education.

15. Israeli authorities continued punitive demolitions of the family homes of alleged Palestinian attackers as collective punishment. During the reporting period, Israeli security forces punitively demolished 11 residential structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, forcibly evicting 71 Palestinians (40 male and 31 female, including 29 children); 59 others were also affected.²⁶ Punitive home demolitions violate international human rights law,²⁷ and are prohibited by international humanitarian law.²⁸ They disproportionately affect Palestinian women and girls, with severe impacts on their physical and psychological well-being.²⁹ Extensive destruction and appropriation of property in occupied territory, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, is a grave breach of article 147 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) and thus a war crime.

16. Israel continued withholding bodies of Palestinians killed by Israeli security forces. During the reporting period, Israeli authorities withheld 30 bodies, including those of 3 boys and 1 woman. As at 31 October, a total of 114 bodies were being held, including of at least 12 boys and 2 women.³⁰ There were no developments regarding two Israeli civilians and the bodies of two Israeli soldiers being held in Gaza.³¹ The Human Rights Committee has noted that withholding bodies of the deceased and denying the right of families to a burial may amount to torture and ill-treatment.³² Withholding of bodies is also inconsistent with the obligations of Israel as an occupying Power.³³

C. Unlawful killings and injuries in the context of law enforcement

17. During the reporting period, Israeli security forces killed 131 Palestinians (97 men, 29 boys and 5 women) in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, mostly by use of firearms. Nearly half (65) were killed in the context of attempted or alleged attacks on Israelis or in armed clashes. Many of the clashes took place in Jenin and Nablus during Israeli raids against armed Palestinians. Heavy troop deployment by Israeli security forces and their use of heavy weaponry in densely populated areas exposed Palestinian residents and bystanders, including children, to serious harm and loss of life. In one arrest raid in Jenin on 13 May, Israeli security forces used the 16-year-old sister of a wanted Palestinian man as a human shield, forcing her to stand in front of an Israeli military vehicle for over two hours during a firefight with armed Palestinians. The use of human shields in law enforcement operations constitutes a violation of the right to life.

18. In another alarming resumption of an unlawful practice, at least one Palestinian was killed in an apparent targeted killing: a blatant violation of international human rights law.³⁴ On 22 October, a Palestinian man, reported to be a leader of a loose group of armed Palestinians in Nablus, was killed when an explosive device attached to a motorcycle detonated near him in the old city. Although Israel neither confirmed nor denied carrying out the operation, the modus operandi is consistent with previous Israeli extrajudicial

²⁶ Information from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

²⁷ E.g., International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11. They may also amount to ill-treatment (CAT/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 41).

²⁸ Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, art. 53; and <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/customary-ihl/v1/rule50>.

²⁹ CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, paras. 32–33. See also A/HRC/46/63, para. 10.

³⁰ Information from the Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center.

³¹ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/hamas-netanyahu-lying-to-israelis-about-talks-to-free-captives/>.

³² CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 32.

³³ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27, and <https://ihl-databases.icrc.org/en/customary-ihl/v1/rule114>.

³⁴ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 6 (1).

executions.³⁵ There are also concerns that other members of the same group may also have been targeted.³⁶

19. OHCHR monitored several instances of apparent extrajudicial executions, where Israeli security forces used lethal force against attackers when they were wounded or subdued and no longer presenting imminent threat, to “confirm the kill”. For example, on 7 March, Israeli security forces killed a 22-year-old Palestinian man at an Al-Aqsa Compound gate in East Jerusalem after he stabbed police officers. According to an eyewitness, one of the injured officers grabbed the knife from the Palestinian man, who was lying on the ground barely conscious after a struggle with one officer in which both rolled down a set of stairs. A second officer shot five or six bullets at him. Soon after, as seen on a video recorded by another eyewitness, the officer fired a single shot at close range at the upper body of the wounded man.

20. Nearly half (65) of the Palestinians were killed in the context of stone-throwing confrontations or otherwise during operations of Israeli security forces (i.e., without exchange of fire). During one such raid in Nablus’ old city on 9 August, Israeli security forces shot dead two Palestinians – including a 16-year-old boy – and injured with live ammunition 76 Palestinians, including 15 boys.³⁷ Both killings and most injuries took place as Israeli security forces in the outer cordon used firearms extensively against Palestinians throwing stones at Israeli security forces vehicles and seeking to enter the old city. Among those killed in such operations was journalist Shireen Abu Akleh.³⁸ In that instance and in many other killings monitored by OHCHR, Israeli security forces used force unnecessarily or in a disproportionate manner, resulting in unlawful killings, in some cases possibly amounting to extrajudicial executions.

21. On 26 July, Israeli security forces shot a 59-year-old man with severe mental disabilities at Huwwara checkpoint, near Nablus – he succumbed to his wounds three days later. The man was apparently initially shot in the legs by Israeli security forces from a military tower as he approached the checkpoint. According to witnesses, while the injured and unarmed man was limping away from the checkpoint, Israeli security forces arrived in a military jeep and shot him in the upper body several times from close range, as he did not stop as directed.

22. In a series of incidents, unwarranted lethal force was employed against Palestinian workers attempting to cross the wall into Israel. On 8 May, Israeli security forces shot dead a 27-year-old Palestinian worker while he was attempting to cross the wall south of Tulkarm. Israeli security forces publicly stated that the man had been unarmed when shot.³⁹ A similar incident took place on 19 June near Qalqiliya, where Israeli security forces shot a 53-year-old worker multiple times in the back and killed him, allegedly solely for damaging the separation barrier in an attempt to cross into Israel.⁴⁰ There was no claim that the man was armed or otherwise presenting an imminent threat to life or of serious injury. In the reporting period Israeli security forces shot and injured 35 workers crossing into Israel.⁴¹

23. The above instances of extensive use of firearms, often wholly unwarranted, by Israeli security forces in the Occupied Palestinian Territory raise serious questions as to what extent Israeli security forces rules of engagement, particularly around arrests, comply with international standards on the use of force. International human rights law permits the use of ³⁵ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/alleged-assassination-in-nablus-may-signal-major-israeli-policy-change-in-west-bank/>.

³⁶ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-briefing-notes/2022/10/unlawful-targeted-killings-west-bank>.

³⁷ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

³⁸ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-briefing-notes/2022/06/killing-journalist-occupied-palestinian-territory>.

³⁹ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/palestinian-shot-dead-trying-to-illegally-cross-west-bank-security-barrier/>.

⁴⁰ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/palestinians-say-man-shot-dead-by-israeli-troops-near-qalqilya-security-barrier/>.

⁴¹ Information provided by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

firearms only when absolutely necessary, in extremely limited circumstances, namely where there is an imminent threat of death or serious injury.⁴²

24. Similar concerns also arise with respect to the Israeli security forces approach of using firearms against Palestinian stone throwers, even though they rarely present any imminent threat to Israeli armoured vehicles and well-protected personnel, often at great distance. For example, on 9 August, Israeli security forces killed a 16-year-old boy during stone throwing by Palestinians in Hebron. According to eyewitnesses, an Israeli sniper, lying prone on the street, fired several rounds of live ammunition at stone throwers approximately 70 metres away, hitting the boy in the chest. These testimonies are consistent with photographs and video showing the distances. At least five other Palestinians were injured by live ammunition during the incident, including two teenage boys.

25. Concerns of Israeli unlawful use of force against Palestinian fishing boats along the Gaza coast remain. Israeli security forces reportedly injured at least 23 fishers (all male, including 2 boys), and arrested 65 male fishers, including 7 boys. This is a dramatic increase from the three fishers arrested and six injured during the previous reporting period. OHCHR monitoring indicates that the use of force against the fishers and their detention appears arbitrary, with many incidents taking place within the fishing zone unilaterally declared by Israel. Israeli security forces also confiscated at least 20 boats – only 2 had been returned as at 31 October – directly affecting livelihoods.

26. Israeli security forces' use of lethal force has become a pervasive practice in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, often employed regardless of the specific level of gravity of the potential threat detected and often as a first rather than as a last resort, contrary to international standards.⁴³ The use of firearms causing the death of persons not posing a threat to life or serious injury constitutes a violation of the right to life. In an occupation, these may also amount to wilful killings, under the Fourth Geneva Convention (art. 147), which is a war crime.⁴⁴

27. Specific instances during the reporting period also raised concerns of unlawful use of force by Palestinian forces. On 4 October, police of the de facto authorities in Gaza killed two men and seriously injured another young man in central Gaza in an alleged anti-drug raid. Although the Gaza Ministry of the Interior claims that there was an exchange of fire, OHCHR monitoring suggests that this was a planned ambush, raising questions of extrajudicial executions. In another instance, on 9 June, the forces of the de facto authorities shot and injured four men during stone-throwing confrontations triggered by a forced eviction in Beit Lahiya. Dozens of others were beaten with batons.

28. In the West Bank, Palestinian security forces shot and injured a 22-year-old Palestinian man near Budrus on 17 July, reportedly after firing at an unlicensed car that turned away from a checkpoint. In another incident on 19 and 20 September, Palestinian security forces carried out a large operation in Nablus, arresting two men reportedly wanted by Israel. Clashes took place with armed Palestinians, during which a 55-year-old bystander was shot dead, apparently by Palestinian security forces. Eight other Palestinians and one Palestinian security forces member were reported to have been shot during the incident, where protesters threw stones and damaged property.

D. Undue restrictions on freedoms of expression and association

29. Civil society space continued to shrink. On 3 February, five human rights and humanitarian organizations submitted a procedural objection to the November 2021 decision of the Israeli military commander of the West Bank declaring them “unlawful”,⁴⁵ based on ⁴² Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2018), para. 12; and <https://www.ohchr.org/en/instruments-mechanisms/instruments/basic-principles-use-force-and-firearms-law-enforcement>.

⁴³ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/instruments-mechanisms/instruments/basic-principles-use-force-and-firearms-law-enforcement>.

⁴⁴ See also the Rome Statute, art. 8 (2) (a) (i).

⁴⁵ A/HRC/49/25, footnote 68.

the lack of due process and evidence. On 17 August, the military commander rejected the objection. Early the next morning, in Ramallah, Israeli security forces broke into and searched the offices of those organizations and another two declared “unlawful” in January 2020.⁴⁶ Israeli security forces sealed the offices’ entrances with iron plates, confiscated and destroyed equipment and documents, and left copies of military orders to close the offices of the organizations. Between 18 August and 15 September, directors of four of the organizations were summoned by the Israeli Security Agency for interrogation. They all told OHCHR that the Agency officials had threatened them with further consequences, including arrest, if they did not stop working for the organizations. Two also reported Israeli Security Agency intimidation directed at their children. The continued Israeli measures against the seven organizations raise serious concern of flagrant undue interference with the legitimate work of those organizations, undue restrictions on freedoms of expression and association, harassment and threats against human rights defenders, and a chilling effect on broader civil society organizations.

30. The Palestinian Authority continued to introduce regulations raising serious concerns of unduly restricting freedom of association.⁴⁷ In September 2022, the Council of Ministers issued a regulation that, among other restrictions, placed a limit of 25 per cent on salary and operating expenses in non-profit companies,⁴⁸ identical to a change in the NGO law made in 2021, the implementation of which was subsequently frozen. The regulation includes extensive reporting requirements, ministerial approval as a condition for donations, and broad powers for the registrar, including conducting risk assessments of non-profits’ activities.

31. The de facto authorities in Gaza continued to severely hamper the exercise of freedom of expression, especially of journalists. For example, on 30 October, the authorities briefly detained and questioned a Palestinian journalist who was investigating incidents related to misfired rockets during the August 2022 escalation. Another journalist reported similar treatment.

E. Gender-based violence, including against women human rights defenders

32. In connection with the designation and declaration by Israel of seven Palestinian organizations as “terrorist” or “unlawful”, some women in senior positions in organizations promoting women’s rights were targeted and arbitrarily detained. On 17 November 2021, an Israeli military court sentenced Juana Rishmawi to 13 months’ imprisonment and a fine, including for providing services to an “unlawful” association, a reference to her fundraising work for Health Work Committees. She was released from prison on 7 February 2022, having been in detention since April 2021. On 12 May 2022, an Israeli military court sentenced Shatha Odeh to 16 months’ imprisonment, a fine and a suspended five-year imprisonment sentence. She was convicted of holding a position in and attending a meeting of an “unlawful” association, namely, Health Work Committees, of which she was the Director, and receiving and bringing funds into the West Bank without military authorization. She was released on 3 June 2022, having been detained since July 2021.

33. Both women were convicted on the basis of plea bargains. Ms. Odeh told OHCHR that she had no option but to accept it because of her age and health condition and because she believed she would be sentenced regardless of her innocence. Her testimony of ill-treatment that she suffered for weeks – limited sleep, 8-to-11-hour interrogations, being transported to interrogation while handcuffed, and being shackled for 8 hours every day – and that it led to her coerced confession, raises serious concerns of torture. Ms. Rishmawi was held in incommunicado detention for 13 days and not allowed to meet her lawyer for seven weeks. She described the plea bargain as “blackmail” – the only way of ending her detention. Both women were also detained three to four weeks in a cell in a men’s prison,

⁴⁶ Ibid.

⁴⁷ The President introduced by decree-law a requirement for NGOs to submit their workplans and budgets consistent with the plan of line ministries, among other unacceptable restrictions.

⁴⁸ Regulation on non-profit companies, No. 20 of 2022.

apparently a practice to intimidate women at the beginning of their detention, and in violation of the international human rights obligation to incarcerate women and men separately.⁴⁹

34. Another designated organization – the Union of Palestinian Women’s Committees – reported that 15 women staff or volunteers had been interrogated or called by the Israeli Security Agency in the reporting period. All were told to stop working for the Union, some were intimidated, including with threats of action against their families. Some of the reported threats had a clear gender dimension, driven by deep-rooted discrimination against women and stereotypes about their appropriate role in society, and were aimed at intimidating and silencing them.⁵⁰

35. The declarations and the arbitrary detention and intimidation of women human rights defenders had a significant chilling effect on the women’s rights movement in Palestine, as it deprived it of leaders and intimidated other women. Such defenders also face threats and hate speech from private actors, mostly on social media, without significant protection from Palestinian authorities. The intimidation includes accusations of “destroying” the “social fabric and collaborating with Israel and Western countries. In March, one such defender was vilified on a website against the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which labelled her and other women human rights defenders “collaborators” and threatened her. On 31 March, she submitted a complaint to the Palestinian Attorney General, but was unaware of any steps taken as at 31 October.

36. Gender-based violence in the private sphere – exacerbated by the occupation – remained a human rights violation of utmost concern.⁵¹ According to the July 2022 results of an official Palestinian survey on violence, 59.3 per cent of Palestinian women – 70.4 per cent in Gaza and 52.3 per cent in the West Bank – had experienced violence by their husbands.⁵² In the reporting period, OHCHR noted 23 cases raising concerns of gender-based killings or femicides of women (20) and girls (3) – 17 in the West Bank and 6 in Gaza – a slight decrease from the previous period (26). Many of these cases are officially reported as suicides, “accidents” and deaths in unclarified circumstances. Women, including victims of gender-based violence, who report to the police continue to be arbitrarily detained on discriminatory charges, such as for adultery and other moral crimes, leading to their revictimization.⁵³ Claiming pressure from conservative groups, the Government of the State of Palestine also stalled the adoption of a family protection bill pending since the early 2000s and the revision of outdated criminal and personal status laws that discriminate against women and girls and create fertile ground for gender-based violence.

37. During the reporting period, there were various instances of intimidation, including by individuals and groups involved with the movement against the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, who coerced organizations to cancel activities perceived to promote LGBTI+ rights and gender equality. For example, on 17 June, approximately 40 Palestinian men attacked the Al-Mustawda’ cultural centre in Ramallah, forcing the cancellation of a concert, alleging that the singer was gay. Similarly, on 8 July, participants in a march by the Ashtar Theatre group in Ramallah were attacked by young Palestinians shouting “gay, LGBTI, collaborators”. In these incidents, there was concern that Palestinian authorities failed to protect the rights of the affected groups or hold the perpetrators to account.

38. LGBTI+ persons continued to be subjected to violence in the private and public spheres. On 5 October, 25-year-old Ahmad Abu Markhiyeh was beheaded in Hebron, allegedly by an acquaintance who was arrested at the crime scene. The victim had escaped his community in Hebron in 2020 reportedly following threats due to his sexual orientation. He entered Israel, where he filed a request for asylum in a third country. The reasons for his return to Hebron are unclear. On 8 October, in a tribal reconciliation ceremony, the family of ⁴⁹ United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (the Nelson Mandela Rules), rule 11 (a).

⁵⁰ A/HRC/46/63.

⁵¹ Ibid., para. 27.

⁵² <https://www.pcbs.gov.ps/Downloads/book2611.pdf>, p. 26 (in Arabic).

⁵³ A/HRC/46/63, para. 27.

the alleged perpetrator agreed to pay 50,000 Jordanian dinars to the victim's family. As at 31 October, the suspect remained under arrest, but no indictment had been filed.

39. LGBTI+ persons have few or no avenues for protection, and limited access to services in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁵⁴ If they manage to flee to Israel, they are vulnerable to further violence and abuse.⁵⁵ The situation of victims of gender-based violence is compounded in Gaza, where vulnerability to such violence is further exacerbated by the ongoing blockade, the high rate of unemployment and the recurrent escalation of hostilities. During the reporting period, OHCHR documented cases of women and LGBTI+ individuals who were trapped in Gaza, unable to leave due to the Israeli blockade. They are forced either to hide or endure violence and other violations as the de facto authorities are unwilling or unable to provide protection due to prevailing patriarchal norms.

F. Arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment

40. As at 31 October, Israel held 820 Palestinians in administrative detention (812 men, 5 boys and 3 women) without charge or trial. This is the highest number since 2008, and a dramatic increase from the 500 in the previous reporting period.⁵⁶ More than 70 detainees boycotted courts in protest against the Israeli administrative detention policy and several carried out prolonged hunger strikes.⁵⁷

41. Among those held without charge or trial is Palestinian-French human rights defender Salah Hammouri. He was arrested on 7 March and subsequently placed under administrative detention for three months, which was extended twice, based on secret evidence. In July, shortly after Mr. Hammouri wrote to the President of France protesting his detention, Israeli authorities categorized him as an "extremely dangerous prisoner", entailing a number of restrictions, including solitary confinement. Mr. Hammouri's East Jerusalem residency permit was unlawfully revoked in October 2021 for "breach of allegiance" to Israel – explicitly prohibited by international humanitarian law.⁵⁸

42. On 30 August, Mohammad el-Halabi the former head of the World Vision International office in Gaza, was sentenced by an Israeli court to 12 years in prison, after being held in detention for six years; there are credible allegations of torture, incommunicado detention and pressure to confess under duress. He was convicted of 13 counts of terrorism-related crimes, despite serious due process violations, including the lack of evidence against him presented in open court, extensive use of secret evidence and closed-door hearings and restricted access to his lawyer.⁵⁹ Despite enormous pressure to accept a plea deal seemingly in the absence of evidence, Mr. el-Halabi maintained his innocence. His lawyers submitted an appeal to the Supreme Court of Israel on 18 October. His continuing deprivation of liberty may amount to arbitrary detention, given the serious due process violations.⁶⁰

43. On 19 June, an Israel Prison Service special committee denied Ahmad Manasrah the possibility of early release, based on retroactive application of a 2016 counter-terrorism law.⁶¹ In 2016, Manasrah, then aged 13, was sentenced to nine and a half years of imprisonment for participation in a knife attack that injured two settlers. Despite serious concerns for his psychological and physical health, the Israel Prison Service parole committee also rejected his early-release motion on medical grounds on 28 June. As at 31 October 2022,

⁵⁴ Ibid., para. 40.

⁵⁵ <https://www.timesofisrael.com/ghastly-murder-lays-bare-the-myrriad-perils-for-lgbt-palestinians-fleeing-to-israel/>.

⁵⁶ <https://hamoked.org/prisoners-charts.php>.

⁵⁷ <https://www.ppsmo.ps/home/news/4842?culture=ar-SA>, in Arabic.

⁵⁸ Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 45. Mr. Hammouri was deported on 18 December (<https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/12/comment-un-human-rights-spokesperson-jeremy-laurence-deportation-salah>).

⁵⁹

<https://www.facebook.com/UNHumanRightsOPT/posts/pfbid0SNLV13X1WHQrrfHKRTiASy6hyqi uWknnxwF2kf5p9YXtsdmUBaas6YmWM3bj9xYl>.

⁶⁰ A/HRC/40/39, para. 31.

⁶¹ <https://www.ohchr.org/en/press-releases/2022/07/un-experts-urge-israel-free-ahmad-manasra>.

Mr. Manasrah remains in solitary confinement – since November 2021 – despite his schizophrenia diagnosis, raising serious concerns of torture or ill-treatment.

44. During the reporting period, OHCHR continued to document allegations of ill-treatment, in some cases possibly amounting to torture, in Palestinian detention facilities in the West Bank and Gaza.

45. In the West Bank, the Independent Commission for Human Rights received 220 complaints (from 210 males and 10 females, including 15 children) of torture or ill-treatment in the West Bank. OHCHR monitored several cases of concern. Following an explosion on 6 June in Ramallah, six Palestinian men were arrested by Palestinian security forces for manufacturing explosives. OHCHR detention monitoring indicated that at least two of the six men were subjected to severe beatings in detention, which may amount to torture. The beatings allegedly intensified as a reprisal after they spoke to representatives of OHCHR and other organizations who visited them in detention. In July, eight detainees held in the police detention facility in Bethlehem made credible allegations of torture and ill-treatment during interrogation. Alleged treatment included stress positions, particularly suspension for long hours with hands cuffed behind; flogging with electric cables and sticks; beating, punching, slapping, kicking and stomping on different parts of their bodies, including the head and genitals; sleep deprivation; and deprivation of access to food, water and the toilet for several days. OHCHR documented injuries and marks on the bodies of four of the detainees, consistent with the allegations. These four detainees, who were held in relation to the same incident, consistently stated that they were subjected to this physical violence in order to force them to confess to the crime of robbery, raising serious concerns of torture.

46. In Gaza, the Independent Commission for Human Rights received 223 complaints (from 209 male and 14 female complainants, including 59 children). In one incident, a 52-year-old man died in custody several weeks after his arrest on 2 September by the anti-drug police of the de facto authorities. On 16 October, the Gaza Ministry of the Interior announced that he had died due to a heart attack after being transferred to a hospital two days before. However, he had reportedly complained about ill-treatment and torture and about his ill-health.

G. Death penalty

47. On 4 September, the de facto authorities in Gaza executed two men sentenced to death for collaboration with the enemy and three men convicted of murder. These were the first executions since May 2017 and were condemned by OHCHR.⁶² Despite requirements under Palestinian law, the approval of the President was not secured, nor were there opportunities for the men to seek clemency or a pardon. Courts in Gaza also issued 20 death sentences (all men), including 8 by military courts; appeals courts confirmed 16 death sentences and cassation courts, 5. Serious concern remains that criminal proceedings resulting in the imposition of death sentences in Gaza do not meet due process requirements and fair trial guarantees.

48. No death sentences were issued in the West Bank. However, two prisoners apparently have remained under death sentences since 2015,⁶³ even though the State of Palestine has committed to abolishing the death penalty by its 2019 accession to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty.

⁶² <https://www.ohchr.org/en/statements/2022/09/comment-un-human-rights-office-spokesperson-ravina-shamdasani-execution-five>.

⁶³ Information from Human Rights and Democracy Media Center SHAMS .

III. Update on accountability

A. Violations during the escalation of hostilities in Gaza

49. As at 31 October, OHCHR was not aware of any criminal investigations opened by Israel into the conduct of the Israeli Defense Forces during the August 2022 hostilities. There is also no information on steps taken by the State of Palestine to investigate apparent violations of international humanitarian law by Palestinian armed groups. According to the de facto authorities in Gaza, investigations into allegations of violations by both sides have been initiated, but no outcome was known as at 31 October.

50. Impunity persists. OHCHR is not aware of any steps taken during the reporting period by any party to the conflict to ensure accountability for actual or potential violations of international humanitarian law, including alleged war crimes, perpetrated in the context of previous rounds of hostilities. In April, the Israeli Defense Forces provided information to Yesh Din regarding the May 2021 escalation, showing no significant progress.⁶⁴ On 24 April, the Israeli High Court of Justice upheld the decision by the Attorney General to close the investigation into an Israeli attack that killed four Palestinian boys on a Gaza beach on 16 July 2014, notwithstanding serious concerns about the attack and the conduct of the investigation.⁶⁵

51. The High Commissioner has previously expressed concerns with regard to the independence, impartiality, promptness and transparency of the Israeli office of the Military Advocate General,⁶⁶ and the consistent failure of all parties to ensure accountability for alleged serious violations of international humanitarian law in the context of hostilities.⁶⁷ The Human Rights Committee expressed concern in March that no perpetrator had been brought to justice for violations committed during the May 2021 escalation.⁶⁸ It further regretted the lack of updated information on investigation into previous escalations in 2008/09, 2012 and 2014 and their outcomes.⁶⁹

B. Unlawful use of force, and other violations of international human rights law

52. Impunity remained pervasive for incidents of apparent unlawful use of force by Israeli security forces in law enforcement operations, outside the context of hostilities.⁷⁰ Between 1 January 2017 – when the High Commissioner began reporting to the Human Rights Council on accountability – and 31 October 2022, 559 Palestinians (including 120 children) were killed by Israeli security forces in law enforcement operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁷¹ OHCHR is aware of 79 criminal investigations opened in relation to these deaths, of which at least 30 were closed without further action and only 5 resulted in indictments, 3 of which led to convictions. OHCHR is unaware of any indictment made during the reporting period, and the lack of transparency continues.⁷²

53. International human rights law requires that all deaths and injuries caused by use of force in law enforcement operations be subject to an independent, impartial, transparent, ⁶⁴ https://s3.eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/files.yesh-din.org/Investigating+Themselves/YeshDin+-+Shomer+5.22+-+Eng_01.pdf, pp. 10–11.

⁶⁵ A/HRC/28/80/Add.1, para. 36; and https://www.ohchr.org/sites/default/files/Documents/HRBodies/HRCouncil/CoIGaza/A_HRC_CRP_4.docx, para. 663.

⁶⁶ A/HRC/40/43, para. 9; and A/HRC/37/41, para. 11.

⁶⁷ A/71/364, para. 40; A/HRC/43/21, para. 17; and A/HRC/46/22, para. 8.

⁶⁸ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 26.

⁶⁹ Ibid., para. 22.

⁷⁰ A/71/364, para. 66; A/76/333, paras. 5 and 16; A/HRC/43/21, para. 20; and A/HRC/46/22, para. 11.

⁷¹ This does not include Palestinians killed in the context of hostilities or those killed in unclear circumstances. The total number of Palestinians killed by Israeli security forces in this period is 1,016.

⁷² A/HRC/49/25, para. 17.

thorough and effective investigation. The Israeli Defense Forces investigation policy applicable in the West Bank since 2011 requires an immediate investigation into operations that result in the death of a person, except when the incident involves “actual combat”.⁷³ This is understood broadly to include any exchange of fire.⁷⁴ It appears that if the office of the Military Advocate General understands the incident to include “actual combat”, it applies the rules regulating the conduct of hostilities.⁷⁵

54. Such a “combat” exemption was also claimed by Israeli authorities in the killing of Palestinian-American journalist Shireen Abu Akleh on 11 May, who was shot dead by an Israeli soldier while covering an Israeli security forces operation in the Jenin refugee camp that triggered armed clashes with Palestinians. On 5 September, the Israeli Defense Forces admitted it was highly probable the journalist was killed by an Israeli soldier,⁷⁶ but the Military Advocate General stated that no criminal investigation into any soldiers would be opened as it had happened in a situation of combat and there was no suspicion that a criminal offence had been committed.⁷⁷

55. In practice, the Israeli Defense Forces appears to have adopted an even broader interpretation of “actual combat”, as the majority of Palestinian deaths are not investigated – even when they take place in the context of alleged stabbing or ramming attacks, stone throwing or Molotov-cocktail throwing, and in the absence of exchange of fire. For example, on 11 May, Israeli security forces shot dead a 16-year-old boy near his school in Al Bireh – 100 metres away from soldiers and not posing any threat; no criminal investigation was announced. Commonly, instead of a criminal investigation, as required by the policy, only operational military probes are conducted within the Israeli security forces unit involved in the incident, solely based on soldiers’ accounts without collecting evidence from other witnesses and sources.⁷⁸ Of concern, such overbroad interpretations of “combat exemption” have previously been approved by the High Court of Justice in clear contradiction of international law.⁷⁹

56. The Israeli conflation of two distinct regimes on use of force – law-enforcement operations regulated by international human rights law and hostilities regulated by international humanitarian law rules – is key in ensuring that Palestinian deaths in the West Bank and along the Gaza border are rarely investigated. Such lack of investigation extends to apparent cases of extrajudicial executions or wilful killings. For example, on 2 September, Israeli security forces repeatedly shot and killed a 19-year-old Palestinian attacker, while he was lying injured on the ground in Beit ‘Einun, near Hebron, and not presenting any further threat. No criminal investigation was opened.

57. The approach in East Jerusalem appears to be similar, as noted above. On 7 March, Israeli security forces shot and killed a barely conscious Palestinian attacker. No criminal investigation was opened; instead, Israeli political and security leaders reportedly praised the soldiers.⁸⁰ Even where investigations are opened, they raise questions of impartiality. For example, on 4 December 2021, Israeli security forces shot and killed a 25-year-old Palestinian stabber near Jerusalem’s old city. Despite the man being shot, injured on the ground and no longer posing any apparent threat, Israeli security forces subsequently shot him twice. Such “confirmation of kill” raises serious concerns of extrajudicial execution and may amount to wilful killing, yet the Israeli Ministry of Justice closed the investigation on 9

⁷³ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/downloads_eng1/en/ENG_turkel_eng_b1-474.pdf, p. 322.

⁷⁴ https://embassies.gov.il/MFA/AboutIsrael/state/Law/Pages/New_investigation_policy_Palestinian_casualties_IDF_fire_Judea_Samaria_6-Apr-2011.aspx (in Hebrew).

⁷⁵ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/downloads_eng1/en/ENG_turkel_eng_b1-474.pdf, p. 377.

⁷⁶ <https://www.idf.il/76056> (in Hebrew).

⁷⁷ <https://usms.cellcom.co.il/files/QEIKC4/jdwke0b345.pdf> (in Hebrew).

⁷⁸ https://www.gov.il/BlobFolder/generalpage/downloads_eng1/en/ENG_turkel_eng_b1-474.pdf, pp. 380 and 384.

⁷⁹ A/HRC/46/22, para. 18.

⁸⁰ <https://www.israelhoyom.co.il/news/defense/article/13026997> (in Hebrew).

December, asserting that the officers had acted in self-defence as “there was a real and concrete threat to the lives of the fighters and the civilians in the area”.⁸¹

58. Concerns of impunity also apply to the continuing lack of progress in investigations relating to widespread use by Israeli security forces of lethal force in the context of the Great March of Return demonstrations (2018/19) in Gaza.⁸² OHCHR is not aware of any accountability steps taken by Israeli authorities in the reporting period.⁸³

59. The duty of the State to investigate potential unlawful deaths is an important element of the protection afforded to the right to life.⁸⁴ The Human Rights Committee has highlighted its deep concern at continuing and consistent reports of excessive use of lethal force by Israeli security forces against Palestinians and the lack of accountability for those acts, resulting in a general climate of impunity.⁸⁵ The systematic Israeli failure to investigate such incidents furthers impunity, leading invariably to increased Palestinian casualties.

60. While complaint channels exist for Palestinians living under the effective control of the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza, there is rarely any action towards accountability. The Palestinian Security Forces Justice Commission received six complaints of use of force by Palestinian security forces – one is being investigated and four were closed without charge. One has proceeded to trial; it may relate to the Budrus shooting (see para. 28 above) – according to the complainant’s family, one Palestinian security forces member is currently detained while undergoing trial. However, no complaint was registered by the Security Forces Justice Commission with respect to the killing of a bystander in Nablus in September. Although Palestinian security forces denied responsibility, there is no information on an investigation into the death.

61. With regard to the June 2021 killing of opposition activist Nizar Banat, the military court in Ramallah has significantly delayed, with no justification, the trial of the 14 accused Palestinian security forces personnel. On 21 June the military public prosecutor decided to release all 14 from detention. OHCHR is unaware of any legal basis for such release and has serious concerns about the willingness of the Palestinian authorities to ensure accountability for the killing of Mr. Banat. The Security Forces Justice Commission did not respond to the specific query from OHCHR in this regard.

62. In Gaza, the de facto authorities announced that some police officers had been injured in the incident in Beit Lahiya on 9 June (see para. 27 above) and vowed to investigate the incident. However, OHCHR is unaware of any action taken as at 31 October. The de facto authorities also indicated that no investigation was being carried out into the shooting incident on 4 October (see para. 27 above), as it involved exchange of fire with those wanted for drug trafficking and previous violence against the police.

63. Impunity for gender-based violence remains pervasive in both the West Bank and Gaza. In the West Bank, a trial is still ongoing three years after the murder of 21-year-old Israa Ghrayeb.⁸⁶ Of 17 likely cases of gender-based killings of women and girls in the West Bank in the reporting period, according to the Attorney General’s Office of the Palestinian Authority, three indictments were filed, six cases were closed for lack of criminal suspicion, and seven cases remained under investigation as at 31 October. One case involving a member of the security forces was transferred to the military prosecution. According to the de facto authorities in Gaza, of the six cases there, three were reportedly closed, while in two cases alleged perpetrators were sentenced to death. One case was transferred to the military prosecution as it involved a member of the de facto authorities’ forces.

⁸¹ <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2021-12-09/ty-article/israel-closes-probe-of-officers-who-shot-palestinian-assailant-in-jerusalem-attack/0000017f-e59d-df5f-a17f-ffdf946b0000>.

⁸² A/HRC/46/22, para. 12.

⁸³ A/HRC/43/21, para. 24; and

https://www.btselem.org/sites/default/files/publications/202112_unwilling_and_unable_eng.pdf.

⁸⁴ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 36 (2018), para. 27.

⁸⁵ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 26.

⁸⁶ A/HRC/43/70, para. 34.

C. Violations relating to torture and ill-treatment

64. Concerns persisted regarding lack of accountability by relevant Israeli authorities in investigating allegations of torture or ill-treatment of Palestinians, including sexual violence, in Israeli detention facilities. In May, the Israeli Ministry of Justice decided not to open a criminal investigation into alleged torture or ill-treatment by the Israeli Security Agency against Palestinian prisoner Tariq Bargut in February 2019.⁸⁷ On 25 August, the Attorney General upheld the decision to close the criminal investigation into apparent sexual assault – two forced genital searches – of a Palestinian woman detainee in 2015.⁸⁸ On 1 September, the Israeli Supreme Court upheld the admissibility of confessions given after 36 hours of interrogations, during which Israeli Security Agency investigators had used “special measures”, including physical harm and humiliation.⁸⁹ These decisions raise serious concern about a lack of respect for the absolute prohibition of torture.⁹⁰

65. The Human Rights Committee has expressed deep concern about reports of a widespread and systematic practice of torture and ill-treatment by the Israel Prison Service and Israeli security forces against Palestinians. It has also noted with concern a low rate of criminal investigations, prosecutions and convictions concerning allegations of such violations.⁹¹

66. The Palestinian Security Forces Justice Commission reported having received nine complaints alleging torture or ill-treatment by Palestinian security forces. Two cases are undergoing trial, five remain under investigation and two were closed without charge. According to the Commission, “no case or any action has been registered” with respect to the 6 June Ramallah allegations, while the July complaints concerning torture in Bethlehem were dismissed for lack of evidence (see para. 45 above). This raises serious questions about the willingness of the Palestinian authorities to ensure accountability for torture or ill-treatment perpetrated by Palestinian security forces.

67. According to the de facto authorities in Gaza, the 16 October death of a man in custody (see para. 46 above) was investigated and found to be a natural death. A prosecutor who reportedly joined the autopsy also noted no signs of torture or ill-treatment. In July, the Committee against Torture specifically expressed concern about reports that individuals were held in unlawful and incommunicado detention by Palestinian armed groups for collaboration and criticism, and about allegations of torture and ill-treatment in such unofficial places of detention.⁹² The Committee observed that there were consistent reports of torture and ill-treatment by persons in custody in both the West Bank and Gaza, in particular during the investigation stage, and highlighted that there was a climate of impunity, as few complaints had led to prosecution and almost none had led to convictions.⁹³

D. Civil remedies

68. In October, the Israeli Ministry of Defense reportedly agreed to compensate the family of a 78-year-old Palestinian-American man who had died in Israeli security forces custody.⁹⁴ The family reportedly rejected the offer.⁹⁵ Palestinians in Gaza continued to face significant ⁸⁷ <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-05-16/ty-article/.premium/shin-bet-deprived-palestinian-of-sleep-during-interrogations-of-up-to-48-hours/00000180-e9ee-dc12-a5b1-fdff738b0000>.

⁸⁸ Information from the Public Committee against Torture in Israel. See also <https://www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2022-11-07/ty-article/.premium/prosecutor-order-to-search-palestinian-womans-private-parts-was-legit/00000184-53bb-d842-a987-dffb5c780000?lts=1676014981883>.

⁸⁹

<https://supremedecisions.court.gov.il/Home/Download?path=HebrewVerdicts/20/880/073/j29&fileName=20073880.J29&type=2> (in Hebrew).

⁹⁰ A/HRC/49/25, para. 30.

⁹¹ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 30.

⁹² CAT/C/PSE/CO/1, para. 26.

⁹³ Ibid., para. 28.

⁹⁴ <https://www.jpost.com/middle-east/article-719237>.

⁹⁵ <https://www.arabnews.com/node/2179436/middle-east>.

barriers in seeking civil remedies. During the reporting period, the Israeli Supreme Court rejected two appeals on rulings denying Palestinians compensation. On 24 November 2021, an appeal of Izzeldin Abu El-Eish from Jabalya, whose three daughters and niece were killed by Israeli security forces during the 2008/09 escalation, was rejected. An appeal related to the shooting and serious injury of 15-year-old Palestinian Attiya Nabaheen in November 2014 in Gaza was rejected on 5 July.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

69. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory continues its downward spiral. As the occupation continues, Israel – the occupying Power – routinely and systematically disregards its obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law. In the West Bank, Israeli use of firearms is endemic and unchecked by rules of engagement, which themselves appear inconsistent with international human rights law. The number of arbitrary administrative detentions is the highest in 15 years, collective punishment is widespread and restrictions on freedom of expression and association have increased, with the very existence of human rights and humanitarian organizations being targeted. In Gaza, the collective punishment of the population continues as the blockade and closures enter a sixteenth year.

70. Israeli security forces and authorities are able to act with impunity given the lack of accountability for their actions violating international humanitarian law and international human rights law, whether in the context of law enforcement or during hostilities. Such impunity also extends to unlawful use of force and torture and ill-treatment by Palestinian security forces, as well as the forces of the de facto authorities in Gaza.

71. The reporting period included a brief escalation of hostilities in Gaza in August 2022, with all parties failing to respect international humanitarian law rules on the conduct of hostilities. The long-standing pattern of such violations and the failure by all parties to take sufficient steps to prevent their repetition allow for mounting civilian casualties.⁹⁶

72. Recalling the comprehensive review of the status of recommendations addressed to all parties since 2009, the High Commissioner calls on Israel to fully comply with its legal obligations, including in particular:

(a) To ensure that the rules of engagement of its security forces and their application are fully consistent with international human rights law, including use of firearms in law enforcement activities only in cases of imminent threat of death or serious injury as a measure of last resort;

(b) To conduct prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and effective investigations into all incidents of use of force by Israeli forces that have led to the death or injury of Palestinians, and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable and that victims are provided with redress;

(c) To end practices of administrative detention and other forms of arbitrary detention and ensure that all detainees are released unless promptly charged and fairly tried;

(d) To immediately end all practices of collective punishment, including lifting its blockade and closures of Gaza;

(e) To urgently revoke the designations against Palestinian human rights and humanitarian organizations as terrorist or unlawful organizations;

(f) To resume cooperation with OHCHR, including by granting visas to OHCHR international staff to access the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

⁹⁶ A/HRC/28/45, para. 16; and A/HRC/49/25, para. 16.

73. The High Commissioner further calls on:

(a) Palestinian authorities to protect the rights of all Palestinians without discrimination, including discrimination based on gender, sexual orientation or gender identity;

(b) The de facto authorities in Gaza to implement an immediate moratorium on the use of the death penalty, and the State of Palestine to take robust measures to abolish the death penalty in all its territory;

(c) All duty bearers to immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or ill-treatment, including sexual violence;

(d) All duty bearers to put an end to impunity and conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including into allegations of international crimes; and also calls upon them to ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, gender-responsive reparation and truth;

(e) All duty bearers to take measures to prevent all forms of gender-based violence, including in the domestic sphere, and ensure that perpetrators, including of gender-based killings, are prosecuted and appropriately sentenced;

(f) All duty bearers to ensure that the rights to freedom of expression and association are respected and protected and that civil society actors, including women human rights defenders, are able to conduct their legitimate activities safely, freely and without harassment;

(g) All parties to the conflict to ensure full respect for international law, including international humanitarian law, in particular the principles of distinction, proportionality and precautions in attack, and that they ensure accountability for serious violations;

(h) All States to exert their influence, to the degree possible, to stop violations of international humanitarian law by all parties to the conflict.

General Assembly

Distr.: General
4 March 2024

Original: English

Human Rights Council

Fifty-fifth session

26 February–5 April 2024

Agenda item 2

Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and reports of the Office of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General

Human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the obligation to ensure accountability and justice

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights*

Summary

The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 52/3. It provides an overview of the implementation of the resolution and developments relevant to the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the obligation to ensure accountability and justice.

* The present report was submitted to the conference services for processing after the deadline so as to include the most recent information.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 52/3 and covers the period from 1 November 2022 to 31 October 2023. It draws on human rights monitoring conducted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and information from governmental sources, other United Nations entities and non-governmental organizations. Almost all the international staff of OHCHR continued to remain outside the Occupied Palestinian Territory during the reporting period due to the failure by Israel to grant entry visas.
2. For more than 56 years, the Occupied Palestinian Territory – the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza – has remained under occupation by Israel, affecting all rights of Palestinians, including the right to self-determination.
3. The human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory drastically worsened during the reporting period. There was an escalation of the use of lethal force in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and, in May 2023, there was an escalation of hostilities in Gaza.¹
4. On 7 October 2023, Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades and other Palestinian armed groups and Palestinians infiltrated southern Israel and attacked civilians and civilian objects, as well as military objectives, while thousands of indiscriminate projectiles hit Israel. In response, Israel launched intensive strikes from the air, land and sea across Gaza. The escalation continued beyond the reporting period, with massive human suffering and an immense impact on civilians, especially women and children.
5. During the reporting period, Israeli security forces killed 338 Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, in the context of law enforcement (including, 251 men, 3 women, 81 boys and 3 girls). In Gaza, in May 2023, Palestinians were killed in the context of an escalation of hostilities (33 overall, including at least 13 civilians – 4 men, 4 women, 3 girls and 2 boys) and another 2 Palestinian men were killed by Israeli security forces in the context of law enforcement operations. Between 7 and 31 October 2023, according to the Gaza Ministry of Health, at least 8,525 Palestinians were killed in Gaza, including at least 3,542 children and 2,136 women, and 1,870 persons were reportedly missing, including 1,020 children.² As in previous escalations, some Palestinian civilians may have been killed by Palestinian armed groups.
6. During the reporting period, 30 Israelis (20 men, 5 boys, 4 women and 1 girl) were killed in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, by individual Palestinians, and 1 Israeli woman was killed in Israel by a rocket launched from Gaza during the escalation of hostilities in May. Specifically, between 7 and 31 October 2023, according to Israeli authorities, at least 1,200 Israelis were killed in Israel, including 325 members of Israeli armed forces.
7. Due to the serious violations committed on 7 October 2023 in Israel and the military response of Israel in Gaza thereafter, and given the close link between impunity and continued violence, the present report includes a particular focus on the hostilities in Gaza and Israel since 7 October 2023, within the context of the ongoing occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory by Israel.
8. The human rights situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, was already grave prior to 7 October 2023. In parallel to an increase in settler violence and measures that could facilitate the de facto annexation of the West Bank, Israel increased the use of military tactics and weapons in law enforcement operations, leading to a massive increase in the number of Palestinians killed. State and settler violence³ against Palestinians exploded after 7 October 2023, entrenching the long-standing discriminatory system under which Israel exercises control over Palestinians.

¹ A/78/502, para. 8.

² These numbers are not yet verified but, on the basis of past experience, they give an accurate and reliable approximation of the number of fatalities.

³ A/HRC/55/72, para. 24.

9. OHCHR has requested full access to Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory to investigate violations by all duty bearers but at the time of writing had not received a response from Israel.

10. OHCHR monitoring of incidents during the escalation of hostilities in Gaza between Israel and Palestinian armed groups indicated extensive disregard for international humanitarian law by all parties. The prevailing climate of impunity by all duty bearers, noted previously by the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner, persisted and has contributed to the commission of further violations of international law, some potentially amounting to international crimes.

II. Human rights situation

A. October 2023 escalation

11. On 7 October 2023, Israelis and Palestinians awoke to the heaviest barrage of explosive projectiles from Gaza in years. Thousands of members of the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades and Al-Quds Brigades, as well as other armed and unarmed Palestinians, had crossed into Israel. The fighters rampaged into areas close to the security fence with Gaza, attacking military bases, small towns, kibbutzim and a music festival.

12. It was rapidly apparent, from a variety of sources, including video material published by armed Palestinians engaged in the attacks, that Palestinian armed groups committed serious violations of international law on a wide scale, including attacks directed against civilians, wilful killing and mistreatment of civilians, wanton destruction of civilian objects and taking of hostages, which amount to war crimes and may also, depending on further investigation, amount to other serious crimes under international law. More than 1,124 persons were reportedly killed in the attacks of 7 October 2023, including 295 military personnel,⁴ and 4,834 persons were injured.⁵ Reportedly, some Israeli civilians were killed in the crossfire by Israeli forces.⁶

13. There are also accounts that members of Palestinian armed groups and other armed and unarmed Palestinians committed rape, sexual assault (see para. 72 below) and torture. Those accounts require thorough investigation, while ensuring full accountability in accordance with international law. Justice for crimes committed must be served and protection and full reparation afforded to all victims.

14. One of the most prominent attacks on civilians was the attack at the Nova music festival, which was attended by thousands. Evidence indicates that the attacks of Palestinian armed groups and other armed and unarmed Palestinians on the festival resulted in the mass killing of hundreds of Israeli civilians. Several reports, including eye-witness testimony, of rape and other sexual and gender-based violence have emerged.⁷

15. Many civilians, as well as military personnel, were taken to Gaza and held there. Israeli authorities have at different times estimated the number of individuals taken into Gaza to be approximately 242, including Israeli citizens, dual nationals and citizens of other countries.⁸ Families have suffered as the fate and whereabouts of their loved ones remain unknown at the time of writing, and they fear for their safety. Hostage-taking is a war crime.

⁴ See www.idf.il/59780?page=1 (in Hebrew).

⁵ See www.timesofisrael.com/the-israel-we-knew-died-on-october-7-the-new-nation-will-be-scarred-for-generations.

⁶ See www.haaretz.co.il/news/politics/2023-11-18/ty-article/0000018b-e1a5-d168-a3ef-f5ff4d070000 (in Hebrew).

⁷ See www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-67629181.

⁸ In total, and as of 30 November 2023, 109 civilians had been released alive (48 woman, 34 children and 27 men) and 1 woman soldier belonging to the Israel Defense Forces had been rescued. As of 15 December 2023, Israel Defense Forces had confirmed the death of eight civilian men, three civilian women and four soldiers belonging to the Israel Defense Forces (three men and one woman) held in Gaza.

16. The suspected perpetrators of those acts must receive due process and fair trials. Many detained in connection with those attacks and the resulting conflict are currently held incommunicado in Israel, exposing them to heightened risks of torture and other ill-treatment and raising concerns about the possibilities of fair trials. Israeli investigative and prosecutorial authorities and courts must ensure that the rights of Palestinian defendants are fully respected.

17. The barrage of indiscriminate projectiles launched by Palestinian armed groups on Israel has continued beyond 31 October 2023. Rockets have been fired across the south and reached the centre of Israel, including Tel Aviv, Sderot and the areas adjacent to Gaza, Beersheva and Jerusalem. Such strikes violate the prohibitions on indiscriminate attacks and the use of weapons, which are by their very nature indiscriminate under international humanitarian law and amount to war crimes.⁹

18. On 9 October 2023, the Minister of Defence of Israel announced that he had ordered a “complete siege” of Gaza, saying that “there will be no electricity, no food, no fuel, everything is closed ... we are fighting human animals, and we are acting accordingly.”¹⁰ The “complete siege” and its implications for the population should be understood in the context of the preceding 16-year-old blockade of Gaza imposed by the Israeli authorities, which had already had far-reaching humanitarian and human rights consequences for the civilian population, including by devastating the local economy,¹¹ and which itself amounted to collective punishment.¹²

19. Between 8 and 21 October 2023, Israel completely closed all crossings into Gaza and prevented the entry of humanitarian aid, commercial goods, food, fuel and electricity, while at the same time only allowing a small supply of water to enter. After that date, only a minuscule amount of aid was allowed in.¹³ The Rafah crossing between Gaza and Egypt was also kept closed until 21 October 2023. That severe deprivation of the rights of Gazans to water, food, health and other basic necessities, compounded by attacks against essential civilian infrastructure, such as hospitals, bakeries and water wells, resulted in a preventable, man-made and unprecedented humanitarian crisis in Gaza.

20. Senior Israeli political and military officials indicated on several occasions that the siege and other restrictions had been imposed deliberately and punitively, also evidenced by their refusal to reopen the Kerem Shalom crossing between Israel and Gaza and the speed at which aid was increased during the “humanitarian pause” in November 2023.¹⁴

21. The complete cut-off of the electricity supply to Gaza and the refusal to allow any fuel to enter Gaza led to the shutdown of the one power plant in Gaza and serious knock-on effects on health care, water supply and sewage services, worsening beyond the reporting period and resulting in preventable deaths.¹⁵ The degradation of the telecommunications network, including a complete blackout as Israel launched its ground operation into Gaza on 27 October 2023, also gravely affected service delivery and hindered reporting.

22. Between 8 and 15 October 2023, Israel completely shut off all three water pipelines into Gaza, representing almost 75 per cent of its supply of potable water. Limited supplies using the pipeline to eastern Khan Yunis were restored on 15 October 2023 and to Deir al-Balah on 31 October 2023. Supplies to northern Gaza have never been restored. The Minister for Energy and Infrastructure of Israel said that restoring the water supply to the

⁹ Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, Customary International Humanitarian Law: Volume I – Rules (Geneva, International Committee of the Red Cross; Cambridge, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Cambridge University Press, 2005), rules 11, 12, 71 and 156.

¹⁰ See www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/defense-minister-announces-complete-siege-of-gaza-no-power-food-or-fuel.

¹¹ See www.unescwa.org/sites/default/files/pubs/pdf/war-gaza-unprecedented-devastating-impact-english_2.pdf.

¹² A/78/502, para. 33; A/76/333, para. 36; A/75/336, para. 24; A/74/468, para. 22; A/73/420, para. 7; A/HRC/52/75; A/HRC/46/63, para. 7; A/HRC/37/38, para. 4; and A/HRC/34/36, para. 36.

¹³ A few trucks passed through the Rafah crossing on 8 October 2023.

¹⁴ See https://twitter.com/Israel_katz/status/1712356130377113904 (in Hebrew); and https://twitter.com/Israel_katz/status/1712876230762967222.

¹⁵ See www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-86.

south of Gaza “will push the civilian population to the southern [part of the] Strip”,¹⁶ suggesting that Israel may have been depriving civilians of access to goods essential to their survival as a means of forcing them to move.

23. Only limited aid was allowed into southern Gaza from 21 October: 217 aid trucks entered Gaza between 8 and 31 October 2023, an average of just over 9 a day. Prior to 7 October 2023, an average of 500 trucks entered Gaza every day, before the combination of hostilities, deprivation of access to basic services, malnourishment, dehydration and displacement had led to an exponential increase in needs.¹⁷ Israel also prevented the entry of commercial goods after 31 October 2023, resulting in the collapse of markets across Gaza.

24. The situation in northern Gaza was particularly bleak, with humanitarian access almost totally restricted and water supplies completely cut off. It was estimated that 300,000 internally displaced persons remained there in shelters and hospitals as of 31 October 2023.

25. The restrictions imposed during the reporting period laid the ground for a serious deterioration in the human rights and humanitarian situation in the ensuing months, raising the spectres of famine, dehydration and the spread of disease.¹⁸ The blockade and siege imposed on Gaza amount to collective punishment and may also amount to the use of starvation as a method of war, which are war crimes and which may also, depending on further investigation, amount to other serious crimes under international law.

26. The sheer scale and extent of damage to civilian homes and infrastructure wreaked by Israel during its massive aerial bombardment of Gaza, especially North Gaza and Gaza City, was unprecedented. By 31 October 2023, approximately 45 per cent of the housing units in Gaza had been destroyed or damaged.¹⁹ Many areas, such as Beit Hanun, were almost completely levelled, while an Israel Defense Forces spokesperson reportedly boasted of “focus[ing] on ... maximum damage” and that “thousands of tonnes of munitions” had been dropped on Gaza in a few days after 7 October 2023.²⁰

27. The widespread damage in northern Gaza raises serious concerns about the compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law, including the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution in attack. Civilians and civilian objects are protected from attacks and residential buildings are prima facie civilian objects. The expected civilian harm from an attack against a military objective must not be excessive in relation to the anticipated military advantage of the attack and all feasible precautions must be taken to protect civilians and civilian objects.

28. From the information available, it is difficult to see how so many prima facie civilian objects could be lawfully subjected to attack. The nature and impact of targeting patterns during the present escalation appears qualitatively different from recent escalations, contributing to extraordinarily high numbers of Palestinian casualties: approximately 355 a day since 7 October 2023, compared with 6 fatalities a day during the escalation in May 2023.²¹

29. Documentation of specific incidents by OHCHR reinforces those concerns, which persist beyond the reporting period. The Israel Defense Forces explicitly indicated an

¹⁶ See www.timesofisrael.com/israel-says-it-is-restarting-water-supply-to-southern-gaza-strip.

¹⁷ See www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/us-reveals-israel-let-commercial-goods-into-gaza-for-first-time-since-war-began and https://edition.cnn.com/middleeast/live-news/israel-hamas-war-gaza-news-01-14-24/h_602b15387f1a24676d480aba68df8087.

¹⁸ See www.emro.who.int/media/news/risk-of-disease-spread-soars-in-gaza-as-health-facilities-water-and-sanitation-systems-disrupted.html; and www.ipcinfo.org/fileadmin/user_upload/ipcinfo/docs/IPC_Gaza_Acute_Food_Insecurity_Nov2023_Feb2024.pdf.

¹⁹ See <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-31-october-2023-2359>. See also <https://reliefweb.int/report/occupied-palestinian-territory/shelter-crisis-joint-advocacy-statement-24th-november-2023>.

²⁰ See www.theguardian.com/world/2023/oct/10/right-now-it-is-one-day-at-a-time-life-on-israels-frontline-with-gaza.

²¹ A/78/502, para. 8.

expansive approach to targeting,²² including apparently considering civilian members of Hamas not directly participating in hostilities, as well as civilian objects belonging to Hamas, as legitimate targets, in violation of the principle of distinction. Reports have also emerged that the Israeli military applied much broader targeting rules than previously.²³ Taken together, there is growing information not only of specific attacks that may amount to war crimes, but also of possible widespread and systematic unlawful targeting by Israel due to erroneous interpretations of international humanitarian law, possibly at the policy level.

30. OHCHR received reports of numerous incidents raising concerns about compliance with international humanitarian law. Three emblematic cases are included here. In those attacks, explosive weapons with wide-area effects were used in densely populated areas, resulting in enormous destruction and very high numbers of fatalities. In those cases, the strikes were attributable to Israel, raising, on available information, serious concerns in relation to their lawfulness.²⁴ Launching an indiscriminate attack that results in the death of or injuries to civilians, or an attack in the knowledge that it will cause excessive incidental civilian loss, injury or damage, is a war crime.²⁵

31. On 9 October 2023, between 10.30 a.m. and 11.30 a.m., massive explosions were reported at Al Trance Street in the Jabalya Camp, in North Gaza, an overcrowded and especially dense neighbourhood. The explosions completely destroyed two multistorey buildings and severely damaged many other surrounding buildings. OHCHR verified that at least 39 people had been killed, including 11 children and 1 woman, and received information of an additional 20 fatalities. Reportedly, no warnings were issued, which is consistent with people going about their regular business in the then busy market.

32. Based on a review of the available documentation of the aftermath of that incident, those strikes appeared to use one or two GBU-31 air-dropped munitions due to the extent of the damage and the ground subsidence, indicating that Israel had carried out the strikes. The GBU-31 is a large, heavy munition used to penetrate through several floors of concrete, which can completely collapse tall structures.²⁶ It is unclear what the specific military objective was. Israel did not make any public pronouncement on that attack.

33. On 25 October 2023, at approximately 4.30 p.m., large explosions rocked the Al Yarmouk neighbourhood, in Gaza City, leading to extensive destruction and damage and hundreds of casualties. An area of at least 5,700 m² was almost flattened, with at least seven structures, including a residential high-rise, completely destroyed and other buildings showing signs of significant damage. OHCHR has verified that 91 persons were killed, including 39 children and 28 women, and received information on an additional 7 fatalities.

34. Based on an assessment of the dimensions of the structures destroyed and the crater sizes, several GBU-31 air-dropped munitions were likely used, indicating that Israel carried out the strikes. On 26 October 2023, the Israel Defense Forces stated that it had attacked 250 targets the previous day, but did not reference that specific attack.²⁷ It is unclear what the specific military objective was.

35. On 31 October 2023, at approximately 2.20 p.m., the Israel Defense Forces hit a residential block in the densely populated Jabalya Camp, resulting in extensive damage, with at least 10 structures destroyed and 10 more badly damaged. OHCHR verified that 23 persons had been killed, including 11 children and 2 women, and received information of an additional 63 fatalities.²⁸

36. The Israel Defense Forces confirmed that they had carried out the strikes, stating that they killed “Ibrahim Biari, the Commander of Hamas’ Central Jabaliya Battalion”, who had ²² See <https://twitter.com/IDF/status/1712282365924343910>.

²³ See www.972mag.com/mass-assassination-factory-israel-calculated-bombing-gaza.

²⁴ OHCHR sent a letter to Israel in respect of these events dated 7 December 2023, but received no response.

²⁵ Henckaerts and Doswald-Beck, Customary International Humanitarian Law, rule 156.

²⁶ See www.af.mil/About-Us/Fact-Sheets/Display/Article/104572/joint-direct-attack-munition-gbu-313238.

²⁷ See <https://twitter.com/idfonline/status/1717442508563636455> (in Hebrew).

²⁸ See www.wsj.com/world/middle-east/israeli-airstrike-hamas-commander-civilian-deaths-3b6be664.

allegedly been involved in the attacks on 7 October 2023. Moreover, the Israel Defense Forces stated that a large number of terrorists who were with Biari had been killed and underground terror infrastructure had collapsed after the strike.²⁹ It is unclear if Ibrahim Biari was targeted in the tunnels or above ground. Based on analysis of the level of damage and the crater sizes, the strike likely used at least four GBU-32s, although use of the larger GBU-31 cannot be discounted.

37. The use of a GBU-31 or a GBU-32, in such densely populated areas in the middle of residential neighbourhoods when extensive civilian harm would be foreseeable, raises very serious concerns that those attacks were disproportionate and/or indiscriminate, and that no or insufficient precautions were taken.

38. According to reports, no warning was given, nor any effort made to evacuate the residential buildings. A number of means may have helped reduce civilian casualties, notably a different choice of weapon to achieve the same effect with more limited destructive effect, as well as, for instance, a change in the timing of the attack, the use of air-raid sirens, flyovers, a “knock on the roof” or warnings to civilians at the scene to evacuate the vicinity.

39. The Israeli Defence Forces have used weapons with a more limited radius of damage and impact that could have been used for a specific target, such as part of a building used as a military objective. If the targets were combatants and the concern was that they would flee, then serious questions arise regarding how such strikes could be proportionate and why such wide-area-effect munitions were used to target individuals given the risks of such enormous civilian harm. The use of such weapons in densely populated areas to target a military objective beneath buildings raises serious concerns about how such attacks comply with the principles of proportionality and precaution, given the foreseeability of the extensive loss of civilian life. That is particularly the case when Israel can accurately assess the likely associated wide-area effects, notably in terms of civilian harm, that result from repeatedly using those weapons in such densely populated areas.

40. There was widespread damage to roads and essential infrastructure, such as power systems and distribution networks, water storage tanks, pipes, supply networks and drainage channels, as well as bakeries and water wells, which are indispensable to the survival of the population. In combination with the extreme restrictions on humanitarian access, those attacks led to a rapid deterioration in access to food and water and the beginning of a breakdown of sanitation and other essential services.

41. By 31 October 2023, 11 bakeries had been struck and destroyed, with only 9 bakeries left operational.³⁰ People queued for hours at the few remaining bakeries while being exposed to air strikes.

42. On 24 October 2023 at approximately 11.50 p.m., an Israeli air-dropped munition appears to have struck the New Al Maghazi Bakery. That was, at that time, the only bakery in Al Maghazi Camp, which ordinarily has a population of approximately 33,000 persons, not counting displacement from North Gaza and Gaza City.³¹ Strikes also damaged water wells, including two in Nuseirat on 30 October 2023.³²

43. Gaza witnessed an unprecedented number and scale of attacks striking hospitals, religious and cultural sites³³ and schools. Israel claimed that Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades and other armed groups used civilian infrastructure, such as hospitals and shelters, or tunnels underneath them, to conduct military operations. If armed groups did so with the intention of using protected places or the presence of civilians or persons hors de combat to prevent their military assets from being attacked, that would constitute a violation of the prohibition on the

²⁹ See <https://t.me/idfofficial/4826>; and www.reuters.com/graphics/ISRAEL-PALESTINIANS/GAZA-JABALIA/byprdygje.

³⁰ See www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-25.

³¹ See www.unrwa.org/where-we-work/gaza-strip/maghazi-camp.

³² See www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-25.

³³ Between 7 and 31 October 2023, there were reportedly 29 hits on or in the vicinities of hospitals, at least 25 mosques were reportedly hit and destroyed and 3 churches were partially damaged.

use of human shields and would amount to a war crime. That would not, however, justify indiscriminate or disproportionate attacks by Israeli security forces.

44. As of 31 October 2023, the United Nations estimated that more than 62 per cent of the population of Gaza had been displaced, forcing approximately 1.4 million persons into overcrowded, unsanitary conditions without adequate access to the essential services that Israel, as the occupying Power, is legally obligated to provide or, at the very least in relation to areas not under its full control, not to raise obstacles to access. Those conditions continued to deteriorate significantly after the reporting period.³⁴

45. That displacement resulted not only from the conduct of hostilities and extremely heavy bombardment of Gaza by Israel, but also due to the evacuation orders issued by Israel and the conditions it imposed that pushed the population further south.

46. At approximately midnight on 12 October 2023, the Israel Defense Forces ordered about 1.1 million people in northern Gaza to evacuate south of Wadi Gaza within 24 hours, ahead of military operations, precipitating a mass flux of people south, even as air bombardment continued. The Israel Defense Forces said they would establish a humanitarian corridor, but people were reportedly killed while fleeing, the “corridors” were frequently shut at short notice and were unilaterally declared, so they could never be fully safe.³⁵

47. International law requires that any lawful temporary evacuation by the occupying Power, for the security of the population or imperative military reasons, must be accompanied by the provision of proper accommodation, carried out under satisfactory conditions of hygiene, health, safety and nutrition, and all possible measures must be taken to ensure family members are not separated. There appears to have been no attempt by Israel to comply with that obligation towards the 1.1 million ordered to evacuate. People were required to travel at least part of the journey on foot and no support was provided for those with limited mobility, older persons, persons with disabilities, pregnant women, families with young children, the injured and the sick.

48. Even an initially lawful evacuation that lasts longer than strictly required for the security of the population or imperative military reasons is a violation of the prohibition of forcible transfer, which is a war crime. The Israeli security forces continued their insistence on evacuating northern Gaza up until the end of the reporting period and beyond. Concerns have been raised regarding whether Israel may also have been seeking to impose a longer term security “buffer zone” through the evacuation orders. The continued denial of sufficient water, food, medicine and other basic items and services to the population in the north, the hindering of humanitarian access, the failure to restore water supplies in the north, mass destruction of civilian homes and infrastructure and the continued orders to go south point, in combination, to risks of forcible transfer on a wide scale.

49. Women and children, comprising more than two thirds of the casualties, disproportionately bore the brunt of the conflict; maternal, newborn and child health services were severely restricted and there was thus an increased risk of malnutrition, disease and death.³⁶

50. The aftermath of the atrocities carried out on 7 October 2023 has been marked by extremely dangerous rhetoric by persons of authority on both sides, at times potentially amounting to incitement to human rights violations and even atrocity crimes. At a minimum, they have contributed to a toxic atmosphere within which violence and discrimination have flourished. Senior Israeli politicians and military leaders issued statements that dehumanized

³⁴ See www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-reported-impact-day-92. Hamas has in turn abdicated its obligations to the civilian population; see www.latimes.com/opinion/story/2023-12-09/israel-gaza-hamas-united-nations-humanitarian-relief.

³⁵ See www.ochaopt.org/content/hostilities-gaza-strip-and-israel-flash-update-8.

³⁶ See www.who.int/news/item/03-11-2023-women-and-newborns-bearing-the-brunt-of-the-conflict-in-gaza-un-agencies-warn.

Palestinians,³⁷ implied international humanitarian law was not to be respected,³⁸ indicated that operations constituted a “Gaza Nakba”,³⁹ in which Palestinians in Gaza would be permanently displaced, and made violent and dehumanizing religious references, including a statement from the Prime Minister that: “You must remember what Amalek has done to you, says our Holy Bible, and we do remember, and we are fighting.”⁴⁰

51. Hamas did not express regret for the events of 7 October 2023, with its leaders threatening on several occasions to repeat the attacks. For instance, on 24 October 2023, a senior Hamas official asserted that “the Al-Aqsa Deluge [the name Hamas gave its operation of 7 October 2023] is just the first time, and there will be a second, a third, a fourth”.⁴¹

52. Those statements on both sides, in the context of the concurrent use of Israeli military force in Gaza, the killing of thousands of Palestinians in these operations, the deprivation of access to essential necessities, and the forced displacement of almost the entire population of Gaza, as well as the killings of persons in Israel, the holding of hostages in Gaza and the reported commission of rape, sexual assault and torture by all sides, increased the risks of atrocity crimes during the reporting period.

B. Measures of collective punishment in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem

53. Israeli practices in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, that may amount to collective punishment increased in number and diversified in kind.⁴² Numerous actions taken by Israeli security forces after 7 October 2023 in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, including mass arrests, ill-treatment and disproportionate restrictions on movement, appear arbitrary and often punitive in nature.

54. Israeli authorities continued punitive demolitions of the family homes of alleged Palestinian attackers in a discriminatory manner,⁴³ destroying 21 residential structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and forcibly evicting 101 Palestinians (56 men and boys and 47 women and girls, including 41 children).⁴⁴ Punitive demolitions disproportionately affect Palestinian women and girls.⁴⁵

55. Israeli security forces appeared to deliberately target and destroy civilian infrastructure. For example, an Israeli security forces operation in Jenin Camp between 3 and 5 July 2023 displaced at least 62 families comprising 283 persons, including 109 children. During the operation, Israeli security forces bulldozers severely damaged roads, major water pipes and the electricity network, resulting in power and water shortages, directly affecting at least 1,880 families.⁴⁶

56. After 7 October 2023, Israel imposed and increased systematic, discriminatory restrictions on the movement of Palestinians across the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, which remained in place beyond 31 October 2023, sharply restricting freedom of movement in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.⁴⁷ The movement restrictions and closures

³⁷ See www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/defense-minister-announces-complete-siege-of-gaza-no-power-food-or-fuel/; and www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/cogat-chief-addresses-gazans-you-wanted-hell-you-will-get-hell/.

³⁸ See www.timesofisrael.com/liveblog_entry/gallant-israel-moving-to-full-offense-gaza-will-never-return-to-what-it-was/.

³⁹ See <https://twitter.com/hahauenstein/status/1723441134221869453>.

⁴⁰ See www.theguardian.com/us-news/2023/nov/13/biden-lawsuit-alleged-failure-prevent-genocide-israel-palestine.

⁴¹ See www.timesofisrael.com/hamas-official-says-group-aims-to-repeat-oct-7-onslaught-many-times-to-destroy-israel/.

⁴² A/75/336, para. 23.

⁴³ A/78/502, para. 26.

⁴⁴ As reported by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁴⁵ CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, paras. 32 and 33; and A/HRC/46/63, para. 10.

⁴⁶ As reported by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

⁴⁷ See www.bloomberg.com/news/features/2023-11-26/israel-hamas-war-west-bank-living-in-fear-with-killings-displaced.

prevent access to services, including medical treatment, and contribute to food shortages. In the closed area of H2 in Hebron, Israel placed 7,000 Palestinians under strict curfew until 21 October 2023, closing all shops and services. Israel imposed a complete closure on Huwwara, and imposed restrictions on access to Jerusalem's Old City and the Aqsa Mosque compound.

C. Unlawful killings and injuries in the context of law enforcement

57. Israel escalated the use of lethal force against Palestinians across the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, often in situations in which its use constituted arbitrary deprivation of life. During the reporting period, Israeli security forces killed 338 Palestinians (including 251 men, 81 boys, 3 women, and 3 girls). Between 7 and 31 October 2023, Israeli security forces killed at least 116 Palestinians (including 38 children, 1 woman and at least 2 persons with disabilities), more than a third of the total fatalities for the year. Prior to 7 October 2023, unprecedented numbers of Palestinians had already been killed since United Nations records began.

58. Israeli security forces applied military means and tactics to law enforcement operations, such as the use of unmanned aerial systems and armed vehicles, attack helicopters, anti-tank missiles, shoulder-fired explosive projectiles and other weaponry designed for the conduct of hostilities, and the deployment of snipers on roofs, in highly populated and busy urban areas.⁴⁸ Israeli security forces failed to take steps to de-escalate situations of confrontation or to apply graduated use of force. Killings resulting from such unlawful use of force amount to arbitrary deprivation of life and, depending on the circumstances, may constitute wilful killings.⁴⁹

59. In one case, between 3 and 5 July 2023, Israeli security forces killed 13 Palestinians in Jenin Camp, including 4 children, in an operation using air strikes, heavy deployment of personnel on the ground, bulldozers, snipers and special forces, in broad daylight and in highly populated areas. Children showed signs of severe psychological distress after being trapped with their families without electricity and limited or no food and water and witnessing fatalities and injuries of other children.

60. The situation deteriorated severely after 7 October 2023 with the increased use of unmanned aerial vehicles and unmanned aerial systems, and other air strikes (reported on at least five occasions by 31 October 2023) in refugee camps and other densely populated areas during operations in the Northern West Bank, resulting in at least 27 Palestinian fatalities, including 11 children, and extensive infrastructural damage. Such cases raise fresh concerns about unlawful use of force, violations of the obligations to plan law enforcement operations to minimize the use of force and the threat to life, and possible wilful killing.

61. On 19 and 20 October 2023, during an operation in the Nur Shams Camp, Israeli security forces killed 14 Palestinians, including 6 children. The presence of Israeli security forces in the Camp triggered clashes and an Israeli soldier was killed. Reportedly, shortly afterwards, Israeli forces launched an air strike on an area far from any exchange of fire, killing two armed Palestinians and eight unarmed Palestinians not involved in clashes or confrontations, including four children. Reflecting a growing pattern, Israeli security forces prevented Palestinian paramedics from accessing the injured. In addition to those killed in the strike, four male Palestinians were killed by Israeli gunfire, including an 11-year-old boy shot from inside an Israeli military vehicle as he was throwing stones and a 16-year-old boy fatally hit by three bullets while walking with his father.

62. Throughout the period, and escalating after 7 October 2023, Israeli security forces used unnecessary or disproportionate lethal force killing several Palestinians, in possible wilful killings. On 22 October 2023, Israeli security forces shot and killed a 20-year-old Palestinian man at the entrance of Al 'Arrub Camp after he hit the leg of an Israeli security forces officer, seemingly by accident.⁵⁰

⁴⁸ A/78/502.

⁴⁹ Ibid., paras. 13–25.

⁵⁰ Video on file.

63. Some 84 children, 81 boys and 3 girls, were killed by Israeli security forces in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, including 38 boys since 7 October 2023. At least 28 were hit above the waist, including 14 in the head, raising concerns that lethal force may have been used intentionally. Israeli security forces also used unnecessary lethal force leading to the death of children. For example, on 19 June 2023, while Israeli security forces were withdrawing from Jenin Camp, an Israeli security forces soldier shot and killed a 14-year-old Palestinian girl in front of her house.

64. Israeli security forces put Palestinians, including children,⁵¹ in danger, including by appearing to use them as human shields. In one example, on 3 July 2023, they appeared to use two Palestinian men as shields during an operation in Jenin Camp. Such acts would constitute a violation of the positive obligation of Israel to ensure the right to life⁵² and may amount to the war crime of hostage-taking in the context of occupation.

65. Israeli security forces continued to use firearms unnecessarily or in a disproportionate manner, including in response to Palestinians engaged in throwing stones or Molotov cocktails. On 13 October 2023, Israeli security forces killed a 16-year-old Palestinian boy while he was throwing Molotov cocktails during confrontations with Israeli security forces in Al 'Isawiya, East Jerusalem.⁵³ On 30 October 2023, Israeli security forces shot and killed a 23-year-old Palestinian man with a disability following a students' protest in Yatta, Hebron Governorate, even though he did not pose any imminent threat.⁵⁴

66. In the vast majority of cases monitored by OHCHR, use of force by Israeli security forces did not comply with the requirements of legality, necessity and proportionality.⁵⁵ The intentional killing of protected persons or the use of firearms causing the death of persons not posing an imminent threat to life or a threat to cause serious injury constitute arbitrary deprivation of life⁵⁶ and may also amount to wilful killing, a war crime in the context of occupation.⁵⁷

D. Undue restrictions on freedoms of expression and association

67. Restrictions by Israel on the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association intensified, with an escalation in its attempts to silence advocates for Palestinian rights,⁵⁸ particularly after 7 October 2023. Journalists were killed in record numbers during hostilities in Gaza, marking a deterioration in an already lethal environment. Israel had already failed to hold anyone accountable for the killing of 20 Palestinian and foreign journalists since 2001.⁵⁹

68. Palestinian journalists and bloggers risked intimidation and arrest under broadly defined charges of "incitement" or "terrorism", which increased after 7 October 2023, raising concerns of violations of the right to freedom of expression. Israeli security forces arrested Palestinians following publication or consumption of social media content related to 7 October 2023 and the conflict in Gaza, affecting in a disproportionate and discriminatory manner the right of Palestinians to freedom of expression, including access to information.

69. Despite a marked increase in hate speech and incitement to hatred and violence against Palestinians,⁶⁰ including Palestinian citizens of Israel, no arrests were reported. Proposals were advanced in the Knesset to broaden the scope of the Counter-Terrorism Law 2016,

⁵¹ A/78/502, para. 22.

⁵² A/HRC/52/75, para. 17.

⁵³ Video on file.

⁵⁴ See <https://x.com/Nawajaa/status/1719749284386451939?s=20>.

⁵⁵ Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, arts. 5 and 9.

⁵⁶ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, art. 6.

⁵⁷ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 8 (2) (a) (i) and (c) (i).

⁵⁸ A/78/502, paras. 48–55.

⁵⁹ See <https://cpj.org/reports/2023/05/deadly-pattern-20-journalists-died-by-israeli-military-fire-in-22-years-no-one-has-been-held-accountable>.

⁶⁰ See <https://7amleh.org/2023/10/12/7amleh-documents-19-000-violent-tweets-in-hebrew-on-x>; and www.nytimes.com/2023/11/15/world/middleeast/israel-gaza-war-rhetoric.html.

targeting Palestinians' rights to information and freedom of expression, and potentially entailing unlawful and discriminatory surveillance.⁶¹

70. The designation, in 2021, by Israel of seven well-established Palestinian civil society organizations as "terrorist" or "unlawful" remained in place, despite a lack of evidence presented by Israel to support such a categorization. As a result, the organizations lived with a constant threat of closure and the arrest of their staff and their legal representatives. Civil society more broadly has faced the possibility of restrictions from funders since 7 October 2023, at a time when support for the communities suffering, following the escalation, including detainees and prisoners, is ever more critical.⁶²

71. Palestinian duty bearers in Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, continued to repress criticism of authority and to fail to adequately address hate speech and incitement to violence against Israelis. Palestinian security forces used unnecessary and disproportionate force, including live ammunition and beatings, to disperse protests in Ramallah and other West Bank cities on 17 and 18 October 2023, during which one man and one boy died after having been injured by Palestinian security forces. Palestinian organizations reported that several others were arrested, beaten up during arrest and criminally prosecuted, with legal proceedings pending as of 31 October 2023.

E. Gender-based violence

72. There are numerous reports of rape, sexual violence and abuse of women and girls during the attacks of 7 and 8 October 2023 in southern Israel.⁶³ Those reports referred to several testimonies regarding gang rape, mutilation and murder by members of the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades at the Nova festival, accounts from first responders according to whom women and at least one girl showed signs of sexual violence and audiovisual material, including video circulated by Hamas, in which an Israeli woman soldier appears stripped naked to her underwear and unconscious or dead is being paraded in Gaza. A non-governmental Israeli civil commission on crimes committed by Hamas against women and children was reportedly created to document gender-based violence committed against women and children. OHCHR has repeatedly asked Israeli authorities for access to monitor and document those allegations, but to date has received no response.

73. Arrests carried out by Israeli security forces after 7 October 2023 were often accompanied by beatings, ill-treatment and humiliation of Palestinian women and men, including acts of sexual assault, such as kicking genitals, and threats of rape. Testimonies from victims and eyewitnesses were corroborated by videos posted by Israeli soldiers on social media showing ill-treatment of Palestinians, including male detainees photographed or recorded on video being stripped naked or half-naked, blindfolded, handcuffed, physically abused and humiliated by Israeli soldiers.⁶⁴

74. LGBTQ+ persons across the Occupied Palestinian Territory continued to be subjected to discrimination and violence by their families, communities and authorities, with few or no avenues for protection, and limited access to services.⁶⁵ In the West Bank, OHCHR documented several cases of men arrested by Palestinian security forces for being gay and subjected them to beatings and ill-treatment, possibly amounting to torture, during interrogation and detention. Palestinian security forces also disclosed or threatened to disclose their sexual orientation to family members or other detainees, which in at least one case resulted in a man being sexually abused by other prisoners.

⁶¹ See www.adalah.org/en/content/view/10930, legislated after the reporting period.

⁶² See www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2023/11/european-governments-donors-discriminatory-funding-restrictions-to-palestinian-civil-society-risk-deepening-human-rights-crisis.

⁶³ See www.phr.org.il/en/gender-based-violence-eng.

⁶⁴ See www.haaretz.com/israel-news/2023-11-09/ty-article-magazine/.premium/growing-number-of-idf-soldiers-are-documenting-and-posting-their-own-abuse-of-palestinians/0000018b-ae60-dea2-a9bf-fefe96070000.

⁶⁵ A/HRC/52/75, paras. 37–39.

F. Arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment

75. Administrative detention and other forms of arbitrary detention by Israel of Palestinians skyrocketed in 2023.⁶⁶ By 31 October 2023, Israel held 6,704 “security” inmates, consisting of 2,313 sentenced prisoners, 2,321 remand detainees and 2,070 administrative detainees. Israel also held 105 persons as “unlawful combatants”, with no information available about their conditions of detention or the status of legal proceedings against them.⁶⁷ Israel has stopped all visits by the International Committee of the Red Cross to Palestinians in Israeli prisons.⁶⁸

76. After 7 October 2023, Israeli security forces conducted thousands of mass, reportedly pre-emptive, detentions of Palestinians, including political figures, community leaders, activists, such as women’s human rights defenders, journalists, students and family members of wanted persons. Between 8 and 31 October 2023, Israeli security forces arrested 1,760 Palestinians, including 145 women, 55 children and 17 journalists, in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and issued 872 administrative detention orders.⁶⁹ Arrests were often brutal, accompanied by beatings, humiliation and inhuman and degrading treatment, in some cases amounting to torture.⁷⁰

77. At least 4,000 Palestinians from Gaza residing in Israel lawfully were detained incommunicado after Israel revoked their medical treatment and work permits by 11 October 2023. Israel failed to provide information on their fate for weeks or to bring them before a court and charge them, causing their families and loved ones to suffer. A group described, to OHCHR, being held in inhuman conditions, including threats of rape, and without clothes or access to toilets and being deprived of food and water.

78. On 1 February 2023, Israel announced measures to worsen detention conditions for Palestinians.⁷¹ After 7 October 2023, the Government further restricted access to food, water, sanitation, electricity, medical treatment, media and information, family visits and the right to consult with legal representatives. Prisoners reported severe food shortages, poor living, hygiene and health conditions, including violence against them and other security prisoners, leading to serious injuries, which remained untreated. Many detainees, including children, the elderly and women, were subjected to violence, which in some cases may have amounted to torture or other ill-treatment.

79. By 31 October 2023, five Palestinian men had died in Israeli detention, including Khader Adnan, who died in May 2023.⁷² Twenty-five-year-old Aarafat Yasser Hamdan, reportedly insulin-dependent, was detained during mass arrests carried out by Israeli security forces on 22 October 2023, in Beit Sira, Ramallah; he was pronounced dead on 24 October 2023. He was held for at least 12 hours with his head covered by a thick wool cap at Ofer and Etzion detention facilities. His death was reportedly being investigated. On 23 October 2023, the Israel Prison Service announced the death in custody of Umar Hamza Daraghme, a 58-year-old Palestinian Hamas leader from Tubas. Similar cases were reported after the reporting period.

80. The Palestinian General Intelligence Service allegedly continued its practice of arbitrary detention, including of political activists, public and religious figures and politically active university students. OHCHR continued to document cases of torture or other ill-treatment perpetrated by the Palestinian General Intelligence Service.

⁶⁶ See A/HRC/52/75.

⁶⁷ See <https://hamoked.org/prisoners-charts.php>; data provided by Israel Prison Service, includes all “security inmates”, including in the West Bank.

⁶⁸ See www.mako.co.il/news-military/6361323ddea5a810/Article-9362f7b9c078b81026.htm (in Hebrew).

⁶⁹ See www.facebook.com/freedom2pal/posts/pfbid02nuF4sorw6ZVv2Vxd3hJVL8o5jNVGXuyHybd8vLzji iqRDvKuN29WTdX4r3AYdrxGl (in Arabic).

⁷⁰ See www.timesofisrael.com/idf-soldiers-film-themselves-abusing-humiliating-west-bank-palestinians.

⁷¹ A/78/502, para. 39.

⁷² A/78/502, para. 38.

III. Update on accountability

81. In the context of hostilities in Gaza, neither party has taken steps to ensure comprehensive accountability for serious violations committed during previous escalations, each characterized by long-standing patterns of violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law by all parties. As of 31 October 2023, OHCHR was unaware of steps taken during the reporting period by any party to ensure accountability for actual or potential violations of international humanitarian law, including alleged war crimes, perpetrated in the context of hostilities.

82. Impunity also remained pervasive for incidents of unlawful use of force by Israeli security forces outside the context of the current hostilities, both in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and along the Gaza fence. Between 1 January 2017 and 31 October 2023, 934 Palestinians (including 218 children) were killed by Israeli security forces in law enforcement operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. OHCHR is aware of only 105 criminal investigations opened in relation to deaths prior to October 2022, of which at least 33 were closed without further action and only 5 resulted in indictments, 3 of which led to convictions. OHCHR is unaware of any indictment being made during the reporting period.

83. International human rights law requires that all deaths and serious injuries caused by the use of force in law enforcement operations be effectively investigated.⁷³ The investigation policy of the Israeli security forces, claimed to apply in the West Bank since 2011, requires an immediate investigation into operations that result in death, except when the incident involves “actual combat”, including any exchange of fire, conflating rules applicable to law enforcement with those applicable to hostilities.⁷⁴ On 6 July 2023, the Jerusalem District Court acquitted⁷⁵ a border police officer who had killed Iyad Al-Hallaq, a 32-year-old autistic Palestinian man from East Jerusalem, on 30 May 2020, even though he was not posing a threat when he was killed. The Court held that the accused had made a split-second decision, which was “an integral part of military activity”, conflating the two regimes on use of force, applying the “combat exemption” to law enforcement⁷⁶ and thus exemplifying the generalized impunity enjoyed by Israeli security forces in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

84. As far as OHCHR is aware, none of the killings emanating from unlawful use of force documented in the present report is under investigation, resulting in persistent impunity for unlawful use of lethal force by Israeli security forces against Palestinians.⁷⁷ The systematic, discriminatory failure by Israel to effectively and promptly investigate such incidents furthers impunity, leading in turn to further Palestinian casualties.

85. While certain complaint channels exist for Palestinians living under the effective control of the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza, there is rarely any action in relation to accountability. Despite follow-up by OHCHR, no substantive progress was made in the trial regarding the killing of Nizar Banat, an opponent of the Palestinian Authority. The 14 individuals accused of killing him remained at liberty, while intimidation of prosecution witnesses continued.⁷⁸ Impunity for gender-based violence remains pervasive in both the West Bank and Gaza.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

86. The situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory was already dire prior to 7 October 2023, given a 56-year occupation, a 16-year blockade of Gaza, increasing

⁷³ A/HRC/52/75, para. 53.

⁷⁴ Ibid., paras. 53–55.

⁷⁵ See <https://img.mako.co.il/2023/07/06/policedin.pdf?Partner=interlink> (in Hebrew).

⁷⁶ A/HRC/46/22, paras. 17 and 18.

⁷⁷ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 26.

⁷⁸ A/HRC/52/75, para. 61. No reply was received to the note verbale of 10 July 2023 from OHCHR to the Permanent Observer Mission of the State of Palestine to the United Nations Office and other international organizations in Geneva, expressing concerns about the trial.

State and settler-violence against Palestinians in the West Bank, as well as long-standing discriminatory systems of control over Palestinians.

87. The shocking attacks by Palestinian armed groups on 7 and 8 October 2023 and the ensuing massive military response by Israel causing unprecedented destruction and suffering of civilians in Gaza have led to an appalling humanitarian crisis. The means and methods of warfare chosen by Israel have led to massive suffering of Palestinians, including through the killing of civilians on a wide scale, extensive repeated displacement, destruction of homes and the denial of sufficient food and other essentials. Clear violations of international humanitarian law, including possible war crimes, have been committed by all parties. Further investigations would be needed to establish whether other crimes under international law have been committed. There must be accountability – on all sides. The entrenched impunity that OHCHR has reported on for many years cannot persist. Justice is a prerequisite for ending the cycles of violence for Palestinians and Israelis to be able to take meaningful steps towards peace.

88. The High Commissioner calls upon all parties to the conflict to implement a ceasefire on human rights and humanitarian grounds, to ensure full respect for international law, including international humanitarian law and international human rights law, and to ensure accountability for violations and abuses.

89. The High Commissioner in particular calls upon the Palestinian armed groups in Gaza:

(a) To repress and punish all violations of international law, including international humanitarian law, committed by their members on and since 7 October 2023;

(b) To ensure the humane treatment and immediate release of all hostages, and to cease firing indiscriminate projectiles and co-location of military objectives and civilians with intent to prevent targeting of military objectives.

90. The High Commissioner in particular calls upon Israel:

(a) To immediately end all practices of collective punishment, including lifting its blockade and closures – and the “complete siege” – of Gaza, and urgently ensure immediate access to humanitarian and commercial goods throughout Gaza, commensurate with the immense humanitarian needs;

(b) To ensure that Israeli security forces immediately take steps to comply with international humanitarian law in the conduct of hostilities, including through the application of targeting rules and policies that fully comply with the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution in attack, cessation of the use of explosive weapons with wide-area effects in populated areas, and protection for hospitals and other civilian infrastructure essential for the survival of the civilian population;

(c) To repress and punish all violations of international law, including international humanitarian law, ensure prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and effective investigations into all incidents carried out by Israeli forces that have led to serious violations of international law, including after 7 October 2023, and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable and that victims are provided with redress;

(d) To ensure that all Palestinians forcibly displaced from Gaza are allowed to return to their homes by creating safe conditions and fulfil its responsibilities as an occupying Power in this regard;

(e) To ensure that the rules of engagement of its security forces and their application are fully consistent with international human rights law, including use of firearms in law enforcement activities only in cases of imminent threat of death or serious injury as a measure of last resort, and plan and implement law enforcement operations to minimize the threat to life and serious injury of the protected population;

(f) To conduct prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and effective investigations into all incidents of use of force by Israeli security forces in the West

Bank, including East Jerusalem, that have led to the death or injury of Palestinians and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable and victims provided with redress;

(g) To immediately end administrative detention and other forms of detention that amount to arbitrary detention and ensure that all detainees are released unless promptly charged and fairly tried applying non-discriminatory laws; and ensure that detention conditions strictly conform with international norms and standards and end all practices that may amount to torture or other ill-treatment;

(h) To urgently revoke the designations of Palestinian human rights and humanitarian organizations as “terrorist” or “unlawful” organizations;

(i) To end the 56-year occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, as part of a broader process towards achieving equality, justice, democracy, non-discrimination and the fulfilment of all human rights for all Palestinians.

91. The High Commissioner also calls upon Palestinian authorities to protect the rights of all Palestinians without discrimination, including discrimination based on gender, sexual orientation or gender identity, and address effectively all cases of gender-based violence.

92. The High Commissioner calls upon all duty bearers:

(a) To immediately end all practices that may amount to torture or ill-treatment, including sexual violence;

(b) To take immediate steps to prevent, or otherwise repress and punish, hate speech and all incitement to hatred and violence;

(c) To put an end to impunity and conduct prompt, independent, impartial, thorough, effective and transparent investigations into all alleged violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law committed on 7 October 2023 and subsequently, including into allegations of crimes under international law; ensure cooperation with international and transnational mechanisms for accountability, including the International Criminal Court; and ensure that all victims and their families have access to effective remedies, gender-responsive reparation and truth, as well as psychological support to victims of sexual violence;

(d) To take measures to prevent and redress all forms of gender-based violence, including in the domestic sphere, and ensure that the perpetrators of sexual and gender-based violence are prosecuted and appropriately sentenced;

(e) To ensure that the rights to freedom of expression and association are respected and protected and that civil society actors, including women human rights defenders, can conduct their legitimate activities safely, freely and without harassment.

93. The High Commissioner calls upon all States and international organizations:

(a) To exert their influence to stop violations of international humanitarian law by all parties to the conflict and prevent their further commission, and not to enable such violations;

(b) To support and ensure sufficient funding for civil society to enable it to respond to the grave humanitarian and human rights situation;

(c) To encourage Israel to cooperate with OHCHR and to issue visas to its international staff, ensuring OHCHR has access throughout Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory to monitor and document all violations of international human rights and international humanitarian law.

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/9/26
1 September 2008

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Ninth session
Agenda item 7

HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN PALESTINE AND OTHER
OCCUPIED ARAB TERRITORIES

Report of the high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun established under Council resolution S-3/1

* The present report was submitted late for processing owing to the dates of the mission.

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs	Page
I. INTRODUCTION	1 - 2	3
II. BACKGROUND	3 - 14	3
A. Implementation of the mandate	3 - 4	3
B. Mandate	5	3
C. Methodology	6 - 9	4
D. Applicable law	10 - 14	5
III. THE SHELLING OF BEIT HANOUN ON 8 NOVEMBER 2006 AND ITS CONTEXT	15 - 43	6
A. Context	15 - 23	6
B. The events of 8 November 2006 and immediate aftermath	24 - 33	9
C. The Israeli response and explanations for the shelling	34 - 42	11
IV. VICTIMS AND SURVIVORS	43 - 71	13
A. The protection of civilians in conflict and the right to life	45 - 51	14
B. The situation of victims and the needs of survivors	52 - 71	16
V. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS	72 - 82	21
 Annex
Schedule of the high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun		24

I. INTRODUCTION

1. At its third special session, held on 15 November 2006, the Human Rights Council adopted resolution S-3/1, in which the Council among other things, called for a high-level fact-finding mission to be established and for the mission to travel to the town of Beit Hanoun in the occupied Palestinian territory of Gaza, following Israeli military operations carried out there around 8 November 2006. The President of the Council appointed Archbishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa to lead the mission, and Professor Christine Chinkin of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as the sole other member of the mission. In accordance with the resolution, the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights provided the administrative, technical and logistical assistance required to enable the mission to fulfil its mandate.

2. The mission has submitted two interim reports to the Council, in which it outlined efforts undertaken to discharge its mandate (A/HRC/5/20). The present report is the final report of the mission, following its trip to Beit Hanoun in May 2008.

II. BACKGROUND

A. Implementation of the mandate

3. On three occasions, the mission attempted to travel to Beit Hanoun via Israel. Each of these attempts was frustrated by the refusal of the Government of Israel to cooperate with the mission (see A/HRC/5/20). The desire of the mission to travel via Israel was motivated by the experts' desire to meet with and hear the views of Israeli actors (Government, military and non-governmental), including individuals living in areas of southern Israel under the threat of rocket attack from Gaza. In the view of the mission, hearing and taking into account the views of these actors would, among other things, go some way towards redressing any imbalance in resolution S-3/1 perceived by the Government of Israel. In view of the unchanging attitude of the Government of Israel, the mission decided in January 2008 to travel to Beit Hanoun via Egypt.

4. The mission travelled to Beit Hanoun from 27 to 29 May 2008. Security considerations and the impact of the visit on day-to-day United Nations operations in Gaza limited the stay of the mission to two days and two nights in Gaza. The mission agenda, including the names of organizations and individuals with whom the mission met, is attached to the present report (see annex).

B. Mandate

5. The mission's core mandate was to travel to Beit Hanoun to assess the situation of victims; address the needs of survivors; and make recommendations on ways and means to protect Palestinian civilians against any further Israeli assaults. The experts construed this core mandate taking into account:

(a) The context provided by the resolution as a whole, with particular reference to collective punishment; the killing of civilians as a gross violation of human rights law and international humanitarian law; international humanitarian law applicable to medical personnel; and the destruction of homes, property and infrastructure in Beit Hanoun;

(b) The delay of 18 months before the mission could travel to Beit Hanoun and the changes in the physical and political environment in Beit Hanoun and Gaza in this period, most prominently the tightening of the Israeli blockade of Gaza;

(c) The rights-based definition of “victim”.

C. Methodology

6. In discharging its mandate, the mission employed a methodology under which it:

(a) Worked to ensure that its activities remained within its mandate;

(b) Placed the factual situation under review within a broader context of events in Gaza;

(c) Adopted an inclusive approach to receiving evidence, information and views from concerned parties;

(d) Focused on the direct testimony of witnesses and survivors of the shelling as well as inspection of the site;

(e) Analysed information received from an international law and human rights perspective;

(f) Sought to respect human rights norms in the execution of its mandate;

(g) Sought to keep concerned parties informed of developments in efforts to discharge its mandate.

7. The mission regrets that it received no formal input from the Israeli authorities, despite a number of requests. The mission made specific efforts to gather information in the public domain indicating relevant stances of the Government of Israel (including its military) and facts on which its positions are based. Information was also sought and received from Israeli non-governmental organizations.

8. The mission wishes to underline the importance of its travelling to Beit Hanoun to witness first-hand the situation of victims and survivors of the shelling, in particular to comprehend the deep distress of the victims of the shelling and of the population generated by the ongoing blockade. This depth of human suffering is only partially conveyed through the third-party reports on the situation. The mission felt it had to go to Gaza, even if reluctantly through Egypt, to express through its presence the solidarity of the international community with the suffering people, very much like the prophet Ezekiel sitting dumbfounded with his compatriots in their exile in Babylon, or the friends of Job in his suffering.

9. In line with its decision to receive input from all relevant actors, the mission met with senior members of Hamas while in Gaza. The mission also kept the Palestinian Authority apprised of its efforts through the Permanent Mission in Geneva and the office of the President in Ramallah.

D. Applicable law

10. In construing its mandate and the facts presented to it, the mission applied an international law framework, in particular international human rights law and international humanitarian law (Council resolution S-3/1, paras. 4 and 5).

11. Gaza is under the effective control of Israel and is thus occupied by it.¹ This control, including in the period since the disengagement of Israel in September 2005, has been described in a number of reports to the Council and to the General Assembly (see A/HRC/4/17). The mission was able to witness this control first-hand, not least in its own protracted difficulties in gaining access to the territory without Israeli cooperation. The mission also witnessed the constant surveillance of Gaza by Israeli forces, most strikingly from unmanned aerial drones. It was also able to see how Israel effectively controls basic aspects of the daily life of Gazans, notably through the fuel blockade in force when the mission visited the territory. The situation was described to the mission by one resident in the following terms: “Israel decides what Gazans eat for dinner, whether they walk or drive, whether their children go to school or not.”

12. As the occupying force, Israel has obligations towards the population in Gaza under both international human rights law and international humanitarian law, both of which are relevant to the shelling of Beit Hanoun. Israel is a party to six of the nine core international human rights instruments.² The long-standing position of United Nations human rights treaty bodies is that, as a State party to international human rights instruments, Israel continues to bear responsibility for implementing its human rights conventional obligations in the occupied Palestinian territory, to the extent that it is in effective control.³ This position is supported by the jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice which, in its advisory opinions on the South West Africa case and the legal consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory case, held that an occupying power remains responsible for fulfilling its obligations under the relevant human rights conventions in occupied territory.

¹ Democratic Republic of Congo v. Uganda, International Court of Justice, 2005, paras. 173-174.

² Israel ratified the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 3 January 1979; and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child on 3 October 1991.

³ See for example the concluding comments on Israel in the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (A/60/38), para. 243.

13. In terms of international humanitarian law, Israel, as the occupying power, has responsibilities under, inter alia, the Hague Regulations (accepted as customary international law) and the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.

14. The mission's mandate also encompasses the humanitarian law obligations of other parties to the conflict, the most relevant being militants launching rockets from Gaza into Israel (Council resolution S-3/1, para. 6). Under accepted customary international humanitarian law obligations, armed groups are bound by the obligations of common article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. They must respect and ensure respect of the principles of distinction, proportionality and the obligation to take the necessary precautions to avoid or minimize incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians and damage to civilian objects. Aiming rockets at civilian targets is a violation of this obligation, as would be endangering Palestinian civilians by launching rockets from or near civilians (for example in residential areas).

III. THE SHELLING OF BEIT HANOUN ON 8 NOVEMBER 2006 AND ITS CONTEXT

A. Context

15. Beit Hanoun is situated near the north-eastern border of the Gaza Strip, with more than 35,000 inhabitants, of which 70 per cent are registered refugees. As in the case of other Gazan towns and cities, the population density in the town is very high, with houses and apartment buildings of three to five stories predominating and a high number of inhabitants in each building. During its visit to the town, the mission was able to appreciate its dense urban nature, the surrounding fields, olive groves and greenhouses, as well as its proximity to the armistice line with Israel, which surrounds the town to the north, south and east at a distance of around 1,000 metres. The mission witnessed the widespread destruction of houses and property and the devastation of agricultural land in the border area as a result of Israeli incursions.

16. An accurate assessment of the shelling of Beit Hanoun on 8 November 2006 and its aftermath was impossible without considering the series of events which preceded it. These events to a large extent explain the fragile state in which the town and its residents found themselves on the morning of 8 November, as well as the adequacy of the response to those injured in the attack.

17. Following the elections for the Palestinian Legislative Council at the beginning of 2006, political, economic and social conditions deteriorated sharply across the occupied Palestinian territories, but particularly in Gaza. This situation has been described elsewhere in detail, particularly in the reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 (see A/HRC/4/17). Suffice it to say here that ordinary Palestinians are the main victims of this crisis. According to the World Bank, poverty (based on household income) has risen to almost 67 per cent of the population, with about 80 per cent relying on some form of United Nations humanitarian assistance.⁴

⁴ World Bank, West Bank and Gaza: Economic Developments and Prospects, March 2008.

18. Over the same period, increased military activity added a climate of fear for an already fragile population. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, from the disengagement until 9 November 2006, the Israeli military fired approximately 15,000 artillery shells and conducted more than 550 air strikes into the Gaza Strip. Israeli military attacks killed approximately 525 Gazans and injured 1,527.⁵ According to Israel, the majority of its military operations in Gaza are aimed at stopping rocket-launching activity.⁶ Over the same period, at least 1,700 Kassam rockets were fired into Israel by Palestinian militants, injuring 41 Israelis.⁷

19. Conflict reached a peak in the summer and autumn of 2006 with Israeli military incursions into Gaza, code-named “Summer Rains” and “Autumn Clouds” respectively, the latter focusing on Beit Hanoun in the week immediately prior to 8 November. From the large amount of information, including testimonies, received by the mission, it is clear that this operation traumatized the population of the town, severely weakened medical service delivery and obstructed freedom of movement, in particular in relation to the evacuation of the injured. During the incursion, the Israeli military fired 239 artillery shells and launched 66 air-to-ground missiles into Gaza.⁸ Israel enforced a curfew confining residents to their homes that was lifted only every second day for three to four hours. Hundreds of male residents aged between 16 and 40 were ordered from their homes and taken to an Israeli holding centre to the north of the town for questioning.⁸ The majority of electricity, water and telephone services in the town were cut; movement, including that of ambulances was restricted to prior authorization of the Israeli military; and Israeli military tanks and bulldozers destroyed scores of homes and other buildings, uprooted orchards and olive groves and dug up roads, water mains and sewage networks. Education services were also disrupted. Schools operated by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) serving nearly 10,500 pupils were shut down for a week. Estimates indicate that damage caused by the operation at over $23 million, including reconstruction or repair of over 1,000 housing units.⁹

⁵ Office for the Coordination in Humanitarian Affairs, Gaza Strip situation report, 9 November 2006.

⁶ Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs communiqué, “Beit Hanoun: a hub of terrorist activity”, 5 November 2006.

⁷ From November 2001 to the end of November 2007, 2,383 rockets hit southern Israel, killing 10 Israeli civilians and wounding 433, the majority being civilians. Intelligence and Terrorism Information Center at the Israel Intelligence Heritage and Commemoration Center.

⁸ Office for the Coordination in Humanitarian Affairs, Gaza Strip situation report, 9 November 2006.

⁹ Ibid., 13 November 2006.

20. Of particular relevance to the shelling on 8 November was the impact of the Autumn Clouds incursion on the health infrastructure of Beit Hanoun. According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the primary health-care system effectively ceased to function during the incursion as staff at the Ministry of Health, UNRWA and local non-governmental organization clinics were unable to reach their places of work.⁹ The hospital in Beit Hanoun was inaugurated barely five weeks before the incursion. According to the World Health Organization, it was not fully operational at the time of the incursion and was designed as a centre for primary care and triage.¹⁰ The mission heard testimony from the hospital Director, a surgeon, a nurse and an ambulance driver. They told of the 24-hour work of the hospital during the incursion in conditions without water, telephone and grid electricity. The already grave situation was compounded as up to 1,500 people sought refuge in the hospital on 3 November, putting excessive demands on hospital staff to provide food and sleeping facilities.¹¹ Access to and from the hospital was restricted by the Israeli military, hampering ambulances from fetching and transferring the injured. Two paramedics were killed during the military operation.¹²

21. During the incursion, Israeli military personnel occupied houses in Beit Hanoun for hours at a time,¹³ including the house of the Al-Athamna family, which was occupied twice; first for four hours, the second time for six. “They knew who slept in each room, they knew it was a family home”, reported one witness.

22. Accounts by United Nations relief agencies,¹⁴ international and Palestinian human rights groups¹⁵ put the number of Palestinians killed during the incursion (together with the victims of the 8 November attack) at between 77 and 82, including at least 39 civilians. Around 250 others were reportedly wounded, including at least 67 children and 58 women. One Israeli soldier died during the operation.

¹⁰ The facility includes 42 beds, 6 emergency beds, 2 operating rooms and a laboratory.

¹¹ UNRWA, Flash Appeal.

¹² WHO, Situation Report; Palestinian Centre for Human Rights, “Palestinian medical crews under attack”, May 2007.

¹³ UNRWA, Flash Appeal; Amnesty International, “Israel and the Occupied Territories: road to nowhere”, December 2006.

¹⁴ Office for the Coordination in Humanitarian Affairs, Gaza Strip situation report, 13 November 2006; UNRWA, Flash Appeal.

¹⁵ “Palestinian human rights groups denounce Beit Hanoun massacre”, statement by 11 Palestinian human rights organizations, 8 November 2006.

23. The mission concludes that the events preceding the shelling on 8 November (in particular the incursion of 1 to 7 November) had a direct and negative impact on the situation of victims and survivors of the shelling. The control exercised by the Israeli military over inhabitants was reaffirmed. Inhabitants of Beit Hanoun lived in a state of constant fear and anxiety and were traumatized by the deaths and injuries they witnessed, the destruction of property and the uncertainty as to what would occur next.

B. The events of 8 November 2006 and immediate aftermath

24. The mission received information about the shelling on 8 November of Beit Hanoun from a number of sources, including the direct testimony of witnesses and survivors, police and hospital staff. From the totality of this information and its corroborative strength, the mission discerned a number of facts, which are set out below. Despite the delay of 18 months, the recollection of witnesses and the depth of their emotion had little diminished. Similarly, the physical evidence of the attack appeared largely intact, as a consequence of both the enormous impact of a 155 mm shell in an urban area and the lack of significant repairs to damaged property. In some ways, the 18-month delay allowed the mission to make a more balanced assessment of the attack. Some victims of the attack who had been hospitalized in Israel or Egypt had returned and were available to meet with the mission. Victims and survivors were able to testify to the impact of the attack on themselves and their families during the 18 months since the shelling. The mission benefited from a number of assessments of the incident made by others, including United Nations agencies in Gaza. The present report cannot recount the stories of all victims and survivors; rather, its purpose is to draw on the accounts given to the mission to bring to the Council as accurate a picture as possible of the shelling and its ongoing impact on victims and survivors.

25. The shelling took place early on the morning of Wednesday, 8 November 2006, some 24 hours after the Israeli military withdrew from the town and concluded operation Autumn Clouds. Residents of Beit Hanoun, including the Al-Athamna family, were returning to normal life after the trauma of the incursion. Those interviewed by the mission spoke of the night of 7 November as being the first time they and their children could again “get a proper night’s sleep”. Another survivor noted that it was the first night she could bake bread. Another noted that it was the first time he could rise and pray at the mosque rather than at home.

26. At approximately 5.35 a.m., the first 155 mm shell from Israeli artillery hit a house in the heavily populated neighbourhood of al-Madakkha in northern Beit Hanoun. Over the following 30 minutes or so, a total of 12 shells struck an area of approximately 1.5 hectares along the western side of Hamad Street, which lies around 800 metres from the armistice line. The shells struck six houses as well as surrounding areas in Hamad Street and lanes between houses. Six shells fell on an area of 50 metres in diameter. The mission saw the extensive damage caused by the shells, including holes blasted through reinforced concrete walls and floors, and blast damage to surrounding buildings. Amateur video footage obtained by the mission shows the last three shells landing with intervals of around one minute and 15 seconds.

27. The victims of the shelling were either asleep in their homes or, as was the case with a number of the men, returning from morning prayer. Following the first shell, which hit a house killing and injuring people inside, most residents fled to the street. Once in the street, people congregated to assist those who had been injured. More shells then landed in the street and surrounding lanes, killing and injuring dozens more. A number of survivors ran into surrounding fields. Others indicated running towards the nearby Erez crossing, believing that the Israeli installation there would offer safety.

28. The testimony received by the mission paints a horrific scene. Woken by the first shell, families fled their homes and assembled in the street outside, where dead and injured persons already lay. One mother described being faced with one of her children with an open skull wound while trying to help another son as he scooped his intestines back into his abdomen. Another spoke of helping his injured father to the door of the house, only for him to be killed by a direct shell at the door. As people gathered and attempted to provide assistance to the injured, more shells landed in the street. There was, according to one witness, “no one left standing”. The nature of injuries caused by artillery shells meant the street was “strewn with limbs”. Children were decapitated and a mother worries for her surviving son who “saw his brother cut in half”.

29. Some time after the first shell landed, the injured started to arrive by private vehicle at the Beit Hanoun hospital, most having lost limbs or requiring amputation. Within a short amount of time, 30 to 40 injured people arrived at the hospital. The director of the hospital declared an emergency and called for ambulances from across Gaza to assist. The first ambulance to reach the scene of the shelling itself came under fire, the driver and assistant being forced to abandon the vehicle. Footage obtained by the mission of the scene in Beit Hanoun hospital as casualties from the shelling arrived showed an extremely disturbing scene of a small hospital crowded with medical staff, victims with blast injuries and their families. Medical staff interviewed by the mission described not only the trauma in dealing with the onslaught of casualties, but also of their exhaustion following their efforts during the Autumn Clouds incursion, as described above.

30. The shelling resulted in the immediate death or mortal wounding of 19 civilians, including seven children and six women. All but one of the victims were from a single family group, the Al-Athamna. Over 50 others were wounded during the attack.

31. A number of the more seriously injured required treatment that could not be provided in Gaza. Families of the injured ran directly to the Erez crossing to plead for Israeli approval to transport injured people to Israeli hospitals. According to survivors, approval to move some injured to Israeli hospitals was received only some 12 hours after the shelling. Survivors told how significant obstacles were placed in the way of individuals travelling to Israel for emergency treatment, in particular:

(a) The refusal by Israeli authorities in some cases to allow the injured to be accompanied by family members. This was particularly distressing in the case of the elderly and children who travelled without their closest relatives;

(b) The refusal by Israeli ambulances to transport the injured from Erez crossing to Israeli hospitals without an immediate payment of some thousands of shekels. These fees were later reimbursed by the International Committee of the Red Cross.

32. At least five injured victims of the attack on 8 November were referred to different Israeli hospitals for treatment not available in Gaza; three more were transferred to Cairo via an arduous journey across the Sinai.

33. Reactions to the news of the shelling were swift, with condemnations from the Palestinian Authority, the Secretary-General,¹⁶ the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,¹⁷ and aid agencies operating in Gaza,¹⁸ as well as Member States. In addition to the special session of the Council at which resolution S-3/1 was adopted, on 30 November 2006, the General Assembly adopted resolution ES-10/16, in which it deplored Israeli military assaults on the Gaza Strip, in particular the killing of many Palestinian civilians in Beit Hanoun. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to establish a fact-finding mission on the attack. The fact-finding mission has never been conducted.

C. The Israeli response and explanations for the shelling

34. Following the shelling, the Prime Minister and Minister for Defense of Israel “expressed their regret over the deaths of Palestinian civilians in Beit Hanoun” and offered “urgent humanitarian assistance and immediate medical care for the wounded”.¹⁹ The Israeli military similarly expressed regret but stressed that “the responsibility for this rests with the terror organizations, which use the Palestinian civilian population as a ‘human shield’, carrying out terror attacks and firing Kassam rockets at Israeli population centres from the shelter of populated areas”.²⁰ The Minister for Foreign Affairs said that “unfortunately, in the course of battle, regrettable incidents such as that which occurred this morning do happen”.²¹

35. On 8 November 2006, Israel announced an inquiry into the shelling of Beit Hanoun earlier that day, intimating that the shells were not fired on civilian areas of Beit Hanoun intentionally but rather as a result of some technical error.²⁰ Use of artillery in Gaza was halted pending the outcome of an investigation. It has been reported to the Mission that artillery has not been used in Gaza since 8 November 2006.

36. The Israeli military appointed an internal investigation committee of military staff headed by a senior officer.²⁰ Some 15 months after the shelling, the committee presented its findings to ¹⁶ Statement of the Secretary-General, 8 November 2006.

¹⁷ United Nations press release, “In Gaza Strip, UN human rights chief decries ‘massive’ violations against civilians”, 20 November 2006.

¹⁸ BBC, “Aid agencies condemn Gaza carnage”, 9 November 2006.

¹⁹ IMFA communiqué, 8 November 2006, “PM Olmert and DM Peretz express regret at death of Palestinian civilians”.

²⁰ Ibid., “Initial reaction to Palestinian claims of civilian casualties in Beit Hanoun”.

²¹ Ibid., “Beit Hanoun: statement by FM Livni”.

the Military Advocate General, who then decided that “no legal action is to be taken against any military official regarding this incident”.²² According to a press communiqué issued by the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the reasons for this decision were that:

(a) The shelling of civilians was not intentional;

(b) The error was “directly due to a rare and severe failure in the artillery fire-control system operated at the time of the incident” causing “incorrect range findings that lead, unknowingly, to fire at a different target than planned initially”;

(c) The malfunction was so rare that “it is not possible to point to a legal circumstantial connection, between the behaviours of the people involved in the incident and the result of the incident”.²²

37. Neither the report of the committee nor that of the Advocate General has been made public. The mission requested copies of both on a number of occasions, but these requests remain unanswered. The mission finds this lack of transparency for a process that is in effect to date the only means for accountability for the deaths of 19 civilians, highly disturbing.

38. The Israeli military appears to be of the view that, if an error is caused by malfunctioning technology, there can be no causal link (and thus no responsibility) on the part of individuals, be they designing, building or operating the technology.²³ The Mission also notes that press reports of the investigation quote military sources as suggesting that “it would be worthwhile to look into whether the artillery battery team could have nonetheless avoided the incident through more proper performance, and careful monitoring of the equipment”. This proposal is strengthened by the reported recommendations of the investigation, one being to require “human tracking of where shells are falling in addition to the radar”.²⁴

39. According to a number of sources, the Israeli military version of events on 8 November 2006 is as follows. On or at some time prior to 8 November, the military received information that rocket launching would take place from a field near Beit Hanoun. “In an effort to disrupt and thwart the launching of rockets at Israeli population centers”, Israeli artillery directed twenty-four 155 mm shells at two targets near Beit Hanoun. In the military’s view, artillery shelling of a site of potential rocket launching is an effective deterrent. The first 12 shells landed in the correct location, however 6 of the second round landed 450 metres away from their intended target and resulted in the civilian casualties.²⁵

²² Ibid., “Military Advocate General concludes investigation of Beit Hanoun shelling”.

²³ The allegedly malfunctioning technology is made by an Israeli manufacturer, which reportedly assisted in the investigation.

²⁴ Haaretz, “Peretz to re-evaluate IDF policy of shelling northern Gaza Strip”, 10 November 2006.

²⁵ Haaretz, “IDF panel: Errant shell in Beit Hanun likely result of human or technical error”, 9 November 2006.

40. This view is in conflict with the information received by the mission. Numerous sources show that 12 shells hit the area around Hamad Street, possibly 13. The mission received no evidence of shelling in a field near Beit Hanoun before the shelling, which resulted in casualties. Indeed testimonies indicate that, just before the shelling, the majority of Beit Hanoun residents were sleeping or at prayer, which would have been quite abnormal if heavy artillery fire had been directed just 450 metres away from the residential area. Furthermore, investigations carried out by the explosive ordnance disposal unit of the Palestinian Police and presented to the mission suggest that six 155 mm artillery shells were fired from a location to the east of Beit Hanoun, and another six from a separate location to the south-east, suggesting the attack was not conducted from one single artillery battery, as reported by the Israeli military, but two.

41. Victims and survivors interviewed by the mission are seeking an explanation for the shelling, a common refrain being “why did this happen to us?” Many expressed doubts as to claims that they had been shelled in error. More than one remarked that they “could believe one shell fired in error but not 12”. Others indicated that the level of Israeli monitoring of Beit Hanoun (including by unmanned aerial drones as witnessed by the mission) is such that an error of this magnitude is highly unlikely. Yet another survivor juxtaposed the alleged 450-metre error in the Beit Hanoun shelling with the precision with which the Israeli military carry out targeted assassinations in the occupied Palestinian territories. Others noted that an error of 450 metres would have placed Israeli soldiers at the nearby Erez crossing at risk of shelling, a risk survivors felt the Israeli military would not take.

42. The mission strongly endorses the position put forward by others, particularly human rights organizations, that the use of artillery in urban areas, especially in densely populated urban settings such as Gaza, is wholly inappropriate and likely contrary to international humanitarian and human rights law. The risks of this practice were compounded by the reported reduction by the Israeli military of the “safety zone” for artillery shelling from 300 to 100 metres earlier in 2006. The 155 mm artillery shells fired on Beit Hanoun have an expected lethal radius of 50 to 150 metres and a casualty radius of up to 300 metres. Firing such a shell within 100 metres of civilians appears to the mission almost certain to cause casualties at one time or another. In litigation by human rights groups against the safety-zone reduction, it was reported that Israeli military officers “admitted that the new regulations put Palestinian lives at risk but insisted it would help strike back at Palestinian militants launching rockets at Israeli civilians”.²⁶

IV. VICTIMS AND SURVIVORS

43. The mission’s core mandate was to assess the situation of victims and the needs of survivors. While recognizing that all Gazans are victims of the occupation and live with the constant disruptions to life caused by the realities of Israeli control, fear of attack and humiliation, the mission focused on the specific situation of victims of the Beit Hanoun shelling, as required by its mandate. There were many more victims than the 19 killed in the shelling. In identifying victims, the mission was guided by the definition of the Basic Principles and ²⁶ Haaretz, “IDF accused of ‘knowingly risking Palestinian lives’”, 17 April 2006. The article quoted an unnamed military officer as saying, “We have no way of ensuring that civilians will not be hurt in the next shelling”.

Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law.²⁷

The victims of the shelling are persons who individually or collectively suffered harm, including physical or mental injury, emotional suffering, economic loss or substantial impairment of their fundamental rights as a result of the shelling; they include the immediate family or dependants of the direct victim and persons who have suffered harm in intervening to assist victims in distress or to prevent victimization. The mission notes that there has been no systematic follow-up of the situation of victims to assess their progress, their ongoing medical or other needs.

44. During its visit to Gaza, the mission met and talked with as many victims and survivors of the shelling as possible, in particular those of the Al-Athamna family. Key elements of the testimony of the victims, survivors, witnesses and non-governmental organizations, together with the mission's own observations, are given below. Following the mission's methodology outlined above, the situation of victims and needs of survivors was addressed from the perspective of international law in general and human rights in particular. The extremely difficult conditions of life facing all Gazans in many instances constitute gross violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. The mission agrees with the Secretary-General (SG/SM/11429), the previous Special Rapporteur (A/HRC/7/17) and the High Commissioner for Human Rights (A/HRC/7/76) that the blockade amounts to collective punishment contrary to international humanitarian law.²⁸

A. The protection of civilians in conflict and the right to life

45. A total of 19 of the Beit Hanoun victims died as a result of the shelling. Two of the greatest needs of the surviving victims are a credible explanation for the attack on the town, and, where appropriate, the holding of individuals to account for the attack. In the mission's view, neither of these needs have been met. As noted by the Israeli Foreign Minister above, "regrettable incidents" do occur in battle; however, such incidents must be assessed in accordance with both the rules regulating recourse to force and international humanitarian law, the applicable lex specialis.

46. The mission recognizes that a State has the inherent right to self defence and to protect its citizens from armed attack under Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations. Israel contends that the shelling of Beit Hanoun, operation Autumn Clouds and indeed the entire blockade of Gaza is in response to the firing of Kassam rockets into its territory by Palestinian militants. While the firing of Kassam rockets constitutes an armed attack against Israel, they are fired by non-State actors. The International Court of Justice in the Wall case concluded that Article 51 was not relevant to that case, noting inter alia that the attacks against which the Wall was being constructed do not emanate from another State.²⁹ However, the opposite view has been expressed by a number of judges. What is clear is that, if the right to self defence applies against armed attacks from non-State actors, it is subject to the requirements of necessity and proportionality.³⁰ This requires a careful examination of all the facts, which, as the mission was not able to visit Israel, it is not in a position to perform. However, the mission saw no evidence of any necessity for the shelling of Beit Hanoun on 8 November and certainly none that the need for such an attack was “instant, overwhelming, leaving no choice of means, and no moment for deliberation”. The fact that the Israeli military had been in almost full control of Beit Hanoun in the days prior to the attack only reinforces this argument.

²⁷ General Assembly resolution 60/147, para. 8

²⁸ See also Hague Regulations, article 50; GC IV, art. 33.

²⁹ ICJ reports 2004, para. 139.

47. The primary rule of international humanitarian law is the protection of civilians. Article 43 of the Hague Regulations require the occupier to “take all the measures in his power to restore, and ensure, as far as possible, public order and safety” in the occupied territory. According to Judge Higgins, President of the International Court of Justice, “the protection of civilians remains an intransgressible obligation of humanitarian law, not only for the occupiers but equally for those seeking to liberate themselves from occupation”.³¹ Nevertheless, the use of force with an impact on civilians is permissible if it is directed at a legitimate military target and is proportionate to the overall threat faced. The mission received no evidence that the shelled area of Beit Hanoun was a legitimate military target and notes that it had been occupied by Israeli military earlier in the week.

48. Israel has not claimed that the houses around Hamad Street were a military target but that the shelling was caused by technical error. The International Law Commission articles on the responsibility of states for internationally wrongful acts³² are silent on whether such a mistake relieves a State of its international responsibility for the commission of an internationally wrongful act and the requirement of fault in international law is controversial. In a commentary on the articles, Crawford and Olleson consider that “if a State deliberately carries out some specific act, there is less room for it to argue that the harmful consequences were unintended and should be disregarded. Everything depends on the specific context and on the content and interpretation of the obligation said to have been breached”.³³

49. The firing of artillery towards Beit Hanoun on the morning of 8 November 2006 was a deliberate act in the context of the long-term occupation of Gaza and of the deaths of civilians and destruction of property in Autumn Clouds. Taken together with further facts (such as the reduction of the safety zone for artillery use referred to above) and the nature of the “intransgressible obligation” to protect civilian life, the mission considers that there is evidence of a disproportionate and reckless disregard for Palestinian civilian life, contrary to the requirements of international humanitarian law and raising legitimate concerns about the possibility of a war crime having been committed.

³⁰ Ibid. sep. op., Judge Buergenthal, para. 5.

³¹ Ibid. sep. op., Judge Higgins, para. 19.

³² Annexed to General Assembly resolution 56/83.

³³ J. Crawford and S. Olleson, “The Nature and Forms of International Responsibility”, in M. Evans, International Law (2003).

50. Human rights law is also applicable in armed conflict and occupation.³⁴ The mission considers that this reckless disregard for civilian life also constitutes a violation of the right to life as set out in article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to which Israel is a party. The right to life includes the negative obligation to respect life and the positive obligation to protect life. The Human Rights Committee has stated that States parties should take measures not only to prevent and punish deprivation by criminal acts, but also to prevent arbitrary killing by their own security forces.³⁵ No exception is made for acts during war.

51. The right to life also includes a procedural component that requires adequate investigation of any alleged violation “promptly, thoroughly and effectively through independent and impartial bodies” for “failure by a State Party to investigate allegations of violations could in and of itself give rise to a separate breach of the Covenant”.³⁶ The investigation of the Israeli military referred to above was not independent (it was carried out by a committee comprised of Israeli military personnel) and the lack of transparency makes it impossible to determine whether or not it was rigorous or effective. The failure of Israel to comply with the procedural requirement adds to the frustration and anger felt by survivors, who have received no credible explanation for what occurred. Survivors have come to perceive the rule of law as having no meaning for them.

B. The situation of victims and the needs of survivors

52. The needs of victims and survivors of the shelling include compliance by Israel with other human rights obligations, especially where failure to do so has an adverse impact on their recovery from the events of 8 November 2006. Relevant human rights obligations include the right to physical and mental health and the right to an adequate standard of living, including work, social assistance and shelter. These economic and social rights are contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The International Court of Justice explicitly stated in the Wall case that the obligations of Israel under the Covenant apply in the occupied Palestinian territories.

1. The right to physical and mental health

53. Testimony demonstrated a number of violations of the obligation to respect and protect the right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health.³⁷ The ³⁴ “The Covenant applies also in situations of armed conflict to which the rules of international humanitarian law are applicable.” Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 on the nature of the general legal obligation imposed on States parties to the covenant, 2004, para. 11.

³⁵ General comment No. 6, 1982, para. 3.

³⁶ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31, para. 15. See also Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy, para. 3 (b).

³⁷ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 12; Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, art. 12; Convention on the Rights of the Child, art. 24.

Special Rapporteur has described the many ways in which the primary obligation to protect the right to physical and mental health has been severely undermined by the economic situation and the blockade of Gaza (see A/HRC/7/17).

54. The situation in Beit Hanoun before and after the shelling has had a significant detrimental impact on the access of victims and survivors to adequate health care. Before the shelling, the health-care infrastructure of the town had already been overwhelmed during the Autumn Clouds incursion. The director of Beit Hanoun hospital told the mission that they had used all their reserves by 8 November; these included physical reserves of strength of medical staff after the demands caused by the severe injuries presented during Autumn Clouds, as well as of essential supplies, such as blood.

55. In the immediate aftermath of the shelling, access to and the availability of health services appropriate to the levels and type of injury was limited by the continued shelling, which impeded ambulances and medical teams from getting to the scene. Subsequently, there were delays in evacuating severely wounded people to hospitals in Israel and Egypt. Despite the promise by the Israeli Prime Minister and the Defense Minister of urgent humanitarian assistance and immediate medical care,¹⁹ the mission was told that it was not until late in the afternoon of 8 November that evacuations were made, and even then with the significant restrictions described above.

56. The fact that the mission was not able to visit Beit Hanoun until May 2008 allowed its members to witness the long-term health consequences of the shelling. The obligation under the Covenant to respect the right to physical and mental health requires States to refrain from interfering directly or indirectly with the enjoyment of the right to health. Survivors told of the various ways in which Israeli authorities had failed to comply with this obligation, for example by refusing permission to return to hospitals in Israel and Egypt for follow-up treatment that had been prescribed by doctors. Testimonies included the following: “Once a month, I have to go to Israel to follow treatment. I spend a month getting my permit. Since the siege I can’t go for follow-up.” Another survivor could not return to Egypt to have shrapnel removed from wounds, nor could a woman whose foot had been blown off during the shelling return to Egypt to receive a prosthetic foot. As one survivor noted, “there were two attacks, the military attack on 8 November and the second a bureaucratic one”. The mayor reported that there was no physiotherapy facility available in the town, and plans with the Catholic Church to build a psychiatric counselling centre had been stalled because of the blockade. The mission was able to witness the effects of the blockade on Al-Shifa hospital, Gaza’s largest medical facility.

57. The survivors do not suffer from physical injury alone; there are also significant mental health problems. In the words of one survivor, “I am physically healed but am having problems dealing with it.”³⁸ The number of children with mental health issues is also increasing. The mission was told by survivors of traumatized children who were afraid to sleep because of the bombs, who had reverted to bed wetting, who ask for their dead parents and who do not want to live in Beit Hanoun. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights stated that States parties are obliged to fulfil (provide) a specific right contained in the Covenant when individuals or a group are unable, for reasons beyond their control, to realize that right themselves by the means at their disposal".³⁹ This is the situation of survivors of the Beit Hanoun shelling and these obligations have not been adequately addressed.

³⁸ In his report (A/HRC/7/17), the Special Rapporteur also argues that the use of sonic booms is among the means through which the Israeli military exerts control over the Gaza Strip.

58. The mission notes that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has confirmed that States parties have a minimum core obligation with respect to health-care services, which includes the obligation to ensure the right of access to health facilities, goods and services on a non-discriminatory basis, especially for vulnerable or marginalized groups.⁴⁰ Survivors in Beit Hanoun have been made especially vulnerable by the shelling on 8 November and its aftermath and the mission considers that there has been a failure by Israel to comply with this minimum core obligation.

2. The right to an adequate standard of living

59. The Committee has consistently underlined the interdependence of the right to physical and mental health with other rights, including those to minimum essential food, access to basic housing, sanitation, adequate and safe water, and equitable distribution of health facilities, goods and services. Such conditions also undermine the right to an adequate standard of living.⁴¹

60. The people of Beit Hanoun, together with all people in Gaza, have experienced a severe undermining of these core requirements during the blockade. For the victims of Beit Hanoun, the impact of these violations has been exacerbated by the consequences of the shelling. For example, where there is such high unemployment, a person with the severe physical or mental injuries suffered by many of the survivors of the shelling is unlikely to be employed, a situation confirmed by witnesses. Some survivors have incurred greater financial obligations by having to undertake the care of orphaned children or other dependants, and their desperate financial situation causes them further stress. Many of the survivors are living on relief handouts, from relief agencies or from family members. This condition is both uncertain and humiliating.

61. The Committee emphasized the essential role of international cooperation under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in particular States parties' joint and individual responsibility in providing disaster relief and humanitarian assistance in times of emergency.⁴² The mission observed the appalling humanitarian consequences of the blockade, exacerbated in the case of Beit Hanoun. This humanitarian crisis is the result of deliberate policy choices of States that are incompatible with States' obligations under the Covenant. All States parties to the Covenant are reminded of their obligations under it.

³⁹ General comment No. 14 on the right to the highest attainable standard of health, 2000, para. 37.

⁴⁰ Ibid., para. 43.

⁴¹ International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, art. 11.

⁴² General comment No. 14, para. 40.

3. Freedom of movement

62. Freedom of movement is provided for in article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including individuals' freedom to leave any country, including their own. Together with other persons living in Gaza, survivors of the Beit Hanoun shelling have had their movements severely restricted by the occupation and the blockade. More directly, during the Autumn Clouds operation, a curfew was imposed on Beit Hanoun, which was thus isolated. The impact of these restrictions on access to health-care services has been discussed above. Being unable to move freely also contributes to feelings of isolation and can undermine mental health.

4. The situation of women

63. The particular position of women and gender-specific harm may be invisible where a whole society is facing gross violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, as there is a sense of unity that prevents identification of and focus on women's situations. Nevertheless, incursions and artillery strikes and their aftermath such as those in Beit Hanoun have engendered consequences that should be addressed.

64. The mission heard testimony from both women survivors of the shelling and women's groups active in Gaza. Many spoke of the intrusions of the Autumn Clouds incursions on women's sense of privacy within the home. Where women have a more vulnerable social position and only limited freedom of movement in public, the private space of the home is especially important as a "women's space". Intrusion into the home by Israeli military personnel, sometimes for several hours, caused humiliation, loss of dignity, denied privacy and undermined women's sense of belonging and ownership. One woman was ejected from her house with nothing but the clothes she was wearing. Another said that she had been unable to go to the bathroom while the Israeli soldiers were in the house. Incursions into houses also caused humiliation to men through their being beaten in front of their families.

65. Autumn Clouds and the shelling on 8 November led to the destruction of a number of houses. Female victims told the mission that they destroyed "the only thing in the world" and that "life itself was destroyed" with the house. Possessions of special importance to women were destroyed with their houses; one woman said she had gone to her child's school to recover some photos of her child as she had lost all she had in the shelling of the house and this was the only way she could get photos of her own child.

66. One woman told the mission that the sufferings of women "could not be divided" but noted that the particular effects and vulnerable social position of women had been worsened by the blockade and effects of the incursion and shelling; women are "the poorest of the poor" and unemployment is especially high among women, including women graduates. The burden of childcare falls on women, which is made more difficult when children are traumatized. Lack of specialized medical services and limited facilities for counselling mean that women receive little expert assistance. Anecdotal evidence was offered indicating an increase in domestic violence in Gaza as a result of the blockade. The mission considers that this is an area that needs addressing. The blockade also hampers initiatives by women's groups to ameliorate the situation, for example, through law reform and advocacy to support women's claims.

5. Access to justice and right to an effective remedy

67. One of the major needs of survivors is to secure access to justice and redress.⁴³ The mission was told that survivors “want justice, not sympathy”. In the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy, the General Assembly recognized that it is through honouring the victims’ right to benefit from remedies and reparation that the international community keeps faith with the plight of victims and survivors. The survivors of the Beit Hanoun shelling have not been able to have access to justice. Victims have made recourse to the assistance of an Israeli lawyer for compensation from Israel, at this stage through court proceedings; however, they face many obstacles, including restrictions on their travel to Israel and legal costs. A number of people also spoke of their concerns about measures introduced recently into Israeli law that had the effect of limiting the ability of Palestinians harmed by Israeli military action to seek redress in Israeli courts.⁴⁴

68. The Israeli military internal investigation referred to above concluded that there would be no prosecutions of individuals or other disciplinary action arising from the shelling; therefore, no one has been held to account for the injuries suffered. A further recent example involving the killing of a media cameraman and eight youths reinforces the culture of impunity decried by the mission in its previous report.

69. Article 2 (3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights guarantees the right to an effective remedy for violations of the Covenant. The Basic Principles state that reparation for harm suffered should be “adequate, effective and prompt”, and that victims seeking access to justice should receive proper assistance. These standards were not observed. The mission was told of how the lack of financial resources prevented survivors from seeking further health care and from finding adequate housing where homes had been made uninhabitable. Some family members are living in rented accommodation and others have taken out loans, creating further financial strains. This also means that family members have been separated when they need mutual support.

70. There has been limited monetary assistance offered to some survivors of the Beit Hanoun shelling and immediate humanitarian assistance from UNRWA. The United Arab Emirates and the United Nations have assisted in the rebuilding of houses. To the best of the mission’s knowledge, Israel has not paid compensation for the damage and harm caused by its internationally wrongful act. The requirements for reparations for victims of human rights abuses have not been satisfied. Other forms of monetary compensation (for example, for moral damage or lost opportunities) have not been offered.

⁴³ General Assembly resolutions 40/34 and 60/147.

⁴⁴ An Israeli law preventing Palestinians from claiming compensation from Israel following military operations was partially struck down by the High Court on 12 December 2006. However, the court left standing a provision that bars compensation to Palestinians harmed in combat operations.

71. Other forms of reparation provided for under the Basic Principles include rehabilitation comprising appropriate medical and psychological care and social and legal services, verification of the facts and public disclosure of the truth, and commemorations of and tributes to the victims. Appropriate reparation should include the provision of a range of such facilities and measures, but none have been forthcoming.

V. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

72. The mission expresses its sympathy to all victims of the shelling on 8 November 2006 of Beit Hanoun. The attack took lives, inflicted horrendous physical and mental injuries, tore families apart, destroyed homes, took away livelihoods and traumatized a population. Its aftermath compounded those ills. The courage of the victims in the face of continuing hardship deserves our admiration. Their recovery is not aided by continuing incursions into Beit Hanoun including on the night after the mission's visit to the town.

73. The mission again expresses its regret that the Government of Israel decided to withhold any cooperation with the mission. Israel feels that the mandate of the mission is biased against it. That is a matter for the Council. The mission has, however, gone to great lengths to execute its mandate in as balanced a way as possible. The effective ban on its visiting Israel and meeting with Israeli actors (including victims of Kassam rocket attacks in southern Israel) has itself been an obstacle to the balance that Israel seeks. The mission expresses its sympathy to all those affected by the Kassam rocket attacks in southern Israel.

74. The bombing of Beit Hanoun and its aftermath came in the wider context of the conflict in the occupied Palestinian territories and Israel. The occupation remains the root cause of the bleak situation that the mission only briefly sketches in the present report. The cessation of hostilities between Israel and Palestinian militants in June 2008 was a positive development. The mission reiterates that the process towards peace must operate within a framework of international law and be guided by respect for the Charter of the United Nations, international human rights law and international humanitarian law. The mission draws the attention of all parties to the conflict to Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) requiring attention to the special needs of women in the aftermath of conflict and urging women's participation in conflict resolution and sustainable peace.

75. The violence in Gaza and southern Israel has led to countless violations of international human rights and international humanitarian law. This lack of respect on both sides for the rules of conflict not only leads to incidents such as that in Beit Hanoun, but also undermines respect for the laws of war and human rights in other conflicts. The people of Gaza must be afforded protection in compliance with international law and, above all, the Fourth Geneva Convention. The Israeli military must place at the centre of its decision-making and activities in the occupied Palestinian territories the consequences of the use of force on civilians. In the absence of a well-founded explanation from the Israeli military (who is in sole possession of the relevant facts), the mission must conclude that there is a possibility that the shelling of Beit Hanoun constituted a war crime as defined in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. Similarly, as the mission made clear to Hamas at the highest level, the firing of rockets on the civilian population in Israel must stop. Those in positions of authority in Gaza have not only an international humanitarian law obligation to respect international humanitarian law norms relating to the protection of civilians, but also a responsibility to ensure that these norms are respected by others.

76. One victim of the Beit Hanoun shelling was the rule of law. There has been no accountability for an act that killed 19 people and injured many more. The Israeli response of a largely secret internal military investigation is absolutely unacceptable from both legal and moral points of view. The mission notes that Israel has adopted a similar response to other killings by its military, with similar results. The mission repeats its position that, regardless of whether the casualties at Beit Hanoun were caused by a mistake, recklessness, criminal negligence or wilful conduct, those responsible must be held accountable. It is not too late for an independent, impartial and transparent investigation of the shelling to be held; indeed, the mission notes other instances in which the courts have ordered the Israeli military to open investigations into the killings of civilians by the military. The mission welcomes this intervention by the courts. Justice cannot wait for peace to be secured. Rather, no credible, lasting peace can be built upon impunity and injustice.

77. As the mission has repeatedly stressed (including to representatives of Hamas), those firing rockets on Israeli civilians are no less accountable than the Israeli military for their actions (A/HRC/5/20, para. 19).

78. Accountability involves providing a remedy and redress for victims. To date, neither has been forthcoming from Israel, despite its admission of responsibility for the attack. The very clear message from the victims and survivors to the mission and to the Council is that they seek justice before anything else. The present report outlines some of the obstacles put in the way of victims seeking justice. While the mission calls on Israel to remove these obstacles, it is of the view that victims should not be forced to fight for compensation through Israeli courts when all accept that damage was inflicted on individuals by the State. The mission recommends that the State of Israel pay victims adequate compensation without delay. In the light of the magnitude of the attack on a small community, and in addition to compensation to individuals, the mission also recommends that Israel make reparation to the community of Beit Hanoun in the form of a memorial to the victims that constitutes a response to the needs of survivors. Possibilities include a health facility such as a much-needed physiotherapy clinic.

79. The situation of victims and survivors of the shelling, as witnessed by the mission, remains grim. Israel, Hamas and the Palestinian Authority have human rights obligations towards the victims. Most of the ongoing violations, however, are caused by Israeli action or inaction. The mission calls on Israel to honour its obligations to the people of Beit Hanoun, and more generally to the people of occupied Gaza, to respect, protect and fulfil their human rights. A major barrier to the enjoyment of human rights is the ongoing blockade that limits individuals' ability to provide an adequate standard of living for themselves and their families and the capacity of local authorities to provide essential services for the population. A central need of victims is access to health services. Israel must desist from obstructing victims' access to health-care services, be it through restricting the flow of medical goods and personnel into Gaza, or through restricting victims' ability to leave Gaza to seek health care elsewhere.

80. The Council asked the mission to make recommendations on ways and means to protect Palestinian civilians against any further Israeli assaults. Specific recommendations in this regard were made in the mission's previous report, recommendations that the mission reiterates. In the mission's view, one of the most effective and immediate means of protecting Palestinian civilians against any further Israeli assaults is to insist on respect for the rule of law and accountability. We have seen that even the flawed Israeli investigation into the Beit Hanoun shelling resulted in a decision to discontinue use of artillery in Gaza, one of the main causes of civilian death and injury in the territory. The knowledge that their actions will be scrutinized by an independent authority would be a powerful deterrent to members of the Israeli military against taking risks with civilian lives.

81. During a press conference at the conclusion of its visit to Gaza, the mission indicated that the international community is failing to fulfil its role in respect of the suffering of the people of Gaza, in particular in its silence which begets complicity. In its efforts to discharge its mandate, the mission witnessed positions based on political objectives rather than on principle by all relevant parties. Addressing human rights violations suffered by individuals in Israel and in the occupied Palestinian territories must be the prime motivating force for members of the Council and others with influence in the region.

82. Finally, the mission expresses its thanks to all those who facilitated its visit to Beit Hanoun, in particular the Government of Egypt and UNRWA. It also expresses its thanks and deep admiration to those working with the people of Gaza, specifically non-governmental organizations, human rights defenders and the United Nations.

Annex

Schedule of the high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun
27-29 May 2008

Tuesday 27 May 2008

- 08:00 Travel from Cairo to Gaza via Rafah
- 16:00 Meeting with UNRWA Commissioner-General and Director of Operations in Gaza
- 17:00 Meetings with Sabaya project BH, Al Taher Community Centre, Women's Research and Legal Consultation Centre.
- 18:00 Meeting with Hamas
- 19:00 Meeting with representatives of OCHA, WHO and the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO)

Wednesday 28 May 2008

- 08:00 Site inspection in Beit Hanoun, meeting with victims and survivors on site
- 10:00 Meeting with the Mayor of Beit Hanoun
- 11:00 Taking testimony from victims and survivors (including medical personnel from Beit Hanoun hospital)
- 16:30 Visit to Al-Shifa hospital
- 17:30 Meeting with the Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR)
- 18:15 Meeting with Al Mezan Center for Human Rights
- 19:30 Meeting with Explosive Ordnance Disposal Unit, Palestinian Police
- 21:00 Informal meeting with civil society organizations (PCHR, Al Mezan, Ad-Dameer, GCMHP, PICCR, PICESG, PNGO, PARC, Women's Technical Committee)

Thursday 29 May 2008

- 09:00 Meeting with the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator/Resident Coordinator and United Nations High Representative for the Alliance of Civilizations
- 09:30 Press Conference in Gaza
- 10:30 Travel from Gaza to Cairo via Rafah

General Assembly

Distr.
GENERAL

A/HRC/12/48
25 September 2009

Original: ENGLISH

HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Twelfth session
Agenda item 7

HUMAN RIGHTS IN PALESTINE AND OTHER
OCCUPIED ARAB TERRITORIES

Report of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict*

* Late submission.

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs	Page
Acronyms and abbreviations		11
Executive summary	1-130	13
PART ONE: METHODOLOGY, CONTEXT AND APPLICABLE LAW
INTRODUCTION	131-150	37
I. METHODOLOGY	151-175	41
A. Mandate and terms of reference	151-155	41
B. Methods of work	156-167	42
C. Assessment of information	168-172	44
D. Consultation with the parties	173-175	45
II. CONTEXT	176-222	46
A. Historical context	177-197	46
B. Overview of Israel's pattern of policies and conduct relevant to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and links between the situation in Gaza and in the West Bank	198-209	52
C. Relevant political and administrative structures in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank	210-215	59
D. Relevant political and administrative structures in Israel	216-222	61
III. EVENTS OCCURRING BETWEEN THE "CEASEFIRE" OF 18 JUNE 2008 BETWEEN ISRAEL AND THE GAZA AUTHORITIES AND THE START OF ISRAEL'S MILITARY OPERATIONS IN GAZA ON 27 DECEMBER 2008	223-267	62
IV. APPLICABLE LAW	268-310	71
A. Self-determination	269	71
B. International humanitarian law	270-285	72
C. International criminal law	286-293	76
D. International human rights law	294-310	77

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
PART TWO: OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORY
THE GAZA STRIP	311-1372	82
Section A: Military operations	311-1344	82
V. THE BLOCKADE: INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW	311-326	82
VI. OVERVIEW OF MILITARY OPERATIONS CONDUCTED BY ISRAEL IN GAZA BETWEEN 27 DECEMBER 2008 AND 18 JANUARY 2009 AND DATA ON CASUALTIES	327-364	85
A. The parties relevant to the conduct of military activities in Gaza between 27 December 2008 and 28 January 2009	328-332	86
B. The phases of the hostilities	333-351	87
C. Data on casualties during the Israeli military operations in Gaza from 28 December 2008 to 17 January 2009	352-364	90
VII. ATTACKS ON GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS AND POLICE	365-438	93
A. Deliberate attacks on Gaza government infrastructure	365-392	93
B. Deliberate attacks on the Gaza police	393-438	99
VIII. OBLIGATION ON PALESTINIAN ARMED GROUPS IN GAZA TO TAKE FEASIBLE PRECAUTIONS TO PROTECT THE CIVILIAN POPULATION	439-498	111
A. Launching attacks from within civilian areas and from within or in the immediate vicinity of protected sites	446-460	113
B. Booby-trapping of civilian houses	461-463	116
C. Use of mosques to launch attacks against the Israeli armed forces or to store weapons	464-465	117
D. Misuse of medical facilities and ambulances	466-474	117
E. Forcing civilians to remain in an area for the specific purpose of sheltering that area or forces in that area from attack	475-478	119

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
F. Mingling with the civilian population to shield combatants against attack	479-481	120
G. Factual findings	482-488	121
H. Legal findings	489-498	122
IX. OBLIGATION ON ISRAEL TO TAKE FEASIBLE PRECAUTIONS TO PROTECT CIVILIAN POPULATION AND CIVILIAN OBJECTS IN GAZA.....	499-652	124
A. Warnings	500-542	124
B. UNRWA compound, Gaza City	543-595	133
C. Al-Quds hospital, Tal el-Hawa, Gaza City	596-629	141
D. Attacks on al-Wafa hospital, 5 and 16 January 2009	630-652	146
X. INDISCRIMINATE ATTACKS BY ISRAELI ARMED FORCES RESULTING IN THE LOSS OF LIFE AND INJURY TO CIVILIANS	653-703	149
A. The shelling in al-Fakhura Street by Israeli armed forces	653-654	149
B. The facts surrounding the Israeli armed forces' mortar shelling	655-666	149
C. The Israeli position	667-673	151
D. Other reports	674-686	153
E. Factual findings	687-690	155
F. Legal findings	691-703	156
XI. DELIBERATE ATTACKS AGAINST THE CIVILIAN POPULATION	704-885	158
A. Attacks on the houses of Ateya al-Samouni and Wa'ed al-Samouni in Zeytoun, resulting in the death of 23 members of the al-Samouni family	706-735	159
B. Killing of civilians attempting to leave their homes to walk to safer areas	736-801	166
C. Information concerning the instructions given to the Israeli armed forces with regard to the opening of fire against civilians	802-808	180

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
D. Legal findings with regard to the cases investigated by the Mission	809-821	182
E. The attack on the al-Maqadmah mosque, 3 January 2009.....	822-843	184
F. The attack on the al-Daya family house, 6 January 2009	844-866	187
G. Attack on the Abd al-Dayem condolence tents	867-885	191
XII. THE USE OF CERTAIN WEAPONS	886-912	194
A. White phosphorous	887-901	194
B. Flechettes	902-905	196
C. Alleged use of munitions causing a specific type of injury	906-908	197
D. Factual findings on the use of munitions causing a specific type of injury	909-910	198
E. Allegations regarding the use of depleted and non-depleted uranium munitions by the Israeli armed forces	911-912	198
XIII. ATTACKS ON THE FOUNDATIONS OF CIVILIAN LIFE IN GAZA: DESTRUCTION OF INDUSTRIAL INFRASTRUCTURE, FOOD PRODUCTION, WATER INSTALLATIONS, SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANTS AND HOUSING	913-1031	199
A. The destruction of el-Bader flour mill	913-941	199
B. The destruction of the Sawafeary chicken farms	942-961	204
C. The destruction of water and sewage installations	962-989	206
D. The destruction of housing	990-1007	210
E. Analysis of the pattern of widespread destruction of economic and infrastructural targets ...	1008-1031	214
XIV. THE USE OF PALESTINIAN CIVILIANS AS HUMAN SHIELDS	1032-1106	218
A. The case of Majdi Abd Rabbo	1033-1063	219
B. The case of Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa	1064-1075	223
C. The case of Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami	1076-1085	225
D. The case of AD/03	1086-1088	227

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
E. Denial of the allegations by the Israeli armed forces	1089	227
F. Factual findings	1090-1095	228
G. Legal findings	1096-1106	229
XV. DEPRIVATION OF LIBERTY: GAZANS DETAINED DURING THE ISRAELI MILITARY OPERATIONS OF 27 DECEMBER 2008 TO 18 JANUARY 2009	1107-1176	232
A. Al-Atatra sandpits	1112-1126	234
B. Detention and abuse of AD/02	1127-1142	236
C. AD/03	1143-1163	239
D. Factual findings	1164	243
E. Legal findings	1165-1176	244
XVI. OBJECTIVES AND STRATEGY OF ISRAEL'S MILITARY OPERATIONS IN GAZA	1177-1216	250
A. Planning	1178-1191	250
B. The development of strategic objectives in Israeli military thinking	1192-1199	253
C. Official Israeli statements on the objectives of the military operations in Gaza.....	1200-1202	255
D. The strategy to achieve the objectives	1203-1212	255
E. Conclusions.....	1213-1216	257
XVII. THE IMPACT OF THE BLOCKADE AND OF THE MILITARY OPERATIONS ON THE PEOPLE OF GAZA AND THEIR HUMAN RIGHTS	1217-1335	258
A. The economy, livelihoods and employment	1220-1233	259
B. Food and nutrition	1234-1241	262
C. Housing	1242-1245	264
D. Water and sanitation	1246-1249	265
E. Environment	1250-1251	266
F. Physical and mental health	1252-1267	267
G. Education	1268-1274	270
H. Impact on women and children	1275-1282	271

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Persons with disabilities	1283-1291	274
J. Impact on humanitarian assistance provided by the United Nations	1292-1299	275
K. Legal analysis	1300-1335	276
XVIII. THE CONTINUING DETENTION OF ISRAELI SOLDIER GILAD SHALIT	1336-1344	284
Section B: Internal violence	1345-1372	286
XIX. INTERNAL VIOLENCE AND TARGETING OF FATAH AFFILIATES BY SECURITY SERVICES UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE GAZA AUTHORITIES	1345-1372	286
A. Factual findings	1366-1368	290
B. Legal findings	1369-1372	291
THE WEST BANK, INCLUDING EAST JERUSALEM	1373-1589	292
XX. TREATMENT OF PALESTINIANS IN THE WEST BANK BY ISRAELI SECURITY FORCES, INCLUDING USE OF EXCESSIVE OR LETHAL FORCE DURING DEMONSTRATIONS	1381-1440	293
A. Settler violence in the West Bank in the period preceding the Israeli military operations in Gaza	1384-1393	294
B. The increased level of force since the end of the operations in Gaza	1394-1404	297
C. The role of impunity	1405-1409	300
D. Legal analysis and conclusions	1410-1440	302
XXI. DETENTION OF PALESTINIANS IN ISRAELI PRISONS	1441-1507	308
A. Issues linked to Israel's December-January military operations in Gaza	1449-1487	309
B. Legal analysis and conclusions	1488-1507	321

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
XXII. ISRAELI VIOLATIONS OF THE RIGHT TO FREE MOVEMENT AND ACCESS	1508-1549	325
A. Movement restrictions affecting the Mission's work ..	1515-1516	327
B. Movement and access and the Israeli military operations in Gaza	1517-1519	327
C. West Bank closures during the Israeli operations in Gaza	1520-1523	328
D. New measures to formalize the separation of Gaza and the West Bank	1524-1527	329
E. Movement and access, current situation	1528-1534	330
F. Jerusalem: accelerating the "silent transfer"	1535-1537	332
G. New settlements, land expropriation and the demolition of villages in Area C	1538-1539	332
H. Connecting the dots	1540-1541	333
I. Legal analysis and conclusions	1542-1549	334
XXIII. INTERNAL VIOLENCE, TARGETING OF HAMAS SUPPORTERS AND RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM OF ASSEMBLY AND EXPRESSION BY THE PALESTINIAN AUTHORITY	1550-1589	335
A. Crackdown by the Palestinian Authority on Hamas and other Islamic parties	1555-1563	337
B. Freedom of the press, freedom of expression and opinion	1564-1570	340
C. Freedom of assembly: repression of demonstrations during the Israeli military operations in Gaza of 27 December 2008 – 18 January 2009	1571-1575	342
D. Legal analysis	1576-1583	343
E. Conclusions	1584-1589	344
PART THREE: ISRAEL
XXIV. THE IMPACT ON CIVILIANS OF ROCKET AND MORTAR ATTACKS BY PALESTINIAN ARMED GROUPS ON SOUTHERN ISRAEL	1594-1691	346
A. Summary of rocket and mortar fire from 18 June 2008 to 31 July 2009	1600-1609	347

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
B. Relevant Palestinian armed groups	1610-1615	349
C. Type of rockets and mortars held by the Palestinian armed groups	1616-1623	350
D. Rocket and mortar attacks by the Palestinian armed groups on Israel	1624-1628	352
E. Statements by Palestinian armed groups concerning their launching of rockets into Israel	1629-1633	353
F. Statements by the Gaza authorities to the Mission	1634-1636	354
G. Precautionary measures in effect in southern Israel	1637-1646	354
H. Impact of rocket and mortar fire on communities in southern Israel	1647-1681	356
I. Legal analysis and conclusions	1682-1686	364
J. Findings	1687-1691	365
 XXV. REPRESSION OF DISSENT IN ISRAEL, RIGHT TO ACCESS TO INFORMATION AND TREATMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS DEFENDERS	 1692-1772	 366
A. Protests inside Israel	1697-1711	367
B. Judicial responses following the arrests of protesters	1712-1718	371
C. The interrogation of political activists by the General Security Services	1719-1723	372
D. Freedom of association and treatment of human rights organizations inside Israel	1724-1732	373
E. The access of the media and human rights monitors to Gaza prior to, during and after the military operations	1733-1751	375
F. Legal analysis and conclusions	1752-1772	379
 PART FOUR: ACCOUNTABILITY AND JUDICIAL REMEDIES
 XXVI. PROCEEDINGS AND RESPONSES BY ISRAEL TO ALLEGATIONS OF VIOLATIONS BY ITS ARMED FORCES AGAINST PALESTINIANS	 1773-1835	 383
A. Israel's system of investigation and prosecution	1789-1803	385
B. Legal assessment	1804-1835	388

CONTENTS (cont'd)

	Paragraphs	Page
XXVII. PROCEEDINGS BY PALESTINIAN AUTHORITIES	1836-1848	394
A. Proceedings related to actions in the Gaza Strip	1836-1842	394
B. Proceedings related to actions in the West Bank	1843-1848	396
XXVIII. UNIVERSAL JURISDICTION	1849-1857	397
XXIX. REPARATION	1858-1873	399
A. The right to a remedy and reparation under international law	1861-1866	400
B. Compensation and reparations to the Palestinian people in the Gaza Strip	1867-1873	401
PART FIVE: CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS
XXX. CONCLUSIONS	1874-1966	404
A. Concluding observations	1874-1876	404
B. The Israeli military operations in Gaza: relevance to and links with Israel's policies vis-à-vis the Occupied Palestinian Territory	1877-1879	404
C. Nature, objectives and targets of the Israeli military operations in Gaza	1880-1895	405
D. Occupation, resilience and civil society	1896-1899	408
E. Rocket and mortar attacks in Israel	1900-1902	409
F. Dissenting voices in Israel	1903-1904	409
G. The impact of dehumanization	1905-1910	410
H. The intra-Palestinian situation	1911	411
I. The need for protection and the role of the international community	1912-1917	412
J. Summary of legal findings	1918-1956	413
K. The need for accountability	1957-1966	420
XXXI. RECOMMENDATIONS	1967-1979	422
Annexes		430

ACRONYMS AND ABBREVIATIONS

ACRI	Association for Civil Rights in Israel
BMC	businessman card
CLA	Coordination and Liaison Administration
CMWU	Coastal Municipalities Water Utility
COGAT	Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories
DFLP	Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine
DIME	dense inert metal explosive
DSS	United Nations Department of Safety and Security
FAO	Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations
GIS	General Intelligence Service
HaMoked	Center for the Defense of the Individual
HCC	Humanitarian Coordination Centre
IAF	Israeli air force
ICCPR	International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights
ICESCR	International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
ICHR	Independent Commission for Human Rights
ICRC	International Committee of the Red Cross
IDF	Israeli Defense Forces
IED	improvised explosive device
IHL	international humanitarian law
IHRL	international human rights law
ILO	International Labour Organization
IOF	Israeli occupation forces
MADA	Palestinian Center for Development and Media Freedoms
NATO	North Atlantic Treaty Organization
NGO	non-governmental organization
OCHA	Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs
OHCHR	Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights
PALTRADE	Palestine Trade Center
PCATI	Public Committee against Torture in Israel
PCHR	Palestinian Centre for Human Rights
PFLP	Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine
PHR-Israel	Physicians for Human Rights – Israel
PLO	Palestine Liberation Organization
PRC	Popular Resistance Committee
PRCS	Palestinian Red Crescent Society
TAWTHEQ	Central Commission for Documentation and Pursuit of Israeli War Criminals
UAV	unmanned aviation vehicle
UNCTAD	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNDP	United Nations Development Programme
UNFPA	United Nations Population Fund
UNHCR	Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
UNICEF	United Nations Children’s Fund
UNITAR	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

UNOSAT
UNRWA

Operational Satellite Applications Programme
United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

WFP WHO

World Food Programme
World Health Organization

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

A. Introduction

1. On 3 April 2009, the President of the Human Rights Council established the United Nations Fact Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict with the mandate “to investigate all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law that might have been committed at any time in the context of the military operations that were conducted in Gaza during the period from 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009, whether before, during or after.”
2. The President appointed Justice Richard Goldstone, former judge of the Constitutional Court of South Africa and former Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, to head the Mission. The other three appointed members were: Professor Christine Chinkin, Professor of International Law at the London School of Economics and Political Science, who was a member of the high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun (2008); Ms. Hina Jilani, Advocate of the Supreme Court of Pakistan and former Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights defenders, who was a member of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur (2004); and Colonel Desmond Travers, a former Officer in Ireland’s Defence Forces and member of the Board of Directors of the Institute for International Criminal Investigations.
3. As is usual practice, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) established a secretariat to support the Mission.
4. The Mission interpreted the mandate as requiring it to place the civilian population of the region at the centre of its concerns regarding the violations of international law.
5. The Mission convened for the first time in Geneva between 4 and 8 May 2009. Additionally, the Mission met in Geneva on 20 May, on 4 and 5 July, and between 1 and 4 August 2009. The Mission conducted three field visits: two to the Gaza Strip between 30 May and 6 June, and between 25 June and 1 July 2009; and one visit to Amman on 2 and 3 July 2009. Several staff of the Mission’s secretariat were deployed in Gaza from 22 May to 4 July 2009 to conduct field investigations.
6. Notes verbales were sent to all Member States of the United Nations and United Nations organs and bodies on 7 May 2009. On 8 June 2009, the Mission issued a call for submissions inviting all interested persons and organizations to submit relevant information and documentation to assist in the implementation of its mandate.
7. Public hearings were held in Gaza on 28 and 29 June and in Geneva on 6 and 7 July 2009.
8. The Mission repeatedly sought to obtain the cooperation of the Government of Israel. After numerous attempts had failed, the Mission sought and obtained the assistance of the Government of Egypt to enable it to enter the Gaza Strip through the Rafah crossing.
9. The Mission has enjoyed the support and cooperation of the Palestinian Authority and of the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations. Due to the lack of cooperation from the Israeli Government, the Mission was unable to meet members of the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank. The Mission did, however, meet officials of the Palestinian Authority, including a cabinet minister, in Amman. During its visits to the Gaza Strip, the Mission held meetings with senior members of the Gaza authorities and they extended their full cooperation and support to the Mission.

10. Subsequent to the public hearings in Geneva, the Mission was informed that a Palestinian participant, Mr. Muhammad Srour, had been detained by Israeli security forces when returning to the West Bank and became concerned that his detention may have been a consequence of his appearance before the Mission. The Mission is in contact with him and continues to monitor developments.

B. Methodology

11. To implement its mandate, the Mission determined that it was required to consider any actions by all parties that might have constituted violations of international human rights law or international humanitarian law. The mandate also required it to review related actions in the entire Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel.

12. With regard to temporal scope, the Mission decided to focus primarily on events, actions or circumstances occurring since 19 June 2008, when a ceasefire was agreed between the Government of Israel and Hamas. The Mission has also taken into consideration matters occurring after the end of military operations that constitute continuing human rights and international humanitarian law violations related to or as a consequence of the military operations, up to 31 July 2009.

13. The Mission also analysed the historical context of the events that led to the military operations in Gaza between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009 and the links between these operations and overarching Israeli policies vis-à-vis the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

14. The Mission considered that the reference in its mandate to violations committed “in the context” of the December–January military operations required it to include restrictions on human rights and fundamental freedoms relating to Israel's strategies and actions in the context of its military operations.

15. The normative framework for the Mission has been general international law, the Charter of the United Nations, international humanitarian law, international human rights law and international criminal law.

16. This report does not purport to be exhaustive in documenting the very high number of relevant incidents that occurred in the period covered by the Mission's mandate. Nevertheless, the Mission considers that the report is illustrative of the main patterns of violations. In Gaza, the Mission investigated 36 incidents.

17. The Mission based its work on an independent and impartial analysis of compliance by the parties with their obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law in the context of the recent conflict in Gaza, and on international investigative standards developed by the United Nations.

18. The Mission adopted an inclusive approach to gathering information and seeking views. Information-gathering methods included: (a) the review of reports from different sources; (b) interviews with victims, witnesses and other persons having relevant information; (c) site visits to specific locations in Gaza where incidents had occurred; (d) the analysis of video and photographic images, including satellite imagery; (e) the review of medical reports about injuries to victims; (f) the forensic analysis of weapons and ammunition remnants collected at incident sites; (g) meetings with a variety of interlocutors; (h) invitations to provide information relating to the Mission's investigation requirements; (i) the wide circulation of a public call for written submissions; (j) public hearings in Gaza and in Geneva.

19. The Mission conducted 188 individual interviews. It reviewed more than 300 reports, submissions and other documentation either researched of its own motion, received in reply to its call for submissions and notes verbales or provided during meetings or otherwise, amounting to more than 10,000 pages, over 30 videos and 1,200 photographs.

20. By refusing to cooperate with the Mission, the Government of Israel prevented it from meeting Israeli Government officials, but also from travelling to Israel to meet Israeli victims and to the West Bank to meet Palestinian Authority representatives and Palestinian victims.

21. The Mission conducted field visits, including investigations of incident sites, in the Gaza Strip. This allowed the Mission to observe first-hand the situation on the ground, and speak to many witnesses and other relevant persons.

22. The purpose of the public hearings, which were broadcast live, was to enable victims, witnesses and experts from all sides to the conflict to speak directly to as many people as possible in the region as well as in the international community. The Mission gave priority to the participation of victims and people from the affected communities. The 38 public testimonies covered facts as well as legal and military matters. The Mission had initially intended to hold hearings in Gaza, Israel and the West Bank. However, denial of access to Israel and the West Bank resulted in the decision to hold hearings of participants from Israel and the West Bank in Geneva.

23. In establishing its findings, the Mission sought to rely primarily and whenever possible on information it gathered first-hand. Information produced by others, including reports, affidavits and media reports, was used primarily as corroboration.

24. The Mission's final conclusions on the reliability of the information received were based on its own assessment of the credibility and reliability of the witnesses it met, verifying the sources and the methodology used in the reports and documents produced by others, cross-referencing the relevant material and information, and assessing whether, in all the circumstances, there was sufficient credible and reliable information for the Mission to make a finding in fact.

25. On this basis, the Mission has, to the best of its ability, determined what facts have been established. In many cases it has found that acts entailing individual criminal responsibility have been committed. In all of these cases the Mission has found that there is sufficient information to establish the objective elements of the crimes in question. In almost all of the cases the Mission has also been able to determine whether or not it appears that the acts in question were done deliberately or recklessly or in the knowledge that the consequence that resulted would result in the ordinary course of events. The Mission has thus referred in many cases to the relevant fault element (mens rea). The Mission fully appreciates the importance of the presumption of innocence: the findings in the report do not subvert the operation of that principle. The findings do not attempt to identify the individuals responsible for the commission of offences nor do they pretend to reach the standard of proof applicable in criminal trials.

26. In order to provide the parties concerned with an opportunity to submit additional relevant information and express their position and respond to allegations, the Mission also submitted comprehensive lists of questions to the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the Gaza authorities in advance of completing its analysis and findings. The Mission received replies from the Palestinian Authority and the Gaza authorities but not from Israel.

C. Facts investigated by the Mission, factual and legal findings

The Occupied Palestinian Territory: the Gaza Strip

1. The blockade

27. The Mission focused (chap. V) on the process of economic and political isolation imposed by Israel on the Gaza Strip, generally referred to as a blockade. The blockade comprises measures such as restrictions on the goods that can be imported into Gaza and the closure of border crossings for people, goods and services, sometimes for days, including cuts in the provision of fuel and electricity. Gaza's economy is further severely affected by the reduction of the fishing zone open to Palestinian fishermen and the establishment of a buffer zone along the border between Gaza and Israel, which reduces the land available for agriculture and industry. In addition to creating an emergency situation, the blockade has significantly weakened the capacities of the population and of the health, water and other public sectors to respond to the emergency created by the military operations.

28. The Mission holds the view that Israel continues to be duty-bound under the Fourth Geneva Convention and to the full extent of the means available to it to ensure the supply of foodstuff, medical and hospital items and other goods to meet the humanitarian needs of the population of the Gaza Strip without qualification.

2. Overview of Israel's military operations in the Gaza Strip and casualties

29. Israel deployed its navy, air force and army in the operation it codenamed "Operation Cast Lead". The military operations in the Gaza Strip included two main phases, the air phase and the air-land phase, and lasted from 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009. The Israeli offensive began with a week-long air attack, from 27 December until 3 January 2009. The air force continued to play an important role in assisting and covering the ground forces from 3 January to 18 January 2009. The army was responsible for the ground invasion, which began on 3 January 2009, when ground troops entered Gaza from the north and the east. The available information indicates that the Golani, Givati and Paratrooper Brigades and five Armoured Corps Brigades were involved. The navy was used in part to shell the Gaza coast during the operations. Chapter VI also locates the incidents investigated by the Mission, described in chapters VII to XV, in the context of the military operations.

30. Statistics about Palestinians who lost their lives during the military operations vary. Based on extensive field research, non-governmental organizations place the overall number of persons killed between 1,387 and 1,417. The Gaza authorities report 1,444 fatalities. The Government of Israel provides a figure of 1,166. The data provided by non-governmental sources on the percentage of civilians among those killed are generally consistent and raise very serious concerns about the way Israel conducted the military operations in Gaza.

31. According to the Government of Israel, during the military operations there were four Israeli fatalities in southern Israel, of whom three were civilians and one a soldier. They were killed by rocket and mortar attacks by Palestinian armed groups. In addition, nine Israeli soldiers were killed during the fighting inside the Gaza strip, four of whom as a result of friendly fire.

3. Attacks by Israeli forces on government buildings and persons of the Gaza authorities, including police

32. The Israeli armed forces launched numerous attacks against buildings and persons of the Gaza authorities. As far as attacks on buildings are concerned, the Mission examined the Israeli strikes against the Palestinian Legislative Council building and the Gaza main prison (chap. VII). Both buildings were destroyed and can no longer be used. Statements by Israeli Government and armed forces representatives justified the attacks arguing that political and administrative institutions in Gaza are part of the “ Hamas terrorist infrastructure ”. The Mission rejects this position. It finds that there is no evidence that the Legislative Council building and the Gaza main prison made an effective contribution to military action. On the information available to it, the Mission finds that the attacks on these buildings constituted deliberate attacks on civilian objects in violation of the rule of customary international humanitarian law whereby attacks must be strictly limited to military objectives. These facts further indicate the commission of the grave breach of extensive destruction of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly.

33. The Mission examined the attacks against six police facilities, four of them during the first minutes of the military operations on 27 December 2008, resulting in the death of 99 policemen and nine members of the public. Overall, the approximately 240 policemen killed by Israeli forces constitute more than one sixth of the Palestinian casualties. The circumstances of the attacks seem to indicate, and the Government of Israel’s July 2009 report on the military operations confirm, that the policemen were deliberately targeted and killed on the ground that the police, as an institution or a large part of the policemen individually, are, in the Government of Israel’s view, part of the Palestinian military forces in Gaza.

34. To examine whether the attacks against the police were compatible with the principle of distinction between civilian and military objects and persons, the Mission analysed the institutional development of the Gaza police since Hamas took complete control of Gaza in July 2007 and merged the Gaza police with the “ Executive Force ” it had created after its election victory. The Mission finds that, while a great number of the Gaza policemen were recruited among Hamas supporters or members of Palestinian armed groups, the Gaza police were a civilian law-enforcement agency. The Mission also concludes that the policemen killed on 27 December 2008 cannot be said to have been taking a direct part in hostilities and thus did not lose their civilian immunity from direct attack as civilians on this basis. The Mission accepts that there may be individual members of the Gaza police that were at the same time members of Palestinian armed groups and thus combatants. It concludes, however, that the attacks against the police facilities on the first day of the armed operations failed to strike an acceptable balance between the direct military advantage anticipated (i.e. the killing of those policemen who may have been members of Palestinian armed groups) and the loss of civilian life (i.e. the other policemen killed and members of the public who would inevitably have been present or in the vicinity), and therefore violated international humanitarian law.

4. Obligation on Palestinian armed groups in Gaza to take feasible precautions to protect the civilian population and civilian objects

35. The Mission examined whether and to what extent the Palestinian armed groups violated their obligation to exercise care and take all feasible precautions to protect the civilian population in Gaza from the inherent dangers of the military operations (chap. VIII). The Mission was faced with a certain reluctance by the persons it interviewed in Gaza to discuss the activities of the armed groups. On the basis of the information gathered, the Mission found that Palestinian armed groups were present in urban areas during the military operations and launched rockets from urban areas. It may be that the Palestinian combatants did not at all times adequately distinguish themselves from the civilian population. The Mission found no evidence, however, to suggest that Palestinian armed groups either directed civilians to areas where attacks were being launched or that they forced civilians to remain within the vicinity of the attacks.

36. Although the incidents investigated by the Mission did not establish the use of mosques for military purposes or to shield military activities, it cannot exclude that this might have occurred in other cases. The Mission did not find any evidence to support the allegations that hospital facilities were used by the Gaza authorities or by Palestinian armed groups to shield military activities or that ambulances were used to transport combatants or for other military purposes. On the basis of its own investigations and the statements by United Nations officials, the Mission excludes that Palestinian armed groups engaged in combat activities from United Nations facilities that were used as shelters during the military operations. The Mission cannot, however, discount the possibility that Palestinian armed groups were active in the vicinity of such United Nations facilities and hospitals. While the conduct of hostilities in built-up areas does not, of itself, constitute a violation of international law, Palestinian armed groups, where they launched attacks close to civilian or protected buildings, unnecessarily exposed the civilian population of Gaza to danger.

5. Obligation on Israel to take feasible precautions to protect the civilian population and civilian objects in Gaza

37. The Mission examined how the Israeli armed forces discharged their obligation to take all feasible precautions to protect the civilian population of Gaza, including particularly the obligation to give effective advance warning of attacks (chap. IX). The Mission acknowledges the significant efforts made by Israel to issue warnings through telephone calls, leaflets and radio broadcasts, and accepts that in some cases, particularly when the warnings were sufficiently specific, they encouraged residents to leave an area and get out of harm's way. However, the Mission also notes factors that significantly undermined the effectiveness of the warnings issued. These include the lack of specificity and thus credibility of many pre-recorded phone messages and leaflets. The credibility of instructions to move to city centres for safety was also diminished by the fact that the city centres themselves had been the subject of intense attacks during the air phase of the military operations. The Mission also examined the practice of dropping lighter explosives on roofs (so-called roof knocking). It concludes that this technique is not effective as a warning and constitutes a form of attack against the civilians inhabiting the building. Finally, the Mission stresses that the fact that a warning was issued does not relieve commanders and their subordinates of taking all other feasible measures to distinguish between civilians and combatants.

38. The Mission also examined the precautions taken by the Israeli armed forces in the context of three specific attacks they launched. On 15 January 2009, the field office compound of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) in Gaza City came under shelling with high explosive and white phosphorous munitions. The Mission notes that the attack was extremely dangerous, as the compound offered shelter to between 600 and 700 civilians and contained a huge fuel depot. The Israeli armed forces continued their attack over several hours despite having been fully alerted to the risks they created. The Mission concludes that the Israeli armed forces violated the requirement under customary international law to take all feasible precautions in the choice of means and method of attack with a view to avoiding and in any event minimizing incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians and damage to civilian objects.

39. The Mission also finds that, on the same day, the Israeli armed forces directly and intentionally attacked al-Quds hospital in Gaza City and the adjacent ambulance depot with white phosphorous shells. The attack caused fires which took a whole day to extinguish and caused panic among the sick and wounded who had to be evacuated. The Mission finds that no warning was given at any point of an imminent strike. On the basis of its investigation, the Mission rejects the allegation that fire was directed at the Israeli armed forces from within the hospital.

40. The Mission also examined the intense artillery attacks, again including white phosphorous munitions, on al-Wafa hospital in eastern Gaza City, a facility for patients receiving long-term care and suffering from particularly serious injuries. On the basis of the information gathered, the Mission found a violation of the prohibition of attacks on civilian hospitals in both cases. The Mission also highlights that the warnings given by leaflets and pre-recorded phone messages in the case of al-Wafa hospital demonstrate the complete ineffectiveness of certain kinds of routine and generic warnings.

6. Indiscriminate attacks by Israeli forces resulting in the loss of life and injury to civilians

41. The Mission examined the mortar shelling of al-Fakhura junction in Jabaliyah next to a UNRWA school, which, at the time, was sheltering more than 1,300 people (chap. X). The Israeli armed forces launched at least four mortar shells. One landed in the courtyard of a family home, killing 11 people assembled there. Three other shells landed on al-Fakhura Street, killing at least a further 24 people and injuring as many as 40. The Mission examined in detail statements by Israeli Government representatives alleging that the attack was launched in response to a mortar attack from an armed Palestinian group. While the Mission does not exclude that this may have been the case, it considers the credibility of Israel's position damaged by the series of inconsistencies, contradictions and factual inaccuracies in the statements justifying the attack.

42. In drawing its legal conclusions on the attack on al-Fakhura junction, the Mission recognizes that, for all armies, decisions on proportionality, weighing the military advantage to be gained against the risk of killing civilians, will present very genuine dilemmas in certain cases. The Mission does not consider this to be such a case. The firing of at least four mortar shells to attempt to kill a small number of specified individuals in a setting where large numbers of civilians were going about their daily business and 1,368 people were sheltering nearby cannot meet the test of what a reasonable commander would have determined to be an acceptable loss of civilian life for the military advantage sought. The Mission thus considers the attack to have been indiscriminate, in violation of international law, and to have violated the right to life of the Palestinian civilians killed in these incidents.

7. Deliberate attacks against the civilian population

43. The Mission investigated 11 incidents in which the Israeli armed forces launched direct attacks against civilians with lethal outcome (chap. XI). The facts in all but one of the attacks indicate no justifiable military objective. The first two are attacks on houses in the al-Samouni neighbourhood south of Gaza City, including the shelling of a house in which Palestinian civilians had been forced to assemble by the Israeli armed forces. The following group of seven incidents concern the shooting of civilians while they were trying to leave their homes to walk to a safer place, waving white flags and, in some of the cases, following an injunction from the Israeli forces to do so. The facts gathered by the Mission indicate that all the attacks occurred under circumstances in which the Israeli armed forces were in control of the area and had previously entered into contact with or had at least observed the persons they subsequently attacked, so that they must have been aware of their civilian status. In the majority of these incidents, the consequences of the Israeli attacks against civilians were aggravated by their subsequent refusal to allow the evacuation of the wounded or to permit access to ambulances.

44. These incidents indicate that the instructions given to the Israeli armed forces moving into Gaza provided for a low threshold for the use of lethal fire against the civilian population. The Mission found strong corroboration of this trend in the testimonies of Israeli soldiers collected in two publications it reviewed.

45. The Mission further examined an incident in which a mosque was targeted with a missile during early evening prayers, resulting in the death of 15 people, and an attack with flechette munitions on a crowd of family and neighbours at a condolence tent, killing five. The Mission finds that both attacks constitute intentional attacks against the civilian population and civilian objects.

46. From the facts ascertained in all the above cases, the Mission finds that the conduct of the Israeli armed forces constitutes grave breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention in respect of wilful killings and wilfully causing great suffering to protected persons and, as such, give rise to individual criminal responsibility. It also finds that the direct targeting and arbitrary killing of Palestinian civilians is a violation of the right to life.

47. The last incident concerns the bombing of a house resulting in the killing of 22 family members. Israel's position in this case is that there was an "operational error" and that the intended target was a neighbouring house storing weapons. On the basis of its investigation, the Mission expresses significant doubts about the Israeli authorities' account of the incident. The Mission concludes that, if a mistake was indeed made, there could not be said to be a case of wilful killing. State responsibility of Israel for an internationally wrongful act would, however, remain.

8. The use of certain weapons

48. Based on its investigation of incidents involving the use of certain weapons such as white phosphorous and flechette missiles, the Mission, while accepting that white phosphorous is not at this stage proscribed under international law, finds that the Israeli armed forces were systematically reckless in determining its use in built-up areas. Moreover, doctors who treated patients with white phosphorous wounds spoke about the severity and sometimes untreatable nature of the burns caused by the substance. The Mission believes that serious consideration should be given to banning the use of white phosphorous in built-up areas. As to flechettes, the Mission notes that they are an area weapon incapable of discriminating between objectives after detonation. They are, therefore, particularly unsuitable for use in urban settings where there is reason to believe civilians may be present.

49. While the Mission is not in a position to state with certainty that so-called dense inert metal explosive (DIME) munitions were used by the Israeli armed forces, it did receive reports from Palestinian and foreign doctors who had operated in Gaza during the military operations of a high percentage of patients with injuries compatible with their impact. DIME weapons and weapons armed with heavy metal are not prohibited under international law as it currently stands, but do raise specific health concerns. Finally, the Mission received allegations that depleted and non-depleted uranium were used by the Israeli armed forces in Gaza. These allegations were not further investigated by the Mission.

9. Attacks on the foundations of civilian life in Gaza: destruction of industrial infrastructure, food production, water installations, sewage treatment plants and housing

50. The Mission investigated several incidents involving the destruction of industrial infrastructure, food production, water installations, sewage treatment plants and housing (chap. XIII). Already at the beginning of the military operations, el-Bader flour mill was the only flour mill in the Gaza Strip still operating. The flour mill was hit by a series of air strikes on 9 January 2009, after several false warnings had been issued on previous days. The Mission finds that its destruction had no military justification. The nature of the strikes, in particular the precise targeting of crucial machinery, suggests that the intention was to disable the factory's productive capacity. From the facts it ascertained, the Mission finds that there has been a violation of the grave breaches provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention. Unlawful and wanton destruction which is not justified by military necessity amounts to a war crime. The Mission also finds that the destruction of the mill was carried out to deny sustenance to the civilian population, which is a violation of customary international law and may constitute a war crime. The strike on the flour mill furthermore constitutes a violation of the right to adequate food and means of subsistence.

51. The chicken farms of Mr. Sameh Sawafeary in the Zeytoun neighbourhood south of Gaza City reportedly supplied over 10 per cent of the Gaza egg market. Armoured bulldozers of the Israeli armed forces systematically flattened the chicken coops, killing all 31,000 chickens inside, and destroyed the plant and material necessary for the business. The Mission concludes that this was a deliberate act of wanton destruction not justified by any military necessity and draws the same legal conclusions as in the case of the destruction of the flour mill.

52. The Israeli armed forces also carried out a strike against a wall of one of the raw sewage lagoons of the Gaza wastewater treatment plant, which caused the outflow of more than 200,000 cubic metres of raw sewage onto neighbouring farmland. The circumstances of the strike suggest that it was deliberate and premeditated. The Namar wells complex in Jabaliyah consisted of two water wells, pumping machines, a generator, fuel storage, a reservoir chlorination unit, buildings and related equipment. All were destroyed by multiple air strikes on the first day of the Israeli aerial attack. The Mission considers it unlikely that a target the size of the Namar wells could have been hit by multiple strikes in error. It found no grounds to suggest that there was any military advantage to be had by hitting the wells and noted that there was no suggestion that Palestinian armed groups had used the wells for any purpose. Considering that the right to drinking water is part of the right to adequate food, the Mission makes the same legal findings as in the case of the el-Bader flour mill.

53. During its visits to the Gaza Strip, the Mission witnessed the extent of the destruction of residential housing caused by air strikes, mortar and artillery shelling, missile strikes, the operation of bulldozers and demolition charges. In some cases, residential neighbourhoods were subjected to air-launched bombing and to intensive shelling apparently in the context of the advance of Israeli ground forces. In others, the facts gathered by the Mission strongly suggest that the destruction of housing was carried out in the absence of any link to combat engagements with Palestinian armed groups or any other effective contribution to military action. Combining the results of its own fact-finding on the ground with UNOSAT satellite imagery and the published testimonies of Israeli soldiers, the Mission concludes that, in addition to the extensive destruction of housing for so-called operational necessity during their advance, the Israeli armed forces engaged in another wave of systematic destruction of civilian buildings during the last three days of their presence in Gaza, aware of their imminent withdrawal. The conduct of the Israeli armed forces in this respect violated the principle of distinction between civilian and military objects and amounted to the grave breach of “extensive destruction... of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly”. The Israeli armed forces furthermore violated the right to adequate housing of the families concerned.

54. The attacks on industrial facilities, food production and water infrastructure investigated by the Mission are part of a broader pattern of destruction, which includes the destruction of the only cement-packaging plant in Gaza (the Atta Abu Jubbah plant), the Abu Eida factories for ready-mix concrete, further chicken farms and the al-Wadiyah Group’s food and drinks factories. The facts ascertained by the Mission indicate that there was a deliberate and systematic policy on the part of the Israeli armed forces to target industrial sites and water installations.

10. The use of Palestinian civilians as human shields

55. The Mission investigated four incidents in which the Israeli armed forces coerced Palestinian civilian men at gunpoint to take part in house searches during the military operations (chap. XIV). The men were blindfolded and handcuffed as they were forced to enter houses ahead of the Israeli soldiers. In one of the incidents, Israeli soldiers repeatedly forced a man to enter a house in which Palestinian combatants were hiding. Published testimonies of Israeli soldiers who took part in the military operations confirm the continuation of this practice, despite clear orders from Israel's High Court to the armed forces to put an end to it and repeated public assurances from the armed forces that the practice had been discontinued. The Mission concludes that this practice amounts to the use of Palestinian civilians as human shields and is therefore prohibited by international humanitarian law. It puts the right to life of the civilians at risk in an arbitrary and unlawful manner and constitutes cruel and inhuman treatment. The use of human shields also is a war crime. The Palestinian men used as human shields were questioned under threat of death or injury to extract information about Hamas, Palestinian combatants and tunnels. This constitutes a further violation of international humanitarian law.

11. Deprivation of liberty: Gazans detained during the Israeli military operations of 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009

56. During the military operations, the Israeli armed forces rounded up large numbers of civilians and detained them in houses and open spaces in Gaza and, in the case of many Palestinian men, also took them to detention facilities in Israel. In the cases investigated by the Mission, the facts gathered indicate that none of the civilians was armed or posed any apparent threat to the Israeli soldiers. Chapter XV of the report is based on the Mission's interviews with Palestinian men who were detained, as well as on its review of other relevant material, including interviews with relatives and statements from other victims submitted to it.

57. From the facts gathered, the Mission finds that numerous violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law were committed in the context of these detentions. Civilians, including women and children, were detained in degrading conditions, deprived of food, water and access to sanitary facilities, and exposed to the elements in January without any shelter. The men were handcuffed, blindfolded and repeatedly made to strip, sometimes naked, at different stages of their detention.

58. In the al-Atatra area in north-western Gaza, Israeli troops had dug out sandpits in which Palestinian men, women and children were detained. Israeli tanks and artillery positions were located inside the sandpits and around them and fired from next to the detainees.

59. The Palestinian men who were taken to detention facilities in Israel were subjected to degrading conditions of detention, harsh interrogation, beatings and other physical and mental abuse. Some of them were charged with being unlawful combatants. Those interviewed by the Mission were released after the proceedings against them had apparently been discontinued.

60. In addition to arbitrary deprivation of liberty and violation of due process rights, the cases of the detained Palestinian civilians highlight a common thread of the interaction between Israeli soldiers and Palestinian civilians which also emerged clearly in many cases discussed elsewhere in the report: continuous and systematic abuse, outrages on personal dignity, humiliating and degrading treatment contrary to fundamental principles of international humanitarian law and human rights law. The Mission concludes that this treatment constitutes the infliction of a collective penalty on these civilians and amounts to measures of intimidation and terror. Such acts are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and constitute a war crime.

12. Objectives and strategy of Israel's military operations in Gaza

61. The Mission reviewed available information on the planning of the Israeli military operations in Gaza, on the advanced military technology available to the Israeli armed forces and on their training in international humanitarian law (chap. XVI). According to official Government information, the Israeli armed forces have an elaborate legal advice and training system in place, which seeks to ensure knowledge of the relevant legal obligations and support to commanders for compliance in the field. The Israeli armed forces possess very advanced hardware and are also a market leader in the production of some of the most advanced pieces of military technology available, including unmanned aviation vehicles (UAVs). They have a very significant capacity for precision strikes by a variety of methods, including aerial and ground launches. Taking into account the ability to plan, the means to execute plans with the most developed technology available, and statements by the Israeli military that almost no errors occurred, the Mission finds that the incidents and patterns of events considered in the report are the result of deliberate planning and policy decisions.

62. The tactics used by the Israeli armed forces in the Gaza offensive are consistent with previous practices, most recently during the Lebanon war in 2006. A concept known as the Dahiya doctrine emerged then, involving the application of disproportionate force and the causing of great damage and destruction to civilian property and infrastructure, and suffering to civilian populations. The Mission concludes from a review of the facts on the ground that it witnessed for itself that what was prescribed as the best strategy appears to have been precisely what was put into practice.

63. In the framing of Israeli military objectives with regard to the Gaza operations, the concept of Hamas' "supporting infrastructure" is particularly worrying as it appears to transform civilians and civilian objects into legitimate targets. Statements by Israeli political and military leaders prior to and during the military operations in Gaza indicate that the Israeli military conception of what was necessary in a war with Hamas viewed disproportionate destruction and creating maximum disruption in the lives of many people as a legitimate means to achieve not only military but also political goals.

64. Statements by Israeli leaders to the effect that the destruction of civilian objects would be justified as a response to rocket attacks ("destroy 100 homes for every rocket fired") indicate the possibility of resorting to reprisals. The Mission is of the view that reprisals against civilians in armed hostilities are contrary to international humanitarian law.

13. The impact of the military operations and of the blockade on the people of Gaza and their human rights

65. The Mission examined the combined impact of the military operations and of the blockade on the Gaza population and its enjoyment of human rights. The economy, employment opportunities and family livelihoods were already severely affected by the blockade when the Israeli offensive began. Insufficient supply of fuel for electricity generation had a negative impact on industrial activity, on the operation of hospitals, on water supply to households and on sewage treatment. Import restrictions and the ban on all exports from Gaza affected the industrial sector and agricultural production. Unemployment levels and the percentage of the population living in poverty or deep poverty were rising.

66. In this precarious situation, the military operations destroyed a substantial part of the economic infrastructure. As many factories were targeted and destroyed or damaged, poverty, unemployment and food insecurity further increased dramatically. The agricultural sector similarly suffered from the destruction of farmland, water wells and fishing boats during the military operations. The continuation of the blockade impedes the reconstruction of the economic infrastructure that was destroyed.

67. The razing of farmland and the destruction of greenhouses are expected to further worsen food insecurity despite the increased quantities of food items allowed into Gaza since the beginning of the military operations. Dependence on food assistance increases. Levels of stunting and thinness in children and of anaemia prevalence in children and pregnant women were worrying even before the military operations. The hardship caused by the extensive destruction of shelter (the United Nations Development Programme reported 3,354 houses completely destroyed and 11,112 partially damaged) and the resulting displacement particularly affects children and women. The destruction of water and sanitation infrastructure (such as the destruction of the Namar wells and the attack against the water treatment plant described in chapter XIII) aggravated the pre-existing situation. Even before the military operations, 80 per cent of the water supplied in Gaza did not meet the World Health Organization's standards for drinking water. The discharge of untreated or partially treated wastewater into the sea is a further health hazard worsened by the military operations.

68. The military operations and resulting casualties subjected the beleaguered Gaza health sector to additional strain. Hospitals and ambulances were targeted by Israeli attacks. Patients with chronic health conditions could not be given priority in hospitals faced with an influx of patients with life-threatening injuries. Patients injured during the hostilities were often discharged quickly to free beds. The long-term health impact of these early discharges, as well as of weapons containing substances such as tungsten and white phosphorous, remains a source of concern. While the exact number of people who will suffer permanent disabilities is still unknown, the Mission understands that many persons who sustained traumatic injuries during the conflict still face the risk of permanent disability owing to complications and inadequate follow-up and physical rehabilitation.

69. The number of persons suffering from mental health problems is also bound to increase. The Mission investigated a number of incidents in which adults and children witnessed the killing of loved ones. Doctors of the Gaza Community Mental Health Programme gave information to the Mission on psychosomatic disorders, on a widespread state of alienation in the population and on "numbness" as a result of severe loss. They told the Mission that these conditions were in turn likely to increase the readiness to embrace violence and extremism. They also told the Mission that 20 per cent of children in the Gaza Strip suffer from post-traumatic stress disorders.

70. Children's psychological learning difficulties are compounded by the impact of the blockade and the military operations on the education infrastructure. Some 280 schools and kindergartens were destroyed in a situation in which restrictions on the importation of construction materials meant that many school buildings were already in serious need of repair.

71. The Mission's attention was also drawn to the particular manner in which women were affected by the military operations. The cases of women interviewed by the Mission in Gaza dramatically illustrate the suffering caused by the feeling of inability to provide children with the care and security they need. Women's responsibility for the household and the children often forces them to conceal their own sufferings, resulting in their issues remaining unaddressed. The number of women who are the sole breadwinners increased, but their employment opportunities remain significantly inferior to men's. The military operations and increased poverty add to the potential for conflicts in the family and between widows and their in-laws.

72. The Mission acknowledges that the supply of humanitarian goods, particularly foodstuffs, allowed into Gaza by Israel temporarily increased during the military operations. The level of goods allowed into Gaza before the military operations was, however, insufficient to meet the needs of the population even before hostilities started, and has again decreased since the end of the military operations. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission believes that Israel has violated its obligation to allow free passage of all consignments of medical and hospital objects, food and clothing (article 23 of the Fourth Geneva Convention). The Mission also finds that Israel violated specific obligations which it has as the occupying Power and which are spelled out in the Fourth Geneva Convention, such as the duty to maintain medical and hospital establishments and services and to agree to relief schemes if the occupied territory is not well supplied.

73. The Mission also concludes that in the destruction by the Israeli armed forces of private residential houses, water wells, water tanks, agricultural land and greenhouses there was a specific purpose of denying sustenance to the population of the Gaza Strip. The Mission finds that Israel violated its duty to respect the right of the Gaza population to an adequate standard of living, including access to adequate food, water and housing. The Mission, moreover, finds violations of specific human rights provisions protecting children, particularly those who are victims of armed conflict, women and the disabled.

74. The conditions of life in Gaza, resulting from deliberate actions of the Israeli armed forces and the declared policies of the Government of Israel – as they were presented by its authorized and legitimate representatives – with regard to the Gaza Strip before, during and after the military operation, cumulatively indicate the intention to inflict collective punishment on the people of the Gaza Strip in violation of international humanitarian law.

75. Finally, the Mission considered whether the series of acts that deprive Palestinians in the Gaza Strip of their means of sustenance, employment, housing and water, that deny their freedom of movement and their right to leave and enter their own country, that limit their access to courts of law and effective remedies could amount to persecution, a crime against humanity. From the facts available to it, the Mission is of the view that some of the actions of the Government of Israel might justify a competent court finding that crimes against humanity have been committed.

14. The continuing detention of Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit

76. The Mission notes the continued detention of Gilad Shalit, a member of the Israeli armed forces, captured in 2006 by a Palestinian armed group. In reaction to his capture, the Israeli Government ordered a number of attacks against infrastructure in the Gaza Strip and Palestinian Authority offices as well as the arrest of eight Palestinian Government ministers and 26 members of the Palestinian Legislative Council. The Mission heard testimonies indicating that, during the military operations of December 2008 – January 2009, Israeli soldiers questioned captured Palestinians about the whereabouts of Gilad Shalit. Gilad Shalit's father, Noam Shalit, appeared before the Mission at the public hearing held in Geneva on 6 July 2009.

77. The Mission is of the opinion that, as a soldier who belongs to the Israeli armed forces and who was captured during an enemy incursion into Israel, Gilad Shalit meets the requirements for prisoner-of-war status under the Third Geneva Convention. As such, he should be protected, treated humanely and be allowed external communication as appropriate according to that Convention. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) should be allowed to visit him without delay. Information about his condition should also be provided promptly to his family.

78. The Mission is concerned by declarations made by various Israeli officials who have indicated the intention of maintaining the blockade of the Gaza Strip until the release of Gilad Shalit. The Mission is of the opinion that this would constitute collective punishment of the civilian population of the Gaza Strip.

15. Internal violence and targeting of Fatah affiliates by security services under the control of the Gaza authorities

79. The Mission obtained information about violence against political opponents by the security services that report to the Gaza authorities. These included the killing of a number of Gaza residents between the beginning of the Israeli military operations and 27 February. Among these were some detainees who had been at al-Saraya detention facility on 28 December and who had fled following the Israeli aerial attack. Not all those killed after escaping detention were Fatah affiliates, detained for political reasons, or charged with collaborating with the enemy. Some of the escapees had been convicted of serious crimes, such as drug-dealing or murder, and had been sentenced to death. The Mission was informed that the movement of many Fatah members was restricted during Israel's military operations in Gaza and that many were put under house arrest. According to the Gaza authorities, arrests were made only after the end of the Israeli military operations and only in relation to criminal acts and to restore public order.

80. The Mission gathered first-hand information on five cases of Fatah affiliates detained, killed or subject to physical abuse by members of the security forces or armed groups in Gaza. In most cases those abducted from their homes or otherwise detained were reportedly not accused of offences related to specific incidents, but rather targeted because of their political affiliation. When charges were laid, these were always linked to suspected political activities. The testimonies of witnesses and the reports provided by international and domestic human rights organizations bear striking similarities and indicate that these attacks were not randomly executed, but constituted part of a pattern of organized violence directed mainly against Fatah affiliates and supporters. The Mission finds that such actions constitute serious violations of human rights and are not consistent with either the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or the Palestinian Basic Law.

The Occupied Palestinian Territory: the West Bank, including East Jerusalem

81. The Mission considered developments in Gaza and the West Bank as closely interrelated, and analysed both to reach an informed understanding of and to report on issues within its mandate.

82. A consequence of Israel's non-cooperation with the Mission was that the Mission was unable to visit the West Bank to investigate alleged violations of international law there. However, the Mission has received many oral and written reports and other relevant materials from Palestinian, Israeli and international human rights organizations and institutions. In addition, the Mission has met representatives of human rights organizations, members of the Palestinian legislature and community leaders. It heard experts, witnesses and victims at the public hearings, interviewed affected individuals and witnesses, and reviewed video and photographic material.

1. Treatment of Palestinians in the West Bank by Israeli security forces, including use of excessive or lethal force during demonstrations

83. Various witnesses and experts informed the Mission of a sharp rise in the use of force by the Israeli security forces against Palestinians in the West Bank from the beginning of the Israeli operations in Gaza (chap. XX). A number of protestors were killed by Israeli forces during Palestinian demonstrations, including in support of the Gaza population under attack, and scores were injured. The level of violence used in the West Bank during the time of the operation in Gaza was sustained also after the operation.

84. Of particular concern to the Mission were allegations of the use of unnecessary, lethal force by Israeli security forces, the use of live ammunitions, and the provision in the Israeli armed forces "open fire regulations" of different rules to deal with disturbances where only Palestinians are present and those where Israelis are present. This raises serious concern with regard to discriminatory policies vis-à-vis Palestinians. Eyewitnesses also reported to the Mission on the use of sniper fire in the context of crowd control. Witnesses spoke of the markedly different atmosphere they encountered in the confrontation with the soldiers and border police during demonstrations in which all checks and balances had been removed. Several witnesses told the Mission that during the operation in Gaza, the sense in the West Bank was one of a "free for all", where anything was permitted.

85. Little if any action is taken by the Israeli authorities to investigate, prosecute and punish violence against Palestinians, including killings, by settlers and members of the security forces, resulting in a situation of impunity. The Mission concludes that Israel has failed to fulfil its obligations to protect the Palestinians from violence by private individuals under both international human rights law and international humanitarian law.

2. Detention of Palestinians in Israeli prisons

86. It is estimated that, since the beginning of the occupation, approximately 700,000 Palestinian men, women and children have been detained by Israel. According to estimates, as at 1 June 2009, there were approximately 8,100 Palestinian "political prisoners" in detention in Israel, including 60 women and 390 children. Most of these detainees are charged or convicted by the Israeli military court system that operates for Palestinians in the West Bank and under which due process rights for Palestinians are severely limited. Many are held in administrative detention and some under the Israeli “Unlawful Combatants Law”.

87. The Mission focused on a number of issues in relation to Palestinian detainees that in its view are linked to the December-January Israeli military operations in Gaza or their context.

88. Legal measures since Israel’s disengagement from Gaza in 2005 have resulted in differential treatment for Gazan detainees. A 2006 law altered due process guarantees and is applied only to Palestinian suspects, the overwhelming majority of whom are from Gaza, according to Israeli Government sources. The ICRC Family Visits Programme in the Gaza Strip was suspended in 2007, barring all means of communication between Gazan prisoners and the outside world.

89. During the Israeli military operations in Gaza, the number of children detained by Israel was higher than in the same period in 2008. Many children were reportedly arrested on the street and/or during demonstrations in the West Bank. The number of child detainees continued to be high in the months following the end of the operations, accompanied by reports of abuses by Israeli security forces.

90. A feature of Israel’s detention practice vis-à-vis the Palestinians since 2005 has been the arrest of Hamas affiliates. A few months before the elections for the Palestinian Legislative Council in 2005, Israel arrested numerous persons who had been involved in municipal or Legislative Council elections. Following the capture by Palestinian armed groups of Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit in June 2006, the Israeli armed forces arrested some 65 members of the Legislative Council, mayors and ministers, mostly Hamas members. All were held at least two years, generally in inadequate conditions. Further arrests of Hamas leaders were conducted during the military operations in Gaza. The detention of members of the Legislative Council has meant that it has been unable to function and exercise its legislative and oversight function over the Palestinian executive.

91. The Mission finds that these practices have resulted in violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, including the prohibition of arbitrary detention, the right to equal protection under the law and not to be discriminated based on political beliefs and the special protections to which children are entitled. The Mission also finds that the detention of members of the Legislative Council may amount to collective punishment contrary to international humanitarian law.

3. Restrictions on freedom of movement in the West Bank

92. In the West Bank, Israel has long imposed a system of restrictions on movement. Movement is restricted by a combination of physical obstacles, such as roadblocks, checkpoints and the Wall, and administrative measures, such as identity cards, permits, assigned residence, laws on family reunification, and policies on the right to enter from abroad and the right of return for refugees. Palestinians are denied access to areas expropriated for the building of the Wall and its infrastructure, for use by settlements, buffer zones, military bases and military training zones, and the roads built to connect these places. Many of these roads are “Israeli only” and forbidden for Palestinian use. Tens of thousands of Palestinians today are subject to a travel ban imposed by Israel, preventing them from travelling abroad. A number of witnesses and experts invited by the Mission to meet in Amman and participate in the hearings in Geneva could not meet the Mission owing to this travel ban.

93. The Mission has received reports that, during the Israeli offensive in Gaza, restrictions on movement in the West Bank were tightened. Israel imposed a “closure” on the West Bank for several days. In addition, there were more checkpoints in the West Bank, including in East Jerusalem, for the duration of the operation. Most of these were so-called flying checkpoints. In January 2009, several areas of the West Bank between the Wall and the Green Line were declared “closed military areas”.

94. During and following the operations in Gaza, Israel tightened its hold on the West Bank by increasing expropriations, house demolitions and demolition orders, granting more permits for homes built in settlements and intensifying the exploitation of the natural resources in the West Bank. Following the operations in Gaza, Israel has amended the regulations which determine the ability of persons with “Gaza ID” to move to the West Bank and vice versa, further entrenching the separation between the people of the West Bank and Gaza.

95. Israel’s Ministry of Housing and Planning is planning a further 73,000 settlement homes in the West Bank. The building of 15,000 of these homes has already been approved and, if all the plans are realized, the number of settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory will double.

96. The Mission believes that the restrictions on movement and access to which Palestinians in the West Bank are subject, in general, and the tighter restrictions during and, to some extent, after the military operations in Gaza, in particular, are disproportionate to any military objective served. In addition, the Mission is concerned about the steps taken recently to formalize the separation between Gaza and the West Bank, and as such between two parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

4. Internal violence and targeting of Hamas supporters by the Palestinian Authority, restrictions on freedom of expression and assembly

97. The Mission has received allegations of violations relevant to its mandate committed by the Palestinian Authority in the period under inquiry. These include violations related to the treatment of (suspected) Hamas affiliates by the security services, including unlawful arrest and detention. Several Palestinian human rights organizations have reported that practices used by the Palestinian Authority security forces in the West Bank amount to torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment. There have been a number of deaths in detention to which it is suspected that torture and other ill-treatment may have contributed or which they may have caused. Complaints of such practices have not been investigated.

98. Allegations were also received about the use of excessive force and the suppression of demonstrations by Palestinian security services – particularly those in support of the population of Gaza during the Israeli military operations. On these occasions Palestinian Authority security services have allegedly arrested many individuals and prevented the media from covering the events. The Mission also received allegations of harassment by Palestinian security services of journalists who expressed critical views.

99. The disabling of the Palestinian Legislative Council following the arrest and detention by Israel of several of its members has effectively curtailed parliamentary oversight over the Palestinian Authority executive. The executive has passed decrees and regulations to enable it to continue its day-to-day operations.

100. Other allegations include the arbitrary closure of charities and associations affiliated with Hamas and other Islamic groups or the revocation and non-renewal of their licences, the forcible replacement of board members of Islamic schools and other institutions, and the dismissal of Hamas-affiliated teachers.

101. The Palestinian Authority continues to discharge a large number of civil and military service employees, or suspend their salaries, under the pretext of “non-adherence to the legitimate authority” or “non-obtainment of security approval” on their appointments, which has become a pre-requirement for enrolment in public service. In effect, this measure excludes Hamas supporters or affiliates from public sector employment.

102. The Mission is of the view that the reported measures are inconsistent with the Palestinian Authority’s obligations deriving from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Palestinian Basic Law.

Israel

1. Impact on civilians of rocket and mortar attacks by Palestinian armed groups on southern Israel

103. Palestinian armed groups have launched about 8000 rockets and mortars into southern Israel since 2001 (chap. XXIV). While communities such as Sderot and Nir Am kibbutz have been within the range of rocket and mortar fire since the beginning, the range of rocket fire increased to nearly 40 kilometres from the Gaza border, encompassing towns as far north as Ashdod, during the Israeli military operations in Gaza.

104. Between 18 June 2008 and 18 January 2009, rockets fired by Palestinian armed groups in Gaza have killed three civilians inside Israel and two civilians in Gaza when a rocket landed short of the border on 26 December 2008. Reportedly, over 1000 civilians inside Israel were physically injured as a result of rocket and mortar attacks, 918 of whom were injured during the time of the Israeli military operations in Gaza.

105. The Mission has taken particular note of the high level of psychological trauma suffered by the civilian population inside Israel. Data gathered by an Israeli organization in October 2007 found that 28.4 per cent of adults and 72–94 per cent of children in Sderot suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder. During the military operations in Gaza 1596 people were reportedly treated for stress-related injuries while afterwards over 500 people were treated.

106. Rockets and mortars have damaged houses, schools and cars in southern Israel. On 5 March 2009, a rocket struck a synagogue in Netivot. The rocket and mortar fire has adversely affected the right to education of children and adults living in southern Israel. This is a result of school closures and interruptions to classes by alerts and moving to shelters but also the diminished ability to learn that is witnessed in individuals experiencing symptoms of psychological trauma.

107. The rocket and mortar fire has also had an adverse impact on the economic and social life of the affected communities. For communities such as Ashdod, Yavne, Beersheba, which experienced rocket strikes for the first time during the Israeli military operations in Gaza, there was a brief interruption to their economic and cultural activities brought about by the temporary displacement of some residents. For towns closer to the Gaza border, which have been under rocket and mortar fire since 2001, the recent escalation has added to the exodus of residents.

108. The Mission has determined that the rockets and, to a lesser extent, the mortars fired by the Palestinian armed groups are incapable of being directed towards specific military objectives and have been fired into areas where civilian populations are based. The Mission has further determined that these attacks constitute indiscriminate attacks upon the civilian population of southern Israel and that, where there is no intended military target and the rockets and mortars are launched into a civilian population, they constitute a deliberate attack against a civilian population. These acts would constitute war crimes and may amount to crimes against humanity. Given the seeming inability of the Palestinian armed groups to direct the rockets and mortars towards specific targets and given that the attacks have caused very little damage to Israeli military assets, the Mission finds that there is significant evidence to suggest that one of the primary purposes of the rocket and mortar attacks is to spread terror among the Israeli civilian population, a violation of international law.

109. Noting that some of the Palestinian armed groups, among them Hamas, have publicly expressed their intention to target civilians in reprisal for the civilian fatalities in Gaza as a result of Israeli military operations, the Mission is of the view that reprisals against civilians in armed hostilities are contrary to international humanitarian law.

110. The Mission notes that the relatively few casualties sustained by civilians inside Israel is due in large part to the precautions put into place by Israel. This includes an early warning system, the provision of public shelters and fortifications of schools and other public buildings at great financial cost – a projected US$ 460 million between 2005 and 2011 – to the Government of Israel. The Mission is greatly concerned, however, about the lack of an early warning system and a lack of public shelters and fortifications for the Palestinian Israeli communities living in unrecognized and in some of the recognized villages that are within the range of rocket and mortars being fired by Palestinian armed groups in Gaza.

2. Repression of dissent in Israel, the right of access to information and treatment of human rights defenders

111. The Mission received reports that individuals and groups, viewed as sources of criticism of Israel's military operations were subjected to repression or attempted repression by the Government of Israel. Amidst a high level of support for the Israeli military operations in Gaza from the Israeli Jewish population, there were also widespread protests against the military operations inside Israel. Hundreds of thousands – mainly, but not exclusively, Palestinian citizens of Israel – protested. While, in the main, the protests were permitted to take place, there were occasions when, reportedly, protesters had difficulty in obtaining permits – particularly in areas populated mainly by Palestinian Israelis. In Israel and in occupied East Jerusalem 715 people were arrested during the protests. There appear to have been no arrests of counter-protesters and 34 per cent of those arrested were under 18 years of age. The Mission notes that a relatively small proportion of those protesting were arrested. The Mission urges the Government of Israel to ensure that the police authorities respect the rights of all its citizens, without discrimination, including freedom of expression and the right to peaceful assembly, as guaranteed to them by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

112. The Mission notes with concern the reported instances of physical violence committed by members of the police against protesters, including the beating of protesters and other inappropriate conduct such as subjecting Palestinian citizens of Israel who were arrested to racial abuse and making sexual comments about female members of their families. Article 10 of the Covenant requires that those deprived of their liberty be treated with humanity and respect for the inherent dignity of the human person.

113. Of the protesters brought before the Israeli courts, the Palestinian Israelis were disproportionately held in detention pending trial. The element of discrimination and differential treatment between Palestinian and Jewish citizens of Israel by the judicial authorities, as indicated in the reports received, is a substantial cause for concern.

114. The interviews of political activists by the Israeli General Security Services were cited as the actions contributing most significantly to a climate of repression inside Israel. The Mission is concerned about activists being compelled to attend interviews with Shabak (also known as Shin Bet), without there being any legal obligation on them to do so, and in general at the alleged interrogation of political activists about their political activities.

115. The Mission received reports concerning the investigation by the Government of Israel into New Profile on allegations that it was inciting draft-dodging, a criminal offence, and reports that the Government was seeking to terminate funding from foreign Governments for Breaking the Silence, following its publication of testimonies of Israeli soldiers concerning the conduct of the Israeli armed forces in Gaza in December 2008 and January 2009. The Mission is concerned that the Government of Israel's action with regard to these organizations may have an intimidating effect on other Israeli human rights organizations. The so-called United Nations Declaration on Human Rights Defenders guarantees the right "to solicit, receive and utilize resources for the express purpose of promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms through peaceful means". If motivated by reaction to the organization's exercise of its freedom of expression, lobbying foreign Governments to terminate funding would be contrary to the spirit of the Declaration.

116. The Government of Israel imposed a ban on media access to Gaza following 5 November 2008. Furthermore, access was denied to human rights organizations and the ban continues for some international and Israeli organizations. The Mission can find no justification for this. The presence of journalists and international human rights monitors aids the investigation and wide public reporting of the conduct of the parties to the conflict, and can inhibit misconduct. The Mission observes that Israel, in its actions against political activists, non-governmental organizations and the media, has attempted to reduce public scrutiny of both its conduct during its military operations in Gaza and the consequences that these operations had for the residents of Gaza, possibly seeking to prevent investigation and public reporting thereon.

D. Accountability

1. Proceedings and responses by Israel to allegations of violations by its armed forces against Palestinians

117. Investigations and, if appropriate, prosecutions of those suspected of serious violations are necessary if respect for human rights and humanitarian law is to be ensured and to prevent the development of a climate of impunity. States have a duty under international law to investigate allegations of violations.

118. The Mission reviewed public information and reports from the Government of Israel concerning actions taken to discharge its obligation to investigate alleged violations (chap. XXVI). It addressed to Israel a number of questions on this issue, but it did not receive a reply.

119. In response to allegations of serious violations of human rights law and international humanitarian law, the Military Advocate General ordered some criminal investigations that were closed two weeks later concluding that allegations “were based on hearsay”. The Israeli armed forces also released the results of five special investigations carried out by high-ranking military officers, which concluded that “throughout the fighting in Gaza, the IDF operated in accordance with international law”, but the investigations reportedly revealed a very small number of errors. On 30 July 2009 the media reported that the Military Advocate General had ordered the military police to launch criminal investigations into 14 cases out of nearly 100 complaints of criminal conduct by soldiers. No details were offered.

120. The Mission reviewed the Israeli internal system of investigation and prosecution according to its national legislation and in the light of practice. The system comprises: (a) disciplinary proceedings; (b) operational debriefings (also known as “operational investigations”); (c) special investigations, performed by a senior officer at the request of the chief of staff; and (d) military police investigations, carried out by the Criminal Investigation Division of the military police. At the heart of the system lies the so-called operational debriefing. The debriefings are reviews of incidents and operations conducted by soldiers from the same unit or line of command together with a superior officer. They are meant to serve operational purposes.

121. International human rights law and humanitarian law require States to investigate and, if appropriate, prosecute allegations of serious violations by military personnel. International law has also established that such investigations should comply with standards of impartiality, independence, promptness and effectiveness. The Mission holds that the Israeli system of investigation does not comply with all those principles. In relation to the “operational debriefing” used by the Israeli armed forces as an investigative tool, the Mission holds the view that a tool designed for the review of performance and to learn lessons can hardly be an effective and impartial investigation mechanism that should be instituted after every military operation where allegations of serious violations have been made. It does not comply with internationally recognized principles of impartiality and promptness in investigations. The fact that proper criminal investigations can start only after the “operational debriefing” is over is a major flaw in the Israeli system of investigation.

122. The Mission concludes that there are serious doubts about the willingness of Israel to carry out genuine investigations in an impartial, independent, prompt and effective way as required by international law. The Mission is also of the view that the Israeli system overall presents inherently discriminatory features that make the pursuit of justice for Palestinian victims very difficult.

2. Proceedings by Palestinian authorities

(a) Proceedings related to actions in the Gaza Strip

123. The Mission found no evidence of any system of public monitoring or accountability for serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law set up by the Gaza authorities. The Mission is concerned with the consistent disregard for international humanitarian law with which armed groups in the Gaza Strip conduct their armed activities, through rocket and mortar fire, directed against Israel. Despite some media reports, the Mission remains unconvinced that any genuine and effective initiatives have been taken by the authorities to address the serious issues of violation of international humanitarian law in the conduct of armed activities by militant groups in the Gaza Strip.

124. Notwithstanding statements by the Gaza authorities and any action that they may have taken, of which the Mission is unaware, the Mission also considers that allegations of killings, torture and mistreatment within the Gaza Strip have gone largely without investigation.

(b) Proceedings related to actions in the West Bank

125. With regard to relevant violations identified in the West Bank, it appears that, with few exceptions, there has been a degree of tolerance towards human rights violations against political opponents, which has resulted in a lack of accountability for such actions. The Ministry of Interior has also ignored the High Court's decisions to release a number of detainees or to reopen some associations closed by the administration.

126. In the circumstances, the Mission is unable to consider the measures taken by the Palestinian Authority as meaningful for holding to account perpetrators of serious violations of international law and believes that the responsibility for protecting the rights of the people inherent in the authority assumed by the Palestinian Authority must be fulfilled with greater commitment

3. Universal jurisdiction

127. In the context of increasing unwillingness on the part of Israel to open criminal investigations that comply with international standards, the Mission supports the reliance on universal jurisdiction as an avenue for States to investigate violations of the grave breach provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, prevent impunity and promote international accountability (chap. XXVIII).

4. Reparations

128. International law also establishes that, whenever a violation of an international obligation occurs, an obligation to provide reparation arises. It is the view of the Mission that the current constitutional structure and legislation in Israel leaves very little room, if any, for Palestinians to seek compensation. The international community needs to provide for an additional or alternative mechanism of compensation for damage or loss incurred by Palestinian civilians during the military operations (chap. XXIX).

E. Conclusions and recommendations

129. The Mission draws general conclusions on its investigations in chapter XXX, which also includes a summary of its legal findings.

130. The Mission then makes recommendations to a number of United Nations bodies, Israel, the responsible Palestinian authorities and the international community on: (a) accountability for serious violations of international humanitarian law; (b) reparations; (c) serious violations of human rights law; (d) the blockade and reconstruction; (e) the use of weapons and military procedures; (f) the protection of human rights organizations and defenders ; (g) follow-up to the Mission's recommendations. The recommendations are detailed in chapter XXXI.

PART ONE: METHODOLOGY, CONTEXT AND APPLICABLE LAW

INTRODUCTION

131. On 3 April 2009, the President of the Human Rights Council established the United Nations Fact Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict with the mandate “to investigate all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law that might have been committed at any time in the context of the military operations that were conducted in Gaza during the period from 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009, whether before, during or after.” The appointment of the Mission followed the adoption on 12 January 2009 of resolution S-9/1 on the grave violations of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly due to the recent Israeli military attacks against the occupied Gaza Strip, by the United Nations Human Rights Council at the end of its ninth special session.

132. The President appointed Justice Richard Goldstone, former judge of the Constitutional Court of South Africa and former Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, to head the Mission. The other three appointed members were: Professor Christine Chinkin, Professor of International Law at the London School of Economics and Political Science, who was a member of the high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun (2008); Ms. Hina Jilani, Advocate of the Supreme Court of Pakistan and former Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights defenders, who was a member of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur (2004); and Colonel Desmond Travers, a former Officer in Ireland’s Defence Forces and member of the Board of Directors of the Institute for International Criminal Investigations.

133. As is usual practice, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) established a secretariat to support the Mission.

134. Between the adoption of resolution S-9/1 in January and the establishment of the Mission at the beginning of April, a broad cross section of actors, including domestic and international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and United Nations agencies and bodies, had already conducted numerous investigations and produced reports on the military operations in Gaza, all of which were taken into account by the Mission in its work of fact-finding and analysis.

135. Bearing in mind that the resolution of the Council had called for the urgent dispatch of the Mission and given the 11-week delay in its establishment, the Mission agreed to be bound by a short time frame (about three months) to complete its work and report to the Council at the earliest opportunity.

136. The Mission interpreted the mandate as requiring it to place the civilian population of the region at the centre of its concerns regarding the violations of international law. Accordingly, the Mission has made victims its first priority and it will draw attention to their plight in the context of the events under investigation. The members of the Mission hope that their situation will not be neglected by any political agenda for the region.

137. The Mission considered it crucial for the implementation of its mandate to meet with the widest possible range of stakeholders relevant to the facts under inquiry. During the three months of its work in Geneva, Gaza, Amman and elsewhere, the Mission met representatives of civil society, including domestic and international NGOs; women's organizations; bar associations; military analysts; medical doctors; mental health experts; representatives of the business/private sector, including agriculture and fishery; representatives of associations of persons with disabilities; journalists and other representatives of domestic and international media outlets; representatives of United Nations organs and bodies as well as other international organizations: the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, the Head of the United Nations Board of Inquiry into incidents in Gaza; diplomatic representatives of Member States of the United Nations in Geneva and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; members of the Palestinian Legislative Council from both Gaza and the West Bank; ministers and officials of the Palestinian Authority; senior members of the Gaza authorities;¹ former Government and military officials of the Government of Israel (see annex I).

138. The Mission convened for the first time in Geneva between 4 and 8 May 2009, when it established its methods of work and a three-month programme of activities. It also had initial briefings and consultations with a wide range of stakeholders. The Mission met the diplomatic community in Geneva, including the President of the Human Rights Council, members of the Council and sponsors of resolution S-9/1.

139. Additionally, the Mission met in Geneva on 20 May, on 4 and 5 July, and between 1 and 4 August 2009. The Mission conducted three field visits: two to the Gaza Strip between 30 May and 6 June, and between 25 June and 1 July 2009; and one visit to Amman on 2 and 3 July 2009. Several staff of the Mission's secretariat were present in Gaza from 22 May to 4 July 2009.

140. On 7 May, notes verbales were sent to all United Nations organs and bodies and Member States of the United Nations. Egypt, Lebanon, Romania, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) on behalf of the 1612 Working Group on Grave Violations against Children established for Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory,² the World Health Organization (WHO), and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) replied to the notes verbales. Documentation was also made available by other specialized agencies and other organizations in the United Nations system, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNRWA, and the Operational Satellite Applications Programme (UNOSAT) of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). On 8 June 2009, the Mission issued a call for submissions inviting all interested persons and organizations to submit relevant information and documentation to assist in the implementation of its mandate. In response, the Mission received 31 submissions from individuals and organizations. Throughout its work, the Mission received or had access to a variety of documents from multiple sources (see chap. I).

¹ The term "Gaza authorities" is used to refer to the de facto Hamas-led authorities established in Gaza since June 2007. See chap. II for details.

² This Working Group was set up following the adoption by the United Nations Security Council of resolution 1612/2005) establishing a monitoring and reporting mechanism to ensure the protection of children affected by armed conflict.

141. Public hearings were held in Gaza on 28 and 29 June and in Geneva on 6 and 7 July 2009.

142. Upon appointment on 3 April 2009, the Head of the Mission held a press conference in Geneva together with the President of the Human Rights Council. The Mission issued a press release on 8 May, at the end of its first official meeting, and on 29 May, before travelling to Gaza. Additionally, the Mission held press conferences in Gaza on 4 June, at the end of its first visit, and on 7 July 2009, at the end of the public hearings in Geneva. The Head of the Mission was interviewed several times by the international media³.

Cooperation with the parties

143. Since its inception, the Mission has requested the cooperation of all relevant authorities to enable it to visit and meet victims in Gaza, the West Bank and Israel.

144. Immediately upon appointment, the Head of the Mission sought to consult the Permanent Representative of Israel to the United Nations Office at Geneva, who unfortunately declined to meet him. Following an exchange of letters between 3 and 7 April, the Permanent Representative of Israel informed the Head of the Mission that his Government would not be able to cooperate with the Mission. On 29 April, an additional invitation to the Permanent Representative of Israel to meet the Mission was also unsuccessful. On 4 May, the Mission wrote to the Prime Minister of Israel, reiterating its request for cooperation, in particular by providing access to Gaza, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Israel. During a meeting on 6 May 2009 with the President of Israel, the United Nations Secretary-General referred to and supported the Mission's request for cooperation from the Government of Israel. In a letter dated 20 May 2009, the Mission attempted again to obtain the cooperation of the Israeli Government, especially in view of its planned visit to the Gaza Strip. In view of the refusal of cooperation from the Government of Israel, in order to be able to fulfil the mandate entrusted by the Human Rights Council within the aforementioned time frame, the Mission sought and obtained the assistance of the Government of Egypt to enable it to enter Gaza through the Rafah crossing. The Mission had additional written exchanges with the Permanent Representative of Israel in Geneva between 2 and 17 July 2009. (See annex II.)

145. Upon appointment, the Head of the Mission consulted the Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations Office at Geneva, who promptly extended the cooperation of the Palestinian Authority to the Mission. The Mission has remained in contact with the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine, and has enjoyed the support and cooperation of the Palestinian Authority. Due to the lack of cooperation from the Israeli Government, the Mission was unable to meet members of the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank. The Mission did, however, meet officials of the Palestinian Authority, including a cabinet minister, in Amman. A Palestinian minister was prevented from travelling to meet the Mission in Amman (see chap. I). During its visits to the Gaza Strip, the Mission held meetings with senior members of the Gaza authorities and they extended their full cooperation and support to the Mission.

³ The webpage of the Mission can be found at: <http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/hrcouncil/specialsession/9/FactFindingMission.htm>.

Protection of persons cooperating with the Mission

146. In the implementation of its mandate the Mission has called for the protections that are required under the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, better known as the Declaration on Human Rights Defenders, to be accorded to all who gave testimony at the public hearings. The Mission also was guided by Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/9 which “urges Governments to refrain from all acts of intimidation or reprisal against (a) those who seek to cooperate or have cooperated with representatives of United Nations human rights bodies, or who have provided testimony or information to them”.

147. Subsequent to the public hearings in Geneva, the Mission was informed that a Palestinian participant, Mr. Muhammad Srour, had been detained by Israeli security forces when returning to the West Bank and became concerned that his detention may have been a consequence of his appearance before the Mission. The Mission wrote to the Permanent Representative of Israel in Geneva expressing its concern. In response, the Permanent Representative informed the Mission that the detention of the person concerned was unrelated to his appearance at the public hearing. Mr. Srour was subsequently released on bail. The Mission is in contact with him and continues to monitor developments.

148. The Mission is also concerned about anonymous calls and messages received on private phone numbers and e-mail addresses by some of those who provided information to it or assisted in its work in the Gaza Strip. The contents seemed to imply that the originators of these anonymous calls and messages regarded those who cooperated with the Mission as potentially associated with armed groups. One of the recipients conveyed to the Mission apprehensions about personal safety and a feeling of intimidation. The Mission also wishes to record that there are others who have declined to appear before it or to provide information or, having cooperated with the Mission, have asked that their names should not be disclosed, for fear of reprisal.

Acknowledgments

149. The Mission is deeply grateful to the numerous Palestinians and Israelis, especially victims and witnesses of violations, who have shared with it their stories and views. It is equally grateful to the many Palestinian and Israeli civil society and NGOs, and to the Palestinian Independent Commission for Human Rights. They are at the forefront of the protection and promotion of human rights in the region and carry out their work with courage, professionalism and independence in very difficult circumstances. The Mission is also grateful to all the domestic and international NGOs that have supported its mandate and have provided a vast amount of relevant and well-documented information. Without the support and the assistance of United Nations agencies, programmes and other bodies, and particularly of the United Nations staff in Gaza, the Mission would have not been able to complete its work. Heartfelt thanks go to all of them. The Mission wishes to especially acknowledge the invaluable support received by the dedicated staff of UNRWA. The Mission expresses its gratitude to the United Nations security personnel and interpreters, who have professionally and sensitively accomplished their difficult tasks. In addition to the secretariat of the Mission appointed by OHCHR, a multinational team with a broad range of professional experience, the gratitude of the Mission goes also to the staff of OHCHR in Geneva, the Occupied Palestinian Territory and New York. A particular mention goes to all those who assisted with the daunting task of organizing at very short notice the public hearings in Gaza and in Geneva. The Mission wishes to formally thank the Government of Egypt and in particular the Permanent Mission of Egypt in Geneva. The Mission wishes to formally thank the Governments of Jordan and of Switzerland for facilitating the issuance of entry visas at short notice. The Mission also wishes to acknowledge the continued support received from the United Nations Secretary-General.

150. Finally, the Mission wishes to thank the people of Gaza for their warm welcome, their humanity and their hospitality in spite of such difficult and painful circumstances.

I. METHODOLOGY

A. Mandate and terms of reference

151. In his letter appointing the members of the Mission, the President of the Council entrusted the Mission with the following mandate: “to investigate all violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law that might have been committed at any time in the context of the military operations that were conducted in Gaza during the period from 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009, whether before, during or after.”

152. To implement its mandate, the Mission determined that it was required to consider any actions by all parties that might have constituted violations of international human rights law or international humanitarian law. The mandate also required it to review related actions in the entire Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel.

153. With regard to temporal scope, the Mission’s broad mandate includes violations before, during and after the military operations that were conducted in Gaza between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009. The Mission considered that, while the Gaza events must be seen in the context of the overall conflict and situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in view of the limited time and resources available, it would be beyond its abilities to focus on conduct or actions that took place long before the military operation of December–January. The Mission therefore decided to focus primarily on events, actions or circumstances occurring since 19 June 2008, when a ceasefire was agreed between the Government of Israel and Hamas. The Mission has also taken into consideration matters occurring after the end of military operations that constitute continuing human rights and international humanitarian law violations related to or as a consequence of the military operation, up to 31 July 2009.

154. The Mission considered that the reference in its mandate to violations committed in the context of the December–January military operations required it to go beyond violations that took place directly as part of the operations. Thus violations within its mandate include those that are linked to the December–January military operations in terms of time, objectives and targets, and include restrictions on human rights and fundamental freedoms relating to Israel’s strategies and actions in the context of its military operations.

155. The normative framework for the Mission has been general international law, the Charter of the United Nations, international humanitarian law, international human rights law and international criminal law.

B. Methods of work

156. The Mission reviewed all allegations raised in connection with issues under its mandate. The review included analysis of material in the public domain, including the many reports produced after the military operations concluded, information provided to the Mission through additional documentation and a series of meetings with experts who had been to the area or studied matters of interest to the Mission.

157. In view of the time frame within which it had to complete its work, the Mission necessarily had to be selective in the choice of issues and incidents for investigation. The report does not purport to be exhaustive in documenting the very high number of relevant incidents that occurred in the period covered by the Mission's mandate and especially during the military operations in Gaza. Nevertheless, the Mission considers that the report is illustrative of the main patterns of violations. The Mission also stresses that the exclusion of issues or incidents from the report in no way reflects on the seriousness of the relevant allegations.

158. The Mission based its work on an independent and impartial analysis of compliance by the parties with their obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law in the context of the recent conflict in Gaza, and on international investigative standards developed by the United Nations.

159. The Mission adopted an inclusive approach to receiving information and views on matters within its mandate. Information-gathering methods included:

(a) The review of reports of international organizations, including the United Nations; reports and other documentation, including affidavits, produced by non-governmental and civil society organizations (Palestinian, Israeli and international); media reports; and writings of academics and analysts on the conflict;

(b) Interviews with victims, witnesses and other persons having relevant information. In keeping with established human rights methodology and in order to ensure both the safety and privacy of the interviewees and the integrity of the information provided, such interviews were conducted in private. The Mission decided not to interview children. The Mission conducted 188 individual interviews. Most interviews were conducted in person. If the Mission was unable to meet the relevant persons, interviews were conducted by telephone. Also in keeping with normal practice for this type of report and to continue to protect their safety and privacy, the names of the victims, witnesses and other sources are generally not explicitly referred to in the report and codes are used instead. The names of individuals who publicly testified at the hearings held by the Mission or who have explicitly agreed to be named (see below) are, however, identified;

(c) Site visits to specific locations in Gaza where incidents had occurred. The Mission investigated 36 incidents in Gaza;

(d) The analysis of video and photographic images, including satellite imagery provided by UNOSAT, and expert analysis of such images;

(e) The review of medical reports about injuries to victims;

(f) The forensic analysis of weapons and ammunition remnants collected at incident sites;

(g) Meetings with a variety of interlocutors, including members of the diplomatic community, representatives of the parties concerned, NGOs, professional associations, military analysts, medical doctors, legal experts, scientists, United Nations staff;

(h) Invitations, through notes verbales, to United Nations Members States and United Nations agencies, departments and bodies to provide information relating to the Mission's investigation requirements;

(i) The wide circulation of a public call for written submissions from NGOs and other organizations and individuals interested in bringing information to the attention of the Mission. As a result, it received numerous submissions from organizations and individuals from Israel, the Occupied Palestinian Territory and elsewhere in the world;

(j) Public hearings in Gaza and in Geneva⁴ to hear: (i) victims and witnesses of violations; and (ii) individuals with specialized knowledge and expertise on the context and impact of the hostilities.

160. The Mission reviewed more than 300 reports, submissions and other documentation either researched of its own motion, received in reply to its call for submissions and notes verbales or provided during meetings or otherwise, amounting to more than 10,000 pages, over 30 videos and 1,200 photographs.

161. The methods adopted to gather and verify information and reach conclusions were for the most part guided by best practice methodology developed in the context of United Nations investigations. In the case of Israel and the West Bank, adjustments were required in view of the Mission's inability to access those areas due to lack of cooperation from Israel.

162. The Mission's preferred option would have been to visit all areas covered by its mandate and undertake on-site investigations in all. The Government of Israel, however, refused to cooperate with the Mission at three levels: (a) it refused to meet the Mission and to provide access to Government officials, including military, and documentation; (b) it precluded the Mission from travelling to Israel in order to meet with Israeli victims, witnesses, members of civil society and NGOs; and (c) it prevented the Mission from travelling to the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, to meet members of the Palestinian Authority and Palestinian victims, witnesses, non-governmental or civil society organizations living or located in the West Bank.

163. Accordingly, the Mission conducted field visits, including investigations of incident sites, in the Gaza Strip. This allowed the Mission to observe first-hand the situation on the ground, and speak to many witnesses and other relevant persons. The Mission considered this particularly important to form an understanding of the situation, the context, impact and consequences of the conflict on people, and to assess violations of international law.

⁴ The public hearings are webcast by the United Nations and can be viewed by visiting the webcast archive at: <http://www.un.org/webcast/unhrc/archive.asp?go=090628>.

164. The Mission gathered first-hand information with regard to the situation in Israel and in the West Bank by conducting telephone interviews with victims, community representatives, local authorities, members of NGOs and experts; by hearing testimonies from victims, witnesses and experts from Israel and from the West Bank at the public hearings in Geneva; and by holding meetings and private interviews both in Amman and in Geneva.

165. The Mission's efforts in this regard were partially thwarted because of restrictions on the freedom of movement of some of the people that the Mission wished to interview. The Mission was not able to meet as planned the Palestinian Minister of Justice, Dr. Ali al-Khashan, in Amman, as he was not allowed by Israel to leave the West Bank. The Mission was also unable to meet Ms. Khalida Jarrar, a member of the Palestinian Legislative Council, who is subject to a travel ban by Israel (see chap. XXII). It held a teleconference with her. A Palestinian witness at the Geneva public hearings, Mr. Shawan Jabarin, had to be heard by videoconference as he is also subject to a travel ban by Israel.

A note on the public hearings

166. The purpose of the public hearings, which were broadcast live, was to enable victims, witnesses and experts from all sides to the conflict to speak directly to as many people as possible in the region as well as in the international community. The Mission is of the view that no written word can replace the voice of victims. While not all issues and incidents under investigation by the Mission were addressed during the hearings, the 38 public testimonies covered a wide range of relevant facts as well as legal and military matters. The Mission had initially intended to hold hearings in Gaza, Israel and the West Bank. However, denial of access to Israel and the West Bank resulted in the decision to hold hearings of participants from Israel and the West Bank in Geneva.

167. Participants in the hearings were identified in the course of the Mission's investigations, and had either first-hand experience or information or specialized knowledge of the issues under investigation and analysis. In keeping with the objectives of the hearings, the Mission gave priority to the participation of victims and people from the affected communities. Participants took part in the hearings on a voluntary basis. Some individuals declined to participate for fear of reprisal. The Mission received expressions of gratitude from participants, as well as members of the affected communities, for having provided an opportunity to speak publicly of their experiences.

C. Assessment of information

168. In establishing its findings, the Mission sought to rely primarily and whenever possible on information it gathered first-hand, including through on-site observations, interviews and meetings with relevant persons. Information produced by others, including reports, affidavits and media reports, was used primarily as corroboration.

169. The section of the report on the Gaza Strip is based on first-hand information gathered and verified by the Mission. To assess the situation in Israel and in the West Bank, the Mission had to make comparatively greater use of information produced by others for the reasons explained above. These sections too, however, include first-hand information directly gathered and verified by the Mission.

170. The Mission met or spoke with witnesses, listened to what they had to say and questioned them wherever necessary. Taking into account the demeanour of witnesses, the plausibility of their accounts and the consistency of these accounts with the circumstances observed by it and with other testimonies, the Mission was able to determine the credibility and reliability of those people it heard. Regarding the large amount of documentary information the Mission received or had access to as documents in the public domain, it tried as far as possible to speak with the authors of the documents in order to ascertain the methodologies used and to clarify any doubts or problems.

171. The final conclusions on the reliability of the information received were made taking all of these matters into consideration, cross-referencing the relevant material and information, and assessing whether, in all the circumstances, there was sufficient information of a credible and reliable nature for the Mission to make a finding in fact.

172. On the basis set out above, the Mission has, to the best of its ability, determined what facts have been established. In many cases it has found that acts entailing individual criminal responsibility have been committed. In all of these cases the Mission has found that there is sufficient information to establish the objective elements of the crimes in question. In almost all of the cases the Mission has also been able to determine whether or not it appears that the acts in question were done deliberately or recklessly or in the knowledge that the consequence that resulted would result in the ordinary course of events, that is, the Mission has referred in many cases to the relevant fault element (mens rea). The Mission fully appreciates the importance of the presumption of innocence: the findings in the report do not subvert the operation of that principle. The findings do not attempt to identify the individuals responsible for the commission of offences nor do they pretend to reach the standard of proof applicable in criminal trials.

D. Consultation with the parties

173. The Mission received documentation related to its mandate from the Palestinian Authority. During its visits in Gaza, the Mission was provided with significant material and documentation by the Gaza authorities. On 29 July, it received, through UN Watch, a paper⁵ on the military operations in Gaza that sets out the Government of Israel's position on many issues investigated by the Mission.

174. During its meetings in Gaza, Amman and Geneva, the Mission discussed matters within its mandate with Palestinian counterparts. While no cooperation was received from the Government of Israel, the Mission met a number of Israeli citizens formerly in senior Government positions.

175. In order to provide the parties concerned with an opportunity to submit additional relevant information and express their position and respond to allegations, the Mission also submitted comprehensive lists of questions to the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the

⁵ "The operation in Gaza: Factual and legal aspects", July 2009, published on the website of the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs, available at http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Terrorism-+Obstacle+to+Peace/Terrorism+and+Islamic+Fundamentalism-/Operation_in_Gaza-Factual_and_Legal_Aspects.htm.

Gaza authorities in advance of completing its analysis and findings. The Mission received replies from the Palestinian Authority and the Gaza authorities but not from Israel.

II. CONTEXT

176. The Mission is of the view that the events that it was mandated to investigate should not be considered in isolation. They are part of a broader context, and are deeply rooted in the many years of Israeli occupation of the Palestinian Territory and in the political and violent confrontation that have characterized the history of the region. A review of the historical, political and military developments between the Six-Day War in 1967 and the announcement of the “period of calm” (Tahdiyah) in June 2008,⁶ and of Israeli policies towards the Occupied Palestinian Territory is necessary to consider and understand the events that fall more directly within the scope of the Mission’s mandate.

A. Historical context

177. The West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip were captured by Israel following the Six-Day War of June 1967. The two non-contiguous areas had been administered by Jordan and Egypt, respectively, since the establishment of the “Green Line” along the 1949 Armistice demarcation, separating the newly founded State of Israel and its neighbours. After 1967, the two areas were administered directly by military commanders until 1981 and since then through a “Civil Administration” established by the Israeli armed forces. “Military orders” were used to rule the civil affairs of the Palestinian population superimposing and often revoking pre-existing Jordanian laws in the West Bank and Egyptian laws in the Gaza Strip. East Jerusalem was annexed to the Israeli municipality of the city and in 1980 the Knesset passed a law which declared that “Jerusalem, complete and united, is the capital of Israel”. With Security Council resolution 478 (1980), the United Nations declared this law “null and void”, condemning any attempt to “alter the character and status of Jerusalem”.⁷ No member of the United Nations, apart from Israel, recognizes the annexation of East Jerusalem.

178. After the Likud party won the 1977 Israeli elections, the establishment of settlements within the occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip dramatically accelerated, and the expropriation of Palestinian lands and the construction of settlements have continued unabated to this day. Many years of growing tension and violence concerning the unresolved status of the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel ensued. In 1987 a widespread popular uprising – the intifada – was forcefully repressed by the Israeli security forces but lasted until 1993, when the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the Government of Israel agreed to recognize each other and signed the “Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements” also known as the “Oslo I Accord”.⁸

⁶ Due to obvious space limitations, the historical context does not make reference to the numerous important events that took place during this period (such as the 1973 War, the Camp David Accords, the peace treaty with Jordan, the 2006 Lebanon War and many others).

⁷ Adopted by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (United States of America).

179. In 1994 the Palestinian Authority was established following the Oslo I Accord and in 1995 “the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip”, also known as “Oslo II”,⁹ detailed practical steps to be implemented by the parties in view of the negotiations on the final status of the territory. The assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin by an Israeli extremist in 1995 dealt a lethal blow to the peace process. Successive Israeli Governments and the Palestinian political leadership failed to reach an agreement on the final status at the United States-sponsored Camp David summit in 2000 and during direct talks in Taba (Egypt) in 2001.

180. A second popular uprising erupted in September 2000, after the then opposition leader Ariel Sharon conducted a controversial visit to the Temple Mount/al-Haram al-Sharif in Jerusalem.¹⁰ This second intifada set off an unprecedented cycle of violence.

181. According to independent sources, while the Israeli-Palestinian conflict claimed the lives of 1,549 Palestinians and 421 Israelis between 1987 and 2000,¹¹ between September 2000 and December 2008, 5,500 Palestinians were killed (593 as result of intra-Palestinian violence) as well as 1,062 Israelis and 64 foreigners.¹²

182. According to Israel’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 154 suicide bomb attacks against Israeli civilians and military personnel took place between 1993 and 2007. They killed 542 individuals,

⁸ The Agreement contained a specific provision for the establishment of a “strong police force” to “guarantee public order and internal security for the Palestinians of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip”. See <http://www.reliefweb.int/rw/rwb.nsf/db900SID/MHII-62DANP?OpenDocument>.

⁹ The Agreement defined three areas of jurisdiction in Gaza and the West Bank: area “A”, in which Palestinians would have full administrative and security responsibilities; area “B”, in which Palestinians would have administrative responsibilities, but Israelis would retain security control; and area “C”, where Israelis would maintain administrative and security responsibilities. See <http://www.reliefweb.int/rw/rwb.nsf/db900SID/MHII-62DAP5?OpenDocument>.

¹⁰ Situated at the heart of the Old City in East Jerusalem, the site is of religious significance to both Muslims and Jews. The Temple Mount/al-Haram al-Sharif (the Noble Sanctuary) is the location of al-Aqsa and the Dome of the Rock mosques, the third most sacred place in Islam. It is also believed to be the location of the two ancient Jewish temples. The southern section of its western external perimeter is what is known as the Western Wall. Haram al-Sharif is administered by an Islamic trust (Waqf) and religious rituals performed there by non-Muslims are forbidden.

¹¹ See B’Tselem statistics (“Fatalities in the first Intifada”), available at: http://www.btselem.org/English/Statistics/First_Intifada_Tables.asp.

¹² See B’Tselem statistics (“Fatalities”), available at: <http://www.btselem.org/English/Statistics/Casualties.asp> with a peak in 2002 of 220 individuals killed in 55 suicide attacks.¹³ The last recorded suicide attack took place in February 2008 in the Israeli city of Dimona.¹⁴

183. The firing of rockets and mortars from Gaza into Israel began in 2001.¹⁵ Israeli sources report that as many as 3,455 rockets and 3,742 mortar shells were fired into Israel from Gaza until mid-June 2008.¹⁶

184. After his election as Prime Minister in 2001, the Likud leader Ariel Sharon discontinued any direct contacts with the Palestinian leadership, in effect putting an end to talks on the final status.

185. In June 2002, the beginning of the construction of the separation Wall, which encroached on Palestinian land to encompass most Israeli settlement areas in the West Bank as well as East Jerusalem, left almost half a million Palestinians on the western side of the divide, cutting historical, social, cultural and economic ties with the rest of the Palestinians in the West Bank.¹⁷ In 2004, the International Court of Justice issued an advisory opinion on the legality of the Wall being built by Israel, at the request of the United Nations General Assembly. The Court stated that Israel must cease construction of the barrier, dismantle the parts of the barrier that were built inside the West Bank, revoke the orders issued relating to its construction and compensate the Palestinians who suffered losses as a result of the barrier.¹⁸ Israel disregarded the views of the Court and construction of the Wall continued. In 2004 and 2005, the Israeli Supreme Court, sitting as the High Court of Justice (see sect. D below), ruled that some parts of the route of the Wall violated the principle of “proportionality” in both Israeli and international law, causing harm to an “occupied population” and that the construction of the structure should be done in a way to lessen the prejudicial impact on the rights of the resident Palestinians. The Israeli Court

¹³ See website of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (“Suicide and other bombing attacks in Israel since the Declaration of Principles (Sept. 1993)”), available at: <http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Terrorism-%20Obstacle%20to%20Peace/Palestinian%20terror%20since%202000/Suicide%20and%20Other%20Bombing%20Attacks%20in%20Israel%20Since>

¹⁴ BBC News, “Israeli killed in suicide bombing”, 4 February 2008, available at: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7225775.stm

¹⁵ “The operation in Gaza...” states that the firing of rockets and mortars from Gaza started in 2000. The same sources quoted in the report, however, put the beginning of the firing of rockets and mortars in 2001. The report states that between 2000 and 2008 “Israel was bombarded by some 12,000 rockets and mortar shells between 2000 and 2008, including nearly 3,000 rockets and mortar shells in 2008 alone.”

¹⁶ Intelligence and Terrorism Information Center at the Israel Intelligence Heritage & Commemoration Center, “Rocket threat from the Gaza Strip, 2000-2007”, December 2007, available at: http://www.terrorism-info.org.il/malam_multimedia/English/eng_n/html/rocket_threat_e.htm; and “Summary of rocket fire and mortar shelling in 2008”, January 2009, available at: http://www.terrorism-info.org.il/malam_multimedia/English/eng_n/pdf/ipc_e007.pdf

¹⁷ See B’tselem statistics (Separation barrier statistics), available at: http://www.btselem.org/English/Separation_Barrier/Statistics.asp

¹⁸ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion of 9 July 2004, I.C.J. Reports 2004.

ordered the rerouting of different portions of the Wall,¹⁹ but considered the structure legal in principle.²⁰

186. In 2002, the so-called Quartet (the United States, the European Union, the Russian Federation and the United Nations) proposed a plan to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The plan came to be known as the “road map to peace.”²¹ The road map envisaged that the Palestinians would engage in democratic reforms and renounce violent means and that Israel would accept a Palestinian Government and cease settlement activities. Fulfilment of the road map’s commitments would lead to negotiations on the final status. The road map remains unimplemented. The same year, the League of Arab States adopted a proposal that Saudi Arabia presented at the Beirut Summit in which its members pledged to establish normal relations with Israel in the context of a comprehensive peace that would establish a Palestinian State within the border of 1967.²²

187. On 6 June 2004, the Israeli Cabinet adopted a “disengagement plan” providing for the unilateral removal from the Gaza Strip of Israeli security forces and Israeli civilians living in settlements. The plan was endorsed by the Knesset on 26 October of the same year. With the evacuation of all Israeli residents and associated security personnel from the Gaza Strip completed on 12 September 2005, Israel declared that “there will be no basis for claiming that the Gaza Strip is occupied territory” (on the continued occupation, see chapter IV). Under the disengagement plan, however, the Israeli armed forces continued to maintain control over Gaza’s borders, coastline and airspace, and Israel reserved “its inherent right of self-defence, both preventive and reactive, including where necessary the use of force, in respect of threats emanating from the Gaza Strip.” Israel removed both settlements and military bases protecting the settlers from the Gaza Strip, redeploying on Gaza’s southern border and repositioning its forces to other areas just outside the Gaza Strip. In addition to controlling the borders, coastline and airspace, after the implementation of the disengagement plan, Israel continued to control Gaza’s telecommunications, water, electricity and sewage networks, as well as the population registry, and the flow of people and goods into and out of the territory while the inhabitants of Gaza continued to rely on the Israeli currency.²³

188. After years of disassociation from the Oslo process, Hamas changed its position about the legitimacy of the Palestinian Authority and decided to participate in the elections of January

¹⁹ Many of these rulings have had only a marginal impact on the Palestinian population.

²⁰ The Court opened its deliberation by stating that “since 1967, Israel has been holding the areas of Judea and Samaria [...] in belligerent occupation”, see Beit Sourik Village Council v. The Government of Israel and Commander of the IDF Forces in the West Bank, case No. 2056/04, Judgement of 30 June 2004 and Mara’abe et al. v. The Prime Minister of Israel et al., case No. 7957/04, Judgement of 15 September 2005.

²¹ “A performance-based road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict”, available at: <http://www.un.org/news/dh/mideast/roadmap122002.pdf>

²² Available at: <http://www.reliefweb.int/rw/rwb.nsf/AllDocsByUNID/5a7229b652beb9c5c1256b8a0054b62e>

²³ See “Disengagement Plan - General Outline”, 15 April 2004, available at: <http://www.pmo.gov.il/PMOEng/Archive/Press+Releases/2004/Disengagement+Plan/Disengagement+Plan.htm>; and “Overall concept of the Disengagement Plan”, 15 April 2004, available at: <http://www.pmo.gov.il/PMOEng/Archive/Press+Releases/2004/Disengagement+Plan/DisengagementPlan.htm>.

2006. The List of Change and Reform, of which Hamas represented the main component, won the elections for the Palestinian Legislative Council and formed a Government. Shortly thereafter, the international community redirected international aid from the Palestinian Authority to international organizations and humanitarian agencies, isolating the new Palestinian executive in a stated effort to put pressure on it to accept the so-called Quartet Principles. The Quartet had already announced that, to be recognized by the international community, any Palestinian Government should adhere to three “Principles”: (i) recognition of the State of Israel, (ii) recognition of previous agreements and (iii) renunciation of violence.²⁴ Israel also imposed economic sanctions on the Hamas-led Palestinian Authority Government, including by withholding tax revenues it collected on imports and introducing additional restrictions on the movement of goods to and from the Gaza Strip. Israel declared that sanctions would be lifted only when the new Palestinian Government would abide by the Quartet Principles.²⁵

189. In June 2006, a squad drawn from three groups – the Popular Resistance Committees, al-Qassam Brigades and the until then unknown Army of Islam – excavated a tunnel under the Gaza-Israel border and attacked the military base of Kerem Shalom inside Israel, blowing up a tank, killing two soldiers and capturing a third, Corporal Gilad Shalit. In reaction to the capture, the Israeli Government conducted a number of targeted assassinations of alleged militants belonging to Hamas and other groups; arrested Palestinian Authority cabinet ministers, Hamas parliamentarians and other leaders in the West Bank; attacked key civilian infrastructure in the Gaza Strip, such as the main power plant, the main bridge in central Gaza and Palestinian Authority offices; tightened the economic isolation; and carried out major armed thrusts into the Gaza Strip for the first time since August 2005.²⁶

190. After the refusal of the politically defeated Fatah movement to cede the control of Palestinian Authority institutions and specifically security institutions to the new Government, armed clashes erupted between the two political groups both in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. In February 2007, Palestinian leaders assembled in Mecca signed an agreement sponsored by Saudi Arabia that led to the formation of a coalition Government that was approved by the Palestinian Legislative Council in March.²⁷ The coalition Government was headed by Hamas and included members of other political movements, including Fatah, as well as independents. After only four months, violent clashes erupted again between armed and security forces loyal to Fatah and Hamas. By 14 June 2007, Hamas forces and armed groups had seized all Palestinian

²⁴ See “Briefing to the Security Council on the situation in the Middle East”, by Ms Angela Kane, Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, 31 January 2006, available at: <http://www.unsco.org/Documents/Statements/MSCB/2008/January%2031.pdf>

²⁵ In June 2006, Hamas subscribed to the so-called Prisoners Document, a common political platform shared by Fatah, Hamas, Islamic Jihad, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP). An implicit recognition of the State of Israel could be traced to the statement that “the right to establish their independent state with al-Quds al-Sharif as its capital on all territories occupied in 1967”. See <http://www.miftah.org/Display.cfm?DocId=10371&CategoryId=32>.

²⁶ See International Crisis Group, “Israel/Palestine/Lebanon: Climbing out of the abyss”, Middle East Report N° 57, 25 July 2006.

²⁷ See “Briefing to the Security Council on the situation in the Middle East”, by Mr B. Lynn Pascoe, 25 April 2007, available at: <http://www.unsco.org/Documents/Statements/MSCB/2007/April%202007.pdf>.

Authority security installations and government buildings in the Gaza Strip.²⁸ The President of the Palestinian Authority dismissed the Hamas-led Government (hereinafter called the Gaza authorities), declared a state of emergency and established an emergency Government based in the West Bank, which was largely recognized by the international community.²⁹

191. In November 2007, the United States of America sponsored the organization of a new comprehensive peace conference. At the Conference – held in Annapolis, Maryland, United States of America – the Palestinian President and the Israeli Prime Minister agreed to resume negotiations by the end of 2007. In addition, they agreed to work continuously to reach a two-State solution by the end of 2008.

192. On 19 September 2007, the Government of Israel declared Gaza “hostile territory.”³⁰ This was followed by the imposition of further severe reductions in the transfer of goods and supplies of fuel and electricity to the Strip. Since then, Israel has only sporadically allowed the opening of all the crossings into the Gaza Strip, at times completely closing them.³¹ (See also chapter V.)

193. Israeli military operations in Gaza and the West Bank started well before the so-called disengagement of 2005. “Operation Defensive Shield” in 2002 was the largest military operation in the West Bank since the 1967 Six-Day War. It began with an incursion into Ramallah, placing the then President of the Palestinian Authority, Yasser Arafat, under siege in his offices, and was followed by incursions into the six largest cities in the West Bank and their surrounding localities. During the three weeks of the military incursions in areas that were under the direct control of the Palestinian Authority, 497 Palestinians were killed.³² The siege on the half destroyed Ramallah Muqataa compound of President Arafat was lifted only at the end of 2004 when he was flown to Paris to undergo medical treatment. He later died there.

194. “Operation Rainbow” of 2004 targeted the Rafah area of the Gaza Strip and left about 50 Palestinians dead. “Operation Days of Penitence” was carried out between September and October 2004. According to the Israeli Government, it was launched in retaliation for the firing of rockets against the town of Sderot and Israeli settlements inside the Gaza Strip. It targeted the towns of Beit Hanoun and Beit Lahia and the Jabalyah refugee camp and resulted in the deaths of more than 100 Palestinians and 5 Israelis.

195. From the disengagement until November 2006, the Israeli armed forces fired approximately 15,000 artillery shells and conducted more than 550 air strikes into the Gaza Strip. Israeli military attacks killed approximately 525 people in Gaza. Over the same period, at

²⁸ See International Crisis Group, “After Gaza”, Middle East Report N°68, 2 August 2007. See also Vanity Fair, “The Gaza bombshell”, April 2008, available at: <http://www.vanityfair.com/politics/features/2008/04/gaza200804>

²⁹ For reactions in support of the emergency Government by the United States, the European Union and Arab States, see “After Gaza...”.

³⁰ “Security cabinet declares Gaza hostile territory”, 19 September 2007, and “Behind the headlines: Israel designates Gaza a ‘hostile territory’”, 24 September 2007, available from the website of Israel’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs at www.mfa.gov.il

³¹ A/HRC/7/76.

³² A/ES-10/186.

least 1,700 rockets and mortars were fired into Israel by Palestinian militants, injuring 41 Israelis. The conflict culminated, in 2006, in the Israeli military incursions into Gaza, codenamed “Summer Rains” and “Autumn Clouds”, the latter focusing on the north of the Strip around the town of Beit Hanoun, where shortly after the end of the military operations in November, 19 people, of whom 18 of the same family, were killed by artillery fire in one incident.³³

196. In February 2008, a rocket attack from Gaza hit the Israeli city of Ashkelon causing light injuries. The Israeli armed forces launched an operation codenamed “Hot Winter” during which the air force conducted at least 75 air strikes on different targets within the Gaza Strip. As a result of the military operation, more than 100 Palestinians and 2 Israelis were killed in Gaza.³⁴

197. In June 2008, an informal “period of calm” (Tahdiyah) of six months was agreed through Egypt’s mediation. (For more details, see chapter III.)

B. Overview of Israel’s pattern of policies and conduct relevant to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and links between the situation in Gaza and in the West Bank

198. Since 1967, Israel has built hundreds of settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. Such settlements were recognized by its Ministry of Interior as Israeli “communities” subjected to Israeli law. The above-mentioned Advisory Opinion by the International Court of Justice advisory opinion and “a number of United Nations resolutions have all affirmed that Israel’s practice of constructing settlements – in effect, the transfer by an occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies – constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention”³⁵ (on the position of the Israeli High Court of Justice on the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, see chapter IV). Sixteen settlements in the Gaza Strip and three in the northern West Bank were dismantled in 2005 during the implementation of the so-called Israeli disengagement plan, but the establishment of new settlements continued. In 2007, there were more than 450,000 Israeli citizens living in 149 settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. According to United Nations sources, almost 40 per cent of the West Bank is now taken up by Israeli infrastructure associated with the settlements, including roads, barriers, buffer zones and military bases. Data released by the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics showed that construction in these settlements has increased in 2008 by a factor of 1.8 in comparison with the same period in 2007. The number of tenders in East Jerusalem has increased by 3,728 per cent (1,761 housing units, compared with 46 in 2007). Until the end of the 1970s, the Government of Israel claimed that the settlements were established on the grounds of military necessity and security, but it has since abandoned this position.³⁶

³³ A/HRC/9/26.

³⁴ A/HRC/8/17.

³⁵ A/63/519.

³⁶ Ibid.

199. It is estimated that 33 per cent of the settlements have been built on private land owned by Palestinians, much of it expropriated by the State of Israel on asserted grounds of military necessity. Following a ruling of the Israeli High Court of Justice in 1979, the Government of Israel changed its policy of land confiscation on the asserted ground of military necessity and started having recourse to civil laws relating to land confiscation in place under Ottoman rule. According to these laws, land may be seized either because no one can prove ownership in accordance with the required standard of evidence or because the area in which it is situated is declared a closed military zone which farmers are prohibited from entering.³⁷

200. “Since 1967, the Israeli authorities have demolished thousands of Palestinian-owned structures in the [Occupied Palestinian Territory], including an estimated 2,000 houses in East Jerusalem.”³⁸ During the first quarter of 2008, the Israeli authorities demolished 124 structures in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, for lack of permits. Of those, 61 were residential buildings whose demolition caused the displacement of many Palestinians, including children. Demolition of structures and residential buildings has been a feature of the Israeli policy that has displaced Palestinians mainly in the Jordan Valley and in East Jerusalem, but also in other areas of the West Bank. The Israeli authorities justify the majority of these demolitions by claiming that the structures or buildings lack the necessary permits. The relevant Israeli authorities rarely issue building permits for Palestinians, frequently refusing them on the basis that the construction is in violation of the mandatory regional outline plans approved by the British Mandate Government of Palestine in the 1940s.³⁹ Areas in East Jerusalem face the prospect of mass demolitions. Carrying out pending demolition orders would affect a combined total of more than 3,600 persons.⁴⁰ The combined effects of the Israeli policies of expanding and establishing new settlements, the demolition of Palestinian-owned properties, including houses, the restrictive and discriminatory housing policies as well as the Wall have been described as a way of “actively pursuing the illegal annexation” of East Jerusalem.⁴¹

³⁷ Ibid.

³⁸ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), “The planning crisis in East Jerusalem: Understanding the phenomenon of ‘illegal’ construction”, Special Focus, April 2009, available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_planning_crisis_east_jerusalem_april_2009_english.pdf

³⁹ A/63/518.

⁴⁰ OCHA, Special Focus, April 2009.

⁴¹ The Guardian, “Israel annexing East Jerusalem, says EU”, 7 March 2009, available at: <http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2009/mar/07/israel-palestine-eu-report-jerusalem>

201. The route of the Wall weaves between Palestinian villages and neighbourhoods and has contributed to the fragmentation of the West Bank into a series of enclaves separated from one another (see map⁴² below). The Wall encircles settlements built around Jerusalem and within the West Bank and connects them to Israel. Eighty per cent of Israeli inhabitants of these settlements reside to the west of the Wall. The route of the Wall, which has created a demarcation, is to a great degree determined by the objective of incorporating settlements into the Israeli side and to exclude Palestinians from these areas.⁴³ If completed, 85 per cent of the Wall will be located inside the West Bank, and 9.5 per cent of West Bank territory, including East Jerusalem, will be cut off from the rest of the West Bank. It is estimated that 385,000 Israeli citizens in 80 settlements out of the total of 450,000 Israeli citizens in 149 settlements and 260,000 Palestinians, including in East Jerusalem, will be located between the Wall and the Green Line. In addition, approximately 125,000 Palestinians in 28 communities will be surrounded on three sides and 26,000 Palestinians in eight communities will be surrounded on four sides.⁴⁴ A number of surveys compiled by United Nations agencies⁴⁵ found that many Palestinian communities cut off by the Wall do not enjoy full access to emergency health services, posing severe challenges in medical emergencies and for expectant mothers. In addition the Wall cuts off residents in closed areas from schools and universities, also having an impact on social relations and especially on traditional marriage patterns. The Wall isolates the land and water resources of a large number of Palestinians, having a negative impact on agricultural practices and on rural livelihoods.

202. Despite the claim by Israel that restrictions of movement within the West Bank are imposed on Palestinian residents for security purposes, most of those internal restrictions appear to have been designed to guarantee unobstructed travel to the Israeli inhabitants of the settlements. None of these restrictions applies to Israeli citizens travelling throughout the West Bank.⁴⁶

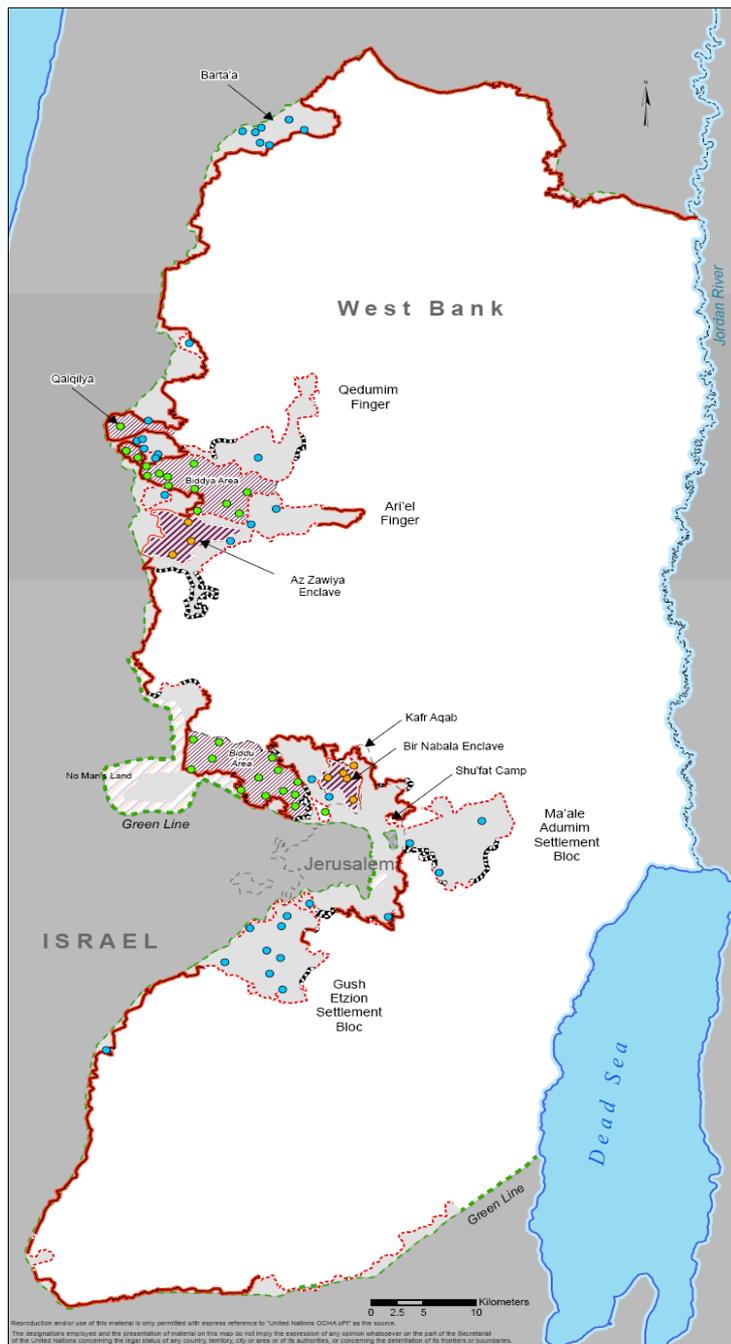

⁴² OCHA, “West Bank barrier route projections”, July 2008, available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/BarrierRouteProjections_July_2008.pdf

⁴³ A/63/519.

⁴⁴ OCHA, “Five years after the International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion: A summary of the humanitarian impact of the barrier”, July 2009 (Updated August 2009), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_barrier_report_july_2009_english_low_res.pdf.

⁴⁵ OCHA and UNRWA surveys quoted in OCHA Special Focus, – “Three years later: The humanitarian impact of the barrier since the International Court of Justice Opinion”, 9 July 2007, available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ICJ4_Special_Focus_July2007.pdf.

⁴⁶ A/63/519.

203. A two-tiered road system has been established throughout the West Bank in which main roads are reserved for the exclusive use of Israeli citizens while Palestinians are confined to a different (and inferior) road network. The Israeli-built roads in the West Bank form a network linking Israeli settlements with one another and to Israel proper. Palestinians are denied free access to approximately 1,500 km of roads within the West Bank.⁴⁷ Travel on these roads by ⁴⁷ Most prohibited roads comprise the major north-south and east-west routes in the West Bank. These are reserved for settlers, Israeli security forces and non-Palestinian international passport holders, including international United Nations staff.

Palestinians is completely forbidden. Partially prohibited roads are those for which a special permit is required, while restricted roads are those on which individuals travelling on such roads who are not from the local area must have a permit.⁴⁸

204. The policy of “closure”, i.e. closures of entire areas and restrictions on the movement for goods and people on the basis of alleged security threats to Israeli citizens, has been a characteristic of the Israeli control over the Gaza Strip and the West Bank since 1996 and has dramatically affected the lives of Palestinians. “Perhaps the most devastating effect of the heightened closure has been a dramatic rise in unemployment levels in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Because the closure restricts the movement of all people (and goods) in and out of the Gaza Strip and West Bank, as well as movement within the West Bank itself, workers from these territories have been unable to reach their places of employment. According to the Palestinian Ministry of Labour, unemployment in Gaza has increased from 50 per cent to 74 per cent (and from 30 per cent to 50 per cent in the West Bank). Before the heightened closure, 22,000 Gazans (down from 80,000 in 1987) and 26,000 West Bankers had permits to work in Israel.” “Losses from unemployment amount to $1.04 million daily for the Gaza Strip alone – $750,000 from lost wages in Israel and $290,000 from lost wages in local sectors. The Palestinian Bureau of Statistics (PBS) estimates that from February 25 to April 4, the Gaza Strip and West Bank lost $78.3 million in wages and income.”⁴⁹ In June 2009, more than 40 United Nations and other humanitarian agencies urged Israel to lift its blockade of Gaza, where nearly everyone depends on international humanitarian assistance, and indiscriminate sanctions are affecting the entire population of 1.5 million⁵⁰ (see also chap. V).

205. A number of Israeli policies and measures especially since 1996 have contributed to effectively separating Gaza from the West Bank, despite the commitments contained in the Oslo I Accord by which “the two sides view the West Bank and the Gaza Strip as a single territorial unit, whose integrity will be preserved during the interim period.” The imposition of tight closures and limitations on movement has chiefly contributed to this separation.⁵¹ With the implementation of the “disengagement plan” and after Hamas secured control of the Gaza Strip, the imposition of an almost total closure has meant that direct contact is no longer possible with Palestinians from the West Bank. The arrest by Israel of members of the Palestinian Legislative Council and other Palestinian Authority officials has also resulted in the inability of many institutions to function properly and prevented Palestinians from the two areas to work together. In the past few years a new permit system has been imposed on Palestinians of the Gaza Strip living in the West Bank. Without such a permit they can be declared “illegal aliens”. In addition, the Israeli authorities – who are in control of the population registry – have stopped updating the addresses of Palestinians who have moved from Gaza to the West Bank. The new requirement

⁴⁸ A/63/519.

⁴⁹ Sara Roy, “Economic deterioration in the Gaza Strip”, Middle East Report, No. 200 (Summer 2006), available at: <http://www.merip.org/mer/mer200/roy.html>.

⁵⁰ “UN, aid agencies call for end to Israel’s two-year blockade of Gaza” (17 June 2009), available at: <http://www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=31174&Cr=gaza&Cr1>.

⁵¹ “The total separation of the Gaza Strip from the West Bank is one of the greatest achievements of Israeli politics.” See Amira Hass, “An Israeli achievement” (20 April 2009), available at: <http://www.bitterlemons.org/previous/bl200409ed15.html#isr2>.

for a permit is based on a person's registered address, enabling Israel to bar Palestinians whose registered address is in Gaza from moving to the West Bank. This measure has also retroactively turned many Palestinians who already live in the West Bank into illegal residents. These policies have had a devastating impact on many families that were effectively forced to live apart or, in order to live together, move to the Gaza Strip with no possibility of returning to the West Bank.⁵² Israel has bureaucratically and logistically effectively split and separated not only Palestinians in the occupied territories and their families in Israel, but also Palestinian residents of Jerusalem and those in the rest of the territory and between Gazans and West Bankers/Jerusalemites.⁵³

206. Despite prohibitions under international humanitarian law (IHL),⁵⁴ Israel has applied its domestic laws throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory since 1967. Notably, existing planning and construction laws were annulled and replaced with military orders, and related civil powers transferred from local authorities to Israeli institutions, with ultimate discretion resting with military commanders.⁵⁵ The application of Israeli domestic laws has resulted in institutionalized discrimination against Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory to the benefit of Jewish settlers, both Israeli citizens and others. Exclusive benefits reserved for Jews derive from the two-tiered civil status under Israel's domestic legal regime based on a "Jewish nationality," which entitles "persons of Jewish race or descendency"⁵⁶ to superior rights and privileges, particularly in land use, housing, development, immigration and access to natural resources, as affirmed in key legislation.⁵⁷ Administrative procedures qualify indigenous inhabitants of the Occupied Palestinian Territory as "alien persons" and, thus, prohibited from building on, or renting, large portions of land designated by the Government of Israel as "State land".⁵⁸

207. The two-tiered civil status under Israeli law, favouring "Jewish nationals" (le'om yehudi) over persons holding Israeli citizenship (ezrahut), has been a subject of concern under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, particularly those forms of discrimination carried out through Israel's parastatal agencies (World Zionist Organization/Jewish Agency, Jewish National Fund and their affiliates), which dominate land use, housing and development.⁵⁹ The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights also

⁵² B'Tselem and Hamoked, "Separated entities - Israel divides Palestinian population of West Bank and Gaza Strip", available at: http://www.btselem.org/Download/200809_Separated%20Entities_Eng.pdf.

⁵³ Amira Hass, op. cit.

⁵⁴ The Hague Regulations (art. 43).

⁵⁵ Order regarding the Towns, Villages and Buildings Planning Law (Judea and Samaria) (No. 418), 5731-1971 (QMZM 5732 1000; 5736 1422, 1494; 5741 246; 5742 718, 872; 5743, No. 57, at 50; 5744, No. 66, at 30), para. 8.

⁵⁶ Jewish National Fund, Memorandum of Association, art. 3 (c).

⁵⁷ For those holding "Jewish nationality" (as distinct from Israeli citizenship), special immigration rights and privileges are provided in the Basic Law: Law of Return (1950), as well as development and access to natural resources under the Basic Law: "Israel Lands" (1960).

⁵⁸ An alien person is defined as one who falls outside the following categories: (a) an Israeli citizen; (b) a person who has immigrated (to Israel) under the Basic Law: Law of Return; (c) someone who is entitled to the status of immigrant under the Law of Return, i.e. a Jew by descent or religion; (d) a company controlled by (a), (b) or (c).

⁵⁹ In 1998, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights observed "with grave concern that the Status Law of 1952 authorizes the World Zionist Organization/Jewish Agency and its subsidiaries, including the Jewish has recognized that Israel's application of a "Jewish nationality" distinct from Israeli citizenship institutionalizes discrimination that disadvantages all Palestinians, in particular, refugees.⁶⁰

208. In 2007, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination highlighted another discriminatory policy imposed by the Israeli authorities on Palestinian residents of the Occupied Palestinian Territory as well as those who are Israeli citizens (but denied a legal "nationality" status).⁶¹ The "Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (Temporary Order)" of 31 May 2003 bars the possibility of granting Israeli citizenship and residence permits in Israel, including through family reunification, to residents of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Committee noted that such measures have a disproportionate impact on Arab Israeli citizens who marry Palestinians from the Occupied Palestinian Territory and wish to live together with their families in Israel. While noting the State party's legitimate objective of guaranteeing the safety of its citizens, the Committee expressed concern about the fact that these "temporary" measures have systematically been renewed and have been expanded to citizens of "enemy States".⁶²

209. Since 1967, about 750,000 Palestinians have been detained at some point by the Government of Israel, according to Palestinian human rights organizations. Currently, there are approximately 8,100 Palestinian prisoners in Israeli prisons and detention centres, roughly 550 of whom are administrative detainees.⁶³ Administrative detention is detention without charge or trial, authorized by an administrative order rather than by judicial decree. The conditions of Palestinians in Israeli detention facilities have been the subject of considerable international criticism, including concerns of torture and other ill-treatment. Palestinian detainees can normally be visited only by first-degree relatives (see chapter XXI). However, following Hamas' seizure of full control in the Gaza Strip in June 2007, the Israeli authorities suspended visits from family members travelling from Gaza to Palestinian detainees in Israel, depriving more than 900 detainees of direct contact with their relatives.⁶⁴

National Fund, to control most of the land in Israel, since these institutions are chartered to benefit Jews exclusively. [...] large-scale and systematic confiscation of Palestinian land and property by the State and the transfer of that property to these agencies constitute an institutionalized form of discrimination because these agencies by definition would deny the use of these properties to non-Jews. Thus, these practices constitute a breach of Israel's obligations under the Covenant." (E/C.12/1/Add.27, para. 11).

⁶⁰ In its 2003 review, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights also observed with particular concern that "the status of 'Jewish nationality,' which is a ground for exclusive preferential treatment for persons of Jewish nationality under the Israeli Law of Return, granting them automatic citizenship and financial government benefits, thus resulting in practice in discriminatory treatment against non-Jews, in particular Palestinian refugees." (E/C.12/1/Add.90, para. 18).

⁶¹ The "Or" Commission, a panel appointed by the Israeli Government in 2000, found that Arab citizens suffer discrimination in Israel and levelled criticism at the Government for failing to give fair and equal attention to the needs of Arab citizens of Israel. See its full report at: http://elyon1.court.gov.il/heb/veadot/or/inside_index.htm (in Hebrew).

⁶² CERD/C/ISR/CO/13.

⁶³ Mission's Public hearings, Geneva (7 July 2009). Testimony of Ms. Sahar Francis, Director of Addameer, available at: <http://webcast.un.org/ramgen/ondemand/conferences/unhrc/gaza/gaza090707am1-eng.rm?start=00:00:00&end=00:47:46>

⁶⁴ A/63/518.

C. Relevant political and administrative structures in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank

210. The Palestinian Legislative Council is the legislature of the Palestinian Authority; a unicameral body with 132 members, elected from 16 electoral districts in the West Bank and Gaza. Its initial composition, whose normal cycle is four years, was 88 members. In accordance with the Oslo Accords, the first Palestinian elections took place in 1996 under the supervision of international monitors. In 2000, a second round of planned elections did not take place due to the flaring-up of the second intifada. In January 2006, the second general polls took place. The elections resulted in a majority for the List of Change and Reform.⁶⁵ On 29 June, days after the capture of Gilad Shalit, the Israeli armed forces in the West Bank arrested eight Palestinian Government ministers and 26 members of the Palestinian Legislative Council.⁶⁶ The Council has been unable to operate since, as the continued detention of its members means it cannot achieve a quorum.

211. The Palestinian Basic Law was developed to function as a temporary constitution for the Palestinian Authority until the establishment of an independent State and a permanent constitution for Palestine can be drawn up. The Basic Law was passed by the Palestinian Legislative Council in 1997 and ratified by the President of the Palestinian Authority in 2002. It has been amended twice: in 2003, the political system was changed to introduce a prime minister and, in 2005, it was amended to conform to the new Election Law.⁶⁷ The legal system comprises a body of laws and decrees which include those remaining from previous centuries – Ottoman, British, Jordanian (in the West Bank), Egyptian (in the Gaza Strip) and Israeli – and legislation introduced by presidential decrees and laws passed by the Palestinian Legislative Council.⁶⁸

212. In the jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority, the court system comprises Magistrate Courts, dealing with misdemeanours; Courts of First Instance, dealing with more serious crimes and appeals against judgements handed down by Magistrate Courts; Appeal Courts, which hear appeals against judgements of the Courts of First Instance; and the High Court, which provides the highest level of appeal. A Supreme Criminal Court was set up in 2006 to try crimes such as murder, abduction, rape, so-called honour crimes and attacks on national security. Military Courts hear cases involving members of the security forces and apply the 1979 PLO Revolutionary Code. The Attorney General and the prosecutors investigate and prosecute crimes, oversee the legality of detentions and investigate complaints by detainees. The Attorney General and the judges are nominated by the Higher Judicial Council, which is headed by the President of the High Court, but appointed by the Palestinian Authority's President.⁶⁹ Since June 2007, the Gaza authorities have restructured the judiciary in violation of Palestinian laws. To replace ⁶⁵ The name of the list on which Hamas representatives ran for election.

⁶⁶ See chap. XXI.

⁶⁷ The Palestinian Basic Law: <http://www.palestinianbasiclaw.org>

⁶⁸ Amnesty International, "Occupied Palestinian Territories torn apart by factional strife", available at: <http://www.amnesty.org/en/library/asset/MDE21/020/2007/en/dom-MDE210202007en.html>.

⁶⁹ Ibid.

officials who had left their jobs under instruction of the Palestinian Authority, the Gaza authorities appointed judges and prosecutors generally lacking experience and independence.⁷⁰

213. Before June 2007, there were about 12,600 Palestinian police officers in Gaza and 6,500 in the West Bank under a unified command. Palestinian civil police were operating from 10 district headquarters (including the one in Ramallah, which is also its main central command). After Hamas seized full control of the Gaza Strip, official data about police numbers are available only for the West Bank, where there are 78 police facilities, including district headquarters, general stations and posts, public order compounds, prisons and detention centres, training centres and stations for border police, tourist police, criminal investigation police and traffic police.⁷¹

214. In 2005 various security forces were consolidated into three branches: National Security, Internal Security and General Intelligence, each comprising several forces. General Intelligence includes Military Intelligence and the Military Police, and is under the direct control of the Palestinian Authority's President, as is the Presidential Guard/Force 17. National Security and Internal Security are under the jurisdiction of the Ministers of National Security and the Interior, respectively, but their heads are appointed by the Palestinian Authority's President. In 2006, the then Hamas Interior Minister established the Executive Force, mainly composed of members of al-Qassam Brigades and Hamas supporters.⁷² Since Hamas seized control in June 2007, law and order and other security functions have been performed by Hamas security organizations.⁷³ The Gaza authorities announced a series of new bodies or mechanisms to replace the Palestinian Authority's security forces and judicial institutions that have refused to operate under or alongside the Hamas administration.⁷⁴ In September 2007, the Internal Security Force was established with most of its personnel coming from al-Qassam Brigades. In October 2007, Hamas dissolved the Executive Force and absorbed its personnel into the police. Both the Internal Security Force and the police report to the minister of interior.⁷⁵ (See chapter X.)

215. Most Palestinian political parties have an armed wing or armed groups affiliated to them.⁷⁶ The two largest armed groups are al-Aqsa Brigades, the armed wing of Fatah, and al-Qassam Brigades, the armed wing of Hamas. Al-Aqsa Brigades were established by Fatah activists, including members of the Palestinian Authority's security forces, shortly after the

⁷⁰ Human Rights Watch, Internal Fight: Palestinian Abuses in Gaza and the West Bank (July 2008), available at: <http://www.hrw.org/en/reports/2008/07/29/internal-fight-0>.

⁷¹ The European Union's police mission for the Palestinian Territories (2008), available at: <http://www.consilium.europa.eu/uedocs/cmsUpload/EUPOL%20COPPS%20booklet.pdf>.

⁷² See chap. VII.

⁷³ Central Intelligence Agency, The World Fact Book 2009 (Gaza Strip), available at: <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/geos/gz.html>.

⁷⁴ "Occupied Palestinian Territories torn apart...".

⁷⁵ Internal Fight...

⁷⁶ The armed wings of the Islamic Jihad, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. There are also other smaller splinter groups.

outbreak of the second intifada. Al-Qassam Brigades were established in the early 1990s with the stated aim of conducting armed resistance to Israeli occupation.⁷⁷

D. Relevant political and administrative structures in Israel

216. In Israel, a largely ceremonial President is elected by the 120-seat Knesset for a seven-year, non-renewable term. The Prime Minister is usually the leader of the largest party or coalition in the Knesset, whose members are elected by party-list, proportional representation for four-year terms. The three main parties are the centre-left Labour Party, the centrist Kadima and the right-wing Likud.⁷⁸

217. Following legislative elections, the President assigns a Knesset member – traditionally the leader of the largest party – the task of forming a governing coalition.

218. Israel has no formal constitution; some of the functions of a constitution are fulfilled by the Declaration of Establishment (1948), the Basic Laws of the parliament (Knesset) and the Israeli Citizenship Law.

219. The court system comprises Magistrates' Courts, which are courts of first instance in criminal and civil matters; District Courts, which are courts of first instance with jurisdiction over serious criminal offences which carry the death penalty or more than seven years' imprisonment and act as appellate courts for the judgments of the Magistrates' Court; and the Supreme Court, which is the highest judicial instance of the country.⁷⁹ The Supreme Court hears direct petitions from Israeli citizens. It also hears cases related to Palestinian residents of the West Bank and Gaza Strip sitting as the High Court of Justice.⁸⁰ Palestinian civilians charged with security-related and other criminal offences are, however, commonly tried in the Israeli military court system. Since 1967, more than 200,000 cases have been brought before military courts, where Palestinian civilians have been prosecuted and judged by the military authorities. About half the prisoners currently being held in Israel have been sentenced to prison terms by military courts.⁸¹

220. The Israeli police is a civilian force mandated to fight crime, control traffic and maintain public safety. The border police (Magav) is the military branch of the Israeli police, with combat, counter-terrorism and riot-control units.

⁷⁷ "Occupied Palestinian Territories torn apart...".

⁷⁸ Freedom House. Country report: Israel (2009), available at: <http://www.freedomhouse.org/template.cfm?page=22&country=7630&year=2009>.

⁷⁹ The State of Israel – The Judicial Authority, at: <http://elyon1.court.gov.il/eng/home/index.html>.

⁸⁰ "As the High Court of Justice, the Supreme Court rules as a court of first instance, primarily in matters regarding the legality of decisions of State authorities: Government decisions, those of local authorities and other bodies and persons performing public functions under the law. It rules on matters in which it considers it necessary to grant relief in the interests of justice, and which are not within the jurisdiction of another court or tribunal." See The State of Israel – Judicial Authority (The Supreme Court), at: <http://elyon1.court.gov.il/eng/rashut/maarechet.html>.

⁸¹ See Yesh Din – Volunteers for Human Rights, Backyard Proceedings: The Implementation of Due Process Rights in the Military Courts in the Occupied Territories (December 2007), available at: <http://www.yesh-din.org/site/images/BackyardProceedingsEng.pdf>.

221. Branches of the military are the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF), Israeli Naval Forces (INF) and the Israeli Air Force (IAF). The Israeli military is headed by the Chief of General Staff under the Minister of Defense. The structure of the Israeli army comprises four regional commands: (a) the Northern Command; (b) the Central Command; (c) the Southern Command; and (d) the Home Front Command. The Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories (COGAT) – formerly known as the “Civil Administration” – is a unit in the Israeli Ministry of Defense that administers areas of the West Bank and coordinates with international organizations operating in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

222. The Israeli intelligence services are: (a) the Institute for Intelligence and Special Operations (Mossad); (b) the Israeli Security Agency (formerly the General Security Services) or the Israeli internal security service (Shin Bet or Shabak); and (c) the Military Intelligence (Aman).

III. EVENTS OCCURRING BETWEEN THE “CEASEFIRE” OF 18 JUNE 2008 BETWEEN ISRAEL AND THE GAZA AUTHORITIES AND THE START OF ISRAEL’S MILITARY OPERATIONS IN GAZA ON 27 DECEMBER 2008

223. As mentioned in chapter I, in order to implement its mandate the Mission decided to focus primarily on events, actions or circumstances that had occurred since 19 June 2008, when a ceasefire was agreed between the Government of Israel and Hamas. Accordingly, both in the context of its mandate and in order to be informed about the environment in which the Israeli military operations in the Gaza Strip took place, the Mission reviewed incidents relevant to the ceasefire that were reported to have taken place between 19 June 2008 and the start of Israel’s military operations in the Gaza Strip. Information about these incidents, which are recorded in chronological order, was gathered primarily from documents in the public domain and may not represent all incidents that occurred during this period.⁸²

224. On 18 June 2008, the Gaza authorities and Israel announced a six-month ceasefire in an agreement brokered by Egypt.⁸³ The ceasefire came into effect on 19 June 2008 at 6 a.m.⁸⁴

225. The terms of the ceasefire agreement were not set out in any formal, written document and, according to recent analysis, the Gaza authorities’ and Israel’s understanding of the terms

⁸² Sources include public statements issued by the Gaza authorities, Palestinian armed groups and Israel, reports of the United Nations, national and international NGOs and the media.

⁸³ The ceasefire was officially termed “a period of calm” (Tahdiyah in Arabic). It has also been referred to as “security calm” and “lull”.

⁸⁴ Prime Minister Olmert’s comments on the calm in the south, Press Release, 18 June 2008, Prime Minister’s Office, available at: <http://www.pmo.gov.il/PMOEng/Archive/Press+Releases/2008/06/spokecalm180608.htm>; Al Ahram Weekly, “Calm for now”, 19 June 2008, available at: <http://weekly.ahram.org.eg/2008/902/eg2.htm>; Felesteen Newspaper, “Gaza: Hamas: the Tahdiyah is the fruit of the resilience and resistance of the (resistance) groups and its unity”, 18 June 2009, available at: <http://www.felesteen.ps/file/pdf/2008/06/18/1.pdf>; 19 June 2009; Felesteen Newspaper, Gaza, Tahdiya starts today accompanied with international and popular welcoming, <http://www.felesteen.ps/file/pdf/2008/06/19/1.pdf>. See chap. II.

differed substantially.⁸⁵ According to information reported by OCHA, the agreement included a commitment by the Gaza authorities to halt attacks by Palestinian armed groups against Israel immediately and a commitment by Israel to cease its military operations in Gaza. Israel also reportedly agreed to ease its blockade of Gaza and gradually lift its ban on the import of a large number of commodities.⁸⁶ According to Egyptian sources quoted by the International Crisis Group,⁸⁷ after three weeks the two sides were to commence negotiations for a prisoner exchange and the opening of the Rafah crossing.

226. The agreement was made in respect to the territory of the Gaza Strip only, but Egypt reportedly undertook to work to expand the ceasefire to the West Bank after the initial six-month ceasefire had elapsed.⁸⁸

227. The first incident relevant to the ceasefire reportedly took place on 23 June 2008, when a 67-year-old Palestinian civilian was injured when the Israeli military stationed at the border north-west of Beit Lahia opened fire on a group of Palestinians trying to collect fire wood near the border. Also on 23 June, two mortar shells were reportedly fired from central Gaza. One landed near the Nahal Oz crossing and the other in the Negev desert; no injuries were reported.⁸⁹

228. Between 18 and 24 June 2008, the Karni (al-Mintar) crossing conveyor belt was opened for four days for wheat and animal feed but was closed to all other imports and exports. The Erez crossing was open for six days to allow the movement of diplomats, international humanitarian workers and critical medical cases. OCHA indicated that senior Palestinian businessmen were also allowed to cross. The Sufa crossing was open for five days during the week ending 24 June 2008, while the Kerem Shalom and Rafah crossings remained closed. The Nahal Oz energy pipelines were open on the six scheduled operating days.⁹⁰

⁸⁵ See International Crisis Group, “Ending the war in Gaza”, Middle East Briefing No. 26, 5 January 2009, p. 3, available at: http://www.crisisgroup.org/library/documents/middle_east_north_africa/arab_israeli_conflict/b26_ending_the_war_in_gaza.pdf.

⁸⁶ OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (18–24 June 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/Weekly_Briefing_Notes_265_English.pdf; see also “Ending the war...”, which also notes that crossing points were to be opened after 72 hours (6 a.m. on 22 June 2008) to allow 30 per cent more goods into Gaza and, on 1 July 2009, all crossings were to be opened to allow for the transfer of goods into Gaza (footnote 1). It is the Mission’s understanding that, in relation to the transfer of goods, the agreement did not include materials that could be used to make explosives or projectiles.

⁸⁷ See “Ending the war...”.

⁸⁸ “Ending the war...”, footnote 1. See also The Jerusalem Post, “End of truce? 3 Kassams hit w. Negev”, 24 June 2008, available at <http://www.jpost.com/servlet/Satellite?cid=1214132667653&pagename=JPost%2FJPArticle%2FShowFull>.

⁸⁹ OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (18–24 June 2008).

⁹⁰ Ibid.

229. Shortly after midnight on 24 June 2008, a mortar fired from Gaza landed in the Negev near the Karni checkpoint, causing no injuries or damage.⁹¹ No group claimed responsibility for the attack.⁹²

230. At dawn on 24 June 2008, the Israeli armed forces launched a raid in the West Bank town of Nablus in which an Islamic Jihad activist and another Palestinian man were killed.⁹³ According to statements reportedly made by the Palestinian armed group Islamic Jihad, it responded by firing three Qassam rockets into Israel, which landed in the western Negev desert.⁹⁴ It added: “We cannot keep our hands tied when this is happening to our brothers in the West Bank”, while a Gaza authorities spokesman was quoted as saying that the rocket attack came as a result of “Israeli provocation” but that Hamas, as the Gaza authorities, was “committed to the security calm”.⁹⁵ In Israel, the Foreign Ministry spokesperson termed the rocket attacks “a grave violation of the ceasefire”⁹⁶ and said it would consider reimposing economic sanctions.⁹⁷

231. On 26 June 2008, Israel’s Defense Ministry ordered the reclosure of the Gaza border crossings, save for special humanitarian cases, in response to the rocket attacks two days previously.⁹⁸ The Gaza authorities accused Israel of violating the ceasefire, stating “if the crossings remain closed, the truce will collapse”.⁹⁹

232. Later on 26 June 2008, one rocket was fired from Gaza into Israel for which the Palestinian armed group al-Aqsa Martyrs’ Brigades claimed responsibility.¹⁰⁰ As reported by the Xinhua news agency, the armed group stated that “the truce must include the West Bank and all

⁹¹ Rianovosti, “Mortar attack from Gaza hit Israel”, 24 June 2008, available at: <http://en.rian.ru/world/20080624/111867958.html>; “End of truce?...”.

⁹² “Mortar attack...”.

⁹³ “End of truce?...”; The New York Times, “Rockets hit Israel, breaking Hamas truce”, 25 June 2008, available at <http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/25/world/middleeast/25mideast.html>

⁹⁴ “End of truce?...”.

⁹⁵ Ibid.

⁹⁶ Ibid.

⁹⁷ BBC News, “Rockets ‘violated Gaza ceasefire’”, 24 June 2008, available at: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7470530.stm

⁹⁸ Xinhua News, “Israeli FM calls for immediate military response to Qassam attacks”, 26 June 2008.

⁹⁹ Gaza authorities, “The Government: Closing the crossings is an infringement of truce, and we call Egypt to interpose”, press statement (25 June 2008), available at: <http://www.moi.gov.ps/en/?page=633167343250594025&Nid=4702>; see also “Israeli FM calls for immediate military response...”.

¹⁰⁰ OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (25 June–1 July 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/Weekly_Briefing_Notes_266.pdf.

sorts of aggression must stop”.¹⁰¹ The Israeli Foreign Minister commented, “I do not care which organization fired the rocket, Israel must respond militarily and immediately.”¹⁰²

233. On 27 June 2008, the al-Aqsa Martyrs’ Brigades claimed responsibility for firing mortar shells into Israel, one of which landed near Sderot. The head of the Gaza authorities, Ismail Haniyah, called on all the Palestinian factions to adhere to the ceasefire, stating that “the factions and the people accepted the lull in order to secure two interests – an end to aggression and the lifting of the siege”. A spokesman for the Gaza authorities was quoted as saying that it considered the rocket attacks to be “unpatriotic” and that Hamas was considering the possibility of taking action against those perpetrating the attacks against Israel.¹⁰³

234. On 28 June 2008, mortar shells were reportedly fired at the Karni crossing but no group claimed responsibility. On 29 June 2008, the crossings into Gaza were closed,¹⁰⁴ save for the delivery of fuel.

235. On 30 June 2008, Israel reported that a rocket fired from Gaza fell near the kibbutz of Miflasim. No group claimed responsibility and Israel confirmed that as of 1 July 2008 no rocket fragments had been located. Israel closed the crossings which had been reopened the day before. The Gaza authorities rejected the assertion that a rocket had in fact been fired and called the closure of the crossings “unjustified”.¹⁰⁵

236. On several occasions during the last two weeks of June, the Israeli navy fired at Palestinian fishermen off the Gaza coast, forcing them to return to shore.¹⁰⁶

237. During the month of June, the number of truckloads of goods allowed into Gaza represented only 17 per cent of the number that entered Gaza in May 2007, before Hamas seized control of the Gaza Strip. No exports had been allowed out of Gaza by Israel since December 2007.¹⁰⁷

¹⁰¹ Xinhua News, “Israeli FM calls for immediate military response ...”.

¹⁰² Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs: “FM Livni: Israel will not tolerate violations of the calm”, press release (26 June 2008), available at: <http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/About+the+Ministry/MFA+Spokesman/2008/Israel%20will%20not%20tolerate%20violations%20of%20the%20calm%2026-Jun-2008>.

¹⁰³ Ynet News, “Haniyeh: All Palestinian factions should honor truce”, 27 June 2008; <http://www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-3561133,00.html>.

¹⁰⁴ Intelligence and Terrorism Information Center at the Israel Intelligence Heritage & Commemoration Center, “The six months of the lull arrangement”, December 2008.

¹⁰⁵ The Guardian, “Israel closes Gaza crossing after reported rocket attack”, 1 July 2008, available at: <http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2008/jul/01/israelandthepalestinians.middleeast>.

¹⁰⁶ OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (18–24 June 2008) and Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (25 June–1 July 2008).

¹⁰⁷ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 26 (June 2008), available at http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/HM_June_2008.pdf.

238. On 1 July 2008, a spokesman for the Gaza authorities accused the Israeli armed forces of shooting a 65-year-old Palestinian woman who was living near the border. Israel said that it was investigating the claim.¹⁰⁸

239. On 2 July 2008, Israel reopened the Sufa and Karni crossings to allow passage of goods into Gaza, while 45 medical evacuations were allowed through the Erez crossing.¹⁰⁹

240. Also on 2 July 2008, several thousand Palestinians attempted to break into the Rafah terminal and cross into Egypt. Egyptian security forces responded with water cannons and tear gas to force them back into Gaza.¹¹⁰

241. On 3 July 2008, a rocket launched from Gaza struck north of Sderot and Israel closed the crossings into Gaza for the day on 4 July 2008 in response.¹¹¹

242. On 7 July 2008, a mortar shell fired from Gaza landed near the Karni crossing, on the Gaza side.¹¹² On the same day, Israeli forces began raids on institutions in Nablus that it believed to be linked to Hamas. Over the following four days, a mosque, a newspaper and other offices were raided, and a medical centre and the Nafha Prisoners' Association were closed down.¹¹³

243. On 8 July 2008, two mortars were fired from Gaza,¹¹⁴ one landing at the Sufa crossing and the other inside the Gaza Strip. Israel closed the crossings briefly. Following the firing of another mortar shell into Israel, the crossing was again closed.

244. On 9 July 2008, Israeli forces shot dead a Hamas member near the West Bank city of Jenin. This led Palestinian Authority Prime Minister Salam Fayyad to warn that the Israeli military actions in the West Bank were undermining the Palestinian Authority and its efforts to improve security.¹¹⁵

245. On 10 July 2008, the Israeli armed forces shot and killed a member of al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades near the Kissufim crossing. The Israeli armed forces stated that warning shots had been fired. In response, the al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades fired two rockets into Israel which landed in an open area. Sources inside Gaza said that the Gaza authorities had arrested those responsible for ¹⁰⁸ "Israel closes Gaza crossings after reported rocket...".

¹⁰⁹ Government of Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs, "Humanitarian Assistance to Gaza during the period of calm (19 June – Dec 18, 2009)", 26 December 2008, available at http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2008/Humanitarian_assistance%20to_Gaza_since_June_19_calm_understanding_18_Nov_2008.

¹¹⁰ OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (2–8 July 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/Weekly_Briefing_Notes_267.pdf.

¹¹¹ "The six months...".

¹¹² OCHA, Protection of Civilians Weekly Report (2–8 July 2008).

¹¹³ PCHR, "PCHR condemns IOF measures against Nablus charities", press release (8 July 2009), available at: <http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/PressR/English/2008/62-2008.html>; BBC News, "Gaza militants fire two rockets", 10 July 2008, available at: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7500322.stm

¹¹⁴ "The six months...".

¹¹⁵ "Gaza militants fire...".

firing the rockets and the al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades stated that its members had been "abducted" by Hamas.¹¹⁶

246. According to Israeli sources, on 12 July 2008 a rocket launched from the Gaza Strip struck an open area in Sha'ar Hanegev and on 13 July 2008 two mortar shells fired fell short inside the Gaza border. This led to Israel closing the Nahal Oz and Sufa crossings. On 15 July 2008, a mortar shell struck territory inside Israel, while three rockets misfired and landed inside the Gaza Strip, in separate incidents on 25, 29 and 31 July 2008.¹¹⁷

247. On 29 July, a 10-year-old boy was shot in the head and killed by the Israeli Border Police during a demonstration against the wall in Ni'lin in the West Bank. During a clash with Israeli Border Police the following day, after the funeral in Ni'lin, a 17 year-old boy was shot in the head and died on 4 August.¹¹⁸

248. During July 2008, the amount of commodities allowed into Gaza by Israel was assessed by OCHA as remaining "far below the actual needs" and was "restricted to certain selected essential humanitarian items". The imports were 46 per cent of those entering Gaza in May 2007, prior to the Hamas' seizing control of the Gaza Strip. As a result of the restriction on imports and total ban on exports, 95 per cent of Gaza's industries remained closed.¹¹⁹

249. In August 2008, according to Israeli sources, three mortars and eight rockets were fired into Israel from the Gaza Strip. They included a rocket which struck Sderot on 11 August 2008,¹²⁰ prompting Israel's closure of the crossings, as well as a rocket fired on 20 August 2008, which once again led to the closure of the border crossings.¹²¹

250. During August, there was a reduction in the number of truckloads carrying goods into Gaza. August imports represented 70 per cent of the July 2008 imports and 23 per cent of the May 2007 level.¹²²

251. In September 2008, three mortars and one rocket were fired into Israel from the Gaza Strip, according to Israeli sources.¹²³

¹¹⁶ Ibid.; Reuters, " Hamas arrests first rocket squads since truce", 10 July 2008, available at: <http://www.reuters.com/article/latestCrisis/idUSL10355564>.

¹¹⁷ "The six months...".

¹¹⁸ Al-Haq, "Right to life of Palestinian children disregarded in Ni'lin as Israel's policy of wilful killing of civilians continues", press release (7 August 2008), available at: <http://www.alhaq.org/etemplate.php?id=387>.

¹¹⁹ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 27 (July 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/Humanitarian_Monitor_July_2008.pdf.

¹²⁰ "The six months...".

¹²¹ Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), "Israel-Occupied Palestine Territories: Rocket attack throws Gaza crossing plan into jeopardy", 20 August 2008, available at: <http://www.unhcr.org/refworld/topic,45a5199f2,4874797e3b,48ae79b81e,0.html>.

¹²² OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 28 (August 2008), available at http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_humanitarian_monitor_08_2008_english.pdf.

252. During September, the movement of goods and people in and out of Gaza through the crossing increased, with levels of imports at 37 per cent of the May 2007 level. The Sufa crossing closed on 13 September 2008 and goods were redirected through Kerem Shalom, as Israel stated that it intended to have only one goods crossing open at any one time.¹²⁴

253. In October 2008, Israeli sources stated that only one rocket and one mortar were fired into Israel from the Gaza Strip.¹²⁵ There was a 30 per cent decline in imports allowed into Gaza by Israel as compared to September 2008, partly due to the closure of the crossings during the Jewish holidays. Imports were at 26 per cent of the level of May 2007. Tunnels under the Rafah border reportedly proliferated during this period and allowed the entry of otherwise unavailable goods. Collapsing tunnels continued to cause casualties.¹²⁶

254. After two months in which few incidents were reported, the ceasefire began to founder on 4 November 2008 following an incursion by Israeli soldiers into the Gaza Strip, which Israel stated was to close a cross-border tunnel that in Israel's view was intended to be used by Palestinian fighters to kidnap Israeli soldiers. The soldiers attacked a house in the Wadi al-Salqa village, east of Deir al-Balah, which was alleged to be the starting point of the tunnel, killing a member of the al-Qassam Brigades. Several Israeli soldiers were wounded. In response, the al-Qassam Brigades fired more than 30 Qassam rockets into Israel. Israel responded with an air strike that left a further five members of the al-Qassam Brigades dead. Both sides blamed the other for the escalation of violence. Hamas also accused Israel of trying to disrupt talks between Hamas and Fatah that were scheduled for the following week in Cairo.¹²⁷ Israel closed the crossings into the Gaza Strip on 5 November 2008 and they remained closed until 24 November 2008, when they were opened briefly to allow humanitarian supplies to enter.¹²⁸

255. According to the Israeli internal intelligence service (known as Shin Bet or Shabak), 22 rockets and nine mortars were fired into Israel between 5 and 12 November 2008.¹²⁹ The crossings into the Gaza Strip remained closed during this time. On 14 November 2008, Amnesty

¹²³ "The six months...".

¹²⁴ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 29 (September 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_humanitarian_monitor_2008_10_1_english.pdf.

¹²⁵ Intelligence and Terrorism Information Center at the Israel Intelligence Heritage & Commemoration Center, "Summary of rocket fire and mortar shelling in 2008", January 2009.

¹²⁶ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 30 (October 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_humanitarian_monitor_oct_2008_10_english.pdf.

¹²⁷ The Guardian, "Gaza truce broken as Israeli raid kills six Hamas gunmen", 5 November 2008, available at: <http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2008/nov/05/israelandthepalestinians>; The Times, "Six die in Israeli attack over Hamas 'tunnel under border to kidnap soldier'", 6 November 2008, available at http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/news/world/middle_east/article5089940.ece. A Hamas spokesman was quoted as saying "The Israelis began this tension and they must pay an expensive price" while an Israeli spokesman stated "this operation was in response to a Hamas intrusion of the quiet".

¹²⁸ JTA, "Israel closes Gaza crossings after attack", 25 November 2008, available at http://jta.org/news/article-print/2008/11/25/1001205/israel-closes-gaza-crossings-after-attack?TB_iframe=true&width=750&height=500.

¹²⁹ Israel Security Agency, "Weekly update, November 5-12, 2008", available at <http://www.shabak.gov.il/SiteCollectionImages/english/TerrorInfo/weekly-update-12-11-08-En.pdf>.

International issued a press release calling on Israel to allow humanitarian aid and medical supplies to enter.¹³⁰

256. On 17 November 2008, Amnesty International issued another press release, noting that on that day Israel had allowed a limited number of trucks carrying humanitarian assistance to enter Gaza. Amnesty International also noted that an additional ten members of Palestinian armed groups had been killed by Israeli air strikes since the killing of six members of Palestinian armed groups by Israel on 4 November 2008.¹³¹

257. Palestinian armed groups fired rockets and mortars into Israel throughout November 2008. According to Israeli sources, 125 rockets were fired into Israel during November 2008 (compared to one in October) and 68 mortars shells were fired (also compared to one in October).¹³² On 14 November 2008, a resident of Sderot was lightly injured by shrapnel.

258. Israel closed the crossings into Gaza for most of November 2008, although 42 trucks of humanitarian aid were permitted to cross on 24 November 2008 and about 60 on 26 November 2008.¹³³ According to OCHA, the number of trucks allowed into Gaza in November 2008 was 81 per cent lower than in October 2008. Shortages forced most of Gaza's bakeries to close and UNRWA suspended food distribution for five days to 750,000 Gazans owing to a lack of food supplies.¹³⁴

259. Rocket and mortar fire by Palestinian armed groups continued unabated throughout December 2008.¹³⁵ According to Israeli sources, 71 rockets and 59 mortars were fired into Israel between 1 and 18 December.¹³⁶ The number of rockets and mortars fired from the Gaza Strip into Israel spiked,¹³⁷ following the killing by the Israeli armed forces of an Islamic Jihad

¹³⁰ Amnesty International, "Israel blocks deliveries to Gaza", 14 November 2008, available at <http://www.amnesty.org/en/news-and-updates/news/israeli-army-blocks-deliveries-gaza-20081114>.

¹³¹ Amnesty International, "Israeli Army relaxes restrictions on humanitarian aid to Gaza", 17 November 2008, available at <http://www.amnesty.org/en/news/news-and-updates/israeli-army-relaxes-restrictions-humanitarian-aid-gaza-20081117>.

¹³² "Summary of rocket fire...".

¹³³ JTA, "Israel closes Gaza crossings after attack..." and "Kassams continue to strike Negev", 27 November 2008, available at http://jta.org/news/article-print/2008/11/27/1001233/kassams-continue-to-strike-negev?TB_iframe=true&width=750&height=500.

¹³⁴ OCHA The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 31 (November 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_humanitarian_monitor_2008_11_1_english.pdf.

¹³⁵ See, for example, JTA, "Kassams fired again from Gaza", 3 December 2008, available at: http://jta.org/news/article-print/2008/12/03/1001316/attacks-from-gaza-increase?TB_iframe=true&width=750&height=500; JTA, "Rockets barrage Israel over weekend", 7 December 2008, available at: http://jta.org/news/article-print/2008/12/07/1001377/rockets-barrage-israel-over-weekend?TB_iframe=true&width=750&height=500; JTA, "Three injured in Kassam attack", 17 December 2008, available at: http://jta.org/news/article/2008/12/17/1001621/more-kassams-rain-on-israel#comment_72450; and JTA, "Kassam rocket hits Sderot home", 21 December 2008, available at: <http://jta.org/news/article/2008/12/21/1001713/kassam-rocket-hits-sderot-home>.

¹³⁶ "Summary of rocket fire...".

¹³⁷ Ibid.

commander in the West Bank on 15 December 2008.¹³⁸ One of the rockets launched from the Gaza Strip on 17 December 2008 struck the car park of a shopping centre in Sderot, injuring three people and causing significant damage to property.¹³⁹

260. On 2 December 2008, the Israeli air force killed two Palestinian children and seriously injured two others when one of its aircraft fired a missile at a group of Palestinian children who were sitting in a street near Rafah. An Israeli military spokesman admitted responsibility for the attack and claimed that it was targeting members of Palestinian armed groups. Eyewitnesses informed the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights (PCHR) that the victims were civilians.¹⁴⁰

261. On 5 December 2008, an Israeli aircraft fired a missile at members of what PCHR described as “activists of the Palestinian resistance” in Jabaliyah refugee camp in the northern Gaza Strip, seriously wounding one person.¹⁴¹ On 18 December, an Israeli air strike killed a man in Beit Lahia.¹⁴² The same day, Israeli aircraft attacked a car maintenance workshop in the city of Khan Yunis in the southern Gaza Strip. The workshop was destroyed and a number of nearby houses were damaged.¹⁴³

262. On 18 December 2008, the Gaza authorities declared that the truce was at an end and would not be renewed on the grounds that Israel had not abided by its obligations to end the blockade on Gaza.¹⁴⁴

263. On 21 December 2008, a rocket hit a house in Sderot and a foreign worker was injured as a result of a rocket striking Ashkelon.¹⁴⁵ Israel responded with air strikes into Gaza City, wounding a Palestinian infant in her home.¹⁴⁶ Israel’s Prime Minister and Defense Minister stated that Israel would no longer practise restraint following the rocket attacks.¹⁴⁷

¹³⁸ JTA, “Kassams hit Israel after terrorist killed”, 16 December 2008, available at: http://jta.org/news/article-print/2008/12/16/1001575/kassams-hit-israel-after-terrorist-killed?TB_iframe=true&width=750&height=500.

¹³⁹ “Three injured...”.

¹⁴⁰ PCHR, “Weekly report on Israeli human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, No. 48/2008 (24 November – 3 December 2008), available at: http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/W_report/English/2008/04-12-2008.htm.

¹⁴¹ PCHR, “Weekly report on Israeli human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, No. 49/2008 (4-17 December), available at: http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/W_report/English/2008/18-12-2008.htm. The Mission notes the lack of clarity as to whether these were armed members of the Palestinian armed groups or civilians.

¹⁴² Al-Jazeera, “Israeli missile kills Gaza man”, 18 December 2008, available at: <http://english.aljazeera.net/news/middleeast/2008/12/2008121721428340460.html>.

¹⁴³ PCHR, “Weekly report on Israeli human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, No. 50/2008 (18–23 December 2008), available at: http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/W_report/English/2008/24-12-2008.htm.

¹⁴⁴ Reuters, “ Hamas declares end to ceasefire with Israel in Gaza”, 18 December 2008, available at: <http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSLI75623220081218>.

¹⁴⁵ “Kassam rocket...”.

¹⁴⁶ “Weekly report...”, No. 50/2008.

¹⁴⁷ “Kassam rocket...”.

264. On 22 December 2008, a 24-hour ceasefire was declared at Egypt's request. Three rockets and one mortar were launched from Gaza that day. Israel opened the border to allow a limited amount of humanitarian aid to enter Gaza.¹⁴⁸

265. By 23 December 2008, rocket and mortar fire was again increasing significantly; 30 rockets and 30 mortars were fired into Israel on 24 December 2008.¹⁴⁹ The Israeli armed forces continued to conduct air strikes on positions inside Gaza and the crossings into Israel remained closed. On 26 December 2008, a rocket launched from Gaza fell short and hit a house in northern Gaza killing two girls, aged 5 and 12.¹⁵⁰

266. The intensified closure regime on the Gaza crossings which began in November continued in December, with imports restricted to very basic food items and limited amounts of fuel, animal feed and medical supplies. According to OCHA, many basic food items were no longer available and negligible amounts of fuel were allowed to enter Gaza. This resulted in the health sector in Gaza deteriorating further into a critical condition, with hospitals continuing to face problems as a result of power cuts, low stocks of fuel to operate back-up generators, lack of spare parts for medical equipment and shortages of consumables and medical supplies.¹⁵¹ On 18 December 2008, UNRWA once again suspended its food distribution programme for the rest of the month, owing to shortages.¹⁵²

267. On 27 December 2008, Israel started its military operations in Gaza.¹⁵³

IV. APPLICABLE LAW

268. The Mission's mandate covers all violations of international human rights law (IHRL) and international humanitarian law (IHL) that might have been committed at any time, whether before, during or after, in the context of the military operations that were conducted in Gaza during the period from 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009. The Mission has therefore carried out its task within the framework of general international law, in particular IHRL and IHL.

A. Self-determination

269. A fundamental element in the legal framework is the principle of self-determination of peoples, derived from the Charter of the United Nations, Article 1, accepted as constituting

¹⁴⁸ JTA, " Hamas curtails launching rockets for 24 hours", 22 December 2008, available at: http://jta.org/news/article-print/2008/12/22/1001726/hamas-stops-launching-rockets-for-24-hours?TB_iframe=true&width=750&height=500; "Summary of rocket fire..."

¹⁴⁹ "Summary of rocket fire..."

¹⁵⁰ Fox News, "Palestinian rockets kill 2 schoolgirls in Gaza", 26 December 2008, available at <http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,473066,00.html>.

¹⁵¹ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 32 (December 2008), available at: http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_humanitarian_monitor_2008_12_1_15_english.pdf.

¹⁵² UNRWA, "UNRWA suspends food distribution in Gaza", press release (18 December 2008), available at: http://www.un.org/unrwa/news/releases/pr-2008/gaz_18dec08.html.

¹⁵³ The New York Times, "Israelis say strikes against Hamas will continue", 28 December 2008, available at: http://www.nytimes.com/2008/12/28/world/middleeast/28mideast.html?_r=2&hp.

customary international law, and set out as a right of peoples in the two International Covenants on Human Rights (common article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR)). The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination has been affirmed by the General Assembly and the International Court of Justice in its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.¹⁵⁴ Self-determination has special prominence in the context of the recent events and military hostilities in the region, because they are but one episode in the long occupation of the Palestinian territory. The right to self-determination has an erga omnes character whereby all States have the duty to promote its realization. This is also recognized by the United Nations General Assembly, which has declared that peoples who resist forcible action depriving them of their right to self-determination have the right to seek and receive support from third parties.¹⁵⁵ Those who take action amounting to military force must comply with IHL.

B. International humanitarian law

270. All parties to the armed conflict are bound by relevant rules of IHL, whether of conventional or customary character. International humanitarian law comprises principles and rules applicable to the conduct of military hostilities and provides for restraints upon the conduct of military action so as to protect civilians and those that are hors de combat. It also applies to situations of belligerent occupation.

271. Israel is a party to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, but has not ratified their Additional Protocols I or II on the protection of victims of armed conflict. In addition, Israel is a party to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May be Deemed to be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, as well as its Protocol I on Non-Detectable Fragments, both of 10 October 1980.

272. Many of the rules contained in the Fourth Hague Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land and the Regulations annexed to it, and the four Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols are now part of customary international law. Israel's High Court of Justice has confirmed that Israel must adhere to those rules and principles reflected in the Fourth Geneva Convention, the Regulations annexed to the Fourth Hague Convention and the customary international law principles reflected in certain provisions of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949. The Government of Israel accepts that, although it is not a party to the Additional Protocol I, some of its provisions accurately reflect customary international law.¹⁵⁶ Under the rules of State responsibility, Israel is responsible for any violations of international law attributable to it. Specifically, under the Fourth Geneva ¹⁵⁴ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion of 9 July 2004, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 135, paras. 149, 155 and 159.

¹⁵⁵ Ibid., para. 156; Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970).

¹⁵⁶ "The operation in Gaza...", para. 31.

Convention, article 29, “the Party to a conflict in whose hands protected persons may be, is responsible for the treatment accorded to them by its agents, irrespective of any individual responsibility which may be incurred.”

273. The legal framework applicable to situations of occupation includes provisions contained in the Hague Regulations (especially articles 42–56), the Fourth Geneva Convention (especially articles 47–78) and Additional Protocol I, and customary international law. The successive steps in the development of that legal framework represent attempts by the international community to protect human beings better from the effects of war while giving due account to military necessity.

274. Article 42 of the Hague Regulations, regarded as customary international law,¹⁵⁷ prescribes that “territory is considered occupied when it is actually placed under the authority of the hostile army”. The occupying authority so established shall take all measures in its power “to restore, and ensure, as far as possible, public order and safety” in the occupied area (art. 43). These provisions call for an examination of whether there was exercise of authority by Israel in the Gaza Strip during the period under investigation.

275. While the drafters of the Hague Regulations were as much concerned with protecting the rights of the State whose territory is occupied as with protecting the inhabitants of that territory, the drafters of the Fourth Geneva Convention sought to guarantee the protection of civilians (“protected persons”¹⁵⁸) in times of war regardless of the status of the occupied territories.¹⁵⁹ That the Fourth Geneva Convention contains requirements in many respects more flexible than the Hague Regulations and thus offering greater protections was recognized by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia in the Naletelić case, where the Trial Chamber applied the test contained in article 6 of the Fourth Geneva Convention: the protections provided for in the Fourth Geneva Convention become operative as soon as the protected persons fall “in the hands” of a hostile army or an occupying Power, this being understood not in its physical sense but in the broader sense of being “in the power” of a hostile army. The Trial Chamber concluded that: “the application of the law of occupation as it effects ‘individuals’ as civilians protected under Geneva Convention IV does not require that the occupying Power have actual authority”.¹⁶⁰

276. Israel has without doubt at all times relevant to the mandate of the Mission exercised effective control over the Gaza Strip. The Mission is of the view that the circumstances of this control establish that the Gaza Strip remains occupied by Israel. The provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention therefore apply at all relevant times with regard to the obligations of Israel towards the population of the Gaza Strip.

¹⁵⁷ Case concerning Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Judgment of 19 December 2005, I.C.J. Reports 2005, para. 172; Legal Consequences..., para. 78.

¹⁵⁸ Under the Fourth Geneva Convention, protected persons are those who, at a given moment and in any manner whatsoever, find themselves in the hands of a party to the conflict or occupying Power of which they are not nationals.

¹⁵⁹ Legal Consequences..., para. 95.

¹⁶⁰ Prosecutor v. Naletilić, case No. IT-98-34-T, Decision of 31 March 2003, paras. 219-222.

277. Despite Israel's declared intention to relinquish its position as an occupying Power by evacuating troops and settlers from the Gaza Strip during its 2005 "disengagement",¹⁶¹ the international community continues to regard it as the occupying Power.¹⁶²

278. Given the specific geopolitical configuration of the Gaza Strip, the powers that Israel exercises from the borders enable it to determine the conditions of life within the Gaza Strip. Israel controls the border crossings (including to a significant degree the Rafah crossing to Egypt, under the terms of the Agreement on Movement and Access¹⁶³) and decides what and who gets in or out of the Gaza Strip. It also controls the territorial sea adjacent to the Gaza Strip and has declared a virtual blockade and limits to the fishing zone, thereby regulating economic activity in that zone. It also keeps complete control of the airspace of the Gaza Strip, inter alia, through continuous surveillance by aircraft and unmanned aviation vehicles (UAVs) or drones. It makes military incursions and from time to time hit targets within the Gaza Strip. No-go areas are declared within the Gaza Strip near the border where Israeli settlements used to be and enforced by the Israeli armed forces. Furthermore, Israel regulates the local monetary market based on the Israeli currency (the new sheqel) and controls taxes and custom duties.

279. The ultimate authority over the Occupied Palestinian Territory still lies with Israel. Under the law and practice of occupation, the establishment by the occupying Power of a temporary administration over an occupied territory is not an essential requirement for occupation, although it could be one element among others that indicates the existence of such occupation.¹⁶⁴ In fact, as shown in the case of Denmark during the Second World War, the occupier can leave in place an existing local administration or allow a new one to be installed for as long as it preserves for itself the ultimate authority. Although Israel has transferred to the Palestinian Authority a series of functions within designated zones, it has done so by agreement, through the Oslo Accords and related understandings, keeping for itself "powers and responsibilities not so transferred".¹⁶⁵ When Israel unilaterally evacuated troops and settlements from the Gaza Strip, it left in place a Palestinian local administration. There is no local governing body to which full authority has been transferred. In this regard, the Mission recalls that the International Court of Justice, in its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, regards the transfer of powers and responsibilities by Israel under various agreements with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as having "done nothing" to alter the character of Israel as an occupying Power.¹⁶⁶

¹⁶¹ Disengagement Plan – General Outline, Prime Minister's Office, 15 April 2004, para. 2 (i)(3), available at www.pmo.gov.il/PMOEng/Archive/Press+Releases/2004/Disengagement+Plan.

¹⁶² Security Council resolution 1860 (2009) and Human Rights Council resolution S-9/1.

¹⁶³ This Agreement of November 2005 represents the commitments of the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority. Its implementation and further elaboration will be assisted by the Quartet Special Envoy for Disengagement and his staff and/or the United States Security Coordinator and his staff. It is available at http://unispal.un.org/unispal.nsf/b987b5db9bee37bf85256d0a00549525/c9a5aa5245d910bb852570bb0051711c/\$FILE/Rafah%20agreement.pdf.

¹⁶⁴ Prosecutor v. Naletilić, para. 217.

¹⁶⁵ Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, 1995, art. I (1).

¹⁶⁶ Legal Consequences..., paras. 76–78.

280. Although the essential elements of occupation are present in the Gaza Strip, account must be taken of the fact that inside Gaza there is a de facto local administration, which carries out the functions and responsibilities in various areas transferred to the Palestine Authority under the Oslo Accords, to the extent that it is able to do so in the light of the closures and blockade imposed by Israel.

281. The developments that have taken place in the past two decades, in particular through the jurisprudence of international tribunals, have led to the conclusion that the substantive rules applicable to either international or non-international armed conflicts are converging. The Mission nonetheless recognizes that certain differences exist in relation to the regime of enforcement established by treaty law, in particular the regime of “grave breaches” contained in the Geneva Conventions.

282. Military hostilities took place between the Israeli armed forces and the military wing of Hamas (al-Qassam Brigades) and of other Palestinian factions, including the al-Aqsa Martyrs’ Brigades, loosely affiliated with the Fatah movement in control of the Palestine Authority. The Israeli Supreme Court has seen the confrontation between Israeli armed forces and what it calls “terrorist organizations” active in the Occupied Palestinian Territory as an international armed conflict on two grounds: the existing context of the occupation and the cross-border nature of the confrontation.¹⁶⁷ Nonetheless, as the Government of Israel suggests, the classification of the armed conflict in question as international or non-international, may not be too important as “many similar norms and principles govern both types of conflicts”.¹⁶⁸

283. It is common for armed conflicts to present elements of an international as well as of a non-international character. The rules contained in article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions, regarded as customary international law, are the baseline rules applicable to all conflicts.¹⁶⁹ The concern for the protection of civilians and those hors de combat in all kinds of conflicts has led to an increasing convergence in the principles and rules applicable to international and non-international armed conflicts, as was authoritatively held by the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia in the Tadić case. Indeed, “what is inhumane, and consequently proscribed, in international wars, cannot but be inhumane and inadmissible in civil strife.”¹⁷⁰ This relates not only to the protection of civilians but also to both methods and means of warfare.

284. A convergence between human rights protections and humanitarian law protections is also in operation. The rules contained in article 75 of Additional Protocol I, which reflect customary law, define a series of fundamental guarantees and protections, such as the prohibitions against torture, murder and inhuman conditions of detention, recognized also under human rights law.

¹⁶⁷ The Public Committee against Torture in Israel v. The Government of Israel (Targeted Killings case).

¹⁶⁸ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 30.

¹⁶⁹ Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p.14.

¹⁷⁰ Prosecutor v. Tadić, case No. IT-94-1-AR72, Decision on the defence motion for interlocutory appeal on jurisdiction of 2 October 1995, para. 119. See also para. 96 ff.

These protections apply to all persons in the power of a party to the conflict “who do not benefit from more favourable treatment” under the Geneva Conventions and its Protocols.

285. The foregoing customary and conventional humanitarian rules are relevant to the investigation of the events that occurred in connection with the military operations of December 2008 and January 2009.

C. International criminal law

286. International criminal law has become a necessary instrument for the enforcement of IHL and IHRL. Criminal proceedings and sanctions have a deterrent function and offer a measure of justice for the victims of violations. The international community increasingly looks to criminal justice as an effective mechanism of accountability and justice in the face of abuse and impunity. The Mission regards the rules and definitions of international criminal law as crucial to the fulfilment of its mandate to look at all violations of IHL and IHRL by all parties to the conflict.

287. Crimes under international law are defined in treaties and also in customary international law. Violations of fundamental humanitarian rules applicable in all types of conflict entail individual criminal responsibility under customary law.¹⁷¹ They encompass crimes against humanity, war crimes and genocide. Other crimes not necessarily committed as a war crime or crime against humanity are torture and enforced disappearance.

288. The four Geneva Conventions of 1949 establish a regime of enforcement through the definition of grave breaches of some of their provisions relating to protected persons. Grave breaches are premised on the importance of the value under attack and the seriousness of the act or omission that constitutes the breach. Article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention defines grave breaches as:

... those involving any of the following acts, if committed against persons or property protected by the present Convention: wilful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, including biological experiments, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a protected person, compelling a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile Power, or wilfully depriving a protected person of the rights of fair and regular trial prescribed in the present Convention, taking of hostages and extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly.

289. Article 146 requires States parties to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing, or ordering to be committed, any of the listed grave breaches. They are under the obligation “to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts.”

¹⁷¹ Ibid., paras. 128 ff. In paragraph 134, the Appeals Chamber stated: “All of these factors confirm that customary international law imposes criminal liability for serious violations of common article 3, as supplemented by other general principles and rules on the protection of victims of internal armed conflict, and for breaching certain fundamental principles and rules regarding means and methods of combat in civil strife.”

290. These and other crimes are also listed in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, article 8 (2) (a) (“grave breaches”) and 8 (2) (b) (“other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict”).¹⁷²

291. War crimes are serious breaches of international humanitarian law that apply to armed conflicts and entail individual criminal responsibility under treaty or customary law. War crimes can be committed in the context of armed conflicts of an international character as well as those of a non-international character. This category of crimes includes and/or overlaps with the grave breaches as defined in the four Geneva Conventions.

292. War crimes comprise crimes against protected persons (including wilful killing, torture or other inhuman acts, taking hostages, and collective punishments); crimes against property (including extensive destruction of property not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, destroying or seizing property of the enemy, pillaging, and declaring abolished, suspended or inadmissible in a court of law the rights and actions of the nationals of the hostile party); crimes relating to the use of prohibited methods and means of warfare (including directing an attack against civilians or civilian objects, launching an attack directed against legitimate targets if such attack causes excessive incidental civilian casualties or damage to the environment, improper use of the protective emblems, the use of starvation of civilians as a method of warfare, use of human shields and acts of terror). In addition, article 8 (2) (b) (iii) of the Rome Statute defines as a war crime the direct attack against protected personnel, installations, material, units or vehicles involved in a humanitarian assistance or peacekeeping mission.

293. Crimes against humanity are crimes that shock the conscience of humanity. The Statutes of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda provided for the prosecution of crimes against humanity. These crimes comprise murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, torture, rape, persecutions and other inhuman acts when they are part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population.¹⁷³ Although under the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia crimes against humanity must be committed in armed conflict, such a requirement is not part of the customary law definition of the crime.

D. International human rights law

294. Israel has ratified several of the most important international human rights treaties, including the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, ICCPR, ICESCR, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

¹⁷² The possible application of the Rome Statute to the conflict in Gaza is still being discussed. The validity under its article 12 (3) of the Palestinian declaration accepting the International Criminal Court’s jurisdiction is being evaluated by the Office of the Tribunal’s Prosecutor.

¹⁷³ See International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Prosecutor v. Kunarac, case No. IT-96-23, Judgement of 12 June 2002, para. 85.

295. It is now widely accepted that human rights treaties continue to apply in situations of armed conflict. In its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the International Court of Justice considered that “the protection offered by human rights conventions does not cease in case of armed conflict, save through the effect of provisions for derogation....”¹⁷⁴

296. In its Advisory Opinion on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, the International Court of Justice held that, in the context of armed conflict, IHL is lex specialis in relation to human rights. It is today commonly understood that human rights law would continue to apply as long as it is not modified or set aside by IHL. In any case, the general rule of human rights law does not lose its effectiveness and will remain in the background to inform the application and interpretation of the relevant humanitarian law rule. For instance, the preamble to Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions recalls the protection of international human rights for the human person, supporting the view that IHL and IHRL are operative in situations of conflict.

297. The human rights treaties ratified by Israel are also binding in relation to Israeli conduct in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Article 2 of ICCPR obliges each State party to respect and to ensure to all individuals “within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction” the rights recognized within it. In the words of the Human Rights Committee, “a State party must respect and ensure the rights laid down in the Covenant to anyone within the power or effective control of that State party, even if not situated within the territory of the State party”.¹⁷⁵

298. The International Court of Justice has also held that ICCPR applies “in respect of acts done by a State in the exercise of its jurisdiction outside its own territory”.¹⁷⁶ Accordingly, the Human Rights Committee has considered that ICCPR also applies to the benefit of people within the Occupied Palestinian Territory.¹⁷⁷ The Committees established to monitor compliance with the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by their States parties have equally determined that Israel’s human rights obligations extend to the population of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.¹⁷⁸

299. The Mission also notes that Israel has not derogated from its obligations under article 4 of ICCPR. Israel’s declaration made upon ratification of the Covenant only concerns derogations to article 9 of ICCPR, regarding deprivation of liberty. The state of emergency in Israel has been in force ever since it was proclaimed in 1948. ICESCR does not explicitly allow for derogations in time of public emergency or war.

¹⁷⁴ Legal Consequences..., para. 106; see also Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion of 8 July 1996, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 226, para. 25.

¹⁷⁵ General comment No. 31 (2004), para. 10.

¹⁷⁶ Legal Consequences..., para. 111; see also Case concerning Armed Activities..., para. 216.

¹⁷⁷ “Concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee” (CCPR/CO/78/ISR).

¹⁷⁸ See, for instance, “Concluding observations of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights” (E/C.12/1/Add.90).

300. Contemporary interpretation of the Hague Regulations has taken a progressive view on the scope of their application. The International Court of Justice, when concluding that Uganda was the occupying Power in the Ituri region in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, also held that Uganda's obligation to "restore, and ensure, as far as possible, public order and safety" included "the duty to secure respect for the applicable rules of international human rights law and international humanitarian law".¹⁷⁹

301. In relation to the application of human rights law during the military operations and to the connected events, the Mission wishes to briefly address four issues of legal significance.

302. The first is the impact of the inauguration in 1995 of limited Palestinian self-government and the evacuation of the Gaza Strip by Israel in 2005 on Israel's international obligations. United Nations human rights treaty bodies have continued to hold Israel responsible for implementing its human rights treaty obligations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory after the establishment of Palestinian self-government bodies.¹⁸⁰ Those bodies have not drawn any distinction between Gaza and the West Bank in this regard, the Occupied Palestinian Territory being regarded as a single unit. In its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the International Court of Justice succinctly addressed the question by noting that, under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Israel is "under an obligation not to raise any obstacle to the exercise of such rights in those fields where competence has been transferred to Palestinian authorities".¹⁸¹ In a recent report about Gaza, nine special procedures of the Human Rights Council considered that the unilateral disengagement from the Gaza Strip does not relieve Israel "from complying with its human rights obligations towards the population of that territory; Israel remains bound to the extent that the measures it adopts affect the enjoyment of human rights of the residents of the Gaza Strip."¹⁸²

303. Israel most recently argued before the Committee against Torture that it no longer had human rights obligations under the Convention with regard to Gaza due to the effect of the 2005 "disengagement". In rejecting the argument, the Committee stated "the State party maintains control and jurisdiction in many aspects on the occupied Palestinian territories."¹⁸³ The Mission agrees that transferring powers and functions to self-governing bodies does not exempt Israel from its obligations to guarantee human rights to people within its jurisdiction or under its effective control. Israel would also have a duty to refrain from actions that obstruct efforts by Palestinian self-governing bodies to guarantee the enjoyment of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and should facilitate that action.

304. A second issue relates to the human rights obligations of the Palestinian Authority, the de facto authority in the Gaza Strip and other political and military actors. As non-State actors, the ¹⁷⁹ Case concerning Armed Activities..., para. 178.

¹⁸⁰ For instance, in its 2003 concluding observations, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights reiterated "its regret at the State party's refusal to report on the occupied territories" (E/C.12/1/Add.90, para. 15).

¹⁸¹ Legal Consequences..., para. 112.

¹⁸² A/HRC/10/22, para. 20.

¹⁸³ "Concluding observations of the Committee against Torture" (CAT/C/ISR/CO/4, para. 11).

question of their human rights obligations must be addressed. It should be noted that the same issue does not arise with regard to IHL obligations, the question being settled some time ago. As the Special Court for Sierra Leone held, “it is well settled that all parties to an armed conflict, whether States or non-State actors, are bound by international humanitarian law, even though only States may become parties to international treaties.”¹⁸⁴

305. The relationship between IHL and IHRL is rapidly evolving, in particular in relation to non-State actors’ obligations, with the ultimate goal of enhancing the protection of people and to enable them to enjoy their human rights in all circumstances. In the context of the matter within the Mission’s mandate, it is clear that non-State actors that exercise government-like functions over a territory have a duty to respect human rights.

306. The Mission notes that the Palestinian Authority, through its public undertakings as well as those of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the Palestinian Legislative Council, has declared its commitment to respect international human rights law in several instances, including in the context of international agreements. This commitment is also contained in the Palestinian Basic Law.¹⁸⁵

307. The obligations of the Gaza authorities may be viewed through a different lens but leading to the same result. The Gaza authorities also reiterated to the Mission their commitments to respect human rights. Hamas has also made a series of unilateral declarations of respect for human rights. Furthermore, the Palestinian Basic Law with its many human rights provisions also applies in the Gaza Strip.¹⁸⁶

308. A third issue to be addressed here relates to the right to self-determination and its application to the definition of combatant status and its impact on the principle of distinction. Armed conflicts opposing national liberation movements and/or resistance movements against colonialism and occupation are regarded as international armed conflicts by Additional Protocol I, article 1 (4). Under international law, notably Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions, any action of resistance pursuant to the right to self-determination should be exercised with full respect of other human rights and IHL.

¹⁸⁴ See for instance, Prosecutor v. Sam Hinga Norman, case SCSL-2004-14-AR72(E), Decision on preliminary motion based on lack of jurisdiction (child recruitment) (31 May 2004), para. 22.

¹⁸⁵ Legal Consequences..., para. 91; A/HRC/10/22, para. 21; Barcelona Declaration, 27-28 November 1995, available at: <http://www.euromedrights.net/281>. The Palestinian Basic Law can be found at <http://www.palestinianbasiclaw.org/2002-basic-law>. See also “Report of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation on Human Rights Council resolution 7/1” (A/HRC/8/17, para. 8).

¹⁸⁶ Meeting and correspondence with the Mission. In this respect nine special procedures mandate holders have stated: “non-State actors that exercise government-like functions and control over a territory are obliged to respect human rights norms when their conduct affects the human rights of the individuals under their control” (A/HRC/10/22, para. 21). This view follows the statement in the same line by four other special procedures mandate holders who visited Lebanon in the aftermath of the 2006 war: “Although Hezbollah, a non-State actor, cannot become a party to these human rights treaties, it remains subject to the demand of the international community, first expressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that every organ of society respect and promote human rights ... It is especially appropriate and feasible to call for an armed group to respect human rights norms when it exercises significant control over territory and population and has an identifiable political structure.” (A/HRC/2/7, para. 19). See also A/HRC/10/22, para. 9.

309. Finally, it is also useful to briefly recall that States not party to an armed conflict have responsibilities and a crucial role to play for the protection of civilians and those hors de combat and for the protection of their rights. Under article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions 1949, the “High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances.” This provision entails obligations not only in relation to actors and conduct within the jurisdiction of each State but also in relation to the international enforcement of the Conventions. States parties to the Geneva Conventions also have the obligation to facilitate the passage of humanitarian relief and a role to play in the provision of such assistance for the protected population in case of need (articles 23 and 59 of the Fourth Geneva Convention).

310. To conclude, the Mission wishes to emphasize that all parties to an armed conflict have the obligation to respect the enjoyment of human rights by all.

PART TWO: OCCUPIED PALESTINIAN TERRITORY

THE GAZA STRIP

SECTION A: MILITARY OPERATIONS

V. THE BLOCKADE: INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW

311. The military operations of 28 December to 19 January 2009 and their impact cannot be fully evaluated without taking account of the context and the prevailing living conditions at the time they began. In material respects, the military hostilities were a culmination of the long process of economic and political isolation imposed on the Gaza Strip by Israel, which is generally described as a blockade. This chapter provides an overview of the blockade, while chapter XVII provides a detailed analysis of the cumulative impact of the blockade and the military operations on the people in Gaza and their human rights.

312. The series of economic and political measures imposed against the Gaza Strip began around February 2006 with the Hamas electoral victory in the legislative elections. This was also accompanied by the withholding of financial support for the Gaza Strip by some donor countries and actions of other countries that amounted to open or tacit support of the Israeli blockade. Hamas took over effective power in the Gaza Strip on 15 June 2007. Shortly thereafter Israel declared the Gaza Strip a “hostile territory,”¹⁸⁷ enacting a series of economic, social and military measures purportedly designed to isolate and strangle Hamas. These have made a deep impact on the population’s living standards.

313. The blockade comprises measures such as the closure of border crossings, sometimes completely for a number of days, for people, goods and services, and for the provision of fuel and electricity. The closure has had severe effects on trade and general business activity, agriculture and industry in the Gaza Strip. Electricity and fuel that are provided from Israel are essential for a broad range of activities from business to education, health services, industry and agriculture. Further limits to the fishing area in the sea adjacent to the Gaza Strip were fixed and enforced by Israel, negatively impacting on fishing activities and the livelihood of the fishing community. Israel also established a buffer zone of variable and uncertain width along the border, together with a sizeable no-go area in the northern part of the Gaza Strip where some Israeli settlements used to be situated. This no-go area is in practice an enlarged buffer zone in the northern part of the Gaza Strip where people cannot go. The creation of the buffer zone has forced the relocation of a number of factories from this area closer to Gaza City, causing serious environmental concerns and potential health hazards for the population. People’s movements have also been drastically restricted, with only a few businesspeople allowed to cross on a very irregular and unpredictable basis.

314. Because of the occupation, which created so many ties of dependence, and for other geographic, political and historical reasons, the availability of goods and services as well as the carrying-on of daily life in the Gaza Strip are highly dependent on Israel and its policies regarding the area. Food and other consumable items as well as fuel, electricity, construction materials and other items are traded from or through Israel. Israel also serves as the communication channel for the population of Gaza with the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the world, including for purposes of education and exchange programmes. There are five crossing points between Israel and the Gaza Strip: Erez (basically dedicated to the transit of people), Nahal Oz (for fuel), Karni (for grains), Kerem Shalom (for goods) and Sufa (for goods). Israeli control of these crossings has always been restrictive for the Gaza population. Since the beginning of the blockade, and particularly during and after the military operation, not only has the measure of restriction increased, but control has been exercised arbitrarily, resulting in uncertainty of access even for those items purportedly allowed entry by Israel.

¹⁸⁷ <http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2007/Security+Cabinet+declares+Gaza+hostile+territory+19-Sep-2007.htm>.

315. Movement of people through the Erez crossing to Israel and the Rafah crossing to Egypt has been almost completely blocked. Exceptions include unpredictable and irregular permission for emergency medical evacuations, access to diplomats and international humanitarian staff and only limited access to some businesspeople.

316. The movement of goods has been restricted to imports of basic humanitarian supplies through the Kerem Shalom crossing point as well as to a limited quantity of fuel. The quantities of goods allowed into the Gaza Strip have not only been insufficient to meet local demands, they also exclude several items essential for the manufacturing of goods and the processing of food products, as well as many other goods that are needed. This is compounded by the unpredictable way in which crossings are managed. Neither the list of items allowed into the Gaza Strip nor the criteria for their selection are made known to the public.

317. Before the military operation, the blockade had resulted in a significant reduction in the number of trucks allowed through the crossings. The number of trucks is considered a fair measure of the amount of imports into or exports from the Gaza Strip. This number increased slightly during the period of calm between June and November 2008, but declined sharply again in November, due to the resumption of hostilities following the Israeli military incursion. The daily average of truckloads crossing the border in November–December 2008 was between 23 and 30, but it increased after the start of military hostilities to up to five times that number during January 2009.¹⁸⁸ However, at no time was it close to what it had been prior to June 2007 or to the amount actually necessary to meet the needs of the population.

318. The 2005 Agreement of Movement and Access called for a daily flow of some 400 trucks in and out of Gaza by the end of 2006, which was already lower than before the second intifada, but not even that level was ever reached.¹⁸⁹ Information supplied to the Mission reveals that imports into and exports from the Gaza Strip before the closure in 2007 reached a monthly average of 10,400 and 1,380 truckloads, respectively. This declined to about 2,834 truckloads of imports and no exports after the recent military operations. Immediately after the operations, there was only one isolated instance in which exports of flowers were allowed from the Gaza

¹⁸⁸ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 33 (January 2009).

¹⁸⁹ International Labour Office, “The situation of workers in the occupied Arab territories”, Report of the Director-General to the International Labour Conference, 98th session, 2009, appendix, para. 24.

Strip in March 2009. Some 134 truckloads of cash crops were exported in total between June 2007 and May 2009.¹⁹⁰

319. In effect, economic activity in the Gaza Strip was severely affected because of the blockade. Since the military operation, the economy has almost come to a standstill. The private sector, particularly the manufacturing industry, has suffered irreparable damage.

320. The blockade and freeze on the movement of goods imposed by Israel have spurred a black market economy in the Gaza Strip that provides basic consumables but is unreliable and unaffordable for the majority of the people. The tunnels built under the Gaza-Egypt border have become a lifeline for the Gaza economy and the people. Increasing amounts of fuel (benzine and diesel) come through those tunnels as well as consumables. While for the Gaza population this is a necessary means of survival in the circumstances, the black market is likely to hold back economic recovery and sustainability, even when the blockade is lifted.

321. The blockade has also included measures relating to access to the sea and airspace. Under the Oslo Accords, the fishing zone limit was set at 20 nautical miles. However, Israel set the limit unilaterally at 6 nautical miles and maintained this limit from October 2006 to January 2009, when it further restricted it to 3 nautical miles. The only airfield in Gaza has been closed and a project to rebuild the small airport was suspended after the seizure of power by Hamas. Israel keeps total control over Gaza's airspace.

322. In mid-December 2008, following an Israeli military incursion into the Gaza Strip and rockets fired into Israel by Hamas, all the crossings were totally closed for eight days.¹⁹¹ Other military or militant activities in areas near the crossings have also led to total closures over certain periods of time. Total and partial closures have significantly contributed to an emergency situation that became a full-fledged humanitarian crisis after the military operations of December 2008–January 2009. During December 2008, UNRWA had to suspend its delivery of food assistance due to the total depletion of its food stocks. Other humanitarian agencies had to reduce or postpone delivery of food and other forms of assistance. The unavailability of banknotes as a result of an Israeli prohibition also prevented humanitarian agencies from implementing “cash for work” or similar programmes over lengthy periods of time.¹⁹²

323. The implementation of the restrictive measures as part of the blockade of the Gaza Strip created not only an emergency situation but also significantly weakened the capacities of the health, water and emergency sectors in Gaza to adequately respond to a worsening situation.¹⁹³ The impact on the local economy further reduced the resilience and coping capacities of the local population and has aggravated the effects of the war on livelihoods and living standards (see below, chap. XVII).

¹⁹⁰ Information submitted by PalTrade, “Gaza private sector status”, 18 June 2009. The Mission also acknowledges the information provided by the Palestinian Authority in its reply to questions from the Mission, 5 August 2009.

¹⁹¹ The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 32.

¹⁹² The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 32, p. 5.

¹⁹³ This impact was noted and analysed in “Report of the high-level fact-finding mission to Beit Hanoun established under Council resolution S-3/1” (A/HRC/9/26, paras. 55 ff).

324. The Mission asked the Government of Israel to provide information in relation to the blockade on the Gaza Strip. It requested information on the criteria applied to determine which goods are or are not allowed to enter the Gaza Strip, the reasons for restricting or preventing cash and bank transfers, the reasons for imposing restrictions on the ability of Gazans to leave the Gaza Strip, including for urgent medical reasons, the reasons for the highly restrictive policy permit applied to international donors, humanitarian and human rights organizations wishing to enter the Gaza Strip, and the reasons and legal basis for establishing a limited fishing zone. No reply was received on any of these questions.

325. The legality of some of the measures imposed by the Government of Israel (the reduction in the supply of electricity and fuel) was the subject of a petition to the Supreme Court of Israel.¹⁹⁴ The petitioners comprised a group of NGOs operating within Israel together with Palestinian citizens and groups who argued that the planned cuts in the supply of fuel and electricity were inconsistent with the obligations of Israel under the Fourth Geneva Convention relating to the protection of civilians.¹⁹⁵ The Court's ruling recognizes that Israel has obligations under humanitarian law vis-à-vis the Gaza Strip under which the intended supply of fuel and electricity was considered "capable of satisfying the essential humanitarian needs of the Gaza Strip at the present". The Court, however, did not indicate what would constitute "essential humanitarian needs" and appears to have left those details for the authorities to determine.

326. The Mission holds the view that Israel continues to be duty-bound under the Fourth Geneva Convention and to the full extent of the means available to it to ensure the supply of foodstuff, medical and hospital items and others to meet the humanitarian needs of the population of the Gaza Strip without qualification. Furthermore, the Mission notes the information it received regarding the lack of compliance by the Government of Israel even with the minimum levels set by the Israeli Court, and in this regard observes that the Government retains wide discretion about the timing and manner of delivering fuel and electricity supplies to the Gaza Strip, and that this discretion appears to have been exercised capriciously and arbitrarily.

VI. OVERVIEW OF MILITARY OPERATIONS CONDUCTED BY ISRAEL IN GAZA BETWEEN 27 DECEMBER 2008 AND 18 JANUARY 2009 AND DATA ON CASUALTIES

327. This chapter provides an overview for the purposes of identifying the key parties in the conduct of the military operations and their dynamics, and to indicate which incidents occurred during those phases which are the subject of detailed analysis in this report. The focus is on the Israeli military operations in Gaza.

¹⁹⁴ Jaber Al-Bassiouni Ahmed et al. v. Prime Minister and Minister of Defense, case No. 9132/07, Judgement of 30 January 2008, available at http://elyon1.court.gov.il/Files_ENG/07/320/091/n25/07091320.n25.pdf.

¹⁹⁵ Petition to stop electricity and fuel cuts to the Gaza Strip, 28 November 2007. The petition, related affidavits, excerpts from the State's answers and excerpts from the Court's decision are all available at: <http://www.gisha.org/index.php?intLanguage=2&intSiteSN=110&intItemId=742>.

A. The parties relevant to the conduct of military activities in Gaza between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009

1. The Israeli armed forces

328. The information available shows that Israel deployed its navy, air force and army in the operation it codenamed “Operation Cast Lead”.

329. The navy was used in part to shell the Gaza coast during the military operations.

330. The air force was also used throughout the military operations in a way that appears in its own view to have been innovative. Having been responsible for the vast majority of operational activities in the first week, it continued to play an important role in assisting and covering the ground forces from 3 January to 18 January 2009.¹⁹⁶

331. The army was responsible for the ground invasion, which began on 3 January 2009. The available information indicates that the Golani, Givati and Paratrooper Brigades and five Armoured Corps Brigades were involved. Assaults on three fronts with combined armour and infantry brigades were also augmented by specialist Arabic-language, intelligence and, in particular, combat engineer troops. The engineer troops equipped with armoured D-9 bulldozers were also trained in operations to counter improvised explosive devices (IEDs). Forward elements of these attack formations could rely on direct support from the air force to call air strikes or to direct them, to call in helicopter missile attacks and to direct their own attached missile-mounted UAVs.¹⁹⁷

2. Palestinian armed groups

332. The Palestinian armed factions operating in the Gaza Strip, and claiming responsibility for the majority of the rocket and mortar launchings, are the Hamas’ Izz ad-Din al-Qassam Brigades,¹⁹⁸ the al-Aqsa Martyrs’ Brigades, the Islamic Jihad, the Abu Ali Mustafa Brigades,¹⁹⁹ which are the military wing of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), and al-Naser Salah ad-Din Brigades, which are the military wing of the Popular Resistance Committees (PRC).²⁰⁰ PRC is a coalition of different armed factions that oppose what they perceive as the Palestinian Authority’s and Fatah’s conciliatory approach towards Israel.

¹⁹⁶ See Anthony H. Cordesman, “The ‘Gaza war’: A strategic analysis”, Centre for Strategic and International Studies (2009), p. 41.

¹⁹⁷ Alon Ben-David, “Israeli offensive seeks ‘new security reality’ in Gaza”, Jane's Defence Weekly, 8 January 2009; Jane's 'Sentinel' Services, “Country Risk Assessments – Israel”, 4 February 2009.

¹⁹⁸ Named after a Syrian who worked with displaced Palestinians in what is now northern Israel, and died in a clash with British troops in 1935, sparking the 1936–39 Palestinian revolt.

¹⁹⁹ The Abu Ali Mustafa Brigades claimed responsibility for launching 177 rockets and 115 mortars on several towns and villages inside Israel during the period of the military operations in Gaza.

See <http://www.kataebabuali.ps/inf2/articles-action-show-id-223.htm>.

²⁰⁰ During the period of the military operations in Gaza, al-Naser Salah ad-Din Brigades claimed responsibility for the launching of 132 rockets and 88 mortars. See <http://www.moqawmh.com/moqa/view.php?view=1&id=300>.

B. The phases of the hostilities

1. Air phase²⁰¹

333. The Israeli armed forces began the military operations with a week-long air attack, from 27 December until 3 January 2009. One study suggests that they had drawn up a list of 603 targets to be hit as they belonged to Hamas suspects or were part of what Israel viewed as the Hamas infrastructure. The study claims that a senior Israeli officer reported that all 603 targets had been hit before the end of the fourth day of the aerial operations in the first week. Officially, the spokesman of the Israeli forces claimed that 526 targets had been hit by 31 December 2008.²⁰²

334. An analysis of the strikes in a report of the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights gives the following breakdown.

335. “IOF [Israeli occupation forces] have launched at least 300 air and sea strikes against the Gaza Strip. These strikes have targeted 37 houses; 67 security and training sites; 20 workshops; 25 public and private institutions; seven mosques; and three educational institutions. The public institutions that have been bombarded are: the compound of ministries, the building of the Palestinian Legislative Council, the building of the cabinet in Gaza City; the buildings of the agricultural control department and the Municipality of Bani Suhaila in Khan Yunis; the buildings of Rafah Municipality and Governorate. The air strikes have targeted also four money exchange shops, a clinic, three fishing harbours, the Islamic University and two schools.”²⁰³

336. Of the incidents addressed in detail in this report, the following occurred during this phase:

- The attack on Arafat City Police Station;
- Attacks on four other police stations, one in Deir al-Balah and three in Gaza City;
- The attack on the Palestinian Legislative Council building and the Ministry of Justice;
- The attack on Gaza main prison in the al-Sarayah complex, Gaza City.

337. Israeli air force activities continued throughout the military operations. In total, it has been suggested that between 2,300 and 3,000 sorties were flown.²⁰⁴

²⁰¹ Although principally recognized as an aerial phase, there was a significant contribution from the Israeli navy not only in the first week.

²⁰² Cordesman, op. cit., p. 30.

²⁰³ PCHR, “Weekly report on Israeli human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, No. 51/2008 (24–31 December 2008), available at: http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/W_report/English/2008/pdf/weekly%20report%2051.pdf.

²⁰⁴ Cordesman, op. cit., p. 41. He cites Lt. Gen. Ashkenazi saying that the air force flew 2,300 successful air strikes but notes other senior officials told him the real number was closer to 3,000.

2. The air-land phase

338. Around 3 January 2009 Israeli ground troops entered Gaza from the north and east. One study suggests that “the war was fought largely by the southern Command using brigade teams that operated with a high degree of independence and freedom to adapt and innovate”.²⁰⁵

339. One of the key initial objectives described by one soldier involved was to divide the Gaza Strip into two parts, i.e. to split and fragment it, with Nitzarim constituting the midpoint.²⁰⁶ The division therefore ran from the Karni crossing point to the coast in a south-westerly direction. After creating the split, the Israeli armed forces concentrated all of their ground forces in the north. Targets in the south were hit from the air, such as in Rafah.

340. At least in the initial phase it appears forces from the Givati Brigade entered from the east and approached Gaza City from the south. It is understood that forces from the Armoured

341. Corps Brigade also operated in this area but probably at a later stage.²⁰⁷ Zeytoun, on the southern outskirts of Gaza, took the brunt of these brigade operations, with incidents of attacks on the civilian population.

342. It appears that those with primary responsibility in the north of Gaza, especially around Beit Lahia and al-Atatra, included forces from the Golani Brigade.

343. The forces focusing on the area between Gaza City and the northern section, especially in Jabaliyah, appear to have been drawn largely from the Paratrooper Brigade.

344. The movement into the south of Gaza City reached at least as far as Zeytoun on 3 January 2009. Some of the troops entering there on that day appear to have been brought in by helicopter rather than arriving by land. Israeli armed forces maintained a presence in Zeytoun until the final withdrawal.²⁰⁸ It is understood that the original forces that entered Zeytoun were at least partially replaced by other troops at some point, but it is not known if any of the original forces remained in the area throughout the period.²⁰⁹

345. In the other brigade areas regular troops were augmented or replaced by reservists who were called up after the initial ground attacks.

²⁰⁵ Ibid., p. 39.

²⁰⁶ Breaking the Silence, Soldiers' Testimonies from Operation Cast Lead, Gaza 2009, testimony 20, p. 48, available at: http://www.breakingthesilence.org.il/oferet/ENGLISH_oferet.pdf.

²⁰⁷ Soldiers' Testimonies ..., testimony 2, p. 9.

²⁰⁸ See accounts of the attack on the Sawafeary chicken farm attack in chapter XIII and the taking of the Juha house in Zaytoun in chapter IX.

²⁰⁹ Soldiers' Testimonies ..., testimony 2, p. 9.

346. Zeytoun was an area of particularly intense action by Israeli forces, yet there are almost no indications of armed resistance in the area at the time.²¹⁰

347. Among the issues of particular concern to the Mission in Zeytoun are the killings of the Samouni family, the mass destruction in the area, including the systematic demolition of the Sawafeary chicken farms, and the air strike that killed 22 members of the al-Daya family.

348. The forces in Zeytoun also appear to have been responsible for the push towards the area around Tal el-Hawa and Rimal in the south-west of Gaza City, about three kilometres from Zeytoun. The Mission has information that indicates that tanks took up positions in and around Tal el-Hawa around 4 and 5 January. Sources indicate that there was a presence there throughout the hostilities, as also evidenced by the artillery fire from around this area on 14 and 15 January on the compound of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and al-Quds hospital, both of which the Mission addresses in detail.

349. The forces responsible for the execution of the Israeli plan in the north-east of the Gaza Strip included the Golani Brigade. Among the areas of special concern in this regard are al-Atatra and Beit Lahia. Various witnesses indicate that in the past there has at times been some armed presence in the area. Information taken from websites apparently belonging to Palestinian armed groups indicates that these were areas of some resistance. The Mission heard from several witnesses about the scale of the destruction that occurred there as a result of artillery fire after the ground phase began on 3 January. Information indicates a sustained attack with aerial and artillery fire from 3 to 8 January. The Mission addresses a number of particular cases that occurred in this context, such as the alleged use of human shields, the alleged widespread mistreatment of civilians, including detentions, and transfers of large numbers to Israeli prisons in unlawful circumstances.

350. In the Jabaliyah area, located between Beit Lahia and Gaza City, the Mission understands that at least for part of the time there was a significant presence of the Paratrooper Brigade.²¹¹ At the beginning of the ground phase it is noted that an Israeli projectile struck the al-Maqadmah mosque, killing at least 15 civilians. A few days later the al-Fakhura Street incident occurred in the same area when a series of mortars fired by the Israeli armed forces killed at least 35 people.

351. Around 15 January the Israeli armed forces began withdrawing from their positions in the main areas described above. As they did so, there appeared to be a practice of systematically demolishing a large number of structures, including houses, water installations, such as tanks on the roofs of houses, and of agricultural land. A renewed aerial phase in Rafah was also conducted in the last few days of the military operations. Whereas the strikes in the first week appear to have been relatively selective, the last few days saw an increase in the number of strikes with several hundred targets hit, causing not only very substantial damage to buildings but also, according to some, underground structural damage.²¹²

²¹⁰ See Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs, “The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties in operation ‘cast lead’: Hamas fire on Palestinian areas”, by Lt. Col. (res.) Jonathan Dahoah Halevi.

²¹¹ See, for example, Haaretz, “IDF investigation shows errant mortar hit UN building in Gaza”, 11 January 2009, available at: <http://www.haaretz.com/hasen/spages/1054284.html>.

C. Data on casualties during the Israeli military operations in Gaza from 28 December 2008 to 17 January 2009

1. Palestinian casualties

352. The Mission received statistics on the fatalities of the military operations from the Gaza authorities, specifically from the Central Commission for Documentation and Pursuit of Israeli War Criminals (TAWTHEQ),²¹³ as well as from PCHR,²¹⁴ Al Mezan²¹⁵ and B'Tselem.²¹⁶ The first three also provided lists of all the persons killed in the military operations, with their names, sex, age, address, occupation, and place and date of the fatal attack. Another NGO, Defence for Children International – Palestine Section,²¹⁷ provided a list of all the children killed.

353. The three lists give different numbers. According to TAWTHEQ, 1,444 persons were killed. The two Palestinian NGOs provide a lower number, 1,417 victims according to PCHR and 1,409 according to Al Mezan, while B'Tselem mentions 1,387 victims. The Mission has not cross-checked the three lists. TAWTHEQ, PCHR, Al Mezan and B'Tselem also provide disaggregated data.

354. TAWTHEQ reports that 341 of those killed were children (under 18), 248 members of the police, 11 members of the Internal Security Service and 5 members of the National Security Service. It provides no figures for the number of combatants killed.

355. PCHR divides the overall 1,417 victims into 926 civilians, 255 police²¹⁸ and 236 combatants.²¹⁹ It reports that 313 of the dead were children and 116 women.

356. Al Mezan reports that overall 1,409 persons were killed during the military operations, of whom 237 were combatants (including 13 under-age combatants) and 1,172 non-combatants, including 342 children, 111 women and 136 members of the police.²²⁰ Thus, according to PCHR

²¹² UNOSAT Report.

²¹³ These lists were prepared by the Gaza authorities' Ministry of Justice, TAWTHEQ, The Central Commission for Documentation and Pursuit of Israeli War Criminals and submitted to the Mission.

²¹⁴ The list is available at: <http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/PressR/English/2008/list.pdf>.

²¹⁵ Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, "Cast lead offensive in numbers", available at: <http://www.mezan.org/upload/8941.pdf>. In September 2009 Al Mezan published an updated list of victims with 1,412 names.

²¹⁶ B'Tselem, "B'Tselem publishes complete fatality figures from operation cast lead", press release, 9 September 2009, available at: http://www.btselem.org/English/Press_Releases/20090909.asp.

²¹⁷ The list is available at <http://www.dci-pal.org/english/display.cfm?DocId=917&CategoryId=1>.

²¹⁸ In the PCHR list of victims the police officers are classified as civilians.

²¹⁹ PCHR, "Confirmed figures reveal the true extent of the destruction inflicted upon the Gaza Strip; Israel's offensive resulted in 1,417 dead, including 926 civilians, 255 police officers, and 236 fighters", press release, 12 March 2009, available at: <http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/PressR/English/2008/36-2009.html>

²²⁰ "Cast lead offensive in numbers...", p. 7.

and Al Mezan, fewer than 17 per cent of the Palestinians killed during the military operations were combatants.

357. B'Tselem states that, of the 1,387 Palestinians who were killed, 773 did not take part in the hostilities, including 320 minors and 109 women over the age of 18. Of those killed, 330 took part in the hostilities and 248 were Palestinian police officers, most of whom were killed in aerial bombings of police stations on the first day of the operations. For 36 people B'Tselem could not determine whether they had participated in the hostilities or not.

358. According to Defence for Children International, 348 children were killed during the military operations.²²¹

359. The Israeli armed forces claim that 1,166 Palestinians were killed during the military operations “according to the data gathered by the Research Department of the Israel Defense Intelligence”. They allege that “709 of them are identified as Hamas terror operatives”, 295 are “uninvolved Palestinians”, while the remaining 162 are “men that have not yet been attributed to any organization”.²²² Of the 295 “uninvolved Palestinians”, 89 were children under the age of 16 and 49 women. According to these figures, at least 60 per cent, and possibly as many as three out of four, of those killed were combatants. The Mission notes, however, that the Israeli Government has not published a list of victims or other data supporting its assertions, nor has it, to the Mission’s knowledge, explained the divergence between its statistics and those published by three Palestinian sources, except insofar as the classification of policemen as combatants is concerned.²²³

360. The Mission, not having investigated all incidents involving loss of life in the Gaza Strip, will not make findings regarding the overall number of persons killed nor regarding the percentage of civilians among those killed. The incidents it did investigate, and on which it will make findings based on the information it gathered, involve the death of more than 220 persons, at least 47 of them children and 19 adult women.

361. The Mission notes that the statistics from non-governmental sources are generally consistent. Statistics alleging that fewer than one out of five persons killed in an armed conflict was a combatant, such as those provided by PCHR and Al Mezan as a result of months of field research,²²⁴ raise very serious concerns about the way Israel conducted the military operations in Gaza. The counterclaims published by the Government of Israel fall far short of international law standards.

²²¹ Defence for Children International confirmed the deaths of another five children caused indirectly by the military operations.

²²² IDF spokesperson, “Majority of Palestinians killed in operation cast lead: Terror operatives”, 26 March 2009, available at <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/News/today/09/03/2602.htm>; see also The Jerusalem Post, “IDF releases cast lead casualty number”, 26 March 2009.

²²³ On the question of whether Gaza policemen were civilians or combatants, see chap. VII.

²²⁴ The Mission notes that the figures from B'Tselem, which distinguish between casualties who took part in the hostilities and those who did not, lead to similar results. If the policemen were added to those who did not take part in hostilities (as Al Mezan and PCHR do in adding the policemen to the civilians killed), the B'Tselem statistics would indicate that approximately one in four Palestinians killed was taking part in hostilities.

362. The Mission also notes that – as the Government of Israel argues at length²²⁵ – there are circumstances under international humanitarian law in which military actions resulting in the loss of civilian life would not be unlawful. These include attacks directed against military objectives that comply with the principles of discrimination and proportionality, but nonetheless kill civilians. They also include the killing of persons who, though not members of an armed group, participate directly in the hostilities. The reportedly exceedingly high percentage of civilians among those killed raises concerns about the precautions taken by Israel in launching attacks as well as the legality of many of the attacks, as elaborated further in this report with regard to the specific incidents investigated by the Mission.

363. The Mission finally notes that it cannot entirely discount the possibility that Palestinian civilians may have been killed as a result of fire by Palestinian armed groups in encounters with the Israeli armed forces, as argued in a submission to the Mission,²²⁶ although it has not encountered any information suggesting that this was the case.²²⁷

2. Israeli casualties

364. The Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs reported that, during the military operations from 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009, there were four Israeli casualties²²⁸ in southern Israel (all adults), of whom three were civilians and one was a soldier.²²⁹ In addition, nine Israeli soldiers were killed during the fighting inside the Gaza Strip, four of whom by friendly fire.²³⁰ B'Tselem²³¹ confirmed these numbers, stating that during the operations Palestinians killed nine Israelis, of whom three civilians, who were reportedly killed by Qassam and Grad rocket fire, and six members of the security forces, while another four soldiers were killed by friendly fire.²³²

²²⁵ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 89–141.

²²⁶ “The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties...”. This submission is examined in chapter VIII below.

²²⁷ The Mission has, however, investigated cases of alleged extrajudicial executions of Palestinians by Palestinian armed groups during the military operations (see chap. XIX).

²²⁸ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Terrorism+Obstacle+to+Peace/Hamas+war+against+Israel/Israel_strikes_back_against_Hamas_terror_infrastructure_Gaza_27-Dec-2008.htm.

²²⁹ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Terrorism+Obstacle+to+Peace/Hamas+war+against+Israel/Victims_Hamas_rocket_fire_Hamas_ends_calm_Dec-2008.htm.

²³⁰ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Terrorism+Obstacle+to+Peace/Hamas+war+against+Israel/IDF_soldiers_killed_Operation_Cast_Lead.htm.

²³¹ B'Tselem, “B'Tselem’s investigation of fatalities in Operation Cast Lead”, p. 2, available at: http://www.btselem.org/Download/20090909_Cast_Lead_Fatalities_Eng.pdf.

²³² Al-Qassam Brigades’ website reports that, during the conflict, they killed 102 Israeli soldiers (“The outcome of al-Qassam operations during the Battle of al-Furqan” (in Arabic), available at: http://www.alqassam.ps/arabic/special_files/al-furqan/30.pdf). On 19 January 2009, Abu Obeida, a spokesperson for the group, stated that “Israel lost ‘at least 80 soldiers’ in the fighting”. See al-Arabiya News Channel, “ Hamas says only 48 fighters slain in Israel war”, 19 January 2009, available at: <http://www.alarabiya.net/articles/2009/01/19/64513.html>. The large discrepancy in the data confirms the Mission’s observations below in the report about the reliability of the information about the Gaza military operations posted on websites of al-Qassam and other Palestinian armed groups.

VII. ATTACKS ON GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS AND POLICE

A. Deliberate attacks on Gaza government infrastructure

1. Overview of damage to Gaza government buildings

365. In its early recovery and reconstruction plan for Gaza, the Palestinian Authority states that “seven government institutions were either completely or partially levelled (including the Government Palace, the Archives building, the General Personnel Council, and the Presidential Compound), and the Ministries of Interior, Justice and Culture were either partially or entirely destroyed, along with their associated compounds. In addition, 19 municipal facilities were damaged and 11 were totally destroyed, including commercial centres such as markets, slaughterhouses and stores.”²³³

2. The Israeli air strikes on the Gaza main prison and on the Palestinian Legislative Council building

366. The Mission visited two locations where government buildings were destroyed by Israeli air strikes: the Palestinian Legislative Council building and the main prison in the al-Saraya complex in Gaza City. In addition, the Mission visited six police stations, which will be discussed separately below.

367. The Mission visited the remains of the Gaza City main prison and interviewed two senior police officers who were, according to their testimony, eyewitnesses to the attack. The Mission also reviewed reports on the attack from other sources based on the testimony of prisoners. It furthermore addressed questions to the Government of Israel regarding the military advantage pursued in attacking the Palestinian Legislative Council building and the main prison in Gaza City, but received no reply.

368. The main prison was located in a densely built-up area of Gaza City in the al-Saraya complex of buildings occupied by government departments, including the Ministries of Education, Transport and the Interior. The prison itself was an old building, several stories high, reportedly used as a prison by successive authorities in charge of Gaza during the previous and present centuries. It held both common offenders and political detainees.

369. While there were some discrepancies in the different accounts of this incident, the Mission was able to ascertain that the complex was attacked at 11 a.m. on 28 December 2008, on the second day of the air strikes by Israel. At the time of the attack between 200 and 300 prisoners were held in the facility, most of the almost 700 prisoners having been released in the days before the strike.²³⁴ The accounts given by officials regarding the number of fatalities and injured

²³³ Palestinian National Authority, Palestinian National Early Recovery and Reconstruction Plan for Gaza 2009-2010, March 2009, p. 41.

²³⁴ According to statements by the police to the Mission, around 400 minor offenders had been released by the authorities to reduce overcrowding, so that when the hostilities started about 300 prisoners remained there. According to a NGO report based on the testimony of prisoners, “authorities released about 580 of the prisoners after the bombings started [i.e. on 27 December 2008], but kept in custody roughly 115 alleged collaborators with Israel, about 70 Fatah supporters held on various charges, and some persons convicted of criminal offences who had among the prisoners are contradicted by NGO reports and the Mission heard allegations of extrajudicial executions of escaping prisoners by, or at the behest of, the Gaza authorities, which the Mission deals with in chapter XIX. Police officials told the Mission that one prison guard was killed and several injured by the Israeli strike, as the first missile hit the guards' quarters, and that no prisoners were seriously injured. The guards had opened the prison doors immediately after the first strike. Others reported that "some prisoners were killed in the bombing, while others escaped the destroyed building."²³⁵ A number of prisoners injured in the attack went to al-Shifa hospital in Gaza City for treatment after escaping from the prison.

370. Despite the limited number of casualties that may have occurred, the high probability of more serious loss of life and of injuries in an attack on a populated prison facility could not have been discounted by the Israeli forces. The Mission has taken note of the assessment of the Israeli air force that 99 per cent of the strikes it carried out were accurate.²³⁶ In the light of this claim and in the absence of explanations to the contrary from the Israeli Government, it can only be concluded that the prison was the intended target of the strike. There is no indication from the information gathered on the incident and an inspection of the site that there was any cause for considering the prison building a "military objective".

371. The Palestinian Legislative Council building in central Gaza City was, according to information provided by the Israeli armed forces on their official web site, attacked on 31 December 2008. Mr. Ahmad Bahr, then Acting Speaker of the Palestinian Legislative Council in Gaza, stated to the Mission that it was hit by three missiles launched from fighter planes. The Mission visited the damaged assembly room. It also saw the rubble of the severely damaged three-storey building of the Parliament, which had been completed two years before. It was explained to the Mission that the new building contained a videoconferencing room which allowed the Gazan parliamentarians to hold joint sessions with the members of Parliament based in Ramallah. No casualties as a result of the strike on the Legislative Council building were reported to the Mission.

372. The Mission notes that the Israeli armed forces acknowledged in their "Summary of overnight events" of 1 January 2009 that:

The IAF and Israel Naval Forces struck around 20 Hamas targets throughout the Gaza Strip during late night and early morning hours (Dec. 31).

Among the sites targeted were.

The buildings housing Hamas' Ministry of Justice and Legislative Assembly, both located in the Tel El-Hawwa government complex. Hamas Government sites serve as a critical component of the terrorist groups' infrastructure in Gaza.²³⁷ been sentenced to death." See Human Rights Watch, Under Cover of War: Hamas Political Violence in Gaza (April 2009), p. 11.

²³⁵ "Ending the war...", footnote 62.

²³⁶ See also chapter XVI.

²³⁷ <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/opcast/op/press/0101.htm>.

373. The Israeli army spokesperson further elaborated: “The attack on strategic government objectives, which constitute part of Hamas’s mechanism of control, is a direct response to the continued firing on communities in southern Israel by the Hamas terrorist organization.”²³⁸

3. The position of the Government of Israel

374. The Mission observes that the Government of Israel is not alleging that any Hamas military activity, such as launching of rockets, storage of weapons or planning of operations, was carried out in the Legislative Council building, the Ministry of Justice or the main prison. The justification of the Government of Israel for the strike on the Palestinian Legislative Council is that it is a “Hamas Government site”, and that such sites “serve as a critical component of the terrorist groups’ infrastructure in Gaza” and “constitute part of Hamas’s mechanism of control”.

375. This explanation posted on the Israeli armed forces’ official website is integrated and elaborated on by numerous statements made by current and former senior Government officials to the media. Major Avital Leibovich, a spokesperson of the Israeli armed forces, reportedly argued “anything affiliated with Hamas is a legitimate target.”²³⁹ The deputy chief of staff, Maj. Gen. Dan Harel, reportedly told a meeting with heads of local authorities in southern Israel that:

This operation is different from previous ones. We have set a high goal which we are aiming for. We are hitting not only terrorists and launchers, but also the whole Hamas government and all its wings. [...] We are hitting government buildings, production factories, security wings and more. We are demanding governmental responsibility from Hamas and are not making distinctions between the various wings. After this operation there will not be one Hamas building left standing in Gaza, and we plan to change the rules of the game.²⁴⁰

376. Israeli armed forces’ spokesman Captain Benjamin Rutland reportedly stated: “Our definition is that anyone who is involved with terrorism within Hamas is a valid target. This ranges from the strictly military institutions and includes the political institutions that provide the logistical funding and human resources for the terrorist arm.”²⁴¹

377. Mr. Matti Steinberg, a former senior adviser to the Israeli General Security Services, argued that “Hamas’s civilian infrastructure is a very, very sensitive target. If you want to put pressure on them, this is how”.²⁴² Less than three months before the hostilities in Gaza began, Col. Gabriel Siboni similarly argued that:

²³⁸ Official statement by an Israeli military spokesman, 1 January 2009, available at: http://dover.idf.il/IDF/News_Channels/art_mivzaim/09/01/0101.htm (in Hebrew).

²³⁹ The Washington Post, “All-out war declared on Hamas”, 30 December 2008.

²⁴⁰ Ynet, “Deputy chief of staff: worst still ahead”, 29 December 2008.

²⁴¹ BBC News, “Gaza conflict: who is a civilian?”, 5 January 2009, available at: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7811386.stm.

²⁴² “All-out war...”.

... the IDF will be required to strike hard at Hamas and to refrain from the cat and mouse games of searching for Qassam rocket launchers. The IDF should not be expected to stop the rocket and missile fire against the Israeli home front through attacks on the launchers themselves, but by means of imposing a ceasefire on the enemy.²⁴³

378. The Mission understands all these statements to imply that, in the view of their authors, in order to be effective, military operations have to be directed not only against military targets but also against the non-military infrastructure.

379. The Israeli Government's discussion of the "targeting of Hamas terrorist infrastructure" asserts that, "consistent with the principle of distinction, IDF forces attacked military targets directly connected to Hamas and other terrorist organizations' military activities against Israel." This statement is followed by a list of examples of objectives, such as command posts of al-Qassam Brigades, alleged weapons storage sites and training camps, rocket and mortar launch sites, and tunnels. The list also refers twice to a location identified as the office of Ismail Haniyah, "head of the Hamas administration". This list is followed, however, by a statement reiterating and elaborating the argument that there is really no distinction to be made between military and civilian objectives as far as government and public administration in Gaza are concerned:

While Hamas operates ministries and is in charge of a variety of administrative and traditionally governmental functions in the Gaza Strip, it still remains a terrorist organization. Many of the ostensibly civilian elements of its regime are in reality active components of its terrorist and military efforts. Indeed, Hamas does not separate its civilian and military activities in the manner in which a legitimate government might. Instead, Hamas uses apparatuses under its control, including quasi-governmental institutions, to promote its terrorist activity.²⁴⁴

4. Factual findings

380. From the facts gathered by it, the Mission finds that Israel launched direct attacks against the main prison in Gaza City on 28 December 2008 and against the Palestinian Legislative Council building in Gaza City on 31 December 2008. The attacks substantially damaged the buildings, making them unfit for use. At least one person was killed in the attack on the prison, while there were apparently no casualties in the attack on the Legislative Council building.

381. The factual question of whether these two institutions and their buildings served a military purpose must be considered with regard to the legal definition of military objectives. It is addressed in the following section.

²⁴³ Gabriel Siboni, "Disproportionate force: Israel's concept of response in light of the second Lebanon war", Institute for National Security Studies Insight, No. 74 (2 October 2008), available at: <http://www.inss.org.il/publications.php?cat=21&incat=&read=2222>.

²⁴⁴ "The operation in Gaza...", paras. 233-235.

5. Legal analysis

382. In assessing the Israeli strikes against the Legislative Council building and the main prison, the Mission first of all notes that Hamas is an organization with distinct political, military and social welfare components.²⁴⁵

383. Since July 2007 Hamas has been the de facto government authority in Gaza. As recognized by the Israeli Government,²⁴⁶ the Hamas-led authorities in Gaza have been responsible for the civilian administration of Gaza. For instance, they employ civil servants and workers, run schools, hospitals, traffic police and the administration of justice. The fact that these institutions and the buildings housing them have been administered by authorities led by Hamas since July 2007, and no longer by a government composed of both Hamas and Fatah members has, in the view of the Mission, no bearing on the continued civilian character of these institutions. Regarding the prison, the Mission finds the consequences of the attack aptly described in the answer to its questions received from the Gaza authorities: “As a result of this targeting, great numbers of those who were detained pending trial in criminal cases and of those convicted of major crimes such as murder escaped. This has caused disorder and chaos, encouraged ‘family revenge’ cases and people taking the law into their own hands.”²⁴⁷ As far as the Palestinian Legislative Council building is concerned, it served representatives from all Palestinian parties who won seats in the 2006 elections (which were recognized as free and fair by international observers).

384. The Mission met with Gaza-based Legislative Council members belonging to Hamas, to Fatah and to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.²⁴⁸ While Hamas constitutes the de facto authority in Gaza, the buildings attacked and destroyed served a public purpose that cannot be regarded as “promoting Hamas terrorist activity”.

385. The fundamental rule of international humanitarian law applicable to attacks against buildings and infrastructure is enshrined in article 52 of Additional Protocol I (“General Protection of civilian objects”). This provision is generally recognized as codifying customary law applicable to both international and non-international armed conflicts.²⁴⁹

²⁴⁵ This situation is recognized also by Governments which have listed Hamas’ military component as “terrorist”. The Australian Government’s listing of al-Qassam Brigades as a terrorist organization (last updated 14 September 2007), for instance, explains: “The functions of the Hamas organization, which has distinct civilian and military wings, include legitimate political and social activities. Its welfare and mosque networks act as a base for its recruitment and propaganda activities. Its terrorist operations are conducted by its military wing, the Izz ad-Din al-Qassam Brigades.”

²⁴⁶ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 235.

²⁴⁷ Reply from the Gaza authorities to the Mission’s list of questions (July 2009).

²⁴⁸ The Mission also spoke with West Bank-based Legislative Council members.

²⁴⁹ International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Customary International Humanitarian Law, vol. I, Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, eds. (Cambridge University Press, 2005), rules of customary law 7–9. The Israeli Government recognizes this principle. See “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 95.

1. Civilian objects shall not be the object of attack or of reprisals. Civilian objects are all objects which are not military objectives as defined in paragraph 2.
2. Attacks shall be limited strictly to military objectives. In so far as objects are concerned, military objectives are limited to those objects which by their nature, location, purpose or use make an effective contribution to military action and whose total or partial destruction, capture or neutralization, in the circumstances ruling at the time, offers a definite military advantage.
3. In case of doubt whether an object which is normally dedicated to civilian purposes, such as a place of worship, a house or other dwelling or a school, is being used to make an effective contribution to military action, it shall be presumed not to be so used.

386. The statement by the Israeli Government concerning the attack on the Legislative Council building and the Ministry of Justice does not suggest any “effective contribution to military action” that the buildings might have been making. No reference is made to any “definite military advantage” that their destruction would offer. Instead, the explanation is that government buildings constitute “part of Hamas’s mechanism of control”, that they “serve as a critical component of the terrorist groups’ infrastructure in Gaza” and that “ostensibly civilian elements of [the Hamas] regime are in reality active components of its terrorist and military efforts.”

387. The Mission observes that there is nothing unique in the fact that in Gaza ministries and prisons are part of the government’s “mechanism of control” and that the legislature’s assembly hall and administrative buildings are a critical component of the government infrastructure. That is not, however, the test applied by international humanitarian law and accepted State practice to distinguish between civilian and military objects. The Mission reviewed, for instance, the tentative list of military objectives drawn up by Major General A.P.V. Rogers, a former Director of the British Army Legal Services, and a proposed list of military objectives drawn up by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). There is nothing in this comprehensive list of military objectives that comes close to a legislative assembly’s building or a prison. As far as ministries are concerned, both lists limit the definition of military objective to “war ministries”.²⁵⁰

388. The Mission further notes that international humanitarian law also recognizes a category of civilian objects which may nonetheless be targeted in the course of armed conflict to the extent that they have a “dual use”. Examples often made for such dual-use objects, which serve both civilian and military purposes, are civilian infrastructures such as telecommunications, power-generating stations or bridges, in so far as they are used by the military in addition to their civilian use. There is no indication, nor any allegation of any such dual use of the Legislative Council building or of the Gaza main prison.

²⁵⁰ “Final report to the Prosecutor by the Committee established to review the NATO bombing campaign against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia”, paras. 38–39, available at: <http://www.un.org/icty/pressreal/nato061300.htm#IVA64d>.

389. There is an absence of evidence or, indeed, any allegation from the Israeli Government and armed forces that the Legislative Council building, the Ministry of Justice or the Gaza main prison “made an effective contribution to military action.” On the information available to it, the Mission finds that the attacks on these buildings constituted deliberate attacks on civilian objects in violation of the rule of customary international humanitarian law whereby attacks must be strictly limited to military objectives.

390. In the Mission's view these facts further indicate the commission of the grave breach of extensive destruction of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, as defined in article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

391. The Mission rejects the analysis of present and former senior Israeli officials that, because of the alleged nature of the Hamas government in Gaza, the distinction between civilian and military parts of the government infrastructure is no longer relevant in relation to Israel's conflict with Hamas. This analysis is accompanied, in the statements of Col. Gabriel Siboni and Mr. Matti Steinberg, by an explicit argument that Israel should “put pressure” on Hamas by targeting civilian infrastructure to attain its war aims.

392. The Mission is of the view that this is a dangerous argument that should be vigorously rejected as incompatible with the cardinal principle of distinction. International humanitarian law prohibits attacks against targets that do not make an effective contribution to military action. Attacks that are not directed against military (or dual use) objectives are violations of the laws of war, no matter how promising the attacker considers them from a strategic or political point of view. As a recent academic contribution to the discussion on whether “new wars” require “new laws” has noted, “if this argument [that attacks against political, financial or psychological targets may prove more effective than those against military or dual-use objectives] was decisive, in some societies – in particular in democracies – it may be hospital maternity wards, kindergartens, religious shrines, or homes for the elderly whose destruction would most affect the willingness of the military or of the government to continue the war.”²⁵¹

B. Deliberate attacks on the Gaza police

393. Information received by the Mission indicates that 248 members of the Gaza police were killed in the course of Israel's military operations.²⁵² In other words, more than one out of every six casualties was a member of the Gaza police.

394. The Mission visited the “Arafat City” police headquarters in Gaza City and five police stations: the Abbas police station (central Gaza City), three police stations in neighbourhoods in the east and south of Gaza City (Zeytoun, al-Shujaeyah and al-Tuffah) and the Deir al-Balah investigative police station. The Mission interviewed the Director of Police, the police spokesman, station commanders at the stations visited and other persons knowledgeable about ²⁵¹ Marco Sassoli, “Targeting: the scope and utility of the concept of “military objectives” for the protection of civilians in contemporary armed conflicts”, New Wars, New Laws? Applying the Laws of War in 21st Century Conflicts, D. Wippman and M. Evangelista, eds. (Ardsley, New York; Transnational Publishers; 2005), p. 196.

²⁵² The Central Commission for Documentation and Pursuit of Israeli War Criminals (TAWTHEQ), established by the Gaza authorities' Ministry of Justice.

the Gaza police. The Mission also reviewed allegations about the Gaza internal security forces made by the Israeli Government and also mentioned in a report (in Hebrew) by the Orient Research Group Ltd., an Israeli organization commissioned by the then Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert to produce this report.²⁵³

395. The attacks investigated by the Mission were all directed against facilities used by the police force called shurta (police) in official documents of the Gaza authorities and referred to as “civil police” in many English reports.

396. The Arafat City police headquarters and three of the five police stations visited were attacked during the first minutes of the Israeli military operations in Gaza, between 11.20 and 11.35 a.m. on 27 December 2009. According to witnesses, the attacks were carried out primarily with bombs and missiles launched from fighter jets. Missiles launched by naval forces might also have been used.

397. According to the information received by the Mission from TAWTHEQ, 29 other police stations were targeted by the Israeli armed forces in addition to the five police stations visited by the Mission. Twenty-four were targeted on 27 December 2008 (mostly during the first minutes of the attack), the first day of the military operations, nine on the following day and one on 14 January 2009.

1. Information regarding the attacks on the police headquarters and police stations visited by the Mission

398. Arafat City police headquarters occupy a large compound in central Gaza. They are used by the civil police (shurta), one of the police forces operating in Gaza, as office space and for training courses. The Mission visited three sites in the compound in which missiles or bombs had struck. In one large yard, three missiles struck the participants of a police training course. Forty-eight policemen were killed on the spot, five more were wounded, two of whom subsequently succumbed to their injuries.

399. While it appears that all the policemen killed in this location were taking part in a training course, there is conflicting information on the details. Most reports by NGOs are to the effect that these were police “cadets” in the midst of a graduation ceremony. The Gaza police spokesperson, however, told the Mission that they were serving policemen, who had been taking a three-week course and who were, at the time of the strike, doing “morning sport exercise”.²⁵⁴ The contents of the training course reportedly were “protocol”, i.e. how to deal with ²⁵³ See Lt. Col. (res.) Jonathan Dahoah-Halevi, “Fatal casualties of the Palestinian security forces – Myth vs. Reality” (Orient Research Group Ltd., 2009). Its author is a former adviser to the Policy Planning Division of the Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs and current researcher at the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs and co-founder of the Orient Research Group Ltd. In a letter to the Mission, the author stated that the report had been commissioned “to identify the police officers killed and the extent of their affiliation with Hamas, Palestinian Islamic Jihad and other terrorist organizations.” As to the sources and methodology employed, he explained that he had examined materials in the public domain, including official lists of policemen who were killed published by the Palestinian Police and the Gaza authorities, NGO reports and material published by Palestinian armed groups. “The operation in Gaza...” relies on this report, referring to it as “a recent study” (para. 247).

²⁵⁴ Mission phone interview with Mr. Shahwan, Gaza police spokesperson, 12 July 2009.

representatives of foreign Governments and international delegations, and rescue operations. An obituary of one of the policemen killed, published on the website of al-Qassam Brigades, claims that he was attending “a military refreshing course.”²⁵⁵

400. The police gave the Mission small cube-shaped (4x4x4 mm³ and 2x4x4 mm³) metal fragments allegedly from the missiles fired at this location. Information provided by NGOs that visited the site soon after the strike and collected samples of the munitions fragments confirm that they were found there. Laboratory analysis of the cubes establishes that they are made of tungsten.²⁵⁶

401. In a second location at Arafat City police headquarters, two projectiles fired by Israeli fighter jets left two craters. No one was present in the area at the time of the strike. The third location visited by the Mission was near the north gate of the police headquarters where a projectile, most likely a missile, killed police chief Tawfiq Jabr. Reports indicate that other sites at the police headquarters, not visited by the Mission, were also targeted.

402. A second police training course targeted was reportedly attended by around 50 policemen. Twenty-eight of them were killed in the strike. According to the police spokesperson, the training course was designed to instruct police officers on how to deal with police officers who abused their power as well as on cultural and economic issues relevant to police work.²⁵⁷ Moreover, as the survivors were trying to flee through the western gate of the police city, they were reportedly targeted by two anti-personnel missiles, which caused deaths and injuries. While the Mission did not receive official information from the Gaza authorities on the number of policemen killed at the police headquarters on 27 December 2008, a report by an NGO submitted to the Mission states that 89 policemen died as a result of this attack.

403. Abbas police station in central Gaza City was, according to the station commander, hit by three missiles on 27 December 2008 at 11.35 a.m.²⁵⁸ Officials at the police station had just been informed of the attack on Arafat City police a few minutes earlier and immediate evacuation of the station had begun. Nine policemen were killed, 20 more reportedly injured. There were, according to the station commander, five detainees (common criminal suspects) in the police cells, who were released before the attack. There were members of the public going about their normal business at the police station at the time of the strike, including women and children. TAWTHEQ estimates the material damage caused by the attack at US$ 80,000.

²⁵⁵ See <http://www.alqassam.ps/arabic/sohdaa5.php?id=1342>.

²⁵⁶ Laboratory analysis was carried out under the supervision of Lt. Col. Lane of Ireland’s Defence Forces, an expert witness of the Mission. In his report to the Mission he notes that “the IDF have deployed newly developed high-precision low-collateral damage missile systems.... In mid-2004 Rafael noted that a new warhead for the Spike had been developed for operations in urban areas.” See also Human Rights Watch, Precisely Wrong: Gaza Civilians Killed by Israeli Drone-Launched Missiles (June 2009), where it is stated that the fragments are likely to have been from drone-launched “Spike” missiles produced by the Israeli firm Rafael Advanced Defense Systems (pp. 6-7, 11-12).

²⁵⁷ Mission phone interview with Mr. Shahwan, Gaza Police Spokesperson, 12 July 2009.

²⁵⁸ Interview with station commander, Maj. Iyad Jabr el Horani, 9 June 2009.

404. The police station in the al-Tuffah neighbourhood of Gaza City, a recently completed three-storey building, was struck by three missiles around 11.30 a.m. on 27 December 2009.²⁵⁹ Also according to the station commander, no policemen were killed, as it had been possible to evacuate the police station very rapidly after another target in the neighbourhood had been hit. Many civilian bystanders were, however, allegedly injured. The station was hit again in the course of the hostilities. TAWTHEQ estimates the material damage caused by the attack at US$ 150,000.

405. The Deir al-Balah investigative police station was attacked between 11.30 and 11.45 a.m. on 27 December 2008. According to a police officer interviewed by the Mission,²⁶⁰ the police station was hit by a missile fired from an F-16. Other witnesses interviewed by the Mission recalled several explosions, the first of them most likely on a plot adjacent to the police station. Police officers who were inside the station at the time of the attack²⁶¹ reported that routine police activities were taking place. Suspects were being interrogated (there were four or five persons held in the station's jail) and residents of the area were filing complaints. One police officer, Ashraf Hamadah Abu Kuwaik, was killed in the strike, and five other officers and one civilian were also injured.

406. The attack on the Deir al-Balah investigative police station cost the lives of six members of the public, who were in the vicinity. As a result of the explosions at the police station and of the debris, walls at the house of the al-Burdini family next to the police station collapsed, killing the 10-year-old Kamelia al-Burdini²⁶² and injuring several other members of the family. At a wholesale fruit and vegetable market next to the police station on Salah ad-Din Street, where between 50 and 100 persons were trading at the time, debris from the police station killed five persons, among them Abd al-Hakim Rajab Muhammad Mansi, 32, and his son, Uday Hakim Mansi, and injured many others.²⁶³

407. The strikes on al-Shujaeyah and Zeytoun police stations, on 28 December 2008 and 14 January 2009, did not result in the deaths of any policemen, as after the 27 December attacks the police stations had been evacuated.²⁶⁴ In the attack on al-Shujaeyah police station, however, two women, a man and a child, standing on the opposite side of the road, were reportedly killed by debris. TAWTHEQ estimates the material damage caused by the attacks on al-Shujaeyah and Zeytoun police stations at US$ 210,000 and US$ 900,000, respectively.

²⁵⁹ Interview with Tuffah station commander, Maj. Aymal el-Batniji, 9 June 2009.

²⁶⁰ Interview with First Lieutenant Samih Sabbah, 30 June 2009.

²⁶¹ Interviews with First Lieutenant Samih Sabbah and criminal investigation officer Ahmad Abu Slimya, 30 June 2009.

²⁶² Interview with Refaet al-Burdini, 30 June 2009.

²⁶³ Interview with Muhammad Ibrahim Khalid. The names of two of the persons killed are on the PCHR list of child victims of the hostilities.

²⁶⁴ Interviews with Zeytoun station commander, Maj. Mahmoud Kehael, and Lt. Mahmoud Idallo of al-Shujaeyah station.

2. Conflicting characterizations of the Gaza security forces

(a) The approach of the Government of Israel

408. The position of the Government of Israel is that “due to their military functions, these internal security forces were not accorded the immunity from attack generally granted to civilians.” It alleges that, in May 2006, Hamas formed the Executive Force as a loyal militia, “[drawing] this paramilitary force largely from its military wing, the Izz al-Din al-Qassam Brigades, and armed the members with anti-tank missiles, mortars, machine guns and grenades. The newly recruited commanders and subordinates were not obliged to give up their military wing affiliation, and continued to operate simultaneously in both functions.” It further alleges that after the June 2007 seizure of full control over Gaza, Hamas restructured the Executive Force and subdivided it into several units, including the police, who “assumed many traditional law enforcement functions”. It goes on to say that its members, however, remained members of Hamas’ military wing and their weaponry continued to include machine guns and anti-tank weapons. “[...] the former Executive Force continued to be closely integrated with — although not formally part of — the al-Qassam Brigades. [...] many members of the internal security services also served directly in the al-Qassam Brigades.” Regarding the military operations, the Israeli Government alleges that “Hamas intended to, and did, in fact, employ its internal security forces for military activities during the Gaza Operation.” It further alleges that the “collective role of the Gaza ‘police’ as an integral part of Hamas armed forces is further evidenced by the fact that many Gaza ‘policemen’ were also members of the al-Qassam Brigades.” To support this allegation, an Israeli Government paper shows pictures of four men killed during the military operations. Each of the men is shown in two pictures purportedly downloaded from Palestinian websites, one identifying the man as a policeman, the other as a member of al-Qassam Brigades. Finally, the paper refers to the above-mentioned study of the Orient Research Group Ltd., stating that it found that “more than nine out of every ten alleged ‘civilian police’ were found to be armed terrorist activists and combatants directly engaged in hostilities against Israel.”²⁶⁵

(b) The approach of the Gaza authorities

409. The characterization of the Gaza internal security forces by the Government of Israel differs sharply from the tasks of the police as they are described on the official website of the Gaza Ministry of Interior, in orders to the police issued by the Minister of Interior which the Mission has reviewed, and in the interviews with the Director of Police and the police spokesman conducted by the Mission.

410. The Director of Police, Gen. Jamal al-Jarrah, also known as Abu Obeidah, stated that “the role of the police is to solve problems of the population, combat drug trafficking, arrest criminals.” He reported that they are equipped with Kalashnikov firearms and batons, as the authorities have not been able to obtain other police equipment, such as tear gas and small guns. Gen. Abu Obeidah acknowledged that there were complaints about the “harsh” methods of the ²⁶⁵ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 237, 239, 241-242 and 245-247.

Gaza police, but showed pride in their success in reducing lawlessness in the Gaza Strip.²⁶⁶ This assessment was shared by many whom the Mission interviewed in the course of its investigations. The police orders and the Ministry's website similarly describe the police as a law-enforcement agency. As to allegations that the police and al-Qassam Brigades were "interchangeable", the Director of Police asserted that they were "absolutely not true".

411. According to the police spokesperson, during the military operations the mandate of the police was firstly to "protect the internal front", i.e. ensure that the relationship between the civilian population and the authorities stayed "intact". Secondly, the police were to monitor the distribution of humanitarian goods to the civilian population. Thirdly, they were to continue regular law-enforcement duties, with a particular focus on combating looting and speculation on prices.²⁶⁷

3. The Mission's assessment of the role and composition of the police

412. In order to shed some light on where the truth might lie between these two conflicting descriptions of the police, the Mission finds it necessary to examine the development of the security forces linked to Hamas after its election victory in January 2006. When Mr. Said Seyam, a senior Hamas representative,²⁶⁸ took office as the Palestinian Authority's Minister of Interior in April 2006, he found that he had little or no control over the Palestinian Authority's security forces, which were put under the control of the President of the Palestinian Authority and of officials loyal to him.²⁶⁹ On 20 April 2006, he announced the formation of a new security force reporting directly to him. This was the Security Forces Support Unit, also known as the Executive Force (al-Quwwa al-Tanfiziyya). The new security force appears to have had a double function as both a law-enforcement agency and, at least potentially, a military force. It was officially charged with enforcing public security and protecting property. At the same time, he appointed Mr. Jamal Abu Samhadana, commander of the Popular Resistance Committees, as the head of the Executive Force²⁷⁰ and announced that it would be composed of 3,000 new recruits

²⁶⁶ Mission meeting with the Gaza authorities' Director of Police, 4 June 2009. On both successes in restoring order and violations of human rights by the Gaza police after June 2007, see also International Crisis Group, "Ruling Palestine I: Gaza under Hamas", Middle East Report No. 73, 19 March 2008, p. 10.

²⁶⁷ Mission meeting with Gaza authorities' police spokesperson, 9 June 2009. According to the International Crisis Group, during the hostilities, "the Qassam Brigades and some civil police members (still referred to locally as the "Executive Forces") patrolled streets in civilian clothes; some wore badges to establish their official status. They continued to arrest lawbreakers, detaining them in ordinary apartments since prisons have been destroyed; this helps explain why thus far there has been no report of looting or increase in crime. Likewise, security personnel maintained order in breadlines that sometimes stretched to hundreds of people and prevented unrest at the overburdened hospitals, where tempers easily flare." "Ending the war...", p. 8).

²⁶⁸ Said Seyam was killed by an Israeli air strike on 15 January 2009 together with several members of his family (TAWTHEQ documents submitted to the Mission; see also International Crisis Group, "Gaza's unfinished business", Middle East Report N°85, 23 April 2009, p. 5.)

²⁶⁹ See, for instance, International Crisis Group, "Palestinians, Israel, and the Quartet: Pulling back from the brink", Middle East Report N°54, 13 June 2006, p. 12.

²⁷⁰ Ibid., pp. 13 and 20; "Fatal casualties...". Abu Samhadana and three other members of the Popular Resistance Committees were killed by an Israeli air strike on 8 or 9 June 2006.

from various Palestinian armed groups, including al-Qassam Brigades.²⁷¹ The newly appointed commander reportedly declared: “[The Executive Force] will be the nucleus of the future Palestinian army. The resistance must continue. We have only one enemy. ... I will continue to carry the rifle and pull the trigger whenever required to defend my people. We are also a force against corruption. We are against thieves, corrupt officials and law breakers.”²⁷²

413. In August 2007, following the June 2007 Hamas seizure of full control over Gaza, the current Director of the Gaza authorities’ civil police, then head of the Executive Force, Gen. Abu Obeidah, described the planned reorganization of the security services in Gaza. Executive Force members were to be integrated into the civil police. He reportedly stated that Hamas was “working hard to retrain Executive Force members to perform police duties” and that the “Force will be in charge of chasing drug dealers and lawless residents”. At the same time, he stated that “members of the Force are religious, and are resistance fighters.”²⁷³

414. In October 2007, the security services operating in Gaza were reorganized. The previous Palestinian Authority’s police agencies in Gaza were merged with the Executive Force.²⁷⁴ The security forces under the control of the Ministry of Interior emerging from this reorganization comprise the Civil Police, the Civil Defence, the Internal Security (an intelligence agency) and the National Security. Their mandates, according to the Gaza authorities’ Ministry of Interior’s website,²⁷⁵ are differentiated.

415. The National Security force is given specific military tasks, such as “the protection of the State from any foreign aggression” and “responsibility for the defence of the Palestinian homeland in the face of external and internal threats”. It is thus plainly a military force whose members are, under international humanitarian law, combatants.²⁷⁶ The functions of the police have been outlined above.

416. On 1 January 2009, during the Israeli military operations in Gaza, the police spokesperson, Mr. Islam Shahwan, informed the media that the police commanders had managed to hold three meetings at secret locations since the beginning of the armed operations. He added that “an action plan has been put forward, and we have conducted an assessment of the situation

²⁷¹ “Palestinians, Israel, and the Quartet...”, p. 13. The “Executive Force consisted in summer of 2007 of some estimated 6,800 members of the armed wings of Hamas and the Popular Resistance Committees”, R. Friedrich and A. Luethold, eds., Entry-Points to Palestinian Security Sector Reform (Geneva Centre for the Democratic Control of Armed Forces, 2007), p. 162.

²⁷² “Palestinians, Israel, and the Quartet...”, footnote 105.

²⁷³ International Middle East Media Center, “Interview with the leader of the Hamas-formed Executive Force”, 17 August 2007, available at: <http://www.imemc.org/article/49939>.

²⁷⁴ See, e.g., Xinhua, “Hamas Executive Force merged into police force in Gaza: official”, 2 October: “Ihab al-Ghusein, a spokesman with the Interior Ministry, made the remarks during a news conference in Gaza. Al-Ghusein said the mission of the Executive Force ‘is now over, and it is time to include the force into the official police force that belongs to the ministry of interior.’” and a general alert has been declared by the police and among the security forces in case of any emergency or a ground invasion. Police officers received clear orders from the leadership to face (“يوواجهه” in Arabic) the enemy, if the Gaza Strip were to be invaded.”²⁷⁷ Confirming to the Mission that he had been correctly quoted, Mr. Shahwan stated that the instructions given at that meeting were to the effect that in the event of a ground invasion, and particularly if the Israeli armed forces were to enter urban settlements in Gaza, the police was to continue its work of ensuring that basic food stuffs reached the population, of directing the population to safe places, and of upholding public order in the face of the invasion. Mr. Shahwan further stated that not a single policeman had been killed in combat during the armed operations, proving that the instructions had been strictly obeyed by the policemen.

²⁷⁵ See the Arabic-language website of the Gaza Ministry of Interior: <http://www.moi.gov.ps/?page=633734043174687500>.

²⁷⁶ See the Arabic-language website of the National Security Forces: <http://www.nsf.gov.ps>.

417. The Mission notes that there are no allegations that the police as an organized force took part in combat during the armed operations. On the basis of the information provided by the Gaza authorities and of the above-mentioned study of the Orient Research Group Ltd., it would appear that 75 per cent of its members killed in the course of the military operations died as a result of the air strikes carried out during the first minutes of the Israeli attack. These men had not engaged in combat with the Israeli armed forces.²⁷⁸

418. The Mission also notes that while the then commander of the Executive Forces and now Director of Police did reportedly say in August 2007 that members of the Executive Force were “resistance fighters”, he stressed in the same interview the authorities’ intention to develop it into a law enforcement force. The Mission notes that a situation in which a recently constituted civilian police force integrates former members of armed groups would not be unique to Gaza. That prior membership in itself would not be sufficient to establish that the police in Gaza is a part of al-Qassam Brigades or other armed groups.

419. Except for the statements of the police spokesperson, the Israel Government has presented no other basis on which a presumption can be made against the overall civilian nature of the police in Gaza. It is true that the police and the security forces created by Hamas in Gaza may have their origins in the Executive Force. However, while the Mission would not rule out the possibility that there might be individuals in the police force who retain their links to the armed groups, it believes that the assertion on the part of the Government of Israel that “an overwhelming majority of the police forces were also members of the Hamas military wing or activists of Hamas or other terrorist organizations”,²⁷⁹ appears to be an overstatement that has led to prejudicial presumptions against the nature of the police force that may not be justified.

²⁷⁷ His statements are reported in the Arabic original on a website of the Egyptian Muslim Brotherhood, at <http://www.ikhwanonline.com/Article.asp?ArtID=43756&SecID=450>. The journalist states that in spite of the Israeli air attacks against police stations, the police continued to do law enforcement work and to direct the traffic: “members of the Criminal Investigation and the Internal Security caught a quantity of drugs in some of the targeted areas, and at the entrances of some of the crossroads and cities within the Strip, where one can observe members of the police in civilian clothes monitoring the traffic”.

²⁷⁸ In “Fatal casualties...”, the Orient Research Group Ltd, however, identifies 31 policemen who it alleges were killed in combat in Gaza during the period from 3 to 18 January. In a few cases the information is rather specific, such as “killed on 4 January in Jabalya after launching rockets” or “killed on 6 January while fighting the IDF in Deir al-Balah”. In other cases it is more generic, such as “killed while fighting the IDF”. The Mission accepts that this might indicate that some individual members of the Gaza police were at the same time members of armed groups. The Mission is also mindful, as explained below, that the claims of armed groups that a person killed during the armed operations was one of their members have to be treated with care.

420. In his meeting with the Mission, the Director of Police was very open in acknowledging that many of his men were Hamas supporters, but insisted at the same time there are others who supported other Palestinian factions.²⁸⁰ Police station commanders interviewed by the Mission stated that most of their men (70 per cent according to the estimates of one station commander, 95 per cent in another station) had joined the police after June 2007.²⁸¹ The Mission understands that most, if not all, of the post-June 2007 recruits into the civil police, will have been recruited from the Executive Force, which was strongly loyal to Hamas.

421. The Mission also notes, however, that in senior positions in the police, the representation of non-Hamas men appears to have been broader. The Director of Police killed on 27 December 2008, Mr. Tawfiq Jabr, was generally known as not being affiliated with Hamas. Several of the station commanders interviewed by the Mission were also not Hamas affiliates but men who had joined the Palestinian Authority’s police after the Oslo Accords allowed the Palestinians to constitute their own law-enforcement agencies. They had thus served in the Palestinian police in Gaza for more than 10 years before Hamas seized control of it in June 2007.

422. The Mission further notes that the study conducted by the Orient Research Group Ltd. names policemen killed during the attack, whom it identifies as members of Hamas, al-Qassam Brigades, other armed Palestinian groups or “terror operatives” whose affiliation is not known. In 78 out of 178 cases the policemen are alleged to be members of al-Qassam Brigades on the sole basis that they were allegedly Hamas members.

423. Furthermore, it appears from the response to the Mission from the Orient Research Group Ltd. describing its methodology that its information on police members’ alleged affiliation with armed groups was based to a large extent on the websites of the armed groups. In this respect, the Mission is mindful of a recent report by a Palestinian human rights NGO drawing attention to the “issue of the ‘adoption’ of killed persons by resistance groups; i.e. declaration by a political or armed group that the person killed was one of their members. Often, when persons, including children, are killed by actions of the Israeli armed forces, political and/or armed groups ‘adopt’ them as ‘martyrs’ placing their photographs on their websites and commending their contribution to resisting occupation. This does not mean that those persons killed were involved in resistance activities in any way. The families accept this ‘adoption’ of deceased family members for various reasons including the willingness of resistance groups to provide financial support to the families and pay for funeral costs of the persons killed.” As the NGO concludes, “these cases require in-depth investigation on a case-by-case basis in order to determine every person’s status according to his actual affiliation”.²⁸²

²⁷⁹ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 247.

²⁸⁰ Mission meeting with Director of Police, 4 June 2009.

²⁸¹ Mission interviews with Gaza City police station commanders, 9 June 2009.

²⁸² Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, “Cast lead offensive in numbers”, p. 5.

4. Factual findings

424. From the facts gathered by it, the Mission estimates that 99 policemen and nine members of the public were killed in the attacks on the police headquarters and the five police stations inspected by the Mission. The Gaza authorities state that overall 248 policemen were killed by the Israeli armed forces during the military operations. The study by the Orient Research Group Ltd. identifies 345 men allegedly belonging to the Gaza internal security forces killed by Israeli attacks during the military operations. It identifies 240 of the 345 alleged members of the internal security forces as members of the police. This is very close to the number provided by the Gaza authorities.²⁸³

425. The facts gathered by the Mission indicate that the policemen were the intended targets of the attacks. The Israeli Government²⁸⁴ is quite clear on this, and has not suggested that the attacks on the police were not intended. The type of ammunition used at the Arafat City police headquarters is designed to kill or incapacitate people in the area of impact and has little or no effect on buildings or other infrastructure. In other locations at the civil police headquarters in Gaza City the munitions used were such that the damage to infrastructure was minimal compared to the cost in lives among the policemen. With regard to the other police stations visited by the Mission, damage to the buildings was extensive but the number of policemen killed was limited, with the exception of Abbas police station in central Gaza City, where nine policemen were killed. There is no question that the approximately 100 policemen who died in the attacks on the stations visited by the Mission were deliberately targeted and killed by the Israeli armed forces.

426. The attacks on the police headquarters and five police stations visited by the Mission were carried out during the first minutes of the surprise air bombing campaign launched by the Israeli armed forces against Gaza shortly before 11.30 a.m. on 27 December.

427. From the facts gathered by it, the Mission finds that there is insufficient information to conclude that the Gaza police as a whole had been “incorporated” into the armed forces of the Gaza authorities. The statement by the police spokesperson on 1 January 2009 (after the attacks of 27 December 2008 had been carried out) cannot, on its own, justify the assertion that the police were part and parcel of the armed forces.

428. The Mission could not verify the allegations of membership of armed groups of policemen. In half the cases, moreover, the allegations appear to be based merely on an equation of membership in Hamas (in itself alleged on the basis of unverifiable information) with membership in al-Qassam Brigades, which in the view of the Mission is not justified. Finally, even according to the study referred to by the Israeli Government, 34 policemen without any affiliation to Hamas or a Palestinian armed group were killed in the armed operations, the great majority of them in the bombardment of police stations on the first day of the military operations.

²⁸³ “Fatal casualties...” assigns the remaining victims to national security (5), civil defence (11) and internal security (2), with the remaining 85 identified as belonging to security forces without being able to state which one.

²⁸⁴ “The operation in Gaza...”, pp. 89-95.

429. An “obituary” published on a website of al-Qassam Brigades states that one of the training courses at the police headquarters in Gaza on 27 December 2008 was a “military refresher course”. That is, however, contradicted by the police spokesperson and a number of the reports received by the Mission from NGOs. It is also not suggested by the Israeli Government that that was a reason for attacking it. As a distinct probability, the Mission finds that the policemen killed there were neither engaged in any military activity at the time of the attacks nor carrying out preparations for combat. At the other police stations, the police were engaged in a range of routine tasks, including questioning detainees and handling issues for members of the public who were present in police facilities in the middle of an ordinary day.

5. Legal analysis

(a) The applicable rules of international humanitarian law

430. The general rule of international humanitarian law is that members of law-enforcement agencies are considered part of the civilian population, unless they have been incorporated into the armed forces of a party to the conflict.²⁸⁵ This principle is accepted by the Israeli Government.²⁸⁶ The obligation to distinguish at all times between the civilian population and combatants and to direct attacks only against military objectives²⁸⁷ (the principle of distinction) therefore generally prohibits attacks against members of the law-enforcement agencies. In its Advisory Opinion of 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, the International Court of Justice recognized the principle of distinction as an “intransgressible” principle of customary international law.

431. There are three situations in which direct attacks against members of police forces would not constitute a violation of the principle of distinction. First, if the law-enforcement agency or the unit to which the policeman belongs has been “incorporated” into the armed forces, thus conferring combatant status upon its members. Second, if individual members of the law-enforcement agency are at the same time members of an armed group, they would be combatants.²⁸⁸ Thirdly, individual members of the law-enforcement agency, like any civilians, ²⁸⁵ Article 43 (3) of Additional Protocol I provides: “Whenever a party to a conflict incorporates a paramilitary or armed law enforcement agency into its armed forces it shall so notify the other parties to the conflict.”

²⁸⁶ “The operation in Gaza...” (para. 238) states that “whereas members of a civilian police force that is solely a civilian police force, who have no combat function are not considered combatants under the Law of Armed Conflict, international law recognizes that this principle does not apply where police are part of the armed forces of a party.”

²⁸⁷ Article 48 of Additional Protocol I expresses the principle in the following terms:

In order to ensure respect for and protection of the civilian population and civilian objects, the Parties to the conflict shall at all times distinguish between the civilian population and combatants and between civilian objects and military objectives and accordingly shall direct their operations only against military objectives.

²⁸⁸ The ICRC Commentary to Additional Protocol I argues that “any interpretation which would allow combatants as meant in article 43 to “demobilize” at will in order to return to their status as civilians and to take up their status as combatants once again, as the situation changes or as military operations may require, would have the effect of cancelling any progress that this article has achieved. ... [Article 44] does not allow this combatant to have the status of a combatant while he is in action, and the status of a civilian at other times” (pp. 515-516).

may not be targeted “unless and for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities.”²⁸⁹ Finally, as with civilians generally, policemen might be indirectly injured or killed in an attack which is directed at a military objective, as long as the attack complies with the principle of proportionality.

(b) Conclusion

432. The Mission will now draw conclusions with regard to each of these grounds potentially justifying the attacks against the police.

433. First, as already noted above, the Mission finds that there is insufficient information to conclude that the Gaza police as a whole had been “incorporated” into the armed forces of the Gaza authorities. Accordingly, the policemen killed cannot be considered to have been combatants by virtue of their membership in the police.

434. Second, the Mission finds that the policemen killed on 27 December 2008 cannot be said to have been taking a direct part in hostilities. Thus, they did not lose their civilian immunity from direct attack as civilians on this ground.²⁹⁰

435. Third, the Mission examined whether the attacks on the police stations could be justified on the basis that there were, allegedly, members of Palestinian armed groups among the policemen. The question would thus be one of proportionality. The principle of proportionality is reflected in Additional Protocol I, which prohibits launching attacks “which may be expected to cause incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians, damage to civilian objects, or a combination thereof, which would be excessive in relation to the concrete and direct military advantage anticipated.”²⁹¹

²⁸⁹ Pursuant to article 51 (3) of Additional Protocol I, civilians enjoy immunity from attack “unless and for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities.” According to ICRC, this rule also reflects customary international law: “Civilians are protected against attack unless and for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities” (rule 6). Customary International Humanitarian Law.... The Mission is aware that Israel is not a party to Additional Protocol I and reportedly does not accept the qualifying phrase “and for such time” as reflective of customary law (see Y. Dinstein, “The ICRC customary international humanitarian law study”, Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, vol. 36 (2006), p. 11). In its report on the military operations, the Government of Israel refers to a definition of direct participation in hostilities by Israel’s High Court of Justice as “involving all persons that perform the function of combatants, including “a civilian bearing arms (openly or concealed) who is on his way to the place where he will use them against the army, at such place, or on his way back from it,” as well as “a person who collected intelligence on the army, whether on issues regarding the hostilities ... or beyond those issues...; a person who transports unlawful combatants to or from the place where the hostilities are taking place; a person who operates weapons which unlawful combatants use, or supervises their operation, or provides service to them, be the distance from the battlefield as it may.” (“The operation in Gaza...”, para. 120).

The Mission is of the view that, for the purposes of the legal analysis of the attacks on the police stations considered here, it is not decisive whether the rule binding Israel is that “civilians are protected against attack unless and for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities” or only “unless they take direct part in hostilities”.

²⁹⁰ This finding does not apply to those policemen who were members of al-Qassam Brigades, who were therefore combatants and not civilians.

²⁹¹ Israel recognizes that “customary international law bars military attacks that are anticipated to harm civilians excessively in relation to the expected military advantage.” “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 120.

436. The Mission has earlier accepted that there may be individual members of the Gaza police that were at the same time members of al-Qassam Brigades or other Palestinian armed groups and thus combatants. Even if the Israeli armed forces had reliable information that some individual members of the police were also members of armed groups, this did not deprive the whole police force of its status as a civilian law-enforcement agency.²⁹²

437. From the facts available to it, the Mission finds that the deliberate killing of 99 members of the police at the police headquarters and three police stations²⁹³ during the first minutes of the military operations, while they were engaged in civilian tasks inside civilian police facilities, constitutes an attack which failed to strike an acceptable balance between the direct military advantage anticipated (i.e. the killing of those policemen who may have been members of Palestinian armed groups) and the loss of civilian life (i.e. the other policemen killed and members of the public who would inevitably have been present or in the vicinity). The attacks on the Arafat City police headquarters and the Abbas Street police station, al-Tuffah police station and the Deir al-Balah investigative police station constituted disproportionate attacks in violation of customary international humanitarian law.

438. From the facts available to it, the Mission further believes that there has been a violation of the inherent right to life of those members of the police killed in the attacks of 27 December 2007 who were not members of armed groups by depriving them arbitrarily of their life in violation of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

VIII. OBLIGATION ON PALESTINIAN ARMED GROUPS IN GAZA TO TAKE FEASIBLE PRECAUTIONS TO PROTECT THE CIVILIAN POPULATION

439. An assessment of the events occurring during the military operations in Gaza in December 2008 - January 2009 requires an investigation of the tactics used both by the Israeli armed forces and by the Palestinian armed groups in the context of their obligations under international humanitarian law to take constant care to minimize the risk of harm to the civilian population and to civilian objects. The Mission examines the extent to which the Israeli armed forces took all feasible precautions in chapter IX, as well as in the examination of individual incidents. In this chapter, the Mission examines allegations that the conduct of the Palestinian armed groups placed the civilian population of Gaza and civilian objects at risk of attack.

440. In its efforts to gather more direct information on the subject, during its investigations in Gaza and in interviews with victims and witnesses of incidents and other informed individuals, the Mission raised questions regarding the conduct of Palestinian armed groups during the hostilities in Gaza. The Mission notes that those interviewed in Gaza appeared reluctant to speak about the presence of or conduct of hostilities by the Palestinian armed groups. Whatever the ²⁹² “The presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character” (Additional Protocol I, art. 50 (3)).

²⁹³ These are the policemen killed at the police headquarters and police stations visited by the Mission. The overall number of policemen killed on 27 December 2008 is around 180, according to the Orient Research Group Ltd. See “Fatal casualties...”.

reasons for their reluctance, the Mission does not discount that the interviewees' reluctance may have stemmed from a fear of reprisals.²⁹⁴

441. The Mission also addressed questions regarding the tactics used by Palestinian armed groups to the Gaza authorities. They responded that they had nothing to do, directly or indirectly, with al-Qassam Brigades or other armed groups and had no knowledge of their tactics.²⁹⁵ To gather first-hand information on the matter, the Mission requested a meeting with representatives of armed groups. However, the groups were not agreeable to such a meeting. The Mission, consequently, had little option but to rely upon indirect sources to a greater extent than for other parts of its investigation.

442. In forming an opinion on the subject, the Mission did use information it had gathered in the course of investigating certain incidents during the December-January military operations. However, the Mission mostly reviewed the allegations made in reports by the Government of Israel, by private individuals and organizations,²⁹⁶ and by NGOs.²⁹⁷

443. The Mission focused on allegations that Palestinian fighters had launched attacks from within civilian areas and from protected sites (such as schools, mosques and medical units); used civilian and protected sites as bases for military activity; misused medical facilities and ambulances; stored weapons in mosques; failed to distinguish themselves from the civilian population and, in so doing, used the Gazan civilian population as a shield against Israeli attack. The Mission further sought information concerning allegations that Palestinian armed groups had booby-trapped civilian property.²⁹⁸

444. The significance of these allegations is twofold. First, the alleged conduct might constitute a violation by the Palestinian armed groups of their obligation of care to prevent harm to the civilian population or the prohibition against the deliberate use of civilians to shield from military activity. Second, the Government of Israel and others argue that certain attacks by Israeli armed forces on civilian objects or protected sites were justified by the unlawful use that Palestinian armed groups made of them. In the words of a report by the Israeli armed forces on its shelling of a United Nations compound in which at least 600 Palestinian civilians had taken refuge, such attacks were “the unfortunate result of the type of warfare that Hamas forced upon ²⁹⁴ See chap. XX.

²⁹⁵ Response of the Gaza authorities to the Mission.

²⁹⁶ Submissions to the Mission by the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs, B'nai Brith International, Take A Pen, the National Lawyers Guild, Mr. Maurice Ostroff, Ms. Yvonne Green and Mr. Peter Wertheim on behalf of a group of Australian lawyers.

²⁹⁷ For example, Amnesty International, Israel/Gaza: Operation “Cast Lead”: 22 days of death and destruction, (London, 2009); International Crisis Group, “Gaza’s unfinished business”, Middle East Report, No. 85, 23 April 2009; Human Rights Watch, Rockets from Gaza: Harm to Civilians from Palestinian Armed Groups’ Rocket Attacks, (August 2009).

²⁹⁸ “The operation in Gaza...”, pp. 55-76. The Mission understands the criticisms made by the Government of Israel to Hamas’ tactics to apply also to other Palestinian armed groups.

the IDF, involving combat in the Gaza Strip's urban spaces and adjacent to facilities associated with international organizations.”²⁹⁹

445. The Mission will address the justifications put forward by the Government of Israel for attacks on protected sites that it alleged were being used by Palestinian armed groups and that are investigated in this report.

A. Launching attacks from within civilian areas and from within or in the immediate vicinity of protected sites

446. The Mission investigated two incidents in which the Government of Israel alleged that Palestinian combatants had fired on the Israeli armed forces from within a United Nations protected site or its immediate vicinity in densely populated urban areas. In the case of the shelling in al-Fakhura Street by the Israeli armed forces on 6 January 2009 (chap. X), the Mission accepted, on the basis of information in the reports it had seen, the possibility of mortar attacks from Palestinian combatants in the vicinity of the school.

447. In the incident at the UNRWA compound in the neighbourhood of Rimal, in the centre of Gaza City, senior international UNRWA staff indicate that they were unaware of any sustained fire at the relevant time from anywhere in the nearby areas (chap. IX). In that case the Mission was unable to make a finding as to whether any combat activity was being conducted by Palestinian armed groups against the Israeli armed forces in that area at that time.

448. The Mission spoke with two witnesses who testified to the launching of rockets from urban areas. One witness stated seeing rockets being launched from a narrow street and from a square in Gaza City without providing further details as to when this occurred.³⁰⁰ A second witness told the Mission that rockets may have been fired from within the Sheikh Radwan neighbourhood north of Gaza City during the military operations in Gaza.³⁰¹

449. The Mission found corroboration of these witness accounts in a number of reports from international NGOs. In reports issued following Israel's military operations in Gaza, Amnesty International, the International Crisis Group and Human Rights Watch each determined that the rocket units of the Palestinian armed groups operated from within populated areas.³⁰² Human Rights Watch and the International Crisis Group gathered reports from civilians about instances in which armed groups had launched or had attempted to launch rockets near residential areas. Human Rights Watch quoted a resident of northern Gaza as stating that, on 1 January 2009, residents of the area prevented Palestinian fighters, who they believed were preparing to launch ²⁹⁹ <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/opcast/postop/press/2202.htm>. According to the Israeli Government, “when a party to an armed conflict uses civilian and protected spaces for military purposes, those spaces become legitimate targets for the opposing side, thereby placing civilian lives and infrastructure in great danger” (“The operation in Gaza...”, para. 153).

³⁰⁰ Mission interview with RA/01, June 2009.

³⁰¹ Mission interview with RA/02, June 2009.

³⁰² Israel/Gaza: Operation “Cast Lead”: 22 days..., pp.74–75; “Gaza’s unfinished business...”, p. 3; Rockets from Gaza..., p. 21.

rockets, from entering a garden next to the building in which they lived.³⁰³ The International Crisis Group interviewed a resident of Beit Lahia who stated that fighters used his land to fire rockets, which he did not dare to resist, as his father had previously been shot in the leg by a member of such an armed group when he had tried to prevent them from using his land as a rocket launching site.³⁰⁴ Amnesty International conducted interviews with residents of Gaza who stated that they had observed Palestinian fighters firing a rocket from a courtyard of a Government school in Gaza City at a time when the schools were closed. In another area of Gaza City, another resident reportedly showed an Amnesty International researcher a place from which a rocket had been launched, 50 metres from a residential building.³⁰⁵ Amnesty International also reported, however, that it had seen no evidence that rockets had been launched from residential houses or buildings while civilians were still in them.

450. Both the International Crisis Group and Human Rights Watch found that the practice of firing close to or within populated areas became more prevalent as the Israeli armed forces took control of the more open or outlying areas.³⁰⁶

451. The Mission reviewed the pictures allegedly showing the launching of rockets “from within or near residential buildings, including schools, mosques and hospitals” in the Israeli Government’s paper³⁰⁷ and in several of the submissions it received.³⁰⁸ The Mission notes that it is not reasonably possible to determine whether those photographs show what is alleged. As the Israeli Government concedes,³⁰⁹ many of them refer not to the December 2008-January 2009 period, but to previous alleged instances of firing of rockets from Gaza.³¹⁰

452. In view of the information communicated to it and the material it was able to review, the Mission believes that there are indications that Palestinian armed groups launched rockets from urban areas. In those instances in which Palestinian armed groups did indeed fire rockets or mortars from urban areas the question remains whether this was done with the specific intent of shielding the combatants from counter-attack. The Mission has not been able to obtain any direct evidence on this question; nor do reports from other observers provide a clear answer.

453. According to the International Crisis Group, for instance, a fighter for Islamic Jihad stated in an interview that “the most important thing is achieving our military goals. We stay away from the houses if we can, but that’s often impossible”, which suggests the absence of intent. The same NGO also reports an interview with three Palestinian combatants in January 2009 in ³⁰³ Rockets from Gaza..., p. 22.

³⁰⁴ “Gaza’s unfinished business...”, p. 3, footnote 29.

³⁰⁵ Israel/Gaza: Operation “Cast Lead”: 22 days..., p. 74.

³⁰⁶ Rockets from Gaza..., p. 21; “Gaza’s unfinished business...”, p. 3.

³⁰⁷ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 155.

³⁰⁸ See, for instance, submission to the Mission by Mr. Maurice Ostroff.

³⁰⁹ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 155.

³¹⁰ The following video, referred to in a submission to the Mission by B’nai B’rith International, appears to show the launching of rockets from within an urban area, allegedly from within a school, on 8 January 2009:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=UN9WzUc7iB0>

which the fighters reportedly stated that rockets and mortars were launched in close proximity to homes and alleyways “in the hope that nearby civilians would deter Israel from responding”.³¹¹

454. The Mission now turns to the related but distinct question of whether and to what extent Palestinian armed groups made use of residential housing and of protected sites, such as schools, hospitals, mosques and United Nations facilities, in their engagements with Israeli ground forces.

455. The Mission also examined the question of the presence and activities of members of Palestinian armed groups in chapter XI. As already mentioned, Palestinian witnesses were generally reluctant to speak to the Mission about the activity of Palestinian armed groups in their neighbourhoods. For the present purposes, it suffices to say that, in some of the cases, there was evidence of the presence of Palestinian armed groups in residential areas.³¹²

456. The Mission received a submission from a colonel of the reserve of the Israeli armed forces that seeks to illuminate the “combat principles” of Palestinian armed groups. His report is based on material published by Palestinian armed groups on their websites. The report describes alleged tactics such as “seizing houses as military positions for the purpose of staging ambushes against IDF forces” and “deploying explosive charges of various types (IEDs, penetrating, bounding, anti personnel etc.) in the vicinity of residences and detonating them”, “booby-trapping houses ... and detonating the charges”, and “conducting fighting and sniper fire at IDF forces operating in the built-up areas”.³¹³

457. This submission provides useful information. It tends to show, for instance, that ground engagements between Israeli forces and Palestinian armed groups were most intense in areas of mixed urban-rural character on the outskirts of Gaza City, Jabaliyah and Beit Lahia.

458. The Mission notes, however, that the one incident described in the submission which it has investigated itself illustrates the unreliability of some of the sources the report relies on. In this incident, the source claimed that three Palestinian combatants had laid an ambush in a house in Izbet Abd Rabbo, hurled explosives at the Israeli armed forces and managed to drag a wounded Israeli soldier into the house. From the facts it has itself gathered, the Mission can exclude that in this incident the Palestinian combatants managed to capture an Israeli soldier. This example suggests that some websites of Palestinian armed groups might magnify the extent to which Palestinians successfully attacked Israeli forces in urban areas.

459. Other sources reviewed by the Mission confirm scepticism about the intensity of attacks on the Israeli armed forces by Palestinian armed groups in built-up areas. The Mission notes that a thread running through many of the Israeli soldiers’ testimonies collected by the Israeli NGO Breaking the Silence is that they had no encounters with Palestinian combatants.³¹⁴ According to another NGO report, “ Hamas fighters plainly were frustrated by their inability to engage in street

³¹¹ “Gaza’s unfinished business...”, p. 3.

³¹² See the case of Majdi Abd Rabbo in chapter XIV.

³¹³ “The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties...”, pp. 1-2 and 20.

³¹⁴ Soldiers’ Testimonies..., testimony 34, p. 76, and Rabin Academy testimonies.

battles”.³¹⁵ Generally, the Mission received relatively few reports of actual crossfire between the Israeli armed forces and Palestinian armed groups. This would also appear to be reflected in the low number of Israeli soldiers killed or injured during the ground offensive.³¹⁶ The Mission also notes that in none of the incidents it investigated was there any indication that civilians were killed in crossfire between Palestinian armed groups and the Israeli armed forces.

460. While the Mission is unable to form an opinion on the exact nature or the intensity of combat activities carried out by the armed groups in urban residential areas that would have placed the civilian population and civilian objects at risk of attack, their presence in these areas as combatants is established from the information that has come to the attention of the Mission.

B. Booby-trapping of civilian houses

461. In chapter XIV the Mission will report on different incidents in which witnesses have described the circumstances in which they had been used by the Israeli armed forces during house searches and forced at gunpoint to enter houses ahead of the Israeli soldiers. These witnesses testified that they had been used in this way to enter several houses. None of them encountered a booby trap or other improvised explosive devices during the house searches. The Mission is also mindful of other incidents it has investigated that involved entry into civilian houses by Israeli soldiers in different areas in Gaza. None of these incidents showed the use of booby traps.

462. The Mission, however, recalls the allegations levelled in the reports that it has reviewed. The Government of Israel alleges that Hamas planted booby traps in “homes, roads, schools and even entire neighbourhoods”. It adds, “in essence, the Hamas strategy was to transform the urban areas of the Gaza Strip into a massive death trap for IDF forces, in gross disregard for the safety of the civilian population.”³¹⁷ The Mission notes that the existence of booby-trapped houses is mentioned in testimonies of Israeli soldiers collected by Breaking the Silence. One soldier recounts witnessing the detonation of a powerful explosion inside a house as a bulldozer approached it. A second soldier stated “many explosive charges were found, they also blew up, no one was hurt. Tank Corps or Corps of Engineers units blew them up. Usually they did not explode because most of the ones we found were wired and had to be detonated, but whoever was supposed to detonate them had run off. It was live, however, ready...”.³¹⁸ Also the reports published by Palestinian armed groups, on which the submission to the Mission on the tactics of Palestinian combatants by the Jerusalem Centre for Public Affairs is based, suggest that booby-

³¹⁵ According to the International Crisis Group, Hamas “tried to draw Israeli troops into densely populated urban areas, especially Hamas strongholds that had been prepared for counter-attack. A fighter described battles as a lethal ‘game of hide and seek’ in which Israel sought to lure fighters into open space, while Hamas attempted to bring Israeli troops onto their preferred terrain. The soldiers refused the bait, Hamas fighters plainly were frustrated by their inability to engage in street battles.” (“Gaza’s unfinished business...”, p. 3).

³¹⁶ Israeli armed forces reportedly lost 10 soldiers in combat between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009, with dozens of soldiers wounded. Four of the Israeli dead appear to have been killed by friendly fire (Cordesman, op. cit., p. 57).

³¹⁷ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras 181.

³¹⁸ Soldiers’ testimonies..., testimony 20, p. 48, and testimony 23, p. 54.

trapped civilian houses were a frequently used tactic.³¹⁹ According to the Israeli Government, “because roads and buildings were often mined, IDF forces had to target them to protect themselves”.³²⁰

463. While, in the light of the above reports, the Mission does not discount the use of booby traps by the Palestinian armed groups, it has no basis to conclude that civilian lives were put at risk, as none of the reports record the presence of civilians in or near the houses in which booby traps are alleged to have been set.

C. Use of mosques to launch attacks against the Israeli armed forces or to store weapons

464. The Israeli Government alleges that “ Hamas abused the protection accorded to places of worship, making a practice of storing weapons in mosques”. This assertion is supported by pictures of Israeli soldiers in a room amid weaponry, including anti-tank weapons, which are alleged to have been taken upon discovery of a weapons cache in a Jabaliyah mosque during the military operations.³²¹ The Mission notes that Israeli soldiers speaking at the Rabin Academy “Fighters’ Talk” recount coming under fire from Palestinian combatants positioned in a mosque.³²²

465. Although the Mission was not able to investigate the allegation of the use of mosques generally by Palestinian groups for storing weapons, it did investigate the incident of a missile attack by the Israeli armed forces against al-Maqadmah mosque on the outskirts of Jabaliyah camp, in which at least 15 people were killed and 40 injured on 3 January 2009 (see chap. XI). The Mission found no evidence that this mosque was used for the storage of weapons or any military activity by Palestinian armed groups. As far as this mosque is concerned, therefore, the Mission found no basis for such an allegation. However, the Mission is unable to make a determination regarding the allegation in general nor with respect to any other mosque that was attacked by the Israeli armed forces during the military operations.

D. Misuse of medical facilities and ambulances

1. Use of hospitals for military purposes

466. The Government of Israel alleges that

Hamas systematically used medical facilities, vehicles and uniforms as cover for terrorist operations, in clear violation of the Law of Armed Conflict. This included the extensive use of ambulances bearing the protective emblems of the Red Cross and ³¹⁹ See “The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties...”.

³²⁰ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras 184. On the destruction of civilian houses by the Israeli armed forces, see chap. XIII.

³²¹ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 164. The Mission notes that there is no mention of which mosque in Jabaliyah the pictures allegedly refer to nor of the date on which the weapons cache was found and the pictures taken.

³²² “Fighters’ Talk” testimonies, pp. 4-5.

Crescent ... and the use of hospitals and medical infrastructure as headquarters, situation rooms, command centres and hiding places.³²³

467. As described in detail in chapter IX, the Mission investigated the attacks against al-Quds hospital in Tal el-Hawa, one of the hospitals which were allegedly used for military purposes by Palestinian armed groups. This hospital was directly hit by white phosphorous shells and at least one high explosive shell on 15 January 2009. The Mission conducted extensive interviews with al-Quds hospital staff and others who were in the area at the time of the attack and concluded that it was unlikely that there was any armed presence in any of the hospital buildings at that time. The Mission also investigated the attacks against al-Wafa Hospital in eastern Gaza City. As in the case of al-Quds hospital, after hearing credible testimony from doctors at that hospital, the Mission excluded the possibility that there were combatants inside the hospital at the time of the attack. However, the Mission did not make any findings with respect to the possible presence of Palestinian combatants in the surroundings of the hospital.

468. In its report, the Government of Israel states that Hamas used two units and a ground-floor wing of al-Shifa hospital, the largest in the Gaza Strip, as a military base.³²⁴ As its sources, it cites an interview with a “Hamas activist” captured by Israel and an Italian newspaper article,³²⁵ which in turn bases this assertion on a single anonymous source. The Mission did not investigate the case of al-Shifa hospital and is not in a position to make any finding with regard to these allegations.

469. On the basis of the investigations it has conducted, the Mission did not find any evidence to support the allegations made by the Israeli Government.

2. Ambulances

470. The Government of Israel alleges that “Hamas made particular use of ambulances, which frequently served as an escape route out of a heated battle with IDF forces.”³²⁶

471. The Mission investigated cases in which ambulances were denied access to wounded Palestinians. Three cases in particular are described in chapter XI: the attempts of the Palestinian Red Crescent Society (PRCS) to evacuate the wounded from the al-Samouni neighbourhood south of Gaza City after the attack on the house of Ateya al-Samouni and after the shelling of the house of Wa’el al-Samouni; the attempt of an ambulance driver to rescue the daughters of Khalid and Kawthar Abd Rabbo in Izbat Abd Rabbo; and the attempt of an ambulance driver to evacuate Rouhiyah al-Najjar after she had been hit by an Israeli sniper. In all three cases the Mission found, on the facts it gathered, that the Israeli armed forces must have known that there were no combatants among the people to be rescued or in the immediate vicinity.

³²³ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 171.

³²⁴ Ibid., para. 172. “Ismail Haniyeh, the head of Hamas in the Gaza Strip, located his Southern Command centre in one of the Shifa Hospital units, while the senior leaders of Hamas stationed themselves in another unit.”

³²⁵ Corriere della Serra, “Così i ragazzini di Hamas ci hanno utilizzato come bersagli”, 21 January 2009.

³²⁶ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 176.

472. The Mission is aware of an interview reportedly given by an ambulance driver to an Australian newspaper, in which he describes how Palestinian combatants unsuccessfully tried to force him to evacuate them from a house in which they were apparently trapped. The same driver reportedly told the journalist that “ Hamas made several attempts to hijack the ambulance fleet of al-Quds Hospital”. He also describes how the PRCS ambulance teams managed to avert this misuse of ambulances. According to this report, relied on by the Israeli Government, the attempts of Palestinian combatants to exploit ambulances as shield for military operations were not successful in the face of the courageous resistance of the PRCS staff members.³²⁷

473. This is consistent with the statements of representatives of the Palestinian Red Crescent Society in Gaza who, in interviews with the Mission, denied that their ambulances were used at any time by Palestinian combatants. Finally, in a submission to the Mission, Magen David Adom stated that “there was no use of PRCS ambulances for the transport of weapons or ammunition ... [and] there was no misuse of the emblem by PRCS.”³²⁸

474. While it is not possible to say that no attempts were ever made by any armed groups to use ambulances during the military operations, the Mission has substantial material from the investigations it conducted and the enquiries it made to convince it that, if any ambulances were used by Palestinian armed groups, it would have been the exception, not the rule. None of the ambulance drivers that were directly interviewed by the Mission reported any attempt by the armed groups to use the ambulances for any ulterior purpose. Moreover, of the ambulance staff members and their volunteer assistants that were killed or injured in the course of their duties, none was a member of any armed groups, so far as the Mission is aware.

E. Forcing civilians to remain in an area for the specific purpose of sheltering that area or forces in that area from attack

475. As discussed in more detail in other parts of the report, the Mission asked numerous witnesses in Gaza why they had stayed in their homes in spite of the shelling, bombing and Israeli ground invasion. They stated that they had decided to stay put either because they had experienced previous incursions and, based on past experience, did not think they would be at risk as long as they remained indoors³²⁹ or because they had no safe place to go.³³⁰ In addition, some witnesses stated that they had chosen to stay because they wished to watch over their homes and property.³³¹ The Mission did not find any evidence of civilians being forced to remain in their houses by Palestinian armed groups.

³²⁷ Ibid., para. 177-179.

³²⁸ Communication by Magen David Adom to the Mission, 9 August 2009. Magen David Adom is Israel’s national emergency medical, disaster, ambulance and blood bank service. It is a member of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and has a long-standing cooperation with the Palestinian Red Crescent Society. That no PRCS ambulances had been used to transport weapons or fighters was also stated forcefully by a Magen David Adom representative to representatives of the Mission in Geneva on 22 July 2009.

³²⁹ Mission interview with Khaled Abd Rabbo.

³³⁰ See chap. IX.

³³¹ Interview with Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa, 3 June 2009 (see chap. XIV on the case of Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa).

476. The Mission's attention has been drawn to a well-known incident in which women and children followed calls to gather on the roof of the house of a Palestinian man who had been informed by the Israeli authorities that his house would be targeted. This incident has been documented in video footage in the public domain³³² and is referred to in submissions received by the Mission as evidence of the use of human shields. The Mission notes, however, that the incident occurred in 2007. No such incidents are alleged by the Israeli Government with regard to the military operations that began on 27 December 2008. The Mission received no reports of such incidents from other sources. On the contrary, in one case investigated by the Mission,³³³ a Hamas official received a phone call from the Israeli armed forces to the effect that his house would soon be targeted. He evacuated the house with his family and alerted the neighbours to the imminent threat so that they, too, were able to leave their homes before the missile did indeed strike.

477. The Mission is also aware of the public statement by Mr. Fathi Hammad, a Hamas member of the Palestinian Legislative Council, on 29 February 2009, which is adduced as evidence of Hamas' use of human shields. Mr. Hammad reportedly stated that ... the Palestinian people has developed its [methods] of death seeking. For the Palestinian people, death became an industry, at which women excel and so do all people on this land: the elderly excel, the mujahideen excel and the children excel. Accordingly, [Hamas] created a human shield of women, children, the elderly and the mujahideen, against the Zionist bombing machine.³³⁴

478. Although the Mission finds this statement morally repugnant, it does not consider it to constitute evidence that Hamas forced Palestinian civilians to shield military objectives against attack. The Government of Israel has not identified any such cases.

F. Mingling with the civilian population to shield combatants against attack

479. When military operations take place in areas in which civilians are present, the importance of military dress and distinctive signs to distinguish combatants from civilians is all the greater. The Mission notes that only one of the incidents it investigated clearly involved the presence of Palestinian combatants. In that incident, the witness told the Mission that three fighters trapped in his neighbour's house were "wearing military camouflage and headbands of the al-Qassam Brigades".³³⁵

480. Reports on the military operations by NGOs suggest that in general members of Palestinian armed groups did not wear military uniforms. One report states that after the destruction caused by the Israeli air strikes at the start of the military operations, members of al-

³³² See <http://switch3.castup.net/cunet/gm.asp?ai=58&ar=StandingOnRoof-V&ak=null>.

³³³ See the case of Mr. Abu Askar in chapter X.

³³⁴ "The operation in Gaza...", para. 186. A video recording of this speech is available at <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ArJbn-IUCh4>.

³³⁵ See the case of Mr. Majdi Abd Rabbo in chapter XIV.

Qassam Brigades abandoned military dress and patrolled streets “in civilian clothes”.³³⁶ A second report states that members of the Palestinian armed groups “also mixed with the civilian population, although this would be difficult to avoid in the small and overcrowded Gaza Strip, and there is no evidence that they did so with the intent of shielding themselves”.³³⁷

481. Finally, on this issue, it is relevant to mention that the Israeli Government has produced no visual or other evidence to support its allegation that Palestinian combatants “mingle routinely with civilians in order to cover their movements”.³³⁸

G. Factual findings

482. On the basis of the information it gathered, the Mission finds that there are indications that Palestinian armed groups launched rockets from urban areas. The Mission has not been able to obtain any direct evidence that this was done with the specific intent of shielding the rocket launchers from counterstrikes by the Israeli armed forces. The Mission also notes, however, that Palestinian armed groups do not appear to have given Gaza residents sufficient warning of their intention to launch rockets from their neighbourhoods to allow them to leave and protect themselves against Israeli strikes at the rocket launching sites. The Mission notes that, in any event, given the densely populated character of the northern half of the Gaza Strip, once Israeli forces gained control of the more open or outlying areas during the first days of the ground invasion, most -- if not all -- locations still accessible to Palestinian armed groups were in urban areas.

483. The Mission finds that the presence of Palestinian armed fighters in urban residential areas during the military operations is established. On the basis of the information it gathered, the Mission is unable to form an opinion on the exact nature or the intensity of their combat activities in urban residential areas that would have placed the civilian population and civilian objects at risk of attack. While reports reviewed by the Mission credibly indicate that members of Palestinian armed groups were not always dressed in a way that distinguished them from civilians, the Mission found no evidence that Palestinian combatants mingled with the civilian population with the intention of shielding themselves from attack.³³⁹

484. From the information it gathered, the Mission does not discount the use of booby traps by the Palestinian armed groups. The Mission has no basis to conclude that civilian lives were put at risk, since none of the reports records the presence of civilians in or near the houses that were allegedly booby-trapped.

³³⁶ “Gaza’s unfinished business...”, p. 8. This report also appears to suggest that members of al-Qassam Brigades were at least in part engaged in law enforcement and internal security functions rather than in combat with the Israeli armed forces.

³³⁷ Israel/Gaza: Operation “Cast Lead”: 22 days...

³³⁸ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 186.

³³⁹ It has also been reported that specialist Israeli troops operated in Gaza during the military operations in civilian attire to liaise with informants and as francs-tireurs; Jane’s Sentinel Services, Country Risk Assessments – Israel, 30 January 2009.

485. On the basis of its own investigations and statements by United Nations officials, the Mission excludes that Palestinian armed groups engaged in combat activities from United Nations facilities that were used as shelters during the military operations. The Mission cannot discount the possibility that Palestinian armed groups were active in the vicinity of such facilities.

486. The Mission is unable to make any determination on the general allegation that Palestinian armed groups used mosques for military purposes. It notes that, in the one incident it investigated of an Israeli attack on a mosque, it found no indication that the mosque was so used.

487. On the basis of the investigations it has conducted, the Mission did not find any evidence to support the allegations that hospital facilities were used by the Gaza authorities or by Palestinian armed groups to shield military activities and that ambulances were used to transport combatants or for other military purposes.

488. On the basis of the information it gathered, the Mission found no indication that the civilian population was forced by Hamas or Palestinian armed groups to remain in areas under attack from the Israeli armed forces.

H. Legal findings

489. Customary international humanitarian law establishes that all “parties to the conflict must take all feasible precautions to protect the civilian population and civilian objects under their control against the effects of attacks.”³⁴⁰

490. Each party to the conflict must, to the extent feasible, avoid locating military objectives within or near densely populated areas.³⁴¹ Each party to the conflict must, to the extent feasible, remove civilian persons and objects under its control from the vicinity of military objectives.³⁴²

491. These rules of customary international law are reflected in article 57 (1) of Additional Protocol I: “In the conduct of military operations, constant care shall be taken to spare the civilian population, civilians and civilian objects.” The following paragraphs of article 57 set forth the specific precautions to be taken by a party launching an attack.³⁴³

492. In addition to the general duty to take constant care to spare the civilian population in the conduct of military operations, international humanitarian law establishes a specific prohibition against the use of civilians as human shields. Article 28 of the Fourth Geneva Convention specifically addresses this issue: “The presence of a protected person may not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations”. This is reinforced by article 51 (7) of Additional Protocol I:

³⁴⁰ Customary International Humanitarian Law..., rule 22.

³⁴¹ Ibid., rule 23.

³⁴² Ibid., rule 24.

³⁴³ See chap. IX.

The presence or movements of the civilian population or individual civilians shall not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations, in particular in attempts to shield military objectives from attacks or to shield, favour or impede military operations. The Parties to the conflict shall not direct the movement of the civilian population or individual civilians in order to attempt to shield military objectives from attacks or to shield military operations.

These provisions reflect rules of customary law.³⁴⁴

493. The Mission finds it useful to clarify what is meant, from a legal perspective, by using civilians or a civilian population as a human shield. Parties to a conflict are not permitted to use a civilian population or individual civilians in order to render certain points or areas immune from military operations. It is not in dispute that both Palestinian armed groups and Israeli forces were fighting within an area populated by civilians. Fighting within civilian areas is not, by itself, sufficient for a finding that a party is using the civilian population living in the area of the fighting as a human shield. As the words of article 57 (1) show (“shall not be used to render”, “in order to attempt to shield”), an intention to use the civilian population in order to shield an area from military attack is required.

494. From the information available to it, the Mission found no evidence to suggest that Palestinian armed groups either directed civilians to areas where attacks were being launched or forced civilians to remain within the vicinity of the attacks.

495. The reports received by the Mission suggest that it is likely that the Palestinian armed groups did not at all times adequately distinguish themselves from the civilian population among whom the hostilities were being conducted. Their failure to distinguish themselves from the civilian population by distinctive signs is not a violation of international law in itself, but would have denied them some of the legal privileges afforded to combatants. What international law demands, however, is that those engaged in combat take all feasible precautions to protect civilians in the conduct of their hostilities. The Mission found no evidence that members of Palestinian armed groups engaged in combat in civilian dress. It can, therefore, not find a violation of the obligation not to endanger the civilian population in this respect.

496. The conduct of hostilities in built-up areas does not, of itself, constitute a violation of international law. However, launching attacks - whether of rockets and mortars at the population of southern Israel or at the Israeli armed forces inside Gaza - close to civilian or protected buildings constitutes a failure to take all feasible precautions. In cases where this occurred, the Palestinian armed groups would have unnecessarily exposed the civilian population of Gaza to the inherent dangers of the military operations taking place around them. This would have constituted a violation of the customary rules of international humanitarian law referred to above. It would also have constituted a violation of the right to life and physical integrity of the civilians thereby endangered.

497. Although the situations investigated by the Mission did not establish the use of mosques for military purposes or to shield military activities, the Mission cannot exclude that this might have occurred in other cases. As far as hospitals and United Nations facilities are concerned, the Mission found that it could not exclude that Palestinian armed groups engaged in combat activities in the vicinity of these protected sites. The Mission wishes to emphasize that the launching of attacks from or in the vicinity of civilian buildings and protected areas are serious violations of the obligation on the armed groups to take constant care to protect civilians from the inherent dangers created by military operations.

³⁴⁴ Customary International Humanitarian Law..., rule 97.

498. The Mission asked the Gaza authorities to provide information on the sites from where the Palestinian armed groups had launched attacks against Israel and against the Israeli armed forces in Gaza. The Mission similarly asked whether, to their knowledge, civilian buildings and mosques had been used to store weapons. In their response, the Gaza authorities stated that they had no information on the activities of the Palestinian armed groups or about the storage of weapons in mosques and civilian buildings. The Mission does not find this response to be entirely plausible. The Mission notes, more importantly, that, whether the answer reflects the reality or not, the Gaza authorities are obliged under international law to control the activities of armed groups operating on the territory under their control.³⁴⁵ If they failed to take the necessary measures to prevent the Palestinian armed groups from endangering the civilian population by conducting hostilities in a manner incompatible with international humanitarian law, they would bear responsibility for the damage done to the civilians living in Gaza.

IX. OBLIGATION ON ISRAEL TO TAKE FEASIBLE PRECAUTIONS TO PROTECT CIVILIAN POPULATION AND CIVILIAN OBJECTS IN GAZA

499. This chapter focuses on incidents where the Mission considered compliance by Israel with its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention and customary rules of international law in relation to taking feasible precautions. In particular, it considers whether everything feasible was done to verify that objectives to be attacked were neither civilians nor civilian objects and were not subject to special protection, whether all feasible precautions were taken in respect of the choice of weapons used and whether the military advantage sought was excessive in relation to the expected loss of civilian life or civilian objects. Before entering into specific incidents, it considers the obligation to provide warnings in relation to attacks.

A. Warnings

500. The Israeli Government has stated that it took the following steps to warn the civilian population of Gaza:³⁴⁶

- The Israeli armed forces made 20,000 calls on 27 December and 10,000 on 29 December 2008;
- 300,000 warning notes were dropped over the whole of the Gaza Strip on 28 December;
- 80,000 leaflets were dropped in Rafah on 29 December;

³⁴⁵ See chap. IV.

³⁴⁶ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2009/IDF_warns_Gaza_population_7-Jan-2009.htm.

- In the context of the beginning of ground operations on 3 January, 300,000 leaflets were dropped in the entire Gaza Strip, especially in the northern and eastern parts;
- On 5 January, 300,000 leaflets were dropped in Gaza City, Khan Yunis and Rafah;
- In total some 165,000 telephone calls were made throughout the military operations;³⁴⁷
- In total some 2,500,000 leaflets were dropped.³⁴⁸

501. In addition to these measures, the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs explains that the telephone calls were both direct calls and pre-recorded messages, that it made radio broadcasts, and that it developed a practice of dropping apparently light explosives on rooftops (referred to by some as “roof-knocking”).³⁴⁹

502. The Mission has reviewed the text of several of the leaflets dropped by the Israeli armed forces and listened to all of the messages recorded on the website of the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs.³⁵⁰ It accepts that Israel dropped leaflets, made phone calls, left recorded messages and dropped smaller explosives on roofs as stated by the Israeli Government.

1. Telephone calls

503. The Mission received first-hand information about some of these methods in its interviews with witnesses in Gaza. In the report on the attack at al-Fakhura Street junction (see chap. X), the Mission notes the credible account of Mr. Abu Askar of the telephone warning he received as a result of which he was able to evacuate up to 40 people from his and other houses. He received that call at around 1.45 a.m. and Israeli forces destroyed his house with a missile strike seven minutes later.

504. The Mission is also aware of circumstances in which telephone warnings may have caused fear and confusion. Al-Bader Flour Mills Co. (see chap. XIII) received two recorded messages indicating the mill was to be destroyed, but neither of these was acted upon. Five days later the mill was struck in the early hours of the morning with no warning whatsoever. The owners of the business and their staff suffered anxiety by having to evacuate the premises on two occasions as a result of receiving such messages when no strikes took place.

³⁴⁷ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 264.

³⁴⁸ Ibid.

³⁴⁹ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2009/IDF_warns_Gaza_population_7-Jan-2009.htm. With regard to roof-knocking, see, for instance, Cordesman, op. cit., p. 13 (the Israeli armed forces “developed small 10-20 kilogram bombs that could be used as both warning shots – sometimes referred to as knocking on the roof”...).

³⁵⁰ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2009/IDF_warns_Gaza_population_7-Jan-2009.htm.

505. Israel's Ministry of Foreign Affairs states that more than 165,000 telephone calls were made issuing warnings. The Mission has received information that there were at least two types of telephone calls. One was a direct and specific warning, as was received by Mr. Abu Askar. The other was a more generic, recorded message, such as the type received by al-Bader Flour Mills. The Mission does not know and, as far as it can determine, Israel has not indicated what proportion of the 30,000 telephone calls was pre-recorded and more generic and what proportion was specific.

2. Roof-knocking

506. The Israeli Government describes that in certain circumstances its armed forces fired “warning shots from light weapons that hit the roofs of the designated targets”—a practice referred to as roof-knocking. The Israeli Government indicates that this practice was used when it appeared that people had remained in their houses despite being given some previous warning.³⁵¹ It is not clear whether this was the only circumstance in which this method was employed. The Mission heard that in the al-Daya incident (see chap. XI) the Israeli Government claims to have made such a warning shot, albeit to the wrong house.³⁵² The Mission also saw in the Sawafeary house (see chap. XIII) that a missile had penetrated the rear of the house on the wall near the ceiling, gone through an internal wall and exited through the wall at the front of the house near the windows. At the time (around 10 p.m. on 3 January 2009) there were several family members in the house, who happened to be lying down. The Mission cannot say what size of weapon was used on this occasion, although it was sufficiently powerful to penetrate three walls, or whether it was intended as a warning.

3. Radio broadcasts and leaflet dropping

507. The radio broadcasts that the Mission listened to appeared to be generic. For example, on 3 January 2009 a radio broadcast made the following points:

- Gaza residents are welcome to receive food and medical supplies, delivered via the Rafah, Karni and Kerem Shalom passages, at the UNRWA centres throughout the Gaza Strip;
- Israel calls on the population to move to city centres for its own safety.³⁵³

This warning preceded the ground phase of the military operations. Its language clearly indicates that UNRWA centres should be regarded as places of safety and civilians may collect food from them.

³⁵¹ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 264.

³⁵² Note that a witness has indicated that an elderly man was killed when struck by a missile some 10 minutes before the al-Daya house was struck. The Mission has also noted significant doubts on the version of events presented by the Israeli Government on this case, including on the issue of the warning shot.

³⁵³ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2009/IDF_warns_Gaza_population_7-Jan-2009.htm.

508. Leaflets dropped appear to fall into a number of categories. One leaflet did not deal with attacks on a particular place but on the storage of weapons and ammunition:

To the residents of the Gaza Strip;

- The IDF will act against any movements and elements conducting terrorist activities against the residents of the State of Israel;
- The IDF will hit and destroy any building or site containing ammunition and weapons;
- As of the publication of this announcement, anyone having ammunition and/or weapons in his home is risking his life and must leave the place for the safety of his own life and that of his family;
- You have been warned.³⁵⁴

509. In some areas specific warnings were sometimes given. One example of a sufficiently specific warning is that issued to the residents of Rafah:

Because your houses are used by Hamas for military equipment smuggling and storing, the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) will attack the areas between Sea Street and till the Egyptian border...

All the Residents of the following neighbourhoods: Block O – al-Barazil neighbourhood – al-Shu'ara'- Keshta- al-Salam neighbourhood should evacuate their houses till beyond Sea Street. The evacuation enters into force from now till tomorrow at 8 a.m.

For your safety and for the safety of your children, apply this notice.³⁵⁵

4. Factual findings

510. Whether a warning is deemed to be effective is a complex matter depending on the facts and circumstances prevailing at the time, the availability of the means for providing the warning and the evaluation of the costs to the purported military advantage.

511. Israel was in a strong position to prepare and issue effective warnings. The preparations for its military operations were “extensive and thorough.”³⁵⁶ Israel had intimate knowledge and ³⁵⁴ Ibid.

³⁵⁵ “No safe place”, report of the Independent Fact Finding Committee on Gaza presented to the League of Arab States (30 April 2009), p. 241. Note a similarly specific kind of warning issued to the residents of al-Shujaeyah (“The operation in Gaza...”, footnote 225).

³⁵⁶ Prime Minister Olmert, press conference on 27 December 2008, available at: http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Speeches+by+Israeli+leaders/2008/PM_Olmert_press_briefing_IDF_operation_Gaza_Strip_27-Dec-2008.htm.

sophisticated up-to-date intelligence in its planning. It had the means to use the landlines and mobile telephone networks. It had complete domination of Gaza's airspace. In terms of the practical capabilities of issuing warnings, it is perhaps difficult to imagine more propitious circumstances.

512. The Mission accepts that the element of surprise that was sought in the initial strikes might well have provided a degree of justification for not giving any advance notice of the time the strikes would take place or the buildings that would be struck.³⁵⁷

(a) The question of whether civilians could be expected to respond to the warnings to leave their homes

513. The Mission recognizes that leaflets dropped from the air can have some direct benefit in assisting the civilian population to get out of harm's way. The effectiveness will depend on three considerations: the clarity of the message, the credibility of the threat and the possibility of those receiving the warning taking action to escape the threat.

514. The Mission has already cited one kind of leaflet which referred to the likelihood of attacks on locations storing weapons and ammunitions. At the beginning of the land-air phase of the operations, the Israeli armed forces also dropped leaflets and made broadcasts advising people to move towards city centres.

515. There had been an intense aerial campaign from 27 December 2008 until 3 January 2009 that had seen hundreds of buildings destroyed in built-up areas of city centres. Civilians not living in city centres were being asked to leave their homes to go to places that as far as they could reasonably assess were already in much more danger than they were in their own homes. In order for the warning to be effective there had to be an objective basis to believe that they would be safer elsewhere. The Mission does not consider that such an objective evaluation could reasonably have been made by civilians in the Gaza Strip.

516. During its meetings with people in Gaza the Mission was told on several occasions of the sense that there was "nowhere to go". The nature of the attacks in the first week had caused deep shock. The widespread attacks created a dilemma not only about where to go but about whether it was safe to leave at all.

517. Even if in the minds of the Israeli armed forces it would have been safer, from 3 January onwards, for civilians to go to city centres, nothing that had happened in the preceding week could lead those civilians to the same conclusion given the widespread destruction of areas and buildings. The events that occurred in those locations after 3 January appear to support the view that going to the city centres offered little guarantee of safety.

³⁵⁷ The recognition of a legitimate element of surprise does not necessarily mean that the Mission accepts the targets chosen were legally justifiable in the circumstances. That matter is dealt with in different parts of this report.

(b) Events in the city centre after the warning to go there was issued

518. On 3 January 2009 the attack on al-Maqadmah mosque took place in a built-up area in central Jabaliyah. Three days after the 3 January warning was given to move to central locations and attend United Nations centres there was the Israeli mortar attack immediately outside a large United Nations shelter killing at least 35 people in Jabaliyah at al-Fakhura Street.³⁵⁸

519. Following the attack in al-Fakhura Street, the Director of Operations in Gaza of UNRWA, John Ging, stated in a press conference on 7 January 2009: “There is nowhere safe in Gaza. Everyone here is terrorized and traumatized.”³⁵⁹

520. On 15 January the UNRWA compound in Tal el-Hawa (Gaza City) was seriously damaged when it was struck by white phosphorous. Between 600 and 700 civilians were sheltering there at the time and were put in grave danger. The same day the nearby al-Quds hospital was struck directly by a number of missiles, including white phosphorous shells, again putting staff and patients in great danger (see sect. C below).

521. The day after the UNRWA compound was hit, John Ging repeated that what had happened there had happened throughout Gaza. He said that the United Nations and the civilian population were “all in the same boat” and that nobody could be said to be safe in Gaza.³⁶⁰

(c) The inference that those who did not go to the city centres must be combatants

522. The warning to go to city centres came at the start of the ground invasion. In the Mission’s view it was unreasonable to assume, in the circumstances, that civilians would indeed leave their homes. As a consequence, the conclusion that allegedly formed part of the logic of soldiers on the ground that those who had stayed put had to be combatants was wholly unwarranted.³⁶¹ There are many reasons why people may not have responded. In several cases the Mission heard from witnesses about people who were physically disabled, too frail or deaf so that it was difficult or impossible to respond to the warning. In other cases, as outlined above, civilians who ³⁵⁸ The Mission concludes elsewhere that this attack was indiscriminate in nature (see chap. X).

³⁵⁹ The Daily Mail, “Gaza’s darkest day: 40 die as Israel bombs ‘safe haven’ UN school”, 7 January 2009.

³⁶⁰ Press conference on humanitarian situation in Gaza (16 January 2009), available at http://www.un.org/News/briefings/docs/2009/090116_Gaza.doc.htm. See also “No safe place”, p. 74.

³⁶¹ See, for example, statements made by soldiers in a seminar in Tel Aviv: “At first we were told to break into a house... Go upstairs and shoot every person we see... The upper echelons said this was allowed because anyone remaining in this area, inside Gaza City, is incriminated, a terrorist, who did not escape.”

Transcript of seminar from Channel 10 News on file with Mission. See also Breaking the Silence, Soldiers’ Testimonies from Operation Cast Lead, Gaza 2009, available at: http://www.breakingthesilence.org.il/oferet/ENGLISH_oferet.pdf. Throughout the report soldiers indicate that the rules of engagement employed meant that no consideration was given to the idea that there may be “innocents” and that in the case of any doubt whatsoever soldiers were to shoot. (“That too was mentioned, that if we see something suspect and shoot, better to hit an innocent that hesitate to target an enemy”, p. 50; “if anything arouses our suspicion, we mustn’t hesitate because the enemy hides among civilians”, p. 51.) Note also the discussion on “wet entry” and “dry entry” (pp. 14-15. This discussion indicates that, in approaching a house, missiles, tank fire, grenades and machine gun fire would be used. This method of approach is borne out in the case of the Juha family. Family members were fired upon when congregating in a room downstairs in their house in Zeytoun. See chap. XI.

could have responded may have had legitimate reasons not to do so. The issuance of warning is one measure that should be taken wherever possible. The fact that a warning was issued does not, however, relieve a commander or his subordinates from taking all other feasible measures to distinguish between civilians and combatants.³⁶²

523. Israeli armed forces had created the circumstances in which civilians could not reasonably believe the city centres were safe. An effective warning had to make clear why, even in those circumstances, it was better for civilians to leave than to stay in their homes.

5. Israel's review

524. According to press reports,³⁶³ military sources, including representatives from the military prosecution's international law department, have agreed that more specific information, such as more accurate timetables for strikes to be carried out and escape routes, should be given in warnings. The press report goes on to say: "Fliers distributed by the IDF from now on will also be more detailed in order to make it clear to civilians that their lives are in danger and give them a chance to flee. It was also determined in the hearing that the military made multiple efforts to prevent civilian casualties in January's offensive."

525. The Mission cannot confirm if such press reports are accurate but notes two things. Firstly, any improvements in practice in this regard are to be welcomed. Secondly, the changes, if reported correctly, appear to address the matters that have been touched on in this section. Those were matters that could not be considered in any way as unforeseeable in the circumstances at the time the warnings were in fact issued. While improvements are welcome in this case, it would also appear to indicate that circumstances almost certainly permitted much better warnings to be given than was the case.

6. Legal findings

526. Chapter IV of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions addresses the issue of precautionary measures that must be taken. Article 57 (1) states that "in the conduct of military operations, constant care shall be taken to spare the civilian population, civilians and civilian objects."

527. Article 57 (2) (c) requires that "effective advance warning shall be given of attacks which may affect the civilian population, unless circumstances do not permit."

528. The Mission regards both these provisions to be norms of customary international law.³⁶⁴ In addition, Israel appears to consider itself bound by the obligation to provide effective warnings under customary law.

³⁶² Note in particular the testimony of Prof. Michael Newton to the Mission at the Geneva public hearings on 7 July 2009. See <http://www.un.org/webcast/unhrc/archive.asp?go=090707>.

³⁶³ See Ynetnews, "IDF to give better warnings before attacks", 29 September 2007.

³⁶⁴ According to ICRC, article 57 (1) codifies the principle of precautions in attack and article 57 (2) (c) is a rule of customary international law applicable to international and non-international armed conflict. Customary International Humanitarian Law..., pp. 51 and 62.

529. The determination of whether the circumstances permit a warning must be made in the context of a good-faith attempt to adhere to the underlying duty to minimize death and injury to civilians or damage to civilian objects. The key limitation on the application of the rule is if the military advantage of surprise would be undermined by giving a warning. The same calculation of proportionality has to be made here as in other circumstances. The question is whether the injury or damage done to civilians or civilian objects by not giving a warning is excessive in relation to the advantage to be gained by the element of surprise for the particular operation. There may be other circumstances when a warning is simply not possible.

530. Article 57 (2) (c) requires the warning to be effective. The Mission understands by this that it must reach those who are likely to be in danger from the planned attack, it must give them sufficient time to react to the warning, it must clearly explain what they should do to avoid harm and it must be a credible warning. The warning also has to be clear so that the civilians are not in doubt that it is indeed addressed to them. As far as possible, warnings should state the location to be affected and where the civilians should seek safety. A credible warning means that civilians should be in no doubt that it is intended to be acted upon, as a false alarm or hoax may undermine future warnings, putting civilians at risk.

(a) Pre-recorded generic telephone calls

531. As regards the generic nature of some pre-recorded phone messages, the Mission finds that these lacked credibility and clarity, and generated fear and uncertainty. In substance, there is little difference between telephone messages and leaflets that are not specific. The Mission takes the view that pre-recorded messages with generic information may not be considered generally effective.

(b) Warning shots delivered to roofs

532. The Mission is doubtful whether roof-knocking should be understood as a warning as such.³⁶⁵ In the context of a large-scale military operation including aerial attacks, civilians cannot be expected to know whether a small explosion is a warning of an impending attack or part of an actual attack. In relation to the incident at the Sawafeary house recounted above, the Mission cannot say for certain if this missile was meant to warn or to kill. It notes that, if this was meant as a warning shot, it has to be deemed reckless in the extreme.

533. The legal requirement is for an effective warning to be given. This means that it should not require civilians to guess the meaning of the warning. The technique of using small explosives to frighten civilians into evacuation, even if the intent is to warn, may cause terror and confuse the affected civilians.

534. The Mission does not have sufficient information to assess the accuracy of the Israeli Government's claim that the warning shot method was used only when previous warnings (leaflets, broadcasts or telephone calls) had not been acted upon. However, in many circumstances it is not clear why another call could not be made if it had already been possible to call the inhabitants of a house. The Mission notes that these warnings all took place in situations where the view appears to have been reached that those in the house are civilians or predominantly civilians. If the choice is between making another call or firing a light missile that carries with it a significant risk of killing those civilians, the Mission is not convinced that it would not have been feasible to make another call to confirm that a strike was about to be made.

³⁶⁵ The Mission notes and agrees with a similar position set out by Diakonia in its report on Operation Cast Lead of 30 June 2009, p. 9.

535. Finally, apart from the issue of fear and ambiguity, there is the question of danger. The idea that an attack, however limited in itself, can be understood as an effective warning in the meaning of article 57 (2) (c) is rejected by the Mission.

(c) Leaflets

536. The leaflets and radio broadcasts that told people to leave their homes and head towards city centres were in most cases lacking in specificity and clarity: people could not be certain that the warnings were directed at them in particular, since they were being issued as far as they could tell to almost everyone, and they could not tell when they should leave since there was rarely an indication of when attacks would take place. Furthermore, in the circumstances created by the Israeli armed forces, people could not reasonably be expected to flee to what appeared to be even less safe places on the basis of such non-specific warnings. Therefore, the Mission does not consider such warnings to have been the most effective possible in the circumstances and, indeed, doubts that many were effective at all.

7. Conclusions

537. While noting the statements of the significant efforts made by the Israeli armed forces to issue warnings, the sole question for the Mission to consider at this point is whether the different kinds of warnings issued can be considered as sufficiently effective in the circumstances to constitute compliance with article 57 (2) (c).

538. The Mission accepts that the warnings issued by the Israeli armed forces in some cases encouraged numbers of people to flee and get out of harm's way in respect of the ground invasion, but this is not sufficient to consider them as generally effective.

539. The Mission considers that some of the leaflets with specific warnings, such as those that Israel indicates were issued in Rafah and al-Shujaeyah, may be regarded as effective. However, the Mission does not consider that general messages telling people to leave wherever they were and go to city centres, in the particular circumstances of this military campaign, meet the threshold of effectiveness.

540. The Mission regards some specific telephone calls to have provided effective warnings but treats with caution the figure of 165,000 calls made. Without sufficient information to know how many of these were specific, it cannot say to what extent such efforts might be regarded as effective.

541. The Mission does not consider the technique of firing missiles into or on top of buildings as capable of being described as a warning, much less an effective warning. It is a dangerous practice and in essence constitutes a form of attack rather than a warning.

542. The Mission is also mindful of several incidents it has investigated where civilians were killed or otherwise harmed and met with humiliation and degrading treatment by Israeli soldiers, while fleeing from locations about which some form of warning was issued. The effectiveness of the warnings has to be assessed in the light of the overall circumstances that prevailed and the subjective view of conditions that the civilians concerned would take in deciding upon their response to the warning.

B. UNRWA compound, Gaza City

543. The field office compound of UNRWA is situated in the southern Rimal area of Gaza City. On the morning of 15 January 2009 it came under sustained shelling from the Israeli armed forces. At least three high explosive shells and seven white phosphorous container shells struck the workshop and warehouse area of the compound causing massive damage as a result of ensuing fires. Five of the shells exploded in the compound including all three high explosive shells. Two complete container shells of white phosphorous were retrieved. Five additional white phosphorous shells were retrieved but not in their complete form. These five shells deposited large amounts of the phosphorus wedges contained in the shells into the compound, if not in fact all of the wedges. At least three shells hit the Gaza Training Centre and caused light injuries to one staff member. At the time of the attack there were between 600 and 700 civilians sheltering in the compound. The remaining shells hit the area in and around the fuel depot and workshop.

544. The Mission has inspected the site and interviewed several of the people who were present at the time. It has also had access to detailed written materials produced by the UNRWA office in relation to its inquiries into the incident. It has furthermore addressed questions to the Government of Israel regarding the use of white phosphorous munitions to strike within the UNRWA compound and the direct military advantage pursued by their use under the circumstances, but has received no reply.

545. The Mission will not here repeat all of the details of the attack that are recounted accurately in a number of other reports.³⁶⁶ It will, however, join with others in noting the bravery of two staff members in particular in dealing with the white phosphorous in close proximity to thousands of litres of fuel stored in tankers. Had the fuel depot exploded, it would have caused untold deaths and damage. The swift and courageous actions of these two people at huge personal risk may have prevented a disaster of gigantic proportions and their efforts should be so recognized.

546. In this particular case, the Mission's interest lay in what was known by the Israeli armed forces at the time, what steps were feasible to reduce the massive risk to civilian life and why were these steps not taken.

³⁶⁶ For instance, Secretary-General's summary of the Report of the United Nations Headquarters Board of Inquiry into certain incidents in the Gaza Strip between 27 December 2008 and 19 January 2009 and reports by Human Rights Watch (Rain of Fire: Israel's Unlawful Use of White Phosphorous in Gaza (March 2009), pp. 41 ff) and Amnesty International (Israel/Gaza: Operation "Cast Lead": 22 days of death and destruction (London, 2009), p. 31).

1. The immediate context

547. Shelling had been ongoing since the night of 14 January. The areas of Tal el-Hawa and southern Rimal had come under attack. There had been shelling close to the UNRWA compound at various points during the night. In the morning of 15 January staff in the UNRWA compound were instructed to remain inside as much as possible.

2. The risks

548. The UNRWA compound contained, among other things, a substantial fuel depot. The depot has an underground storage facility, which at the time had about 120,000 litres of fuel. Fuel tankers parked above ground had around 49,000 litres of fuel in them. In addition to the obvious and immediate risk of fire in these circumstances, the compound also stored large quantities of medical supplies, food, clothing and blankets in the warehouses.

549. Conservative estimates suggest that between 600 and 700 civilians were taking shelter in the compound at that time.

550. The principal and immediate risk was, therefore, of what might have been a catastrophic fire caused by the ignition of the fuel in the direct vicinity of the site where hundreds of civilians had sought shelter directly in response to the Israeli warnings of 3 January 2009.

3. The strikes

551. The Mission considers the witnesses it interviewed about this incident to be reliable and credible. After careful analysis of the information it received, the Mission finds that the following can be established with a high degree of certainty:

552. Three high explosive shells hit the compound. Two landed on the Gaza Training Centre and one landed in the car park. Complete or substantial parts of seven white phosphorous container shells landed in the compound. The wedges in these container shells were either discharged totally or very substantially in the compound. One shell, which was seen directly by a senior international staff member with many years' of active military service, detonated on impact or only a very short distance from the ground.

553. One high explosive shell struck the Gaza Training Centre's yard and was witnessed by at least two guards and left a crater.

554. Two high explosive shells landed on the roof of the education building. There are two large holes in the roof and shrapnel all around.

555. A white phosphorous container shell struck the Project and Logistics Division Building.

556. One white phosphorous container shell hit the back of a vehicle in the spare parts store, coming through a wall on the south side at a high point. This is believed to have caused the fire to start in the workshop area.

557. One white phosphorous container shell or a substantial part thereof came through a wire fence at the top of the southern boundary of the compound near the spare parts and workshop area, causing damage to a vehicle there.
558. One white phosphorous container shell landed in the workshop embedding itself in the concrete.
559. One white phosphorous container shell or a substantial part thereof came through the roof of the painting bay.
560. One white phosphorous container shell or a substantial part thereof struck a manhole cover near small warehouses storing food.
561. One white phosphorous container shell struck near a generator on concrete ground.
562. Seven of the ten strikes occurred in an area smaller than a standard football pitch. The whole area, including the three other strikes on or near the Gaza Training Centre, would be no more than two football pitches.
563. The precise moment when each of the strikes occurred cannot be stated with certainty but all occurred between 8 a.m. and 12 noon.

4. Communications and responses

564. For the purposes of liaison with the Israeli authorities, the counterpart of the United Nations Department of Safety and Security (DSS) is the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories (COGAT). This is a unit within the Israeli Ministry of Defense. In Gaza the day-to-day liaison and coordination activity with COGAT is carried out by the Coordination and Liaison Administration (CLA), located on the Israeli side of the Erez crossing. CLA is the military unit responsible for the coordination of access to and from Gaza in connection with the facilitation of civilian and humanitarian needs. DSS at the time routinely liaised with COGAT through CLA.
565. From 27 December until 2 January DSS communicated with COGAT/CLA by telephone and by e-mail. The Mission is in possession of the names of the Israeli officers with whom such contact was established and maintained. In the second phase of the conflict, COGAT intervention increased and new personnel added to their capacity. Two new contacts were added to those already established.
566. The most comprehensive list of relevant data was forwarded to COGAT/CLA on 3 April 2008, including all United Nations installations. As of 29 December 2008 COGAT/CLA had been provided with an updated list of the coordinates of all United Nations offices, international residences and pre-identified possible emergency shelters. Throughout the military operations DSS was in almost daily communication, providing detailed information on coordinates of relevant emergency shelters and distributions centres. The Mission has been shown the relevant log of all such communications.
567. On the day in question DSS made at least seven phone calls to COGAT/CLA counterparts between 8.14 a.m. and 1.45 p.m. These conversations addressed, for instance, the proximity of Israeli fire, the damage done to UNRWA installations, requests that fire be redirected or withdrawn, and coordination for the removal of fuel tankers.

568. Despite calls beginning at 8.14 a.m., it does not appear that COGAT/CLA was able to confirm that contact had been established with the relevant brigade until 11.06 a.m.

569. Other information available to the Mission shows that the Deputy Director of Operations of UNRWA, who was in Jerusalem at the time was engaged in frequent calls to senior Israeli officials. He had received a call at 9 a.m. from John Ging, the Director of Operations at UNRWA, advising him of the shelling near the compound and had been asked to demand that the shelling be stopped by calling the Israeli armed forces' Humanitarian Coordination Centre (HCC) in Tel Aviv. He made a total of 26 calls to the head of HCC or to his assistant as well as to members of COGAT/CLA. He was assured on a number of occasions by the head of HCC that shelling had stopped, but it was clear when he relayed this message back to Gaza that shelling was continuing. The Deputy Director had warned of the immediate risk to the fuel depot and those seeking shelter.

5. Weapons used

570. Analysis of the shells used in the strikes that hit the UNRWA compound indicates clearly that at least seven shells were white phosphorous shells, three of which were complete and four of which were very substantial components of the shells. Military experts indicate that in all probability these shells were fired from a 155 mm Howitzer.

571. Three other missiles were determined clearly by UNRWA military experts to have been high explosive missiles.

6. The Israeli response

572. On 15 January the Israeli Defence Minister, Ehud Barak, said the attack had been a "grave error" and apologized, according to the United Nations Secretary-General, who had spoken with him earlier in a meeting in Tel Aviv. The same day the Israeli Prime Minister said that it was "absolutely true that we were attacked from that place, but the consequences are very sad and we apologize for it". The Israeli Welfare and Social Services Minister made subsequent statements suggesting there had been gunfire directed at Israeli troops from adjacent premises. He said it was shrapnel from the return fire that entered the UNRWA compound causing the blaze.³⁶⁷

573. On 22 April the summary of the conclusions of the Israeli armed forces' investigations reported as follows:

... the IDF deployed a smoke screen in order to protect a tank force operating in the neighbourhood from Hamas anti-tank crews who had positioned themselves adjacent to the UNRWA headquarters. The smoke screen was intended to block the terrorists' field of view. Information received by the IDF shows that the smoke screen did assist in protecting the force and prevented precise anti-tank fire against ³⁶⁷ <http://www.jpost.com/servlet/Satellite?cid=1232292898771&pagename=JPArticle%2FShowFull>.

IDF forces. The smoke projectiles were fired at an area a considerable distance from the UNRWA headquarters, and were not intended to cause damage to either person or property. However, it appears that fragments of the smoke projectiles did hit a warehouse located in the headquarters, causing it to catch fire.

During the incident, claims were also made that an explosive shell or shrapnel hit the UNRWA headquarters. The investigation showed that these were shells, or shell fragments that were fired at military targets within the battle zone.

The damage caused to the UNRWA headquarters during the fighting in the Tel El-Hawwa neighbourhood is the unfortunate result of the type of warfare that Hamas forced upon the IDF, involving combat in the Gaza Strip's urban spaces and adjacent to facilities associated with international organizations. These results could not be predicted.

Nevertheless, it is clear that the forces did not intend, at any stage, to hit a UN facility. Following UN complaints that an explosive shell had hit the headquarters, the forces were ordered to cease firing explosive shells in the region in question. Following the receipt of reports about the fire in the warehouse, all firing in the area was stopped. The entry of fire-fighting trucks to the area was coordinated with the IDF in order to assist in extinguishing the fire.³⁶⁸

574. In its report of July 2009 on the military operations, the Israeli Government explains that the “primary rationale” for firing white phosphorous was to “produce a smokescreen to protect Israeli forces from the Hamas anti-tank crews operating adjacent to the UNRWA headquarters”. The report goes on to assert:

The IDF sought to maintain a safety distance of several hundred metres from sensitive sites, including the UNRWA compound. Despite the maintenance of a safety distance, some felt wedges and other components of the projectiles apparently landed in the compound after the release of felt wedges in the air. The IDF neither anticipated not intended this outcome.³⁶⁹

575. The Mission has a number of observations about the conclusions of the Israeli Government. First, it does not share the circumspect or indeed understated representation of the nature and extent of the strikes in the compound. There were ten strikes: three high explosive shells landed and exploded in the compound; seven white phosphorous container shells discharged completely or very substantially in the confines of a very limited space around particularly vulnerable areas of the UNRWA compound. This is not a matter of a limited number of wedges falling inside the compound or shrapnel or parts of shells landing in the compound as the shells exploded elsewhere. It is important to emphasize that we are dealing with shells exploding or discharging inside the compound in areas where hazardous material was stored.

³⁶⁸ <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/opcast/postop/press/2202.htm>.

³⁶⁹ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 344 and 346.

576. Secondly, the claim that this result was neither intended nor anticipated has to be reviewed carefully. In the first place the Mission affirms the result to be reviewed is not fragments and wedges landing in the compound but ten shells landing and exploding inside the compound. It is difficult to accept that the consequences were not appreciated and foreseen by the Israeli armed forces.

577. Those in the Israeli army who deploy white phosphorous, or indeed any artillery shells, are expertly trained to factor in the relevant complexities of targeting, including wind force and the earth's curvature. They have to know the area they are firing at, possible obstacles in hitting the target and the other environmental factors necessary to ensure an effective strike. It is also clear that, having determined that it was necessary to establish a safety distance, the presence of the UNRWA installations was a factor present in the minds of those carrying out the shelling.

578. The question then becomes how specialists expertly trained in the complex issue of artillery deployment and aware of the presence of an extremely sensitive site can strike that site ten times while apparently trying to avoid it.

579. The Mission's scepticism that the result was not anticipated is confirmed by the fact that from around 8 a.m. on 15 January UNRWA officials began a series of calls to a number of officials explaining precisely what was going on. These calls were made to the appropriate people at COGAT/CLA as a result of prearranged coordination and further reinforced by the numerous calls by the Deputy Director of UNRWA to senior Israeli military officials in Tel Aviv.

580. In particular, the Israeli military officials were informed that shells had indeed struck inside the compound by the series of phone calls made by UNRWA officials.

581. The Mission is in possession of information that indicates a senior UNRWA official called the head of HCC in Tel Aviv and a number of his immediate subordinates several times. In particular a call was made at 10.31 a.m. by the official to the Israeli armed forces to explain that white phosphorous had landed in the compound and had set fire to the warehouse. He was told "by Tel Aviv" that the firing had stopped. To be clear, this means that by 10.30 a.m. at the latest channels of communication had been opened between Tel Aviv and those on the ground in Gaza City responsible for the firing of the shells, albeit not necessarily directly, but sufficient to be receiving reports of what was going on from Israeli troops on the ground.

582. At 10.30 a.m. staff at the UNRWA compound noted five white phosphorous container shells had discharged in the confines of the compound. At 10.40 a.m. the UNRWA official was again in direct communication with Tel Aviv explaining specifically that "the targeting is taking place in the vicinity of the workshop" and requiring that the Israeli armed forces desist immediately. In particular, he pointed out that what was required was a cessation of the firing for a sustained period of time to allow staff to bring the fire under control.

583. At 11.17 a.m. the same senior UNRWA official was informed in a phone call from UNRWA staff in the compound that a further two rounds had impacted "within the last ten minutes".

584. At 11.53 a.m., in a further telephone call, the senior UNRWA official indicated to the COGAT/CLA contact person that the firing had been unforgivable and unacceptable. He noted that efforts had been made since 09.30 a.m. to get the firing to stop and that UNRWA had been told in several calls that the firing had been ordered to be stopped at higher levels, yet it continued. The UNRWA official noted that it was incomprehensible that, with the amount of surveillance and geographic positioning system (GPS) information, the most vulnerable part of the compound had been repeatedly struck.

585. In all the circumstances the Mission rejects the Israeli armed forces' assertion to the effect that it was not anticipated that the shells would land in the compound. The Israeli armed forces were told what was happening. It no longer had to anticipate it. The Israeli armed forces' responses in Tel Aviv and in COGAT/CLA indicate quite clearly that they understood the nature and scale of what was happening. Their responses in particular indicate that orders had been given to stop the firing.

7. Factual and legal findings

586. The Mission considers that Israeli armed forces had all of the information necessary to appreciate the danger they were creating as a result of their firing at the UNRWA installations, in particular the fuel depot, and to the civilians gathered there. Orders were said to have been issued to cease firing in the vicinity of the UNWRA premises.

587. The Israeli Government's report cites with approval a passage from the report to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia in relation to the bombing of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in 1998. The Mission has also considered that report. On the issue of intent it states:

Attacks which are not directed against military objectives (particularly attacks directed against the civilian population) and attacks which cause disproportionate civilian casualties or civilian property damage may constitute the actus reus for the offence of unlawful attack under article 3 of the ICTY Statute. The mens rea for the offence is intention or recklessness, not simple negligence. In determining whether or not the mens rea requirement has been met, it should be borne in mind that commanders deciding on an attack have duties:

- (a) To do everything practicable to verify that the objectives to be attacked are military objectives;
- (b) To take all practicable precautions in the choice of methods and means of warfare with a view to avoiding or in any event to minimizing incidental civilian casualties or civilian property damage; and
- (c) To refrain from launching attacks which may be expected to cause disproportionate civilian casualties or civilian property damage.³⁷⁰

³⁷⁰ "Final report to the Prosecutor...", para. 28.

588. The Mission agrees that this passage correctly reflects both the nature of the intent required and the relevant duties of a commander.

589. Even if the Israeli armed forces were under fire from anti-tank missiles from Palestinian armed groups at the time, all of the information referred to above indicates that the commanders in question did not take all feasible precautions in the choice of methods and means of warfare with a view to avoiding or, in any event, to minimizing incidental civilian casualties or civilian property damage.

590. The Mission is not attempting to second-guess with hindsight the decisions of commanders. The fact is that the events in question continued over a period of some three hours. In these circumstances the Israeli armed forces were not confronted by surprise fire to which they had to respond with whatever materiel was available to them at the time. If they were faced with anti-tank missiles, that was hardly something of which they had been unaware for an appreciable time.

591. Statements made to the Mission by senior UNRWA international staff indicate that they were unaware of any sustained fire at the relevant time from anywhere in the nearby areas. The Mission notes that official statements made on 15 January by Israel's Prime Minister had indicated with complete certainty that firing by Palestinian armed groups had occurred from within the UNRWA compound.³⁷¹ This was later contradicted and corrected to state that the armed groups occupied positions near to but outside the compound.³⁷² The Mission considers it important to record that the initial allegation was incorrect and this appears now to be accepted as such by the Israeli.

592. The Mission concludes that the Israeli commanders knew of the location of the UNRWA premises and indeed of the layout of the compound in terms of the most vulnerable areas and especially the fuel depot before the shelling took place around 8 a.m.

593. Even if the Israeli Government's position regarding the position of Palestinian armed groups is taken at face value, the Mission concludes that, given the evident threat of substantial damage to several hundred civilian lives and to civilian property in using white phosphorous in that particular line of fire, the advantage gained from using white phosphorous to screen Israeli armed forces' tanks from anti-tank fire from armed opposition groups could not be deemed proportionate.

594. Having been fully alerted not to the risks but to the actual consequences of the course of action, Israeli armed forces continued with precisely the same conduct as a result of which further shells hit the compound. Such conduct, in the Mission's view, reflects a reckless disregard for the consequences of the choice of the means adopted in combating the anti-tank fire

³⁷¹ Israel's Prime Minister, Ehud Olmert, told the United Nations Secretary-General that troops shelled the building in response to Hamas gunfire coming from within, but nonetheless said it should not have happened. Israeli troops "were attacked from there and the response was harsh", Olmert said. "It is absolutely true that we were attacked from that place, but the consequences are very sad and we apologize for it", he added. See <http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2009/jan/15/israel-gaza-offensive-truce-talks>. The same quotation is reported in multiple sources.

³⁷² "The operation in Gaza...", para. 347.

the Israeli authorities claim they were facing. The decision to continue using the same means in the face of such knowledge compounds that recklessness. It deprived the UNRWA staff of the ability to contain the fires that had been caused and led to millions of dollars worth of damage that could have been avoided. It also put in danger some 700 lives, including staff and sheltering civilians.

595. The Mission, therefore, concludes on the basis of the information it received and in the absence of any credible refuting evidence that Israeli armed forces violated the customary international law requirement to take all feasible precautions in the choice of means and method of attack with a view to avoiding and in any event minimizing incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians and damage to civilian objects as reflected in article 57 (2) (a) (ii) of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions.

C. Al-Quds hospital, Tal el-Hawa, Gaza City

596. Al-Quds hospital belongs to the Palestinian Red Crescent Society (PRCS). It consists of three buildings facing west towards the sea and occupying the corner of Jami'at ad-Duwal al-Arabiyyah Street and al-Abraj Street in the area of Tal el-Hawa. The building nearest the corner is seven storeys high. Its principal purposes were administrative and cultural rather than medical. It stored a huge quantity of PRCS archives. The middle building contains the accident and emergency treatment area as well as other offices. The building furthest from the corner is the main medical building with operating theatres in the basement. About 200 metres eastwards on al-Abraj Street is the Palestinian Red Crescent ambulance depot. These buildings all suffered significant damage in the course of an Israeli bombardment on 15 January 2009, which included the use of white phosphorous. The attacks endangered the lives of the staff and more than 50 patients in the hospital. There was no warning given for any of the attacks.

597. The Mission met staff from the hospital on six separate occasions, three of them on site visits. Two extended site visits included inspections not only of the hospital premises, but also of the ambulance depot, of the damage done to apartment buildings on that street and of the area opposite the hospital to assess the damage done by fighting in that area. Three long interviews were carried out with one doctor individually, another was carried out with two doctors together and there were two group meetings with four and five doctors, respectively. The Mission also received a considerable body of photographs and digital video footage of the events of the day in question. It furthermore addressed questions to the Government of Israel regarding the use of white phosphorous munitions against al-Quds hospital and the direct military advantage pursued by their use under the circumstances, but received no reply.

598. The doctors with whom the Mission spoke all occupied senior positions but also witnessed the events that occurred throughout that day. The Mission was impressed with their objectivity and the genuine distress several of them showed at being unable to help or protect the sick and wounded who had come to the hospital. Throughout that day many of the staff, including the doctors, took exceptional risks to stop fire spreading, including by removing white phosphorous wedges from near diesel tanks. One doctor in particular showed remarkable courage. He left the hospital to drive an ambulance through artillery shelling as he sought to bring an eight-year-old girl to al-Shifa hospital for treatment which he was no longer able to provide in al-Quds. Having taken the girl there, he drove back to the hospital in the same conditions to continue assisting the efforts to fight the fires.

1. The facts

599. When the Israeli air offensive began on 27 December a government building opposite the al-Quds administrative building on al-Abraj Street was almost totally destroyed. The building had previously served as a criminal detention centre and is still referred to locally by that designation although it had recently been used for other purposes, including customs administration. The same building was reportedly struck on a number of other occasions after 27 December. When the Mission visited in June 2009, the site was completely demolished.

600. Diagonally opposite al-Quds Hospital on Jami'at ad-Duwal al-Arabiyyah Street was another building rented to the Government and used primarily for public registry functions. Today only the ground floor of the building remains. Witnesses indicate that the upper floors had been destroyed, probably by artillery fire, around 6 and 7 January.

601. Three senior doctors at the hospital and two residents from al-Abraj Street indicated that at some point between 3 and 6 January several tanks were stationed several hundred metres east of al-Quds hospital, visible from the ambulance depot. Throughout the days of 5, 6, 7 and 8 January there was significant artillery fire on a number of civilian apartment buildings on al-Abraj Street. On 8 January 2009 the seventh-floor apartment of Dr. Jaber Abu al-Naja was struck. His wife and son-in-law were killed immediately as they sat on the balcony of the apartment eating pastries. His wife was cut in half by the explosion and his son-in-law was thrown from the balcony on to the street below. His daughter, Ihsan, was seriously injured and taken to al-Quds hospital for treatment. Dr. Jaber Abu al-Naja is the former Ambassador of the PLO to Senegal and a well-known Fatah politician.³⁷³

602. By 15 January the area immediately to the south of al-Quds hospital (the customs building and the registry building) had been totally or very substantially destroyed. The area to the east on al-Abraj Street had been significantly attacked by artillery fire.

603. By this time a large number of civilians (several hundreds) had also gathered in the hospital buildings seeking safety.

604. During the night of 14 January Israeli armed forces began an extended barrage of artillery fire over the area. It continued into the morning of 15 January. Between 8 and 9 a.m. doctors in the main building were in the principal meeting room when shells landed on either side of the building. They saw white phosphorous wedges burning near a container of diesel and efforts were successfully made to move those away. The initial explosions had blown out the office windows. At about the same time it became apparent that the administrative building on the corner had also been hit. The hospital building next to it has a large timber-built component. The risk of fire spreading was immense and a witness described how hospital staff, including senior doctors, all sought to break, by hand, the wooden bridge way that linked the administrative building to the hospital building to prevent the fire from spreading.

605. Shortly after the initial explosions and fire were observed, a tank shell directly penetrated the rear of the middle hospital building. That part of the building is made of corrugated iron and the entry point of the shell is easily detectable. The shell then penetrated the inner concrete wall of the hospital where the pharmacy was located. The pharmacy was completely destroyed as a result. An eyewitness described that, through the holes made in the corrugated iron, he observed a tank on a road between two buildings about 400 metres eastwards. Although he could not say whether it was this tank that had struck the hospital directly, it was in a direct line in relation to the entry point of the shell.

³⁷³ Interview with Dr. Jaber Abu al-Naja, 4 July 2009.

606. Throughout the day the hospital was unable to procure the assistance of civil defence forces or other fire-fighting support. As a result, the staff of the hospital were almost entirely consumed with the task of saving the buildings and ensuring the safety of patients.

607. It was not until around 4 p.m. that it was possible to coordinate an evacuation of hospital patients with the assistance of ICRC, which made clear upon arrival that it would be able to carry out this procedure only once. Those not evacuated at this point were relocated to the operating theatres of the hospital.

608. At around 8 p.m. another fire broke out causing serious damage to the main hospital building. As a result of this fire it was decided to carry out a total evacuation of the remaining patients as well as a number of local residents who had sought refuge in the hospital. It was at this stage that one of the senior doctors took an eight-year-old girl who had been struck by a bullet in the jaw and was critically ill to al-Shifa hospital, where she later died. At that point he says he felt that there was very heavy fire in the area and that there appeared to be some attempts to aim directly at or near to the ambulance.

609. Meanwhile, 200 metres to the east in al-Abraj Street the PRCS ambulance depot had also been severely damaged. One of its principal buildings was entirely destroyed. The Mission also saw the remnants of three PRCS ambulances that had been parked at the entrance to the depot. Two had been crushed by tanks but not burned out. The other ambulance showed signs of having been struck directly in the front below the windscreen by a missile of some description and having been burned out.

610. The devastation caused to both the hospital buildings, including the loss of all archives in the administrative building, and the ambulance depot was immense, as was the risk to the safety of the patients.

611. The Mission examined a number of the shells retrieved by the hospital staff and reviewed footage taken at the time as well as still photographs.

2. The Israeli position

612. The Israeli authorities did not specifically mention the incident at al-Quds hospital in the conclusions of their investigations on 22 April 2009.³⁷⁴

³⁷⁴ Annex B addresses some allegations regarding the use of ambulances, but not the attack on the hospital. See <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/Press+Releases/09/4/2202.htm>.

613. In its report of July 2009 (para. 173) the Israeli Government quotes part of an article from Newsweek magazine:

One of the most notorious incidents during the war was the Jan. 15 shelling of the Palestinian Red Crescent Society buildings in the downtown Tal-al Hawa part of Gaza City, followed by a shell hitting their Al Quds Hospital next door; the subsequent fire forced all 500 patients to be evacuated. Asked if there were any militants firing from the hospital or the Red Crescent buildings, hospital director general Dr. Khalid Judah chose his words carefully. 'I am not able to say if anyone was using the PRCS buildings [the two Palestine Red Crescent Society buildings adjacent to the hospital], but I know for a fact that no one was using the hospital.' In the Tal-al Hawa neighborhood nearby, however, Talal Safadi, an official in the leftist Palestinian People's Party, said that resistance fighters were firing from positions all around the hospital. He shrugged that off, having a bigger beef with Hamas. 'They failed to win the battle.' Or as his fellow PPP official, Walid al Awad, put it: 'It was a mistake to give Israel the excuse to come in.'³⁷⁵

While the Israeli Government does not comment further on the specific attack, it would appear to invoke these comments to justify the strikes on the hospital and surrounding area.

614. The Mission understands that the Israeli Government may consider relying on journalists' reporting as likely to be treated as more impartial than reliance on its own intelligence information. The Mission is nonetheless struck by the lack of any suggestion in Israel's report of July 2009 that there were members of armed groups present in the hospital at the time.

3. Factual findings

615. The Mission finds that on the morning of 15 January the hospital building and the administrative building were struck by a number of shells containing white phosphorous and by at least one high explosive shell. The fires these caused led to panic and chaos among the sick and wounded, necessitated two evacuations in extremely perilous conditions, caused huge financial losses as a result of the damage and put the lives of several hundred civilians including medical staff at very great risk.

616. The Mission also notes that, as a result of the conditions the attack created, the hospital was unable to provide the necessary care for an eight-year-old girl. Despite heroic attempts to save her, she died later in another hospital. The girl had been shot by an Israeli sniper. The Mission finds the Israeli armed forces responsible for her death.

617. On the issue of armed groups being present in the hospital buildings, the Mission does not agree that anything in the extract cited above from Newsweek magazine justifies the conclusion that the hospital premises were being used by armed groups. The fact that Dr. Judah spoke with certainty about matters within his knowledge cannot be presumed to mean that he believed other parts of the hospital premises were being used by armed groups. That may be journalistic gloss and is tantamount to putting words in the mouth of Dr. Judah. The comments attributed to Mr. Safadi that “resistance fighters were firing from positions all around the hospital” can mean either that people were inside the hospital firing or were in positions outside but near to the hospital. The journalist did not clarify precisely what was meant.

³⁷⁵ "Hamas and its discontents", 20 January 2009.

618. The Mission, having carried out over eight hours of interviews with senior and junior staff, and having sought to verify the matter with others, including journalists who were in the area at that time, has concluded that it is unlikely there was any armed presence in any of the hospital buildings at the time of the attack.

619. The Mission finds that no warning was given at any point of an imminent strike and at no time has the Israeli Government suggested such a warning was given.³⁷⁶

620. Reviewing the scene at the time of the strikes on al-Quds hospital, it is important to bear in mind that a great deal of destruction had already occurred and that buildings with an apparent connection to the local government had been attacked and largely destroyed. As such, Israeli tanks had a relatively clear view of the area immediately to the south of the hospital. The Mission also notes that as a result of the attacks on al-Abraj Street by tanks for several days, the scope for resistance, if any, from that particular quarter had been significantly reduced.

621. The Mission is aware of reports that there was significant resistance from Palestinian armed groups in the Tal el-Hawa area on the night of 14 January.³⁷⁷ Information available alleges that on the night of 14 January Israeli troops had entered buildings on al-Abraj Street, used human shields to check if there was any presence of enemy combatants or explosive devices and found none. Reports do not specify the nature, scale or precise location of resistance in Tal el-Hawa. The Mission notes that in the buildings directly opposite al-Quds hospital on Jami’at ad-Duwal al-Arabiyah Street there is very little sign of damage to any of the buildings on that side of the street, and certainly nothing that compares to the damage to the buildings on al-Abraj Street.

622. The Mission takes into account the damage that had already occurred between 27 December and 8 January on al-Abraj and Jami’at ad-Duwal al-Arabiyah Streets, and the lack of apparent damage to the buildings directly opposite the hospital on Jami’at ad-Duwal al-Arabiyah Street. It also takes account of the sighting of at least one tank whose direct line of fire, bearing in mind that it was surrounded by tall buildings on both sides, was the hospital itself. It also notes the credible sightings of Israeli aircraft in the area at various points throughout the day. It further notes the extensive damage to the ambulance depot at the same time as the strikes

³⁷⁶ In its conclusions of its investigations published on 22 April, the Israeli armed forces highlight the fact, in connection with its investigation into allegations of attacks on medical services, that they gave warnings. One related to an ambulance and another to a clinic. There is no mention of al-Quds hospital. See <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/Press+Releases/09/4/2202.htm>.

³⁷⁷ The Mission has noted a witness account in relation to Israeli armed forces’ use of human shields on al-Abraj Street on the night of 14 January, thus indicating that there was indeed a very active Israeli presence on the ground. See Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, “Hiding behind civilians: April 2009 update report”, p. 8.

on the hospital occurred and the apparently unexplainable crushing of ambulances parked outside the depot.

623. In the light of all these considerations, the Mission finds that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the hospital and the ambulance depot, as well as the ambulances themselves, were the object of a direct attack by the Israeli armed forces in the area at the time and that the hospital could not be described in any respect at that time as a military objective.

4. Legal findings

624. Article 18 of the Fourth Geneva Convention provides that civilian hospitals may in no circumstances be the object of attack but shall at all times be respected and protected by the parties to the conflict.

625. Article 19 provides that the protection to which civilian hospitals are entitled shall cease “only after due warning has been given, naming, in all appropriate cases, a reasonable time limit and after such warning has remained unheeded.”

626. Even in the unlikely event that there was any armed group present on hospital premises, there is no suggestion even by the Israeli authorities that a warning was given to the hospital of an intention to strike it. As such the Mission finds on the information before it that Israeli armed forces violated articles 18 and 19 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

627. On considering the information before it, the Mission takes the view that there was intent to strike the hospital, as evidenced in particular by the high explosive artillery shell that penetrated the rear of the hospital and destroyed the pharmacy.

628. Even if it is suggested that there was no intent to directly strike the hospital but that Palestinian armed groups had taken up positions near al-Quds hospital, the Israeli armed forces would still have been bound to ensure that risk of death, injury or damage to the people in the hospital or the hospital itself would not be excessive in relation to the military advantage anticipated in attacking the hospital.

629. Taking into account the weapons used, and in particular the use of white phosphorous in and around a hospital that the Israeli armed forces knew was not only dealing with scores of injured and wounded but also giving shelter to several hundred civilians, the Mission finds, based on all the information available to it, that in directly striking the hospital and the ambulance depot the Israeli armed forces in these circumstances violated article 18 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and violated customary international law in relation to proportionality.

D. Attacks on al-Wafa hospital, 5 and 16 January 2009

630. The Mission interviewed three senior doctors of al-Wafa hospital. One was Dr. Khamis el-Essi, its Director. The two other doctors do not wish to be identified. The Mission has also reviewed information in the public domain in relation to the various alleged attacks on the hospital.

631. Al-Wafa hospital is located at the eastern part of al-Shujaeyah (east Gaza City), very close to the Israel-Gaza eastern border. It was founded in 1996 and provides long-term care to those suffering from head and spinal injuries. Many patients are elderly. It can accommodate over 50 patients.

632. The hospital consists of three buildings. From south to north these are the administrative building (three floors), the hospital buildings (rooms of patients and surgeries, seven floors) and the building for the elderly (reception and rehabilitation, three floors).

1. The facts

633. The hospital was the object of a significant attack on 16 April 2008. Tanks fired in and around the hospital area, damaging a large number of patient rooms and causing significant destruction of the building for rehabilitative care for the elderly. Hospital staff indicate there was no armed presence inside the hospital at that time but cannot say whether there may have been a presence outside.

634. During the military operations, the hospital was attacked again. Despite media reports that a warning had been given, hospital staff deny that any specific warning was received. Leaflets had been dropped in the area with general indications that support of Hamas would be punished. The hospital had also received a number of telephone warnings with recorded messages but with no specific indication that the hospital itself would be the object of an attack, much less with an indication of when that would occur. One doctor indicated that the hospital had received around four such messages each day since 27 December 2008.

635. On 5 January, the hospital was attacked with intensive artillery fire, including white phosphorous shells. Senior doctors indicate that generic recorded telephone warnings were actually received during the shelling. The latest warning the hospital received on 5 January was at 4.30 p.m. Following this, at around 12.30-1 a.m. on 6 January, white phosphorous shells landed in the area surrounding the administrative building and on its roof.

636. The white phosphorous caused damage to the administrative building only, destroying the roof.

637. All three witnesses of the senior medical staff confirm absolutely that there was no presence of any armed resistance inside the hospital. They are not able to confirm or deny the presence of such elements outside of the hospital.

638. The hospital was attacked again with artillery fire on 16 January 2009 at 2 a.m. No specific warning was given. Again a general recorded message had been received saying that people located in the border areas should leave and threatening punitive measures to those who stayed. Again doctors confirm there was no armed presence inside the hospital but cannot say what was occurring outside it.

639. The attack damaged the building for elderly patients on the ground and third floors as well as the roof. It damaged the third and fourth floors of the central hospital building.

640. Doctors estimate that the tanks were as close as 70 metres from the hospital.

641. The damage to the hospital (as a result of the two attacks) is estimated at US$ 550,000.

642. As to why the hospital was the subject of these attacks, doctors speculate that its location close to the border is one possible reason. Another relates to the rumour that Israel believes that Muhammad al-Deif, a well-known Hamas militant, is treated inside the hospital.

643. According to one witness in the hospital, Israeli armed forces tried to assassinate Mr. al-Deif on 12 July 2006. Although he survived the assassination attempt, he was badly hurt and, according to some rumours, his legs were amputated and he became blind. It seems that Israel believes that he receives some rehabilitation and medical treatment at al-Wafa hospital.

644. On 5 February 2003, for instance, Israeli snipers shot and killed two staff nurses who were on duty inside the hospital (Abd al-Karim Lubad and Omar Hassan, both aged 21).³⁷⁸

2. Factual findings

645. The Mission notes that the three witnesses interviewed are senior doctors in the hospital. The Mission found them to be credible and reliable. They clarified a number of apparently inaccurate statements that have appeared in press reports, especially regarding the nature of the warnings given.

646. The Mission considers that the warnings given cannot be considered as a warning within the meaning of article 19 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. It was not specific and no indication was given about when the attack would take place or how much time there was to evacuate the hospital.

647. As to the reasons for the multiple attacks on the hospital in 2003, 2008 and 2009, the Mission is not in a position to comment.

3. Legal findings

648. The Mission finds that the choice of deploying white phosphorous shells in and around such a building, where patients receiving long-term care and suffering from particularly serious injuries were especially vulnerable, was not acceptable in the circumstances. The Mission is particularly concerned about the attack on the hospital on 16 January from such close proximity. Even if there was some degree of armed resistance in the area (which the Mission cannot confirm), commanders in deploying such weaponry must take into account all the facts and circumstances.

649. The Mission considers the use of white phosphorous in such an area as reckless and not justifiable in relation to any military advantage sought in the particular circumstances.

650. The Mission considers that the general protection given to hospitals indicates the need for particular consideration to be given to the use of such especially hazardous materials. The failure to provide sufficient warning indicates in the Mission's view a wilful failure to consider seriously the consequences of using such weapons in those circumstances.

³⁷⁸ See <http://www.hrea.org/lists/hr-health-professionals/markup/msg00099.html>.

651. The Mission notes that the case of al-Wafa hospital demonstrates the complete ineffectiveness of certain kinds of warnings. The information the Mission has received points towards a kind of repetition and routine warning system taking no account at all of the realities of the hospital.

652. As such the Mission considers that, from all the information available to it, the Israeli armed forces violated articles 18 and 19 of the Fourth Geneva Convention as well as customary international law as reflected in Additional Protocol I, articles 57 (2) (b) and (c).

X. INDISCRIMINATE ATTACKS BY ISRAELI ARMED FORCES RESULTING IN THE LOSS OF LIFE AND INJURY TO CIVILIANS

A. The shelling in al-Fakhura Street by Israeli armed forces

653. In the afternoon of 6 January at least four mortar bombs fired by Israeli armed forces exploded near the al-Fakhura junction in the al-Fakhura area of the Jabaliyah camp in northern Gaza.³⁷⁹

654. The Mission interviewed Mr. Muhammed Fouad Abu Askar on three occasions. His brother and two sons were killed in the attack.³⁸⁰ It also met surviving members of the al-Deeb family on two occasions.³⁸¹ The Mission interviewed four men who had lost family members in the attack, the Director of the UNRWA premises that were being used as a shelter for civilians and a number of journalists who covered the story. In addition, the Mission has seen a number of statements provided to organizations in Gaza in the form of affidavits. The Mission has also considered to the degree possible the information available from Israeli sources on the circumstances of the strike.

B. The facts surrounding the Israeli armed forces' mortar shelling

655. On 5 January 2009 UNRWA had opened the elementary school on al-Fakhura Street to provide shelter to civilians fleeing the areas where the Israeli armed forces had entered.

656. The Mission spoke on two occasions with the Director of the shelter about its management. He said that about 90 per cent of those in the shelter had come from outside of Jabaliyah camp, largely from the al-Atatra area. He explained that the shelter was guarded by ³⁷⁹ Interviewees' statements vary, asserting between four and six shells landed. The Mission saw for itself what it assessed to be the effects of mortars that landed. The crater in the orchard beside the al-Deeb house may have been caused by a mortar, but given the nature of the surroundings it is less easy to tell in terms of shrapnel patterns. The Mission does not reject the possibility that more landed but was not able to inspect those sites or to come to a firm view confirming the additional shells.

³⁸⁰ Mr. Abu Askar is a Hamas member. He also provided testimony at the public hearings in Gaza. He was detained on the charge of being a member of Hamas in 1992. He is the Director-General for Religious Affairs (a voluntary position) and is on the Dialogue Committee, organizing the pilgrimage to Mecca (Saudi Arabia). He is in charge of the Hamas Follow-Up Committee in North Gaza related to the settlement of disputes between Hamas and other groups in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. He has a master's degree in education and is currently pursuing a PhD in the Syrian Arab Republic. He denies any involvement in armed militant activities.

³⁸¹ Two of the members of the family also presented their testimony at the public hearings in Gaza.

security staff at its entry points and that all people coming in were registered by name and searched to ensure no weapons were being taken into the premises.

657. UNRWA has confirmed to the Mission that the Israeli armed forces were fully aware that the school was being used as a shelter from 5 January 2005. UNRWA materials indicate that there were 1,368 people in the shelter at the time.

658. About 16 hours prior to the shelling on the afternoon of 6 January 2009, Israeli armed forces had already carried out at least one strike, destroying the house of Mr. Abu Askar. At around 1.45 a.m. on 6 January 2009, Mr. Abu Askar received a personal telephone call from the Israeli armed forces advising him that he should evacuate the house and everyone in it because it was going to be destroyed by an air strike. The building housed not only his immediate family but a large number of his extended family, about 40 in all. Mr. Abu Askar responded quickly, evacuating not only his own extended family but also advising neighbours of the imminent strike. The survivors of the al-Deeb family confirm they were advised at this time by Mr. Abu Askar of the call he had received.

659. The house was struck by a missile from an F-16 according to Mr. Abu Askar about seven minutes after the call was received. Several hours later, at around 6 a.m., he returned to the site of the house with members of his family hoping to retrieve some items of furniture. There he noticed that a number of other houses in the area also appeared to have been hit at some time in the intervening four hours. In the course of that day Mr. Abu Askar and members of his family took various steps to prepare the move of the family to rented accommodation nearby.

660. Mr. Abu Askar was in the street at around 4 p.m., when several mortars landed. He believes that there were about 150 people in the street at the time. The Director of the shelter confirmed that the street outside the school was generally busy. It had become busier than usual due to the large influx of people into the school looking for shelter. Some relatives were coming to the school to visit those who had recently arrived and new people were arriving to seek shelter, including with belongings on donkey carts.

661. Witnesses indicate that all of the explosions were over within around two minutes. One shell landed directly in the courtyard outside the al-Deeb house, where most of the family was gathered. Surviving family members interviewed by the Mission explained that nine members of the family were killed immediately. Ziyad Samir al-Deeb lost both legs as a result of the blast.³⁸² Surviving family members and neighbours carried the dead and injured one after another to hospital. Ambulances came, but most casualties were transported in private cars. Alaa Deeb, a daughter of Mo'in Deeb, was taken to al-Shifa hospital and thereafter to Egypt, where she died of her injuries. In total, 11 members of the family died, including four women and four girls.

662. Apart from the shell that landed in the al-Deeb courtyard, three other shells landed in the street outside. The total spread of the four mortars was a little over 100 metres. The Mission cannot specify in which order the mortars fell, but proceeding southwards from the al-Deeb house along al-Fakhura Street, the Mission saw the impact of another mortar, 45 metres away, a third was seen a further 50 metres south and a fourth a further 10 metres south.

³⁸² Ziyad al-Deeb testified before the Mission at the public hearings in Gaza along with his uncle.

663. The three other shells that the Mission could identify as having landed at different places on al-Fakhura Street killed at least 24 people. The witnesses estimate that up to another 40 were injured by the blasts.³⁸³ The Mission has not been able to verify those figures, but having inspected the site and viewed the footage, it does not consider these numbers to be exaggerated.

664. Among those killed immediately were two sons of Mr. Abu Askar, Imad, aged 13, and Khaled Abu Askar, aged 19. Mr. Abu Askar's brother Arafat was also killed.

665. The Director of the UNRWA school shelter confirmed to the Mission that the blasts had damaged the part of the school building facing onto al-Fakhura Street. Up to nine people were injured. One boy of 16, who was sheltering in the school but was in the street at the time, was killed. No one inside the school was killed. He confirmed that no shell had directly hit the United Nations premises either inside or outside.

666. Witnesses have described the scene of chaos and carnage caused by the bombs. They indicate that people were ferried to hospitals in private cars because of the difficulties in reaching ambulance services at the time, although some ambulances did arrive.

C. The Israeli position

667. Contradictory accounts emerge from official Israeli statements. The initial position accepted that Israeli forces had struck inside the UNRWA school, claiming to be in response to Hamas fire. A later response accepted that Hamas had not been in the UNRWA school but had allegedly fired from 80 metres away from the school. Finally, the Israeli Government claimed that in fact Hamas operatives were launching mortars at Israeli armed forces for around one hour, firing every few minutes until the Israeli armed forces identified them and returned fire, killing a number of them.

668. On 6 January the Israeli armed forces posted the following statement on their website:

An initial inquiry by forces on operating in the area of the incident indicates that a number of mortar shells were fired at IDF forces from within the Jebaliya school. In response to the incoming enemy fire, the forces returned mortar fire to the source.

This is not the first time that Hamas has fired mortars and rockets from schools, in such a way deliberately using civilians as human shields in their acts of terror against Israel. This was already proven several months ago by footage from an unmanned plane showing rockets and mortars being fired from the yard of an UNRWA school.

Again, we emphasize that this announcement is based on an initial inquiry.

After an investigation that took place over the past hour it has been found that among the dead at the Jebaliya school were Hamas terror operatives and a mortar ³⁸³ A number of reports put the total figure of deaths at 42 or 43, including the al-Deeb family deaths. The Mission has not been able to contact all the relatives of those reported to have died.

battery squad who were firing on IDF forces in the area. Hamas operatives Immad Abu Iskar and Hassan Abu Iskar were among terrorists identified killed.³⁸⁴

669. Further statements from spokespersons for the Prime Minister,³⁸⁵ the Foreign Ministry and the Israeli armed forces all adhered to the position set out in the statement cited above. In two interviews the Prime Minister's spokesman, Mr. Regev, emphasized that he considered Hamas were mounting a cover-up in relation to the fact the senior operatives had been killed by the Israeli armed forces in its strike and in particular that two persons, Imad and Hassan Abu Askar, were "well-known members of the Hamas military machine – part of the rocket network".³⁸⁶

670. The position set out on 6 January was repeated again in comments to the press on 12 January by an Israeli armed forces' spokesman.³⁸⁷

671. On 15 and 19 February 2009 The Jerusalem Post published reports quoting Colonel Moshe Levi of CLA. He indicated that the stories of 40 or more dying as a result of the attack were the result of distortions and that in fact the Israeli armed forces had killed 12 people, including nine Hamas operatives and three non-combatants. The report of 19 February lists 7 of the 12 he said were killed. He also pointed out that the Israeli surveillance footage showed only "few stretchers were brought in to evacuate people".

672. On 22 April 2009 the Israeli armed forces published the results of their preliminary investigations, stating a completely different position from that previously expressed:

³⁸⁴ http://www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Government/Communiques/2009/Initial_inquiry_school_incident_6-Jan-2009.htm.

³⁸⁵ On 7 January in a television interview on the British Broadcasting Corporation's programme Newsnight, Mr. Regev indicated that he believed that the Israeli armed forces had attacked the school because they had come under fire, that the school was occupied by Hamas operatives and that those Hamas operatives had committed a war crime by using the premises for the purpose of launching mortars. See <http://www.youtube.com/watch?gl=GB&hl=en-GB&v=9wv0giW1elo&feature=PlayList&p=9277810AA376DF8D&playnext=1&index=5>.

In another interview he indicated the Israeli armed forces' patrol returned fire having received mortar fire, that he assumed the school had been taken by force by Hamas "with guns" and held the people in the school as "hostages". See <https://www.csionline.org/resources/news/9/462-strike-on-gaza-school-kills-40?tmpl=component&print=1&page>.

On the same day Major Avital Leibovich, spokeswoman of the Israeli armed forces, in an interview with Channel 4 news said that Hamas had fired from "the vicinity of the school" but later asserted that the two Hamas militants were inside the school firing at the Israeli armed forces. See <http://link.brightcove.com/services/player/bcpid1184614595?betid=6539745001>

On the same day Israeli armed forces' spokesman Captain Benjamin Rutland made a presentation posted on YouTube. He indicated that it had transpired later that the mortar fire had come from within a United Nations school, that this was a crime on the part of Hamas and that civilians had been killed. He noted, however, that Hamas terror operatives had been killed including the well-known Abu Askar brothers. Another Israeli armed forces spokesperson confirmed on 12 January that it was adhering to the same positions as had been expressed on 6 and 7 January. See <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/News/today/09/4/2201.htm>.

³⁸⁶ See <https://www.csionline.org/resources/news/9/462-strike-on-gaza-school-kills-40?tmpl=component&print=1&page>

³⁸⁷ The statement of Captain Ishai David in The Jerusalem Post on 12 January 2009.

Regarding the UNRWA school in Jabaliya, the Fahoura school, the investigation concluded that the IDF used minimal and proportionate retaliatory fire, using the most precise weapons available to them. Hamas made this necessary, as it fired mortar shells at Israeli forces 80 metres from the school. Additionally, it was concluded that all of the shells fired by IDF forces landed outside of the school grounds.³⁸⁸

673. In July 2009 the Israeli Government stated:

Soon after the source of fire was detected, a scouting unit was dispatched to confirm the location. Approximately 50 minutes after the mortar attack had begun, two independent sources cross-verified the location of the mortars. Only subsequent to this, and after verification of a safety margin of at least 50 metres between the target (i.e. the identified source of the mortar fire) and the UNRWA school, did the force respond to the ongoing barrage, by using the most accurate weapon available to it – 120-mm mortars.³⁸⁹

D. Other reports

674. The Mission carried out nine interviews with people who were present in al-Fakhura Street, in the al-Deeb yard or in the UNRWA school. No witness stated that he had heard any firing prior to the Israeli armed forces' mortars landing. On the other hand, the Mission is aware of at least two reports that indicate local residents had heard such fire in the area.³⁹⁰

675. The Mission notes that the statement of the Israeli armed forces on 22 April did not indicate where the Hamas fire came from, only stating it was 80 metres away. The Mission finds it difficult to understand how the Israeli armed forces could have come to this view without having the information at the same time that Hamas operatives had been firing mortars for almost one hour. It regards these new allegations as lacking credibility. However, the Mission accepts, for the purposes of this report, that some firing may have occurred that gave rise to the Israeli armed forces' response.

676. It seems clear to the Mission that Israel's Government developed a position justifying the striking of an UNRWA school as a result of the immediate outcry generated by initial erroneous reports that the school had been hit. That effort included a number of statements, in particular those by Mr. Regev and Major Leibovich, which turned out to be erroneous.

677. The Mission notes the comment of Colonel Moshe Levi in The Jerusalem Post on 15 February 2009 casting doubt on the numbers of dead noting that Israeli surveillance saw only ³⁸⁸ <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/News/today/09/4/2201.htm>.

³⁸⁹ "The operation in Gaza...", para. 338.

³⁹⁰ One report comes from the Associated Press, whose sources insisted on anonymity. The other is by a correspondent of the British Channel 4 News programme who reports that locals told him "militants had been firing rockets" at the Israeli armed forces and were running down the street to get away. See Jonathan Miller, "Why UN 'reversal' over Gaza school should be treated with caution". Channel 4, 5 February 2009, available at: http://www.channel4.com/news/articles/world/middle_east/why+un+reversal+over+gaza+school+should+be+treated+with+caution/2924657.

a few stretchers being used to lift the dead and injured. If Israel had that capacity of surveillance in the immediate aftermath of the shelling, it must have been able to see that the shells had hit on the street outside the school and not inside the school. Furthermore, if such surveillance was recorded, in the face of serious allegations levelled against the Israeli armed forces by several sources after the military operation in Gaza, the Government could have made this footage public in order to establish the truth of its claims regarding this incident.

678. Finally, the Mission comes to the repeated assertion of the Israeli authorities as to the identities of those killed in the strikes. The most detailed attempt to name these come in Col. Levi's statement of the 12 dead, including nine militants and three non-combatants. On 19 February The Jerusalem Post published seven of the names given to them by CLA. The Mission notes that CLA did not provide any information to explain where the information on the dead came from. None of the seven names corresponds with any the Mission has so far established died in the attack.

679. The position assumed by Colonel Levi of CLA is problematic in the light of the relatively uncomplicated case of the al-Deeb family, of whom nine members died immediately and two died later. Four of these were women and four were children. Given these figures alone, and the relative ease with which the victims could be identified, the Mission considers the CLA assertions as to the total numbers and identities of those killed in the Israeli armed forces' mortar strikes to be unreliable. Even if the Israeli authorities were to be correct in saying that nine combatants were killed, they are, in the considered view of the Mission, incorrect in stating that only three non-combatants were killed.

680. A further assertion made several times by Israeli spokespersons on 6 and 7 January and confirmed again on 12 January was that the strikes had not only managed to hit the militant rocket launchers but had also killed two senior Hamas militants, namely Imad Abu Askar and Hassan Abu Askar.³⁹¹ Again, for the most part these early assertions indicated that both had been killed in the UNRWA school. It is noticeable that the Israeli armed forces' summary of their own preliminary investigations does not repeat this claim.

681. What is now clear is that, if any Hamas operatives were killed by the Israeli strike, they were not killed in the school premises. It is difficult for the Mission to understand how the Israeli authorities could establish with such certainty within a matter of hours the identities of two of the Hamas operatives it had killed but could not establish within a week that the alleged firing had not come from the school and that the Israeli armed forces had not hit the school.

682. The Mission is satisfied that three Abu Askar family members were killed: Imad, aged 13, his brother Khaled, aged 19, and their uncle, Arafat, aged 33. Mr. Mark Regev indicated that Imad Abu Askar was a well-known member of Hamas's militant operation and of some significance in the rocket-launching operations. Major Leibovich and Captain Rutland also named Imad as one of the two operatives killed.

³⁹¹ In her interview with Channel 4 News, Major Leibovich in fact appears to say "Amr Abu Askar" after some hesitation but in the light of the other statements the Mission considers this to have been an error on her part and that in all likelihood she intended to say "Imad".

683. The Mission does not deny the possibility of children being recruited by Palestinian armed groups. However, in the case of Imad Abu Askar, the Mission is satisfied that he was not a Hamas operative. Apart from his father's vehement and, in the Mission's view, credible rejection of any such claim, two other factors appear relevant. Firstly, since it has become clear that Imad was a 13-year-old boy it is noticeable that Israel has not commented further on the allegation of his alleged Hamas activity in general or the allegation in particular that on the day in question he had launched mortars at Israel.

684. Secondly, the Israeli armed forces directly called Mr. Abu Askar early in the morning of 6 January notifying him that his house would be attacked imminently. If Imad Abu Askar was as notorious and important as alleged, despite his young age, the Mission presumes that the Israeli authorities would have known where he lived and, in particular, that he lived in the very house they were about to destroy. It is extremely doubtful that the Israeli armed forces, having identified the house where alleged Hamas militants of some significance lived, would warn them so that they may escape and then bomb the house.

685. There is no indication that anyone of the name of Hassan Abu Askar was killed in the attacks as far as the Mission can determine. The Mission notes that the two Hamas operatives Israeli reports refer to were at least on one occasion referred to as brothers. Mr. Abu Askar confirms that there is no one of such a name in his family.

686. It would appear that shortly after the attack the Israeli armed forces received some information that two Abu Askar brothers had been killed. That much is indeed true. However, the use made of that information appears to the Mission to have been knowingly distorted. The brothers were Imad and Khaled, not Imad and Hassan as asserted. One was a 13-year-old boy, the other was a recently married 19-year-old. The certainty and specificity with which the Israeli authorities spoke at the time make it very difficult for them to suggest now that they had simply mixed up the names.

E. Factual findings

687. The facts gathered by the Mission indicate that on 6 January 2006 at around 1.45 a.m. the Israeli forces called Mr. Abu Askar's house, alerted him to the imminent strike on his house and proceeded to destroy it with an aerial strike about seven minutes later. As a result of the warning, Mr. Abu Askar was able to save himself and his family. The Mission finds that the Israeli forces did not seek to kill Mr. Abu Askar or the members of his family with this strike.

688. The Mission also finds that at around 4 p.m. Israeli forces launched at least four mortar shells. One landed in the al-Deeb courtyard, killing nine people immediately and two later on.

689. Three other shells landed on al-Fakhura Street, which was busy at the time, killing at least a further 24 people and injuring as many as 40.

690. The Mission notes that the attack may have been in response to a mortar attack from an armed Palestinian group but considers the credibility of Israel's position damaged by the series of inconsistencies and factual inaccuracies.

F. Legal findings

691. Elements of article 50 of Additional Protocol I reflect customary international law and provide the following:

2. The civilian population comprises all persons who are civilians.
3. The presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilians does not deprive the population of its civilian character.

692. Article 57 is relevant in relation to the following provisions:

1. In the conduct of military operations, constant care shall be taken to spare the civilian population, civilians and civilian objects.
2. With respect to attacks, the following precautions shall be taken:
 - (a) Those who plan or decide upon an attack shall:
 - (i) Do everything feasible to verify that the objectives to be attacked are neither civilians nor civilian objects and are not subject to special protection but are military objectives within the meaning of paragraph 2 of article 52 and that it is not prohibited by the provisions of this Protocol to attack them;
 - (ii) Take all feasible precautions in the choice of means and methods of attack with a view to avoiding, and in any event to minimizing, incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians and damage to civilian objects;
 - (iii) Refrain from deciding to launch any attack which may be expected to cause incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians, damage to civilian objects, or a combination thereof, which would be excessive in relation to the concrete and direct military advantage anticipated;
 - (b) An attack shall be cancelled or suspended if it becomes apparent that the objective is not a military one or is subject to special protection or that the attack may be expected to cause incidental loss of civilian life, injury to civilians, damage to civilian objects, or a combination thereof, which would be excessive in relation to the concrete and direct military advantage anticipated;
 - (c) Effective advance warning shall be given of attacks which may affect the civilian population, unless circumstances do not permit.

693. The Mission considers there are two key issues to be considered in the present case: the issue of proportionality in relation to the military advantage to be gained and the choice of weapons used.

694. A detailed discussion of the difficulties of assessing military advantage is presented in the analysis of the Committee established to review the NATO bombing campaign against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in 1998.³⁹² According to that Committee, the following are some of the relevant questions to be asked:

- (a) What are the relative values to be assigned to the military advantage gained and the injury to non-combatants and or the damage to civilian objects?
- (b) What do you include or exclude in totalling your sums?
- (c) What is the standard of measurement in time or space? And
- (d) To what extent is a military commander obligated to expose his own forces to danger in order to limit civilian casualties or damage to civilian objects?

695. The Committee reflected further:

The answers to these questions are not simple. It may be necessary to resolve them on a case-by-case basis, and the answers may differ depending on the background and values of the decision maker. It is unlikely that a human rights lawyer and an experienced combat commander would assign the same relative values to military advantage and to injury to non-combatants. Further, it is unlikely that military commanders with different doctrinal backgrounds and differing degrees of combat experience or national military histories would always agree in close cases. It is suggested that the determination of relative values must be that of the "reasonable military commander". Although there will be room for argument in close cases, there will be many cases where reasonable military commanders will agree that the injury to non-combatants or the damage to civilian objects was clearly disproportionate to the military advantage gained.

696. Accepting that these views are helpful to inform the present discussion, the Mission finds the following:

- (a) The military advantage to be gained was to stop the alleged firing of mortars that posed a risk to the lives of Israeli armed forces;
- (b) Even if there were people firing mortars near al-Fakhura Street, the calculation of the military advantage had to be assessed bearing in mind the chances of success in killing the targets as against the risk of firing into a street full of civilians and very near a shelter with 1,368 civilians and of which the Israeli authorities had been informed.

697. The Mission recognizes that for all armies proportionality decisions will present very genuine dilemmas in certain cases. The Mission does not consider this to be such a case.

³⁹² "Final report to the Prosecutor...", paras. 47-50.

698. The Mission does not say that the Israeli armed forces had to accept the risk to themselves at all cost, but in addressing that risk it appears to the Mission that they had ample opportunity to make a choice of weapons that would have significantly limited the risk to civilians in the area. According to the position the Government has itself taken, Israeli forces had a full 50 minutes to respond to this threat – or at least they took a full 50 minutes to respond to it. Given the mobilization speeds of helicopters and fighter jets in the context of the military operations in Gaza, the Mission finds it difficult to believe that mortars were the most accurate weapons available at the time. The time in question is almost 1 hour. The decision is difficult to justify.

699. The choice of weapon – mortars – appears to have been a reckless one. Mortars are area weapons. They kill or maim whoever is within the impact zone after detonation and they are incapable of distinguishing between combatants and civilians. A decision to deploy them in a location filled with civilians is a decision that a commander knows will result in the death and injuries of some of those civilians.

700. Even if the version of events presented now by Israel is to be believed, the Mission does not consider that the choice of deploying mortar weapons in a busy street with around 150 civilians in it (not to mention those within the school) can be justified. The Mission does not consider that in these circumstances it was a choice that any reasonable commander would have made.

701. From the facts available to it, the Mission believes that there has been a violation of:

- Additional Protocol I, articles 57 (2) (a) (ii) and (iii) as set out above;
- The inherent right to life of the Palestinian civilians killed in the above incidents by depriving them arbitrarily of their life in violation of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

702. The Mission views as being unreliable the versions given by the Israeli authorities. The confusion as to what was hit, the erroneous allegations of who was specifically hit and where the armed groups were firing from, the indication that Israeli surveillance watched the scene but nonetheless could not detect where the strikes occurred, all combine to give the impression of either profound confusion or obfuscation.

703. Whatever the truth, the Mission is of the view that the deployment of at least four mortar shells to attempt to kill a small number of specified individuals in a setting where large numbers of civilians were going about their daily business and 1,368 people were sheltering nearby cannot meet the test of what a reasonable commander would have determined to be an acceptable loss of civilian life for the military advantage sought.

XI. DELIBERATE ATTACKS AGAINST THE CIVILIAN POPULATION

704. According to the Israeli Government, the Israeli armed forces' rules of engagement for the military operation in Gaza emphasized the principle of distinction as one of four "guiding principles that applied in an integrated and cumulative manner: military necessity, distinction, proportionality and humanity". It defines the principle of distinction in the following terms: "Strikes shall be directed against military objectives and combatants only. It is absolutely prohibited to intentionally strike civilians or civilian objects (in contrast to incidental proportional harm).”³⁹³

705. The Mission investigated 11 incidents in which serious allegations of direct attacks with lethal outcome were made against civilians. There appears to have been no justifiable military objective pursued in any of them. The first two incidents concern alleged attacks by Israeli armed forces against houses in the al-Samouni neighbourhood of Gaza during the initial phase of the ground invasion. The following group of seven incidents concern the alleged shooting of civilians who were trying to leave their homes to walk to a safer place, waving white flags and, in some of the cases, following an injunction from the Israeli armed forces to do so. In the last of these seven cases, a house was allegedly shelled with white phosphorous, killing five and injuring others. Two further members of the family were allegedly shot by Israeli troops as they tried to evacuate the wounded to a hospital. In the following incident, a mosque was targeted during the early evening prayer, resulting in the death of 15. In many of the incidents, the Israeli armed forces allegedly obstructed emergency medical help to the wounded. A further incident concerns the bombing of a family house, killing 22 family members. In the last of the incidents described, a crowd of family and neighbours at a condolence tent was attacked with flechettes.

A. Attacks on the houses of Ateya al-Samouni and Wa’el al-Samouni in Zeytoun, resulting in the death of 23 members of the al-Samouni family

706. To investigate the attacks on the houses of Ateya and Wa’el al-Samouni, which killed 23 members of the extended al-Samouni family, the Mission visited the site of the incidents.³⁹⁴ It interviewed five members of the al-Samouni family and several of their neighbours on site.³⁹⁵ Two members of the extended al-Samouni family, who were eyewitnesses to the incident, Messrs. Wa’el and Saleh al-Samouni, testified at the public hearing in Gaza. The Mission also interviewed PRCS ambulance drivers who went to the area on 4, 7 and 18 January 2009, and obtained copies of PRCS records. The Mission finally reviewed material on this incident submitted to it by TAWTHEQ as well as by NGOs.

707. The so-called al-Samouni area is part of Zeytoun, south of Gaza City, bordered to the east by al-Sekka Street, which in that part of Gaza runs parallel and very close to Salah ad-Din Street. It is inhabited by members of the extended al-Samouni family, which gives its name to the area, as well as by other families, such as the Arafats and the Hajjis. Al-Samouni area is more rural than urban, houses used to stand next to small olive and fig groves, chicken coops and other small plots of agricultural land. A small mosque stood in the centre of the neighbourhood. These no longer existed at the time of the Mission’s visit in June 2009. The Mission saw very few ³⁹³ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 222.

³⁹⁴ Graffiti left by Israeli soldiers in the house of Talal al-Samouni, which were photographed by the Mission, included (a) in Hebrew, under the Star of David: “The Jewish people are alive” and, above a capital “T” [referring to the army (Tsahal)], “This [the letter T] was written with blood”; (b) on a drawing of a grave, in English and Arabic, “Arabs 1948-2008 ”; and (c) in English: “You can run but you can not hide”, “Die you all”, “ 1 is down, 999,999 to go”, “Arabs need to die” and “Make war not peace”.

³⁹⁵ Testimony to the Mission by Saleh al-Samouni, Talal al-Samouni, Wa’el Faris al-Samouni, Muhammad Asaad al-Samouni, Ms. Massouda Sobhia al-Samouni, Mr. Faraj Ata al-Samouni, Mrs. Abir Muhammad Hajji and Mr. Fawzi Arafat, 3 June 2009.

buildings left and a few tents standing amidst the rubble of collapsed houses and bulldozed land.³⁹⁶

708. The Israeli ground offensive from the east reached al-Samouni neighbourhood around 4 a.m. on 4 January 2009. In addition to the ground forces moving in from the east, there were, in all likelihood, heliborne³⁹⁷ troops that landed on the roofs of several houses in the area. Residents told the Mission that there was shooting in the neighbourhood in the night of 3 to 4 January and again the following night, but denied having seen any Palestinian fighters.

1. The killing of Ateya al-Samouni and his son Ahmad

709. During the morning of 4 January 2009, Israeli soldiers entered many of the houses in al-Samouni area. One of the first, around 5 a.m., was the house of Ateya Helmi al-Samouni, a 45-year-old man. Faraj, his 22-year-old son, had already met Israeli soldiers some minutes earlier as he stepped outside the house to warn his neighbours that their roof was burning. The soldiers entered Ateya al-Samouni's house by force, throwing some explosive device, possibly a grenade. In the midst of the smoke, fire and loud noise, Ateya al-Samouni stepped forward, his arms raised, and declared that he was the owner of the house. The soldiers shot him while he was still holding his ID and an Israeli driving licence in his hands. The soldiers then opened gunfire inside the room in which all the approximately 20 family members were gathered. Several were injured, Ahmad, a boy of four, particularly seriously. Soldiers with night vision equipment entered the room and closely inspected each of those present. The soldiers then moved to the next room and set fire to it. The smoke from that room soon started to suffocate the family. A witness speaking to the Mission recalled seeing "white stuff" coming out of the mouth of his 17-month-old nephew and helping him to breathe.

710. At about 6.30 a.m. the soldiers ordered the family to leave the house. They had to leave Ateya's body behind but were carrying Ahmad, who was still breathing. The family tried to enter the house of an uncle next door, but were not allowed to do so by the soldiers. The soldiers told them to take the road and leave the area, but a few metres further a different group of soldiers stopped them and ordered the men to undress completely. Faraj al-Samouni, who was carrying the severely injured Ahmad, pleaded with them to be allowed to take the injured to Gaza. The soldiers allegedly replied using abusive language. They also said "You are bad Arabs". "You go to Nitzarim".

711. Faraj al-Samouni, his mother and others entered the house of an uncle in the neighbourhood. From there, they called PRCS. As described below, at around 4 p.m. that day a PRCS ambulance managed to come in the vicinity of the house where Ahmad was lying wounded, but was prevented by the Israeli armed forces from rescuing him. Ahmad died at around 2 a.m. during the night of 4 to 5 January.³⁹⁸ The following morning those present in the house, about 45 persons, decided to leave. They made themselves white flags and walked in the direction of Salah ad-Din Street. A group of soldiers on the street told them to go back to the house, but the witness said that they walked on in the direction of Gaza. The soldiers shot at their feet, without injuring anyone, however. Two kilometres further north on Salah ad-Din Street, they found ambulances which took the injured to al-Shifa hospital in Gaza.

³⁹⁶ The UNOSAT report (p. 21) counts "114 ... destroyed or severely damaged buildings, ... 27 damaged greenhouse complexes, and 17 impact craters along roads or in cultivated fields" in the area of al-Samouni Street. A soldier stationed in Zeytoun during the military operations recalled that he observed through his binoculars "increasing devastation. Houses that disappear with time, farm land ploughed over time." (Soldiers' testimonies..., testimony 37, p. 82).

³⁹⁷ One witness told the Mission that on 5 January 2009, walking on Salah ad-Din Street towards Gaza, he saw by the roadside parachutes Israeli troops had used to land in the area.

2. The attack on the house of Wa'el al-Samouni

712. In other cases, the entry of soldiers was less violent than in Ateya al-Samouni's home. In one instance, the soldiers landed on the roof and descended the stairs to the ground floor, separated men from women, searched and handcuffed the men.³⁹⁹ In another case they broke into a house by knocking a hole in the wall with a sledgehammer.⁴⁰⁰ At the house of Saleh al-Samouni, the Israeli soldiers knocked on the door and ordered those inside to open it. All the persons inside the house stepped out one by one and Saleh's father identified each of the family members in Hebrew for the soldiers. According to Saleh al-Samouni, they asked to be allowed to go to Gaza City, but the soldiers refused and instead ordered them to go to Wa'el al-Samouni's house across the street.

713. The Israeli soldiers also ordered those in other houses to move to Wa'el al-Samouni's house. As a result, around 100 members of the extended al-Samouni family, the majority women and children, were assembled in that house by noon on 4 January. There was hardly any water and no milk for the babies. Around 5 p.m. on 4 January, one of the women went outside to fetch firewood. There was some flour in the house and she made bread, one piece for each of those present.

714. In the morning of 5 January 2009, around 6.30 – 7 a.m., Wa'el al-Samouni, Saleh al-Samouni, Hamdi Maher al-Samouni, Muhammad Ibrahim al-Samouni and Iyad al-Samouni, stepped outside the house to collect firewood. Rashad Helmi al-Samouni remained standing next to the door of the house. Saleh al-Samouni has pointed out to the Mission that from where the Israeli soldiers were positioned on the roofs of the houses they could see the men clearly. Suddenly, a projectile struck next to the five men, close to the door of Wa'el's house and killed Muhammad Ibrahim al-Samouni and, probably, Hamdi Maher al-Samouni.⁴⁰¹ The other men managed to retreat to the house. Within about five minutes, two or three more projectiles had struck the house directly. Saleh and Wa'el al-Samouni stated at the public hearing that these were missiles launched from Apache helicopters. The Mission has not been able to determine the type of munition used.

³⁹⁸ Faraj al-Samouni also told the Mission that, at the time of Ahmad's death, another relative gave birth to a baby in the same house. The following day the mother, who had to be transported in a wheelchair because she had broken her leg doing household chores, and the baby were among the group that managed to evacuate to Gaza City. Mother and child are in good health.

³⁹⁹ Testimony of Muhammad Asaad al-Samouni, 3 June 2009.

⁴⁰⁰ Testimony of Saleh al-Samouni, 3 June 2009.

⁴⁰¹ The Mission notes that while all testimonies agree that Muhammad Ibrahim al-Samouni died on the spot, there are some discrepancies as to whether Hamdi Maher al-Samouni was killed by the first strike or died subsequently inside the house.

715. Saleh al-Samouni stated that overall 21 family members were killed and 19 injured in the attack on Wa'el al-Samouni's house. The dead include Saleh al-Samouni's father, Talal Helmi al-Samouni, his mother, Rahma Muhammad al-Samouni, and his two-year-old daughter Azza. Three of his sons, aged five, three and less than one year (Mahmoud, Omar and Ahmad), were injured, but survived. Of Wa'el's immediate family, a daughter and a son (Rezqa, 14, and Fares, 12) were killed, while two smaller children (Abdullah and Muhammad) were injured.⁴⁰² The photographs of all the dead victims were shown to the Mission at the home of the al-Samouni family and displayed at the public hearing in Gaza.

716. After the shelling of Wa'el al-Samouni's house, most of those inside decided to leave immediately and walk to Gaza City, leaving behind the dead and some of the wounded. The women waved their scarves. Soldiers, however, ordered the al-Samounis to return to the house. When family members replied that there were many injured among them, the soldiers' reaction was, according to Saleh al-Samouni, "go back to death". They decided not to follow this injunction and walked in the direction of Gaza City. Once in Gaza, they went to PRCS and told them about the injured that had remained behind.

3. The attempts of PRCS and ICRC to rescue the civilians in the al-Samouni area

717. PRCS had made its first attempt to evacuate the injured from the al-Samouni area on 4 January 2009 around 4 p.m. after receiving a call from the family of Ateya al-Samouni. PRCS had called ICRC, asking it to coordinate its entry into the area with the Israeli armed forces. A PRCS ambulance from al-Quds hospital managed to reach the al-Samouni area. The ambulance had turned west off Salah ad-Din Street when, at one of the first houses in the area, Israeli soldiers on the ground and on the roof of one of the houses directed their guns at it and ordered it to stop. The driver and the nurse were ordered to get out of the vehicle, raise their hands, take off their clothes and lie on the ground. Israeli soldiers then searched them and the vehicle for 5 to 10 minutes. Having found nothing, the soldiers ordered the ambulance team to return to Gaza City, in spite of their pleas to be allowed to pick up some wounded. In his statement to the Mission, the ambulance driver recalled seeing women and children huddling under the staircase in a house, but not being allowed to take them with him.⁴⁰³

718. As soon as the first evacuees from the al-Samouni family arrived in Gaza City on 5 January, PRCS and ICRC requested permission from the Israeli armed forces to go into the al Samouni neighbourhood to evacuate the wounded. These requests were denied. On 6 January around 6.45 p.m., one ICRC car and four PRCS ambulances drove towards the al-Samouni area

⁴⁰² The names of the other 15 members of the extended al-Samouni family killed in the attack on Wa'el al-Samouni's house are: Rabab Izaat (female, aged 37); Tawfiq Rashad (male, aged 22); Layla Nabeeh (female, aged 44); Ismaeil Ibrahim (male, aged 16); Ishaq Ibrahim (male, aged 14); Maha Muhammad (female, aged 20); Muhammad Hilmi Talal (the six-year-old son of Maha); Hanan Khamis Sa'di (female, aged 36); Huda Naiel (female, aged 17); Rezqa Muhammad Mahmoud (female, aged 56); Safaa Sobhi (female, aged 24); al-Moa'tasim Bilah Muhammad (male, aged six months); Hamdi Maher (male, aged 24); Rashad Helmi (male, aged 42); Nassar Ibrahim Hilmi (male, aged 6).

⁴⁰³ Mission interview with PRCS driver W2, 10 June 2009.

in spite of the lack of coordination with the Israeli armed forces, but were not allowed to enter the area and evacuate the wounded.

719. On 7 January 2009, the Israeli armed forces finally authorized ICRC and PRCS to go to the al-Samouni area during the “temporary ceasefire” declared from 1 to 4 p.m. on that day.⁴⁰⁴ Three PRCS ambulances, an ICRC car and another car used to transport bodies drove down Salah ad-Din Street from Gaza City until, 1.5 km north of the al-Samouni area, they found it closed by sand mounds. ICRC tried to coordinate with the Israeli armed forces to have the road opened, but they refused and asked the ambulance staff to walk the remaining 1.5 km.

720. Once in the al-Samouni neighbourhood, PRCS looked for survivors in the houses. An ambulance driver who was part of the team told the Mission that in Wa’el al-Samouni’s house they found 15 dead bodies and two seriously injured children.⁴⁰⁵ One of the children had a deep wound in the shoulder, which was infected and giving off a foul odour. The children were dehydrated and scared of the PRCS staff member. In a house close by, they found 11 persons in one room, including a dead woman.

721. The rescue teams had only three hours for the entire operation and the evacuees were physically weak and emotionally very unstable. The road had been damaged by the impact of shells and the movement of Israeli armed forces, including tanks and bulldozers. The rescuers put all the elderly on a cart and pulled it themselves for 1.5 kilometres to the place where they had been forced to leave the ambulances. The dead bodies lying in the street or under the rubble, among them women and children, as well as the dead they had found in the houses had to be left behind. On the way back to the cars, PRCS staff entered one house where they found a man with two broken legs. While they were carrying the man out of the house, the Israeli armed forces started firing at the house, probably to warn that the three-hour “temporary ceasefire” were about to expire. PRCS was not able to return to the area until 18 January.

722. On 18 January 2009, members of the al-Samouni family were finally able to return to their neighbourhood. They found that Wa’el al-Samouni’s house, as most other houses in the neighbourhood and the small mosque, had been demolished. The Israeli armed forces had destroyed the building on top of the bodies of those who died in the attack. Pictures taken on 18 January show feet and legs sticking out from under the rubble and sand, and rescuers pulling out the bodies of women, men and children. A witness described to the Mission family members taking away the corpses on horse carts, a young man sitting in shock beside the ruins of his house and, above all, the extremely strong smell of death.⁴⁰⁶

4. Factual findings

723. The Mission found the foregoing witnesses to be credible and reliable. It has no reason to doubt their testimony.

⁴⁰⁴ Mission interview with PRCS driver W1, 10 June 2009.

⁴⁰⁵ Ibid.

⁴⁰⁶ Mission interview with witness W2, 7 June 2009.

724. With regard to the context in which the attacks on the houses of Ateya al-Samouni and Wa'el al-Samouni took place, the Mission notes that there is some indication that there might have been a presence of Palestinian combatants in the al-Samouni neighbourhood during the first hours of the Israeli ground attack. A witness told the Mission that when he heard the first shots in the vicinity of his house in the night of 3 to 4 January, he at first thought it was Palestinian fighters. An NGO report submitted to the Mission states that a Palestinian combatant, reportedly a member of the Islamic Jihad, was killed in the al-Samouni area around midnight between 3 and 4 January.⁴⁰⁷

725. The Mission considers, however, that the testimonies of the witnesses strongly suggest that already before daybreak on 4 January 2009 the Israeli armed forces were in full control of the al-Samouni neighbourhood. The Israeli soldiers had taken up position on the roofs of the houses in the area. According to several witnesses, the soldiers on the street spoke to residents who had ventured out of their houses.⁴⁰⁸ In some cases (for instance, at the house of Saleh al-Samouni and at the house Iyad al-Samouni was in, see below), they entered the houses non-violently after knocking on the door. According to Saleh al-Samouni, the prolonged identification of all the persons present in his house (his father identifying each family member in Hebrew for the soldiers) took place outside. The soldiers appear to have been confident that they were not at immediate risk of being attacked.

726. The Mission also reviewed the submission it received from an Israeli researcher, arguing generally that statements from Palestinian residents claiming that no fighting took place in their neighbourhood are disproved by the accounts Palestinian armed groups give of the armed operations. The Mission notes that, as far as the al-Samouni neighbourhood is concerned, this report would appear to support the statements of the witnesses that there was no combat.⁴⁰⁹

727. Regarding the attack on Ateya al-Samouni's house, the Mission finds that the account given to it by Faraj al-Samouni is corroborated by the soldiers' testimonies published by the Israeli NGO Breaking the Silence. The assault on Ateya al-Samouni's house appears to be the procedure of the Israeli armed forces referred to as a "wet entry". A "wet entry" is, according to the soldier's explanation, "missiles, tank fire, machine-gun fire into the house, grenades. Shoot as we enter a room. The idea was that when we enter a house, no one there could fire at us." This procedure was, according to the soldier, thoroughly practised during recent Israeli armed forces manoeuvres.⁴¹⁰

728. The Mission notes that considering the generally calm circumstances that appear to have prevailed in the al-Samouni neighbourhood at the time (as evidenced by the way the soldiers

⁴⁰⁷ Al Mezan's table of children killed during the military operations in Gaza.

⁴⁰⁸ Testimonies of Saleh al-Samouni and Faraj al-Samouni.

⁴⁰⁹ "The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties..." Only 4 of the more than 100 entries in the submission refer to combat action in Zeytoun, the much larger part of Gaza City of which al-Samouni neighbourhood is a part. The incidents in Zeytoun that are mentioned reportedly occurred on 6, 7, 11 and 13 January 2009, and consist of Palestinian combatants opening fire against Israeli troops with rocket-propelled grenades, a mortar (in one case) and detonating an explosive device.

⁴¹⁰ Soldiers' Testimonies..., testimony 4, p. 14; see also testimony 37, p. 82.

entered other houses after knocking on the door) and the fact that the soldiers had already spoken to Faraj al-Samouni, one of the persons in Ateya al-Samouni's house, the Mission cannot see any circumstance justifying the violent entry into the house.

729. With regard to the attack on the five men who stepped out of Wa'el al-Samouni's house to fetch firewood in the early morning of 5 January 2009 and to the subsequent shelling of the house, the Mission notes that the members of the other families who had been moved by the Israeli forces into Wa'el al-Samouni's house had been searched by Israeli soldiers, as recounted by Saleh al-Samouni. Everything indicates that the Israeli forces knew that there were about 100 civilians in the house. Indeed, the families had asked to be allowed to leave the area towards a safer place, but had been ordered to stay in Wa'el al-Samouni's house. The house must have been under constant observation by the Israeli soldiers, who had complete control over the area at the time.

730. The Mission was not able to determine whether the attack was carried out by missiles launched from Apache helicopters, as Saleh and Wa'el al-Samouni told the Mission at the public hearing in Gaza, or by other munitions. Nevertheless, the fact that a first projectile struck next to the five men soon after they had left the house (at a time at which there was no combat in the area) and two or three projectiles struck the house after the survivors had retreated into the house, indicates that the weaponry used allowed a high degree of precision with a short response time and that the five men and then the house were the intended targets of the attack.

731. The Mission notes that, four days later, the Israeli armed forces denied that the attack on the house of Wa'el al-Samouni had taken place. On 9 January 2009, an Israeli army spokesman, Jacob Dallal, reportedly told the Reuters news agency that "the IDF did not mass people into any specific building. [...] Furthermore, we checked with regard to IDF fire on the 5th. The IDF did not target any building in or near Zeitun on the 5th."⁴¹¹ The Mission is not aware of any subsequent statement from the Israeli Government which would contradict this blanket denial or suggest that the allegations have been the subject of further investigation.

732. With regard to the obstruction of emergency medical access to the wounded in the al-Samouni neighbourhood, the Mission notes that four-year-old Ahmad al-Samouni was still alive at 4 p.m. on 4 January 2009, when the PRCS ambulance called by his relatives managed to arrive within what the Mission estimates to be 100 to 200 metres from the house where he was. In fact, he died about 10 hours later, which suggests that he might have had a good chance of survival. Israeli soldiers stopped the ambulance and thoroughly searched the driver, nurse and vehicle.⁴¹² Although they did not find anything indicating that the ambulance staff was not on a genuine emergency mission to evacuate a wounded civilian, they forced the ambulance to return to Gaza City without the injured Ahmad.

733. On 5 and 6 January 2009, following the arrival in Gaza City hospitals of survivors of the attack on Wa'el al-Samouni's house, PRCS and ICRC requested permission from the Israeli ⁴¹¹ http://www.javno.com/en-world/gaza-boy-recounts-house-of-death_222451.

⁴¹² In addition to searching the ambulance driver and the nurse, the Israeli soldiers also appear to have intended to humiliate them by forcing them to lie down on the street in their underwear for 5 to 10 minutes, in the cold of an early January late afternoon.

armed forces to go into the al-Samouni neighbourhood to evacuate the wounded. These requests were denied. According to the information available to PRCS, the Israeli armed forces told ICRC that there were combat operations going on in the area. A PRCS ambulance driver who was part of the PRCS convoy which went to the area in spite of the refusal of the Israeli armed forces to grant permission, reported that there were no clashes at the time.⁴¹³ PRCS and ICRC were not able to evacuate the wounded from the area until 7 January in the afternoon.

734. The information before it leads the Mission to believe that the Israeli armed forces arbitrarily prevented the evacuation of the wounded from the al-Samouni area, thereby causing at least one additional death, worsening of the injuries in others, and severe psychological trauma in at least some of the victims, particularly children.

735. These findings are corroborated by the press release ICRC issued on 8 January 2008:

The ICRC had requested safe passage for ambulances to access this neighbourhood [the al-Samouni area in Zeytoun] since 3 January but it only received permission to do so from the Israel Defense Forces during the afternoon of 7 January.

The ICRC/PRCS team found four small children next to their dead mothers in one of the houses. They were too weak to stand up on their own. One man was also found alive, too weak to stand up. In all there were at least 12 corpses lying on mattresses.

In another house, the ICRC/PRCS rescue team found 15 other survivors of this attack including several wounded. In yet another house, they found an additional three corpses. Israeli soldiers posted at a military position some 80 metres away from this house ordered the rescue team to leave the area which they refused to do. There were several other positions of the Israel Defense Forces nearby as well as two tanks.⁴¹⁴

B. Killing of civilians attempting to leave their homes to walk to safer areas

1. The shooting of Iyad al-Samouni

736. The Mission received testimony on the death of Iyad al-Samouni from Muhammad Asaad al-Samouni and Fawzi Arafat, as well as from a PRCS staff member. In the night of 3 to 4 January 2009, Iyad al-Samouni, his wife and five children were, together with about 40 other members of their extended family in Asaad al-Samouni's house, very close to the houses of Wa'el al-Samouni and Ateya al-Samouni (the scenes of the incidents described above). At 1 a.m. on 4 January 2009 they heard noise on the roof. At around 5 a.m. Israeli soldiers walked down the stairs from the roof, knocked on the door and entered the house. They asked for Hamas fighters. The residents replied that there were none. The soldiers then separated women, children and the elderly from the men. The men were forced into a separate room, blindfolded and handcuffed with plastic handcuffs. They were allowed to go to the toilet only after one of the men urinated on himself. The soldiers stationed themselves in the house.

⁴¹³ PRCS records at al-Quds hospital.

⁴¹⁴ <http://www.icrc.org/web/eng/siteeng0.nsf/html/palestine-news-080109>.

737. In the morning of 5 January 2009, after the shelling of Wa'el al-Samouni's house, two of the survivors took refuge in Asaad al-Samouni's house. From the testimonies received, the Mission is not able to state whether the Israeli soldiers then ordered the al-Samouni family members in the house to leave and walk to Gaza City, or whether it was the families who pleaded with the soldiers to be allowed to leave having heard the appalling news of what had happened to their relatives in Wa'el al-Samouni's house. In any event, the persons assembled in Asaad al-Samouni's house walked out of the house and down al-Samouni Street to take Salah ad-Din Street in the direction of Gaza City. They had been instructed by the soldiers to walk directly to Gaza City without stopping or diverting from the direct route. The men were still handcuffed and the soldiers had told them that they would be shot if they attempted to remove the handcuffs.

738. On Salah ad-Din Street, just a few metres north of al-Samouni Street and in front of the Juha family house,⁴¹⁵ a single or several of the Israeli soldiers positioned on the roofs of the houses opened fire. Iyad was struck in the leg and fell to the ground.⁴¹⁶ Muhammad Asaad al-Samouni, who was walking immediately behind him, moved to help him, but an Israeli soldier on a rooftop ordered him to walk on. When he saw the red point of a laser beam on his body and understood that an Israeli soldier had taken aim at him, he desisted. The Israeli soldiers also fired warning shots at Muhammad Asaad al-Samouni's father to prevent him from assisting Iyad to get back on his feet. Iyad al-Samouni's wife and children were prevented from helping him by further warning shots. Fawzi Arafat, who was part of another group walking from the al-Samouni neighbourhood to Gaza, told the Mission that he saw Iyad al-Samouni lying on the ground, his hands shackled with white plastic handcuffs, blood pouring from the wounds in his legs, begging for help. Fawzi Arafat stated that he yelled at an Israeli soldier "we want to evacuate the wounded man". The soldier, however, pointed his gun at Iyad's wife and children and ordered them to move on without him.

739. Iyad al-Samouni's family and relatives were forced to abandon him and continue to walk towards Gaza City. At al-Shifa hospital they reported his case and those of the other dead and wounded left behind. Representatives of PRCS told them that the Israeli armed forces were not permitting them to access the area.

740. A PRCS staff member⁴¹⁷ told the Mission that three days later, on 8 January 2009, PRCS was granted permission by the Israeli armed forces through ICRC to evacuate Iyad al-Samouni. The PRCS staff member found him on the ground in Salah ad-Din Street in the place described by his relatives. He was still handcuffed. He had been shot in both legs and had bled to death.

⁴¹⁵ This is the home of the family of Mu'een Juha, see the case of the shooting of Ibrahim Juha discussed below in the chapter.

⁴¹⁶ According to the researchers of a Palestinian NGO who investigated this case, the mobile phone in the pocket of the cousin walking in front of Iyad al-Samouni rang and Iyad al-Samouni tried to take the phone out of his pocket (the cousin's hands were tied as well, so he could not reach into his pocket himself), whereupon the Israeli soldier opened fire. This detail was not mentioned to the Mission in its interviews.

⁴¹⁷ Mission interview with PRCS driver W4, 10 June 2009.

2. Factual findings

741. The Mission found the witnesses it heard in relation to the shooting of Iyad al-Samouni to be credible and reliable. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of the main elements of their testimony, which is corroborated by the testimony of the PRCS ambulance driver.

742. The Mission finds that Iyad al-Samouni was part of a large group of civilians who were leaving their homes and walking towards Gaza City in an area under the complete control of the Israeli armed forces. His hands were tied with white plastic handcuffs. The soldier who opened fire on him should have known, on the basis of the plastic handcuffs if not of coordination with his fellow soldiers stationed in Asaad al-Samouni's house a few hundred metres away, that he had been searched and detained by the Israeli armed forces. In opening fire on Iyad al-Samouni, the Israeli armed forces shot deliberately at a civilian who posed no threat to them.

743. While the fire directed at Iyad al-Samouni could have been intended to incapacitate rather than to kill, by threatening his family members and friends with lethal fire, the Israeli armed forces ensured that he did not receive lifesaving medical help. They deliberately let him bleed to death.

744. The Mission found that the witnesses who spoke about the death of Iyad al-Samouni appeared to be profoundly traumatized by the recollection of his pleading for help from his wife, children and relatives. They also recalled the helplessness of his family, who were under a very credible threat of being shot themselves if they came to his help, and who were compelled to abandon him on the road to bleed to death.

3. The death of Muhammad Hajji in the attack on his family's house and the shooting of Shahd Hajji and Ola Masood Arafat

745. The Mission interviewed Mrs. Abir Hajji in private and received her testimony at the public hearing in Gaza.

746. In the night of 4 to 5 January 2009, the family of Muhammad Hajji and his wife Abir⁴¹⁸ was at home in the al-Samouni neighbourhood. In the hope of being safer from the shooting, they had put their mattresses on the floor. At around 1.30 a.m., Abir Hajji heard a very loud explosion, which shook the house and shattered the windows. Some minutes later, Abir Hajji was in a different room from the rest of the family, looking for her mobile phone to use as a torch, when she heard a second explosion, this time apparently inside the house. The children screamed, shouted "Dad!", but her husband did not reply. In the pitch-darkness she found her husband and felt that he was injured on one side of his head, in the area of the eye and the ear. Her daughters Noor, aged 6, and Nagham, aged 13, were injured.

747. She called her neighbour and brother-in-law, Nasser Hajji, who examined his brother and told her that he was dead. As they were preparing to move to Nasser Hajji's house, Israeli soldiers broke into the house shooting. The soldiers asked Nasser Hajji whether he "was ⁴¹⁸ Muhammad and Abir Hajji had five children, four daughters, Ghada (aged 16), Nagham (aged 13), Noor al-Huda (aged 6) and Shahd (aged 3), and a son, Amin (aged 11).

Hamas”, which he denied assuring them that nobody in the area was a member of either Hamas or Fatah. Mrs. Hajji remembers the soldiers laughing and insisting that Nasser Hajji “was Hamas”. The laughing added to her pain, as the soldiers had seen her dead husband and the children. Nasser Hajji was ordered to undress and then pull his brother’s body to another room, where the soldiers threw mattresses and blankets on the body (the body was still lying in the same position when Abir Hajji returned to her home two weeks later). Her children asked her whether they would be killed as well. She told them to say the Shehada, the prayer recited in the face of death. Mrs. Hajji also recalled that the soldiers were breaking the tiles on the floor of the house and digging in the earth below. Asked about this at the public hearing, she expressed the opinion that this was to obtain sand for the sandbags they subsequently placed on the roof of the house.⁴¹⁹

748. After some time, during which they were sitting on the ground as ordered by the Israeli soldiers, Mrs. Hajji, her children and Nasser Hajji were taken to Nasser’s house. There they found four households of the extended Hajji family. The young men had been handcuffed and four of them also blindfolded. About 60 Israeli soldiers were in the house. Mrs. Hajji recalled them carrying around food and drinks and relaxing in the couches. One of her daughters asked to be allowed to eat something. The soldiers first denied her request, but then allowed her to go into the kitchen and get a small piece of bread.

749. After the midday prayers on 5 January 2009, the Israeli soldiers separated the men from the women and children. The latter were ordered to walk to Rafah. The Hajjis protested, asking to be allowed to go to Gaza City, where they had relatives, but the soldiers told them that they would be shot if they tried to walk to Gaza City. Nasser Hajji and his 18-year-old son were allowed to walk with the women and children, while the other men stayed behind.⁴²⁰

750. The group of Hajji family members walked down the alley to al-Sekka Street. There they were joined by members of the Arafat family, who also live in the al-Samouni neighbourhood, carrying white flags. On al-Sekka Street, one of the Israeli soldiers standing on a rooftop ordered the families to turn south and walk towards Rafah. The families begged to be allowed to walk to Gaza City instead. Without warning, the Israeli soldiers opened fire, “shooting at random” according to Abir Hajji. Ola Masood Arafat, a 28-year-old woman, was struck by a bullet and died on the spot. Mrs. Hajji was wounded in her right arm. Her three-year-old daughter Shahd was shot in the chest. Abir Hajji, who was still carrying Shahd, her other children, her mother-in-law and others managed to take refuge in a house. There they found out that Shahd was still alive.

751. Later on, they left the house and walked together with other families to Salah ad-Din Street and then south on that road. When they reached the Gaza wadi, a motorist took Abir Hajji and her daughter Shahd to a hospital in Deir al-Balah. Shahd died of her wound very soon after arriving at the hospital. Abir Hajji, who was two months pregnant at the time, also suffered a miscarriage.

⁴¹⁹ Soldiers’ Testimonies... suggests that breaking the tiles in civilian homes was a standard practice with two purposes: to fill sandbags (“Take for example the house we were in – it was abandoned and you go about it as if you own it. You break floor tiles to make sandbags, you break stuff to prepare an outpost”, testimony 46, p. 100,) and to search for tunnels (“You’re also told to wreck the floor tiles to check for tunnels”, testimony 23, p. 54)

⁴²⁰ Abir Hajji learned after the armed operations that they had been detained in that house for another three days and then released.

4. Factual findings

752. The Mission found Mrs. Hajji to be a credible and reliable witness. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of her testimony. The Mission also notes that according to the testimony of four other witnesses (those it heard in the case of Ibrahim Juha below), a very similar incident occurred in the immediate vicinity on the same day.

753. With regard to the death of Muhammad Hajji, the Mission notes that Mrs. Hajji's testimony does not provide sufficient information to establish exactly what happened. On the basis of the information before it, the Mission can neither make a statement as to what type of weapon killed him, nor as to whether he was the intended target of a direct attack. The circumstances of his death suggest, however, that he was killed by fire from the Israeli armed forces while at home in a room with his children.

754. As to the fatal shooting of Shahd Hajji and Ola Masood Arafat, Mrs. Hajji's testimony as well as that of Mr. Mu'een Juha and Mrs. Juha, the parents of Ibrahim Juha, of Mr. Sameh Sawafeary and of Mr. Rajab Darwish Mughrabi (see the case of Ibrahim Juha below) all establish that there were no combat operations in the area at the time of the incident. Indeed, the Israeli armed forces would not have ordered the members of the extended Hajji, Arafat, Juha and Sawafeary families to walk to Rafah, thereby asking hundreds of civilians to come out of their houses and fill the streets, if there had been any fighting in the neighbourhood at the time. The Israeli armed forces opened fire on a group of persons they had interacted with during the preceding 12 hours and therefore knew to be civilians. In doing so they killed Ola Masood Arafat and three-year-old Shahd Hajji and injured her mother, who was holding her in her arms.

5. The shooting of Ibrahim Juha

755. The Mission interviewed three eyewitnesses to the shooting of Ibrahim Juha and a further witness of the events surrounding the shooting.⁴²¹ The events preceding and following the shooting of Ibrahim Juha are described in greater detail in chapter XIII below in connection with the destruction of the Sawafeary chicken farms.

756. The Juha family lives in a house on al-Sekka Street a few meters north of where al-Samouni Street goes off Salah ad-Din Street to the west. The house was struck by several missiles during the night of 3 to 4 January 2009, which had caused significant destruction. In the early morning of 4 January, Israeli soldiers entered the house and fired into the room where the Juha family, consisting of Mr. Juha, his two wives, his mother and 13 children, was assembled. Photographs of the scene taken by Mr. Juha show that numerous rounds were discharged. The family was made to assemble in the upper part of the house. They were then ordered to leave the house and walk towards Rafah.

⁴²¹ Mr. Mu'een Juha and Mrs. Juha, the parents of Ibrahim, Mr. Sameh Sawafeary and Mr. Mughrabi.

757. The Juha family and their neighbours, the Sawafeary family, walked down al-Sekka Street for 100 metres in the direction of Rafah. When they reached the house of another neighbour, Mr. Abu Zur, they were invited into that house and decided to stay there. The three families spent 4 January in the house. On the morning of 5 January the house was the subject of intense firing from Israeli troops in the vicinity. After some time Israeli soldiers approached the house and ordered everyone to come out. The men were separated from the women. From the group of men four were separated and required to strip to their underwear. They were held in a house opposite the Abu Zur house, belonging to Mr. Subhi al-Samouni. The remaining group was told once again to leave the area and walk towards Rafah. Mr. Juha recounts that walking down al Sekka Street the group came to a point where a large crater blocked the way ahead and the surrounding rubble provided a difficult obstacle for some members of his family, including his ageing mother, who had fainted shortly before outside the Abu Zur house.

758. In the face of these obstacles the group of three families walked east towards Salah ad-Din Street. There they entered the house of another family, the Mughrabis. With the arrival of the Juha, Sawafeary and Abu Zur families, there were now more than 70 persons assembled in the house.

759. Mr. Juha told the Mission that, after taking a little rest in the Mughrabi house, he came to the view that it was impossible for them all to stay there, given their substantial numbers and the earlier experience of the intense firing at the Abu Zur house. He decided that they should seek to go back into the street and move to another place. Mr. Mughrabi strongly advised against this.

760. The Juha, Abu Zur and Sawafeary families went back into the street in the afternoon of 5 January. Mr. Juha had his mother in front of him propped up on a two-wheeled trolley as she was unable to walk. Mr. Sawafeary was near to him at the front of the group. Behind him, towards the middle of the group, was his 15-year-old son, Ibrahim, carrying a white flag. Mr. Juha believes he heard two shots. One of the shots hit his son in the chest. The group immediately sought cover once again in the Mughrabi house. They tried to care for Ibrahim in the workshop at the front of the house. His mother tried to sew the wound with a needle and thread and sterilize the materials with eau de cologne. Ibrahim died some six hours after he was shot.

761. The group of over 70 persons remained in the house until 8 January in the afternoon, when ICRC and PRCS representatives came to the neighbourhood and they managed to leave the area and walk to Gaza City.

6. Factual findings

762. The Mission found the witnesses of the shooting of Ibrahim Juha to be credible and reliable. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of their testimony.

763. The testimonies of Mr. Mu'een Juha and Mrs. Juha, Mr. Sameh Sawafeary and Mr. Rajab Darwish Mughrabi, as well as of Mrs. Abir Hajji, all establish that there were no combat operations in the area at the time of the incident. The Israeli armed forces had attacked Mr. Juha's house and that of Mr. Abu Zur, where the Juhas and other families had taken refuge, forcing them to leave the area. It was the Israeli armed forces that ordered these families to take the road to Rafah. In sum, the Israeli armed forces deliberately opened fire on a group of persons they had interacted with during the preceding 24 hours and therefore knew to be civilians, killing the child Ibrahim Juha.

7. The killing of Majda and Rayya Hajaj

764. The Mission visited Juhr ad-Dik village twice and interviewed three eyewitnesses of the killing of Majda and Rayya Hajaj⁴²² and two other members of the family, sons of Rayya Hajaj (and brothers of Majda). The Mission also measured the distances between the reported location of the victims at the time of the shooting and the tanks. The Mission further obtained copies of the PRCS records on its attempts to obtain approval from the Israeli armed forces to dispatch ambulances to Juhr ad-Dik. Finally, the Mission saw the agricultural land destroyed by tanks and bulldozers, the rubble remaining of the house of Saleh Hajaj, and the devastation and graffiti⁴²³ left by the Israeli soldiers in Youssef Hajaj's house.

765. Juhr ad-Dik is a village in an agricultural area south-east of Gaza City, about 1.5 kilometres from the border with Israel (the so-called Green Line). On 3 January 2009, an Israeli tank force entered Juhr ad-Dik. Part of the tank force moved on towards Salah ad-Din Street and Zeytoun; the remaining force occupied Juhr ad-Dik.⁴²⁴

766. On 4 January 2009, at about 6 a.m., shells hit the house of Youssef Hajaj's family, where he, his wife and children, the wife and children of his brother Majd (who was not with his family), their sister Majda, aged 37, and mother Rayya, aged 65, were taking shelter. A daughter of Youssef, 13-year-old Manar, was injured. Between 9 and 10 a.m., the Hajaj family decided to move to the house of their neighbour Muhammad al-Safdi. Around 11 a.m., Youssef Hajaj received a phone call from his brother Majd, informing him that the Israeli armed forces had announced on local radio stations (al-Aqsa and al-Hurriya) that people living along the border between Israel and Gaza should evacuate their houses to remain safe. Having prepared two make-shift white flags, which were carried by Majda Hajaj and Ahmad Muhammad al-Safdi, 25 years old, who was also holding his two-year-old son in his arms, 26 members of the two families (more than half of them children)⁴²⁵ left the al-Safdi house. They started walking down the road westwards, where a group of Israeli tanks was standing at a distance of 320 metres.⁴²⁶ They walked very slowly, covering 200 metres in about 10 minutes. The group was some 120 metres away from the Israeli tanks when, without warning, they were fired on from the direction of the tanks. Majda Hajaj and her mother, Rayya, were hit. Majda died of her injuries instantly. Rayya tried to flee, but fell to the ground after a few metres.

⁴²² Mission interviews of Ms. Farhaneh Hajaj, Ms. Siham Hajaj, Mr. Muhammad al-Safdi, Mr. Youssef Hajaj and Mr. Saleh Hajaj.

⁴²³ Graffiti photographed by the Mission in the Hajaj house included, in Hebrew, names and dates, such as "Yahir Ben Eliezer Commander mon. [for month] March 2006" and "Yohanan Boutboul Commander mon. [for month] November 2005" and, in English, the phrase "Death will find you soon".

⁴²⁴ Testimony to the Mission by Youssef and Saleh Hajaj, 3 June 2009.

⁴²⁵ The overall number of persons leaving the house of the al-Safdi family was also indicated to the Mission as 28. The Mission was told that 17 children led the procession.

⁴²⁶ This and the other distances mentioned in the summary of the case were measured with GPS instruments.

767. The others scrambled back to the al-Safdi family house, and managed to take shelter behind a shack next to it and later inside the house. Members of the Hajjaj family called PRCS for help with the evacuation of Majda and Rayya Hajaj's bodies. PRCS in turn contacted ICRC. The Israeli armed forces denied ICRC access to Juhr ad-Dik on the ground that the area had been declared a military zone.⁴²⁷ The two families spent the remainder of the day and the night sheltering under the staircase in the al-Safdi house, while the Israeli armed forces continued to direct shell and machine-gun fire at the house. The following day they walked to Gaza City by a different, circuitous route. The Hajaj family found the bodies of Majda and Rayya Hajaj under the rubble when they were able to return to Juhr ad-Dik on the evening of 18 January 2009.

8. Factual findings

768. The Mission found the witnesses interviewed to be credible and reliable. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of their testimony.

769. The Mission finds that Majda and Rayya Hajaj were part of a group of civilians moving with white flags through an area in which there was, at the time, no combat. Moreover, the Israeli armed forces had, according to witnesses interviewed by the Mission, called over local radio on the civilian population of Juhr ad-Dik to evacuate their homes and walk towards Gaza City. In the light of these reported circumstances, and particularly considering that the civilians were at a distance of more than 100 metres from them, the Israeli soldiers could not have perceived an imminent threat from the movement of people in that area, as they would have expected the civilians to respond to the call for evacuation. The Mission, therefore, finds the shooting and killing of Majda and Rayya Hajaj a deliberate act on the part of the Israeli soldiers.

9. The shooting of Amal, Souad, Samar and Hajja Souad Abd Rabbo

770. The Mission visited the site of the shooting of Amal, Souad, Samar and Hajja Souad Abd Rabbo and interviewed an eyewitness, Mr. Khalid Abd Rabbo, on site. Khalid and Kawthar Abd Rabbo gave their testimony at the public hearing in Gaza on 28 June 2009. The Mission also reviewed sworn statements from two additional witnesses it was not able to interview in person.⁴²⁸

771. The family of Khalid Abd Rabbo and his wife Kawthar lived on the ground floor of a four-storey building in the eastern part of Izbat Abd Rabbo, a neighbourhood east of Jabaliyah inhabited primarily by members of their extended family. Khalid Abd Rabbo's parents and brothers with their families lived on the upper floors of the house. The residents of Izbat Abd Rabbo started hearing the sound of shooting and of the Israeli ground incursion in the evening of 3 January 2009. Khalid Abd Rabbo's family decided to stay inside the house, all gathered on the ground floor, as they had done safely during previous Israeli incursions into the neighbourhood.

772. In the late morning of 7 January 2009, Israeli tanks moved onto the small piece of agricultural land in front of the house. Shortly after 12.30 p.m., the inhabitants of that part of Izbat Abd Rabbo heard megaphone messages telling all residents to leave. According to one ⁴²⁷ PRCS records confirm the ICRC requests to the Israeli armed forces to be allowed access to Juhr ad-Dik.

⁴²⁸ Affidavits of W5 and W6.

witness's recollection, there had also been a radio message broadcast by the Israeli armed forces around 12.30 announcing that there would be a temporary cessation of shooting between 1 and 4 p.m. that day, during which time residents of the area were asked to walk to central Jabaliyah.

773. At about 12.50 p.m., Khalid Abd Rabbo, his wife Kawthar, their three daughters, Souad (aged 9), Samar (aged 5) and Amal (aged 3), and his mother, Hajja Souad Abd Rabbo, stepped out of the house, all of them carrying white flags. Less than 10 metres from the door was a tank, turned towards their house. Two soldiers were sitting on top of it having a snack (one was eating chips, the other chocolate, according to one of the witnesses). The family stood still, waiting for orders from the soldiers as to what they should do, but none was given. Without warning, a third soldier emerged from inside the tank and started shooting at the three girls and then also at their grandmother. Several bullets hit Souad in the chest, Amal in the stomach and Samar in the back. Hajja Souad was hit in the lower back and in the left arm.

774. Khalid and Kawthar Abd Rabbo carried their three daughters and mother back inside the house. There, they and the family members who had stayed inside tried to call for help by mobile phone. They also shouted for help and a neighbour, Sameeh Atwa Rasheed al-Sheikh, who was an ambulance driver and had his ambulance parked next to his house, decided to come to their help. He put on his ambulance crew clothes and asked his son to put on a fluorescent jacket. They had driven a few metres from their house to the immediate vicinity of the Abd Rabbo house when Israeli soldiers near the Abed Rabbo house ordered them to halt and get out of the vehicle. Sameeh al-Sheikh protested that he had heard cries for help from the Abd Rabbo family and intended to bring the wounded to hospital. The soldiers ordered him and his son to undress and then re-dress. They then ordered them to abandon the ambulance and to walk towards Jabaliyah, which they complied with. When the families returned to Izbat Abd Rabbo on 18 January, they found the ambulance was in the same place but had been crushed, probably by a tank.

775. Inside the Abed Rabbo house, Amal and Souad died of their wounds. The family decided that they had to make an attempt to walk to Jabalya and take Samar, the dead bodies of Amal and Souad, and their grandmother to hospital. Khaled and Kawthar Abd Rabbo, and other family members and neighbours carried the girls on their shoulders. Hajja Souad was carried by family and neighbours on a bed. Samar was transferred to al-Shifa hospital and then, through Egypt, to Belgium, where she still is in hospital. According to her parents, Samar suffered a spinal injury and will remain paraplegic for the rest of her life.

776. When Khalid Abd Rabbo returned to his home on 18 January 2009, his house, as most houses in that part of Izbat Abd Rabbo, had been demolished. He drew the Mission's attention to an anti-tank mine under the rubble of a neighbour's house.⁴²⁹

10. Factual findings

777. The Mission found Khalid and Kawthar Abd Rabbo to be credible and reliable witnesses. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of the main elements of their testimony. The Mission also reviewed several sworn statements they and other eyewitnesses gave to NGOs about the incident and found them to be consistent with the account it received.

⁴²⁹ The UNOSAT report (p. 14) counts 341 buildings in Izbat Abd Rabbo destroyed or severely damaged as a result of the military operations.

778. The Mission notes that, in general, Izbat Abd Rabbo and the nearby areas of Jabal al-Kashef and Jabal al-Rayes appear to have been among the locations in Gaza which saw the most intense combat during the military operations.⁴³⁰ The testimony of Khalid and Kawthar Abd Rabbo, however, shows that the Israeli armed forces were not engaged in combat or fearing an attack at the time of the incident. Two soldiers were sitting on the tank in front of the Abd Rabbo family house and having a snack. They clearly did not perceive any danger from the house, its occupants or the surroundings. Moreover, when the family, consisting of a man, a young and an elderly woman, and three small girls, some of them waving white flags, stepped out of the house, they stood still for several minutes waiting for instructions from the soldiers. The Israeli soldiers could, therefore, not reasonably have perceived any threat from the group. Indeed, the fact that the gunfire was directed at the three girls and, subsequently, at the elderly woman, and not at the young adult couple, can be seen as further corroborating the finding that there was no reasonable ground for the soldier shooting to assume that any of the members of the group were directly participating in the hostilities. The Mission finds that the soldier deliberately directed lethal fire at Souad, Samar and Amal Abd Rabbo and at their grandmother, Hajja Souad Abd Rabbo.

779. The Mission further finds that, by preventing Sameeh al-Sheikh from taking the wounded to the nearest hospital in his ambulance, the Israeli armed forces deliberately further aggravated the consequences of the shooting. The Mission recalls that the soldiers had forced Sameeh al-Sheikh and his son to get out of the ambulance, undress and then re-dress. They therefore knew that they did not constitute a threat. Instead of allowing them to take the gravely wounded Samar Abd Rabbo to hospital, the soldiers forced Sameeh al-Sheikh and his son to abandon the ambulance and to walk towards Jabaliyah.

11. The shooting of Rouhiyah al-Najjar

780. The Mission visited the site of the shooting of Rouhiyah al-Najjar in Khuza'a. It interviewed two eyewitnesses of the shooting and six other witnesses to the events, including Yasmine al-Najjar, Nasser al-Najjar, Rouhiyah al-Najjar's husband, and their daughter Hiba.

781. The Israeli armed forces launched the attack against Khuza'a, a small town about half a kilometre from the border (Green Line) with Israel east of Khan Yunis, around 10 p.m. on 12 January 2009. During the night, they used white phosphorous munitions, causing fires to break out in the al-Najjar neighbourhood on the eastern fringe of Khuza'a. Families in the neighbourhood, including the family of Nasser al-Najjar, his first wife Rouhiyah and their daughter Hiba, spent much of the night trying to extinguish fires in their houses. Israeli armed forces, possibly heliborne troops, had taken position on the roofs of some houses in the neighbourhood and observed the residents as they attempted to fight the fires. Around 3 a.m. residents also began to hear the noise of approaching tanks and bulldozers, with which they were well familiar, as in 2008 there had been several Israeli incursions into the farmland to the north and east of Khuza'a, in the course of which bulldozers flattened fields, groves, chicken coops and greenhouses.

⁴³⁰ "The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties..." suggests that these areas were among those in which Palestinian combatants most frequently engaged the Israeli armed forces.

782. In the early morning hours, some of the residents, including Rouhiyah al-Najjar, climbed on the roofs of their houses and hoisted improvised white flags. Using megaphones, the Israeli armed forces asked the men of the neighbourhood to come out of the houses and walk towards the tanks. There the men were separated into two groups which were then held in different houses under the control of the soldiers.

783. At some point between 7 and 7.45 a.m., Rouhiyah al-Najjar and the women in her immediate neighbourhood decided to leave their homes and walk with their children to the town centre. The group of women was headed by Rouhiyah al-Najjar and her 23-year-old neighbour and relative Yasmine al-Najjar, both carrying white flags. Rouhiyah's daughter Hiba was right behind her. Other women were holding up babies in their arms, shouting "God is great!" and "We have children!" The group of women and children started moving down a straight alley, about six or seven metres wide, flanked on both sides by houses. At the other end of the alley, a little more than 200 metres away,⁴³¹ was the house of Faris al-Najjar, which had been occupied by numerous Israeli soldiers (around 60 according to one witness). The soldiers had made a hole in the wall of the first floor of the house, giving them a good view down the alley into which the group of women and children were advancing. When Rouhiyah al-Najjar was about 200 metres from Faris al-Najjar's house, a shot fired from that house hit her in the temple (she had just turned her head towards her neighbour next to her to encourage her). Rouhiyah al-Najjar fell to the ground; Yasmine was struck in her leg. This single shot was followed by concentrated gunfire, which forced the group of women and children to scramble back into the houses of Osama al-Najjar and Shawki al-Najjar, though it did not cause further injury. Because of the fire from the Israeli soldiers, they did not dare to leave the house and look after Rouhiyah al-Najjar. They stayed inside until around noon the same day, when they made a second, successful attempt to leave the neighbourhood and walk to a safer part of Khuza'a.

784. An ambulance driver from Khan Yunis hospital, Marwan Abu Reda, received a phone call from Khuza'a asking for emergency help for Rouhiyah al-Najjar at around 7.45 a.m. He immediately drove to Khuza'a and arrived in the neighbourhood shortly after 8 a.m., i.e. within no more than an hour from the shooting. He was already in the alley where Rouhiyah al-Najjar was lying on the ground⁴³² when soldiers opened fire from houses or rooftops, forcing him to make a U-turn and take the ambulance to a nearby alley. He called PRCS and asked it to seek access to the injured woman, through ICRC and in coordination with the Israeli armed forces, without success. Marwan Abu Reda was not able to pick up Rouhiyah al-Najjar's (by then lifeless) body until the evening of that day. He confirmed to the Mission that she had received a bullet in the temple.

⁴³¹ The Mission did not measure the distance; this is an estimate.

⁴³² The Mission does not have information which would allow it to state whether Rouhiyah al-Najjar was still alive when the ambulance arrived.

12. Factual findings

785. The Mission has no reason to doubt the veracity of the main elements of the testimony of the witnesses it heard with regard to the shooting of Rouhiyah al-Najjar.

786. The Mission's site inspection and the testimony of several witnesses appear to establish that the group of women and children led by Rouhiyah al-Najjar had slowly walked for at least 20 metres before the shot that killed Rouhiyah was fired. During that time, Israeli soldiers standing on the roofs of the houses in the neighbourhood had ample time to observe the group. The fact that, after shooting Rouhiyah and Yasmine al-Najjar, the soldiers directed warning fire at the group without injuring anyone, but forcing them to retreat to a house, is further indication that the soldiers had not observed any threat to them from the group.⁴³³ Indeed, a few hours later the same group was allowed to walk past the soldiers to a safer area of Khuza'a. The Mission accordingly finds that Rouhiyah al-Najjar was deliberately shot by an Israeli soldier who had no reason to assume that she was a combatant or otherwise taking part in hostilities.

787. The Mission also observes that, while it is unclear whether the ambulance from Khan Yunis hospital could have saved Rouhiyah al-Najjar's life, the Israeli forces prevented the evacuation of the wounded woman without any justification.

13. The Abu Halima family case

788. The Mission interviewed three members of the Abu Halima family who were eyewitnesses to the events described below.⁴³⁴ The Mission also spoke to the doctor who treated some of the family members.⁴³⁵ The Mission reviewed a report by Physicians for Human Rights – Israel and Palestinian Medical Relief Society which includes analysis by doctors who observed the wounds of the surviving victims at the beginning of March 2009 and also has medical reports confirming the injuries they suffered.⁴³⁶ Finally, the Mission reviewed information received from TAWTHEQ.

789. On 3 and 4 January 2009, the initial days of the ground invasion, there was heavy aerial bombardment and shelling by tanks of the open areas around Siyafa village, in al-Atatra neighbourhood west of Beit Lahia. Most residents are farmers and, although the Israeli armed ⁴³³ The Mission was not given any testimony about the presence of Palestinian combatants in Khuza'a at the time of this incident. In fact, Khuza'a municipal officials expressly denied that there was any combatant activity in Khuza'a at the time of the Israeli ground invasion, arguing that, Khuza'a and the surrounding fields being such an open area, there was no place for fighters to take cover. These statements are contradicted by reports indicating that "about one dozen fighters had directly engaged the IDF in Khuza'a. But these engagements appear to have been minimal, with the fighters mostly retreating whenever the Israeli forces advanced." (Human Rights Watch, Rain of Fire: Israel's Unlawful Use of White Phosphorous in Gaza (March 2009), pp. 53-54).

⁴³⁴ Mission interviews with Sabah Abu Halima (aged 45), Muhammad Sa'ad Abu Halima (aged 24), Omar Sa'ad Abu Halima (aged 18), 15 June 2009.

⁴³⁵ Mission interview with Dr. Nafeez, the burns expert from al-Shifa hospital, 12 June 2009.

⁴³⁶ Physicians for Human Rights-Israel and Palestinian Medical Relief Society, "Final report: Independent fact-finding mission into violations of human rights in the Gaza Strip during the period 27.12.08-18.01.09", pp. 51-55, available at: http://www.phr.org.il/phr/files/articlefile_1241949935203.pdf.

forces had dropped leaflets warning civilians to leave the area, most had chosen to stay. Based on their previous experiences of ground invasions, they reportedly believed that they were not in danger.

790. On 4 January 2009, the bombardment reportedly increased as Israeli troops moved into and took control of al-Atatra neighbourhood. The Abu Halima family was sheltering in the home of Muhammad Sa'ad Abu Halima and Sabah Abu Halima in Sifaya village. The house has two floors; the ground floor is used for storage and the living quarters are on the upper floor. According to Sabah Abu Halima,⁴³⁷ 16 members of her immediate family were sheltering on the upper floor.

791. In the afternoon, after hearing that a shell had hit the adjacent house of Sabah Abu Halima's brother-in-law, most of the family moved from the bedroom into a hallway in the middle of the upper floor, where they thought they would be better protected. At around 4.30 p.m., a white phosphorous shell came through the ceiling into the room where they were sheltering.

792. According to family members who survived,⁴³⁸ there was intense fire and white smoke in the room, the walls of which were glowing red. Five members of the family died immediately or within a short period: Muhammad Sa'ad Abu Halima (aged 45) and four of his children, sons Abd al-Rahim Sa'ad (aged 14), Zaid (aged 12) and Hamza (aged 8), and daughter Shahid (aged 18 months). Muhammad Sa'ad and Abd al-Rahim Sa'ad were decapitated, the others burnt to death. Five members of the family escaped and suffered various degrees of burns: Sabah Abu Halima, her sons Youssef (aged 16) and Ali (aged 4), daughter-in-law Ghada (aged 21), and Ghada's daughter Farah (aged 2).⁴³⁹

793. Family members tried to call an ambulance, but the Israeli armed forces had declared the area a closed military zone and ambulances were not permitted to enter. Two cousins put Sabah Abu Halima in the back of a tractor trailer and drove her to Kamal Idwan hospital in Beit Lahia. The driver reported that he reached the hospital despite coming under fire from Israeli soldiers posted inside the Omar Bin Khattab school for girls on the road to al-Atatra.⁴⁴⁰ One cousin remained with Sabah Abu Halima, while the other returned to help the rest of the family.

794. The remaining survivors and the injured were placed on a second tractor trailer to take them to Kamal Idwan hospital. The remains of Shahid Abu Halima were also taken. The tractor was driven by a cousin, Muhammad Hekmat Abu Halima (aged 16). Another cousin, Matar Abu Halima (aged 17), his brother Ali (aged 11) and his mother, Nabila, accompanied them.

⁴³⁷ Statement by Sabah Abu Halima to the Mission on 15 June 2009.

⁴³⁸ Statements by Sabah Abu Halima, Muhammad Sa'ad Abu Halima and Omar Sa'ad Abu Halima to the Mission on 15 June 2009.

⁴³⁹ Given the seriousness of their injuries, Sabah, Farah and Ghada Abu Halima were transferred to Egypt for treatment. Ghada died there in late March 2009.

⁴⁴⁰ www.dci-pal.org/English/Doc/Press/Case-Study_Cast-Lead_Abu-Halima_Family_FINAL.pdf.

795. When they reached the crossroads next to the Omar Bin Khattab school in al-Atatra, Israeli soldiers positioned on the roof of a nearby house, some ten metres away, ordered them to stop. Muhammad Hekmat, Matar, Ali, Nabila and Matar got down and stood beside the tractor. One or more soldiers opened fire, hitting Muhammad Hekmat Abu Halima in the chest and Matar Abu Halima in the abdomen.⁴⁴¹ Both died as a result of their injuries. Ali, Omar and Nabila Abu Halima fled. Omar was shot in the arm, but they eventually reached Kamal Idwan hospital.

796. The remaining family members were ordered to abandon the tractors and walk. They were not permitted to take the bodies of the two dead boys, or the remains of Shahid Abu Halima, which were recovered four days later, on 8 January. Ghada Abu Halima, who had burns on 45 per cent of her body, had great difficulty walking. After some 500 metres, a vehicle picked up several members of the family, including Ghada and Farah, and took them to al-Shifa hospital in Gaza City.

797. Dr. Nafiz Abu Shaban, Chief of Plastic Surgery at al-Shifa hospital, confirmed that Sabah, Ghada and Farah Abu Halima were admitted there with serious burns and were transferred to Egypt for treatment. The doctor believed that the burns were caused by contact with white phosphorous.⁴⁴²

14. Factual findings

798. The Mission found Sabah Abu Halima, Muhammad Sa'ad Abu Halima and Omar Sa'ad Abu Halima to be credible and reliable witnesses. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of the main elements of their testimonies, which were corroborated by the testimony of Dr. Nafiz Abu Shaban of al-Shifa hospital.

799. With regard to the white phosphorous shelling of the Abu Halima family house, the Mission notes that the house is located in a village in a rural area. The shelling occurred on 4 January 2009 at a time when Israeli ground forces were apparently advancing into al-Atatra. Moreover, the Israeli armed forces had dropped leaflets warning civilians to leave. Under the circumstances, the Mission cannot make any determination as to whether the shelling of the Abu Halima house was a direct attack against a civilian objective, an indiscriminate attack or a justifiable part of the broader military operation.

800. With regard to the shooting of Muhammad Hekmat Abu Halima and Matar Abu Halima, the Mission notes that the Israeli soldiers had ordered the tractor on which they were transporting the wounded to stop and had ordered the two cousins (aged 16 and 17) to come down. They had complied with those instructions and were standing next to the tractor, when the Israeli soldiers standing on the roof of a nearby house opened fire on them. The soldiers cannot have been mistaken about the circumstance that these were two civilians taking gravely wounded persons to a hospital. The shooting of Muhammad Hekmat Abu Halima and Matar Abu Halima was a direct lethal attack on two under-age civilians. The fact that they were hit in the chest and the abdomen, respectively, indicates that the intention was to kill them.

⁴⁴¹ According to statements given by Omar and Nabila Abu Halima to the NGO Defence for Children International (ibid.). Information provided to the Mission by Omar Abu Halima on 15 June 2009 was less detailed but consistent with this information.

⁴⁴² Mission interview, 12 June 2009.

801. The Mission further notes that in this case the Israeli armed forces denied the ambulances access to the area to evacuate the wounded and then opened fire on the relatives of the wounded who were trying to take them to the nearest hospital.

C. Information concerning the instructions given to the Israeli armed forces with regard to the opening of fire against civilians

802. The Mission found in the above incidents that the Israeli armed forces repeatedly opened fire on civilians who were not taking part in the hostilities and who posed no threat to them. These incidents indicate that the instructions given to the Israeli armed forces moving into Gaza provided for a low threshold for the use of lethal fire against the civilian population. The Mission found strong corroboration of this trend emerging from its fact-finding in the testimonies of Israeli soldiers collected by the Israeli NGO Breaking the Silence⁴⁴³ and in the Protocol of the Rabin Academy's "Fighters' Talk". These testimonies suggest in particular that the instructions given to the soldiers conveyed two "policies". Both are an expression of the aim to eliminate as far as possible any risk to the lives of the Israeli soldiers.

803. The first policy could be summarized, in the words of one of the soldiers: "if we see something suspect and shoot, better hit an innocent than hesitate to target an enemy." Another soldier attributed the following instructions to his battalion commander: "If you are not sure – shoot. If there is doubt then there is no doubt." The first soldier summarized the briefing from the battalion commander as follows "the enemy was hiding behind civilian population. [...] if we suspect someone, we should not give him the benefit of the doubt. Eventually, this could be an enemy, even if it's some old woman approaching the house. It could be an old woman carrying an explosive charge." A third soldier explained "you don't only shoot when threatened. The assumption is that you constantly feel threatened, so anything there threatens you, and you shoot. No one actually said 'shoot regardless' or 'shoot anything that moves.' But we were not ordered to open fire only if there was a real threat."⁴⁴⁴

804. The Mission notes that some soldiers stated that they agreed with the instructions to "shoot in case of doubt." One of them explained "this is the difference between urban warfare and a limited confrontation. In urban warfare, anyone is your enemy. No innocents." Another told of his profound discomfort with the policy and of how he and his comrades had attempted to question their commander about it after a clearly harmless man was shot.⁴⁴⁵ While they disagreed about the legitimacy and morality of the policy, they had little doubt about the terms of the instructions: each soldier and commander on the ground had to exercise judgement,⁴⁴⁶ but the policy was to shoot in case of doubt.

⁴⁴³ Soldiers' Testimonies....

⁴⁴⁴ Ibid., testimony 21, pp. 50–51, testimony 7, p. 20, and testimony 9, p. 24.

⁴⁴⁵ Ibid., testimony 7, p. 20, and testimony 14, pp. 38-39.

⁴⁴⁶ Ibid., testimony 13, p. 37.

805. The second policy clearly emerging from the soldiers' testimonies is explained by one of the soldiers as follows: "One of the things in this procedure [the outpost procedure, which is being applied in areas held by the Israeli armed forces after the Gaza ground invasion] is setting red lines. It means that whoever crosses this limit is shot, no questions asked. [...] Shoot to kill."⁴⁴⁷ In one incident highly relevant to the cases investigated by the Mission because of factual similarities, a soldier recounted an event he witnessed.⁴⁴⁸ A family is ordered to leave their house. For reasons that remain unclear, probably a misunderstanding, the mother and two children turn left instead of right after having walked between 100 and 200 metres from their house. They thereby cross a "red line" established by the Israeli unit (of whose existence the mother and children could have no knowledge). An Israeli marksman on the roof of the house they had just left opens fire on the woman and her two children, killing them. As the soldier speaking at the Rabin Academy's "Fighters' Talk" a month later observes, "from our perspective, he [the marksman] did his job according to the orders he was given".

806. "Incessant" alerts about suicide bombers⁴⁴⁹ meant that even civilians clearly identified by the soldiers as carrying no arms were perceived as a threat as soon as they came within a certain distance from the soldiers – a threat to be eliminated, also without warning fire, as a second might be enough for the "suicide bomber" to get close enough to harm the soldiers.

807. The Mission notes that many of the persons interviewed in Gaza described incidents in which they were, individually, as part of a group or in a vehicle, exposed to intense gunfire from Israeli soldiers – but without being hit or injured. This was the case, for instance, of an ambulance drivers attempting to drive into an area which the Israeli armed forces had decided he should not enter.⁴⁵⁰ In the Khuza'a case, after the lethal shooting of Rouhiyah al-Najjar and wounding of Yasmine al-Najjar, the other women and children were exposed to fire from the Israeli soldiers, which forced them to retreat to the houses they had been trying to leave.⁴⁵¹ These incidents suggest that the Israeli armed forces made ample use of gunfire to "communicate" with the civilian population, to issue injunctions to civilians not to walk or not to drive any further in a certain direction or to immediately retreat to a building they were about to leave. The terrifying effect this sort of non-verbal communication had on those at the receiving end is evident, as is the likelihood of lethal consequences.

808. The Mission also read testimony from soldiers who recounted cases in which, although a civilian had come within a distance from them which would have required opening fire under the rules imparted to them, they decided not to shoot because they did not consider the civilian a threat to them.

⁴⁴⁷ Ibid., testimony 12, p. 32, also testimony 21, p. 52; and the of "Ram" in the Rabin Academy Fighters' Talk, pp. 6-7.

⁴⁴⁸ Testimony of "Ram" in the Rabin Academy Fighters' Talk, pp. 6-7. The Mission notes that "Ram" clearly states that he was an eyewitness to the incident.

⁴⁴⁹ For instance, Soldiers' Testimonies..., testimony 13, p. 37, and testimony 22, p. 53.

⁴⁵⁰ Interview with Marwan Abu Reda, 11 June 2009. For a description of warning shots in front of moving vehicles, see Soldiers' Testimonies..., testimony 12, p. 33.

⁴⁵¹ This would appear to have been the case also in the shooting of Majda and Rayya Hajaj in Juhr ad-Dik.

D. Legal findings with regard to the cases investigated by the Mission

809. The fundamental principles applicable to these incidents, which are cornerstones of both treaty-based and customary international humanitarian law, are that “the parties to the conflict shall at all times distinguish between the civilian population and combatants”⁴⁵² and that “the civilian population as such, as well as individual civilians, shall not be the object of attack”.⁴⁵³ The Israeli Government refers to the principle of distinction as “the first core principle of the Law of Armed Conflict.” It further states that “the IDF’s emphasis on compliance with the Law of Armed Conflict was also directly incorporated into the rules of engagement for the Gaza Operation.” The principle of distinction was reportedly incorporated in the following terms: “Strikes shall be directed against military objectives and combatants only. It is absolutely prohibited to intentionally strike civilians or civilian objects (in contrast to incidental proportional harm).”⁴⁵⁴

810. In reviewing the above incidents the Mission found in every case that the Israeli armed forces had carried out direct intentional strikes against civilians. The only exception is the shelling of the Abu Halima family home, where the Mission does not have sufficient information on the military situation prevailing at the time to reach a conclusion.

811. The Mission found that, on the basis of the facts it was able to ascertain, in none of the cases reviewed were there any grounds which could have reasonably induced the Israeli armed forces to assume that the civilians attacked were in fact taking a direct part in the hostilities and had thus lost their immunity against direct attacks.⁴⁵⁵

812. The Mission therefore finds that the Israeli armed forces have violated the prohibition under customary international law and reflected in article 51 (2) of Additional Protocol I that the civilian population as such will not be the object of attacks. This finding applies to the attacks on the houses of Ateya and Wa’el al-Samouni, the shooting of Iyad al-Samouni, of Shahd Hajji and Ola Masood Arafat, of Ibrahim Juha, of Rayya and Majda Hajaj, of Amal, Souad, Samar, and Hajja Souad Abd Rabbo, of Rouhiyah al-Najjar, and of Muhammad Hekmat Abu Halima and Matar Abu Halima. In these incidents, 34 Palestinian civilians lost their lives owing to Israeli fire intentionally directed at them. Numerous others were injured, some very severely and with permanent consequences.

813. Not only are civilians not to be the object of attacks, they are also “entitled in all circumstances, to respect for their persons ... protected especially against all acts of violence or threats thereof” (Fourth Geneva Convention, art. 27). Fundamental guarantees set out in article 75 of Additional Protocol I include the absolute prohibition “at any time and in any place” of “violence to the life, health, or physical or mental well-being of persons”. According to the facts presented to the Mission, these provisions have been violated.

⁴⁵² Additional Protocol I, art. 48.

⁴⁵³ Additional Protocol I, art. 51 (2).

⁴⁵⁴ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 94 and 222.

⁴⁵⁵ Pursuant to article 51 (3) of Protocol Additional I, civilians enjoy immunity from attack “unless and for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities.” On the status of this rule in customary law, see chap. VII.

814. The State of Israel would be responsible under international law for these internationally wrongful actions carried out by its agents

815. From the facts ascertained, the Mission finds that the conduct of the Israeli armed forces in these cases would constitute grave breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention in respect of wilful killings and wilfully causing great suffering to protected persons⁴⁵⁶ and as such give rise to individual criminal responsibility.

816. The Mission also finds that the direct targeting and arbitrary killing of Palestinian civilians is a violation by the Israeli armed forces of the right to life as provided in article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

817. In most of the cases examined above, the Mission finds that the Israeli armed forces denied the medical emergency services access to the wounded civilians. This was the case with regard to all the incidents occurring in the al-Samouni neighbourhood, particularly after the shooting of Ahmad al-Samouni, where the PRCS ambulance was forced to return to Gaza City having come within 100 metres of the gravely wounded boy. Ambulances were also arbitrarily prevented from reaching the wounded after the attack on Wa'el al-Samouni's house, most dramatically after the shooting of Amal, Souad, Samar, and Hajja Souad Abd Rabbo and of Rouhiyah al-Najjar. In the case of the shooting of Muhammad Hekmat Abu Halima and Matar Abu Halima, it is the rescuers who were executed, preventing them from taking their severely burned relatives to hospital. In the case of Iyad al-Samouni, finally, the relatives who wanted to assist him were threatened with being shot themselves.

818. The Mission recalls that article 10 (2) of Additional Protocol I provides that "In all circumstances [the wounded] shall be treated humanely and shall receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition. ..." This provision enjoys customary international law status. The Mission is mindful that "the obligation to protect and care for the wounded ... is an obligation of means." It applies whenever circumstances permit. However, "each party to the conflict must use its best efforts to provide protection and care for the wounded, ... , including permitting humanitarian organizations to provide for their protection and care."⁴⁵⁷

819. The facts ascertained by the Mission establish that in the incidents investigated the Israeli armed forces did not use their best efforts to provide humanitarian organizations access to the wounded. On the contrary, the facts indicate that, while the circumstances permitted giving access, the Israeli armed forces arbitrarily withheld it.

820. On this basis, the Mission finds a violation of the obligation under customary international law to treat the wounded humanely.

⁴⁵⁶ Article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention defines the "wilful killing" of protected persons as a grave breach of the Convention. The same qualification is applied to acts which "wilfully caus[e] great suffering or serious injury to body or health".

⁴⁵⁷ Customary International Humanitarian Law..., rule 110 and p. 402.

821. The conduct of the Israeli armed forces amounted to violations of the right to life where it resulted in death, and to a violation of the right to physical integrity, and to cruel and inhuman treatment in other cases, which constitutes a violation of articles 6 and 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

E. The attack on the al-Maqadmah mosque, 3 January 2009

1. The facts gathered by the Mission

822. The al-Maqadmah mosque is situated near the north-west outskirts of Jabaliyah camp, close to Beit Lahia. It is located less than 100 metres from the Kamal Idwan hospital, in the al-Alami housing project. At least 15 people were killed and around 40 injured – many seriously – when the Israeli armed forces struck the entrance of the mosque with a missile.

823. The Mission heard five eyewitnesses who had been in the mosque at the time it was struck. Two of them had been facing the door as the explosion occurred. Three of them had been kneeling facing the opposite direction and had been seriously injured. The Mission also heard from a number of relatives of those who died in the attack and has seen a number of sworn statements signed by them testifying to the facts they witnessed.⁴⁵⁸ The Mission also heard again from three witnesses it had interviewed earlier at the public hearings in Gaza. Finally, the Mission reviewed information received from TAWTHEQ.

824. On the evening of 3 January 2009, between 5 and 6 p.m., a large number of people had gathered in the mosque for evening prayers. Witnesses indicate that between 200 and 300 men had gathered on the first floor.⁴⁵⁹ A number of women had also congregated in the basement at that time. Witnesses explained that in time of fear or emergency it was the tradition to combine sunset and evening prayers.⁴⁶⁰ In addition, the Mission heard that, while some time normally elapses between the muezzin calling the faithful to prayer and the prayers beginning, at this time it was the practice to begin prayers almost immediately.

825. The witnesses indicated that prayers had ended and the sermon was just beginning. At that point there was an explosion in the doorway to the mosque. One of the two wooden doors was blown off its hinges and all the way across the prayer area to the opposite wall.

826. As a result of the explosion at least 15 people died. Almost all were inside the mosque at the time. One of the casualties was a boy who had been sitting at the entrance. His leg was blown off by the missile strike and found afterwards on the roof of the mosque. A large number, around 40, suffered injuries. Many were taken to the Kamal Idwan hospital for treatment.

⁴⁵⁸ Note, for example, the affidavit of Ismail al-Salawi, brother of the sheikh at the mosque. He recounts how he was on his way to the mosque when his 13-year-old daughter ran towards him screaming that it had been bombed. He rushed in to find a scene of bloody chaos. As an immediate result of the strike his grandson Muhammad (13 years old), his nephews Hani (8 years old) and Omar (27 years old) were killed. See also a similar explanation of events by Ayisha Ibrahim, whose husband, Abdul Rahman (46), and son Ra'id were killed in the attack.

⁴⁵⁹ Sheikh al-Salawi, interviewed on 3 June 2009 and 4 July 2009.

⁴⁶⁰ See, for example, Sheikh al-Salawi at the public hearing in Gaza on 27 July 2009, available at <http://www.realnetworks.com>

827. On visiting the mosque, the Mission was able to observe the damage done to it. Its immediate entrance is on a raised level from the external pavement and is reached via a ramp. There are a number of stairs below the doorway, now covered by the raised entrance at the end of the ramp. The stairs underneath the ramp were damaged and the concrete had been pierced. There was a scorch mark on the ground and stairs.

828. The Mission has also viewed a number of photographs taken shortly after the strike and considers them to be reliable. They showed that something had penetrated the concrete (about three inches thick) immediately outside of the mosque doorway and then hit the pavement at the bottom of the stairs below the concrete covering. The ramp and entrance level structure had a wall about one metre high built on its outer side. The part of the wall opposite the mosque door was blown away.

829. The Mission observed that the interior walls of the mosque and part of the exterior wall around the doorway appeared to have suffered significant damage as a result of a spray of small metal cubes. A good number of these were lodged in the wall even at the time of the Mission's visit to the site in June 2009. Several of these were retrieved and the Mission could see how deeply embedded they were in the concrete walls.

830. Apart from the aforementioned visit to the mosque, the Mission has interviewed its sheikh on three occasions, its imam twice, its muezzin, several members of the sheikh's family, several of those injured in the blast and a number of the relatives who lost family members and who assisted in the immediate aftermath of the attack. It has seen medical certificates that bear out the nature of those injuries related by the young men it interviewed. The Mission questioned all of the witnesses and sought to clarify any doubts it may have had.

2. The position of the Israeli Government and the Israeli armed forces

831. The Israeli armed forces' response to the allegations states:

... relating to a strike against the "Maqadme" mosque in Beit-Lahiya on January 3rd, 2009, it was discovered that as opposed to the claims, the mosque was not attacked at all. Furthermore, it was found that the supposed uninvolved civilians who were the casualties of the attack were in fact Hamas operatives killed while fighting against the IDF.⁴⁶¹

832. Apart from the apparent contradictions it contains, the Mission notes that the statement does not indicate in any way the nature of the inquiry, the source of its information or the reliability and credibility of such sources.

833. In July 2009 the Israeli Government repeated the same position.⁴⁶²

⁴⁶¹ "Conclusions of investigations into central claims and issues in Operation Cast Lead", 22 April 2009, annex C. The document was approved and authorized by the Chief of the General Staff Lt. Gen. Gabi Ashkenazi. It is available at: <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/opcast/postop/press/2201.htm>

⁴⁶² "The operation in Gaza...".

3. Factual findings

834. The Mission has established that the Israeli armed forces fired a missile that struck near the doorway of the mosque. The penetration pattern witnessed on the concrete ramp and stairs underneath is consistent with that which would be expected of a shrapnel fragmentation sleeve fitted onto an air-to-ground missile. Shrapnel cubes that the Mission retrieved from the rear inside wall of the mosque are consistent with what would be expected to be discharged by a missile of this nature.⁴⁶³

835. The strike killed at least 15 people attending the mosque for prayers and very seriously injured several others.

836. The Mission is not in a position to say from which kind of aircraft or air-launch platform the missile was fired. It believes the testimony of the witnesses regarding the circumstances of the attack, finding it plausible and consistent not only with the other witnesses, but also with the physical evidence at the scene. The Mission also notes that a number of local organizations sent representatives to the site of the attack very shortly after it occurred and they witnessed the scene for themselves. The Mission has also spoken with them and notes that their accounts are consistent with the testimony provided by the witnesses it heard.

837. There has been no suggestion that the al-Maqadmah mosque was being used at that time to launch rockets, store weapons or shelter combatants.⁴⁶⁴ Since it does not appear from the testimonies of the incident or the inspection of the site that any other damage was done in the area at that time, the Mission concludes that what occurred was an isolated strike and not in connection with an ongoing battle or exchange of fire.

4. Legal findings

838. In the absence of any explanation as to the circumstances that led to the missile strike on al-Maqadmah mosque and taking into account the credible and reliable accounts the Mission heard from multiple witnesses, as well as the matters it could review for itself by visiting the site, the Mission concludes that the mosque was intentionally targeted by the Israeli armed forces. The Mission also takes into account the precision and sophistication of the Israeli armed forces' munitions in making this finding.

839. The Mission's finding is strengthened in the face of the unsatisfactory and demonstrably false position of the Israeli Government.

840. It follows that this was an attack on the civilian population as such and not on a military objective.

⁴⁶³ The Mission considers it possible in analysing the information available that the missile in question may have been a modified high-explosive anti-tank missile, sometimes referred to as either augmented high-explosive anti-tank (AHEAT) or high-explosive dual-purpose (HEDP).

⁴⁶⁴ See, for example, statements made by Israel in "The operation in Gaza...", para. 234.

841. Based on the facts ascertained, the Mission finds that the Israeli armed forces have violated the prohibition under customary international law that the civilian population as such will not be the object of attacks as reflected in article 51 (2) of Additional Protocol I.

842. Based on those facts, the violations also constitute a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention in respect of wilful killings and wilfully causing great suffering to protected persons.

843. The Mission also finds that the State of Israel would be responsible for the arbitrary deprivation of the right to life, in relation to article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, of those killed.

F. The attack on the al-Daya family house, 6 January 2009

1. The facts gathered by the Mission

844. On 6 January 2009, the al-Daya Family house located on al-Rai'i Street in Zeytoun, south-east of Gaza City, was struck by a projectile fired from an F-16 aircraft which killed 22 members of the family. Twelve of those killed were children under 10.

845. In June 2009, the Mission visited the site of the incident where it interviewed two of the four surviving members from the al-Daya family and a number of local residents.⁴⁶⁵ Further inquiries and interviews were conducted in late July with neighbours of the al-Daya family.

846. The al-Daya house was a four-storey building with seven apartments owned by Fayez Musbah al-Daya. Each apartment was occupied by one of his seven sons, some married and living with their own families, and two unmarried daughters.

847. The Israeli armed forces reached Zeytoun on 3 January. Witnesses interviewed by the Mission said that the Israeli armed forces dropped leaflets in the area instructing people not to support Hamas and to provide the Israeli armed forces with information, at a given number, on military activities in the neighbourhood, including details of weapon facilities.⁴⁶⁶

848. Witnesses mentioned that a rumour had circulated that the Israeli forces were going to bomb a house in the neighbourhood, which led several families to leave their homes.⁴⁶⁷ A few families chose to stay, including the remaining members of the al-Daya family and five other families.⁴⁶⁸

849. On the morning of 6 January, at around 5.35 a.m. a missile was reportedly fired in the vicinity of the al-Daya house, close to the Hassan al-Banna mosque, which killed an elderly man. Witnesses stated that the strike occurred shortly after the morning prayers had ended and when the man was on his way home. The same witnesses confirmed that the death of the man in ⁴⁶⁵ Muhammad Fayez al-Daya, Rida Fayez al-Daya, Aimer al-Daya and Hafez al-Daya.

⁴⁶⁶ Mission interviews with Muhammad Salam al-Ra'i, Deeb al-Ra'i, Faraj al-Ra'i and Rida al-Daya, July 2009.

⁴⁶⁷ Those who left included the eldest son of the al-Daya family, Nafez al-Daya, his wife and seven children.

⁴⁶⁸ The families of Zuher al-Ra'i (an estimated 16 people), Faraj al-Ra'i (an estimated 15 people), Jumaa al-Ra'i (an estimated 7 people), Mahmoud al-Hindi (an estimated 4 people) and Shawqi Sa'd.

question was caused not by a bullet but by a small missile. Approximately 10 minutes later, at around 5.45 a.m. the al-Daya family house was hit by a projectile from an F-16 aircraft.

850. Twenty-two members of the al-Daya family inside the house were killed.⁴⁶⁹

851. The Mission interviewed a number of neighbours. Each one of them said they had not received any warning call from the Israeli forces prior to the strike on the al-Daya house and confirmed that no other house in the street was struck after the al-Daya house had been hit.

852. Owing to the location of the house and the narrow street access it took several hours before neighbours were able to dig through the rubble. One brother, Radwan al-Daya, was pulled out of the debris alive and taken to the hospital with the help of a PRCS worker who lived near the al-Daya house. He died three days later having suffered severe asphyxiation. Several bodies were recovered only after the withdrawal of the Israeli armed forces.

2. The Israeli position

853. On 22 April 2009 the Israeli armed forces issued the following statement:

[...] The Al-Daia family residence in the Zeitoun neighbourhood in the city of Gaza (January 6th, 2009) – the incident in question was a result of an operational error with unfortunate consequences. The investigation concluded that the IDF intended to attack a weapons storage facility that was located in the building next to the Al-Daia family residence. It appears that following an error, the structure that was planned to be attacked was the Al-Daia residence rather than the building containing the weapons.⁴⁷⁰

854. In July 2009 the Israeli Government stated the following:

The IDF has concluded that this tragic event was the result of an operational error. An investigation determined that the IDF intended to strike a weapons' storage facility located in a building next to this residence. However, the IDF erroneously targeted the Al-Daia residence, rather than the weapons storehouse. Although the IDF did provide warning shots to the roof of the Al-Daia residence, other warnings (such as the warning phone call) were made to the building actually containing the weapons, not the Al-Daia residence.

The IDF is examining how the unfortunate operational error occurred, in order to reinforce safeguards and to prevent its recurrence. Israel deeply regrets the tragic outcome. This is the kind of mistake that can occur during intensive fighting in a crowded environment, against an enemy that uses civilian neighbourhoods as cover for its operations. IDF forces did not intentionally target civilians. This lack of unlawful intent ⁴⁶⁹ These included the wife of Muhammad al-Daya (one of the surviving family members), their three daughters and one son, all under seven, who were crushed under the rubble of the house. Most of them were asleep at the time of the attack. Others killed included Fayez al-Daya and his wife; Iyad al-Daya and his wife Rawda, their three daughters and three sons, all under 10; Ramez al-Daya, his wife Safa, and their six-month-old daughter and two-year-old son; two sisters, Raghdah and Sabrine, and Radwan al-Daya.

⁴⁷⁰ "Conclusions of investigations...", annex C.

has been a critical factor, in past incidents involving operational mistakes by other armies (such as NATO's erroneous bombing of the Chinese Embassy in the former Yugoslavia), in determining that no violation of the Law of Armed Conflict occurred. Similarly, although its attack on the Al-Daia residence was a tragic error, it did not constitute a violation of the laws of war.⁴⁷¹

3. Factual findings

855. Israel's position is that the al-Daya house was destroyed as a result of an "operational error" made at some point in the planning of the operation. It says the target that should have been hit was a neighbouring house storing weapons. The Mission has interviewed the residents of the neighbouring houses and visited the site. No neighbouring house was attacked at any time after the al-Daya house was destroyed. The Mission finds it difficult to understand how a target apparently important enough to be targeted for such definitive destruction in the first place, as a result of what it apparently contained, could then remain free from attack for the remaining 12 days of the land operation.

856. The Mission is unable to verify claims that a warning was given by means of firing a small missile to the roof as the house was destroyed and the residents killed. Local witnesses have reported that a small missile did appear to strike an elderly man in the neighbourhood about 10 minutes before the al-Daya house was destroyed but the Mission is not in a position to say whether this is likely to have been an errant warning shot.

857. The Israeli authorities have not indicated with any precision which house they called but the claim that a warning call was made to the house that allegedly contained weapons has been denied by all local residents. No such call was received by anyone in the houses neighbouring the al-Daya house.

858. In these circumstances there are significant doubts about the Israeli authorities' account of the incident and what has been offered to date does not in the view of the Mission constitute an explanation.

859. Besides the main difficulties mentioned above, there are a number of issues that could have been easily clarified but were not. The precise nature of the operational error remains unclear, as does the time it occurred and who was responsible for it. Similarly, it would appear that the warnings system failed at various points: the Government of Israel reports that a warning was given on the basis that it believed there was a house storing weapons. Given the power of the projectile that destroyed the four-storey al-Daya building, the Mission wonders what the consequences would have been if the projectile had in fact struck a weapons store, yet there is no suggestion by the Israeli authorities of a warning having been given to neighbouring houses that secondary explosions were possible. Not only does it appear that the wrong warnings were given to the wrong people, but if the existence of the storage facility is to be believed at all, it would also appear that the apparently feasible step of warning locals of entirely foreseeable danger was not taken either.

⁴⁷¹ "The operation in Gaza...", paras. 386-387.

860. The Mission finds the version of events offered so far by Israel to be unsatisfactory. The details given are not sufficient to clarify the nature of the very serious error that has been made, if it was an error. In so far as any explanation has been given, it appears to lack coherence and raises more questions than it answers.

4. Legal findings

861. In the absence of information necessary to determine the precise circumstances of the incident, the Mission can make no findings on possible violations of international humanitarian law or international criminal law. If indeed a mistake was made and the intention was to destroy a house nearby rather than to kill the al-Daya family, there could not be said to be a case of wilful killing as the requisite degree of criminal intent would not have been established on the part of the individuals responsible.⁴⁷²

862. However, the issue of State responsibility remains. The International Law Commission's articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts⁴⁷³ are silent on whether such a mistake relieves a State of its international responsibility for the commission of an internationally wrongful act and the requirement of fault in international law is controversial. In a commentary on the articles, Crawford and Olleson consider that "if a State deliberately carries out some specific act, there is less room for it to argue that the harmful consequences were unintended and should be disregarded. Everything depends on the specific context and on the content and interpretation of the obligation said to have been breached".⁴⁷⁴

863. The obligation breached in this case is the duty to ensure the general protection of the civilian population against the dangers arising from military operations, as reflected in article 51 (1) of Additional Protocol I.

864. The firing of the projectile was a deliberate act in so far as it was planned, by Israel's admission, to strike the al-Daya house. The fact that target selection had gone wrong at the planning stage does not strip the act of its deliberate character. The consequences may have been unintended; the act was deliberate. Taken together with further facts (such as the failure to deliver an effective warning) and the nature of the "intransgressible obligation" to protect civilian life, the Mission considers that, even if a fault element is required, the available information demonstrates a substantial failure of due diligence on the part of Israel. As such, the Mission considers Israel to be liable for the consequences of this wrongful act.

865. The Mission finds that Israel's lack of due diligence in this case also constitutes a violation of the right to life as set out in article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which Israel is a party. The right to life includes the negative obligation to respect life and the positive obligation to protect life. The Human Rights Committee has stated that States parties should take measures not only to prevent and punish deprivation by criminal acts, but also to prevent arbitrary killing by their own security forces.⁴⁷⁵ No exception is made for acts during war.

⁴⁷² See, for example, article 32 of the Rome Statute.

⁴⁷³ Annexed to General Assembly resolution 56/83.

⁴⁷⁴ J. Crawford and S. Olleson, "The nature and forms of international responsibility", in International Law, M. Evans, ed. (Oxford, Oxford University Press, 2003).

866. The right to life also includes a procedural component that requires adequate investigation of any alleged violation “promptly, thoroughly and effectively through independent and impartial bodies” for “failure by a State party to investigate allegations of violations could in and of itself give rise to a separate breach of the Covenant.”⁴⁷⁶ The investigation of the Israeli armed forces referred to above lacks transparency and credibility. The failure of Israel to comply with the procedural requirement adds to the frustration and anger felt by survivors, who have received no credible explanation for what occurred.

G. Attack on the Abd al-Dayem condolence tents

1. The facts gathered by the Mission

867. On 4 January 2009 the Israeli armed forces struck an ambulance in the Beit Lahia area with a flechette missile as it was attending a number of wounded persons who had been hit in an earlier attack. Those wounded in the first attack had also been hit by a flechette missile. As a result of the attack on the ambulance, one of the first-aid volunteers in the ambulance crew, Arafa Abd al-Dayem, suffered severe injuries. He died later the same afternoon.

868. The following day, as is the custom, the family set up condolence tents where family and friends would pay their respects and comfort the grieving relatives. The family home is in Izbat Beit Hanoun, a built-up area in the north-east corner of the Gaza strip. It is located between Jabaliyah and Beit Hanoun, about 3 kilometres from the border with Israel both to the north and to the east. Although the Israeli armed forces had entered Gaza at the time of the incident, in this area they remained on the Israeli side of the “Green Line” border. Two tents were set up – one for male visitors and one for female visitors. They were positioned at about ten metres from each other. The male tent was outside the house of Mohammed Deeb Abd al-Dayem, the father of the ambulance driver.

869. The tents were struck three times in two hours, again with flechette missiles.

870. The Mission spoke to several of the witnesses who had attended and survived the attacks on the condolence tents. The Mission noted the great pride Arafa Abd al-Dayem’s father had in his son and the deep sense of loss he clearly felt.

871. As regards the attacks on the condolence tents, witnesses stated that at around 7.30 a.m. on 5 January, the house of Mohammed Deeb Abd al-Dayem, was hit by a shell. The shell struck the fourth floor of the five-storey building causing the roof to collapse.⁴⁷⁷ Three men at the gathering, including the father of the deceased, were slightly wounded and taken to the Kamal ⁴⁷⁵ General comment No. 6 (1982), para. 3.

⁴⁷⁶ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 31 (2004), para. 15. See also Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law, para. 3 (b).

⁴⁷⁷ Testimony of IK/12 and IK/13 to the Mission on 30 June 2009.

Idwan hospital in Beit Lahia for treatment. They returned to the house at around 8.15 a.m. where a decision was taken by the mourners to end the condolence ceremony for fear of further attacks.

872. The witness stated that at around 8.30 a.m. when the people were leaving the house of Mohammed Deeb Abd al-Dayem and moving towards the women's condolence tent, two flechette missiles struck within a few metres of the tent and less than half a minute apart. Around 20 to 30 persons assembled there were injured. The injured include a 13-year-old boy who received a flechette injury to the right side of his head and a 33-year-old man who sustained injuries to the chest and head, his body punctuated with little holes according to a witness who saw his corpse being prepared for burial. A 22-year-old man was wounded in the abdomen, the chest and the head. A 16-year-old boy sustained injuries to the head and the neck. A 26-year-old man sustained injuries to his chest, head and left leg. These five persons died of their injuries. Another 17 persons present at the scene, including 14 men, two children (aged 17 and 11) and one woman were injured.

873. IK/12, who survived the attack, still has several flechettes embedded in his body, including in his chest, and is unable to move freely without pain.

874. Witnesses described that their sense of loss was aggravated by the fact that they could not access the injured or dead in hospitals as movement was restricted owing to continued shelling in and around the neighbourhood. Only two families out of the five families of the dead were able to conduct the burial according to their traditional customs and practices.

2. The Israeli position

875. The Israeli Government does not appear to have made any public comment on the allegations surrounding the Abd al-Dayem case, despite information about it being in the public domain for some time.⁴⁷⁸ It has, however, recalled that the Israeli High Court of Justice has rejected the argument that flechette munitions are by their nature indiscriminate and maintains that subject to the general requirements of the rules of armed conflict their use is legal.⁴⁷⁹

3. Factual findings

876. The Mission visited the area and the house of the Abd al-Dayem family. It spoke with the father of Arafa Abd al-Dayem, who had died as a result of the injuries received while working as a first-aid volunteer, and with several of the witnesses who had attended the condolence ceremonies.

877. The account of the incidents was consistent and plausible. The fact that it was mainly men who were killed near the women's tent is explained by the fact that the strikes occurred precisely when the men were making their way across the road.

⁴⁷⁸ The incident is mentioned in Amnesty International, Fuelling Conflict: Foreign Arms Supplies to Usrael/Gaza (February 2009).

⁴⁷⁹ See "The operation in Gaza...", paras. 431-435.

878. The Mission can see nothing at all that points to the house of Mohammed Deeb Abd al-Dayem, or the condolence tents constituting a military objective. The repeated nature of the strikes indicates that there was a deliberate attempt to kill members of the group or the entire group, but no information about the purpose of the strikes has been forthcoming from the Israeli authorities.

879. The Mission inspected the sites of the attacks and was left in no doubt that they had been entirely deliberate. There was a tent at each side of the wide road. The particular area is relatively open.

4. Legal findings

880. While international humanitarian law does not explicitly prohibit the use of flechettes in all circumstances, the principles of proportionality and precautions necessary in attack render their use illegal. Flechettes are 4-cm-long metal darts used as anti-personnel weapons that penetrate straight through human bone and can cause serious, often fatal, injuries.⁴⁸⁰ Discharged from tank shells and aircraft or UAV-launched missiles, they are fired in salvo and are therefore an area anti-personnel weapon. They are, therefore, by their nature lacking in discrimination.

881. The Mission notes that, during the condolence ceremony, flechette shells were fired in the vicinity of a large group of civilians, killing 5 and injuring more than 20. To consider the attacks indiscriminate would imply that there was a military objective underlying the attacks in the first place. The Mission has no information on which to base such a conclusion and notes the silence of the Israeli authorities on the incident.

882. The Mission therefore considers that the families participating in the condolence ceremony were civilians and taking no active part in hostilities. The attacks on the condolence tent on the morning of 4 January were entirely unjustified and unnecessary. The attacks seemed designed to kill and maim the victims directly and otherwise to terrify the people in the area rather than to pursue any genuine military objective.

883. The Mission finds that the attack on the Abd al-Dayem family condolence tents constitutes an intentional attack against the civilian population and civilian objects, wilful killing and the wilful infliction of suffering. In particular, the Mission believes that any party using a flechette missile in circumstances that are totally or predominantly civilian cannot fail to anticipate the severe and unnecessary suffering of the civilians affected.

884. Based on the facts ascertained, the Mission therefore finds there to have been violations of customary international law in respect of a deliberate attack on civilians. It considers the attack was not only an attack intended to kill but also to spread terror among the civilian population, given the nature of the weapon used. (See art. 51 (2) of Additional Protocol I.)

⁴⁸⁰ Amnesty International, Israel/Gaza: Operation "Cast Lead": 22 days of death and destruction (London, 2009) and B'Tselem, "Flechette shells: an illegal weapon", available at: <http://www.btselem.org/english/firearms/flechette.asp>.

885. The Mission also finds the attack to constitute a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention with respect to article 147 regarding wilful killings and wilfully causing great suffering.

XII. THE USE OF CERTAIN WEAPONS

886. In the course of its inquiries, the Mission was made aware of the use of certain weapons by the Israeli armed forces. This chapter does not intend to present a comprehensive analysis of all the aspects raised on the kinds of weaponry used during the military operations. It is rather a summary of the Mission's views on a number of issues that arise from the foregoing chapters in relation to the obligation to take all feasible precautions in the choice of the means and methods of warfare. Many of the issues brought to the Mission's attention had already received scrutiny in the press or as a result of analysis carried out by a number of organizations.⁴⁸¹ Among these issues was the use of white phosphorous, the use of flechette missiles, the use of so-called dense inert metal explosive (DIME) munitions, and the use of depleted uranium.

A. White phosphorous

887. White phosphorous was used throughout the ground phase of the operations. The Israeli Government has set out its reasons for doing so, emphasizing that it is not only not a proscribed weapon under international law but that it was deployed with a high degree of success.⁴⁸²

888. It has explained that it used white phosphorous in two forms. One was as exploding munitions used as mortar shells by ground and naval forces. It says that in this form it was deployed only in unpopulated areas for marking and signalling purposes, and not in an anti-personnel capacity. It claims that, as a result of international concerns, it decided to stop using these munitions on 7 January 2009, although this was not required by international law. It also acknowledges the use of smoke projectiles containing felt wedges dipped in white phosphorous.

889. The Mission understands the means of deploying these smoke projectiles was that they were fired as a canister shell by 155-mm howitzers. The projectile was timed or programmed to air-burst over its designated target. The canister shell then discharged a quantity of felt wedges impregnated with white phosphorous, usually in the order of 160 wedges in a fan-like dispersion earthwards. These wedges with white phosphorous, which is a pyrophoric chemical (that is, self-igniting when in contact with the air), emit smoke and continue to do so until the chemical is exhausted or deprived of air. Wedges of white phosphorous therefore remain active and have done so in Gaza for up to 21 and 24 days after discharge. It is technically possible that there are still active white phosphorous wedges in Gaza – in water tanks or in sewage systems, for example. Children have subsequently been injured by coming in contact with such wedges.

⁴⁸¹ See, for example, Physicians for Human Rights-Israel, Report of the Independent Fact Finding Mission into violations in the Gaza Strip during the period 27.12.08-18.01.09, http://www.phr.org.il/phr/files/articlefile_1241949935203.pdf, Human Rights Watch, Rain of Fire: Israel's Unlawful Use of White Phosphorous in Gaza (March 2009), Amnesty International, Fuelling conflict: Foreign arms supplies to Israel/Gaza (February 2009), Report of the Independent Fact Finding Committee on Gaza, "No safe place...", paras. 206-207; Summary of the Report of the United Nations Headquarters Board of Inquiry, paras. 46-56, documentation provided by UNRWA.

⁴⁸² "The operation in Gaza...", paras. 406-430. The Mission addressed written questions to the Government of Israel regarding the use of white phosphorous during the military operations in Gaza. No reply was received.

890. The Mission has recounted a number of incidents where it has particular concern about the choice to use white phosphorous. These incidents have been addressed in detail elsewhere and include the incidents at the UNRWA compound in Gaza City, the attacks on al-Quds and al-Wafa hospitals, also in Gaza City, and the use of white phosphorous in the attack on the Abu Halima family to the north of al-Atatra and in Khuz'a.

891. The Mission notes that, at least in the case of Abu Halima,⁴⁸³ it appears that the white phosphorous was deployed by means of an exploding shell and not as a smoke projectile. This occurred several days after the apparent decision to stop using the munitions on 7 January 2009.

892. The Mission has also spoken at some length to a number of local and international medical experts who treated patients in Gaza who suffered burns as a result of exposure to white phosphorous.

893. The Mission need not repeat much of what it has already concluded on the choice to use white phosphorous in specific circumstances. It has already made clear that the risks it posed to the civilian population and civilian objects in the area under attack were excessive in relation to the specific military advantages sought.

894. The Israeli Government has frequently pointed out the difficulties posed by fighting in built-up areas. One of the difficulties is the proximity of civilian premises to possible military targets. Commanders have no choice but to factor in the risk to such premises and the people inside them in deciding which weapons to use. The Mission finds that the Israeli armed forces were systematically reckless in determining to use white phosphorous in built-up areas and in particular in and around areas of particular importance to civilian health and safety.

895. In addition to the reckless use of white phosphorous, the Mission must emphasize that it is concerned not only with the inordinate risks the Israeli armed forces took in using it, but also the damage it caused in fact. In speaking with medical experts and practitioners, it was impressed by the severity and sometimes untreatable nature of the burns caused by the substance.

896. Several doctors told of how they believed they had dealt with a wound successfully only to find unexpected complications developing as a result of the phosphorous having caused deeper damage to tissue and organs than could be detected at the time. Several patients died, according to doctors, as a result of organ failure resulting from the burns.

897. A senior doctor at al-Shifa hospital in Gaza City confirmed that Sabah, Ghada and Farah Abu Halima were admitted with serious burns and transferred to Egypt for treatment. The doctor believed that the burns were caused by contact with white phosphorous.⁴⁸⁴

⁴⁸³ See chap. XI.

⁴⁸⁴ Mission interview on 12 June 2009.

898. The doctor commented that, before the military operations, the hospital was not familiar with white phosphorous burns. Staff became concerned when patients who had been sent home after treatment of apparently minor burns would come back in the following days with more serious wounds. They found that when they removed the bandages that had been applied to a wound that still contained fragments of white phosphorous, smoke would come from the wound, even hours after the injury. White phosphorous continues to burn as long as it is in contact with oxygen.

899. International doctors working with al-Shifa staff, some of whom had worked in Lebanon during the 2006 war, identified white phosphorous as the cause of these injuries and the treatment was adapted accordingly. Any apparent white phosphorous burn was immediately covered with a wet sponge and the particles extracted. White phosphorous sticks to tissue, so all flesh and sometimes the muscle around the burn would have to be excised.

900. In addition, the highly toxic substance, used so widely in civilian settings posed a real health threat to doctors dealing with patients. Medical staff reported to the Mission how even working in the areas where the phosphorous had been used made them feel sick, their lips would swell and they would become extremely thirsty and nauseous.

901. While accepting that white phosphorous is not at this stage proscribed under international law, the Mission considers that the repeated misuse of the substance by the Israeli armed forces during this operation calls into question the wisdom of allowing its continued use without some further degree of control. The Mission understands the need to use obscurants and illuminants for various reasons during military operations and especially in screening troops from observation or enemy fire. There are, however, other screening and illuminating means which are free from the toxicities, volatilities and hazards that are inherent in the chemical white phosphorous. The use of white phosphorous in any form in and around areas dedicated to the health and safety of civilians has been shown to carry very substantial risks. The Mission therefore believes that serious consideration should be given to banning the use of white phosphorous as an obscurant.

B. Flechettes⁴⁸⁵

902. Flechettes are small, dart-like pieces of composite metal and are usually fired in salvo from canister projectiles or shells. Those fired and retrieved in Gaza were 4 cm long and approximately 2–4 mm wide, having a pointed end and a fletched end.

903. Flechettes are used in an anti-personnel role and are discharged in such quantities that they cover an area forward of the canister shell. As an area weapon, on impact the darts will hit whatever is within a certain zone. They are incapable of discriminating between objectives after detonation. They are, therefore, particularly unsuitable for use in urban settings where there is reason to believe civilians may be present.

⁴⁸⁵ See “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 431-434. The report simply states that the weapons are not proscribed and this was reiterated by the Israeli High Court of Justice in 2002. Although it does not address specific allegations, it does state in general terms that allegations are still being investigated (para. 435). The Mission addressed questions to the Government of Israel regarding the use of flechettes during the military operations in Gaza. No reply was received.

904. Flechettes were fired during the military operations on several occasions by tanks and on at least one occasion from an air-to-surface missile of the “Helfire” type.⁴⁸⁶ In all cases those hit by these devices were civilians and in one case were attending a condolence tent following the loss of a family member who was also killed by flechettes.

905. Flechettes are known to bend, break or “tumble” on impact with human flesh. Such performances are often part of the flechettes design characteristic and are marketed as such. “Tumbling” in particular is adjudged to be a further determination of the projectiles “incapacitation” effect.⁴⁸⁷ The Mission notes, however, that flechettes can be designed to be free of these post-impact characteristics if it is desired that they should do so.

C. Alleged use of munitions causing a specific type of injury

906. The Mission received reports from Palestinian and foreign doctors who operated in Gaza during the military operations of a strikingly high percentage of patients with severed legs as a result of the impact of projectiles launched by the Israeli armed forces. Dr. Mads Gilbert, a Norwegian anaesthetist, and Dr. Eric Fosse, a Norwegian surgeon, who carried out surgery in al-Shifa Hospital from 31 December 2008 to 10 January 2009,⁴⁸⁸ described to the Mission the characteristics of the wounds. The amputations mostly occurred at waist height in children, generally lower in adults, and were combined with skin-deep, third-degree burns, four to six fingers upward from the amputation. Where the amputation took place, the flesh was cauterized as a result of the heat. The patients with these amputations had no shrapnel wounds, but red flashes on the abdomen and chest. The excision of large pieces of flesh was not infrequent in these patients. Dr. Gilbert added that the patients also suffered internal burns. This description was confirmed to the Mission by Palestinian surgeons.

907. The Mission understands such injuries to be compatible with the impact of DIME weapons. DIME weapons consist of a carbon-fibre casing filled with a homogeneous mixture of an explosive material and small particles, basically a powder, of a heavy metal, for instance, a tungsten alloy. Upon detonation of the explosive, the casing disintegrates into extremely small, non-lethal fibres. The tungsten powder tears apart anything it hits. The impact of such weapons in general causes very severe wounds within a relatively limited diameter (compared to other projectiles) from the point of detonation. As the small heavy metal particles can slice through soft tissue and bone, survivors close to the lethal zone may have their limbs amputated and tungsten alloy particles embedded in their bodies. The probabilities of injuries to persons at a greater distance from the detonation point are reduced compared to more conventional projectiles. It is therefore also referred to as a “focused lethality munition”.⁴⁸⁹

⁴⁸⁶ See Abduldayem case in chapter XI.

⁴⁸⁷ William Kokinakis and Joseph Sperrazza, “Criteria for incapacitating soldiers with fragments and flechettes (U)”, Ballistic Research Laboratories Report Number 1269, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland (January 1965).

⁴⁸⁸ Mads Gilbert and Eric Fosse, “Inside Gaza’s al-Shifa hospital”, The Lancet, vol. 373, No. 9659 (17 January 2009), p. 200.

⁴⁸⁹ The DIME munitions subject of discussion here are distinct from the missile described, for example, in the al Maqadmah mosque case. In that case the missile had been fitted with a micro-shrapnel fragmentation sleeve. The 908. The materials submitted to the Mission, including by the expert witness Lt. Col. Lane, point to specific medical concerns with regard to survivors of DIME weapon injuries.⁴⁹⁰ The tungsten alloy particles are suspected to be highly carcinogenic and so small that they cannot be extracted from the patient's body. Dr. Gilbert noted that there had been no follow-up studies on the survivors of this type of amputation observed in Gaza and Lebanon since 2006 following Israeli military operations. There is some research suggesting that these patients might be at increased risk of cancer. These concerns apply equally to missile or projectile shrapnel of heavy metal such as tungsten or tungsten alloy which was used in at least two occasions in Gaza. The carcinogenic hazards are the same no matter the delivery means or the size or shape of the pieces of the metal that enter human flesh.

D. Factual findings on the use of munitions causing a specific type of injury

909. From the facts it gathered, the Mission finds that the allegations that DIME weapons were used by the Israeli armed forces in Gaza during the military operations require further clarification with regard to their use and, particularly, the health-care needs of survivors of the amputations attributed to DIME weapons.

910. The Mission notes that DIME or heavy metal shrapnel weapons and weapons armed with heavy metal are not prohibited under international law as it currently stands. The "focused lethality" reportedly pursued in the development of DIME weapons could be seen as advancing compliance with the principle of distinction. The Mission also observes, however, that there remains a very high risk of harming civilians when using these weapons in built-up areas and that concerns have been expressed that DIME weapons could have a particularly adverse impact on the enjoyment of the right to health of survivors, which would go beyond the impact generally associated with being affected by anti-personnel weapons in an armed conflict.

E. Allegations regarding the use of depleted and non-depleted uranium munitions by the Israeli armed forces

911. The Mission received submissions and reviewed reports alleging the use of depleted uranium weapons by the Israeli armed forces during the military operations in Gaza.⁴⁹¹ While it cannot be excluded that such weapons were used, on the basis of the information received the Mission decided not to investigate the matter further.

912. The Mission also received a submission which alleged that the analysis of the air filter taken from an ambulance which was in operation in the Beit Lahia area during the military micro-shrapnel consisted of tungsten or tungsten alloy cubes, which may have similar carcinogenic hazards as the powder or fibres in DIME.

⁴⁹⁰ Written submissions to the Mission by expert witness Lt. Col. Lane.

⁴⁹¹ Arab Commission for Human Rights, Action des citoyens pour le désarmement nucléaire and International Coalition Against War Criminals, Preliminary report, Mission for Gaza, April 2009 by Jean-François Fechino, pp. 55-60; Action des citoyens pour le désarmement nucléaire, On the use of radioactive weapons in the Gaza Strip during « Operation Cast Lead » (27 December 2008 - 18 January 2009), <http://www.acdn.net/>.

operations showed unusually high levels of non-depleted uranium and niobium in the air.⁴⁹² In view of the limited time available, the Mission could not further investigate this matter.

XIII. ATTACKS ON THE FOUNDATIONS OF CIVILIAN LIFE IN GAZA: DESTRUCTION OF INDUSTRIAL INFRASTRUCTURE, FOOD PRODUCTION, WATER INSTALLATIONS, SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANTS AND HOUSING

A. The destruction of el-Bader flour mill

913. The Mission visited the site of the air strikes and surveyed the surrounding area in Sudaniyah, west of Jabaliyah. It met and interviewed the Hamada brothers, joint owners of the el-Bader flour mill, on four occasions. It spoke with representatives of the business community about the context and consequences of the strike on the flour mill. Mr. Hamada also testified at the public hearings in Gaza.⁴⁹³ The Mission also addressed questions to the Government of Israel with regard to the military advantage pursued in attacking the el-Bader flour mill, but received no reply.

914. The Hamada brothers are well-established businessmen and hold Businessman Cards, issued by the Israeli authorities to facilitate business travel to and from Israel. The flour mill is one of several businesses owned by the brothers on this site, including a tomato-canning factory and a factory for the production of nappies. These last two businesses were closed down sometime before the beginning of the Israeli military operations in Gaza, as the blockade led to a lack of supplies. According to Mr. Rashad Hamada, the tomato-canning business failed primarily because of the Israeli authorities' refusal to allow tins for canning into Gaza. The owners had transferred many employees from the businesses that had closed down to the flour mill so that these employees would continue to draw a salary. At the time of its destruction, the flour mill employed more than 50 people.

915. The el-Bader flour mill began operations in 1999.⁴⁹⁴ By 27 December 2008, it was the only one of Gaza's three flour mills still operating. The others had ceased operations owing to a lack of supplies. The el-Bader mill was able to continue in part because of its greater storage capacity.

⁴⁹² Submission by Chris Busby & Dai Williams. Battlefield Fallout: Evidence of Uranium and Niobium in Weapons Employed by the Israeli Military in Gaza. Analysis of Ambulance Air Filter and Bomb Crater.

⁴⁹³ The Mission met Rashad Hamada and other members of the Palestinian business community on 3 June 2009 and interviewed him at the site of the el-Bader flour mill on 4 June 2009. Mr. Hamada testified at the public hearings in Gaza on 29 June 2009.

⁴⁹⁴ Rashad Hamada stated that the aim of the business, besides making a profit, was to help Gaza to be more self-sustaining economically and thus to reduce dependence on external supplies. He indicated that the increase in running costs caused by the blockade gave Israeli competitors a considerable advantage. The cost of electricity, for example, was approximately 50 per cent higher than it was for his competitors in Israel. In addition, since the Israeli Government had closed the Erez crossing and all imports and exports had to go through the Karni crossing, transport costs had increased 10-fold. The increased cost for the consumer had, as a result, also been significant. The retail price of milled flour had risen, in his estimation, by perhaps as much as 10 per cent.

916. On 30 December 2008, a recorded warning was left on the flour mill's answering machine to the effect that the message was from the Israeli armed forces and that the building should be evacuated immediately. The approximately 45 workers in the mill at the time were evacuated at around 9.30 a.m.

917. Following the evacuation, Mr. Hamada called a business associate in Israel, explained what had happened and asked him for advice. The business associate called him back, indicating that he had spoken with contacts in the Israeli armed forces on Mr. Hamada's behalf, and had been told that, although the mill had been on a list of proposed targets, they had decided not to proceed with the strike. Mr. Hamada did not receive any information as to why his mill might have been targeted.

918. As a result of these conversations and the fact that there had been no strike, the employees returned to work the next day. Work continued for a number of days until a second recorded warning was received on or around 4 January 2009. The flour mill was again evacuated and Mr. Hamada again contacted his business associate in Israel. The same scenario unfolded whereby Mr. Hamada received a call later on to the effect that the Israeli armed forces had informed his associate that the mill would not be hit. The employees returned to work in the light of the information and the fact that the warnings had not been put into effect.

919. On 9 January, at around 3 or 4 a.m., the flour mill was hit by an air strike, possibly by an F-16. The missile struck the floor that housed one of the machines indispensable to the mill's functioning, completely destroying it. The guard who was on duty at the time called Mr. Hamada to inform him that the building had been hit and was on fire. He was unhurt. In the next 60 to 90 minutes the mill was hit several times by missiles fired from an Apache helicopter. These missiles hit the upper floors of the factory, destroying key machinery. Adjoining buildings, including the grain store, were not hit. The strikes entirely disabled the factory and it has not been back in operation since. A large amount of grain remains at the site but cannot be processed.

920. The Israeli armed forces occupied the disabled building until around 13 January. Hundreds of shells were found on its roof after the soldiers left. They appeared to be 40-mm grenade machine-gun spent cartridges.

921. The Hamada brothers rejected any suggestion that the building was at any time used for any purpose by Palestinian armed groups. They pointed out that all of the buildings and factories were surrounded by a high wall and manned by at least one guard at night. In addition, the Israeli authorities knew them as businessmen and they would not have been given Businessman Cards had there been any reason for the Israeli Government to suspect that they were involved with or supported armed groups. They were both adamant that their interest was and always had been industrial and commercial, and that the last thing they were prepared to do was put their business at risk.

1. Factual findings

922. The Mission found the Hamada brothers to be credible and reliable witnesses. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of their testimony. The information they provided was corroborated by other representatives of the Gaza business community with whom the Mission discussed the context and consequences of the strike on the flour mill.

923. The owners and employees of the flour mill were forced to evacuate the building twice because of the two recorded warnings left on the answerphone, which were not followed by air strikes. They were put into a state of fear as a result of the false alarms. When the mill was hit on 9 January, the strike happened without prior warning, raising questions about the efficacy or seriousness of the warnings system used by the Israeli armed forces.

924. The consequences of the strike on the flour mill were significant. Not only are all the employees out of work, the capacity of Gaza to produce milled flour, the most basic staple ingredient of the local diet, has been greatly diminished. As a result, the population of Gaza is now more dependent on the Israeli authorities' granting permission for flour and bread to enter the Gaza Strip.

925. Available information does not suggest that the Israeli authorities have investigated the destruction of the flour mill. The Mission finds the version of the Hamada brothers to be credible and in line with the Israeli practice of leaving telephone warnings of impending attacks.

2. Legal findings

926. In considering the degree to which there may have been violations of international humanitarian law, the Mission refers to article 52 of Additional Protocol 1, which is set out in full above at chapter VII. The Mission also considers the following provisions to be relevant to its deliberations:

Article 54 (1) and (2) of Additional Protocol I

1. Starvation of civilians as a method of warfare is prohibited.

2. It is prohibited to attack, destroy, remove or render useless objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, such as foodstuffs, agricultural areas for the production of foodstuffs, crops, livestock, drinking water installations and supplies and irrigation works, for the specific purpose of denying them for their sustenance value to the civilian population or to the adverse party, whatever the motive, whether in order to starve out civilians, to cause them to move away, or for any other motive.

Article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention provides:

Grave breaches to which the preceding article relates shall be those involving any of the following acts, if committed against persons or property protected by the present Convention: wilful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, including biological experiments, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a protected person, compelling a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile Power, or wilfully depriving a protected person of the rights of fair and regular trial prescribed in the present Convention, taking of hostages and extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly.

927. No other buildings in the industrial compound belonging to the Hamadas were damaged at the time of the strikes. It appears that the strikes on the flour mill were intentional and precise.

928. The Hamada brothers are well-known businessmen. The Israeli authorities did not appear to consider them either before or after the military operations to be a threat, given the unrestricted issuance of their Businessman Cards and their ability to travel to Israel afterwards. The issuance of a Businessman Card is no trifle, especially in the context of the ongoing restrictions on trade. It is not plausible that the Israeli authorities would issue such a document to any party it regarded with suspicion.

929. The only issue that remains to be examined is whether there was any reason for the flour mill to have been deemed a military objective on 9 January. The building was one of the tallest in the area and would have offered extensive views to the Israeli armed forces. The Mission notes that taking control of the building might be deemed a legitimate objective in the circumstances. However, by 9 January the Israeli armed forces were fully aware that the flour mill could be evacuated at short notice by using the warning message system. If the reason for attacking the mill was to gain control of it for observation and control purposes, it made no sense to bomb the principal machinery and to destroy the upper floors. There is also no suggestion that the Israeli armed forces considered the building to be a source of enemy fire.

930. The nature of the strikes on the mill and in particular the precise targeting of crucial machinery on one of the mid-level floors suggests that the intention was to disable its productive capacity. There appears to be no plausible justification for the extensive damage to the flour mill if the sole objective was to take control of the building. It thus appears that the only purpose was to put an end to the production of flour in the Gaza Strip.

931. From the facts it ascertained, the Mission finds that there has been a violation of the grave breaches provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention. Unlawful and wanton destruction which is not justified by military necessity would amount to a war crime.

932. Having concluded that the strikes were without any military justification, and therefore wanton and unlawful, the Mission finds it useful to consider if there was any non-military purpose to the strikes.

933. The aim of the strike, if not military, could only have been to destroy the local capacity to produce flour. The question is whether such deliberate destruction of the sole remaining flour-producing capacity in the Gaza Strip can be described as having been done for the purpose of denying sustenance to the civilian population.

934. Article 54 (1) and (2) of Additional Protocol I reflect customary international law.⁴⁹⁵ Article 54 (2) prohibits acts whose specific purpose is the denial of sustenance for whatever reason, including starvation, forced displacement or anything else. In short, the motive for denying sustenance need not be to starve the civilian population. Indeed, the motive is irrelevant.

⁴⁹⁵ In this respect the Mission agrees with the views expressed by ICRC in Customary Rules of International Law..., pp. 189-193.

935. The civilian population is increasingly dependent on external humanitarian assistance, whose arrival depends on permission from the Israeli authorities. While it is not suggested that starvation is imminent, the health and welfare of the population at large have been profoundly affected by the blockade and the military operations. The only reason why starvation is not imminent however is precisely the provision of humanitarian assistance. Without such assistance Gaza's civilian population would not be able to feed itself.⁴⁹⁶

936. States cannot escape their obligations not to deny the means of sustenance simply by presuming the international community will fill the gap they have created by deliberately destroying the existing capacity.

937. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission finds that the destruction of the mill was carried out for the purpose of denying sustenance to the civilian population, which is a violation of customary international law as reflected in article 54 (2) of Additional Protocol I and may constitute a war crime.

3. The right to food⁴⁹⁷

938. The right to adequate food therefore requires the right to food security (through either self-production or adequate income) and the "fundamental" right to be free from hunger.⁴⁹⁸ That Israel has not created a state of hunger is the result largely of the external aid provided to the population of Gaza. It has, however, severely affected the ability of Gazans both to produce food and to purchase it.

939. Article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights states that "in no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence."

940. The right to adequate food is also reflected in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which requires State parties to guarantee to women "adequate nutrition during pregnancy and lactation."

941. The Mission finds that, as a result of its actions to destroy food and water supplies and infrastructure, Israel has violated article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 12 (2) of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

⁴⁹⁶ According to John Ging, 80 per cent of the Gazan population is dependent on UNRWA for food supplies. Interview with IRIN, 20 January 2009.

⁴⁹⁷ See chap. XVII.

⁴⁹⁸ See Randle C. DeFalco, "The right to food in Gaza: Israel's obligations under international law", Rutgers Law Record, vol. 35 (Spring 2009), available at: http://www.lawrecord.com/rutgers_law_record/2009/05/the-right-to-food-in-gaza-israels-obligations-under-international-law.html#sdfootnote24sym.

B. The destruction of the Sawafeary chicken farms

942. On or around the night of 3 January 2009 Israeli troops arrived at a number of houses on al-Sekka Road in Zeytoun. The Mission interviewed four people who were direct witnesses to and victims of the events that occurred in the aftermath of their arrival. One witness was interviewed three times for a total of five hours and testified at the public hearings in Gaza.⁴⁹⁹ Another three were interviewed for an hour each. The Mission also visited the site of the Sawafeary chicken farms. Finally, the Mission addressed questions to the Government of Israel with regard to the military advantage pursued in attacking Mr. Sawafeary's chicken farms, but received no reply. The following narrative reflects the eyewitness accounts.

943. Sameh Sawafeary is a chicken farmer. His family has been in the egg production business for many years. He indicated that he, his brothers and his children owned 11 chicken farms in Zeytoun as of December 2008. The farms housed more than 100,000 chickens.

944. On 3 January, Mr. Sawafeary, who was in his home on al-Sekka Road in the al-Samouni neighbourhood of Zeytoun with his family, was alerted by an al-Jazeera television news broadcast at around 8 p.m. that an Israeli ground invasion was imminent.⁵⁰⁰ As a result, he took a number of precautions, including hiding money and other valuables. He then gathered around 11 members of his family on the upper floor of the two-storey concrete house. At around 10 p.m. a missile struck the house, entering through the rear of the upper floor and exiting near the window of the living room opposite. The missile passed over several of Mr. Sawafeary's children and grandchildren, who were lying on the floor. No one was injured.

945. At around 11 p.m., Mr. Sawafeary heard the sound of helicopters flying over his house followed by soldiers landing on his roof. The soldiers remained there until 7 a.m. the next morning, firing what he described as "a rain of bullets". The family stayed, terrified, on the floor of an upstairs room.

946. At around 7.15 a.m. on 4 January, soldiers came into the upstairs room where the family was sheltering. They separated the men from the women and put the women in another room. The hands of the men and the boys were tied behind their backs, except for one of Mr. Sawafeary's sons who has only one arm. After some time the commander told Mr. Sawafeary that they should walk south and "go to Rafah". The soldiers then searched the house. The 11 members of the household there at the time left the house as instructed.

947. The Sawafeary family spent the following five days in terror. Together with neighbouring families they spent one night in the Abu Zur house and the following three in the nearby house of Mr. Rajab Mughrabi. During that time they suffered a number of violations at the hands of the Israeli armed forces, including the killing of the child Ibrahim Juha (see chap. XI).

948. For the purposes of this section the Mission refers to the information it received about the systematic destruction that occurred for several days and which the witnesses were able to see during the time they were forced by the circumstances to remain in the house of Mr. Mughrabi.

⁴⁹⁹ Interviewed by the Mission in Gaza on 3 June and 14 June and at the Gaza public hearing on 29 June.

⁵⁰⁰ The previous night, a garage next door had been destroyed by an air strike.

949. Mr. Sawafeary and Mr. Mughrabi informed the Mission that they had watched Israeli armoured bulldozers systematically destroy land, crops, chickens and farm infrastructure. Mr. Mughrabi stated that he watched the bulldozers plough through fields with crops and trees, destroying everything in their path. Mr. Sawafeary stated that he saw less, as he was watching through a small opening because he was afraid of being seen and shot. He stated that he saw only two or three “tanks”, but was not in a position to say whether there were more. He watched as the armoured bulldozers destroyed the chicken farms, crushing the wire mesh coops with the chickens inside. He could not see his own farms and the chickens he could see being destroyed were not his. He noted that the drivers of the tanks would spend hours flattening the chicken coops, sometimes stopping for coffee breaks, before resuming their work.

950. When he left Mr. Mughrabi’s house on 8 January, Mr. Sawafeary was able to see that his own farms did not appear to have been subjected to the destruction he had witnessed from inside the house. However, when he was able to return to his home after the Israeli withdrawal all 31,000 of his chickens had been killed and the coops systematically flattened.

951. The Mission visited the site and saw the still flattened mesh coops, which had been covered with corrugated iron, as well as the remains of water tanks and machinery. The Mission was also shown the remnants of a small mosque near the end of one of the lines of the coops that had been destroyed. The remains of some dead chickens were still visible and Mr. Sawafeary stated that it had been a mammoth task to clean up the area when he returned. He pointed out that, in addition to the loss of livestock, the farm had been completely automated with significant investment in machinery, all of which had been destroyed, as had the plant for packaging the eggs. In short, the business had been razed to the ground. A protective grille, believed to be part of a D-9 armoured bulldozer, was found at the site.

952. The Mission notes comments from one soldier to Breaking the Silence that appears to broadly corroborate the destruction in Zeytoun, probably at the hands of the Givati Brigade.⁵⁰¹

953. The Mission inspected the inside of Mr. Sawafeary’s house and noted damage to the upper floor, where a missile had penetrated. It also observed a number of graffiti that appeared to have been written by Israeli troops. One said “424 Givati”. There were others apparently written in Russian.

954. Mr. Sawafeary told the Mission that he and his family together supplied approximately 35 per cent of the egg market in Gaza. His own farms supplied over 10 per cent. He noted that it was not only his farms that had been destroyed but also most of his family’s farms had been destroyed in the same way as his. He estimated that close to 100,000 chickens were killed in the process.

955. The Mission has reviewed the relevant UNOSAT report and satellite imagery. One satellite image shows the Sawafeary chicken farms in June 2007 and another shows the area in ⁵⁰¹ Soldiers’ Testimonies..., testimony 37, p. 82.

January 2009. The images depict clearly the size of the farms and the surrounding area. The destruction is plainly visible in the second image.⁵⁰²

1. Factual findings

956. The systematic destruction along with the large numbers of killings of civilians suggest premeditation and a high level of planning. Even in the context of a campaign that had many serious violations of international humanitarian law, the events in Zeytoun at this time stand out.

957. The Mission finds that the destruction of the land and farms in the area was not justified by the pursuit of any military objective. The Israeli armed forces that arrived took control of the area within a matter of hours. They remained there until 18 January. The destruction of the land was not necessary to move the tanks or equipment or gain any particular visual advantage.

958. An inspection of the scene indicates that the area is relatively sparsely populated. The Mission rejects the idea that the Sawafeary farm was destroyed in the pursuit of any military objective.

959. The destruction of the farms appears to have been wanton and not militarily necessary. Not only were the coops with the chickens destroyed, but all of the plant and machinery of the farms as well.

960. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission finds that the Sawafeary chicken farms, the 31,000 chickens and the plant and material necessary for the business were systematically and deliberately destroyed, and that this constituted a deliberate act of wanton destruction not justified by any military necessity.

2. Legal findings

961. The Mission makes the same findings regarding article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and article 54 (2) of Additional Protocol I, article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 12 (2) of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women as it made above in relation to the el-Bader flour mill.

C. The destruction of water and sewage installation

1. The Gaza wastewater treatment plant, Road No. 10, al-Sheikh Ejlin, Gaza City

962. The Mission visited the site of al-Sheikh Ejlin treatment plant on 3 and 17 June 2009. While there it interviewed the Director of the Coastal Municipalities Water Utility (CMWU), Mr. Munther Shublaq, inspected the plant, the site of lagoon No. 3 and the location where a large pipe carrying raw sewage had been ruptured. On 3 June, the Mission also visited a nearby farm that had been inundated with raw sewage and spoke to the farmer. The Mission interviewed Mr.

⁵⁰² UNOSAT satellite image analysis, 27 April 2009, p. 29.

Munther Shublaq a second time at length on 14 June 2009. The Mission took photographs of the area, and obtained plans and diagrams of the plant. Finally, the Mission addressed questions to the Government of Israel with regard to the military advantage pursued in attacking al-Sheikh Ejlin treatment plant, but received no reply.

963. The Gaza wastewater treatment plant is located in the coastal area south-west of Gaza City in the al-Sheikh Ejlin neighbourhood. It was built in 1977 and expanded with support from development cooperation. It consists of a number of installations, including offices, tanks and lagoons to store raw sewage.

964. At some point between 3 and 10 January, a large missile hit the northernmost wall of lagoon No. 3, causing a massive outflow of raw sewage, which travelled a distance of 1.2 kilometres and damaged 5.5 hectares of land, including agricultural land, according to UNOSAT satellite imagery.

965. The chief of the plant, Mr. Jaoudat al-Dalou, explained to the Mission that when the Israeli ground offensive started around 3 January, all staff left for security reasons, as did the local residents of the sparsely populated area. Around 14 January, he received a phone call from someone in the vicinity of the plant reporting the strike on lagoon No. 3 and the flooding of neighbouring farmland by sewage. He contacted ICRC and PRCS to seek permission from the Israeli armed forces to go to the plant and carry out urgent repairs. Permission was denied on the grounds that the area was a “military zone”.

966. After the withdrawal of the Israeli armed forces, Mr. al-Dalou and his colleagues returned to al-Sheikh Ejlin to inspect the damage. They also saw what they believed to be unexploded bombs nearby and called the police to contact UNRWA to clear the area. Mr. al-Dalou found a crater five metres deep on the north-east side of lagoon No. 3. The damaged wall took over four days to repair at a cost of some US$ 158,000. More than 200,000 cubic metres of raw sewage had flowed into neighbouring farmland.

967. In addition, a number of items, including an incubator, had been taken out of the plant and used by Israeli soldiers to make a barricade or protection wall. The damage done by the impact of bullets could still be seen on interior walls. Shattered windows had still not been replaced as glass was not available. Other damaged equipment included distillation equipment (damaged beyond repair) and a nitrogen ammonium machine.

968. In interviews with the Mission, Mr. Munther Shublaq, who issued a CMWU report of the damage in January 2009,⁵⁰³ confirmed that staff had left upon the arrival of Israeli ground forces and did not return until their withdrawal. He also indicated that on hearing news of the rupture of lagoon No. 3 he made several unsuccessful efforts to obtain permission to access the area to stop the damage caused by the outflow.

969. The Mission noted breaks in a large raw-sewage pipe which ran to the north of lagoon No. 3. Plant officials suggested that clearly visible markings on the pipe had been made by tanks.

⁵⁰³ CMWU, “Damage assessment report: water and waste water infrastructure and facilities”, January 2009, available at: http://www.cmwu.ps/upload/Damages_Assessment_for_W_WW_after_War2009.pdf.

The routes of such pipes are marked by 1.5-metre-high, red and white poles to ensure that care is taken not to damage the pipes. The damage is very close to one such pole.

970. The precise date of the strike on Lagoon No. 3 is uncertain because there were no witnesses in the area at the time. With satellite images it is, however, possible to establish that the strike must have occurred before 10 January 2009, as the images clearly show the massive outflow of sewage from the lagoon on that date.

971. It is also possible to ascertain from the satellite images that the strike on the lagoon wall's eastern side created a breach of about 22 metres, through which the sewage flowed. The same images show the route of the outflow and where it stopped. The United Nations Environment Programme carried out a ground survey of the site on 30 January 2009 and data from that survey were added to the UNOSAT image interpretation.

972. The plant occupies a position at the top of a hill and provides a view over a considerable area of open land, which is mainly farmland. As such, it might reasonably be considered to be of strategic interest.

Factual findings

973. The plant was effectively abandoned by staff when the ground invasion began. The strike on lagoon No. 3 must have occurred after the Israeli armed forces had taken control of the plant and the surrounding area as the employees interviewed confirmed that it was intact when they left the area. Although the damage to the raw-sewage pipe may have been caused by a tank stopping or passing over it, the Mission is not in a position to conclude that this was in fact what occurred.

974. Notwithstanding the possible military advantage offered to the Israeli armed forces by the plant's location, the Mission cannot find any justification for striking the lagoon with what must have been a very powerful missile, sufficient to cause a breach 5 metres deep and 22 metres wide. It is highly unlikely that Palestinian armed groups could have taken up positions in or around the lagoon after the initial occupation of the area by Israeli armed forces: any such groups would have been exposed in the open area. The fact that the lagoon wall was struck precisely there where it would cause outflow of the raw sewage suggests that the strike was deliberate and premeditated.

2. Namar wells group, Salah ad-Din Street, Jabaliyah refugee camp

975. The Mission visited the site of the Namar wells group on 17 June 2009.⁵⁰⁴ It interviewed engineer Ramadan Nai'm, CMWU water production and storage manager, and Ibrahim al-Ejjla, CMWU media coordinator. The Mission took photographs of the site. The Mission also addressed questions to the Government of Israel with regard to the military advantage pursued in attacking the Namar wells group, but received no reply.

⁵⁰⁴ The Namar wells group consists of two of installations situated in Jabaliyah. See "Damage assessment report...".

976. The wells group stood approximately 50 metres from the Jabaliyah refugee camp's administration building, which was also destroyed. A crater (approximately five metres wide) was still visible in the grounds belonging to the civil administration, with at its bottom the case of a rocket.⁵⁰⁵

977. This was a complex of two water well pumps, one in operation and another next to it as standby. Mr. Ramadan Nai'm told the Mission how proud CMWU had been of this water well, which produced more than 200 cubic metres per hour of the best-quality water in the area. The well supplied water to some 25,000 people in eastern and central Jabaliyah. The standby well pump was capable of pumping some 100 cubic metres of water. Both were completely destroyed on 27 December by an airstrike.

978. In the Namar water wells complex there were not only pumping machines but also a 180 kg generator, a fuel store, a reservoir chlorination unit, buildings and related equipment. These were also destroyed.

979. The operator, Mr. Abdullah Ismail al-Zein, was killed in the air strike while he was working at the station. He was employed by the Municipality rather than by CMWU and had been working in the station for four years. He was blown to pieces and his identity was established when his shoes were found three days later.

980. The strike also blew up the pipes connecting the wells to other water wells; incoming water spilled into the area for some 10 days before the pipes could be shut off.

981. Mr. Nai'm informed the Mission that he tried through the mediation of ICRC to get permission from the Israeli armed forces to repair the supply pipes, but permission was not granted and he was obliged to wait until the withdrawal of the Israeli armed forces.

982. It was calculated that repairs to this group of water wells would cost around US$ 200,000, excluding the ancillary but necessary civil engineering works.

983. Mr. Nai'm stated that at least 10 bombs were used to destroy the complex. Not a single wall was left intact.

Factual findings

984. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission finds that the Namar wells were destroyed by multiple air strikes on the first day of the Israeli aerial attack and that civil administration buildings located at approximately 50 metres were also destroyed.

985. The question remains as to whether the Israeli air strikes on the Namar wells group were deliberate or made in error. The Mission notes that the deployment systems and aircraft used in the strikes of 27 December (principally F-16 fighter jets and UAVs) are capable of a high degree of precision. It notes also that, by all accounts, a great deal of preparation had been put into determining and designating the targets of air strikes. The Mission considers it unlikely that a target the size of the Namar wells could have been hit by multiple strikes in error, given the nature of the deployment systems and the distance between the wells and any neighbouring buildings. The facts thus indicate that the strikes on the Namar wells group were intentional.

⁵⁰⁵ Photographs of the damage can be found in "Damage assessment report...".

986. The Mission found no grounds to suggest that there was any military advantage to be gained from hitting the wells. There was no suggestion that Palestinian armed groups had used the wells for any purpose.

3. Legal findings

987. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission makes similar findings to those set out regarding the violation of article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Conventions and article 54 (2) of Additional Protocol I in relation to the destruction of the el-Bader flour mill.

988. The right to food clearly includes the right to have adequate access to water. The Mission finds that this was denied to the people served by the Namar wells. It took some 75 days to repair them

989. The Mission also finds that the killing of Mr. Abdullah Ismail al-Zein was unlawful and constitutes a violation of the right to life. Since targeting the wells constituted an act of wanton destruction, the incidental loss of life cannot be justified with regard to any military advantage.

D. The destruction of housing

990. The Mission received information about the extensive destruction of houses and private property during the military operations.⁵⁰⁶ During its own visits to the Gaza Strip, the Mission witnessed the extent of the destruction caused by air strikes, mortar and artillery shelling, missile strikes, the operation of bulldozers and demolition charges. Some areas of the Gaza Strip were more heavily affected than others, but the Mission saw many piles of rubble where, prior to the military operations, there had been multi-storey houses.

991. In many, if not most, of the incidents investigated by the Mission, described in chapters X, XI, XIV and XV, the victims it interviewed not only suffered the loss of loved ones (or were used as human shields or detained), but also saw their homes severely damaged or completely destroyed. For present purposes, the Mission will recall a few of the incidents relating to the destruction of housing.

992. In some cases, the damage to or destruction of housing was arguably related to the conduct of military operations against Palestinian combatants. The houses of Majdi Abd Rabbo and of his neighbour, HS/08, for instance, were destroyed in combat against the three Palestinian fighters hiding in HS/08's house (see chap. XIV).⁵⁰⁷

⁵⁰⁶ Information received includes the following reports: Al Mezan, Statistical Report on Persons Killed and Property Destroyed by Israeli Occupation Forces during Operation Cast Lead, June 2009, Al-Dameer Gaza, IOF Targets Civilian Premises and Cultural Properties during its Offensive on the Gaza Strip, May 2009, Submission to the Mission by Habitat International Coalition's Housing and Land Rights Network entitled "Targeting Shelters and Shelter Seekers during Operation Cast Lead in the Context of Israeli Military Practice.", and Submission to the Mission by the Centre on Housing Rights and Evictions (COHRE), June 2009, pp. 3-4.

993. In many others, such as the shelling of the houses of Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami (chap. XIV), of the Sawafeary family (see above and chap. XI) and of the Abu Halima family (chap. XI), the houses were in the general path of the advancing Israeli ground troops.

994. In a third group of cases, however, the facts ascertained by the Mission strongly suggest that housing was destroyed without their having any direct link to combat operations. On 6 January 2009 at 1.45 a.m., Mr. Abu Askar received a phone call from the Israeli armed forces informing him that his family should evacuate their house as it was going to be targeted by an air strike. This warning was put into practice a few minutes later, when the home of about 40 members of the extended Abu Askar family was destroyed by a missile (see chap. X).

995. In Juhra ad-Dik, after the killing of Majda and Rayya Hajaj (chap. XI), the Israeli armed forces directed machine-gun fire at the house of the al-Safadi family for the entire afternoon of 4 January 2009. The soldiers firing at the house had seen the Hajaj and al-Safadi families taking refuge there after their failed attempt to flee to Gaza City. When the Hajaj family managed to leave Juhra ad-Dik the following day, Israeli troops apparently took up position in Mr. Youssef Hajaj's house, which they rendered completely uninhabitable, as the Mission saw for itself during a visit. His brother Saleh Hajaj was even less fortunate. His house was reduced to a pile of rubble.

996. Other neighbourhoods were destroyed during the last few days of the military operations as the Israeli armed forces were preparing to withdraw. For example, in an incident described below, after an attempt to demolish a cement-packaging plant in east Gaza, soldiers also destroyed the surrounding houses of the owner and the employees. The factory owner, Mr. Abu Jubbah, had hidden in the house for two days with seven members of his family. Suddenly, a direct strike on the side of the house warned them that the house was to be destroyed and they should leave. Waving a white flag, Mr. Abu Jubbah left the house in a rush, put his family in a car and drove off. On their way they saw tanks and soldiers in the area. Their house was destroyed by shelling. It took several strikes to destroy it, while the factory facilities and the fence were demolished by bulldozers. Housing for 55 factory workers was also demolished with bulldozers.⁵⁰⁸

997. Two further cases investigated by the Mission also exemplify the deliberate demolition of residential housing. The house of Wa'el al-Samouni, in which 21 family members died, was damaged but still standing when PRCS and ICRC extracted the wounded survivors in the afternoon of 7 January 2009 (chap. XI). When the family and rescuers returned to the area on 18 January, the house was completely demolished. As the Mission could see for itself during its visit to the area as well as on photographs taken on that day, the manner in which the house had collapsed strongly indicated that this was the result of deliberate demolition and not of combat.

⁵⁰⁷ The Mission is only noting that there was a factual link between combat and the destruction of the houses, it is not making a finding as to whether the destruction of the two civilian houses was proportionate to the military objective to be achieved.

⁵⁰⁸ Mission interview with Mr. Atta Abu Jubbah, owner of the cement packaging factory.

Similarly, when Khalid Abd Rabbo returned to the home of his extended family in Izbat Abd Rabbo (which he had abandoned intact after the shooting of his daughters, see chap. XI) after the withdrawal of the Israeli armed forces, he found it completely demolished, as were the other houses in the vicinity. Khalid Abd Rabbo drew the Mission's attention to what appeared to be an anti-tank mine visible under the rubble of his neighbour's house, which had reportedly been used by the Israeli armed forces to cause the controlled explosion which brought down the building. As in the case of Wa'el al-Samouni's house, the way the buildings had collapsed strongly suggests that both Khaled Abd Rabbo's house and that of his neighbour were deliberately demolished by explosives experts, rather than damaged during combat. Khaled Abd Rabbo added that, to his knowledge, his house had been demolished by the Israeli armed forces shortly before they withdrew from Gaza.

1. Factual findings

998. From the facts gathered, the Mission concludes that, in a number of cases it investigated, the Israeli armed forces launched direct attacks against residential houses, destroying them. Although the Mission does not have complete information on the circumstances prevailing in Juhf ad-Dik, al-Samouni neighbourhood and Izbat Abd Rabbo when the houses of the Hajaj, al-Samouni and Khalid Abd Rabbo families were destroyed, the information in its possession strongly suggests that they were destroyed outside of any combat engagements with Palestinian armed groups. Nor were these houses otherwise making any effective contribution to military action. These attacks deprived the extended families living there of shelter and of a significant part of their property.

999. In other cases, residential neighbourhoods were subjected to air-launched bombing and to intensive shelling apparently in the context of the advance of Israeli ground forces. In these cases, although the facts gathered by the Mission do not suggest that the residential houses were directly targeted, it doubts whether there were military objectives pursued by the shelling.

2. Corroboration of Mission's factual findings and widespread nature of housing destruction

1000. Testimonies of Israeli soldiers deployed in Gaza during the military operations corroborate what the Mission saw for itself and heard from the witnesses it interviewed. Several of the soldiers interviewed by Breaking the Silence spoke of the unprecedented scale of destruction of houses and of "intentional, systematic destruction."⁵⁰⁹ The testimonies of the soldiers appear to distinguish between three phases in or types of destruction of residential housing. First, there is the destruction which is incidental to the actual combat between the advancing Israeli forces and the Palestinian combatants or to Israeli forces directing fire at locations from which rockets were launched.⁵¹⁰ Second, there is destruction of houses for what ⁵⁰⁹ Soldiers' Testimonies..., pp. 59, 66, 69 and 101. One soldier recalls: "There was a point where D-9s were razing areas. It was amazing. At first you go in and see lots of houses. A week later, after the razing, you see the horizon further away, almost to the sea. They simply took down all the houses around so the terrorists would have nowhere else to hide."

⁵¹⁰ In "The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties...", the Jerusalem Centre for Public Affairs argues that Palestinian houses were also demolished when Palestinian armed groups attacked houses in Gaza in which the Israeli armed forces had taken up positions. This argument is supported with reports of incidents gathered from websites of Palestinian armed groups, such as the following referring to the evening of 9 January 2009: "Three RPG is termed “operational reasons”. This is the deliberate destruction of houses from which fire had been opened on Israeli soldiers or which were suspected of being booby-trapped, containing tunnels or being used for weapons storage.⁵¹¹ “Operational necessity” also embraced the destruction of houses which obstructed visibility for the Israeli armed forces or had a “strategic advantage” for them.⁵¹² “In case of any doubt, takedown houses. You don’t need confirmation for anything, if you want”, were the instructions of one commander to his troops.⁵¹³

1001. The third phase of destruction of housing was no longer tied to the “operational necessities” of the ongoing military operations. It was in view of “the day after” the Israeli armed forces withdrew from Gaza. In the words of one Israeli soldier:

... then we were told there are houses to be demolished for the sake of “the day after”. The day after is actually a thought that obviously we’re going in for a limited period of time which could be a week and it might also be a few months. But it’s not a longer span of time without defining what it is. And the rationale was that we want to come out with the area remaining sterile as far as we’re concerned. And the best way to do this is by razing. That way we have good firing capacity, good visibility for observation, we can see anything, we control a very large part of the area and very effectively. This was the meaning of demolition for the sake of the day after. In practical terms this meant taking a house that is not implicated in any way, that its single sin is the fact that it is situated on top of a hill in the Gaza Strip.⁵¹⁴

1002. Satellite imagery provided by UNOSAT at the Mission’s request is consistent with the soldiers’ testimonies. It shows, for instance, that 65 per cent of the destruction/damage of buildings in Rafah was caused by airstrikes between 11 and 18 January. By contrast, 54 per cent of the destruction/damage in Izbet Abd Rabbo (east Gaza) occurred between 6 and 10 January as the Israeli troops advanced into the city.⁵¹⁵

1003. The UNOSAT reports on the destruction of buildings in al-Samouni neighbourhood and al-Atatra, two areas that suffered particularly heavy destruction of civilian housing and other buildings, show that most were destroyed during the last three days of the Israeli armed forces’ presence on the ground in Gaza. In al-Samouni, out of 114 severely damaged or completely destroyed buildings, 60 were destroyed between 27 December 2008 and 10 January 2009 (i.e. the rockets and machine guns are fired against a house where IDF soldiers took up positions in the Ezvet Abd Rabbo region in the eastern sector of Jabalya” (p. 12).

⁵¹¹ Soldiers’ Testimonies..., pp. 26, 35, 44, 56, 59, 61 (“Sometimes you know the house is empty. You know as far as you can know. Now if the house disrupts your defence line, you take it down with a tank or a bulldozer. We took an eight-storey house and the instruction was not to enter any doorway because it would be booby-trapped.”), and 66 (“we were to raze as much as possible of the area. Such razing is a euphemism for intentional, systematic destruction, enabling total visibility. Razing was meant to give us the advantage of full control over fire and field of view, to see exactly what was happening throughout the zone. So that no one could hide anything from us.”).

⁵¹² Ibid., pp. 12, 61, 100 and 101.

⁵¹³ Ibid., p. 56.

⁵¹⁴ Ibid., p. 66. See also p. 69.

⁵¹⁵ UNOSAT satellite imagery, pp. 14 ff.

air phase and the advance of the ground invasion), only 4 between 10 and 16 January and 50 between 16 and 19 January 2009.⁵¹⁶ Similarly, in al-Atatra, out of 94 severely damaged or completely destroyed buildings, 36 were destroyed between 27 December 2008 and 10 January 2009, only 6 between 10 and 16 January, and 52 between 16 and 19 January 2009.⁵¹⁷

1004. These figures confirm that a first phase of extensive destruction of housing for the “operational necessity” of the advancing Israeli forces in these areas was followed by a period of relative idleness on the part of the Israeli bulldozers and explosives engineers. But during the last three days, aware of their imminent withdrawal, the Israeli armed forces engaged in another wave of systematic destruction of civilian buildings.⁵¹⁸

3. Legal findings

1005. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission finds that the houses of the families of Saleh Hajaj, of Wa’el al-Samouni, of Khalid Abd Rabbo and of Muhammad Fouad Abu Askar were subjected to direct attacks in spite of their unmistakably civilian nature. They did not present any apparent threat to the Israeli armed forces. These attacks violated the principle of distinction in customary international humanitarian law as codified in article 52 of Additional Protocol I.

1006. Considering the facts it has gathered on the destruction of these houses from the soldiers’ testimonies and the UNOSAT report, the Mission finds that the conduct of the Israeli armed forces in these cases amounted to the grave breach of “extensive destruction... of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly” under article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

1007. Article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights requires State parties to “recognize the right of everyone to an adequate standard of living for himself and his family, including adequate... housing”. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission finds that the Israeli armed forces violated the right to adequate housing of the families concerned.

E. Analysis of the pattern of widespread destruction of economic and infrastructural targets

1008. The Mission interviewed Mr. Amr Hamad, the Deputy General-Secretary of the Palestinian Federation of Industries, on three separate occasions, including at the public hearings in Gaza. The Mission also met a number of businessmen involved in fishing, strawberry farming, construction, including concrete and cement production and packaging, food and drinks production, car mechanics and repairs, livestock farming and refrigeration. While much of the information provided to the Mission focused on the effect of the restrictions Israel had imposed on the Gaza Strip for a considerable time before 27 December 2008, significant information was also provided on the effect of the attacks during the Israeli military operations in Gaza.

⁵¹⁶ UNOSAT report, p. 17.

⁵¹⁷ Ibid., pp. 20–21.

⁵¹⁸ The Mission finally notes that, in its formal submission, Housing and Land Rights Network – Habitat International Coalition provides a detailed historical account of the Israeli army practices of targeting civilian homes and generating displaced populations that suggests a pattern that is not unique to the military operation in Gaza of December 2008 – January 2009, but “consistent over time and across borders”.

1009. Mr. Amr Hamad indicated that 324 factories had been destroyed during the Israeli military operations at a cost of 40,000 jobs. In its detailed written report on the impact of the Israeli military activities, the Palestinian Federation of Industries points out that 200 businesses and factories were destroyed in Gaza City, 101 in northern Gaza and 20 in southern Gaza. Of the total 324 premises damaged, almost 30 per cent were linked to the metals and engineering sector, over 20 per cent to construction and 16 per cent to furniture businesses. Other sectors with significant losses were aluminium, food, sewing textiles, chemicals and cosmetics, plastics and rubber, paper and carton, and handicrafts. The Federation states that more than half were totally destroyed.

1010. The Federation emphasized that “the Gaza Strip’s most crucial industries, and ones which require the greatest investment, were most severely hit”.⁵¹⁹ Eleven of the 324 premises struck by the Israeli armed forces were linked to the food industry and the losses incurred amount to some US$ 37 million, i.e. over one third of all the losses to the industrial sector. Similarly, while the construction sector suffered 69 of the 324 strikes, this represented just under 30 per cent of the total damage. The report notes that the majority of the losses resulting from the strikes on the 324 premises related to machinery costs (50 per cent), while just over a quarter relate to the buildings themselves.

1011. The Mission found the information provided by Mr. Hamad, as well as the report produced by the Palestinian Federation of Industries, to be credible and reliable. The Mission discussed and was satisfied by the methodology used in compiling the report, which was produced with the support of the Konrad Adenauer Foundation. The Mission also found that the testimony of businessmen whose premises had been struck or destroyed by the Israeli armed forces corroborate information provided by Mr. Hamad and the Palestinian Federation of Industries.

1. Construction industry

1012. One of the incidents Mr. Hamad referred to at the public hearing relates to the destruction of the only cement-packaging plant in Gaza. The Mission also interviewed its owner, Mr. Atta Abu Jubbah.⁵²⁰ According to the reconstruction of the events, the Israeli armed forces began striking the plant from the air, damaging it significantly. Later ground forces -- equipped with bulldozers and tanks -- moved in and used mines and explosives to destroy the silo that used to contain 4,000 tons of cement. Helicopters launched rockets to destroy the main manufacturing line and fired holes into the cement containers. Bulldozers were used to destroy the factory walls. Over four days the factory was systematically destroyed. The Mission spoke with a number of other witnesses able to verify this account and considers it to be reliable. Among those witnesses was a civil engineer who inspected the site and confirmed that certain aspects of the destruction could have been achieved only by placing explosives inside the building. The silo had not been entirely destroyed in the aerial attacks, so explosives were attached to its supporting columns.

⁵¹⁹ Page 14 of the Report of the Palestinian Federation of Industries.

⁵²⁰ Mission interview with Mr. Atta Abu Jubbah, Gaza, 17 June 2009.

1013. The plant was an important part of Gaza's construction industry. It produced cement in bags, selling 200 tons per day with a profit of US$ 15 per ton. The company is valued at some US$ 12 million. As mentioned above, the owner's house was also destroyed by rocket fire.

1014. The owner is one of fewer than 100 businessmen who are in possession of the Businessman Card issued by Israel. The Mission notes that the plant was not destroyed during the aerial phase but was systematically reduced to rubble in a concerted effort over several days at the end of the military operations.

1015. The destruction of Mr. Atta Abu Jubbah's plant forms part of what appears to have been a very deliberate strategy of attacking the construction industry. The Palestinian Federation of Industries also provides detail on the systematic and total destruction of the Abu Eida factories for ready-mix concrete. They were established in 1993. Nineteen of the 27 concrete factories were reported to have been destroyed, representing 85 per cent of the productive capacity.

1016. The ability to produce and supply concrete in a context where external supplies are entirely controlled by Israel is a matter not only of economic importance but arguably one of human necessity to satisfy the basic need for shelter. Even if the population can get by in makeshift accommodation or by living in cramped conditions with their extended families, the capacity to repair the massive damage done to buildings without internally produced concrete is severely reduced. To the extent that concrete is allowed to enter at all, it is significantly more expensive than domestically produced concrete.

1017. There appears to have been no military reason or justification for destroying the factory. This conclusion is borne out by the long established trading history of the owners and their recognition through the Businessman Cards.

2. Destruction of the remaining food industry

1018. As already reported, more than a third of all egg factories were destroyed by the Israeli armed forces. Other testimonies, for example that of the Mayor of al-Atatra,⁵²¹ who referred to the destruction of his sister's chicken farms, indicated that a substantial part of the chicken farming industry appears to have been deliberately and systematically destroyed.

1019. The Mission also notes the destruction of the al-Wadiyah Group's factories. The al-Wadiyah Group employed some 170 people, had been in business since 1954 and produced a variety of food and drinks. Dr. al-Wadiyah presented a detailed account of its activities and losses to the Mission.⁵²²

⁵²¹ Mission interview with Muhammad Husein al-Atar, Mayor of al-Atatra, 3 June 2009.

⁵²² Mission interview with Dr. Yasser al-Wadia, 3 June 2009.

1020. The Mission found no reason to believe that the premises of the flour mill, chicken farms and food-processing plants that were destroyed had been used for purposes that would render them in any way military objectives.

1021. The Mission also reviewed satellite images showing significant destruction of greenhouses throughout Gaza.⁵²³ In total, it is estimated that over 30 hectares of greenhouses were demolished; 11.2 hectares were destroyed in Gaza City and 9.5 hectares in north Gaza. The Mission found that the large-scale and systematic destruction of greenhouses was not justified by any possible military objective.

3. Destruction of water installations

1022. Finally, in relation to the supply and treatment of water, the Mission analysed a limited number of cases. The strikes on the al-Sheikh Ejlin plant and on the Namar water wells have been described in some detail. The Mission also spoke at length with Mr. Munther Shublaq, who was responsible for the CMWU Damage Assessment Report. That report indicates that all types of water installations appeared to have been damaged to some extent during the Israeli operations, but notes especially that in some areas, particularly Beit Lahia, Jabaliyah, Beit Hanoun, part of Zeytoun, south of Rafah and the villages in the east, buildings, water and wastewater infrastructure and other facilities have been totally destroyed. “Those areas need a complete water and wastewater infrastructure which may require re-designing the networks based on the new population in the area”.⁵²⁴

1023. Mr. Munther Shublaq noted that, although a number of wells had been struck, the worst effects had been as a result of the damage to water-treatment plants and sewage pipes. The Mission heard a number of reports that indicated that the strikes on plants, pipes, wells and tanks had put considerable pressure on the sanitation and water-supply system.

1024. The Palestinian Authority claimed that 5,708 roof water storage tanks were destroyed, but it is not clear how many of these were on the roofs of the 4,036 houses that the Palestinian Authority stated were destroyed.

1025. The Mission found that the targeting of water-related installations was not justified by any possible military objective.

4. Conclusions

1026. The facts ascertained by the Mission indicate that there was a deliberate and systematic policy on the part of the Israeli armed forces to target industrial sites and water installations. In a number of testimonies given to Breaking the Silence, Israeli soldiers have described in detail the way in which what is at one point euphemistically referred to as “infrastructure work” was carried out. The deployment of bulldozers for systematic destruction is graphically recounted. Soldiers confirm in considerable detail information provided to the Mission by witnesses.⁵²⁵

⁵²³ UNOSAT report, pp. 23–27. See also chapter XVII.

⁵²⁴ “Damage assessment report...”, p. 8.

1027. The Mission refers to chapter XVII, where it found that the systematic destruction of food production, water services and construction industries was related to the overall policy of disproportionate destruction of a significant part of Gaza's infrastructure.

5. General legal findings

1028. The Mission has made detailed findings in relation to each of the incidents set out above. However, given the nature of the systematic attacks on the food, water and infrastructure provision in Gaza during the military operations, the Mission also believes it is important to highlight the issue of State responsibility and the liability of Israel in relation to the internationally wrongful acts committed.

1029. While the element of fault is controversial in the law of State responsibility, the Mission has found that in all of the cases described above both the act and the consequence were intended.

1030. Israel had a number of duties in respect of its actions during the military operations. These included the general obligation reflected in article 52 of Additional Protocol I to ensure that civilian objects are not the objects of attack and to ensure the protection of objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population. In addition, the customary norms of international law contained in article 54 (2) of Additional Protocol I require States not to destroy objects indispensable to the survival of the population.

1031. Israel displayed a premeditated determination to achieve the objective of destruction. It is, therefore, responsible for the internationally wrongful acts it perpetrated in breach of the duties specified above.

XIV. THE USE OF PALESTINIAN CIVILIANS AS HUMAN SHIELDS

1032. The Mission received allegations that in two areas in north Gaza Israeli troops used Palestinian men as human shields whilst conducting house searches. The Palestinian men were allegedly forced to enter houses at gunpoint in front of or, in one case, instead of soldiers. The Mission investigated four cases. One incident took place in the Izbet Abd Rabbo neighbourhood and another in al-Salam neighbourhood, both east of Jabaliyah, close to the border with Israel. Two incidents took place in al-Israa neighbourhood, west of Beit Lahia. The Mission visited each of the locations and interviewed a number of witnesses. In each case, the Mission found the allegations to be credible.

⁵²⁵ See Soldiers' Testimonies..., testimony 17 on "infrastructure work" and the razing of orchards, p. 44 and testimony 29, p. 66. Note also testimony 46 on the practice of D-9 armoured bulldozers effectively working around the clock, largely destroying orchards (p. 100). The Mission notes that an issue raised on several occasions was the idea of the "day after" – the circumstances that Israel would find after finishing the military operations in terms of addressing future attacks from Gaza. Even if this could be conceived of as a longer-term strategic military goal, it is not a legitimate one in these circumstances. It does not meet the appropriate test for military advantage in the pursuit of certain objectives. Nor does it meet the test of military necessity referred to in the grave breaches provisions. See also chapter XVI.

A. The case of Majdi Abd Rabbo

1033. To investigate this case, the Mission visited Izbat Abd Rabbo. The Mission interviewed Mr. Majdi Abd Rabbo⁵²⁶ and several of his neighbours.⁵²⁷ It also obtained two sworn statements Majdi Abd Rabbo had given to two NGOs.

1034. Majdi Abd Rabbo, a man aged 39 at the time of the incident, is married and the father of five children aged between 16 years and 14 months. He is an intelligence officer of the Palestinian Authority. He lived with his family in a house on the main street of Izbat Abd Rabbo, al-Quds Street, which in this section is commonly known as Izbat Abd Rabbo Street. His family house stood next to Salah ad-Din mosque. The home of the family of Khalid and Kawthar Abd Rabbo (see chap. XI) is less than 500 metres east of the Majdi Abd Rabbo family home.

1035. Majdi Abd Rabbo recounted that, at around 9.30 a.m. on 5 January 2009, he heard loud banging on the outer door of the house. He asked who was at the door and someone responded in Arabic, ordering him to open the door. He opened the door and saw in front of him a handcuffed Palestinian man, whom he later found out to be HS/07, aged 20. A group of around 15 Israeli soldiers stood behind HS/07. One of the soldiers was holding a weapon to HS/07's head. The soldiers pushed HS/07 to one side and four soldiers pointed their weapons at Majdi Abd Rabbo. They ordered him to undress down to his underwear. He was then told to dress again and they pushed him into the house.

1036. The soldiers ordered him to call his children one by one. He started with his eldest son, aged 16, who was ordered by the soldiers to strip naked. The same process was followed with the two other sons, aged nine and eight. He then called his daughter, aged 14, who was told to press her clothes to her body and turn around. His wife, who was holding their baby daughter, was also told to press her clothes to her body, and then to take the baby's trousers off.

1037. Majdi Abd Rabbo stated that the soldiers then forced him to walk in front of them as they searched the house, room by room, holding a firearm to his head. They questioned him about the house behind his. He told them that the house was empty and the owner, HS/08, had been absent for four years working in the Sudan. There was a small gap between the two houses, but they were joined at the roof. The soldiers gave him a sledgehammer, the kind used to break stones, and told him to break a hole through the dividing wall into HS/08's house. This took around 15 minutes.

1038. From the roof, the soldiers entered HS/08's house, pushing Majdi Abd Rabbo ahead of them down the stairs while they watched over his shoulders. They had descended only a few steps, however, when the soldiers apparently detected some movement in the house, started ⁵²⁶ Mission interview with Majdi Abd Rabbo.

⁵²⁷ Mission interviews with Muhammad Muhammad Abd Rabbo, Muhammad 'Aish Muhammad Abd Rabbo, witness HS/11 and Iyad Abd Rabbo.

shouting, pulled Majdi Abd Rabbo back and rushed back into his house over the roof. Majdi Abd Rabbo heard some gun shots.

1039. The soldiers ran out into the street, forcing Majdi Abd Rabbo and HS/07 with them while they were shooting. Both were taken into the adjacent mosque, where there were a large number of soldiers with military equipment. They were forced to sit down and then handcuffed.

1040. The soldiers used the raised area of the mosque, from where the imam leads prayers, to fire at Majdi Abd Rabbo's house and the houses next to it. He shouted at the soldiers to stop, as his family was still in the house. A soldier told him to shut up or they would shoot him. The shooting continued for around 30 minutes. After a lull, the soldiers warned that there would be a huge explosion and, indeed, about three minutes later there was a huge explosion. The explosion was followed by intensive gunfire and artillery shells. Majdi Abd Rabbo could not identify the source of the explosion.⁵²⁸

1041. In the meantime, he had been forced to break a hole in the wall of the mosque on the south side and into the neighbouring house. He had then been interrogated about his knowledge of Hamas and the location of tunnels. Subsequently, he was taken and detained together with a group of neighbours, men and women, in another house in the neighbourhood (the HS/09 family home).

1042. When the shooting stopped, soldiers came to fetch him. He was taken to the road next to his house, to an empty area behind HS/08's house. He saw that HS/08's house and the entrance area of his house had been damaged. There were numerous soldiers standing next to the house, including some officers. He saw a senior officer talking to the soldiers who raided his house, and the officer then came to speak to him, through an Arabic-speaking soldier. The soldier said that they had killed the fighters inside the house and told him to go into the house and come back with their clothes and weapons. He protested, saying that he just wanted to find out if his family was safe. The officer told him to obey their orders if he wanted to see his family again. He refused to go, and was kicked and beaten by soldiers with their weapons until he gave in.

1043. He approached HS/08's house from the street. The entrance was destroyed and blocked by rubble. He went back to the officer and told him that he could not get in. The officer told him to go through the roof instead. He went into his own house, which he found empty, except for a soldier. This reinforced his anxiety about the fate of his family. At this point, there was no major damage to his house. He crossed the roof and went down the stairs into HS/08's house. He was scared that the fighters would shoot at him and shouted, "I am a Palestinian, a neighbour. I am being forced to come into this house." In a room at the bottom of the stairs he found three armed young men wearing military camouflage and headbands of al-Qassam Brigades. They pointed their weapons at him. He told them that the Israeli soldiers thought that they had been killed and had sent him to check. He said that he was helpless as the soldiers had taken his wife and children. The armed men told him that they had seen everything, and asked him to go back to the soldiers and tell them what he had seen.

⁵²⁸ Other sources clarify that HS/08's house had been bombed by Israeli aircraft which had been called in by the soldiers in the mosque. Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs, "The hidden dimension of Palestinian war casualties in operation 'cast lead': Hamas fire on Palestinian areas", p. 20; Soldiers' Testimonies..., p. 7 ("The [combat] helicopters fired anti-tank missiles" according to testimony 1, which in this part appears to repeat an account heard from other soldiers).

1044. He went back outside, again crossing over the roof of his house. As he approached the soldiers, they pointed their weapons at him and ordered him to stop, strip naked and turn around. After he dressed again, he told them what he had seen. Initially, the soldiers did not believe him. They asked how he knew that they were Hamas militants and he explained about their headbands. The soldiers asked about their weapons. He replied that they were carrying Kalashnikovs. The officer told him that, if he was lying, he would be shot dead.

1045. He was handcuffed and taken back to the HS/09 family house for detention. At around 3 p.m., he heard gunfire for around 30 minutes. The soldiers came back for him and took him to the same officer. This time he noticed different soldiers present with different military equipment. Through the translator, the officer told him that they had killed the militants, and told him to go in and bring back their bodies. Again he refused, saying “this is not my job, I don’t want to die.” He lied to them, saying that the three militants had told him that if he came back, they would kill him. The officer told him that, as they had already killed the militants, he should not worry. He added that they had fired two missiles into the house, which must have killed the militants. When he still resisted, he was beaten and kicked again, until he went into HS/08’s house via the roof again.

1046. He found the house very badly damaged. The bottom part of the stairs was missing. He again went in shouting, to alert the militants if they were still alive. He found them in the same room as before. Two were unharmed. The third was badly injured, covered in blood, with wounds to his shoulder and abdomen. They asked him what was going on outside and he told them that the area was fully occupied and the soldiers had taken numerous hostages, including his family.

1047. The wounded man gave him his name (HS/10) and asked him to tell his family what had happened. Majdi Abd Rabbo promised to do so if he survived and later did so. Another of the three told him to tell the Israeli officer that, if he was a real man, he would come to them himself.

1048. Majdi Abd Rabbo returned to the soldiers, who again forced him to strip naked before they approached him. He told the officer that two of the militants were unharmed. The officer swore at him and accused him of lying. Majdi Abd Rabbo then repeated the message from the militant, at which the officer and four other soldiers assaulted him with their weapons and insulted him.

1049. The officer asked Majdi Abd Rabbo for his identity card. He replied that it was in his house but gave him the ID card number. The officer checked the number via an electronic device. Three minutes later the officer asked him if it was true that he worked with the head of Palestinian Authority’s intelligence services, which he confirmed. The officer asked him if he was with Abu Mazen and a Fatah affiliate. He said he was.

1050. The soldiers brought Majdi Abd Rabbo a megaphone and told him to use it to call the militants. He initially refused but did so under threat. As instructed, he told the militants to surrender, that ICRC was present and they could hand themselves over. There was no response.

1051. By then, night had fallen. Majdi Abd Rabbo was again handcuffed and taken back to the house of the HS/09 family. Thirty to forty minutes later, he heard shooting and a huge explosion. Soldiers came to tell him that they had bombed HS/08's house and ordered him to go in again and check on the fighters.

1052. The Israeli armed forces had floodlit the area. Majdi Abd Rabbo found both his and HS/08's house very badly damaged. He could not use the roof of his house to enter HS/08's house, as it had collapsed. He went back to the soldiers, who again made him strip, this time to his underwear. He asked where his family was and said that he could not reach the fighters because of the damage to the houses. He accused the soldiers of destroying his house. The officer said that they had only hit HS/08's house. Majdi Abd Rabbo was then handcuffed. Until this time, he had been given no food or water, and it was very cold. After a while, his handcuffs were removed, he was told to dress and taken back to the HS/09 family house, to the room where he found that other people were being held. All the men and boys in this room were handcuffed and their ankles were tied. A soldier came with some drinking glasses and smashed them at the entrance to the room where they were being held. After smashing the glasses, he left again. Majdi Abd Rabbo had developed a severe headache. Another detainee, who spoke Hebrew, called a soldier to say that Majdi Abd Rabbo was sick and needed medicine. The soldier told him to keep quiet or he would be shot. A woman tied a scarf around Majdi Abd Rabbo's head to ease the pain.

1053. At around 7 a.m., Majdi Abd Rabbo was taken back to the soldiers outside. He was questioned about the number of fighters in the house. He confirmed that he had seen only three.

1054. Two young Palestinian men from the neighbourhood were brought over. A soldier gave them a camera and told them to go into the house and take photos of the fighters. The two tried to refuse, and were beaten and kicked. The soldier showed them how to use the camera and they went into HS/08's house through the damaged main entrance. About 10 minutes later, they came back with photos of the three fighters. Two appeared to be dead, under rubble. The third was also trapped by rubble but appeared to be alive and was still holding his firearm. A soldier showed Majdi Abd Rabbo the photos and asked if these were the same people. He confirmed they were.

1055. A soldier took the megaphone and told the fighters that they had 15 minutes to surrender, that the neighbourhood was under the control of the Israeli armed forces and that, if they did not surrender, they would hit the house with an air strike.

1056. Fifteen minutes later, a soldier came with a dog, which had electronic gear attached to its body and what looked like a camera on its head. Another soldier had a small laptop. The dog handler sent the dog into the house. A few minutes later, shots were heard and the dog came running out. It had been shot and subsequently died.

1057. At around 10.30 a.m. on 6 January 2009, a bulldozer arrived and started to level the house. The bulldozer moved from east to west, demolishing everything in its way. Majdi Abd Rabbo watched it demolish his own house and HS/08's house. He and the two young men were told to go back to the HS/09 house. They heard shooting.

1058. At around 3 p.m., he was taken back close to the site of his and HS/08's house. He told the Mission that he saw the bodies of the three fighters lying on the ground in the rubble of the house.

1059. The soldiers then forced him to enter other houses on the street as they searched them. All the houses were empty. The soldiers forced him to go into the house alone initially and, when he came out, sent in a dog to search the house. During the house searches he managed to find some water to drink, the first drink he had had for two days. At midnight, the soldiers took him back to the HS/09 family house.

1060. On 7 January, all the men and boys were taken from the HS/09 family house and transferred to the house of a cousin of Majdi Abd Rabbo's in the same neighbourhood. There were more than 100 men and boys, including members of his extended family, aged between 15 and 70. The women were being held elsewhere. Majdi Abd Rabbo's immediate family members were not there, and he learnt that no one had seen them. He remained extremely anxious about their safety.

1061. At around 11 p.m., the men and boys in that house were told that they were going to be released, and that they should all walk west towards Jabaliyah, without turning left or right, on threat of being shot. They found Izbat Abd Rabbo Street severely damaged. Majdi Abd Rabbo went to his sister's house in Jabaliyah, where he was reunited with his wife and children on 9 January 2009. His wife then told him that they had stayed for some hours in the house, during the first shooting on 5 January, and had then fled with a white flag to a neighbour's house.

1062. Majdi Abd Rabbo told the Mission that he and his family were traumatized by what had happened to them and did not know what to do now, having lost their home and all their possessions. His children were all suffering psychologically and performing poorly at school. Five months later, in June 2009, Majdi Abd Rabbo was still having nightmares.

1063. The Mission notes that his account to it implies that there were at least three other Palestinian men compelled by the Israeli armed forces to search houses. A journalist's account indicates that the author "spoke with eight residents of Izbat Abd Rabbo neighbourhood, who testified that they were made to accompany IDF soldiers on missions involving breaking into and searching houses [...]. The eight estimated that about 20 local people were made to carry out "escort and protection" missions of various kinds, [...], between January 5 and January 12."⁵²⁹

B. The case of Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa

1064. The Mission interviewed Mr. Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa and his wife,⁵³⁰ and visited al-Israa, the neighbourhood west of Beit Lahia, where his house is located.

1065. When hostilities started on 27 December 2008, Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa, aged 59, asked his family to leave the home and stayed behind alone. On 9 January 2009, after a day of shelling, the ground forces invaded the north-west of his neighbourhood. At around 0.05 a.m. on 5 January 2009, the Israeli armed forces stormed into his house. He was hiding under the staircase and screamed when they reached him, putting his hands in the air. The soldiers had torch lights on their rifles and helmets, and their faces were painted black.

⁵²⁹ Haaretz, "Gazans: IDF used us as 'human shields' during offensive", 28 March 2008, available at: <http://www.haaretz.com/hasen/spages/1065594.html>.

⁵³⁰ Mission interviews with Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa and his wife.

1066. At gunpoint, the soldiers ordered him to take off his clothes, which he did except for his underwear. They made him turn around and ordered him to dress again. By this time there were some 40 soldiers in the house. His hands were tied behind his back, his legs were tied and he was blindfolded. He was severely beaten. He was then taken to a neighbour's house. He told the soldiers that he had bad asthma, but they would not allow him to take his inhaler.

1067. In the neighbour's house, he was questioned by an Israeli officer about the whereabouts of Gilad Shalit and the location of Hamas tunnels and rocket launch sites. The soldiers threatened to blow up his house if he did not tell them. He insisted that he did not know the answers to their questions. He pleaded that he had worked in Israel for 30 years and had built hundreds of houses there. He speaks fluent Hebrew and communicated with the soldiers in Hebrew.

1068. After about 30 minutes, he was taken to a different location in the vicinity and made to sit down. After another 15 minutes, he was again made to walk to a different location. He was still blindfolded; the ties binding his legs had been loosened slightly, but walking was difficult. One of the soldiers was directing his footsteps while holding him at gunpoint.

1069. In a house that he subsequently recognized as that of a neighbour, one of the soldiers untied his legs and the blindfold. His hands remained tied. He saw a number of soldiers in the house and around 15 officers sitting in the living room. They had maps and radios in front of them. One of the officers (there were three stripes on the shoulder of his uniform) asked him to identify his house on the map, and then asked him about the location of tunnels and rocket launching sites. He answered that he did not know. He was blindfolded again but he could see a little through the blindfold.

1070. He was then taken out of the house and onto the road. As previously, he was held from behind, a weapon pressed against his back or the back of his head. Due to the damage to the roads caused by the tanks and other military equipment, walking was difficult. For about two hours he walked around as directed by the soldiers. They would stop and call: "Who is in the house?" They would then open fire, force Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa to go into the house while they were gathering behind him, and then leave the house again after the search. He was made to go into five houses in this way. They did not find anyone in any of the houses.

1071. Thereafter, they walked and stopped for about an hour without any shooting. Finally, he was ordered to sit down on the ground and covered with a blanket. He was held for two days at this location, which he identified to be near the American School in north Gaza, close to an Israeli armed forces' tank position. During the two days he was given neither food nor water.

1072. He was then transported, blindfolded, in what he believes was a tank, for about 90 minutes to another location which he believes was Netsalim (Nitzarim), where he was thrown on the ground. He was kept there for two days and nights in the open, during which time the soldiers refused to give him a blanket. During the two days he was again interrogated several times about the location of Hamas tunnels and rockets, and about Gilad Shalit's whereabouts. He was beaten and threatened with death if he did not provide the information.

1073. At around 5 p.m. on the second day he was taken in a closed vehicle, which he believes was a truck, to a detention centre inside Israel, which he heard a soldier refer to as Telmund. He was fingerprinted and taken to see a doctor, whom he told that he was suffering from acute asthma and severe pain from a back injury caused by the beating.⁵³¹ The doctor did not give him medication. He was placed in a cell, where he was again refused a blanket.

1074. He was interrogated again at the detention centre, this time by civilians and then transferred to another location, where he was held together with some 50 Arabs. After two days, he was taken to the Erez border crossing and told to walk back into Gaza. Soldiers shot around his feet and over his head as he walked. He managed to reach his sister's house, where he collapsed and was taken to al-Shifa hospital.

1075. When he returned to his house, he found it vandalized. When the Mission spoke to him, he was still traumatized from the treatment he had undergone at the hands of the Israeli armed forces.

C. The case of Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami

1076. Mr. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami was interviewed twice, at length, by the Mission. He also testified at the public hearing in Gaza on 30 June 2009.

1077. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami is a former civil servant, whose last position was as Assistant Foreign Minister. He resigned from the Ministry when Hamas took over Gaza and has not worked since. He, his wife and 15-year-old daughter lived in a house in the same neighbourhood west of Beit Lahia as Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa. The area was shelled during the initial air strikes of the Israeli campaign. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami's home was directly hit for the first time on 2 or 3 January 2009, according to him by tank shells and by missiles fired by Apache helicopters, which seriously damaged external and internal walls. Tanks came into the area on 3 or 4 January and initially were positioned around 500 metres north of his house.

1078. He stayed in the house with his wife and daughter. As he told the Mission, he had decided not to leave because of his father's experience of leaving his home in Israel and not being able to return. On an unspecified date during the first week of January, however, he decided that this was proving too difficult for his daughter. He called a taxi and his daughter moved to the house of an uncle in a safer area.

1079. On 9 January 2009, shelling of the area was particularly intensive. According to Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami, 10 tank shells hit his house. His wife received light injuries from shrapnel and broken glass. In the night of 9 to 10 January 2009, around midnight, soldiers made a violent entry into their home, where he and his wife were sheltering on the ground floor, ⁵³¹ The Mission was provided medical documentation supporting his statement that he suffered two fractured vertebrae as a result of the beating by Israeli soldiers. He now has to wear a corset to support his spine.

underneath the stairs. They threw a grenade into the entrance on the west side of the building and entered the house shooting.

1080. An officer ordered Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami to lift his robe (he was in nightclothes) and turn around. He then told Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami's wife to press her clothes close to her body and turn around. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami and his wife were then taken to a neighbouring house where soldiers took his identity card and checked his identity on a laptop computer. An officer interrogated him about the location of Hamas tunnels, rockets, Palestinian fighters and Gilad Shalit. He responded that he could not provide that information because he did not know, that he was previously a member of the Fatah administration. The soldier responded: "You are Hamas; Hamas killed all Fatah and others in Gaza, so you must be Hamas." Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami insisted that he was a civilian. The officer told him again that he had five minutes in which to give him information or he would be shot. Five minutes later, he again responded that he did not know anything about the questions asked.

1081. He was handcuffed with his hands in front of him and blindfolded. Two or three soldiers took him by the shoulders and forced him to walk in front of them. His wife tried to go with him but they pushed her back into the room. It was by now around 2 a.m. The soldiers took him up to the second floor of the building and threw him down. He landed on rubble and fainted. When he came to, he had severe pain in his right side and had difficulty breathing. He found out later that he had broken four ribs and he had severe bruising down his right leg. Four soldiers forced him to stand. He was moaning with the pain but did not want them to hear. It was raining and still dark. The soldiers pushed him against a wall and walked away from him. He thought that they were going to shoot him. He was still blindfolded.

1082. In the early morning hours, the soldiers took him and another man (whom he subsequently found out to be his neighbour Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa) and forced them to walk in front of them. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami was blindfolded and a gun was held to the back of his head. He thinks that there were around 25 soldiers behind him and the other Palestinian man. Having walked in this way for a while, both he and the other man were forced to enter several houses with the soldiers taking cover behind them. In Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami's recollection, on six or seven occasions the soldiers opened fire. They did not find anyone in any of the houses.

1083. After these house searches, the soldiers, Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami and Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa walked north towards a place called Dogit, a former settlement. He could hear the movement of tanks and see tank positions. Both men were forced to sit on the ground. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami had his hands handcuffed in front; the other man had his hands handcuffed behind him. It was still raining, very cold, and Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami's ribs and leg were very stiff and painful. They were left there without food, water or blankets until morning. At around 10 a.m., soldiers took Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa for interrogation.

1084. During that and the following day, Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrami was also interrogated, by a senior officer. On the second day, he was taken to the edge of the camp and told to walk back south into Gaza City. He was able to reach the outskirts of the city and was helped by a stranger to reach a family member's house, from where he was taken to al-Shifa hospital.

1085. On returning to his house, he found it ransacked and vandalized. He recounted that many items of value had been stolen, including jewellery and electronic equipment.

D. The case of AD/03

1086. The summary of AD/03's case is based on his interview by the Mission. His case is also discussed in chapter XV, which gives more details on his case.

1087. AD/03 is a resident of al-Salam neighbourhood, located east of Jabaliyah, close to the eastern border with Israel. On 8 January, at around noon, the Israeli armed forces made an announcement ordering all residents of the area to evacuate their homes and come out in the street. The men were separated from the women and children, the men being told to line up against a wall. They were told to lift their shirts and to strip to their underwear. They remained in that position, stripped and lined up against the wall for approximately 15 minutes. The women and children were told to go to Jabaliyah. Shortly afterwards, AD/03 and three others (his brother, a cousin and an unknown man) were made to lie on the ground, were blindfolded and their hands were tied behind their backs with plastic strips. They were detained overnight in a house, in a room together with three men who identified themselves as residents of Izbet Abd Rabbo. The next morning, on 9 January, their blindfolds were removed and the seven men were interrogated.

1088. On the second day of detention, the Israeli armed forces began to use a number of the detainees as human shields. At this point the detainees had been without food and without sleep for a day. There were constant death threats and insults. To carry out house searches, the Israelis took off AD/03's blindfold but he remained handcuffed. He was forced to walk in front of the soldiers and told that, if he saw someone in the house but failed to tell the Israeli soldiers, he would be killed. He was instructed to search each room in each house cupboard by cupboard. After one house was completed, he was taken to another house with a gun pressed against his head and told to carry out the same search there. He was punched, slapped and insulted throughout the process. AD/03 indicates that he was forced to do this twice while the group was held in this house for eight days. Others were also required to do it. On the first occasion he was forced to carry out searches in three houses and on the second occasion in four houses. AD/03 estimates that each time he was involved in searches for between one hour and one and a half hours. At no point did he come across any explosive devices or armed group members.

E. Denial of the allegations by the Israeli armed forces

1089. Reacting to reports of the use of civilian men as human shields in Izbet Abd Rabbo, the Israeli armed forces' Spokesperson's Unit told an Israeli journalist:

The IDF is a moral army and its soldiers operate according to the spirit and values of the IDF, and we suggest a thorough examination of the allegations of Palestinian elements with vested interests. The IDF troops were instructed unequivocally not to make use of the civilian population within the combat framework for any purpose whatsoever, certainly not as "human shields."

Following an examination with the commanders of the forces that were in the area in question, no evidence was found of the cases mentioned. Anyone who tries to accuse the IDF of actions of this kind creates a mistaken and misleading impression of the IDF and its fighters, who operate according to moral criteria and international law.⁵³²

F. Factual findings

1090. The Mission found the foregoing witnesses to be credible and reliable. It has no reason to doubt the veracity of their accounts and found that the different stories serve to support the allegation that Palestinians were used as human shields.

1091. The Mission notes in particular that Mr. Majdi Abd Rabbo has told the story of his experience from 5 to 7 January 2009 to several NGOs, to several journalists and to the Mission without any material inconsistencies. There are some minor inconsistencies, which are not, in the opinion of the Mission, sufficiently weighty to cast doubt on the general reliability of Majdi Abd Rabbo. There are also, not surprisingly, some elements of the long account which appear in some versions and not in others. The Mission finds that these inconsistencies do not undermine the credibility of Majdi Abd Rabbo's account.

1092. The Mission further notes that one of the Israeli soldiers interviewed by the NGO Breaking the Silence recounts the case of Majdi Abd Rabbo. The soldier describes the case in great detail and mentions having personally met Majdi Abd Rabbo.⁵³³ Finally, the Mission notes that the submission it has received from the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs, while not containing a summary of Majdi Abd Rabbo's role in the incident in which the three Palestinian fighters were killed, also refers to the incident.⁵³⁴

⁵³² "Gazans: IDF used us as 'human shields' during offensive".

⁵³³ The Mission notes, however, that the soldier does not appear to have been a direct witness to the incident, but rather heard it from others and subsequently met Majdi Abd Rabbo. Soldiers' Testimonies..., pp. 7-8:

"Testimony 1 [...] In one case, our men tried to get them to come out, then they opened fire, fired some anti-tank missiles at the house and at some point brought in a D-9, bulldozer, and combat helicopters. There were three armed men inside. The helicopters fired anti-tank missiles and again the neighbour was sent in. At first he told them that nothing had happened to them yet, they were still in there. Again helicopters were summoned and fired, I don't know at what stage of escalation (in the use of force). The neighbour was sent in once again. He said that two were dead and one was still alive, so a D-9 was brought in and started demolishing the house over him until the neighbour went in, the last armed man came out and was caught and passed on to the Shabak. [...] [Some civilians] were made to smash walls with 5-kilo sledgehammers. There was a wall around a yard where the force didn't want to use the gate, it needed an alternative opening for fear of booby-traps or any other device. So the "Johnnies" themselves were required to bang open another hole with a sledgehammer. Talking of such things, by the way, there was a story published by Amira Hass in Haaretz daily newspaper, about Jebalya where a guy tells exactly the same thing. It's the guy who was sent. I saw him afterwards, the guy who was made to go into that house three times. He also told us about being given sledgehammers to break walls."

The newspaper article referred to by this testimony is "Gazans: IDF used us as 'human shields' during offensive". The Mission notes that the soldier who gave testimony 1 states that one of the three Palestinian combatants was arrested, while Majdi Abd Rabbo's testimony is that he saw all three of them dead.

⁵³⁴ "The hidden dimension..." p. 20. This submission is a "war diary" pieced together "from detailed data that both Hamas and its Izz ad-Din Qassam Brigades have published." That this incident and the story of Majdi Abd Rabbo are the same is corroborated by comparing the three names of the killed Palestinian combatants mentioned in both accounts (one name is identical, the second very similar).

1093. In more general terms, the Mission notes that the statements of the men used as human shields by the Israeli armed forces during house searches are corroborated by statements made by Israeli soldiers to the NGO Breaking the Silence. The soldier providing testimony 1 speaks of the “Johnnie procedure”: “It was the first week of the war, fighting was intense, there were explosive charges to expose, tunnels in open spaces and armed men inside houses. [...] Close in on each house. The method used has a new name now – no longer 'neighbour procedure.' Now people are called 'Johnnie.' They're Palestinian civilians, and they're called Johnnies [...] To every house we close in on, we send the neighbour in, 'the Johnnie,' and if there are armed men inside, we start, like working the 'pressure cooker' in the West Bank.” This soldier then mentions that some commanders were “bothered” by the fact that “civilians were used to a greater extent than just sending them into houses.” A second soldier interviewed by Breaking the Silence, testimony 17, appears to have discussed the “Johnnie procedure” at length, but his testimony was censored or otherwise cut in that respect, so that we can only read: “They [civilians found in houses] were used as ‘Johnnies’ (at a different point in the interview the witness described the ‘Johnnie’ procedure, using Palestinian civilians as human shields during house searches), and then released, and we’re finding them in later searches.”⁵³⁵

1094. The Mission thus finds that while these testimonies do not confirm the details of the specific cases it investigated, they strongly support the general allegation that the Israeli armed forces engaged in the practice of compelling Palestinian civilians to accompany them on house searches.

1095. In conclusion, from the facts it gathered, the Mission finds that Messrs. Majdi Abd Rabbo, Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa, Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrani and AD/03 were captured by the Israeli armed forces while they were in their homes, in some cases together with their families, and were then forced at gunpoint to search houses together with the Israeli armed forces. The Mission also finds on the basis of those facts that they were all subject to cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment during their captivity.

G. Legal findings

1096. Several provisions of international humanitarian law prohibit the practice of using civilian men captured by the armed forces to search houses in which the invading army suspects the risk of ambushes or booby traps.

1097. This practice constitutes the use of involuntary human shields and is a violation of article 28 of the Fourth Geneva Convention which reads: “The presence of a protected person may not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations.” Article 51, paragraph 7, of Additional Protocol I (set out in full in chapter VIII above) adds that “the presence or movements of the civilian population or individual civilians shall not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations, in particular in attempts to shield military objectives from attacks or to shield, favour or impede military operations. The Parties to the conflict shall not direct the movement of the civilian population or individual civilians in order to attempt to shield military objectives from attacks or to shield military operations.” The prohibition of the use of human shields also has customary law status (rule 97 of the ICRC rules of customary humanitarian law⁵³⁶), both in international and in non-international armed conflict. The Mission, therefore, finds that the Israeli armed forces have violated article 28 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and the prohibition under customary international law that the civilian population as such will not be the object of attacks, as reflected in article 51 (2) of Additional Protocol I.

⁵³⁵ Soldiers’ Testimonies..., pp. 7–8 and 46. A third soldier recounts discussing the use of Palestinian civilians with his unit commander. The unit commander denied knowing about this, but the soldier concludes: “This procedure of using civilians exists, he knows about this. ‘Neighbour procedure’ is an official army procedure; it’s just not called that any longer. The brigade commander was on the ground the whole time. He even came to visit us one day. An official army procedure means army instructions.” Ibid., p. 107.

1098. In 2002, the Israeli Supreme Court sitting as the High Court of Justice was seized of a case regarding the use of a very similar practice in the West Bank, at the time known as the “neighbour procedure”. The petitioners, seven Israeli and Palestinian human rights organizations, described cases in which “the IDF forced Palestinian residents to walk through and scan buildings suspected to be booby-trapped, and in which it ordered them to enter certain areas before the combat forces, in order to find wanted persons there; also described are cases in which the army used residents as a “human shield” which accompanied the combat forces, to serve as a shield against attack on those forces. [...] Further described were cases in which local residents were asked about the presence of wanted persons and weapons, under threat of bodily injury or death, should the questions go unanswered.”⁵³⁷ In other words, the petitioners described incidents analogous to those investigated by the Mission in Gaza.

1099. In their response to the petition, the Israeli armed forces and other respondents “clarified unequivocally that they recognize that the forces operating in the field are categorically forbidden from using Palestinian residents as a ‘live shield’ or as ‘hostages’, and that involving local residents in any activity exposing them to danger to life or limb is prohibited.”⁵³⁸ The Israeli armed forces also submitted to the High Court of Justice a directive regarding the use of the so-called “early warning” procedure. This procedure relied on the allegedly exclusively voluntary cooperation of Palestinian civilians to give wanted persons a warning to turn themselves in. The directive states that “it is strictly forbidden to use the local resident in military missions (e.g. locating explosive charges, intelligence gathering).” It also provides “it is strictly forbidden to use a local resident as a ‘live shield’ against attack. Thus, during the advance of the force, accompanied by the local resident, the latter is not to be positioned at the head of the force.”⁵³⁹

1100. As a result of these assurances given by the Israeli armed forces, the High Court of Justice did not rule on the so-called neighbour procedure, but on the “early warning” procedure. In its ruling, it found that the “early warning” procedure was also “at odds with international law” and ⁵³⁶ Customary International Humanitarian Law..., p. 337. The Israeli Government recognizes the customary nature of the principle enshrined in Additional Protocol I, article 51 (7) (“The operation in Gaza...”, para. 151).

⁵³⁷ Adalah Legal Centre for Arab Minority Rights in Israel et al. v. Commander of the Central Region et al., case No. 3799/02, Judgement of 23 June 2005.

⁵³⁸ Ibid., Opinion Justice D. Beinisch.

⁵³⁹ Ibid., para. 7.

ordered the armed forces to desist from any further use of the procedure.⁵⁴⁰ In reaching this outcome, Supreme Court President A. Barak left no doubt that he considered the “neighbour procedure” to violate article 28 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. He quotes approvingly from J. Pictet’s Commentary to the Fourth Geneva Convention, in which it is stated that “such practices [the use of human shields], the object of which is to divert enemy fire, have rightly been condemned as cruel and barbaric”.

1101. When reporting on its military operations in Gaza, the Israeli Government stated:

IDF’s rules of engagement strictly prohibit the use of civilians as human shields. Moreover, the Israel Supreme Court has ruled that use of civilians in any capacity for the purpose of military operations is unlawful, including the use of civilians to call terrorists hiding in buildings. Following this judgement, this latter practice has also been proscribed by IDF orders. The IDF is committed to enforcing this prohibition.

The IDF took a variety of measures to teach and instil awareness of these rules of engagement in commanders and soldiers.⁵⁴¹

The Israeli Government does not, however, in any way mention the very specific allegations of use of Palestinian civilians as human shields in January 2009 which have been in the public domain since they were published in an Israeli newspaper in March 2009⁵⁴² and in NGO reports from April 2009 onwards, and which have been brought to the attention of the Attorney-General of Israel in letters by Israeli NGOs.

1102. The Mission further finds from the facts available to it that the conduct of the Israeli armed forces in the cases above violates article 31 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. This provision dictates that “no physical or moral coercion shall be exercised against protected persons, in particular to obtain information from them or from third parties.” The ICRC Commentary notes that “article 31 prohibits coercion for any purpose or reason and the obtaining of information is only given as an example. Thus, the custom, hitherto accepted in practice but disputed in theory, that an invasion army may force the inhabitants of an occupied territory to serve as ‘guides’ is now forbidden.”⁵⁴³

1103. The questioning of civilians under threat of death or injury by Israeli soldiers, who demanded information about Hamas and the location of Palestinian combatants and tunnels, also constitutes a violation of article 31. The Mission has no information on cases in which such a threat was actually followed by the killing of a captured civilian. However, Messrs. Majdi Abd Rabbo, Abbas Ahmad Ibrahim Halawa and Mahmoud Abd Rabbo al-Ajrmi, all claim that they were threatened with execution. Majdi Abd Rabbo also claimed that he was kicked and beaten by soldiers until he gave in to their request to enter the house of HS/08. Mahmoud Abd Rabbo

⁵⁴⁰ Ibid., para. 25.

⁵⁴¹ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 227-228.

⁵⁴² “Gazans: IDF used us as ‘human shields’ during offensive”.

⁵⁴³ p. 220.

al-Ajrami was thrown from the second floor of his house after refusing to provide information to Israeli soldiers, resulting in several broken ribs.

1104. The use of the “neighbour procedure”, now apparently renamed “Johnnie procedure”, constitutes a violation of fundamental human rights norms. It puts the right to life of the civilians concerned, protected in article 6 of ICCPR, at risk in an arbitrary and unlawful way. The anguish to which civilians who, blindfolded and handcuffed, are forced at gunpoint to enter houses which – this is the reason they are forced to enter the houses – might be booby-trapped or harbour combatants who might open fire on them, can only be described as cruel and inhuman treatment prohibited by article 7 of ICCPR. Furthermore, the witnesses were all deprived of liberty and the security of their person violated. This also constitute a violation of article 9 of ICCPR. The Mission must state that numerous civilians who came into contact with the Israeli armed forces during the military operation recounted shocking stories of humiliation that would certainly be in stark contravention of the principle of respect for human dignity, which forms the core of all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

1105. The Mission also finds that the intentional use as human shields of those whose accounts are presented above qualifies as inhuman treatment of and wilfully causing great suffering to protected persons under the Fourth Geneva Convention. As such, the Mission considers the conduct of the Israeli armed forces in relation to such persons to amount to grave breaches of the said Convention. The use of human shields is also a war crime under article 8 (2) (b) (xxiii) of the Rome Statute.

1106. Finally, the Mission finds that obliging Majdi Abd Rabbo to use a megaphone to call on the men trapped in the house behind his to surrender, on the grounds that ICRC was present and they could safely hand themselves over, qualifies as a violation of article 37 of Additional Protocol I of the Geneva Conventions, which prohibits perfidy. At the time, the Izbet Abd Rabbo area was a closed military zone into which no one, including ICRC, was permitted to enter. Perfidy is defined by article 37 as “acts inviting the confidence of an adversary to lead him to believe that he is entitled to, or is obliged to accord, protection under the rules of international law applicable in armed conflict, with intent to betray that confidence”. Acts amounting to perfidy resulting in death or serious personal injury are also a war crime under article 8 (2) (b) (vii) of the Rome Statute.

XV. DEPRIVATION OF LIBERTY: GAZANS DETAINED DURING THE ISRAELI MILITARY OPERATIONS OF 27 DECEMBER 2008 TO 18 JANUARY 2009

1107. According to information that the Mission received, hundreds of Gazans, including women and children, were detained by the Israeli armed forces during the military operations. Their exact number is not known. Some were held for hours or days in homes, other buildings or sandpits in the Gaza Strip; others were taken into detention in Israel, either immediately or after an initial period of detention in the Gaza Strip. A number of people were held in army bases (e.g. Sde Teiman⁵⁴⁴), others were held in prison, and some released detainees do not know where they were held. Some detainees have reported abuse during detention, including beatings, and being kept in unsanitary conditions, without any or with only inadequate food or toilet facilities. Some released persons have reported that they were used as human shields during their detention, for example, forced to walk in front of soldiers and enter buildings ahead of soldiers.⁵⁴⁵

⁵⁴⁴ Correspondence with HaMoked, 22 July 2009. See also the testimony of AD/06 taken by Addameer, Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association.

1108. On 28 January 2009, seven Israeli human rights organizations appealed to the Israeli Military Judge Advocate General and to the Attorney General, concerning the “appalling conditions in which Palestinians arrested during the fighting in Gaza were held, and the humiliating and inhuman treatment to which they were subjected from the time of their arrest until their transfer to the custody of the Israel Prison Service.”⁵⁴⁶

1109. The number of detainees that were eventually taken to Israeli prisons has been estimated at around 100.⁵⁴⁷ Some of them have since been released. It often took the families and lawyers several weeks to find out that their loved ones or clients were being detained. Some lawyers have alleged that Israel deliberately did not disclose the number of detentions, even to ICRC.⁵⁴⁸ Human rights organization Adalah have filed a freedom of information request to the Government, but at the time of writing this report is yet to receive a response. Eventually many were released by the Israeli Prison Service but the Mission is not in a position to determine the exact number.

1110. A PCATI lawyer representing detainees, Mr. Bader, who spoke at the Mission’s public hearings in Geneva, interviewed a number of the detainees in Israeli prisons and relayed their testimonies. These include stories from prisoners who said they were used as human shields or held in sandpits.

1111. The Mission has interviewed a number of persons who were detained by the Israeli armed forces for substantial periods of time during the military operations in Gaza and thereafter. In the course of that detention they were in some cases held without trial or respect for basic due process guarantees, and were mentally and physically abused. The Mission has also heard directly from legal representatives of several people who were detained at this time, including some of those referred to above. Moreover, the Mission addressed questions to the Government of Israel with regard to the number of persons from Gaza detained by Israel during the military operations and the duration of their detention, including how many remain in custody. The Mission asked how many persons detained in Gaza were charged with being “unlawful combatants” and on what basis, how many were subjected to trial and what due process guarantees were afforded to them. No reply was received.

⁵⁴⁵ PCATI Affidavit submitted to the Mission. Addameer, Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association affidavit of AD/06.

⁵⁴⁶ The complaint was submitted by the Public Committee against Torture in Israel (PCATI), the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), HaMoked – Centre for the Defence of the Individual, Physicians for Human Rights – Israel (PHR-Israel), B’Tselem, Adalah and Yesh Din. See http://www.btselem.org/english/press_releases/20090128.asp ⁵⁴⁷ Figures supplied to the Mission by PCHR, Adalah and PCATI.

⁵⁴⁸ Correspondence with Addameer, Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association, 25 June 2009.

A. Al-Atatra sandpits

1112. Al-Atatra is located 10 kilometres north of Gaza City, west of Beit Lahia and three to four kilometres south of the Green Line. The neighbourhood is largely agricultural with orange and lemon orchards. On the morning of 5 January, it suffered heavy aerial bombardment, which was followed by a ground incursion by Israeli troops. The Mission met six people, members of the same extended family⁵⁴⁹ and residents of al-Atatra, three of whom were direct witnesses and victims of the events that occurred in the aftermath of the ground incursion.⁵⁵⁰ Their testimonies are supported by those of three others, also residents of al-Atatra, submitted to the Mission by an NGO.⁵⁵¹

1113. On the morning of 5 January, shortly after the ground operations began, an estimated 40 Israeli soldiers broke into several homes, including that of AD/01, who described to the Mission how 65 persons, several of whom were holding white flags, were made to assemble in the street. The soldiers separated the men from the women. The men were made to line up against a wall and strip to their underwear. AD/01 indicated that any attempt to resist the soldiers was met with physical force, resulting in injuries.

1114. Approximately 20 minutes later, they were taken into a house owned by Mr. Khalil Misbah Attar, where they were detained for a day, the men still separated from the women. The house had been struck by a number of missiles that morning and was badly damaged. Witnesses indicated to the Mission that the house was at that time being used by the Israeli armed forces as a military base and sniper position.⁵⁵²

1115. At around 10 p.m., all of the men were handcuffed behind their backs with plastic restraints and blindfolded. The men, 11 women and at least seven children below the age of 14 were taken on foot to al-Kaklounk located south of the American School, one to two kilometres away. Many of the men remained in their underwear, exposed to the harsh winter weather.⁵⁵³ Al-Kaklounk is very close to Israeli military artillery and tank positions, and while the detainees were held here at least one tank was engaged in frequent firing.

1116. AD/01 told the Mission that, on arrival at al-Kaklounk, everyone was asked to clamber down into trenches, which had been dug to create a pit surrounded by a wall of sand, about three metres high. There were three such pits, each of which was surrounded by barbed wire. They were estimated to cover about 7,000 square metres (“six or seven donums”) each. AD/01 described how they were assembled in long single files, rather than massed together, and held in ⁵⁴⁹ For security reasons the witnesses from the family are referred to by coded reference here.

⁵⁵⁰ Testimony to the Mission by AD/01 (plus three others), 30 June 2009.

⁵⁵¹ Affidavit of RR, RS and RT, residents of al-Atatra, submitted to the Mission by Adv. Majd Bader.

Public Committee Against Torture in Israel who testified at the public hearings in Geneva.

⁵⁵² The use of Mr. Khalil Misbah Attar’s house as a detention place is corroborated in the testimony of Samir Ali Muhammad Attar collected in an affidavit by Advocate Mahar Talhamy on behalf of PCATI, available at: http://www.stoptorture.org.il/files/28109_eng.pdf

⁵⁵³ According to the BBC weather services, temperatures in the Gaza Strip in December and January, on average, vary from maximum 17° to minimum 7° Celsius.

these pits, in the open air and exposed to cold temperatures for three days (till 8 January). Each pit accommodated approximately 20 people. They were forced to sit in stress positions, on their knees and leaning forward keeping their heads down. They were monitored by soldiers and were not allowed to communicate with each other. They had no access to food or water on the first day of their internment, and were given a sip of water and an olive each to eat on the second and third days of their detention (6 and 7 January). They had limited access to toilet facilities. The men had to wait for two to three hours after asking before they were allowed to leave the pits to relieve themselves and sometimes were able to remove their blindfolds for the purpose. A few of them were told to relieve themselves inside the pit, behind a small mound of sand. They stated that it was culturally too difficult for the women to seek permission to relieve themselves and they did not ask.

1117. AD/01 states that some tanks were inside the pit with at least one tank positioned at the eastern end.⁵⁵⁴ While the people were held there, the tank facing inland each day sporadically fired on the houses along the road opposite the site.

1118. AD/01B and AD/01C recounted that on 8 January, the women and children were released and told to go to Jabaliyah. The men were transferred to military barracks near the northern border, identified as the Izokim Barracks. At the Izokim barracks, the men were detained in pits similar to but smaller than those in al-Kaklouk. They continued to be exposed to the cold temperature, rain and the constant sound of tank movement overhead. The witnesses have described to the Mission the experience of continued and prolonged exposure to the sound of this tank movement as disorienting and creating feelings of futility, isolation, helplessness and abject terror.

1119. The men were held handcuffed and in their underwear in the Izokim barracks overnight. They were questioned intermittently, mostly on details and locations of Qassam rockets, the tunnels and the whereabouts of Hamas parliamentarians. According to statements made to the Mission, they were beaten during the interrogation and threatened with death and being run over by tanks. The Mission notes that the nature and types of questions asked remained the same throughout the interrogations in various detention facilities.

1120. On 9 January, the men were taken to a prison in Israel, indentified by one witness as the Negev prison, where they remained until 12 January. They were detained in one section of the prison, alternating between being held in isolation and in shared cells, and were subjected to harsh interrogation, often by two people dressed in civilian clothes. Interrogation focused on the identification of Hamas tunnels and arms as well as the whereabouts of Gilad Shalit.

1121. AD/01B and AD/01C recounted that they were shackled to a chair with plastic strips and interrogated several times, with AD/01B stating that he was made to strip naked during an interrogation. He was kept in solitary confinement where a soldier would come intermittently during the day, and slam the cell door open and shut, exposing him to extremely cold temperatures. AD/01C stated that during the first interrogation he was verbally threatened and in the subsequent two he was blindfolded and beaten. He was made to stand up and face the wall, following which his face was smashed against the wall several times before he was severely beaten (kicked and punched) on his back and buttocks.

⁵⁵⁴ This is corroborated in the statement by RR to PCATI.

1122. Requests for clothing were denied. During the interrogation the detainees were informed that they were “illegal combatants” and that they had no protection under the Geneva Conventions. They had limited access to food, water and sanitation. Their morning meal was a bottle-cap-sized piece of bread with a drop of marmalade. The evening meal, if provided, consisted of rotting sardines and cheese on mouldy bread.

1123. AD/01C described the experience of being detained, stripped and shackled as one of abandonment, desperation, suffocation and isolation. He continues to experience discomfort where he was beaten and is unable to sit and sleep comfortably.

1124. AD/01C stated that while in Negev prison an additional group arrived. They were kept separately in the second section. The exact number of detainees in the second group is unknown, although AD/01C indicated to the Mission that the second group was smaller.

1125. On 12 January, nine people including the witnesses were blindfolded, handcuffed and transported to the Erez border. AD/01 described to the Mission how they were subjected to harsh interrogation at Erez and made to strip completely. Several hours later they were told to run into Gaza, to look straight ahead and not to look back.

1126. AD/01 states that all 65 detainees from the original group taken from al-Atatra to Israel were eventually released. Some members of his family were detained afterwards, but not in the original group of 65. At the time of writing, three of these remain incarcerated in various detention facilities of the Israel Prison Service. An unknown number remain in prison facing charges of being illegal combatants and members of al-Qassam Brigades. The first hearing was scheduled to be held in August in Israel (exact date not known).

B. Detention and abuse of AD/02

1127. AD/02 was interviewed by the Mission on 1 July 2009. He is a resident of Beit Lahia and a businessman. He was detained on 4 January 2009 for around 85 days. In that period he was held in Beersheba and Negev prisons, after being detained in locations identified as military posts. He was mentally and physically abused. He appeared before what appeared to be a criminal court, but the precise nature of the proceedings and their results were never made clear to him. He was released without explanation and returned to the Erez border and told to re-enter Gaza.

1128. By 3 January AD/02 and his extended family, numbering over 200, had gathered together in Beit Lahia as a result of the attacks that were taking place in the area. At around 4 a.m. on 4 January Israeli troops entered the area shooting. They ordered everyone out of the house and separated the men from the women and children. They selected 15 of the men, without asking for names. The women and children were ordered to go south. AD/02 recounted that the 15 men, including him, were separated from the other men and were blindfolded and handcuffed with plastic strips.⁵⁵⁵ They were taken on foot to an open space half a kilometre away. An hour later, they were taken to a house where they were joined by an estimated 54 or 55 people, who apparently also wore blindfolds.

1129. AD/02 described how they were interrogated in a separate room, individually and at times in groups of two or three. He stated that some of the men, though not him, were beaten during the interrogation and were made to clamber down into trenches or pits, dug in the ground outside the house, big enough to accommodate one person. They were kept in the pits for several hours at a time, handcuffed and blindfolded, with no access to toilets.

1130. Later that night, 15 people – four women and at least 11 children – were brought to the house. They were detained overnight in the corridor outside the room where the men were detained. The next morning, on 4 January, the men, women and children were taken out of the house to an open space. The men remained blindfolded and handcuffed. AD/02 stated that the open space was a military post with many tanks and soldiers. They were all told to sit in the middle of the empty space. A fence of barbed wire was then erected around them. They sat within the barbed enclosure all day and all night in close proximity to the movement and sound of military tanks.

1131. AD/02 stated that 18 to 20 other men were held overnight in an open truck, exposed to the cold and rain. AD/02 knew this from talking to some of the men the following morning.⁵⁵⁶

1132. On 5 January, 18 to 20 men, not including AD/02, were taken from the military post to an unknown location.⁵⁵⁷ AD/02 and 35 others were taken to an area described by him as located north of Gaza City and in Israel. They remained handcuffed and blindfolded for an hour and a half. Then a roll-call was taken, their blindfolds removed and they were interrogated by a person who identified himself as an intelligence officer. Shortly afterwards, AD/02 and a few others (exact number not known) were interviewed by a group of people identifying themselves as part of a television crew. AD/02 does not know the name and/or details of the television channel. They were then led to an open space, where they stayed all evening exposed to the rain and cold. Later that night (5–6 January) they were blindfolded and shackled with chains and taken to a location which AD/02 subsequently learned was the Beersheba prison facility. A few hours later, at dawn, their blindfolds and handcuffs were removed.

1133. AD/02 recounted that he was in extreme pain as the handcuffs were very tight, adding to the pain caused by pre-existing injuries to his hands and wrist. Earlier in his life, he had suffered serious burns and the scarring on his hands and arms is evident. There is continued nerve damage to the skin tissue which causes significant pain in cold weather. His gloves were taken away by ⁵⁵⁵ Jerusalem Centre for Public Affairs submission, page 48; see also testimony 21 in Soldiers' Testimonies..., which supports AD/01's statement: "we go in, call out to the owner to open, gather all the males, shackled them, gather the family in one room and begin to search", p. 50.

⁵⁵⁶ AD/02's statement is corroborated in a letter sent by various NGOs (ACRI, PCATI, HaMoked, PHR, B'Tselem, Yesh Din and Adalah) to the Military Advocate General on 8 January 2009, available at: http://www.stoptorture.org.il/files/28109_eng.pdf.

⁵⁵⁷ AD/02 indicated that it was later learned that the men had been taken to Ashkelon prison before being brought to the Beersheba Prison, where they were grouped with the others, including AD/02.

soldiers during an interrogation, exposing his hands to the extreme cold. His requests for medical assistance were ignored several times before his arrival in Beersheba, where he was given access to a doctor. He was, however, given only a non-medicated lotion.

1134. AD/02 stated that he was detained in Beersheba for approximately a week. He was intermittently kept in isolation and then in a courtyard with several other detainees. In one instance, he was blindfolded, handcuffed and shackled, and interrogated for approximately two hours by three people. He was verbally abused and beaten during the interrogation, his hair was pulled and he was kicked with one of the interrogators attempting to push his boots through the loop of the handcuffs tied around his wrists.

1135. On or around 13 January, pursuant to an interrogation by a person dressed in civilian clothes, AD/02 was blindfolded and handcuffed and taken to the Negev prison. He remained there until the end of March. During this time he was transferred at least 10 times from one cell to another.

1136. On arrival his handcuffs were removed and he was taken to a ward, which consisted of small one-man cells with iron doors and no windows. The cells each contained an iron bench. Two hours later, he was blindfolded and taken to an interrogation room, where he was stripped and made to stand alone, naked, for almost an hour before his clothes were returned and he was handcuffed and shackled. He was taken by four people to another room, where he was beaten with the butt of a rifle while also being kicked and punched several times. The beating lasted for about 30 minutes. He was then left alone in the room for about 2 hours. He was then taken to a large communal space referred by the soldiers as the "tents." There were seven or eight such spaces or tents spread across the prison.

1137. AD/02 said that he was unable to stand owing to the severe injuries sustained during the beatings and had to be carried to the tents. He was taken to a doctor, given some medicines and allowed to take a shower. AD/02 stated that he stayed in the tent area for about a week before being transferred to a cell occupied by four people. The cell had an iron bed and a bunk bed. Two people including AD/02 slept on the floor. The cell was dark and filthy. There was no clean water and no toilet. During the entire week the men had to relieve themselves in the cell, which was never cleaned.

1138. AD/02 remained in the cell for about one week. At some time during this period he was taken, blindfolded, handcuffed and shackled, by bus to what appeared to be a court. On arrival, his handcuffs and blindfold were removed. He remained shackled when he was taken inside the courtroom. The courtroom had a standard layout with the judge seated behind a table in the centre of the room. The prosecution was on one side and the defence on the other. They were all dressed in civilian clothes. Once inside the courtroom, AD/02 was made to sign a consent form, accepting the lawyer reportedly appointed to defend him. Although the lawyer identified himself as belonging to a human rights organization, he gave no name. As the proceedings began, the judge addressed AD/02 and read out the charge against him. The judge announced that he was being charged with being an illegal combatant but did not explain specific charges. AD/02 was asked no questions. When the defence lawyer asked for the charge to be elaborated, the judge replied that the charges were part of a secret dossier and could not be elaborated upon or revealed. The proceeding lasted about 30 minutes and AD/02 was taken back to Negev.

1139. A week later, around or on 28 January, AD/02 was transferred to another section of the prison, where roll-calls and strip searches were carried out regularly. Some 8 to 10 days later, around 7 February, he and 14 others, were moved to a larger ward with prisoners from the West Bank. The ICRC was given access to them.

1140. On 8 February, AD/02 was transferred, twice, to another section of the prison and shortly afterwards to the cell where he had first been detained on arrival at Negev. On 9 February, at around noon, he and several others were transferred, for the ninth time, to another section of the prison occupied by a large number of prisoners, including those from the West Bank. AD/02 indicated that several of them were parliamentarians. He remained in this section for approximately 20 days. During this time he three times met a person who identified himself as a lawyer. He was informed of the charges against him, which included membership and involvement with the resistance.

1141. On 2 March, he was transferred with 10 others to yet another section of the prison. They were put in two rooms, five in each room. The rooms had graffiti on the wall that read illegal combatants in English and in Hebrew. They had limited access to toilets and were given uncooked food to eat.

1142. Around 29–30 March, AD/02 was finally released. He and his brother, a cousin and two other residents of Izbat Abd Rabbo were blindfolded and handcuffed and taken to the Erez border, where they were interrogated for approximately four hours. They were then told to cross the border and not look back. They were given no explanation about either their detention or their release.

C. AD/03

1143. AD/03 is a resident of al-Salam neighbourhood, east of Jabaliyah and close to the eastern border with Israel. His arrest and detention were preceded by aerial attacks and a ground invasion in his neighbourhood. His house was struck several times, over a period of five days, by projectiles fired from F-16 aircraft. The attacks continued throughout the night when most people were asleep.⁵⁵⁸ As a result of the continued attacks, he sought refuge in a relative's house nearby.

1144. AD/03 stated that, although the area could be considered as a frontline where armed groups had been present, the neighbourhood could not reasonably have been perceived as a military threat by the time the Israeli armed forces arrived on the ground. There was no resistance going on in the neighbourhood when it was targeted. If the intent of the attacks was to ⁵⁵⁸ On the afternoon of 3 January, AD/03's house was struck twice by projectiles, within two hours, causing significant damage. He and his family moved to a relative's house nearby, where they stayed overnight. On 4 January in the evening, when AD/03 had returned to his own home, it was struck for the third time and part of the roof collapsed. AD/03 sustained minor injuries; his mother and his wife sustained more serious injuries. Later that night, at around 9.40 p.m., the house was hit by a fourth rocket, which was followed by another attack 20 minutes later that completely destroyed the ground floor facade injuring AD/03's father's second wife. Another shell (the sixth attack) was fired shortly afterwards. AD/03 and his family relocated for the second time to his cousin's house, where they remained for four nights, until 7 January. On the morning of 8 January, aerial bombardment intensified to the extent that three explosions/shells were reportedly heard every minute.

destroy alleged command centres, positions or weapons caches of Hamas, he felt that those positions would have been destroyed in the first few attacks on the neighbourhood given the intensity of the shelling.

1145. On 8 January, at around 11.30 a.m., the house where AD/03 was seeking refuge was struck by a missile so he decided to return to his own house. He described how Israeli soldiers fired at them, including women and children carrying white flags, when they tried to leave his cousin's house. His father's wife sustained a bullet injury to her leg. Thirty minutes later, around noon, the Israeli armed forces ordered all residents to evacuate their homes and come out in the street. The men were separated from the women and children, and told to line up against a wall, lift their shirts and strip to their underwear. They remained stripped and lined up against the wall for approximately 15 minutes. The men, women and children were then told to walk down the street.

1146. AD/03 recounted that the street was blocked with large piles of heavy rubble and debris of bulldozed buildings, which provided a difficult obstacle for several people, including children and elderly people. They walked 200-250 metres before arriving at a house. Two hours later the women and children were told to go to Jabaliyah. Shortly afterwards, AD/03, his brother, cousin and an unknown man were taken to another room, where they were forced to lie on the ground. They were then blindfolded and their hands were tied behind their backs with plastic strips. They were interrogated individually for several hours. Later that evening, they were made to walk about 100 metres eastward to another house. They were detained overnight in a room, together with three others, who identified themselves as residents of Abd Rabbo. They had no access to food, water or toilets. The next morning, on 9 January, their blindfolds were removed and all seven were interrogated, individually, by one soldier.

1147. AD/03 stated that the house was being used as a military base and sniper position. On the second day of detention the Israeli soldiers began to use some detainees as human shields. By then the detainees had been without food and sleep for a day. They had been subjected to what AD/03 described as psychological torture. There were constant death threats and insults. To carry out house searches as human shields the Israeli soldiers took off AD/03's blindfold but he remained handcuffed. He was forced to walk in front of the soldiers and told that, if he saw someone in the house but failed to tell them, he would be killed. He was instructed to search each room in each house cupboard by cupboard. After one house was completed he was taken to another house with a gun pressed against his head and told to carry out the same procedure there. He was punched, slapped and insulted throughout the process.

1148. AD/03 indicated that he was forced to do this twice while the group was being held in this house for eight days. Others were also required to do the same thing. On the first occasion he was forced to carry out searches in three houses and on the second in four. AD/03 estimates that these searches took between one hour and one hour and a half. At no point did he come across any explosive devices or armed group members.

1149. AD/03 stated that, at the end of every search, the houses were vandalized by the Israeli soldiers, who broke doors, windows, kitchenware and furniture, for instance.⁵⁵⁹

1150. At the end of the day he was taken back to the house, where he and six others continued to be detained for 8 days, until 16 January. They had limited access to food and water and were often denied access to toilets. They were told that their ordeal would continue indefinitely. One soldier reportedly told them that the soldiers were “following instructions issued by the chain of command.”

1151. For the first time the detainees were asked for proof of identity. AD/03 said that their identification documents were thoroughly inspected. Had they revealed anything in relation to militant activities, he believed they would have been killed.

1152. On 16 January they were handcuffed, with plastic strips tied very tightly around their wrists, made to stand in a single file, blindfolded and told to hold on to the shirt of the person standing in front of them. They were made to walk towards a military tank positioned very close to the house where they had been detained and told to sit on top of each other inside the tank. The tank drove on a bumpy track and over big boulders causing them to frequently slam against the sides of the tank. About three hours later it stopped in an unknown location. On arrival, they were asked to clamber down into holes or pits about three to four metres deep. AD/03 stated that they were in a military post, as they heard the voices of several soldiers laughing and joking noisily. They remained blindfolded and handcuffed and exposed to the continued sound of tank movement overhead. They remained in the pit for about one hour and were then made to sit inside a tank that moved in circles.

1153. Shortly afterwards, their handcuffs were removed and they were shackled with chains inside a bus. They were accompanied by soldiers who spoke Hebrew. On arrival, they were searched and then interrogated for eight hours before being taken to the military barracks in Beersheba. Then they were made to line against the wall before being asked to strip naked. They were made to stand, blindfolded, naked and exposed to the cold winds, for about three or four hours.

1154. On 19 January, eight people, including AD/03, his brother and one other man from the group of seven who were taken to Beersheba on 16 January, were shackled inside the bus, made to bend forward and keep their heads down, between their knees, and were taken to Negev prison, a journey that lasted approximately four hours. During this journey they were continuously beaten, kicked and punched by four or five soldiers on board. According to AD/03, the detainees sustained serious injuries and were bleeding, two bleeding more profusely than the others. Two detainees reportedly even fainted. He stated that soldiers on board made constant reference to shackling practices in the Russian Federation, leading AD/03 to believe that the soldiers were from there.

⁵⁵⁹ The account of a soldier interviewed by Breaking the Silence and the account in the submission of the Jerusalem Centre for Public Affairs clarify that soldiers would vandalize houses after searches. Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs submission, p. 78. “The family was not in there, they had run away. He [one of the soldiers] took out notebooks and textbooks and ripped them. One guy smashes cupboards for kicks, out of boredom. [...]” Soldiers’ Testimonies..., testimony 35, p. 80.

1155. On arrival at Negev, they were severely beaten by the prison security for approximately one and a half hours before being put into cells and told that they were caught during battle and were illegal combatants. Later that night, 10 more people joined the group of detainees.

1156. AD/03 described how on the second day of their incarceration, 20 January, the detainees (at this point 18 in number) were told that they would be interrogated in accordance with their alleged political affiliations. Several of them pointed out that they had none. They were grouped apart. AD/03 said that they talked among themselves and he found out that nine of them were livestock farmers and three or four were merchants and traders.

1157. AD/03 described how the detainees were divided into two groups of nine each and put in a section of the prison referred to as the mardaban, which was divided into two wards containing 10 iron beds each and guarded by Israeli Arab soldiers. They remained incarcerated for eight days, until 27 January, with limited access to food, water, toilets and physical exercise.

1158. On 24 January, AD/03 was given access to a lawyer, affiliated with Addameer, Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association,⁵⁶⁰ for the first and only time. The Mission interviewed him⁵⁶¹ and he confirmed that he had visited AD/03 and his brother on 25 January 2009. The lawyer's evidence provided corroboration of the detention of AD/03 and his brother (who was also assisted by the lawyer), and the conditions under which he was subjected to criminal proceedings in Israel. The lawyer was informed by the Israeli authorities that AD/03 was detained under the illegal combatant law but he was not given the dossier to review. His brother was never formally charged.

1159. On 25 January, the detainees were told that they would be taken to Beersheba for their trial. On 26 January, all 18 detainees were shackled with iron chains to iron benches in a bus, handcuffed with iron handcuffs and taken to Beersheba. They were not blindfolded. The journey lasted five hours during which the bus drove on bumpy roads causing the detainees to slam against the sides of the bus. They were detained in Beersheba overnight in overcrowded cells together with people convicted of serious offences, according to AD/03. They were mostly Israeli Jews.

1160. The following morning, on 27 January, they were taken back to the Negev prison in shackles and handcuffs. They were given no information regarding the scheduled hearing. The outcome of the proceedings was not clear to AD/03 at the time, as he believed he had been "acquitted" only when they were returned to the Negev prison.

1161. The lawyer from Addameer was present in the court. According to him, the prosecutor made the decision not to proceed with the case rather than the detainees being acquitted. The lawyer confirms that they were held in Ktziot prison in the Negev Desert and released on 27 January.

⁵⁶⁰ The Mission has heard directly from AD/03's legal representative, who stated that he received a copy of his file, but not the secret file, from the Prosecutor's Office on 21 January 2009. AD/03 was arrested on suspicion of being an illegal combatant.

⁵⁶¹ The lawyer had been alerted to the cases by Al Mezan, a human rights organization in Gaza.

1162. AD/03 said they were then taken back to Beersheba and later to the Erez border, where they were released. They were told to run into Gaza and not look back.

1163. AD/03 indicated that two others, detained with him, were released a month later. Two others continue to be detained in the Ktziot prison and are reportedly awaiting trial. The status and whereabouts of 11 others are not known.

D. Factual findings

1164. The Mission found the witnesses credible and reliable taking into account their demeanour and the consistency of their statements. At least one of them was still suffering considerable anguish because of the treatment he had endured at the hands of the Israeli soldiers and other officials. The Mission notes that there are several common features to these incidents that disclose a pattern of behaviour on the part of the Israeli soldiers, indicating that the treatment meted out to the persons deposing before the Mission were not isolated incidents. The facts available to the Mission indicate that:

- All three locations were near the border with Israel;
- Before the arrival of ground troops, all three had been under aerial or ground attack. The soldiers on the ground were in complete control of the area at the time of their encounter with the civilians;
- There was no combat activity by the persons reporting, nor any likelihood of such activity being under way in the area or nearby at the time that the soldiers started the operation against civilians in the three locations. None of the civilians was armed or posed any apparent threat to the soldiers. In two of the incidents they were holding white flags as a sign of their non-combatant status;
- It is clear in two of the incidents that none of those detained had been asked for their names by the soldiers for several days. This establishes that there was no definite suspicion against them that they were combatants or otherwise engaged in hostile activities;
- In all cases a number of persons were herded together and detained in open spaces for several hours at a time and exposed to extreme weather conditions;
- The soldiers deliberately subjected civilians, including women and children, to cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment throughout their ordeal in order to terrorize, intimidate and humiliate them. The men were made to strip, sometimes naked, at different stages of their detention. All the men were handcuffed in a most painful manner and blindfolded, increasing their sense of fear and helplessness;
- Men, women and children were held close to artillery and tank positions, where constant shelling and firing was taking place, thus not only exposing them to danger, but increasing their fear and terror. This was deliberate, as is apparent from the fact that the sandpits to which they were taken were specially prepared and surrounded by barbed wire;

- During their detention in the Gaza Strip, whether in the open or in houses, the detainees were subjected to beatings and other physical abuse that amounts to torture. This continued systematically throughout their detention;
- Civilians were used as human shields by the Israeli armed forces on more than one occasion in one of the three incidents. Taking account of other incidents in which the Mission has found this to have happened, it would not be difficult to conclude that this was a practice repeatedly adopted by the Israeli armed forces during the military operation in Gaza;
- Many civilians were transferred across the border to Israel and detained in open spaces as well as in prisons;
- The methods of interrogation amounted not only to torture in some of the cases, but also to physical and moral coercion of civilians to obtain information;
- These persons were subjected to torture, maltreatment and foul conditions in the prisons. They were deprived of food and water for several hours at a time and any food they did receive was inadequate and inedible;
- While in detention in Israel they were denied due process.

E. Legal findings

1165. The Mission considers the following legal provisions relevant to its consideration of the matters presented above:⁵⁶²

Article 4 of the Fourth Geneva Convention

Persons protected by the Convention are those who, at a given moment and in any manner whatsoever, find themselves, in case of a conflict or occupation, in the hands of a party to the conflict or occupying Power of which they are not nationals.

Nationals of a State which is not bound by the Convention are not protected by it. Nationals of a neutral State who find themselves in the territory of a belligerent State, and nationals of a co-belligerent State, shall not be regarded as protected persons while the State of which they are nationals has normal diplomatic representation in the State in whose hands they are.

The provisions of Part II are, however, wider in application, as defined in article 13.

Persons protected by the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field of 12 August 1949, or by the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea of 12 August 1949, or by the Geneva ⁵⁶² The Mission does not repeat here the provisions already cited elsewhere, such as article 57 of Additional Protocol I or common article 3.

Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of 12 August 1949, shall not be considered as protected persons within the meaning of the present Convention.

Article 5 of the Fourth Geneva Convention

Where, in the territory of a party to the conflict, the latter is satisfied that an individual protected person is definitely suspected of or engaged in activities hostile to the security of the State, such individual person shall not be entitled to claim such rights and privileges under the present Convention as would, if exercised in the favour of such individual person, be prejudicial to the security of such State.

Where in occupied territory an individual protected person is detained as a spy or saboteur, or as a person under definite suspicion of activity hostile to the security of the occupying Power, such person shall, in those cases where absolute military security so requires, be regarded as having forfeited rights of communication under the present Convention.

In each case, such persons shall nevertheless be treated with humanity and, in case of trial, shall not be deprived of the rights of fair and regular trial prescribed by the present Convention. They shall also be granted the full rights and privileges of a protected person under the present Convention at the earliest date consistent with the security of the State or occupying Power, as the case may be.

Article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention

Protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for their persons, their honour, their family rights, their religious convictions and practices, and their manners and customs. They shall at all times be humanely treated, and shall be protected especially against all acts of violence or threats thereof and against insults and public curiosity.

Women shall be especially protected against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, enforced prostitution, or any form of indecent assault.

Without prejudice to the provisions relating to their state of health, age and sex, all protected persons shall be treated with the same consideration by the party to the conflict in whose power they are, without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, religion or political opinion.

However, the parties to the conflict may take such measures of control and security in regard to protected persons as may be necessary as a result of the war.

Article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention

Protected persons accused of offences shall be detained in the occupied country, and if convicted they shall serve their sentences therein. They shall, if possible, be separated from other detainees and shall enjoy conditions of food and hygiene which will be sufficient to keep them in good health, and which will be at least equal to those obtaining in prisons in the occupied country.

They shall receive the medical attention required by their state of health. They shall also have the right to receive any spiritual assistance which they may require.

Women shall be confined in separate quarters and shall be under the direct supervision of women.

Proper regard shall be paid to the special treatment due to minors.

Protected persons who are detained shall have the right to be visited by delegates of the protecting Power and of the International Committee of the Red Cross, in accordance with the provisions of article 143.

Such persons shall have the right to receive at least one relief parcel monthly.

1166. Relevant parts of article 75 of Additional Protocol I, which reflect customary international law, provide:

1. In so far as they are affected by a situation referred to in article 1 of this Protocol, persons who are in the power of a party to the conflict and who do not benefit from more favourable treatment under the Conventions or under this Protocol shall be treated humanely in all circumstances and shall enjoy, as a minimum, the protection provided by this article without any adverse distinction based upon race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or on any other similar criteria. Each Party shall respect the person, honour, convictions and religious practices of all such persons.

2. The following acts are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents:

(a) Violence to the life, health, or physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular:

[...]

(ii) torture of all kinds, whether physical or mental;

(iii) corporal punishment; and

[...]

(b) Outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault;

(c) The taking of hostages;

(d) Collective punishments; and

(e) Threats to commit any of the foregoing acts.

3. Any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly, in a language he understands, of the reasons why these measures have been taken. Except in cases of arrest or detention for penal offences, such persons shall be released with the minimum delay possible and in any event as soon as the circumstances justifying the arrest, detention or internment have ceased to exist.

4. No sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the armed conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include the following:

(a) The procedure shall provide for an accused to be informed without delay of the particulars of the offence alleged against him and shall afford the accused before and during his trial all necessary rights and means of defence;

(b) No one shall be convicted of an offence except on the basis of individual penal responsibility;

(c) No one shall be accused or convicted of a criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under the national or international law to which he was subject at the time when it was committed; nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time when the criminal offence was committed; if, after the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby;

(d) Anyone charged with an offence is presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law;

(e) Anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to be tried in his presence;

(f) No one shall be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt;

(g) Anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;

(h) No one shall be prosecuted or punished by the same Party for an offence in respect of which a final judgement acquitting or convicting that person has been previously pronounced under the same law and judicial procedure;

(i) Anyone prosecuted for an offence shall have the right to have the judgement pronounced publicly; and

(j) a convicted person shall be advised on conviction of his judicial and other remedies and of the time limits within which they may be exercised.

5. Women whose liberty has been restricted for reasons related to the armed conflict shall be held in quarters separated from men's quarters. They shall be under the immediate supervision of women. Nevertheless, in cases where families are detained or interned, they shall, whenever possible, be held in the same place and accommodated as family units.

6. Persons who are arrested, detained or interned for reasons related to the armed conflict shall enjoy the protection provided by this article until their final release, repatriation or re-establishment, even after the end of the armed conflict.

7. In order to avoid any doubt concerning the prosecution and trial of persons accused of war crimes or crimes against humanity, the following principles shall apply:

(a) Persons who are accused of such crimes should be submitted for the purpose of prosecution and trial in accordance with the applicable rules of international law; and

(b) Any such persons who do not benefit from more favourable treatment under the Conventions or this Protocol shall be accorded the treatment provided by this article, whether or not the crimes of which they are accused constitute grave breaches of the Conventions or of this Protocol.

8. No provision of this article may be construed as limiting or infringing any other more favourable provision granting greater protection, under any applicable rules of international law, to persons covered by paragraph 1.

1167. From the facts available to it, and in the absence of any information refuting the allegations that the incidents described above took place, the Mission finds that there have been a number of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law.

1168. All of the persons held were civilians and protected persons under article 4 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The Mission does not accept the proposition that the men were detained as or considered to be unlawful combatants and therefore beyond the protection of the Fourth Geneva Convention. An individual loses the status of protected person only if that person is “definitely suspected of or engaged in activities hostile to the security of the State” (art. 5). The Mission has not heard any information suggesting this to be the case. Even if a person is no longer entitled to the status of protected person, article 5 provides that such persons must “be treated with humanity” and “shall not be deprived of the rights of fair and regular trial.” Furthermore, under Additional Protocol I, article 75, they shall enjoy “as a minimum” the protections provided by that article.

1169. The Mission has considered to what extent the actions of the Israeli armed forces might legitimately be considered as some kind of internment in the light of the resistance from armed groups in the area generally, although not in the context of the specific detentions. These people from Gaza were detained in prisons inside Israel (Beersheba, Ashkelon and Negev prisons), contrary to the Fourth Geneva Convention, which stipulates in article 76 that protected persons should be detained inside the occupied territory and not transferred out of it unless there is a pressing security need.⁵⁶³ It also makes clear that internment is the most severe measure that a detaining authority or occupying Power may take with respect to protected persons against whom no criminal proceedings have been initiated. Internment is a preventive administrative measure and cannot be considered a penal sanction.⁵⁶⁴ Recourse to the measure may be had only if the security of the State makes it “absolutely necessary” (art. 42) or “for imperative reasons of security” (art. 78).

⁵⁶³ ICRC also specifies that, in occupied territories, civilians can be interned, or placed in assigned residence, only within the frontiers of the occupied country itself. See ICRC Commentary on article 78 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

1170. The Mission does not consider that the information it has received supports defining the treatment described above as internment.

1171. The rounding-up of large groups of civilians and their prolonged detention under the circumstances described above constitute a collective penalty on those persons in violation of article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and article 50 of the Hague Regulations. Such treatment amounts to measures of intimidation and terrorism, prohibited under article 33 and a grave breach of the Convention that constitutes a war crime.

1172. By holding the detainees in sandpits without privacy, the Israeli soldiers failed to ensure respect for their persons or to treat them humanely as required by article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The information before the Mission suggests that this treatment could not be justified as necessary “measures of control and security.” This treatment also constituted outrages on personal dignity, humiliating and degrading treatment contrary to the Geneva Conventions, common article 3, and Additional Protocol I, article 75 (2) (b). The abuse, which required a considerable degree of planning and control, was sufficiently severe to constitute inhuman treatment within the meaning of article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and thus a grave breach of the said Convention that would constitute a war crime.

1173. “Women shall be the object of special respect”, in accordance with article 76 of Additional Protocol I. The Mission finds, on the information before it, that the treatment of the women in the sandpits, where they endured especially distressing circumstances, was contrary to this provision and would also constitute a war crime.

1174. The Mission has received information relating to the particular treatment received by some witnesses, such as shackling, severe beatings during detention and interrogation, being held in foul conditions or solitary confinement, which added to their already profound sense of degradation. Such treatment violates article 31 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which prohibits physical or moral coercion against protected persons, “in particular to gain information from them”. This would also constitute a war crime.

1175. Furthermore, on the basis of this information, the Mission considers that the severe beatings, constant humiliating and degrading treatment and detention in foul conditions allegedly suffered by individuals in the Gaza Strip under the control of the Israelis and in detention in Israel, would constitute torture, and a grave breach under article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention and a violation of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Such violations also constitute war crimes.

⁵⁶⁴ ICRC Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention.

1176. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission believes that there has also been a violation of articles 7 and 10 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as of article 14 ICCPR with regard to the right to be brought before a judge at the earliest opportunity, the right to be informed of the charges against one, the right to consult with legal counsel and the right to be provided with a meaningful opportunity to defend oneself.

XVI. OBJECTIVES AND STRATEGY OF ISRAEL'S MILITARY OPERATIONS IN GAZA

1177. This chapter addresses the objectives and the strategy underlying the Israeli military operations in Gaza.

A. Planning

1178. The question of whether incidents involving the Israeli armed forces that occurred between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009 are likely to be the result of error, the activities of rogue elements or a deliberate policy or planning depends on a number of factors, including the degree and level of planning involved, the degree of discretion field commanders have in operations, the technical sophistication and specification of weaponry, and the degree of control commanders have over their subordinates.

1179. The Government of Israel has refused to cooperate with the Mission. The Mission has therefore been unable to interview high-level members of the Israeli armed forces. It has, nevertheless, reviewed a significant amount of commentary and conducted a number of interviews on planning and discipline, including with persons who have been connected with the planning of Israeli military operations in the recent past. The Mission has also analysed the views expressed by Israeli officials in official statements, official activities and articles, and considered comments by former senior soldiers and politicians.

1. The context

1180. Before considering the issue of planning there is an important issue that has to be borne in mind about the context of Israeli operations in Gaza. The land mass of Gaza covers 360 square kilometres of land. Israel had a physical presence on the ground for almost 40 years with a significant military force until 2005. Israel's extensive and intimate knowledge of the realities of Gaza present a considerable advantage in terms of planning military operations. The Mission has seen grid maps in possession of the Israeli armed forces, for example, that show the identification by number of blocks of houses throughout Gaza City.

1181. In addition to such detailed background knowledge, it is also clear that the Israeli armed forces were able to access the telephone networks to contact a significant number of users in the course of their operations.⁵⁶⁵

1182. Since the departure of its ground forces from Gaza in 2005, Israel has maintained almost total control over land access and total control over air and sea access.⁵⁶⁶ This has also included the ability to maintain a monitoring capacity in Gaza, by a variety of surveillance and electronic means, including UAVs. In short, Israel's intelligence gathering capacity in Gaza since its ground forces withdrew has remained extremely effective.

⁵⁶⁵ See "The operation in Gaza...", paras. 8, 24, 138, 264, 350, 354, 375, 389 and 447.

2. Legal input and training of soldiers on legal standards

1183. The Israeli Government has set out the legal training and supervision relevant to the planning, execution and investigation of military operations.⁵⁶⁷ The Mission also met Col. (Ret.) Daniel Reisner, who was the head of the International Legal Department of the Military Advocate General's Office of the Israeli Defense Forces from 1995 until 2004. In an interview with the Mission he explained how the principles and contents of international humanitarian law were instilled into officers. He explained the four-tiered training system, reflecting elements similar to those presented by the Government, which seeks to ensure knowledge of the relevant legal obligations for compliance in the field. Firstly, during training all soldiers and officers receive basic courses on relevant legal matters. The more senior the ranks, the more training is required "so that it becomes ingrained". Secondly, before a significant or new operation, legal advice will be given. Col. Reisner indicated that he understood from talking with colleagues still in active service that detailed consultations had taken place with legal advisers in the planning of the December-January military operations. He was not in a position to say what that advice had been. Thirdly, there would be real-time legal support to commanders and decision makers at headquarters, command and division levels (but not at regiment levels or below). The fourth stage is that of investigation and prosecution wherever necessary.

1184. The same framework explained by Col. Reisner appears to be repeated in similar detail in a presentation of the Office of the Legal Adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.⁵⁶⁸

3. The means at the disposal of the Israeli armed forces

1185. The Israeli armed forces are, in technological terms, among the most advanced in the world.⁵⁶⁹ Not only do they possess the most advanced hardware in many respects, they are also a market leader in the production of some of the most advanced pieces of technology available, including UAVs.⁵⁷⁰ They have a very significant capacity for precision strikes by a variety of methods, including aerial and ground launches. Moreover, some new targeting systems may have been employed in Gaza.⁵⁷¹

⁵⁶⁶ See chap. IV.

⁵⁶⁷ "The operation in Gaza...", paras. 212-221.

⁵⁶⁸ <http://www.mfa.gov.il/NR/rdonlyres/8DC5105D-A2A1-4709-9874-F42F1D1DA44B/0/TaubGazaLegalAspects270509.pps>.

⁵⁶⁹ For a detailed breakdown of Israeli capacity, see http://www.inss.org.il/upload/\(FILE\)1245235226.pdf1245235226.pdf).

⁵⁷⁰ Ibid., pp. 8-9.

⁵⁷¹ According to the Israeli armed forces, the system, controlled by a computer and composed of 120 ml mortars, was developed for use by ground forces. "The Keshet weapons system is an autonomous mortar with the ability to aim and navigate independently. It fires at a fast speed and has the capacity to fire the first mortar accurately within a minute". See <http://dover.idf.il/IDF/English/News/today/2008n/04/1401.htm>.

1186. Taking into account all of the foregoing factors, the Mission, therefore, concludes that Israel had the means necessary to plan the December-January military operations in detail. Given both the means at Israel's disposal and the apparent degree of training, including training in international humanitarian law, and legal advice received, the Mission considers it highly unlikely that actions were taken, at least in the aerial phase of the operations, that had not been the subject of planning and deliberation.⁵⁷² In relation to the land-air phase, ground commanders would have had some discretion to decide on the specific tactics used to attack or respond to attacks. The same degree of planning and premeditation would therefore not be present. However, the Mission deduces from a review of many elements, including some soldiers' statements at seminars in Tel Aviv and to Breaking the Silence, that what occurred on the ground reflected guidance that had been provided to soldiers in training and briefing exercises.⁵⁷³

1187. The Mission notes that it has found only one example where the Israeli authorities have acknowledged that an error had occurred. This was in relation to the deaths of 22 members of the al-Daya family in Zeytoun. The Government of Israel explained that its armed forces had intended to strike the house next door, but that errors were made in the planning of the operation.⁵⁷⁴ The Mission expresses elsewhere its concerns about this explanation (see chap. XI). However, since it appears to be the only incident that has elicited an admission of error by the Israeli authorities, the Mission takes the view that the Government of Israel does not consider the other strikes brought to its attention to be the result of similar or other errors.

1188. In relation to air strikes, the Mission notes the statement issued in Hebrew posted on the website of the Israeli armed forces on 23 March 2009:

Official data gathered by the Air Force concluded that 99 per cent of the firing that was carried out hit targets accurately. It also concluded that over 80 per cent of the bombs and missiles used by the Air Force are defined as accurate and their use reduces innocent casualties significantly...⁵⁷⁵

1189. The Mission understands this to mean that in over 80 per cent of its attacks the Air Force deployed weapons considered to be accurate by definition – what are known colloquially as precision weapons as a result of guidance technology. In the other 20 per cent of attacks, therefore, it apparently used unguided bombs. According to the Israeli armed forces, the fact that these 20 per cent were unguided did not diminish their accuracy in hitting their targets, but may have caused greater damage than those caused by precision or “accurate” weapons.

⁵⁷² See “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 236.

⁵⁷³ See, for example, a soldier's report of a junior officer's briefing before entering Gaza: “I want aggression. If we suspect a building we take down this building. If there's a suspect on one of the floors of that building we shell it. No second thoughts. It's either them or us. Let it be them... No one has second thoughts. Let error take their lives, not ours”. See transcript from Channel Ten News on record with the Mission of soldiers speaking at a seminar in Tel Aviv.

⁵⁷⁴ “The operation in Gaza...”, paras. 385-387. The Israeli Government's comments in relation to the attack on a truck with oxygen tanks is somewhat more equivocal. The blame is put on the proximity of the tanks to alleged armed groups. Ibid., paras. 398-400.

⁵⁷⁵ http://dover.idf.il/IDF/News_Channels/today/09/03/2301.htm (Mission's own translation).

1190. These represent extremely important findings by the Israeli Air Force. It means that what was struck was meant to be struck. It should also be borne in mind that the beginning of the ground phase of the operation on 3 January did not mean the end of the use of the Israeli Air Force. The statement indicates:

During the days prior to the operation "Cast Lead", every brigade was provided with an escorting UAV squadron that would participate in action with it during the operation. Teams from the squadrons arrived at the armour and infantry corps, personally met the soldiers they were about to join and assisted in planning the infantry manoeuvres. The UAV squadrons had representatives in the command headquarters and officers in locations of actual combat who assisted in communication between the UAVs – operated by only two people, who are in Israeli territory – and the forces on the ground. The assistance of UAVs sometimes reached a ratio of one UAV to a regiment and, during extreme cases, even one UAV to a team.

1191. Taking into account the ability to plan, the means to execute plans with the most developed technology available, the indication that almost no errors occurred and the determination by investigating authorities thus far that no violations occurred, the Mission finds that the incident and patterns of events that are considered in this report have resulted from deliberate planning and policy decisions throughout the chain of command, down to the standard operating procedures and instructions given to the troops on the ground.

B. The development of strategic objectives in Israeli military thinking

1192. Israel's operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory have had certain consistent features. In particular, the destruction of buildings, including houses, has been a recurrent tactical theme.⁵⁷⁶ The specific means Israel has adopted to meet its military objectives in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in Lebanon have repeatedly been censured by the United Nations Security Council, especially its attacks on houses.⁵⁷⁷ The military operations from 27 December to 18 January did not occur in a vacuum, either in terms of proximate causes in relation to the Hamas/Israeli dynamics or in relation to the development of Israeli military thinking about how best to describe the nature of its military objectives.

1193. A review of the available information reveals that, while many of the tactics remain the same, the reframing of the strategic goals has resulted in a qualitative shift from relatively focused operations⁵⁷⁸ to massive and deliberate destruction.

1194. In its operations in southern Lebanon in 2006, there emerged from Israeli military thinking a concept known as the Dahiya doctrine, as a result of the approach taken to the Beirut

⁵⁷⁶ See, for example, Housing and Land Rights Network – Habitat International Coalition's submission to the Mission (pp. 12-28).

⁵⁷⁷ Security Council resolutions 101 (1953), 106 (1955), 111 (1956), 171 (1962), 228 (1966), 248 (1968), 265 (1969), 270 (1969), 313 (1972), 316 (1972), 332 (1973), 347 (1974), 450 (1979), 501 (1982), 515 (1982), 520 (1982) and 1544 (2004).

⁵⁷⁸ The reference to relatively focused operations here should not be misunderstood as an indication that all such actions were acceptable in terms of distinction and proportionality. It is merely a comparative reference.

neighbourhood of that name.⁵⁷⁹ Major General Gadi Eisenkot, the Israeli Northern Command chief, expressed the premise of the doctrine:

1195. What happened in the Dahiya quarter of Beirut in 2006 will happen in every village from which Israel is fired on. [...] We will apply disproportionate force on it and cause great damage and destruction there. From our standpoint, these are not civilian villages, they are military bases. [...] This is not a recommendation. This is a plan. And it has been approved.⁵⁸⁰

1196. After the war in southern Lebanon in 2006, a number of senior former military figures appeared to develop the thinking that underlay the strategy set out by Gen. Eisenkot. In particular Major General (Ret.) Giora Eiland⁵⁸¹ has argued that, in the event of another war with Hizbullah,⁵⁸² the target must not be the defeat of Hizbullah but “the elimination of the Lebanese military, the destruction of the national infrastructure and intense suffering among the population... Serious damage to the Republic of Lebanon, the destruction of homes and infrastructure, and the suffering of hundreds of thousands of people are consequences that can influence Hizbollah’s behaviour more than anything else”.⁵⁸³

1197. These thoughts, published in October 2008 were preceded by one month by the reflections of Col. (Ret.) Gabriel Siboni:⁵⁸⁴

With an outbreak of hostilities, the IDF will need to act immediately, decisively, and with force that is disproportionate to the enemy's actions and the threat it poses. Such a response aims at inflicting damage and meting out punishment to an extent that will demand long and expensive reconstruction processes. The strike must be carried out as quickly as possible, and must prioritize damaging assets over seeking out each and every launcher. Punishment must be aimed at decision makers and the power elite... In Lebanon, attacks should both aim at Hizbollah’s military capabilities and should target economic interests and the centres of civilian power that support the organization. Moreover, the closer the relationship between Hezbollah and the Lebanese Government, the more the elements of the Lebanese State infrastructure should be targeted. Such a response will create a lasting memory among ... Lebanese decision makers, thereby increasing Israeli deterrence and reducing the likelihood of hostilities against Israel for an ⁵⁷⁹ During the 2006 Lebanon war, Israel inflicted massive destruction on Dahiya, which it considered to be a stronghold of Hizbullah.

⁵⁸⁰ Ynet, “Israel warns Hizbullah war would invite destruction”, 10 March 2008.

⁵⁸¹ Former Chief of the Israeli National Security Council, former National Security Adviser to the Prime Minister, and prior to that head of the IDF Operation Branch.

⁵⁸² Although Major General Eiland was writing about Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, it is the suggestion of the objectives and the means of obtaining them that is striking in relation to what occurred in Gaza.

⁵⁸³ Giora Eiland, “The third Lebanon war: target Lebanon”, Strategic Assessment, vol. 11, No. 2 (November 2008), p. 9.

⁵⁸⁴ Colonel (Res.) of the IDF. Researcher for Institute for National Strategic Studies. Former fighter and commander in the Golani Brigade, completed his service as the brigade’s reconnaissance unit commander. Within the scope of his reserve service, he served as senior staff officer of the Golani Brigade, Deputy Commander of the logistics unit, and Chief of Staff of an armoured division in the north.

extended period. At the same time, it will force Syria, Hizbollah, and Lebanon to commit to lengthy and resource-intensive reconstruction programmes...

This approach is applicable to the Gaza Strip as well. There, the IDF will be required to strike hard at Hamas and to refrain from the cat and mouse games of searching for Qassam rocket launchers. The IDF should not be expected to stop the rocket and missile fire against the Israeli home front through attacks on the launchers themselves, but by means of imposing a ceasefire on the enemy.⁵⁸⁵ 1198. General Eisenkot used the language quoted above while he was in active service in a senior command position and clarified that this was not a theoretical idea but an approved plan. Major General Eiland, though retired, was a man of considerable seniority. Colonel Siboni, while less senior than the other two, was nonetheless an experienced officer writing on his field of expertise in a publication regarded as serious.

1199. The Mission does not have to consider whether Israeli military officials were directly influenced by these writings. It is able to conclude from a review of the facts on the ground that it witnessed for itself that what is prescribed as the best strategy appears to have been precisely what was put into practice.

C. Official Israeli statements on the objectives of the military operations in Gaza

1200. The Mission is aware of the official statements on the goals of the military operations:

The Operation was limited to what the IDF believed necessary to accomplish its objectives: to stop the bombardment of Israeli civilians by destroying and damaging the mortar and rocket launching apparatus and its supporting infrastructure, and to improve the safety and security of Southern Israel and its residents by reducing the ability of Hamas and other terrorist organizations in Gaza to carry out future attacks.⁵⁸⁶

1201. The Israeli Government states that this expression of its objectives is no broader than those expressed by NATO in 1998 during its campaign in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

1202. The Mission makes no comment on the legality or otherwise of NATO actions there.

D. The strategy to achieve the objectives

1203. The issue that is of special concern to the Mission is the conceptualization of the “supporting infrastructure”. The notion is indicated quite clearly in General Eisenkot’s statements in 2006 and reinforced by the reflections cited by non-serving but well-informed military thinkers.

⁵⁸⁵ Siboni, op. cit. This appears very similar to the so-called Dahiya doctrine. See, for example, Ed Blanche, Jane’s Rockets and Missiles, 3 February 2009, citing Major General Gadi Eisenkot.

⁵⁸⁶ See “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 83.

1204. On 6 January 2009, during the military operations in Gaza, Deputy Prime Minister Eli Yishai⁵⁸⁷ stated: "It [should be] possible to destroy Gaza, so they will understand not to mess with us". He added that "it is a great opportunity to demolish thousands of houses of all the terrorists, so they will think twice before they launch rockets". "I hope the operation will come to an end with great achievements and with the complete destruction of terrorism and Hamas. In my opinion, they should be razed to the ground, so thousands of houses, tunnels and industries will be demolished". He added that "residents of the South are strengthening us, so the operation will continue until a total destruction of Hamas [is achieved]".⁵⁸⁸

1205. On 2 February 2009, after the end of the military operations, Eli Yishai went on: "Even if the rockets fall in an open air or to the sea, we should hit their infrastructure, and destroy 100 homes for every rocket fired."⁵⁸⁹

1206. On 13 January 2009, Israel's Foreign Minister, Tzipi Livni, was quoted as saying:

We have proven to Hamas that we have changed the equation. Israel is not a country upon which you fire missiles and it does not respond. It is a country that when you fire on its citizens it responds by going wild – and this is a good thing.⁵⁹⁰

1207. It is in the context of comments such as these that the massive destruction of businesses, agricultural land, chicken farms and residential houses has to be understood. In particular, the Mission notes the large-scale destruction that occurred in the days leading up to the end of the operations. During the withdrawal phase it appears that possibly thousands of homes were destroyed. The Mission has referred elsewhere in this report to the "day after" doctrine,⁵⁹¹ as explained in the testimonies of Israeli soldiers, which can fit in with the general approach of massively disproportionate destruction without much difficulty.

1208. The concept of what constituted the supporting infrastructure has to be understood not only in the context of the military operations of December and January, but in the tightening of the restrictions of access to goods and people into and out of Gaza, especially since Hamas took power. The Mission does not accept that these restrictions can be characterized as primarily an attempt to limit the flow of materials to armed groups. The expected impact, and the Mission believes primary purpose, was to bring about a situation in which the civilian population would ⁵⁸⁷ During the military operation in Gaza, Eli Yishai served as Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Industry, Trade, and Labour in the Government of Mr. Olmert. He serves in the current Government headed by Mr. Netanyahu as Internal Affairs Minister as well as Deputy Prime Minister. During the military operations in Gaza, he was also a member of the Security Cabinet for National Security within the Israeli Cabinet. Its duties include setting the targets of the security system and its policies; questions related to the Israeli armed forces, issues related to intelligence, foreign policy, military and security operations, and coordination of the activities of the Government in "Judea, Samaria and Gaza". See <http://www.pmo.gov.il/PMO/Archive/Decisions/2006/05/des20.htm> (in Hebrew).

⁵⁸⁸ <http://news.walla.co.il/?w=/1412570> (in Hebrew).

⁵⁸⁹ <http://www.ynet.co.il/Ext/Comp/ArticleLayout/CdaArticlePrintPreview/1,2506,L-3665452,00.html> (2 February 2009, in Hebrew).

⁵⁹⁰ The Independent, Israeli cabinet divided over fresh Gaza surge, 13 January 2009.

⁵⁹¹ See chap. XIII.

find life so intolerable that they would leave (if that were possible) or turn Hamas out of office, as well as to collectively punish the civilian population.

1209. The Israeli Government has stated:

While Hamas operates ministries and is in charge of a variety of administrative and traditionally governmental functions in the Gaza Strip, it still remains a terrorist organization. Many of the ostensibly civilian elements of its regime are in reality active components of its terrorist and military efforts. Indeed, Hamas does not separate its civilian and military activities in the manner in which a legitimate government might. Instead, Hamas uses apparatuses under its control, including quasi-governmental institutions, to promote its terrorist activity.⁵⁹²

1210. The framing of the military objectives Israel sought to strike is thus very wide indeed. There is, in particular, a lack of clarity about the concept of promoting “terrorist activity”: since Israel claims there is no real division between civilian and military activities and it considers Hamas to be a terrorist organization, it would appear that anyone who supports Hamas in any way may be considered as promoting its terrorist activity. Hamas was the clear winner of the latest elections in Gaza. It is not far-fetched for the Mission to consider that Israel regards very large sections of the Gazan civilian population as part of the “supporting infrastructure”.

1211. The indiscriminate and disproportionate impact of the restrictions on the movement of goods and people indicates that, from as early as some point in 2007, Israel had already determined its view about what constitutes attacking the supporting infrastructure, and it appears to encompass effectively the population of Gaza.

1212. A statement of objectives that explicitly admits the intentional targeting of civilian objects as part of the Israeli strategy is attributed to the Deputy Chief of Staff, Maj. Gen. Dan Harel. While the Israeli military operations in Gaza were under way, Maj. Gen. Harel was reported as saying, in a meeting with local authorities in southern Israel:

This operation is different from previous ones. We have set a high goal which we are aiming for. We are hitting not only terrorists and launchers, but also the whole Hamas government and all its wings. [...] We are hitting government buildings, production factories, security wings and more. We are demanding governmental responsibility from Hamas and are not making distinctions between the various wings. After this operation there will not be one Hamas building left standing in Gaza, and we plan to change the rules of the game.⁵⁹³

E. Conclusions

1213. The Israeli military conception of what was necessary in a future war with Hamas seems to have been developed from at least the time of the 2006 conflict in southern Lebanon. It finds its origin in a military doctrine that views disproportionate destruction and creating maximum ⁵⁹² “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 235.

⁵⁹³ Ynet, “Deputy chief of staff: worst still ahead”.

disruption in the lives of many people as a legitimate means to achieve military and political goals.

1214. Through its overly broad framing of the “supporting infrastructure”, the Israeli armed forces have sought to construct a scope for their activities that, in the Mission’s view, was designed to have inevitably dire consequences for the non-combatants in Gaza.

1215. Statements by political and military leaders prior to and during the military operations in Gaza leave little doubt that disproportionate destruction and violence against civilians were part of a deliberate policy.⁵⁹⁴

1216. To the extent to which statements such as that of Mr. Yishai on 2 February 2009 indicate that the destruction of civilian objects, homes in that case, would be justified as a response to rocket attacks (“destroy 100 homes for every rocket fired”), the Mission is of the view that reprisals against civilians in armed hostilities are contrary to international humanitarian law.⁵⁹⁵ Even if such actions could be considered a lawful reprisal, they do not meet the stringent conditions imposed, in particular they are disproportionate,⁵⁹⁶ and violate fundamental human rights and obligations of a humanitarian character.⁵⁹⁷ One party's targeting of civilians or civilian areas can never justify the opposing party’s targeting of civilians and civilian objects, such as homes, public and religious buildings, or schools.

XVII. THE IMPACT OF THE BLOCKADE AND OF THE MILITARY OPERATIONS ON THE PEOPLE OF GAZA AND THEIR HUMAN RIGHTS

“A military commander’s obligation does not end with avoiding harm to the lives and the dignity of the local residents, a “negative obligation”, but his obligation is also “positive”- he must protect the lives and dignity of the residents, within the constraints of the time and place....” Justice Barak (HCJ 764/04)

“As long as Israel has control of the transfer of necessities and the supply of humanitarian needs to the Gaza Strip, it is bound by the obligations of international humanitarian law to allow the civilian population to have access, inter alia, to medical facilities, food and water, as well as additional humanitarian items”.
Justice Beinisch (HCJ 201/09)

1217. During its visits to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and its meetings and hearings in Gaza, Amman, Geneva and other places, the Mission saw for itself and received reports and ⁵⁹⁴ Highlighting the pattern of military actions targeting civilian shelters and shelter seekers, the Habitat International Coalition concludes: “The official statements that accompany these actions [...] seem to reflect a presumption that any source of brutality against the indigenous inhabitants would convert the victims into agents of the attackers’ preferred outcome: defeat of resistance” (submission, cited, p. 40).

⁵⁹⁵ See Additional Protocol I, art. 51 (6).

⁵⁹⁶ Customary International Humanitarian Law..., pp. 513–518.

⁵⁹⁷ See also article 50 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts of the International Law Commission (General Assembly resolution 56/83, annex).

testimonies about the negative effects that the severe restrictions on the movement of goods and people from and to the Gaza Strip had caused to the full enjoyment of a range of social, economic and civil rights by women, men and children. These reports and testimonies come from a variety of sources, including businesspeople, industry owners, ordinary residents, public officials and NGOs in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and abroad.

1218. People in Gaza, as in other parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, have been living under foreign occupation for decades and enduring the restrictions and other effects of the policies implemented by the occupying Power. While the start of the blockade and the most recent military operations have undoubtedly added to those restrictions and scarcities, people in Gaza have not been living in what can be called a “normal” situation for a long time.

1219. The restrictions imposed by Israel on the imports to and exports from the Gaza Strip through the border crossings as well as the naval and airspace blockade have had a severe impact on the availability and accessibility of a whole range of goods and services necessary for the people of Gaza to enjoy their human rights. Their already eroded ability to access and buy basic goods was compounded by the effects of the four-week Israeli military campaign, which further restricted access to those essential items and destroyed goods, land, facilities and infrastructure vital for the enjoyment of their fundamental rights. In conjunction, the blockade and the military hostilities have created a situation in which most people are destitute. Women and children have been particularly affected. The current situation has been described as a crisis of human dignity.⁵⁹⁸

A. The economy, livelihoods and employment

1220. The Mission received information about the state of the economy, employment and family livelihoods in the Gaza Strip. Before the December-January military operations, the Gaza economy was already in dire straights, with few business sectors able to operate at full capacity. The blockade restricted or denied entry to a range of items and energy necessary for the economy to function. These included fuel and industrial diesel for the Gaza power plant to produce enough electricity for factories and businesses to function and for agricultural activities to continue on a regular basis. The net result was a stalled economy, with many businesses, factories and farms either closed or operating at reduced capacity.

1221. Electricity was purchased directly from Israel (51 per cent) and Egypt (7 per cent), while the Gaza power plant produced only 34 per cent, leaving an 8 per cent electricity deficit. Following additional cuts by Israel in the supply of industrial fuel, the Gaza power plant further reduced its output. The shortage of fuel caused the plant to malfunction, while the lack of spare parts and maintenance is likely to damage the plant in the long term.⁵⁹⁹ According to OCHA, the electricity shortfall in the Gaza Strip was 41 per cent by 15 December 2008. Cooking gas was also restricted although less drastically.

⁵⁹⁸ WHO report 2009, p. 8.

⁵⁹⁹ OCHA, “Gaza humanitarian situation report: the impact of the blockade on the Gaza Strip”, 15 December 2008.

1222. Raw materials, equipment, spare parts and other inputs necessary for industrial and agricultural activity were not allowed into the Gaza Strip either.

1223. The consequences for day-to-day life were considerable. Some areas of the Gaza Strip were left without electricity for several hours a week, many households, especially those in buildings that depend on the use of water pumps, had access to water only a few hours a week. Intermittent electricity supply damaged medical equipment in hospitals and doctors' practices, and generally disrupted civilian life. The operation of sewage treatment facilities was also reduced and increased quantities of untreated sewage were dumped into the sea, causing public health risks and pollution, which in turn affected fishing.

1224. Several companies closed or cut back their operations, laying off employees, who consequently lost their livelihoods. Information provided to the Mission covering June 2007 to July 2008 showed that 98 per cent of industries were temporarily shut down and five establishments were relocated to the West Bank and Jordan. Around 16,000 workers were laid off. The ban on all exports caused losses for the agricultural sector estimated at US$ 30 million up until July 2008 and 40,000 jobs lost. Similarly, the construction sector endured severe losses resulting from the halt in development projects and other construction projects owing to the absence of construction materials. Some 42,000 workers were reported to have lost their jobs as a result.⁶⁰⁰ Those who were laid off searched for employment in other sectors, such as agriculture, or joined the ranks of those who live on food assistance from the United Nations and aid agencies.

1225. As a result of the closure of the crossings to the transit of people, many families also lost the financial support they had from relatives, usually the male head of the family, who used to work abroad, either in Israel or in neighbouring Arab countries.⁶⁰¹ In its submission to the Mission, UNCTAD stated that 15.4 per cent of Gaza's labour force was employed in Israel by 2000.⁶⁰² In his presentation to the Mission, the economist Shir Hever explained that by 2009 no one from Gaza could find work in Israel. Even Palestinian workers from the West Bank mostly work in industrial zones in settlements rather than in Israel.⁶⁰³

1226. By December 2008 the destructive impact of the blockade on the local economy had doubled unemployment levels. While in 2007 79 per cent of households lived below the official poverty line (US$ 4 per capita/day) and some 70 per cent below the deep poverty line (US$ 3 per capita/day), these figures were expected to increase by the end of 2008 – even before the Israeli military operations. The Mission received information from organizations explaining how the agricultural sector had traditionally absorbed unemployed workers from other sectors, but in the circumstances imposed by the blockade, without fertilizers, pesticides, machinery, spare parts

⁶⁰⁰ Palestine Trade Center (PALTRADE), "Gaza Strip: A year through siege", July 2008.

⁶⁰¹ GISHA Legal Center for Freedom of Movement and Physicians for Human Rights – Israel, Rafah Crossing: Who holds the keys? (March 2009).

⁶⁰² UNCTAD submission, p. 4.

⁶⁰³ Mission meeting with Shir Hever, Alternative Information Centre, 2 July 2009.

and, crucially, without access to markets, it could no longer fulfil the role of shock absorber.⁶⁰⁴ In its submission to the Mission, UNCTAD noted that when the industrial and agricultural sectors lost their capacity to provide jobs, public administration and services absorbed up to 54 per cent of Gaza's labour force (up from 37 per cent in 1999). UNCTAD concluded:

The ultimate impact of this momentum is the systematic erosion of the Palestinian productive base to deprive them from the ability to produce and feed themselves, and turn them into poor consumers of essential goods imported mainly from Israel and financed mainly by donors.

1227. The military operations destroyed a substantial part of the Gaza Strip's economic infrastructure and its capacity to support decent livelihoods for families. Many factories and businesses were directly targeted and destroyed or damaged. Poverty, unemployment and food insecurity increased dramatically.

1228. Information provided to the Mission showed that some 700 private (industry and trade) businesses were damaged or destroyed during the military operations, with direct losses totalling approximately US$ 140 million. The industrial sector appeared the most affected, as it suffered 61 per cent of those losses, in particular in the sub-sectors of construction and food.⁶⁰⁵ Because of the extent and gravity of the destruction inflicted on the industrial sector, businesspeople and industrialists who spoke to the Mission stated their belief that Israel had as one of its military objectives the destruction of local industrial capacity so as to harm the prospects for an economic recovery in the Gaza Strip.⁶⁰⁶

1229. The severe restrictions on the availability of banknotes imposed by Israel caused serious disruptions in economic transactions and affected the ability of the public sector and the non-governmental sector to carry out operations such as contracting or procuring goods and services.

1230. The agricultural sector, including crop farming, fisheries, livestock farming and poultry farming, suffered direct losses worth some US$ 170 million. Indirect losses have still to be definitively calculated. One business organization estimates that 60 per cent of all agricultural land had been destroyed, 40 per cent directly during the military operations.⁶⁰⁷ Moreover, 17 per cent of all orchards, 8.3 per cent of livestock, 2.6 per cent of poultry, 18.1 per cent of hatcheries, 25.6 per cent of beehives, 9.2 per cent of open fields and 13 per cent of groundwater wells were destroyed. Agriculture had already lost a third of its capacity since the start of the second intifada and the frequent Israeli incursions, according to NGO estimates used by UNDP-Gaza.⁶⁰⁸ Parts of ⁶⁰⁴ Meetings with representatives from the agricultural sector in Gaza, 30 June 2009; meeting with representatives of Campaign to End the Siege, Gaza, 29 June 2009.

⁶⁰⁵ Private Sector Coordination Council Gaza Governorates, "Gaza private sector: Post-war status and needs", 25 February 2009.

⁶⁰⁶ Interviews with Amr Hamad of the Palestinian Federation of Industries and with Ali Abu Shalah of the Palestinian Business Association.

⁶⁰⁷ "Gaza private sector: post-war status...", p. 5.

⁶⁰⁸ UNDP, FAO and Ministry of Agriculture, "Assessment of impact of cast lead operation: estimated direct losses to agriculture in the Gaza Strip between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009".

the land were reportedly contaminated by unexploded munitions and chemical weapons residues (e.g. white phosphorous) and would need to be tested and cleared before agricultural activity could resume.⁶⁰⁹ Some 250 agricultural wells were reportedly destroyed or severely damaged.

1231. Fishing that provided direct employment to some 3,000 people was also affected by the blockade and the military operations. Several boats and some fishermen were directly hit. The Mission met representatives of fishermen's associations and a fisherman testified at the public hearings in Gaza.⁶¹⁰ One fisherman interviewed by the Mission explained that he had previously owned a fishing boat, mainly to fish sardines. It was hit by shelling as it was moored beside the civil defence buildings that were hit by air strikes on 27 December. Half of it was destroyed. Another small boat was also destroyed as were the nets. The family house was also destroyed and he had been out of work since the beginning of the military operations in December. However, his fishing activities had already been affected before the operations, when the Government of Israel had imposed a limit of six nautical miles for fishing, and then further reduced it to only three.⁶¹¹

1232. The continuation of the blockade does not permit the reconstruction of the economic infrastructure that was destroyed. Not only do construction materials continue to be banned but the provision of energy is also still insufficient and irregular. Local purchasing capacity being shattered, there is not enough market demand for many products.

1233. Exports also continue to be prohibited, with the exception of some truckloads of flowers that crossed the borders between January and March 2009. Without external markets, local production of all kinds has no prospect and so employment and livelihoods will remain precarious and diminished. A strawberry farmer and the Head of the Association of Strawberry Farmers based in Beit Lahia explained that before the military operations he used to export up to 2,000 tons of strawberries to Europe. Hundreds of donums of land were destroyed during the operations as well as some 300 greenhouses and 2,000 acres of citrus trees. As a result, they had lost the European market for their products.⁶¹²

B. Food and nutrition

1234. The availability of food in the Gaza Strip is determined by the amount imported through the crossings and that which is locally produced. The Mission received credible information indicating that during the months preceding the military operations both sources of food suffered from the severe restrictions imposed by Israel.

1235. The closing of the Karni grain conveyor belt, the only mechanism for importing wheat, during part of December, resulted in the depletion of wheat stocks, forcing the six mills in the Gaza Strip to close down or reduce operations. The el-Bader flour mill appeared to be the only ⁶⁰⁹ "Gaza private sector: post-war status...", p. 5; FAO, "Impact of Gaza crisis: Agricultural sector report", p. 16; WHO Report, p. 29.

⁶¹⁰ Public hearings, Gaza, 29 June 2009.

⁶¹¹ Meeting with the Mission, Gaza, 3 June 2009.

⁶¹² Meeting with the Mission, Gaza, 3 June 2009.

one that kept working as its owners had kept a good stock of grain, but it was later bombed and destroyed (see chap. XIII). However, about one third of the previous number of truckloads of wheat continued entering through the Kerem Shalom crossing. The blockade was tightened following the confrontations of November 2008, further restricting United Nations food assistance. On 18 December, UNRWA was compelled to halt its food distribution programme to thousands of families because its stocks were depleted. It also had to downsize its cash-for-work programmes as it ran out of banknotes.

1236. By December 2008 food insecurity was on the rise. Food security is the capacity of each individual to have access to sufficient and adequate food at all times. The Mission received information indicating that rising food insecurity was the result falling income levels, eroded livelihoods and higher food prices. Some food items were also unavailable in the local markets. Consequently, the average Gazan household was spending two thirds of its income on food.⁶¹³ People had to reduce the quantity and the quality of food they ate, shifting a diet based on low-cost and high-energy cereals, sugar and oil.

1237. Changes in diet patterns are likely to prejudice the long-term health and nutrition of the population. According to the WHO office in Gaza, there are indications of chronic micronutrient deficiencies among the population, in particular among children. Among the most worrying indicators is the high prevalence of stunting among 6- to 16-year-old children (7.2 per cent), while the prevalence of thinness among that group was 3.4 per cent for 2008 (the WHO standard is 5 per cent). Levels of anaemia are alarming: 66 per cent on average among 9- to 12-month-old babies (the rate being higher for girls (69 per cent)). On average, 35 per cent of pregnant women suffer from anaemia.⁶¹⁴

1238. During the military operations the availability and quality of fresh food dropped: local production was suspended during the fighting and local produce was spoilt. Mr. Muhammad Husein al-Atar, Mayor of al-Atatra, told the Mission how agricultural land in his neighbourhood was razed. The area is close to the Israeli border and 95 per cent of the work is farming-related. Israeli military incursions had been happening since 2000 accompanied by destruction and bulldozing. As a result, 50,000 acres of land had not a single tree left standing and between 10 and 15 farmers had been killed every year during the last nine years. During the December – January military operations the area was bombed from the air, land and sea. He had personally lost three (industrial) refrigerators, each capable of holding 600 tons of vegetables, for instance. His sister's chicken farms were also destroyed, including some 70,000 chickens (see chap. XIII).⁶¹⁵

1239. The destruction of land and greenhouses has an impact on the availability of fresh food in the Gaza Strip and, consequently, on the total supply of micronutrients to the population. Satellite imagery commissioned by the Mission shows that for the whole Gaza Strip an estimated 187 greenhouse complexes were either destroyed or severely damaged, representing approximately 30.2 hectares. Of all the destroyed greenhouses 68.6 per cent were in the Gaza

⁶¹³ “Gaza humanitarian situation report: the impact...”.

⁶¹⁴ Nutrition indicators for 2008 and 2009 provided by WHO office in Gaza to the Mission.

⁶¹⁵ Meeting with the Mission, 3 June 2009.

and Gaza North Governorates; and 85.4 per cent were destroyed or damaged during the last week of the military operations. Satellite imagery also gives strong indications that tanks and/or heavy vehicles were likely to have been responsible for most of the damage.⁶¹⁶

1240. Despite the increased quantities of food allowed into Gaza since the beginning of hostilities, representing between 60 and 80 per cent of all truckloads, wheat flour was in short supply. This was probably the result of the severe depletion of local stocks following the tighter restrictions during December. After the ceasefire was declared by the parties to the conflict, access to food remained problematic for most people many prices had risen and there was a lack of income and banknotes. It was reported that the military operations caused food insecurity to increase and affect up to 75 per cent of the population.⁶¹⁷

1241. In a rapid assessment, FAO and the World Food Programme (WFP) found that food availability was back to pre-military operations levels, but the supply of fresh food was likely to decrease in the immediate future due to the large-scale destruction. Prices continued to be very high and some items were prohibitively expensive (e.g. poultry, eggs and meat) and unaffordable. However, severe access problems persisted and were aggravated for a population whose income and livelihoods had been shattered, despite the food assistance provided by the United Nations and aid agencies.⁶¹⁸

C. Housing

1242. Figures about the overall damage to residential housing vary according to the source and time of the measurement as well as the methodology. The human rights NGO Al Mezan reports that a total 11,135 homes were partially or fully destroyed.⁶¹⁹ According to the human rights NGO Al-Dameer-Gaza, 2,011 civilian and cultural premises were destroyed, of which 1,404 were houses that were completely demolished and 453 were partially destroyed or damaged.⁶²⁰ A UNDP survey immediately after the end of military operations reported 3,354 houses completely destroyed and 11,112 partially damaged.⁶²¹ The destruction was more serious in the north, where 65 per cent of houses were completely destroyed. As a result of the destruction, more than 600 tons of rubble had to be removed, with the consequent costs and potential impact on the environment and public health. Information provided to the Mission showed that much of the construction in Gaza contained important amounts of asbestos, the particles of which had been or could be released into the air at the time of destruction or removal. The refugee population was concentrated in the north and the destruction of residential housing appeared to have particularly affected them.

⁶¹⁶ UNOSAT satellite imagery, p. 23. See also chap. XIII.

⁶¹⁷ OCHA, The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 33 (January 2009).

⁶¹⁸ FAO and WFP, "Report of the rapid qualitative emergency food security assessment – Gaza Strip", 24 February 2009.

⁶¹⁹ Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, "Cast lead offensive in numbers".

⁶²⁰ Al-Dameer Gaza, "IOF targets civilian premises and cultural properties during its offensive on the Gaza Strip", May 2009.

⁶²¹ The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 33, p. 7. A figure similar to this was provided by the Palestinian Authority in its reply to questions by the Mission, 5 August 2009.

1243. The destruction or damage of their homes forced many people to flee and find shelter with relatives or agencies providing assistance, such as UNRWA. At the height of the military operations UNRWA was providing shelter to 50,896 displaced persons in 50 shelters. This number was estimated to be a fraction of those who had become homeless, most of whom found temporary shelter with relatives. The Mission was informed that this situation created extreme hardship for people who had to share already deteriorated and limited housing, sanitary and water facilities. It saw for itself people who were still living in tents some six months after the end of the operations.

1244. Children and women were particularly affected by the hardship caused by the destruction of homes and the displacement. Housing and Land Rights Network – Habitat International Coalition reported that “of those forced to seek shelter following the military damage or destruction of their home, over half were children. While female-headed households constitute only a relatively small percentage of the total affected families (7 per cent), their number in absolute terms, 763 such families, is significant.”⁶²²

1245. The impact of the destruction of housing is aggravated by the substantial destruction of the Gaza construction industry during the military operations. In chapter XIII, the Mission described the destruction of the Atta Abu Jubbah cement-packaging plant, which formed a significant part of the construction materials industry in Gaza. The Mission also noted reports regarding the destruction of 19 producing plants (representing 85 per cent of the production capacity of the Gaza factories of ready-mix concrete). External supplies of concrete and other building materials into Gaza are entirely controlled by Israel, which has banned imports of cement into Gaza. The thousands of families who have lost their shelter as a result of the military operations are therefore prevented by the blockade imposed by Israel from rebuilding their homes.

D. Water and sanitation

1246. The Mission received submissions, testimonies and information about the effects of the blockade and of the military operations on the supply of and access to water and sanitation facilities by the population of the Gaza Strip.⁶²³ During the months preceding the military operations the water and sanitation sectors were already under severe strain. The lack of construction materials, pipes and spare parts had prevented the building of additional infrastructure and the proper maintenance of existing facilities. Desalinization plants and works to preserve the aquifer had to be postponed. By December 2008, OCHA reported that the degradation of the system “is posing a major public health hazard”.⁶²⁴ Frequent power outages, fuel shortages and a lack of spare parts for electricity generators had also affected the functioning of the water and sanitation systems.

⁶²² Submission to the Mission by Housing and Land Rights Network -- Habitat International Coalition, “Targeting shelters and shelter seekers during operation Cast Lead in the context of Israeli military practice”.

⁶²³ Submission by the Centre on Housing Rights and Evictions (COHRE); Al Mezan Center for Human Rights, “The impact of the Israeli offensive on the right to water in the Gaza Strip”, February 2009.

⁶²⁴ “Gaza humanitarian situation report: the impact...”.

1247. By December 2008, it was reported that some 80 per cent of Gaza's water wells were only partially functioning while the others were not functioning at all. This situation had already affected the population's access to water: over half of the residents of Gaza City had access to running water few hours a week, with those living in houses and buildings using water pumps spending many hours trying to get water by other means. Of the water supplied in Gaza 80 per cent did not meet WHO standards for drinking water owing to, among other factors, the shortage of chlorine to purify the water. Important health risks were consequently likely to arise. Other health hazards were expected to arise from the practice of discharging untreated or partially treated wastewater into the sea. More than 70 million litres a day were discharged into the sea, creating significant environmental damage and health risks for human beings and marine life.

1248. As with other sectors, the military operations worsened the situation in the water and sanitation sector. Services and infrastructure already partially paralysed or in serious need of maintenance suffered further destruction or damage. The Gaza wastewater treatment plant was hit sometime between 3 and 10 January and one of its lagoons was severely damaged (see chap. XIII). Sewage pipes leading to the plant and others in different parts of the city were hit or damaged. Up to 11 water wells that supplied water for human consumption were hit and 3 completely destroyed.⁶²⁵ Thousands of metres of water and sewage pipes/networks were destroyed or damaged and around 5,700 rooftop water tanks destroyed and some 2,900 damaged.

1249. By the end of January only 70 per cent of Gaza's water wells were working, either whether fully or partially, i.e. 10 per cent less than before the hostilities. At the height of the military operations some 500,000 Palestinians did not have access to running water at all, whereas the rest received water for few hours a week. Sanitation and water facilities in public shelters were overwhelmed, and raw sewage ran through fields and streets in some areas. The water authorities' reparations team were prevented from going to the sites to carry out urgent repairs and had to wait in most cases until Israeli troops had withdrawn. All urgent repairs were done on a provisional basis given the lack or shortage of construction materials and equipment. The Mission witnessed how precarious those repairs could be when it saw one sewage pipe in the vicinity of the Gaza wastewater treatment plant explode during a site visit.

E. Environment

1250. The Mission has received comments and concerns from non-governmental organizations and concerned individuals in Gaza relating to threatened environmental damage by reason of munitions or debris from munitions. These concerns relate to the fear that hazardous material might have remained or will remain in the soil and water of parts of the Gaza Strip for indefinite periods of time and could enter the food chain or otherwise be hazardous to life.

1251. The Mission was unable to further investigate these concerns, but is aware of an environmental impact study being undertaken by the United Nations Environmental Programme (UNEP) in the Gaza Strip. Preliminary results from UNEP indicate that the environment in the Gaza Strip has been seriously impacted by the Israeli military operations of December-January.

⁶²⁵ "Damage assessment report...". Al Mezan reports that 112 wells were destroyed but it clarifies that this figure includes agricultural wells; COHRE submission to the Mission.

In particular, the groundwater in Gaza show high nitrate levels exceeding WHO ceilings, putting infants at risk of nitrate poisoning.

F. Physical and mental health

1252. The capacity of the health sector in the Gaza Strip was already diminished by the blockade when the Israeli offensive started. While hospitals and clinics continued operating, the quality of their service and its accessibility were eroded. The insufficient and erratic supply of electricity caused equipment to malfunction even when the staff had recourse to generators. Power cuts and water impurities damaged equipment and created additional health hazards. The lack of maintenance and spare parts that were blocked at the crossings further compounded the situation. In addition, the lack of construction materials and inputs hampered the development of additional facilities and needed infrastructure.

1253. Reported confrontation between the Palestinian Authority in Ramallah and the Gaza authorities also affected the quantity and quality of the service provided. The Ministry of Health in Ramallah had been responsible for the supply of medicines to Gaza since September 2008, but it was reported that few trucks with medicines actually reached the Gaza Strip after that time resulting in serious availability problems for some 20 per cent of essential medicines. The referral of patients needing specialized treatment abroad (e.g. in Israel, Jordan and Egypt) was also affected by the blockade established in 2007. Before that date only some 9 per cent of patients intending to cross the border were rejected or their permits delayed, but that proportion had reached some 22 per cent by September 2008.⁶²⁶

1254. The beleaguered health sector was subjected to severe strain when the military operations started on 28 December. Hospitals and health centres of the Ministry of Health worked on an emergency basis under extremely difficult conditions and with limited resources. They nevertheless responded effectively to the crisis. Urgent medical interventions to treat critical injuries were performed under severe circumstances. Of the 5,380 injured people reported by the Ministry, 40 per cent were admitted to the main hospitals, but because of the policy of discharging patients as soon as feasible to free up beds and staff, there were concerns that some injuries (e.g. burns and acute surgical conditions) might have led to complications as follow-up care may have been inadequate. Some injuries will result in permanent disability (see also section G below).

1255. Medical facilities and personnel were targeted during the fighting. Seventeen health personnel were killed and 26 injured. In total, 29 ambulances were damaged or destroyed by bombs or crushed by armoured vehicles, while 48 per cent of Gaza's 122 health facilities were either directly or indirectly hit by shelling. Medical relief and rescue were in many cases also intentionally hindered.

1256. OCHA reported that medical supplies, including drugs and equipment, were allowed into the Gaza Strip in larger quantities during January in the midst of the fighting. However, logistical difficulties and the fact that many medicines had a very short expiration date prevented the health staff from using the increased quantities for the benefit of patients. Finally, the situation of patients with chronic health conditions, such as heart and kidney problems, became a concern because patients with critical life-threatening injuries requiring urgent attention were given priority.⁶²⁷

⁶²⁶ WHO Report....; "Gaza humanitarian situation report: the impact...".

1257. The destruction of sewage treatment facilities and pipes together with the lack of purifying materials had consequences for public health. Thousands of litres of untreated sewage dumped in fields or in the sea created a potential health hazard. The Mission received information about recent epidemiological tests of water samples. The samples had been collected from all water networks and wells, especially from areas targeted during the military operations, to investigate the presence of microbiological pollutants. Information on water-related diarrhoea among children under age 3 attending UNRWA facilities was collected weekly in January and February 2009. The analyses showed an increase of 18 per cent between 19 January and 8 February. Moreover, 14 per cent of the water samples collected in February were polluted with microbiological pollutants. The increase in diarrhoeal disease was also confirmed to have occurred in the areas where the water had been contaminated.⁶²⁸

1258. WHO also cited the preliminary results from UNEP initial sampling in Gaza, which showed that “much of the rubble is contaminated with asbestos; damage to the waste treatment system had contaminated the aquifer; the health waste handling system had completely broken down, with such waste going into domestic waste. The results on heavy metal contamination are so far inconclusive.”⁶²⁹ The Mission also investigated and confirmed allegations about the use of weapons whose potential long-term impact on individual victims’ health raises concern. They include allegations of the use of weapons containing chemical pollutants such as tungsten and white phosphorus (see also chapter XII).⁶³⁰

1259. Conditions under Israeli occupation prior to 2005, together with poverty and the difficulties caused by the blockade, had already made a deep impact on the mental health of the local population. The three weeks of intense bombardment and military ground action added new, serious psychological traumas, especially noticeable in children. According to Dr. Iyad al Sarraj of the Gaza Community Mental Health Programme, over 20 per cent of Palestinian children in Gaza suffer from post-traumatic stress disorders, the symptoms of which “will appear over the days, months, years, or decades to come”.⁶³¹

1260. One particular characteristic of the conflict, namely that the population could not flee the conflict areas as can be done in many conflicts, and had no shelters or safe places in which to hide or protect themselves, reinforced feelings of being trapped, defenceless and vulnerable to more attacks with a sense of inevitability.⁶³² Many of those who met the Mission stated that they felt terrorized.

⁶²⁷ The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 33.

⁶²⁸ WHO, “Quality of water in the Gaza Strip”, March 2009.

⁶²⁹ WHO Report, p. 29.

⁶³⁰ Report of the Mission by Physicians for Human Rights-Israel, p. 75-76.

⁶³¹ Public hearing, Gaza, 29 June 2009.

⁶³² WHO report, p. 12.

1261. According to Dr. Ahmad Abu Tawahina, psychosomatic disorders have a particularly serious impact on Palestinian society, where social stigma is often associated with mental suffering. In general, this makes it difficult for people to express psychological problems. This condition is frequently experienced in the form of recurrent psychosomatic symptoms, such as migraines, pains in joints and muscles, general fatigue and the inability to do even normal daily activities. Most of these patients are referred not to mental health practitioners, but to general physicians, who prescribe drugs to alleviate the symptoms and not the causes. This in turn has given rise to a serious problem of drug dependency.⁶³³

1262. The sense of security that comes from living in a supportive and safe environment had already been eroded over the years by constant attacks and military confrontation, but was further undermined by the direct experience and/or witnessing of violence against relatives. The widespread destruction, the displacement, the inability to find a safe place anywhere, together with the direct exposure to life-threatening events will continue to have a serious impact on the population. The general state of the inhabitants of the Gaza Strip was described as a form of alienation.⁶³⁴

1263. Many of the mental health problems are the result of years of conflict, living in poverty, scarcity and instability in the area and will probably continue until the root causes are eliminated. People, in particular children, live or grow up in a society under occupation, with constant episodes of violence and no sense of security or normalcy.

1264. The situation is compounded by the relative scarcity of qualified professionals and inadequate facilities. The Gaza Community Mental Health Programme has only about 40 members of staff specialized in mental health, including physicians, social researchers, nurses, as well as psychologists. According to Dr. al-Sarraj, this number is not sufficient to cover even the needs of Gaza City district, whereas for the entire population of the Gaza Strip a team of 300 specialists would be necessary.⁶³⁵

1265. Over the past two decades, the Gaza Community Mental Health Programme and others have worked to build resilience in people. They told the Mission that the recent military operations had wiped out their achievements. People suffering severe loss also detach themselves from reality, in a phenomenon called “numbness”. According to Dr. Tawahina, the general feeling among most people in Gaza is that they have been completely abandoned by the international community. This feeling of abandonment in turn increases their frustration, creating additional pain, and leads eventually to more violence and extremism. The Gaza Community Mental Health Programme studied children’s attitudes towards violence and found that, as a result of this situation, and especially when children had lost their parents and with them the ⁶³³ Dr. Ahmad Abu Tawahina, Gaza Community Mental Health Programme, public hearing, Gaza, 29 June 2009, available at: <http://www.un.org/webcast/unhrc/archive.asp?go=090629>.

⁶³⁴ Ibid.

⁶³⁵ Dr. Iyad al-Sarraj, public hearing, Gaza, 29 June 2009, available at: <http://www.un.org/webcast/unhrc/archive.asp?go=090629>.

associated protection and sense of security, they tended to look at “martyrs” and members of armed groups as adult role models instead.⁶³⁶

1266. A study conducted by the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) revealed that men also showed more symptoms of psychological trauma after the December-January military operations. Based on specialists’ reports, the Mission is of the view that this could in part be due to the additional stress that men face as heads of families in a male-dominated society when they are unable to fulfil their role as main breadwinners or to provide protection and security to their children, wives and other family members.⁶³⁷

1267. Based on previous experiences with emergencies, WHO expects the number of people with serious mental health disorders to increase by an average of 1 per cent above the baseline and with mild to moderate disorders by 5 to 10 per cent “provided that a protective environment is restored”.⁶³⁸

G. Education

1268. The Mission received information about the state of the education sector in the Gaza Strip. UNRWA operates one of the largest school systems in the Middle East and has been the main provider of basic education to Palestine refugees for nearly five decades. The Mission was greatly impressed by its activities and achievements. UNRWA runs 221 schools, while the Government runs 383. UNRWA schools are also a vehicle for health-monitoring and food/nutritional programmes. That Palestinians have high levels of education is largely the result of that work. By the same token, the Mission was shocked to learn how badly educational facilities and activities in the Gaza Strip have been affected as a result of the blockade and the recent military operations.

1269. Information and testimonies received by the Mission showed that the education system was affected in several ways by the restrictions imposed by the blockade. The lack of construction materials had halted all new construction. Repairs to the educational infrastructure also had to be postponed. Around 88 per cent of UNRWA schools and 82 per cent of Government schools operated on a shift system to cope with the demand. The lack of educational material and equipment hampered the ability to maintain teaching standards. This situation was causing a decline in attendance and performance at governmental schools.⁶³⁹

1270. The ban on the movement of people through the crossings affected not only university students planning to study or already undertaking studies abroad, but also the possibilities for academics and scholars to travel abroad on academic exchanges. Between July and September 2008 only 70 students managed to leave the Gaza Strip via Erez but hundreds saw their aspirations to study abroad truncated.

⁶³⁶ Meeting of the Mission with the Gaza Community Mental Health Programme, 4 June 2009.

⁶³⁷ United Nations, Voicing the Needs of Women and Men in Gaza, 2009, p. 32.

⁶³⁸ WHO report, p. 13.

⁶³⁹ UNRWA and the Association of International Development Agencies (AIDA), “The Gaza blockade: Children and education fact sheet”.

1271. The military operations destroyed or damaged at least 280 schools and kindergartens. Six of them were located in northern Gaza, affecting some 9,000 pupils, who had to be relocated. According to the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, 164 pupils and 12 teachers were killed during the military operations. Another 454 pupils and five teachers were injured. At UNRWA schools, 86 children and three teachers were killed, and 402 children and 14 teachers injured. During the military operations, 44 UNRWA schools were used as emergency shelters to cope with the more than 50,000 displaced individuals.

1272. Schools were generally closed for the duration of the hostilities, disrupting the study programme. After the ceasefire it was unclear how many students and teachers returned to schools but that number was reported to reach up to 90 per cent in UNRWA schools.⁶⁴⁰ Children and teachers reported situations of anxiety and trauma as a result of the extreme violence to which they had been exposed and the loss of relatives or friends. The Mission heard that the start of the military operations with air strikes at a time when schools were functioning exposed children to a heightened risk and filled them with fear and panic. Schools and the roads towards them occasionally remained unsafe because of the presence of explosive remnants of war. Two Palestinian children were killed by those explosives in Zeytoun shortly after the ceasefire was declared. The Mission heard reports that some children were injured by white phosphorus on their way to school.

1273. The Mission saw the destruction caused to the American School. It also saw the destruction caused at the Islamic University and in other university buildings that were destroyed or damaged. These were civilian, educational buildings and the Mission did not find any information about their use as a military facility or their contribution to a military effort that might have made them a legitimate target in the eyes of the Israeli armed forces.

1274. The Mission was also informed of indoctrination programmes allegedly introduced by the Gaza authorities, and of a process of ideological and political polarization. Such programmes have a high potential for imposing models of education at odds with human rights values and with a culture of peace and tolerance. In this regard, the Mission believes that efforts to incorporate human rights in the curricula should be encouraged by the relevant authorities.

H. Impact on women and children

1275. The attention of the Mission was drawn to the particular manner in which children and women had been affected by the blockade policies and the military operations. In its report, WHO took figures from PCHR: out of 1,417 persons killed, 313 were children and 116 women. It also takes figures from the Israeli armed forces that showed that 1,166 were killed, of whom 49 were women and 89 were under 16.⁶⁴¹ Among the 5,380 injured, 1,872 were children and 800 women.⁶⁴² The Mission directly investigated many incidents in which women and children had been killed as a result of deliberate or indiscriminate attacks by the Israeli armed forces.⁶⁴³

⁶⁴⁰ The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 33.

⁶⁴¹ WHO report, p. 10.

⁶⁴² The Palestinian National Early Recovery and Reconstruction Plan...

⁶⁴³ See chapters VII, X, XI and XIV.

WHO also reported that among the many injured people who crossed the Rafah border and were accepted for medical treatment in Egypt during the second week of the military operations there were 10 children showing a single bullet injury to the head and one with two.

1276. The Mission held interviews with a number of women and representatives of women's organizations and heard the testimony of Mariam Zaqout of the Culture and Free Thought Association.⁶⁴⁴ It heard that the blockade and the military operations had aggravated poverty, which particularly affected women, who must find food and other essentials for their families. Women were often the sole breadwinners (for instance, if male family members had died or been injured as a result of conflict or violence, or were imprisoned) but jobs were hard to come by. Over 300 women had been widowed as a result of the military operations and had become dependent on food and income assistance. In addition, women bore a greater social burden, having to deal with daily life made harsher by the crisis and, at the same time, provide security and care for injured family members and children, their own and others who have lost their parents. These responsibilities sometimes compelled them to conceal their own sufferings, so their concerns remained unaddressed.

1277. In the same interviews, the participants stated that women were particularly affected by the destruction of homes and the invasion of privacy. Having to live in tents without privacy or appropriate sanitary facilities added to their hardship. Moreover, the military operations had strained relations among family members. Psychological pressures on men and women, together with financial difficulties, led to family disputes, family violence and divorce. There were frequent disputes between widows and their in-laws regarding child custody and inheritance. Widows were also under increased pressure to get married again to be able to sustain themselves. Consequently, there was an increase in women seeking legal aid, as legal problems tended to become aggravated because of shortcomings in the law and fewer safeguards for the rights of women.⁶⁴⁵

1278. The particular manner in which the conflict affected women was dramatically illustrated for the Mission by the testimony of a woman of the al-Samouni family (see chap. XI). She had three children and was pregnant when her family and her house came under attack. She commented on how the children were scared and crying. She was distressed when recounting how her 10-month-old baby, whom she was carrying in her arms, was hungry but she did not have anything to give him to eat, and how she tried to feed him by chewing on a piece of bread, the only food available, and giving it to him. She also managed to get half a cup of water from an ill functioning tap. There were other babies and older children. She and her sister exposed themselves to danger by going out to search for food for them. Her husband, mother and sister were killed but she managed to survive. Her other son was wounded in the back, and she carried both out of the house.⁶⁴⁶

1279. Many women felt helpless and embarrassed at not being able to protect and care for their children. Others felt frustrated, invaded in their personal space and powerless when their houses

⁶⁴⁴ Public hearings, Gaza, 29 June 2009.

⁶⁴⁵ Meeting with women's organizations, 3 June 2009.

⁶⁴⁶ Mission interview with Mrs. Massouda Sobhia al-Samouni, Gaza, 3 June 2009.

and possessions were destroyed or vandalized. Those feelings contributed to their psychological suffering.⁶⁴⁷

1280. A UNFPA study conducted immediately after the December-January military operations reported a 40 per cent increase in miscarriages admitted to maternity wards, a 50 per cent increase in neonatal deaths, a rise in obstetric complications and anecdotal evidence of deaths or health complications because pregnant women were unable to reach hospital to deliver their babies.⁶⁴⁸ Women interviewed in the context of another UNFPA study expressed extreme fears for themselves and their loved ones. Associated symptoms included anxiety, panic attacks, feelings of insecurity, disturbed sleep and eating patterns, depression, sadness and fear of sudden death.⁶⁴⁹

1281. Adults and children showed signs of profound depression, while children suffered from insomnia and bed-wetting. Numerous testimonies received by the Mission highlight the presence of children in situations where houses were searched or occupied with force by Israeli soldiers, and when killings occurred.⁶⁵⁰ The Mission heard the testimony of a mother whose children, aged 3 to 16, had witnessed the killing of their father in their own house. With Israeli soldiers forcefully questioning their mother and uncle and vandalizing their house, the children asked their mother whether they would be killed as well. Their mother felt the only comfort she could give them was to tell them to say the Shehada, the prayer recited in the face of death.⁶⁵¹ Children were present in improvised shelters on United Nations premises, enduring the trauma of displacement as well as feelings of fear from the military attacks and of deep insecurity from having been attacked in their own homes or in a shelter that was expected to be safe. During its visits, the Mission saw many children living with their families in the ruins of their homes and in makeshift accommodation. The trauma for children having witnessed violence and often the killing of their own family members will no doubt be long-lasting. Mrs. Massouda Sobhia al-Samouni told the Mission that her son was still traumatized. He kept placing coins in his mouth and when she told him it was dangerous and he might die if he did so, he replied that he wanted to join his father.

1282. Some 30 per cent of children screened at UNRWA schools had mental health problems, while some 10 per cent of children had lost relatives or friends or lost their homes and ⁶⁴⁷ Culture and Free Thought Association and UNFPA, "Gaza crisis: Psychosocial consequences for women, youth and men", executive summary, 27 April 2009, p. 3.

⁶⁴⁸ UNFPA, "Gaza crisis: impact on reproductive health, especially maternal and newborn health and obstetric care", draft report, 10 February 2009.

⁶⁴⁹ Culture and Free Thought Association, "Gaza crisis: Psycho-social consequences for women", executive summary, 8 February 2009.

⁶⁵⁰ See, for example, chapters X and XI. See also the testimony of Mrs. Abir Hajji at the public hearing, Gaza, 6 June 2009, recounting the killing of her husband in the presence of her children.

⁶⁵¹ Mission interview with Mrs. Abir Hajji, Gaza, 3 June 2009. Mrs. Hajji also participated in the public hearings, Gaza, 28–29 June 2009.

possessions. WHO estimated that some 30,000 children would need continued psychological support and warned of the potential for many to grow up with aggressive attitudes and hatred.⁶⁵²

I. Persons with disabilities

1283. Information provided to the Mission showed that many of those who were injured during the Israeli military operations sustained permanent disabilities owing to the severity of their injuries and/or the lack of adequate and timely medical attention and rehabilitation. Gaza hospitals reportedly had to discharge patients too early so as to handle incoming emergencies. Other cases resulted in amputations or disfigurement. About 30 per cent of patients were expected to have long-term disabilities.⁶⁵³

1284. WHO reported that by mid-April 2009 the number of people with different types of permanent disability (e.g. brain injuries, amputations, spinal injuries, hearing deficiencies, mental health problems) as a result of the military operations was not yet known. It reported speculations that there might be some 1000 amputees; but information provided by the WHO office in Gaza and based on estimates by Handicap International indicated that around 200 persons underwent amputations.⁶⁵⁴

1285. While the exact number of people who will suffer permanent disabilities is still unknown, the Mission understands that many persons who sustained traumatic injuries during the conflict still face the risk of permanent disability owing to complications and inadequate follow-up and physical rehabilitation.⁶⁵⁵

1286. The Mission also heard moving accounts of families with disabled relatives whose disability had slowed their evacuation from a dangerous area or who lived with a constant fear that, in an emergency, their families would have to leave them behind because it would be too difficult to evacuate them.

1287. One testimony concerned a person whose electric wheelchair was lost after his house was targeted and destroyed. Since the residents were given very short notice of the impending attack, the wheelchair could not be salvaged and the person had to be taken to safety on a plastic chair carried by four people.

1288. The Mission also heard a testimony concerning a pregnant woman who was instructed by an Israeli soldier to evacuate her home with her children, but to leave behind a mentally disabled child, which she refused to do.

1289. Even in the relative safety of shelters, people with disabilities continued to be exposed to additional hardship, as these shelters were not equipped for their special needs. The Mission heard of the case of a person with a hearing disability who was sheltering in an UNRWA school, ⁶⁵² WHO report, p. 13.

⁶⁵³ The Humanitarian Monitor, No. 33.

⁶⁵⁴ WHO report, p. 11; Gaza Situation Report Feb - May 2009, WHO Gaza, provided to the Mission.

⁶⁵⁵ Gaza Situation report.

but was unable to communicate in sign language or understand what was happening and experienced sheer fear.

1290. Frequent disruptions in the power supply had a severe impact on the medical equipment needed by many people with disabilities. People using wheelchairs had to face additional hurdles when streets started piling up with the rubble from destroyed buildings and infrastructure.

1291. In addition, programmes for people with disabilities had to be closed down during the military operations and rehabilitation services stopped (for instance, organizations providing assistance were unable to access stocks of wheelchairs and other aids). Many social, educational, medical and psychological programmes have not yet fully resumed.⁶⁵⁶

J. Impact on humanitarian assistance provided by the United Nations

1292. The tightening of the blockade during the two months before the military operations entailed additional restrictions also for United Nations programmes and activities, in particular those of UNRWA, WFP and others that provide food and other forms of support. The Mission was informed that, as a result of the blockade and the Israeli limitations on the delivery of humanitarian assistance, the capacity of UNRWA to mitigate the effects of the military operations on the civilian population was reduced.⁶⁵⁷ As stated above, just days before the Israeli military operations started, UNRWA had to suspend its food assistance programmes and scale down other programmes.

1293. But the impact of the blockade also extended to several humanitarian projects that had been planned or were in progress and had to be stopped and postponed. Most of them were in health, sanitation, water and education.

1294. During the military operations, UNRWA workers and trucks were also hit, resulting in deaths and injuries. The Board of Inquiry established by the United Nations Secretary-General investigated a number of incidents in which United Nations facilities were targeted and issued a report determining responsibilities.⁶⁵⁸ The Mission is of the view that the factual findings made by the Board of Inquiry entail legal liability for those responsible (see below).

1295. The Mission learned that seven UNRWA staff members (none of them on duty), five job creation programme contractors (one on duty) and three contractors were killed; 21 other contractors were injured. In all, 57 UNRWA buildings were damaged by shelling or airstrikes, including 36 schools (six serving as emergency shelters), seven health centres, three sanitation offices, two warehouses and five other buildings.

1296. Thirty-five UNRWA vehicles, including three armoured vehicles, were damaged. From its remaining 321 vehicles, only 286 are operational and 7 are damaged beyond repair.

⁶⁵⁶ Meeting of the Mission with the Society for Disabled in the Gaza Strip, 30 June 2009.

⁶⁵⁷ Meeting of the Mission with UNRWA, 1 June 2009.

⁶⁵⁸ See Summary of the Report of the United Nations Headquarters Board of Inquiry.

1297. UNRWA informed the Mission that between 27 December and 19 January, 536 UNRWA trucks entered the Gaza Strip through the Kerem Shalom border crossing. By 21 January, 394 trucks had entered through Karni and 2089 through Kerem Shalom (including private, humanitarian and UNRWA trucks). UNRWA considered these amounts to be insufficient to meet the humanitarian needs of the population of the Gaza Strip.⁶⁵⁹

1298. The Israeli Government stated that “from the commencement of the Gaza Operation and for its duration” a total of 1,511 trucks with supplies from Israel as well as diesel, cooking gas and other fuel were allowed into the Gaza Strip. It would appear that some 60 per cent of these supplies were foodstuffs. The Israeli Government states that (presumably during the same period) it also coordinated the passage of 706 trucks carrying donations from international organizations and various countries.⁶⁶⁰ Information from UNRWA suggests that these quantities were irrelevant given the situation prevailing during the military operation and the local needs. For instance, although fuel for the power plant was let in, it was inadequate, forcing the power plant to shut down and causing 16-hour power cuts in some areas. Israel also reported allowing in 2,277,000 litres of diesel during the military operations, but according to UNRWA records only 199,400 litres were allowed in, while OCHA records suggest only 92,000 litres were allowed in, compared to 6,628,400 litres in January 2007.⁶⁶¹

1299. The Israeli Government also provided information about medical supplies that were brought into the Gaza Strip, but the figures are imprecise or incomplete as it was unclear what unit of measure was being used. In addition, many of the agencies listed were not actually bringing in medical supplies. For instance, its report lists that WFP brought in “3,611” medical supplies, but information made available to the Mission indicated that WFP was bringing in only flour and hygiene kits.

K. Legal analysis

1300. Obligations under international humanitarian law are relevant for the assessment of the facts described above. As mentioned earlier, the Fourth Geneva Convention as well as provisions of Additional Protocol I reflecting customary international law apply to the actions of Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory before and during the military operations. The protections owed under international humanitarian law to the civilian population of the Gaza Strip by all parties to the conflict include the duty to allow the free passage of humanitarian medical supplies, as well as consignments of essential foodstuffs and clothing for children, pregnant women and mothers at the earliest opportunity (article 23 of the Fourth Geneva Convention). Article 70 of Additional Protocol I provides that parties to a conflict are obliged to allow the passage of articles that are essential for the civilian population, at the earliest opportunity and without delay.

⁶⁵⁹ By 1 February UNRWA was providing food assistance to 900,000 registered Palestine refugees, 504,000 of them children, in the Gaza Strip. There are 1,048,125 refugees in the Gaza Strip (74 per cent of the population), see UNRWA, “Fact sheet: Consequences of the conflict in the Gaza Strip 27 December 2008- 18 January 2009”.

⁶⁶⁰ “The operation in Gaza...”, para. 271.

⁶⁶¹ OCHA also reported that in January 2009 no imports of petrol to Gaza were registered, compared to 1,522,250 litres in January 2007; 915,310 kilograms of cooking gas was imported in January 2009, compared to 5,238,030 in January 2007; and 3,760,400 litres of industrial diesel, compared to 8,370,290 in January 2007.

1301. The relevant provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention relating to the duties of an occupying Power should also be taken into consideration, in particular the obligations contained in articles 50 (duty to facilitate the working of care and education institutions), 55 (duty to ensure food and medical supplies to the population), 56 (duty to ensure and maintain medical and hospital establishments and services), 59 (duty to agree on relief schemes if the occupied territory is not well supplied) and 60 (duty to continue performing obligations even if third parties provide relief consignments). Several provisions of Additional Protocol I reflecting customary international law are also relevant here, including articles 51 and 52, which prohibit attacks on civilians and on civilian objects, and article 54, which prohibits the destruction of objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population.

1302. Access to adequate food, shelter and clothing, as part of an adequate standard of living, are human rights recognized in article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The same instrument recognizes the rights to education and to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health (art. 12). The content of these rights and the corresponding State duties has been clarified by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Convention on the Rights of the Child protects the child's right to life, survival and development (art. 6) and to be protected from all forms of mental or physical violence (art. 19), to the highest standard of health (art. 24), to an adequate standard of living (art. 27) and to education (arts. 28 and 29). Although these instruments protect women and men, girls and boys alike, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women adds more specification and scope to those obligations with regard to women. All these human rights obligations are applicable to Israel with respect to its actions in the Gaza Strip since they apply also in situations of armed conflict.

1303. Some rights contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights are subject to progressive realization. This means that they can be achieved only over time. States have an obligation to move as expeditiously and effectively as possible towards that goal. Deliberate retrogressive measures are permitted only under stringent conditions.⁶⁶²

1304. The Mission recalls in this regard its analysis of the Israeli objectives and strategies during the military operations in chapter XVI. There the Mission referred to statements made by Deputy Prime Minister Eli Yishai on 6 January 2009: "It [should be] possible to destroy Gaza, so they will understand not to mess with us". He added that "it is a great opportunity to demolish thousands of houses of all the terrorists, so they will think twice before they launch rockets". The Mission also referred to the so-called Dahiya doctrine, which requires widespread destruction as a means of deterrence and seems to have been put into practice. These objectives and strategies should be kept in mind with regard to the following analysis.

1305. The Mission considers that the closure of or the restrictions imposed on border crossings by Israel in the immediate period before the military operations subjected the local population to extreme hardship and deprivations that are inconsistent with their protected status. The restrictions on the entry of foodstuffs, medical supplies, agricultural and industrial input, including industrial fuel, together with the restrictions on the use of land near the border and on fishing in the sea have resulted in widespread poverty, increased dependence on food and other assistance, increased unemployment and economic paralysis. The Mission can conclude only that Israel has and continues to violate its obligations as an occupying Power under the Fourth Geneva Convention.

⁶⁶² General comment No. 3 (1990), para 9.

1306. The Mission has given consideration to the argument put forward by the Israeli Government that the above policies and restrictions are being imposed as a form of sanction. However, such blanket sanctions are not permitted under international law. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has addressed economic sanctions and their effects on the enjoyment of economic and social rights, and held:

[...] whatever the circumstances, such sanctions should always take full account of the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [and]

[...] it is essential to distinguish between the basic objective of applying political and economic pressure upon the governing elite of the country to persuade them to conform to international law, and the collateral infliction of suffering upon the most vulnerable groups within the targeted country.⁶⁶³

1307. In respect to the right to water, the Committee stated: “States parties should refrain at all times from imposing embargoes or similar measures that prevent the supply of water, as well as goods and services essential for securing the right to water.” Similar considerations apply to food and health services and goods.⁶⁶⁴

1308. The Mission also notes that reprisals and collective penalties are prohibited under international humanitarian law.

1309. The Mission has considered the question of military security. As serious as the situation that arises when rockets and mortars are fired on or near border crossings may be, the Mission considers that it does not justify a policy of collective punishment of the civilian population of the Gaza Strip. The Mission is aware of the Government of Israel’s declaration of the Gaza Strip as a “hostile territory”. Again, for the Mission, such a declaration does not relieve Israel of its obligations towards the civilian population of the Gaza Strip under international humanitarian law.

1310. Moreover, the Mission takes note that following the decision of the Supreme Court of Israel in what is known as the Fuel and electricity case,⁶⁶⁵ Israel reconsidered its obligations relating to the amounts and types of humanitarian supplies that it allowed into the Gaza Strip to meet “vital humanitarian needs”. Whatever that somewhat vague standard may be, the Mission stresses that Israel is bound to ensure supplies to meet the humanitarian needs of the population, to the fullest extent possible.

⁶⁶³ General comment No. 8 (1997), paras. 4 and 16.

⁶⁶⁴ General comments No. 15 (2002) and No. 12 (1999), para. 8.

⁶⁶⁵ Gaber et al. v. The Prime Minister, case No. 9132/07.

1311. In sum, the Mission restates its view that Israel has not fulfilled its duties as an occupying Power in relation to the Gaza Strip.

1312. Again, reference is made to the blockade and Israel's obligation to respect, protect, facilitate or provide, to the extent possible, for the enjoyment of the whole range of economic, social and cultural rights in the Gaza Strip. At the very least, Israel is "under an obligation not to raise any obstacle to the exercise of such rights in those fields where competence has been transferred to Palestinian authorities".⁶⁶⁶ Israel's actions have led to a severe deterioration and regression in the levels of realization of those rights. Consequently, the Mission finds that Israel has failed to comply with those obligations.

1313. The Mission has also given consideration to the extent and type of military operations conducted by Israel in the Gaza Strip between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009. As mentioned earlier, provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention and of Additional Protocol I that reflect international customary law apply to those operations. Their obligations include that under the Fourth Geneva Convention to give particular protection and respect to the infirm and expectant mothers (art. 16), to respect and protect civilian hospitals and medical personnel (arts. 18 and 20), and to allow the free passage of all consignments of medical and hospital objects, food and clothing subject to certain conditions (art. 23). The Mission will address here only respect for the provisions contained in article 23, which it considers to be part of customary international law. With regard to Additional Protocol I, the Mission will address here Israel's compliance with article 54.

1314. The Government of Israel has provided information about the actions it took to ensure the supply of humanitarian assistance to the Gaza Strip and to ensure that medical relief and rescue as well as essential facilities would function during the hostilities. These actions allegedly comprised: the continuous supply of humanitarian aid through the crossings; coordination of evacuation within the Gaza Strip and outside; a unilateral suspension of military operations each day to enable the resupply of assistance for the population and actions to ensure the functioning of essential infrastructure in the Gaza Strip. To this end, the Government of Israel reported that it established a number of coordinating and liaison bodies with Palestinian authorities and organizations, the United Nations agencies on the ground and humanitarian agencies, such as ICRC. The Government also reported that a number of trucks carrying humanitarian goods from Israel and from other countries, including from international organizations, were given passage.

1315. In response, the Mission draws attention to the fact that no consideration was given to the situation that prevailed in the Gaza Strip before the military operations. In particular, the Mission notes that the amounts and types of food, medical and hospital items and clothing were wholly insufficient to meet the humanitarian needs of the population. Given that since the end of the operations the number of truckloads allowed through the crossings has again fallen, the humanitarian supplies are even less sufficient.

1316. At the height of the military operations, several NGOs appealed to the Government of Israel to ensure a sufficient supply of electricity and fuel to the Gaza Strip to allow for the functioning of vital services.⁶⁶⁷ At the same time, two petitions were filed with the Supreme Court of Israel on 7 and 9 of January, respectively, to order the Government to ensure that the Israeli armed forces did not attack ambulances and medical personnel and that sufficient electricity and fuel were supplied to enable hospitals, water and sanitation systems to function during the conflict. On 19 January, as military operations ended, the Supreme Court ruled denying both petitions.⁶⁶⁸

⁶⁶⁶ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion of 9 July 2004, I.C.J. Reports 2004, para. 112.

1317. The Government of Israel seems to see the hardship and suffering of Palestinians as an inevitable consequence of a situation of war. The Government's statement that "civilian populations inevitably and tragically suffer during a time of armed combat, particularly where the combat operations take place in densely populated urban areas"⁶⁶⁹ may be correct, but this does not relieve Israel from its obligations under international humanitarian law.

1318. From the facts it ascertained and the foregoing analysis, the Mission finds that Israel has violated its obligation to allow the free passage of all consignments of medical and hospital stores and objects, food and clothing (article 23 of the Fourth Geneva Convention).

1319. Article 54 of Additional Protocol I contains the prohibition:

to attack, destroy, remove or render useless objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, such as foodstuffs, agricultural areas..., drinking water installations and supplies and irrigation works for the specific purpose of denying them for their sustenance value to the civilian population or to the adverse party, whatever the motive [...].

The Mission regards this rule as reflective of international customary law. In this context, Israel's obligations to respect, protect and facilitate or provide for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, and its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women are also relevant, and have been undermined by the blockade and restrictions on the Gaza Strip, as well as the actions taken during the military operations.

1320. With regard to article 54 (2) of Additional Protocol I, the Mission recalls its analysis included in chapter XIII on the destruction of buildings, food production and industry. From the facts ascertained and the circumstances described in the present chapter and in chapters XIII and XVI, the Mission concludes that in the destruction or damaging of greenhouses, agricultural land, water wells for irrigation and irrigation networks there was the specific purpose of denying their use for the sustenance of the civilian population of the Gaza Strip. Furthermore, this appears to be done as part of a policy of collective punishment of the civilian population as elaborated below.

⁶⁶⁷ An excerpt from the Hebrew appeal is available in an English press release at: <http://www.gisha.org/UserFiles/File/Press%20Materials/HR%20groups%20-%20resumption%20of%20gaza%20fuel%20supplies%201-1-09%20-%20online%20version.pdf>

⁶⁶⁸ Physicians for Human Rights et. al. v. The Prime Minister et. al., case No. 201/09, and Gisha Legal Centre for Freedom of Movement et al. v. Minister of Defense, case No. 248/09, Judgement of 19 January 2009, para. 26, available at http://elyon1.court.gov.il/files_eng/09/010/002/n07/09002010.n07.pdf

⁶⁶⁹ "The operation in Gaza...", para. 277.

1321. With respect to the right to water, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights stated:

The obligation to respect [the right to water] requires that States parties refrain from [...] limiting access to, or destroying, water services and infrastructure as a punitive measure, for example, during armed conflicts in violation of international humanitarian law.⁶⁷⁰

1322. This language is similar to that of a resolution adopted by consensus at the 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent that calls upon parties to a conflict to “take all feasible measures to avoid in their military operations, all acts liable to destroy or damage water sources.”⁶⁷¹

1323. Similar considerations apply to the right to adequate housing.⁶⁷² The widespread destruction of residential housing, water wells and pipe networks cannot be seen as an inevitable or necessary incidence of military hostilities. Israel had a duty to distinguish between civilian and military objects and not to direct any attacks at civilians or civilian objects. The Mission has not received any information suggesting that all the houses destroyed served as hideouts for Hamas fighters or were booby-trapped and does not accept that this was the case. The patterns of destruction described in the present chapter and in others reveal that many houses were fired at or demolished after their occupants had been ordered to leave them. There was then no clear necessity for Israeli soldiers to occupy such properties or to destroy them. They were in effective control of the area. In other cases, houses were demolished with bulldozers during the last few days of the military operations when, again, Israeli forces were in total control of the areas in which the houses were located. Military necessity and the need to prevent rockets being fired from the houses into Israel do not seem to the Mission plausible reasons for this widespread destruction. These considerations apply equally to the destruction of agricultural land and greenhouses, which are so important for local food security.

1324. From the facts available to it and by virtue of the foregoing considerations, the Mission believes that the destruction of private residential houses, water wells, water tanks, agricultural land and greenhouses violates Israel’s duties to respect the right of the people in the Gaza Strip to an adequate standard of living (including food, housing and water).

1325. The Mission is aware of the statement of the Committee on the Rights of the Child that many of the fundamental rights of the child “have been blatantly violated during this crisis”.⁶⁷³ On the basis of this finding and on the facts as described above, the Mission also considers that ⁶⁷⁰ General comment No. 15 (2002), para. 21.

⁶⁷¹ Customary International Humanitarian Law..., p. 150.

⁶⁷² Submission to the Mission made by COHRE.

⁶⁷³ Committee on the Rights of the Child, “Effects of the Gaza conflict on children ‘devastating’”, statement, 12 January 2009.

Israel has violated its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child during its military operations in the Gaza Strip and in particular of article 24 (1), stipulating that “States Parties recognize the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and to facilities for the treatment of illness and rehabilitation of health. States Parties shall strive to ensure that no child is deprived of his or her right of access to such health-care services”; article 38 (1), stipulating that “States Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for rules of international humanitarian law applicable to them in armed conflicts which are relevant to the child”; and article 38 (4), stipulating that “States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure protection and care of children who are affected by an armed conflict”.

1326. The Mission also notes that Israel is in continuing violation of article 39 of the Convention in that, by actively preventing reconstruction efforts, it does not fulfil its obligations to “take all appropriate measures to promote physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of a child victim of: [...] armed conflicts. Such recovery and reintegration shall take place in an environment which fosters the health, self-respect and dignity of the child”.

1327. The Mission is also aware of the statement made by the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women that “the human rights of women and children in Gaza, in particular to peace and security, free movement, livelihood and health, have been seriously violated during this military engagement.”⁶⁷⁴ It concurs with this statement. The Mission also notes that the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, article 11, requires States parties to take “all necessary measures to ensure the protection and safety of persons with disabilities in situations of risk, including situations of armed conflict”. Israel has signed, but not yet ratified, this Convention and is thus under an obligation not to defeat its object and purpose.

1328. The Mission also considered whether the Gaza population was subject to collective punishment or penalty. According to article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, “collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited”. Article 75 (2) (d) of Additional Protocol I includes collective punishment as an act that is “prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever”. Reprisals against protected persons are also prohibited under article 33. These prohibitions are part of customary international law.⁶⁷⁵

1329. The Mission notes that the scope of collective penalties goes beyond physical or criminal sanctions to encompass also “sanctions and harassment of any sort, administrative, by police action or otherwise”.⁶⁷⁶ The cumulative effect of the blockade policies, with the consequent hardship and deprivation among the whole population, and of the military operations coupled with statements by Israel made to the effect that the whole of the Gaza Strip was a “hostile territory” strongly suggest that there was an intent to subject the Gaza population to conditions such that they would be induced into withdrawing their support from Hamas. This was apparently confirmed by the then Minister of Foreign Affairs of Israel commenting on the ⁶⁷⁴ United Nations, UN committee says women’s rights were seriously violated during Gaza conflict, press release, 6 February 2009.

⁶⁷⁵ See Customary International Humanitarian Law..., p. 374.

⁶⁷⁶ ICRC Commentary to Additional Protocol I, p. 3055.

decision by the Supreme Court to uphold the fuel cuts: “The Palestinians need to understand that business is not usual, I mean there is no equation in which Israeli children will be under attacks by Kassam rockets on a daily basis and life in the Gaza Strip can be as usual”.⁶⁷⁷

1330. The above statements should also be seen in the light of what the Mission has identified as the objectives and strategies of Israel before and during the operations (see chap. XVI). Israel, rather than fighting the Palestinian armed groups operating in Gaza in a targeted way, has chosen to punish the whole Gaza Strip and the population in it with economic, political and military sanctions. This has been seen and felt by many people with whom the Mission spoke as a form of collective punishment inflicted on the Palestinians because of their political choices.

1331. The facts ascertained by the Mission, the conditions resulting from the deliberate actions of the Israeli armed forces and the declared policies of the Israeli Government – as they were presented by its authorized representatives – with regard to the Gaza Strip before, during and after the military operation, cumulatively indicate the intention to inflict collective punishment on the people of the Gaza Strip. The Mission, therefore, finds a violation of the provisions of article 33 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

1332. The Mission has also considered the question of whether the crime of persecution as a form of crime against humanity had been committed against the civilian population of the Gaza Strip. To establish that a crime against humanity was committed it would have to be established that there was a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population that blatantly discriminated and infringed a fundamental right recognized under international customary law or treaty, and was carried out deliberately with the intention so to discriminate.⁶⁷⁸

The crime of persecution encompasses a variety of acts, including, inter alia, those of physical, economic or judicial nature, that violate an individual’s right to the equal enjoyment of his basic rights.⁶⁷⁹

1333. In Prosecutor v. Kupreskic judgement, the Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia describes the types of acts that would constitute the crime of persecution in the following terms:

[...]

(c) Persecution can also involve a variety of other discriminatory acts, involving attacks on political, social, and economic rights. [...]

⁶⁷⁷ Global Security, “Israel’s Supreme Court upholds fuel cuts to Gaza”, 30 November 2007, available at: <http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/library/news/2007/11/mil-071130-voa02.htm>. The issue is also addressed in the submission to the Mission by Diakonia.

⁶⁷⁸ Prosecutor v. Kunarac et al., International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Trial Chamber, case No. IT-96-23-T and No. IT-96-23/1-T, Judgement of 22 February 2001, para. 431.

⁶⁷⁹ Prosecutor v. Tadić, International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Trial Chamber, case No. IT-94-1-T, Judgement of 7 May 1997, para. 710.

(d) Persecution is commonly used to describe a series of acts rather than a single act. Acts of persecution will usually form part of a policy or at least of a patterned practice, and must be regarded in their context. [...]

(e) [...] discriminatory acts charged as persecution must not be considered in isolation. Some of the acts mentioned above may not, in and of themselves, be so serious as to constitute a crime against humanity. For example, restrictions placed on a particular group to curtail their rights to participate in particular aspects of social life (such as visits to public parks, theatres or libraries) constitute discrimination, which is in itself a reprehensible act; however, they may not in and of themselves amount to persecution. These acts must not be considered in isolation but examined in their context and weighed for their cumulative effect.⁶⁸⁰

1334. The Mission has described above a series of acts that deprive Palestinians in the Gaza Strip from their means of subsistence, employment, housing and water. Palestinians are further denied freedom of movement and their right to leave and enter their own country. Later the report will address the extent to which Palestinian rights to access a court of law and an effective remedy are limited or denied by Israeli laws (see chap. XXVII)

1335. From the facts available to it, the Mission is of the view that some of the actions of the Government of Israel might justify a competent court finding that crimes against humanity have been committed.

XVIII. THE CONTINUING DETENTION OF ISRAELI SOLDIER GILAD SHALIT

1336. The Mission notes the continued detention of Gilad Shalit, a member of the Israeli armed forces, captured in 2006 by Palestinian armed groups during a cross-border operation. In reaction to the capture, the Israeli Government ordered a number of incursions to attack important infrastructure in the Gaza Strip as well as Palestinian Authority offices. This was followed by the arrest of eight Palestinian Government ministers and 26 members of the Palestinian Legislative Council by the Israeli security forces (see chap. II).

1337. Israeli Government officials have repeatedly stated that the easing of the blockade on the Gaza Strip (see chaps. V and XVII) is linked to the release of Gilad Shalit. In February 2009, it appeared that the Israeli Government had dropped its demand for Palestinian militants to release Gilad Shalit before it would end the blockade.⁶⁸¹ However, the then Deputy Prime Minister stated shortly after that "Israel is facing a serious humanitarian crisis, and it is called Gilad Shalit, and... until he is returned home, not only will we not allow more cargo to reach the residents of Gaza, we will even diminish it." Israel's then Prime Minister also stated that "we will not reopen the border crossings [into Gaza] and assist Hamas so long as Gilad Shalit is in ⁶⁸⁰ Prosecutor v. Kupreškić et al., case No. IT-95-16-T, Judgement of 14 January 2000, para. 615.

⁶⁸¹ Agence France Presse quoted by France 24 – "Israel drops Shalit release from truce demands, Hamas claims", 6 February 2009.

their brutal prison."⁶⁸² According to the CBS News Channel, this position was reiterated by the current Israeli Prime Minister in July 2009.⁶⁸³

1338. In October 2008, a Hamas spokesman stated that “the Shalit case is dependent on prisoners swap... He will never be released if the Israeli occupation does not release Palestinian prisoners whom Hamas wants free....”⁶⁸⁴

1339. The Mission is aware that negotiations, through intermediaries, continue with regard to the exchange of prisoners between the Israeli Government and Hamas representatives.

1340. The Mission asked the Gaza authorities to confirm the status of Gilad Shalit. In their reply, which the Mission considered to be unsatisfactory, the Gaza authorities denied being involved in any way with the capture and detention of Gilad Shalit and stated that they are not in possession of any information regarding his current status.

1341. During its investigations in the Gaza Strip, the Mission heard testimonies indicating that during the military operations of December 2008 – January 2009, Israeli soldiers questioned captured Palestinians about the whereabouts of Gilad Shalit (see chap. XV).

1342. Gilad Shalit’s father, Noam Shalit, appeared before the Mission at the public hearing held in Geneva on 6 July 2009.⁶⁸⁵ He informed the Mission of his extreme concern about the condition of his son, who has not been able to communicate with his family and has not been allowed to receive ICRC visits. Mr. Shalit expressed concern about the health and psychological status of his son after more than three years of captivity and appealed for his release.

Legal findings and conclusions

1343. The Mission is of the opinion that, as a soldier who belongs to the Israeli armed forces and who was captured during an enemy incursion into Israel, Gilad Shalit meets the requirements for prisoner-of-war status under the Third Geneva Convention. As such, he should be protected, treated humanely and be allowed external communication as appropriate according to that Convention. ICRC should be allowed to visit him without delay. Information about his condition should also be provided promptly to his family.

1344. The Mission is concerned by the declarations referred to above, made by various Israeli officials, who have indicated the intention of maintaining the blockade of the Gaza Strip until the release of Gilad Shalit. The Mission is of the opinion that this would constitute collective punishment of the civilian population of the Gaza Strip.

⁶⁸² Amnesty International, “Detainees used as bargaining chips by both sides in Israel/Gaza conflict”, 20 March 2009.

⁶⁸³ CBS News Channel, “Gaza blockade remains until Shalit freed”, 30 July 2009.

⁶⁸⁴ “Detainees used as bargaining chips...”.

⁶⁸⁵ Mission’s public hearings: <http://www.un.org/webcast/unhrc/archive.asp?go=090706>.

SECTION B: INTERNAL VIOLENCE

XIX. INTERNAL VIOLENCE AND TARGETING OF FATAH AFFILIATES BY SECURITY SERVICES UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE GAZA AUTHORITIES

1345. The Mission has received reports and allegations of violations committed in Gaza by the security services in the period under inquiry. It has heard some of those allegations first-hand and investigated them by comparing the accounts it received with reports of domestic and international human rights organizations.

1346. From the beginning of 2006, when Hamas won the majority of seats in the Palestinian Legislative Council, violence between competing Palestinian political groups in the Gaza Strip escalated. Armed clashes periodically erupted between the security forces affiliated with the two main political groups – Fatah and Hamas – and culminated in June 2007, when Hamas seized control of the Palestinian Authority’s civil and security institutions of the Gaza Strip.⁶⁸⁶

1347. During the six months preceding the Israeli military operations in Gaza of December 2008-January 2009, reports of deaths in suspicious circumstances and abuses by the security services reporting to the Gaza authorities continued to be documented by domestic monitoring mechanisms, including by the Independent Commission for Human Rights (ICHR).⁶⁸⁷

1348. Between June and December 2008, ICHR received 45 complaints from citizens alleging that they were subjected to torture while being detained or interrogated. All these complaints were lodged against the Ministry of Interior, the police, the military intelligence, the general intelligence and the internal security services of the Gaza authorities, as well as al-Qassam Brigades.

1349. During the same period, ICHR received about 250 complaints from citizens that security agencies (namely the internal security and the police) detained them without respecting legally prescribed procedures. In particular, ICHR reported that no arrest warrants from the competent authorities were presented to detainees and that the security services searched civilian houses without having obtained the relevant search warrants. ICHR reported that family visits to detainees were denied, especially in the al-Saraya and al-Mashtal detention and interrogation centres of the internal security agency. In addition, detainees were not brought before the judicial ⁶⁸⁶ Non-governmental organizations reported that members of the security forces and armed groups belonging to both groups “committed grave human rights abuses and displayed a flagrant disregard for the safety of the civilian population.” “Both sides killed captured rivals and abducted scores of members of rival groups and held them hostage, to be exchanged for friends and relatives held by their rivals.” See “Occupied Palestinian Territories torn apart...”.

⁶⁸⁷ The Independent Commission for Human Rights is an independent Palestinian institution established in 1993 by Presidential Decree with a broad mandate in accordance with national and international norms. This mandate gives it the authority to deal with human rights violations; complaints of abuse of power submitted by citizens; education and promotion; monitoring; and generally integrating human rights into Palestinian legislation and practices. The Mission was impressed by the outstanding work of the institutions in both Gaza and the West Bank. See ICHR, “Monthly reports on violations of HR” (June to December 2008), available at: <http://www.ichr.ps/etemplate.php?id=12>.

authorities within the legally prescribed period. According to ICHR, the security services also continued to detain citizens with arrest warrants issued by the military justice authority.

1350. Many leaders of the Fatah movement as well as the Governors of Khan Yunis and Gaza were at the time of drafting this report still in detention at the al-Mashtal detention and interrogation centre.

1351. In the course of its investigations in Gaza, the Mission obtained information from international and domestic organizations and from individuals in Gaza about violence against political opponents by the security services that report to the Gaza authorities. The Israeli attacks, including the aerial strikes targeting police stations and the main prison in Gaza City (see chap. VII), created chaos, making it impossible to independently verify initial reports about violations by the security services. Towards the end of the military operations, however, domestic human rights organizations started to verify such allegations, including by analysing information from hospitals that they had received bodies of persons who had apparently not been killed in the Israeli attacks.

1352. According to both domestic and international human rights organizations, members of the security services and unidentified gunmen killed between 29 and 32 Gaza residents between the beginning of the Israeli military operations and 27 February.⁶⁸⁸ Among these, between 17 and 22 detainees, who had been at al-Saraya detention facility on 28 December and had fled following an Israeli aerial attack, were killed in seemingly extrajudicial or summary executions, some of them while seeking medical assistance in hospitals (see chap. VII).

1353. Not all those killed after escaping detention were Fatah affiliates, detained for political reasons, or charged with collaborating with the enemy. Some of the escapees had been convicted of serious crimes, such as drug-dealing or murder, and had been sentenced to death.⁶⁸⁹ Regardless of the intended scope of the Israeli attack on the prison, the effect was to create a chaotic situation that, according to some domestic observers,⁶⁹⁰ was exploited by some elements in the security services.

1354. During the course of its work in Gaza, the Mission heard first-hand accounts of violations against Fatah affiliates committed during the period of the Israeli military operations. Some of the witnesses who were interviewed by the Mission were severely distressed and asked that their identity not be disclosed for fear of retaliation. The Mission questioned the witnesses and found them to be credible. The following cases are among those reported to the Mission and are based on information it gathered from a variety of sources.

⁶⁸⁸ See Under Cover of War...; ICHR, "Monthly report on human rights and freedoms in the PNA-controlled territory", January 2009, available at: <http://www.ichr.ps/pdfs/eMRV-1-09.pdf>; PCHR, "Special report: inter-Palestinian human rights violations in the Gaza Strip", 3 February 2009, available at: http://www.pchrgaza.org/files/Reports/English/pdf_spec/Increase_rep.pdf.

⁶⁸⁹ No death sentence has been carried out since the Hamas takeover. Death sentences must be approved by the Palestinian Authority's President, who has not approved any of these sentences since Hamas took control of the administration of justice in Gaza. The last official execution was carried out in 2005 by firing squad.

⁶⁹⁰ Mission interview with a civil society activist, Gaza City, June 2009.

1355. One of the individuals killed following their escape from the damaged al-Saraya prison was a Fatah affiliate who had been arrested and detained long before the Israeli military operations in Gaza. For about two weeks his family made several unsuccessful enquiries with different security services to discover his whereabouts. After finally tracing him, the family was able to visit him in the detention facility run by the internal security and saw that he was in poor health as the likely result of torture and inadequate detention conditions. He was reportedly not able to speak freely while in detention.

1356. He was still in al-Saraya prison on 28 December 2008, when it was hit during an Israeli aerial bombardment. His dead body was later found with signs of bullet wounds at al-Shifa hospital in Gaza City. The family was told that he had been shot dead by unknown persons. Independent sources consulted by the Mission seem to indicate that the victim had fled from al-Saraya detention facility after the aerial attack and had been wounded in the attack itself or shot by the prison staff trying to prevent detainees from escaping.⁶⁹¹

1357. The Mission received a number of reports of violent attacks against individuals affiliated with Fatah⁶⁹² by armed men who broke into their homes. In one incident,⁶⁹³ a group of persons claiming to be police officers knocked at the door of a family residence in Gaza City. The family was confronted by a group of 7 to 10 men wearing civilian clothes, most of them masked. They took one member of the family outside. When they brought him back roughly half an hour later, he appeared to have been beaten violently with metal pipes. He died of his injuries about a month later.⁶⁹⁴

1358. In another incident reported to the Mission, a group of 10 to 12 masked men wearing military uniforms broke into the residence of an individual who used to work for the preventive security under the Palestinian Authority before the Hamas takeover. When the family tried to resist attempts to capture him, the masked men started shooting indiscriminately, killing one member of the family and injuring 11 others. After the shooting, the masked men fled. According to the information provided to the Mission, when the injured were transferred to al-

⁶⁹¹ The Mission ascertained that on 28 December 2008, the second day of the air strikes by Israel, about 200 to 300 prisoners were still held in the facility. Most of the almost 700 prisoners had been released in the previous days. According to a Human Rights Watch report based on the testimony of prisoners, “authorities ... kept in custody roughly 115 alleged collaborators with Israel, about 70 Fatah supporters held on various charges, and some persons convicted of criminal offences who had been sentenced to death. Some of the remaining detainees escaped the following day when Israel bombed the prison, but were subsequently tracked down and killed by masked gunmen. The ICHR documented 20 cases of escaped prisoners being shot and killed by masked gunmen from December 28 to January 31; at least 12 of the victims had been detained in the prison for allegedly ‘collaborating with the enemy.’ Seventeen of the 29 people killed by gunmen that the Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR) reported from December 28 to February 27 were prisoners and detainees who had fled the prison compound after Israel’s attack, including 13 men sentenced to death for collaboration with Israel, three convicted of common crimes, and one man awaiting trial.” (Under Cover of War....). The Gaza authorities informed the Mission (in correspondence of July 2009) that only 11 persons accused or convicted of criminal offences remained in their custody and were transferred “under supervision” to a residential apartment. See also chap. VIII.

⁶⁹² Dates and other identifying information have been removed to protect sources.

⁶⁹³ Mission interviews, Gaza, June 2009.

⁶⁹⁴ “In total, Palestinian human rights groups documented nine deaths by torture or severe beating in Gaza in January, February and March 2009”. Under Cover of War....

Shifa hospital, members of the security services there prevented medical staff from providing assistance.

1359. The Mission was informed that – although serious – this was only one of many incidents in which this family had been targeted by Hamas operatives. One year earlier, a member of the family had been abducted and shot in the legs.

1360. The Mission was also informed of an incident in which a group of armed, masked men broke into the house of a Fatah supporter in Gaza City, abducted him and took him to a nearby location, where he was tortured and shot in the leg. He was reportedly left unconscious and rescued by neighbours. The ordeal reportedly lasted about one hour. The same individual had previously been arrested by members of the security services and kept in detention for a month and a half. He was released only after signing a pledge not to participate in Fatah political celebrations or occasions.

1361. The Mission was informed that, in another incident, three armed, masked men wearing symbols of al-Qassam Brigades broke into the residence in Gaza City of an individual who is a Fatah supporter and on the payroll of a Fatah-controlled institution. The men started beating everyone inside, including a child, and were screaming insults. All the males were then reportedly made to go outside – where other masked men were waiting – and were beaten with metal bars and with rifle butts. After this, the masked men took one of the men to a nearby location, where they again beat him very violently. While he was being beaten, the masked men reportedly kept insulting him, accusing him of collaborating with Israel and calling him a traitor. In response to a question by the Mission, a witness stated that he had the feeling that there was a clear chain of command among the group of masked men. Shortly before meeting the Mission, the same individual had been summoned by the internal security in Gaza along with other Fatah affiliates and kept for four hours at an internal security detention centre in Gaza City before being released.

1362. Similarly, a group of people who were identified as belonging to the internal security stormed the residence of an individual in Gaza City and beat members of the family. The group was composed of masked men who left only after shooting him in the leg. The victim was allegedly prevented by members of the security services from getting treatment at al-Shifa hospital for his injuries. He had previously been arrested and detained by members of the security services. During his detention, he was allegedly subjected to different forms of torture, including beatings, shabah,⁶⁹⁵ electric shocks and sleep deprivation. His captors did not reportedly question him or levy specific charges against him. Finally, towards the end of his detention, he was formally accused of “having contacts with the Ramallah government”. He was reportedly arrested again after the end of the conflict by members of the security services and again subjected to torture.

1363. The Mission was also informed of the case of another Fatah affiliate who had been summoned by the internal security in Gaza and detained on the basis of evidence provided by another member of his family who accused him of collaborating with Israel. Additional abuses allegedly committed by the security services include the confiscation of property from the families of Fatah affiliates, as well as additional cases of torture while in detention in facilities that they operate.

⁶⁹⁵ A torture method in which the prisoner is tightly shackled for long periods.

1364. The Mission was informed that the movement of many Fatah members was restricted during Israel's military operations in Gaza and that many were put under house arrest very early on and threatened with "action" should they disobey. Hundreds of cases in which house arrest was imposed without any kind of due process were reported to domestic human rights organizations during this period. Some individuals received a written order from the police or the internal security (the Mission has a sample of these orders), or a verbal order from the members of al-Qassam Brigades or the internal security. In some cases, those issuing these orders would not identify themselves. The Mission was informed of one case in which an individual put under house arrest in this way was allegedly shot dead by the security services when he and other members of his family were evacuated from their home owing to the presence of the Israeli armed forces.⁶⁹⁶

1365. The Gaza authorities denied that any arrests had taken place in Gaza between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009 owing to the insecurity created by the Israeli military operations.⁶⁹⁷ They stated that arrests were made only after the end of these operations and only in relation to criminal acts, "security prevention and to restore public order".

A. Factual findings

1366. The Mission finds that the statements provided to it in relation to abuses committed by the Gaza authorities' security services are credible and has no reason to doubt their veracity.

1367. As for violent attacks against individuals either in their homes or after being taken from their homes, this finding is reinforced by a number of factors. The pattern of armed and sometimes uniformed, masked men breaking into houses is described in almost all incidents reported to the Mission. Also, in most cases those abducted from their homes or otherwise detained were reportedly not accused of offences related to specific incidents, but rather targeted because of their political affiliation. When charges were laid, these were always linked to suspected political activities contrary to the perceived interest of the Gaza authorities. Some of the accounts also indicate that elements of hierarchical control were present within the groups of armed, masked men executing the attacks. The testimonies of witnesses and the reports provided by international and domestic human rights organizations bear striking similarities and indicate that these attacks were not randomly executed, but constituted part of a pattern of organized violence directed mainly against Fatah affiliates and supporters.

1368. In relation to the allegations that between 27 December 2008 and 18 January 2009 more than 20 persons suspected of collaborating with Israel were killed or maimed by being shot in the leg or otherwise severely injured, the Gaza authorities stated that their investigations found these incidents to be the result of family feuds "or otherwise they were individual acts motivated by personal revenge." In addition, they stated that "the Government, through its competent ⁶⁹⁶ Mission interview with a civil society activist, Gaza City, June 2009.

⁶⁹⁷ Mission correspondence with the Gaza authorities, July 2009.

agencies, opened investigations into these events immediately after the war, and submitted charges before the competent Courts.”⁶⁹⁸ According to PCHR, however, on 2 February 2009 a spokesperson for the Gaza authorities stated that “the Government makes distinctions between abuses of law and the actions of the Palestinian resistance during the war, regarding the execution of some collaborators who are involved in collaborating with the [Israeli] occupation.”⁶⁹⁹ The statement seems to express support for a number of acts of violence that occurred in the chaotic atmosphere created by the military operations.

B. Legal findings

1369. Although not internationally recognized and therefore not able to be party to international human rights treaties, the Gaza authorities have an obligation to respect and enforce the protection of the human rights of the people of Gaza, inasmuch as they exercise effective control over the territory, including law enforcement and the administration of justice⁷⁰⁰ (see chap. IV).

1370. Before Hamas took full control of the Gaza Strip in June 2007, its leaders had publicly indicated that they would respect international human rights standards.⁷⁰¹ In July 2009, the Gaza authorities formally stated to the Mission that they accepted the obligation to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including those enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the Palestinian Basic Law. They added that “the Government is in permanent contact with the Red Cross and human rights organizations, and listens to their observations and takes into account their recommendations as far as it can, and those institutions can testify on that”.⁷⁰²

1371. From the facts ascertained by it, the Mission finds that the actions by members of the security services described above constitute serious violations of human rights and are not consistent with either the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or the Palestinian Basic Law. In particular, regarding the Universal Declaration – which has become part of international customary law – they are in violation of article 3 in relation to everyone’s right to life, liberty and security of the person; article 5 in relation to the freedom from torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; article 9 stating that no one shall be subjected to arbitrary

⁶⁹⁸ Written reply from the Gaza authorities to the Mission; July 2009.

⁶⁹⁹ Taher al-Nouno, a spokesman of the Gaza authorities, attended the press conference with Ehab al-Ghusein, spokesman of the Ministry of the Interior, and Islam Shahwan, spokesman of the Palestinian police in Gaza. See “Special report...”.

⁷⁰⁰ For example, in their joint report on Lebanon and Israel, a group of four United Nations Special Rapporteurs concluded that: “Although Hezbollah, a non-State actor, cannot become a party to these human rights treaties, it remains subject to the demand of the international community, first expressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that every organ of society respect and promote human rights. [...] It is especially appropriate and feasible to call for an armed group to respect human rights norms when it exercises significant control over territory and population and has an identifiable political structure” (A/HRC/2/7, para. 19). See A/HRC/6/76, paras. 4-9, for a brief overview of relevant events leading up to Hamas’ seizure of full control in the Gaza Strip. (See also Andrew Clapham, Human Rights Obligations of Non-State Actors (Oxford, Oxford University Press, 2006), chap. 7.

⁷⁰¹ See A/HRC/8/17.

⁷⁰² The Gaza authorities have allowed IHCR to function uninterruptedly and regularly deal with the complaints it brings to their attention.

arrest and detention; articles 10 and 11 regarding the right to fair and impartial legal proceedings; and article 19 regarding the freedom of opinion and expression, including the freedom to hold opinions without interference.

1372. The Mission takes note of the statement of the Gaza authorities of the opening of criminal investigations into some of the killings that happened between 28 December 2008 and 18 January 2009. It is, however, concerned that – according to the Gaza authorities – these investigations concern only family feuds or individual acts motivated by personal revenge. The Mission also notes with concern that, at the time of drafting this report, appeals by international and domestic human rights organizations to the Gaza authorities to conduct serious investigations into all allegations of violations, to bring perpetrators to justice and to publish all of their findings remain unanswered. Failure to conduct credible investigations into these allegations and hold those responsible accountable will prevent the victims from accessing justice and encourage a culture of impunity.

THE WEST BANK, INCLUDING EAST JERUSALEM

1373. As explained above in chapter I, the Mission believes that the reference in its mandate to violations “in the context” of the military operations in Gaza required it to go beyond the violations that occurred in and around Gaza. It also believes that violations within its mandate in terms of time, objectives and targets, include those that are linked to the December 2008 – January 2009 military operations, and include restrictions on human rights and fundamental freedoms related to the strategies and actions of Israel in the context of its military operations.

1374. Developments in Gaza and the West Bank are closely interrelated, in the Mission’s view, an analysis of both is necessary to reach an informed understanding of and to report on issues within the Mission’s mandate. On the one hand, the events in Gaza have consequences in the West Bank, on the other, pre-existing problems in the West Bank have been exacerbated by the Gaza military operations.

1375. In its examination of the West Bank with respect to actions taken by Israel, the Mission focused on four key aspects in their linkage to the Israeli military operations in Gaza: (a) the sharp increase in the use of force by Israeli security forces, including the military, in the West Bank; (b) the tightening and entrenchment of the system of movement and access restrictions; (c) the issue of Palestinian detainees and especially the increase in child detainees during and after the military operations; and (d) the Gaza corollary of the detention of Hamas members of the Palestinian Legislative Council.⁷⁰³ While the treatment by the Gaza authorities of those opposing its policies is discussed in chapter XIX, similar issues with regard to the conduct of the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank also called for investigation. Linkages with the Israeli operation in Gaza are elaborated in the respective chapters.

⁷⁰³ The issue of Gazans detained by Israel during and following the operations from December 2008 to January 2009 is discussed in chapter XV.

Methodology

1376. One consequence of the refusal by Israel to cooperate with the Mission was that it was unable to visit the West Bank to investigate alleged violations of international law. The Mission nonetheless received many oral and written reports and other relevant materials from Palestinian, Israeli and international human rights organizations and institutions. In addition, the Mission met with representatives of a number of human rights organizations and with members of the Palestinian legislature and other community leaders (see annex). It invited experts, witnesses and victims to participate in the public hearings held in Geneva on 6 and 7 July 2009. The Mission also conducted telephone interviews with affected individuals and witnesses, and reviewed relevant video and photographic material.

1377. Owing to the lack of access to the West Bank, the chapters in the section below rely on secondary information to a greater extent than in the previous sections.

1378. The Mission found the witnesses it heard in relation to the situation in the West Bank to be credible and reliable. The Mission is also satisfied that the reports it reviewed and to which it refers are credible and based on sound methodologies.

1379. The Mission also wrote to the Palestinian Authority and the Government of Israel seeking information and official positions on, inter alia, the issues addressed in this section. The information received by the Palestinian Authority was taken into account in the present chapter. The Government of Israel has not responded to the Mission's requests.

1380. Owing to the complexity of the issues relating to Palestinian detainees and of freedom of movement and access, the chapters on these issues include an explanatory introduction that sets out the factual parameters of the problems and explains some of the key terminology and concepts.

XX. TREATMENT OF PALESTINIANS IN THE WEST BANK BY ISRAELI SECURITY FORCES, INCLUDING USE OF EXCESSIVE OR LETHAL FORCE DURING DEMONSTRATIONS

1381. The information gathered by the Mission indicates an ongoing pattern of ill treatment and use of force by the Israeli security forces against Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Ill treatment and low levels of force are reported being common in encounters at checkpoints between Palestinians and the Israeli security forces (army, police and border police),⁷⁰⁴ while a greater, sometimes lethal, degree of force has been used during demonstrations, incursions and search and arrest operations. With heavily armed Israeli military forces present throughout the West Bank, the possibility of violence always exists. As a witness reported to the Mission, "the use of force is part of the system of control of the occupation, where a key element is fear, which can only be sustained by the constant threat and the periodic act of violence".⁷⁰⁵

⁷⁰⁴ B'Tselem, "Beatings & Abuse" (www.btselem.org/english/beatings_and_abuse/index.asp). For the use of private contractors at checkpoints, see chap. XXI.

⁷⁰⁵ Mission interview with Defence for Children International-Palestine Section, 3 July 2009.

1382. Violence against Palestinians in the West Bank does not only come from the security forces. The Israeli military operations in Gaza commenced when the West Bank was experiencing some of the worst acts of settler violence in several years.⁷⁰⁶

1383. Witnesses and experts informed the Mission of a sharp increase in the use of force by the Israeli security forces against Palestinians in the West Bank from the commencement of the Israeli operations in Gaza.⁷⁰⁷ A number of protesters were killed and scores were injured by Israeli forces during Palestinian demonstrations following the beginning of the,⁷⁰⁸ the degree of violence employed in the West Bank during the operations in Gaza, has been sustained since 18 January.⁷⁰⁹ Reports from non-governmental organizations confirm this information.⁷¹⁰

A. Settler violence in the West Bank in the period preceding the Israeli military operations in Gaza

1384. In early December 2008, Israeli settlers in the city of Hebron rioted and perpetrated acts of violence against the local Palestinian population. Although Israel, as the occupying power, has the responsibility to maintain public order and safety in the occupied territory,⁷¹¹ the Israeli police did not intervene to protect Palestinians.⁷¹² Settler violence is a regular occurrence, targeting primarily Palestinian civilians and their property but also, on occasion, Israeli soldiers.⁷¹³ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, “a root cause

⁷⁰⁶ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs Special Focus: “Unprotected: Israeli settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their property”, December 2008. In its reply to the Mission (5 August 2009), the Palestinian Authority reported 58 acts of violence perpetrated by settlers on Palestinian civilians from 16 November 2008 to 15 December 2008, compared to a monthly average of 26 reported incidents in the year to date..

⁷⁰⁷ The NGO Al-Haq reported another particularly disturbing case of “what appears to be a willful killing” of a farmer from Hebron on 17 January 2009. According to medical personnel who were asked to collect his body from the Israeli soldiers by whom he had been detained, the farmer appeared to have been shot at point blank in the stomach while seated. See “A vicious reminder of occupation in the West Bank: Israeli soldiers Kill Palestinian farmer in Hebron”. Al-Haq press release, 17 January 2009.

⁷⁰⁸ Mission interview with Al-Haq, 2 July 2009 (six deaths were recorded by Al-Haq). See also Weekly Protection of Civilians reports of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs for the relevant period; the communication received by the Mission from the Palestinian Authority, which reported 30 injuries by shooting from 27 December 2008 to 18 January 2009; the statements of Mohamed Srour and Jonathan Pollak at the public hearings in Geneva, 6 July 2009; and B’Tselem press release of 18 June 2009 “Prohibit live ammunition in circumstances that are not life-threatening in the West Bank”.

⁷⁰⁹ Mission meetings with B’Tselem on 3 July 2009 and Al-Haq on 2 July 2009.

⁷¹⁰ B’Tselem reported an increase in the number of beatings, and referred to some particularly serious cases, including that of an elderly shepherdess whose arm was broken by border police on 11 March 2009. “Border police break arm of Halimeh a-Shawamreh, near the Separation Barrier”, Deir al-‘Asal al-Foqa, March 2009”.

⁷¹¹ The Palestinian Authority is not allowed to enter the part of the Old City of Hebron known as “H2” as a result of the Protocol Concerning the Redeployment in Hebron of January 1997.. With regard to the general situation in Hebron see www.btselem.org/English/Hebron/.

⁷¹² “Al-Haq calls for immediate measures to stop settler violence in Hebron and throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory”, Al-Haq urgent release, 5 December 2005. In its reply to the Mission, the Palestinian Authority reported 335 settler attacks from 19 May 2008 to 17 July 2009.

⁷¹³ In 2008, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs recorded 290 incidents of settler violence, resulting in 131 Palestinian deaths, a substantial rise over previous years. Most incidents reported involved groups of of the phenomenon is Israel's decade-long policy of facilitating and encouraging the settling of its citizens inside occupied Palestinian territory, defined as transfer of population and prohibited by international humanitarian law."⁷¹⁴ Israeli media attribute the increase in settler violence to the settler movement which became increasingly radicalized after the Gaza Disengagement in August 2005.⁷¹⁵

1385. According to various sources,⁷¹⁶ rioting erupted in Hebron on 4 December 2008 after the evacuation by the Israeli security forces of Israeli settlers from the Rajabi family home in the old city of Hebron. United Nations sources reported that, at first, clashes erupted between settlers and Israeli security forces, causing injuries on both sides; afterwards, "violence continued in Hebron city. Groups of settlers threw stones at Palestinian houses and set fire to vehicles, agricultural fields, houses and the contents of one mosque. Settlers also attempted to force entry into Palestinian homes."⁷¹⁷ One incident in which Israeli settler Ze'ev Braude shot and injured three members of the al-Matariyeh family was filmed and broadcast by the international media.⁷¹⁸

1386. The wave of violence continued for days.⁷¹⁹ Palestinian hospitals reported 17 injuries during the period, including five bullet wounds.⁷²⁰ settlers attacking vulnerable targets (children, women and the elderly) mainly in the Hebron and Nablus areas. In January 2007, B'Tselem launched a camera distribution and video advocacy project focusing on the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The project aims at providing "Palestinians living in high-conflict areas with video cameras, with the goal of bringing the reality of their lives under occupation to the attention of the Israeli and international public, exposing and seeking redress for violations of human rights." The B'Tselem project has resulted in footage of these kinds of attacks being publicized, such as the attack by settlers on herders in Susya, June 2008..

⁷¹⁴ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs Special Focus: "Unprotected: Israeli settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their property", December 2008.

⁷¹⁵ See also, "Israel's religious right and the question of settlements", International Crisis Group Middle East Report N°89 – 20 July 2009.

⁷¹⁶ "Settler violence after evacuation of Occupied House", Temporary International Presence, Hebron, Press Release; "Israel braces for settler violence in wake of Hebron house evacuation", Ha'aretz, 5 December 2008, and "Dozens injured as Israeli army removes settlers from Hebron house", Maan News Net, 4 December 2008.

⁷¹⁷ Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs Special Focus: "Unprotected: Israeli settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their property", December 2008.

⁷¹⁸ For example, "Settlers filmed shooting at Palestinians turn themselves in", Ha'aretz, 7 December 2008. The settler was eventually released and not charged or prosecuted.

⁷¹⁹ According to the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, "settler violence quickly spread to other West Bank areas (...) groups of settlers threw stones at Palestinian vehicles in more than twelve locations on the day of the evacuation and attacked Palestinian communities, setting fire to Palestinian property and land, cutting down olive trees, slashing vehicle tires and vandalizing other property", Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs Special Focus: "Unprotected: Israeli settler violence against Palestinian civilians and their property", December 2008., See also the Alternative Information Centre Settler Violence report for November/December 2008 available at www.alternativenews.org/publications/164-settler-violence-reports/1829-settler-violence-report-november-december-2008-.html and Ha'aretz: www.haaretz.com/hasen/spages/1043794.html

⁷²⁰ "IDF declares Hebron area a closed Military Zone after settler rampage", Ha'aretz, 4 December 2008.

1387. The use of force against Gaza solidarity demonstrations in the West Bank during the Israeli operations in Gaza

1388. There was a significant increase in the use of force by Israeli security forces during demonstrations in the West Bank after the start of the Israeli operations in Gaza. The degree of force used against protests during the previous year had already been high, including during protests against the Wall in places such as Jayyous, al-Ma'sara, Bi'lin and Ni'lin.⁷²¹ The villages where demonstrations are regularly held have lost or stand to lose much of their land to Israeli settlements and the Wall. A vibrant grass-roots, non-violent resistance movement has evolved that has attracted support from Israeli and international activists. New tactics and weapons used by the Israeli security forces aimed at suppressing the popular movement⁷²² have resulted in deaths and injuries. For example, in July 2008, Israeli border police killed two children, Ahmad Musa, aged 10,⁷²³ and Yusef Amara, aged 17, both of whom were shot in the head.⁷²⁴

1389. Another cause of concern for the Mission were further allegations of the use of unnecessary, lethal force by Israeli security forces. At the public hearing in Geneva of 6 July 2009, two witnesses, Mohamed Srour and Jonathan Pollak, described the fatal shooting, on 28 December 2008, of two young men from the village of Ni'lin during a protest against the Israeli operations in Gaza. Mr Srour was himself shot in the leg during the same protest.⁷²⁵

1390. At the hearing on 6 July, Mr Srour stated that as a result of this war, many people all around the West Bank, but also in his village Ni'lin, wanted to demonstrate and express their solidarity with the people of Gaza. The demonstration included important participation of people from the different solidarity movements, from Israel as well from the international community." The two witnesses spoke of the atmosphere that they had encountered in the confrontation with ⁷²¹ "Repression Allowed, Resistance Denied: Israel's suppression of the popular movement against the Apartheid Wall of Annexation", Addameer and Stop the Wall report, July 2009. For a list of the 19 people including 11 children killed in anti-wall demonstrations up until July 2009, see <http://palsolidarity.org/2009/06/7647>.

⁷²² See Ni'lin Factsheet at <http://stopthewall.org/factsheets/1669.shtml>

⁷²³ 29 July 2008: Killing of Ahmed Husam Yusef Mousa (10) in Ni'lin. According to Al-Haq "Ahmad Husam Musa, a ten-year-old child, hid in an olive grove. A member of the Israeli Border Police saw Ahmad Musa, left the Border Police vehicle, aimed his rifle and fired a live bullet. Shot from a distance of 50 metres, the bullet entered Ahmad Musa's forehead and exited through the back of his skull. While two of the demonstration's organisers attempted to carry Ahmad Musa to safety, they were fired upon by the Border Police. They succeeded in carrying the child to safety, but he was already dead", "Right to life of Palestinian children disregarded in Ni'lin as Israel's policy of wilful killing of civilians continues", Al-Haq press release, 7 August 2008.

⁷²⁴ "Right to life of Palestinian children disregarded in Ni'lin as Israel's policy of wilful killing of civilians continues", Al-Haq press release, 7 August 2008. See also "Repression Allowed, Resistance Denied: Israel's suppression of the popular movement against the Apartheid Wall of Annexation", Addameer and Stop the Wall report, July 2009. To illustrate the use of unusual weapons which, the report states, is aimed at creating lasting injury, on 13 June 2008, Ibrahim Burnat (aged 26) was shot three times in the thigh while in the weekly anti-Wall demonstration in Bi'lin. According to his medical report, he was shot with an explosive bullet. The report also states that, in the four villages mentioned, 1,566 people had been injured while six people had been killed at protests.

⁷²⁵ The testimony of Mr. Srour and Mr. Pollak, including a video of the events can be viewed at <http://webcast.un.org/ramgen/ondemand/conferences/unhrc/gaza/gaza090706pm1-eng.rm?start=00:35:37&end=01:41:24>.

the soldiers and border police, which was markedly different from the situation before the operations in Gaza. Mr. Pollak stated:

The atmosphere of the incident, and during and after the start of the war generally was that all checks and balances had been removed. The soldiers were saying things related to the Gaza war, taunting things like, "It's a shame we're not in Gaza killing Arabs." There seemed to be an enthusiasm to confront and the amount of live ammunition used shows this. The behaviour of the soldiers has escalated immensely – not that in the past the army was so gentle.

1391. According to the witnesses, the main demonstration had ended when the army and border police used tear gas and stun grenades to disperse the crowd. The next sequence of events took place on the edge of the village, at a considerable distance from the site of the construction of the Wall. The two young men killed were part of a small group of demonstrators, some of whom had thrown stones at the soldiers. In video footage, four or five soldiers appeared to be casually walking around and not seemingly threatened. No tear gas was used at that stage. Dozens of rounds of live ammunition were fired in the direction of the group of young men, hitting three of them within minutes of each other. Mohamed Khawaja was shot in the forehead; Arafat Khawaja, who had turned to run away, was shot in the back, and Mohammed Srour was shot in the leg. Subsequently an ambulance was prevented from reaching the victims, who had to be carried some distance and were eventually put onto a pick-up truck, at which the army fired tear gas. Arafat Khawaja was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital and Mohamed Khawaja passed away a few days later.

1392. Two Palestinians were killed during other protests against the military operations in Gaza. On 4 January, Mufid Walwel was shot dead during a demonstration near Qalqilya, where the Wall is to be built. In Hebron, on 16 January, Mus'ab Da'na died after being shot in the head. According to an NGO report, the Israeli border police are believed to have been responsible for both incidents.⁷²⁶

1393. The Mission has asked the Government of Israel to explain the increased use of live ammunitions during demonstrations in the West Bank, but has received no reply.

B. The increased level of force since the end of the operations in Gaza

1394. Since the end of the December-January military operations in Gaza, the increased level of force has reportedly continued against demonstrators and in other situations. The Mission heard from an eye witness, how, on 13 March 2009, United States citizen Tristan Anderson was hit, while participating in an anti-Wall demonstration in Ni'lin, with a high velocity tear gas canister in the forehead. According to the witness, Mr. Anderson was taking pictures of Israeli soldiers and border police attacking the demonstrators. A high velocity long-range tear gas canister was used at short range, crushing his forehead. As he laid on the ground, the border police, who would have been able to see him falling down and lying on the ground, continued to shoot tear gas in his direction. Video footage received by the Mission showed Palestinian paramedics in bright orange uniforms putting Mr. Anderson's body on to a stretcher, a tear gas canister landing directly beside them and a large cloud of gas developing.⁷²⁷ According to the witness, Israeli forces delayed Mr. Anderson's transfer from the Palestinian ambulance to an Israeli ambulance at the checkpoint before entering Israel.⁷²⁸ At 1 August 2009, Mr. Anderson remains in a critical condition in an Israeli hospital.

⁷²⁶ Al-Haq affidavit No. 4667/2009 and 4608/2009.

1395. On 17 April 2009, in Bi'lin, Bassem Abu Rahma was killed by a high velocity tear gas canister which was shot at his chest from a distance of 30 to 40 metres. The killing, which took place during a peaceful demonstration against the Wall, was filmed.⁷²⁹ The footage shows Mr. Abu Rahma standing on a small hill, clearly visible and not armed or otherwise posing a threat.

1396. Eye witnesses reported to the Mission that they felt that it had become almost a sport for snipers, who now routinely enter villages and occupy roofs of buildings, to aim at protesters in a manner that is inappropriate in the context of crowd control, with apparent disregard for the lives or limbs of the persons they hit.⁷³⁰

1397. On 5 June 2009, five people were shot by snipers in a demonstration in Ni'lin, of whom one, Aqel Srour, was killed, and another, a 15 year-old boy, was shot in the abdomen and will be permanently disabled.⁷³¹ Al-Haq described the shooting of Srour, who according to Al-Haq had run to assist the boy who was shot in the abdomen, as a case of "wilful killing".⁷³²

1398. The weapons used by the security forces are also a cause for concern. Many of the injuries to protesters during anti-Wall demonstrations in recent months (in Ni'lin, Bi'lin, Jayyous, Bitunya and Budrus) and the death of Aqel Srour and that of a 14-year-old who was killed in Hebron in February⁷³³ were reportedly inflicted by a .22 caliber Ruger rifle. B'Tselem has protested against the use of this weapon as a means of crowd control on the grounds that it is potentially lethal.⁷³⁴ In its response to B'Tselem's letter of 26 February, the Israeli Judge Advocate General wrote, that "the open-fire regulations applying to the .22 ammunition are ⁷²⁷ See <http://palsolidarity.org/2009/03/5324>.

⁷²⁸ Mission telephone interview with Ulrika Karlsson, 5 August 2009. Israel does not allow Palestinian ambulances to enter Israel. The witness also reported having been shot herself in January, in the calf, with a .22 bullet shot aimed at her, while moments later the only other person near her was shot in the foot. See also the Democracy Now news report "US Consul General says awaiting Israeli Report on IDF shooting of American citizen", 16 March 2009.

⁷²⁹ "Our peaceful village should no longer be the graveyard of our youth", 17 April 2009, at the website www.bilin-village.org/english/articles/press-and-independent-media/Our-Peaceful-Towns-Should-No-Longer-Be-The-Graveyard-Of-Our-Youth.

⁷³⁰ Mission telephone interview with Ulrika Karlsson on 5 August 2009 and direct interview with Jonathan Pollak on 6 July 2009.

⁷³¹ Mission interview with Jonathan Pollak and Mohamed Srour on 6 July 2009 and telephone interview with Ulrika Karlsson on 5 August 2009. See also Addameer report.

⁷³² "The willful killing of Aqel Srour following a Ni'lin demonstration against the Annexation Wall: a deplorable illustration of impunity's slippery slope", Al-Haq press release, 25 June 2009.

⁷³³ "Prohibit live ammunition in circumstances that are not life-threatening in the West Bank", B'Tselem, Press Release, 18 June 2009.

⁷³⁴ Correspondence received by the Mission, available at www.btselem.org/English/Press_Releases/20090709.asp.

comparable, in general, to the open-fire rules applying to “ordinary” ammunition” and that “following your letter, we directed that the forces again be instructed with respect to the binding Open-Fire Regulations that apply to use of the Ruger rifle.”⁷³⁵ However, from the nature of the killing of Aqel Srour and the injuries sustained by protesters in the months following the Judge Advocate General’s response, it is clear that the use of the Ruger rifle has not been tempered.⁷³⁶

1399. The Israeli armed forces’ open-fire regulations for the West Bank provide that different rules apply in situations where Israeli citizens are present, as compared to situations where there are only Palestinians present.⁷³⁷ For example, they provide for the use of live ammunitions under certain conditions, in the case of violent “disturbances”⁷³⁸ near the Wall or in the nearby area. Where Israelis participate, however, the use of live ammunitions is forbidden. Similarly different provisions are found with regard to the use of warning shots and rubber bullets. Witnesses indicated to the Mission, however, that the army no longer distinguishes between Palestinians and their Israeli and international supporters, and uses a greater degree of force against all.⁷³⁹

1400. The Mission asked the Government of Israel about the differences in open fire regulations applied in the Occupied Palestinian Territory in situations in which Israeli citizens are present as opposed to situations where none are present, but has received no reply.

1401. In a recent court hearing, Colonel Virob, an Israeli Brigade Commander in the West Bank, defended the routine use of force in achieving the goals of the occupation.⁷⁴⁰ According to the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, when Colonel Virob was asked about using physical force during an investigation against people who are not suspects, he stated that “using violence and aggression to prevent the situation from escalating and the need to use even more violence is not only allowed but sometimes imperative (...), giving a blow, a push, in a situation even with people who are not involved in an operational situation, if it can advance the mission, is certainly possible.” He added that “the way you use violence should also be appropriate (...), a slap, sometimes a hit to the back of the neck or the chest, in cases that there is friction, a reaction from the Palestinian side, sometimes a knee jab or strangulation to calm someone down is reasonable.”⁷⁴¹

1402. The Mission considers with concern reports of gratuitous abuse by Israeli soldiers. It heard testimonies in a video footage shown on Israeli television⁷⁴² that described a search and ⁷³⁵ Letter from Major Yehoshua Gortler, Legal Assistant to the Judge Advocate General to B’Tselem, dated 15 March 2009.

⁷³⁶ See also B’Tselem letter to Brig. Gen. Avichai Mandelblit, Judge Advocate General, 17 June 2009.

⁷³⁷ See Open Fire Regulations Booklet for the Soldier in Judea and Samaria region, issued by the Headquarters of the Central Command in July 2006. See “Open fire regulations for Palestinians only” (in Hebrew), Maariv at www.nrg.co.il/online/1/ART1/590/452.html.

⁷³⁸ Situations of disturbances are defined as those that may be the result of demonstrations, marches, and similar events.

⁷³⁹ Mission interview with Jonathan Pollak, 6 July 2009.

⁷⁴⁰ “Truth walks into a Jaffa court”, by Michael Sfar, Yesh Din, 10 June 2009.

⁷⁴¹ Association for Civil Rights in Israel Press Release, 24 June 2009.

⁷⁴² Available at <http://news.nana10.co.il/Article/?ArticleID=641918&TypeID=1&sid=126>.

detain operation by the Kfir brigade in the West Bank village of Haris. Hundreds of troops had participated in a nocturnal raid on a village aimed at finding boys who were thought to have thrown stones at settlers' cars some days previously. On 9 June 2009, The Independent reported on the operation, quoting soldiers of the Kfir Brigade involved. One was quoted as saying he saw many soldiers "just knee [Palestinians] because it's boring, because you stand there ten hours, you're not doing anything, so they beat people up."⁷⁴³ A second soldier described a "fanatical atmosphere" during the search operations. "We would go into a house and turn the whole thing upside down", he recalled, but no weapons were found. "They confiscated kitchen knives." The first soldier stated that numerous soldiers were involved. "There were a lot of reservists that participated, and they totally had a celebration on the Palestinians: curses, humiliation, pulling hair and ears, kicks, slaps. These things were the norm." He described the beating of a child:

The soldiers who took [detainees] to the toilet just exploded [over] them with beatings; cursed them with no reason. When they took one Arab to the toilet so that he could urinate, one of them gave him a slap that brought him to the ground. He had been handcuffed from behind with a nylon restraint and blindfolded. He wasn't insolent, he didn't do anything to get on anyone's nerves ... [it was] just because he's an Arab. He was something like 15 years old.

1403. He stated that the incidents in the toilet were the "extreme" and added that the beatings did not draw blood. They were "dry beatings, but it's still a beating".⁷⁴⁴

1404. Video footage uploaded to the internet by Israeli border police, and filed under "comedy" offers an insight into how wanton abuse is perceived by members of the security forces themselves.⁷⁴⁵ The Mission has received reports of other, similar occurrences,⁷⁴⁶ giving rise to the concern that an increased level of force and the dehumanization have become normalized in the practice of security forces.

C. The role of impunity

1405. Several witnesses told the Mission that, during the operations in Gaza, the sense in the West Bank was one of a "free for all", where any behavior was permitted for Israeli forces. An even greater use of force than that used in the West Bank could be attributed to a change in atmosphere or attitude towards the "other" during time of war. There are indications that this shift in attitude was also apparent during the war in Lebanon in 2006.⁷⁴⁷ The concept of what is ⁷⁴³ "Bound, Blindfolded and Beaten, By Israeli Troops", The Independent, 9 June 2009.

⁷⁴⁴ Ibid.

⁷⁴⁵ "Border Police upload footage of their abuse of Palestinians to YouTube", Ha'aretz, 19 June 2009. The article reports how in the footage an Arab youth slaps himself while a voice is heard instructing him to say "I love you, Border Police," and "I will fk you, Palestine," in Arabic, to the raucous laughter of those present, all border police.

⁷⁴⁶ For example, "Soldiers come across Palestinians and detain and abuse them for hours, Dura, April 2009", B'Tselem.

⁷⁴⁷ Mission telephone interview with Sarit Michael, 5 August 2009. In the video footage of the shooting of an Israeli demonstrator during the war in Lebanon in 2006, a border police member can be heard saying, after the order to considered “normal” and “acceptable” conduct risks shifting to even higher levels, if those in positions of responsibility do not respond appropriately. In the face of the recently increase in violence by the Israeli security forces in the West Bank, B’Tselem stated that condemnations by Ministers and other officials remain solely declarative. Security forces, meanwhile, misusing their power, continue to abuse and beat Palestinians, among them, minors (...). If a message is sent to security forces, it is that even if the establishment does not accept acts of violence, it will not take measures against those who commit them. The effect of such a message is that the lives and dignity of Palestinians are meaningless and that security forces can continue, pursuant to the function they serve, to abuse, humiliate, and beat Palestinians with whom they come into contact.⁷⁴⁸

1406. In the past, every case in which a Palestinian not participating in hostilities was killed was subject to criminal investigation. This policy changed in 2000. Criminal investigations are now the exception,⁷⁴⁹ these cases are now simply discussed in an “operational debriefing” by the military itself.⁷⁵⁰ In 2003, the Association for Civil Rights in Israel and B’Tselem filed a petition to reverse this policy change, demanding that every civilian death be independently investigated. The petition included demands for investigations into individual deaths as well as the principle question relating to the overall policy. The former were dismissed, while the principle question is still pending.⁷⁵¹

1407. Yesh Din reports that over 90 per cent of investigations into settler violence are closed without an “indictment being filed”.⁷⁵² B’Tselem reported in June 2009 that the charges against Mr Braude, the Hebron settler who was filmed shooting and injuring three Palestinians in December 2009, would be dropped, as the court had ordered that “secret evidence” against him be disclosed, and the potential public harm of this disclosure would outweigh the harm done by a person, documented as having committed a violent crime, being released back into society.⁷⁵³

open fire was given, “now we’re in Lebanon”. When passing by the injured demonstrator lying on the ground bleeding from his head injury, the commander ignored the calls by a woman to get an ambulance for the injured Israeli. He answers that there are many Israelis injured in Lebanon, too. As shown in the footage, the demonstrator was shot at close range from behind, as he was walking in front of the soldiers. See www.liveleak.com/view?i=8dba196f36.

⁷⁴⁸ “Beating and Abuse”, B’Tselem.

⁷⁴⁹ Mission telephone interview with the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, 29 July 2009.

⁷⁵⁰ Mission interview with Daniel Reisner, 6 July 2009. See also “Response to the Attorney-General's Refusal Concerning a Gaza Probe” at www.acri.org.il/eng/story.aspx?id=635 and chapter XXVIII below.

⁷⁵¹ See the Association for Civil Rights in Israel press release at www.acri.org.il/eng/Story.aspx?id=216. Text of the petition is available at www.btselem.org/english/Legal_Documents/HC9594_03_Investigations_Appeal.rtf.

⁷⁵² “Law Enforcement upon Israeli Civilians in the OPT”, Yesh Din data sheet, July 2008.

⁷⁵³ B’Tselem compares this to the admission in judicial proceedings of secret evidence in the prosecution of Palestinians (see also section below). See “8 June ’09: Bring Ze’ev Braude, the shooter from Hebron, to justice” B’Tselem press release.

1408. In July 2009, an Israeli activist who had been shot in the head in 2006 by the Israeli border police was awarded compensation for his injury in an out of court settlement. To date, the commander who ordered the shooting has not been subject to criminal investigation.⁷⁵⁴

1409. On 7 July 2008, Ashraf Abu-Rahma was shot at short range while blindfolded and handcuffed. The incident was filmed and widely broadcast.⁷⁵⁵ When the Israeli Military Advocate General charged the officer who ordered the shooting with “conduct unbecoming”, Israeli international law Professor Orna Ben-Naftali stated that “the decision (was) indicative of a policy of tolerance towards violence against non-violent civilian protests against the construction of the Separation Wall”. She added that “the implication of such a policy is twofold: first, it might transform ‘conduct unbecoming’ – which as a matter of law is a war crime – into a crime against humanity; second, it may well be construed as an invitation to the international community to intervene through the exercise of universal jurisdiction.”⁷⁵⁶

D. Legal analysis and conclusions

1410. Israel has obligations to Palestinians in the West Bank under both international humanitarian law and international human rights law. With regard to the former, the obligations flow from the status of Israel as the occupying power and the consequent obligations concerning protected persons. With regard to the latter, specific human rights obligations to all individuals in the West Bank arise from both customary law and the obligations assumed by Israel under the various human rights conventions that it has ratified. The obligations under both bodies of law are complementary and mutually reinforcing, and provide a clear framework against which the facts outlined above may be analysed (see chapter IV above). With regard to the issues discussed in the present chapter, the most relevant obligations are set out below.

1. Violence by settlers against Palestinians in the West Bank

1411. Israel has an obligation under customary law, as reflected in article 43 of the Hague Regulations, to ensure public order and safety in the West Bank:

Article 43. The authority of the legitimate power having in fact passed into the hands of the occupant, the latter shall take all the measures in his power to restore, and ensure, as far as possible, public order and safety, while respecting, unless absolutely prevented, the laws in force in the country.

⁷⁵⁴ Mission telephone interview with the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, 29 July 2009.

⁷⁵⁵ “Soldiers fires ‘rubber’ bullet at handcuffed, blindfolded Palestinian”, B’Tselem, July 2008, at www.btselem.org/English/Video/20080707_Nilin_Shooting.asp.

⁷⁵⁶ “Whose ‘conduct unbecoming’? The shooting of a handcuffed, blindfolded Palestinian demonstrator, by Orna Ben-Naftali and Noam Zamir, Journal of International Criminal Justice, 3 March 2009. Recently, the Israeli Military Advocate General’s decision to charge commander Omri Bomberg and his subordinate with “conduct unbecoming” was overturned, the second time in recent decades that a decision by the Military Advocate General has been overturned. The first being related to the demotion of General Tamir, who let his 14-year-old son drive his military vehicle, see “Neither an officer nor a gentleman”, Ha’aretz, 31 July 2008; and “Israeli High Court of Justice rules against Judge Advocate General’s ‘extremely unreasonable’ decision”, B’Tselem press release, 1 July 2009.

1412. This obligation is supported by the obligation by Israel under article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention (set out in chapter XV above) to ensure that Palestinians, as protected persons, are protected against all acts or threats of violence.

1413. Israel also has obligations under international human rights law to protect Palestinians from violence by private individuals, and to investigate and punish acts of violence through the application of criminal law, without discrimination.

1414. Palestinians thus have “the right to security of the person” under article 9 (1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which the Human Rights Committee has read to mean that the State has an obligation to take reasonable and appropriate measures to protect individuals from threats to the life of persons under their jurisdiction, including threats from private actors.⁷⁵⁷ Under article 2 of the Covenant, Israel has an obligation “to adopt such laws or other measures as may be necessary to give effect to the rights recognized in the present Covenant” and to “ensure that any person whose rights or freedoms as herein recognized are violated shall have an effective remedy”. In applying the law, Israel has an obligation under article 26 of the Covenant to ensure that “all persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to the equal protection of the law”. Finally, insofar as acts of violence amounting to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment are perpetrated by private individuals with the acquiescence of public officials (including security forces), Israel has an obligation under article 16 of the Convention against Torture to prevent such acts:

Article 16 (1). Each State party shall undertake to prevent in any territory under its jurisdiction other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment ..., when such acts are committed by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.

Conclusions

1415. With regard to violent acts perpetrated by settlers against Palestinians, such as those relating to the cases of December 2008 in Hebron reported above, the Mission concludes, on the basis of the reports received and the video footage viewed, that Israel has failed to fulfil its obligations to protect the Palestinians from violence by private individuals under both international human rights law and international humanitarian law. In some instances, evidence of the acquiescence of the security forces in this violence could amount to a violation of the relevant obligations relating to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

1416. Insofar as this acquiescence only occurs in respect of violence against Palestinians by settlers, and not vice-versa, there is a strong argument that the behaviour of the security forces is in breach of the obligations of Israel to not discriminate on the basis of national origin under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

1417. The facts also suggest a violation of article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights guaranteeing equal protection of the law, particularly insofar as there is a failure to investigate Palestinians’ allegations of assault by settlers.

⁷⁵⁷ For example, William Eduardo Delgado Paez v. Colombia, Communication 195/1985, views adopted 12 July 1990.

1418. Finally, the failure by Israel to adequately investigate allegations of the failure of the State to protect Palestinians, and of the acquiescence of state actors before the violence of private actors and thus to provide an effective remedy for those suffering human rights violations also place Israel in violation of article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

2. Actions by Israel with regard to Gaza solidarity demonstrations

1419. All individuals in the West Bank enjoy the right to freedom of expression provided in article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights:

Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

1420. Israel has an obligation under article 21 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to recognize the right of peaceful assembly. While restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right, they must be “in conformity with the law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order (ordre public), the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others”. In accordance with article 2 of the Covenant, any restrictions on the right of peaceful assembly can only be imposed “without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status”.

1421. In dealing with Palestinian civilians, including in the context of public demonstrations, Israel has an obligation under articles 2 and 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to ensure, without distinction of any kind, that no one is arbitrarily deprived of their life:

Article 2 (a). Each State party to the present Covenant undertakes to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

Article 6 (1). Every human being has the inherent right to life. This right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life.

1422. A further obligation on Israel is to ensure that no one is subject to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and articles 2 and 16 of the Convention against Torture), without discrimination.

1423. The Fourth Geneva Convention places a number of obligations on Israel relevant to the treatment of Palestinians participating in demonstrations. Under article 27, Israel must ensure that Palestinians as protected persons are “at all times ... humanely treated, and ... protected, especially against all acts of violence or threats thereof and against insults and public curiosity”. Treatment by Israel as the occupier must be “without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, religion or political opinion”. From article 32 derives the prohibition of “taking any measure of such a character as to cause the physical suffering or extermination of protected persons”.

1424. Finally, Israel has obligations under articles 146 and 147, as set out in chapter IV, which include an obligation to:

bring before its courts persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed ... grave breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention, including wilful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly.

1425. The content of the international human rights obligations set out above has been clarified through a number of other sources, including the jurisprudence of the human rights treaty bodies (in this, particularly the Human Rights Committee), and various standards adopted under the auspices of the United Nations. The most relevant in respect of the facts outlined above are set out below.

1426. The permissible use of force by those exercising police powers is narrowly construed under international human rights law. The Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials,⁷⁵⁸ states that law enforcement officials (which include military authorities when exercising police powers) “may use force only when strictly necessary and to the extent required for the performance of their duty” (art. 3). Under the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials:⁷⁵⁹ law enforcement officials shall not use firearms against persons except in self-defence or defence of others against the imminent threat of death or serious injury, to prevent the perpetration of a particularly serious crime involving grave threat to life, to arrest a person presenting such a danger and resisting their authority, or to prevent his or her escape, and only when less extreme means are insufficient to achieve these objectives.

1427. Whenever the lawful use of force and firearms is unavoidable, law enforcement officials are obliged, inter alia, to “ensure that assistance and medical aid are rendered to any injured or affected persons at the earliest possible moment”.

1428. Insofar as the events involve individuals who are human rights defenders, the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Declaration on Human Rights Defenders) is also relevant,⁷⁶⁰ in particular article 5 which affirms the right of ⁷⁵⁸ General Assembly resolution 34/169.

⁷⁵⁹ Adopted at the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Havana, 27 August to 7 September 1990.

⁷⁶⁰ General Assembly resolution, 53/144, annex. Israel joined consensus when the Declaration was adopted by the Assembly.

everyone “to meet or assemble peacefully” for the purpose of promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Conclusions

1429. The dispersal by Israeli security forces of demonstrations in the West Bank is prima facie in violation of the rights to freedom of expression and to peaceful assembly. Insofar as the protesters were protesting against the violation of human rights in Gaza, the activities of the security forces in dispersing demonstrations ran counter to the provisions of the Declaration on Human Rights Defenders.

1430. Regardless of whether the facts indicate that the above mentioned rights could be permissibly limited under the terms of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the methods and means of dispersal are questionable. The use of force described to the Mission against peaceful demonstrations is clearly prohibited in such situations, in particular the lethal use of tear gas canisters against demonstrators, of live ammunition (including .22 ammunition), and of snipers. It should be emphasized that the norms relating to the use of force by law enforcement officers outlined above, continue to apply even when the demonstrations are no longer peaceful, such as when stones are thrown, such as in the case of the Ni’lin demonstration of 28 December. The situation described by the witnesses to the killings in Ni’lin suggests that firearms were used when there was no threat to the life of the Israeli security forces or others under their protection. According to the witnesses, both the deceased were shot in the upper body and one of them in the back.

1431. On the basis of the facts obtained, the Mission finds that the use of firearms resulting in the death of demonstrators constitutes a violation of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights as an arbitrary deprivation of life. Reports that Israeli security forces delayed the provision of medical aid to the injured in at least two demonstrations also suggest that violations occurred under the Fourth Geneva Convention and Principle 5 of the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials.

1432. The impermissible use of force that resulted in injury rather than death is in clear violation of a number of standards, including articles 7 and 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

1433. The use of snipers and lethal ammunitions against demonstrators in situations where there is no threat to soldiers’ lives or to the lives of others under their protection appears to indicate an intention, or at least recklessness, to cause harm to civilians, which may amount to wilful killing. Several of the incidents reported to the Mission raise concerns in this regard.

1434. The discrimination in the open-fire regulations for security forces dealing with demonstrations based on the presence of persons of a particular nationality, violates the principle of non-discrimination of article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. These violations are all the more serious insofar as the regulations reflect a State policy based on discrimination.

3. Violence by Israeli security forces outside the context of demonstrations

1435. Reports on incidents such as the raid on Haris of March 2009 and the types of acts described by Colonel Virob, as well as those described in affidavits reviewed by the Mission raise concerns with regard to their compliance with article 32 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and article 16 of the Convention against Torture on the prevention of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

4. Accountability

1436. The Mission emphasizes that effective investigation and, if appropriate, prosecution resulting from acts by its agents or by third parties involving deprivation of life, serious injuries and torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and other possible violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law, is an obligation of the State of Israel. The Mission is concerned that the facts before it point to a failure by Israel to do so with regard to acts committed against Palestinians as reported above.

5. Conclusions

1437. The Mission is alarmed at both the reported increase in settler violence over the past year and the failure of the Israeli security forces to prevent settler attacks against Palestinian civilians and their property.

1438. The Mission is also gravely concerned at the increased use of force, including the use of lethal force, in response to demonstrations, and at the generalized violence of security forces against Palestinians living under occupation in the West Bank. Of particular concern is the apparent and systematic lack of accountability for acts of violence committed by Israeli security forces against Palestinian civilians.

1439. While the filming of incidents has led to the exposure of particular grave incidents of violence, the Mission is also concerned about violence that may have occurred out of sight gone unreported.

1440. In the opinion of the Mission, a line has been crossed, what is fallaciously considered acceptable “wartime behaviour” has become the norm. Public support for a more hard-line attitude towards Palestinians generally,⁷⁶¹ lack of public censure and lack of accountability⁷⁶² all combine to increase the already critical level of violence against the protected population.

⁷⁶¹ As stated by a number of interviewees, such as Sarit Michaeli during a telephone interview, 5 August 2009.

⁷⁶² Michael Sfard, a prominent Israeli human rights lawyer, concludes in an article entitled “The price of internal legal opposition to human rights abuses”, in which he reviews 35 years of human rights practice in Israel, “by lodging petitions to the Israeli High Court, human rights lawyers act as public relations agents of the occupation by promoting the notion that Palestinian residents have a recourse to justice.”

XXI. DETENTION OF PALESTINIANS IN ISRAELI PRISONS

1441. According to estimates, as at 1 June 2009, there were approximately 8,100 Palestinian “political prisoners” in detention in Israel, including 60 women and around 390 children.⁷⁶³ Most of these detainees are charged or convicted by the Israeli military court system that operates for Palestinians in the West Bank. The most common convictions are for stone-throwing. Being a “member of an illegal organization” is another common charge.⁷⁶⁴ All but one of the Israeli prisons holding Palestinians from the Occupied Palestinian Territory are located inside Israel.⁷⁶⁵

1442. As at June 2009, of all the Palestinians held by Israel for reasons related to the occupation, 512 were held without charge or trial, of whom 12 were held under the Israeli Unlawful Combatants Law and 500 as “administrative detainees”.^{766, 767}

1443. The military courts system has been specifically set up by Israel to deal with Palestinians from the Occupied Palestinian Territory, while Israeli citizens living or otherwise present in the West Bank, if arrested, are dealt with under the Israeli civilian legal system. The Palestinian Authority is not allowed to arrest or detain Israeli citizens.⁷⁶⁸

1444. It is estimated that during the past 43 years of occupation, approximately 700,000 Palestinian men, women and children have been detained under Israeli military orders.⁷⁶⁹ Israel argues that these detentions are necessary on grounds of security.

⁷⁶³ Estimates vary. The Mission is using figures provided by Addameer, Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association at 1 June 2009. Its General Director, Ms. Sahar Francis, explained at the public hearing in Geneva on 7 July 2009 that its statistics were based on monthly figures published by the Israeli prison authority and on its own monthly visits to detention facilities in Israel. The organization also attempted to collect direct information from the prisoners. Providing exact statistics was difficult as these figures changed daily, with new arrests and releases. She mentioned, for example, that in 2008, the Israeli military arrested more than 4,000 people, so the average was around 300 per day. Addameer defines as “political prisoners” those prisoners detained in relation with the occupation, as opposed to detainees suspected or convicted of crimes/offences unrelated to the occupation.

⁷⁶⁴ Ms. Sahar Francis, testimony at the public hearing, Geneva, 7 July 2009.

⁷⁶⁵ See “Yesh Din Petitions HCJ: Stop holding Palestinian detainees inside Israel. Yesh Din, along with the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI) and HaMoked: Center for the Defence of the Individual, filed a petition to the HCJ on March 25, 2009 demanding that prisoners and detainees who reside in the West Bank not be held in facilities within Israel, and that arraignment hearings for such detainees also not be held in courts outside the West Bank”. See also, for instance, Backyard Proceedings... See also <http://www.hamoked.org/>. See also Lisa Hajjar, Courting Conflict: The Israeli Military Court System in the West Bank and Gaza (University of California Press, 2005).

⁷⁶⁶ Figures provided by Addameer for 1 June 2009.

⁷⁶⁷ The original military order dealing specifically with administrative detention is Military Order No. 1226. Subsequent amendments to it have each received different numbers. The most recent is: Order regarding Administrative Detentions (Temporary Order) [Combined version] (Judea and Samaria) (No. 1591), 2007. See also Addameer, “Administrative detention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory: A legal analysis report”, November 2008.

⁷⁶⁸ The Palestinian-Israeli Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, annex IV, Protocol Concerning Legal Affairs, art. I.

⁷⁶⁹ A/HRC/7/17.

1445. Due process rights for Palestinians in the Israeli military court system are severely limited. Military Order No. 378, which is the main source regulating detention and trial, allows for a Palestinian detainee from the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including children as young as 12, to be held for up to eight days before being brought before a military judge (Israeli detainees must be brought before a judge within 48 hours). Moreover, Palestinian detainees can be held for up to 90 days without access to a lawyer (compared to 48 hours for Israeli detainees).⁷⁷⁰ Palestinian detainees can be held for up to 188 days before being charged (an Israeli detainee must be charged within 30 days).⁷⁷¹

1446. Accusations of torture and other ill-treatment during arrest, interrogation and detention are common, while the court system is criticized for the use of coerced evidence.⁷⁷² It is also alleged that complaints about the ill-treatment of detainees rarely lead to investigations or to prosecution, let alone conviction.⁷⁷³ The Israeli military court system treats Palestinian children as adults from the age of 16.⁷⁷⁴ Israeli citizens, however, are considered adults only from the age of 18.

1447. Palestinian prisoners are reportedly held in substandard detention facilities (for example, Ktziot prison houses prisoners in tents) with very limited access to health care and education.⁷⁷⁵ Detention inside Israel also means that many detainees do not receive family visits, as their relatives are prohibited from entering Israel (see chap. XXII).

1448. During the Israeli military operations in Gaza, scores of Gazans were detained by the Israeli armed forces. A portion of those were taken to prisons inside Israel, where some remain at the time of writing. This is discussed in chapter XV.

A. Issues linked to Israel's December-January military operations in Gaza

1. Differential treatment of Gaza prisoners

1449. After its disengagement from Gaza in August 2005, Israel ceased to apply its military orders to Gaza and began to prosecute Gaza detainees under domestic criminal law. In June ⁷⁷⁰ Articles 78c and d of Military Order No. 378 "Order Concerning Security Directives" and the Israeli Criminal Procedure (Powers of Enforcement – Detention) Law 1996.

⁷⁷¹ See also, for instance, Backyard Proceedings.... See also <http://www.hamoked.org>.

⁷⁷² In its review of Israel in May 2009, the United Nations Committee against Torture expressed concern inter alia at the "numerous, ongoing and consistent allegations" of the use of methods of interrogation contrary to the Convention (CAT/C/ISR/CO/4). See also the United Against Torture coalition's three "Alternative Reports" to the Committee, September 2008; United Against Torture Report, April 2009; examples of torture practised in the briefing by PCATI and the World Organisation against Torture to the Committee (April 2009); Amnesty International's report to the Committee.

⁷⁷³ PCATI, "No defence: Soldier violence against Palestinian detainees", Periodic Report, June 2008, p. 38; see also Yesh Din's Accountability Project statistics: <http://www.yesh-din.org/site/index.php?page=criminal3&lang=en>.

⁷⁷⁴ See Military Order No. 132.

⁷⁷⁵ On child detainees, see below; on female detainees, see, for instance, Addameer, "In need of protection: Palestinian female prisoners in Israeli detention", November 2008.

2006, the Knesset passed a law⁷⁷⁶ which alters existing Israeli criminal law due process guarantees by, for example, allowing a detainee to be held incommunicado for 21 days (after an initial appearance before a judge within 96 hours).⁷⁷⁷

1450. The Law does not discriminate. However, in practice, it is applied only to Palestinian suspects, whether Palestinians from the Occupied Palestinian Territory or Palestinian citizens of Israel. According to estimates submitted to the Knesset's Constitution, Law and Justice Committee by the head of the investigations unit of the General Security Services concerning the applicability of the Law, "over 90 per cent of detainees (to whom this Law was applied) were from the Gaza Strip, but there were cases of detainees who are not from the Gaza Strip such as East Jerusalem and the Arab-Israeli... who are Israeli civilians."⁷⁷⁸

1451. The Law was extended in January 2008. In January 2009 a petition submitted to the Israeli High Court of Justice by ACRI, PCATI and Adalah was heard. The Court criticized many aspects of the law, but the Government argued that it had secret materials that explained why such a law was necessary. In March 2009, the Court decided, on the basis of the secret evidence provided by the State, that the restrictions imposed by the Law were legal and proportionate.⁷⁷⁹ In protest against the Court's use of secret evidence to determine the constitutionality of the Law, the human rights organizations withdrew their petition.⁷⁸⁰

(a) Unlawful Combatants Law

1452. The Israeli Internment of Unlawful Combatants Law 2002 provides for the indefinite detention of "foreign" nationals.⁷⁸¹ It offers a lower level of protection than the Law described above. In addition, it provides for a lower burden of proof and a higher threshold for judicial review.⁷⁸² In its submission to the Committee against Torture, the United Against Torture

⁷⁷⁶ Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers – Detention) (Detainee Suspected of Security Offence) (Temporary Order) Law 2006.

⁷⁷⁷ Compared to detainees held under the regular criminal procedural law, who have to be brought before a judge within 24 hours, or 48 hours, as per the Criminal Procedure (Powers of Enforcement – Arrests) Law – 1996. The Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism commented, on 5 July 2006, following the adoption on 27 June 2006 by the Knesset of Law 5765 – 2006 "Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers – Detention) (Detainees Suspected of Security Offences) (Temporary Provision)": "The law still does not provide all the necessary procedural safeguards for individuals detained for security reasons. In particular, the law provides that an individual may be held in detention for up to 96 hours before being brought before a judge and may not be present in court when a decision on the extension of the detention is made during the period when he is barred from contact with a legal counsel. In addition, while the provisions on access to legal counsel have not been worsened by this new law, the 21 days of detention without access to legal counsel authorized by the detention law currently in force remain incompatible with international human rights law" (A/HRC/4/26/Add.1).

⁷⁷⁸ Quoted in the petition submitted by ACRI, PCATI and Adalah to the High Court of Justice, The Public Committee against Torture et al. v. Minister of Justice et al., case No. 2028/08.

⁷⁷⁹ ACRI and Partners, "Revoke law severely limiting due process rights", press release, 4 January 2009.

⁷⁸⁰ ACRI, "Illegal decision by HCJ Judges to hear classified GSS evidence", press release, 24 March 2009.

⁷⁸¹ According to Adalah's data, the Law has been applied only to Gazans in the past six months, see "New data on Palestinian prisoners incarcerated in Israeli prisons", Adalah's Newsletter, vol. 62, July 2009.

⁷⁸² Mission correspondence with HaMoked, 22 July 2009.

coalition of NGOs concludes that “an examination of its provisions suggests that the goal behind the law is to allow Israel to hold suspects as hostages who can be used as bargaining chips in future negotiations”.

1453. According to this Law, a person is designated an “unlawful combatant” by the Chief of General Staff. The definition the Law gives to the concept of “unlawful combatant” is:

a person who has participated either directly or indirectly in hostile acts against the State of Israel or is a member of a force perpetrating hostile acts against the State of Israel, where the conditions prescribed in article 4 of the Third Geneva Convention of 12th August 1949 with respect to prisoners-of-war and granting prisoner-of-war status in international humanitarian law, do not apply to him (art. 2).

1454. The amendments made to the Law in July 2008, which included lengthening the time detainees can be held before they must be brought before a judge and before they must be allowed access to a lawyer, were challenged and upheld on appeal. Israel’s Court of Criminal Appeals considered the Law constitutional and consistent with international humanitarian law.⁷⁸³

1455. Detention under this Law does not require admission of guilt or the existence of evidence acceptable as part of fair trial standards. According to Al-Mezan, “this law essentially licenses the military to hold individuals arbitrarily and indefinitely, on the basis of assumed rather than proven guilt that they are conducting direct or indirect activities that could harm the security of Israel or are affiliated to groups working to harm the security of Israel.”⁷⁸⁴

(b) Gaza and the ICRC Family Visits Programme

1456. On 6 June 2007, the Israeli authorities suspended the ICRC Family Visits Programme in the Gaza Strip, effectively barring all means of communication between Gazan prisoners and the outside world.⁷⁸⁵ Before the new arrests of Gazan residents during Israel’s latest offensive in the Gaza Strip (see chapter XV), the ban affected approximately 900 prisoners and their families. In June 2009, ICRC called for the ban to be lifted.⁷⁸⁶

1457. According to Addameer, the timing of the decision to ban family visits coincided with factional fighting in the Gaza Strip which was followed by Hamas’ seizing of control, a party which Israel does not recognize and defines as a “terrorist” organization. Therefore, the decision to suspend the programme appears to be a form of collective punishment intended to coerce Palestinians to respond to Israel’s demands in terms of Palestinian leadership.⁷⁸⁷ On 17 June 2008, Adalah filed a petition on behalf of Gazan prisoners’ families, Al-Mezan and the ⁷⁸³ Supreme Court sitting as the Court of Criminal Appeals, A and B v. State of Israel, Judgement of 11 June 2008.

⁷⁸⁴ “Al-Mezan calls for release of all detainees held by Israel and especially those categorized as ‘unlawful combatants’ in contravention of international law and human rights principles”, 26 March 2009.

⁷⁸⁵ Palestinian detainees are not normally given access to telephones or the Internet.

⁷⁸⁶ ICRC, “Gaza: families should be allowed to resume visits to relatives detained in Israel”, news release, 10 June 2009.

⁷⁸⁷ Addameer, “The Palestinian prisoners of Israel”, fact sheet, February 2009.

Association for the Palestinian Prisoners, challenging the legality of the ban on visits.⁷⁸⁸ At the time of writing, this petition remained pending.⁷⁸⁹ In October 2008, the Government of Israel submitted arguments to the Supreme Court to suggest that the State is not obliged to permit families from Gaza to visit their relatives incarcerated in Israeli prisons.⁷⁹⁰

1458. In addition, during the December-January military operations in Gaza, Adalah filed a petition demanding that Gazan prisoners should be allowed to use the telephone to contact family members. Not allowing this, Adalah argues, violates detainees' right to dignity and their right to family life, and "transforms their imprisonment to a humiliating and degrading experience that contradicts international norms and conventions, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights."⁷⁹¹ According to Adalah, the Prison Authority replied that they allowed each detainee to use the telephone once. Some prisoners confirmed to Adalah that they had been allowed to use the telephone, but others said that they were not allowed to do so on the grounds that they did not present a certificate proving that a close relative had passed away during the offensive.⁷⁹²

2. Increase in children from the West Bank arrested and detained during or after the military operations in Gaza

1459. The Mission received information that during the Israeli military operations in Gaza the numbers of children from the West Bank detained by Israel increased. According to Defence for Children International – Palestine Section, the figures for January and February were 389 and 423, compared with 327 and 307 the previous year and a monthly average of 319 in 2008. Many of these children were reportedly arrested on the street and/or during demonstrations.⁷⁹³ Defence for Children International also found that their average age changed: for the 12–15 age range, the percentage is usually 23; in January–February 2009, it was 36.⁷⁹⁴ In January–March, it represented 69 children in the Israeli military courts. As of 20 June 2009, eight of these children

⁷⁸⁸ Adalah, "Adalah, Al Mezan and the Association for the Palestinian Prisoners petition Supreme Court demanding that Palestinians from Gaza be permitted to visit their relatives incarcerated in Israeli prisons", press release, 17 June 2008.

⁷⁸⁹ Mission correspondence with Adalah, 2 August 2009.

⁷⁹⁰ Adalah, "State to Supreme Court: Israel not obliged to permit families from Gaza to visit their relatives incarcerated in Israeli prisons", press release, 27 October 2008.

⁷⁹¹ Adalah: "Adalah to [Attorney General] and Prison Service: Prisoners from Gaza incarcerated in Israel must be allowed to use telephones to check on their family members", press release, 31 December 2008.

⁷⁹² Mission correspondence with Adalah, 2 August 2009.

⁷⁹³ Defence for Children International – Palestine Section, "DCI concerned by increase in arrests of West Bank children", statement, 17 January 2009. In the first two weeks of January 10 Palestinian children were brought before Israeli military courts in pretrial hearings, while the normal monthly average is 10-15. Many of these children were arrested from the street and/or during demonstrations."

⁷⁹⁴ Submission to the Mission. See also "DCI concerned by sharp increase in detention of child", statement, 11 March 2009.

were released without charge, while among the 61 charged, 47 were sentenced and 14 are still awaiting trial.⁷⁹⁵

1460. Defence for Children International also found that there was a change in the percentages of children charged with particular offences in the first three months of 2009: in 2008, 27 per cent of children had been charged with throwing stones, as opposed to 61 per cent in the period covered by the report. “During OCL, the army didn’t want to lose control of the West Bank, so they came down like a tonne of bricks on demonstrations.” It concludes “The fact that many of these children were younger than the average child detainee and the fact that the majority were charged with minor offences suggest that this increase is the result of children’s participation in a high number of demonstrations in the West Bank during Operation Cast Lead, and the increased use of force, including mass arrest, by Israeli authorities to suppress and discourage these protests.”⁷⁹⁶

Number of Palestinian children in Israeli detention at the end of each month (2008)⁷⁹⁷

Year/Month	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	May	Jun	Jul	Aug	Sep	Oct	Nov	Dec
2008	327	307	325	327	337	323	324	293	304	297	327	342
2009	389	423	420	391	346	355	-	-	-	-	-	-

Note: These figures are not cumulative.

1461. One of the cases recorded by Defence for Children International is summarized as follows:

Ahmad Q.: 15-year-old boy arrested on 1 January 2009 and accused of throwing stones. On 1 January 2009, Ahmad was protesting against the war in Gaza near Qalandiya checkpoint. He was arrested by soldiers and dragged 100 metres to a jeep. He was slapped and kicked, had his hands tied with plastic cords and he was blindfolded. He was transferred to Atarot for interrogation, made to sit outside in the cold until 4 a.m., transferred to Ofer prison, and then to prisons inside Israel. He was charged with throwing stones and sentenced to four and a half months in prison and fined NIS 1,000.

1462. The Israeli operations in Gaza caused a wave of demonstrations that did not end with the operations. Child detentions continued to be high in February and March, with the high percentage of children charged with stone-throwing indicating that they were detained during demonstrations. Defence for Children International reports two incidents of mass arrests of ⁷⁹⁵ Submission to the Mission, p. 4. Defence for Children International – Palestine Section estimates that it represents 30-40 per cent of children appearing before Israeli military courts.

⁷⁹⁶ Mission meeting with Defence for Children International, 3 July 2009. On the increased use of force by the Israeli military in the West Bank, see chap. XX.

⁷⁹⁷ Defence for Children International – Palestine Section. These numbers are essentially taken up by West Bank ID holders. Palestinian children (and adults) with Jerusalem ID are generally processed by civilian Israeli courts. The numbers do not include children from Gaza. (Mission interview with Gerard Horton of Defence for Children International, 24 July 2009.)

children after demonstrations in January and March 2009, including one in the village of Haris, where the Israeli armed forces entered the village at around midnight and rounded up about 90 children, detaining them in a school for almost a day, before finally arresting four of them.⁷⁹⁸ The same incident was referred to in the British media and included testimony by Col. Itai Virob commander of the Kfir Brigade:

The worst beatings were in the bathrooms, he said. "The soldiers who took [detainees] to the toilet just exploded [over] them with beatings; cursed them with no reason. When they took one Arab to the toilet so that he could urinate, one of them gave him a slap that brought him to the ground. He had been handcuffed from behind with a nylon restraint and blindfolded. He wasn't insolent, he didn't do anything to get on anyone's nerves... [it was] just because he's an Arab. He was something like 15 years old."⁷⁹⁹

1463. On 6 March 2009, the President of Defence for Children International wrote to the Israeli Minister of Justice, Daniel Friedmann, seeking an explanation for the sharp increase in the number of Palestinian children being detained by Israel and notified the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child of these developments. At the time of writing, there had been no response.⁸⁰⁰

1464. In its report on Israel's detention of Palestinian children, Defence for Children International concluded that the abuse of Palestinian children by Israeli authorities is systematic and institutionalized.⁸⁰¹

1465. In a statement issued in support of this report, UNICEF, WHO, OHCHR and local and international child protection agencies (together the 1612 Working Group on Grave Violations against Children) stated that, "Israeli military courts violate many basic fair trial rights according to international humanitarian and human rights law... For example, in almost all cases, the primary evidence used to convict children is a confession obtained through coercive interrogations carried out in the absence of a lawyer. The most common charge made against children was stone-throwing (about 27 per cent), which carries a maximum sentence of 20 years. With the potential for harsh sentences, approximately 95 per cent of cases end in the child pleading guilty, whether the offence was committed or not."⁸⁰²

1466. A former Israeli military commander told the BBC that Palestinian youngsters are routinely ill-treated by Israeli soldiers while in custody. The BBC website item included a video of a young Palestinian boy being arrested at night. Col. Efrati, who had left the army five months

⁷⁹⁸ Submission to the Mission, p. 6.

⁷⁹⁹ The Independent, "Bound, blindfolded and beaten – by Israeli troops", 9 June 2009.

⁸⁰⁰ Submission to the Mission.

⁸⁰¹ Defence for Children International, Palestinian Child Prisoners: The systematic and institutionalised ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian children by Israeli authorities (June 2009).

⁸⁰² Statement available at: http://www.unicef.org/oPt/1612_STATEMENT_JUNE_9.pdf. The Working Group is chaired by UNICEF and includes OCHA, OHCHR, UNRWA, WHO, Save the Children Alliance, Al-Mezan Centre for Human Rights, B'Tselem, Defence for Children International – Palestine Section and PC HR.

previously, said: “I never arrested anyone younger than nine or 10, but 14, 13, 11 for me, they're still kids. But they're arrested like adults. Every soldier who was in the Occupied Territories can tell you the same story. The first months after I left the army I dreamed about kids all the time. Jewish kids. Arab kids. Screaming.”⁸⁰³ He added, “Maybe [the kid is] blindfolded for him not to see the base and how we’re working... But I believe maybe we put the blindfold because we don't want to see his eyes. You don’t want him to look at us - you know, beg us to stop, or cry in front of us. It’s a lot easier if we don’t see his eyes.”⁸⁰⁴

3. Members of the Palestinian Legislative Council

1467. In September 2005, i.e. some months before the Palestinian Legislative Council elections, the Israeli military conducted a two-day arrest campaign in which 450 persons affiliated with the political parties Hamas and Islamic Jihad were detained. These individuals had been involved in either, or both, the municipal elections or the Council elections. Most were kept in administrative detention and many were released just before or after the Palestinian Legislative Council elections on 25 January 2006. Some candidates were elected while in detention. A number of those released were subsequently rearrested.⁸⁰⁵

1468. Hamas had taken part in municipal elections in 2005 and in Council elections in mid-2005. While Hamas is considered an unlawful organization by Israel,⁸⁰⁶ its candidates participated under a list named “Change and Reform Bloc”, underlining the main election pledge of reforming the system. Not all candidates and elected persons on that list were members of Hamas; some independent candidates joined the list, including a number of Palestinian Christians.⁸⁰⁷

1469. Israel had not banned the Change and Reform Bloc from participating in the elections, which were supported by the international community.⁸⁰⁸ Reportedly, Israel had agreed the list of proposed candidates for the elections with the Palestinian Authority⁸⁰⁹ and facilitated voting on the day.⁸¹⁰ However, the mass arrests in September 2005 hampered campaigning and ⁸⁰³ BBC News, “Israeli troops accused of abuse”, 5 August 2009, available at: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/8186522.stm.

⁸⁰⁴ BBC News, “Israeli troops ‘ill-treat kids’”, 6 August 2009, available at: http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/8186905.stm.

⁸⁰⁵ Addameer, “The arrest and detention of Palestinian Legislative Council Members”, fact sheet, available at: <http://addameer.info/?p=503>.

⁸⁰⁶ See State of Israel - Defence Ministry: List of Declarations and Orders, available in Hebrew at: <http://www.mod.gov.il/pages/general/pdfs/terror.pdf>. Hamas was declared a “terrorist group” by Israel on 22 June 1989 (applicable in Israel) and in the Occupied Palestinian Territory on 26 February 1996.

⁸⁰⁷ “The arrest and detention...”.

