66. In light of the recommendation on reporting periodicity adopted by the Committee and described in the report on its twenty-ninth session (CRC/C/114), the Committee, aware of the considerable delay in the State party's reporting, underlines the importance of a reporting practice that is in full compliance with the provisions of article 44 of the Convention. An important aspect of States parties' responsibilities to children under the Convention is to ensure that the Committee on the Rights of the Child has regular opportunities to examine the progress made in the implementation of the Convention. In this regard, regular and timely reporting by States parties is crucial. The Committee recognizes that some States parties experience difficulties in initiating timely and regular reporting. As an exceptional measure, in order to help the State party catch up with its reporting obligations in full compliance with the Convention, the Committee invites the State party to submit its second, third and fourth reports in one consolidated report by 1 November 2008. The Committee expects the State party to report thereafter every five years, as foreseen by the Convention.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.
GENERAL

CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/1
15 April 2009

Original: ENGLISH

COMMITTEE ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILD

CONSIDERATION OF REPORTS SUBMITTED BY STATES PARTIES UNDER ARTICLE 8 (1) OF THE OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILD ON THE INVOLVEMENT OF CHILDREN IN ARMED CONFLICT

Initial reports of States parties due in 2007

ISRAEL*

[18 March 2008]

* In accordance with the information transmitted to States parties regarding the processing of their reports, the present document was not edited before being sent to the United Nations translation services.

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs	Page
Introduction	1 - 4	3
Article 1	5 - 10	3
Article 2	11 - 27	4
Article 3	28 - 60	7
Article 4	61 - 62	13
Article 5	63 - 64	14
Article 6	65 - 78	15
Article 7	79 - 80	16
Annex		17

Introduction

1. The Government of the State of Israel is pleased to submit its initial report concerning the implementation of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. Pursuant to the requirements of article 8, the present report shall provide comprehensive information on the measures Israel has taken to implement the provisions of the Optional Protocol.
2. The State of Israel signed the Optional Protocol on 14 November 2001, and ratified it on 18 July 2005. In accordance with article 10, paragraph 2, the Optional Protocol entered into force for Israel on 18 August 2005.
3. All relevant Governmental Ministries and institutes were requested to supply data and information concerning their respective fields of responsibility. Non-governmental organizations were also approached to contribute information assisting in the compilation of the present report.
4. The present report was compiled by the Human Rights and Foreign Relations Department in the Ministry of Justice.

Article 1

5. Following its ratification of the Optional Protocol, the State of Israel made the following declarations, in accordance with article 3, paragraph 2:

“The Government of the State of Israel declares pursuant to article 3, paragraph 2 of the Optional Protocol on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict that:

(a) The minimum age in which the State of Israel permits voluntary recruitment into its armed forces is 17 years of age, according to article 14 of the defense service law (consolidated version) 5746-1986;

(b) The Government of the State of Israel maintains the following safeguards in respect of voluntary recruitment into the armed forces so as to ensure that such recruitment is not forced or coerced:

- (i) In accordance with section 14 of the defense service law (consolidated version) 5746-1986, no person under 18 years of age may enlist in the Israeli armed forces without a written application submitted by the person and the written consent of the person's parents or legal guardian; however, should there be an appreciable difficulty in contacting one of the parents, the written consent of the other parent is sufficient;
- (ii) Clear and precise explanation of the nature of the duties involved in military service is provided to both the person and the person's parents or legal guardian;

- (iii) Prior to acceptance of any person into the Israeli armed forces a reliable proof of age is obtained through the Ministry of the Interior's official national population registry;
- (iv) The IDF has several long-term programmes in which participants may engage in academic or rabbinic studies or perform volunteer work, prior to the commencement of their actual military service. Enrollment in these programmes is open to participants from the age of 17 and a half. For administrative purposes, these participants undergo a one-day administrative induction into the armed forces. Following their administrative induction, these participants are released from active service and enrol in their chosen programme;
- (v) Persons under 18 years of age, who enlist in one of the aforementioned ways, may in no case be posted to combat duty."

6. As stated in section 5 of the above declarations, members of the Israel Defence Force (hereafter referred to as the IDF), aged under 18, are not posted in combat duty and therefore do not take a direct part in hostilities.

7. Following the above statement and Amendment 13 to the Defence Service Law (Consolidated Version), 5746-1986 ("the Defence Service Law") outlined below, persons aged 17-18, who volunteer for early military service, on their own initiative, pursuant to their written request, and according to the provisions declared by the State of Israel, are limited to military training until they attain 18 years, and do not take a direct part in hostilities.

8. There are a few isolated instances where a person under 18 may be recruited to a combat unit. It occurs only where recruits are to join a special unit, generally elite units, which require long-term training which begins only once a year. However, these units, and their commanders, are given clear instructions, prohibiting any person below the age of 18 to take direct part in combat duty prior to them becoming of age.

9. Furthermore, note that according to the aforementioned units training programmes, the length of the training required to directly take part in combat duty is such that virtually all recruits will be over 18 before they are required to participate in combat duty.

10. There are no IDF soldiers under the age of 18, who have been taken prisoner, regardless of their non-participation in hostilities.

Article 2

11. The IDF was founded on May 26, 1948, shortly after the establishment of the state of Israel, through the Israel Defence Forces Ordinance, 5708-1948 ("Israel Defence Forces Ordinance").

12. According to section 2 of Basic Law: The Army (1976), The IDF is subordinate to the directions of the civilian authorities, and is subject to the laws of the State. The goal of the IDF is to protect the independence and existence of the State of Israel, and to thwart all enemy efforts to disrupt a normal way of life therein. IDF soldiers are obligated to fight, to dedicate all their strength, and even to sacrifice their lives in order to protect the State of Israel, its citizens, and its residents. IDF soldiers operate according to IDF orders, whilst honoring the laws of the State, the norms of human dignity, and the values of the State of Israel as a Jewish and democratic state.

13. The Basic Values of the IDF are: Defence of the State, its Citizens and its Residents - The IDF's goal is to defend the existence of the State of Israel, its independence and the security of the citizens and residents of the state. Dedication to the Homeland and Loyalty to the Country - At the core of service in the IDF is a deep rooted sense of dedication to the homeland, commitment, and devotion to the State of Israel - a democratic state that serves as a national home for the Jewish People - its citizens and residents. Human Dignity - The IDF and its soldiers are obligated to protect human dignity. Every human being is of value regardless of his or her origin, religion, nationality, gender, status or position.

Calculation of age

14. According to section 13 of the Israeli Defence Service Law, the IDF may enlist a person of "military age" for regular service at a certain time and place. A man, found fit for service, will be of military age from 18 to 29 years. A woman, found fit for service, will be of military age from 18 to 26 years.

15. The above age is calculated, according to the amended section 2 of the Defence Service Law, in the following manner:

"Calculation of age

2. For the purpose of this Law -

- (1) The calculation of age shall be in accordance with the Jewish calendar.
- (2) A person who attains a particular age in a particular year of the Jewish calendar shall be regarded -
 - (a) If he attains that age after the 1st of Tishrei and before the 1st of Nissan of that year - as having attained that age on the 1st of Tishrei of that year;
 - (b) If he attains that age after the 1st of Nissan of that year - as having attained that age on the 1st of Nissan of that year;

(2a) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to the calculation if the person attains or does not attain the age of 18 years, regarding -

- (1) The definition of a person of military age in section 1 and section 13, 15 and 16, except for service in the academic reserve tracks recognized in the army regulations and non-payment service according to its meaning in the said regulations.

- (2) Sections 20(a) and (a1), 24 and 24a.
- (3) The determination of age shall be governed by the provisions set out in the schedule.”

16. According to the above section 2, the age for enlistment, is calculated according to the Gregorian calendar, with the exception of those enlisting to a one-day administrative induction of the academic reserve and the Hesder Yeshivas, a programme which combines advanced Talmudic studies with military service into the IDF, as will be detailed below.

17. Note that the above criteria relating to determination of age is attributed to Amendment 13 of the Israeli Defence Service Law, approved in the Knesset on 2 February 2004, which concluded the extensive process conducive to ratification of this Optional Protocol.

18. Under the former legislation, for administrative purposes, the year was divided according to the traditional Jewish calendar. Hence, the law applied a “presumption of ages” according to which persons designated for military service who were to reach the age 18 in the first half of a particular year, were considered to have reached that age on the first day of that year, while persons designated for military service who were to reach age 18 in the second half of that year, were considered as having turned 18 on the first day of the second half of that year. Hence, there were some instances where those who have reached the age of seventeen and a half, were eligible for compulsory draft. This situation was rectified by the existing legislation in order to conform with the provision of the Optional Protocol. Further details are provided below.

19. The explanatory note to the above amendment bill states: “In the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, accepted in the United Nations General Assembly in New York on 25 May 2000, entered into force on 12 February 2002 and signed by the State of Israel on 14 November 2001, it was determined, for the purpose of putting an end to the phenomenon of children and youth under the age of 18 being recruited to the armed forces, that the minimum age for compulsory recruitment to armed forces and taking part of hostilities is the age of 18.”

20. Additional provisions applying to volunteer service can be found in the Defence Service Regulations (Volunteering for Defence Service), 5734 - 1974. These Regulations also apply to those aged 17-18 whose parents or legal guardians agreed to their volunteering.

The recruitment process

21. According to the Defence Service Law, the IDF may call-up persons designated for military service who are over 17 years of age, according to the Jewish calendar and the age presumption outlined in section 2 as detailed above, for registration, medical examination and other examinations to determine their general suitability for service. This enables the IDF to call-up persons for registration, medical examination and other examinations starting from the age of 16 and a half. According to the IDF regulations, (MG-09-06 - Planning the Procedure for the 1st and 2nd Registration), medical examination will only take place after the person designated for military service is 17 years of age.

22. The practical effect is that when they reach the minimal age, persons designated for military service are called to register their personal details, and attend a fitness examination and various other examinations, to determine their general suitability for service. If possible, all the above is performed on one single date.

23. Until completion of the entire enlistment procedure, persons designated for military service may be called-up for additional examinations. These subsequent exams might concern, for example, a specific medical situation, or a socio-economic evaluation for additional alleviations, or they might aid in additional classification for specific positions.

24. Once the age of enlistment is attained, persons designated for military service are called-up to commence their military service, (otherwise known as an enlistment order). This concludes their recruitment process. On the date of their enlistment, soldiers are sent for basic training, and subsequently, to their respective designated military units.

Requisite documentation

25. The IDF considers the Ministry of the Interior's official national population registry as reliable proof of age. Data from the registry is transmitted directly from the Ministry of the Interior. Moreover, in the process of registration, additional data verification is performed. The person designated for military service is requested to provide a statement regarding his personal details including his age, and the date he/she is scheduled to conclude his/her high school education. Where any inconsistency is found, further inquiries are made.

Times of emergency

26. According to section 34 of the Defence Service Law, the Minister of Defence may, in emergency circumstances where state security so necessitates, call upon a person of military age, e.g. men - 18-54, women, 18-38, for regular, or reserve service. Such an order must be brought before the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, as soon as possible after it is issued. The Committee may approve such an order with or without adjustments, or they may disapprove it, or bring it before the Knesset. Unless approved, such an order shall expire within 14 days from the date of its issuance.

27. There are no legal options to lower the recruitment age, in times of emergency and those who are not designated for service, but wish to do so, may assist in the performance of non military activities that shall not constitute direct participation in hostilities. Therefore, any service volunteered for by persons under 18 will adhere to objectives and spirit of the Optional Protocol, whilst still allowing these persons, to be actively engaged in civil aid of the State during a crisis.

Article 3

Paragraph 1

28. The above declarations are in accordance with the provisions of section 14 of the Defence Service Law. Those provisions enable an Israeli citizen or permanent resident, who is aged 17-18 and found fit for service, to be enlisted according to his written application and the written consent of the person's parents or legal guardian. In the event of an appreciable difficulty in contacting one of the parents, the written consent of the other parent will be sufficient.

29. Note that according to section 14 (b) of the Defence Service Law, the provisions of this Law shall apply to a person who was enlisted according to section 14 (a) as if he were enlisted according to section 13, excluding the limitation of their taking direct part in hostilities, according to IDF guidelines.

30. Section 17 of the Defence Service Law enables a person not required to perform regular service to volunteer to serve in the IDF regular forces. The age limitation in this section is subject to the age limitation in Section 14, i.e. 17 years of age. Volunteering in this manner is subject to a signed declaration by the volunteer, and necessitates the approval of the Minister of Defence (note that according to section 54 of the Defence Service Law this authority was delegated to the Head of the Recruitment Administration or his deputy). A volunteer serving in accordance with this section will, with regard to his rights and duties, be subject to the same law as any other person serving under this law.

Statistics

31. Current IDF data indicates that between July 18, 2005 and October 10, 2007 - 1,014 persons designated for service, aged under 18 (according to the Gregorian calendar) were called for service. The vast majority underwent a one-day administrative induction into the armed forces. Following these procedures, these participants were released from active duty to enroll into their chosen programme - most notably with the academic reserve, or Hesder Yeshiva studies.

Paragraph 2

32. Israel provided the above declarations in accordance with section 3(2) and adheres to every aspect of it. Safeguards ensuring that service is genuinely voluntary include:

(a) The requirement of a written application submitted by the person requesting permission to serve;

(b) Before enlisting a person aged 17-18 as per their request, a written, and informed consent from the person's parents or legal guardians must be obtained;

(c) To be genuinely voluntary a person must give full and informed consent. To that end, a clear and precise explanation of the nature of the duties involved in military service is provided to both the person, and the person's parents or legal guardian;

(d) Additionally, prior to acceptance of any person into the Israeli armed forces, reliable proof of age is obtained through the Ministry of the Interior's official national population registry;

(e) Additional data verification is performed.

33. Adoption of the Optional Protocol was the successful outcome of a lengthy process, which included intensive inter-ministerial deliberation among the IDF, the Ministry of Defense, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. These deliberations resulted in the above-stated Amendment 13 of the Defence Service Law and further required the amendment of several IDF procedures to fully comply with the provisions of the Optional Protocol.

34. The Knesset Committee on the Rights of the Child devoted a session to this issue on March 8 2001, in the presence of representatives from the Ministry of Justice, the IDF, (the Head of the Recruitment Administration, his deputy, and a representative of the Military Attorney's Office), and members of the relevant NGOs.

Paragraph 3

The volunteering process

35. In accordance with the procedures of the above-stated section 14 of the Defence Service Law, persons aged 17-18 may apply for service via a written request to enlist. IDF guidelines grant the authority to approve this request to the Head of the IDF Recruitment Administration, or his deputy.

36. According to the IDF guideline (attached as annex), such a request will be examined to ensure that is not in contradiction with an existing order or guideline. The Head of the IDF Recruitment Administration has to find proper justification for an early enlistment. Such justification may be based on financial, family or other relevant considerations. This requirement applies to: Cadets; graduates of an IDF driving course; members of Hesder Yeshivas, a programme which combines advanced Talmudic studies with military service into the IDF. Except in very extreme circumstances, the Hesder Yeshivas programmes do not include combat duty until the actual enlistment; persons designated for military service of non-combat nature, which begins with courses that only take place once a year (The IDF orchestra, the IDF theatre, etc.); special cases (e.g. extraordinary personal circumstances), and is based on the stipulation that combat duty will not take place until the person turns 18 years of age according to the Hebrew Calendar.

37. It is noteworthy that under no circumstances can the enlistment of a person less than 17 years of age take place. Furthermore, according to the above guidelines, enlistment of a person aged at least 17 years necessitates the authorization of the Head of the IDF Recruitment Administration.

Parental consent

38. Parental/legal guardian consent to early enlistment of their son/daughter shall be given in writing, in the IDF Recruitment Administration in the presence of an officer or a non-commissioned officer, or before the city officer or his aid, (an officer or a non-commissioned officer), the head/secretary of the local municipality, or a lawyer who can attest to their identity, approval, and signature in his presence. A legal guardian must provide legal proof of his guardianship.

39. Following the signing of this document, a clear and precise explanation of the nature of the duties involved in military service is provided to both the person, and the person's parents or legal guardian. Note that due to the prevalence of military service in the IDF in Israel, the nature of the duties constituting military service is considered to be common knowledge. As such, no information in addition to the verbal explanation and data provided in the consent form has been published, or otherwise issued in that regard.

40. According to section 2 (2a) of the Defence Service Law, persons aged 17-18 who take part in the IDF academic reserve are not soldiers during their NPS. These persons require IDF permission to work or travel abroad, and may theoretically be enlisted for combat duty in very extreme times of state emergency, e.g. wars. In practical terms however, these persons may only be enlisted following the minimum standard of military training that must be provided for members of the academic reserve after a year of studying - i.e. after they attain 18 years of age. The first year of the service of members of the Hesder Yeshivas is devoted to schooling, and therefore these members are as a minimum 18 when beginning their military training, and later their combat duty.

Requisite documentation

41. As detailed above, the IDF considers the Ministry of the Interior's official national population registry as reliable proof of age. Data from the registry is transmitted directly from the Ministry of the Interior for that purpose. Furthermore, during the process of registration, additional data verification is performed, and the person designated for military service is asked to provide a statement regarding his/her personal details, including his/her age and the date he is scheduled to conclude his high school education. Where an inconsistency is found, a further inquiry is made.

Service periods

42. According to Section 15 of the Defence Service Law, men serve for a period of: 30 months (36 months following a temporary provision) if called to enlist between the ages of 18-26; for a period of 24 months if called to enlist between the ages of 27-29; and for a period of 12 months if they are doctors or dentists, and are aged 35-38. New immigrants, (oleh), aged 27 and above will serve for a period of 18 months only, excluding certain exceptions.

43. According to section 16 of the Defence Service Law, women serve for a period of: 24 months where they are called to enlist between the ages of 18-26, or are doctors or dentists aged 27-34, if they are doctors or dentists aged 35-38 service will be for a period of 12 months. New immigrants, (oleh), aged 27 and above will serve for 18 months only, excluding certain exceptions setting a 36 months service, according to section 61a of the Defence Service Law.

44. The provisions of the above Sections 15-16 of the Defence Service Law, apply to those volunteering for service aged 17-18, in accordance with Section 14 of the Defence Service Law.

45. According to Section 11 of the Defence Service Regulations (Volunteering for Defence Service), 5734 - 1974, the Minister of Defence may approve that a person volunteer for a period shorter than that set out in the Regulations, e.g. less than the provisions in sections 15 -16 of the Defence Service Law, or a shorter period set for older enlistees.

Application of the Military Law

46. Section 35 of the Defence Service Law applies the provisions of military laws to all those enlisting, commencing on the date set for their enlistment. The Military Jurisdiction Law, 5716-1955, (“Military Jurisdiction Law”), defines a soldier as a member of the IDF regular forces, or a volunteer. Section 4 of the Military Jurisdiction Law applies the Law to those lawfully accepted to the IDF regular forces. Accordingly, military justice and discipline laws apply, inter alia, to those volunteering for service aged 17-18.

Israel Border Police

47. According to section 24 of the Defence Service Law, those serving in the Border Police, are recruited in a manner comparable with that of IDF soldiers, including the same age restrictions. They see out their service in the Israel Border Police, which is the operational branch of the Israeli Police. Three years as a border policeman is equal to three years as an IDF soldier. According to section 25, 24A of the Defence Service Law, except for drug-related offences, the Military Jurisdiction Law does not apply to border policemen throughout the duration of their service. Rather the Police Ordinance, 5731-1971 applies. The same Ordinance applies to those serving in other Police units in locus of their military service, according to section 24A of the Defence Service Law.

Israel Prisons Service (IPS)

48. According to section 24B of the Defence Service Law, those serving in the IPS, are recruited in a manner identical to that of IDF soldiers, including the same age restrictions. They see out their service in the IPS in locum of their military service duty. Three years in the IPS is equal to three years as an IDF soldier. According to section 24C of the Defence Service Law, except for drug-related offences, the Military Jurisdiction Law does not apply to IPS wardens throughout the duration of their service. Rather the Prisons Ordinance [Consolidated Version], 5732-1971 applies.

Punishment for desertion and absence from service

49. According to section 94 of the Military Jurisdiction Law, absence from service without permission is punishable by three years imprisonment; unless it is proven that there was permission, or another reasonable justification exists. Desertion, defined as absence from military service with the intention not to return to the army, is punishable by 15 years imprisonment.

Encouraging volunteering

50. The IDF, the Israel Border Police and the IPS, neither encourage, nor use incentives to encourage volunteers to enlist for military service under the age of 18. The only instances where early enlistment is offered under the age of 18, is in cases where the starting date of a certain course or special service programme (i.e. the academic reserve, “combined service” in Hesder Yeshivas), not involving belligerent activity, precedes the date set for the persons designated “for military service” date of enlistment, and the IDF desires to enable the said persons to attend the course or service programme, (usually, a course or service programme which can be adhered only once a year). In this instance, the persons are invited to apply in writing for an early enlistment, in accordance with section 14 of the Defence Service Law.

Paragraph 5

Long-term programmes

51. The IDF has several long-term programmes in which participants may engage in academic and rabbinic studies. For administrative purposes, these participants undergo a one-day administrative induction into the armed forces. Following their administrative induction, these participants are released from active service to enroll in their chosen programme.

Schools operated by or under the auspices of the IDF

52. The IDF also has several schools and programmes designated for youths aged 13.5-18, where specific professional and military professions are taught. Some schools operate as boarding schools, and some as daily schools.

53. The IDF operates 6 military schools that provide schooling for three to four years. As of March 2007, these schools had a total of 2,766 pupils. The educational part of the training in these schools is carried out in high schools in the vicinity of the schools, whilst the technical/professional part is carried out on school grounds. The professional part of the pupils’ training is provided through IDF personnel and civilians working for the IDF alike.

54. Prior to their enrolment, the pupils are required to sign a contract between the pupils, his/her parents/legal guardian and the Ministry of Defence, and a form for three years of standing military service. These will be signed in the schools’ secretariats in the presence of the pupil and his/her parents/legal guardian.

55. School curriculum: In addition to specialized training, IDF-operated schools abide by the same curriculum as every other school in the Israeli educational system. The Ministry of Education curriculum specifically relates to relevant human rights and humanitarian issues, such as the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

56. Military training: Except for specific military style training, and during their basic training, pupils in the school do not receive or carry arms.

57. The pupils in these schools are not soldiers and the provisions of the Military Jurisdiction Law do not apply to them. In times of emergency, pupils over 16, (according to the provisions of the Civil Defence Law, 5711-1951), may engage in civil aid activities, of a non-military capacity; such as assisting in hospitals, local municipalities, schools, etc., as well as contributing professional assistance in their field of schooling. They may also undertake limited tasks relating to home security assignments.

58. Pupils in IDF operated schools are allowed to quit school any time they so desire. Provided they quit before completion of the 12th (and last grade), they will not be obligated to serve an additional standing military service. Pupils who have completed the 12th grade and wish to be exempt from additional standing military service, may apply for annulment of this period based on personal grounds.

59. Conditions, and discipline, in IDF-operated schools are determined by the IDF Human Resources Branch Orders. The disciplinary provisions which pupils willingly take upon themselves are well proportioned, balancing between the need to maintain a high level of discipline in a manner that is adequate and suited to the pupils' position. A right to plea provides a mechanism for the pupils to complain against their superiors in circumstances where discipline is considered excessive or ill-suited. All these aforementioned guarantees help uphold the pupils' right to human dignity, and is in accordance with the spirit of the Optional Protocol and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

60. Discipline in IDF-operated schools includes certain limitations, mostly similar to those imposed in civilian high schools/boarding schools: i.e. prohibitions on drinking alcoholic beverages, gambling, etc. The pupils are required to keep to a stricter dress code, including dressing in uniforms when on school grounds, as well as to observe certain limitations concerning shaving and haircuts.

Article 4

61. No armed groups distinct from the Israel Defence Forces, (the State's armed forces), exist in Israel, nor are they allowed to operate. This is in accordance with the Israel Defence Forces Ordinance, and section 6 of Basic Law: The Army (1976), which holds that:

“No armed force other than the Defence Army of Israel shall be established or maintained except under law.”

62. In addition, section 143 of the Israeli Penal Law criminalizes unlawful military exercises, as detailed:

Section 143

Unlawful military exercises

- (a) If a person did one of the following, then he is liable to seven years imprisonment:
- (1) He drilled or trained others - without permission from the Government - in the use of arms or the performance of military exercises, movements or operations;
 - (2) He was present at a meeting or assembly of persons held without permission from the Government, in order to drill or train other persons in the use of arms or the practice of military exercises, movements or operations.

(b) If he trains or drills the use of arms or the practice of military exercises, movements or operations at a meeting or assembly convened without Government permission or is present therein order to be so trained or drilled, then he is liable to three years' imprisonment.

Article 5

63. The State of Israel is committed to and adheres to the provisions of the relevant national and international law in all matters relating to the present Optional Protocol.

International mechanisms

64. The status of ratification of the main international instruments concerning children in armed conflict, is as follows:

(a) The Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) - the State of Israel signed the Convention on 3 July 1990 and ratified it on 3 October 1991;

(b) Amendment to article 43 (2) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child - (New York, 12 December 1995), the State of Israel ratified the amendment on 27 December 1999;

(c) International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1966) - the State of Israel signed the Convention on 19 December 1966 and ratified on it 3 October 1991;

(d) The Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) of the International Labour Organization (ILO) - the State of Israel ratified it on 21 June 1979;

(e) Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (182) of the International Labour Organization (ILO) - the State of Israel ratified it on 15 March 2005;

(f) Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, 1949 - the State of Israel ratified it on 6 July 1951;

(g) Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea, 1949 - the State of Israel ratified it on 6 July 1951;

(h) Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, 1949 - the State of Israel ratified it on 6 July 1951;

(i) Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, 1949 - the State of Israel ratified it on 6 July 1951.

Article 6

Paragraph 1

65. Israel signed the Optional Protocol on 14 November 2001, and ratified it on 18 July 2005. In accordance with article 10, paragraph 2, the Optional Protocol entered into force for Israel on 18 August 2005.

66. Amendment 13 of the Defence Service Law took place prior to the ratification of the Optional Protocol, as detailed above.

67. The Protocol is fully applicable before domestic jurisdictions, and its provisions are a cornerstone for the relevant bodies, as detailed throughout the present report. To date, issues with regard to the Optional Protocol have yet to be brought before Israeli Courts.

68. The State of Israel made no reservations regarding the Optional Protocol.

69. The implementation of the Optional Protocol is relevant to several Government Ministries and bodies, according to their different areas of expertise. Among the relevant bodies are the Ministry of Defence, The IDF, the Ministry of Public Security, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

70. The provisions of the Optional Protocol have been implemented through legislation, regulations, circulations, and procedures, as detailed throughout the present report.

Civil society

71. The State of Israel is a robust and vibrant democracy, with a diverse and active civil society. Non-governmental organizations play a distinctive role in Israel in several ways - they actively participate in public debate, and promote awareness and sensitivity to human rights issues on the whole, and with regard to children's rights in particular. Many of these organizations maintain regular working relations with the above mentioned Government Ministries and bodies.

Paragraph 2

72. Following the ratification of the Optional Protocol, Israel has taken several measures to make the principles and provisions of the Optional Protocol widely known. It has been promoted via appropriate means, to adults and children alike.

73. Accordingly, the Optional Protocol was translated into Hebrew by the Ministry of Justice and published on 1 January 2008 in the Official Gazette (K.A. 1465/54).

74. Presently, Israel has no international peacekeeping personnel, and therefore does not provide particular training on the subject although initial steps have been taken to explore relevant existing training provided by the United Nations.

75. There are currently four IDF officers and two police officers, who are intended to take part in international peacekeeping missions, as representatives of the State of Israel. All of them took part in a three-week United Nations training for peacekeeping personnel, that included the following issues:

(a) The relevant principles and standards of international law and best United Nations peacekeeping practice;

(b) Basic knowledge of the structure of the United Nations, the Charter, the United Nations mission, humanitarian and international law, including the human rights conventions and the Optional Protocol;

(c) Training on different nationalities, accents, cultures and atmosphere in simulation of an actual United Nations mission;

(d) Practical (mine awareness, map reading, driving, hostage taking) and theoretical training (United Nations organizations and functions, stress management, negotiations and mediations, United Nations policing best practice procedures).

76. Following ratification of the Optional Protocol, its provisions were disseminated notably to those responsible for military recruitment, and via training offered to all professional groups working with and for children.

77. The monitoring of the implementation of the Optional Protocol is carried out by several bodies - the Ministry of Defence, the IDF and the Ministry of Justice. Monitoring is done via legislation, as well as under routine supervision, and was also advanced during the process of compiling the present report.

Paragraph 3

78. Not applicable to Israel.

Article 7

79. The State of Israel fully adheres to the provisions of the Optional Protocol, in the manner specified above, and is acting to prevent any activity contrary to its provisions.

80. At present, budgetary limitations restrain the State of Israel from providing financial assistance to third parties, with regard to matters relating to the Optional Protocol.

Annex

PERMANENT ORDERS

9-10 September 2006

M.G. 09-10 Reporting for service as per personal request - Drafting of Minors - Parental/Guardians Consent

General

1. Drafting to the IDF will be done according to Defence Service Law (Consolidated Version) 5726-1965, according to the age of drafting determined therein.
2. Article 14 of the law states that “an Israeli citizen or permanent resident that has not yet reached the age of 18, and was found fit for service, can be called for regular service duty upon his written request, where his parents or guardian had given their consent, and he is at least 17 years old. It is sufficient to satisfy the requirement of parental consent if only one parent gives their consent where real difficulty is had in establishing contact with the other parent so as to inquire as to their stance”.
3. A person designated for military service will be drafted before he is 18 years of age according to the provisions of this order. Nothing in this provision shall diminish from any other orders or drafting guidelines.
4. For the purpose of calculating if the person reached or did not reach the age of 18, no use will be made of the age presumption set in Article 2(2) of the Defence Service Law, except unless on the subject of the academic reserve or the service without pay courses.
5. This order details the procedure for the treatment of minors designated for service who wish to apply for early drafting, not taking into account those designated for service who are graduates of pre-military training who would be otherwise treated according to the permanent order for the Chief of Staff - Human Resources Section MN10-01 “ Prior Commitment of Pre-military Training Cadets”.

Method

6. Where a person designated for service, who is over 17 years of age according to the Hebrew Calendar, and reports to the Recruitment Bureau and asks to be drafted, the Recruitment Bureau will check if the minor’s drafting does not contradict an existing guideline or order.
7. If it is realized that the minor’s early recruitment contradicts an existing guideline or order, or the Head of the Recruitment Bureau does not find sufficient reason for an early recruitment - his request will be denied.

8. If it is realized that the early recruitment of the person designated for service does not contradict orders or guidelines, and the Head of the Recruitment Bureau considers that there is reason to accept the persons request based on economic, family considerations, or on any other grounds, the Bureau shall act as follows:

(a) It will request that the minor file a private written request for early recruitment. (Form 7308 - "Minor request for early recruitment");

(b) In the request, (found at Part B of the form), the parents/guardian of the person are asked for their consent to his early recruitment;

(c) The request will be addressed to the Head of the Recruitment Bureau, and either he, or his deputy, shall consider it for approval.

9. A. Authority to approve the recruitment of minors lies with the Head of the Recruitment Bureau or his deputy, and may be exercised at the request of the following persons:

(a) Cadets;

(b) Graduates of pre-military driving course;

(c) Members of NAHAL (Fighting Pioneer Youth) seed groups - for enable them to enlist together with the group they belong to;

(d) Students of Hesder Yeshivas;

(e) Persons designated to join non-combat military courses that open once a year;

(f) The authority may also be exercised for other exceptional reasons, such as extraordinary personal circumstances, and of reasons to be recorded - provided the minor will not participate in any military training or combat duty before he has reached the age of 18.

B. Preceding drafting by more than six months from the date it is permitted to draft the minor according to the Defence Service Law, but not before he has reached the age of 17, will be done solely with the permission of the Head of the Recruitment Bureau.

10. Signing of the parental consent form for the early drafting of their son/daughter, (as per art. 7), will take place in the Recruitment Bureau in the presence of an officer, or a non-commissioned officer; or with the City Officer (an officer/ non-commissioned officer), with the head of the local municipality, or the local municipality secretary, or by having a lawyer approve the signing of the form, (after examining Identity certificates), and stating that the parents/guardian have given their genuine consent in his presence.

11. Parents or guardians residing abroad at the time shall sign their consent with one of the Israeli consulates abroad.

12. Despite the provisions of article 7(b), it is enough to have one parent consent for early recruitment of a minor if there is real difficulty in making contact with one of the parents. For example: if one parent is staying abroad for a long time and cannot come before an Israeli representative as detailed in article 11, or for other special reasons, the other parent will declare as much in the presence of a lawyer, and his signature alone will suffice on the volunteering form.
13. Where a person is designated for service whose parents have died, or had a guardian appointed to him for any other reason, the guardians signature shall be made as per article 7 (b) detailed above. The guardian must prove his guardianship with appropriate documentation.
14. A person drafted early according to the provisions of this order will not be sent to combat duty before he is 18 years old, according to the Hebrew calendar.
15. Drafting to academic reserve courses recognized in military orders, and service without pay as per its meaning in these orders, shall generally be done according to the relevant provisions of the Defence Service Law. The above will not prevent drafting of these persons for service according to a request for early recruitment, as previously detailed in this order.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Fifty-third session

11–29 January 2010

Consideration of reports submitted by States parties under article 8 of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict

Concluding observations: Israel

1. The Committee considered the initial report of Israel (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/1) at its 1475th meeting, held on 19 January 2010 (see CRC/C/SR.1475), and adopted at its 1501st meeting, held on 29 January 2010, the following concluding observations.

Introduction

2. The Committee welcomes the submission of the State party's initial report. The Committee further welcomes its written replies (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/Q/1/Add.1) to the list of issues. The Committee appreciates the constructive dialogue with a multisectoral delegation, which included a representative of the Ministry of Defence, which shed light on the implementation of the provisions of the Optional Protocol, as part of Israel's broader commitment to children's rights in general.

3. The Committee reminds the State party that these concluding observations should be read in conjunction with its previous concluding observations adopted on the State party's initial report on 4 October 2002 (CRC/C/15/Add.195).

4. The Committee reiterates that, in accordance with State responsibility in international law and under the prevailing circumstances, the provisions of the Convention and optional protocols apply to the benefit of the children of the occupied Palestinian territory, notably with regard to all conduct by the State party's authorities or agents that affects the enjoyment of rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee underlines the concurrent application of human rights and humanitarian law, as established by the International Court of Justice in its Advisory Opinion on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalls the explicit references to humanitarian law in the Optional Protocol.

5. The Committee notes the difficulties of the State party in fully implementing the Optional Protocol. The Committee recognizes the climate of fear which persists and the deliberate and indiscriminate targeting and killing of Israeli civilians, including children by Palestinian armed groups, some of whom carry out terrorist attacks. At the same time, the Committee recognizes the illegal occupation of Palestinian territory, the bombing of civilian areas, extrajudicial killings, the disproportionate use of force by the Israel Defense Forces, the demolition of homes, the destruction of infrastructure, the construction of the wall and mobility restrictions resulting in the denial of access to education, health care, clean water and employment, all of which have a severe impact on Palestinian children. The Committee reiterates that the daily humiliation of Palestinians continues to contribute to the cycle of violence.

I. Positive aspects

6. The Committee notes as positive the State party's ratification of ILO Convention No. 182 concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour on 15 March 2005.

7. The Committee welcomes information provided by the State party that asylum-seeking children who have been recruited or used in armed conflict have been granted refugee status on the basis of having been used as child soldiers in armed conflict.

II. General measures of implementation

Non-discrimination

8. The Committee is concerned that Israeli legislation continues to discriminate in the definition of the child between Israeli children (18 years) and Palestinian children in the occupied Palestinian territory (16 years) according to Military Order No. 132.

9. The Committee reiterates its recommendation that the State party rescind the provision of Military Order No. 132 concerning the definition of the child and ensure that its legislation conforms to the Convention on the Rights of the Child in this regard.

Right to life, survival and development

10. The Committee is concerned over the violations of the right to life, survival and development of children within the jurisdiction of the State party. The Committee, while noting that Israeli children are affected, is concerned that Palestinian children are disproportionately vulnerable. The Committee expresses grave concern for the serious violations suffered by children in Gaza during the Operation "Cast Lead" in December 2008 and January 2009 owing to the disproportionate violence, the lack of distinction for civilians and the obstruction of humanitarian and medical aid, notably documented by the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict, endorsed by the General Assembly (A/RES/64/10) and the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/RES/S-12/1). Furthermore, the Committee is concerned over the threat to the life of children posed by anti-personnel mines, originating from the State party, which have been placed in parts of the occupied Palestinian territory, southern Lebanon and the occupied Syrian Golan.

11. The Committee urges the State party to :

(a) Take prompt measures to comply with the fundamental principles of proportionality and distinction enshrined in humanitarian law, including the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 1949, which set out the minimum standards for the protection of civilians in armed conflict ;

(b) Pay special attention to the right to life of Palestinian children and recommends the State party to, as a matter of urgency, discontinue the blockade and support the reconstruction of homes, schools and hospitals ;

(c) Comply with the recommendations of the United Nations Fact - Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict , while paying particular attention to those recommendations which directly or indirectly affect children ;

(d) Clear all anti-personnel mines in the occupied Palestinian territory, southern Lebanon and the occupied Syrian Golan and seek international cooperation for this purpose, as necessary.

Dissemination and awareness

12. The Committee, while noting information on measures undertaken by the State party, is concerned that awareness of the Optional Protocol among the general public remains low .

13. The Committee recommends, in the light of article 6, paragraph 2, of the Optional Protocol, that the State party ensure that the principles and provisions of the Optional Protocol are widely disseminated to the general public and among both Israeli and Palestinian children.

Training

14. The Committee is concerned that relevant professional categories, in particular the military, the police and those working for the administration of justice, do not receive adequate training on the provisions of the Optional Protocol.

15. The Committee recommends that the State party strengthen human rights training for members of the Armed Forces with specific training on the provisions of the Optional Protocol. Furthermore, the Committee recommends that the State party develop awareness-raising, education and training programmes on the provisions of the Optional Protocol for relevant professional groups working with children, notably prosecutors, lawyers, judges, law enforcement officers, social workers, medical professionals, teachers, media professionals and local and district officials. The State party is invited to provide information in that respect in its next report.

Data

16. The Committee regrets the reiterated refusal of the State party to provide any information on the situation of children in the occupied Palestinian territory. The Committee further regrets the absence of data on the number of children in armed groups and children who have been charged and prosecuted for security offences.

17. The Committee urges the State party to provide relevant information in its next periodic report under the Convention and that data on the occupied Palestinian territory be included therein .

III. Prevention

Compulsory recruitment

18. The Committee, while noting information provided by the State party during the dialogue that persons under 18 years of age cannot take direct part in hostilities, nevertheless remains concerned that the State party fails to fully comply with article 2 of the Optional Protocol by designating persons below 18 years for compulsory recruitment. The Committee is concerned over information provided by the State party that persons under 18 years of age may be recruited to combat units.

19. The Committee recommends that the State party revise its laws and ensure that its policy on compulsory recruitment is consistent with the provisions of the Optional Protocol.

Voluntary recruitment

20. The Committee notes that the minimum age of voluntary recruitment is 17 years and that those volunteers are not allowed to be deployed to armed duty.

21. The Committee notes that the great majority of States parties to the Optional Protocol do not permit voluntary recruitment of children. The Committee therefore encourages the State party to raise the minimum age for recruitment into the Armed Forces to 18 years in order to promote the protection of children by means of a legal standard that is higher overall .

Military education

22. The Committee is concerned that the curricula of programmes that combine military service with Talmudic studies (hesder yeshivas), such as programmes that explicitly encourage students to volunteer for recruitment and seek active combat duty, are contrary to the aims of education and human rights values enshrined in article 29 of the Convention.

23. The Committee recommends that any military education should take into account human rights values and article 29 of the Convention , and that the educational content of such programmes should be periodically monitored by the Ministry of Education. Furthermore, the Committee recommends that the State party ensure that all students, including those undertaking military and religious studies, have access to an independent complaints mechanism.

Use of children as human shields and informants

24. The Committee is deeply concerned over the persistent practice whereby Palestinian children are used as human shields and informants for intelligence purposes. Furthermore, the Committee regrets that the State party declines to provide information on compliance with the ruling of the Israeli High Court of Justice in Adalah et al. v. Commander of the Central Region et al. (HCJ 3799/02, Judgement of 23 June 2005). In view of reports indicating the use by the Israeli army of Palestinian children as human shields, including during Operation “Cast Lead” in Gaza in December 2008 and January 2009, the Committee notes information from the State party provided during the dialogue that investigations have been initiated. However, the Committee is concerned over delays and the lack of information regarding the outcome of such investigations.

25. The Committee urges the State party to ensure strict compliance with humanitarian law, abide by the ruling of the Israeli High Court of Justice in Adalah et al. v. Commander of the Central Region et al. and revise its Defence Services Law No. 5746- 1986 accordingly. Furthermore, the Committee urges the State party to promptly and impartially investigate reports of such crimes and ensure that those responsible are duly prosecuted and sanctioned with appropriate penalties.

Peace education

26. The Committee notes information from the State party regarding efforts to promote peace education in Israeli schools, but is concerned that peace education is extremely limited in Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory. The Committee is concerned over the lack of access to education in the occupied Palestinian territory. Furthermore, the Committee is concerned at the contrasts in the values promoted in education and, in particular, the extensive militarization of the educational system in Israel and the inclusion of mandatory military components as part of the school curricula.

27. The Committee recommends that the State party ensure that the education curricula is consistent with article 29 of the Convention and encourages the systematic inclusion of peace education both in the Israeli and Palestinian school system. For this purpose, the Committee encourages its general comment No. 1 on the aims of education to be taken into account. The Committee encourages joint initiatives, bringing together both Israeli and Palestinian children, to be undertaken to promote peace education.

IV. Prohibition and related matters

Legislation

28. The Committee, while noting provisions on unlawful military activities in the Israeli Penal Law, is concerned that it fails to specifically include the crimes covered in the Optional Protocol.

29. In order to further strengthen international measures for the prevention of the recruitment of children and their use in hostilities, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Revise the Penal Code and include a provision which explicitly criminalizes violations of the provisions of the Optional Protocol regarding the recruitment and involvement of children in hostilities and include a definition of direct participation in hostilities;

(b) Ensure that all military codes, manuals and other military directives are in accordance with the provisions of the Optional Protocol.

Extraterritorial jurisdiction

30. The Committee notes the statement of the State party that it may assume extraterritorial jurisdiction for the war crime of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years; however, the Committee is concerned over the lack of a specific legal basis on which such jurisdiction could be exercised.

31 . The Committee recommends that the State party review its legislation in order to establish extraterritorial jurisdiction for crimes under the Optional Protocol.

32 . The Committee recommends that the State party consider ratifying the following international instruments, already widely supported by the international community:

(a) The Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and Relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), 1977;

(b) The Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and Relating to the Protection of Victims of Non-International Armed Conflicts (Protocol II), 1977;

(c) The Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, 1997;

(d) The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, 1998;

(e) The Convention on Cluster Munitions, 2008.

V. Protection, recovery and reintegration

Prosecution of children on terrorist charges

33. The Committee is seriously concerned that the State party has failed to comply with the recommendations issued in 2002 (CRC/C/15/Add.195, paras. 62 and 63) regarding the practices of arrest and interrogation of children in the occupied Palestinian territory. The Committee expresses concern that provisions in military orders (specifically Nos. 378 and 1591) continue to be in violation of international standards on the administration of juvenile justice and the right to a fair trial. The Committee further notes with concern information regarding attempts to incorporate juvenile justice standards within military courts.

34. The Committee is gravely concerned over reports that more than 2,000 children, some as young as twelve, have been charged with security offences between 2005 and 2009, held without charge for up to eight days and prosecuted by military courts. The Committee is particularly concerned that children charged with security offences are subjected to prolonged periods of solitary confinement and abuse in inhumane and degrading conditions, that legal representation and interpretation assistance is inadequate and that family visits are not possible as relatives are denied entry to Israel. The Committee is disturbed by information indicating that children have been subjected to administrative detention orders for renewable periods of up to six months. Finally, the Committee regrets the insufficient information provided by the State party on the above concerns.

35 . The Committee urges the State party to :

(a) Rescind the Military Orders Nos. 378 and 1591, as previously recommended in 2002;

(b) Never hold criminal proceedings against children in military courts and not subject children to administrative detention;

(c) Guarantee that juvenile justice standards are applied to all children within its jurisdiction and any trials should be conducted in a prompt and impartial manner, in accordance with minimum fair trial standards;

(d) Ensure that any definition of terrorist crimes is brought in line with international standards and norms, as recommended by the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism (A/HRC/6/17/Add.4, para . 55) ;

36. The Committee furthermore recommends that the State party :

(a) Ensure that children are only detained as a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible time period. If in doubt regarding the age, young persons should be presumed to be children;

(b) Guarantee that children, if accused of having committed security offences, are detained in adequate conditions in accordance with their age and vulnerability;

(c) Inform parents or close relatives where the child is detained and allow contact;

(d) Provide adequate free and independent legal advisory assistance for all children;

(e) Guarantee children a periodic and impartial review of their detention;

(f) Ensure that children in detention have access to an independent complaints mechanism. Reports of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment of detained children should be investigated promptly in an impartial manner;

(g) Provide educational programmes and recreational activities, as well as measures for all detained children's social reintegration;

(h) Provide all professionals working in the juvenile justice system with training on the Convention, the optional protocols , other relevant international standards and the Committee's general comment No. 10 on children's rights in juvenile justice.

Assistance for physical and psychological recovery

37. The Committee notes the information provided on physical and psychological recovery for Israeli children, but regrets the absence of information on such measures available for Palestinian children. In particular, the Committee is deeply disturbed by the psychological effects on children in Gaza resulting from Operation "Cast Lead" and the lack of assistance for these children. The Committee is furthermore concerned over the lack of adequate programmes for rehabilitation of children who have been victims of anti-personnel mines.

38. Given the psychological trauma on children as a consequence of the disproportionate attacks on civilians by Israel Defense Forces, the Committee urges the State party to assume its responsibility for providing assistance for the physical and psychological recovery of all affected children, Israeli and Palestinian. Furthermore, the Committee recommends that the State party support specific programmes for children who have been victims of anti-personnel mines.

VI. International assistance and cooperation

International cooperation

39. The Committee welcomes information that the State party supports Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) and recommends that the State party further strengthen its cooperation with the Special Representative of the Secretary - General for Children and Armed Conflict in order to effectively implement Security Council resolutions 1612 (2005) and 1882 (2009) within its jurisdiction.

Arms export

40. The Committee observes that Israel is a significant arms exporter and notes information from the State party indicating that legislation adopted in 2007 (Israeli Security Export Control Law No. 5767-2007) regulates the exportation of such materials in accordance with an assessment which takes into account the respect of children's rights; however, the Committee is concerned over the absence of an explicit prohibition of arms export to countries where children are recruited or used in hostilities.

41. The Committee recommends that the State party expressly prohibit in its legislation, the sale of arms when the final destination is a country where children are known to be or may potentially be recruited or used in hostilities.

VII. Follow up and dissemination

42. The Committee recommends that the State party take all appropriate measures to ensure full implementation of the present recommendations, inter alia by transmitting them to the Ministry of Defense, the Ministry of Education, the Cabinet and the Knesset for appropriate consideration and further action.

43. The Committee recommends that the initial report submitted by the State party and concluding observations adopted by the Committee be made widely available to the public at large and children in particular in order to generate debate and awareness of the Optional Protocol, its implementation and monitoring. The Committee specifically requests that the State party ensure that the recommendations are disseminated both in Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory.

VIII. Next report

44. In accordance with article 8, paragraph 2, the Committee requests the State party to include further information on the implementation of the Optional Protocol in its next periodic report under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, due since 1 November 2008.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
28 August 2012

Original: English

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Consideration of the reports submitted by States parties under article 44 of the Convention

Combined second, third and fourth periodic reports of States parties due in 2008

Israel*

[11 June 2010]

* In accordance with the information transmitted to the States parties regarding the processing of their reports, the present document was not edited.

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
I. Introduction	1-16	4
II. General measures of implementation (arts. 4, 42 and 44, para. 6)	17-85	8
III. Definition of the child	86-150	17
IV. General principles	151-314	25
A. Article 6– The right to life, survival and development	151-190	25
B. Article 2– Non-discrimination and equal opportunity	191-203	31
C. Article 3 – The best interest of the child	204-216	34
D. Article 12- Respect for the views of the child	217-240	36
E. Articles 7 and 8	241-256	40
F. Article 13– Freedom of expression	257	43
G. Article 14– Freedom of thought, religion and conscience	258	43
H. Article 15– Freedom of association and peaceful assembly	259-264	43
I. Article 16– The right to dignity, privacy and reputation	265-282	44
J. Article 17– Access to information: television, radio, and film	283-297	46
K. Article 37 (a).....	298-314	49
V. Family environment and alternative care	315-434	52
A. Articles 5, 9 and 18.....	327-374	54
B. Article 10– Family reunification.....	375-376	62
C. Article 11 – Illicit transfer and non-return	377-385	62
D. Article 27, paragraph 4 – Recovery of maintenance for the child	386-390	65
E. Articles 20 and 25– Children deprived of a family environment.....	391-399	66
F. Article 21 – Adoption	400-415	68
G. Articles 19 and 39 – Abuse and neglect, recovery and reintegration.....	416-434	71
VI. Basic health and welfare	435-613	75
A. Article 23 – Children with disabilities	435-469	75
B. Articles 6 and 24 – Health and health services	470-578	84
C. Article 26 – Social security.....	579-584	106
D. Article 27, paragraphs 1-3– Standard of living.....	585-613	107
VII. Education, recreation and cultural activities	614-713	112
VIII. Special protection measures	714-947	133
A. Articles 37, 39 and 40 – Children in the juvenile justice system	714-809	133

B. Articles 32–36 – Children in situations of exploitation, including physical and psychological recovery and reintegration into society	810-830	151
C. Article 34 – Sexual exploitation and sexual abuse.....	831-917	156
D. Articles 22, 38 and 39 – Children in emergency situations	918-947	170

I. Introduction

1. This is the second periodic report of the State of Israel, submitted to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child in accordance with the requirements of article 44 of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child (hereinafter referred to as the "Convention. This report has been compiled by the Human Rights and Foreign Relations Department of the Ministry of Justice, in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and other Israeli Government bodies. Israeli non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were also invited to submit comments prior to the compilation of the present report, both through direct application, and a general invitation to submit remarks, which was posted on the Ministry of Justice website. Their contributions were given substantial consideration.

2. Since the submission of the initial report (CRC/C/8/Add.44), many legislative, administrative and judicial developments relevant to the implementation of the Convention have occurred. A brief summary of the most significant of these changes is set out below. This report provides a comprehensive account of these developments. It also addresses the comments made by the Committee in its concluding observations (CRC/C/15/Add.195) dated 10 October 2002.

3. As of Israel's first submission to the Committee, noteworthy legislative steps have been taken to promote children's rights. Several of the more prominent new pieces of legislation include:

- Amendment No. 10 to the Public Defenders Law (the: "Public Defenders")
- Amendment No. 11 to the Criminal Procedure Law 5756-1996 (the: "Criminal Procedure Law")
- Amendment No. 12 to the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers and Bodily Search) (Legislative Amendment) 5765-2005 (the "Enforcement Powers and Bodily Search Law")
- Amendment No. 13 to the Legislative Amendment Law to the Evidence Revision (Protection of Children) Law 5765-2005 (the: "Evidence Revision Law")
- Amendment No. 5 to the Courts Law (Consolidated Version) 5744-1984 (the: "Courts Law")
- Legislative Amendment to the Treatment of Mentally Ill Law 5751-1991 (the: "Treatment of Mentally Ill Law")
- Amendment No. 14 to the Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law 5731-1971 (the: "Youth Law")
- Amendment No. 9 to the Transportation Ordinance (New Version) 5721-1961 (the: "Transportation Ordinance (New Version)")
- Amendment No. 6 to the Penal Law 5737-1977 (the: "Penal Law"), which endeavours to assimilate the principle of a child's best interest (as a leading principle) in legislative, administrative and judicial matters affecting children

4. In Israel, the principle rights enshrined by the Convention are effectively protected through legislation and judicial decisions. Having said this, it should be noted that Israel has not enacted any further basic laws (Israel's constitutional law) regarding children's rights since the submission of its previous periodic report. Israel did however incorporate the Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction 1980 into Israeli domestic law as the Hague Convention Law (Return of Abducted Children) 5751-2001.

With respect to judicial decisions, the Supreme Court has continued to play a major role in the implementation of the rights protected by the Convention.

Judicial rulings

5. Both the Israeli Supreme Court and several of Israel's District Courts referred to different provisions of the Convention in a number of their decisions. The most noteworthy examples of this practice which occurred during the reporting period are:

- The Supreme Court noted the provisions of article 3 regarding the best interests of the child in HCJ 7395/07 Anonymous v. The Rabbinical Court of Appeals (21.1. 2008). This case involved a dispute over the education of the children of a divorced couple. The Supreme Court overruled a decision of the Rabbinical Court, which had not considered the best interests of the children in question. The Supreme Court determined that the children should study in the national education system as opposed to the national-religious education system.
- The Supreme Court also referred to article 28 of the Convention regarding a child's right to education in HCJ 6914/06 The National Parents Organization (Registered Society) v. The Ministry of Education, Culture and Sports et. al. (14.8. 2007). In this case, the National Parents Organization claimed that school-related payments, which parents are required to pay each year, violate the right to free education; and therefore filed a petition requiring the Ministry of Education to receive the approval of the Knesset Education Committee for all forms of parental school payments that parents are required to pay for each school year.
- District Courts also referred to the rights enshrined in the Convention. For example, the Tel-Aviv District Court, when sitting as a Juvenile Court, addressed article 37(a) of the Convention in relation to the imposition of life imprisonment upon a minor who committed a murder before he reached the age of eighteen, and stressed that the punishment in question did not violate article 37(a) as the Israeli legal system permits the release of those sentenced to life imprisonment (S.Cr.C (Tel-Aviv) 204/05 The State of Israel v. Anonymous (251. 2007)). In another case, the Tel-Aviv District Court, sitting as an Administrative Court, made reference to article 2, paragraph 2 of the Convention requiring a State to take all appropriate measures to ensure the protection of children from all forms of discrimination. In the relevant case, a school had refused to admit certain girls due to their ethnic affiliation. (Ad.P. (Tel-Aviv) 2176/06 Anonymous v. The Ministry of Education, Culture and Sports et. al. (15.11.06)).
- Family Matters Courts also referred to the rights set out in the Convention. For example, the Jerusalem Family Matters Court relied on article 3 of the Convention when emphasizing that the best interests of the child should be considered in determining a child's surname when her/his parents are not married nor share custody. (F.M.C (Jerusalem) 9182/06 Anonymous v. Anonymous (10.4.2007)).
- The Jerusalem District Court was asked to grant visitation rights to the divorced parents of two minor children. The Court consulted an expert on child development prior to reaching its decision. The Court emphasized the fact that since 1990, there had been a significant increase in the attention paid to a child's well-being. The visitation rights that the court decided upon were largely based on the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Court considered the Convention and the Rotlevi Committee recommendations as sources of interpretation and guidance (C.M 6802/04 Anonymous v. Anonymous (19 .12.2004)).

- Yated – Non-Profit Organization for Parents of Children with Down Syndrome, together with parents of children with disabilities, petitioned the Supreme Court to order the State to finance the integration of children with disabilities (who are deemed fit) into ordinary schools. In this way, equality would be achieved for children who study in special education schools. The Court determined that the right to education is a fundamental one, which is enshrined both in article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and in articles 28 and 29 of the Convention. See specification in Chapter VI, below. (H.C.J. 2599/00 Yated – Non-Profit Organization for Parents of Children with Down Syndrome v. The Ministry of Education (14.8.02)).

Children and rights

6. Children possess certain rights that are particular to them, primarily welfare rights. These rights protect important interests, such as health and adequate living standards. Recognizing a child's rights created a concomitant duty for the parent or the State respectively. Adults have duties to protect important interests of children but these interests do not necessarily correlate with rights held by children (such as choosing whether or not to attend school, purchase alcoholic beverages, drive etc.) Other rights are shared by children and adults. The guiding rule is the child's best interest. In recent years, an increasing number of liberties previously reserved for adults have been extended to children. Under Israeli law, a child is defined as any human being below the age of 18. Any deviations from this definition must be made in accordance with a particular law applicable to the child, such as the Penal Law, which stipulates that with respect to criminal liability, the age of maturity is 12, whereas legal capacity is normally at eighteen.

The best interests of the child

7. This principle is a primary guiding principle under Israeli law, which has absorbed this relatively modern concept. The majority of child-related legal issues (including legislative, administrative and judicial issues) that arose in Israel following the submission of Israel's initial report were guided by this rule. In fact, decisions and rulings may be rendered based entirely on the child's best interests. If a child has a certain right, others have a duty not to interfere with that right.

8. One of the rights that promotes children's welfare, and which has been incorporated into Israeli law in recent years is the right of a child to be heard in matters affecting her/his interests. This right has been clearly defined in some of the latest legislative amendments, for example Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law, which constitutes an extensive amendment that applies to several laws applicable to children, as detailed below.

9. In concluding observation No. 32 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child concerning Israel's previous periodic report dated 4 October 2002 (CRC/C/15/Add/195), the Committee encouraged the continuation and assimilation of the respect for the views of the child. In that regard, Section 1B (a) of Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law states that minors are entitled to state their opinion and express their personal feelings prior to a decision being reached in matters that affect them (the Youth Employment Law underwent a similar amendment, below). The weight afforded to the minor's view is dependent upon the child's age and level of maturity. In order to encourage the participation of minors in matters affecting them, and for the purpose of enabling them to exercise their right to express their opinion, the minors are provided with information in a manner and language comprehensible to them (information that can cause actual harm to the minor is not conveyed). In cases where a decision has been made regarding a minor but the minor has not been afforded the opportunity to express her/his view, the minor shall be provided with such an opportunity subsequent to the completion of the decision-making process, provided that the decision has yet to be implemented, and the reason for the revocation no longer exists. If the decision that was made conflicts with the minor's wishes, the person who reached the decision or a person acting on her/his behalf shall explain to the minor (in a manner understandable to her/him) the justification for their decision. The explanation given must be compatible with the minor's age and level of maturity. The information ought not to cause the minor actual harm or be of the kind that is forbidden to be disclosed under Section 1B (b) (1–2) to the Youth Law. The Amendment also stipulates, with respect to Section 2(a) of the Youth Law that jurists appointed to serve as juvenile court judges, may also preside in proceedings concerning the arrest of minors as well as in preliminary hearings, provided that the jurists in question undergo special educational training in youth and child care.

10. The right of the child to express her/his opinion, as stipulated in article 12 of the Convention, is incorporated in the following legislation.

11. Amendment No. 9 to the Youth Employment Law 5713-1953, (the: "Youth Employment Law") issued on 7 July 1998, supplements Section 27F–27G which sets out guidelines regarding work permits for youth. According to Section 27F(a) a work permit for the employment of a youth will not be granted if it may harm the best interests of the youth. Section 27F(b)–(c) stipulate that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Labor may issue rules, limitations and conditions concerning the employment of youth. Section 27G(a) stipulates that any youth who is capable of expressing an independent opinion, will have the right to do so with regard to the granting of a permit for her/his employment. Her/his opinion will be afforded a degree of consideration that accords with her/his age and level of maturity. According to Section 27G(b), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Labor (ITL) shall issue regulations regarding the manners in which this right can be realized.

12. A 2009 Amendment to the Hours of Work and Rest Law 5711-1951 (hereinafter: the "Hours of Work and Rest Law") determines time for recreation away from one's work in order to enable use of the lavatory (Section 20A). As mentioned, the Youth Employment Law underwent a similar amendment (Section 3 of Amendment No. 13 to the Youth Employment Law).

13. Section 24 of the Legal Capacity and Guardianship Law 5722-1962 (the: "Legal Capacity and Guardianship Law" 5722-1962 (the: "Legal Capacity Law") determines that parents who do not live together are entitled to conclude a guardianship agreement, as well as to determine the rights of the non-custodian parent. Such parents can therefore now determine custodianship and visitation rights. Such an agreement requires the approval of the courts in order to confirm that the agreement is in fact in the child's best interests.

14. Information concerning the implications of children's rights in legislation can be found in the "Indication of Information Regarding Legislation Influences on the Rights of the Child" 2" 5762-2002 (the: "Children Rights Influence of Legislation Law"). This law requires the systematic inclusion of explanatory notes in every bill regarding the bill's expected implications on the rights of children. These explanatory notes should include information as to any impingement or improvement in the rights of children and the scope of these rights as a result of the bill, as well as any changes regarding what constitutes satisfactory living conditions for children and/or services provided to children. Furthermore, the explanatory notes should include the data and information relied upon to determine whether the bill is impinging or improving the rights of children. Amendment No. 14 implemented these changes.

15. Nevertheless, in some cases, the rights of the parents or the interests of society are considered in addition to the "best interests of the child." Thus, for example, the best interest of the child is not, in itself, a cause for adoption. In a series of rulings, the Supreme Court determined that even if adoptive parents are likely to be better parents than a child's biological parents, this does not constitute a sufficient reason to remove the child from the custody of her/his biological parents (see C.A. 623/80 Anonymous v. The Attorney General, P.D. 45(2) 72) 12.3.1980. It is permissible to place a child up for adoption only when there is a specific reason to do so, for example, when the biological parents are unable to provide sufficiently for the child. When there is a reason for an adoption, the child's best interests will be the primary consideration.

16. This report addresses the main issues raised by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in their 2003 concluding observations in the period between the submission of the Israel's previous periodic report and December 2009, as well as concerns raised by the Committee following the 2002 session before the Committee.

II. General measures of implementation (arts. 4, 42 and 44, para. 6)

The Convention's legal status

17. The Convention on the Rights of the Child was signed by the State of Israel on 3 July 1990 and was ratified by the Knesset on 4 August 1991; it entered into force on 2 November 1991. Although the Convention does not have the status of law, it is often cited in rulings of both the Supreme and the lower courts as a legal basis for a decision reached and as a source of interpretation.

18. The State of Israel is also a signatory to other international conventions concerning children. Since the submission of Israel's initial report, the State of Israel became a party to several major international instruments concerning children. On 15 March 2005, Israel became a party to the ILO Convention 182 on Worst Form of Child Labour 1999. In its concluding observation No. 62 concerning Israel's previous periodic report, the Committee encouraged the State party to ratify the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child: On 18 July 2005, Israel became a party to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. The State of Israel has also signed the Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography on 14 November 2001, and ratified it on 19 June 2008.

19. In addition, on 14 December 2006, Israel became a party to the United Nations Convention on Transnational Organized Crime, 5760-2000. On 23 July 2008 Israel also became a party to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and to the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime.

20. The State of Israel made no reservations upon ratification of the Convention.

The Committee to examine fundamental principles concerning children and the law, and the implementation of these principles in Israeli legislation

21. A Committee chaired by the Deputy President of the Tel Aviv District Court, Justice Saviona Rotlevi, was appointed in 1997 by the Minister of Justice. The Minister appointed the Committee to thoroughly examine Israeli legislation concerning the rights of children and children's legal and welfare status under Israeli law, in light of the principles set down in the Convention on the Rights of the Child, so that Israel could meet its commitments under the Convention. The Committee was also asked to assess the need to draft a comprehensive law regarding the status of children and youth. The Committee was further asked to examine the necessity of establishing agencies and mechanisms to implement, coordinate, and regulate the rights of children as outlined by the Convention.

22. The Committee involved approximately 70 senior public and other officials from a variety of fields, including the Courts Administration and the Ministries of Justice, Labor and Social Affairs, Departments of Social Work and professors from Law and Psychology Faculties of Academia. Representatives of children's mental health services and the Israeli Bar Association were also involved in this project.

23. Six reports prepared by Sub-Committees were submitted to the Minister of Justice. These reports concerned: Representation of Children in Civil Proceedings, Out-of-Home Placement of Children, Children and their Family, Education, Children in Criminal Proceedings, and a general report. Since the submission of the general report, the recommendations of the Sub-Committees' reports have been gradually implemented. Since the submission of the Sub-Committees' conclusions, numerous developments related to the implementation of the Convention have occurred. This report provides a comprehensive survey of the advancement in legislation, and judicial decisions. The Rotlevi Committee was committed to creating equal opportunities for all children, to enable them to develop independently, to be heard and represented in matters affecting them, and to create an environment that encourages and supports their individuality. The core revisions that have resulted from the Rotlevi Committee and the various subcommittees' reports are referred to throughout this report. The main recommendations regarding the promotion of children's rights are set out below:

- Redefine the rationale for State actions with respect to children's rights.
- Redefine State liabilities with respect to children's rights, for instance, recognize and address children's grievances in various areas or submit annual reports on the state of children to the Prime Minister and the Advisory Committee.
- The Committee recommended the establishment of an Advisory Committee within the Ministry of Justice. The Committee recommended that the Advisory Committee be empowered to provide opinions to the Minister of Justice regarding laws passed with respect to children and judicial rulings that effect child's rights, and provide updates concerning organizations that operate to promote children's rights etc.

Recommendation regarding the adoption of a comprehensive children's law

24. The Committee recommended the adoption of a comprehensive Children's Law. Such a law, the Committee believed, should settle the legal relations between children, their parents and the State. The committee's recommendation was to take all child-related protection laws, such as: the Legal Capacity Law, the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law 5720-1960 (the: "Youth (Care and Supervision) Law"), the Adoption of Children Law 5741-1981 (the: "Adoption of Children Law"), the Kindergartens Supervision Law 5725-1965, the Safety of Protected Persons Law 5726-1966, and the Welfare (Procedure in Matters of Minors, Mentally Sick Persons and Absent Persons) Law 5715-1955 and incorporate them into one extensive Children's Law, that shall consist of existing laws and unambiguous rights of children.

Recommendations regarding the ban on physical punishment

25. The Committee formulated its recommendations against the background of the multicultural society which exists in Israel. The Committee's recommendations were based on the following premise: physical punishment is a breach of a child's right to wellbeing and physical safety, and is accordingly illegal. The Committee concluded that in order to guarantee a reduction in both the amount and degree of physical punishment directed against children in Israel, extensive regulation was required. The followings are its main recommendations.

Legislation

26. The Committee strongly condemned the usage of any physical punishment against children. Nevertheless, the Committee distinguished between physical punishment imposed by immediate family members (such as a parent) and physical punishment imposed within an educational framework.

Minimizing physical punishment inside the family

27. A child is entitled to protection from physical harm and/or humiliation. The Committee proposed that the applicable law would be a Civil Law rather than a Criminal Law.

Minimizing physical punishment in the educational framework

28. The Committee recommended that specific criminal sanctions apply to educational personnel who impose physical punishment against children.

Education and explanation

29. The Committee recommended that Government bodies implement explanatory, educational activities in order to raise the consciousness of individuals against the use of physical punishment. The Committee encouraged the use of different methods of discipline.

Prevention

30. The Committee recommended that the Government take actions against any violations of the prohibition on physical punishment.

Adaptation of laws applicable to children

31. Recently, there has been extensive legislative activity on behalf of children. Many new bills, as well as amendments to existing laws, have been proposed, some of which have been finalized.

32. An indication of the information concerning the implications of legislation can be found in the Children Rights Influence of Legislation Law. This law requires the systematic inclusion of explanatory notes in every bill regarding its expected implications on the rights of children.

33. These explanatory notes should include information regarding any impingement or improvement of children's rights as a result of the bill in question, any changes regarding the basic living conditions that need to be met, and any amendments to services provided to children. Furthermore, the explanatory notes should include the data and information which was employed to determine whether the bill is impinging or improving children's rights.

34. Section 2G of the Business Licensing Law 5725-1965, forbids businesses from tattooing and piercing minors under the age of sixteen without the consent of the minor's parents or custodian. This does not apply to ear lobe piercing.

35. An initiative for a comprehensive reform of the Youth Law led to the adoption of Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law on 21 July 21, . The Amendment entered into force in July 2009. This Amendment greatly improves the treatment of minors in criminal proceedings.

Implementation of the Convention by National and Local Government

36. One measure taken to effect the implementation of the Convention by National and Local Government was the adoption of the Prohibition of Selling Lottery and Gambling Tickets to Minors (Legislation Amendments) Law 5767-2007. This Amendment forbids any offering, selling or distributing of tickets (or other means of participation in gambling activities of any kind) to a minor. This law imposes a punishment of six months' imprisonment in the event that its terms are breached.

37. The Directives and general guidelines of the Director General of the Ministry of Education refer to various aspects of children's rights. For example, the Ministry published a Directive regarding the involvement of divorced/separated parents in school-related projects and events, such as school trips. The Directive stipulates that the school shall communicate with both parents, but shall provide updates and notifications regarding any other school-related issues to the court-appointed custodian, and/or in accordance with the best interests of the child (Directive 5763/5(a), January 2003).

38. In its concluding observation contained in paragraph 22(b) concerning Israel's "previous periodic report, the Committee encouraged the dissemination of the Convention, Directive 5767/6 (February 2007) generate the implementation of the Pupils Rights Law 5761-2000 (the: "Pupils Rights Law") and its amendments, including the distribution of a brochure entitled "In the Path of Rights" aimed at promoting the awareness and inculcation of the Law by pupils. The Ministry's Division for pupils' rights is charged with guiding teachers and creating an informative disc regarding the Law for teachers in primary and secondary schools. The disc includes movies, presentations and detailed information regarding the manner in which schools and teachers at school can promote an atmosphere that embraces pupils' rights.

39. Directive 5765/3(a) (September 2005) published the amendments to the Youth Law and the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law 5715-1955 (the: "Evidence (Protection of Children) Law"). It stipulated that in cases where a pupil is under investigation and requests that her/his parents not be notified about the investigation, the school and its personnel will help the pupil manage the results of the investigation.

40. Below are the primary changes introduced by Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law concerning legal proceedings.

Police investigation

41. When a child is suspected of committing a crime and is summoned to a police station to undergo questioning, the minor's parents or a close relative (in the event that the parent cannot be located despite reasonable efforts to do so) must be notified.

42. A child residing at a group home will be summoned subject to the group home's superintendent's notification and parental knowledge. The policy with respect to a group home is the same as above – in the event that the parent cannot be located despite reasonable efforts to do so, then another adult who is a family member, that is known to the minor, will be notified.

43. In other circumstances (such as in the event of a minor's detention) the Police Commissioner in charge at the time, is required to notify the parents or other close relative as to the child's whereabouts.

44. Simultaneously, the commissioner is required to inform the child that the family member has been notified. When a child, who is suspected of having committed a crime, comes to a police station on her/his own initiative, or was brought to the police station by someone else, a parent or a family member must be notified, unless the minor expressly states that she/he objects to the notification.

45. Notification will not be given when the minor expresses a clear objection. If the minor has been arrested, her/his objection is considered in light of her/his age and level of maturity. The minor's objection must be specified, reported and filed.

46. The Police Commissioner's final decision — whether or not to notify the minor's parents — will be documented visually, vocally or in writing. The Commissioner's decision must be detailed, and must afford substantial consideration to the minor's objection, if the minor objects. If the Commissioner decides not to inform the parents, she/he must inform another close relative.

47. In its concluding observation contained in paragraph 29 concerning Israel's previous periodic report, the Committee recommended that the State party continue to fully incorporate in legislation and practice the principle of the best interests of the child. The above principles demonstrate the assimilation of such considerations. However, under the circumstances below, an authorized officer may summon a minor, who has not been arrested, to undergo an investigation without giving any adult notification thereof if:

- The notification may physically or mentally harm the child, or otherwise impact upon her/his or another person's wellbeing.
- Obstruction of justice in the event that notification is given, is foreseeable as a result of a family member's involvement in the suspected crime.
- There is a national security risk.

48. An authorized officer may consider (when issuing an order not to notify a family member) a Group Home Superintendent's statement. Such statement must disclose a threat against the minor's physical and/or mental wellbeing. When such an order is issued, the Police have eight hours before they are required to give notification to a family member, or a period until such time as the reason for the non-notification ceases to exist (whichever is the earlier).

49. In cases where notification is postponed, the period of additional postponement shall not exceed six hours (except for cases where genuine danger to the child's wellbeing or safety exists, or where there is a foreseeable risk of obstruction of justice, or there exist national security risks).

50. When a suspect, who is a minor, is summoned to undergo an investigation that has been agreed upon by her/his parents (or family member) in advance, she/he is entitled to have them present during the investigation and/or to consult with them. This will not apply if the minor objects to the family member's presence or she/he is placed under arrest. This is slightly different to the situation described above as the parents know about the investigation in advance but are prohibited from participating in the investigation (rather than not being notified).

51. An authorized office may bar a family member from the investigation room in the following circumstances:

- The presence of the family member could cause harm to the minor or impair the investigation.
- The presence of the family member may physically or mentally harm the child or otherwise curtail her/his or another person's wellbeing; obstruction of justice as a result of the family member's involvement in the suspected crime is foreseeable; or there is the possibility of a national security risk.
- There is a foreseeable obstruction to the investigation or an obstruction to some other suspect's investigation and/or an obstruction of a potential arrest. Another reason to ban the presence of family member during an investigation or to prevent consultation with a family member is the potential loss of evidence that may result.
- It will create difficulties for the prevention of other crimes.

- It will create difficulties for the minor's release.
- It will cause the disclosure of another minor's private affairs (infringement of her/his right to privacy).

52. A decision to investigate a minor with no parent or close relative present shall be documented. The decision must include the justification therefore, as specified by the officer in charge.

53. If a parent's or a family member's presence in the investigation room interrupts or interferes with the investigation in any way, for instance, by threatening the child in a direct or implied manner, the investigator is authorized to remove them from the room. A decision to remove a parent from the room must be in writing.

54. Prior to the investigation of a minor, the investigator shall notify the minor of her/his rights and obligations particularized by law in simple intelligible language, that is compatible with the minor's age and level of maturity.

55. There is no requirement to appoint an attorney to represent a minor in every case in which a minor is involved, even though the proceedings may infringe the minor's rights (with her/his parents' tacit consent or even support). However, Family Matters Courts and Juvenile Courts are authorized to appoint a legal guardian for a minor if she/he is considered to be a "minor in need" under the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law. In such a case the court will appoint a separate defence council to represent the minor.

A minor's rights in legal proceedings are as follows

56. A minor has a right to a private consultation with a defence attorney and a right to be represented by a defence attorney. The Public Defenders' (Entitlement of Additional Minors to Representation) Regulations 5758-1998 entitle a minor detainee or a minor involved in legal proceedings to be represented by a public defender (Amendment No. 14).

57. Section 18(a) of the Youth Law empowers a Juvenile Court to appoint counsel for minors in legal proceedings on the basis of the best interest of the child. The court enjoys this power throughout the criminal proceedings, including during the investigation stage. Moreover, the minor is entitled to any right valid under the Public Defenders Law and to have a parent or a family member present.

58. Directive 5765/4(a) (December 2004) focuses on the recognition of suicidal behaviour and the prevention of suicide attempts by children. The Directive details warning behavioural signs and explains available methods of treatment for school personnel.

59. Directive 5763/2(a) (October 2002) determines the means to remove a pupil from a class or from school, and preliminary efforts to be taken in order to prevent such a removal, including the notification of the parents, warnings etc. (Director General of the Ministry of Education).

Mechanisms regulating implementation of the Convention

60. This issue was addressed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this respect since the submission of Israel's initial report.

The Knesset Committee on the Rights of the Child

61. The Knesset Committee on the Rights of the Child was addressed in Israel's previous Report. Amendments to legislation and new bills have been proposed by the Knesset Committee, some of which were formulated by the Committee as a whole and some by individual Knesset members. The Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services aspire to improve and adjust existing laws so as to integrate the articles of the Convention. Representatives of the National Student and Youth Council, with the collaboration of the Israeli National Council for the Child, drafted various bills; both have also participated actively in the Knesset Committee's discussions.

62. On 18 December 2001, the Committee held a session regarding the formation of Municipal Committees to promote the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Knesset Committee reviewed the functioning of Municipal Committees in municipalities where such Committees have begun to operate.

63. In other sessions held by the Knesset Committee, the principle of the best interest of the child has been focused upon. This focus has resulted in, for example, the right of a child to have regular contact with her/his grandparents, the right of a child to be raised by her/his family, the right of a child to have contact with her/his parents. Emphasis has been placed on the Convention as a means of preventing the deportation of minors, and as a means of imposing a duty on the State to ensure the provision of certain rights to all children, including, the right to education, the prevention of violence towards children, and the right to a name and identity. The Convention also serves to guarantee that a section of the budget is allocated so as to implement the State's duties. Special sessions of the Knesset Committee were dedicated to the ratification of the 1999 ILO Convention No. 182 Worst Forms of Child Labour, and to the experience of an Israeli delegation to the United Nations General Assembly, which was sent to discuss the rights of the child and its relevance to children in legal proceedings.¹

State Comptroller

64. As yet there is no specific mechanism available for regulating the implementation of the Convention. Nevertheless, the State Comptroller's Office publishes an annual report citing shortcomings in government activities, including violations of children's rights. For example, the 2007 State Comptroller's annual report (published in May 2008) reviewed the Ministry of Education's attempts to address the hooliganism and violence in the school system. The report found that between the years 1999–2006 there were no changes in the frequency of physical, social and sexual violence in educational institutions. During these years, a third of school children were harassed and intimidated on school premises. Moreover, the 2008 annual report also highlighted difficulties in the ability of the Youth Probation Service to fulfil its role in rehabilitating offending youth.

65. The 2007 State Comptroller Report on Local Authorities revealed that the position in schools situated in Ultra-Orthodox and Arab localities is far from satisfactory. Most of these schools do not comply with the Ministry of Education's regulations regarding infrastructure and maintenance, and some even pose a threat to the health of the pupils or even to their lives.

66. The 2006 State Comptroller Report on Local Authorities illustrated that in the four municipalities examined, there was no programme in place to assist female minors in distress, and assistance was granted to these girls following a significant delay, if at all. Furthermore, according to a 1999 Government Resolution, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services was to publish a plan for the treatment of, and follow-up on, female minors in distress. The 2006 State Comptroller Report indicated that during 2005, approximately 17,000 female minors in distress were located and assisted by the Local Authorities' social workers.

¹ This was conducted on 5 March 2001 (see the protocol of the session – <http://www.knesset.gov.il/protocols/data/html/yeled/2001-03-05.html>).

67. The 2004 State Comptroller Report on Local Authorities examined the issue of private accident's insurance for children within the education system. Under a 1994 amendment to the Compulsory Education Law 1949-5709 (the: "Compulsory Education Law") the local education authority is obligated to insure pupils that are entitled to free education within its jurisdiction. The State Comptroller found that in several local authorities, the parental-payment required for the insurance exceeded the maximum stipulated by the Ministry of Education, and that several populations of pupils do not enjoy the insurance.

The Ombudsman

68. In Israel, the State Comptroller also serves as Ombudsman. He performs this function by way of a special unit within the State Comptroller's office – the Office of the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman investigates complaints against statutory bodies that are subject to audit by the State Comptroller, including Government Ministries, local authorities, state enterprises and institutions, and government corporations, as well as their employees.

69. Complaints relating to the activities of public bodies, which the law does not authorize the Ombudsman to investigate, such as banks, insurance companies and other non-governmental entities that serve the public, are often forwarded to the bodies statutorily charged with their supervision, such as the Supervisor of Banks, the Supervisor of Insurance and the Director of Capital, Insurance and Savings. Thus, the Ombudsman is an effective address for dealing with problems of discrimination within a broad array of governmental and public institutions.

70. For example, in 2007, the Ombudsman investigated a complaint regarding the lack of service available in Russian in the Ministry of Education; and a complaint regarding flawed treatment in exemptions granted from the Compulsory Education Law. This had resulted in a minor's missing his matriculation exams due to the Ministry's refusal to open an examinee card for the minor who did not study in a recognized institution. Both complaints were found to be justified.

71. In 2003, the Ombudsman investigated a complaint regarding the refusal of a school to refund payment made for a school-trip, which was paid by the parent prior to the trip, after the child did not participate in the school trip as a result of the security situation. These complaints were found justified and the relevant bodies acted according to the recommendations issued by the Ombudsman.

Reducing discrepancies among groups and geographic areas

72. The efforts to reduce gaps among population groups have continued since the submission of Israel's initial report. These steps are discussed extensively in the relevant chapters contained hereinafter.

Voluntary organizations that implement and disseminate the convention

73. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this regard since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Non-government organizations' interaction with the government

74. Many voluntary organizations have extensive contact with government agencies. While non-government organizations are not systematically involved in planning policy, their influence has continued to be felt in recent years, and they often take the initiative in developing services and promoting legislation in the spirit of the Convention, which is aimed at the facilitation of the best interest of the child.

Disseminating the Convention

75. As aforementioned, in the observation contained in paragraph 22(b) of the Committee's concluding observations, it is encouraged to disseminate the Convention. And thus, the English, Hebrew and Arabic text of the Convention appears on the website of the Ministry of Justice, and in Hebrew and in English on the Ministry of Education website – a popular website for Israeli pupils and students.

Education and the Convention

76. Moreover, the Ministry of Education distributed the Convention on the Rights of the Child to the majority of schools throughout the country. The purpose of this distribution was to ensure that pupils of all ages are familiar with the Convention.

77. The Pupils Rights Law and its Regulations were published in the Director General's section of the Ministry of Education, and are posted in Hebrew and Arabic announcements in schools once every two years, in accordance with Section 4 of the Pupils Rights Law.

78. Between the years 2000 and 2005, the Ministry of Education distributed a notebook written in Hebrew and Arabic that included a summary of children's rights as laid down by the Convention. The Ministry also distributed a summary of the Convention to all schools in Hebrew, Arabic, English, Russian,² Amharic and Spanish. These materials were also published on the Internet.

79. Annual teacher's training was conducted in 2008 in Oranim College. In 2010, an additional teacher's seminar will be held in the northern and southern districts for the Muslim, Bedouin and Christian populations.

80. A unique programme designed for blind children was conducted by the Ministry of Education between 2005 and 2008. In this programme the pupils studied the essence of the Convention, in addition to the means available for its implementation. The children implemented the Convention in their lives through the use of communication skills acquired during the programme (radio broadcasting). Thus, the pupils established the foundation for verbal abilities, diction, and intonation. They are now able to express their personal opinion clearly and from different points of view. Another interesting programme involved high school pupils who became familiar with the Convention and their rights by means of joint activities for children in Israel and abroad. The pupils published articles in an international journal, and two of the pupils were sent to the United Nations General Assembly to participate in global discussions on the subject of "A World Fit for Children."

81. The Unit for Supervision and the Implementation of the Pupils Rights Law in the Ministry of Education, together with the National Parents Organization, is conducting joint seminars for parents concerning how to assimilate children's rights within the family and at school.

82. According to the head of the Israel Psychologists' Union, the chief psychologist of the Ministry of Education (MOE) is disseminating the Convention to educational psychologists and SHEFI (Psychological Counseling Services) stations, and encouraging psychologists to assist schools in taking responsibility for respecting and promoting the rights of pupils.

² See annex No. 1 enclosed.

Police officers and police youth experts in the police

83. According to the head of the youth section at police headquarters, the Israeli Police provide guidance and training with respect to child victims of crime, with the intention of increasing the efficiency and sensitivity of the Police in handling youth. Police investigators attend special courses offered by the Police Youth Department in order to qualify as juvenile interrogators. According to Section 3(a) of the internal police regulations (Israel Police, Minors/Youth Department Directives (the: “Police Directives Minors”), only a Police youth expert (an informal educational instructor) or a specially trained police officer may interrogate a minor suspect. Many of the rules governing the Police’s handling of minors are not defined by statute, but may be found in internal police regulations (Israel Police, Minors/Youth Department Directives).

84. The youth interrogators qualification course reflects the spirit of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and thus, officers receive information on the distinct laws and procedures available for handling youth and on community services for minors and youth. Among the topics taught is the encouragement of a reciprocal relationship between the youth officer, a social worker and the minor.

85. Officers also attend lectures given by juvenile court judges concerning detailed procedures for investigating a minor. Currently, several changes are being affected. These changes relate to minors who are suspected of having committed sexual offences, the promotion of tolerance for cultural differences, the prevention of crimes, the enhancement of investigation methods and the level of care provided by police officers. Regarding minors who have perpetrated crimes, new guidelines, regulations and laws drafted in the spirit of the Convention have been distributed to police youth experts and field units, and are strictly enforced.

III. Definition of the child

86. The definition of a child was discussed in Israel’s initial report. No change has occurred in the definition since the submission of Israel’s initial report.

Taking legal action: the legal capacity of minors

87. This issue was discussed in Israel’s initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel’s initial report.

Permission to employ children

88. This issue was discussed in Israel’s initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel’s initial report.

Marriage

89. The phenomenon of underage marriage still takes place in certain Israeli population groups, including ultra-orthodox Jews originating from Georgia, and Arabs. According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, in 2004, 1,360 Arab-Israeli girls, younger than seventeen, were married. Additionally, 44 per cent of Arab women were married before the age of nineteen. In 2005, the rate of marriage for Muslim girls was more than 2.5 times higher than that of Jewish girls. Also in 2005, 30 requests to allow the marriage of minors were submitted to Family Matters Courts – seventeen were approved. During the years 1997–2005, more than half of the 251 requests for the marriage of minors were approved. During the years 2000–2006, 41 complaints were submitted to the Police due to violations of the Marriage Age Law 5710-1950. In half of these cases criminal files were opened. In all other cases it was decided not to prosecute.

Consent to sexual relations

90. Recently, several provisions of the Penal Law were amended to add specific provisions regarding sexual abuse by a therapist. This is discussed in a Chapter VI B.

The compulsory draft, volunteering for military service, and participation in acts of war

91. The State of Israel signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict on 14 November 2001, and ratified it on 18 July 2005. In accordance with article 10(2), the Optional Protocol entered into force for Israel on 18 August 2005.

92. The State's initial report detailing Israel's implementation of the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict was submitted to the Committee in March 2008.

Criminal and tortuous liability

93. These issues were discussed in Israel's initial report. No changes have occurred in these areas since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Statute of limitations

94. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Revocation of liberty

Detention

95. The Youth Law and the Criminal Procedure Law established restrictions regarding minors in detention. Adults may be detained without a court order for 24 hours, children who are under fourteen years of age may be detained without a court order for only twelve hours; while in special circumstances, the on-duty officer at the police station can order the continued detention of a minor for an additional period not to exceed twelve hours. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law stipulates that a decision to hold a minor on a Saturday or on a holiday requires the approval of the Youth District Officer.

96. The Amendment allows for a period of extension not to exceed 24 hours in the following circumstances:

- Constitution of a sufficient cause specified in Section 29 of Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers Arrest) Law 5756-1996 (the: "Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law").
- Where a decision to extend the arrest of a minor in detention could not be made prior to midnight, and therefore the minor could not be brought before a judge due to the termination of working hours. Hence, the minor shall be brought before a judge immediately upon the resumption of working hours. With regard to minors between the ages of fourteen and eighteen, at present the arrangement for such a minor's detention without a court order is similar to that of an adult they may be detained without a court order for a period of up to 24 hours; in special circumstances, this period may be extended by an additional 24 hours.

97. The Youth Law and the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law imposes restrictions pertinent to the detention of minors. According to this law, the period of a minor's detention prior to indictment is as follows:

98. The Amendment in question reflects a new approach that accords with the spirit of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. Under Section 17 to the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law, a Juvenile Court is authorized to order the detention of a minor for a period that is not to exceed ten days (fifteen days for an adult). A minor who is a suspect may not be detained continuously for a period in excess of twenty days (30 days for an adult). A petition to extend the detention of a minor may be filed only subject to the Attorney General's approval.

99. Under Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law, which addresses the detention of a minor following the filing of an indictment, the court may order that the minor be detained until the termination of proceedings subject to Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law rectifications:

(a) A minor who is under 14 years of age may not be detained until the termination of proceedings against her/him;

(b) A minor may not be detained continuously for a period in excess of twenty days.

100. Section 59 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law stipulates that an adult may be detained for a maximum period of 75 days if an indictment has not been filed. In the case of a minor, the maximum period is limited to 40 days.

101. A minor that has been accused of a crime may be detained for a maximum period of 45 days, as opposed to the 90 days which an adult who has been accused of a crime may be detained (Section 62 to the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law).

102. The amendment further states that when no verdict is reached, a minor is not to be detained for a period in excess of six months (nine months for an adult).

Alternative to detention

103. A closed residence may serve as an alternative to imprisonment. Closed residences, as defined in the Youth Law, serve as an out-of-home-placement or the locus of custody for a minor referred by the Supervisor of Residences. A minor may be placed in a closed residence as a penalty or as a treatment alternative to a penalty. Also, a minor who is under the age of criminal liability, and a minor who is a danger to her/himself and/or others, and who has been declared a minor in need, may be placed in a closed residence. The prohibition against a minor's leaving a place of residence (on condition of bail) (according to Section 48(a) (9) of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law) is for a maximum period of nine months. Nevertheless, the court may issue an order necessary to extend the condition for an additional period not to exceed 90 days. If a court issued such an order on condition of bail for over sixteen hours a day; the order will be re-examined by the court once every three months during that time.

Separation between minors and adult detainees

104. In its concluding observation contained in paragraph 61 concerning Israel's previous periodic report, the Committee on the Rights of the Child recommends that the system of juvenile justice fully integrates into its legislation and practice the provisions of the Convention. Section 13 of the Youth Law requires a separation to be enforced between minor and adult detainees. This section was amended in 2008 to include more detailed orders regarding the required separation. Amendment No. 14 sets that although a minor is to be held in a separate detention facility for minors or in a separate section of a general detention facility, a female minor can be held in a detention cell together with an adult female detainee. This is subject to the minor's agreement and the following conditions: holding the minor alone is not in her best interests; holding the minor with an adult detainee is in her best interests (or there is no possibility of holding the minor with another minor) and the holding of the minor with an adult detainee does not risk the physical or mental health of the minor. Such holding is to be approved by a court within 24 hours. The amendment also stipulates that a detained minor who is in the custody of the prison's authority is entitled to a meeting with a social worker within 24 hours, or as soon as possible after the Sabbath or a holiday ends.

Detention for protective purposes

105. It is permissible to detain a minor for the purpose of self-protection. Section 10(3) of the Youth Law stipulates that "the judge before whom a minor is brought is authorized to order the minor's detention if this is required to ensure the minor's personal safety or to remove him from the company of an undesirable individual." A police officer is authorized to order the detention of a minor on such grounds for twelve hours, until the minor is brought before a judge, and in special circumstances up to 24 hours.

Children in criminal procedure

106. A 2004 Amendment made several changes in this area, including those set out below.

107. The implementation of special procedures allowing children to testify in court, in relation to offences to which the Law applies (Section 2d). In this regard, the child's testimony will be permitted by the youth investigator subject to certain conditions being met. The investigator may require, for example, that the child testifies via closed circuit television, on one specified date, not on the witness stand, in the judge's chamber, etc.

108. In the concluding observation contained in paragraph 32 of its concluding observations, the Committee on the Rights of the Child encouraged the continuation and assimilation of the respect for the views of the child. And thus, decisions of the youth investigator and the Court concerning testimony and testimonial measures, will be concluded only after hearing the opinion of the child, if she/he can express her/his own opinion. The child's opinion will be weighed according to her/his age and her/his level of maturity (Section 2f).

109. Once the youth investigator reaches a decision as to the child's testimony, whether or not to allow her/him to testify, she/he must, without delay, re-evaluate her/his decision in respect of the admission of the child's testimony. (Section 2g).

110. The decision of a children's' investigator may be re-examined by a senior youth investigator (Section 2h).

111. A youth investigator must provide substantial reasons for her/his decisions (Section 2i).

112. The above 2004 amendment to the Criminal Procedure Revision (Examination of Witnesses) Law 5718-1957 established the rule that a child's investigation must be conducted with her/his parent's knowledge, except in certain circumstances. For example; if there is a concern as to any harm to the child's physical and mental wellbeing, or that the suspect is a family relative and there is a concern of possible harm to the child. Moreover, when there is a substantial difficulty in informing the parent despite reasonable efforts having been taken to do so, and the delay might foil the investigation or the prevention of a crime (Section 4a). In addition, the amended law states that if an investigation without the parent's knowledge is required, the child may, under specific circumstances, be removed from the place where she/he is located (school, kindergarten, etc.) (Section 4b). The conditions include such requirements as consultation with educational workers who know the child, providing explanations to the child, supplying identification details of the youth investigator to the administrator of the institution in question, etc. An investigator's decision to investigate a minor without the presence of a parent or a close relative must be documented and be substantially reasoned. However, if a parent or family member is present in the investigation room, but interrupts or interferes in any way such as, by threatening the child in a direct or implied manner, the investigator is authorized to remove the parent from the investigation room. The youth investigator must provide substantial reasons for her/his decisions.

113. A 2006 amendment stated that a child with a mental disability is to be questioned by a special youth investigator in accordance with the Investigation and Testimony Procedures (Suitability to Persons with Mental or Physical Disability) Law 5766-2005.

114. Amendment No. 10 to the Evidence (Protection of Children) Law issued on 12 August 2004, supplements Section 2(f) to the Law. The Amendment stipulates that a youth investigator shall decide whether to allow or exclude the testimony of a minor, as well as determine the conditions under which the testimony is given, according to Section 2(d) of the Law. The Court shall terminate the testimony or condition it, according to Sections 2(c) and 2(e) of the Law, only after a minor, capable of forming an opinion, was given a chance to express her/his opinion regarding her/his testimony and the manner of collecting it. The opinion of the minor shall be given proper consideration according to her/his age and maturity.

115. The 2008 Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law adds the following conditions, with regard to the investigation of a minor:

- The Amendment creates a rule that a child not suspected of committing a crime may not be investigated during night hours, unless the child her/himself filed the complaint or if a Child Protection Officer was convinced that the child is in danger. In such cases, the Amendment stipulates that a Child Protection Officer (Supervisor of the social workers team with regard to children protection) is authorized to conduct the investigation at night (Section 9 of the Youth Law).
- Amendment No. 14 also broadened the definition of parental notification. The officer in charge of a police station to which a minor has been brought must notify one of the minor's parents.
- Children are entitled to a consultation with a parent prior to their investigation as well as to have a parent or a close relative present during the investigation. There is also an obligation to inform the minor of her/his right to consult with an attorney, to have legal representation, and the right to have a parent or other family member present during an investigation.

116. Recently, the Tel-Aviv District Court determined that visual documentation of a suspect's investigation can be published following a court decision allowing such publication, even if the proceedings are still pending. However, the publication may not include reference to the testimony of witnesses (other than witnesses who are police officers), and shall not include any identifying details regarding a minor involved directly or indirectly in the case (Cr. C. 40247/07 The Israeli News Company Inc. v. The State of Israel (25.12. 2008)).

Legal representation without parental consent

117. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. On 27 June 1997, the former Minister of Justice appointed the Rotlevi Committee to examine fundamental principles concerning children and the law (see above) and accordingly, in 2003, six reports prepared by Sub-Committees were submitted to the Minister of Justice, one of which addressed the increase in child representation in Civil Proceedings.

Representation of children in civil proceedings

118. The separate representation of children in civil proceedings is sometimes essential to ensure the maintenance of appropriate legal procedure. The Supreme Court, as well as the courts of lower instance, recognize the significance of this trend and have therefore promoted its development in recent years. The Sub-Committee on the Representation of Children in Civil Proceedings raised this issue by laying the foundations for specific laws drafted in the spirit of the Convention. Hence the Committee formulated a number of recommendations concerning children's representation.

119. The Sub-Committee made use of the Convention's principles, as well as adopting and adapting additional models from different countries around the world. The purpose of the recommendations is not to "attach" an attorney to every child, but rather to assist children who experience unusual difficulties resulting from judicial matters. The Committee's recommendations relate to representation of minors up to eighteen years of age and include civil courts and courts of appeal. The Sub-Committee established the following recommendations:

A child's right to representation

120. Family legal disputes involve both parties' interests. However the child's interests may go unnoticed and unaddressed. Such circumstances require the courts to intervene and ensure that the child's opinion is heard. Under optimal circumstances, the child ought to be represented by her/his parents. However, when the best interests of the child are impaired, it is the State's duty to provide separate legal representation to act on behalf of the child.

Court discretion

121. The Sub-Committee formulated principles aimed at assisting the court in deciding whether to appoint a representative on behalf of the child. Below are two examples where there is an obligation to appoint legal representation on behalf of the child:

(a) Parents are unable to represent their child's best interest, either because of a conflict of interest or because of a lack of an individual ability. In such a case, legal representation will be appointed to represent the child, merely for the purpose of court proceedings;

(b) A child above twelve years of age that is capable of expressing her/his will articulately, will be appointed legal representation to enable the conveyance of her/his wishes to the court.

122. The degree of frequency in representation alters in accordance with the child's level of maturity and personal skills. The Sub-Committee distinguishes between children below and above the age of twelve:

123. When a child is below twelve years of age, the representation is similar to a legal guardian appointed by law. Child representation endorses the welfare principle, thereby the child's wishes and desires gain more credibility as she/he grows older.

124. When a child is above twelve years of age, legal representation is an expression of the minor's wishes and desires.

125. The Sub-Committee recommends that the court's discretion concerning children between ages ten to fourteen remain in the hands of the court. Notwithstanding, the minor's level of maturity and legal capacity must be considered. Such capacity is expressed in the child's ability to understand matters at hand.

126. The Sub-Committee also recommended acknowledging the legal representation of children as a (separate) complicated interdisciplinary legal field. This area is in need of professionals in: (1) Child care (2) child law (3) child development.

127. The Sub-Committee recommended that the court compile and maintain a list of professionals in the field of child legal care and appoint professionals solely from that list. Moreover, the Sub-Committee suggested adopting the interdisciplinary model of professional assistance – that is a counsellor (psychologist, psychiatrist or social worker) that works together with the legal representative in order to achieve the best results for children involved in legal affairs.

128. The Sub-Committee recommended that minor's representatives be subject to additional legal ethical regulations that include, among other things, directives regarding the transmission of information to minors, confidentiality, and immunity towards minors in legal proceedings. Moreover, the Sub-Committee recommended supervising the continuity and consistency of a minor's representation, assurance of a minor's participation in legal proceedings and imposing an obligation to act in good faith in reaching agreements between the parties involved.

129. The person who acts as guardian or as the child's legal representative is subject to a full fiduciary duty. As such, the person in charge of the child's legal matters is obliged to treat her/him with respect and give significant weight to her/his wishes.

130. The Sub-Committee recommended setting up a legal representation unit for the sake of children and youth. As aforementioned, the State is responsible for the fulfillment and finances of a child's right to legal representation and therefore the Minister of Justice should form such a unit.

131. The recommendations determine that the child, her/his parents, the representative of the State, the State attorney's Office and the social workers from the Family Matters Courts (Assistance Unit) are allowed to approach the court in order to ask for the appointment of legal representation for a child.

132. Legal instructions and case law also emphasize the right of the child to be heard when there is a conflict between her/him and her/his parents. Under the Legal Capacity Law, parents or guardians are appointed by the court to represent minors in legal proceedings; they can however, appoint someone else to represent their child. The Law authorizes the court to appoint a representative on behalf of the child (a legal guardian or an attorney).

133. Generating a Public Defense Attorney representation makes it possible for additional minors to be represented in criminal proceedings. The Public Defenders Law provides funding for complete child representation.

Military Court proceedings

134. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law effected several other changes, including to Military Court proceedings.

135. Section 45 of the Youth Law determines that Youth Law Regulations shall not apply to Military Courts' proceedings and the Military Justice Law 5715-1955 (the: "Military Justice Law"). However, Section 45(a) of the Youth Law establishes that a sixteen-year old minor is indictable in a Military Justice Court (consistent with the Protection (Urgency) Directives 1945). Amendment No. 14 stipulates that Juvenile Courts which arraign recruited minors above sixteen years of age shall be considered as Military Courts. Hence, Military Judges who are trained and qualified to engage in child and youth matters as defined in Section 2(a) of the Youth law: "Proceedings Regarding Juvenility" are appointed.

Adoption

136. According to the Adoption of Children Law it is possible to adopt a child who has not yet reached the age of eighteen. It is not possible, however, to adopt a foetus before it is born or an adult above the age of 21. According to Section 7 of the Adoption Law, the court will not grant an adoption unless it is convinced that a child above the age of nine — or who has not yet reached the age of nine but is capable of understanding the issue — stated that she/he agrees to the adoption by the specific adopter(s).

137. The court must listen to the opinion of a much younger child who is not an infant in each adoption case. On the other hand, there are cases where the court may issue an adoption order without revealing the fact of the adoption to the adoptee. There are two conditions that apply in this regard:

- The adoptee does not know that the adopter is not her/his parent
- All signs indicate that the adoptee desires the continuation of the relationship with the adopter

138. The best interest of the adoptee requires not apprising her/him of the adoption. In lieu of hearing the adoptee in person, the court may be convinced of the adoptee's wishes in some other manner, for example, through a Child Protection Officer.

139. Additional changes regarding the Adoption Law shall be delineated below.

Changing one's name

140. As a rule, under the Names Law 5716-1956 (the: "Names Law"), the names of minors are chosen and may be changed without their consent. However, in certain cases the court and the Minister of Interior are authorized to intervene in the decision of parents or guardians in this matter.

The right to a name

141. On 18 February 2008, an amendment to the Names Law was issued, addressing the determination of the father's name (detailed in a minor's State-issued identity card) if his identity is unknown. For a child under the age of sixteen, the mother may either determine the unknown father's first name or make no determination at all. However, if the child is sixteen years or older and the father's name is unknown or undetermined, the child may either determine the name of the father or leave it undetermined. Finally, the amendment stipulates that if the father's name was determined by the mother, a person over the age of sixteen has the right to amend it.

Legal capacity to inherit and transfer property*Legal capacity to inherit*

142. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No changes have occurred since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Consumption of alcohol

143. Section 193 A (a) to the Penal Law stipulates that a person encouraging or persuading a minor under the age of eighteen to consume alcohol is subject to three months' imprisonment.

144. Amendment No. 79 to the Penal Law issued on 9 July 2004 supplements Section 193A by adding Section 193A (a1): "Any person who sells alcohol to minors under the age of eighteen is subject to six months' imprisonment."

Driving

145. A minor's receipt of a driver's license depends upon the type of vehicle. From the age of sixteen, a minor may obtain a driver's license for a tractor or a motorcycle with an engine up to 125 cc. If the intended driver has not yet reached the age of 17, she/he must obtain the written consent of her/his parents or guardian to receive the driver's license.

146. At the age of seventeen, a minor may receive a driver's license for most types of private and commercial vehicles, if the vehicle's total weight does not exceed 3.5 tons and its maximum number of passengers does not exceed eight.

147. A driver is referred to as a "new driver" for the first two years after receiving her/his license. During the first three months after receiving her/his license, the minor must drive while being accompanied by an experienced driver. Subsequent to these three months, and until the minor is 21; she/he may not drive more than two passengers unless she/he is accompanied by an experienced driver. As of the age 21, an individual may receive a license to drive a bus, taxi or a rescue vehicle.

148. The Transportation Regulations 5721-1961 (the: "Transportation Regulations") allow a minor to start taking driving lessons before reaching the age at which she/he is permitted to receive a license. Thus, it is possible to begin learning to drive a motorcycle (up to 125 cc) at age sixteen, a tractor and most types of private vehicles at age sixteen and a half.

149. At age seventeen a minor may file a request to receive an apprentice pilot's license.

A right to a dignified death

150. On 6 December 2005, the Knesset enacted the Terminally Ill Patient Law 5766-2005 (the: "Terminally Ill Law") in response to the medical-ethical dilemma presented by the treatment of terminally-ill patients. The Law is based on the recommendations of a public committee appointed by the Minister of Health in 2000. See further details below.

IV. General principles

A. Article -6- The right to life, survival and development

The right to life and physical development

151. Several amendments were proposed by the Rotlevi Committee concerning the scope and implementation of the Youth Law. The Committee advocated several mechanisms by which to guarantee the rights of minors — physically, mentally, socially and educationally — in any situation in which a minor is deprived of her/his liberty. These rights include the provision of essential necessities (such as clothing, food, medical treatment, and hygiene), psychotherapy, psychiatric treatment, protection from violence, aspects of leisure, physical activity and the promotion of family ties.

152. Another area that raises concern regarding the welfare of children and youth is that of accidents, including accidents in and around the home environment, on the road, at school or during social activities. Approximately one-quarter of children's deaths are caused by accidents. In recent years, efforts have been made to reduce car accidents through campaigns launched in the media and at schools (including the participation of children in safety patrols). Programmes to promote safe behaviour and encourage compliance with safety measures have been instituted (examples of these programmes will be provided throughout this report).

Emotional, cognitive and social development and the acquisition of skills

153. The total national expenditure on education in the year 2007, amounted to 56.2 billion NIS ($15.1 billion), comprising 8.3 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. The total national expenditure on education (in constant prices) in the year 2007 increased by 5 per cent following a 2 per cent increase in 2006 and in 2005 respectively.

154. In November of 2003, the Government of Israel established a public committee headed by Professor Hillel Schmidt to examine the state of children and youth at risk in Israel from birth to age eighteen. In 2008, the Israeli Government launched a national early childhood initiative called New Beginnings through Ashalim – The Association for Planning and Development of Services for Children and Youth at Risk and their Families.

155. In Israel, 80,000 children from birth to age six are defined as being “at-risk,” representing 8 per cent of Israel’s total child population. These children suffer from inadequate parental care, severe learning difficulties and poverty. In many poverty-stricken localities the New Beginnings Association offers programmes including the improvement of services within existing day-care centres, home visits by professionals, parent-child programmes, empowerment programmes for fathers, nutrition and health promotion, identification of developmental delays and accident prevention.

156. According to data reported by welfare authorities, 40,000 children are victims of abuse, exploitation and neglect each year and are eligible for treatment. Out of the children who were assessed by child investigators in 2007, many were classified as victims of abuse committed by family members (56.1 per cent), and nearly one third of those analyzed were sexually abused (31 per cent).

157. New medicines have been introduced as part of Israel’s Health Funds and are now included in the array of medicines available to insured individuals. Some of these medications are specific to children and assist in child care.

The right to life, survival and development of children with disabilitiesGeneral

158. In 2007, 293,000 disabled or chronically ill children resided in Israel, amounting to 12.8 per cent of the total population of children in the country. Approximately 176,000 children (out of the 293,000) are disabled or suffer from a chronic illness. Of these, 7.7 per cent suffer from disabilities that impinge upon their daily functioning for a period of at least a year.

159. The percentage of children who suffer from at least one disability among the Bedouin population (in the southern Negev area) stands at 9.1 per cent, at 8.3 among the total population of Arab children, and at 7.6 per cent among Jewish children.

160. Between the years 2001–2005 there was a decrease in the percentage of children with disabilities who were either sexually assaulted or were victims of family violence (from 11.2 per cent to 9 per cent).

161. In comparison with western countries, Israel has a relatively high rate of children born at a very low weight. The rate of children born with low birth weights increased from 15.8 per cent (on average) between 1995 and 1998, and 18 per cent in 2005.

162. Approximately 25 per cent of children with disabilities live with two unemployed parents, who in many cases depend on an income support pension. Among the Bedouin population, 50 per cent of the children with disabilities’ fathers are unemployed.

Sexual and family violence

163. The percentage of children with disabilities who were sexually molested, assaulted or were the victim of family violence and were questioned by a special child investigator (9 per cent), is higher than the rate in the total population of children in Israel (7.5 per cent).

Education

164. In Israel there are approximately 46,000 pupils in the Special Education System; which includes kindergartens for disabled children, schools for disabled children, and classrooms in regular schools which are allocated to disabled children. Between the years 2002–2005 the rate of disabled pupils and classrooms assigned to disabled children in regular schools grew by 16 per cent. In the same period, the number of kindergartens for disabled children grew by 26 per cent. In 2005, approximately 72,164 children with disabilities were incorporated into the regular education system.

165. Of the children who are schooled in the Special Education System, the number of children with learning difficulties amounts to 38 per cent of the total number of children with disabilities. Most of the children in this group study in classrooms in regular schools which are earmarked for children with disabilities. Children with mental disabilities constitute a significant group in the Special Education System – comprising roughly 20 per cent of the total population of children in the system.

166. As mentioned above, the Special Education Law 5758-1998 (The “Special Education Law”) was amended in 2002 and a chapter devoted to children with disabilities was added. In concluding observation No. 40 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee recommended that the State party continue to strengthen its efforts to ensure the needs of children with disabilities meet the necessary services. The purpose of the amendment is to ensure that the same level of services granted to children in regular schools is afforded to children with disabilities. Moreover, the amendment obligates the Placement Committee to favour the placement of a child with disabilities in a regular educational facility rather than in a special facility. Among the purposes of the amendment is the inclusion of children with disabilities within the regular education system while gradually enlarging the budget allocated for this purpose. Eligibility is determined by a Placement Committee composed of a representative of the local school system (the chairman), two Ministry of Education supervisors, an educational psychologist, a paediatrician, a social worker, and a representative of the national special education parents’ committee. The Placement Committee must hear the child’s parents or representative before making a decision; it may also hear directly from the child. Prior to the Amendment 2002, children with non-physical disabilities who required care beyond age six (when their eligibility for care under the National Health Insurance Law ends) could receive care through the special education system. These children previously received assistance by the “reinforcement basket”, which only partially covered their needs. This Amendment meets their needs and compares services of all children.

Data on children and institutions

167. As of 2009, 57,943 children with disabilities were placed in various educational facilities. This number represents 3.2 per cent of the total number of pupils (approximately 1.8 million) in Israel. 9,677 attend special education kindergartens, 27,592 study in special education classrooms within regular schools and 20,674 attend special education schools.

168. There are approximately 75,000 children with disabilities included in the regular educational system. Approximately 56,000 (75 per cent) are Jewish and the remaining 19,000 (25 per cent) are members of Israel’s Arab population. The Special Education Law applies to approximately 133,000 children, 103,000 of which study in regular education institutions (in regular classrooms or in special education classrooms) and 30,000 study in institutions designated for children with disabilities.

Table 1

Number of pupils and classrooms in special education institutions, 2009

Population groups	Classrooms	Pupils
Jewish	5 077	45 145
Arab	1 000	9 416
Druze	161	1 343
Bedouin	215	2 039
Total	6 453	57 943

Source: The Ministry of Education 2009.

169. The Dorner Committee (named after Justice Dalia Dorner – chairman of the Committee for the Examination of Special Education in Israel) was appointed by the Minister of Education in September 2007. The Committee submitted its recommendations to the Government in January 2009.

170. The Committee examined the Israeli school system for children with disabilities. The Committee recommended implementing a model based on “Parental Choice” which gives the parents the choice as to whether or not the child should attend a regular school or a special education school. The Committee also recommended the adjusting of the allocation of funding according to the principle that “funding follows the child”. This principle would help to insure that the needs of every child are met and would also help to prepare future teachers and assistants on how to work with children with disabilities. The Committee recommended the establishment of more schools and kindergartens for children with disabilities alongside the existing regular educational institutions.

171. The Committee also highlighted problems resulting from the distinction drawn between children with disabilities who are included in the regular education system and those who receive special education services. The Committee recommended greater parental involvement in the education process. Accordingly the Committee suggested that parents choose their child’s education structure that is whether their child will be educated in a special or regular educational framework. This model exists in other countries including several countries that are members of the OECD (Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development).

172. The Committee concluded that the current method of budgeting is too rigid and does not always allow for the appropriate treatment of children with disabilities. Hence the Committee recommended that the budget be determined based on a model called the “funding according to needs – system” which stipulates that the budget is determined by the individual characteristics of every child with disabilities. The Committee also recommended that the placement of the child and degree of assistance offered to the child as well as the characterization of the child should be effected based on the child’s individual functioning abilities rather than the type of disability from which the child suffers.

173. In order to smooth the implementation of the above recommendations the Committee suggested the following approach: establishing a committee to examine each disabled child’s entitlement to special education services. Parents ought to be encouraged to participate in all stages of the various procedures and the case of every child with disabilities ought to be examined once every three years. Based on its recommendations the Committee formulated an amendment to the Special Education Law.

174. In accordance with the above mentioned concluding observation No. 40 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in 2002 the Knesset approved the amendment to the Special Education Law. Following the amendment a pupil with disabilities who is included in the regular school system is entitled to receive supplementary tutoring and studies as well as access to special services such as psychology services aid services medical services or any other services that the Minister of Education after consulting with the Minister of Health and the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services establishes in a Directive (The Special Education Law (Amendment No. 7)).

Personal assistance

175. Moreover the Safe Transportation for Children and Infants with Disabilities Law 5755-1994 (the: "Transportation for Children Law") has also been amended several times: in 2002, 2005 and 2008. According to this law a child with disabilities is entitled to transportation from her/his place of residence or a place nearby to an educational institution in accordance with her/his needs and the type of disability which the child has ((Section 2(a)).

176. An infant with a disability is entitled to transportation to a rehabilitation day-care centre and to be accompanied by one adult in addition to the driver (Section 2(a1)). The relevant local authority is responsible for providing transportation during the school year and school hours respectively (Section 3(a)). The local authority must employ a safe vehicle as determined by the Regulations of the Minister of Transportation unless there are less than five children or infants transferred at a time. Such transportation is available if sitting or lying in the vehicle does not harm the health or safety of the children and infants respectively (Section 4).

177. The Committee recommended that the Ministry of Education provide personal assistant services for children with disabilities The Committee recommended that the Ministry of Education periodically reassess its eligibility policy for personal assistance. The Committee recommended that these services be expanded.

178. In order to fully utilize the financial resources at the disposal of the Ministry of Education teachers from the regular education system must be educated and trained to work with children with disabilities who are included in regular education institutions.

179. The Committee recommended that the Ministry of Education instruct The National Insurance Institute (NII) to participate in the financing of any shortage of equipment in special education institutions. To this end the Committee recommended that the Ministry of Education set up financial funds for the purchase of the equipment required.

180. Finally the Committee recommended that the Ministry of Education advocate the establishment of schools and kindergartens for special education near the regular education institutions. In this regard the Planning and Construction Committees shall submit annual reports specifying the special education schools and kindergartens to be constructed by the local authorities.

181. In addition to the above the Rights of Pupils with Learning Disabilities in Secondary Education Facilities Law 5768-2008 was recently enacted. This law affirms the rights of pupils with learning disabilities to adjustments in the criteria for admission to secondary education facilities (academic technological rabbinical or professional) as well as in the exams and other assignments that they are required to sit and submit throughout school years.

182. Moreover modifications of matriculation exams for children with Learning Disabilities were approved. In 2007 62 912 out of 281 511 pupils (22.3 per cent) requested modifications to their matriculation exams due to learning disabilities. The majority of the applications were approved. Among the Arab population 3 207 of the 46 579 pupils (6.9 per cent) requested that adjustments be made and these requests were approved. Among the Druze population 246 of the 5 689 pupils (4.3 per cent) requested that adjustments be made and their requests were approved.

Case law

183. In a recent case the Tel-Aviv District Court residing as an Administrative Court addressed the scope of the State's obligation to provide free education to children with disabilities. The petitioners contested an internal Directive of the Ministry of Education according to which commencing in the 2007/8 school year the supervisors of special education schools could authorize reinforcement assistants for special education classes; but could not authorize personal assistants for the children. The petitioners claimed that the Directive violates the rights of a child with a disability to free education as established by the Special Education Law.

184. The Court determined that the State has a substantial obligation under the Special Education Law to provide free education for children with disabilities and cannot release itself from this obligation once a child is placed in the special education system. A Directive that negates the ability of an individual or a group of individuals such as persons with disabilities to benefit from personal assistance impinges their fundamental right to education and therefore violates the State's obligation. The Court determined that it is essential that the Ministry's policy take individual circumstances into consideration as a strict framework of rules which does not allow for deviation in the event of exceptional cases arising may constitute a breach of the fundamental right of a child to education and as such would be invalid. The Court further held that the Ministry of Education's Directive prohibiting the authorization of personal assistants in the special education system is void and had to be reworded so as to allow for the inclusion of personal assistants for pupils in exceptional circumstances (Ad.P 1214/08 Orel (minor) et. al. v. The Ministry of Education et. al. (07.09.2008)).

Special education in the minority populations

185. Children with disabilities are absent from school for longer periods of time during the school year than children without disabilities. Approximately 25 per cent of disabled children were absent four to seven days of school in the first three months of the school year 19 per cent were absent seven days of school in the first three months of the school year and a further 14 per cent were absent from between fourteen days to the entire first three months of schooling.

Health care

186. Approximately 18 per cent of children admitted to general hospitals with a stay of 21 days or more were hospitalized in psychiatric and rehabilitations wards. In 2004 756 children were hospitalized for psychiatric reasons.

187. According to a recent Amendment to the National Health Insurance Law 5754-1994 Amendment 43 (the: "National Health Insurance Law") dated 5 November 2008 children with Autistic disorders shall receive 3 hours of paramedic treatment (physiotherapy speech therapy and occupational therapy). These treatments require a minimum co-payment of 23 NIS ($6) per session. The Amendment was gradually implemented as of January 2009.

188. The National Health Insurance (Children with Disabilities) Directives 5770-2010 (the: "National Health Insurance (Children with Disabilities) Directives") enlarged the scope of eligibility for a disability pension of disabled children. The increase in the scope of eligibility was followed by the recommendations of 2009 Ornoy Committee (named after Professor Ornoy – Chairman of the Committee for the Examination of the Criteria for Disability Pension of Disabled Children). The Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services appointed the Committee that determined the following: children dependant on others due to a mental or a physical disability will be eligible for additional pension concerning their education. Such pension is intended for school assistance studies arrangements and exams accommodation adapted to their disability.

Case law

189. In July 2009 the High Court of Justice held that The National Insurance Institute was required to recognize all children who fall on the autistic spectrum that is who have diverse autistic disabilities (including PDD NOS and Asperser's Syndrome) as children entitled to full disability pensions in accordance with The National Insurance Institute (Subsistence Allowance Studying Assistance and Arrangements for Disabled Child) Regulations 5758-1998. The petition was submitted in 2006 subsequent to the NII's decision to cease payments of pensions to autistic children. The NII claimed that the payment of the pension was dependent on the child's level of functioning. The ruling allows parents of autistic children to finance the expensive treatments that children who fall on the autistic spectrum require. The Court also held that essential services such as rehabilitation day care and the like will continue to be provided by the State (H.C.J 7879/06 "ALUT" The Israeli Society for Autistic Children v. The National Insurance Institute of Israel (19.7.2009).

190. Children with disabilities receive various services from the Social Welfare Department including family guidance education psychosocial aid and para-medical treatments. There is also an allowance granted by the NII for disabled children although only 12 per cent of the children with disabilities are entitled to it. Approximately 1 000 children are entitled to walking aids orthopaedic shoes or limb prosthesis funded by the Ministry of Health. In 2008 the number of families receiving child allowances increased by 1.4 per cent following a similar increase in 2007. In 2008 (monthly average) child allowances were paid to approximately 2.4 million children from 994 800 families.

B. Article 2 – Non-discrimination and equal opportunity

191. Non-discrimination is a central principle of Israeli legislation. Equality among population groups is promised in the State's Declaration of Independence and in various pieces of legislation. The provision of equal opportunity for all citizens has guided social policy since the establishment of the State.

192. For the last two decades two groups of immigrants with radically different social and cultural characteristics came to Israel: immigrants from the former Soviet Union and immigrants from Ethiopia. Immigrant children and youth face major difficulties and in general experience higher rates of dropping out of school and of social deviance. The educational gap is particularly significant for Ethiopian immigrants and for certain groups of immigrants from the southern parts of the former Soviet Union.

193. In recent years concern regarding the quality of the integration of immigrant children into the school system has led to a range of initiatives taken to promote their educational and social integration (see details below).

194. The absorption of Ethiopian immigrant children presents a particular challenge given the dramatic cultural transition and their families' socio-economic status. There is also a problem of demographic composition and their parents' fairly low level of education. Policies have been developed to promote equal opportunity for these children and to support their absorption into the school system.

195. Nevertheless a certain percentage of them have scholastic difficulties and do not regularly attend school. The rate of school attendance and of eligibility for matriculation certificates among Ethiopian youth are low compared to the general population.

196. In May 2009 the Israel National Council for the Child applied to the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services (as a final resort before filing a petition with the High Court of Justice) for equal medical treatment and social services for all children in Israel. In the request the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services was asked to issue an order granting equal services in the fields of medical care general assistance and social services for children who have no legal status in Israel.

Differences between Jewish and Arab children

197. Gaps between the Arab and Jewish population with respect to child development services have considerably decreased in recent years. Eight child development centres which provide health services have been opened in close proximity to Arab populations in addition to the opening of the development institute located at the French Hospital in Nazareth. Recent years have witnessed an increase in the establishment of Child Development Centers in majority Arab areas.

198. Currently there are 34 child development institutes and 65 units that are recognized by the Health Division of the Israeli Ministry of Health. These units primarily serve children who suffer from arrested development difficulties. In majority Arab areas there are six units that serve children with developmental difficulties and one development institute. The services provided at these facilities include access to preventive medical care tracking delays in development diagnostic services and support services (such as psychological and counselling services). This indicates significant progress in medical and therapeutic services for disabled Arab children and Arab children who suffer from arrested development.

Children of foreign workers

199. In 2007 approximately 1 000 children of foreign workers lived in Israel. According to Directive No. 5760/10(a) dated June 2000 of the Director General of the Ministry of Education the Compulsory Education Law applies to all children living in Israel regardless of their status in the Population Registry.

200. Since the submission of Israel's initial report there has been progress in the legal status of foreign worker's children. Government resolution No. 3807 dated 26 June 2005 was amended by Government resolution No. 156 dated 18 June 2006 and states the following:

“Upon request the Minister of Interior is entitled to grant permanent residency status to children of illegal immigrants who have been part of the Israeli society and culture if they fulfil the following conditions:

(a) The child has lived in Israel for at least six years (as of the date of the Resolution) and entered Israel prior to the age of fourteen. A short visit abroad will not be viewed as an interruption of this time period;

(b) Prior to the child's entry or birth the parents must have entered Israel legally and with an entry permit in accordance with the Entry into Israel Law 5712-1952 (the: “Entry into Israel Law”);

(c) The child speaks the Hebrew language;

(d) The child is in first grade or above or has completed her/his studies;

(e) Those filing the request will be required to submit documentation or participate in hearings in order to prove that they meet the abovementioned criteria.

201. The Minister can grant temporary residency status in Israel to the parents and the siblings of the child as long as they have lived in the same household from the date of the child's entry into Israel or birth in Israel and are in Israel as of the date of this Resolution. If there is no reason for objection the temporary residency status will be renewed until the child reaches the age of 21. At that point the parents and the siblings will be entitled to file a request for permanent residency status.

202. As of 1 June 2009 approximately 862 requests have been filed of which 436 were accepted 424 were rejected and 2 were still pending. In the case of 424 rejected requests 354 appeals were filed to the committee of appeals. On review 131 applications were accepted by the Ministry of Interior and 219 were rejected. Of the rejected appeals 31 were referred to the committee that reviews humanitarian issues and 4 appeals are currently under review. In total 567 files were accepted and 291 were rejected.

203. As of June 2009 there are 1 431 children of foreign workers who study in schools and kindergartens. Among them are 956 schoolchildren and 475 are kindergarten children.

Table 2

Distribution of children of foreign workers by grades 2009

Grade	Elementary school	Junior high school	High school	Total
Kindergarten		-	-	475
1	150	-	-	150
2	104	-	-	104
3	85	-	-	85
4	78	-	-	78
5	70	-	-	70
6	60	-	-	60
7	19	34	-	53
8	17	30	-	47
9	2	28	23	53
10	-	-	92	92
11	-	-	115	115
12	-	-	47	47
13	-	-	2	2
Total	585	92	279	1 431

Source: Ministry of Education 2009.

C. Article 3 – The best interest of the child

The best interest of the child as a guiding principle

Preserving the best interest of the child

Case law

204. The District Court determined that if child support payments impose a heavy burden, a father is entitled to request a reduction in payments, provided that the reason for the reduction accords with one of the causes listed by the law as sufficient cause. However, the father can only seek to enforce an indemnification agreement when his former wife can refund him without causing harm to the welfare of the child after she/he reaches the age of eighteen, or when his former wife has financial prosperity and if there is no conflict with the best interest of the child. (F.M.A 785/05 Anonymous v. Anonymous et. al. (03.01.2006)).

205. In a separate case, the Supreme Court accepted an appeal against a decision of the Family Matters Court which determined that a claim for child support should be regarded as a substantial claim, given that the children are not bound by the amount agreed to by their parents during their divorce. The appeal was submitted by a mother on behalf of two minors regarding their child support payments. The father did not oppose the change, but emphasized that from his viewpoint, the claim was essentially for a change of child support payments that had already been ruled upon. It is critical to understand the difference in the parents' positions is since a substantial claim requires the Court to examine the needs of the minor(s) before it and then set the amount of child support accordingly. On the other hand, a claim for the alteration of child support payments means that the applicant must prove a change of circumstances which justify the alteration. (F.M.A 7916/03 Anonymous et. al. v. Anonymous (28.02.05)).

Preserving the best interest of the child in child welfare proceedings

206. The Supreme Court, residing as the High Court of Justice, was asked to revoke a decision reached by the Sharia (the Muslim Court System) regarding guardianship of three children, aged 7, 8 and a half, and 10. The Sharia Court and the Sharia Court of Appeals both granted the father of the children with guardianship, without examining evidence regarding their best interests or questioning the children themselves. Moreover, the Courts' decisions violated the relevant laws, in particular the Legal Capacity Law and the Equal Rights for Women Law 5711-1951, which stipulate that guardianship is to be determined according to the best interests of the children and which apply to all courts, including those part of the religious court system. Therefore, the Supreme Court ruled in favour of the applicant, revoked the decision and remanded the case to the Sharia Court so that evidence from social workers regarding the best interests of the children could be considered. (HCJ 1129/06 Anonymous et. al. v. The Shari'a' Court of Appeals et. al. (05.06.2006)).

207. In another case, the Supreme Court determined that the judgment reached by the Jerusalem Rabbinical Court and affirmed by the High Rabbinical Court should be annulled. The Supreme Court determined that the rabbinical judges did not consider the best interest of the child when considering the father's request to be awarded custody over the child. The family's place of residence was in the United States and the child remained there with his mother following his parents' separation and divorce proceedings, which were held before the courts abroad. Those courts awarded the father supervised visitation rights with the child. However, since the father opposed the requirement that his visits be supervised, he refused to visit his child. Subsequently, the father moved to Israel and upon learning this, the mother petitioned the Jerusalem Rabbinical Court for a "Get" (Jewish divorce document). The father, simultaneously, petitioned for custody. The Jerusalem Rabbinical Court determined that the custody issue should be resolved after the finalization of the divorce, by agreement of the parties. The Jerusalem Rabbinical Court, after granting the divorce between the couple, awarded the father custody. The High Rabbinical Court affirmed the lower court's decision. The decision was reached without considering the child's best interest; and since the courts in the United States had already awarded custody to the mother, the Supreme Court determined that the courts in Israel were 'Forum Non Convenient' according to private international law applicable in Israeli courts, including the rabbinical courts, and that therefore custody should remain with the mother, and the judgments of the High Rabbinic Court should be annulled. (H.C.J 1073/05 Anonymous et. al. v. The High Rabbinical Court et. al. (25.06. 2008)).

Preserving the best interests of the child in out-of-home care

208. In Israel there are approximately 70,000 children and youth (3 per cent of all children) living separately from their families. For the most part the children are scattered among government-supervised facilities. 55,000 children (ages fourteen to eighteen) attend boarding schools. In most cases the decision to leave home is made by the children themselves or their families. Far fewer children and youth (approximately 8,500) have been placed outside their homes by Child and Family Services. 6,500 children were placed in boarding schools and the remaining 1,950, were placed in foster families.

209. Some children were placed in facilities operated by the Youth Protection Authority (a government agency of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services that is responsible for supervising correctional facilities), which is responsible for the placement of delinquent and near delinquent youth; while others were admitted to psychiatric hospitals, and certain disabled children were removed from their homes by Social Welfare Departments.

210. Another issue concerning children in out-of-home frameworks is their relationship with their parents. The welfare system is aware of the importance of maintaining a relationship between parents and their children, and a special programme has been designed for this purpose. A committee of experts that established standards for maintaining the relationship between boarding school pupils and their parents recommended that schools regularly report to parents on their child's status, set times for telephone calls between parent and child, pre-arrange vacation dates, and host at least one event per year to which parents are invited. The Youth Protection Authority has also set guidelines and methods for including parents in the care of their child and reinforcing their relationship with their child. Such recommendations are already in effect.

Preserving the best interests of the child in immigration matters

211. On 2 October 2008 the Supreme Court overturned a decision reached by the District Court preventing the immigration of a seven year-old minor to Germany with his German mother, and determined that they may temporarily emigrate to Germany despite the objection of the Israeli father. The Court stipulated that the leading principle in the decision making process regarding custody and residency of children, as in any other case concerned with the relationship between parents and their children is the best interest of the child. This principle obligates parents and Courts alike, and is an individual and independent guiding principle in determining custody and residency issues.

212. In situations of parental separation, the Court must determine what is the lesser of two evils with regard to the minor. The Court is obligated to find an arrangement which will be a stable solution – awarding custody to the parent deemed to be fitter, while maintaining, as much as possible, the relationship between the child and the second parent, especially when the minor emigrates from Israel.

213. In the case in question, the Court imposed several restrictions on the emigration, including the continuation of the minor's education in a Jewish school, and at least four annual visits of a minimum of seven days each by the minor to Israel, as well as awarding the father the right to visit the minor in Germany as many times as he desires following the giving of advance notice. The mother was required by the court to deposit a personal bond with the Family Matters Court to guarantee the fulfilment of these conditions, and it was decided that the Court would reconvene after two years to determine whether the conditions were met, as well as to determine whether to make the arrangement a permanent one. (F.M.A 10060/07 Anonymous v. Anonymous (2.10.2008)).

214. Subsequent to the immigration of families with children to Israel, requests for status in Israel are filed. The file is forwarded to the Ministry of Interior's Inter-Ministerial Humanitarian Committee for review. Since the best interest of the child is the leading criterion, requests for status which involve children are granted more often than not.

Preserving the best interest of the child in local authorities

215. Following the details presented in the initial report, according to a 2000 Amendment to the Municipalities Ordinance (New Version) 5724-1964, the municipality's council should elect a Committee for the purpose of initiating and planning activities for the advancement of the status of children and youth. This Committee should act in order to protect children and youth, to ensure their rights, including the realization of the principle of the child's best interest, non-discrimination, the right to decent conditions of development and the right of children and youth to participate in the decision-making process with respect to decisions concerning them.

216. The Committee should include between three and five members of the municipality's council, the director of the education division and the director of the social services division, a principal of one of the schools in the municipality, representatives of the teacher's union, the chairperson of the pupils council, the chairperson of the parent's organization, representatives of youth movements and others.

D. Article 12- Respect for the views of the child

The right to be heard and respect for the views of minors in matters affecting them

217. Israeli Laws and policies support the broader consensus that a child's opinion should be heard and considered in matters affecting her/him. Laws and administrative procedures tend to recommend, and even demand, that the child's opinion be heard prior to making a decision that concerns the child.

218. In proceedings involving conversion, adoption or admission to a psychiatric hospital, the consent of the minor (once she/he has reached an age determined by the law) is required before a decision is made and actions are taken. Courts are authorized to rule against the minor's wishes or even not to allow her/his opinion to be heard if doing so (allowing her/him to be heard) would cause harm to the child. Another reason for a court to disallow a child's statement is if the information that would be revealed is confidential (Section 1B of the Youth Law).

219. The novelty in the above legislation is in the legislative requirement as opposed to merely a customary one. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law stipulates that courts' rulings should be given subsequent to the child in question having expressed her/his opinion. Judges and administrators are required to pay attention and give substantial weight to the minor's opinion when ruling or making a decision that affects the child, bearing in mind the child's age and level of maturity (though not to obtain her/his consent). The court will explain its decision to the minor in a comprehensible manner.

220. The Rotlevi Sub-Committee regarding the Child and her/his Family provided a valid argument in favour of the right of the child to be heard: it promotes the child's independence (subject to the child's age and level of maturity). This right is granted in a gradual manner, consistent with the child's best interest. The committee also recommended setting up a mechanism to facilitate the child's participation in court proceedings. Below are the primary mechanisms:

- Appointing a person to accompany the child throughout the court proceedings.
- Establishing a separate department within the Assistance Units of the Family Matters Courts, intended for children in legal proceedings.

Protection of children in legal proceedings

221. Amendment No. 1 to the Pupils Rights Law issued on 22 December 2004, amends Section 1 of the Pupils Rights Law, and stipulates that the purpose of the Law is to formulate principles for the rights of pupils which are in accordance with the spirit of human dignity and the principles contained in the Convention, while still preserving the dignity of all who operate in the education system (the pupil, the educational employee, and the education institution staff), and preserving the uniqueness of different kinds of educational institutions, and fostering an atmosphere of mutual respect in the educational institution community. The amendment also amends Section 4 of the Pupils Rights Law, and stipulates that the Director General guidelines, as well as the guidelines of each school principal, must include rules for the protection of dignity, discipline and the prevention of violence.

222. On 1 June 2007, an experimental programme entered into force at the Haifa and Jerusalem Family Matters Courts, with the participation of the children involved in Family Matters Court's proceedings. The programme operates in association with the Courts Administration bodies within the Ministry of Justice, the Assistance Units to the Family Matters Courts within the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services body and Ashalim (an NGO).

223. The participation of children in the decision-making processes that affect their lives is achieved by implementing the recommendations of the Rotlevi Committee, with the assistance of the Department for Child Participation in Family Matters Courts.

224. On 3 December 2007, the Minister of Justice signed the Civil Procedure Regulations (Temporary Order) 5767-2007, which adds Chapter K2 to the Civil Procedure Regulations 5744-1984. The practice embodied in Chapter K2 regulates the procedures for children's participation in Family Matters Courts for the duration of the experimental programme, namely between 7 and 9 December 2007. (See also Supreme Court Decision HCJ 1129/06 Anonymous et. al. v. The Shari'a' Court of Appeals et. al. (05.06.2006)) above.

Removal of pupils

225. In 2004, the Minister of Education published Regulations regarding the removal of pupils from the educational system (Compulsory Education Regulations (Rules for the Permanent Removal of a Pupil Due to School Achievement) 5765-2004).

226. These Regulations include a prohibition on removing a pupil in the first to sixth grades from school due to a lack of achievement in their studies. Regarding pupils in the seventh to twelfth grades, removal from school shall not be made based on a lack of achievement unless the pupil fails at least 70 per cent of the mandatory subjects for that school year. Moreover, the failure must not occur due to illness, death of a family member, separation or divorce of the pupil's parents, or other exceptional event which, according to the educational personnel, led to the failure.

227. The Pupils Rights Regulations (Publishing Orders and Pupil Removal) 5762-2002, establishes rules regarding the removal of pupils from school. Among them is the necessity of holding a hearing before finalizing the decision to remove a pupil (Section 4). The pupil or her/his parents can file an appeal with the Head of the Ministry of Education's District, according to Section 6(a). A hearing should be held before a panel within fourteen days, according to the provisions of Section 6(b). According to Section 6(d) the pupil and her/his parents may state their claims in person or through an appointed person.

228. The Pupil Rights Law was amended on 27 July 2009. The amendment allows the removal of pupils from school following severe disciplinary or violence-related problems. Prior to the amendment the actual removal of a pupil was impossible until a final decision had been reached in the case. Section 6(d) to the Pupil Rights Law determines that a school principal is permitted to permanently dismiss a pupil who has presented repeated disciplinary and/or violence-related problems without delay, provided the principal has received the approval of the District Supervisor. Section 7(b) to this law was also amended with respect to a decision taken on appeal. As of the entrance into force of this amendment, the Discipline Committee will be presented not only with the pupil's parents, but also with the person in charge of the educational institution or someone acting on her/his behalf.

Case law

229. Recently, the District Court of Jerusalem sitting as an Administrative Court, dealt with a case regarding the right of a minor to be heard in administrative appeal procedures. Specifically, the issue before the Court concerned the possible violation of the integrity of matriculation exams. The Court stated that in general, it is sufficient for an administrative authority (the Ministry of Education in this case) to allow for a written right of appeal – it is not required to alter the appeal procedure and allow for an oral right of appeal simply because the appellant is a minor.

230. The Court did however note that in several cases, the fact that the administrative authority was dealing with a minor justified their granting the right to appeal orally. For example, minors who cannot express themselves properly in writing, may give rise to a justification for holding an oral appeal.

231. The Court in the case held that the disqualification by the supervisor or inspector, on the basis of a breach of the integrity of a matriculation exam, violated the rights of pupils as defined in the Pupil Rights Law. Being disqualified in this way allowed for appeals to be lodged only after the administrative act was completed, which violates the requirement that the right to a hearing shall be granted prior to the relevant decision being finalized. Since the circumstances of the case in question did not fall into any of the exceptions to this rule, the Court held that the Ministry of Education had to revise the Director General's Directive, and grant the right to a hearing prior to disqualification based on the suspicion of the supervisor or inspector. (Ad.P 362/07 Anonymous v. The Ministry of Education; Ad.P 377/07 The National Council for the Child v. The Ministry of Education (1.7. 2007)).

232. Additional protection in legal proceedings is found in the Crime Victims' Rights Regulations 5762-2002, which were enacted following the enactment of the Crime Victims' Rights Law 5761-2001, under which the rights of a minor under the age of fourteen may be realized by her/his parents or legal guardian (Section 18(b)). However, the rights of a minor over the age of fourteen may be realized by the minor herself/himself, as well as by the parents or legal guardian, unless the minor requested that she/he alone will realize her/his rights (Section 18(c)).

233. The realization of the minors' rights will not be made by the parent or legal guardian if either of them is a suspect or an accomplice of the offence of which the minor was a victim, and if the realization of the minor's rights by them may harm the physical integrity or mental stability of the minor (Section 18(d)). The realization of the rights of a minor, who is a victim of violence or of a sexual offence, includes a right to express an opinion with respect to the possibility of a delay in procedures and/or a plea bargain, as well as a right to express an opinion before a prison release board, and to express an opinion regarding the possibility of a pardon being granted.

234. Furthermore, reference can also be made to the Pupils Rights Regulations (Publishing Orders and Pupil Removal) 5762-2002; mentioned in this periodic report (paras 225-226 above, which stipulate the right of a pupil to express her/his opinion before her/his removal from school.

Legal representation of minors

235. Observation No. 61 made by the Committee in its concluding observations engaged in children and the criminal justice system. This recommendation, among others things, was aimed at ensuring that children have access to legal aid. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law determines that a minor who is prosecuted is entitled to representation. The court is also authorized, based on what it believes to be the best interest of the child, to appoint a defence attorney to act on behalf of a minor even if an indictment has not been filed. In matters specified below, the court will rule only after the child's parents have been given the opportunity to express their opinion on the matter.

236. The Amendment also determines that at any point during the legal proceedings, if a child is not represented or her/his parents are missing; the court is authorized to appoint a legal guardian based on what it considers to be the best interest of the child. Legal instructions and case law emphasize the importance of individual legal representation, principally when an absence of representation imperils the interest of the minor.

Legal representation

237. On 24 January 2007 (A.A 000379/06 Anonymous v. The Ministry of Interior), the Haifa District Court accepted the appeal of a fifteen year old foreign minor who had been a victim of trafficking in persons (TIP). The Court decided to release the minor after eight and a half months in custody. This was the first decision of an Israeli court which recognized a person as a TIP victim for purposes other than prostitution.

238. The District Court held that in cases where an illegal resident is a minor and cannot speak Hebrew, the Detention Review Tribunal must appoint a Public Defender to provide him with legal assistance. As the minor in question had not been provided with legal representation, the Court held that he had been deprived of his procedural and fundamental rights to such a degree as to amount to a distortion of justice.

239. The Court stated that 'custody' as it is referred to in the Entry into Israel Law, can be defined as "custody until the completion of the proceedings." Subsequently, if proceedings cannot be completed, then custody which is based solely on this law is illegal. In this particular case, the proceedings could not be completed because they required the minor's removal from the country. This was however impossible as a result of a lack of diplomatic relations between Israel and the child's country of origin. Indefinite detention of the minor under these circumstances, and based only on the Entry into Israel Law, was thus considered to be invalid.

240. Subsequent to the above court decision and following proceedings that took place in the Detention Review Tribunal (14 February 2007), the General Director of the Ministry of Justice ordered the Department of Legal Assistance in the Ministry Of Justice to provide legal representation to minors and persons claiming minority, including on appeals. In a case where a minor is in custody during criminal proceedings and is not represented – she/he is entitled to legal representation and this information must be conveyed to her/him by the relevant authority. This Directive is retroactive, that is to say that people who began their criminal proceedings prior to this regulation’s coming into effect are also entitled to representation from the moment that the regulation came into effect.

E. Articles 7 and 8

Registration of children at birth and establishment of identity

241. Under Section 6 of the Population Registry Law 5725-1965 (the: “Population Registry Law”), there is a duty to notify a registration officer of the Ministry of Interior of every birth that occurs in Israel. The notification is to be made within ten days of the birth by the institution at which the birth occurred, or by the parents of the child.

242. Amendment No. 9 to the Population Registry Law issued on 14 December 2005 supplements Section 6, so as to include requirements regarding a birth that occurred outside a health institution. According to Section 6(b), if the birth occurred outside an institution and a midwife or a physician was present at the birth then the midwife or the physician should provide a written deposition stating that the mother of the infant is her/his natural mother. According to Section 6(c)(1), if the birth occurred outside an institution but was not attended by a midwife or a physician then the following additional documents should be provided: depositions from the infant’s parents stating that the infant’s mother is her/his natural mother, a medical certificate issued by an authorized physician who examined the pregnant women from the 28th week of her pregnancy, and a medical certificate issued by a physician who examined the women within 48 hours of the birth. If the parents fail to provide the abovementioned medical certificates, they will be required to provide the results of a genetic parental test confirming that the mother is the infant’s natural mother.

243. Section 32 of the Population Registry Law, stipulates that details that might reveal the identity of an adopted person, her/his adoptive parents or her/his biological parents and other relatives will not be disclosed other than to officials as prescribed in the Law. However, the Minister of Interior shall issue orders for allowing an official who registers marriages, or a person who needs the information in order to perform her/his duty in registering marriages, to ascertain whether the marriage-applicant was adopted. This provision is necessary to prevent consanguineous marriages.

The Citizenship and Entry to Israel Law (Temporary Provision), 5763-2003 (the: “Citizenship and Entry to Israel Law”)

244. According to a 2005 amendment to the Citizenship and Entry to Israel Law, the Minister of Interior is authorized to grant a permit to stay in Israel to a minor under the age of fourteen from the West Bank, in order to prevent her/his separation from her/his legal guardian who is lawfully residing in Israel.

245. Furthermore, the Minister is authorized to approve a request for a stay permit submitted by the Military Commander of the Judea and Samaria Area, for a minor over the age of fourteen, residing in the West Bank, in order to prevent her/his separation from her/his legal guardian, who is lawfully residing in Israel, as long as the permit shall not be extended if the minor does not reside in Israel on a permanent basis.

Case law

246. The Tel-Aviv District Court, while residing as an Administrative Court, dealt with the case of a child born to an Israeli mother and to a father who lacked legal status because he had illegally resided in the country for ten years, subsequent to overstaying his tourist visa. The Court found that the competent authorities failed to address the best interest of the child despite evidence presented before them regarding the emotional bond between the child and his father and the father's financial support of his child. Thus, the Court ordered the Ministry of Interior's Inter-Ministerial Humanitarian Committee to reconsider granting the applicant legal status in the State in accordance with the best interests of the child. (A.A. 002454/04 Collins Okthzuko Obi v. The Minister of Interior et. al. (06.03.2007)).

The right to acquire nationality and the protection of nationality

247. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

The right to know one's parents' identity

Case law

248. On 28 January 2008 the District Court of Haifa affirmed a judgment reached by the Family Matters Court in Haifa, which determined that the determination of the identity of the father of a child through paternity tests does not accord with the best interest of the child, as it might result in the child's being labelled a 'bastard' according to Jewish "Halacha" resulting in her/his inability to marry a Jewish person other than another 'bastard.' Therefore, the Court ordered that the said test not be conducted. In the case in question, a couple who had two children, were in the process of divorce, during which time the woman was in a new relationship with a man whom she claimed was the father of her third child, born eight and a half months after the finalization of the divorce. A year and a half after the child was born, and a month after the mother requested an increase in the amount of the maintenance paid for the couple's two children, the divorced husband submitted a claim to the Court to be recognized as the child's father. The Court determined that although society in general supports the clarification of the identity of a child's parent, and although it is the right of a person to know that he fathered a child, the rights of the minor prevail and his best interest is the primary concern of the court.

249. The Court determined that subjecting the minor to a paternity test in order to determine who her father was, may harm the minor's dignity, her developmental needs, and the formation of her self-identity. The Court stressed that although the right of the child to know her/his father is an important right as it is stipulated in article 7 to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and is recognized at a national constitutional level as constituting the basic dignity of a person, this right can be realized at a later date if the need arises. (F.A. 526/07 Anonymous v. Anonymous (28.1.2008)).

250. On 22 January 2006 the Jerusalem Family Matters Court determined that a person, who refused to undergo a tissue analysis in order to determine whether he was the biological father of a minor, would be regarded as the father since there was external evidence to support such a conclusion being drawn. In the case in question, the Court determined that the child's interest to know the identity of her father, and the need to know in case of a medical emergency in the future, overruled the alleged father's right to privacy and to abstention from invasive examinations. Moreover, the alleged father tried to resist the request for analysis by pointing to the fact that the mother had several other relationships at the time that she fell pregnant and that she had previously unsuccessfully claimed that another man, with whom she claimed to have had an exclusive relationship, was the father. The Court held that even if the mother's previous testimony was a lie, the proper response was not to deny the request for a paternity test, as the harm resulting from not holding the test would be inflicted upon the child and would impinge upon the child's rights and not the mother's. (F.M.C 26762/01 Anonymous v. Anonymous (22.01.2006)).

251. The Jerusalem District Court decided to allow a single woman to receive fertility treatments involving sperm donations from a married man, although such a practice is not in accordance with current regulations. The Court considered the rights of all parties involved, including those of the wife and children of the married man. The Court determined that becoming a parent is a fundamental right, and the couple made an agreement regarding the child as required by the regulations of the Ministry of Health. Moreover, the Court held that the rights of a child, even one that is not yet born, to know both his parents, takes priority over the property rights of the wife and children involved in this case. The rights of the child include the right to dignity, the right to know both parents, to receive emotional and financial support from both parents, and the right not to be considered a “Sh’tooki” – a Jewish term meaning the illegitimate child of an unknown father, who according to Jewish “Halacha” as interpreted by some rabbinical circles, cannot marry a Jewish person and may only marry a converted person. Therefore, the Court issued a declaration allowing the woman to receive fertility treatments with sperm donated by a married man. (O.M. 5222/06 Anonymous v. The Minister of Health, et. al. (26.07.2006)).

252. In another case, the Tel-Aviv District Court determined that in certain cases when two males claim parentage to the same child it is important to determine the identity of the biological father. In the case in question, the child was being raised by the mother and her new husband, who signed a child support agreement prior to the marriage, stating that in the event of separation, he would provide child support until the child reached the age of eighteen. This second marriage took place four years after the child was born, but the new husband claimed to be the child’s biological father, and stated that even if it was proven that the child was not biologically his, he wanted to adopt her. However, the first husband also claimed parentage of the child, paid child support and had visitation rights under the divorce agreement regarding the said child and two other children.

253. The Court examined the complex situation, in which the child recognized the new husband as her “psychological father” and while the visitation with the first husband took place, feared him and was intimidated by him. The Court held that under these circumstances, it is important to determine the identity of the father, due to the complex relationships between the parties involved and their effects on the child. The Court disagreed with the Family Matters Court who postponed the determination until the child reached the age of eighteen. The Court held that the decision should be made based on the best interests of the child; either by paternity tests or by external evidence, and therefore remanded the case to the Family Matters Court for a ruling. (F.A (Tel-Aviv) 1327/06 Anonymous et. al. v. Anonymous et. al. (18.12.2007)).

The right to parental care

254. As detailed in Israel’s initial report, parents are regarded as the natural guardians of their children. This means that children are entitled to be cared for by their parents and parents are entitled to care for their children.

255. Amendment No. 12 of the Legal Capacity Law issued on 28 June 2004 supplements Section 35 to include Section 35(b), which stipulates that when appointing a legal guardian for a minor, the court should give priority to a fit person who is a member of the minor’s family (including siblings, grandparents, aunts or uncles, or a spouse of one of the parents) unless the court decides it is in the child’s best interest to appoint a legal guardian that is not a family member.

256. Section 24 of the Legal Capacity Law stipulates that if the parents of a minor are separated, whether they remain married or their marriage is annulled, they can agree on the issue of guardianship over the minor and each parent’s respective rights. Such an agreement requires the approval of the court. Amendment No. 13 to the Law issued on 23 March 2005 amends Section 24 so as to include unmarried parents. The Amendment also broadens the scope of the court's approval which is needed to validate the agreement, so as to include recognition by the court that the guardianship agreement is in the best interest of the minor. Upon receipt of the court's approval, the agreement will have the status of a court decision for all matters other than appeals. (See above).

F. Article 13 – Freedom of expression

257. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

G. Article 14 – Freedom of thought, religion and conscience

258. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

H. Article 15 – Freedom of association and peaceful assembly

259. The Non-Profit Associations Law 5741-1980 (the: "Non-Profit Associations Law") requires that the establishment of any association be by at least two adults, thus restricting the right of children to establish an association. Nevertheless, Amendment No. 5, issued in February 2005 amends Section 15 to stipulate that any person aged 17 and above is eligible to be a member of a non-profit association.

260. Section 4 of the Legal Capacity Law states that legal action taken by a minor requires the approval of her/his representative (a parent or a legal guardian appointed) either in advance of the action or subsequent to the action. In contrast, Section 15(b) that was included in amendment No. 5 to the Non-Profit Associations Law holds that a minor joining such an association and voting in its institutions does not require the approval of her/his representative.

Political assembly

261. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Assembly of pupils and youth councils

262. The Ministry of Education encourages the establishment of pupils' councils, which are elected bodies of pupils that represent the entire student body before the school administration, the local school board and the Ministry of Education. Members of Pupils' councils are elected democratically, with adequate representation for every age group (see the Director-General's circular nt/1(a) of 1 September 1998) A pupil council member also serves on the committee to promote the status of children, which was established in each local authority under Section 149G of the Municipalities Ordinance, as amended in 2000. The Pupils' Rights Law stipulates that a school must encourage the establishment of a pupils' council, and refrain from any action that would inhibit its establishment.

Freedom of protest and demonstration

263. In principle, the freedom of protest and demonstration enjoyed by adults also applies to children. The Ministry of Education prohibits pupils from taking part in political demonstrations during school hours, although it recognizes that pupils and teachers have a right to participate in demonstrations outside of school hours, subject to their own responsibility.

264. The Ministry also stipulates that parents of children who are absent from school due to participation in any gathering or demonstration are required to notify the school of the absence in writing. The school will handle this absence in accordance with the regulations applying to any absence from school.

I. Article 16 –The right to dignity, privacy and reputation

265. The Ministry of Education Directives include numerous provisions to protect pupils' dignity, including their privacy. For example, the Directives prohibit anyone in the school from conducting a bodily search of a pupil to discover drug use, even if pupils and parents have given their consent to such searches. Another Directive of the Ministry of Education prohibits an educational institution from punishing a pupil for any act or omission of her/his parents. This is directed at parents who fail to make all of the payments requested by the institution. A pupil may not be removed from a classroom or suspended from school as a result of non-payment, nor can her/his grades or certificates be withheld for reason of non-payment. In fact, another Directive stipulates that matters of payment will be settled directly with parents, without involving pupils. A pupil's dignity will not be violated due to a dispute with her/his parents regarding payment.

The right to privacy in the narrow sense

266. Juvenile court proceedings are conducted in camera. The Court must authorize the publication of a hearing conducted in camera, including a photograph of the courtroom. Sections 70 and 70(c) of the Courts Law prohibits publication of any detail including pictures, addresses or other details that are likely to lead to the identification of minor defendants or witnesses in criminal trials, or a complainant, or those affected in a trial for offences according to Sections 208, 214, 345–352 and 377A to the Penal Law, which includes the prohibition against allowing a minor to reside in a brothel, the prohibition against committing sexual offences and the prohibition against trafficking in persons. This provision applies to courts of all instances in which minors may be tried — not only juvenile courts — and its application is not restricted to cases which are heard in camera.

Genetic testing

267. Following previous information provided regarding the Protection of Genetic Information Law 5760-2000 (the: "Genetic Information Law"), an amendment was enacted in July 2008. The amendment entered into force on 30 November 2008.

The definition of Genetic Testing for Family Connections

268. The definition of "Genetic Testing for Parenthood" set out in Section 2 of the Law was amended and is now entitled: "Genetic Testing for Family Connections", which is genetic testing for establishing the family connections of an individual.

The performance of genetic testing for establishing family connections

269. The Amendment added chapter E1 to the Genetic Information Law to regulate this issue through Sections 28A to 28Q.

270. Section 28A stipulates that genetic testing can be conducted only subject to an order granted by the Family Matters Court. Furthermore, Section 28B determines that the person's consent to the testing is required. If the individual is under 16 years, the consent of her/his guardian is necessary. A minor over the age of 16's consent is required; the Court shall not order the performance of such a test prior to hearing the minor's objection (regardless of her/his age).

271. The court shall take into consideration the minor's age and level of maturity, unless it is convinced that such a hearing may harm the best interest of the child. Nevertheless, if the minor is a parent or is alleged to be a parent, the court may order (for reasons noted) the performance of the test without the consent and presence of the minor's guardian as long as an explanation is provided to the minor. This option is subject to the minor-parent's consent to the test and consideration of the minor-parent's best interest.

272. Section 28C stipulates that a court may order genetic testing of an embryo, only when such a test is required during the pregnancy. The test may be conducted subject to the mother's informed consent and only after she was provided with a detailed explanation of the possible risks involved.

273. Section 28D refers to special circumstances. These circumstances are as follows: when the mother of a minor was married (in accordance with the Population Registry Law) for a period of 300 days prior to the minor's birth, the court shall not order genetic testing. The reason for this is the best interest of the child, which prevent performing a test that may indicate that another person is the child's father. However, the court may order the tests in cases where it is convinced that the necessity of the test outweighs the harm it may cause the child.

274. Furthermore, Section 28E to the amended Protection of Genetic Information Law amendment also stipulates specific rules regarding the performance of the test when the outcome is likely to indicate that the child is a 'bastard' (illegitimate according to the Jewish Halachic Law). This status prevents the person from marrying another Jewish person. Therefore, the Law tries to prevent such results from being reached by prohibiting the performance of the test in such cases.

275. The court may find that it is in the best interest of a minor to undergo such a test even though it may result in illegitimacy, however, it shall order that the test results will not be valid in a Religious Court.

Case law

276. In a related case, the Tel-Aviv District Court established the normative criteria to compel the performance of a paternity test. The Court held that a child has a fundamental right to know the identity of her/his biological father. And thus, the court can order a paternity test or draw the conclusions arising from a person's refusal to undergo the test. As a rule, the court will not order that a paternity test be performed when there is a fear of illegitimacy. Still, this rule is not absolute; there are exceptional circumstances in which the court will consider ordering the performance of a paternity test despite the fear of illegitimacy. In such circumstances the court examines the child's best interest together with the legitimate interests of the parents. When the court orders a paternity test it must examine the best interest of the child and be certain of the degree of any potential harm to the child as a result of the test outcome (M.A 1364/04 Attorney General v. Anonymous et. al. (5.7.2006)).

277. The Tel-Aviv District Court, while residing as Juvenile Court, agreed to disclose a minor's identity, subsequent to the child's fleeing from a closed residence where he was sent post-conviction. The minor was convicted of committing severe sexual offences against two small children, aged 6 and 10.

278. The Court faced a difficult decision, balancing between the defendant's and his family's right to privacy, as they were member of an ultra-orthodox community, and the protection and security that the court owed to the public. The Court stressed that the publication would in fact terminate the efforts to rehabilitate the defendant; however, by escaping from the facility the defendant had actually showed indifference to the rehabilitation efforts.

279. The Court held that the defendant's identity would be publicized. However, the Court gave the defendant a chance to come forward and avoid such publication. (S.Cr.C 203/05 Anonymous v. Anonymous (08.12.2008)).

The right to privacy in the broad sense

280. In a recent decision of the Tel-Aviv Magistrate Court, the Court convicted a defendant for violations of the right to privacy and for the publication of profanities. The defendant was caught taking photographs of naked children at the beach with his cellular phone, which attracted the attention of bystanders. The Court found that these profane photos included images of children and thus violated Section 214(b3) to the Penal Law which states that a person who possesses profane photos, including images of children, will be sentenced to one-year imprisonment unless the possession is random and in good faith. The Court found that although the legislator did not specify what constitutes profanity, the concept involves emotions of repugnance and loathing. The Court determined that photographing children for the purpose of satisfying the sexual desires of the defendant qualified as profanity. The Court further stipulated that the interpretation of what profanity is should include reference to the nature of the Law, which is to protect children against paedophiles and sex maniacs.

281. Furthermore, the Court found that the defendant violated the Protection of Privacy Law, 5741-1981. These children were photographed without their parents' consent. The Court held that there is a difference between an adult who exposes himself in public and can therefore be seen as consenting to any resulting photographs, and a child who does not have legal capacity, is naïve, and is being used for profane purposes.

282. The fact that the children were naked on the beach does not preclude their right to privacy, including the right not to be stalked or photographed. The defendant was eventually sentenced to one year imprisonment and 18 months of suspended imprisonment. (Cr.C (Tel-Aviv) 006136/07 The State of Israel v. Salomon-Ballivoy Korido (08.01.2008)).

J. Article 17 – Access to information: television, radio, and film

Protection of children

283. In accordance with recommendation No. 59 of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee recommended that the State party shall take all necessary measures to increase the effectiveness to address commercial sexual exploitation by providing the necessary financial and other resources. Below are the measures undertaken to address this recommendation.

284. In 2001, the Knesset approved the Classification, Marking and Prohibition of Harmful Broadcasts Law 5761-2001 (the: "Broadcasts Law"). The Law determined that television broadcasts that allow visual, verbal or vocal elements of violence, sexual acts and cruelty or which could be seen as encouraging criminal behaviour or the use of illegal drugs, shall be classified as broadcasts that are not appropriate for children under a certain age.

285. The Classification, Marking and Prohibition of Harmful Broadcasts Rules (Commercial Broadcast, Advertisement and Issuing of a Notice) 5765-2005, (The: "the Broadcasts Rules") distinguish between three categories of classification: programmes inappropriate for children under the age of eight, programmes inappropriate for children under the age of fourteen and programmes inappropriate for children under the age of eighteen. The classifications are made according to the content of the programme.

286. After a long process initiated by the Broadcast Cable and Satellite Council (the “Council”), which included a public hearing and a comprehensive examination accompanied by a professional counsellor, the Council decided on 9 July 2009, to recommend to the Minister of Communication, to change the existing rules in order to adapt the broadcast categories of classification in a more appropriate way to the stages of development of children and youth.

287. Therefore, the Council recommended classifying the broadcasts according to four categories of classification instead of three. The 4th category recommended is: “programs inappropriate for children under the age of twelve”. In addition to this, the Council recommended to cancel the category of “programs inappropriate for children under the age of fourteen” and to replace it by a category: “programs inappropriate for children under the age of fifteen”.

288. Furthermore, the Council recommended adding categories of description according to the characteristics classifying the broadcasts: “sex and pornography”, “violence and cruelty”, “fear of encouraging violence” or “using dangerous drugs”.

289. According to a 2002 amendment to the Communication Law (Broadcasting and Television) 5742-1982, a company licensed to transmit television broadcasts, shall not broadcast profanities including the screening of sexual intercourse that involves violence, abuse, humiliation, contempt or exploitation. Moreover, it is prohibited to broadcast sexual intercourse with a minor or a person impersonating a minor.

290. The Consumer Protection Regulations (Commercial and Marketing Directed at Minors) 5751-1991 (the: “Consumer Law”) creates principles for commercials and marketing directed at minors under the age of eighteen. The content of the commercials and marketing of a product must be appropriate to the understanding and level of maturity of the intended audience. The message transmitted ought to accord with moral values such as justice, equality, non-violent behaviour, integrity and tolerance. Moreover, the information broadcasts must contain accurate and valid information (Section 2 to the Consumer Law). Section 3 prohibits the making of commercials and any marketing that involves the abuse of children’s imagination and innocence, violent descriptions, nudity or sexual innuendos. Such content may result in a feeling of deprivation and inferiority among minors. Section 4 prohibits the making of commercials and marketing techniques that encourage minors to act carelessly, risk their health and/or safety and use dangerous accessories. Section 5 forbids commercials and marketing techniques that encourage minors to consume alcohol and/or tobacco, participate in gambling and games of chance, with the exception of lottery games entered for non-commercial purposes. The Consumer Law also prohibits the encouragement of any illegal act (Section 7). The Law further bans the publication of a minor’s personal details, directly or indirectly, without the consent of her/his parents or custodian (Section 7(a)).

Children’s television programmes

291. These prohibitions are also stipulated in the Second Authority for Television and Radio Regulations (Broadcasting of Television Programs by a Concessionaire) 5762-2002. Moreover, according to these regulations, a television programme that is intended for adults should not be broadcast before 22:00 p.m. whereas a television programme that is intended for adults and has blunt sexual scenes, severe violence, or foul language should not be broadcast before 24:00 p.m. In addition, the concessionaire is obligated to provide a diverse and balanced broadcasting programme. The concessionaire broadcasts at least eighteen hours a day, and such broadcast includes programmes for the family. Programs intended for children up to the age of twelve or programmes for youth between the age of twelve and fifteen must be broadcast at least during 90 per cent of the time between 16:00–24:00 p.m.

292. The Second Authority for Television and Radio Regulations (Insertion of Commercials in Television Broadcasts) 5752-1992 controls the transmission of commercials during children's programmes. According to the regulation, programmes designated and/or that might be popular among minors ought not to include commercials for drinks that contain alcohol, elements that may start a fire or easily catch fire. It is also prohibited to air commercials concerned with medications, vitamin additives, sedatives and adult films before 22:00 p.m.

293. The Second Authority for Television and Radio Regulations (Ethics in Television Commercial) 5754-1994, prohibits the transmission of commercials that may encourage inappropriate acts. It is also prohibited to broadcast a commercial that tolerates the appearance of minor in an improper manner or transmit commercials that offend the dignity of minors.

294. In accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 26 of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the right to non-discrimination must carry out comprehensive public education campaigns. Hence, the Israeli Broadcasting Authority devotes considerable efforts to encouraging tolerance and equality among children and youth. The Authority emphasizes the importance of impartiality and equivalence between dissimilar races, diverse skin colour, different ethnicities, origins and nationalities. The Broadcasting Authority — television and radio — transmits varied programmes on the subject of religious pluralism, co-existence between the Arab and the Jewish population, children and children with disabilities, children of immigrants, children of foreign workers and so on. These programmes aim to educate children, teach them about the various populations in the society and how to accept diverseness.

295. Attention is paid to fighting racism and communal segregation among youth. Daily news covers social and legal racial discrimination and struggles in order to raise awareness of the issue among adults and children.

296. "Kol Israel" – is a part of the Israeli Israel Broadcasting Authority (IBA) and is required by law to air artists of different styles, and broadcast programmes in Amharic, Russian and other languages on a regular basis. It is also committed to objectivity and to raising the awareness among people by discussing matters of controversy online. For instance, recent debate concerning a dispute between certain private schools in the central region of Israel and the Ethiopian community was broadcast broadly by the majority of networks.

Protection against the publication of children in the media

297. In 2004, Section 24(a) (2) to the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law was amended. The amendment stipulates that photographs of minors aged 5 (rather than 9, as it was previously) without their cloth, which photographs can result in the identification of the minor cannot be published. Thus, whoever advertises such pictures is liable and can be imprisoned for a period of up to one year.

K. Article 37 (a)

Prohibition against torture and cruel treatment

298. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred in this regard since Israel's initial report.

Corporal punishment of children – Remedies for parental cruelty

Case law

299. On 4 July 2006, the Tel-Aviv District Court sentenced a defendant to seven years' imprisonment and two years' suspended imprisonment. The defendant was convicted of multiple accounts of violence and abuse of a minor, which he performed against his two children over a period of several years.

300. The Court stressed that children should not be subject to corporal punishment, nor to strict discipline from their parents, but rather to parental care and warmth. Instead, the children in the case, were systematically abused, insulted, isolated from peers, and terrorized, all of which resulted in the children's need for psychiatric treatment including medication. The defendant had been residing in Israel for over fifteen years and was well aware of the legal situation in Israel in this regard. The fact that the defendant himself was also brought up in a similar manner, does not warrant leniency by the Court. The defendant pleaded guilty from the commencement of the investigation, which spared the need for the children to testify. The defendant also expressed remorse for his actions. Nonetheless, due to the severity of the offences, and the impact on the children, the Court did not find reason to impose a light sentence (Cr.C 40362/05 The State of Israel v. Onimaya Theodor (04.07.2006)).

301. On 12 February 2003, the Be'er-Sheva District Court accepted the State's appeal regarding the leniency of the punishment imposed on a defendant. According to the appeal, the defendant was convicted following a plea bargain reached with respect to two charges of abuse against minors and two charges of violence against minors. The Court stipulated that these offences were committed on numerous occasions.

302. The defendant, a father of seven children, abused them physically and mentally, and whipped them using a belt. The Ashkelon Magistrate Court sentenced him to 25 months' imprisonment, of which seven months was to be served as suspended imprisonment. The Be'er-Sheva District Court held that due to the severity of the offences, and due to the fact that the defendant did not demonstrate genuine remorse, the defendant should be subject to 36 months' imprisonment and one year of conditional imprisonment for the duration of three years following his release from prison, and provided he does not assault family members or injure minors and defenceless persons. The District Court held that violence towards children cannot be accepted as a method of education. Furthermore, the Court stipulated that a minor is a person, as underscored by the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, and therefore, beating him violates his basic human rights; and the parent is not entitled to violate the minor's rights this way. (Cr.A (Be'er-Sheva) 7161/02 The State of Israel v. Z.Y. (12.2.2003)).

303. On 9 September 2007, The Ashkelon Magistrate's Court sentenced the defendant to a period of two years' imprisonment and one year suspended imprisonment, after he again attacked three of his children during 2006. The Court also activated the one year of conditional imprisonment which was included in the defendants' previous conviction. The court stated that parents must protect, love and educate their children, rather than serve as source of violence, fear and terror. (Cr.C (Ashkelon) 1414/06 The State of Israel v. Zur Yehoshua (9.9.2007)).

304. On 17 July 2008 the Tel-Aviv District Court sentenced a father who was found guilty of committing an indecent act against his child during a period of two years, to eight years' imprisonment and two years' suspended imprisonment. Furthermore, the Court ordered the father to compensate his daughter with the sum of 50,000 NIS (13,500$) (S.Cr.C. 1043/06 (Tel-Aviv) The State of Israel v. Anonymous (17.07.2008)).

305. On 27 March 2008 the Tel-Aviv District Court sentenced a father who was found guilty of committing multiple acts of incest against his daughter, to twelve years' imprisonment and two years' suspended imprisonment. Furthermore, the Court determined that due to the severity and frequency of these acts, the father should compensate his daughter with the maximum compensation stipulated in the law in the amount of 228,000 NIS (61,500$). (S.Cr.C 1035/03 (Tel-Aviv) The Tel-Aviv District Attorney (Criminal) v. Anonymous (27.03.2008)).

The obligation to report

306. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. Certain changes have occurred with respect to the obligation to report since Israel's initial report. In accordance with recommendation No. 37 of the concluding observation of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, a State party ought to establish a national and comprehensive strategy violence and abuse within the family, in schools and other institutions carrying for children. Such strategy is now implemented by means of the Compulsory Education (Physical Violence Reporting Rules) Regulations 5770-2009. A recent enactment that obligate Principals of educational institutions to report in writing to the supervisor of such institution regarding any occurrence of physical violence between an educator and a pupil (additional details provided below).

Minors in need of protection

307. In a groundbreaking decision reached by the Jerusalem Magistrate Court, the Court ordered the Municipality of Tel-Aviv to pay 200,000 NIS ($54,000) as compensation to the plaintiff. This was awarded as a result of the Municipality's failure to remove the plaintiff from his home, when he was 10 years old, despite the existence of evidence available to the Department of Welfare, regarding abuse and neglect inflicted by the plaintiff's father. When the municipality finally acted based on the information before it, after severe emotional damage was inflicted upon the plaintiff, it failed to provide an appropriate out-of-home placement, therefore the plaintiff ended up in the youth wing of a psychiatric hospital where he stayed for over a year, despite the fact that he did not exhibit any symptoms of psychiatric illness, other than distress that would be expected under the circumstances. As a result of the inappropriate hospitalization, the plaintiff suffered from several difficulties in his adult life, including the reluctance of the Israeli Defense Force to draft him, reluctance of the authorities to issue him a driving license and a permit to carry a weapon, all of which resulted from the stigma associated with mental instability. The Court agreed with the plaintiff that an evaluation conducted by a psychiatric hospital of the condition of a child removed from his home should last several weeks at most, and thereafter, the child should have been placed in a out-of-home facility according to his needs and according to the options available to the relevant authorities. The Court determined that the primary harm was the failure to remove the plaintiff from his home in due time, which resulted in extensive hospitalization, and was part of the pain and suffering caused by the municipality, therefore entitling him to compensation for non-pecuniary damages. (C.C. 3970/98 Yitzhak Goldstein v. The State of Israel (14.01.2007)).

Children suspected of a criminal offence

308. The Mentally Ill Patients Treatment Law was amended by Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law. According to the Amendment, psychiatric examinations, treatment orders etc, can only be issued by psychiatrists and professionals in child psychiatry.

Capital punishment

309. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No change has occurred on this subject since Israel's initial report.

Life imprisonment

310. On 18 January 18, 2006 the Supreme Court rejected an appeal filed against a sentence of 25 years' imprisonment imposed on a minor. The minor was 17 and three months at the time he murdered his own father. The rationale of the appeal was anchored in Section 25(b) to the Youth Law that stipulates that there is no obligation to impose life imprisonment, mandatory imprisonment or a minimum penalty on a minor. The appellant claimed that the District Court that sentenced him to 25 years' imprisonment was not authorized to sentence him to more than twenty years. The Court affirmed prior decisions determining that Section 25 of the Youth Law allowed courts discretion as to whether or not to impose severe punishment on minors and under what circumstances. The Court stressed that the legislator's purpose in enacting Section 25 of the Youth Law was to broaden the scope of punishments that can be imposed on minors, excluding capital punishment which cannot be imposed under any circumstances. Therefore, the Court rejected the appeal and the punishment remained (Cr.A. 4379/02 Anonymous v. The State of Israel (18.01.2006)).

311. In another case, the Supreme Court rejected an appeal lodged by two defendants who were convicted of the joint perpetration of a murder when they were seventeen and a half years old. The convictions were passed down in separate trials, and the first defendant was sentenced to life imprisonment while the second was sentenced to 24 years' imprisonment. The appeals were heard together. The first appellant appealed his sentence of life imprisonment on the basis of the fact that he was a minor at the time he committed the crime. This outcome, he claimed, violated Section 25(b) of the Youth Law and the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty. According to the appellant, his rights were violated.

312. The Court held that the legislator was aware of the sensitive issue of minors' sentencing, namely that extra caution is required. Therefore, even though there is a mandatory sentence imposed on those who have committed murder, the court has the discretion regarding the punishment in cases of unusual circumstances, even if it results in a deviation from the mandatory sentence.

313. In Israel, a life sentence does not entail life-long imprisonment with no option of early parole. Therefore, it does not contradict or refute the provisions of the Convention that prohibits an imposition of life sentence in its literal meaning on a minor. This way, the proper balance is struck between the need to be lenient with minors, even if they committed the most severe offences, with the need to respect the rights of the victim. Thus, the practice in this matter is consistent with the Basic Law. The Court determined that the judgment should remain and the sentence should not be reduced.

314. The second appellant contested the severity of her punishment; while the State appealed to impose the same punishment on Sigalit Haimovich of life imprisonment as imposed on the first appellant, as they committed the crime together and should serve the same sentence. The Court held that even when the offence was jointly performed, there is space to consider each perpetrator's specific circumstances. Therefore, the Court denied both appeals. (Cr.A 9937/01 Roei Horev et. al. v. The State of Israel (09.08.2004)).

V. Family environment and alternative care

The definition of the term "Family" under Israeli law

315. Both the Rotlevi Committee (2003) and its Sub-Committees recommended several changes to the Israeli legal definition of a family. Some of the recommendations were implemented by Amendment No. 14. It is worthwhile noting that in addition to the changes that this Amendment rendered, it had several implications for related legislation in particular the Criminal Procedure Law.

316. A recent amendment was made to the definition of a "Family Unit." The amendment adds extended family members to the list of individuals who constitute immediate family. The addition includes grandparents. As a result of the amendment, less direct family members may hold rights with respect to minors. Moreover, a 2007 Amendment to the Limitation Law 5718-1958 (the: "Limitation Law") includes the parent's partner (even if they are not married), foster parents (and their partners, even if they are not married), as well as grandparents in the definition of immediate family members. The term family member was also amended to include persons over the age of 15, who are either biological or foster siblings, as well as their spouses, uncles or aunts including their spouses, and siblings' in-law. This definition is also incorporated into the Penal Law following recent amendments.

317. A similar definition can be found in the Criminal Procedure Law, (Enforcement Powers – Physical Search and Obtaining Means of Identification) 5756-1996 (the: "Criminal Procedure Law (Enforcement Powers) Law"). This definition includes the parents, grandparents, their spouses (even if they are not married), siblings (including step-siblings), and their off-spring, aunts or uncles and their off-spring, and siblings-in-law.

Family structure

318. Israel's population is relatively young. In 2008, 34.85 per cent of Israel's population was classified as children, aged between newborn and the age of 18. In the same year, 43.3 per cent of Israeli households were families with children under the age of 17. More recent numbers are detailed below.

Family size

319. As indicated in table No. 3 below, in 2008 the average number of children per family was 2.38, which is similar to the average reported in Israel's initial report. Large families with four or more children comprise 16.43 per cent of all families, while approximately one-third of all families have only one child. The number of children in families varies greatly according to sub-population: Jewish families have an average of 2.24 children, while Arab families have an average of 2.95 children. Large families with four children or more comprise 12.7 per cent of Jewish families and 30.8 per cent of Arab families. The ultra-orthodox Jewish population is also characterized by large families.

320. New immigrant families that came to Israel during the 1990's tend to be smaller: In 2005, 50 per cent of these families had one child, compared with 33 per cent of the general population (in 2006). Between 1996 and 2008, the population of Jewish children decreased from 35.84 per cent to 33.11 per cent, while simultaneously, the number of Arab children decreased from 50.8 per cent to 49.63 per cent.

Table 3
Number of children per family, by sub-population (average and percentage)

2001		2008
Number of children	Total population	Number of children	Total population
Average	2.35	Average	2.38
Percentage	-	Percentage	-
1 child	34.20	1 child	31.4
2 children	29.90	2 children	32.23
3 children	18.90	3 children	19.95
4 or more children	16.80	4 or more children	16.43

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstract of Israel, 2009.

Family composition

321. In Israel, most families (90 per cent) with children are headed by two parents; the remainder (10 per cent) are single-parent families. There are fewer single-parent families in the Arab population (5.5 per cent), and significantly more such families among the new immigrant population (29.56 per cent). Most (57.6 per cent) single parents are divorced, 13.2 per cent of single parents are married but live separately, 18.8 per cent are widowed and 10.4 per cent were never married.

322. In 2008, 3,943 children were born to girls age 19 and younger. These births amount to 2.51 per cent of all births that occurred in Israel in 2008. Births to single minors are rather uncommon in Israel. In 2006, 581 children were born to girls under the age of seventeen, of which 432 were Muslim and 107 were Jewish, 10 per cent of these girls had given birth previously. In 2007, 2,811 girls aged 19 and younger approached the State Termination of Pregnancy Committees. 84 per cent of these girls were Jewish, 10.9 per cent had no religious affiliation and only 2.85 per cent were Muslim. Nearly all of these girls (96.8 per cent) were single. The majority of the abortion requests were granted.

323. Directive 4/08 of the General Director of the Ministry of Health Directives deals with an expansion of services provided in the State medical basket of services for the year 2008. Prior to this expansion, female minors below the age of eighteen were entitled to undergo a free abortion. However, as of 3 March 2008, all women below the age of nineteen are entitled to a free abortion.

Same-sex couples

324. Civil marriages are not recognized under Israeli law. Marriages are conducted in accordance with the couple's religious law; therefore marriages between two persons of the same-sex are not possible. Nevertheless, in recent years two alternatives to the traditional institution of marriage were developed. The first is the recognition of Reputed Couples (common-law partners). Such a relationship is legally binding, and enjoys similar legal rights and duties as do couples who were legally married. Gradually, the legal status of same-sex couples has been encompassed within the legal concept of Reputed Couples. The second alternative for same-sex couples is the registration of a marriage which took place abroad with the Israeli Population Registration. According to a ruling of the Israeli High Court ruling in November 2006, same-sex couples who were married abroad can be registered with the Israeli Population Registration. This registration renders the civil (legal) status of reputed and/or same-sex couples equal to that of legally married couples, including with respect to National Insurance and tax benefits (the above relates to all religious groups in Israel).

325. Another leading case concerning same-sex couples was heard by the Supreme Court of Israel, residing as a Civil Court of Appeals. The Court accepted an appeal submitted by two unmarried woman, mothers to minor children, who were living together as a couple. The couple applied to adopt each other's children. The Supreme Court emphasized that there are various aspects to the concept of the child's wellbeing, some of which are personal and individual to each child and some of which are environmental. In order to reach a decision, a court is required to consider all potential aspects that may impact upon the child's wellbeing as a result of her/his adoption; such as the future relationship between the child and her/his parent, difficulties that may arise within the immediate (and remote) family and with friends, and even the response of the child's community to the adoption. The Adoption Law is formulated in a flexible manner (both in terms of its wording and its interpretation) as cases and circumstances vary. And thus, the Supreme Court revoked the lower court's decision and remanded the case to the Family Matters Court in order for that court to re-evaluate the matter. The Supreme Court ordered that the re-evaluation must include consideration of the children's wellbeing (C.A. 10280/01 Yaros-Hakak v. The Attorney General (10.01.05)).

Marriage and birth among minors

326. Please see Chapter III, above.

A. Articles 5, 9 and 18

Parental guidance and responsibilities

327. The Rotlevi Sub-Committee, which engaged with issues related to the child and her/his family, presented a conceptual basis for legislation addressing the issue of childrearing. The traditional legal presumption is that parents ought to be granted wide-ranging legal rights with respect to their minor children. In 2003, the Sub-Committee recommended principles that the Israeli legislator should adopt in this regard. By 2009, the majority of the recommendations had either been approved by the Israeli legislator or were in the process of enactment, as stated in this Report.

328. It is worth mentioning that in recent years there has been a change of perception with respect to children's rights throughout the western democratic world. The previous legal, social and educational notions have evolved, and are now governed by a child-central perception. This perception acknowledges the value of the child's autonomy and encourages the participation of children in decisions affecting them and their interests. The legal, welfare and educational systems respectively examine the child's best interest in every proceeding, whether or not these accord with the parent's points of view and/or their wishes.

329. The rights and the duties related to raising a child are granted legal recognition and are governed by diverse legal duties, including the acknowledgement of the importance of the extended family's involvement in childrearing. The committee also suggested the adoption of new terminology, and the replacement of the phrase the "Rights and Duties" of parents, with the phrase "Parental Responsibility". The novelty inherent in this conception lies in the aspect of "equivalency". Parents no longer have the sole rights over their children's lives; children now enjoy rights of their own over their lives.

330. Albeit, children still enjoy the right that an adult will bear parental responsibility for them. A child's right to be cared for stems from, among other things, well-founded "child development psychology,” which recognizes that children need a stable home and a nurturing environment to ensure their healthy development.

331. Children enjoy a number of rights with respect to family and childrearing, for example:

- The right of a child to live, grow, and develop with her/his parents.
- The right of a child to dignity and security, and the right to be cared for by her/his own (not necessarily biological) parents.
- The right of a child to an intimate, steady, and continual relationship with her/his parents.
- The right of a child to guidance and consultation from her/his parents.

332. Few laws can shield children from emotionally neglected childhoods; nevertheless, the essence of the Sub-Committee’s recommendations is already regulated by the Legal Capacity Law and affected by the Social Welfare Department in her/his region.

Parents’ legal responsibilities

333. Section 361 of the Penal Law distinguishes between different types of neglect. The Section stipulates that leaving a child under the age of six without proper care, while subjecting the child to the danger of actual harm to her/his health or wellbeing, can result in three years’ imprisonment. If the act is done negligently, the offender may be sentenced to one years’ imprisonment. However, if the act was committed in order to abandon the child, the offender may be sentenced to up to five years’ imprisonment.

334. The Amendment also modified Section 323 of the Penal Law, stipulating that a parent or a legal guardian is obliged to provide the minor with all her/his substantial needs, such as providing healthcare, preventing them from being abused, and bodily or emotionally harmed. The guardian shall be liable for failing to satisfy her/his legal obligations, and if the guardian endangers the child’s life, she/he may be sentenced to up to three years’ imprisonment.

Parents’ tortuous wrong

335. On 31 August 2005 the Jerusalem Family Matters Court determined that a father, convicted of performing an indecent act against his child when she was three years old, could also be seen as violating other sections of the Penal Law, including violating the obligation to care for a child, committing assault, and committing abuse; and could be seen as violating his parental obligations to care for his child as stipulated under the Legal Capacity Law. Accordingly, these violations constitute a breach of statutory duties and assaults under the Civil Wrongs (Tort) Ordinance, 5728-1968 which establishes a right to compensation.

336. The Court held that this kind of harm, inflicted on a small child, would continue to affect the child at different stages of her/his life, thus qualifying as mental harm which would necessitate psychological assistance. The Court also found that this harm created a permanent mental disability of 20 per cent. Due to the breach of the obligation to care for the child in question, both under the Penal Law and the Legal Capacity Law, as well as a violation of Articles 16 and 19 of the Convention, the Court determined that the father should reimburse his child for the mental treatment she had already received. In addition, the Court ordered the father to compensate his child for future mental treatment, and for the infliction of misery and pain, in the total sum of 480,000 NIS (129,000 $). (F.M.C 2160/99 Anonymous v. Anonymous (31.08 .2005)).

337. In another case, the Rishon-Lezion Family Matters Court ordered a father who was convicted of committing an indecent act against his child, when she was 14 years old, to compensate her in the amount of 160,000 NIS (43,000$). The child was forced to change schools and move to a private school, as a result of the change in her behaviour caused by the trauma. Furthermore, the child dropped out of social work studies at university after only two months, after being asked to write a paper on sexual abuse. Therefore, the Court ordered the child's compensation, which included compensation for the infliction of misery and pain, for past and future medical treatment, and for the costs of changing schools and dropping out of University. (F.M.C 10970/04 Anonymous v. Anonymous (29.10 .2006)).

Income support for families

338. The National Insurance Institute (NII) is responsible for the payment of income support benefits. In 2006, the NII paid income support benefits to approximately 130,341 families, which did not earn the minimum level of income as determined by the Income Support Law 5740-1980, and were not covered by any other income maintenance programmes.

339. As of 1 January 2006, women who are unable to work owing to their high-risk pregnancies are to receive a "maternity allowance" for a period of at least 30 days. The amount which is to be received per day is the lower of the following two amounts: the basic amount divided by 30–259 NIS, (70$); or the woman's average salary, as determined based on her income in the previous three months, divided by 90 (starting from 1.1.2009). Following the Emergency Economic Plan and the Recovery Plan for the years 2002–2006, the sum of the maternity allowance was reduced by 4 per cent, effective as of June 2002 and up until December 2007. The 4 per cent reduction was annulled as of 1 January 2008.

340. As of 1 January 2005, the NII of Israel makes payments of maternity grants, which are provided to post-natal new mothers in order to help cover the cost of a layette for the newborn child, directly into the mother's bank account approximately one month after the date on which she gave birth. The maternity grant was previously paid by means of a check given to the mothers in the hospital in which the birth took place.

Table 4

Maternity allowance and birth grants, 1990–2008

Year	Recipients of maternity allowance (thousands)	Annual increase (per cent)	Recipients of birth grant (thousands)	Annual increase (per cent)
1990	43.7	0.5 (1986–1990)	103.6	0.5 (1986–1990)
1995	55.2	4.8 (1991–1995)	113.1	1.8 (1991–1995)
2001	71.2	0.8	127.1	-3.6
2003	73.9	3.5	136.4	6.1
2004	77.5	4.9	141.2	3.5
2005	77.0	-0.6	142.9	-
2006	82.7	7.3	143.6	0.5
2007	86.0	4.1	147.2	2.5
2008	93.6	8.8	152.0	3.3

Source: The National Insurance Institute, 2008.

Maternity Hospitalization Grant

341. This grant is paid by the NII and is intended to cover the cost of childbirth and the cost of hospitalization for the mother and child, and is conveyed directly to the hospital. Women who enter offence prematurely are provided with a higher fee. Women who give birth overseas receive payment directly if they submit a claim therefore. Since April 2005, the amount paid for a premature delivery was increased by 50 per cent and by January 2007 it climbed a further 12.1 per cent. The added percentage amounts to 151.6 million NIS ($40 million) per annum. These grants are funded by the Ministry of Finance. In 2008, 2,500 grants were paid for premature childbirths, an increase of 5 per cent as compared to 2007.

342. As of 1 January 2009, a “maternity grant” given to a new mother upon the birth of her first baby, or to adoptive parents upon adoption, was 1,556 NIS, (420$). The maternity grant for a second child was 700 NIS, (175$), and for every third and additional child to the family was 467 NIS, (126$).

343. The NII grants a benefit to a mother who has given birth to three or more children in one birth, and again at the end of a 30-day period after the date of the birth, if at least three of those children have survived. The childbirth allowance is paid, in addition to the maternity grant, for the period from the first day of the month following the birth, up until twenty months from that date.

344. In 2006 and 2007, a number of significant Amendments were made to the Women’s Employment Law 5714-1954 (the: “Women’s Employment Law”). These changes prohibit the employment of women during their maternity leave; prolong the period of leave permitted after hospitalization; prolong the period during which an employer is prohibited from dismissing an employee returning from maternity leave to 60 days; prolong the period during which dismissal of a female employee staying in a battered women’s shelter is prohibited to 90 days (also requiring the consent of the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services); extends maternity leave from twelve to fourteen weeks; and notably alters the pre-existing conditions so that after six weeks’ maternity leave, should a new mother decide to return to work, or otherwise waive her remaining leave, the father will be permitted permanent, (previously temporary), leave in her stead, for the duration of the maternity leave. Another significant Amendment was legislated in 2008 (Amendment No. 44), and stipulated that a female employee who worked for at least twelve months under the same employer up until the beginning of her maternity leave, is entitled to a leave of absence for a period of one fourth of all her employment period, but no more than twelve months (before the Amendment, the requirement was that the woman work for the same employer for at least 24 months).

345. Amendment No. 5 to the Sick Day Payment (Absence from Work due to Child’s Illness) Law 5753-1993 (the: “Sick Day Payment Law”) issued on 26 March 2001, increased the number of paid leave per year for a child’s illness from six to eight days.

346. Amendment No. 6 issued on 15 July 2002, supplemented Section 1(b) to the Sick Day Payment Law, stipulating that if the child in question is in the sole custody of a working or single parent, she/he is entitled to up to twelve days of paid leave per year on account of her/his child’s illness. Amendment No. 8 issued on 3 March 2008 further extended this to sixteen days.

347. Amendment No. 7 issued on 18 June 2007 supplemented Section 1B(a) stipulating that if a parent of a child with a disability works for the same employer or in the same workplace for one year, she/he is entitled to fifteen days leave per year. These may correspond with regular vacation time or sick days, so long as the assistance provided to the disabled child requires absence (including treatment, supervision, accompaniment, or other necessary assistance). Furthermore, the parent is entitled to fifteen additional days leave per year if she/he is a single parent, has sole custody of the disabled child, or if her/his spouse was not absent from her/his workplace under this amendment. The above Amendment supplements Section 1C, stipulating that the right accorded in Sections 1A and 1B will apply to foster parents if the biological parent or the adoptive parent did not take advantage of the right.

348. If the parent worked for one year in the same workplace or for the same employer, she/he is entitled to leave for up to 30 days per year (which may correspond to regular vacation time or with sick days) in the event of a child suffering from a terminal disease. If the second parent was not absent from her/his workplace or if the parent is a single parent, or the child is under her/his sole custody, then the parent is entitled to 60 days leave per year in the event that the child suffers from a terminal disease (Amendment No. 3, dated 2 April 1997). Many work places grant additional privileges such as shorter work days for mothers or employers' participation in day care expenses.

Social insurance and entitlements

349. As detailed in Israel's initial Report, all families residing legally in Israel, regardless of income, are entitled to receive a "child allowance", a monthly grant which increases with the number of children in a family. The Government policy of instituting drastic cuts in the amount provided in child allowances — the first stage of which was carried out in 2002–2004 — was set to continue in subsequent years up until the year 2009. The policy was partially implemented by means of temporary orders, and partially as permanent legislation. By the end of the legislative process in 2009, the allowance was a set amount for every child in all families, regardless of the child's position in the family. Beginning January 2006, for children who were born as of 31 May 2003, a family with one child received 159 NIS (42$) per month; a family with two children received 318 NIS (85$) per month; a family with three children received 509 NIS (127$) per month; a family with four children received 862 NIS (232$) per month; and a family with five children received 1,215 NIS (303$) per month. The amount per child born after 1 June 2003, is 159 NIS (42$) constantly. In 2005, 956,294 families received child allowances, amounting to 19 per cent of the total benefits paid by the NII. In 2006, 968,282 families received child allowances, amounting to 17.6 per cent of the total benefits paid by the NII. (For further details see chapter VI (C) on child allowance, below).

Social services support

Social welfare departments

350. Social welfare departments assist with the placement of children in day care centres so as to assist working mothers. In some cases, particularly in families that are unable to adequately care for their children, the Social Welfare Departments will refer the children to a centre and finance their care. As of May 2009, 14,000 children were placed in day care centres or family day care by the Social Welfare Department. Six various day care facilities operate within municipalities with an Arab majority, among them are 280 infants and 250 children that were placed in day-care facilities by the Social Welfare Departments.

351. After-school frameworks provide older children with supervision, hot meals, recreational activities, informal education and some therapeutic services. As of May 2009, approximately 10,000 children were placed in such frameworks by Social Welfare Departments – a dramatic increase from the 4,000 children who were placed in such frameworks in 1989. This increase was the result of cooperation between the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs and the Ministry of Education, which worked together towards the increasing the number of after-school frameworks. (For more information on the after-school frameworks provided by the Ministry of Education, see Chapter VII.)

The Counseling and Psychological Services Department

352. The Counseling and Psychological Services (“Shefi”) Department is a department within the Ministry of Education responsible for providing counselling and psychological Services, as well as educational counselling for pupils, parents and educators.

353. Resource distribution is as follows: “Shefi” currently allocates a total of 1,302 educational psychologists to kindergartens and schools in every local authority in Israel. 1,023 psychologists are allocated to the Jewish population and 159 are assigned to the Arab population. Among these, 71 are specialized in educational counselling and psychological services, fourteen are allocated to work with the Bedouin population and five are assigned to work with the Druze population.

354. With respect to kindergartens, “Shefi” operates an educational advisory service for kindergartners composed of children aged 3 to 6. The guidance is given by M.A. graduate educational advisors who are trained to deal with infants.

355. With respect to schools, “Shefi” currently allocates approximately 4,300 educational advisors to all official educational institutions (440 of which work with the Arab population, 70 with the Druze population and 37 with the Bedouin population).

356. Shefi plays a major role in the process of assimilation and implementation of the new Directive 5770/1(A) (September 2009) of the Director General of the Ministry of Education, which was concerned with the creation of a safe environment, and treatment against violence in educational institutions. The Directive comprises policy for the prevention of violence and the creation of a safe environment. The scope of the policy includes the advancement of schools’ cultural environments, inter-personal communications, emotional and social studies, environmental studies, the importance of accepting children with disabilities and cooperation with parents. The Directive includes specific rules regarding violent behaviour while presenting a positive model of behavioural norms in accordance with the recommendations of the State Comptroller.

357. Since 2005, “Shefi” annually updates its website regarding the HIV virus and the Ministry of Education’s website (prior to World AIDS Day). The websites includes theoretical and preventive information, surveys, and educational job offers for HIV infected youth.

Separation of children from their parents

Out of home placements

358. Out of home placements refer to all kinds of child residences outside the nuclear family home that stem from the order of a court or welfare authorities. The Rotlevi Sub-Committee, which addressed the issue of the child and her/his family, examined out-of-home-placements while these were partially regulated by legislation. Below are the Sub-Committee’s recommendations with respect to out-of-home placements. Most of the recommendations were accepted and implemented by 2008, through Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law.

The Sub-Committee’s recommendations regarding out-of-home placement of children

Equality

359. The Sub-Committee recommended applying the principles of equality in a manner suitable to an out-of-home placement environment. One of the important factors emphasized by the Sub-Committee was adherence to children’s civil, political, social and cultural rights despite the change of environment. The child’s wellbeing is maintained by allowing her/him to obtain information relevant to her/him, to be protected, to be heard, to enjoy respect of her/his privacy, to ensure responses to the child's claims, to obtain education, to enjoy leisure and to encourage the development of the child's own personality. The Sub-Committee gave special attention to the rights of children with disabilities. Those taking part in out-of-home placement — parents, foster parents and the entire group home personnel — must adjust their care in accordance with the child's abilities, potential and changing needs.

The decision-making process

360. The Sub-Committee's premise is that a child is better off raised by her/his parents. Thus, a decision to place a child in an out-of-home placement ought to be seriously considered and based on the belief that such a placement is in the best interest of the child. The decision is subject to the receipt of permission from the child's parents. The decision must be made by a group of professionals, specializing in child care.

361. When a child is placed out of home, the State is responsible for her/his wellbeing throughout her/his stay. The Minister of Social Affairs and Social services is bound (by regulations) to provide an appropriate and sufficient framework. All children must be placed in a framework suitable to their individual needs. Out-of-home placement is subject to periodical inspection and every child is accompanied by a person responsible for her/him during their residence.

Ending of placement

362. The Sub-Committee recommended establishing a mechanism to ensure continuous examination, designated to assist children return to their natural environment, namely their parents. The Sub-Committee paid special attention to the importance of particular guidance being given to children who reached maturity during their stay at their out-of-home residence (ages 18 to 21).

Qualitative out-of-home placement treatment

363. The Sub-Committee emphasized the importance of the presence of professional supervision at the facilities and accommodation of the placement concerned. Additional weight is put on the processes of training, guidance, documentation and research.

Divorced or separated parents

364. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. Few changes have occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Case law

365. On 27 September 2004 the Tel-Aviv District Court determined that pursuing the principle of the best interest of the child required granting custody to the father of two minor girls (ages nine and seven). The court-appointed expert, after evaluating both parents and their spouses, determined that both couples were qualified to be awarded custody of the girls. However, since the girls' mother intended to immigrate to the United States, where her new spouse resided, a decision had to be made. The Court determined that according to the Convention several of the girls' interests needed to be considered when a custody dispute involves emigration, such as: the right to maximum survival and development of the child (art. 6), the right to grow in a family environment (arts. 18 and 20) the right to education (art. 28), the right of the child to preserve her/his identity (art. 8) and the right of a child to form her/his own views and to express those views freely in all matters affecting him (art. 12).

366. The Court heard the girls unaided and together with each of their parents, and determined that the girls understood the situation and the desire of both parents to include them in their new family. The Court held that although the girls did not express a specific desire to live with one of the parents, mainly due to their desire not to take sides in the conflict, they indirectly expressed their desire to remain in Israel, by the emphasis they placed on their relationship with relatives and friends in Israel. In the eyes of the Court, fulfilment of the right to identity as well as the right to grow with family members meant that the best interest of the girls was to stay with their father, therefore the Court awarded the custody to the girls' father. (F.A (Tel-Aviv) 1152/04 Anonymous v. Anonymous (27.9.2004)).

367. In another case regarding custody and emigration, the Tel-Aviv District Court determined that the children in question may immigrate to the U.K. with their mother subsequent to granting her custody. A year later the mother petitioned the Family Matters Court, requesting to be allowed to immigrate to the U.K since her parents and brother resided there, and provided the Court with detailed information regarding the relocation plan (such as place of residence and intended school for the children). While the motion was in process the mother revised her petition, informing the Court that she and the girls would reside with her new spouse in the U.K. The father objected to both of the plans suggested.

368. The Family Matters Court held that the mother may immigrate to the U.K., as she and the children were British citizens, and determined that this option would cause the least damage to the children, and it was in their best interest, since the father was not qualified to have sole custody, and forcing the mother to remain in Israel would harm the children psychologically. The father then appealed to the District Court and claimed that the children's independent will was not determined nor was their voice heard in court proceedings. The Court determined that the children were interviewed by the court-appointed expert who determined that they did not want to express a preference for either one of their parents, and would be traumatized if forced to appear before the court.

369. Therefore, the District Court affirmed the decision rendered by the Family Matters Court, allowing them to immigrate with their mother. (F.A (Tel-Aviv) 1287/05 Anonymous v. Anonymous (26.12.05)).

370. The father requested permission to appeal to the Supreme Court, which was granted. Thus the Supreme Court served as a third instance in this matter. The Supreme Court reaffirmed the decision made by the District Court. The Court held that hearing a minor according to article 12 to the Convention, does not need to be done directly, and as the court-appointed expert ascertained that the children wished to avoid appearing before the court, it was sufficient to hear their wishes through the evaluation of the court-appointed expert. Furthermore, it held that the right of the child to express his will does not necessarily accord with the best interest of the child, which the court must determine in any given case. Moreover, the fact that the court proceedings regarding the immigration of the children lasted more than three years, did not comply with the best interest of the children either. (F.M.A. 27/06 Anonymous v. Anonymous (1.5.06)).

Maintaining contact with both parents

371. Please see Chapter I, introduction above.

Tax deduction for childcare services

372. On 3 April 2008 the Tel-Aviv District Court determined that expenses paid for childcare services, such as nursery and after-school programmes are expenses made for the purpose of generating an income, and can therefore be deducted from the taxable income of a mother each tax year. The Court determined that these costs are essential in allowing the integration of mothers with young children into the labour market. In the case at hand, the Court determined that a mother of two children, a lawyer with a private practice, who was required to work long hours in order to succeed in her work, was required to find a solution for the care and supervision of her children during her working hours. However, the tax authorities did not agree to deduct the expenses paid for childcare from the mother's taxable income. The Court determined that a distinction should be drawn between the component of care and supervision (including the amount of money necessary to operate a childcare institution) and the component of education and enrichment the children receive while in those childcare institutions.

373. The Court emphasized the fact that the premise for its decision is the right of the two spouses to fulfil their career aspirations, their right to practice their occupation and create a livelihood for themselves and their family members. The placement of children who need adult supervision in childcare institutions is done for the purpose of allowing both parents to leave for work and to perform their offence. Therefore, the Court ordered that the tax authorities deduct two-thirds of the expenses paid in the years in dispute from the mother's taxable income. (I.T.A (Tel-Aviv) 1213/04 Vered Peri v. The Income Tax Assessor of the Dan Metropolitan Area (03.04.2008)).

374. Following the judgment, a State appeal was submitted to the Supreme Court on May 12, 2008. On 30 April 2009 the Supreme Court rejected the appeal and determined that child care during the time as a parent was at work is a deductible expense (C.A. 4243/08 The Income Tax Assessor of the Dan Metropolitan Area v. Vered Peri).

B. Article 10– Family reunification

Permanent residence in Israel

375. The Law of Return 5710-1950 (the “Law of Return”) and the Law of Citizenship 5712-1952 (the “Law of Citizenship”) entitle people of the Jewish faith, their spouses and their children (including adopted children) as well as grandchildren, to Israeli citizenship. Thus, family reunification is automatic if children and parents are both Jewish; the Minister of Interior is authorized to grant Israeli citizenship even to those who do not meet these requirements. For instance, if the person is a spouse of an Israeli citizen who is not Jewish (subject to the Citizenship (Temporary Order) Law) or if the person, usually a great-grandson of a person of the Jewish faith or a child from the first marriage of the spouse of a Jewish person, has served in the Israel Defense Forces (IDF). The entitlement of Israeli citizenship is not limited to family reunion matters or subject only to the provisions of the Law of Return. A person is entitled to apply for citizenship based on several rationales, such as settlement, birth, adoption and more (Sections 1–5 to the Law of Citizenship).

376. However, once a person becomes a citizen, together with her/his minor children, in the course of a single procedure, citizenship is granted to her/his minor children – provided that they reside in Israel - and that the parent holding the citizenship has custody over the children. If the minor is a foreign citizen and both her/his parents share her/his custody, the minor will not be granted Israeli citizenship if one of the parents declares that she/he does not wish that the child acquire such citizenship. Parents of citizens and permanent residents of Israel are not entitled to family reunification, but the Minister of Interior may grant them citizenship or permanent residency at her/his discretion (See: Citizenship (Temporary Order) Law, detailed above).

C. Article 11 – Illicit transfer and non-return

377. Israel is a party to the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspect of International Child Abduction and has enacted the Hague Convention Law. Section 4 of the Hague Convention

Law stipulates that the Attorney General is the sole executor of this Convention. She/he may appoint a Child Protection Officer who is subject to the supervision of the chief of the Child Protection Officer. The Child Protection Officer is empowered by the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law.

378. The Attorney General is authorized by Section 5 of the Hague Convention Law to transmit information to persons and/or an organization in Israel and/or abroad in order to execute the Convention's Directives. Such information must remain confidential. A Child Protection Officer is authorized to convey information on behalf of the Attorney General, subject to her/his consent.

379. Family Matters Courts are authorized to issue an order that prevents abducted children and/or the person holding them from leaving the country. The Court can also instruct the Police to investigate the abduction, locate the abducted children and assist the Child Protection Officer in bringing the children to court. Injunctions that can prevent injury to the children, infringement of their rights, and ensure their return are advisable. Regulation 295/9(5) of the 1995 Amendment to the Civil Law Procedures 5744-1984 (the: "Civil Law Procedures") stipulates that if the child's age and level of maturity enables it, the court shall not make a decision prior to hearing the child's opinion, unless there is a special reason not to do so (such reason must be documented). Regulation 295/9(5) of the 1995 Amendment to the Civil Law Procedures also allows the court to consider the child's opinion in an indirect manner, namely via a professional in child care, in accordance with the Convention on the Right of the Child. The Israeli Courts formulated basic conditions to consider the weight given to a child's opinion: (a) age and level of maturity; (b) free will; (c) rationality.

380. Table 5 below indicates the total number of child related cases handled by the Central Authority under the Hague Convention between the years 1993 and 1996. Among the 139 cases of children abducted to Israel in the above years, 52 were children abducted from the United States, fifteen from France and fifteen from the U.K. Of the 215 cases of abducted children from Israel, 60 were children taken to the United States and twelve to the U.K.

381. As another means of preventing the illicit transfer of children in situations of parental disagreement, in addition to the fact that both parents are the child's guardian, the Ministry of Interior issues passports to children only with the consent of both of their parents. If a parent fears that the other parent may attempt to illicitly transfer the child to another country, she/he may request an injunction against the child leaving the country.

Table 5

Cases of abducted children handled by the Attorney General under the Hague Convention

Case resolution	Children brought to Israel*	Children abducted from Israel*
Total	139	215
Children returned following court ruling	47	60
Children not returned following court ruling	13	40
Waiting for appeal	2	7
Petition withdrawn	11	18
Re-abducted to the State of origin	12	2
Refusal by State authorities	1	7
State not party to Convention	2	8

Case resolution	Children brought to Israel*	Children abducted from Israel*
Case not active	17	38
Child not located/never entered the country	7	1
Visitation arrangement (child remained by agreement in country to which abducted)	5	9
Voluntary return	18	21
Pending	4	4

Source: The Public Defenders Office Data, 2009.

* These statistics reflect the number of cases, not the number of children. Each case may contain more than one child.

Case law

382. The Tel-Aviv District Court held that two girls taken by their mother to Israel should return to their father in the United States. The couple married in the United States in 1996 and were divorced in 2000. The father filed suit with the New York Civil Court and the Court ordered that the children remain in the U.S. until the following hearing; nevertheless, the mother took the girls to Israel while the proceedings were still pending. In addition, the father was granted custody over the children, therefore, by taking the children out of the U.S. the mother violated the father's custodial prerogative. The Israeli District Court held that Section 3 of the Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction was breached. Thus, the Court did not grant the girls the opportunity to express their wishes, although it emphasized the significance of such proceedings in order to fulfil the rights as set out in Section 13 to the aforementioned Convention, and Article 12 to the Convention on the Right of the Child. (F.A 1085/01 Anonymous v. Anonymous (8.8.2001)).

383. In another case, the Israeli Supreme Court ordered the return of two children to their state of origin in accordance with the Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. The mother had legal custody over her minor children and they were living with her in Italy. During one of the father's regular visits to Italy to meet with his children, he took them with him to Israel without the knowledge and/or permission of the children's mother. The mother filed a suit with the Israeli District Court – demanding the return of the children according to the Hague Convention. The father claimed that the children's wish was to stay in Israel and therefore (according to Section 13 of the Hague Convention) they should stay in Israel.

384. The court held that under Section 13 of the Convention there is no duty to return the children to the State of origin, if the children explicitly object to the idea. The premise is that the best interest of the child is fulfilled by the child's returning to the State of origin, and the exception cited in Section 13 must be limited to extreme cases, in order to accord with the Convention's goal. In this case it was held that the children's determination to stay in Israel was not established, therefore they should return to Italy and to the custody of their custodian parent. (F.M.A 672/06 Taufik Abu Arar v. Paula Ragozo (15.10.2006). (For a similar decision see, F.M.A 902/07 Anonymous v. Anonymous (26.4.2007)).

385. In another case, an Israeli citizen (the mother) and a Belgian resident (the father) were divorced in 2004. The couple had one child. In 2004, the mother applied to the Court for permission to leave with the child to France. The Belgium Court held that the mother could leave with the child (permanently) to reside in France. However, the Belgium Court of Appeals decided in 2005 that the child must return to Belgium to his father's custody. In 2006 the mother took the child to Israel without the father's permission. The Israeli Supreme Court examined the weight of Section 13 of the Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. The Supreme Court held that the best interest of the child outweighed the exception cited in Section 13 of the Convention in rare circumstances only. Such circumstances did not present themselves in this case; the return of the child to the State of origin was not proven to cause serious physical or mental harm to the child. Therefore the Court ordered the return of the child to Belgium. (F.M.A 1855/08 Anonymous v. Anonymous (8.4.2008)).

D. Article 27, paragraph 4 – Recovery of maintenance for the child

386. The Maintenance (Assurance of Payment) Law 5732-1972 (the: “Maintenance Law”) states that the NII shall grant a Child Support Allowance to any person whom the court has awarded child support, but who is not receiving these payments from the person who by law is obliged to make them.

387. The 2002 Amendment No. 4 to The Maintenance Law broadened the scope of payments of Child Support Allowances by the NII, not only to decisions by Israeli courts, but also to foreign judgments, foreign interlocutory sentences or interim orders that were determined to be enforceable according to the Enforcement of Foreign Judgment Law 5718-1958 (the: “Enforcement of Foreign Judgment Law”). The Amendment also amended Section 2 of The Maintenance Law, stipulating that a person who is an Israeli resident and who received a court decision in her/his favour for the payment of child support, is entitled to request the NII for a monthly allowance if the person who was found liable to pay child support was an Israeli resident on the day the court gave its decision or is that person was an Israeli resident for at least 24 out of the 48 months prior to the court’s issuing the decision for child support. With regard to foreign judgments, foreign interlocutory sentences or interim orders, the court’s decision date is the day the decision was announced as being enforceable under the Enforcement of Foreign Judgment Law.

Case law

388. See Chapter IV (C), article 3 of the Convention – The best interest of the child, a father’s claim to reduce payments and the determination of the Court to allow such reduction subject to the keeping the welfare of the child (F.A 785/05 Anonymous v. Anonymous et. al. (03.01.2006)), was discussed above.

389. In another case, the Supreme Court accepted an appeal submitted by a mother on behalf of two minors regarding their child support allowances. The suit, which was filed by the children four years after the divorce of their parents, requested the determination of the amount of child support payments. The Supreme Court held that the Rabbinical Court did not consider the children’s best interest, and therefore remanded the case to the Family Matters Court in order for it to determine the claim as if it was an original claim coming before it. (F.M.A 7916/03 Anonymous et. al. v. Anonymous (28.02.05)). (See Chapter IV (C.)- The best interest of the child above).

390. In a different case, the National Labor Court discussed the meaning of a child’s entitlement to alimony. According to the Maintenance Law, The National Insurance Institute pays alimony when the debtor fails to pay and the person entitled to the alimony is an Israeli resident. The NII argued that the parent is the lawful creditor of such alimony, and since the mother was not an Israeli resident she was not entitled to the payments. The court rejected the NII’s claim and held that the child herself/himself is the rightful person to whom alimony payments should be made. The judgment indicated that alimony is a part of the child’s legal rights to dignity and property. The parent is only the child’s means of fulfilling her/his rights. The child in question was an Israeli resident, and thus entitled to the NII alimony. (La.A 592/07 The National Insurance Institute of Israel v. Gaya Assi (1.6.2009)).

E. Articles 20 and 25– Children deprived of a family environment

The alternative care system in Israel

391. Out-of-home placement of children and youth can be divided into several groups. The majority, 61,726 (ages fourteen to eighteen) reside at boarding schools (mostly out of personal choice). A smaller group (9,599) of children and youth are placed in residential facilities and foster homes by social services. A yet smaller number of youth are placed in Youth Protection Authority facilities equipped to handle juvenile offenders and youth with severe behavioural problems.

Children placed outside their home by social services

392. In 2009, a total of 8,500 children, newborn to age eighteen, resided in an out-of-home facility arranged by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services. Contrary to the situation in most western countries, the majority of children placed in out-of-home facilities are the older ones. 6,500 of them are placed in boarding schools and 1,950 live with foster families (1,830 in standard foster families and 120 in special care foster families). 35 per cent of the children are placed out-of-home by court order and 65 per cent agree to out-of-home placement as a result of parental dysfunction or as a result of serious behavioural problems (such as acts of violence, involvement in sexual offences or post-hospitalization difficulties).

Residential facilities

Residential settings and boarding schools

393. In recent years the State has accelerated the development of new residential-care models. For instance, community-based residential settings and group homes have been established in collaboration with Non-Government organizations. The residences located in the child's home community encourage her/his parents to participate in her/his daily activities and in decisions concerning her/him. In addition, family units are being built for twelve to fourteen member families. Some of the units are part of larger residential settings whereas others function as individual Group Homes scattered throughout the community. Some residential facilities provide a "Day-Care" programme where the children arrive in the morning and return to their family homes mid- afternoon.

Children and youth in residential facilities

Table 6

Presents status of placement in boarding schools by social services

Distribution by age		Number of children
(iii)	0–5	(iv)	62 (0.9%)
(v)	6–12	(vi)	2 400 (36.6%)
(vii)	13–18	(viii)	3 899 (59.5%)
(ix)	19 +	(x)	196 (3%)
Distribution by educational population		Children (in %)
(xiii)	Arab and Druze	(xiv)	14%
(xv)	State	(xvi)	45%
(xvii)	State-religious	(xviii)	18.6%
(xix)	Orthodox	(xx)	22.4%

Source: Welfare department the pedagogy clerkship – Welfare supervision department 2009.

Protecting the rights of children in out-of-home placements

Laws protecting children in out-of-home placements

394. Sections 368A-368F of the Penal Law addresses injuries to minors and defenceless persons. Amendment No. 94 to the Penal Law issued on 30 May 2007, added certain individuals to the definition of a family member (Section 368A(2)) including foster parents, their spouses, their parents or offspring, their siblings and the spouse of each of these.

395. The observation contained in paragraph 37(c) of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child suggests a mechanism that investigates and monitors complaints and suspicion for abuse. This Amendment added Section 368D (c1), which creates a duty to report to the Police or to the Child Protection Authority any grounds that give rise to a suspicion of sexual offences performed against a minor or a defenceless person, by a family member who has not reached the age of eighteen years. Failure to report such abuse is a criminal offence, which carries a term of three months' imprisonment. This Amendment also imposes a sentence of six months' imprisonment on professionals who fail to report the abuse of a minor to the police or Child Protection Authority (e.g. physicians, nurses, educators, social workers, police officers, psychologists, criminologists, and school principals and staff; (Section 368D(c2)). The Amendment also imposes a sentence of six months' imprisonment on the person responsible for a minor or a defenceless person who, despite having had reasonable ground to believe that a sexual offence was committed against the minor or defenceless person by a family member who had not reached the age of 18 years, failed to report the abuse to the Police or Child Protection Authority (Section 368D (c3)).

396. On 28 July 2000, the Knesset enacted the Infants at Risk (Entitlement to Day Care) Law 5760-2000 (The: "Infants at Risk Law"). This law was amended in 2002. According to Section 2 of the Law, infants at risk are infants who are less than three years old, and whose development is believed to be in jeopardy. A decision to this effect is made by a professional committee, which will order the stay of the infant in day care to avoid her/his removal from home.

397. According to Section 3 of the Infants at Risk Law, perilous situations applicable under the Law are:

- According to the evaluation of a social worker and a medical opinion given by a physician, the infant is either physically abused or her/his developmental needs are continually ignored.
- One of the parents does not function properly as a result of domestic violence, a mental illness, alcoholism, drug addiction, severe disability, retardation, prostitution, criminal behaviour or a chronic disease of one of the family members.
- The infant is evaluated and found to be able to develop normally. This determination must be made either by a paediatrician, who is an expert in child development, or a developmental psychologist. Moreover, the decision is to be accompanied by severe family circumstances which give rise to developmental problems or which actually cause them.

398. Section 4 of the Infants at Risk Law specifies the conditions that must be met, after an infant is found to be at risk, in order for the infant to stay in day care near her/his place of residence. The Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services, in conjunction with the Minister of Finance, determines the participation rate for the person obligated to pay child support, calculated based upon their income. The operator of the day care centre is responsible for 5 per cent of the total cost of the infants' stay in day care. The local municipality will fund 25 per cent of the cost of the infant's stay in day care, after deducting the amount funded by the day care operator and the payments of the person obliged to provide child support. This funding will not apply to infants at risk whose participation in day care is provided for by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services according to laws other than the Infants at Risk Law.

Case law

399. The Israeli Supreme Court residing as the High Court of Justice held that visitation arrangements agreed to by a divorced couple regarding their children, did not bind the children in question. As a rule, the Court stated that when an agreement regarding a minor's welfare (such as a place of residence) is reached without considering the minor's opinion, it might not be binding. The High Court of Justice clarified that a lower instance decision, which stated that a divorce agreement concerning alimony payable for a child does not bind the children involved, could be extended and applied to child visitation rights. The Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty both strengthen the recognition of the child as an independent entity who holds separate rights from those of her/his parents. (H.C.J 2898/03 Anonymous et. al. v. The High Rabbinical Court et. al. (21.1.2004)).

F. Article 21 – Adoption

Circumstances of adoption

400. Amendment No. 6 to the Children Adoption Law, (issued on 20 July 2004), stipulates that a court's ruling that a child should be taken from her/his parents for adoption shall be given within twelve months of receiving the request for such a proclamation unless the court postponed its decision in view of reasons specified (Section 13(b)).

Case law

401. The Supreme Court recently ruled that an adoption should be a 'closed adoption' – therefore, from the date the adoption was approved, there should be no further contact between the biological parents and the adopted child.

402. The Court debated whether to allow contact between the biological mother and the child, as she had had supervised visitation rights for three years prior to the court hearings, thus rendering the adoption as an 'open adoption' (where some contact remains between the parties). The Court, after examining psychological reports admitted in earlier proceedings, as well as the report of a court-appointed psychologist, determined that it was in the child's best interest to approve the adoption as a 'closed adoption' and, to deny further visitation with the biological mother. The Court found that further visitation would require the approval of the adoptive parents in order to avoid further confusion for the child and to prevent forcing him to take sides between the adoptive parents and the biological mother; and would also require the biological mother's expressing opinions concerning the raising of the child. Such an opinion, assuming it would be a negative one, would significantly harm the child. The Court further determined that according to reports submitted by the adoptive parents, visitation with the biological mother was harmful to the emotional stability of the child, causing him to fear being detached from the family, to suffer sleep disorders, etc. The Court decided to approve the adoption as a 'closed adoption' and denied the biological mother's appeal. (F.M.A 366/06 Anonymous v. The Attorney General (14.02.2007)).

Adoption in practice

403. In a recent case, the Supreme Court accepted an appeal submitted by a father who requested the cancellation of a decision which declared that his minor child was adoptable, since he had not been aware of the proceedings. The Court noted that the declaration of a minor as adoptable would not be reversed if it would cause the minor significant harm. The court would only revoke such a decision after having examined the child's wellbeing. The Court considered the rights of the biological parent and the interest of the adoptive parents. (F.M.A 778/09 The Attorney General v. Anonymous et. al. (29.11.09)).

404. On 21 April 2005 the Supreme Court decided to revoke a decision handed down by the District Court, and determined that the child in question was eligible for adoption, despite the fact that the child's biological father did not know of his existence nor of the decision to give him up for adoption. The mother, who gave the child up immediately after giving birth, refused to reveal details of the child's father; and therefore the welfare authorities could not locate him, and determined that the child was eligible for adoption with regard to both biological parents. The father learned that he fathered a child only after the mother changed her mind, and began legal proceedings in order to regain custody of the child. Upon learning of the existence of the child, the father made efforts to have the decision regarding the child's status revoked.

405. The legal proceedings were conducted over a period of two years, during which the child was raised by a foster care family that intended to adopt him. The potential adoptive parents appealed to participate in the legal proceedings as they believed that they represented the child's best interest.

406. The Supreme Court held that the father did not express his desire to raise the child immediately upon receiving information regarding his existence, but rather hesitated for a few months, and that this period of time was crucial for the child.

407. The Court emphasized that the first period of time in a child's life is the most significant with regard to the relationship formed with the primary caregivers. The Court stressed that continuity and stability in the relationship was extremely important for a child's development. The longer the child stays with the potential adoptive parents, the graver the damage to the child if her/his is removed and therefore the greater the weight of the interest of the potential adoptive parents. Moreover, removing the minor from the custody of the individuals he views as "psychological parents" could result in damage to the minor, and may render him a minor at risk, who needs parents with special parental skills, the kind of skills that his biological parents lacked. The Supreme Court held that the child in question would therefore stay with the adoptive parents, as he should not have to pay a heavy price solely to ease the pain of his biological parents. (F.M.A 377/05 Anonymous and Anonymous v. Anonymous et. al. (21.4.2005)).

408. In another case, the Supreme Court debated whether a minor could be declared eligible for adoption, after the mother put him up for adoption and refused to reveal the identity of the father but did provide several details about him in the event that the child would need the information at a later point in life.

409. The Court considered the right of the biological father to know his child, the right of the biological mother to give her child up for adoption, and her interest in not providing details of the biological father, and the right of the child to know his parents and be raised by them, as well as the public interest in encouraging adoptions that might be endangered if the biological mother was forced to reveal the identity of the biological father, and the public interest to know the identity of one's biological parents. The Court determined that a child can be declared as being eligible for adoption despite the fact that the biological father is unknown and that forcing disclosure of the father's identity might reduce the number of adoptions and harm the relevant children's best interest. (F.M.A 5082/05 The Attorney General v. Anonymous et. al. (26.10.05)).

Inter-country adoption

410. Section 28 of the Child Adoption Law is the primary section stipulating the conditions for inter-country adoption. Amendment No. 5 dated 5 July 2004 modified several provisions. The amendment also modified several provisions regarding inter-country adoption.

411. In Section 28G that defines the eligibility of an Israeli person to request inter-country adoption, the Amendment replaces the words 'permanent resident' with "an Israeli citizen, or a person holding a "Teudat Ole" (provided by the Ministry of Immigrant Absorption), a document stating that a person is a "New Immigrant" (to Israel)". In addition, a permanent resident is eligible to adopt from abroad provided she/he resides in Israel for a period of three out of the last five years prior to the submission of the adoption request or twelve out of the eighteen months prior to the submission of the request. The Amendment also stipulates that the request should be submitted with additional information from a social worker regarding the competence of the person to be an adoptive parent.

412. The Amendment also amended Section 28H that requires the prospective parents to hand over an evaluation by the social workers to the adoption agency of information received from the prospective parents which attests to their competence as parents.

413. Further, the Amendment amended Sections 28–33 of the Child Adoption Law, which sections stipulate that an adoption agency shall not request, charge or receive, directly or indirectly, payments in return for inter-country adoption, in Israel or abroad, save for authentic expenses paid by the agency towards the adoption.

414. Sections 28–36(a) were amended to stipulate that if the competent authorities in the relevant foreign country affirmed the issuance of an adoption decree or the granting of a judgment, in terms of which the adoption is made final, the legal status of the adoption in Israel will be the same as intra-country adoption, provided that the relevant authorities have determined that the adoption is in the best interest of the child and does not offend public morality.

415. According to the Central Authority for Inter-Country Adoptions in the Department of Personal and Societal Services in the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services, between 1999 and 2007, a total of 2,059 children were adopted abroad and brought to Israel. Most of these children arrived from the Ukraine, Romania, and Russia. The following tables demonstrate the number of children arriving per year and the total number of children adopted in each country.

Table 7

Countries of adoption, 1999–2007 (in absolute numbers)

The country	Number of children
Ukraine	692
Russia	629
Romania	381
Guatemala	115
Belarus	79
Georgia	39
Moldova	39

The country	Number of children
Kazakhstan	25
Azerbaijan	19
Kirgizstan	17
Bulgaria	17
Other	7

Source: The Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services, 2008.

G. Articles 19 and 39 – Abuse and neglect, recovery and reintegration

Legislation

416. Amendment No. 6 to the Special Education Law was issued on 24 July 2002. This Amendment obligates the Minister of Education to promulgate regulation regarding the placement of children with disabilities in educational institutions. The idea is to allocate placement based on requests made by parents, in addition to the receipt of a professional opinion affirming that the child has a severe disability which requires her/his placement in the educational institution and that her/his integration in a regular educational institution is not feasible. Furthermore, the regulations promulgated should include information for parents with reference to the rights of children with disabilities and alternative educational institutions which are available to them.

417. Amendment No. 7 to the Special Education Law supplemented the Law to define disability as including physical, mental, intellectual, emotional-behavioural, cognitive, linguistic or any other developmental problem. The Amendment supplements regulation regarding the integration of a child with disabilities in the regular education system.

418. The purpose of the Amendment was to ensure that services of the same quality were provided to children integrated in regular schools as those provided to children in special educational institutions. The Amendment further obligates the inclusion of children with disabilities within the regular education system while increasing the annual budget designated for this purpose (See recommendations of the Dorner Committee, above). The Compulsory Education Law was amended in 2007 (Amendment No. 29). The Compulsory Education Law applies to children aged 3 years and older. (See also under: “The right to life, survival and development of children with disabilities” chapter IV (A) above).

419. A 2002 Amendment to the Rehabilitative Day-care Centers Law 5760-2000 (the: “Rehabilitative Day-care Centers Law”), expanded the basket of services provided to infants with disabilities to include not only treatment and educational services available in rehabilitation day-care centres, but also the infants’ transportation from their private residence to day-care and back. When transported, the child is accompanied by an adult, other than the driver, who is available to assist the child when necessary.

420. According to a 2005 Amendment to the Rehabilitative Day-care Centers Law, a rehabilitation day-care centre provides treatment and education throughout the day to a minimum of ten infants with disabilities, either through the central rehabilitation day-care centre or through one of its smaller branches. A Rehabilitative Day-care extension is considered to be one which provides treatment to a minimum of six infants with autism, hearing deficiency, sight deficiency or other recognized deficiency, or an infant whose place of residence is located over 25 kilometres outside the area of the original rehabilitation day-care centre.

421. According to a 2008 Amendment, an infant with a disability is a child between six months to three years of age, who is entitled to the NII pension; or is a child between one and three years of age with respect to whom it was determined, by a Diagnosis Committee, that the child suffers from a developmental disability. The 2008 Amendment stipulated that a recognized child development institute is qualified to determine the immediate placement of such an infant in a rehabilitation day-care centre under certain circumstances in order to prevent significant damage to the child. This Amendment entered into force in February 2009.

The Penal Law

422. Amendment No. 59 to the Penal Law, enacted on 29 March 2001, replaces Section 361 of the Law (See under parents' legal responsibilities, above). If an act was performed negligently, the offender may be sentenced to one year's imprisonment. However, if an act was committed in order to abandon the child, the offender may be sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

The Prevention of Stalking Law 5762-2001 (the: "Stalking Law")

423. The Stalking Law, enacted on 16 October 2001 amended the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law 5751-1991 (the: "Prevention of Domestic Violence Law") to include subsection 2(h1) which stipulates that when a court considers an appeal for a protective order according to the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law, it may also issue an order to prevent stalking the Prevention of Stalking Law.

424. Amendment No. 15 to the Youth (Supervision and Care) Law issued on 30 October 2001 stipulates that a court considering the interests of a minor, may issue a restraining order against stalking, according to the Stalking Law (Section 3A).

The Prevention of Domestic Violence Law

425. Amendment No. 9 to the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law was enacted on 21 March 2007. The Amendment supplements Section 3A which states that a request for a protection order against a minor shall only be submitted to the Family Matters Court (Section 3A(a)). The following orders will apply to the request presented by a family member (Section 3A (b)):

- The court will refer the applicant and the minor to the 'Assistance Unit' within the court (Section 3A(b)(1)).
- The Assistance Unit shall inform the court if the parties were able to find a solution to the conflict and the recommendation of the Assistance Unit on the issue (Section 3A(b)(2)).
- If the parties were unable to find a solution, the Assistance Unit will inform the minor of her/his right to be represented by a lawyer in a court hearing according to the Legal Aid Law 5732-1972 (the "Legal Aid Law), unless the minor chooses to be represented by a lawyer of her/his choice (Section 3A(b)(3)).

426. The court will consider the circumstances of the matter and the best interest of the minor, against which the protective order is requested. The aim of the protective order against a minor is to defend a family member (or particular persons) that the minor constitutes a threat to. If the court finds that there is a need to issue a protective order, it may issue such an order subsequent to granting the minor the opportunity to appear before the court. However, the court shall not issue a protective order according to Section 2(a)(1) to the Law, stipulating a prohibition against entering the home of her/his family member, unless an appropriate out of home arrangement was reached for the minor and only after receiving the evaluation of a social worker (Section 3A(b)(4)).

427. Amendment No. 9 also amended the Legal Aid Law regarding the availability of legal assistance which is granted to a minor whose family member applied for a protective order against her/him. Such an order is available in terms of Section 3 of the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law, in a hearing under Section 3A (b) (4) or an appeal on a decision reached under this section. The representation is not subject to a written request for assistance and cannot be terminated according to Sections 3 and 4 of the Legal Aid Law. However, an appeal regarding a decision reached by a court regarding a minor may be subject to termination according to Section 4 of the Legal Aid Law.

428. Amendment No. 11 issued on 4 March 2008 supplements Section 4 to include subsection (d), which stipulates that the court can deny a request for a protection order only after granting the applicant or her/his attorney an opportunity to present their claims verbally, unless the court finds that there are irregular circumstances and for reasons that will be recorded. This section is inclusive to minors and adults.

429. According to the Compulsory Education (Physical Violence Reporting Rules) Regulations 5770-2009, the Principal of an educational institution will report in writing to the supervisor of such institution any occurrence of physical violence between an educator and a pupil (Section 2(a) (1)). In addition, incidents of physical violence that take place within the educational institute or during school hours that resulted in injury must be reported (Section 2(a) (2)). Such a report is submitted immediately, as well as conveyed to the district supervisor of the school in question (Section 3).

Case law

430. The Israeli High Court of Justice struggled with the legal presumption that parents enjoy a legal and moral right over their minor children, which is to be free from State interference. The High Court of Justice held that childrearing is not absolute and it is subject to the child's best interest and her/his right to a good life as a separate entity. Thus, the State is entitled to intervene in the parent's prerogative when circumstances present themselves – that is if the child's welfare or wellbeing is placed at stake. According to the principle legal presumption, parents are the sole legal guardians of their minor children; though, the State has discretion to act when necessary. In the case at hand, the Supreme Court held that the parent's lack of desire to keep in contact with their minor children despite the children's continuous need, indicated a lack of competence on behalf of the parents. The parents petition to "subordinate" their children to their authority was therefore denied. (H.C.J 927/05 Anonymous et. al. v. The Social Welfare Departments – Municipality of Bnei-Brak et. al. (15.5.2006).

431. A mentally ill mother appealed to the Supreme Court after her children were declared to be "needy minors." These children had no father involved in their lives and their mother was ill. The Family Matters Court revoked the mother's custody and ordered the Netanya Welfare Authority to serve as primary custodian. The mother submitted an appeal to the District Court, but it was rejected. A second appeal was submitted to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court rejected the appeal since the lower instance court had already examined the wellbeing of the children, and thus there was no reason to interfere with its decision. Moreover, the Supreme Court held that since the mother was not capable of raising the minors and there were no other family members responsible for the kids, the Welfare Authorities were required to care for the children, afford them a good life and end their deterioration. (C.M.A 369/08 Anonymous v. The Welfare Authority of Natanya (10.4.08)).

432. In another Case, the Supreme Court discussed the implementation of Section 12 of the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law. This Section enables the court to use its discretion with respect to temporary custody orders. The court acknowledged the parents right to childrearing, but it also established the boundaries. Such limitations include the child's right to a good life and to a minimum standard of living. When the parents do not fulfil their parental duties and responsibilities, the State may take over. The Supreme Court emphasized that Section 12 is feasible only when the child is legally defined as a "needy minor" or in immediate need of assistance. Under such circumstances, such assistance is necessary for the child's wellbeing. Significant consideration must be given to the harm that can be caused to a child by her/his neglectful or unfit parents as well as the harm that can be caused by revoking parental custody. Revocation of parental rights may only occur as an act of last resort, in exceptional cases and in order to maintain the child's wellbeing. (6041/02 Anonymous et. al. v. Anonymous et. al. (12.7.2004)).

Non-governmental organizations

433. The Beit Lynn Center is a child protection centre based in Jerusalem, which serves minors who have been victims of sexual, physical and psychological abuse. In order to provide holistic care, Beit Lynn employs a team of professionals from several sectors of the work force, including a child protection officer, a child investigator, a youth investigator, a housemother, a paediatrician, and an attorney. This team works jointly so as to ensure sensitive and holistic treatment is provided in each case of abuse. Beit Lynn serves several of the minor's most immediate needs, and for example provides immediate intervention when necessary and offers children and youth a safe environment in which to seek shelter. Beit Lynn also provides medical check-ups and initial urgent treatment; as well as referrals and recommendations for further treatment. In addition, Beit Lynn aims to prevent further trauma to the youth by shortening and centralizing the interview and diagnosis process which follows reports of abuse.

434. The Haruv Institute is dedicated toward the development of a capable and skillful professional community able to ensure the welfare and wellbeing of children who have suffered from various types of abuse and/or neglect. In pursuit of this end, Haruv provides high-level study and training programmes for professionals working in the field of child abuse and neglect, and has developed a range of advanced approaches and methodologies in the prevention of abuse, and the care of children who have been abused and/or neglected. Professionals who attend the seminars and programmes offered by Haruv are drawn from diverse sectors of the workforce, including welfare, education, health, judiciary, local authorities, and academia. In addition to its work with individual professionals, Haruv works with both governmental and non-governmental agencies which operate in the field of child welfare. Through this interaction, Haruv has contributed to the formation and influence of Israeli public opinion and social policies. Finally, Haruv brings together local and international experts working in the field of child care, and thereby ensures a fruitful exchange of information and ideas.

VI. Basic health and welfare

A. Article 23 – Children with disabilities

Table 8

Pupils with special needs in primary and post-primary education according to the type of disability and type of setting, 2006–2007

Type of disability*	Type of setting				Type of setting
	Integrated	Special classes	Special schools	Total	Integrated	Special classes	Special schools	Total
	Percentages				Absolute numbers
Total	100	100	100	100	65 728	23 687	16 829	106 244
Developmental delay	6.5	0.5	0.6	3.9	3 405	129	109	3 643
Language disorders	3.7	0.6	0.1	2.2	1 930	135	9	2 074
Learning disability	67.1	72	18.3	59.5	34 963	17 051	3 066	55 080
Behavioural disturbance	10.2	5.1	16.6	10	5 286	1 207	2 792	9 285
Borderline IQ	4.2	11.8	-	5.4	2 177	2 785	-	4 962
Suspicion of mild retardation	-	0.5	0	0.1	-	115	6	121
Mild retardation	0.5	1.2	12.1	2.8	276	278	2 023	2 577
Moderate retardation	0.1	0.7	12.8	2.6	48	176	2 146	2 370
Multiple diagnosis moderate retardation	-	0.1	9.5	1.7	-	18	1 599	1 617
Severe/profound retardation	-	-	12	2.2	-	-	2 019	2 019
Cerebral palsy/severe physical handicaps	1.1	0.4	4.5	1.5	553	101	762	1 416
Autism	0.6	4	5.5	2.4	323	946	918	2 187
Psychiatric disorders	0.4	0.2	5.5	1.3	223	36	916	1 175
Rare diseases	0.5	-	-	0.3	257	-	-	257
Deafness/hearing impairment	3.5	3	2.1	3.1	1 813	710	351	2 874
Blindness/vision impairment	1.6	-	0.4	1	818	-	67	885

Source: Statistical Abstract of Israel, CBS, Central Bureau of Statistic. 2009.

* Type of disability is determined by the type of class in which the pupil is enrolled, except for pupils in integrated classes, for whom the source of the data is based on the main disability assessed by the integration committee.

 Including pupils in special schools who have not been characterized by type of class, as well as pupils in integrated classes who have not been characterized by type of disability.

Table 9

The number of children who received prostheses, medical devices for rehabilitation and mobility, all funded by the Ministry of Health in accordance with age and diagnosis (2008)

Diagnosis	Total	Age
		0-4	5-9	10-14	15-17
Prosthesis
Total	65	18	23	13	11
Congenital Malf.	63	18	22	12	11
Tumor	2	0	1	1	3
Device for rehabilitation or mobility
Total	1 282	306	564	326	86
Cerebral palsy	911	217	402	242	50
Spina Bifida	122	32	49	31	10
Polio	10	1	3	5	1
Cong. Malf.	94	29	36	21	8
Muscular Dystrophy	33	2	18	8	5
Hemiplegia	112	25	56	19	12
Medical shoes
Total	232	12	48	94	78
Cong. Malf.	132	11	37	46	38
Cerebral palsy	63	0	1	35	27
Polio	6	0	2	1	3
Other	31	1	8	12	10

Source: The Ministry of Health, Lewis Institute, Tel Hashomer, 2008.

Table 10

Provision of hearing aids between the ages of 0 and 18, according to year and type of device

Year	Referrals	FM*	Bilateral	Unilateral
2006	1 436	176	585	266
2007	-	174	610	356
2008	-	135	567	235

Source: The Ministry of Health, Department of Mother, Child and Adolescent Health, 2009.

“Aleh Negev” (“The Southern Israel leaf”)

435. Aleh is an organization that provides services to children with severe cognitive and physical disabilities, as well as making employment available to the adult residents. These services consist of high-quality medical care. Aleh Negev is a modern communal Rehabilitative Village situated in the city of Ofakim. It is home to over 500 residential adults with disabilities and each year serves approximately 12,000 children and young people with disabilities based on an outpatient treatment method. The village also provides vocational training, occupational therapy and medical facilities. Approximately 650 severely disabled children receive the best possible care, educational and rehabilitative treatments. Aleh cares for children with serious medical conditions such as Autism, Cerebral Palsy, Down syndrome and genetic disorders. Many of the children learn how to overcome their handicaps and conduct themselves in the same manner as other children. Many of Aleh's children come from families lacking the financial resources or time to adequately care for their children.

“Mechina L’Chaim”

436. The “Mechina L’Chaim” (“Readiness for Life”) programme was established in 2005. To date, “Readiness for Life” has enrolled 68 physically disabled, blind and visually disabled young people in two regions – Bustan Hagalil in the north, and Sderot and Netivot in the south. The programme is operated by JDC-Ashalim, associated with the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services, the NII and the “Kivunim” and “Gvanim” associations. This project is a two-year residential programme designed to assist young adults with disabilities who are between the ages of eighteen and twenty with the transition to an autonomous, independent and productive adult life. It offers these young adults an alternative to other frameworks for people their age, such as IDF service, National Service and higher education common among young adults. In the course of the programme the young adults share their lives with peers who also face challenges with their own disabilities and volunteer for the National Service program. This programme assists its graduates to settle in life, find group apartments and become accustomed to their independence.

Rates of disability and handicap among children in Israel

437. In 2007, 300,000 disabled or chronically ill children resided in Israel, comprising 12.8 per cent of the total child population of the country. Approximately 190,000 children (out of the 293,000) were disabled or suffered from a chronic illness that affected their daily functioning and had persisted for more than one year. These children comprised 7.7 per cent of the total child population. (See Chapter IV General principles above).

438. In accordance with the 2008 report of the Commission for Equal Rights of Persons with Disabilities, most disabled people living in Israel are not born with the disabilities but rather become disabled at some point during their life.

The system of services available for disabled children in Israel

The health system

439. When developmental problems are suspected, or when they are discovered by a primary care physician or nurse at a family health centre, the child is usually referred to a centre for child development. There are 29 such centres in Israel: eleven are operated by the Ministry of Health, nine by Clalit Health Funds (Israel's largest health fund) five by the Maccabi Health Fund, two by the Meuhedet Health Fund and two by the kibbutz movement and the Sisters of Mercy in Nazareth. Most of the centres are operated by the Ministry of Health and located in hospitals.

440. The needs of children with non-physical disabilities who require care beyond the age of 6 years old (when their eligibility for care under the National Health Insurance Law ends) are not being met. If deemed eligible by a Placement Committee, these children receive care from the special education system. Most children with non-physical disabilities who receive care at a child development centre are ineligible for special education and have been included within the regular educational system. The children receive assistance through the “Reinforcement Basket,” which only partially covers their needs. Other needs are met by ongoing programmes, offered in other frameworks.

441. Section 7 of the second appendix of Amendment No. 43 to the National Health Insurance Law stipulated what Paramedical Services included when it came to Child Development. For children aged 7 to 18 who are diagnosed as Autistic – children whose diagnosis is located on the Autistic spectrum by the DSM-4 (the leading guidance book accepted by the international medical community) are entitled to multi-professional medical team treatment. Such services are granted subject to an observation by a neurologist of an Israeli Health Fund or subject to a medical opinion provided by a Paediatrician who is specialized in Child Development.

442. A further problem relates to the implementation of the National Health Insurance Law, which rendered the Health Funds responsible for financing developmental services for children under the age of eight. According to this law, these services are conditional upon a co-payment being made by the parents of the child; however, co-payments cover only a small proportion of the cost of service – which may be substantial, if a child requires more than one type of service, or if a family has a limited income. In the past, parents could petition a special committee to be exempted from having to make the co-payment.

Mental health services for children and adolescents

443. Services for children whose mental health problems require them to be hospitalized are provided in the in-patient departments of hospitals for the mentally ill. There are a total of thirteen in-patient departments for minors under the age of eighteen located in general and mental hospitals.

Table 11

The number of minors admitted to mental health facilities according to religious-national denominations between the years 2006 and 2008

Religious affiliation	2006	2007	2008 (January–June)
Jewish	861	775	391
Muslim	71	78	44
Christian	11	6	5
Druze	2	6	6
Other	78	72	28
Total	1 023	937	474

Source: The Ministry of Health, 2008.

444. According to the above data there are approximately 1,000 hospitalizations of minors under eighteen per annum, of which 83 per cent–84 per cent are Jewish, 9 per cent–11 per cent are Muslim, Christian and Druze, and 6 per cent–7 per cent are of another affiliation.

445. As of 2008, there are 65 out-patient clinics for children and adolescents. During 2007, 11,300 minors were treated in out-patient clinics, with 147,400 individual sessions.

446. The in-patient hospitalization of minors is regulated by two laws – the Treatment of Mentally Ill Law and the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law. In recent years, in accordance with these laws, hospitals do not report all hospitalizations of minors, but only hospitalizations of those who have suffered from a mental illness and posed a violent threat. According to the Treatment of Mentally Ill Law, an expert psychiatrist reviews all hospitalizations of minors (Section 3). A minor’s custodian can request the admission of the minor to a psychiatric hospital as well as consent on her/his behalf to treatments received during the hospitalization (Section 4a (b)). However, if a minor who has reached the age of fifteen refuses to be admitted, a court order is necessary in order to admit the minor. Such order is issued based on regular causes cited in cases of the compulsory hospitalization of minors (Section 4a(c)). If the minor has not yet reached the age of fifteen and her /his caregivers understand that, she/he does not consent to the hospitalization; a District Psychiatric Committee shall make the relevant decision. The Committee is comprised of professionals: a psychiatrist specializing in children and adolescents, a clinical child psychologist, an educational psychologist and a social worker (Section 4a (d)). A minor who has reached the age of fifteen may request of her/his own free will to be admitted to a psychiatric ward; if the custodian refuses, court approval is necessary (Section 4b). The District Psychiatric Committee for Children and Youth also functions as consultant to the court and has the authority to decide whether or not to continue the hospitalization of an individual minor.

447. The Mentally Ill Law was amended by Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law. According to the Amendment, psychiatric examination, treatment orders etc. can only be issued by psychiatrists who have specialized in child psychiatry.

448. In 2008, the Ministry of Health sponsored an annual meeting to discuss mental health issues that was open to the public. Over 1,000 people participated in the meeting, including mental health professionals, non-profit associations and families. Emphasis was placed on attempts to de-stigmatize and rehabilitate disabled individuals in the community.

449. In order to promote children's rights to health care in general, and mental health care in particular, the Mental Health Services of the Ministry of Health, along with other institutions, carried out a nation-wide study: "The prevalence of mental disorders among adolescents in Israel." The purpose of this research was to identify the relevant areas of need and to recognize groups at high risk for mental disorders, in order to plan appropriate services to cope with the needs. The research included 1,000 adolescents (together with their mothers), aged 14 to 17, who were from different population groups. Preliminary analyses revealed that the prevalence of mental disorders among adolescents in Israel is 11.7 per cent, similar to the prevalence in other western countries. No significant differences in prevalence of mental disorders were found between Jewish and Arab adolescents, but it was found that there was higher risk of having a mental disorder for children of divorced parents, dysfunctional families, children who have a learning disability or children who suffer from a chronic disease. The study also provided important data regarding geographic regions that may not have access to treatment. The study will help to facilitate plans for the treatment of mentally ill children and adolescents that most require such treatment.

The social welfare system

The National Insurance Institute

Children with disabilities

450. The National Insurance Institute pays a special benefit on behalf of disabled children, defined as follows: children under eighteen (including an adopted or step-child) of an insured person, or of an insured person who died as an Israeli resident, who is of the following:

- A child (from age three) dependent on the help of others for the performance of everyday functions (dressing, eating, washing, mobility in the home, and requires the permanent presence of another, as defined in the regulations) to a degree significantly greater than is normal for her/his age group.

- A child (over 91 days) in need of constant supervision.
- A child with a special impairment, that is (from birth) Down's syndrome or deterioration in hearing, or (over 91 days) vision impairment, Autism, psychosis or severe developmental disabilities (the latter till the age of three).
- A child (over 91 days) in need of special medical treatment as defined in the regulations, due to a severe chronic disease.

Table 12

Children receiving National Insurance Institute disability benefits in 2008 by age (in absolute numbers)

Year	Total number of recipients (thousands)	Aged 0–3	Aged 3–8	Aged 8–18	Annual increase (per cent)
1990	5.8	-	-	-	7.7 (1986–1990)
1995	10.3	-	-	-	12.2 (1991–1995)
2001	16.4	-	-	-	7.2
2003	18.36	1.46	4.57	12.67	5.1
2004	19.54	1.58	4.86	13.09	6.0
2005	21.09	1.7	5.2	14.04	7.2
2006	22.2	1.81	5.47	14.91	6.0
2007	23.81	1.89	5.84	16.06	7.2
2008	25.25	1.97	6.17	17.11	6.3

Source: The National Insurance Institute, Publications, Statistical Quarterly, 2008.

451. In 2008 (monthly average) the number of benefit recipients (on behalf of children with disabilities) increased by 6.1 per cent. That is 25,255 recipients as compared with 23,810 recipients during 2007.

The Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs

452. As noted, the social welfare department has primary responsibility for providing out-of-home care. At present, 1,500 children with developmental problems and a small number of children with other disabilities, reside in various frameworks. A small number of children currently reside in several community-housing frameworks. One is for children with mental disorders and the other is for children with physical disorders. While most of the community-housing frameworks serve children with mild disabilities, four new facilities are geared for severely mentally disabled children. In recent years, after-school and holiday activities are operated for mentally disabled children as well as for children residing at rehabilitation centres. Autistic children are provided with out-of-home activities like all children. The services are financed by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services.

The education system

453. In Israel, there are approximately 46,000 pupils in the special education system; which incorporates special kindergartens, special schools and special classrooms in regular schools. Between the years 2002–2005, the rate of school pupils in special schools and special classrooms in regular schools grew by approximately 16 per cent. In that time period, the number of kindergarten-aged children in special kindergartens grew by approximately 26 per cent. In 2005, approximately 72,164 children with disabilities were integrated within the regular education system.

454. Among the special education children, the number of children with learning disorders makes up 38 per cent of the total number of children with disabilities. Most of the children in this group studied in special classrooms in regular schools. A significant group of children who study in the special education system is comprised of children with mental disabilities, who constitute roughly 20 per cent of all the children in the system (for more details regarding learning disabilities see: Chapter IV (A)-Personal assistance- and for special education in the minority populations see Chapter VI).

455. Two groups of disabled children in the special education system are of special interest: those who are blind or have impaired vision, and those who are deaf or have impaired hearing. Although these children are portrayed as being part of the special education system, most have been mainstreamed into the regular system and attend regular classes, receive special education assistance and assistive devices that enable them to function like other pupils. These two groups, along with children who have learning disabilities, are the only ones mainstreamed into the regular education system as a group.

Children with disabilities attending regular schools

456. The Ministry of Education allocates some 84,000 weekly special education hours (integration hours) for mainstreamed pupils. Each local authority is allocated a quota of teaching hours based on the number of pupils in its jurisdiction, the school's "development index," and the percentage of pupils with minor disabilities who are referred to Placement Committees in an effort to encourage their mainstreaming. A Local Resource Center for Special Education Services is the operational organizational division of the inclusive education; it provides educational services dependent on the regulation of the special education in every municipality.

457. The Ministry of Education allocates 350 positions for full-time assistants to pupils with severe physical disabilities who have been mainstreamed into regular schools and require assistance. The Dorner Committee recommended that placement and assistance, as well as the characterization of the children's needs, should be performed based on the children's specific functioning abilities rather than the type of deficiency. The current resources appear limited, and are provided mainly to children with severe disabilities. As a result, the Dorner Committee concluded that the current budgeting method is too rigid and does not always enable appropriate treatment to be provided to children with disabilities. Thus, the Committee recommended budgeting be performed on the basis of a model called: "Funding according to needs – system," namely that the budget is determined by the characteristics of every child. These recommendations are already in effect.

The involvement of parents and children in determining placement and a programme of care

Case law

458. The Nazareth District Court, residing as an Administrative Court, was asked to address a decision of the Ministry of Education to close a school for children with disabilities in the village of Al-Dihi. The school's closure was the result of a decline in the number of pupils from 32 (which is the minimum according to the Ministry's regulations) to eighteen. Such a decrease in the number of pupils required the placement of seven different age groups in one classroom (a maximum difference of three age groups is allowed in unique circumstances according to the regulations). This situation caused financial cutbacks within the local authority and a decision to cutback was approved by the District Director of the Ministry of Education. The decision was annulled by the District Court, which stated that the District Director's approval was issued in contradiction to the principles of proper governance. In the school year following the court order, only nineteen pupils attended; therefore, in accordance with the Ministry's regulations, a reduction was made in the number of classrooms.

459. During the re-examination of the above mentioned decision, consideration was given to the opinions of parents, the suitability of alternative placements for the pupils in light of their disabilities, the opinions of relevant Ministry personnel, etc. Nevertheless, the decision to close the school was once again reached.

460. The parents petitioned the decision again, questioning the sincerity of the reasoning given in the decision to close down the school. The Court determined that the Ministry of Education's decision was reached after proper examination and consideration of the best interests of the pupils. Moreover, the decision allowed the parents to choose from three different schools and promised the full cooperation of the Ministry's personnel in registration and integration into these schools. Therefore, the Court rejected the petition and the decision to close the school was finalized. (Ad.P 1114/07 The Board of Parents for the School of Bustan-Almargh et. al v. The Ministry of Education, et. al. (30.07.07)).

Discounts and tax breaks

461. The parents of disabled children receive tax breaks and discounts on fees as compensation for having to invest financial and other resources in the care of their children. These include:

- Parents with a physically disabled, blind or autistic child, or a child with an emotional disorder or chronic illness, are eligible for an income tax credit; they are also eligible for these credits if the child resides in an out-of-home framework.
- Parents of a child with disabilities may receive a discount of up to 25 per cent on their municipal taxes, at the discretion of the local authority.
- Parents of a child who receives a full disability benefit, and parents of a blind child or a child undergoing dialysis, are eligible for discounted telephone services. The discounts include a 50 per cent reduction on regular monthly charges; 60 free telephone units per month for a disabled child and 300 units for a blind child; and a 50 per cent reduction on the cost of the installation or transfer of telephone lines. Parents with two children who each receive a full disability benefit are eligible for double discounts.

The accessibility of public areas and services

462. In September 2008, new regulations were promulgated, requiring the modification of various public sites to accord with the needs of persons with disabilities. The Equal Rights for People with Disabilities (Site Accessibility Adjustments) Regulations 5768-2008, laid down the accessibility requirements for archaeological sites, national parks and nature reserves, as well as other areas, mainly forests, managed by the Jewish National Fund or on its behalf. According to these Regulations, new sites are not to open for public use unless the accessibility requirements are met (Section 5). Existing sites are compelled to gradually meet the requirements within ten years (Section 7).

463. Recently, a number of resort sites have been made accessible for the disabled with the help of funds from the National Insurance Institute. The duty of the Commission for Equal Rights of Persons with Disabilities, among other things, is to enforce the law, and thus the Commission insists on the implementation of any law or regulation that concerns persons with disabilities.

464. On 1 August 2009, a new Directive dealing with accessibility entered into force. This Directive enforced accessibility for people with a disability in public places, and was added to the Planning and Construction (Permit Application Conditions and Fees)

Regulations 5730-1970. The new accessibility Directive applies to all public structures as opposed to limited developments (public buildings and other forms of construction) that are legally obligated to make public areas accessible as required by the Directive. The scope of the new Amendment is extensive and details modification, accommodation and accessibility for persons with disabilities. Moreover, these Directives are applicable to different kind of disabilities, considerably more than the previous directives, including blindness, hearing deficiencies, physical disabilities and so on.

465. In addition, a number of dispensations included for the families of disabled children are meant to ease access. For example, special parking permits are given to the parents of children who have lower limb motor disorders or who need a respirator. These permits allow them to park in spaces designated for disabled drivers, as well as to park free of charge in areas where parking is available for a fee. The parents of children with mobility problems (i.e., who have been declared to be at a 60 per cent degree of disability by the District Health Bureau or have been designated by a physician as having a disability that requires a motor vehicle for purposes of mobility) are exempt from annual motor vehicle registration fees.

466. For children, access to schools is particularly important. According to the Planning and Building Law 5725-1965 (the: "Planning and Building Law") and the Planning and Building Regulations (Permit Application-Permit Terms and Fees) 5730-1970, a permit will be denied for the construction of a public building that does not comply with regulations concerning access for the disabled. According to these Regulations, in schools and other public structures, only one storey need be accessible to the disabled. As such, even when the Law is implemented, it is difficult for disabled children to become integrated into schools – a fact often cited as the primary difficulty with mainstreaming disabled children.

Case law

467. An NGO, together with parents of children with disabilities, petitioned the Supreme Court to order the State to finance the integration of children with disabilities (who are deemed fit) into ordinary schools. Such integration would require the State to finance personal assistance for the children. The petitioners claimed that the right to education is a fundamental one, and therefore, should not be confined to financing the children's education in special schools, but rather their integration into ordinary schools. In this way, equality would be achieved for children who study in special education schools. If the State did not cover the costs, it would compel parents without means to send their children to special schools despite the fact that they were found fit to be integrated into the ordinary system. The Court determined that the right to education is a fundamental one, which is enshrined both in article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and in articles 28 and 29 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Court stipulated that the right to special education derives from the right to education, even if it was yet to be determined whether the right to education was part of the right to human dignity. Moreover, the Court referred to Article 23(2) of the Convention, which stipulates that the States recognize the rights of disabled children.

468. In light of the Supreme Court ruling that both customary and treaty law affect Israeli law, since Israeli law operates under the presumption of compatibility between the domestic law and international norms Israel has undertaken to uphold; human rights treaties constitute an important tool for the interpretation of national legislation, and serve to further enhance and entrench international human rights norms in the domestic sphere.

469. Therefore, the Court determined that the purposive interpretation of the Special Education Law obligates the State to execute the law in an equal manner, which means changing the budgetary policy to enable allocation of budget to both the special schools, and children with disabilities in ordinary schools. (H.C.J. 2599/00 Yated – Non-Profit Organization for Parents of Children with Down Syndrome v. The Ministry of Education (14.8.02)). For that reason the Dorner Committee was established and its recommendations, as cited above, have since been implemented.

B. Articles 6 and 24 – Health and health services

A right to a dignified death

470. On 6 December 2005, the Knesset enacted the Terminally Ill Law in response to the medical-ethical dilemma presented by the treatment of terminally ill patients. The Law is based on the recommendations of a public committee appointed by the Minister of Health in 2000.

471. The Law presumes that every person has the will to continue living, unless proven otherwise. Furthermore, in the event of doubt, the will to live shall be presumed (Section 4). One shall not avoid granting medical treatment to a terminally ill patient unless it is clear, according to specific conditions, that the patient has no will to continue living (Section 5). If the terminally ill patient has “capacity,” meaning that she/he is older than seventeen years old, can express her/his will, and was not declared incapacitated, or excluded from this status as a result of a documented, justified medical decision, then any decision concerning her/his medical treatment shall be subject to her/his implicit will (Section 5(a)). If the terminally ill patient does not have “capacity”, any decision concerning her/his medical treatment shall accord with her/his preliminary instructions, the instructions of an empowered person, or the decision of an “institutional committee” as defined below (Section 5(b)). If no such instructions or decisions exist, then the responsible physician, in consultation with the patient’s relatives or guardian (only in the absence of a relative), will determine the appropriateness of withholding medical treatment (Section 5(c)).

472. The Law states that a terminally ill patient’s desire to forego treatment to extend her/his life shall be respected, and medical treatment shall not be provided, for so long as she/he has “capacity” (Section 15(a)). However, the Law does not allow for an act to be committed, including a medical act, that is intentionally directed at causing the terminally ill patient’s death or which will result in certain death, even if motivated by grace and compassion (section 19). In addition, assisting the patient to commit suicide or the cessation of continuous medical treatment are both prohibited (Sections 20 and 21 respectively). However, it is permitted to cease the renewal of continual and/or cyclic medical treatment that has been terminated unintentionally as long as it was not against orders (Section 21).

473. The Terminally Ill Law contains different provisions as to the manner and procedure in which a person can express, in advance, her/his will with respect to medical treatment she/he will receive in the event of being diagnosed as terminally ill. In addition, the Law states that every medical institution will appoint, in consultation with a state committee, institutional committees which are to determine treatment in cases of conflict or in the event of doubt as to the course of treatment. These committees will consist of three physicians, a nurse, a social worker or a clinical psychologist, an academic specializing in philosophy or ethics, a jurist qualified to be appointed as a district judge, and a public representative or religious persona.

474. The Terminally Ill Law contains different provisions regarding the applicability of the Law to minors, and defines a minor as any person who has not reached the age of seventeen. The parent of a minor is authorized to represent her/him with regard to medical treatment and may choose to decline treatment. A legal guardian, who is a related person,³ may express her/his opinion regarding the treatment, and the physician in charge may act accordingly. If the minor is parentless, or if the legal guardianship of the parents was negated and there has not been a determination of a new guardian, or if the guardian is not a related person (as defined above), the medical institution's commission shall make the decision regarding the minor (Section 24).

475. The Law stipulates that a terminally ill minor shall have the right to participate in decisions concerning her/his medical treatment if she/he understands her/his condition, requests to participate in decisions regarding her/his treatment, and if the physician in charge determines that her/his mental capability and maturity allows her/him to participate (Section 25(1) and (2)). The Law also states that the physician in charge shall provide the minor with information regarding her/his medical condition or treatment so long as the physician determines that her/his mental capability and maturity enables her/him to fully grasp the meaning of such information and that it will not harm her/his physical or mental health or pose a risk to her/his life (Section 26(1) and (2)).

476. The Law states that the decisions as to whether to inform the minor of her/his medical condition (Section 26) and as to the minor's ability to participate in decisions as to her/his treatment (Section 25) shall be made after consulting with the minor's parents, the legal guardian if one has been appointed, caregivers, relevant physicians and specialists, as well as with her/his personal physician if possible (Section 27).

Discrimination

477. In accordance with the Patient's Rights Law 5756-1996 (the: "Patient's Rights Law"), detailed in Israel's initial report, every member of the health system is committed to refrain from all forms of discrimination and maintain the patient's privacy, in the spirit of the Law. The Patient's Rights Law was amended in 2004, and Sections 4 and 28(a) prohibit discrimination on grounds of gender inclination. The Law and its provisions are an integral part of the basic training of the personnel working in the Health System with respect to the health of children and youth in Israel.

Maternal mortality, infant mortality and underweight births

478. 3The maternal mortality rate for Israel has declined steeply over the past 50 years. At present, it equals the rates found in the most developed nations: 0.04–0.12 per 1,000 births, with no variance among sub-populations between the years: 1990–2000.

479. Maternal mortality in Israel is relatively rare and in recent years the rate of maternal mortality remained generally low. The following table displays the number of maternal deaths in Israel in recent years.

³ A person who, according to the opinion of the physician in charge, is either a dedicated family member or a dedicated person with an emotional relationship to the minor, who has intimate knowledge of the terminally ill minor, due to continuous contact before or during the medical treatment.

Table 13

Maternal mortality, 1990–2006

Year	Number of maternal deaths
1999	10
2000	3
2001	8
2002	6
2003	7
2004	9
2005	7
2006	9

Source: Ministry of Health, 2008.

480. Progress in medical knowledge and technologies and changes in lifestyle and behaviour have resulted in infant mortality rates dropping significantly. Throughout the 1970's, Israel's infant mortality rate was 21.9 deaths for every 1,000 live births. By 2007, Israel's infant mortality rate was 3.9 deaths for every 1,000 live births. However, there remains variance among population sub-groups: 2.9 deaths for every 1,000 live births among Jews, 2.8 among Christians, 6.0 among Druze, and 7.2 among Muslims. According to data from the Ministry of Health, there was an 11 per cent decrease in the infant mortality in the Arab population in 2005 compared to infant mortality in 2004.

481. In 2007, the infant mortality rate of Bedouins decreased to 11.5 deaths for every 1,000 live births and the Government is continuing to open Mother and Child Health clinics in unauthorized villages and Mother and Child Health clinics to better serve the population.

Table 14

Causes of infant death by population group, 2005–2007 (rate per 1,000 live births)

Causes of death	Jews	Others
Congenital malformations	0.8	2.5
Causes of prenatal mortality	1.5	2.4
All other unspecified causes	0.6	1.9
External causes	0	0.2
Infectious diseases	0.1	0.1
Total	3.0	7.2

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstract of Israel, 2009.

482. The Arab infant mortality rate is higher than the infant mortality rate in the Jewish population (7.2 versus 3.0). The higher Arab infant mortality rate is due in large part to a higher rate of deaths from congenital malformations. This is related to the high rate of consanguineous marriages in the Arab population, particularly among the Bedouin population.

Table 15

Contagious and infectious illnesses among children, newborn to 14 years of age, by age and population group, 2008 (per 100,000 in each age group)

Illness	Population group	Age group (years)
		Newborns	1-4	5-9	10-14
Rubella	Jews	0.0	0.0	0.0	0.0
	Arabs	0.0	0.0	0.0	0.0
Measles	Jews	98.7	47.5	26.5	23.4
	Arabs	22.9	4.3	0.9	0.0
Salmonellosis	Jews	178.1	94.4	19.3	12.7
	Arabs	150.1	48.2	7.9	3.0
Campylobacteriosis	Jews	301.1	228.1	89.7	65.6
	Arabs	885.5	176.6	19.6	9.1

Source: The Ministry of Health, October 2008.

Table 16

Infant mortality rates, by selected causes, religion and age (rates per 1,000 live births)

Cause of death	2000-2004			2005
	0-27 days	28-364 days (1-11 month)	Total	Total
Grand total	3.3	1.8	5.1	4.4
Intestinal infectious diseases	(0.0)	(0.0)	(0.0)	-
All others infectious and parasitic diseases	-	0.1	0.1	(0.0)
Pneumonia	(0.0)	-	(0.0)	-
Congenital anomalies	0.9	0.4	1.3	1.4
External causes	(0.0)	0.1	0.1	(0.1)
Causes of per natal mortality	2.2	0.3	2.5	1.9
All others and unspecified causes	0.2	0.9	1.1	0.9
Jews – total	2.7	1.1	3.8	3.1
Intestinal infectious diseases	..	-	(0.0)	-
All other infectious and parasitic diseases	(0.0)	-	(0.0)	-
Pneumonia	(0.0)	-	(0.0)	-
Congenital anomalies	0.5	0.3	0.8	0.9
External causes	(0.0)	0.1	0.1	..
Causes of prenatal mortality	2.0	0.2	2.3	1.6
All others and unspecified causes	0.1	0.4	0.6	0.6
Other religions – total	4.9	3.5	8.4	7.7
Intestinal infectious diseases	0.0	(0.1)	(0.1)	-
All other infectious and parasitic diseases	-	0.1	0.1	-
Pneumonia	-	(0.0)	(0.0)	-
Congenital anomalies	1.9	0.8	2.6	2.9

Cause of death	2000–2004		2005
	0–27 days	28–364 days (1–11 month)	Total	Total
External causes	-	0.2	0.2	(0.3)
Causes of prenatal mortality	2.5	0.5	3.1	2.6
All others and unspecified causes	0.4	1.8	2.3	1.8

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstract of Israel, 2008.

Infant mortality rate in Israel

483. In 2007, the overall infant mortality rate in Israel was 4.1 per 1,000 births (compared to 5.5 in 2001). Among the Jewish population the rate was 3.0, and among the Arab population the rate was 7.2. The trend in the rate of infant mortalities per 1,000 live births has been as follows.

Table 17
Infant mortality, 2004–2007

Druze	Christians		Muslims		Jews		Total population		Year
	Absolute numbers	Rates
4.3	11	3.3	8	8.8	319	3.1	315	4.6	670	2004
5.9	15	3.2	8	8.1	277	3.1	313	4.4	628	2005
5.0	13	-	4	7.3	252	3.0	312	4.0	594	2006
6.0	15	2.8	7	7.2	250	3.0	309	4.1	586	2007

Source: The Ministry of Health and the Israel Central Bureau of Statistics, Abstract of Israel 2008.

484. In 2007, there was a 2 per cent decline in infant mortality among the Jewish population and a 22.7 per cent decline among the Arab population, compared to 2003. A large part of the decrease in infant mortality rates is attributed to the decrease in mortality caused by infectious diseases, a decrease in prenatal mortality and a decrease in infant mortality as a result of the contraction of pneumonia. Death from congenital disorders also indicates a downward trend.

485. In 2008 infant mortality rates decreased further to 2.9 infant mortality cases per 1,000 live births among the Jewish population and 6.5 cases among the Arab population (compared to 7.2 cases in 2007). The infant mortality rate among the Arab population is still relatively high despite the continuing decrease in the rate. The difference in the rates between the populations stems from a number of factors, among them the high rate of consanguineous marriage – approximately 35 per cent among the Arab population and approximately 60 per cent among the Bedouin population, a religious prohibition against abortion among the Arab population, even in medically recommended cases, as well as socio-economic differences.

486. According to a report issued by the Ministry of Health, and published in February 2009, the infant mortality rate of Bedouin infants in 2008 was 11.5:1000, representing a decline from the rate in 2005 (15:1000). The high rate is mostly attributed to high rates of congenital anomalies and hereditary illnesses due to the high rate of consanguineous marriages. Another element impacting upon mortality rates is the religious prohibition against abortion among Muslims even in medically recommended cases, as well as the high rate of births among elderly women. It should be noted that the infant mortality rate among Bedouin infants living in unauthorized villages was actually lower than that among Bedouin infants living in established towns. The Government is continuing to open Mather and Child Health Clinics in unauthorized villages and new Clinics are being built to serve the population.

487. Furthermore, the Government has been funding several special projects to improve the health and expand the health-care services provided to Bedouin living in unauthorized villages. One of these programmes is a special long-term intervention programme to decrease infant mortality among the Bedouin. The programme is community-based, and boasts a wide-consortium of participants, including representatives from the Bedouin community leadership and the educational system, along with providers of curative and preventative health care services, the Department of Health in the Community and the Epidemiology Department of the Faculty of Health Sciences at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

488. Free genetic testing is also funded by the Government, along with genetic consulting, for any member of a Bedouin tribe in which the prevalence of a serious inherited disease is above 1:1000, and has an available genetic test.

489. The Ministry continues to work intensively to reduce the Israeli Muslim Arab infant mortality rate through a Health education/information project. The central aims are to discourage marriage among close relatives, attempt to encourage pregnant women to make more use of diagnostic procedures during pregnancies, and encourage mothers to make more use of the Mother and Child Care Services available throughout the country.

490. There has also been an important improvement in the growth of Bedouin infants and toddlers over the past two decades, indicating improved nutrition. Moreover, there has been increased compliance with recommendations for supplemental folic acid among Bedouin women in their fertile years, and a decrease in the incidence of open neural tube defects (NTD's) among Bedouin fetuses and infants. Unfortunately there are still high rates of congenital malformations and inherited diseases among Bedouin infants, due to multiple factors including the tradition of consanguineous marriage (approximately 60 per cent), as well as cultural-religious-social barriers to pre-marital and pre-natal screening for inherited diseases.

491. According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, in the last decade the infant mortality rate has decreased by nearly 40 per cent, from 6.0 per cent to 3.9 per cent per 1,000 live births. The largest decrease was among the Jewish population – a decrease of 38 per cent (from 4.7 per cent to 2.9 per cent per 1,000 live births), and among the Arab population a decrease of 26 per cent (from 8.8 per cent to 6.5 per cent per 1,000 live births).

Preventive care and control of epidemics

492. The Ministry of Education Director General's Directive dated 1 September 2004, forbade the collection of fees from parents in order to finance medical services in schools. This issue arose due to financial cutbacks that reduced funding for school nurses from levels allowing a nurse's full-time presence to levels only allowing a nurse's presence once a week. Some parents were willing to pay to fill the budgetary gap.

493. Following the filing of a petition with the Supreme Court, on 21 November 2005, the Ministry of Education made several suggestions in order to resolve the situation. The latest suggestion was dated January 2007, and included the publishing of a tender to create regional motorized centres, manned by professionals. The petitioners did not agree to this suggestion, arguing that the arrival of paramedics would be delayed if several calls were received simultaneously, and that such a delay could lead to harmful consequences.

494. On 7 June 2007, the Ministry of Education decided that in order to best prepare the timetables for the following school year (commencing on September 1st), it was best to postpone the tender. Therefore, the Ministry contracted with MDA (the provider of emergency medical services in Israel) so that it would provide the services. The State emphasized before the Court that this was a temporary solution until the end of 2008, and that during this period; lessons would be learned.

495. The Supreme Court held that the State has an obligation to provide first aid care to pupils in the education system and that the prohibition on collecting fees from parents was meant to maintain equality between children. The Court found that the contract with MDA was a reasonable solution, primarily because of the convening of a follow-up committee to examine the results of this solution. However, the Court held that the petitioners may petition again if they feel that the solution is not satisfactory and if the State fails to provide a proper solution. (HCJ 10794/05 Dudy Landoi et. al. v. The State of Israel (26.08. 2007)).

AIDS

496. In the years 1981–2007, 5,358 new cases of HIV/AIDS were notified in Israel. Taking account of fatalities and those who left Israel, 4,239 people registered as living with HIV/AIDS remain in Israel. Approximately 5,940 HIV/AIDS carriers presently reside in Israel. Between the years 2003–2007, an annual average of 333 individuals were notified of their being HIV carriers.

497. An assessment of the HIV/AIDS epidemic in Israel incorporates several tools, both qualitative and quantitative, which are meant to promote and evaluate the National Evidence-Based Policy. A National multidisciplinary Steering Committee (NAC) advises the Minister of Health and its Director General on the overall national HIV prevention and treatment efforts. This NAC includes representatives from several Ministries, directors of AIDS treatment centres, academic professionals and representatives from two NGOs (Israel AIDS Task Force and Physicians for Human Rights). A dedicated department at the Ministry of Health (the Department of Tuberculosis and AIDS) promotes and evaluates both prevention and treatment programmes, in coordination with several other departments, within and outside the Ministry of Health (including the Department of Health Promotion).

498. National HIV/AIDS registration has been available since the beginning of the epidemic in 1981. HIV testing is systematic amongst blood donors and amongst certain selected groups. In addition, HIV testing is available at all community clinics around the country, confidential and free of charge for any person requesting the service. Each year, approximately 5 per cent of the adult Israeli population is tested voluntarily. Health education programmes are developed for both the general population and groups at high-risk, usually in conjunction with NGOs. Medical treatment and follow-up counseling is provided by seven specialized regional AIDS centres that offer comprehensive treatment (including HAART, and highly effective medicine) to all patients. The financial burden is placed on the Health Fund to which the patient belongs, with minimal or no financial contribution being required on behalf of the patient. Since 2005, HIV drug resistance testing became part of the standard care in Israel.

499. From 1996–2006, 35 HIV+ women gave birth to 45 infants. 31 (88 per cent) of these women were of Ethiopian origin and gave birth to 39 infants. Of the 35 HIV positive women, 30 were aware of being HIV positive. They gave birth to 40 infants. Another five women (14 per cent) were not aware of being HIV positive at the time of delivery. They gave birth to five infants. Of the group of women who knew of their HIV positive status, 26 (87 per cent) were Ethiopian immigrants who delivered 34 infants and four were non-Ethiopians who delivered six infants. In the group of five women who were not aware of their HIV positive status, all were Ethiopians.

500. A programme launched by an Israeli medical infectious disease specialist has succeeded in decreasing the fatalities among Ethiopian children infected with the HIV/AIDS virus. The programme involves treating the children with anti-retroviral therapy. Since the anti-retroviral therapy began, the number of children who have died from the virus and related diseases has been reduced to three. Treatment has been given to 130 children, who are all doing very well.

HIV education

501. The Ministry of Education invests a great deal of effort in the education of students and educational institution's personnel regarding illnesses, the rights of ill persons, and ways to include them in educational institutions and within the community. Children with an immunodeficiency virus are included in kindergartens and schools and participate in every school activity (unless there is a specific medical condition that prohibits their participation). Children receive all the support possible without breaching their right to privacy. According to the law, children are entitled to check whether they carry the HIV virus without their parents' knowledge. Principals must circulate information on the HIV virus among pupils in the ninth to twelfth grades.

Encouraging breastfeeding

502. The Ministry of Health is presently establishing a Breastfeeding Committee in order to advise the Head of Public Health Services on the implementation of the International Code of Marketing of Breast-Milk Substitutes in Israel. The promotion of breastfeeding has been included as an objective of the guidebook for the "Healthy Israel 2020" initiative. The guidebook was created by the Ministry of Health to lay out the Israeli policy of disease prevention and health promotion.

Table 18

The objectives defined specifically for the promotion of breastfeeding

	2000	Objective for 2020
Breastfeeding initiation rate	85%	90%
BF rate at 3 months	56%	75%
BF rate at 6 months	38%	55%
BF rate at one year	14%	25%
Exclusive BF rate at 3 months	25%	40%

Source: The Ministry of Health, National Health and Nutrition Survey, 2000.

503. A Breastfeeding Promotion Committee was established in 2001 with the purpose of further advancing the Ministry of Health's activities. The objective of the Committee is to continue encouraging breastfeeding. The Committee is composed of several representatives of different Departments in the Ministry of Health. The Committee has been successful in accomplishing the following:

- Provision of professional breastfeeding training programmes for nurses and delivery-room teams.
- Professional training programmes for nurses and dieticians in the Public Health Services.
- Organizing discussion forums for graduates of the above mentioned breastfeeding programmes.
- Publication of informational bulletins on the subject of breastfeeding for the general population.

- Provision of breastfeeding information for hospital staff conveyed by the World Public Health Organization.
- Setting up breastfeeding spaces in public places as a part of public service.
- Publication of a guide for Mother and Child Health Clinics and information on breastfeeding.
- Participation in various parliamentary committees engaged in encouraging breastfeeding.
- Encouraging public health services' personnel to attend an International Breastfeeding Course for Lactation Consultants (IBCLC) and obtain certification.
- Encouraging workers of the health and hospital services to support breastfeeding.
- Organizing a public campaign that promotes breastfeeding in the workplace (associated with Israeli Health Funds).
- Advertisements on the Ministry of Health website of: the "Baby-Friendly Work Place."
- Including the promotion of breastfeeding in the objectives of the Ministry of Health for the year 2020.
- Encouraging cooperation between the Civil Service Commission and the chairperson of the Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women in the Ministry of Health.

Road safety

504. In recent years, various Amendments concerning the safety of children were passed:

505. Amendment No. 80 to the Transportation Ordinance (New Version) issued on 8 February 2007, supplemented Section 65C. The Section stipulates that a person may not ride a bicycle and/or carry another person, unless they wear a safety helmet with a strap to prevent from loosening during the ride. A parent, a legal guardian, or the adult in charge, must prevent the minor from riding a bike with no helmet on her/his head while in their care.

506. An owner of a bicycle business must place a noticeable sign in her/his shop regarding the obligation to wear a helmet. For the purpose of this section, the term bicycle includes skateboards, roller-skates, rollerblades, and a motor scooter, while excluding a tricycle.

507. According to Section 83 to the Transportation Regulations only an authorized vehicle is allowed to transport children. Furthermore, children must sit down inside the vehicle: they can no longer remain standing while moving. The permission that once existed to seat three children in a seat designated for two children was abolished.

508. The duty to fasten children into a safety seat while in a vehicle has been expanded. A child under the age of three must be fastened into a baby seat. A child between the ages of three and eight must be fastened into an elevated seat which fits her/his height and weight. Above the age of eight, there is a general duty to fasten a safety belt (Section 83A to the Transportation Regulations).

509. In order to prevent the transportation of young children on motorbikes, it is prohibited to carry a person on a motorbike if her/his legs cannot reach the side pedals (Section 119 to the Transportation Regulations).

510. The legal Directives dealing with driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs have been expanded. The requirement of an exhalation test to determine if a driver is a drunk driver is legitimate even when there is no valid suspicion of drunkenness. The police officer at the scene has the discretion regarding whether to demand that the driver undergo an exhalation test. The saliva-test that determines intoxication is performed at the police station subject to the consent of the person.

511. In 2008, the Minister of Transportation approved a comprehensive reform for the qualification of drivers. This reform will enter into force in May 2010, and improves the level of driving schools and prolongs any probationary periods. For instance, the requirement that a mature driver accompany a new driver for her/his initial three months of driving following her/his receipt of a license shall be extended by three more months and a further three months with respect to driving at night.

512. The National Road Safety Authority was re-established in 2007 under new standards. It is a statutory corporation that was established due to temporary order, for a limited number of years. This authority practices road safety and acts to promote awareness among educational frameworks. These standards accord with the National Road Safety Authority (Temporary Order) Law 5766-2006 (the: "National Road Safety Law"). According to Section 6 of the Law, one of the duties of the Authority is to advise and assist the educational system as well as conduct research in the field of road safety.

513. The National Road Safety Authority carries out activities for the protection of children, as delineated below.

514. Involvement in determining the curriculum of the educational system – the Authority, together with the Road Safety Division in the Ministry of Education, develops, manages, and finances studies on the issue of road safety in kindergartens, elementary schools and high schools. Representatives of the Authority and the Ministry of Education lead committees that approve activities and presentations on road safety within educational settings. In 2008, the Authority succeeded in receiving the consent of approximately 98 per cent of high school principals to assimilate a grading system on the issue of road safety as a condition for receipt of a matriculation certificate. The Authority also boasts approximately twenty guidance centres for guidance regarding safe cycling. The centres are intended for fourth and fifth grade children across the country.

515. Coordinating with youth movements – the Authority conducts national campaigns on the issue of road safety by youth movements in coordination with the Council of Youth Movement in Israel.

516. "At High risk" – the Road Safety Authority Information Centers undertakes explanatory activities for the Bedouin population. Such activities raise the awareness concerning accidents 'around the home', the importance of fastening safety belts and wearing bicycle helmets while riding.

517. Media – the Road Safety Authority produces explanatory activities for children's television programmes, in playgrounds, and in locations where children frequently gather.

518. General research – the Road Safety Authority researches road accidents that involve children. The Authority studies the cause of these accidents and then seeks solutions to avoid their recurrence.

Accidents

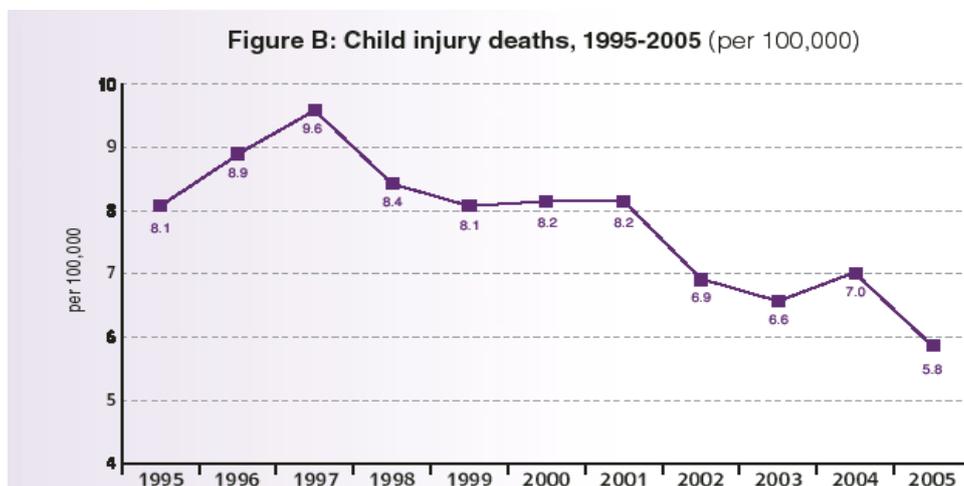

519. Approximately 2.3 million children between the ages of 0–17 currently reside in Israel. Child injuries result in approximately 150 deaths per year, 25,000 hospitalizations and 180,000 visits to emergency rooms. Half of Israeli children sustain injuries that require medical care. Such care is available within the community medical services.

Child injury trends in Israel

520. Over the past decade, injury-related mortality rates in children between the ages of 0–17 have decreased by 28 per cent, from 8.1 deaths per 100,000 children in 1995 to 5.8 deaths per 100,000 children in 2005.

Chart 1

Child injury deaths, 1995–2005

Source: 'Beterem', a special analysis of the Israeli Bureau of Statistic Data on Mortality, Unpublished (Mortality). 2005.

Causes of childhood injury

521. During the years 2003 and 2005, the leading cause of injury-related death in children aged 1 to 17 was road accidents. As for infant's aged up till one years old, half of the injury-related deaths occurred in domestic and playground environments, with the leading cause of death being choking/strangulation. The primary causes of injury-related death among children aged one to seventeen are: drowning, suffocation, falls, poisoning, fire/burns and firearm related injuries.

Injury by population groups

522. Between the years 1999 and 2005, injury-related mortality rates decreased in both Arab and Jewish children. In 1999, there were 12.3 and 6.7 injury-related deaths per 100,000 Arab and Jewish children respectively. In 2005, the injury-related mortality rate was 9.3 and 4.4 in Arab and Jewish children respectively (a 34 and 24 per cent decrease respectively). Injury-related mortality among Arab children is still higher when compared to injury-related mortality among Jewish children.

523. A report published by the Israel Medical Association Journal (IMAJ) in 2007, indicated that road accidents constituted the most frequent causes of mortality among children older than one year, and were second in causes of hospitalization. A secondary cause was found to be falls from high altitudes.

Sexual behaviour and birth control

Table 19
Live births among minors by age and religion in 2007

Religion	Total	Age
		14	15	16	17
Total		20	137	747	2 177
Jews	530	31		105	394
Muslims	2 371	12	102	602	1 655
Christians	23	-	-	23
Druze	22	-	-	-	22
No religion stated	134	10		38	86

Source: CBS, Central Bureau of Statistics, 2008.

Table 20
Unmarried girls up to the age of nineteen who requested authorization for pregnancy termination, by religion and number of previous induced abortions, 2006

Religion	All ages	Up to age 19
		Absolute numbers	Percentage	Rate per 1,000 for age group
Jews	14 818	2 215	79.5	11.3
Muslims	1 619	92	3.3	1.7
Christians	496	44	1.6	7.4
Druze	204	11	0.4	(2.0)
No religion stated	1 893	355	12.7	32.8
Number of previous induced abortions
0	-	2 229	80.0	-
1-2	-	412	14.8	-
3+	-	8	0.3	-

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, 2008. (Data based on estimates).

Emotional well-being

524. Suicide ranks as the second most common cause of death among children and youth in Israel, similar to other developed Western countries. The extent of the phenomenon of suicide and the attempts at suicide are not precisely known.

525. In order to understand and deal with the phenomenon of suicide among youth at the national level, the Inter-Ministerial Committee for the Prevention of Suicide among Youth has made great efforts with children and youth under the age of 24. The Committee includes representatives from various bodies and has prepared a suicide prevention kit for personnel working with children.

Table 21

Number of suicide attempts among children and youth in emergency departments, by age and gender, 1999–2007

Year	Boys					Girls
	Total	Total	Up to 9	10–14	15–17	Total	Up to 9	10–14	15–17
1999	469	124	5	24	95	345	1	59	285
2000	525	110	8	20	82	415	0	82	333
2001	484	99	3	12	84	385	4	108	273
2002	535	97	4	19	74	438	0	109	329
2003	621	135	3	32	100	486	1	133	352
2004	691	117	6	28	83	574	4	154	416
2005	694	148	5	34	109	546	1	147	398
2006	638	133	1	31	101	505	1	147	357
2007	685	128	7	40	81	557	0	158	399

Source: The Ministry of Health, Department of Health Information, 2008.

526. In 2007 there were 685 reported suicide attempts among children that resulted in their being brought to emergency rooms. Since 1996, there has been an increase of approximately 30 per cent in suicide attempts. This can be attributed to an improvement of the data collection system, rather than an increase in the number of suicide attempts. The rate of suicide attempts among girls is much higher than that among boys.

Dental health

527. Following a petition submitted to the Israeli High Court of Justice by the NGO Physicians for Human Rights – Israel (PHR) in March 2008, the Ministry of Health announced on 7 June 2009 that dental checks for every pupil in Israel between the ages of five and eighteen would be financed by the Government. The Ministry also declared that it would triple the budget of Dental Health Services by up to 30 million NIS (8,100,000$) per year. Pending this solution, dental checks were partially financed by local authorities (depending on their financial situation). The treatments that are funded by the Ministry of Health include routine checks, preventive treatments and guidance. It does not include dental treatments (the National Health Insurance Law). On 14 December 2009, the Israeli Government decided to include children's dental treatments within the State Medical Basket that is covered by the National Health Insurance.⁴

Traditional customs that may affect a child's health

528. Recent data indicates that over the last few years there were no reports of women who underwent female genital mutilation in Israel.

⁴ The Health and Welfare Committee gathered on 15 December, 2009 to discuss the Government resolution, see Protocol No. 158 and 166 dated 15 and 22 December 2009, respectively.

Preventive services for young children

Mother and Child Health Services (MCH)

529. In recent decades, the proportion of pregnant women making use of the MCH services as their principal source of prenatal care has declined dramatically – from close to 100 per cent in the mid-1980s to approximately 20 per cent of Jewish women and 50 per cent of Arab women as of 2002. Women opt to receive their prenatal care through State health insurance coverage, namely through their Health Funds or from their private doctors.

530. The MCH services remain essentially the sole source of Mother and Child Health Clinics. In 2006, approximately 145,000 infants received care at over 1,200 clinics that belong to the Ministry of Health, the Israeli Health Funds and two localities (Jerusalem and Tel Aviv). The Ministry of Health operated 44 per cent of the clinics and cared for approximately two-thirds of the infants. The Israeli Health Funds operated 50 per cent of the clinics, including many relatively small clinics in rural areas and cared for 20 per cent of the infants. All of the services operate under the supervision of the Ministry of Health and conform to the service guidelines promulgated by the Ministry.

531. In 2004, the Government of Israel approved an experimental plan for the responsibility of MCH services to be transferred from the Ministry of Health and municipalities to the Israeli Health Funds that are funded by the Government. In 2007, the Prime Minister decided to halt the pilot project and his decision was confirmed by the Government.

532. A new service was added to the Israeli Health Funds on 1 January 2009, a Metabolic Disease Screening for 11 diseases, which is performed for all newborns. This service is funded by the Ministry of Health and expands the former service that detected only Congenital Hypothyroidism and Phenylketonuria (hereditary disease PKU).

Vaccinations

533. New vaccinations were added to the childhood vaccinations schedule. Two doses of Varicella, an additional two doses of Pertussis and 2+1 Pneumococcal are scheduled in 2009.

Table 22

Children at age two who received inoculations, by population group and type of inoculation for the years 2003, 2005, 2006 (percentages)

Pop. group	DTP 4 doses			Polio IPV			MMR			Hep B		Hep A		Hib
	2003	2005	2006	2003	2005	2006	2003	2005	2006	2003	2005	2006	2005	2006	2005	2006
Total	93	93	95	93	95	94	96	94	96	98	96	98	90	84	93	94
Arab	97	98		97	97		98	98		100	96		96		98
Jews	91	91		91	94		95	93		97	96		88		91

Source: The Ministry of Health, Lewis Institute, Tel Hashomer Hospital, 2008, Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, 2009.

Table 23

The percentage of children in 1st, 2nd and 3rd grades who received routine vaccinations from the Association of Public Health, 2008

1st grade MMR		2nd grade IPV + dTaP		3rd grade dT
Abs.	%	Abs.	%	Abs.	%

	1st grade MMR		2nd grade IPV + dTaP		3rd grade dT
	Abs.	%	Abs.	%	Abs.	%
Candidates	136 199	100.0	138 206	100.0	117 158	100.0
Vaccinated	124 236	91.2	123 684	89.5	99 250	84.7
No need*	3 220	2.5	4 142	3.2	6 618	6.2
Refusal	1 306	1.0	1 376	1.0	1 130	1.0

Source: The Ministry of Health, Public Health Services, 2008.

* Children who did not need the vaccine or were already vaccinated.

Preventive programmes for special populations

The Ethiopian community

534. In 2006, there were approximately 27,000 Ethiopian-Israeli youth between the ages of ten to nineteen in Israel. 12,000 were born in Israel to immigrant parents and 15,000 were born in Ethiopia.

535. Israeli national data indicate that there are significant gaps in the educational results of Ethiopian-Israeli youth compared to the general population.

536. However, the country's 115,000 Ethiopian-Israelis are a particular priority and JDC's (American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee) chief PACT (Parents and Children Together) operate a programme designed to facilitate Ethiopian-Israelis' inclusion within the Israeli educational system. This programme tackles critical educational and social gaps between Ethiopian-Israeli children under the age of six and their veteran Israeli peers by promoting inclusion of every Ethiopian-Israeli child into a pre-school framework. The programme thereby, provides culturally sensitive support, and PACT assists the children to acquire social and cognitive skills that Ethiopian-Israeli parents who were in most cases raised in a rural society, cannot provide. This, in accordance with recommendation No. 20 of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child concerning Israel's previous periodic report, recommending that cooperation with NGOs and international organizations should be strengthened.

537. Since 1998, the city of Be'er-Sheva together with the Jewish Community PACT (Parents and Children Together) operates in fourteen locations. In 2007, over 11,000 Ethiopian-Israeli children and their parents benefited from PACT and the city's assistance to the community.

Science and technology

538. In the recommendation contained in paragraph 53 of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child it was recommended to increase the budget allocated for education in the Arab population. Accordingly, the Ministry of Science and Technology operates regional Research and Development Centers in Arab localities. Between the years 2003 and 2008, 4,307,984 million NIS (1,164,320$) were conveyed to the Galilee region and another 5,086,680 million NIS (1,374,778$) was transferred to a centre in the "Meshulash" (Triangle) region in the north of Israel. In addition, since 2005, 948,200 NIS (256,270$) have been transmitted to the regional centre for the Bedouins in the Negev.

539. The Ministry of Science and Technology also supports projects that promote Arab student's academic achievements. During the 2006/7 school year, 500 financial grants were awarded to Arab students. In 2007/8, an addition of 300 scholarships were granted, 50 per cent of which were to Arab students. During the 2008/9 school year, 700 scholarships were granted, 480 of which were to Arab students.

540. The Ministry of Science and Technology also allocated an exceptional budget in 2008/9 in order to establish two new centres for the teaching of science in the “Meshulash” region in the north of Israel. In the Galilee, the budget for the 2008 fiscal year was 1.5 million NIS (405,000$) per centre in addition to a new National Research Center which was opened for the Druze population and which was funded in the amount of 400,000 NIS (108,000$).

Table 24

Financial aid granted by the Ministry of Science and Technology between the years 2001–2008 (by million NIS)

Project	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008
Studies in regional research and development centres	0.699	0.317	0.093	0.441	2.548	0.495	1.95	1.258
Operating Arab-population research and development centres		0.67	0.536	0.536	0.536	-	-	-
Support for regional research and development centres	0.536	0.707	0.552	0.505	0.591	0.827	0.548	0.654
Support for Bedouin regional research and development centres	-	-	-	-	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.15
Supplying for regional research and development centres	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	0.94
Minorities scholarships	1.415	1.637	0.48	0.4	0.48	0.09	0.33	0.15
Inauguration scholarships	-	-	-	-	-	-	2.52	2.8
Psychometric test scholarships	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	0.5

Source: The Ministry of Science and Technology, 2008.

The budget for culture, entertainment and sports

541. The Ministry of Culture and Sports and the Ministry of Education provide financial aid to 850 artistic and cultural institutions, including children’s theatres, dance schools and choirs. Moreover, museums are recognized by law as beneficial and qualitative enrichment institutions for children. The State accepted the Holon Children’s Museum as such an establishment. The State encourages the conservation of Arab, Druze and Circassian traditions.

Table 25

The budget for Arab, Druze and Circassia culture 2001–2008

	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008
Arab culture	7 500	7 175	6 919	6 017	6 703	7 106	10 362	12 453
Druze and Circassian culture	2 026 NIS (547$)	1 919 NIS (518$)	1 874 NIS (506$)	1 653 NIS (446$)	1 593 NIS (430$)	1 638 NIS (442$)	2 075 NIS (560$)	1 866 NIS (504$)

Source: The Ministry of Culture and Sports, 2008.

Preventive services for schoolchildren

542. Preventive services for pupils are no longer provided directly by the Ministry of Health. This responsibility was outsourced in 2006 when the Ministry was replaced by a non-governmental organization. Dissatisfaction with the level of services led to the advertising of a public tender for the next five years, beginning in the summer of 2009. At this date, the provider of the service has not yet been chosen. (See: Preventive care and control of epidemics section B, above).

Psychiatric services

543. The Israeli child and adolescent mental health services are available in both inpatient and outpatient settings. These services aim to prevent developmental difficulties as a result of emotional problems. The services enable young people with mental disabilities to return rapidly to their daily lives.

544. Recent technological developments have introduced new drugs available as part of the National Health Insurance. The availability of treatment in the community environment contributes to the care of children and youth, as it allows young patients to remain in a familiar environment.

545. The psychiatric hospitalization system includes fourteen psychiatric hospitals. Eight of these are governmental, two belong to the Clalit Health Services Health Fund (the leading Israeli HMO), one is owned by a public non-profit organization and the remaining three are privately owned. There are also twelve psychiatric wards in the general hospitals. These wards specialize in treating all age groups.

Table 26

Children and youth admitted hospitalized, by gender, age and diagnosis (2005)

Diagnosis	Gender	Age		Total
		Up to 11	12–17
Total		155	856	1 011
	Males	129	454	583
	Females	26	402	428
Schizophrenia and delusional disorders	Total	9	123	132
	Males	8	76	84
	Females	1	47	43
Acute psychotic disorders	Total	10	99	109
	Males	8	67	75
	Females	2	32	34
Affective disorders	Total	4	149	153
	Males	4	55	59
	Females	0	94	94
Organic disorders	Total	3	11	14
	Males	2	9	11
	Females	1	2	3
Neurotic disorders	Total	15	95	110

Diagnosis	Gender	Age		Total
		Up to 11	12–17
Personality disorders	Males	10	32	42
	Females	5	63	68
	Total	2	51	53
Childhood disorders	Males	2	10	12
	Females	0	41	41
	Total	99	202	301
Drug and alcohol use	Males	83	127	210
	Females	16	75	91
	Total	1	15	61
Mental retardation	Males	1	11	12
	Females	0	4	4
	Total	8	17	25
Other	Males	7	9	16
	Females	1	8	9
	Total	4	94	98
	Males	4	58	62
	Females	0	36	36

Source: The Ministry of Health, Department of Information and Evaluation.

Education, health care and welfare in Jerusalem

546. There are 28 Mother and Child Health Clinics located in the Jerusalem municipal area. Among these clinics, there are four situated in the eastern neighbourhoods and 24 located in the western neighbourhoods. Since 2001, no additional centres have been opened. Additionally, according to the Jerusalem municipality's data, 407 social workers are currently employed in Jerusalem. 343 are allocated to facilities in the western neighbourhoods and 64 to facilities in the eastern neighbourhoods. Over the course of eleven years (1997–2008), fourteen kindergartens and 340 schoolrooms were added for the benefit of the residents of the eastern neighbourhoods of Jerusalem.

The Bedouin population

Environmental factors that affect health

Medical care and infrastructure

547. The medical facilities in the vicinity of Bedouin villages are fully equipped, Mother and Child Health Clinics are computerized, air conditioned and maintained in good condition.

548. The Ministry of Health operates special health services and Health Clinics for the Bedouin population in the Negev. The service includes an ambulance, run by the Bedouin population that resides in the Negev. The purpose of this service is to ensure an open gateway between the nearest hospital and the Bedouin community. This enables professional workers from nearby residencies to evaluate the living arrangements of patient's subsequent to their release from hospital. Such personnel can view the patient's sanitary living conditions prior to their release and provide recommendations accordingly. The cost of a visit to the Health Clinic is identical throughout the State.

549. There are 42,400 Bedouin Israeli children under the age of 6 (53 per cent) who live in Bedouin towns, whereas 47 per cent of Bedouin children live in unauthorized villages. In 2007, the Ministry of Health operated 27 Family Health Centers providing services to the Bedouin population in the Negev, in addition to 51 clinics operated by the various Health Funds.

550. There are 18 Mother and Child Health Clinics located in Bedouin villages. In addition six Mother and Child Health Clinics have been established within the illegal clusters. There are 32 Medical Clinics run by the various Health Funds located in Bedouin communities; nine of which provide services to the unauthorized Bedouin villages.

551. According to a large-scale study conducted by the Myers-JDC-Brookdale Institute during 2003–2005 in association with the Ben-Gurion University, the "Shatil" organization and the Council for Unauthorized Villages in the Negev, approximately 9 per cent of all Bedouin children in the Negev suffer from functional disabilities or chronic illnesses that require ongoing medical treatment and/or monitoring. This percentage is slightly higher than among the general Arab and Jewish populations in Israel (8.3 per cent and 7.6 per cent respectively).

552. For most types of disabilities, the proportion of children in the Bedouin population who suffer from the disability is higher than that among the Jewish population. The number of children in need of continual medical and paramedical treatment is higher in the Bedouin population than in the general Arab and Jewish populations (4.9 per cent, 2.8 per cent, and 2.1 per cent respectively). Furthermore, the percentage of sensory disability among Bedouin and Arab children is twice as great as that found among the Jewish population (2.0 per cent 2.2 per cent and 0.8 per cent respectively).

553. In March 2009, the Israeli NGO, Physicians for Human Rights, published a report regarding the absence of paediatricians in the unauthorized Bedouin villages. Since most of the Bedouin villages are unrecognized by the State, health services are not available to the inhabitants. Although eleven villages were recognized by the State in 1999, it was claimed that they were not yet receiving the services they are entitled to by law. Twelve clinics and eight Mother and Child Health stations are located in unauthorized villages, yet their working hours are limited. However, no paediatrician, gynaecologist or pharmacy was found within a reasonable radius of the area. According to the PHR report, based on data provided by Soroka Hospital, when compared to Jewish children, more Bedouin children approach emergency rooms, are admitted to the hospital and intensive care units, and die from disease. Consequently, many inhabitants turn to private health services or the Health Care clinics available in the large cities.

554. Some of the major improvements in the past decade in the field include improved immunization coverage of Bedouin infants in the Negev. Thus, there has been a significant decrease in vaccine-preventable infectious diseases; with the 2006 figures indicating that 90 per cent–95 per cent of Bedouin children have completed all necessary vaccinations by age three – a sizeable improvement compared to a rate of 27 per cent in 1981. Two mobile immunization teams managed by the Ministry of Health also provide home immunizations to infants in unauthorized Bedouin communities, whose families do not bring the infants to one of the Mother and Child Health Clinics for treatment. A computerized tracking system allows the Ministry of Health to identify infants who are behind on their immunization schedule and to send one of the mobile immunization teams to immunize them.

555. There has also been an important improvement in the growth of Bedouin infants and toddlers over the past two decades, indicating improved nutrition. Moreover, there has been increased compliance with recommendations for supplemental folic acid among Bedouin women in their fertile years, and a decrease in the incidence of open neural tube defects (NTD's) among Bedouin fetuses and infants. Unfortunately there are still high rates of congenital malformations and inherited diseases among Bedouin infants, due to multiple factors including the tradition of first-cousin marriages, as well as cultural-religious-social barriers to pre-marital and pre-natal screening for inherited diseases.

556. In 2007, the infant mortality rate among Bedouins decreased to 11.5 deaths for every 1,000 live births. The Government is continuing to open Mother and Child Health clinics in unauthorized villages and MCH centres to better serve the population.

557. Furthermore, the Government has been funding several special projects to improve the health and expand the health-care services provided to Bedouins living in unauthorized villages. One of these programmes is a special long-term intervention programme aimed at decreasing infant mortality among Bedouins. The programme is community-based and boasts a wide-consortium of participants, including representatives from the Bedouin community leadership and the educational system, along with providers of curative and preventative health care services, the Department of Health in the Community and the Department of Epidemiology in the Faculty of Health Sciences at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

558. The Government funds genetic testing and counselling for members of tribes which have a prevalence of serious inherited diseases. The diseases included in the funding scatter among the population in a 1:1000 relation.

559. There has been a sustainable decline in the incidence of infectious disease among Bedouin infants over the past decades. There is, however, generally a higher rate of infectious disease among Bedouin infants than among Jewish infants of the same age. Bedouin infants and children have lower rates of Pertussis, Tuberculosis and HIV infection. Furthermore, due to high immunization coverage among Bedouin infants, indicating improved access and utilization of preventive health care services, there have been no cases of measles since 1994 and no cases of poliomyelitis, diphtheria, congenital rubella, neonatal tetanus or tetanus in Bedouin children in the Negev since 1990. During the period 2000–2003, no cases of mumps were reported. Additionally only one to two cases of Homophiles influenza disease was reported in 2000–2002, and none in 2003.

560. Specialty physician services are provided to the Bedouin community in the Negev, including: Paediatrics, General Internal Medicine, Neurology, Family Medicine, Dermatology, Gynaecology and Obstetrics, Ear, Nose and Throat, Ophthalmology, Orthopaedics, Gastroenterology, Cardiology, Surgery and Trauma, Paediatric Surgery and Paediatric Pulmonary Medicine. In addition, every resident has equal access to all the specialty clinics at the Soroka University Medical Center, with no discrimination made between Bedouin or Jewish patients.

561. The Government, as well as the main HMO serving the Bedouin population, has made substantial efforts to train and recruit Bedouin physicians and nurses. The Government provided all the funding required for three classes of Bedouin students to complete their training as registered nurses, including funding their transportation to nursing school, a meal allowance during their studies, and special remedial lessons to assist those who needed it. The Government has similarly provided special funding to hire Arab physicians and nurses.

562. A course for qualified Bedouin nurses opened in 1994. It should be noted that students who participate in the course are committed to serving their first three years of practice after graduation wherever the Ministry of Health decides their services are needed.

This will guarantee that the trained nurses serve the target population: the Bedouins. In addition, the first female Bedouin physician in Israel, Rania al-Oqbi, recently completed her degree. She was part of the special “Cultivating Medicine in the Desert” programme, which is aimed at incorporating more Bedouin into the health services. Currently, six Bedouin women are studying medicine; 35 Bedouin women have completed degrees in various health professions; and 45 additional women are studying health sciences.

563. Seventy per cent of Bedouins live in planned, urban towns, with municipal infrastructure, including running water in every home (with the water in question meeting the Israeli standards for drinking water quality). The percentage of bacterially contaminated drinking water samples followed previous downward trends reaching 0.25 per cent in 2007 (7.6 per cent in 1990 and 1.9 in 2001).

564. Nearly 62,000 Bedouin live in illegal clusters throughout the Negev; these villages cause difficulties in terms of supplying the residents with necessary services, especially the provision of water. While the Government does not question its duty to supply its inhabitants with services such as water, it is practically impossible to supply it to sporadic destinations which disregard the national construction and planning programmes.

565. Nevertheless, until the completion of the establishment of permanent Bedouin towns and the regulation of water supply systems, the Ministerial Committee for the Arab Population has decided to build “Water Centers”.

566. Following this decision, instructions were given concerning the planning of water supply systems to several “Water Centers”. The Water Centers are part of the Government’s understanding of the needs and current realities of the Bedouin population and its efforts to improve their living conditions. The planning of the centres takes into account an amount of water suitable for the magnitude of the population expected in 2020, and the establishment of the centres is very costly.

567. These systems will enable the supply of water to a significantly larger portion of the Bedouin population, than the portion receiving a water supply today through individual connections. There are currently 5 Water Centers, which are located in the most populated areas of the Bedouin Diaspora, compatible with the Government’s plans for the establishment of permanent towns.

568. An additional method employed, is through direct water connections to the main water pipeline, granted to a minimum of ten families. Due to the problematic nature of these connections, which require the transfer of water to unauthorized villages, this method is less frequently used than in the past. The Water Committee, which evaluates requests for connections to pipelines, approves the connection to such a pipeline, as well as negotiates agreements in cases of disputes between residents of the Diaspora over ownership of such connections.

569. In addition, according to “Mekorot,” the Israel National Water Corporation, numerous pirated connections to pipelines are being made without the authorization of the Water Committee.

Case law

570. On 13 September 2006, the Haifa District Court (sitting in its capacity as a Water Tribunal) rejected an appeal filed by Adalah-the Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel (“Adalah”) on behalf of 767 Israeli-Bedouin living in the Negev’s Diaspora, demanding access to sources of water (D.C.H. Appeal 609/05, Abdallah Abu Msaed, et. al. v. The Water Commissioner). The appeal was submitted against prior decisions of the Water Commissioner, who had also denied these requests.

571. In its decision, the President of the Haifa District Court emphasized that while the case deals with connections to the primary water pipe, behind it lies the complex issue of the organization of “unauthorized villages”. The Court added that it is not disregarding the fact that all citizens possess the basic human right to water and health, which must be granted by the State in order to guarantee the right to dignity, but explained that, in its opinion, providing connections to the water mains is not the way in which to resolve the problem of unauthorized villages. According to the Court’s decision, the right to water is not absolute, but can be made conditional upon a “clear” public interest “not to encourage cases of additional illegal unauthorized villages”.

572. On 18 November 2006, Adalah submitted an appeal to the Supreme Court against the ruling delivered by the Haifa District Court.

573. In the appeal, Adalah argued that the Water Commissioner’s decisions to deny the petitioners the right to water were based upon improper and arbitrary considerations. Adalah asked the Supreme Court to overturn the decision of the Water Tribunal, and to order the provision of water access points via the existing main water distribution network.

574. Adalah further argued in the appeal that in reaching its decisions, the Water Commissioner relied entirely on the recommendations of the Water Committee, which is administered by the Bedouin Development Authority. To date, the appeal is still pending. (C.A. 9535/06, Abdullah Abu Musa’ed, et. al. v. The Water Commissioner and the Israel Lands Administration).

Air pollution

575. On 22 July 2008, the Knesset enacted the Clean Air Law, 5768–2008, which will enter into force on 1 January 2011 (the: “Air Law”). The purpose of this law is to prevent and treat air pollution by establishing an arrangement which enables the imposition of greater responsibility and obligation on the Government, local municipalities and factories.

576. Government Ministries are compelled, by this law, to establish a national monitoring station and to allow access to data. Each local authority is obligated to act in favour of reducing sources of air pollution in their municipality and facilities. A detailed course of action must precede any such operation. Instructions as mentioned are consistent with standard air pollution provisions in other developed countries. These provisions also accord with international organizations and the European Union recommendations and directives. (Section 19(c) to the Air Law).

577. Infecting and polluting factories listed in the Air Law’s third Appendix must ensure that they hold a valid emissions license. Factories that are not listed in the Appendix are subject to the conditions of the environmental protection legal terms described in their working license – operating contrary to the provisions of these Directives constitutes an illegal act. Factories that produce toxic waste are sources for air pollution, and hence must obtain authorization from the Minister of the Environmental Protection in order to operate.

578. The new Air Law grants the Ministry of Environmental Protection the authority to initiate Directives to prevent and reduce sources of air pollution. Sources of air pollution particles may also be discharged by vehicles, aircraft and fuel machinery. The Air Law empowers local authorities to act against pollution by imposing penal sanctions, and warrants, as well as seeking the assistance of the court. The Ministry of Environmental Protection has the power to take legal measures against corporations that violate the Directives. The Air Law determines that air pollution may carry criminal responsibility and liability for damages.

C. Article 26 – Social security

Case law

579. On 7 January 2009 the Supreme Court handed down its ruling in a petition submitted by the Association of Defense for Children International (DCI) (Israel) against the National Insurance Institute (NII). The DCI requested the translation of the NII forms into Arabic, which would enable the population living in the eastern neighbourhoods of Jerusalem to submit forms to the NII in Arabic, and for the NII to send letters and notices to the population of the eastern neighbourhoods of Jerusalem in Arabic.

580. The purpose of this petition was to enable the population residing in the eastern neighbourhoods of Jerusalem access to the social rights granted by the NII, as the majority of the population does not know Hebrew. The petition was submitted in 2001, at which point the NII committed to translate all of its forms. However, this commitment was not fulfilled, and in May of 2007, the Court issued a conditional order against the NII. In July 2008, the Court criticized the NII and ordered the NII to present, within 90 days, a concrete plan of action, together with a detailed schedule, regarding the translation of its forms. On 1 December 2008, a time schedule in which to translate the forms was presented to the Court. Furthermore, the NII confirmed that they would accept forms submitted in Arabic. Thus, the Court issued an order according to which the NII was required to complete the translation of the forms into Arabic, and to accept forms which were submitted to it in Arabic. However, the Court held that the demand that the NII send letters and notices in Arabic to the population of the eastern neighbourhoods of Jerusalem should not be granted, as translators were available in the offices of the NII should clarification be sought. (HCJ 2203/01 The Association of Defense for Children International (DCI) v. The National Insurance Institute (07.01.2009)).

Child allowance

581. In addition to the child allowance payments paid to families with minor children, school funding is granted by the NII to single-parent families with four or more children, in accordance with NII criteria for social security pensions. This funding is provided to children between the ages of six and fourteen, for the purpose of facilitating the purchase of annual school supplies. In 2008, approximately 145,500 children received a school funding grant, compared with 141,000 children in 2007. The grant comprises 18 per cent of the basic cost (1,323 NIS/ 357$ in 2008) for children between the ages of 6 and 11, and 10 per cent of the basic cost for children between the ages of twelve and fourteen (735 NIS 198$). The cost of the grant in 2008 amounted to 147 million NIS ($ 39 million). (See also Chapter V(A), above).

Maternity leave payments

582. For further details on Maternity Allowances see Chapter V (A), above).

583. In 2007 (the monthly average) the number of women who received maternity leave payments was 86,285. In 2008, (the monthly average) the number of women who received maternity leave payments was 93,630, constituting an increase of 8.8 per cent.

584. In 2008 (the monthly average) the number of woman who received childbirth grants increased by 3.3 per cent to a total of 152,319 recipients compared to 147,245 recipients in 2007.

Table 27

Number of woman who received maternity leave grants and childbirth grants (monthly average) between the years 1990–2008

Year	Recipients of maternity allowance (thousands)	Annual increase (%)	Recipients of birth grants (thousands)	Annual increase%
1990	43.7	0.5 (1986–1990)	103.6	0.5 (1986–1990)
1995	55.2	4.8 (1991–1995)	113.1	1.8 (1991–1995)
2001	71.2	0.8	127.1	-3.6
2003	73.9	3.5	136.4	6.1
2004	77.5	4.9	141.2	3.5
2005	77.0	-0.6	142.9	-
2006	82.7	7.3	143.6	0.5
2007	86.0	4.1	147.2	2.5
2008	93.6	8.8	152.0	3.3

Source: The National Insurance Institute, Annual Survey 2008.

Dependence allowance

585. Section 135 of the National Insurance Law stipulates that once a widow remarries she is entitled to receive two benefit payments, but forfeits her claim to the monthly dependence allowance. It should be noted that the Law defines the term “wife” (and therefore someone who marries) as including a women who cohabitates with a man and who is jointly responsible for the household.

D. Article 27, paragraphs 1-3 – Standard of living

586. As mentioned in Israel’s initial report, the right to enjoy an adequate standard of living is well recognized in Israeli society and under the Israeli legal system, under which the Judiciary, Executive and Legislative branches are all committed to pursuing the fulfilment of this right.

587. A prominent example of the State’s adherence to provide people with an adequate standard of living can be found with respect to the NII and its activities, which are designed to guarantee that forsaken segments of the population and needy families, who find themselves facing temporary or long-term difficulties, will have a financial basis which will ensure an adequate level of existence. The NII services, described in further detail above, are equally accessible to the various populations in Israeli society.

588. The courts in Israel continue to play a pivotal role in the protection of the right to enjoy an adequate standard of living. The issue of minimum standards of living was addressed by the Supreme Court, residing as the High Court of Justice, in a petition filed by the Commitment to Peace and Social Justice Association – (HCJ 366/03, The Commitment to Peace and Social Justice Association v. The Minister of Finance (12.12.2005)). In its ruling, the Court emphasized that while the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty does create an obligation for the State to ensure human dignity, it does not guarantee an absolute guarantee of social rights. In this regard, however, the State is obligated to maintain a ‘safety net,’ which is designed to ensure that the condition of the underprivileged does not deteriorate to one of existential deprivation, in the sense that they would suffer from a shortage in food, or a lack of shelter, sanitation, health care services and such.

589. On 14 March 2008, the Jerusalem District Court determined that in order to ensure the receipt of child support payments, a parent may take action to receive a stay of exit order against the second parent when there is evidence which suggests that the second parent intends to violate their obligation to pay child support.

590. In the relevant case, the Court determined that the right of a child to receive child support derives from two separate rights – the right to dignity and the right to property. These rights override the right of the father, who is obligated to pay child support, to travel abroad even when he is a permanent resident elsewhere. The Court stressed that when dealing with a child, the opinion of the Supreme Court, as reflected in its rulings, is that the right of the child to fulfil his physical and material needs is a fundamental right deriving from the right to human dignity which is enshrined in the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty.

591. According to the Court, the right of the child to receive child support is stipulated in article 27 of the Convention, according to which the State is required to recognize the right of a child to enjoy a standard of living that is adequate for the child's physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development. The Court emphasized Article 27(2) of the Convention, as imposing the primary obligation of care for the child on the child's parents.

592. The Convention, although not anchored in internal legislation, constitutes an important interpretative instrument, which can be used in balancing the constitutional right of the father to travel abroad with his obligation to provide for his children tilts the aforementioned balancing act in favor of the obligation to provide for one's children. (M.A. 3284/07 Merav Pelman et. al. v. Erez Pelman (14.03.2008)).

Poverty

593. The year 2000 witnessed a slight decline in the incidence of poverty in Israel. The percentage of families, whose net income (after transfer payments and the payment of direct taxes) was below the poverty line, fell from 17.8 per cent in 1999 to 17.6 per cent in 2000. In 2002, there was no change in the incidence of poverty. In 2003, following reductions in several Social Security Benefits and a tax reform, the scope of poverty in Israel increased. A further increase occurred in 2004. The figures for 2006, as well as the results of a survey conducted in 2007, indicate a slight decline in the rate of poor families in Israel (20 per cent in 2006 and 19.9 per cent in 2007). As of June 2008, 20 per cent of households in Israel were considered to be living below the "poverty line." The poverty rate among individuals and among children has declined — in 2007, 23.8 per cent of individuals were considered to be poor, in comparison with 24.5 per cent in 2006. With respect to children — as of June 2008, 34.1 per cent were considered to be below the "poverty line" compared to 34.2 per cent in 2007, and 35.8 per cent in 2006.

594. As of June 2008, the rate of poverty among large families (households with at least four children) increased to 58.1 per cent, in comparison with 56.5 per cent in 2007, and 60 per cent in 2006. A similar reduction also occurred among Arab families who comprise a significant proportion of the families with four children or more – 51.4 per cent in 2007, in comparison with 54 per cent in 2006. However, gaps remain in the incidence of poverty among the Jewish and the Arab populations.

595. In 2007, 24.8 per cent of families with children lived under the poverty line, a decline in comparison with the rate of 25.5 per cent in 2006. As of June 2008 the rate had declined to 24.7 per cent.

The extent of poverty among different groups

Table 28

The incidence of poverty in different groups in 2007 (per cents)

Group	Incidence of poverty among children
Total population of children	34.2
Families with 1–3 children	18.4
Families with four or more children	56.5
Families with five or more children	66.7
Single-parent families	29.8
Immigrant families	18.8
Arab families	51.4

Source: The National Insurance Institute, Annual Survey 2008.

Table 29

The incidence of poverty among children, 2004–2007 (percentages)

	After transfer payments and direct taxes	Incidence of poverty (%)	After transfer payments only	Incidence of poverty (%)	Before transfer payment and direct taxes	Incidence of poverty (%)
2004	713 600	33.2	632 100	29.4	881 600	41.0
2005	768 800	35.2	686 500	31.4	899 600	41.1
2006	796 100	35.9	718 600	32.3	921 900	41.5
2007	773 900	34.2	697 700	-	901 000	39.9

Source: The National Insurance Institute, Annual Survey 2007.

Table 30

Children in different groups living below the poverty line or removed from poverty by transfer payments and taxes in 2006 (percentages)

Children in	After transfer payments and direct taxes	After transfer payments only	Before transfer payments and direct taxes
Total population	796 100	718 600	921 900
Incidence of poverty (%)	35.9	32.3	41.5
Single-parent families	74 400	71 400	113 400
Incidence of poverty (%)	37.9	36.3	57.7
Immigrant families	73 300	65 900	98 500
Incidence of poverty (%)	27.3	24.6	36.8
Large families	501 400	457 000	546 500
Incidence of poverty (%)	62.3	56.8	67.9
Small families	294 700	261 600	375 400
Incidence of poverty (%)	20.9	18.5	26.5

Source: The National Insurance Institute, Annual Survey 2007.

The right to adequate housing

596. The 2006 survey of household expenditure indicated that 69.5 per cent of the heads of households owned their place of residence, while approximately one-quarter of them rented their place of residence.

597. There has been a consistent improvement in housing conditions over time, with the percentage of three or more people per room declining steadily. Arab households are more crowded than Jewish ones. In 2007, approximately 6.1 per cent of Arab households lived with over three persons per room, compared to 0.4 per cent of Jewish households. This is in part due to differences in family size.

The Bedouin population

598. There are more than 170,000 Bedouins living in the Negev desert area. Most of those live in urban and suburban towns, which have been legally planned and constructed. All existing towns have approved plans and include infrastructure such as schools, clinics, running water, electricity, etc.

599. There are several existing Bedouin towns in the Negev: Laqiya, Hura, Kseife, Arara, Tel-Sheva and Segev Shalom, in addition to the city of Rahat. Although the seven existing towns can effectively provide a proper solution to the Bedouin population's needs, subject to their expansion, the Government decided that a further nine new towns should be established for Bedouins. The first additional town to be constructed is "Tarabin," situated in the Bney-Shimon District Council area and designated for the members of the Tarabin El-Sana tribe. The first stage of this town's development has been finalized, with most of the lots having been distributed and hundreds of residents already populating the town. Each of the families received developed land for construction and an agricultural piece of property. The new town was planned jointly with its inhabitants, as a modern town offering educational services, underground infrastructure, and health services. The town extends over a territory of 1,132 dunams, designated to be home to approximately 3,500 people by 2020.

600. Additional towns that are in the process of planning and development include: Abu Krinat — located on 7,320 dunams, which is intended to accommodate around 15,000 people by 2020; and currently (in its first stage of construction) consists of 1,300 lots and an industrial centre. Bir Hadaj — an agricultural town located in an area of 6,550 dunams, and which is designated to accommodate approximately 12,500 people by 2020. Kasar a-sir- located in an area of 5,000 dunams and which is intended to accommodate approximately 8,000 people by 2020. The other towns to be established are Makchul-Marit — for which a detailed plan of 2 neighbourhoods was approved in September 2005, and a detailed plan for a third neighborhood is currently being prepared and which is intended to cover an area of 6,300 dunams, and to accommodate approximately 12,000 people by 2020; Um Betin — for which a master plan was approved in March 2005, and which is located on 6,700 dunams, and is designated to accommodate approximately 8,000 people by 2020; Moleda — for which a master plan was approved in March 2005, and which is located on 11,000 dunams; and Darijat. The names of these towns were chosen by the Bedouin population. In addition, the Government is in the process of expanding thousands of units in the existing towns.

601. As such there are nine new towns planned. Of those Tarabin is currently populated and 100 new houses have been built; Abu Krinat and Bir Hadaj are under construction; and Kasar A-Sir, Marit (Makhol), Darjat, Um Batin, Mulada and El Seid are all in the planning stages. A further three towns — Ovdar, Abu Tlul, and El-Foraa — are in the process of receiving statutory approval: A regional council has been established for five of the new towns. It is called "Abu Basma," and was officially founded on 3 February 2004.

602. Moreover, in two different resolutions adopted in April and September of 2003, the Government formulated a comprehensive plan for the advancement of the Bedouin population, including investments of 1.1 Billion NIS ($0.29 Billion) in the improvement of infrastructure, and the establishment of public institutions over the next six years.

603. Following lessons learned from past planning committees, the planning authorities carried out this task while in constant consultation with Bedouin representatives, who provided input as to their vision of every town's desired character depending on such characteristics as whether the town was to be built for an agrarian or an urban population and whether the town was planned for a group who requires a strict separation to be maintained between the various tribes who will populate it.

604. On 15 July 2007, the Government adopted a resolution concerning the establishment of a new Authority in the Ministry of Construction and Housing, intended to deal entirely with development in the Bedouin Population, including the expansion of towns, and the provision of housing solutions for all Bedouins.

605. Despite the establishment of a number of permanent towns for the Bedouins, approximately 70,000 Bedouins still choose to live in illegal clusters of buildings throughout the Negev, and ignore the planning procedure of Israel's planning authorities. This illegal building is carried out without any plans, as required by the Planning and Building Law, and with no pre-approval from the planning authorities. In addition, it causes many difficulties in terms of the provision of services to residents.

606. The Government encourages the movement of those living in unauthorized villages to permanent towns by providing unique financial benefits to all the residents of the Bedouin Diaspora who seek to move to permanent towns, regardless of their economic condition or of any entitlement test. These benefits include, inter alia, provision of land plots for free or at a very low cost, and compensation for the demolition of illegal structures.

607. An Advisory Committee for the Policy regarding unauthorized villages was established on 28 October 2007 by Government Resolution No. 2491.

608. The Committee's task, as set forth by the Government in the aforementioned Resolution, is to present recommendations regarding a comprehensive, feasible and broad-spectrum plan which will establish the policy for regulating unauthorized villages in the Negev, including establishing rules for compensation, mechanisms for the allotment of land, civil enforcement, a timetable for the plan's execution, and proposed legislative Amendments, where needed.

609. The Committee submitted its final recommendations to the Government, which began to enforce them through Government Resolution No. 4411 dated 18 January 2009.

610. On 18 January 2009, the Government confirmed resolution No. 4411 after a full examination of the committee's report. The government accepted the committee's recommendations as a basis for arranging the housing situation of the Bedouins in the Negev, and appointed a professional cadre comprised of representatives of Government Ministries, the Israel Land Administration, and the Attorney General. The cadre is intended to submit a detailed and implement-able outline for the fulfilment of the Government Resolution.

611. In addition, in 2007, the proper authorities began the planning procedures for the Beer-Sheva Metropolis district plan (No. 23/14/4). The plan seeks to regulate the planning of the entire Negev area, with consideration being afforded to the needs of the population, any relevant restrictions, environmental concerns etc. Several objections have been submitted to the Courts regarding the abovementioned plan, none of which have yet been ruled upon by the Court.

612. Currently, the implementation team is in the final stages of completing the detailed governmental plan for the regulation of unauthorized villages in the Negev. The Plan is based on the recommendations of the Goldberg Committee for the Regularization of the Bedouin Housing Situation in the Negev (the: “the Goldberg Committee”) and on intensive work that was conducted in the past year and included consultations with representatives of various segments of the Bedouin community and the consideration of remarks made by civilian organizations with respect to the Committee’s report.

613. Note, that in its current work, the team attempted to formulate an extensive regulatory shift in the law with respect to land ownership and the development of physical and social infrastructures. To that end, the necessary systems (both legal and implementing) for the establishment of new localities, for the development of existing localities and for the settlement of law suits, are now being created.

VII. Education, recreation and cultural activities

Education (arts. 28 and 29)

614. On 27 June 1997, the former Minister of Justice appointed the Rotlevi Committee. One of its six Sub-Committees, which was engaged in education, focused on two aspects:

- (a) Pupil’s rights; and
- (b) Equality and the right to an education.

615. The Rotlevi Sub-Committee examined the Pupil’s Rights Law and found that the existing law did not fully accord with the rights established in the Convention. Thus, the Sub-Committee formulated a bill that extended the rights of pupils, in order to render them compatible with the spirit of the Convention. The Bill was implemented through the adoption of two supplementary Amendments to the Pupil’s Rights Law (both Amendments are detailed throughout this Report).

616. The intention of the Sub-Committee was to promote reciprocal respect between pupils and teachers. In addition, the Sub-Committee’s recommendations encouraged the non-violent resolution of conflicts. The Sub-Committee emphasized the importance of equal opportunity for access to qualitative education. One can only guarantee such equal opportunity if a right to this effect is framed as part of the law, and includes rights unique to children, such as the right to maintain personal relationships with parents, the right to individuality, and the right to an education.

617. The following are the central aspects of the right to education recommended by the Sub-Committee.

618. The premise of the Convention is that a child is considered to be an autonomous being, with rights and responsibilities. This contrasts with the paternalistic outlook accepted until such time as the Convention was adopted, and which focused on the protection of children and on responsibilities borne towards them, rather than on the protection of their rights. The basis for the right to education is grounded in a child- centred approach which views various issues from the child’s perspective, while focusing on her/his future and her/his best interests. Investing in qualitative education for all children enhances the sense of equality among pupils.

619. Each local municipality ought to guarantee the well being, health, security and safety of its pupils. Pursuing this objective requires the taking of active measures to protect children, thereby ensuring their right to the best possible education and personal growth.

620. The Sub-Committee emphasized the benefit derived for children who are involved in the decision-making process in matters affecting their school life. In this context, Section 8 of the Sub-Committee's recommendations determined that a child's welfare must be the first and foremost consideration in all actions or decisions taken regarding pupils. The Committee underlined the importance of pupils' participating in proceedings that jeopardize their rights. The Committee also recommended that certain rights are taught to pupils at school, including:

- (1) The right of pupils to freedom of expression and opinion, within school activities and in any disciplinary proceeding involving the minor.
- (2) The right of access to information.
- (3) The right to privacy.
- (4) The right to associate and assemble, for instance in legitimate demonstrations and pupils' gathering.
- (5) The right to individuality – pupils are entitled to develop and demonstrate their independent way of thinking in school activities and after hour frameworks.
- (6) The right to freedom of religion and conscience – pupils have the right to practice their religious beliefs, so long as the practice involved is compatible with their school schedule.

621. The Committee also recommended establishing the following mechanisms within every educational institute:

- (1) Formal mechanisms that examine the infringements of pupil's rights.
- (2) Disciplinary committees.

622. The Sub-Committee's recommendations regarding equality in education are as follows: The Sub-Committee discussed the inequality in the education of children, problems in education, problems stemming from gaps in the provision of education to Arab children and poor children, paying special attention to the issue of violence against children and among youth, the importance of early childhood education and the rights of children in the education system. The Sub-Committee noted that placing all pupils in educational institutions is not nearly enough; hence the Government, through its municipal authorities, must assure that every institution provides qualitative education, allocated equally to all children living in Israel.

623. According to the Sub-Committee, qualitative education is based on four measures: accessibility (physical and economic), availability (of educational resources), correlation (between the education and its aims) and compatibility (pupils and community needs). The Sub-Committee recommended that the Minister of Education formulate a policy of 'Reverse Discrimination'. This policy would give precedence to pupils as individuals and as members of minority groups. The intention of the policy was to rectify a continual state of deprivation, inequality and deficiency in pupil's rights.

624. The Sub-Committee recommended various actions which should be taken so as to eliminate discrimination among pupils. The absence of an equal measure of educational opportunity for children is perhaps the major problem; the Sub-Committee emphasized the importance of striving for the best interest of the child, respect for children's views, and the right of the child to develop to the maximum extent possible, preferably as part of a heterogenic group of children. Such a heterogenic group of children is a feature of equality that facilitates and promotes non-discrimination.

625. In the recommendation contained in paragraph 53 of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child it was recommended to strengthen its affirmative action programmes in the Arab population. Whereat, the Sub-Committee recommended reinforcing and furthering the involvement of the Arab population in the educational system by determining a quote of impartial and proper representation of the Arab population within the Ministry of Education.

Education in Arab localities

626. The Ministry of Education is constantly investing great efforts in the promotion of education in Arab localities, in order to bridge the gaps which currently exist between the Jewish and the Arab populations. During the 2009/2010 school year, the Ministry took additional measures in pursuit of this purpose:

- Operating new programmes for the Arab kindergarten and elementary school population, in order to improve the children's fluency in their native tongue.
- In order to promote pupil's achievements in international and national subjects, the Ministry of Education added three school hours per day to every elementary school located in Arab localities and eight hours to every seventh grade classroom (a total sum of 37 million school hours). Moreover, the Ministry of Education allocated an additional 195 days and 5,236 school hours for lessons in Arabic, mathematics and science.
- The programme "Ofek Hadash" (New Horizon) has been gradually implemented in all Israeli schools since 2008, and is currently implemented fully in 216 of the 390 (55 per cent) Arab elementary and junior high schools. In addition, 210,000 supplementary school hours are allocated to the Arab educational system in the course of this programme.
- During the 2007/8 school year, nine schools in the north and 31 in the south were included in the "New Horizon" reform, followed by six schools in the north and seventeen in the south in the 2008/9 school year. This reform is intended to provide pupils with poor performance levels an opportunity to improve their performance and to fulfil their potential.
- Approximately 140,000 Arab and Bedouin pupils benefit from the "Karev Program" for Educational Involvement, a joint initiative of the Ministry of Education and the "Karev Foundation." This foundation aims towards achieving an educational-social change within Israeli society by means of enrichment activities and reinforcement of the education system.
- The State financed warm meals for approximately 122,000 pupils who study for extended hours (see: Government resolution No. 2342 of 1 August 2004).
- 400 new teachers were added to the Arab Educational System.
- A five year plan for the promotion of the education of the Arab population added hundreds of thousands of school hours to schools including kindergartens, amongst which 25,000 hours are dedicated to studies for matriculation exams only. Professionals were trained and placed at 200 schools, along with 150 educational advisors, and learning centres for psychometric tests (the equivalent of the scholastic aptitude test (SAT)) were established for 500 pupils.

Case law

627. On 20 August 2007 the Be'er-Sheva District Court residing as an Administrative Court, held that the taking of tests in order to determine the placement of first-graders in special schools (such as art schools, etc.) for the school year 2007–2008, contravened the directives of the Ministry of Education. The Ministry Director General's specific Directives prohibit the affording of unequal opportunities to children of the same age group.

Furthermore, since the petition to disqualify the tests in question was received in close proximity to the beginning of the school year, accepting the petition would result in harm to the children who took the tests and passed. Therefore, the Court stressed the prohibition against taking these tests. However, the Court determined that until the Ministry of Education determined guidelines clarifying the criterion for first-graders to qualify for special schools, the results of the testing, namely those who passed and had been accepted, would remain unchanged. Annuling the results would cause greater harm to the children who were already accepted to the schools in question for the 2007–2008 school-year, and the petitioner's son would have to study in a regular school near his place of residence. (Ad. P. 327/07 Gordon Michal et. al. v. The Municipality of Ashkelon et. al. (20.08.2007)).

Education in Bedouin localities in the south

628. The Bedouin population in the Negev consists of eight local authorities: Abu-Basma, Hura, Lakia, Kseifa, Arara, Rahat, Segev Shalom and Tel-Sheva. In 2009, there were 72,460 pupils in the education institutions of the Bedouin population in the Negev, in comparison with 45,117 pupils in 2001. Since 2001 there has been an increase of approximately 70 per cent in the number of educational institutions established in Bedouin localities in the Negev. During that time there was a decrease of 4 per cent in the number of Jewish educational institutions established.

Table 31

Number of pupils and education institutions in the southern Bedouin population, 2009

Local authority	Kinder-gardens		Elementary schools		High schools		Special education schools		Total institutions per authority	Total pupils per authority
	Pupils		Pupils		Pupils		Pupils
Abu-Basma	132	3 854	26	432	4	837	-	-	162	19 114
Hura	45	1 337	5	2 557	3	1 977	1	92	54	5 963
Lakia	33	910	4	2 339	2	1 642	-	-	39	4 891
Kssaife	35	1 004	5	3 230	2	2 464	1	65	43	6 763
Arara	39	1 131	6	2 798	2	1 865	1	58	48	5 852
Rahat				10
	102	2 898	16	920	4	4 455	1	126	123	18 399
Segev Shalom	29	715	4	2 488	2	2 083	-	-	35	5 286
Tel-Sheva	49	1 343	4	3 075	3	1 775	-	-	56	6 193
Total		13		41		17
	464	192	70	830	22	097	4	341	560	72 460

Source: Ministry of Education, the Southern Educational locality, 2009.

Table 32

Number of educational institutions in the southern district between the years 2000–2009

Population	Education phase	Education phase
		2000	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Jewish		1	1 148	1 128	1 132	1 114	1 094	1 084	1 093	1 129	1 130
	Kindergarten	130	(+18)	(-20)	(+4)	(-18)	(-20)	(-10)	(+9)	(+36)	(+1)

Population	Education phase
		2000	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Total	Elementary school	274	277 (+3)	271 (-6)	271 (0)	269 (-2)	267 (-2)	261 (-6)	260 (-1)	260 (0)	263 (+3)
	High school	113	122 (+9)	122 (0)	95 (-27)	100 (+5)	94 (-6)	93 (-1)	97 (+4)	95 (-2)	99 (+4)
	1	517	1 547 (+30)	1 521 (-26)	1 498 (-23)	1 483 (-15)	1 455 (-28)	1 438 (-17)	1 450 (+12)	1 484 (+34)	1 492 (+8)
Arab	Kindergarten		263 (+65)	317 (+54)	365 (+48)	398 (+33)	413 (+15)	445 (+32)	461 (+16)	452 (-9)	459 (+7)
	Elementary school	198	53 (+2)	55 (+2)	55 (0)	56 (+1)	66 (+10)	70 (+4)	73 (+3)	76 (+3)	79 (+3)
	High school	13	15 (+2)	18 (+3)	20 (+2)	21 (+1)	20 (-1)	20 (0)	22 (+2)	22 (0)	23 (+1)
Total			331 (+69)	390 (+59)	440 (50+)	475 (+35)	499 (+24)	535 (+36)	556 (+21)	550 (-6)	561 (+11)

Source: The Ministry of Education Southern region, 2009.

629. In 2000, the Southern Department in the Ministry of Education began to implement a five-year plan for promoting the education system in the Bedouin population. The plan includes bridging gaps between the Bedouin population and the Jewish population. The purpose of the plan is to achieve better results in school, improve school environments and prevent violence. The plan also trains educators; extends teaching hours, improves learning techniques, improves the quality of construction, and provides missing technological equipment.

Table 33

The plan for promoting the education in Bedouin localities in the south – activities and budget (NIS) during 2007–2009

Subject	Activity	2007 budget	2008 budget	2009 budget	Total budget
Promoting pupils' achievements	Supervising pupils' achievements	1 038 000	151 204	-	1 189 204
	Reinforcing core studying subjects	4 300 300	3 086 500	3 770 000	11 156 500
	Developing teleprocessing skills	840 000	-	-	840 000
Training educators	Educators' professional development	540 000	400 000	570 000	1 510 000
	Localities accompanists	-	-	90 720	90 720
	In-service trainings	450 000	189 000	254 700	893 700
	Training and qualifying educational advisors	1 400 000	-	-	1 400 000
Supplying	Reading books for 1th–2th grades	821 100	-	-	821 100
	Upgrading science labs and technology	856 000	759 500	-	1 615 500

Subject	Activity	2007 budget	2008 budget	2009 budget	Total budget
Total sum		10 245 100	4 586 204	4 685 420	19 516 724

Source: The Ministry of Education Southern region, 2009.

630. In recent years, the Ministry of Education carried out various activities for children of all ages. These activities included the promotion of Arabic, Hebrew, English, mathematics and sciences learning skills as well as computerizing the school learning environment.

631. In addition to the expended five-year plan, the Ministry of Education is involved in a serious effort in order to prevent Bedouin children from dropping out of school. The Ministry of Education operates several educational treatment centres for youth at risk or minors outside the education framework. These services locate potential dropouts, conduct workshops for parents, and insist on the use of teaching methods that accord with the pupils' needs. The drop-out rate in the Bedouin population in the Negev has decreased from 9.4 per cent in 2004 to 6.7 per cent in 2008.

Training for professional personnel

Guidance Counselors

632. Between 2004 and 2008, three training courses for Guidance Counselors were opened: two in the North and one in the South.

633. In addition, two classes of Learning Functions Diagnosticians were opened, one in Sakhnin College (north), and the other in Be'er-Sheva (south) – both within the framework of the Open University.

Psychologists

634. Additional positions for psychologists were allocated, yet a shortage of positions per pupils and of educational psychologists persists.

Special education frameworks

635. Four special education schools and 25 kindergartens currently serve the Bedouin population in the South, as well as three Regional Support Centers. In 2008, two additional regional support centres were opened, as well as ten classes in primary schools. In addition, all primary and intermediate schools received additional reinforcement teaching hours.

636. In the North – a new school for severe intellectual disabilities was established, as well as six special education kindergartens. In addition, four classes in secondary schools were added, as well as 3,000 hours of integration.

Table 34

Dropout rates in the southern Bedouin population between the years 2003–2008 (percentages)

School year	National	South District	The Bedouin population in the South
			Bedouin boys	Bedouin girls
2003–2004	4.3	4.5	9.4	9.4	9.4
2004–2005	3.6	3.8	8.3	9.3	7.2
2005–2006	4.4	4.8	8.4	9.6	7.0
2006–2007	3.6	3.6	6.7	7.5	5.9
2007–2008	3.1	2.8	6.7	8.3	5.1

Source: The Ministry of Education Southern region, 2009.

Table 35
The budget for establishing classrooms between the years 2002–2007

Year	Total classrooms	Classrooms in the Bedouin population in the South	Rate of Bedouin pupils out of the total pupils
2002	3 265	182 (5.6%)	2.79%
2003	455	6 (1.3%)	2.98%
2004	778	110 (14.1%)	3.1%
2005	1 283	35 (2.7%)	3.27%
2006	1 312	119 (9.1%)	3.41%
2007	1 573	183 (11.6%)	3.57%
Total	8 666	635 (7.3%)	-

Source: The Ministry of Education Southern region, 2009.

Elementary and secondary education

637. Since the submission of Israel's initial report, there has been a slight decrease in attendance rates in the Arab population, from 78.9 per cent to 77.6 per cent. There has also been a decrease in attendance rates among the Jewish population, from 94.5 per cent to 85.6 per cent.

Table 36
Attendance rates of pupils aged 14–17 at high schools under the surveillance of the Ministry of Education by population (percentages)

Year	Jewish population	Arab population
2001/2–2002/3	85.0	76.1
2002/3–2003/4	84.8	76.0
2003/4–2004/5	85.2	75.8
2004/5–2005/6	85.4	76.7
2005/6–2006/7	85.6	77.6
2006/7–2007/8	85.6	77.6

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstract of Israel, 2003–2008.

Legislation

Compulsory education

638. During the reporting period, the Compulsory Education Law was amended several times.

639. A 2001 Amendment issued on 7 August 2001 stipulated that the principal of an educational institution shall inform the director of the education department in the local authority and the relevant Ministry of Education personnel, with respect to a pupil registered in an educational institution who does not regularly attend, or with respect to a pupil who was enrolled in the institution in a given school year, and did not enrol in the same institution the following year. Furthermore, a pupil may be removed from school permanently on account of scholastic achievements only in accordance with the regulations stipulated by the Minister of Education.

640. A 2002 Amendment, issued on 2 July 2002 stipulated that a local authority (the “sending authority”) should fund the schooling of a child or adolescent residing in its territory, in an education facility in another local authority (the “receiving authority”), provided that the intended educational facility does not exist within the sending authority’s territory. The Amendment further stipulated that the sending authority must locate the nearest educational institute to the child’s place of residence, unless determined otherwise by the Minister of Education, and must decide having taken into consideration public transportation arrangements.

641. The Rotlevi Educational Sub-Committee recommended the funding of preparatory courses for the psychometric test for pupils from the lower echelons as part of the compulsory education programme.

642. The Rotlevi Educational Sub-Committee also recommended a right to school transportation under the following conditions (as previously mentioned, most of the Rotlevi recommendations have already been implemented):

- (1) The distance for which the authority is obliged to provide transportation must be reduced with respect to localities where there is no public transportation.
- (2) Safe service and bus-stations for transportation on expressways must be established.
- (3) The obligation to provide transportation for 11th–12th grade pupils who study outside their localities should be extended.

643. An Amendment issued on 19 December 2005, stipulates that a principal of an educational institute shall report to the appointed person in the Ministry of Education, regarding any incident of physical violence either between a teacher and a pupil, or between pupils, which caused physical damage. The principal shall report the incident immediately after it has occurred, together with the consequences of the incident, including disciplinary measures taken.

644. In 2007, The Compulsory Education Law, was amended in order to broaden its scope and extend compulsory education to youth between the ages of fifteen and seventeen (inclusive) – the 11th–12th grades. Prior to the Amendment, education in the 11th–12th grades was free, but not compulsory. With the aim of protecting youth during this vulnerable stage in life from negative influences, and in order to prepare them and provide better tools to them for their successful integration as productive adults in society in the future, the Government decided to make the 11th and 12th grades compulsory. Another desired effect of the Law, is a decrease in drop-out rates and removal of pupils, by requiring the provision of solutions within the education system for all pupils falling within this age group. The Law is to be fully implemented by 2009 for pupils attending the 11th grade and by 2010 for those attending the 12th grade. This Amendment shall enter into force in a gradual manner, by the year 2011 it is expected to be fully implemented.

645. Amendment No. 28 to the Compulsory Education Law, issued on 5 June 2007 supplemented Section 12d of the Law. This Section stipulates that in a recognized educational institution, the teaching of basic skills to first and second grade classes should take up at least ten hours of weekly teaching time, and should be conducted in a framework where the number of pupils per teacher does not exceed 20. These basic skills include basic reading, writing and mathematics. This provision is to be gradually implemented over a period of four years.

Free education

Case law

646. The National Parent Association petitioned the Supreme Court to address the issue of parental school payments (see Chapter I above). Parental payments are divided into four different categories: compulsory payments, non-compulsory payments, voluntary purchase payments, and payments for additional educational programmes. The Compulsory Education Law mandates free education for all between the ages of three and fifteen. Section 6 of the Law creates exceptions to the right to free education, and qualifies the imposition of compulsory and non-compulsory payments. Over the years, several compulsory payments have been transferred into the category of non-compulsory payments. Additional educational programmes include aid in problematic subjects during afternoon hours, and are subject to the approval of the district supervisor. These programmes are optional – parents who lack the means for such programmes or do not wish for their child to participate in them are not obliged to make the relevant payment. HCJ 6914/06 The National Parents Association v. The Ministry of Education, Culture and Sports, et. al. (14.08.2007).

647. Payments for additional educational programmes are regulated by Section 8 of the National Education Law 5713-1953, but are not subject to the approval of the Knesset Education, Culture and Sports Committee. Voluntary purchase payments are intended to save money by centralizing the purchase of products or services (including school-books, school uniforms, etc.) and require the approval of the school supervisor as well as the parents of all pupils in need of the service.

648. The Ministry of Education determines the rate of all four of these payments for each school year through a process of consultation with several bodies, including the Union of Local Authorities in Israel (ULAI). After the rate of these payments is determined, the Knesset Education, Culture and Sports Committee must approve them. The Ministry then publishes the rates of payments and schools are prohibited from collecting payments exceeding these rates.

649. The petitioner requested that all four categories of payments be subject to the approval of the Knesset Education, Culture and Sports Committee. The State argued that in past years, the payments were not properly divided into their different categories, thus complicating the Committee's approval process. However, the State confirmed that the Knesset Education Committee approved the payments required by law (i.e., the compulsory and the non-compulsory payments) and received reports regarding the two other categories of payments, in keeping with its obligation to supervise the Ministry of Education.

650. The Court declared that the law regarding free education is crucial for the actual realization of the right to education for every child. Free education reflects the value of equality in education and aims to provide all children with equal educational opportunities. It also decreases the financial burden imposed on parents as well as serving to restrict extra curriculum programmes and services parents are financially obliged to bear.

651. The Court held that the Ministry acted in accordance with the law, which does not require it to present the voluntary purchasing payments and payments for additional educational programme to the Committee for approval. The Court acknowledged the tension between non-compulsory payments on the one hand, and the difficulty facing the educational system when parents wish to invest more in their children's education (especially with regards to extra-curricular programmes), on the other.

652. The Tel-Aviv District Court, while residing as an Administrative Court, ordered the Municipality of Holon to fully subsidize the cost of school books and school transportation for a child whose father had passed away and whose mother was mentally ill and deeply in debt. The municipality did not contest the unfortunate financial status of the mother, but rather contested the order on the basis of its inability to fully subsidize the child's needs due to the existing obligations of its municipal welfare department. Although the Court found no deviation from the law or procedures relevant to the issue at hand, it declared that it is within its power to issue a remedy in the interest of justice because of the importance of the principle of free education. Thus, the fact that a remedy was not provided for anywhere in the relevant statutes did not prevent the Court from fashioning an adequate judicial remedy. The Court determined that the right to education is essential for every child in order to fully realize their skills and abilities, and emphasized that the parents' financial difficulties should not preclude the child from receiving an education. (Ad.P (Tel-Aviv) 2402/05 Anonymous v. The Ministry of Education et. al. (13.06.2006)).

Extended school day and enrichment programmes

653. Due to budgetary constraints, the gradual implementation of the Long School Day and Enrichment Studies Law 5757-1997 (the: "Long School Day and Enrichment Studies Law"), detailed in Israel's initial report, is to be completed only in 2014.

654. Section 3 of the Daily Meal for the Pupil Law 5765-2005 (the: "Daily Meal for the Pupil Law") stipulates that each pupil will receive one warm meal per day, which meal will accord with a well-balanced and varied menu which will be determined by the Ministry of Health, and will take into consideration the age and needs of the pupils.

655. The Daily Meal for the Pupil Law is to be gradually implemented. The Minister of Education, in conjunction with the Minister of Finance, will determine the population of pupils regarding which the Law will be implemented each year (Section 4).

656. The Ministry of Education and the local municipalities fund the nutrition service. The Daily Meal for the Pupil Law permits the local municipality to collect participation payments from parents, yet it requires the Minister of Education's consent to do so. The parental participation payment will be determined by the Minister, according to socio-economic standards and in the framework of payments stipulated under the Compulsory Education Law.

Special education

Regional support centres

657. The Special Education Law is implemented in the same manner with respect to every Israeli child between the ages of 3 and 21. There are 68 regional support centres in the educational system, 53 dispersed throughout Jewish localities, eight scattered in Arab localities, four in Bedouin localities and three in Druze localities. However, every centre provides services to all populations living within its region. The centres are responsible for supporting children with disabilities in both official and unofficial institutes. The centres are also used as sources of information.

Table 37

Average number of students per class, by population

Year	Total	Average students per class
		Jewish population	Arab population
2001/2	26	26	29
2002/3	26	26	29
2003/4	27	26	30
2004/5	27	26	30

Year	Total	Average students per class
		Jewish population	Arab population
2005/6	27	26	30
2006/7	27	26	30
2007/8	27	26	30

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstract of Israel, 2002–2008.

658. The accelerated development in the number of classes has not matched the increase in the number of pupils; consequently, the average number of pupils per class has risen slightly, from 26 in 2001–2003, to 27 since 2003. Although the average number of pupils is higher in Arab localities, the average number of pupils (29–30) per class in Arab localities has remained stable during the past decade.

Table 38

Level of education among teachers, by education systems (percentages)

Education framework	Jewish education system	Arab education system
Elementary schools
University degree	56.7	52.9
Senior	19.4	19.9
Certified	4.2	4.7
Uncertified	4.0	3.9
Secondary schools	-	-
University degree	46.7	62.6
Senior	8.7	4.7
Certified	3.7	3.6
Uncertified	2.5	3.0

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics Statistical Abstract of Israel 2008.

659. During the 2008–09 school years, 73.0 per cent of the elementary school teachers and 84.4 per cent of the secondary school teachers in the Hebrew education system were university graduates, compared to 77.4 per cent and 86.4 per cent, respectively, of their colleagues in the Arab education system.

Work force in the education system

660. In 2007/8, 83 per cent of all of the teachers in the Arab education system had an academic degree, compared with 86 per cent of their Jewish colleagues. Breaking these figures down, 73 per cent of elementary school teachers and 87 per cent of secondary school teachers (including intermediate schools) in the Arab education system had an academic degree, compared with 70.5 per cent and 86 per cent, respectively, of the elementary and secondary school teachers (including intermediate schools) in the Jewish education system.

Training for educators

661. There are 61 colleges in Israel for training educators, not including Universities. There are twelve State colleges, thirteen Religious State colleges; eight Arab designated colleges and 28 ultra-orthodox designated colleges. The eligibility requirements for educator's training in the field of special education are the same for all population groups.

The minimum requirement needed to enter a special education course is a matriculation certificate and a psychometric score.

Boarding schools

662. There are approximately 600 boarding schools in Israel. There are 280 educational boarding schools supervised by the Ministry of Education, 60 State boarding schools, 120 Religious-State boarding schools and 100 ultra-orthodox boarding schools. There are 40,000 teenagers between the ages of twelve and eighteen who reside in educational boarding schools, a third are girls and two-thirds are boys. A little more than half (22,000) are financed by the Ministry of Education. There are approximately 150 Bedouin teenagers in educational boarding schools, in addition to the 50 youth that arrived over the course of the last year from Sudan and were placed in those schools.

Health services for pupils

663. The Ministry of Health and the State Association for Public Health, with the cooperation of the Ministry of Education, provide health services for pupils. These services are consistent with Section 21A of the National Health Insurance Law and Directive 5768/1 (September 2007) of the Director General of the Ministry of Education. The health services include routine checks, vaccinations, preventive treatments, guidance and supervision by physicians and nurses.

Table 39

The distribution of health services for pupils

Population	Allotted days/manpower	% of pupils of the population group
Jewish	57%	56.8%
Arab	22.07%	19.7%
Ultra-orthodox	13.4%	15.66%
Bedouin	4.88%	5.49%
Druze	2.58%	2.31%

Source: The Ministry of Education, the pedagogy – Health supervision department, 2009.

Education for infancy

664. The Compulsory Education Law applies to children from the age of three years old. The Law is implemented in accordance with the State's budget. In 2009, the rate of children aged 3 to 4 who studied in kindergartens which are State-financed was 49 per cent (39 per cent in the Jewish population, 80 per cent in the Arab and Bedouin population, and 62 per cent in the Druze population).

Table 40

Rate of participation of children aged 3 to 6 in institutions of the Ministry in 2009

Age	Jewish	Arab-Bedouin	Druze	Total
3	66%	56%	95%	64%
4	87%	64%	97%	81%
5	94%	86%	97%	92%
6	13%	2%	3%	10%

Source: The Ministry of Education, the pedagogy – elementary education department 2009.

Table 41
Distribution of pupils by classrooms and populations, 2009

Population group	Elementary school (pupils)	Elementary school (classrooms)	Junior high school (pupils)	Junior high school (classrooms)	High school (pupils)	High school (classrooms)
Jewish	577 747	23 032	264 597	10 205	253 661	10 077
Arab	160 306	5 541	72 597	2 459	55 272	1 956
Druze	18 132	688	8 450	297	7 203	265
Bedouin	47 942	1 694	18 678	624	11 592	417
Circassian	-	-	142	8	-	-
Total	804 127	30 995	364 464	13 593	327 728	12 715

Source: The Ministry of Education the pedagogy – elementary education department 2009.

Prevention of dropout

665. During the 2008–2009 school year, the rate of high school pupils who dropped out of school (9th–12th grades) was 4.3 per cent (19,333 out of a total of 444,843 pupils). The total dropout rate of pupils between the first and twelfth grades was 2 per cent (28,947 out of a total of 1,454,777 pupils). The Ministry of Education operates an internal unit of officers who regularly visit schools in order to prevent children from dropping-out of school. The Ministry of Education has a special department aimed at maintaining school attendance and preventing children from dropping out of school. This department works in accordance with the Compulsory Education Law (Section 4) and as part of the policy of the Ministry of Education. Currently, there are 498 attendance officers, of which 369 operate in Jewish localities (including 37 within the Ultra-Orthodox population), 96 in Arab localities, seventeen in Bedouin localities and sixteen in the Druze localities.

Table 42
Dropout rates between 7th–12th grades in school year 2008–2009

Population group	Total pupils	Number of dropouts	In %
Jewish	515 414	16 039	3.1
Arab	122 201	5 738	4.7
Bedouin	28 209	2 110	7.5
Druze	15 238	434	2.8
Circassian	134	2	1.5
Total	681 196	24 323	3.6

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, 2009.

Table 43
Preschool attendance rates among different age groups, by population groups in the 2006–2007 school year (percentages)

Age	Jews	Arabs
Total	84.4	68.0
2	54.5	12.3
3	89.8	74.3

Age	Jews	Arabs
4	95.5	83.3
5	99.6	99.7

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, 2008.

High school dropout rates

666. In 2007, a total of 20,085 (4.5 per cent) of the pupils in grades 9–12 dropped out of the education system. 12,958 (3.7 per cent) of the pupils in grades 9–12 dropped out of the Jewish education system compared with 7,127 (7.2 per cent) of the pupils in the Arab education system.

Table 44

Percentage of 17 year old pupils eligible for a matriculation certificate, by population and selected demographic characteristics, 2001–2006

Characteristic	2001	2003	2005	2006
Total population	55.1	56.4	53.8	53.4
Jewish population
Total	55.6	57.4	55.1	54.9
Gender: Boys	49.3	51.2	49.9	49.5
Girls	61.9	63.3	61	61.0
Ethnic origin (parents' birthplace)
Israel	57.2	58.2	56.1	56.2
Asia-Africa	51.0	54.3	51.4	50.9
Europe-America	57.1	61.8	59.7	59.3
Arab population
Total	52.2	50.7	47.2	46.3
Gender: Boys	44.3	41.8	39.2	36.5
Girls	58.8	58.3	54.2	55.3
Religion:
Muslims	50.3	49.2	44.9	43.7
Christians	68.5	63.9	63.9	60.9
Druze	50.2	48.8	50.3	54.6

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, Statistical Abstract of Israel, 2003–2008.

667. The percentage of Jewish pupils aged 17 who were eligible for a matriculation certificate decreased from 55.6 per cent in 2001 to 54.9 per cent in 2006. The percentage of Arab pupils aged 17 who were eligible for a matriculation certificate decreased from 52.2 per cent in 2001 to 46.3 per cent in 2006.

668. The matriculation rate of girls is significantly higher than that of boys: 61 per cent of girls in the Jewish population and 55.3 per cent of girls in the Arab population received a matriculation certificate, compared to only 49.5 per cent and 36.5 per cent of the boys, respectively according to 2009 Statistic Abstract Report of Israel, 2009 (issued by the Central Bureau of Statistics).

669. According to data collected in 2007, and based on a division of the towns in Israel into ten socio-economic clusters: 9.2 per cent of 12th grade pupils in clusters 1-2 (towns with the lowest socio-economic status) were eligible for a matriculation certificate; compared to 74.6 per cent of those in clusters 9-10 (towns with the highest socio-economic status) in Jewish localities. 43.8 per cent of 12th grade pupils in clusters 1-2 were eligible for a matriculation certificate compared to 52.5 per cent in clusters 7-8 (the highest status) in Arab localities.

Programmes that help pupils matriculate fully

670. The Ministry of Education implements many programmes to assist weaker pupils and increase their chances of completing all matriculation examinations. To increase the proportion of pupils eligible for a matriculation certificate, the Ministry of Education acts in four ways: it encourages pupils to take matriculation examinations; it provides intensive assistance to pupils who need it; it creates post-secondary continuing education frameworks; and it pays for pupils, who lack only one or two examinations, to study to complete their matriculation. The Ministry has earmarked resources to be allocated to schools, which take an initiative in this regard, to use at their own discretion.

Alternative education frameworks for weaker pupils and pupils with adjustment difficulties

671. Over 68 vocational schools are scattered throughout the country. Most of the schools provide three or four years of education (from the 9th or 10th grade through the 12th grade). Approximately 13,000 students, or 3 per cent of all youth, aged 14 to 17 attend such schools.

Special and therapeutic alternative frameworks

672. Youth Centers and Education Centers, operated by the Department of Education and Social Welfare Departments of the Ministry of Education, serve youth who have dropped-out of the regular education system. Youth Centers combine academic study and vocational training in a relatively intimate framework. At present, 44 centres serve approximately 8,000 youth.

673. The HILA Program (Learning Together Programs for Youth At-Risk and Dropout Prevention) is a structured learning programme developed by the Youth Advancement Department of the Ministry of Education. The Ministry of Education grants a formal certificate to pupils who complete 8, 9, or 10 years of education in this framework. Some 2,500 youth participate in this programme at 60 centres.

Children's rights in the education system

674. See details above.

Commercial activities

675. On 31 December 2007, the Knesset enacted the Prohibition on Commercial Activity in Educational Institutions Law 5767-2007. According to this Law, a principal of an educational institute (including kindergartens, special education institutions, and schools) shall not allow the carrying out of the following activities by publishers and service providers, including manufacturers who operate in the school area.

- (1) Entrance for advertising purposes, sale promotion and marketing, exposure of products or providing commercial services, for any reason whatsoever, during the operating hours of the education institution.

- (2) Presentation of commercials in any manner.
- (3) Distributing commercial publications or gifts, arranging raffles or making pupils sign papers, during the operating hours of the educational institution.
- (4) Using learning aids for publication or sales promotion.
- (5) Receiving identifying details about pupils or their families from pupils.

676. Furthermore, according to the Law, whoever received information on pupils or their family members, in the course of fulfilling her/his duty or in the course of working in an educational institute, shall not transfer these to an advertiser or to a service provider. This section does not detract from the confidentiality obligations established by law.

677. The Director General of the Ministry of Education, upon receiving a request by a principal of an educational institute, may authorize an abovementioned activity, for reasons that must be recorded. The authorization may be for a specific matter or for a general period.

The integration of the “Ole Hadash” (new immigrants) and youth into the education system – special efforts taken by the education system

678. Awareness of the educational, social, economic and other, unique difficulties that confront new immigrants has led the education system to make special efforts to integrate this population. Specifically, the education system has taken the following steps:

- It has opened additional classes in schools that the children attend until they are ready to be integrated into regular classes
- Weekly teaching hours have been added, including extra hours of Hebrew language dependent subjects
- Dispensation has been granted to make matriculation examinations easier and more accessible, for example by allowing new immigrants to be examined in their native language
- It has also allowed immigrants to choose the language of their country of origin as their second language of study
- It offers immigrant pupils special seminars and summer sessions that include Hebrew learning by means of learning concepts in the Israeli culture, Judaism and Jewish heritage
- It has instituted programmes that ease the absorption process

679. In addition, the Ministries of Education and the Department of Immigrants Absorption finance the cost of education — e.g., schoolbooks, field trips, cultural activities — which are usually covered by parents.

680. The steps taken further include additional remedial teaching hours; tutorial assistance during the school day and in the afternoon, provided by IDF soldiers/teachers and programmes that combine studying and socializing, such as the Shalhevet Project (integration of immigrants through social activity) and Project 75 (a system-wide project for absorbing immigrants).

681. Recognizing the unique difficulties that face children whose parents came from Ethiopia, the Ministry of Education has made care of these pupils a top priority, allocating further resources for their absorption than for that of other new immigrants. The primary pre-requisites for Ethiopian pupils are the extension of the period of eligibility for remedial study hours (an additional 1.75 hours of teaching per week) allocated to the school that has absorbed the pupils, and a financial grant to purchase schoolbooks and other school aids.

Children whose parents originate from Ethiopia receive more hours of education than new immigrant children from other countries do, and also receive subsidies for school supplies and expenditures for a longer period of time.

Social integration

The Arab education system

682. In 2006, there were approximately 656,000 Arab children up to the age of seventeen (specifically 570,000 Muslims, 46,000 Druze and 39,000 Christians) constituting 27.7 per cent of all of the children in the State of Israel. In 2006, children in the Arab population represented 28 per cent of all elementary school children and 23.3 per cent of all secondary school children.

The structure of the education system

Early childhood education

683. In 2007, 68 per cent of Arab children aged 2 to 5 attended early childhood education frameworks, compared to 84.4 per cent of Jewish children of similar ages. The difference in attendance rates is evident in all age groups (see table below). While nearly 55 per cent of Jewish children age two attended preschools, only 12 per cent of Arab children aged 2 do so. There is a decrease in this gap as the children get older, and at age five, the attendance rate is nearly the same in both Jewish and Arab localities.

The education system in Bedouin localities

684. As aforementioned, in concluding observation No. 53 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child it was recommended to increase the budget allocated for education in the Arab population. According to the multi-year plan, a special budget was allocated towards establishing additional educational facilities in Bedouin localities in both the North and the South. As part of the Ministry of Education's plan to advance the educational framework in Bedouin localities, funding was allocated towards establishing and upgrading science and computer laboratories. Educational counsels providing assistance to school principals in preparing the school's work plan and funding allocated reinforcement hours for pupils in need at all levels of education, in order to reduce academic gaps, including raising the rate of entitlement to matriculation certificates.

685. In addition, a programme for training Bedouin teachers and assisting them in the first stages of their employment was initiated in order to reinforce the teachers' status and to improve their pupils' achievements. To date, 165 teachers have participated in the programme. An additional training programme for the improvement of the teaching staff in secondary education was also initiated in cooperation with the Ben-Gurion University.

The Bedouin population in the south

686. Since 2004, three High Schools have been established in unauthorized villages in the Negev – Abu-Krinat, Al-Huashlla and Bir-Hadge. The schools contributed greatly to the significant reduction in dropout rates, especially among Bedouin girls, whose parents previously prohibited them from attending school, due to the distance of the school from the village and religious and cultural barriers. Construction of new High School classes in Kasar-a-Sar is in final stages.

The 'Daroma' (South) Program

687. In 2004, the Ministry of Education commenced a programme to improve educational achievements among exceptional pupils in the 10th–12th grades. The “Daroma” program now operates in five Bedouin High-Schools (approximately 300 pupils). The purpose of the programme is to advance these pupils in Mathematics and English, develop their learning skills and prepare them for the psychometric test required for enrolment in higher education institutions. The pupils participate in courses in academic institutions such as the Ben-Gurion University. The programme also focuses on self-empowerment and activities within the community and for its benefit. A similar programme commenced in 2009, in the Abu-Basma municipality and in Tel-Sheva in the South. A comparable programme entitled “Heznek Atidim,” is also operated in the North.

688. An extra-curriculum activities programme is also operated in the Bedouin localities in the Negev, in conjunction with the Ministry for the Development of the Negev and the Galilee, and the Israel Association of Community Centers. The programme provides scholarships for extra-curricular activities for children in the 4th to 6th grades in the Negev.

Higher education

689. In 2008, the Ministry of Education announced its intention to grant Bedouin students studying engineering, technology and science with tuition grants and scholarships in the amount of 5,000 NIS each, for the upcoming academic year. The scholarships were intended to further encourage Bedouin students to enrol in and complete higher education.

690. In accordance with Government resolutions No. 412 and No. 413 dated August 2006, the Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women grants scholarships for female Bedouin students in the north, as well as for Druze and Circassian female students. In 2007/8, 75 scholarships were granted. The Authority recently published an announcement calling upon Bedouin, Druze and Circassian women to submit applications for the upcoming year.

The status of the Arabic language and culture

691. See Chapter VI (C) — article 26 of the Convention — Social security and HCJ 2203/01 The Association of Defense for Children International (DCI) v The National Insurance Institute (07.01.2009), above.

692. In 2006, a proposal for the establishment of an Academy of the Arabic language was submitted to the Knesset. In the first meeting held by the Knesset Education, Culture and Sports Committee on the matter, it was acknowledged that in order to give proper expression to Arabic as a formal language of the State of Israel, an Academy of the Arabic language was necessary. It was also thought that other academic institutions in Israel would benefit from the establishment of this Academy, and the new institution would improve Arabic education and the teaching of Arabic in Israel.

693. The High Institute for the Arabic Language Law 5767–2007, was the basis for the establishment of the Arabic Language Academy in December 2007. The Arabic Language Academy’s functions include the publishing reports of its activities, relations with the Hebrew Language Academy and advising the Ministry of Education and the Institute of Higher Learning regarding Arabic Language issues. The Arabic Language Academy is also in charge of researching Arabic and its cultural and historic resources, promoting the study of terminology, grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation and transcription. The Academy also addresses the current linguistic computerized reality. According to the Law, the Institution’s activities are State-funded.

Informal education in schools

694. This issue was discussed in Israel’s initial report. No change has occurred in this area since the submission of Israel’s initial report.

695. According to the Gym Regulations (License and Supervision) (Training Minors in a Gym) 5765–2005, a trainer qualified to train minors (“trainer”), will not train minors under the age of six in a gym. Furthermore, a gym shall not allow a minor under the age of six to train in a gym, unless undergoing physiotherapy with a physiotherapist.

696. In addition, the number of minors a trainer can train simultaneously is eight trainees between the ages of six and fourteen or fifteen trainees between the ages of fourteen and eighteen when teaching aerobics or using instruments; and five trainees between the ages of six and fourteen and ten trainees between the ages of fourteen and eighteen when training with free weights.

697. The trainer must maintain eye contact with all of the trainees during the entire duration of the training session. The gym must also comply with safety standards.

The budget for culture, entertainment and sports

698. In 2007, the national expenditure on culture, entertainment and sports was 5.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. Households paid for 84.4 per cent of this expenditure. 60.7 per cent of the expenses were for cultural services – theatre, movies, concerts, sports events, internet, gambling, etc. The remainder was used to purchase products.

699. In 2007, of the total national expenditure on culture, recreation and sports, 9.4 per cent was spent on cultural heritage, literature and visual arts. 21.5 per cent was spent on music and performing arts, 22.6 per cent on radio, television, cinema and photography, 10.2 per cent on socio-cultural activities. 23.7 per cent was spent on sports, games, computers and internet, 5.8 per cent on gambling nature and environment, and 4.9 per cent was spent on “fixed capital,” which is a business or personal capital that can be used repeatedly without changing form or ownership.

700. The Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Culture and Sports financially assisted 300 artistic and cultural institutions, projects, and initiatives in culture and the arts, as well as initiated activities country-wide and helped ethnic groups preserve their culture. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of Culture and Sports also promoted cultural relations and exchanges between Israel and other countries.

Cultural institutions that hold activities for children

701. The Public Libraries Law (“Public Libraries Law”) requires the State to establish public libraries in Israel, as well as school and other libraries. Subsequent to several Amendments from the years 2002, 2003 and 2007, Section 5 to The Public Libraries Law now obligates the Ministry of Finance to partake in the maintenance and the administration of the public libraries, with an inclusive rate of 50 per cent, according to the conditions and criterions set by the Minister of Finance. Such funding is progressive and will be completed by 2013.

702. The above-mentioned Amendments were enacted as a response to the Supreme Court’s decision regarding the interpretation of the Public Libraries Law in H.C.J 2376/01 The Union of Local Authorities in Israel v. The Minister of Science, Culture and Sport (21.10.2002). The Court held that the services offered by public libraries must be provided by the State for free to the public at large on the basis of equal opportunity for all citizens of all ages to gain knowledge and education regardless of their economic background. The Court emphasized the public library’s special role in shaping the younger generation and exposing it to culture. The Court also highlighted the implication of the UNESCO Public Library Manifesto of 1994, which emphasized the importance of public library services, including the encouragement of reading habits among children. Therefore, the Court held that there is a close connection between free library services and the State’s obligation to assist the local authorities in funding and establishing library services.

The role of the media in the promotion of children in an educational life

Television

703. The Ministry of Education is responsible for the content aired on Israel Educational Television (hereinafter: IETV). The IETV teaches a variety of topics, including arts, culture, sciences and variety of topics. It increases children's involvement in schooling, interest in fine arts and bringing children up-to-date on intellectual matters. Its curriculum includes spreading the Jewish culture and the Jewish tradition. IETV broadcasts "learning programmes" throughout morning hours, intended for school children spending time outside a school framework. IETV televises enrichment curriculum programmes, family programmes, current events and other educational series. IETV, in collaboration with the Counseling and Psychological Services of the Ministry of Education (Shefi), dedicates a week each year to raising awareness of the prevention of sexual violence. During that week, a daily programme regarding the prevention of sexual violence is aired. IETV refers annually to International Children's Day by broadcasting programmes that emphasize the importance of a child's right to wellbeing – such as short movies directed by UNICEF.

704. The Israeli television curriculum provides a daily News Edition appropriate for children and youth (entitled: "The Edition"). The programme enables children to actively participate as hosts, interviewers and field reporters. This programme is engaged in cultural affairs, entertainment, national and international reports, environmental issues, nature and science, sports, internet, press and the like. The purpose is to provide the youth with important information which will attract them to partake in social activism.

705. Private Cable television companies also air channels for children, which air programmes for children, such as scientific, cultural and educational programmes produced by assorted countries. Furthermore, the Open University in Israel broadcasts educational programmes on the radio and television. The Second Authority for the Television and Radio, in cooperation with the Ministry of Education, makes an effort to expand children's learning skills. To this end, particular learning materials are prepared for elementary schools, and teachers are trained as to how to promote over-achievement among pupils. Documentaries are filmed at high-schools and summer camps for gifted pupils. Israeli television and radio programmes are broadcast in five languages: Hebrew, Arabic, English, Russian and Amharic.

Radio

706. The Israeli Broadcasting Authority initiates special projects to promote the participation of children in cities' cultural life. Radio "Kol Israel" — a leading radio station — undertook a project involving 48 radio stations that broadcast in different educational institutions, colleges and Universities. This project has functioned for fifteen years, and has engaged the youth in the promotion of human rights issues, freedom of expression and freedom of the press. The project also assists with the integration of youth into society, as well as the admission of children into child protected employment. Radio network "A" allocates a daily hour to the live broadcasting of youth, thereby enabling them to choose the content in accordance with the relevant law. These Radio programmes are aimed at educating and interviewing youth of different backgrounds. Radio network "B" widely covers any event of violence against children and discusses matters regarding children's rights.

The institutional infrastructure of cultural life in Israel

The National Council for Culture and Art.

707. On 12 November 2002, the Knesset enacted the Culture and Arts Law 5763-2002, which created the National Council for Culture and Art as an advisory body assisting the Minister of Culture and Sports, as well as other Government bodies, in issues relating to arts, culture and the financing of cultural institutions. The role of the National Council is to promote and initiate policies and programmes encouraging art and culture, ensuring freedom of creation and the expression of the cultural variety of Israeli society. The National Council is required to suggest multi-year policy plans in the fields of art and culture, including the financing of institutions in these fields. The council was established in 2004.

National Library

708. On 26 November 2007, the Knesset enacted the National Library Law 5768-2007, declaring a library at the Hebrew University as the National Library. Prior to the Law, the library in question at the Hebrew University performed as a de-facto national library but was not legally recognized as such. According to the Law, the National Library is intended to accumulate, preserve, nurture and bequeath knowledge, heritage and cultural resources, in general, and those linked to the State of Israel, the land of Israel and the Jewish people, in particular.

Film

709. In 2000, the Israeli Film Council was established. The Council was founded in accordance with the Film Law 5759-1999, which was legislated on 10 January 1999. The Council's aim is to encourage the Israeli film industry, promoting freedom of creation and expression of the cultural variety in Israeli society. The council's role includes advising the Minister of Culture and Sports on all relevant issues regarding the film industry, including defining criteria for financial support to public institutions dedicated to encouraging and promoting creation, production and distribution of Israeli films as well as international cooperation.

Jewish heritage

710. In January 2007, the Knesset approved the creation of two national heritage authorities for the heritage of the Jewish community of Bukhara and for the heritage of the Jewish community of Libya. Each of these authorities is mandated to preserve the cultural heritage of its community, and to research and document it (The National Authority for the Cultural Heritage of the Bukhara Jewish Community Law 5767-2007, and the National Authority for the Cultural Heritage of the Libyan Jewish Community Law 5767-2007).

711. The Council for Commemoration of the Spain and Eastern Heritage Law 5763-2002 was enacted on 13 November 2002. According to this Law, the Minister of Culture and Sports, and the Minister of Religious Affairs will appoint a Council for Commemoration of Sephardic and Eastern Heritage, to advise the Ministers regarding the promotion, assistance, and encouragement of activity relating to the heritage of Spanish Jewry.

712. On 6 December 2005, the Knesset enacted the Diaspora Museum Law 5766-2005. This Law recognizes the Diaspora Museum in Tel-Aviv as the national centre for Israeli communities in Israel and abroad. According to the Law, the responsibilities of the Diaspora Museum are to present items relating to the Israeli communities and to the history of the Jewish people, to conduct research, and to accumulate knowledge on issues relating to the Jewish people. In addition, the Museum is to create a reservoir of genealogical trees and family names of Jewish families in the world, as well as a database of Jewish communities in the world and their history. The Ministry of Culture and Sports is in charge of executing this law, and the State will participate in the funding of the Diaspora Museum.

Druze heritage

713. On 4 June 2007, the Knesset enacted the Druze Cultural Heritage Center Law 5767-2007. Its purpose was to facilitate the establishment of a Druze Cultural Heritage Center in Israel. According to the Law, the Government is required to designate the necessary budget for the establishment, operation and maintenance of the Center. The Center includes a research institute, a museum and an archive on Druze heritage, culture and history. The Center is required to develop and promote research activities, as well as educational programmes, including tours, lectures, conferences and exhibitions geared towards developing, enriching and promoting knowledge related to the different aspects of Druze culture, history and heritage.

VIII. Special protection measures

A. Articles 37, 39 and 40 – Children in the juvenile justice system

714. One of the Rotlevi Sub-Committees was engaged with the issue of children involved in criminal proceedings. This Sub-Committee examined the present criminal proceedings regulations, and whether or not they accorded with the central principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

715. The premise of the Sub-Committee was that minors in criminal proceeding are entitled to rights encompassed by law, in addition to ‘special rights’ as a result of the fact that they were minors. The following are the central recommendations of the Sub-Committee.

General

716. The Youth Law and Criminal laws which apply to minors must be amended.

717. There is a need to insert an introductory section to the Youth Law which stipulates the purpose of the Law, the principles behind its implementation, and a description of the rights granted to minors in criminal proceedings. These modifications have already been adopted and entered into force in July, 2009.

Particular

718. The Sub-Committee recommended that children accused and/or convicted of committing a crime be subject to rehabilitation treatment rather than punishment. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law implemented this recommendation.

719. The Sub-Committee indicated in its report that the rehabilitation of minors cannot, by itself, justify an infringement of a minor’s rights. The Sub-Committee also recommended the revocation of Section 10(2) of the Youth Law since it allows for minors under the age of fourteen to be detained without a court order and/or the existence of legal grounds for an arrest. Section 10 of the Youth Law was amended by Amendment No. 14.

A 2008 amendment establishing the principles of criminal proceedings

Detention and/or child custody

720. In accordance with recommendation No. 61(b) of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child which requires that the deprivation of liberty only be used as a measure of last resort against a minor who finds her/himself involved in the juvenile justice system, a child suspected of committing a crime shall not be detained if there is an equivalent alternative. Thus, children are placed in a secured group home if they are closely monitored and receive treatment. This 2008 amendment was in accordance with the recommendations of the Rotlevi Sub-Committee regarding alternative custody arrangements for children, so as to ensure that the law was compatible with Article 40(3) (b) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

721. If a request to arrest a minor is filed in court, a Probation Officer is certified to take the initiative and submit her/his report or express her/his professional opinion regarding the matter at hand. If the minor is being indicted, the court is authorized to instruct the submission of such a report or agree to an oral presentation of the Probation Officer's opinion (Section 10(G) (b) of Amendment No. 14). When a detained minor resides and/or is being held in a secured group home, the Group Home Officer is permitted to submit her/his professional opinion regarding the minor's arrest (Section 10(G) (c) to Amendment No. 14). Non-submission of a Probation Officer Report may not, in itself, establish grounds for the continuance of the minor's arrest (Section 10 (G) (d) to Amendment No. 14).

Notification of a child hearing in court

722. When a hearing is conducted, the youth investigator and/or the prosecutor in the minor's pretrial or arrest hearing must notify the minor's parent or a close relative of the hearing. The minor's parent or a close relative is invited to appear before the court and state their opinion regarding the relevance of their presence at the hearing (Section 10(H) (a) to Amendment No. 14). Exceptions to the obligation of parental notification in legal proceedings are set out below.

(1) Reasoned objection made by the minor – The Youth investigator or the prosecutor acting in the case can prohibit the notification and revoke a family member's privilege to be present during the investigation or court proceedings, in accordance with the minor's request.

(2) Parents or a close relative may also be excluded if the investigator and/or the prosecutor in the case believe that such presence endangers the minor's well-being. The minor's parent or a close relative will not be summoned to a pretrial arrest hearing, if by doing so, it may thwart the purpose of the arrest or if it is a matter of national security. However, a decision not to inform the parents is subject to the court's approval.

723. In the event that a minor's parents are absent, the following exceptions will apply:

- The court can order detention of up to 24 hours in certain circumstances. In such circumstances, the minor's parents or a close relative who were absent from the hearing shall be summoned to the next hearing regarding the child's arrest. The next hearing will be scheduled for the end of the detention period.
- If the court concludes that the minor's parents or a close relative do not intend to appear in court despite the summons, it will instruct the involvement of a social worker or a Probation Officer in the next hearing to be held.
- If a parent and/or a relative and/or a social worker and/or a Probation Officer have not appeared in court on behalf of the minor, the judge is authorized to conduct the hearing without their presence. The non-appearance of the above-mentioned legal guardians or extended family members at the hearing, shall not, in itself, establish grounds for the minor's arrest.

Detention

724. The recommendation contained in paragraph 61(B) of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child also addresses child detention as a measure of last resort used for the shortest possible time. Therefore the Youth Law and the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law establish restrictions for the detention of minors. Amendment No. 14 reflects a new approach to this issue, which approach is in accordance with the spirit of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Amendment to the Youth Law also applies to the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law. For example, due to the Amendment the detention of a minor prior to the filing of an indictment is limited – under Section 17 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law, Juvenile Courts are allowed to order a minor’s detention for a period not to exceed ten days (fifteen days for an adult). A minor suspected of committing a crime may not be detained continuously for a period in excess of twenty days (30 days for an adult).

725. Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law addresses detention following the filing an indictment. When an indictment is filed, the court must set the earliest date possible for the commencement of the trial (Regulation 19 to the Criminal Procedure Regulations). In the case of a minor, Section 14 of the Youth Law stipulates that: “save with the consent of the Attorney General, a minor will not be brought to trial for an offence if a year has passed since its commission.” Once an indictment has been filed, the court is entitled to order detention until the termination of proceedings.

726. In the case of a minor, Section 21 to the Youth Law applies subject to the following modifications.

727. Detention until the termination of proceedings shall not apply to a minor who is under fourteen years of age. A minor may not be detained continuously for a period in excess of twenty days (30 days for an adult). Under Sections 59-61 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law, a suspect must be released if an indictment has not been filed against her/him within 75 days of the beginning of the arrest. According to Amendment No. 14, a minor in such circumstances may not be detained for a period in excess of 40 days. If there is no verdict, minors may not be detained for a period in excess of six months (nine months for an adult). The maximum period of detention for an accused minor is 45 days instead of the 90 days allowed for an adult (Section 62 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law). Amendment No. 14 has significantly shortened the period a minor can be detained and serves to distinguish a minor from an adult in similar circumstances.

728. When considering an alternative to imprisonment, a closed residence is an adequate substitute for incarceration. Release on condition of bail (according to Section 48(a) (9) of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law) is for a period not to exceed nine months. Nevertheless, the court may issue an order if necessary to extend the leave on bail for an additional period, not to exceed 90 days each time. If the court has issued an order for house arrest on condition of bail for more than sixteen hours per day, it shall order a hearing once every three months throughout that time in order to review its order. Amendment No. 14 implements the Rotlevi Sub-Committee’s recommendations calling for a minimum of time in prison and the greatest degree of possibilities for alternative incarceration for minors.

Orders of supervision and observation orders

729. Following the filing of an indictment, a Juvenile Court is authorized to order temporary supervision of a minor by a Probation Officer. The order applies until the court submits its ruling. The court decision is subject to the Probation Officer’s Report and its conviction that a temporary custody order is in the best interest of the child. The court must also ensure that there is no other, less harmful way to achieve this objective.

730. Supervision by a Probation Officer includes the followings:

- Maintaining a relationship with the child (through daily phone conversations)

- Assessments made by professionals: psychological and psychiatric diagnosis (in accordance with Mentally Ill Law); employment, educational, social, developmental and clinical diagnosis as well as a prognosis for drug abuse and alcohol
- The evaluation of the child's functioning within the family and community environment

731. A Juvenile Court is authorized, at the minor's or the Probation Officer's request, to order an out-of-home-placement for the minor while a temporary supervision order is in effect. Such an order must accord with the best interest of the child and be reviewed once every three months.

732. A temporary supervision order shall not exceed a period of six months without a court order. The court order must accord with the best interests of the child. Although responsibility for a child's subsistence falls first and foremost on her/his family, the State is responsible for helping the family ensure a child's existence and development by providing social services.

733. A court's decision concerning a child's welfare is based on the opinion of professionals. The court orders child care experts to review the case, make factual findings and present recommendations. Such findings will not be used as evidence against minors in criminal proceedings; but will only be used for the sake of the future care and treatment of the minor.

734. Once an indictment has been filed, the court may issue an order, based on the best interests of the child and a request submitted by the Probation Officer, an order for observation and diagnosis for a period not to exceed 70 days (Section 20(a) (1) of the Youth Law).

735. The observation order must be made in co-ordination with the Superintendent of Residences and the Probation Officer, in order to ensure that a suitable residence is located for the minor and that the residence has room to admit her/him. Although observation is an alternative to detention, professionals agree that it should be used in exceptional circumstances only, and that a special framework designed particularly for detention must be established. However, the court will not issue an order for observation unless the following conditions are met:

- A lawyer who represents her/him directly, without the intercession of the court or the legal guardian, legally represents the minor. An unrepresented minor who is above fourteen years of age shall be protected by the court, thus the minor's right to due process is guaranteed by law. When a minor is not represented, the court is required to ensure that the order for observation is justified and does not cause harm to the child.
- Either the minor grants her /his consent to be sent to a closed residence for observation or legal counsel represents her/him. When an observation order is enforced against the minor's wishes, representation is required.

736. An alternative judge to the one deciding the case will issue a temporary supervision order (Section 20 to the Youth Law). Such order must be either: a) Subject to a statement that there is substantial evidence against the minor b) A request to arrest the minor has been filed (under Section 21 to the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law, and the court is assured of the existence of convicting evidence or, c) the minor has confessed in court to the existence of the evidence. A temporary supervision order granted by a court at the request of the minor (provided that she/he has legal counsel) will render the above conditions redundant.

Revoking temporary supervision and/or an observation order

737. According to Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law, a Juvenile Court is authorized to cancel or extend the temporary supervision and/or observation order at the request of a Probation Officer. The extension cannot exceed 30 days. This decision may be appealed twice.

738. It is the task of the court that decided to send the child to a closed residence, to explain to the child in a manner understood by her/him and compatible with her/his age and level of maturity, under what circumstances the closed residence can be replaced with incarceration. Furthermore, the court must inform the minor of the possibility that imprisonment can have a serious effect on her/his life. Ruling or making a decision to place a child at a closed residence instead of in detention is reversible. The court can later reconsider and send the minor back to imprisonment. Incarceration as an inverse alternative to the closed residence is subject to the evaluation of the Superintendent of Residences. However, imprisonment shall not exceed the time remaining in the original order.

739. The court may send a minor from the closed residence back to detention if it is convinced of one of the following:

- The child is in danger or endangers others.
- The child is causing damage to property.
- The child's behaviour while in closed residence prevents the maintenance of the order.

740. The court is allowed to initiate a hearing during the minor's imprisonment for discussing alternatives to detention. Section No 25(a) of the Youth Law determines that the court must ensure the right of the minor to express her/his opinion and argue her/his case. A legal counsel will be appointed to represent the minor in such proceedings.

741. It is also noteworthy that under Amendment No. 14, there are procedures concerning methods of treatment or the duration of treatment for which it is mandatory to obtain the approval of the minor. For example, a court decision to extend an order of treatment beyond the period originally set is subject to the minor's consent (Section 32). A Juvenile Court's decision to extend the order is appealable.

742. A Juvenile Court is entitled, at the request of the Probation Officer — subject to the minor's consent — to extend the period of a minor's treatment as set by a court order, for up to one year.

743. The Superintendent of Residences is entitled to transfer a minor from an open residence to a closed residence without court approval. However, a minor must be allowed to express her/his opinion prior to the superintendent reaching a final decision. Moreover, the holding of a minor in a closed residence pursuant to the Superintendent's order shall not exceed seven days.

744. The conditions for such relocation are as follows:

- The minor endangers her/himself or others; or causes serious continual damage to property.
- Relocation of the minor from an open to a closed residence was an act of last resort.

745. A Superintendent's order to transfer a minor can be appealed to the Juvenile Court. The Juvenile Court, who ordered the holding of a minor in a closed residence, is entitled, at the request of the Superintendent, and subsequent to hearing arguments by both parties; to extend the temporary supervision order for an additional period not to exceed 30 days.

746. Section 32 of the Youth law stipulates that the Superintendent of Residences may alter the order that placed the minor in a closed residence, or an order issued for its implementation, to an order placing the minor in a foster home. (Amendment No.14 states that the minor's opinion on the matter of her/his placement within a foster home shall be considered).

747. Moreover, the court is authorized (at the request of the Superintendent of the Residence) to add a period, not to exceed one year, during which the minor will be held in a closed residence. However, according to Amendment, No. 14, such extension is subject to the minor's consent or based upon her/his personal request. If the court extended the period of stay, it may cancel its order at the request of the minor. The court is also authorized, at the request of the Superintendent and subject to the discretion of the court to cancel the additional period determined.

748. Section 34 of the Youth Law determines that a person shall not be held in a closed residence nor be obliged to report daily to any residence when she/he reaches the age of twenty-one.

749. However, once minors are settled in a residence, the supervisor of the residence must inform them of their rights. The Superintendent of the Residence must also inform the minor at a reasonable time prior to the end of the first year of residence, that they can bring their matter before a Parole Board.

Age of criminal responsibility

750. This issue was discussed in Israel's initial report. No changes have occurred in this area since the submission of Israel's initial report.

Data on minor suspects

751. In 2007, 7,390 police investigation cases involving minors and youth were filed. In 2002, there were 7,776 cases. Among the cases filed in 2007, 7,227 were filed with the Magistrate Courts and 163 cases were filed with the District Courts (comparably, in 2002, 7,572 were filed with Magistrate Courts and 204 with District Courts). In 2007, 8,285 cases involving minors were closed compared to 7,282 cases closed in 2002.

752. Table 45, below, specifies the kind of registered offences that minors were involved in during 2007 in comparison with offences they were involved in during 2002. In 2007, 32 per cent of the minors were primarily suspected of having committed property related offences, 25 per cent of the minors were suspected of having committed offences against the person and 11 per cent were suspected of involvement in drug-related offences.

Table 45

Minors' registered offences, 2002 and 2007

Type of offence	2002	2007
Total	6 535	6 875
Security offences	103	29
Public order offences	246	266
Offences against the administration of rule and justice	315	581
Offences against the person	1 423	1 756
Sex offences	157	223
Assault causing actual harm	24	193
Drug-related offences	899	737

Type of offence	2002	2007
Property and trespassing	1 941	2 173
Other criminal offences	666	280
Transportation – general	82	83
Transportation – tickets total	640	519
Transportation – car accidents with/without casualties	39	35

Source: The Court's Administration System, 2008.

Principles for dealing with children in the criminal justice system

753. Note that the majority of the provisions relevant to this chapter were amended in Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law and are detailed throughout this report.

Defence against self-incrimination

754. Suspects in a criminal investigation and a defendant on trial have the right to remain silent. The Criminal Procedure (Witnesses) Ordinance 1927 determines that “a person interrogated [at a police station] ... is required to respond correctly to all questions posed to them during the investigation by the police officer in question, or any other authorized officer, with the exception of questions the answer to which may put them in danger of incriminating themselves.” During trial, the court is obligated to notify the defendant that she/he has the right to testify or not to testify. If they choose to testify, she/he may be cross-examined (Section 161 of The Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version] 5742-1982 (the “Criminal Procedure [Consolidated Version] Law”). The court is also obligated to explain to the defendant that a decision not to testify is likely to be considered as supporting any other incriminating evidence (Section 162). Failure to explain her/his rights to a suspect or defendant may, under certain circumstances, constitute cause to disqualify an admission that the suspect made during an investigation.

Special protection of minors in criminal proceedings

755. For the Rotlevi Sub-Committee's recommendations regarding minors in criminal proceedings see: “2008 Amendment that established the principles of Criminal Proceedings,” as detailed below.

756. Many of the rules governing the police's handling of minors are not defined by statute, but may be found in the Internal Police Regulations (Israel Police Force, Minors/Youth Department Directives). The Police's handling of minors rests mainly with youth investigators. According to Section 3(a) of the Internal Police Regulations (Israel Police Force, Minors/Youth Department Directives), only a police youth-expert (who is a specially trained police officer) may interrogate a minor suspect. An exception to the rule is a minor under the age of fourteen who is a suspect, witness or a victim of a sexual or violent offence, including trafficking in persons and abduction. In such a case, a youth investigator (a social worker from the Youth Probation Service of the Ministry of Social affairs and Social Services) interrogates the minor.

757. Many sections of the Internal Police Regulations (Israel Police Force, Minors/Youth Department Directives) are designed to protect a minor's privacy and prevent her/him from being labelled as a criminal. For example, a police youth-expert must wear civilian clothing and travel in unmarked vehicles, rather than in police vehicles (Sections 2(e) and 2(g) of the Directives). Police youth-experts are prohibited (except in urgent cases) from interrogating or arresting a minor at night or in public places such as her/his place of study or work (Sections 2(d) and 3(c) (2) (a) of the Directives). If this is nevertheless imperative, the investigation must be coordinated with the school principal and measures should be taken to avert unnecessary attention (Section 3(c) (2) (b) to the Directives). Investigation at a police station is conducted in a separate room specially designed for the investigation of minors. The room must prevent all forms of contact between minors and adults who are suspects or detainees. In most police stations, there is a separate entrance for this investigation room, in order to prevent contact or exposure of minors to adult suspects or detainees.

758. The investigation of a minor must be conducted during daytime, however not inside an educational or employment place or a gathering place for youth (Sections 3(c) (2) (a) to the Directives). An exception is made if a delay may lead to a failure of the investigation or when the investigation is necessary for the minor's welfare and safety. The investigation can only transpire subject to the cooperation of the school principal or employer. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law regulated a time-schedule that is suitable for interrogating a minor. According to the Amendment, a minor aged 14 and above must not be interrogated between 22:00 p.m and 07:00 a.m. A minor under the age of fourteen must not be interrogated between 20:00 PM and 07:00 AM. An exception can be made when a minor is a witness to a crime that she/he is not suspected of committing; or if the minor voluntarily came to the police station; or if the crime was committed nearby and an officer accompanies the minor to the police station.

759. In some cases, a minor suspected of committing a crime may be investigated during the night (subject to a written and detailed decision submitted by a police officer). The relevant circumstances are as follows:

- The crime was committed near the place of arrest.
- If the crime is a specific type determined by law and a delay in the investigation could cause physical or mental harm to the minor, her/himself or others.
- If an interference with the investigation may prevent the release of the minor, another suspect, thwart the exposure of evidence, or other related objects and/or interfere with the fight against crime, a minor may be investigated during the night.

760. It is prohibited to shackle a minor except for in exceptional cases (Section 4(c) to the Directives). According to the Police Directives – Shackling a Detainee in Public Place, a minor under the age of twelve must never be shackled. A minor detainee between the ages twelve and fourteen can be shackled by the hands only with the prior consent of a police officer. Such shackling is allowed without prior consent if a police officer believes that the delay might detract from the purpose of the shackling. Other considerations are that the detainee may damage or conceal evidence or that she/he may receive or deliver an object that may be used to commit a crime (Section 8 of the Directives). A minor detainee between the ages twelve and fourteen can be shackled by the legs only with the prior consent of a police officer. Such shackling is permitted with no prior consent when a delay may detract from the purpose of the shackling and the detainee caused corporal or property damage by trying to escape or assist others to escape (Section 9 of the Directives).

761. Amendment No. 14 2008 to the Youth Law determines that a minor must not be arrested if the purpose of the arrest can be achieved using less harmful measures. The arrest of a minor shall be for the shortest period possible. A decision regarding an arrest must consider the minor's age and the affect that an arrest may have on her/his physical and mental wellbeing.

762. A minor under the age of fourteen cannot be examined by use of a polygraph. A minor between the ages of fourteen and sixteen can be examined by use of a polygraph subject to the minor's, her/his parents and authoritative police officer's consent. Polygraphs can be used only with regard to severe crimes or a crime which involves a major public interest (Section 3(e) of the Directives).

763. There are limitations on photographing and finger printing of a minor suspected of committing an offence. A minor under the age of fourteen will not be photographed and finger prints will not be taken from a minor under the age of twelve (Section 3(g) of the Directives).

Table 46

Minor's polygraph examinations in the year 2008, by year of birth

Year of birth	Polygraph examinations
1990	15
1991	12
1992	4
1993	2
Total	33

Source: The Ministry of Public Security, 2009.

764. The Youth (Care and Supervision) Law and the Internal Police Regulations (Israel Police Force, Minors/Youth Department Directives), also establish strict rules regarding the prohibition on the publication of details of convicted minors or minors declared by the law as “needy minors.” Thus, the Police do not publish the identity of a suspected minor in the media, except for limited circumstances determined by law. In publicized cases, the minor is generally described as “missing” and not as suspected of committing a crime. Police Directives also strictly limit the transfer of information concerning a minor’s criminal record between official bodies.

Special protection of minors in criminal proceedings: implementation

765. The Amendment to the Youth Law addresses this issue and improves its provisions comprehensively, as detailed below.

Representation of minors in criminal proceedings

Court appointment of defense counsel

766. Recommendation No. 61c of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child requires to ensure that children have access to legal aid (that includes legal representation). Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law amended The Public Defenders Office Law on 30 July 2008. According to the Amendment, a minor is entitled to legal representation in criminal proceedings.

767. The Public Defender’s Office (PDO) is responsible for representing minors in legal proceedings, especially criminal proceedings. According to data provided by the PDO in 2007, legal assistance was granted in 11,944 cases that year, from which 11,325 were held in Juvenile Courts and 619 were held in District Courts residing as Juvenile District Courts. These cases demonstrate the degree of assistance provided with respect to criminal charges, different hearings, requests for arrests and criminal appeals. The PDO operates in five districts and in 2007 the distribution of cases among them was as follows: in Nazareth and the northern district — assistance was provided in 857 cases, in the Haifa district — assistance was provided in 1,875 cases, in the southern district — assistance was provided in 2,833 cases, in Jerusalem — assistance was provided in 1,809 cases and in the Tel-Aviv district- assistance was provided in 4,570 cases.

Representation by a parent or guardian

768. Under Section 15 of the Guardianship and Legal Capacity Law “parental guardianship [over a child] includes ... the authority to represent her/him.” According to Police Directives, a parent or guardian is allowed to be present at the investigation of a minor under the age of fourteen (Section 3(c) (c) of the Directives). This rule may be disregarded if it is suspected that the parent’s presence may cause the minor harm or interfere with the investigation (Section 3(c) (d) of the Directives). If a minor is over the age of fourteen, a parent or guardian has no right to be present at the investigation, unless the Police decide otherwise, or when the minor or the parent ask to be present at the investigation and such presence does not interfere with the investigation (section 3(c)(c) of the Directives).

769. Amendment No. 14 changes the proceedings as it determines that a minor suspect under the age of eighteen who is summoned for an investigation is entitled to the presence of a parent or a relative during the investigation. The minor is also entitled to a consultation prior to the investigation.

770. The minor can object to the presence of her/his family member in the investigation room. However, she/he should offer a reasonable argument against the presence of a family member. Another objection to parental presence can be raised when the minor is under arrest.

771. A police officer in charge can prevent parental presence if she/he is convinced that their presence may cause physical or mental harm to the minor or to other persons; or the officer is certain that such presence interferes with the investigation, harms state security (when the minor is suspected of having committed a security offence), prevents the release of the minor (or other suspects) from being arrested, prevents the finding of evidence or objects related to the minor’s suspected offence or interferes with the prevention of other offences. This prevention of the minor’s right can only go on for so long as the aforementioned circumstances continue to exist.

Opening a criminal file and filing an indictment

772. According to Amendment No. 14, an individual committing a crime will not be prosecuted if the crime was committed while the individual was a minor (Section 14 to the Youth Law).

773. Section 3(c) (b) (d) to the Internal Police Regulations (Israel Police Force, Minors/Youth Department Directives) states “a decision ... to use a no-prosecution proceeding be made in light of the minor’s former police record and the recommendation of the police youth-expert handling the case.” This proceeding is designated to prevent the labelling of minors as offenders after having committed their first offence and assist in their removal from the criminal path. The Police Directives instruct using the “no-prosecution proceeding” (since 2007 this is known as “contingent treatment”) for a first and petty offence of a minor who admits her/his actions, expresses regret and seems to be a candidate for rehabilitation. This will not appear in the minor’s police record. The decision to use the no-prosecution proceeding is subject to a warning form completed by the minor and her/his parents, in which the minor undertakes to cooperate with the Youth Probation Officer. The minor also undertakes not to commit additional offences in the next six months.

Police considerations for opening a criminal file

774. The use of no-prosecution proceedings has decreased. The no-prosecution proceeding was utilized in approximately 60 per cent of cases involving minors and has decreased to being used in approximately 40 per cent of the cases. In most of these cases the offence for which the no-prosecution proceeding was invoked was classified as a felony or misdemeanour, for which penalties are statutory and relatively mild (up to three months' imprisonment and up to three years' imprisonment, respectively).

775. Special instructions laid down by the Attorney General apply to drug offences: In an investigation of a minor suspected of using or possessing a dangerous drug for the purpose of self-use (not including acts of injecting or sniffing drugs), the Police will weigh initiating criminal proceedings against invoking the no-prosecution proceeding. According to these instructions, the Police will refrain from initiating criminal proceedings against a minor suspected of such offences, provided that the following conditions are met: there is no indication of previous drug use, the minor admits to having committed the offence and agrees to undergo treatment, the minor does not use drugs on a regular basis, did not initiate the purchase or distribution of the drugs, and did not solicit other minors to use drugs. In addition, the minor must disclose the source of the drugs to the investigator. A no-prosecution proceeding may also be invoked if the chief investigating officer is convinced that the minor is either unaware of or afraid to reveal the source of the drugs.

776. The above instructions were distributed to schools in an effort to encourage the report of drug use among pupils. The idea is to promote the involvement of minors, in rehabilitation programmes accompanied by "Shefi," the Educational Counseling and Psychological Services.

Table 47

Data on youth investigation files opened in 2008

Type of file	Number of investigation files
No-prosecution proceeding – general	12 062
Criminal investigation file – general	20 570
Total	32 632
No-prosecution proceeding – drugs	2 179
Criminal investigation file – drugs	2 822
Total	5 001

Source: The Courts Administration System, 2008.

Youth Probation Services data

777. In 2008, out of 33,965 offences committed by youth, the Youth Probation Services treated 20,472 adolescents. Presently there are 210 Youth Probation Officers. The Youth Probation Services treat an average of 4,700 children from minority populations annually.

Table 48

Youth referred to the Probation Service in 2008

Gender	Number of youngsters directed	In per cent
Males	19 991	87.9
Females	2 481	12.1
Total	20 472	100
Age
12–14	4 326	21.1
15–16	8 059	39.4

Gender	Number of youngsters directed	In per cent
17–18	8 087	39.5
Total	20 472	100
Population
Jewish	15 765	77.1
Arabs	4 707	22.9
Total	20 472	100

Source: The Courts Administration System, 2008.

Table 49

Youth directed to the Probation Service in 2008 according to the type of offence

Type of offence	Number of youngsters directed	In per cent
Offences against public order	2 426	11.9
Violence	7 768	37.9
Drug-related offences	3 281	16.0
Sex and morale offences	580	2.8
Property offences	4 687	22.9
Transportation and car accidents	1 116	5.5
Other offences	614	3.0
Total	20 472	100

Source: The Courts Administration System, 2008.

Table 50

Court's decisions regarding minors in 2008

Court's decision	Still minors after decision	Number of decisions
Imprisonment	417	1 419
Conditional imprisonment	619	1 378
Community service	94	257
Secured institution	13	63
Institution	30	76
Supervision in residence conditions	89	256
Supervision	489	1 219
Treatment by appropriate person	3	8
Any other order – contribution in community	302	535
Any other order – restrictions	3	5
Any other order – contribution	36	44
Any other order	12	16
Fine	319	496
Victim's compensation	120	179
Deprivation of license	162	235
Conditional deprivation of license	71	90

Court's decision	Still minors after decision	Number of decisions
Minor's bail	1 191	1 770
Total	3 970	8 046

Source: The Courts Administration System, 2008.

Children in administrative proceedings

778. Recently, the Haifa District Court held that the removal of two sixteen year old foreign minors was invalid. Moreover, since the minors were held in custody for over 60 days, the Border Commissioner was required to examine within fifteen days the possibility of their release under the terms of the Entry into Israel Law. The State was obligated to make sure that a social worker examined the minors and determined whether they were “minors in need” as stipulated in the Youth (Supervision and Care) Law and act accordingly.

779. The Court explained in its ruling that the State did not follow the legal principle regarding an unaccompanied minor. The minors’ refusal to leave Israel on the basis of the fact that their lives were endangered while they were applying for asylum or their refusal to be transferred to an asylum country, cannot be considered as a lack of cooperation that would justify a dismissal of a request for bail. (A.A 000222/08 Anonymous et. al. v. The Ministry of Interior et. al. (10.06.2008)).

Sentencing, punishment and modes of treatment – general principles

Court considerations and verdicts

780. The Courts take into consideration the age in cases involving minors, which is evident in the low rates of prison sentences imposed on minors. Only 13 per cent of the cases in 2007, compared to 12.1 per cent in 2002, resulted in sentence of imprisonment. According to Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law, an individual committing a crime shall not be prosecuted if the crime was committed while the individual was a minor. When sentencing, ruling, or reaching a decision in matters affecting minors, Amendment No. 14 determines that the presence of the minor is imperative, that the minor is represented and her/his best interest is well thought out (Section 17 to the Youth Law). (See the Rotlevi Committee recommendations and implementation, below.)

Children deprived of their liberty, including arrest, imprisonment and placement in a residence

Considerations in court decisions to deprive a minor of her/his liberty

781. The Tel Aviv District Court held that due to the severe sexual offences inflicted by the defendant, a fourteen-year old minor at the time he committed the crimes, against a six-year old girl, the Court was obligated to impose an actual imprisonment term. This, despite the fact that there is a need to balance between the general rules of punishment, according to which consideration is given to the severity of the crime, its essence, the need for deterrence and the offender’s personal circumstances; and between the fact that the offender was a minor at the time of committing the offences in question.

782. The Court stressed that there is a difference between the conviction and punishment of a minor to that of an adult. The Court acknowledged the fact that in sentencing a minor, the rehabilitation aspect should be considered more favourably. However, at times, considerations of deterrence, prevention and punishment outweigh the consideration of rehabilitation even when dealing with a minor. Therefore, the minor was convicted of committing sodomy in rape circumstances, and indecent acts in aggravated circumstances according to Section 347(b) together with Section 345(a)(3), and Section 348 together with Section 345(a)(3) of the Penal Law. The minor was sentenced to two years' imprisonment of which six months could be served by Community Service if a positive evaluation was submitted by the Supervisor of the community service. In addition, the minor was sentenced to eighteen months' suspended imprisonment on the condition that he did not commit sexual offences for a period of three years. (S.Cr.C 204/02 The State of Israel v. Anonymous (Minor) (10.04.2003)).

783. In another case, the defendant, a minor who was thirteen/fourteen years old when committing the sexual offences in question against four minor boys, was himself a victim of sexual misconduct when he was nine years old. The Nazareth Juvenile Court weighed the option of imposing a period of imprisonment on the minor as opposed to rehabilitating him. The Court stressed that the minor underwent a lengthy period of rehabilitation and was determined to make positive progress. The Court determined that on the one hand, sending the defendant to prison would compromise the rehabilitation process, which is the main purpose of the sentencing of youth – prevention of recidivism. On the other hand, since the offences that were committed were severe in nature, they demanded the imposition of a prison sentence.

784. The Court decided to sentence the minor to three years' suspended imprisonment for all sexual offences committed and eighteen months' suspended imprisonment for the rest of the offences of which he was convicted. In addition, the Court issued a two and a half year probation order for the participation of the minor in youth treatment programmes for sexual offenders and for his supervision and residency in a youth facility. Furthermore, the minor and his family were required to compensate each of the victims in the amount of 15,000 NIS (4,054$), half of which was to be paid by the minor himself and half of which was to be paid by his family. (S.Cr.C 108/06 The State of Israel v. Anonymous (15.05.2008)).

Arrest until termination of proceedings

Case law

785. On 21 November 2001, the Tel-Aviv District Court sentenced a defendant to six years' imprisonment twelve months of which would run simultaneously to the prison term he was serving at the time of the sentence. In addition, the Court sentenced the defendant to eighteen months of conditional imprisonment subject to the condition that he did not commit sexual offences for a period of three years after his release. This ruling was made in accordance with a plea bargain.

786. The defendant was a minor prisoner in the juvenile ward of the "Hasharon" prison facility, where he sexually assaulted a fellow minor inmate. He was charged with committing sodomy and indecent acts against a minor under the age of sixteen, constituting an offence similar to rape according to the Penal Law.

787. The Court stressed that the minor's actions were grave and that he had already been charged with similar offences, as well as with charges of violence. The Court also emphasized that it was its duty to protect not only the public, but also the population of prisoners and detainees, as all are entitled to protection from sexual and physical abuse. This is true especially when dealing with minor prisoners. The defendant should have realized that the body and dignity of a fellow prisoner are not negated, even if the inmate was himself convicted for similar acts. (S.Cr.C. 1071/01 The State of Israel v. Mishady-Moshe Naga'job (21.11.2001)).

Terms of arrest and placement in closed or open residence

788. Some of the criticism surrounding the protection of the rights of children involved in criminal proceedings concerned the conditions of arrest. It had been claimed that there was overcapacity in detention facilities and that their physical structure was inappropriate. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law has remedied some of these faults. Some of the adjustments made by the Amendment are:

- (1) An on-duty officer may transfer a detainee to a private cell in order to keep her/him safe. Such a safety measure will occur when a detainee endangers her/himself and others or if her/his best interest requires it.
- (2) A minor detainee shall be held in adequate conditions appropriate to her/his age and personal needs, subject to supervision that is compatible with her/his physical and mental wellbeing.
- (3) The detainee is granted educational services and free time. The Ministers of Public Security, Social Affairs and Social Services and Education determined the contents of the services. This is done to relieve the physical and psychological difficulties associated with incarceration of minors in detention facilities.

789. Although the provisions of the Criminal Procedure (Arrests) Law create different structures with regard to adults, a minor detainee not yet indicted, is entitled to visitation by immediate family members and telephone communication. The minor also has the right to send and receive mail. A decision to hold minors together in a detention facility is dependent on the minor's wellbeing, the age difference between the minors, the offences each minor is suspected of having committed, their criminal record and potential violence between the detainees.

790. Recommendation No. 61b of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child requires that persons under the age of eighteen shall not be detained with adults. Under Section 25(e) of the Youth Law: "a minor on whom imprisonment has been imposed may not be held in prison together with a person who is not a minor." Minors are detained in only one prison in Israel, in a special wing, which is located away from the other prison wings. Section 13 of the Youth Law requires the separation of minors and adult detainees.

791. A minor on whom imprisonment has been imposed may not be held in prison together with a person who is not a minor. The authorities must ensure that minor's wings are separate from adult wings and are fully secure. In cases of fully occupied prison cells, minors must at least be held in a different wing. Minors' wings are designed in such a way that no access and visual contact between adults and minor detainees is possible. A minor detainee who reaches the age of eighteen, yet not the age of 21 throughout her/his detention time, can be held together with a minor detainee as long as the other minor has reached the age of seventeen. Placement of an adult detainee (under the age of 21) together with a seventeen year old detainee is weighed against the best interest of the child. The minor is entitled to express her/his opinion on the matter prior to the decision of placement with an adult.

792. A minor can be held together with an adult detainee for the period during which she/he awaits a court hearing, not to exceed 24 hours. Prisons authorities that hold the minor under these circumstances shall uphold the rule of no access between and/or maintaining visual contact between an adult and a child detainee to the extent that it is possible. A minor detainee can be held for up to 72 hours if the court hearing is set for Saturday/holiday or the decision regarding the minor's arrest and/or indictment is still pending.

793. According to Section 42 of the Youth Law, a minor remanded to an open or closed residence who escapes therefrom or whose release therefrom has been cancelled, or whose leave therefrom has expired, may be arrested by a police officer without a warrant as she/he escaped from lawful custody, which is grounds for arrest without a warrant. The minor may be kept under arrest until she/he has been returned to the residence. The Police must immediately notify the Superintendent of Residences of the arrest and act to ensure the swift return of the minor to the residence.

794. Concurrently, a minor remanded to an open or closed residence who escapes therefrom, or whose leave therefrom has been cancelled or expired – is regarded as a minor who escaped from lawful custody (unless the minor is arrested and placed in detention). In such a case, the court may instruct, at the request of the Superintendent of Residences or the minor her/himself, to include the missing period as time served (Section 42(c) to the Youth Law). Leave from lawful custody at a closed or opened residence is granted to minors when interlacement in an educational or employment framework is required. Leave of custody may also be considered for reintegration into society. Section 37 of the Youth Law prescribes a maximum of 30 days for leave under special circumstances. Amendment No. 14 extends the period a minor may remain on special leave by an additional 30 days, if the chairperson of the Parole Board deems this to be in the minor's best interest. The chairperson may also grant leave based on the continuance of the minor's treatment or vocational training. A further 30 days can be granted at the discretion of the Parole Board.

Means of restraint

795. Amendment No. 14 stipulates the means of restraint that can be used against minors remanded to an open or closed residence. A primary caregiver is permitted to take reasonable restraining actions against minors in order to prevent their escape there from, or their causing physical damage to her/himself; to property or to others (handcuffing is forbidden). Restraining methods are available to a limited extent, namely the minimum necessary for achieving the result. Means of restraint used against minors must be reported to the Superintendent of Residences immediately.

796. One of the methods used to restrain and/or prevent the escape of a minor is the placing of a minor in a separate room for a maximum period of twenty minutes per time. Such a method is part of a comprehensive treatment plan for misbehaviour. The regulations emphasize that this educational technique must be limited to a maximum duration of two hours.

797. The youth instructor and the person in charge of educational programmes in the residence are both responsible for implementing the restraining practices. During this period, minors remanded to the closed area are closely monitored; and any response, difficulty or change in behaviour is reported. Separate placement as an educational practice can be implemented only when there are no other, less restrictive, measures available. The Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services, following consultation with the Minister of Justice and the Knesset Constitution, Law and Justice Committee established guidelines for the above restraining practices. These guidelines prescribe terms of reporting and documentation requirements.

Sentencing of children and life imprisonment

798. The Criminal Procedure [Consolidated Version] Law and the Penal Law applies to every legal hearing concerning minors, unless there is an express provision to the contrary in the Youth Law. Under Section 25(d) of the Youth Law, a court may not impose a prison sentence on a minor who is under the age of fourteen at the time of sentencing. It is not obligatory to impose a life prison sentence, a mandatory prison sentence or a minimum penalty on a minor.

Capital punishment

799. A death penalty cannot be imposed on a minor who committed the offence while she/he was a minor.

Bed to every prisoner

800. On 12 February 2007, the Supreme Court declared that the State must provide a bed to every prisoner held in an Israeli prison. The Court ordered full implementation of this obligation by 1 July of that year. In its decision, the Court stated that the right to sleep on a bed is a minimum standard of living and dignity, based on the right to dignity enshrined in the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty.

801. The Public Defenders Office claimed that the deterioration of the security situation in Israel as of October 2000, resulted in an increased number of detainees and prisoners held in Israeli prisons, thus Israel Prisons Service (IPS) failed to provide a bed to every prisoner. Instead, only mattresses on the floor were provided due to a serious lack of incarceration facilities. Nevertheless, the State did not object to the petitioners' claim that a prisoner's right to sleep on a bed is an integral part of her/his basic right to dignity, but requested that the Court recognize possible limitations which might prevent full implementation of the principle of affording a "bed to every prisoner," especially in unforeseen times of emergency. The Court stated: "when on the one side of the balance equation rests the right of a person to minimum standards of living when held in prison, a contradictory value with a special significance is necessary in order to justify damage to this fundamental right". (HCJ 4634/04 Physicians for Human Rights et.al. v. The Minister of Public Security, et.al.).

Data on the arrest of minors

802. 6,705 minors were arrested in 2008, of them 1,068 were sentenced to house arrests. 60 per cent of the arrests were for no more than several days, 16 per cent of the arrests were house arrests and 10 per cent of the arrests were extended until the termination of proceedings. In two-thirds of these cases, the minors arrested were ages sixteen to seventeen.

Table 51

Arrest of minors and type of arrest in 2008, by age (in numbers)

Age	Type of arrest				Total
	Days	Until another decision	Until the completion of proceedings	House arrest
12	44	11	5	9	69
13	104	39	12	40	195
14	400	119	68	140	727
15	832	177	140	218	1 367
16	1 156	257	225	301	1 939
17	1 518	273	246	360	2 397
Total	4 054	876	696	1 068	6 705

Source: The Courts Administration System, 2008.

Open and closed residences

Case law

803. On 2 December 2007, the Haifa District Court, sitting as a Juvenile Court convicted a thirteen year old defendant of committing sodomy, indecent acts, abuse and violence against a minor, who was only four years old when the offence was committed.

804. The Court held that in sentencing a minor, the Court faces three possibilities; the first, sending him to an open facility where the minor participates in the activities within the facility and may enjoy vacations. The second, a closed facility, where the minor is placed in a more strict educational facility, where supervision and security is amplified and the Court can also determine additional limitations regarding vacations. The third option is sending the minor to prison, where he will be held in a separate wing for minors. The Court stressed that in general, in cases where it is appropriate to impose a sentence that includes imprisonment on a minor, it is preferable to send her/him to a closed facility. However, if the minor refuses to accept treatment in the closed facility or if the Probation Officer did not recommend integrating the minor into a closed facility, there is no alternative but to send her/him to prison. However, this cannot be the case when dealing with imprisonment according to Section 24(1) together with Section 25(1) of the Law. That is to say that Court-imposed imprisonment cannot be an alternative to a closed facility, but rather a closed facility is an alternative to the imprisonment period.

805. The Court held, in a majority vote of 2-1, that due to the defendant's minority status, the possibility of his rehabilitation and the severity of the offences, the minor would be placed in a closed facility for a period of three years and be subject to eighteen months of conditional imprisonment. (S.Cr.C (Haifa) 306/06 The State of Israel v. Anonymous (02.12.2007)).

806. However, in another case dealing in a similar context, the Supreme Court held that due to the severity of the offence the minor defendant had to be subject to imprisonment. However, since the possibility of his rehabilitation continued to exist, and considering the young age of the defendant at the time that he committed the offence, it was found to be proper to leave open the possibility of placing the minor in a closed facility, at a later date. In this sense, the sentence was not peremptory and the defendant could petition the Court, provided it was with the agreement of the State and the Probation Office. (Cr.A 9828/06 Anonymous et. al. v. The State of Israel (10.06.2007)).

Conditions and rights of minors in residences

Case law

807. On 18 January 2006, the Supreme Court rejected an appeal filed against a 25 year sentence of imprisonment imposed on a minor who was seventeen and three months old at the time he murdered his own father. The appeal was based on Section 25(b) of the Youth Law that stipulates that there is no obligation to impose a sentence of life imprisonment, mandatory imprisonment or a minimum penalty on a minor. It was also based on Section 41 of the Penal Law that stipulates that when sentencing for an offence which bears a sentence of life imprisonment that is not legally mandated, the court-imposed sentence should not exceed twenty years.

808. The appellant claimed that the District Court that sentenced him to 25 years imprisonment was not authorized to sentence him to more than twenty years according to the above-mentioned sections.

809. The Court affirmed prior decisions holding that the purpose of Section 25 to the Youth Law is to allow the court discretion in determining the judgment imposed on minor offenders. The Court stressed that the legislator's purpose in enacting Section 25 of the Youth Law was to broaden the scope of punishments a court may impose on minors, excluding capital punishment that cannot be imposed on minors. Hence, the Court rejected the appeal and the 25 years' imprisonment remained (Cr.A. 4379/02 Anonymous v. The State of Israel (18.01.2006)). Also see: Cr.A 9937/01 Roei Horev et. al. v. The State of Israel (09.08.2004) Chapter IV, above.

B. Articles 32–36 – Children in situations of exploitation, including physical and psychological recovery and reintegration into society

International conventions

810. Since the submission of Israel's initial report, Israel became a party to several major international instruments concerning children. On 15 March 2005, Israel became a party to the ILO Convention 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labour (1999). In addition, on 14 December 2006, Israel became a party to the United Nations Convention on Transnational Organized Crime, (2000). On 23 July 2008 Israel became a party to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (2002) and to the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (2000).

The legal situation

Hours of work and rest

811. Section 25 of the Youth Employment Law stipulates that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Labor may allow the employment of a youth until 23:00 pm in a workplace in which the work is shift work (see Chapter I, Introduction, above).

812. According to Amendment No. 11 of the Youth Employment Law issued on 6 February 2007, if a state of emergency was declared, the Minister could allow for the employment of youth after 23:00 PM. This is provided that the relevant workplace operates in shifts or that the minor is in need of employment due to the state of emergency. The Minister must receive guarantees that conditions are maintained to preserve the health and wellbeing of the youth. The Minister's authorization shall terminate once the state of emergency is over. The state of emergency may include the proclamation of a special situation in the civil population according to Section 9C of the Civil Defense Law 5711-1951, recruitment of military reservists according to Section 8 of the Defense Service Law, 5746-1986, (The: "Defense Service Law") or a proclamation of a mass disaster according to Section 90B of the Police Ordinance (New Version) 5731-1971.

813. The National Labor Court rejected the appeal of Alonail, the company operating McDonald's branches in Israel and its acting manager and shareholder, against their conviction. The company and its manager were convicted of employing Jewish youth on Sabbath, which is considered their day of rest, contrary to Section 21 of the Youth Employment Law. The company and the manager were fined 30,000 NIS (8,108$) and 50,000 NIS (13,513$) respectively (Cr.A 1004/00 Alonail v. The State of Israel (09.02.2003)).

Minimum wage

814. In a case brought before the Haifa District Labor Court, the Court ordered the compensation of three female employees who were fired from their positions in a sewing workshop. These employees started to work in the workshop as minors; one of them was employed as a minor for a period of five years. These employees did not receive the minimum wage they were entitled to; did not receive payment for overtime work; their wage was delayed on a monthly basis and they were fired without receiving proper notice and without receiving severance payment.

815. The Court determined that these employees had been employed full-time, contrary to the workshop's claim; and that therefore they were entitled to receive a supplement to the minimum wage and to receive severance payments. In sum, the Court ordered the compensation of the three employees in the following manner: the first complainant was to be paid 20,500 NIS (5,540$), the second was to be paid 13,356 NIS (3,609$) and the third was to be paid 22,738 NIS (6,145$) (La.C 5595/98 Lobna Hassan et. al v. Crown Jolies Textile Inc. (19.07.2002)).

Administrative offences

816. According to a 2002 Amendment of the Administrative Offences Regulations (Administrative Fine Youth Employment) 5754-1994, a violation of Sections 33, 33A-33D, 33H of the Youth Employment Law constitutes an administrative offence. These sections include the prohibition against employing youth under fifteen years of age, the prohibition/restriction against employing youth in dangerous work, the prohibition against employing youth on the weekly day of rest or over time, the prohibition against employing youth without requiring a medical examination, etc. An administrative fine of 1,500-5,000 NIS (4,055,405$) is to be imposed in the event of a violation of these sections.

Sexual harassment

817. According to the Prevention of Sexual Harassment Law, 5758-1998 (the: "Sexual Harassment Law"), repeated suggestions of a sexual character made towards a person, or repeated references concerning the sexuality of a person who has expressed to the harasser her/his lack of interest in the suggestions or references, as well as sexual extortion and indecent acts are forms of sexual harassment.

818. According to a 2007 Amendment to the Law, the abovementioned suggestions and references will be considered sexual harassment when committed towards a minor or a helpless person, by exploiting a relationship of authority, dependency, education, or treatment, even if the minor did not express her/his lack of interest in the suggestions or references. If the minor was below the age of fifteen, these suggestions and references will be considered sexual harassment even if the harasser was not exploiting their relationship with the minor, provided that the harasser is not a minor her/himself.

Record keeping

819. According to a 2004 Amendment of the Youth Employment Law, an employer shall record the following details in a notebook which is kept in the workplace: the names of a minor employee's parents, the minor's date of birth, identity number, residential address, date of the beginning of her/his employment, dates of annual vacation and sick days, detailed information regarding the workday and week, including actual work hours and breaks. If the recording of hours in the notebook is performed manually, then the employee who is assigned the task of recording the hours is required to sign the number of hours recorded.

820. The Jerusalem Labor District Court ordered Pizza Hut (Israel) Inc. to compensate a minor employee in the sum of 3,043 NIS (822$) for extra hours worked, as well as 842 NIS (210$) in lieu of vacation, and 215 NIS (58$) for recuperation pay. The Court stressed that the defendant systematically deprived its employees of their rights, and openly violated the provisions of the labour laws. Also, since many of its employees were youth, who are not familiar with their rights under the law, it could be assumed that only a small percentage of them filed claims against the company following the termination of their employment. The seriousness of the situation was aggravated by the fact that the company has many branches throughout Israel with many employees, and that the company unlawfully accumulated a substantial amount of money as a result of its failure to pay its employees all the amounts that they were legally entitled to. Therefore, the Court ordered the defendant to pay the full amount of overdue payment from the time that the employment relationship was terminated until the actual date of payment. (Su.P. 1588/01 Ze'ev Shalman v. Pizza Hut (Israel) Inc. (04.04.02)).

821. According to the Tax Ordinance, a minor is obligated to file a tax report and to pay income tax, provided that he earned an income of at least 59,900 NIS (16,189$) in 2007 (compared to 44,460 NIS (12,016$) in 2001).

Youth protection

822. As detailed in Israel's initial report, the Youth Employment Law prohibits the employment of persons under the age of fifteen. Under the Law, an executive (as defined by the Law) in a corporation has a duty to supervise and adopt all necessary measures in order to prevent violations of the Law by the corporation or one or more of its employees. A 2000 Amendment to the Law broadened this duty so as to include the responsibility of executives in public bodies to ensure that contractors hired by the public body do not violate the Law. The Amendment also enumerates the different measures that a public executive must adopt in order to fulfil her/his duty.

Tobacco

823. A 2001 Amendment to the Youth Employment Regulations (Prohibited Employment and Restricted Employment) 5756-1995 expands the prohibition against the employment of youth in the manufacturing of cigarettes and cigars, and the handling of tobacco leaves, to include employment which involves the employee's dealing with formaldehyde, ethylene oxide and other such substances.

824. In addition, there is also a prohibition against selling cigarettes and tobacco products to minors following a 2004 Amendment of the Restriction of Advertisement of Tobacco Products for Smoking Law 5743-1983. This Amendment, issued on 4 August 2004, augments Section 8A so as to prohibit the selling of tobacco products to minors. A business owner who sells tobacco products may request identification from a person who requests to purchase tobacco, in order to verify her/his age, and is obligated to place a sign in a noticeable place regarding the prohibition against selling cigarettes and tobacco products to minors and stipulating her/his authority to request identification (Sections 8A(b)–(c) to the Law). In addition to the prohibition against selling cigarettes and tobacco products, the prohibition scope has been modified so that selling, renting or borrowing products designate for smoking as water pipes, etc. are illicit for minor use (2008 Amendment).

Eating disorders

825. A project opened a hostel in northern Israel for teenage girls who suffer from eating disorders and are in the intermediate stages of the disease. This project was initiated by the director of the clinic for eating disorders at the Rambam hospital in Haifa, in cooperation with the Department for Special Enterprises in the National Insurance Institute (NII), which will also fund most of the project, and with authorization from the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services.

826. The project will be guided and supported by the staff of the eating disorders' clinic and will be operated by a non-profit organization. The project's cost is estimated at 3.5 million NIS (900,000$) over the next three years, during which time, its efficacy and results will be evaluated. The Ministry of Health will participate in the funding of some of the treatments depending on the numbers of girls who receive treatment.

827. The purpose of this project is to create an intermediate stage, to help young women who are in the recovery process to maintain their recovery, and to support them in their reintegration to every-day life. It should be mentioned that in 2007, the NII established a hostel in Herzliya, intended for girls whose rehabilitation was complete, whereas the hostel to be established in the north is intended for girls who have not completed their rehabilitation process and are still at risk of reverting to their eating disorder.

Performances and commercials

828. According to a 2001 Amendment to the Youth Employment Regulations (Mediation for Employment of Youth in a Performance or Commercial) 5759-1999, the mediation fee payable on account of a child's participation in a performance or commercial shall not exceed 20 per cent of the payments received from the person permitted to employ a child under the age of fifteen.

829. In addition, a request to receive a mediation permit should include a commitment by the person requesting the permit to adhere to the relevant laws and regulations, as well as the conditions of the permit. Furthermore, the person requesting a permit authorizes the Minister of Industry Trade and Labor to receive information from the Criminal Registry regarding her/him, as stipulated by the Criminal Registry and the Rehabilitation Law 5741-1981, as well as information regarding open cases in which indictments were filed against her/him. The request should also include the opinion of the child, if she/he is capable of forming her/his own opinion and the consent of the child's parents.

Data on working minors

830. Table 52 (below) reveals that 6.9 per cent of minors aged 15 to 17 are employed (7.6 per cent of these minors are boys and 6.1 per cent of these minors are girls). The percentage of Jewish boys who are employed is greater than that of Arab boys. However, in the Arab population, particularly rural communities, minors engage in work which is usually not reported, such as agriculture and housework. Given this fact, and the high rates of illiteracy in the Arab population, it is possible that more youth work in Arab localities than is reported. This may be particularly true regarding girls.

Table 52

Population aged 15–17 by work, studies, gender and population group 2001–2007

	2001			2006			2007
	Arabs	Jews	Total	Arabs	Jews	Total	Arabs	Jews	Total
Grand total
Thousands	77.9	258.4	336.3	85.2	254.4	346.3	89.7	255.8	350.6
Percentage	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100
Work	3.2	9	7.6	3.5	8	7	2.5	8.3	6.9
Thereof: Study	1.2	7.6	6.1	-	6.9	5.3	-	7.2	5.5
Do not study	2.2	1.4	1.6	3.3	1.1	1.7	2.2	1.1	1.4
Do not work	96.8	91	92.4	96.5	92	93	97.5	91.7	93.1
Thereof: Study	82.1	85.6	84.8	82.6	86.2	85.2	85.1	86.3	85.9
Do not study	14.7	5.4	7.6	13.8	5.8	7.8	12.4	5.5	7.2
Men
Thousands	38.9	134	172.9	43.7	130.8	177.7	45.8	130.9	179.4
Percentage	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100

	2001			2006			2007
	Arabs	Jews	Total	Arabs	Jews	Total	Arabs	Jews	Total
Work	5.6	9.4	8.6	6.6	8.8	8.3	4.3	8.6	7.6
Thereof: Study	-	7.8	6.4	-	7.6	5.8	-	7.7	5.8
Do not study	4.1	1.6	2.1	6.2	1.3	2.5	3.9	0.9	1.8
Do not work	94.4	90.6	91.4	93.6	91.1	91.7	95.7	91.4	92.4
Thereof: Study	77.7	84.9	83.3	79.9	85.2	83.9	82.9	85.9	85
Do not study	16.4	5.6	8.1	13.7	6	7.8	12.8	5.5	7.4
Women
Thousands	38.9	124.4	163.3	41.5	123.7	168.6	43.9	124.8	171.2
Percentage	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100
Work	-	8.4	6.7	-	7.1	5.5	-	8	6.1
Thereof: Study	-	7.2	5.8	-	6.2	4.7	-	6.8	5.1
Do not study	0.3	1.2	0.9	-	1	0.8	-	1.2	1
Do not work	99	91.6	93.3	99.5	92.8	94.4	99.4	92	93.9
Thereof: Study	86.2	86.4	86.4	85.5	87.1	86.7	87.3	86.6	86.8
Do not study	12.8	5.1	7	14.0	5.7	7.8	12.1	5.4	7.1

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, 2002, 2007, 2008, 2009.

Table 53

Youth labour: files opened and fines imposed during 2005–2008

	2005	2006	2007	2008	Total
Files opened	412	89	453	682	1 636
Fines imposed	162	85	67	576	890
Amounts (NIS)	704 500	447 900	448 000	4 725 250	6 325 650

Source: The Central Bureau of Statistics, 2002, 2007, 2008, 2009.

Table 54

Minimum wage for youth (in accordance with the Minimum Wage Regulations (Working Youth and Apprentices) 5747-1987)

Age	per cent of the minimum wage of an adult	Minimum wage per month	Minimum wage per hour
Under 16	70%	2 695.13 NIS	15.58 NIS
Under 17	75%	2 887.63 NIS	16.69 NIS
Under 18	83%	3 195.65 NIS	18.47 NIS
Apprentice	60%	2 310.11 NIS	13.35 NIS

Source: The Ministry of Trade, Industry and Labor, July 2008.

C. Article 34 – Sexual exploitation and sexual abuse

The legal situation: definition of offences

831. Amendment No. 61 to the Penal Law, issued on 12 June 2001 supplements Section 348 regarding the performance of indecent acts. According to Section 348(a), a person committing an indecent act against a person in one of the circumstances enumerated in Section 345(a)(2) to (5), is liable to seven years' imprisonment. The acts are as follows: when receiving consent as a result of the use of deceit in respect of her/his identity or the nature of the act; when the act is committed against a minor below the age of fourteen, regardless of her/his consent; when exploiting the state of unconsciousness or other condition that prevents the giving of consent freely or by exploiting the fact that the person is mentally ill or deficient. Exploitation of this kind does not constitute free consent. According to Section 348(b), if a person committed an indecent act against a person in one of the circumstances specified in Section 345(b)(1) to (5), then that person will be liable to ten years' imprisonment. The circumstances specified in Section 345(b)(1) to (5) are as follows: a person commits an act against a minor below the age of sixteen, and in the circumstances specified in Section 345(a)(1), (2),(4) or (5); while threatening the minor with a firearm or other weapon; while causing bodily or mental injury, or pregnancy; together with the abuse of the person before, during or after the act; in the presence of one or several others, who came together to commit an indecent act by one or several of them.

832. According to Section 348(c), if a person committed an indecent act against a person without her/his consent, but not under the circumstances stipulated in Subsections 348(a), (b) or (c1) – that person will be liable to three years' imprisonment. According to Section 348(c1), an indecent act committed against a person without her/his consent, which is achieved as a result of the use of force or other coercive measures, or as a result of the threat to use force or other coercive measures – whether towards the person or towards anybody else, will render the person liable to seven years' imprisonment.

833. Section 351 of the Penal Law is concerned with sexual offences committed within the family, and prescribes harsher punishments than those prescribed for offences committed by someone who is not related to the victim (See Chapter V, above).

834. According to Section 203B(a) of the Penal Law, if a person induces another to engage in prostitution, and there are aggravating circumstances with respect to the prostitution (Sections 199, 201, 202, 203), the person who committed the offence will be liable to a longer term of imprisonment. That is, with respect to offences for which a penalty is of five years' imprisonment, the person committing the act against a minor will be liable to seven years' imprisonment due to the aggravating circumstances. Accordingly, a sentence of seven years' imprisonment will be extended to ten years; a sentence of ten years' imprisonment — will be extended to fifteen years, and a sentence of sixteen years' imprisonment — will be extended to twenty years.

835. Furthermore, if an offence was committed under these sections against a minor below the age of fourteen by a person responsible for the minor, then the perpetrator shall be liable to double the penalty, but no more than twenty years' imprisonment.

836. The Penal Law was amended in 2006 (Amendment No 91), so that Section 15 now applies the principle of extraterritoriality to the offences of pornography and prostitution when committed against minors. It is currently possible to try offenders in Israel for such offences, even though the act might not constitute a criminal offence in the country in which it was performed (no double criminality is required).

837. Limitations on the Return of a Sex Offender to the Surroundings of the Victim of the Offence Law 5765-2004 was enacted in order to protect the victim of the offence and to prevent additional harm that might occur as a result of frequent encounters with the sexual offender. The Law is not intended to impinge -proportionally upon the rights of the sex offender.

838. According to Section 3 of the Limitations on the Return of a Sex Offender to the Surroundings of the Victim of the Offence Law 5765-2004 (the "Victim of the Offence Law"), a Court may issue an order that imposes limitations on the places of residence or employment of a sexual offender. The court will order this in cases where the offender's place of residence or employment is in the vicinity of the victim's place of residence or employment, provided that the court is convinced, after holding a hearing, that it is necessary to impose such limitations as a failure to do so may cause the victim to suffer serious mental harm. The Court in its decision should consider the implication of such limitations on the sexual offender's rights.

839. Section 3 further states that the court will hold a hearing regarding the imposition of limitations on a sexual offender, following a request submitted by one of the following: the victim (or a person on her/his behalf), the Attorney General, a police or military prosecutor or a Social worker . However, the Court may decide not to hold a hearing even if requested to do so, if the victim or the person on her/his behalf requested that such a hearing not be held.

840. The hearing should be held after sentencing, or if the offender has been sentenced to imprisonment or a period of hospitalization, before or at the time of the release from these institutions. However, in special circumstances, which must be recorded, the Court may hold the hearing up to three months following the release.

841. The decision to impose restrictions shall not exceed a period of three years. The Court may extend the period from time to time for additional periods that shall not exceed three years if the circumstances that originally justified the order still hold.

842. According to Section 4, a Court deciding to issue such an order may appoint an expert who shall submit a written opinion as to the state of the victim. This opinion shall include an evaluation of the mental harm that may be caused to the victim, as a result of residing or working near the offender. Section 5 of the Law stipulates that the approval of the victim is required for such an evaluation by a court-appointed expert. Furthermore, upon receipt of the consent of a victim over the age of fourteen, there shall be no need to obtain the further authorization of her/his legal guardian in order to perform the evaluation.

843. The court may agree to the evaluation of a minor under the age of fourteen who cannot express her /his consent, even if the legal guardian refused to give consent to the evaluation. The court will only do so if it is convinced that the evaluation is in the best interest of the minor, and after hearing the opinions of the minor's guardian and the Social Welfare Department that is responsible for the minor's case.

844. On 7 August 2001 the Knesset enacted the Prevention of Employment of Sex Offenders in Certain Institutions Law 5761-2001, which has since been amended several times. The Law defines institutions as schools attended by minors, educational institutions for minors, minors' day-care centres and nurseries. In addition, sports and cultural centres for youth, gyms and sport clubs attended by minors, kindergartens, zoos, amusement-parks, youth movements, swimming pools open to minors, summer camps, boarding schools, clubs, clinics, children's hospitals, or paediatric wards, transportation services that transport groups of minors, or a business that organizes trips for minors or provides security services for minors on their trips. In addition, these institutions include, minors' residence, day-care centres or treatment centres, employment rehabilitation centres, a club and/or businesses providing tourism services and transportation services for mentally or developmentally disabled persons; as well as hospitals and health clinics as defined by the Mentally Ill Patients Treatment Law.

845. Section 2 of the Law stipulates that an employer in such institutions shall not employ an adult convicted as an adult of committing sexual offences. Furthermore, an adult convicted of committing sexual offences shall not undertake employment involved with children. These rules as of the date of conviction and for a period of twenty years thereafter.

846. Furthermore, Section 3 of the Law stipulates that an employer shall not accept an adult for work in such an institution, prior to receiving the Police's confirmation that there is no legal hindrance according to this law to hiring the individual in question.

847. Section 5 of the Law prescribes a fine of 67,300 NIS ($18,189) for an employer who hired a convicted sexual offender, or hired the offender prior to receiving the abovementioned police confirmation, and prescribes a year's imprisonment for the offender.

848. These provisions apply to a direct employer as well as to employment through manpower companies.

849. The Haifa District Court sentenced a defendant to a sentence of ten months' imprisonment and fourteen months' suspended imprisonment, on the condition that he does not commit any related offences for three years following his release. In addition, the defendant was fined the amount of 3,000 NIS (810$). The defendant was convicted under Sections 214 (b), and 214(b3) of the Penal Law, for the possession of obscene publications, including the likeness of a minor.

850. The Court stressed that the protection of minors from abuse for pornographic purposes is a universal interest that is reflected in article 34 of the Convention. The State of Israel shares this concern and has enacted legislation prescribing a significant penalty for those who violate the rights of minors. (Cr.C 1780/06 The State of Israel v. Aharon Ofer (23.09.2007)).

Sexual exploitation

851. Amendment No. 77 of the Penal Law, issued in November 2003, supplements Section 346 to include sexual intercourse between a therapist and a female minor between the ages of sixteen and eighteen as a form of exploitation of a relationship of dependency, unless the sexual intercourse commenced before the beginning of the therapy and within the course of an intimate relationship (Section 346(2)). The same is true of sodomy committed by a therapist against a minor between the ages of sixteen and eighteen, unless the sodomy commenced before the beginning of the therapy and within the course of an intimate relationship (Section 347(a)(2)).

852. The Amendment supplements Section 347 of the Penal Law and inserts the definition of sexual intercourse with a therapist. Section 347A(a) defines therapy as any diagnosis, evaluation, consultation, treatment, rehabilitation, or conversations performed over a long period of time through personal meetings, in order to aid a person suffering from distress, disturbance, illness, or a different problem, stemming from a mental or emotional basis. A therapist is defined as a person who engages professionally in providing therapy as an occupation or a profession, and is a psychologist, psychiatrist or social worker, or a person masquerading as one of these professionals. Section 347A(b) stipulates that a therapist who engages in sexual intercourse with a woman or commits sodomy against a person, who reached the age of eighteen, during the course of treatment or in the three years following the treatment, while obtaining consent by exploiting the actual mental dependency that existed as a result of the treatment given, is subject to four years' imprisonment. For the purpose of this Section, acts committed during the period of treatment, will be regarded as exploiting the relationship of dependency. This will not apply if the acts were committed prior to the commencement of the therapy.

853. According to Section 348(d)(1) of the Law, a person committing an indecent act against a minor between the ages of fourteen and eighteen, exploiting a relationship of dependence, authority, education or supervision, is subject to four years' imprisonment. Amendment No. 77 supplements Section 348(d)(2) and stipulates that a therapist committing an indecent act against a minor between the ages of fourteen and eighteen, during therapy, will be regarded as an act committed by exploiting the relationship of dependence. This will not apply if the minor reached the age of sixteen, and the acts were commenced prior to the beginning of the therapy, while engaging in an intimate relationship.

The Ministry of Education's treatment of sexual abuse

854. The Unit for the Prevention of Child and Youth Abuse ("the Unit") in "Shefi," which is the Counseling and Psychological Services within the Ministry of Education, has dealt with the issue of sexual abuse since 1989. Assistance is granted through development, prevention, and treatment programmes and the training of professionals. The Unit includes 32 advisors and seven psychological coordinators, four of which are assigned to the Arab population. During 2008, the Unit dealt with approximately 750 cases of sexual abuse which took place in schools.

855. The Director General of the Ministry of Education Directives' refers to the Ministry's policy of addressing sexual abuse. Directive No. 5760/2(a) 1999 includes guidance on how to stop the abuse, treat the victim and assist the criminal offender; and when necessary, report to the relevant authorities. Directive No. 5763/6(b) 2003 refers to the sexual abuse of pupils by their educators, and clarifies the manner in which an educator suspected of abusing pupils is to be treated – that is the immediate separation between the educator and the victim, assisting the victim and reporting the incident to the Police.

856. The Directive also renders it possible to suspend an educator immediately. Directive No. 5769/3(b) 2008 relates to the duty to report on such incidents, by obliging every school principal to conduct annual workshops that raise awareness on the subject. Since 2006, the Ministry of Education has dedicated an annual week to raise awareness of sexual abuse. The week is called the "Educational System Week – Against Sexual Violence." This week includes educational activities and workshops for pupils of all ages, which are conducted in every school.

857. The Ministry of Education trains educators to identify sexual abuse among pupils. Such training is achieved through the use of special programmes designed for professionals who work in the field of education. Since 2003, the Ministry of Education has trained approximately 500 educational psychologists to treat pupils who are victims of sexual abuse and since 2009, the Ministry began training psychologists for short-term intervention with minors who exhibit harmful sexual behaviour.

The child-victim

858. The Crime Victims' Rights Law was enacted in order to stipulate the rights of the victims of crime and to protect their dignity as human beings, without detracting from the rights of suspects, defendants, and accused individuals.

859. According to this law, when granting rights to victims, one is required to consider each victim and her/his needs, while protecting their dignity and privacy, and within a reasonable time. Section 4 of the Law determines that granting rights to victims who are minors shall be realized while making the necessary adjustments for the relevant circumstances, and while considering the maturity of the minor and the principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

860. During the criminal proceedings, which include the court hearings, the victim is entitled to protection from the suspect, defendant or accused, as well as from their relatives and associates (Section 6).

861. The personal information of victims of severe violence or of a sexual offence, for which an investigation was launched or an indictment was filed, and which information was gathered by the authorities during the investigation or which forms part of the indictment, shall not be given to the defendant or her/his attorney. Furthermore, a prosecutor is permitted not to transfer material from the investigation to the defence when the offence is violent or sexual, even if the offence is not severe in nature, if it might cause damage to the wellbeing of the victim (Section 7).

862. The victim in a criminal proceeding is entitled to receive information regarding her/his rights as a victim and regarding the criminal proceeding provided that the receipt of such information is not prohibited by law. The victim is entitled, following her/his request or following the request of her/his attorney, to study the indictment filed and to receive a copy of it unless the Law prohibits it or if the District Attorney's Office or the head of the police prosecution unit determine it is inappropriate.

863. The victim of a violent or sexual offence, who so requested, is entitled to receive information from the relevant authorities regarding the imprisonment or other lawful custodial methods imposed upon the defendant. In addition, the victim is entitled to express her/his opinion in writing regarding the issue of early release and to submit it to the Parole Board; and regarding a request for pardon submitted to the President, and submit that to the Parole Department in the Ministry of Justice. In addition, victims of a violent or sexual offence are entitled to an opportunity to express their opinion, in writing, with regard to the foreseeable risk of releasing a sentenced offender who is about to be brought before the Parole Board (Section 19). Similarly, the victim of a violent or sexual offence is entitled to express her/his opinion regarding a request for amnesty applied for by a sentenced offender (Section 20).

864. Furthermore, the victim of an offence is entitled to receive information regarding assistance services available for victims, whether they are made available by the State or by private bodies.

865. The Law further stipulates that the proceedings relating to violent or sexual offences shall be carried out within a reasonable time, in order to prevent the delay of justice.

866. Victims of a severe violent or sexual offence are entitled to be accompanied by a person of their choice during the investigation, unless such person damages or disrupts the investigation or the procedures involved in the investigation. Moreover, victims of a severe violent or sexual offence, who receive notice of the possibility of a plea bargain's being reached with the defendant, are entitled to express their opinion before the prosecutor. The victim's opportunity to do so is to occur prior to the prosecutor's decision making, unless the District Attorney's Office or the head of the police prosecution unit determined that it would lead to a disruption of the procedure. Similarly, a victim of a severe violent or sexual offence who received notification of the intention to stay the proceedings is entitled to an opportunity to express her/his opinion in writing before the Attorney-General or before a person acting on her/his behalf.

867. Furthermore, these victims should not be investigated regarding their sexual past, except for necessary investigations regarding any sexual relationship with the suspect, unless the officer in charge determines that such an investigation is necessary in order to determine the truth. In addition, victims, together with a person of their choice who accompanies them, are entitled to be present in court sessions conducted behind closed doors.

868. Any victim may submit a statement to the investigating body or to the prosecutor, regarding any injury or damage caused as a result of the offence, including physical damage, emotional damage or damage to property. Victims who provided such statements are entitled to be heard by the court in the sentencing hearings.

869. Furthermore, the Law calls for the formation of assistance units in the District Attorney's Offices and in the State Attorney's Office which will be in charge of ensuring the fulfilment of the rights of the victims according to this law, as well as the appointment of officers within the Police who will be placed in charge of implementing the Law.

870. The Rotlevi Committee noted in its recommendations that minors, who are victims of a crime, are particularly vulnerable, and thus, ought to receive all legal information relevant to their situation. Such information must be conveyed in language which is clear and compatible to the minor's level of maturity. A minor's objection to the notification of her/his parents must be respected so long as it does not cause substantial harm. The Committee also concluded that a minor who is a victim should be able to participate in legal proceedings and be granted all treatment necessary, including rehabilitation services offered by the State. All of the above mentioned recommendations were incorporated into Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law.

Protection of minor victims of sexual offences in criminal proceedings

871. On 10 April 2008 the Knesset enacted the Assistance to Minor Victims of Sexual or Violence Offences Law 5768-2008 (The: "Minor Victims of Sexual or Violence Offences Law"). The purpose of this law is to determine the right of a minor who is a victim of a sexual offence or a violent offence to receive initial assistance in a specially designated centre.

872. According to Section 3 of the Law, each centre shall facilitate initial assistance according to the minor's needs in the following areas: the provision of medical and mental diagnosis and treatment, and the provision of immediate physical needs including food and clothing. A session with a youth investigator, police investigator, social worker or other authorized personnel in order to begin the necessary treatment or the investigation, and referral to State or private entities, which provide assistance services, including legal assistance, emergency housing, company and long-term treatment.

873. Such assistance shall be provided without infringing upon the rights of the suspect, accused or defendant.

874. Due to budgetary constraints, the implementation of this law shall be gradual, so that each year at least one centre shall be established and begin its operation, provided that within three years, at least eight centres deployed nationwide are established, allowing for the full realization of this law.

875. As part of the implementation of the Minor Victims of Sexual or Violence Offences Law, the Tel Ha'Shomer Protection Center opened in March 2009. This centre is located next to the Emergency Room of the Children's Hospital that makes it possible to treat a child medically and for a Child Protection Officer to simultaneously collect medical evidence to conduct a criminal investigation. The Center responds to cases of minors (between the ages of three and eighteen years of age) suspected of suffering family abuse, reported by the hospital to the Social Welfare Department. The Center's personnel include a doctor trained to collect evidence from children, and a nurse.

Minor victims of sex offences or offences committed within the family

876. Section 368A-368F of the Penal Law addresses injuries to minors and defenceless persons. Amendment No. 94 of the Penal Law issued on May 30, 2007, adds to the definition of a family member (Section 368A (2)) foster parents, their spouses, their parents or offspring, their siblings and the spouse of each. This Amendment also adds Section 368D (c1), which incorporates the requirement to report any reasonable ground of suspicion that sexual offences have been committed against a minor or a defenceless person, by a family member who had not reached the age of eighteen years, to the Police or to the Child Protection Authority. Failure to report such abuse constitutes a criminal offence, which carries a sentence of three months' imprisonment. This Amendment also imposes a sentence of six months' imprisonment on professionals who fail to report such abuse to the police or Child Protection Authority, (e.g., physicians, nurses, educators, social workers, policemen, psychologists, criminologists, and school principals and staff members (Section 368D(c2)). The Amendment also imposes a sentence of six months' imprisonment on a person responsible for a minor or a defenceless person who had reasonable ground to believe that a sexual offence was committed against the minor or the defenceless person by a family member who had not reached the age of eighteen, and failed to report the abuse to the police or Child Protection Authority.

877. The Social Welfare Department in the Ministry of Health developed a course of study for the prevention of violence and sexual abuse within the family. The course is composed of 200 hours. It includes training professionals and volunteers such as hospital companions and Para-medical personnel. To date, eighteen physicians have already passed this course.

Investigation of minor victims or witnesses to offences of sex or violence

878. The provision regarding testimony of a minor who is testifying against her/his parent – who is accused of committing sexual offences, was revoked following the broadening of the Penal Law application. In a recent case, the Supreme Court reaffirmed its position regarding the unequivocal prohibition against a minor testifying without permission having been granted by a Youth Investigator. The Court stated that it holds no discretion in such matter, nor may it evade the prohibition. The Court may request a re-evaluation of the minor by the Youth Investigator closer to the date of the trial, if the proceeding are extended, according to Section 2(g)(2) to the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law. Still, the decision of the Youth Investigator following a re-evaluation is final and absolute. (S.Cr.C 1149/05 The State of Israel v. Anonymous (27.5.2008)).

Data on investigations of offences committed against minors

879. In 2008, 34,641 files concerning general violent offences committed against minors were submitted. 2,509 files concerning violent offences against minors within the family were opened. 2,504 files relating to sexual offences against minors were opened.

Table 55

Data on the opening of police files regarding offences committed against minors in 2008

Type of offence	Total	In the family	Outside the family
Violence offence against a minor	34 641	2 509	32 132
Sexual offences against a minor	2 420	-	-

Source: Israeli Police, Crime Victims' Department – Violence Towards Children, 2008.

880. Minors were exposed to the following sexual offences: rape, unlawful sexual intercourse, sexual harassment, sodomy, indecent acts (forcefully, non- forcefully and in public).

Testimony of victims in court

881. A 2004 Amendment of the Criminal Procedure Revision (Examination of Witnesses) Law, supplements Section 2C and stipulates that a minor who is a witness in a criminal proceeding involving sexual offences, abuse and assault, prostitution and obscenity, murder, attempted murder, and manslaughter, shall have the same protection whether the defendant is a relative or not. Thus, the Court may direct that the testimony be given without the presence of the defendant. The same protection is provided to a minor testifying regarding harm caused with aggravated intent, grievous harm, and violence against a minor by a person in charge, when the minor is testifying against the person in charge, her/his sibling or the sibling's spouse or the descendent of one of these. In addition, the same protection applies when a minor testifies against her/his parent regarding sexual offences such as rape, sodomy, indecent acts, etc. Furthermore, this protection applies to offences for which the penalty is death, life imprisonment or over ten years' imprisonment, and when the trial is conducted in a District Court.

*A new police programme for the assistance of minor victims and suspectsRestorative justice and mediation groups

882. This mechanism is an alternative to criminal proceedings. Minors who committed a crime meet with the victims of the crime to discuss the offence's impact and the damage the offence caused, and to discuss possible corrective actions which the minor can take. In addition, a rehabilitation programme was constructed especially for minor-offenders in order to assist them to leave the criminal path. If the process is successful, the Police can consider the repeal of the criminal charges against the minor. During 2008, 76 minors participated in such mediation groups, 25 meetings were completed, 29 meetings were halted and 22 meetings are still in progress.

Project "Chances"

883. "Chances" is a pre-rehabilitation programme, designated for minors who committed a crime and wish to reform their ways with the assistance of a family member. The programme provides an immediate answer for youth who were often required to wait for weeks before they were able to meet with a Probation Officer. The programme operates in 22 population areas, and the majority of the participants are new immigrants ("Olim") (75 per cent). In 2008, 914 minors were referred to the programme and 474 actually participated in the programme.

Programme to accompany minor victims and witnesses

884. This programme offers minors who are victims and/or witnesses of crimes the opportunity to be accompanied by an adult companion and to receive professional support during criminal proceedings. The programme starts with a Police investigation, and continues with the minor's testimony or giving of evidence in court. 330 children took part in this programme during 2008, with the aid of the Council for (child) Social Welfare Department.

National Program in Support of Children and Youth at Risk

885. This programme implements the recommendations of the Schmidt Committee, a Prime Minister Committee for Children and Youth at Risk. The Committee was established on 16 November 2003 by the Israeli Government (chaired by Professor Hillel Schmidt, head of the Hebrew University Social Work Department) in order to examine the condition of Israeli children and youth in distress and at risk. The Committee has published its recommendations in 2006, which included a series of measures aimed at improvements, including: a budget increase; affirmative action for the Arab population, the Ultra-Orthodox population and new immigrants. The programme was initiated in 2008 in 56 municipalities and a budget of over 100 million NIS (27,000,000$) for the next five years, was allocated. According to Government Resolution No. 1007, dated 16 November 2003, Israel's former Prime Minister and former Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services, appointed a public Committee for the examination of the conditions of children and youth at risk or in distress. On 12 September 2006, following a report submitted by the committee in March 2006, the Government accepted Resolution No. 477 for the gradual implementation of a plan recommended by the Committee. In 2007, the implementation of the plan began in the local authorities of several towns in Israel with a special annual budget of 200 million NIS (54,000,000$).

Child protection centres

886. These centres assemble experts involved in the process of investigation and medical diagnosis of minors who are victims of sexual and violent crimes. It aims to shorten and focus the questioning and diagnosis process, to provide emergency treatment if needed, facilitate the decision-making process and offer referrals and recommendations for further treatment. Moreover, the centres ensure sensitive and versatile professional guidance. The first centre was established in Jerusalem in 2002 and treated 295 children during 2008. The second centre was opened in March 2009 in Tel-Hashomer hospital and six additional centres will be opened over the next three years.

Legislation

887. In 2006, Section 2B of the Criminal Procedure Revision (Examination of Witnesses) Law was revised, adding a trafficking in person's offence to the previous provision regarding sexual offences. The Rotlevi Committee (2003) focused on the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law. The Committee's recommendations were premised on the assumption that minors who are witnesses and part of the process of testimony have an independent status that requires separate attention. The Committee also suggested that child investigators include professionals such as psychologists, psychiatrics and clinical criminologists with at least five years of experience in their field.

888. The Committee recommended the reduction of the weight of evidence attached to a child's testimony by an investigator in order to strike an appropriate balance between the rights of defendants and the witnesses. The Committee recommended the creation of a more supportive environment for minor witnesses, in court and in the investigation rooms. Particular attention must be given to children with disabilities.

889. In 2006, a new law defending the public from sex offenders was enacted, the Public Protection from Sex Offenders Law, 5766-2006 (the: "Protection from Sex Offenders Law"). The aim of this law is to defend the public from sex offences by repetitive sex offenders. The Protection from Sex Offenders Law enables courts to issue supervision orders against sex offenders, subsequent to experts' risk evaluation. A risk evaluation is an assessment of the possibility of harm of repetitive sex crimes and a recommendation on how to supervise her/him in order to prevent future sex crimes. Professionals specializing in the mental health field make the risk assessment. These professional will be trained accordingly and be responsible for the supervision and a follow-up plan of the Offenders.

890. The experts shall be appointed by the Minister of Health and the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services from the following related fields: psychiatry, psychology, social work and clinical criminology in order to asses the dangerousness of the sex offenders and supervise their behaviour. Subsequent to a specialist evaluation conveyed to court, the sex offender who was found to be above minimum risk is subject to a supervision court order. A hearing will be scheduled in two cases: (1) based on the offender and/or the Attorney General initiative. (2) When the victim of the crime is a minor. Such order may impose the following restrictions:

- Alcohol and drugs consumption.
- Possessing any kind of sexual arousing substance.
- Driving.
- Leaving a place of residence at certain hours.
- Hanging out at certain places.
- Socializing with other sex offenders.
- Socializing with minors.
- Possessing certain objects.
- Meeting with the victim or passing by her/his place of residence.
- Working or volunteering at certain places.
- Living or working at certain locations.
- Using an Internet connection.

891. The maximum period of a supervision order shall not exceed five years. After five years, a new order can be issued if the assessment of the sex offender remains of high risk. The total period of supervision shall not exceed 20 years.

892. The Minister of Public Security established a special Supervision Unit responsible for these assessments. Such assessments are made prior to court decisions regarding treatments, punishments and court orders that can be imposed on the sex offenders. A supervision order is granted after the sex offender completed to serve her/his punishment or followed a conviction where no imprisonment is imposed.

893. The Protection from Sex Offenders Law currently applies to offenders who were sentenced to imprisonment and completed their punishment or those who their victims were children. By 2 October 2011 this law will apply to all sex offenders (Section 34 to the Law).

Minors over the age of fourteen

Case law

894. In a petition for an additional hearing submitted to the Supreme Court, a defendant convicted of committing indecent acts against, and rape of, his stepdaughter, claimed that a written expert opinion and the testimony of a youth investigator should not be regarded as evidence. The defendant argued that the minor herself is over fourteen and testified in the proceedings. Here, the minor was questioned by the youth investigator in the investigation stage, and turned fourteen, a month before the date set for the review of evidence in the trial. Therefore, she was called as a witness by the prosecution, testified and was confronted with her testimony before the youth investigator during the cross examination.

895. In its ruling, the District Court created a new rule, allowing the testimony of the youth investigator regarding the credibility of the minor's testimony; even after the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law no longer applies.

896. The testimony and expert opinion of the youth investigator were needed to clarify the investigation stage, as the minor's credibility was questioned during the cross examination, due to the fact that her complaint against the actions of her father was made gradually during the investigation, and not in a complete and integral manner. The Court did not find that there were grounds for a further hearing, as the defendants' claims did not give rise to new legal questions, and therefore rejected the request. (C.A.H 3281/02 Anonymous v. The State of Israel (19.9.02)).

Trafficking in children

897. The Anti Trafficking Law (Legislative Amendments) 5767-2006 entered into force on 29 October 2006. The Law promulgates a broad crime of trafficking for a number of illegal purposes: prostitution, sexual crimes, slavery or forced labour, removal of organs, pornography, and using the body of a person to give birth to a baby who is then taken from her.

898. Offences involving minors are regarded severely, and specific sections were added regarding the abuse of minors:

- The crime of trafficking in persons (Section 377A) – Anyone who carries on a transaction in a person for one of the above stipulated purposes or in so acting places the person in danger of one of the following, shall be liable to sixteen years' imprisonment and twenty years' imprisonment if the offence is committed against a minor.

- The crime of holding a person under conditions of slavery (Section 375A) – Anyone holding a person under conditions of slavery for the purposes of work or services, including sexual services - is liable to sixteen years' imprisonment. Where the offence was committed against a minor, the offender is liable to twenty years' imprisonment.

- The crime of causing a person to leave a state for purposes of prostitution or slavery (Section 376B) – Anyone who causes another person to leave the state in which she/he lives for purposes of engaging the person in prostitution or holding that person under conditions of slavery shall be liable to ten years' imprisonment. Where the offence was committed against a minor, the offender is liable to fifteen years' imprisonment.

899. An obligation to report suspected trafficking offences committed against minors or those who cannot care for themselves by those who care for them, has been imposed upon certain professionals (doctors, nurses, educational workers, social workers, employees of the social welfare services, police officers, psychologists, criminologists, paramedics, staff members in shelters) who have a reasonable basis to believe that a trafficking offence has been committed (at any time). These professionals are to report their suspicions as soon as possible to a welfare worker or the Police. Violation of this obligation is a criminal offence. In addition, it is incumbent upon a member of the general public to so report if she/he has a reasonable basis to believe that such a crime has just been committed (recently). Violation of this obligation is a criminal offence.

Case law

900. On 24 January 2007 the Haifa District Court accepted the appeal of a fifteen year old foreign minor who had been a victim of trafficking in persons. The Court decided to release the minor after a period of eight and a half months in custody. This was the first decision by an Israeli court recognizing a person as a victim of trafficking in persons for purposes other than prostitution.

901. The District Court held that in cases where an illegal resident is a minor who does not speak the language, the Detention Review Tribunal must appoint a Public Defender to provide her/him with legal assistance. As the minor in question was not provided with legal representation, the Court held that he had been deprived of his procedural and fundamental rights to such a degree as to amount to a distortion of justice.

902. The Court stated that ‘custody’ as referred to in the Entry into Israel Law is defined as “custody until the completion of the proceedings.” Subsequently, if proceedings cannot be completed, then custody based solely on this Law will be illegal. In this particular case, the proceedings could not be completed because they required the minor’s removal from the country. The removal was prevented by a lack of diplomatic relations between Israel and the minor’s country of origin, a situation which has yet to be resolved. Indefinite detention of the minor under these circumstances, based exclusively on the Entry into Israel Law, was found to be illegal. (A.A 000379/06 Anonymous v. The Ministry of Interior).

903. To date, trafficking in minors never constituted a major problem in Israel. In some cases victims were under the age of eighteen, yet even in these cases, adolescents rather than children were involved. These findings are reflected in intelligence data, as well as in the numbers of women removed from Israel, and those residing in the “Maagan” shelter for victims of trafficking.

Child prostitution

904. Under Israeli law, the act of prostitution is itself not criminalized. Nevertheless, related activities of those who profit from acts of prostitution are criminalized, such as pandering for purposes of prostitution, purchasing the prostitution services of minors, and publicizing the prostitution services of minors. The penalties are as follows:

- Exploitation of a minor for prostitution – heightens penalties according to Section 203B of the Penal Law, thus:
 - For an offence with a maximal penalty of five years – to seven years
 - For an offence with a maximal penalty of seven years – to ten years
 - For an offence with a maximal penalty of ten years – to fifteen years
 - For an offence with a maximal penalty of sixteen years – to twenty years
- If the offence is committed against a minor who is less than fourteen years old or by a person who is responsible for the minor – the maximum penalty is double the penalty established by the relevant section, but no more than twenty years
- Liability of a minor’s customer — (section 203C of the Penal Law) — maximal penalty of three years’ imprisonment.
- Prohibition of publicizing prostitution of a minor — (section 205A of the Penal Law) — maximum penalty of five years’ imprisonment.
- Prohibition of mentioning that a person is a minor in an advertisement for prostitution — (section 205B of the Penal Law) — maximum penalty of six months’ imprisonment.

Drug abuse

Israel Anti-Drug Authority (IADA)

905. In recent years, concern over the widespread use of drugs by Israeli youth has grown, and various agencies have increased their efforts to develop prevention and treatment programmes for adolescent drug users. It is the policy of the Police and the State Attorney’s Office, in cooperation with the Education Systems, to allow minors involved in drug trafficking and abuse to be referred to treatment and rehabilitation programmes, rather than to the criminal justice system.

906. The IADA coordinates policy, including information centres, in addition to treatment and rehabilitation services for minors subject to drug abuse. Together with the Civil Guard, the IADA have developed an experimental programme that recruits adult citizens who volunteer to patrol the cities and locate dropouts susceptible to drug abuse. The “Al-Sam” Association activates treatments and counselling centres for youth addicted to drugs. Treatment is provided on an anonymous basis, although the minor may request that her/his parents or a member of the school personnel become involved in her/his treatment. The minor may also participate in group therapy. The Ministry of Education initiates drug prevention programmes in schools, as part of the “preparation for life” programmes designed for adolescents (some of which are operated in cooperation with the IADA and Al-Sam). Such programmes aim to help adolescents cope with the changes they are going through, make independent decisions, and stand up to peer pressure; they also disseminate information about the ill effects of drugs. The Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services also operate drug prevention programmes for youth who do not attend school. In addition, periodic advertising campaigns in the media, aimed at young people, inform them about the fatal risks of drug use.

907. In order to create a database that examines drug abuse among children, the IADA conducts surveys and research. The latest national survey was conducted in 2005. The survey examined ordinary pupils and detached youth between the ages of twelve and eighteen. This survey revealed that approximately 10 per cent of ordinary pupils and 20 per cent of detached youth consumed some kind of illegal drug during that year. Approximately 20 per cent of ordinary pupils and 58 per cent of detached youth smoked tobacco during that year, and approximately 50 per cent of ordinary pupils and 60 per cent of detached youth reported drinking alcohol. In 2004, surveys focusing on the Arab, Druze and Bedouin populations revealed that approximately 12 per cent of Arab ordinary pupils and 14 per cent of the Arab detached youth had used an illegal psychoactive drug in the course of that year. Approximately 10 per cent of Druze standard pupils and 6 per cent of Druze detached youth had used an illegal psychoactive drug in the course of that year. Approximately 22 per cent of Bedouin youth had used at least one kind of illegal drug throughout that year. In 2007, a survey of former Soviet Union immigrant youth between the ages of twelve and eighteen was conducted. The survey revealed that approximately 35 per cent of the immigrant youth had used illegal drugs and 84 per cent consumed alcohol in the course of that year. Such data facilitates the estimation of the effort needed to reduce the rates of drug abuse among minors, as well as assist in developing a unique aid plan for each population group.

908. Several youth projects are operated by the IADA and analyzed by scholars that examine their effect. Among these projects are plans for treatments and prevention of runaway youth, pupils and minor children, who are regarded as ‘children at high risk.’ In addition, studies on different subjects are currently being conducted, for example world terrorism and its affect on drug abuse among youth (2008); and Availability, sources of information and the extent of minor’s seeking assistance (2008). There are also studies that examine the scope of minors living with their parents, yet consuming drugs (2005).

909. The programmes developed by the IADA are intended for all ages – from infancy to maturity. Such programmes are guiding and instructing teachers and pupils on how to abstain from dangerous chemical usage (common among youth). Other programmes aimed towards the Jewish and the Arab populations are based on psycho-educational models, advanced technology and interactive workshops. The psycho-educational model of counselling, views the counsellor as an instructor. It allows the counsellor to consider aspects of therapy similar to instructional situations, therefore creating the opportunity for using an established, empirical research methodology.

910. The treatment and rehabilitation arm of IADA includes varied programmes; all are subject to the supervision of the Ministry of Health. Each year, 1,500 youngsters are treated in ambulatory municipality welfare department clinics. There are four regional day-care centres designated for children that battle drug abuse. Each centre admits fifteen to twenty youngsters for a period of one year. Although there is no emphasis on gender or population groups, the number of immigrants from Ethiopia and the former Soviet Union is relatively high. The IADA also operates a National Rehabilitation Unit, intended for sixteen youngsters, for a period of three months. Two more rehabilitation clinics are set to open during 2009 and 2010.

911. The IADA also operates youth hostels and community treatments centres (Malkishua – community treatment for 70 youngsters, Tirat Zvi – youth hostel for eight religious girls, Kfar Rupin – youth hostel for eight secular girls, Afulla – youth hostel for ten, Tiberius – youth hostel for fifteen boys, Returno – community treatment centre for 25 religious youngsters) as well as in-school educational/treatment programmes that operate simultaneously in approximately 60 schools.

912. The IADA developed many youth assistance programmes. One of the programmes focuses on field work; the programme is called “Parents Patrols”. This programme supports youth during holidays and vacations, especially during night hours. The programme involves patrol vehicles composed of students who provide emotional aid to youth at risk, group activities for the prevention of drugs and alcohol abuse and spread information against drunk driving.

913. The IADA is responsible for vocational training; and instructs professionals who work with children and youth. Training regarding the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse is provided, among other things, to University professors, Ethiopian community mediators, scholars, MDs, paediatricians, parents, consultants at Mother and Child Health Clinics, special education professionals and the employees of the Probation officer and the services for youth in the Ministry for Social Affairs and Social Services.

914. Following a comprehensive 2007 Amendment to the Prohibition of Smoking in Public Places and Exposure to Smoking Law 5743-1983, it is now prohibited to smoke in public places including cinemas, shopping centres, hospitals, public transportation, restaurants, pubs, schools, kindergartens, etc. Furthermore, the owner of a public place must place signs in the public place regarding the prohibition against smoking, and is obligated to inspect and do all within her/his power to prevent smoking in the place she/he owns.

915. Each local municipality shall empower inspectors to enforce this law, and these inspectors, as well as police officers, are authorized to enter public places to ensure their compliance with the Law.

916. A recent Amendment to this law, issued on 4 February 2008, expands the prohibition against selling tobacco products to minors, to include a prohibition against selling products used to smoke tobacco to minors. Furthermore, the Amendment stipulates that a person shall not lease nor lend a product used to smoke tobacco to minors. According to Section 61(a)(1) to the Penal Law a fine shall be imposed on a person selling tobacco products or selling, lending, or leasing a product used to smoke tobacco to a minor.

Case law

917. The parents of a minor submitted a request to the Ashqelon Magistrate Court to forcibly place the minor in a rehabilitation and treatment centre. The request was submitted due to serious risk to the minor's life stemming from his addiction to drugs and alcohol. The social worker who dealt with the case supported the parents' request. The Court held that the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law authorizes the court to intervene in such matters and thereby force treatment on minors at risk. The court noted that even though there is no unanimity as to the efficiency of forced treatment with regard to addictions, there is no alternative treatment in this case that can save the minor's life. Since the Court could not find a facility suitable for the minor, it ordered the social worker to seek other ways of treatment. (C.M 378/07 Welfare Agency v. Anonymous (7.8.08).)

D. Articles 22, 38 and 39 – Children in emergency situations

Children in armed conflict

918. The State of Israel signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict on 14 November 2001, and ratified it on 18 July 2005. In accordance with article 10, paragraph 2, the Optional Protocol entered into force in Israel on 18 August 2005.

919. The Government of the State of Israel submitted its initial report concerning the implementation of the Optional Protocol in March 2008.

The age of military draft

920. According to Section 13 of the Israeli Defense Service Law, the IDF may enlist a person of 'military age' for regular service at a certain time and place. A man, found fit for service, will be of military age from 18 to 29 years. A woman, found fit for service, will be of military age from 18 to 26 years.

921. The above age is calculated, according to the amended Section 2 of the Defense Service Law, in the following manner:

Calculation of age

922. For the purpose of this Law:

- The calculation of age shall be in accordance with the Jewish calendar.
- A person who attains a particular age in a particular year of the Jewish calendar shall be regarded as follows:
 - (a) If she/he attains that age after the 1st of Tishrei and before the 1st of Nissan of that year – as having attained that age on the 1st of Tishrei of that year;
 - (b) If she/he attains that age after the 1st of Nissan of that year – as having attained that age on the 1st of Nissan of that year;
- (2a) paragraph (2) shall not apply to the calculation if the person attains or does not attain the age of 18 years, regarding:
 - (1) The definition of a person of military age in Section 1 and Sections 13, 15 and 16, except for service in the academic reserves track recognized in the army regulations and voluntary service according to its meaning in the said regulations.
 - (2) Sections 20(a) and (a1), 24 and 24a.
 - (3) The determination of age shall be governed by the provisions set out in the schedule.”

923. According to the above Section 2, the age for enlistment is calculated according to the Gregorian calendar, with the exception of those enlisting to a one-day administrative induction for the academic reserves and the Hesder Yeshivas, a programme which combines advanced Talmudic studies with military service in the IDF.

924. Note that the above criteria relating to determination of age is attributed to Amendment 13 of the Israeli Defense Service Law approved in the Knesset on 2 February 2004, which concluded the extensive process conducive to ratification of the Optional Protocol.

925. The explanatory note to the above Amendment Bill states: "In the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, accepted in the United Nations General Assembly in New York on 25 May 2000, entered into force on 12 February 2002 and signed by the State of Israel on 14 November 2001, it was determined, for the purpose of putting an end to the phenomenon of children and youth under the age of 18 being recruited to the armed forces, that the minimum age for compulsory recruitment to armed forces and taking part of hostilities is the age of 18".

Children in emergency situations

The effect of rockets on the City of Sderot and Israeli localities around the Gaza Strip

926. Over the last 10 years of endless rocket and mortar strikes, the impact on the Israeli population of the daily barrage of rockets has been debilitating. Studies have documented an entire generation of children traumatized by the terror of rocket strikes and the helplessness of adults to ensure their safety. Hamas increased the terror engendered by its attacks by timing them to coincide with the time when children were on their way to school in the morning or were returning in the afternoon.

927. There are over 2,200 primary and secondary schools within the range of the rockets. These institutions include over 1,700 kindergartens (with over 52,200 children) and nearly 500 schools (with over 196,000 children). There are over 248,000 pupils within rocket range. Had the onslaught of rocket attacks continued unabated, it was only a matter of time before a direct hit on a school, hospital or other public facility would have caused extensive loss of life. It was inevitable that civilian casualties, economic loss and the overall impact of these terrorist assaults would have mounted.

Data on casualties associated with mental disorder and anxiety

928. According to official data, 18 Israeli citizens were killed and hundreds were physically injured (most of them civilians) due to the use of short range rockets against the civilian population of Israel. These figures do not include and do not represent thousands of people who suffer from anxiety, stress and trauma following explosions of rockets and mortar shells.

929. According to data of the Mental Health Communal Center in the city of Sderot, in 2007 alone, more than 652 new cases of stress and trauma victims were reported in Sderot and the western Negev (an increase of more than 200 per cent in comparison to 2006), and more than 4,860 persons received Psychiatric, psychological or mental treatment for symptoms of stress, anxiety and trauma following rockets explosions (an increase of more than 400 per cent in comparison to 2006).

930. According to the Mental Health Communal Center in the city of Sderot, about 30 per cent of the trauma victims are diagnosed as suffering from severe anxiety and trauma. The severe cases include uncontrolled crying, fainting, temporary loss of ability to speak, physical and other symptoms. In many cases the situation is so severe that medications are necessary as treatment. The number of anxiety, stress and trauma injuries is very difficult to assess and is considered to be even higher, since not all those suffering from it, turn to seek immediate medical help. Furthermore, the affects of anxiety, trauma and stress may appear in later stages (post-trauma) and not necessarily at the moment of the traumatic event. Therefore, the number of anxiety, stress and trauma victims is believed to be around several thousands people.

931. A study from 2006, found a significant increase in the rate of people living in the city of Sderot that suffer from the psychiatric syndrome of post-traumatic disorder (26 per cent). In addition, 44 per cent reported symptoms of Hyper Arousal syndrome and 30 per cent reported symptoms of Intrusive symptoms. All of these symptoms cause difficulties in concentration, memory problems and high degrees of stress.

932. A study that was conducted in 2007 found that 28.4 per cent of the adult population in the city of Sderot reported symptoms of post-traumatic syndrome. That is 3 times higher than that of the control group – a city outside the range of the rockets. Moreover, the frequency and severity of the psychiatric symptoms among Sderot residents are much higher than those who live in cities outside the range of the rockets.

933. According to another study that was conducted by NATAL – the mental and psychological help centre for cases of stress and trauma, at least 75 per cent of the children living in Sderot (ages 4–18) suffer from post-traumatic symptoms of sleeping disorder and concentration difficulties. About 30 per cent of Sderot children suffer from severe symptoms that disrupt their daily function.

Child refugees and asylum seekers

934. Children of school age, weather asylum seekers, children of work migrants or infiltrators, regardless of the legality of their status in the country, are integrated in Israel's educational system, and are eligible for subsidized health insurance.

935. Israel is a party to the United Nations 1951 Convention on the Status of Refugees, and to its 1967 Protocol. Any person may apply for a refugee status in Israel, regardless of his/her religion, and his claim will be assessed based on the convention's definitions.

936. Every asylum seeker has full and free access to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and may approach the Police and the Courts regarding any claim in his/her regards, and on many cases this right was exercised, either directly or through NGOs.

937. In 2002, a procedure for the processing of requests by asylum seekers in Israel was formed in coordination between the delegation of the UNHCR in Israel, the Ministry of Interior and the Ministry of Justice, and has been in force until June 2009.

938. In 2009, a special unit for the Treatment of Asylum Seekers was formed within the Ministry of Interior and received extensive training from the UNHCR Israeli branch.

939. The Refugee Status Determination (RSD) Unit in the Population, Immigration and Border Authority (PIBA) within the Ministry of Interior, was established in order to conduct thorough interviews for asylum seekers and provide written recommendations for further discussions in the Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of the ministries of Interior, Justice and Foreign Affairs. The Unit began its operation in July 2009.

940. Subsequently, every asylum seeker was referred to UNHCR until July 2009. Since 1 July 2009 the RSD Unit performs the initial and in-depth interviews. However, all asylum seekers have full access to UNHCR, as well as to NGOs.

941. Naturally, as the authority and responsibility for the determination of a refugee status is a sovereign Israeli decision, Israel reserves the right not to grant a stay permit in Israel for citizens of hostile or enemy States.

942. A person recognized as entitled to asylum, and following an evaluation it was determined that his/her matter should be brought before the Advisory Committee, should be awarded with a six-month stay permit.

943. As of December 2009, there were over 20,000 infiltrators/asylum seekers residing in Israel, most of whom received temporary protection based on their country of origin. In 2009, 2,525 infiltrators applied for asylum and were interviewed by the RSD Unit of the Ministry of Interior, the Immigration Authority, and received temporary status. 948 infiltrators completed the questioning process but their case had not yet been referred to the inter-ministerial National Status Granting Body (NSGB). 520 infiltrators were considered by the inter-ministerial NSGB, and five are under appeal procedures regarding the committee's decision. 284 infiltrators turned to the courts after their appeal was rejected by the inter-ministerial NSGB.

Unaccompanied foreign minors

944. Some of the illegal foreign populations living in Israel are minors, several dozens to date. These minors require special treatment. The Ministry of Interior procedure No. 10.1.0016 (currently undergoing an amendment process): Unaccompanied Foreign Minors Treatment Procedure establishes modes of treatment, as follows: Placement in custody must be in a residence principally for minors; the removal of minors under eighteen years of age must be done following the primary consideration of the best interest of the child. An illegal minor who is under a temporary custody order shall be brought as soon as possible — no later than 24 hours — to a Passport Control Officer. The Passport Control Officer, after considering the minor's opinion regarding the custody order and the removal order, shall decide which order shall be given effect (that is consistent with the specific circumstances).

945. A minor under the age of fourteen shall not be held in custody, but rather in an appropriate facility or foster care pending removal. A minor must be informed of her/his right to counsel. Within 24 hours (48 hours in special circumstances and 72 hours if it is a holiday or a weekend) the minor will meet with a social worker. The social worker shall submit her/his professional opinion to the Passport Control Officer within 48 hours, followed by a decision to keep the minor in custody or release the minor from custody. Notification as to the delay in removal shall be transmitted to the minor's state of origin, unless it endangers the minor's life, freedom or the lives or freedom of members of her/his family.

946. A minor placed within an educational framework is dependent on the Ministry of Education as the responsible authority, which shall take care of its medical insurance. A minor can be held for up to 60 days in custody and then be moved to an appropriate alternative facility or foster care, pending age confirmation and availability of a facility or foster care arrangements. Notification of the relocation is provided at least seven days prior to the final date set for relocation, and is coordinated as far as possible with the recipient state. A minor will not be removed if her/his life or liberty is in danger in her/his home land.

947. The Legal Aid Department in the Ministry of Justice provides legal aid for minors who arrived illegally to Israel, and claims the release of such minors from detention while transferring them to alternative custody, such as foster families and boarding schools.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
23 January 2015

Original: English

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Consideration of reports submitted by States parties under article 12, paragraph 1, of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Reports of States parties due in 2010

Israel*

[Date received: 12 November 2012]

* The present document is being issued without formal editing.

GE.15-00864 (E)

* 1 5 0 0 8 6 4 *

Please recycle

Contents

	Paragraphs	Page
Introduction	1–6	3
Articles 1–3	7–105	3
Article 4	106–113	22
Article 5	114–124	24
Article 6	125–129	25
Article 7	130–137	26
Article 8	138–197	27
Article 9	198–252	35
Article 10	253–267	44

Introduction

1. The State of Israel is pleased to submit its initial report (this “Report”) concerning the implementation of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (“the Protocol”). Pursuant to the requirements of Article 12 of the Protocol, this Report provides comprehensive information on the measures Israel has taken to implement the provisions of the Protocol.
2. By way of background, the State of Israel signed the Protocol on 14 November 2001 and ratified it on 19 June 2008. The Protocol entered into force on 23 July 2008.
3. The State of Israel fully adheres to the purposes of the Protocol and is committed to its obligations thereunder. While much remains to be done in order to eradicate the worldwide phenomenon of trafficking in children, child prostitution and child pornography, Israel believes that its efforts since 2008 have been quite successful. At the same time, Israel appreciates the opportunity to learn about the practices and experience of other countries leading the fight against trafficking in children, child prostitution and child pornography, and views the reporting process established by Article 12 of the Protocol as an invaluable tool for such purpose.
4. This Report is the product of extensive internal consultations and efforts. All relevant Government Ministries and bodies (including the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Interior, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services) were requested to provide data and information concerning their respective fields of responsibility. In addition, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were invited to submit comments prior to the compilation of the Report, both through direct application, and through a general invitation to submit remarks, which was posted on the Ministry of Justice website. Their responses were given due consideration.
5. The compilation of the information and data and the drafting of this Report were conducted by the Department for International Agreements and International Litigation at the Ministry of Justice, in cooperation with other governmental agencies.
6. Please note that the imprisonment terms and monetary fines specified in the Israeli Penal Law 5737-1977 (the “Penal Law”) represent the maximum term or fine that a court may impose. Accordingly, references in this Report to imprisonment terms and monetary fines correspond to such maximum punishments, unless specified otherwise.

Articles 1–3

7. Article 1 is introductory in nature and creates the overarching obligation to prohibit the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography in accordance with the Protocol. Article 2 includes the definitions of “sale of children”, “child prostitution” and “child pornography”.
8. Article 3 provides that States parties shall ensure that the acts and activities referred to by the Article are covered under their criminal or penal law and punishable by appropriate penalties.
9. As discussed below, the acts and activities referred to by Article 3 violate the Israeli Penal Law.

Sale of children

10. In the context of sale of children, State parties are required, as a minimum, to criminalize the offering, delivering, or accepting by whatever means of a child for the purpose of sexual exploitation of the child, transfer of organs for profit, or engagement of the child in forced labor (Article 3(1)(a)(i)). (The prohibition on inducing consent for the adoption of a child (Article 3(1)(a)(ii)) is addressed in paragraphs 58–89 below.)

11. The sale of children, as defined in Article 2, is prohibited by Israeli law through several provisions.

12. On October 29, 2006 Israel enacted the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (Legislative Amendments) Law 5766–2006 (the “Anti-Trafficking Law”). Most of its provisions were incorporated in the Penal Law. The Anti-Trafficking Law’s provisions, as will be further detailed below, address the relevant aspects of offering, delivering or accepting, by whatever means, of a child for the purposes enumerated in Article 3(1)(a)(i) of the Protocol.

13. The legislative technique which Israel adopted on this matter was to create a group of five offenses, detailed below, which together encompass the main aspects of the trafficking phenomenon. This broad approach was adopted because it was felt the creation of a single offense might fail to cover all aspects of this criminal phenomenon. The legislation was designed to be comprehensive in order to prevent evasion by criminals.

14. The offenses were incorporated in the Penal Law under the chapter that deals with offenses relating to the deprivation of a person’s liberty. It should be noted that of these five core offenses, only the first two criminalize the act of “trafficking in a person” in the strict sense of the term. The other three criminalize other conducts which are similar to trafficking, in that a person is treated in a manner so abject that the act is assimilated to “trafficking”. The common denominator of the five core offenses is that they all criminalize conduct by which a person is objectified and denied his or her basic human dignity and freedom. All five are punishable with severe prison terms.

15. Trafficking in Persons – This offense is set out in Section 377A of the Penal Law, and carries a maximum penalty of 16 years’ imprisonment, and 20 years’ imprisonment if the victim is a minor. The crime includes two elements:

(a) A transaction in a person (distinguished from a transaction with a person, thus denoting the objectification of the victim). For this matter, “transaction in a person” means selling or buying a person or carrying out another transaction in a person, whether or not for consideration.

(b) For one of seven pernicious purposes: removing an organ from the person’s body (which corresponds to Article 3(1)(a)(i)(b) of the Protocol); giving birth to a child and taking the child away; subjecting the person to slavery or forced labor (which corresponds to Article 3(1)(a)(i)(c) of the Protocol); inducing the person to commit an act of prostitution or inducing him/her to take part in an obscene publication or obscene display or committing a sexual offense against the person (which corresponds to Article 3(1)(a)(i)(a) of the Protocol).

16. Section 377A also forbids trafficking in a person if in doing so the offender exposes the victim to the risk of one of the purposes listed above.

17. Section 377A(c) of the Penal Law provides that the middleman in trafficking in a person, whether or not for consideration, shall be liable to the same penalty as the actual trafficker.

18. Abduction for the Purpose of Trafficking – This offense is set out in Section 374A of the Penal Law and carries a maximum penalty of 20 years' imprisonment. The crime consists of the following three elements:

- (a) Inducing a person to move from one place to another;
- (b) By means of threats or force or by fraudulently obtaining her/his consent;
- (c) For any of the purposes of trafficking in persons as detailed in Section 377A (a) of the Penal Law or placing the person in one of the dangers set forth in the said section.

19. Holding a Person Under Conditions of Slavery – It is a crime to hold a person under conditions of slavery for the purposes of work or services, including sex services. This offense is set in Section 375A of the Penal Law, and carries a maximum penalty of 16 years' imprisonment, and 20 years' imprisonment if the victim is a minor. For the purposes of this provision, "slavery" means a situation under which powers generally exercised towards property are exercised over a person; substantive control over the life of a person or denial of his/her liberty are deemed to be such an exercise of power.

20. Forced Labor – This offense is set in Section 376 of the Penal Law. According to this Section, a person who unlawfully forces a person to work, by using force or other means of pressure or by threat of one of these, or by consent elicited by means of fraud, whether or not for consideration, shall be liable to seven years' imprisonment.

21. Causing a Person to Leave Her/His State for Purposes of Prostitution or Slavery – This offense is set in Section 376B of the Penal Law, and carries a maximum penalty of ten years' imprisonment, and 15 years' imprisonment if the victim is a minor. The elements of this crime are as follows:

- (a) Causing a person to leave the State in which she/he resides;
- (b) For the purpose of employing the person in prostitution or holding her/him under conditions of slavery.

22. The Israeli legislator views trafficking offenses as very grave. For that reason, a high minimum punishment has been set for the offense of holding a person under conditions of slavery and trafficking in persons. According to Section 377B of the Penal Law, where a person is convicted of an offense under Sections 375A (holding a person under conditions of slavery) or 377A (trafficking), the sentence imposed shall not be less than one-quarter of the maximum sentence set forth for the said offense, unless the court has decided, for special reasons that shall be recorded, to impose a more lenient sentence. Moreover, a sentence of imprisonment, as mentioned above, shall not be wholly suspended, if there are no special reasons.

23. Additionally, the Penal Law includes offenses that may assist law enforcement authorities in addressing trafficking in children, which are often, though not necessarily, related to trafficking but do not constitute trafficking per se. These include crimes such as pandering and charging excessive brokerage fees. Another example is the prohibition on detaining a passport (Section 376A of the Penal Law – three years' imprisonment), which is a common practice used by offenders to maintain control over victims and prevent their escape. If the offender detains a passport for one of the purposes set forth in Section 377A of the Penal Law or by so doing places the person in one of the dangers set forth in the said section, the offender is liable to five years' imprisonment.

24. The Penal Law also includes other offenses that impose duties and criminal liability on parents, legal guardians of minors or other persons responsible for minors, inter alia, to protect minors and to narrow the risk of them becoming victims of trafficking. For example:

(a) A person that leaves a child under six years of age without proper supervision, and in doing so endangers the life of the child or risks harming his/her health or well-being, is liable to three years' imprisonment; if it was done out of neglect, that person is liable to one year of imprisonment; and if it was done with the intent to desert the child, then that person is liable to five years' imprisonment (Section 361 of the Penal Law);

(b) Offering or giving remuneration for permission to have charge of a minor under 14 years old and asking for or receiving remuneration for permission to have charge of a minor as aforesaid, is an offense punishable by three years of imprisonment, irrespective of whether the remuneration was in cash or in kind (Section 364 of the Penal Law);

(c) A parent or legal guardian of a minor under the age of 14 who delivers or allows to deliver the minor to a person who is not his/her parent or his/her legal guardian, while renouncing his/her duties or his/her rights towards the minor, is liable to two years' imprisonment (Section 365 of the Penal Law);

(d) Taking away or detaining by fraud, force, or enticement a minor under the age of 14 from his/her parent or legal guardian with the intent of depriving the parent or legal guardian from custody over the minor is an offense punishable by seven years' imprisonment, unless the defendant proves that he/she has a bona fide claim to a right of custody (Section 367 of the Penal Law).

Child prostitution

25. Israeli legislation addresses the criminal aspects of prostitution by criminalizing the various ranges of conduct of those involved in the prostitution industry, from pandering to inducing prostitution to holding or renting a place for prostitution to publishing prostitution services. This is the case both for prostitution generally and for child prostitution specifically. Thus, all actions supporting or sustaining the prostitution industry are prohibited, signalling the State's efforts to minimize this phenomenon. Furthermore, the Penal Law imposes stricter penalties when child prostitution is involved, as detailed below.

26. Specifically, the Penal Law states that a person who fully or partially, permanently or for any period of time, lives on the earnings of a person engaged in prostitution or who knowingly receives something that was given for a person's act of prostitution (or part thereof) is liable to five years' imprisonment (Section 199 of the Penal Law). Where the person engaged in prostitution is the offender's spouse, child or stepchild, or the offense was committed by exploiting a relationship of authority, dependence, education or supervision, then the maximum imprisonment term is seven years (Section 199(b) of the Penal Law). For the purposes of this offense, it is immaterial whether the offender received money, valuable consideration, a service or some other benefit, whether he/she received it from a person who engages in prostitution or from some other person and whether he/she receives what was given for an act of prostitution or as a substitute for what was so given (Section 199(c) of the Penal Law). If a man lives with a prostitute or regularly accompanies her, or if he exerts control or influence over her in a manner that aids her or forces her to engage in prostitution, then he/she shall be presumed to live on her earnings, unless the contrary is proven (Section 200 of the Penal Law).

27. In addition, a person that induces someone to perform an act of prostitution with another person is liable to five years' imprisonment (Section 201 of the Penal Law), and a person that induces someone to engage in prostitution is liable to seven years' imprisonment (Section 202 of the Penal Law).

28. The Law establishes aggravating circumstances regarding both Sections 201 and 202, which lead to a harsher punishment. If the above-mentioned offenses are committed under the following circumstances, then the person guilty of the act is liable to ten years' imprisonment (Section 203 of the Penal Law):

(a) The offense was committed by exploiting a relationship of authority, dependence, education or supervision, or by exploiting the economic or mental distress of the person who was induced to perform an act of prostitution or to engage in prostitution;

(b) The offense was committed by the use of force or by use of other means of pressure, or by threat of one of the above, whether against the person who was induced to commit an act of prostitution or to engage in prostitution or against some other person;

(c) The offense was committed by exploiting a situation that prevents opposition by the person induced to commit an act of prostitution or to engage in prostitution, or by exploiting the fact that he/she is mentally ill or mentally incompetent;

(d) The offense was committed by consent that was obtained deceitfully from the person induced to commit an act of prostitution or to engage in prostitution.

29. The maximum prison terms are increased when an offense described in Sections 199, 201, 202 or 203 is committed against a minor, as follows:

(a) When the victim is 14 years old or older, then the applicable penalties are increased as follows:

(i) For offenses punishable by five years' imprisonment, the maximum imprisonment term is increased to seven years;

(ii) For offenses punishable by seven years' imprisonment, the maximum imprisonment term is increased to 10 years;

(iii) For offenses punishable by 10 years' imprisonment, the maximum imprisonment term is increased to 15 years;

(iv) For offenses punishable by 16 years' imprisonment, the maximum imprisonment term is increased to 20 years;

(b) If the victim is less than 14 years old, or if he/she is a minor who is 14 years old or older and is under the care and responsibility of the offender, then the maximum imprisonment terms for these offenses are doubled, up to a maximum of 20 years (Section 203B of the Penal Law).

30. Sections 203C and 203D of the Penal Law are additional measures demonstrating the severity with which Israeli law deals with prostitution offenses committed against minors. Pursuant to Section 203C, a person who accepts sexual services from a minor is liable to three years' imprisonment. For this matter, as well as all other offenses related to prostitution or pornography committed against minors, if the defendant claims that he/she did not know the age of the person with whom or in respect of whom an offense was committed, then he/she bears the burden of proof.

31. Moreover, a person who maintains or operates a place including a vehicle or a vessel for the practice of prostitution, is liable to five years' imprisonment (Section 204 of the Penal Law), and a person who rents out or renews the rental of such a place, knowing that it is or will be used for acts of prostitution, shall be liable to six months' imprisonment (Section 205 of the Penal Law).

32. As an additional measure, aimed at reducing prostitution, the Penal Law provides that a person who delivers information or publishes any publication about the provision of a service that constitutes an act of prostitution provided by a minor, is liable to five years' imprisonment or a fine of 226,000 NIS (US$ 59,473) (the amount is doubled if the offense is committed by a legal person). The foregoing applies regardless of whether the prostitution service is provided in Israel or abroad, whether the information refers to a specific minor and whether the publication indicates that the person who provides the service is a minor (Section 205A of the Penal Law). In contrast, with respect to adults, the offense applies only to the publication of such services (it does not include the offense of “delivering information”) and the penalty for such a publication is three years’ imprisonment (Section 205C of the Penal Law).

33. Finally, Section 208 of the Penal Law provides that a person who permitted a minor between the age of 2 and 17 years old, of whom he/she has custody, to reside in a brothel or to visit it frequently, is liable to three years’ imprisonment.

Sexual abuse of children

34. Just as with trafficking offenses, whereby a broad array of criminal offenses capture the different types of conduct associated with trafficking, so is it too with child prostitution. The following provisions of the Penal Law are detailed to provide a fuller picture of the legislative situation with respect to the protection of minors from sexual offenses which typically accompany child prostitution and increased punishments where minors are involved.

(a) Rape (Section 345 of the Penal Law) – Generally, rape is punishable by 16 years of imprisonment. Rape consists of intercourse with a woman (1) without her consent, (2) with consent which was obtained by deceit in respect of the identity of the person or the nature of the act, (3) with a minor who is less than 14 years of age, regardless of whether the victim consented or not, (4) by exploiting the woman’s state of unconsciousness or other condition that prevents her from giving her free consent, or (5) by exploiting the fact that she is mentally ill or deficient, if – due to her illness or mental deficiency – her consent was not given freely. However, the maximum penalty for rape is increased to 20 years, if committed in the following cases: (a) if the victim is a minor under the age of 16, under the circumstances set forth in items (1), (2) (4) and (5) above, (b) if the act was committed under threat of a firearm or other weapon; (c) if it was committed by causing physical or emotional harm, or pregnancy, (d) if abuse was committed before, during or after the act, or (e) if it was committed in the presence of one or more persons, who joined together in order for any of them to commit the act.

(b) Forbidden_intercourse despite consent (Section 346 of the Penal Law) – if a person has intercourse with a minor between the ages of 14 and 16 who is not married to him, or if a person has intercourse with a minor between the ages of 16 and 18 by exploiting a relationship of dependence, authority, education or supervision, or by a false promise of marriage, then that person is liable to five years’ imprisonment.

(c) Sodomy (Section 347 of the Penal Law) – sodomy is punishable by five years’ imprisonment, if the victim is between the ages of 14 and 16, or if the victim is between the ages of 16 and 18 but the act was committed by exploiting relations of dependency, authority, education or supervision. If sodomy was committed against a victim under one of the circumstances specified in section 345, mutatis mutandis, then the offender is liable to the penalties of a rapist.

(d) Indecent act (Section 348 of the Penal Law) – Generally, an indecent act committed against a person without his/her consent is punishable by three years of imprisonment. “Indecent act” is defined as an act committed for the purpose of sexual stimulation, gratification or abasement. If an indecent act is committed under the circumstances set forth in items (2)–(5) in paragraph 34 (a) above, or if it is committed by the use of force of any kind or by threat of using such force – against the victim or against another person, it is punishable by seven years’ imprisonment. If the indecent act is committed under the circumstances set forth in items (a)–(e) in paragraph 34 (a) above, it is punishable by 10 years' imprisonment. If the indecent act is committed against a minor who is above 14 years of age by exploiting relations of dependency, authority, education, supervision, work or service, it is punishable by four years' imprisonment. For this matter, an act as mentioned above committed by a psychotherapist against his/her patient is considered as committed by exploiting relations of dependency.

(e) Indecent act in public (Section 349 of the Penal Law) – A person committing an indecent act in public in the view of another person without his/her consent is liable to one year of imprisonment. If the act is committed, in any place, in the view of a person who is under 16 years of age, the maximum term of imprisonment is three years.

(f) Offenses within the family and offenses by persons responsible for an individual in a state of helplessness (Section 351(a) of the Penal Law) – This provision deals with sexual offenses committed within the family, and prescribes harsher punishments than those prescribed for offenses committed by someone who is not related to the victim.

Child pornography

35. The Israeli legislator addresses the phenomenon of pornography in a comprehensive manner.

36. The Penal Law provides that if a person publishes obscene material or prepares such material for publication, or if a person presents, organizes or produces an obscene display in a public place, or in a place which is not public (other than a private residence or a place used by a group of persons which restricts membership to persons aged 18 years old and above for a continuous period), then he/she shall be liable to three years' imprisonment (Section 214 of the Penal Law). Additionally, if a person published an obscene publication and it includes the likeness of a minor, including a representation or a drawing of a minor, he/she is liable to five years' imprisonment (Section 214b of the Penal Law) and if a person utilized the body of a minor in order to advertise an obscenity, or used a minor in the presentation of an obscenity, he/she is liable to seven years' imprisonment (Section 214(b1) of the Penal Law).

37. As with trafficking in children, the legislator ascribes great importance to the responsibilities of parents and other persons in charge of children. Accordingly, the Penal Law provides that if an offense under subsections 214(b) or (b1), as mentioned above, was committed or consented to by a person responsible for a minor, as defined in Section 368A of the Penal Law, then that person is liable to 10 years' imprisonment (Section 214(b2) of the Penal Law). In order to impair the profitability of this commerce and thereby reduce the use of children for pornography, the Penal Law provides that a person having in his/her possession an obscene publication that includes the likeness of a minor, is liable to one year of imprisonment, except where such material was held by coincidence and in good faith (Section 214(b3) of the Penal Law).

38. In order to enable different officials to fulfil their duties, the Penal Law states that a person shall not be deemed to have committed an offense under Sections 205A to 205C and 214, if the provision of the information, its publication or the possession thereof was for a legal purpose, including true and fair reporting on the subject of prostitution and obscenity. This, subject to the condition that the provision of information, the publication or the possession are not prohibited under any other law and were not carried out in order to encourage acts prohibited under the Penal Law.

Duty to report

39. In order to protect minors, there is a legislated duty to report offenses committed against minors. Section 368D of the Penal Law provides that the following offenses committed against minors, by a person responsible for the minor, must be reported to a welfare officer or to the Police:

- (a) Prostitution and obscenity offenses under Sections 199, 201, 202, 203, 203B, 203C, 205A and 214(B1);
- (b) An offense of endangering life and health under Section 337;
- (c) A sexual offense under Sections 345, 346, 347, 347A, 348 and 351;
- (d) An offense of abandonment or neglect under Sections 361 and 362;
- (e) An offense of assault or abuse under Sections 368B and 368C;
- (f) An offense of trafficking in persons under Section 377A.

40. The duty to report is imposed on any person who has reasonable grounds to believe that such a crime was committed, on a person in charge of the minor, on a professional (physician, nurse, educator, social worker, social welfare employee, policeman, psychologist, criminologist, paramedic, director or staff member of a home or institution in which minors or persons under care live) in the course of his/her professional activity or responsibility. Violation of this duty constitutes an offense punishable by three to six months' imprisonment.

Article 3 (1) – Commission of offenses on an organized basis

The commission of offenses individually or on an organized basis

41. In accordance with the requirement of Article 3(1) of the Protocol, the Battle Against Organized Crime Law 5763 – 2003 creates separate criminal offenses for criminal activity committed as a part of an organized crime group and states that if a crime is committed in the context of organized crime, its maximum punishment is double the punishment of that crime, but may not exceed 25 years' imprisonment. This provision applies to "crimes", which is defined as offenses the commission of which is punishable by a prison term of more than three years. As such, the great majority of offenses detailed above fall within the scope of this provision.

Statute of limitations

42. As a rule, according to Section 9 to the Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version] 5742-1982, a person may not be indicted for an offense if the following terms have elapsed since the date of its occurrence: in an offense defined as a felony, attended by a penalty of death or life imprisonment – twenty years; in another felony – ten years; in a misdemeanor – five years; in a transgression – one year.

43. In certain sexual offenses committed against a minor, the period of limitation begins the day the victim reaches the age of 28. However, if ten years have elapsed since the offense was committed, filing an indictment requires the approval of the Attorney General (Section 354 of the Penal Law).

Article 3 (2) – Attempt, complicity and participation

44. Article 3(2) provides that “subject to the provisions of the national law of a State party, the same shall apply to an attempt to commit any of the said acts and to complicity or participation in any of the said acts”. Although the Protocol does not obligate States to criminalize attempts to commit acts covered by Article 3(1) or complicity or participation in such acts, Israeli law is consistent with the requirements of Article 3(2) of the Protocol. The Penal Law contains general provisions concerning attempts to commit a crime, complicity and participation in a crime.

45. Section 25 of the Penal Law defines “attempt” as performing an act with the intent of committing an offense, where such act is considered beyond mere preparations and provided that the offense was not completed, regardless of whether commission of the offense was impossible because of circumstances of which the person who made the attempt was not aware or in respect of which he/she was mistaken (Section 26 of the Penal Law). However, no criminal liability is attached to an attempt if the defendant proves that, acting of his/her own free will and out of remorse, he/she stopped in the commission of the act or substantively contributed to prevention of the results on which the completion of the offense depends; however, the foregoing does not derogate from his/her criminal liability for another completed offense connected to the act (Section 28 of the Penal Law).

46. Where the Penal Law sets a mandatory penalty or a minimum penalty for an offense, then this penalty shall not apply to an attempt to commit the offense (Section 27 of the Penal Law).

47. Additionally, the Penal Law recognizes the possibility that an offense might be committed by an individual or by a group of persons. Indeed, a perpetrator of an offense is defined to include a person acting in concert with others (joint perpetrators) or through someone else. Participants in the commission of an offense are each deemed joint perpetrators, irrespective of whether the entire offense was committed by each of them or whether different acts constituting the offense were performed separately by any of them. Committing an offense “through” someone else is defined as contributing to someone else’s commission of an act by using that other person as his/her instrument for the commission of the act, where the other person is in one of the following situations (within the meanings assigned to them in the Penal Law):

- (a) Minority or mental incompetence;
- (b) Lack of control;
- (c) Without criminal intent;
- (d) Misunderstanding of the circumstances;
- (e) Under duress or with justification.

Enticement

48. Enticement is defined as causing someone else to commit an offense by means of persuasion, encouragement, demanding, requesting persistently or by other means involving the application of pressure (Section 30 of the Penal Law).

Accessory

49. If a person does anything – before an offense is committed or during its commission – to make its commission possible, to support or protect it, or to prevent the perpetrator from being captured or the offense or its spoils from being discovered, or if he/she contributes in any other way to the creation of conditions for the commission of the offense, then he/she is an accessory (Section 31 of the Penal Law).

Penalty for being an accessory

50. The penalty for being an accessory to the commission of an offense is half the penalty established for commission of the main offense; however, if the penalty is:

- (a) The death penalty or mandatory life imprisonment, then his/her penalty shall be twenty years' imprisonment;
- (b) Life imprisonment, then his/her penalty shall be ten years' imprisonment;
- (c) A minimum penalty, then his/her penalty shall not be less than half the minimum penalty;
- (d) Any mandatory penalty, then that shall be the maximum penalty and half thereof shall be the minimum penalty (Section 32 of the Penal Law).

Attempt to entice

51. The penalty for attempting to entice a person to commit an offense is half the penalty set for its main commission; however, if the penalty is:

- (a) The death penalty or mandatory life imprisonment, then his/her penalty shall be twenty years' imprisonment;
- (b) Life imprisonment, then his/her penalty shall be ten years' imprisonment;
- (c) A minimum penalty, then his/her penalty shall not be less than half the minimum penalty;
- (d) Any mandatory penalty, then it shall be the maximum penalty and half thereof shall be the minimum penalty (Section 33 of the Penal Law).

52. If a person incited another or was an accessory, then he/she shall not bear criminal liability for enticement or for being an accessory if he/she prevented the commission or completion of the offense, or if he/she informed the authorities of the offense in time in order to prevent its commission or its completion, or if – to that end – he/she acted to the best of his/her ability in some other manner; however, the foregoing does not derogate from criminal liability for another completed offense in connection with the same act.

53. In this context, “authorities” means the Israel Police or any other body lawfully empowered to prevent the commission or completion of an offense (Section 34 of the Penal Law).

54. In order to properly address the problem of joint perpetrators, the Penal Law provides that if, in the course of commission an offense, a person also commits a different or an additional offense, then the co-perpetrator will also be held liable for that second offense if, under the circumstances, an ordinary person could have been aware of the possibility that the second offense could be committed. However, if the second offense requires “intent”, then the co-perpetrator shall be liable for the lesser offense of “indifference”.

55. Similarly, if a person entices another person to commit an offense or acts as an accessory to an offense, and in the course of commission of the offense, the principal perpetrator also commits a different or an additional offense, then the former person will also be held liable for an offense of negligence in connection with that second offense, provided such an offense of negligence exists in respect of the second offense (Section 34A of the Penal Law).

56. Attempt, enticement, attempt to entice and abetting are not punishable in respect of an offense defined as a “transgression” (i.e. any offense that is punishable by up to three months’ imprisonment or a fine of up to 14,400 NIS (US$ 3,789)) (Section 34C of the Penal Law).

57. Unless legislation explicitly or implicitly provides otherwise, any enactment that applies to the commission of a completed offense itself, also applies to an attempt, incitement, an attempt to incite or abetting in respect of that same offense (Section 34D of the Penal Law).

Article 3 (3) – Appropriate penalties

58. States parties are required by the Protocol to make the offenses related to the Protocol punishable by appropriate penalties that take into account their grave nature. As detailed above, all of the above offenses are attended by severe penalties, matching their grave nature.

Article 3 (4) – Liability of legal persons

59. According to Section 23 of the Penal Law, legal persons can bear criminal liability as follows:

(a) For an absolute liability offense: if the offense was committed by a person in the course of the performance of his/her duties in the corporation;

(b) For an offense that requires proof of criminal intent or negligence: if – under the circumstances of the case and in light of the position, authority and responsibility of the person in the management of the affairs of the corporation – the act by which he/she committed the offense, his/her criminal intent or his/her negligence are to be deemed the act, the criminal intent or the negligence of the corporation;

(c) If the offense was committed by way of omission, when the obligation to perform is directly imposed on the corporation, then it is immaterial whether the offense can or cannot be related also to a certain officer of the corporation.

60. The vast majority of the offenses relevant to the Protocol require criminal intent, such that the liability of legal persons would be determined according to the circumstances of the above subsection (2).

Articles 3 (5) and 3 (1) (a) (ii) – Adoption

61. In the context of sale of children, the Protocol requires that States parties criminalize “improperly inducing consent, as an intermediary, for the adoption of a child in violation of applicable international instruments on adoption” (Article 3(1) (a)(ii)). The Protocol further requires State parties to take all appropriate measures to ensure that all persons involved in the adoption of a child act in conformity with applicable international legal instruments (Article 3(5)).

62. The law in Israel permits adoption. Most matters related to adoption, including the rights and obligations of persons involved in the process and the procedural aspects of the issue, are regulated in the Adoption Law 5741-1981 (the “Adoption Law”).

63. The main principles of the Adoption Law are that adoption can only occur pursuant to an order given by a court of law, upon request of an adopter, and that the adoption order, as well as every decision regarding the adoption proceedings, may be issued only if the court is convinced that it is in the best interests of the child (Section 1 of the Adoption Law). Making the validity of any adoption conditional upon a court-issued adoption order ensures the court's supervision over the entire process. The court is thus empowered to act as guardian of the child's best interests. This process also helps to reduce the likelihood of illegal adoptions.

64. According to Israeli law, a court may not issue an adoption order unless it is convinced that the biological parents gave consent to the adoption or if the child was declared adoptable by the court, in accordance with the conditions set by the Adoption Law.

Parental consent

65. The Adoption Law contains specific detailed provisions concerning parental consent. Such consent can only be made before a State official following the provision of sufficient explanations and verification that the consent is informed.

66. Parental consent for adoption must be informed and may only be given after the full information concerning all relevant issues has been brought to the parents' attention, in clear language (Section 8A of the Adoption Law), including: the possibility to raise the child by himself/herself or with the assistance available under law; the implications of adoption, including emotional aspects; the stages of the adoption process; the legal implications and consequences of adoption; the possibility to consult any other person before signing the consent document; the possibility to be accompanied by another person while signing the document; the importance of providing details of the other parent; and the possibility to leave a letter or a memento in the adoption file for the child (Section 8B of the Adoption Law).

67. An authorized social worker must explain to a parent who is asking to give his/her child up for adoption, the importance of providing details of the other parent in order to seek his/her opinion concerning the adoption and to ensure the best interests of the child. If the parent refuses to do so, the authorized social worker must bring it to his/her attention that he/she may provide such details that would be used only for the purpose of locating the other parent for medical reasons, reference or any other reason specified by the parent (Section 8C of the Adoption Law).

68. Parental consent for adoption may be given before both a judge and an authorized social worker, or before both a lawyer, authorized by the Attorney General, and an authorized social worker. This arrangement was established specifically to guarantee that the consent is informed and given freely. Parental consent must be documented and signed by the parent and by both the judge or the lawyer and the social worker before whom the consent was given (Section 9 of the Adoption Law).

69. Parental consent for adoption given outside the State of Israel may be given by signing the consent document before the diplomatic or the consular representative of Israel, in accordance with the laws in the place where the consent was given or in accordance with the laws in the main residence of the parent or the child at the time of consent (Section 9A of the Adoption Law).

70. In addition to the safeguards mentioned above, the court may, upon request of a parent, annul parental consent for adoption if it is convinced that the consent was given by illegitimate means. The court may also, in special cases, allow a parent to reconsider his/her consent to give his/her child up for adoption, on the condition that the request is made within 60 days following the later of the day on which the child was given to the potential adopter and the day of signature of the consent document, and that the adoption order has not yet been issued (Section 10 of the Adoption Law).

71. In order to prevent attempts to persuade mothers or pregnant women to give up their children for adoption, the Adoption Law forbids the acceptance of parental consent for adoption within seven days following the birth of the child, unless this is approved by the court upon a finding that such a delay could jeopardize the life or well-being of the parent or the child (Section 8A of the Adoption Law).

72. In order to prevent illegal actions and in order to maintain control over the process, transferring the custody of a child to the adoptive parents is possible only through an authorized social worker, who is required by law to verify that the child's parents have given their consent to the adoption or that the child was declared adoptable by the court. Any other action made by the social worker is required to be approved by the court (Section 12 of the Adoption Law).

73. As stated above, parental consent is the primary means provided by the law for adoption to occur. However, if parental consent is not given, the court is authorized, at the request of the Attorney General, to declare the child as adoptable, if the court determines that (Section 13):

(a) There is no reasonable possibility to identify the parent, to locate him/her or to obtain his/her opinion concerning the adoption;

(b) The parent is the father of the child but was not married to the mother and did not recognize the child as his own, or he recognized the child but the child did not live with him and the father refused without reasonable grounds to allow the child to live with him;

(c) The parent is dead or was declared incompetent, or his/her guardianship concerning the child was denied;

(d) The parent abandoned the child or, without reasonable ground, refrained from having a personal relation with him/her during six consecutive months;

(e) The parent refrained, without reasonable ground, to fulfil all or most of his/her obligations toward the child during six months in sequence;

(f) The child was held outside his/her parents' home during six months that began before the child reached the age of six and the parent refuses, without justification, to allow the child to reside with him/her;

(g) The parent is unable to take proper care of the child due to the parent's behaviour or condition, and there is no likelihood that such behaviour or condition will change in the near future despite any reasonable financial or treatment assistance by the welfare authorities to rehabilitate the parent; or

(h) The refusal to give consent is motivated by immoral grounds or aimed at an illegal purpose.

74. The court must refrain from ordering the taking of action that is aimed at locating the parent in any of the following cases:

(a) The action could jeopardize the life or the health of any of the parents or the child, or cause irreversible damage to any of them;

(b) The child was born as a result of sexual intercourse that constitutes a sexual offense or as a result of sexual intercourse between family members;

(c) The father knew about the pregnancy or about the existence of the child but refrained, without reasonable ground, from contacting the mother concerning the pregnancy or from contacting the child.

Inter-country adoption

75. In principle, Israeli law allows for the adoption of a child from another country (“inter-country adoption”). The procedure for such an adoption is subject to the rules set by the Adoption Law and to applicable international law. In that regard, the State of Israel is a party to the Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Inter-country Adoption (29 May 1993) and fully complies with its provisions.

76. In order to conduct and supervise the process of inter-country adoption, the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services appointed a chief social worker who functions as the “central authority” for inter-country adoption pursuant to the Adoption Law as well as for the purposes of the Hague Convention (Section 28B to the Adoption Law).

77. Inter-country adoption may only be carried out through a non-profit organization whose exclusive purpose is to act in the field of inter-country adoption and is approved and recognized by the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services and the Minister of Justice (hereinafter, the “Ministers”) (Section 28C of the Adoption Law). The organization must act in good faith while ensuring the best interests of the child and the protection of his/her basic rights in accordance with applicable laws and international standards.

78. The approval for such organization is given for a period of two years, which can be extended from time to time for additional periods, in order to enable ongoing supervision and inspection of the organization’s activities (Section 28V to the Adoption Law).

79. The Ministers may approve an organization if they are satisfied that it meets all the conditions set by the Law, including, inter alia, employing qualified employees and high-level professionals such as social workers, a lawyer, a bookkeeper and an internal auditor, and paying reasonable and fair remuneration or salary to its managers, employees and those acting on its behalf. The above conditions are essential to ensure that the organization functions and performs its duties in an appropriate manner and to prevent misuse of its role in a manner that might harm the minors.

80. An application for approval of the organization must be submitted in writing to the Ministers in the manner prescribed by the Adoption Regulations (Recognition of an Inter-Country Adoption Organization) 5758-1998. The application must include a legal opinion as to the adoption procedures applicable in the countries in which the organization wishes to act, a copy of all relevant laws, and all other permits and certifications that confirm the organization’s authorization to carry out inter-country adoption in those countries.

81. A recognized organization is subject to the central authority’s supervision and, upon request from time to time, must provide information and documents regarding its activities.

82. While the organization is subject to the central authority’s ongoing supervision, the issuance of an inter-country adoption order remains within the sole purview of a court, which may grant it only after being convinced that all conditions for inter-country adoption prescribed by law have been met. A violation by the organization of its obligations can constitute a civil tort as well as a criminal offense liable to one year’s imprisonment or a fine of 75,300 NIS (US$ 19,815).

83. Moreover, an organization is not allowed to publish any advertisement other than advertisements containing practical information concerning its activities and on the condition that publishing such information is consistent with the principle of the best interests of the child.

84. An organization is not allowed to demand, charge or receive, directly or indirectly, any payments from an applicant for its activities in regard to inter-country adoption, either in Israel or abroad, except for its actual expenses incurred for such activities, and for services authorized by the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services to the extent the amount charged does not exceed the maximum amounts prescribed by the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services in the Adoption Regulations (Maximum Payments for Recognized Organization) 5758-1998.

85. In order to enforce the obligations under the Adoption Law, Section 32 of the Adoption Law provides that a person who offers, gives, requests or accepts remuneration (other than amounts that can legally be charged for the inter-country adoption), whether by money or in kind, for adoption or for mediation, without the court's permission, commits an offense punishable by three years' imprisonment.

86. Additionally, pursuant to Section 33 of the Adoption Law, a person who delivers, receives or holds a child for adoption in Israel or for inter-country adoption in a manner contrary to the provisions of the Adoption Law, commits an offense punishable by three years' imprisonment.

87. Finally, several acts concerning the adoption procedure, such as disclosing information, breaching confidentiality obligations, making a prohibited advertisement and receiving illegal payments in regard to inter-country adoption, are criminalized and carry a penalty of one year's imprisonment or a fine.

88. The State of Israel conducts a registration of the population, according to the Population Registration Law 5725-1965 (the "Registration Law"), in which several details concerning a resident are registered. The notification for all births in Israel must be delivered to a registration official within 10 days of the date of birth (Section 6 of the Registration Law). The notification must be delivered by the person in charge of the institution where the birth took place. "Institution" is defined to include a hospital, prison, hotel, public aircraft, sea craft or vehicle. If the birth took place elsewhere, the notification must be delivered by the parents of the newborn, or the physician or the midwife who attended the birth. In such a case, the notification must include a medical certificate from the physician or a deposition from the midwife confirming that the mother of the newborn is his/her biological mother.

89. If the birth took place outside an institution and was not attended by a physician or a midwife, the notification must include an affidavit from the parents of the newborn confirming that the mother of the newborn is his/her biological mother, a medical certificate given by a physician who monitored the pregnancy starting from week 28 of the pregnancy, and a medical certificate given by a physician who examined the mother of the newborn within 48 hours of the time of birth. If the above-mentioned medical certificates are not available, the notification must include the results of a genetic test made in accordance with the law in order to ascertain that the mother of the newborn is his/her biological mother.

90. Moreover, according to the Registration Law, a notification must be made concerning any death within 48 hours (Section 7 of the Registration Law), and any abandoned child within 10 days (Section 9 of the Registration Law).

91. In order to enforce the obligations mentioned above, the Registration Law provides that a person that knowingly delivers any incorrect detail, document or notification is liable for three months' imprisonment. Moreover, a person who does not deliver a notification as required is liable for two weeks' imprisonment or a fine (Section 35 of the Registration Law).

92. The above-mentioned offenses in Sections 32 and 33 of the Adoption Law conform with the obligation set in Article 3(1)(a)(ii) of the Protocol, in which States parties are required to criminalize "improperly inducing consent, as an intermediary, for the adoption of a child". A common practice used to improperly induce consent is by offering or giving compensation for the relinquishment of parental rights, an act criminalized by the offense set in Section 364 of the Penal Law, as mentioned above. Should parental consent be induced improperly through other means, such as intimidation, threats or deception, the relevant criminal offenses would apply to such acts.

Case law

93. In accordance with the above-mentioned legislation, Israeli law enforcement agencies fully utilize every measure available to combat the offenses relevant to the Protocol, as evidenced by the following examples of case law.

Child prostitution

94. On 22 March 2012, the Supreme Court rendered a judgement regarding a case in which the defendant was charged with exploitation of minors for prostitution by way of inducing minors to prostitution (Sections 203B(A)(1) and 201 of the Penal Law), for soliciting four girls to have sadomasochistic sexual relations in his apartment, and attempting to exploit a fifth minor. The defendant was also charged with inducing minors to prostitution by way of pandering (Sections 203B(A)1 and 199(A)2 of the Penal Law), exploitation of minors by way of inducing a minor to prostitution under aggravated circumstances (Sections 203B(A)(3), 201 and 203 of the Penal Law), and supplying all five girls with drugs (Section 21 of the Dangerous Drugs Ordinance 5733-1973). Tel Aviv District Court had initially sentenced the defendant to a five-year prison sentence, with an additional 18 months' suspended imprisonment, and fined him 10,000 NIS (US$ 2,631), while taking into account that there was no precedent for sentencing such offenses. The State Attorney's office appealed to Supreme Court, which found that the sentence was too lenient and extended the term of imprisonment to eight years. The Supreme Court mentioned in its ruling that the lack of precedent was taken into account, and that future crimes, if brought before the court, should receive harsher sentences, of ten years or more (Cr.A 3212/11 The State of Israel v. Anonymous).

95. In August 2010, the Petah Tikva Magistrate's Court convicted a defendant on three different counts: 1) maintaining a place for purposes of prostitution (Section 204 of the Penal Law); 2) prostitution and obscenity (Section 199(A) (2) of the Penal Law); and 3) exploitation of minors for prostitution (Section 203B (A) (1) of the Penal Law). The defendant was found guilty of operating a massage parlor and "employing" a 16-year-old girl, and was sentenced to ten months' imprisonment. The defendant argued that, in her application, the young woman had lied about her age. The Court rejected the defendant's claim, holding that the defendant willfully ignored the possibility that the young woman was underage, and did not ask for any certification and/or official document to verify her age (Cr.C, 20510/09 The State of Israel v. Michael Praver).

96. On 18 October 2009, Jerusalem District Court convicted a defendant who had solicited two teenage girls to have intercourse with men inside his apartment in exchange for money. The defendant himself compensated the girls for maintaining sexual relations with him on several occasions and supplied the girls with drugs. The Court convicted the defendant of exploitation of minors for prostitution (Section 203B (A) (1) of the Penal Law) and influencing the girls to use dangerous drugs (Section 21 of the Dangerous Drugs Ordinance). The Court sentenced the defendant to 15 months' imprisonment and four months' suspended imprisonment (S.Cr.C. 605/09 The State of Israel v. Ben Moha).

97. In December 2008, Jerusalem District Court convicted a woman of exploitation of minors for prostitution with aggravating circumstances, namely, an offense committed by a person responsible for the minor (Section 203B(c) of the Penal Law). The mother subjected and involved her 16-year-old daughter in acts of prostitution that took place in the family home. The Court mentioned that this case is complicated due to the mother's and daughter's difficult daily routine. Nonetheless, the Court held that society could not tolerate such repugnant behavior and lack of moral values. The defendant was sentenced to five years' imprisonment and a one-year suspended imprisonment, and she was fined NIS 30,000 (US$ 7,894) (S.Cr.C, 8075/07 The State of Israel v. Anonymous).

Child pornography

98. On January 10, 2012, the District Court of Nazareth rendered a judgement in an appeal regarding a case concerning the possession of child pornography. The defendant was charged with multiple violations of Section 214(b3) of the Penal Law (possession of obscene photos, including images of children) (see paras. 36–39 above). In this case, following an investigation request from INTERPOL, the defendant's computer was searched and a large amount of child pornography was found. Nazareth Magistrate's Court found the defendant guilty, despite the State's inability to prove that he had actually watched or distributed the material. The Court ruling stated that the offense required the mere possession of the material, regardless of actual use or distribution. This perception stems from the purposes of the law, which include prevention of the exploitation of minors, by deterring the potential consumers of such material. Nazareth Magistrate Court sentenced the defendant to eight months' suspended imprisonment and fined him 10,000 NIS (US$ 2631). The State and the defendant both appealed to the District Court, which extended the sentence by an additional six months' imprisonment, to be served in community service. The District Court stressed the importance of sentences that will create substantial deterrence, but took into account the defendant's contribution to the community and his good behaviour since the offenses were committed, and therefore did not impose the maximum penalty (Cr.A. 490/11 The State of Israel v. Yafeem Gorivich).

99. On 14 October 2009, Haifa Magistrate's Court sentenced a defendant to five months' imprisonment to be served in community service, nine months' suspended imprisonment and a fine of NIS 2,000 (US$ 526). The defendant was found guilty of possession of obscene publications and display (Section 214(b3) of the Penal Law). The Court emphasizes the gravity of the offense, as it enables and creates the continuance of demand for child pornography (Cr.C. 14057/08 The State of Israel v. Itzhak Bruk).

100. On 17 May 2009, the Supreme Court rejected an appeal filed by a convicted offender. The appellant was convicted by Tel Aviv District Court based on his own admission for possession and display of obscene publications (Section 214(b3) of the Penal Law). The Supreme Court held that the purpose of Section 214(b3) is to eradicate sexual abuse of minors. According to the Court, the classification of this Section as a "misdemeanor" does not detract from the gravity of the crime or the severity of the defendant's actions, which ultimately contributed to the production and distribution of pedophile materials (P.Cr.A. 3890/09 Inbar Mor v. The State of Israel).

Adoption

101. An Israeli couple offered a Philippine foreign worker compensation and flight expenses back to the Philippines in exchange for her baby. Be'er Sheva Magistrate's Court convicted the two defendants based on their own admission and sentenced them to 250 hours of community service for the crime of relinquishing a minor for consideration (Section 364 of the Penal Law). Contrary to the probation officer's recommendation, the Court increased the recommended community service hours from 150 to 250 (Cr.C. 4833/08 The State of Israel v. Tibi).

Statistics

Sale of children

Table 1

Data regarding investigation cases opened between 2006 and 2011 concerning the sale of children (Sections 374A, 375A, 376, 376A, 376B, 377A of the penal law)

Year	Number of cases
2006	1
2007	1
2008	3
2010	2
2011	5
Total	12

Source: Israel Police, 22 February 2012.

Table 2

Data regarding the status of investigation cases opened between 2006 and 2011 concerning the sale of children

Status	2006	2007	2008	2010	2011	Total
Under investigation					2	2
Closed		1	2			3
Prosecution being considered (by the State Attorney's Office)					3	3
Prosecuted	1		1	2		4
Total	1	1	3	2	5	12

Source: Israel Police, 22 February 2012.

Child prostitution

102. The scope of child prostitution in Israel, which tends to be a covert activity, is subject to a lack of consensus among State authorities and non-governmental bodies. Significant efforts are made by law enforcement agencies and NGOs in order to arrive at accurate numbers of children in prostitution, so that adequate programs would be available to all the relevant children. Government bodies, along with NGOs, are cooperating in this arena and are making a sincere effort towards finding an immediate solution.

103. One of the main difficulties in regard to child prostitution is locating the children. However, all Ministries dealing with children at risk are working together towards dealing better with this phenomenon, to best estimate and assess accurately its scope.

Child sex tourism

104. Police intelligence indicates that sex tourism in general, and child sex tourism specifically, does not constitute a problem in Israel.

Table 3
Data regarding investigation cases opened between 2004 and 2011 concerning child prostitution (Sections 199, 201-203, 203B, 203C, 204, 205, 205A-205C of the penal law)

Year	Number of cases
2004	9
2005	8
2006	5
2007	12
2008	8
2009	12
2010	14
2011	11
Total	79

Source: Israel Police, 22 February 2012.

Table 4
Data regarding the status of investigation cases opened between 2004 and 2011 concerning child prostitution

Status	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	Total
Under investigation						1	1	1	3
Closed	6	7	3	10	7	6	4	3	46
Prosecution being considered (by the State Attorney's Office)			1	1		4	8	6	20
Prosecution being considered (by Police Prosecution)							1	1	2
Prosecuted	3	1	1	1	1	1			8
Total	9	8	5	12	8	12	14	11	79

Source: Israel Police, 22 February 2012.

Child pornography

105. There are no statistics with regard to the extent of child pornography in Israel.

Table 5
Data regarding investigation cases opened between 2004 and 2011 concerning child pornography (Section 214 of the penal law)

Year	Number of cases
2004	25
2005	29
2006	25
2007	78
2008	122
2009	100

Year	Number of cases
2010	46
2011	43
Total	468

Source: Israel Police, 22 February 2012.

Table 6
Data regarding the status of investigation cases opened between 2004 and 2011 concerning child pornography

Status	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	Total
Under investigation		1		1	4	3	13	14	36
Closed	20	16	15	50	90	71	20	18	300
Prosecution being considered (by the State Attorney's Office)		4	3	8	16	20	11	11	73
Prosecution being considered (by Police Prosecution)				2	7	3	2		14
Prosecuted	5	8	7	17	5	3			45
Total	25	29	25	78	122	100	46	43	468

Source: Israel Police, 22 February 2012.

Article 4

Article 4 (1) – Jurisdiction

106. Article 4(1) provides that each State party shall take measures as may be necessary to establish jurisdiction over criminal conduct identified in Article 3(1) of the Protocol, concerning the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography, when the offenses are committed in its territory or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State.

107. Israeli criminal laws apply to all domestic offenses (Section 12 of the Penal Law). For such purpose, the term “offense” includes every offense committed within Israeli territory, fully or partially, or an act in preparation for the commission of an offense, an attempt, an attempt to induce another to commit an offense, or a conspiracy to commit an offense committed abroad, on condition that all or part of the offense was intended to be committed within Israeli territory; for this matter, “Israeli territory” is the area of Israeli sovereignty, including the strip of its coastal waters, as well as every vessel and every aircraft registered in Israel (Section 7 of the Penal Law).

108. In order to apply the Israeli Penal Law, it is important to verify that the applicability of Israeli criminal laws – also in respect of foreign offenses – is not restricted by any foreign enactment or any act of a foreign court of law, unless otherwise provided by law. Moreover, no person may be put on trial for a foreign offense, except by the Attorney General or with his/her written consent, if he/she concluded that doing so is in the public interest; Israeli criminal laws do not apply in respect of an offense if the person was tried for it abroad at the request of the State of Israel and, in the event that he/she was convicted there, he/she served his/her sentence. In any case, if Israeli criminal laws can be applied by virtue of several ways of applicability, they shall be applicable by the least restricted applicability (Section 9 of the Penal Law).

109. In addition to the applicability of the Penal Law according to the sections mentioned above, the State of Israel can establish jurisdiction over foreign offenses through international conventions, at the request of a foreign State and on a reciprocal basis, provided that the criminal laws of the requesting State apply to the offense; and that the offense was committed by a person who is on Israeli territory and who is an Israeli resident, whether or not he/she is an Israeli citizen. Subject to the application of Israeli law against that person, the requesting State must waive the applicability of its law to the case at hand. Finally, the penalty imposed for that offense cannot be more severe than that could have been imposed under the laws of the requesting State. Additional relevant provisions may be set in the convention.

Article 4 (2) (a) – Offenses committed by nationals or against nationals

110. In regard to offenses committed against an Israeli citizen or an Israeli resident, the Penal Law applies to foreign offenses committed against the life, body, health or freedom of an Israeli citizen or of an Israeli resident, for which the maximum penalty is one year's imprisonment or more. As mentioned above, according to Israeli law, the acts referred to by the Protocol are punishable by penalties that exceed one year's imprisonment and therefore, the Penal Law applies to such acts.

111. However, if the offense was committed on a territory that is subject to the jurisdiction of another State, then the criminal laws shall apply to it only if all the following conditions are met (Section 14(b) of the Penal Law):

- (a) It is an offense also under the laws of that State;
- (b) No restriction on criminal liability applies to the offense under the laws of that State;
- (c) The person was not already found innocent of it in that State, or – if he/she was found guilty – he/she did not serve the penalty that was imposed.

112. In such cases, the penalty imposed for that offense cannot be more severe than the penalty that could have been imposed under the laws of the State in which the offense was committed (Section 14(c) of the Penal Law).

113. In regard to offenses committed by an Israeli citizen or an Israeli resident, the criminal laws of Israel apply to a foreign offense categorized as a felony or misdemeanour (maximum penalty of three months' imprisonment or more), which was committed by a person who, at the time the offense was committed or thereafter, was an Israeli citizen or an Israeli resident (Section 15 of the Penal Law), unless such person was extradited from Israel to another country because of that offense and was tried there for that offense. In cases where the Penal Law applies, the above-mentioned restrictions in Section 14(b) and (c) apply as well. However, the double criminality condition in Section 14(b)(1) of the Penal Law does not apply with respect to any of the offenses set forth below if the person was an Israeli citizen at the time of commission of the offense:

- (a) An offense under Section 10 of Chapter Eight (Prostitution and Obscenity), committed by a minor or in connection to a minor;
- (b) Conveying a person beyond the boundaries of the State, under Section 370;
- (c) Causing a person to leave a State for purposes of prostitution or slavery, under Section 376B;

- (d) Trafficking in persons, under Section 377A.

Article 5

114. Article 5 addresses the issue of extradition between States parties in connection with the offenses referred to in Article 3(1) of the Protocol.

115. Extraditing a person from Israel to another country can be made only in accordance with the provisions of the Extradition Law 5714-1954 (“Extradition Law”), which regulates all aspects of extradition.

116. According to the Extradition Law, extradition is possible only if there exists an extradition treaty in force between Israel and the requesting State and if the requested person is either a defendant or convicted of an extraditable offense. It is important to emphasize that reciprocity is an important condition applied in considering requests for extradition, unless determined otherwise by the Israeli Minister of Justice.

117. For the purposes of the Extradition Law, a “treaty” is either a bilateral agreement or a multilateral convention, including an agreement or convention that is not specific for extradition but includes provisions concerning this matter; or a special agreement between Israel and the requesting State concerning extraditing a specific person, for example an ad hoc extradition agreement, in accordance with the Extradition Law. An “extraditable offense” is an offense that, if committed in Israel, would be punishable by at least one year’s imprisonment. As mentioned above, all acts and activities referred to by the Protocol are criminalized and punishable by penalties that exceed one year’s imprisonment. They are thus considered “extraditable offenses”.

118. Accordingly, Article 5 of the Protocol constitutes an appropriate basis for extradition between Israel and other States Parties to the Protocol, subject to the fulfilment of the conditions set forth in the Extradition Law.

119. Some additional examples of multilateral or bilateral agreements can be mentioned here: Israel has been a party to the 1957 European Convention on Extradition since 1967, and is also a party to bilateral extradition agreements, with the United States (1963), Canada (1969), Australia (1975), Swaziland (1970) and Fiji (1972).

120. Moreover, the following are examples of conventions to which the State of Israel is a party, that are not extradition conventions but that include provisions concerning extradition:

(a) The United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, of 1988 (Section 6);

(b) The United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, of 2000 (Section 16); and

(c) The United Nations Convention against Corruption, of 2003 (Section 44).

121. The Extradition Law places several restrictions on extradition to the requesting State, some of which are relevant to the matter at hand, for example if there are grounds to believe that the extradition request is based on discrimination against the requested person due to race or religion, or if the requested person was prosecuted in Israel for that offense and was found guilty or innocent.

122. Extradition is not possible if the extradition offense is punishable by the death penalty in the requesting State, and in Israel the penalty for that offense is not as such, unless the requesting State assures that death penalty will not be imposed or that, if it were initially imposed, it would be replaced with a less severe punishment (Section 16 of the Extradition Law).

123. Additionally, extraditing a person is conditional upon the requesting State's assurance that that person will not be arrested, prosecuted or punished in the requesting State for another offense committed prior to extradition and that he/she will not be extradited by the requesting State to another country for an offense committed prior to the extradition. Such condition does not apply, however, if that person left the requesting State after extradition and came back to the State willingly, or if after extradition he/she was given the opportunity to leave the requesting State and did not leave the State during 30 days, or if the Minister of Justice consents in writing to such an action against the requested person (Section 17 of the Extradition Law). The same restrictions apply when considering requests for extradition under an agreement or convention that is not specific for extradition but includes provisions concerning this matter.

124. As for extraditing nationals of the State, the Extradition Law provides that a person who, when committing an extraditable offense, was an Israeli citizen or an Israeli resident, may not be extradited unless the extradition request is for prosecution in the requesting State, and the requesting State has undertaken to return him/her to Israel for carrying out the sentence should he/she be found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment. An Israeli citizen may waive his/her right to return to Israel for carrying out the sentence.

Article 6

125. This Article provides for general mutual legal assistance between States parties in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings brought in respect of the offenses established in Article 3(1).

Article 6 (1) – Mutual legal assistance

126. The International Legal Assistance Law 5758-1998 (the "International Legal Assistance Law") allows for mutual legal assistance between Israel and other countries in legal proceedings. Such mutual legal assistance may be granted without specific agreements, and the State of Israel provides and receives such assistance on a routine basis, regardless of the existence of specific agreements.

127. According to Section 2 to the International Legal Assistance Law, legal assistance includes the following: service of documents, collecting evidence, search and seizure operations, transfer of evidence and other documents, relocation of a person in order to testify in a criminal proceeding or to participate in an investigation, investigative acts, transmission of information, confiscation of property, provision of legal relief, authentication and certification of documents or the performance of any other legal act (civil and criminal proceedings).

128. To date, the Department of the International Affairs in the Ministry of Justice has not engaged in proceedings concerning the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography among its mutual legal assistance cases.

Article 6 (2) – Treaties and arrangements on mutual legal assistance

129. Israel is a party to the European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, of 1959, and also to bilateral agreements on mutual legal assistance with the following States: the United States (1991), Chile (1995), Turkey (1995), Ukraine (1995), Cyprus (1996), Greece (1996), Jordan (1996), Hungary (1997), Mexico (1997), the Russian Federation (1997), Latvia (1998), Malta (2000), Argentina (2002), Panama (2002), Romania (2002), the Republic of Moldova (2004), India (2005), Italy (2007), and Serbia (2010).

Article 7

130. This Article addresses the issues of seizure and confiscation of goods used to commit or facilitate offenses and proceeds derived from these offenses.

Article 7 (a) and 7 (b) – Seizure and confiscation

131. Section 32 of the Criminal Procedure Ordinance (Arrest and Search) (New Version) 5729-1969 (the “Criminal Procedure Ordinance”) grants policemen the power to seize an object, if he/she has reasonable grounds to believe that an offense was or is about to be committed with that object, that it could serve as evidence in a judicial proceeding, or that it was given as remuneration for the commission of an offense or as a means for its commission. Section 36 of the Criminal Procedure Ordinance stipulates that, if during the legal proceedings, that object was submitted to the Court as evidence, the Court may determine what shall be done with the object.

132. Section 39 of the Criminal Procedure Ordinance states that a Court may order the confiscation of an object that was seized or held by the Police in accordance with this ordinance, if the object is owned by the person who was convicted of the offense and is connected to the offense. If the person who was convicted of an offense is not the owner of the object, and the object was given as remuneration for the commission of that offense (or a related offense) or as a means for its commission, then the object may be confiscated only if it was given or consented to be given for such purpose by its owner or by its lawful possessor.

133. Other criminal statutes provide ample bases for seizure and confiscation. The legislation contains several provisions authorizing forfeiture for offenses covered by the Protocol: the Battle Against Organized Crime Law 5763-2003 (the “Organized Crime Law”) and the Seizure and Confiscation of Profit Earned by Offenses Publication 5765-2005; and Sections 11 and 21 of the Prohibition of Money Laundering Law 5760-2000.

134. Section 377D of the Penal Law, which was incorporated into the Penal Law in October 2006 as part of the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking Law, states that the provisions of Sections 5 to 33 of the Organized Crime Law (other than Sections 8, 14(2) and 31 thereof), apply to the forfeiture of property related to the offense of holding under conditions of slavery (Section 375A of the Penal Law) and the offense of trafficking in persons (Section 377A of the Penal Law), as the case may be and mutatis mutandis.

Article 7 (b) – Mutual legal assistance requests

135. On 24 October 2010, the International Legal Assistance Law was amended with regard to the conditions for assistance in confiscation and forfeiture. Prior to the amendment, the Law required that a foreign State requesting the issuance of a temporary order undertake to bear the expenses regarding any damages caused to third parties, in the event that the property is ultimately not forfeited. Similarly, a foreign State requesting the transfer of property outside of Israel was required to undertake to bear such expenses in the event that the forfeiture order was to be canceled by the court. Prior to the amendment, such undertaking constituted a potential obstacle to cooperation in forfeiture. The International Legal Assistance Law was therefore amended, by granting discretion to the Minister of Justice to waive the requirement for such undertaking by the requesting State.

Article 7 (c) – Closing of premises

136. The Law Limiting Use of Premises in Order to Prevent the Commission of Crime 5765-2005 authorizes the Police and the courts to limit the use of premises and to close them if there are reasonable grounds to suspect that those places would continue to serve for the purpose of the following offenses: procurement (Section 199 of the Penal Law), inducement to engage in prostitution (Section 202 of the Penal Law), trafficking in persons for inducing the person to commit an act of prostitution (Section 377A(a)(5) of the Penal Law), maintaining a place for purposes of prostitution (Section 204 of the Penal Law) and renting a place for prostitution (Section 205 of the Penal Law).

137. The courts have the authority to issue closure orders for periods of 90 days each time, with the possibility of extension. The Police may issue such orders for a period not to exceed 30 days, during which they may request the court to rule on the matter. Violating such an order is punishable by two years' imprisonment.

Article 8

138. As is detailed below, Israeli law provides extensive protection for child victims, as required by Article 8 of the Protocol.

139. At the outset, it is important to note that the victim of an offense can often play a key role in all stages of the criminal legal process. Israeli law grants such victims special status, beyond their regular status as prosecution witnesses. Indeed, Israel makes every effort so that all officials at all stages of the process treat victims with dignity, fairness and understanding, assist them to receive full compensation available by law for their damages and do their best to protect victims from further damages, subject of course to the rights of defendants.

140. The main legislation regarding the rights of crime victims is the Crime Victims' Rights Law 5761-2001 (the "Victims' Rights Law"), the purpose of which is to determine the rights for a crime victim and to protect his/her dignity as a human being without prejudicing the legal rights of suspects, defendants and convicts. The principles of the Victims' Rights Law are that granting rights to the victim of a crime must be made while giving consideration to his/her needs, while protecting his/her dignity and privacy, within a reasonable amount of time (Section 3 of the Victims' Rights Law).

141. The Victims' Rights Law applies to "victims of a crime". The term is defined as a person that suffered directly because of a crime, as well as a family member (spouse, parent, parent's spouse, children, brother or sister) of a person who died as a consequence of the crime (excluding the suspect, the defendant or the person convicted of the crime). For the purposes of this law, "crime" refers to an offense, excluding traffic violations, which is qualified as a misdemeanor or a felony, and which was either committed in Israel or, committed abroad but prosecuted before an Israeli court by official State authorities.

142. As mentioned above, all actions and activities referred to by the Protocol are criminalized by Israeli law and penalized by severe punishments, thus falling within the scope of the Victims' Rights Law.

143. The Victims' Rights Law grants victims of crime a wide range of rights. Victims of sexual or violent offenses are granted additional rights, stemming from the particular gravity of such offenses. The Victims' Rights Law provides measures for protecting the rights and interests of victims of crime, including children, through all stages of the legal proceedings, as is described more fully below.

Article 8 (1) (a) – Recognizing the vulnerability of child victims

144. Section 4(a) of the Victims' Rights Law states, as a core principle, that the implementation of a child victim's rights should be adjusted and modified according to the relevant circumstances of each case, and the child's age and level of maturity, all in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

145. According to Section 18 of the Crime Victims' Rights Regulations 5762-2002 (the "Crime Victims' Rights Regulations"), the rights of a child below the age 14 can be exercised through his/her parent or legal guardian, while the rights of a child who is 14 years old or older can be exercised either through his/her parent or legal guardian or personally if he/she so requests. However, exercising such rights through parents or legal guardians is not possible if the parent or the legal guardian was a suspect or involved in committing the crime, or if exercising the rights through the parent or the legal guardian might impair the physical or mental well-being of the child. In such a case, the exercise of the child's rights must be done through another person, whose identity will be determined after consulting with a social worker and, to the extent possible, after hearing the child's opinion.

Children as witnesses

146. Investigating children, either as witnesses or as victims of a crime, is one of the most sensitive aspects of the legal criminal process, requiring a heightened level of awareness of the vulnerability of child victims and an adaptation of the procedures in place so as to recognize the special needs of child victims.

147. The Law of Evidence Revision (Protection of Children) 5715-1955 (the "Protection of Children Law") provides that children under the age of 14 may be questioned and investigated in connection with specific offenses (which includes, inter alia, prostitution and obscenity offenses and sex and violence offenses), only by a specialized investigator trained in dealing with children and appointed by the Minister of Justice (the "investigator for children").

148. The investigator for children must document the investigation of the child, including all that transpired, by video, by audio (if video recording was not possible or if the child refused to answer questions due to the video recording), or in writing (if audio recording was not possible or if the child refused to answer questions due to the audio recording). Such testimony, written notes or report edited by the investigator for children during the investigation or afterwards are admissible as evidence in a court of law. However, a defendant cannot be convicted based on such evidence without the presence of other corroborating evidence (Section 11 of the Protection of Children Law).

149. Later, during legal proceedings in court, a child under the age of 14 may not testify, and his/her written statement may not be submitted to the court, unless the submission of such testimony or statement is authorized by the investigator for children. If that authorization is granted, the testimony will be given in closed doors in the sole presence of the prosecutor, the defendant, his/her attorney and the investigator for children. Other persons can be present only with the court's permission.

150. The reason for such an instruction is to avoid or minimize the potential harm to the minor and to allow for the testimony to be given with less pressure. Such testimony, depending on the circumstances, may be given through closed-circuit television

(Section 2(c) of the Amendment of Procedure (Examination of Witnesses) Law 5718-1957 (the “Examination of Witnesses Law”)).

151. Other measures for recognizing the vulnerability of child victims and adapting procedures to recognize their special needs will be discussed below, regarding the Article dealing with protecting the privacy and identity of the child victim.

Article 8 (1) (b) – Keeping child victims informed

152. As mentioned above, even though a child victim of a crime is not a party to the proceedings, Israeli law grants him/her special status through all stages of the legal proceedings and imposes on all officials specific duties in this regard. This includes the duty to inform the victim of a crime regarding several matters concerning the legal process.

153. The general obligation on that matter is prescribed in Section 8 to the Victims’ Rights Law, which details the rights of a victim of a crime to receive information concerning his/her rights as a victim and also concerning the manner in which the criminal proceedings are being conducted, except if disclosure of these details is forbidden by law or if the person in charge of the investigation or the prosecution determines that providing that information could impair the investigation or the privacy or well-being of another person.

154. With respect to information concerning the manner in which the criminal proceedings are being conducted, the Victims’ Rights Law imposes duties upon all officials involved in the legal process, to provide information to the victim.

155. The Victims’ Rights Law includes a list of types of information that the crime victim is entitled to receive and specifies the identity of the person or body responsible for conveying that information. Some of the information is mandatory, while the remainder can be obtained by request of the victim.

156. Note that the provisions of this law do not derogate from the obligation to inform a complainant under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law.

Article 8 (1) (c) – Presenting the views, needs and concerns of child victims

157. Section 17 of the Victims’ Rights Law grants the victim of a “grave sexual or violent crime”, as defined in that law, the right to express to the prosecutor his/her opinion, position and views concerning the plea bargain, prior to the court’s approval of the plea bargain, unless the District Attorney or the Head of the Prosecution Department of the Israel Police, as the case may be, determines that this would cause material harm to the conduct of the proceedings. A similar right is granted concerning a decision to delay the procedures against the defendant (Section 16 of the Victims’ Rights Law).

158. Section 18 of the Victims’ Rights Law grants the crime victim the right to submit a written statement to the investigating body or the prosecutor concerning any injury or damage caused to him/her as a result of the crime, including bodily or mental harm, or damage to property (Victim Impact Statement). In such a case, the prosecutor will present the above-mentioned statement to the court during the sentencing hearing.

159. Section 19 of the Victims’ Rights Law entitles a victim of a sexual or violent crime to express in writing his/her position and views concerning the expected danger stemming from a possible early release of the sentenced offender from prison, before the parole board makes a final decision on the matter.

160. Section 20 of the Victims' Rights Law entitles a victim of a sexual or violent crime to express in writing his/her opinion, position and/or views, through the Pardons Department of the Ministry of Justice, prior to the decision of the President of the State of Israel concerning an application for a pardon or mitigation of punishment. To that end, the Department of Pardons in the Ministry of Justice assigns a designated attorney to establish contact with the victims and their families and seek their input. The Department makes every effort to contact the victim and to inform them of their rights as mentioned above.

Article 8 (1) (d) – Providing appropriate support services to child victims

161. Section 11 of the Victims' Rights Law provides for the right of victims of a crime to receive information concerning available support services provided by the State or by non-governmental bodies, including centers for prevention of domestic violence.

162. The Crime Victims' Rights Regulations require the State to disseminate information leaflets that contain details concerning the legal rights of a victim of a crime and the stages of the legal process, telephone numbers and addresses of bodies providing social and legal support to victims of a crime, and details concerning available protection from perpetrators. Those information leaflets are deposited in an accessible and conspicuous place in different locations where they are most likely to be viewed by victims of a crime after its occurrence, such as police stations, relief agencies, emergency rooms, ambulance stations, legal aid offices, centres for treatment and prevention of domestic violence, the secretariat of the State Attorney's Offices, and courts of law. The information leaflets are printed in different languages, including Hebrew, Arabic, English, Amharic and Russian, and they are also available on the internet.

163. Furthermore, the Victims' Rights Law requires that the State Attorney's Office establish an Assistance Unit and that the Police appoint a policeman in charge, in order to ensure that victims can properly exercise their rights. These officials are responsible for conveying information to and from victims, guiding other employees and assisting them in implementing this law, and gathering relevant and updated information concerning support and assistance services for victims of a crime and disseminating such information to other employees.

164. State Attorney's Guideline No. 14.7, entitled "Assistance to Crime Victims and Prosecution Witnesses in a Criminal Proceeding" (last update – 1.8.2011) ("Guideline No. 14.7"), instructs that members of the State Attorney's Office be trained to ensure that crime victims are provided with the information necessary to receive support, including urgent medical and social care, compensation according to the law and information on public and national bodies providing counsel and care.

Article 8 (1) (e) – Protecting the privacy and identity of child victims

165. As mentioned above, Israeli law recognizes the vulnerability of victims of sexual or violent offenses, including and especially children.

166. When a minor is a witness in a criminal procedure or a victim of an offense under Sections 208, 214, 352-345, 374A, or any of 377A(5) to (7) of the Penal Law (sexual offenses and prostitution, obscenity offenses, abduction for the purpose of trafficking and trafficking in persons), it is forbidden to publish the minor's name, picture, address or other details that can identify him/her without the court's permission (Section 70 to the Courts Law (Consolidated Version) 5744-1984 (the "Courts Law")).

167. Guideline No. 14.7 of the State Attorney's Guidelines instructs that members of the State Attorney's Office must ask the court to explicitly mention the prohibition on disclosing the child victim's personal details, so that everyone present in the court, including the media, can be aware of it.

168. Moreover, it is forbidden to publish (except with the court's permission) any details that can identify a child under the age of 14 who was interrogated concerning an offense listed in the Protection of Children Law or who testified concerning such an offense in court, or to publish any part of their testimony. Violating the above prohibition is an offense punishable by three years' imprisonment, by a fine, or by both (Section 6 of the Protection of Children Law).

169. With respect to protecting the privacy of victims generally, Section 7 of the Victims' Rights Law prohibits all authorities from providing personal details of a victim of a sexual or violent offense (home address, workplace address and telephone number), including to the defendant or his/her attorney, without the victim's consent. The rule in regard to other crimes is that only the prosecutor is authorized to withhold personal details of the crime victim from the defendant or his/her attorney, and the prosecutor may do so only if there are grounds to believe that providing such details would impair the well-being of the victim(s).

170. In order to balance between a victim's right to privacy and the rights of the defendant, in cases where details regarding the victim are not disclosed to the defendant, the Victims' Rights Law authorizes the court, upon request of the defendant or his/her attorney, to order the disclosure of the victim's personal details, if the court finds it necessary for the defendant's defense.

171. Another kind of protection for the privacy of a victim of a crime can be found in Section 13 of the Victims' Rights Law, according to which during an investigation of a sexual or violent crime, the crime victim may not be investigated about his/her sexual past, except for an inquiry relevant under specific circumstances regarding a previous sexual relationship with the suspect, unless the officer in charge of the investigation determines that due to written reasons, such an investigation is essential for discovering the truth. If such an investigation is approved, it shall be conducted with due care while maintaining the victim's dignity and privacy. Moreover, during the trial, the court shall not allow the questioning of a victim of a sexual offense about his/her sexual past, unless preventing such questioning would cause a miscarriage of justice with regard to the defendant (Section 2A of the Examination of Witnesses Law).

Article 8 (1) (f) – Providing for the safety of child victims

172. Protection of victims during the criminal procedure constitutes a key aspect of victims' rights. The right of victims to protection is provided in Section 6 of the Victims' Rights Law, the first section in the chapter that enumerates the various rights granted to victims of a crime. Without such a protection, the criminal procedure cannot exist. Victims of a crime would not complain and would not testify, and perpetrators would not be brought to justice.

173. Such a protection must be effective and comprehensive. To that end, Section 6 of the Victims' Rights Law provides that during a criminal procedure a crime victim is entitled to four aspects of protection: first, protection from the suspect, the defendant or the convicted person, or from his/her agents or his/her friends and relatives, as much as possible and according to necessity; second, protection in the court of law, as much as possible, from any contact or unnecessary communication with any of the above individuals; third, to receive information from the Police concerning relevant options for protection from the above-mentioned persons; fourth, to live quietly in his/her home, without the presence of the suspect, defendant or convicted person, if he/she resides with him/her, under a decision of a court of law in accordance with the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law 5751-1991 ("Prevention of Domestic Violence Law").

174. Generally, the hearings in Israeli courts are open to the public. However, for the sake of protecting victims of a crime or witnesses, the prosecutor may ask the court to conduct the hearings behind closed doors if he/she finds that it is essential for 1) protecting moral values; 2) protecting a matter related to minors or persons in a state of helplessness; 3) protecting a victim of a sexual offense; 4) protecting a victim of trafficking in persons; 5) ensuring that a victim or a witness is able to testify freely, if holding a public hearing might deter him/her from testifying or from doing so freely. If the prosecutor's motion is approved, the legal hearing is to be conducted behind closed doors. The court may, however, allow certain persons or a group of persons to be present during that legal hearing. In such cases, the court must clarify the prohibition on publishing any details concerning that legal hearing, to all persons present in the courtroom. A violation of this prohibition constitutes an offense punishable by six months' imprisonment, or one year's imprisonment if the violation concerned a minor (Section 68, 70 of the Courts Law).

175. Even in cases where the hearings are open to the public, the prosecutor may ask the court to prohibit any publication concerning the legal hearing if he/she believes that it is necessary to protect the safety of a witness or another person who was mentioned during the hearing (Section 70(d) of the Courts Law).

176. Moreover, if the presence of a certain person in the courtroom might deter a witness from testifying freely or from testifying at all, the prosecutor may ask the court to remove that person from the courtroom (Section 69(b) of the Courts Law).

177. In cases where a minor who is less than 14 years of age is testifying during a criminal procedure under Sections 345–351 of the Penal Law (sexual offenses), the prosecutor may ask the court to allow the minor to testify without the presence of the defendant, but with the presence of his/her attorney, if he/she believes that doing so is necessary to prevent mental harm to the minor (Section 2 of the Protection of Children Law). Additionally, Section 2B of the Examination of Witnesses Law enables a complainant of a sexual offense, in certain circumstances and subject to certain conditions, to testify in court without the presence of the defendant, except his/her attorney, if testifying in front of the defendant could cause damage to the complainant or impair the testimony.

178. Finally, Section 2 of the Examination of Witnesses Law grants crime victims and witnesses protection from inappropriate examination in court. This section provides that the court shall not allow examination of witnesses which includes insults, intimidation or shaming which are irrelevant or unfair.

179. In addition to the protections detailed above, which are relevant to the course of the criminal procedure itself, victims of trafficking in persons and victims of sexual offenses may be admitted to the Witness Protection Program, should they meet the relevant eligibility criteria, in particular concerning the level of intimidation and threats they risk being subjected to. The Witness Protection Authority protects witnesses and their families prior to, during and after the trial. The Authority was established in 2008, pursuant to the Witness Protection Program Law 5769-2008. The Police and the Israeli Prisons Service, as applicable, continue to protect witnesses who do not meet the criteria for this heightened protection.

Article 8 (1) (g) – Avoiding unnecessary delays

180. Section 12 of the Victims' Rights Law requires that proceedings in regard to sexual or violent offenses take place within a reasonable time to prevent any miscarriage of justice.

181. State Attorney's Guideline No. 8.2, titled "Plea Bargain in Sex Offenses and Child Domestic Abuse Cases" (last update – 1.1.2003), instructs the State Attorney's Office to utilize the greatest sensitivity and caution in handling such cases, and to take special care when considering plea bargains in such cases.

182. State Attorney's Guideline No. 8.2, also instructs that a plea bargain should be considered to promote swift indictment and sentencing, in the case where holding a trial may cause additional harm to the victim. Due to the unique sensitivity of this issue, every such plea bargain requires the approval of the District State Attorney, and in especially sensitive cases, further consultation may be held with the State Attorney. Prior to decision-making regarding such a plea bargain, consideration should be given to the possibility of consulting with an expert or the relevant welfare officer.

Article 8 (2) – Uncertainty as to the actual age of the victim

183. The first step to determine the age of the victim is to consider documentary proof, which is possible mainly to Israeli victims who hold an identity card or are otherwise registered in Israel's population registry. For this matter, the official national population registry of the Ministry of Interior constitutes reliable proof of age.

184. With regard to foreign victims, who usually lack any documentation, the Ministry of Health has issued a special procedure for determining the biological age of a foreign resident, using three levels of evaluation – a physical examination by a physician specializing in child endocrinology, an x-ray of the left hand and an ortho-partogramic filming. The findings are examined by an expert physician.

Article 8 (3) – The best interest of the child as a primary consideration

185. The best interest of the child principle exists in most Israeli child-related legislation and constitutes a primary guiding principle under Israeli law. The majority of child-related legal issues (including legislative, administrative and judicial issues) are guided by this principle. For instance:

(a) Section 2 of the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law states that any order for the protection of the child must accord with the best interest of the child consideration;

(b) Section 8(c) of the Youth Law (Care and Supervision) 5720-1960 empowers courts engaged in matters concerning a minor to appoint a legal guardian for the child if it is in the child's best interest;

(c) The Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law 5731-1971 (the "Youth Law") considers the child's best interest as a primary consideration. The Youth Law states that minors are entitled to state their opinion and express their personal feelings prior to a decision being reached in matters that affect them.

186. The determination of the best interest of a child in a given case is based on factual elements, and is made by the court in accordance with the ordinary rules of evidence and procedure. In order to make its decision, the court hears all relevant parties and their arguments, guardians of the child, welfare representatives and social workers, expert opinion on behalf of the parties to the case or at the request of the court, and the child himself/herself concerning his/her needs, views and opinion. Sometimes, the court requests the opinion of the State Attorney.

187. The weight afforded to the minor's view is dependent upon the child's age and level of maturity.

Article 8 (4) – Training

Investigators for children

188. As mentioned above, children under the age of 14 can be investigated as suspects, witnesses or victims of prostitution and obscenity offenses (Section 199-214 of the Penal Law) only by an investigator for children, appointed by the Minister of Justice after consultation with an advisory committee headed by a juvenile court judge. Investigators for children are under the authority of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services.

189. The process of training investigators for children includes several stages, the first of which is a basic course for investigators for children, which includes 20 sessions totalling 120 hours. During the course, the investigators learn about the various ways in which children are typically harmed, thus allowing the graduates to conduct basic investigations of children. The training involves lectures, workshops, simulations, guidance, and joining experienced investigators in real investigations. During this course, the investigators are taught both the legal basis for working as investigators for children, the unique aspects of such an investigation process, and child psychology — including the memory process in regard to children, behaviour patterns that characterize children who have fallen victim to offenses and the like. The investigators are then taught how to assess whether the child is fit to testify, the reliability of their testimony and other data resulting from the investigation. The investigators are able to exercise their newly acquired skills by using the video-recordings of previous investigations and by reading instructional materials. At the end of the course, the investigators receive formal certification and become eligible for nomination before the Advisory Committee for the appointment of investigators for children.

190. The second stage of the training process is an advanced course for investigators for children. This course is available for investigators with one year of practical experience, and also includes 20 sessions totalling 120 hours. This course is designed to enhance the investigators' grasp of complex issues related to their work, and to expose them to the work and expertise of professionals in related fields. Among the topics included in the course are the therapeutic aspects of dealing with victims of sexual assault, considerations with regard to permitting a child to testify in court, the investigation of child suspects, collaboration with social workers and with the Police, and more.

191. Additionally, the training process of a special investigator may be relevant to children who are victims of offenses covered by the Protocol. This training process is intended to train the investigators for children, once they have acquired the skills of investigating and questioning children, to conduct investigations of people with mental disabilities, pursuant to the Investigation and Testimony Procedures Law (Adaptation to Persons with Mental or Psychological Disability) 5765-2005. The training process is divided into two parts: the first part is an annual course consisting of 20 sessions totalling 120 hours, which covers topics such as the definition and diagnosis of mental deficiency and other disabilities, the effects of such a disability on the behaviour of the victims, and how to deal with people with disabilities who have fallen victim to sexual assault. This course includes professional guided tours and an introduction to the various populations in question. At the end of the course, the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services is asked to appoint the graduate as a special investigator, and only then may she or he conduct special investigations.

192. The second part of the training process is an annual course of ten sessions, totalling 60 hours, which is intended to further educate the investigators and accompany them in professional issues that they may encounter while investigating people with disabilities. This part completes the training process of the special investigator, who at that point will have undergone 420 hours of training in total.

Police juvenile investigators

193. Investigating minors (under the age of 18 years old) with regard to trafficking offenses (section 374A-377A of the Penal Law) is under the jurisdiction of the Police.

194. The Police provide guidance and training to their officers with respect to child victims of crime, for the purpose of increasing the efficiency and sensitivity of the Police in dealing with young people. Police investigators attend special courses offered by the Police Youth Department in order to qualify them as juvenile investigators.

195. Consistent with the Convention on the Rights of the Child, officers taking the juvenile investigators' qualification course receive information on the distinct laws and procedures available for handling youth and on community services for minors and youth. Among the topics taught is the encouragement of a constructive relationship between the youth officer, a social worker and the minor.

State Attorney's Office

196. State Attorney's Guideline No. 14.7 requires that members of the State Attorney's Office be trained to ensure that crime victims are provided with the information necessary to receive support, including urgent medical and social care, compensation according to the law and information on public and national bodies providing counsel and care.

Article 8 (5) – Protecting the safety and integrity of persons and/or organizations protecting victims

197. The State of Israel is fully committed to the safety and integrity of those persons and organizations involved in the prevention and/or protection and rehabilitation of victims of such offenses. While there are no formal procedures in place dealing specifically with this issue, the Police remains in constant contact with such persons and organizations, such that if any actual or perceived safety threats arise, the Police responds immediately.

Article 9

Article 9 (1) and 9 (2) – Prevention of the offenses and promoting awareness

198. The Government of Israel spares no efforts in the prevention of the offenses referred to in the Protocol and promoting awareness, both among the public at large and among children specifically, in relation to the harmful effects of these offenses and preventive measures that can be taken.

199. Due to the complex nature of the phenomenon, many governmental agencies are involved, in one way or another, in anti-trafficking efforts. The agencies that have taken the lead are: the National Anti-Trafficking Coordination Office, the Ministry of Public Security and the Israel Police, the State Attorney's Office, the Legal Aid Branch of the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Education, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Levinsky Clinic

200. The Levinsky Clinic (“the Clinic”) was established in 2002 by the Ministry of Health’s Tel Aviv District Health Clinic in order to reduce the rate of sexually transmitted diseases and raise awareness among the public at risk. The Clinic provides medical services, diagnosis examination, and support and counseling, all of which are provided anonymously and free of charge. These services are given impartially to individuals of all ages (including minors), without discrimination.

201. In line with other similar clinics worldwide, children and youth were identified as populations at risk for sexually transmitted diseases. The Levinsky Clinic provides support and counseling in matters relating to sex, sexually transmitted diseases, sexuality and sexual relationships, and also organizes explanatory meetings and workshops outside the Clinic, such as in schools, military units and other educational frameworks.

202. The Clinic offers professional training on the subject of sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, and the identification, treatment and prevention of sexually transmitted diseases. During these meetings, the staff promote discussions about stigma, prejudice, ignorance and other challenging topics. The program qualifies professional teams that will facilitate prevention of sexually transmitted diseases as well as responsible behavior among youth, Israel Defense Forces soldiers, students etc.

Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women

203. The Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women, under the auspices of the Prime Minister’s Office, is directing its efforts towards breaking the cycle of prostitution and addressing the phenomenon of prostitution in general, through public information campaigns and interministerial plans of action. These measures target both potential trafficking victims and the potential “clients” of prostitution. They have been widely acknowledged as having contributed significantly to raising public awareness regarding prostitution and trafficking.

204. The following are examples of these information and education campaigns:

- The Authority’s website (<http://www.women.gov.il/MA/>) is regularly updated with information regarding trafficking in women and related information on government plans for eliminating trafficking, as well as further relevant links on the issue.
- The Authority has established and published a list of women who are experts on trafficking in women and gender issues, and funds their lectures in local authorities, government ministries and government hospitals all over the country. The lectures target the public and government officials. The list of lecturers is published on the Authority’s website for the benefit of the public.
- During 2011, the Authority initiated a new educational campaign for young people. It has appointed a professional team responsible for creating a campaign targeted specifically at young people, in order to address several worrisome phenomena among Israeli youth, such as strip-tease performances during parties etc. The team is expected to launch the campaign in the next few months on websites targeted to young people.
- An annual budget of NIS 200,000 (US$ 54,000) is allocated by the Authority to the Ministry of Education’s programming for raising awareness within the education system on the topic of trafficking in women (as described above). Teachers and other educators are provided with a detailed lesson regarding prostitution and trafficking in women as a form of slavery in the twenty-first century, with booklets on trafficking in women, to serve to educate students on these subjects.

- The Authority annually updates and distributes the “Nobody has the right to hurt you” brochure, which includes the contact details of organizations that assist women who were victims of violence and of trafficking for prostitution. This brochure is distributed in hospitals, clinics and local authorities, in culture, youth and sports centers, and during various public events conducted throughout the country. The brochure is published in Hebrew, English, French, Amharic, Russian, Spanish and Arabic.
- The Authority contacted officials of local authorities regarding strip clubs working within their jurisdiction, and the Chief of Police was requested to address the issue of advertisements for prostitution services distributed locally.
- In addition, the Authority is cooperating with the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator and the Hotline for Migrant Workers to publish a brochure for the public detailing the means of identifying victims of all forms of trafficking. This brochure will be wholly funded by the Authority.

Ministry of Education

205. Educational programs on empowerment and gender equality for pupils aged 3–16 and for all educational staff (e.g. teachers, principals):

- Seminars for teachers on challenging common stereotypes regarding gender, the status of women and violence against women;
- Integrating gender topics within education programs and the research papers of pupils;
- Conventions and seminars;
- Programs designated for pupils on issues of empowerment, gender, equality between the genders, preventing trafficking in women and violence against women.

206. Programs focused on preventing human trafficking and violence against women and young girls:

- A program for pupils and seminars for teachers on gender equality – in the Jewish education system;
- Programs for preventing violence against women – in the Arab education system;
- Lectures for pupils and teachers in junior high school during the month of November, marking International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women. Every year, 200 lectures are given throughout the country, in collaboration with the Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women;
- Conventions for teachers and pupils in junior high school entitled “Human Dignity – Men and Women”, dealing with the prevention of trafficking in women (seven conventions in collaboration with the Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women have taken place thus far);
- Informational brochures are sent to schools and uploaded on the Ministry’s website, to mark International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women.

207. The Ministry of Education is disseminating the text of the Convention on the Rights of the Child to educational psychologists and the Psychological Counseling Services stations (SHEFI), thereby encouraging psychologists to assist schools in promoting awareness of the rights of children among the teaching staff and students.

208. SHEFI employs approximately 50 consultants, advisers, experts and psychologists specializing in sexuality, family relations and domestic disputes as well as the prevention of sexual vulnerability and the detection of potential abuse situations. These experts guide and accompany school personnel in the implementation of educational programs and in making interventions where suspicions of exploitation or abuse are raised.

209. Seminars and study days – SHEFI personnel undergo professional training regarding sexual abuse and distress and the duty to recognize and report potential abuse situations. The courses taught include “From Healthy Sexuality to Sexual Abuse and Back”; “Identifying Children at Risk”; “Treating and Caring for Sexual Crime Victims”; “Treating Children with Sexual Behavior Disorders”.

210. Treatment and care – SHEFI has trained about 500 pedagogical psychologists to treat child victims of sexual offenses. Around 160 children are treated annually by SHEFI professionals. In addition, courses are taught on treatment and care for children with emotional and behavioral problems. This includes a unique approach on how to identify child hardship and assist in such cases.

211. Prevention programs – the Ministry of Education operates several programs in elementary and middle schools. One of the more substantial programs, called “Life Skills” (“Kishurey Haim”), teaches about safe browsing of the internet, dealing with pornography, and more. Educational materials are written and developed, and real-time assistance by professionals is available for school personnel.

212. The Ministry of Education has published on its official website the Hebrew translation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as its child-friendly version, and the text of the Protocol.

National Anti-Trafficking Coordination Office

213. While data in recent years shows that trafficking in children is not an issue in Israel, Israel is aware of the need to combat trafficking in children worldwide, and remains vigilant as to any possible emergence of such a phenomenon in Israel. To that end, several government bodies take an active role in raising awareness of trafficking.

214. The National Anti-Trafficking Coordination Office has a central role in the fight against trafficking on two levels: creating mechanisms to encourage cooperation, and designing substantive initiatives.

215. The Office assists policymaking in this area and in particular as regards protection of victims. It makes efforts to identify potential issues and bring about solutions before the problems escalate, promotes education and training, encourages research, develops established channels of communications between government and NGO actors, in an effort to strengthen cooperation, deals with specific problems which arise as they arise, promotes legislation, regulations and procedures which are important for the battle against trafficking, and is actively involved in subjects which pertain to the battle against trafficking in the government ministries, including procedures that create a climate unfriendly to trafficking. The Office serves in an advisory capacity to government agencies and other bodies which need information on issues regarding this subject. Most importantly, the Office’s first concern is the battle against trafficking and, as such, it places the issue in the foreground of any context in which it appears. It also sees – as its first duty – ascertaining that Israel accords with international standards in this area and, in particular, its human rights focus.

216. To that end, the Office strengthened and broadened cooperation mechanisms with government agencies by means of convening meetings when apprised of problems, opening communication channels among bodies experiencing difficulties with one another, assisting bodies by means of tool kits, comparative research and legal documents, and serving as a clearing house for information among bodies. The Office conducts periodic meetings every few months in order to exchange information and forge common solutions. In addition, the Office conducts periodic meetings with NGOs, sometimes together and sometimes separately.

217. The Office is active in building and maintaining the coordination between different Ministries as well as between these Ministries and other organizations, in issues concerning the battle against trafficking in persons, at the national and international levels. The Office initiates and participates in training of various government officials and non-governmental personnel. The Office is involved in public information lectures aimed at the public at large and certain targeted audiences. The Office prepares legal opinions, participates in and convenes meetings, and accompanies the work of legislation. In regard to regulations – in the wake of the regulations regarding the forfeiture fund (Section 377E of the Penal Law – see para. 241 below), the Office has acted to facilitate transfer of money to the fund.

218. The Office maintains a broad network of international connections with international bodies such as the UNODC, the OSCE, the IOM, and the ILO and with other countries.

219. While the Office does not maintain direct connections with victims as a rule, it does assist them in cases that are emergencies or are particularly sensitive. Thus, the Office assists specific victims, when approached by the Legal Aid Branch of the Ministry of Justice, or NGOs.

220. The Office maintains daily contact with NGOs and meets with NGOs in order to learn about problems they encounter and to report to them regarding developments. In addition, the Office tries to involve them in interministerial teams and training sessions.

221. Identifying New Patterns of Trafficking – One of the most important functions of the Office is to identify new patterns of trafficking and assist government agencies to deal with them, by alerting them to their potential and bringing together relevant bodies in an effort to forge policy and procedure.

Knesset Subcommittee on Trafficking in Women

222. In the Knesset (Israel's Parliament), there is a subcommittee within the Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women that focuses on the battle against trafficking in women.

223. The Subcommittee is active in three major areas related to trafficking: (1) policy development and deliberating legislation; (2) ongoing monitoring and debating of current events; and (3) in-depth research and assessment of subjects of interest.

Policy development and legislation

- Active promotion of the amendment to the Penal Law prohibiting the advertising of sexual services.

Ongoing monitoring and debating of subjects of interest

- Assessment of the steps taken by the Authority for the Advancement of the Status of women regarding trafficking in women;
- Assessment of the final report of the interministerial team regarding trafficking patterns on prostitution and related offenses.

- Hearing various data on sexual assaults against women migrant workers.
- Conducting a hearing on prostitution and commercial sexual exploitation of minors.

In-depth research and assessment of subjects of interest

- Initiating the preparation of research reports on issues related to trafficking in women, including reports on the medical treatment provided to victims of trafficking in persons for the purpose of prostitution, and on commercial sexual exploitation of minors and minors' prostitution.

Israel Police

224. The Police has made the fight against trafficking one of its priorities over the last few years, such that every District Unit and Regional Unit within the Police has accounted for this issue in their annual action plan. This has impacted positively not only on the Police's enforcement efforts in the field, but on its intelligence-gathering activities as well, both in Israel and abroad.

225. An anti-trafficking Coordinating Officer has been appointed to monitor the trafficking, slavery and forced labour-related offenses and to ensure proper coordination between the various units. The Coordinating Officer also seeks to ensure the seamless implementation of the organizational reform, and serves as a contact point for trafficking, slavery and forced-labour cases within the Police and before governmental authorities. Each of the Regional Units has appointed contact officers who serve a double function: they act as liaisons to the Coordinating Officer and other personnel involved in anti-trafficking efforts, and they serve as experts with knowledge and experience who can advise other regional officers regarding the special aspects of trafficking cases.

State Attorney's Office

226. Members of the State Attorney's Office often lecture in various forums on trafficking issues, in order to raise their awareness of the phenomenon. Among the forums are international representatives from source countries, high schools, higher education facilities, and social workers.

Legal Aid Branch

227. The Legal Aid Branch is a special division of the Ministry of Justice, and in many ways its operational model is unique. The Branch's attorneys are Ministry of Justice attorneys, but they function independently from the Ministry of Justice and other government entities in some ways. The Branch provides legal services to various segments of the population, free of charge. In effect, it can be described as a government-funded independent pro bono legal department. Its independence from the Ministry of Justice enables it to represent individuals in all kinds of civil and administrative proceedings, including, in some cases, against the Government itself.

228. The Legal Aid Branch acts to raise awareness among the public, potential victims, trafficking perpetrators and potential "clients", through publication of its achievements and activities in the media, and through lectures conducted in educational institutions on trafficking in persons. The Legal Aid Branch also directs its advocacy efforts towards ensuring that victims are made aware of their right to legal aid.

Israel Second Authority for Television and Radio

229. The Israel Second Authority for Television and Radio routinely addresses the issue of trafficking for prostitution. The issue is expansively addressed and debated on the Authority's television and radio channels. For example, channel 2 television morning programs regularly include items and discussion on the issue, with the participation of government officials and representatives of NGOs.

Article 9 (3) – Victim assistance

230. Article 9(3) requires State parties to take all feasible measures with the aim of ensuring all appropriate assistance to victims of the offenses covered by the Protocol, including their full social reintegration, and physical and psychological recovery.

231. The Assistance to Sex Violence Minor Crime Victims' Law 5769-2008 was enacted in 2008 and is gradually being implemented. This law adds the right of a child victim of a sexual or violent crime to immediate assistance in a crisis center designated by the Minister of Social Affairs and Social Services particularly for this purpose. Such centers are intended to provide initial treatment in:

- (a) Diagnosis and medical care;
- (b) Providing for the victim's immediate and essential needs, including food and clothing;
- (c) Setting up a meeting with the investigator for children, police investigator, social worker, or any other agent as needed based on the situation at hand;
- (d) Referring the victim to the Legal Aid Branch, appropriate medical, health, and/or psychological care, and emergency centers for long-term treatment.

Shelters

232. Atlas and Ma'agan shelters: Government-funded shelters specially created to care for victims of trafficking for the purpose of prostitution, slavery and forced labour. Although receiving their funding from the Government and being under the supervision of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services, they are operated by an independent, non-profit NGO. The Ma'agan shelter houses female victims of trafficking, and the Atlas Center houses male victims.

233. The above-mentioned shelters do not house child victims of trafficking offenses, but they constitute a well-founded platform for establishing shelters for children if the need were to arise.

Visas

234. The Ministry of Interior has issued specific internal directives that deal with visas for trafficking victims. There are three directives: 1) a directive regarding treatment of victims of trafficking for prostitution who request to testify; 2) a directive regarding visas for victims of trafficking and/or prostitution for rehabilitation purposes; and 3) a directive regarding the status of victims of trafficking and/or forced labor. In addition, in cases where the criminal proceedings against an offender have ended or where a victim does not wish to cooperate with the Police, the victim is entitled to apply to the Ministry of Interior to receive visas for rehabilitation purposes.

235. The B1 visa is a work and residency permit, which can be granted to a victim of trafficking for a one-year rehabilitation period; this period may be extended in exceptional circumstances. A B1 visa can also be granted to enable a victim to remain in Israel in order to testify in proceedings against traffickers. The B1 testimony-related visa may be extended for the duration of investigations and/or court proceedings.

236. Such visas can only be issued if a) the person indeed is a victim of trafficking, and b) the person is capable of being rehabilitated. It is not a prerequisite that victims reside in the shelters in order to receive year-long visas for rehabilitation purposes.

Treatment and assistance

237. The Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women has been cooperating with the Ministries of Social Affairs and Social Services, Health and Education since 2008, in an interministerial plan offering services to empower women to leave the vicious cycle of prostitution, including access to safe accommodation, education, training, drug rehabilitation, and to ongoing support. The budget allocated to this program in 2011 was NIS 8 Million (US$ 2.1 million), and this has become a permanent item in the State budget. During 2011, the budget was used on the following endeavours:

- Holding emergency apartments which provide temporary housing for prostitutes, in Tel Aviv (Sal'it) and in Haifa (Ofek Nashi);
- Creating a national hotline for providing an initial response for women and young people in the cycle of prostitution who often encounter severe cases of abuse, rape and robbery; the hotline provides a response by promptly referring the women to the appropriate treatment providers, and by providing emergency care;
- Operating a hostel, located in Tel Aviv, intended for psychological treatment and rehabilitation over prolonged periods of time;
- Operating two day-centres for psychological and occupational rehabilitation, in Tel Aviv and in Haifa;
- Operating two therapeutic evening-centers, in Tel Aviv and in Haifa;
- Operating a therapeutic day-centre in Be'er-Sheva;
- Operating an emergency program in Eilat.

238. Free psychological treatment program – Since 2008, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services has been operating a free psychological treatment program for child victims of sex crimes. The National Insurance Institute and the Rashi Foundation established this program. The budget allocated for this purpose is 10 million NIS (US$ 2,631,578). There are twelve centers throughout the country, located in central cities. Rural populations are also treated by additional clinics that include sex crime victim professionals. The treatment plan is tailored to the children's needs, the trauma he/she has experienced and the needs of the child's family. Treatment is provided for up to 18 months.

Article 9 (4) – Compensation of victims

239. Article 9(4) requires States parties to ensure that child victims have access to adequate procedures to seek compensation for damages.

240. While financial compensation alone is not sufficient to heal all the physical, psychological and emotional damage endured by child victims of an offense, it remains, nonetheless, a key component of restorative justice.

241. To that end, Section 77 of the Penal Law authorizes the court to impose monetary compensation to the victim, as part of the court's sentence. In appropriate cases, during the argumentation for punishment, the prosecutor may ask the court to grant the victim of the offense full compensation. The prosecutor must inform the victim about ways to obtain the documentation and evidence required for determining the damages.

242. Such compensation can be imposed in respect of each offense of which the defendant was convicted, up to an amount of 258,000 NIS (US$ 67,894), as partial compensation for the damage or suffering caused to him/her. Compensation under this section must be determined according to the value of the damage or suffering caused, on the day the offense was committed or on the day the decision on compensation is rendered, whichever is greater. For the purposes of collection, compensation under this section is treated like a fine. Furthermore, any amount paid or collected on account of a fine when compensation is also due, shall first be allocated to compensation.

243. Such a procedure is aimed to ease the victim's suffering and to prevent the need for him/her to conduct a separate procedure for compensation and spare him/her from enduring once again the difficulties of the legal process, including testifying and cross-examination.

244. As opposed to ordinary offenses, if a person is convicted of an offense under Sections 375A (holding a person under conditions of slavery) or 377A (trafficking in persons), and if the Court did not award compensation for the injured person under Section 77, then the Court must explain, in its sentencing ruling, its reasons for not awarding such compensation (Section 377C of the Penal Law).

245. The compensation granted under Section 77 of the Penal Law is not exclusive and does not restrict the victim's right to seek compensation under any other statute, including under the laws of tort.

246. If a victim of an offense believes that the amount of compensation awarded to him/her according to Section 77 of the Penal Law is not adequate, and wishes to file a civil lawsuit against the convicted perpetrator, with or without others, he/she is entitled to do so through two different procedures. First, the victim may file a lawsuit according to Section 77 of the Courts Law. Such a lawsuit can be filed only against the convicted person and should be submitted to the court that convicted the perpetrator and to the same judge. All factual determinations made during the criminal procedure are admissible in the civil procedure without the need for the victim to prove them again. The second option is to file an ordinary and independent lawsuit, whether against the convicted perpetrator or against him/her and others parties who might also be liable towards the victim.

247. Moreover, section 377E of the Penal Law creates a special victims' compensation fund. If there is no reasonable possibility for the victim to actually obtain the compensation by having recourse to existing laws, then Israel's Administrator-General (the government authority handling State assets and managing public trusts) must provide the compensation stated in the judgement and not yet realized directly to the victim of the offense out of that fund.

Legal aid

248. The Legal Aid Branch in the Ministry of Justice cooperates with NGOs in locating and referring trafficking victims in need of legal assistance. The Branch has been working since 2004 to represent victims of trafficking. Until 2006, only victims of trafficking for prostitution were represented, but since the end of 2006 all victims of trafficking have been represented, including persons held under conditions of slavery, victims of trafficking in persons for purposes such as slavery, forced labour, organ harvesting, kidnapping and forced participation in illicit advertising. Legal aid is provided in civil and torts claims against the offenders and in proceedings according to the Entry into Israel Law 5712-1952, such as requests for a one-year rehabilitation work visa, release from detention, and requests for legal status in Israel. It should be noted that victims of trafficking are accorded free legal aid, without having to meet the prescribed economic criteria for eligibility.

249. It should be stressed that the evidential burden that a victim needs to establish in order to receive legal aid is relatively low and preliminary evidence is enough. In addition, the Legal Aid Branch accords legal aid even if the case is a borderline one. Thus, there are cases in which the Police reached the conclusion that the evidentiary burden of “beyond reasonable doubt” has not been established regarding trafficking or slavery, but the Legal Aid Branch will conclude that according to its own evidentiary burden, the person is a victim of trafficking or slavery.

250. According to the Courts (Fees) Regulations 5767-2007, those represented by the Legal Aid Branch are exempted from paying court fees.

Article 9 (5) – Prohibition of the production of material advertising the offenses

251. Article 9(5) requires States parties to take measures to effectively prohibit the production and dissemination of material advertising the relevant offenses.

252. Please see Articles 1–3 above for the legal basis for prohibiting access to the production and dissemination of material advertising the relevant offenses – the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.

Article 10

Article 10 (1) – International cooperation

253. Article 10(1) calls on State parties to strengthen international cooperation to best address perpetrators of the crimes relevant to the Protocol, and to promote international cooperation and coordination.

International mechanisms

254. The mounting extent of the worldwide trafficking phenomenon led to the creation of global mechanisms to deal with this issue. In addition to the Protocol, the applicable instruments to which Israel is a party are: the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1966) (Articles 4 and 8), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) (Article 11(1)), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (1979) (Article 6), the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict (2000) (Article 1), the Slavery Convention (1926), the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others (1949), the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956), and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (2000).

International cooperation

255. Israel regularly engages in bilateral and multilateral efforts to deter and prevent the increasing international traffic in children for labor and sexual exploitation. In an effort to address this issue at its core, Israel has worked with foreign governments and NGOs to inform potential victims of the risks posed to them by the traffic in children. Within the United Nations system, Israel supports UNICEF and the International Labour Organization (ILO) and, thus, participates in ILO programmes such as the International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labor aimed at suppressing trafficking in children and prostitution. International labor law imposes a total prohibition on labor trafficking, as enshrined in the following conventions of the ILO, including Convention No. 29 (1930) concerning Forced Labor, Convention No. 105 (1957) concerning the Abolition of Forced Labor, and Convention No. 182 (1999) concerning the Worst Forms of Child Labor, all of which Israel is a party to.

256. Additionally, pursuant to bilateral and multilateral legal assistance treaties with foreign governments, Israel cooperates with law enforcement agencies of other countries to combat child prostitution, pornography, the sale of children and sex tourism. Israel also supports deterrent programs that encourage innovative partnerships among governments, labor, industry groups and NGOs to end the employment of children in hazardous or abusive conditions.

Sex tourism

257. According to the Israeli authorities' information, sex tourism in general, and child sex tourism specifically, does not constitute a problem in Israel. No cases or other information have been brought for examination by the Israeli authorities by NGOs, international organizations or other entities regarding international and domestic child sex tourism, involving Israeli citizens.

Article 10 (2) – International victim assistance

258. Article 10(2) calls on State parties to promote international cooperation to assist child victims of the offenses referred to by the Protocol.

259. To date, all of the victims of trafficking in need of assistance were adults rather than children, due to the nature of the trafficking phenomenon in Israel. Should a child victim be found, he/she would be eligible to benefit from the "Safe Return" program, detailed below.

260. The "Safe Return" Program: The "Ma'agan" and "Atlas" shelters work in cooperation with NGOs in the origin countries of victims in order to assist and facilitate the return of the victims of trafficking to their home countries and their reintegration into their communities. When it is determined that a victim is to return to his/her country of origin, the social worker in the respective shelter meets with him/her and inquires whether he/she needs and wishes to receive assistance with regard to his/her return. If the victim requests such assistance, contact is made with shelters and organizations in the origin country in order to find appropriate solutions, such as assistance in returning to the family residence or to shelter for an initial adaptation period. The shelters' staff remains in contact with the relevant organizations in the country of origin and monitors the integration process of the victims even after they arrive home. Currently the shelters maintain a list of approximately 50 organizations in countries of origin.

Article 10 (3) – International cooperation on the root causes

261. Article 10(3) addresses cooperation in addressing the root causes of the crimes relevant to the Protocol.

262. Unfortunately, currently Israel is unable to provide such assistance.

Article 10 (4) – Providing financial, technical or other assistance

263. Article 10(4) calls upon States parties to provide financial, technical or other assistance through existing multilateral, regional, bilateral or other programmes.

264. The International Development Cooperation Division (MASHAV) of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs supports and funds international anti-trafficking training courses attended by representatives of other governments and NGOs from developing countries. These courses are conducted in cooperation with foreign embassies, international organizations and relevant NGOs. In 2011, two courses were dedicated to the subject of trafficking. In June 2011, the Ministry sponsored a course entitled “The Battle Against Trafficking: A Victim-Centred Approach”, at the Golda Meir Mount Carmel International Training Center in Haifa. The course was organized jointly by the International Aid Division, the United States embassy in Tel Aviv, the Center for International Migration & Integration, and Israel’s Ministry of Justice, and was attended by 20 individuals from 12 countries. In September 2011, a course was held on the subject of “Violence Against Women and Children”, also at the Carmel Center. This course, organized jointly with the International Organization for Migration, was attended by 27 individuals from 20 countries.

265. During these training courses, government representatives introduce the Israeli anti-trafficking system and support systems introduced for victims in trafficking. For instance, the participants visited the Ma’agan and Atlas Shelters and other NGOs serving victims of violence and trafficking. In addition, the Legal Aid Branch has participated in one of their special workshops and presented the Branch’s work and its unique role in assisting all trafficking victims with free legal assistance, representing them in civil suits against the traffickers, in applications for work visas from the State and in personal status related suits. A similar course, entitled “Profiles of Trafficking: Patterns, Populations and Policies” was held in May 2012 for 24 participants representing 19 countries, and also included a day conference on the Relationship between Governmental and Non-Governmental Organizations. A 2012 Workshop on Violence Against Women saw 25 professionals taking part from 17 countries.

266. Israeli trafficking experts participate in professional meetings and conferences in international forums aimed at enhancing cooperation and assisting counterparts worldwide.

267. The National Anti-Trafficking Coordination Office maintains a broad network of international connections and cooperation with international bodies, including dealing with mutual assistance requests. Among the organizations that the coordinator works with are the UNODC, the OSCE, the IOM, and the ILO, and with other countries.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
4 July 2013

Original: English

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Concluding observations on the second to fourth periodic reports of Israel, adopted by the Committee at its sixty-third session (27 May – 14 June 2013)

1. The Committee considered the combined second to fourth periodic reports of Israel (CRC/C/ISR/2-4) at its 1796 and 1797 meetings (see CRC/C/SR. 1796 and 1797), held on 3 June 2013, and adopted the following concluding observations at its 1815th meeting, held on 14 June 2013.

I. Introduction

2. The Committee welcomes the submission of the combined second to fourth periodic reports of the State party and the written replies to its list of issues (CRC/C/ISR/Q/2-4/Add.1), and expresses appreciation for the constructive dialogue held with the multisectoral delegation of the State party.

3. The Committee however considers that the State party's persistent refusal to provide information and data and to respond to the Committee's written questions on children living in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (hereafter OPT), including East Jerusalem and the Occupied Syrian Golan Heights, greatly affects the adequacy of the reporting process and the State's accountability for the implementation of the Convention. The Committee urges the State party to comply with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the OPT (I.C.J report 2004, para. 163 (3) A.) and to abide by its obligations to ensure the full application of the Convention in Israel and in the OPT, including the West Bank, the Gaza Strip as well as in the Occupied Syrian Golan heights.

II. Follow-up measures undertaken and progress achieved by the State party

4. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the following legislative measures:

(a) The Amendment No. 14 to the Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law No. 5731-1971 of July 2009 which gives priority to rehabilitation treatment over punishment of children accused and/or convicted of committing a crime and prohibits detention of children below 14 years without a court order;

(b) The Assistance to Sex Violence Minor Crime Victims' Law No. 5769-2008 which establishes the right for a child victim of sexual violence to receive immediate assistance in crisis centre;

(c) The 2006 and 2007 amendments to the Employment Law No. 5714-1954 which extend the maternity leave from twelve to fourteen weeks;

(d) The 2002 Registration of Information on the Influence of Legislation on the Child's Right Law No. 5762;

(e) The 2002 amendment to the Special Education Law No. 5758-1998 which gives priority to the placement of children with disabilities in a regular education facility and increases the budget for this purpose;

(f) The Compulsory Education (Physical Violence Reporting Rules) Regulations No. 5770-2009.

5. The Committee notes as positive the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, in September 2012.

6. The Committee further welcomes the following institutional and policy measures:

(a) The Child Friendly Initiative (CFCI) which aims to integrate children's rights in policies, programmes and budgets at municipal level;

(b) The Ofek Hadash (New Horizon) reform of 2008 and the Oz Betmura (courage for change) reform, both aiming at changing and improving the education system;

(c) The Arabic language education programmes in pre-school, elementary school and high school for improving the Arab populations' language skills;

(d) The programme "Tsila" creating afternoon centres for the ages 3-9 in pre-schools and elementary schools with extracurricular and social education in small groups, aimed at reducing the gap between socio-economic levels, as recommended by the Trajtenberg Committee.

III. Factors and difficulties impeding the implementation of the Convention

7. The Committee takes into account the national security concerns of the State party. The Committee however emphasizes that the illegal long-lasting occupation of Palestinian territory and the Syrian Golan Heights, the continued expansion of unlawful settlements and construction of the Wall into the West Bank as well as land confiscation, destruction of houses and livelihood of Palestinians constitute severe and continuous violations of the rights of Palestinian children and their families, feed the cycle of humiliation and violence and jeopardize a peaceful and stable future for all children of the region. The Committee urges the State party to end the occupation of the OPT and the Syrian Golan Heights, to withdraw all settlements illegally established which present, as observed by the United Nations Secretary General (A/67/375, para. 47) an existential threat to the viability of a future Palestinian State, and to cease the transfer of its population into the Occupied Syrian Golan Heights.

IV. Main areas of concern and recommendations

A. General measures of implementation (arts. 4, 42 and 44, para. 6, of the Convention)

The Committee's previous recommendations

8. The Committee regrets that the State party has consistently failed to provide information on the follow-up to the Committee's recommendations relating to children living in the OPT contained in the concluding observations on the State party's initial reports under both the Convention and the Optional Protocol on children and armed conflict (CRC/C/15/Add.195, paras. 27 (a), 37, and 62, 2002, and CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, paras. 11, 17, 35 and 38, 2010). The Committee also regrets that a number of the Committee's concluding observations of 2002 on the State party's initial report under the Convention have not been addressed.

9. The Committee urges the State party to implement as a matter of utmost priority its recommendations relating to children living in the OPT contained in the concluding observations on the State party's initial reports under both the Convention and the Optional Protocol on children and armed conflict. The Committee also recommends that the State party take all necessary measures to address those recommendations that have not been implemented or not sufficiently implemented and, in particular, reiterates its recommendations to the State party to:

(a) Establish a central mechanism for intersectoral coordination and cooperation at and between the national and local levels of government (para. 13 (a)) as also recommended in 2003 by the Israeli Rotlevy Committee for investigation of the basic principles in the field of children, law and legislation implementation;

(b) Collect data on all persons under 18 years for all areas covered by the Convention, including children in the most disadvantaged situations and use this data to assess progress and design policies to implement the Convention (para. 15 (a) and (b));

(c) Strengthen and expand its programme for the dissemination of information on the Convention and its implementation in all official languages among children and parents, civil society and all sectors and levels of government, including initiatives to reach those vulnerable groups who are illiterate or without formal education (para. 23 (a));

(d) Develop systematic and ongoing training programmes on human rights, including children's rights, for all professional groups working for and with children (e.g. judges, lawyers, law enforcement officials, civil servants, local government officials, personnel working in institutions and places of detention for children, teachers and health personnel) (para. 23 (b));

10. In light of its previous recommendation (para. 13 (b)), the Committee also encourages the State party to prepare a comprehensive policy on children and, on the basis of that policy, to develop a strategy with the necessary elements for its application, which is provided with sufficient human, financial and technical resources.

Legal status of the Convention

11. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the delegation during the interactive dialogue about the progressive incorporation of the principles and provisions of the Convention into its domestic legal system. The Committee is however concerned that this process is yet to be completed, a situation which affects the justiciability of children's rights in the State party.

12. The Committee recommends that the State party accelerate the integration process of the rights and principles and provisions of the Convention into its domestic legal system to ensure the justiciability of all children's rights.

Allocation of resources

13. The Committee regrets that insufficient information has been provided by the State party on the resources allocated for the implementation of the Convention, on the impact on children of its budgetary decisions and on the specific budgetary allocations for the provision of critical social services to children, including those in the most vulnerable situations. The Committee is also concerned that the average spending per child in the Arab localities is estimated to be more than a third lower than in Jewish localities and that the State party fails to take into account the unequal level of resources provided to the two health systems to explain the persistent disparities in relation to health indicators between the Arab and Jewish children.

14. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Utilize a child-rights approach in the elaboration of the State budget by implementing a tracking system for the allocation and the use of resources for children throughout the budget, thus providing visibility to the investment on children and allowing impact assessments on how investments in any sector may serve to fulfil children's rights;

(b) Ensure transparent and participatory budgeting through public dialogue, especially with children and for proper accountability by local authorities;

(c) Ensure that budgetary allocations, including budgetary allocation for the health sector, no longer discriminate against Arab Israeli families and their children, and define strategic budgetary lines for children in disadvantaged or vulnerable situations, in particular Bedouin, Palestinian, Arab Israeli children, as well as children of migrant workers and asylum seekers.

Independent monitoring

15. While acknowledging the role of the State Comptroller, the Committee expresses concern that limited progress has been made by the State party since its previous recommendation (CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 17) to establish an independent mechanism with the mandate to regularly monitor and evaluate progress under the Convention as recommended by the Rotlevy and Peretz committees.

16. The Committee draws attention to its general comment No. 2 (2002) on the role of independent national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child and recommends that the State party accelerate the process for the establishment of an Ombudsperson for children in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles) to monitor and evaluate progress in the implementation of the Convention at the national and local levels and to deal with complaints from children in a child-sensitive and expeditious manner.

Cooperation with civil society

17. The Committee regrets that limited information was provided on the involvement of civil society in the elaboration of the State party's report and that non-governmental organizations are not systematically involved in planning policies and laws for children as acknowledged by the State party in its report. The Committee also expresses concern that Palestinian non-governmental organizations and international human rights organizations working in the OPT are increasingly perceived as a threat to national security and are subject to, among others, harassment, arrest and denial of work permits. It is further concerned about the denial of work permits to foreign nationals working for humanitarian organizations in the OPT and about the tightened control of foreign funding of non-governmental organizations when they cooperate with United Nations fact-finding missions.

18. The Committee urges the State party to systematically involve communities as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations and children's organizations, in the planning, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies, plans and programmes related to child rights. The Committee also urges the State party to take concrete steps to build a climate of trust and cooperation with civil society and to engage in a constant dialogue with civil society actors, including those which monitor the child rights situation in the OPT with a view to formulating and implementing strategies for the protection and promotion of the rights of all children without discrimination. The Committee further recommends that the State party ensure that non- governmental organizations can solicit, receive and utilize resources for the monitoring and promotion of children's rights.

B. Definition of the child (art. 1 of the Convention)

19. The Committee takes note of Military Order 1676 adopted in September 2011 raising the age of majority in the military courts from 16 to 18 years, in line with the Committee's recommendations under the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 9). The Committee is however concerned that, to date, this Military Order has not been fully applied in practice.

20. The Committee urges the State party to ensure that children living in the OPT are considered as children up to the age of 18 years and that they effectively benefit from the full protection under the Convention, in particular, the provisions relating to the administration of juvenile justice.

C. General principles (arts. 2, 3, 6 and 12 of the Convention)

Non-discrimination

21. While taking note of court decisions on discrimination, the Committee however reiterates its concern (CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 26) that non-discrimination is not expressly guaranteed under the Basic Laws of the State party. The Committee also expresses concern about the adoption of numerous discriminatory laws over the reporting period as pointed out notably by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, paras. 11, 15, 16, 18 and 27, 2012) and which primarily affect Palestinian children, in all aspects of their life, but also Arab Israeli, Bedouin, and Ethiopian children as well as children of migrant workers and asylum seekers. The Committee is deeply concerned that the establishment of separate means of transport and road services as well as the implementation of two separate legal systems and institutions amount to de facto segregation and lead to inequality between Israeli and Palestinian children in the enjoyment of their rights.

22. The Committee urges the State party to include the prohibition of discrimination and the principle of equality in its Basic Laws and to undertake a comprehensive review of its legislation and policies to ensure that laws that discriminate against non-Jewish children be repealed without delay. The Committee also urges the State party to take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate policies or practices which severely and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the OPT as already recommended by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 24) and to ensure that all children living in the OPT enjoy their rights under the Convention without discrimination.

Best interests of the child

23. The Committee welcomes the numerous measures taken over the reporting period to ensure respect for the right of the child to have his or her best interests taken as a primary consideration, in particular, the 2002 Registration of Information on the Influence of Legislation on the Child's Right Law which provides for a child rights impact assessment of new legislations. The Committee also welcomes the 2006 and 2008 rulings of the Supreme Court which revoked decisions of Sharia and Rabbinical Courts granting custody of children to their father without taking into consideration the best interests of the children. The Committee is however concerned that the right of children to have their best interests assessed and taken as a primary consideration has not been appropriately integrated and consistently applied in all legislative, administrative and judicial proceedings as well as in all policies, programmes and projects relevant to, and with an impact on children, and that this right can be subject to misinterpretations by some courts as reflected notably in court decisions taken on paternity testing. It is also concerned that the best interests of Palestinian children continue to be disregarded by the State party.

24. The Committee draws attention to its general comment No.14 (2013) on the right of the child to have his or her best interests taken as a primary consideration and recommends that the State party strengthen its efforts to ensure that this right is appropriately integrated and consistently applied in all legislative, administrative and judicial proceedings as well as in all policies, programmes and projects relevant to, and with an impact on children. In this regard, the State party is encouraged to develop procedures and criteria to provide guidance for determining the best interests of the child in every area, and to disseminate this to the public, including traditional and religious leaders, and private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities and legislative bodies. The Committee also urges the State party to undertake a full impact assessment of its policies on children living in the OPT and ensure that their best interests are fully taken into account in its military governance of the OPT and in the 2002 Anti-Infiltration Law.

Right to life, survival and development

25. Referring to its 2010 concluding observations under the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 10), the Committee reiterates its deepest concern that children on both sides of the conflict continue to be killed and injured, children living in the OPT being disproportionately represented among the victims. The Committee expresses serious concerns that hundreds of Palestinian children have been killed and thousands injured over the reporting period as a result of the State party military operations, especially in Gaza where the State party proceeded to air and naval strikes on densely populated areas with a significant presence of children, thus disregarding the principles of proportionality and distinction. The Committee is deeply concerned about:

(a) Palestinian children being shot by the State party's military near the Gaza border whilst collecting building material to support their families in the reconstruction of their homes, 30 such cases having been reported over the reporting period;

(b) The rise in the number of children from the OPT being subjected to attacks by settlers in the West Bank, four of them having been killed since 2008 and hundreds injured over the reporting period. The Committee notes with concern that in most of the cases Israeli military forces not only fail to intervene to prevent violence and to protect children, but also bring support to those committing violence. The Committee further notes with concern that, in most of the cases, perpetrators are not brought to justice and enjoy full impunity for their crimes;

(c) The devastating impact on the right to life, survival and development of children living in the OPT of the construction of the Wall as well as the Gaza blockade imposed since 2007 which was considered by the International Committee of the Red Cross as a collective punishment imposed in clear violation of Israel's obligations under international humanitarian law.

26. The Committee reiterates its recommendations (CRC/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 11 (a), and CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 32 (c) and (d)) that the State party take prompt measures to comply with the fundamental principles of proportionality and distinction enshrined in humanitarian law, including the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, put an end to all killings and injuring of children, investigate immediately and effectively all such crimes, bring the perpetrators to justice and take all necessary measures to provide child victims of these human rights violations with possibilities for adequate compensation, recovery and social reintegration. The Committee also urges the State party to:

(a) Take all necessary measures to prevent further incidents of excessive use of force and in particular review all regulations on the use of live ammunitions by security and defence forces as recommended by the High Commissioner for Human Rights (A/HRC/19/20, para. 52);

(b) Clearly and publicly condemn all forms of violence committed by settlers, and send a clear message that these acts will no longer be tolerated. The State party should take immediate measures to ensure public order, prevent further violence and ensure investigation and accountability for all acts of violence committed by settlers against children and for complicity in the perpetration of such violence;

(c) Cease the construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and fully lift the Gaza blockade, and urgently allow entry of all construction materials necessary for Palestinian families to rebuild homes and civilian infrastructures so as to ensure respect for children's right to housing, education, health, water and sanitation as recommended notably by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 26) and in line with Israel's Manual on the Laws of War (1998) which prohibits the conduct of a scorched earth policy "with a view to inflicting starvation or suffering on the civilian population".

Respect for the views of the child

27. The Committee notes as positive the steps taken to expand to all courts by 2014 the experimental programme initiated in 2007 at the Haifa and Jerusalem Family Matters Courts with the participation of children involved in family matters proceedings as well as the Hadassah University hospital's practice of including children in decision-making on medical treatment and procedures. The Committee is however concerned that:

(a) In proceedings involving conversion, or admission to a psychiatric hospital, courts are not obliged to hear the opinions of the child if it would cause harm to the child, and that derogation to the right of the child to be heard in adoption proceedings is permissible when children are not aware of being adopted. The Committee is further concerned that migrant and asylum-seeking children are rarely heard in proceedings that concern them;

(b) The participation of children in decision-making processes, while receiving increased attention in the State party, is still not a widespread practice and the views of children are not sufficiently solicited or taken into account, especially in public policy decisions.

28. Referring to its general comment No. 12 (2009) on the right of the child to be heard, the Committee reminds the State party that this right applies to all relevant judicial and administrative proceedings affecting the child, without limitation, and that in decisions on adoption, the "best interests" of the child cannot be defined without consideration of the child's views. The Committee recommends that the State party reconsider the limits it has posed on the right of the child to be heard in cases of conversion, admission to a psychiatric hospital or adoption and to take measures to effectively ensure the right of migrant and asylum-seeking children to be heard in proceedings that concern them. The Committee also recommends that the State party establish clear mechanisms and guidelines for an effective implementation in practice of the right of the child to be heard and ensure that the views of the child are taken into account by policymaking bodies and that children are provided with adequate responses to their proposals.

D. Civil rights and freedom (arts.7, 8, 13-17, 19 and 37 (a) of the Convention)

Birth registration / nationality

29. The Committee, while noting that Section 6 of the Population Registry Law establishes a duty to notify a registration officer of the Ministry of Interior of every birth that occurs in Israel, expresses concern that:

(a) The ban on the granting of Israeli citizenship to children born of an Israeli parent and a parent from the OPT, the decision of the State party to stop processing residency applications for Palestinian children since 2000 as well as the arbitrary revocation of residency and identity of those living in East Jerusalem have resulted in thousands of unregistered Palestinian children excluded from access to health services, education and any other type of social benefits as well as in thousands of children being prevented from living with their parents;

(b) Children of migrants born in the State party often do not receive an official birth certificate but a hand-written official notification without the father's name being indicated. The Committee is also concerned about information that migrant families who are unable to cover the cost of hospitalization might be denied birth notification, and about reported cases of migrant families who have to pay exorbitant costs for a DNA test in order to have the father's name included in the birth notification. The Committee is further concerned about reported cases of families forced to sign voluntary return declarations to be able to obtain official birth certificates.

30. The Committee urges the State party to take immediate steps to repeal all legal provisions which result in denying the right of Palestinian children to be registered immediately after birth in violation of article 7, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to acquire a nationality and to be cared for by their parents. To this end, the State party is urged to transfer the population registry to the Palestinian Authority. The Committee also urges the State party to issue free birth certificates indicating the names of both parents to all children of migrants as it is done for Israeli children. The issuance of birth certificates should in no way be made conditional on the signing of "voluntary" return declarations.

Right to identity

31. The Committee is concerned about the provisions of the Adoption of Children Law which allows hiding from a child the fact that he or she has been adopted. The Committee is also concerned about the 2008 reasoning of the Family Matters and District court of Haifa which considered that allowing a paternity test was not in the best interests of the child as it might result in the child being labelled as a "bastard" according to Jewish Halasha.

32. In the light of article 7 of the Convention, the Committee recommends that the State party ensure, as far as possible, respect for the child's right to know his or her parents' identity in the case of an adopted child or a child born out of wedlock who has not been recognized by either of his or her parents. It also urges the State party to ensure that religious laws be brought in line with the Convention and do not contain derogatory language against children born out of wedlock.

33. The Committee is concerned that, when regulating surrogate motherhood arrangements, the State party has paid insufficient attention to the rights and interests of children born as a result of assisted reproduction technologies, particularly with the involvement of surrogate mothers.

34. The Committee recommends that, in the regulation of assisted reproduction technologies, particularly with the involvement of surrogate mothers, the State party ensure respect for the rights of children to have their best interests taken as a primary consideration and to have access to information about their origins. The Committee also recommends that the State party consider providing surrogate mothers and prospective parents with appropriate counselling and support.

E. Violence against children (arts. 19, 37 (a) and 39 of the Convention)

Torture and other cruel or degrading treatment or punishment

35. The Committee expresses its deepest concern about the reported practice of torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian children arrested, prosecuted and detained by the military and the police, and about the State party's failure to end these practices in spite of repeated concerns expressed by treaty bodies, special procedures mandate holders and United Nations agencies in this respect. The Committee notes with deep concern that children living in the OPT continue to be:

(a) Routinely arrested in the middle of the night by soldiers shouting instructions at the family and taken hand-tied and blindfolded to unknown destination without having the possibility to say good bye to their parents who rarely know where their children are taken;

(b) Systematically subject to physical and verbal violence, humiliation, painful restraints, hooding of the head and face in a sack, threatened with death, physical violence, and sexual assault against themselves or members of their family, restricted access to toilet, food and water. These crimes are perpetrated from the time of arrest, during transfer and interrogation, to obtain a confession but also on an arbitrary basis as testified by several Israeli soldiers as well as during pretrial detention;

(c) Held in solitary confinement, sometimes for months.

36. The Committee reminds the State party about its unavoidable responsibility to prevent and eradicate torture and ill-treatment of children living in the OPT which are not only a serious violation of article 37 (a) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child but also a grave breach of article 32 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The Committee strongly urges the State party to:

(a) Immediately remove all children from solitary confinement;

(b) Launch without delay an independent inquiry into all alleged cases of torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian children. This should include ensuring that at all levels of the chain of command, those who have been ordering, condoning or facilitating these practices be brought to justice and be punished with penalties commensurate with the gravity of their crimes;

(c) Take immediate measures to ensure that children living in the OPT are provided with safe and child-friendly complaint mechanisms, including during trials, with regard to the treatment they were subjected to at the time of arrest and subsequent detention;

(d) Ensure that relevant judicial authorities are exercising due diligence in investigating and prosecuting acts that amount to torture or other forms of ill-

treatment, even in the absence of a formal complaint when circumstances cast a doubt about the way confession was obtained;

(e) Ensure physical and psychological recovery as well as social reintegration assistance to all children living in the OPT who have been victims of torture and ill-treatment.

Corporal punishment

37. The Committee welcomes the full prohibition of corporal punishment in all settings in the State party as well as the Compulsory Education (Physical Violence Reporting Rules) Regulations No. 5770-2009 which obliges Principals of educational institutions to report in writing any occurrence of physical violence between an educator and a pupil. The Committee is however concerned about the high proportion of students reporting that they have experienced physical and emotional maltreatment, and that corporal punishment continues to be inflicted on children in detention.

38. In light of its general comment No. 8 (2006) on the right of the child to protection from corporal punishment and other cruel or degrading forms of punishment, the Committee recommends that the State party take effective measures to eliminate corporal punishment and its psychological consequences including through the implementation of public and professional awareness raising programmes including campaigns. The State party should also promote positive, non-violent and participatory forms of child-rearing and discipline as an alternative to corporal punishment and establish child-friendly complaints mechanisms.

Abuse and neglect

39. The Committee notes as positive the State's appeals against court decisions pronouncing light sanctions for parents abusing and neglecting their children (e.g. Cr.A (Be'er-Sheva) 7161/02 The State of Israel v. Z.Y. (12.2.2003). The Committee also welcomes the 2007 decision of the Jerusalem Magistrate Court (C.C. 3970/98 Yitzhak Goldstein v. The State of Israel (14.01.2007) condemning the Municipality of Tel-Aviv for its failure to remove a child from his home and to protect him from abuse and neglect despite evidence available to the Department of Welfare that the child was mistreated. The Committee however expresses concern about insufficient support and services to promote responsible parenting and the shortage of placement for children at risk which lead some children to be held in detention facilities, as in the case of 153 teenage girls reportedly held in detention facilities awaiting placement in May 2012.

40. The Committee recommends that the State party strengthen its efforts to protect children from abuse and neglect and to promote positive parenting and take all appropriate measures to increase the number of protective shelters available to children at risk who should benefit from psychosocial assistance and appropriate care. As a matter of priority, the State party should remove all children at risk currently held in detention facilities and place them in appropriate rehabilitation and care facilities.

Harmful practices

41. The Committee expresses concern about reported short and long-term complications arising from some traditional male circumcision practices.

42. The Committee recommends that the State party undertake a study on the short and long-term complications of male circumcision.

Freedom of the child from all forms of violence

43. The Committee is deeply concerned about the climate of violence in which Palestinian and Israeli children live, especially during explosions caused by rocket attacks, air strikes and shelling. The Committee is also gravely concerned about the psychological violence inflicted on Palestinian children who witness their parents being beaten or humiliated and the demolition of their homes, and about the long-term consequences of this violence on these children.

44. Recalling the recommendations of the United Nations study on violence against children of 2006 (A/61/299), the Committee recommends that the State party prioritize the elimination of all forms of violence against children and to refrain from adopting and implementing policies that exacerbate rather than diminish violence resulting from the conflict. The Committee further recommends that the State party take into account its general comment No. 13 (2011) on the right of the child to freedom from all forms of violence, and in particular:

(a) Develop a comprehensive national strategy to prevent and address all forms of violence against children;

(b) Adopt a national coordinating framework to address all forms of violence against children;

(c) Pay particular attention to and address the racist and gender dimension of violence;

(d) Cooperate with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on violence against children and other relevant United Nations institutions.

F. Family environment and alternative care (arts. 5, 18 (paras. 1-2), 9-11, 19-21, 25, 27 (para. 4) and 39 of the Convention)

Family environment

45. The Committee welcomes the measures adopted by the State party to provide assistance and support services to parents and legal guardians in the performance of their child-rearing responsibilities, including the provision of income support benefits to families which do not earn the minimum level of income, as well as the 2007 amendment to the Sick Day Payment Law which entitles parents of children with disabilities to additional leave days to care for their children. The Committee is however concerned about the situation of children of asylum seekers, refugees and migrant workers who are left in mass babysitting or alone in apartments or in the streets without any support from social services during the time their parents work outside the home.

46. The Committee urges the State party to take concrete measures to ensure that social support is provided to all parents who cannot afford private after school programmes for their children and have no choice but to leave their children alone while they work. Special attention should be paid to children in particularly vulnerable situations, such as children of asylum seekers, refugees and migrant workers.

Children deprived of a family environment

47. While noting the positive efforts made by the State party to accelerate the development of new residential-care models, such as community-based residential settings and group homes in the child's home community, the Committee remains concerned that only a small proportion of children are placed in foster care compared to those placed in residential institutions. The Committee also expresses concern that in 2008, the Israeli Defence Forces closed down two institutions for children in Hebron without any written instructions and proper alternative plans, evicting 3,192 children and confiscating all clothing, food, stationary and other supplies, as reported by the High Commissioner for Human Rights (A/HRC/8/17, para. 50).

48. The Committee reiterates its recommendation (CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 41) that the State party further strengthen the foster care system. The Committee also urges the State party to investigate the responsibilities in the closure of the child institutions in Hebron and ensure that human, financial and technical resources are provided for all evicted children to be sheltered and cared for in appropriate conditions.

49. The Committee expresses concern that thousands of Palestinian children are deprived of their right to live and grow up in a family environment with both of their parents or with their siblings and that thousands live under the fear of being separated because of the severe restrictions on family reunification under the Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law as amended in 2005 and 2007. The Committee is particularly concerned about the State party's decision to stop processing residency applications for Palestinian children since 2000 and to revoke the residency status of Palestinians living in East Jerusalem. The Committee notes with deep concern that even children who have lost one of their parents are prevented from reuniting with their surviving parent in the West Bank.

50. The Committee urges the State party to take immediate measures to ensure that all separated Palestinian children are reunited without delay with both of their parents and with their siblings, and that all family members obtain proper registration to avoid any further risk of separation. The State party should revoke the Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law and all policies which are in breach of articles 9 and 10 of the Convention and which prevent family reunification, as previously recommended by the Human Rights Committee (CCPR/C/ISR/CO/3, para.15, 2010), the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 25, 2011) and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in 2012 (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 18).

G. Disability, basic health and welfare (arts. 6, 18 (para. 3), 23, 24, 26, 27 (paras. 1-3) of the Convention)

Children with disabilities

51. The Committee welcomes the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities in September 2012 and the adoption of numerous laws with respect to children with disabilities, in particular the amendment to the Special Education Law No. 5758-1998 and the Rights of Pupils with Learning Disabilities in Secondary Education Facilities Law No. 5768-2008, as well as the measures taken for children with disabilities to receive supplementary tutoring and special psychological and medical services when integrated in regular school. The Committee is however concerned that:

(a) The overwhelming majority of children with disabilities attend special schools or special classes in ordinary schools;

(b) The placement of a child in regular or special schools depends on parental choice and does not result from a procedure which would allow the child to express him/herself and to have his or her best interests assessed and determined;

(c) The resources allocated to the inclusion of children with disabilities in regular schools have been insufficient, especially the number of full time assistants available to support children with disabilities.

52. Recalling its general comment No. 9 (2006) on the rights of children with disabilities, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Reconsider the model of parental choice and establish a formal process, with strict procedural safeguards, designed to assess and determine the best interests of the child with disabilities and ensure that the right of children with disabilities to be heard and have their views taken into account is fully respected in this process;

(b) Develop a comprehensive national strategy on children with disabilities with the view to expanding inclusive education to all children who could benefit from it. Particular attention should be paid to children in the most disadvantaged situations, among them children with autism;

(c) Ensure the provision of adequate human, financial and technical resources for schools to effectively provide inclusive education for children with disabilities by implementing the so called “funding according to needs” system recommended by the Dorner Committee.

Health and health services

53. The Committee welcomes the development of a system of high quality health services for children in the State party. The Committee regrets however the unequal access to these services which mainly affects Bedouin and Arab children as well as children belonging to the Ethiopian Israeli community. Notwithstanding the information provided by the State party during the dialogue, the Committee expresses deep concern that the deteriorated situation of health and health services for children in the OPT noted by the Committee in 2002 considerably worsened over the reporting period due to attacks on hospitals and clinics of Gaza (more than half of them were severely damaged during the operation Cast Lead) and the denial of, and delays in, delivering permits to transfer children or pregnant women to medical facilities outside the OPT which have caused the death of many children and pregnant women over the reporting period. The Committee is also highly concerned about:

(a) The high level of mortality of Bedouin children living in so-called “unrecognized” villages in the Negev who are deprived of basic health services;

(b) Children in the Gaza Strip suffering from blood disorders and sanitation related diseases such as watery diarrhoea and typhoid due to daily exposure to highly contaminated water (12 per cent of child death in Gaza being attributed to the poor quality of water).

54. In light of its general comment No. 15 (2013) on the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health, the Committee urges the State party to take all necessary measures to ensure that all children enjoy this right without discrimination. The Committee also reiterates its recommendation (CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 45) that the State party guarantee safe and unconditional access by all children and pregnant women living in the OPT to health services, including emergency medical care, and ensure the availability of adequate medical supplies and trained personnel. This recommendation also applies to Bedouin children in the Negev. The Committee urges the State party to cease its attacks against hospitals and medical facilities and to urgently allow entry into Gaza of all the necessary material for the reconstruction of medical infrastructure and to ensure timely transfer without delay of all children and pregnant mothers in need of medical care outside the OPT. The Committee also urges the State party to adopt immediate measures for the restoration of safe drinking water and adequate sanitation services and ensure unimpeded access of humanitarian agencies which provide those services until the restoration is completed.

Adolescent health

55. The Committee is concerned about the high rate of suicide and attempts at suicide among adolescents in the State party, especially among girls.

56. Referring to its general comment No. 4 (2003) on adolescent health, the Committee recommends that the State party undertake an in-depth study of youth suicide and its causes, including a gender perspective, and use this information to develop and implement a national plan of action on youth suicide, in cooperation with child guidance centres, social workers, teachers, health workers and other relevant professionals. The State party should also consider increasing the availability of psychological counselling services and provide adolescents with the support of trained social workers in schools.

Standard of living

57. The Committee is concerned that poverty among children has risen over the years, and that one out of three is living under the poverty line or on the edge of it. The Committee is also concerned about the privatization of social services and the limited access to free services, which increase the difficulties that children and their families in need are facing.

58. The Committee urges the State party to ensure that children and their families living in poverty receive adequate financial support and free, accessible services without discrimination.

59. In light of its previous concluding observations (CRC/C/15/Add.195, paras. 50 and 51), the Committee remains deeply concerned about the increasing poverty among Palestinian children and the serious violations of their right to an adequate standard of living resulting from the occupation of the Palestinian territories by the State party and about the measures taken to accelerate expansion of Israeli settlements, the construction of the Wall to separate communities and the Gaza blockade. The Committee is particularly concerned about:

(a) Land confiscation, large-scale demolition of Palestinian houses, expulsion of Palestinian and Bedouin families from the homes they have occupied for generations, discriminatory building regulations, especially in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, which continue to result in hundreds of Palestinian families and their children being displaced, homeless or in constant fear of eviction and demolition;

(b) The critical water shortage faced by Palestinian children and their families and by Bedouin children in the Negev due to prohibitions of access to natural resources, restrictions on water utilization and destruction of water services including traditional cistern-based water infrastructure essential for maintaining the Bedouin people's nomadic and agricultural way of life. The Committee is further concerned about the State party authorities' opposition to the creation of waste water treatment facilities in East Jerusalem and to providing access to safe drinking water to Bedouin families and their children living in so-called "unrecognized villages" even in cases where the Supreme Court has ruled that villages should be connected, as in Civil Appeal 9535/06, Abdullah Abu Musa'ed, et al. v. The Water Commissioner and the Israel Land Administration (decision delivered 5 June 2011);

(c) Children in the OPT increasingly suffering from chronic malnutrition, a situation which has been gravely exacerbated by the closure of the Gaza Strip and the constraints placed on agencies providing humanitarian aid in Gaza, by the maintenance of severe restrictions on access to agricultural land and the sea and by the destruction and confiscation of means needed for Palestinian livelihood, including the thousands of Palestinian-owned trees, mainly olive trees damaged or uprooted by Israeli settlers and the State authorities.

60. In light of the numerous recommendations addressed to the State party by the United Nations Secretary General, the High Commissioner for Human Rights and various treaty bodies in relation to the right of Palestinian and Bedouin families to an adequate standard of living, the Committee urges the State party to unconditionally commit itself to refrain from any actions that would further deprive Palestinian and Bedouin families of their land and of access to safe drinking water, sanitation and food as well as to allow humanitarian agencies unimpeded access to families and children in need without fear of persecution or other recrimination. The Committee also urges the State party to:

(a) Adopt a moratorium on demolition and evictions until the planning and zoning regime is brought into compliance with applicable international legal standards for areas in the West Bank under its full control, including East Jerusalem, and ensure that Palestinians in the West Bank have access to a fair, effective and participatory planning system;

(b) Restore confiscated land to Bedouin and Palestinian families and their children;

(c) Take immediate measures to ensure the availability of sufficient and safe drinking water and adequate sanitation for Palestinians living in the OPT as already recommended by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (E/C.12/ISR/CO/3, para. 29, 2011);

(d) Review the restrictions placed on Palestinian access to land, sea and livelihood. The State party should also put an end to the impunity enjoyed by settlers who destroy Palestinian livelihood and take active measures to prevent further violence and destruction.

H. Education, leisure and cultural activities (arts. 28, 29 and 31 of the Convention)

Education, including vocational training and guidance

61. The Committee welcomes the 2007 amendment of the Compulsory Education Law which broadens its scope and extends free compulsory education to children between the ages of fifteen and seventeen. The Committee also notes as positive the five-year plan (2011-2016) to reduce the gaps in the education of Bedouin children as well as the agreement reached in the municipality of Eilat whereby children of migrant asylum seekers will eventually be integrated into the regular public schools and not in a separate education frameworks as was previously the case. The Committee is however concerned that:

(a) Collection of tuition fees from parents is widespread, jeopardizing the right to free education enshrined in the Compulsory Education Law;

(b) There is serious discrimination against Bedouin children who are often left without any school available for them or without safe roads and transportation means to schools, as well as against children belonging to the Ethiopian community who are disproportionately placed in special education without proper screening and the identification of their special needs;

(c) Jewish and Arab children continue to be educated in segregated school systems as observed by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/ISR/CO/14-16, para. 11) with lower investment in the education system for Arab children which results in a severe shortage of classrooms, in substandard conditions and quality of teaching, low academic results and high school dropout.

62. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Take the necessary measures to effectively enforce the Compulsory Education Law and ensure that education remains free by discontinuing the practice of requesting that parents pay fees and other non-official contributions for the education of their children;

(b) Take active measures to ensure the right to education of Bedouin children and immediately remove Ethiopian children who have been unnecessarily placed in special schools;

(c) Put an end to the segregation of Arab and Jewish children in schools and build an education system based on tolerance and understanding among children from all communities;

(d) Establish an inclusive education system for all children regardless of individual differences or difficulties, ethnic or cultural background, or socioeconomic status in order to build a society that is genuinely inclusive, that values difference and respects the dignity and equality of all human beings regardless of difference.

63. The Committee is also concerned that:

(a) 300 educational facilities have been damaged during the operation “Pillar of Defence” of the State party, and that in the West Bank, 32 attacks by the army have been reported since 2009. Palestinian schools were attacked by the State party military or settlers and in some cases used as military outposts or detention centres. Furthermore, children continue to be subject to harassment, threats and violence by the State party’s military and security forces as well as by settlers on their way to and from school as observed notably by the United Nations Secretary General (A/67/375, para.23);

(b) In spite of the construction of new classrooms highlighted by the delegation of the State party during the interactive dialogue, there is a serious school shortage (1000 classrooms lacking in East Jerusalem according to the State Comptroller’s 2009 report) and a state of disrepair of school infrastructure in all the OPT which have led Palestinian children to be deprived of education or to attend classes in tents or caravans in unsuitable and overcrowded conditions. The Committee is further concerned that the State party continues to refuse permits to build new classrooms and orders the demolition of schools, thus further depriving Palestinian and Bedouin children of their right to education;

(c) Due to the Gaza blockade, in 2010, UNRWA was unable to meet the enrolment needs of 40 000 school age children. Additionally, the restrictions on freedom of movement imposed by the wall, closures, checkpoints and permit regimes continue to prevent some Palestinian children from attending schools.

64. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Protect children in the OPT from harassment, intimidation and violence by ensuring that the settlers and security forces are held accountable;

(b) Cease attacks against schools and use of schools as outposts and detention centres in the OPT and immediately declare a moratorium on the destruction of schools in the OPT and in the Negev;

(c) Remove aggregates, iron bars and cement from the dual use list in order to allow the reconstruction of schools in Gaza, take all the necessary measures to facilitate the construction of temporary schools and prepare as a matter of priority an investment plan to tackle the school shortage in East Jerusalem;

(d) Remove all disproportionate restrictions on freedom of movement which prevent Palestinian children from attending schools.

Aims of education

65. The Committee reiterates its concern that peace education is extremely limited in the State party given the state of conflict and the extensive militarization of the educational system (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para 26). Notwithstanding the information provided by the delegation of the State party, the Committee is also concerned at the removal of significant information on Palestinian history, heritage, flag and cities from school textbooks distributed in 2011 to all private and public schools in East Jerusalem.

66. The Committee reiterates its recommendation (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 27) of systematic inclusion of peace education both in the Israeli and Palestinian school system, and again encourages joint initiatives, bringing together both Israeli and Palestinian children, to be undertaken to promote peace education. The Committee also draws the attention to its general comment No. 1 (2001) on the aims of education and reminds the State party of its duty to ensure that Palestinian children are educated with respect to their cultural identity, language and values and therefore urges the State party to cancel the prohibitions of using Palestinian textbooks and curricula.

Early childhood development

67. The Committee expresses concern that despite the fact that the Compulsory Education Law applies to all children from the age of three, there continue to be a disproportionately low number of Arab children enrolled in early childhood education. The Committee is also concerned that the State party has still not adopted the necessary legal framework for the licensing and supervision of early childhood institutions.

68. The Committee recommends that the State party adopt a comprehensive national policy for early childhood education and development and ensure that all children have access to high quality early childhood care and education opportunities without discrimination. The Committee also recommends that the State party adopt a legal regulatory framework applicable to early childhood care and education and ensure that all institutions undergo compulsory registration and are supervised based on specified criteria.

I. Other special protection measures (arts. 22, 30, 38, 39, 40, 37 (b)-(d), 32-36 of the Convention)

Asylum seeking and refugee children and children of migrant workers

69. The Committee welcomes the creation of a Youth Village in Nitzana in 2011 for unaccompanied children. The Committee also notes as positive the attention that the situation of children without legal status has recently received from the State Comptroller and the Knesset Child Rights Committee. The Committee is however concerned about the increased marginalization of children of asylum seekers and migrant workers as well as unaccompanied children in the State party, who are often left without any support from welfare authorities. The Committee is further concerned that these children are often denied access to day-care centres, education, and health services and therefore stay alone while their parents work outside of their home or are exposed to various forms of exploitation. The Committee also expresses concern about:

(a) The Anti-Infiltration Law enacted in January 2012 which allows for the prolonged detention of children, including child victims of exploitation, torture and trafficking who migrate illegally to the State party;

(b) The rise in arrests since August 2011 of children of migrant workers, including children born in the State party, in extremely stressful conditions such as those conducted at night. These children and their mothers are then placed in Yahalom detention facility at Ben Gurion International Airport until their deportation, in small cells that are unsuitable for families without the possibility to contact their father or any other family members and without access to health services, social workers or legal counselling;

(c) The conditions of detention of children in Saharonim detention centre which were judged harsh and overcrowded by the Public Defender in his August 2011 report. In 2011, 19 boys attempted suicide in the Matan detention facility of Harera and in the Givon detention facility, girls have been detained together with adults. Child victims of abuse, torture or trafficking are not provided with appropriate psychosocial care and support;

(d) The arrest, imprisonment in harsh conditions and deportation in 2012 of Sudanese children, including children who had been placed in protective care services due to violence and severe neglect by their parents, following arrest and imprisonment of the parents in harsh conditions, causing serious emotional damage to these children.

70. The Committee draws attention to its general comment No. 6 (2005) on the treatment of unaccompanied and separated children outside their country of origin and reminds the State party that all children involved in or directly affected by international migration are entitled to the enjoyment of their rights, regardless of age, sex, ethnic or national origin and economic or documentation status, in both voluntary and involuntary migration situations, whether accompanied or unaccompanied, on the move or otherwise settled, documented or undocumented or any other situation. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Guarantee the right for all asylum-seeking children and children of migrant workers to access public schools, boarding schools, kindergartens, nurseries and health services and ensure coordination among responsible government actors with the view to protecting and adequately supporting these children;

(b) Develop and enact as a matter of priority a national legal framework to regulate the Israeli asylum procedure, including the principle of non-refoulement, and repeal the provisions of the Anti-Infiltration Law which allow for the prolonged detention of children;

(c) Take all appropriate measures to promote physical and psychological recovery, as well as social reintegration of child victims of any form of neglect, exploitation, abuse, torture or any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(d) Cease with immediate effect the detention of children on the basis of their immigration status;

(e) Conduct individual assessments and evaluations of the best interests of the child at all decision stages of the migration process affecting children, and with the involvement of child protection professionals, the judiciary as well as children themselves. Primary consideration should also be given to the best interests of the child in any proceeding resulting in the child's or their parents' detention, return or deportation;

(f) Consider ratifying the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, and review nationality legislation and existing procedures to bring them in line with international standards for the prevention and reduction of statelessness.

Follow up to the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict

71. The Committee expresses deep concern about the continuous use of Palestinian children as human shields and informants (14 such cases having being reported from January 2010 to 31 March 2013 only) and about the failure of the State party to comply with the ruling of the High Court of Justice in Adalah et al. v. Commander of the Central Region et al. (HCJ 3799/02, Judgement of 23 June 2005) as recommended by the Committee in 2010 (CRC/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 25) in this respect. The Committee notes with deep concern that:

(a) The State party's soldiers have used Palestinian children to enter potentially dangerous buildings ahead of them and to stand in front of military vehicles in order to stop the throwing of stones against those vehicles as observed by the Special Rapporteur on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms while Countering Terrorism (A/HRC/6/17/Add.4, para.48);

(b) Almost all those using children as human shields and informants have remained unpunished and that the soldiers convicted for having forced at gunpoint a nine-year old child to search bags suspected of containing explosives only received a suspended sentence of three months and were demoted.

72. The Committee urges the State party to immediately abide by the High Court of Justice in Adalah et al. v. Commander of the Central Region et al., to take active measures to prevent the use of children as human shields and informants, effectively enforce the prohibition to use of children as human shields and informants and ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice and punished with sanctions commensurate with the gravity of their crimes.

Administration of juvenile justice

73. The Committee commends the State party for the significant improvement of its juvenile justice system which contains a wide range of guarantees and safeguards for Israeli children in conflict with the law. The Committee is however concerned that the State party fully disregarded the recommendations it made in 2002 and 2010 in relation to arrest and detention of Palestinian children and their detention conditions and has continued to deny all these guarantees and safeguards to children living in the OPT who remain subject to military orders. The Committee is gravely concerned that an estimated 7000 Palestinian children aged from 12 to 17 years, but sometimes as young as nine years, have been arrested, interrogated and detained by the State party's army over the reporting period, (an average of two children per day), this number having increased by 73 per cent since September 2011 as observed by the United Nations Secretary General (A/67/372, para 28). The Committee expresses deep concern that:

(a) Most of the Palestinian children arrested often on an arbitrary basis as testified by several Israeli soldiers are accused of having thrown stones, an offence which can carry a penalty of 20 years of imprisonment;

(b) 236 children are currently detained for alleged security reasons; dozens of them are between the ages of 12 and 15;

(c) Arrested Palestinian children can be detained for four days before being brought before a judge (eight days until August 2012), are rarely informed of their rights, including their right to have the presence of a parent who are often not even aware of the place where their children are detained, and to have access to a lawyer;

(d) Palestinian children arrested by the State party military and police are systematically subject to degrading treatment, and often to acts of torture, are interrogated in Hebrew, a language they do not understand, and sign confessions in Hebrew in order to be released;

(e) Children are brought in leg chains and shackles wearing prison uniforms before military courts where confessions obtained from them under duress are used as the main evidence. The lawyers they meet for the first time do not have access to a translated version into Arabic of military orders which will be applied to children;

(f) The sentencing provisions applicable to adults apply to children aged 16 and 17;

(g) Many Palestinian child detainees (215 children since 2009) are transferred out of the OPT and serve their detention and sentences inside Israel in breach of article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War. A large number of them are detained in overcrowded cells together with adults in poor conditions, with poor ventilation and no access to natural light. Poor quality and inadequate amounts of food, harsh treatment by prison officials and deprivation of any form of education add to their plights.

74. The Committee strongly urges the State party to guarantee that juvenile justice standards apply to all children without discrimination and that trials are conducted in a prompt and impartial manner, in accordance with minimum fair trial standards. The Committee also urges the State party to dismantle the institutionalized system of detention and use of torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian children at all stages of the judicial procedure. All those who have been involved in this illegal system should be brought to justice and punished if found guilty. The Committee also urges the State party to comply with the recommendations it made in 2002 and 2010 and which have been constantly reiterated by all human rights mechanisms, the United Nations Secretary General and the High Commissioner for Human Rights and in particular that it:

(a) Review and amend all laws that allow the sentencing of Palestinian children to 20 years of prison for having thrown stones, and remove from detention all children that are held there for this reason;

(b) Ensure that detained children have effective access to an independent judicial review of the legality of their arrest and detention within 24 hours of their arrest and are provided with adequate free and independent legal assistance immediately after their arrest and can contact their parents or close relatives;

(c) Ensure that children accused of having committed security offences are only detained as a measure of last resort, in adequate conditions in accordance with their age and vulnerability and for the shortest possible period of time. In case of doubt on having reached the age of criminal responsibility, children have to be presumed to be below this age;

(d) Ensure that all confessions written in Hebrew and signed or adopted by a Palestinian child be rejected as evidence by the courts and that decisions are no longer made solely on the basis of confessions from children;

(e) Ensure that all detained Palestinian children are separated from adults and are held in appropriate conditions and with access to education in facilities located in the OPT. Their detention should be periodically and impartially reviewed;

(f) Ensure that children in detention have access to an independent complaints mechanism and that all those who were unlawfully detained and subject to torture and ill-treatment obtain redress and adequate reparation, including rehabilitation, compensation, satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition.

J. Ratification of international human rights instruments

75. The Committee recommends that the State party, in order to further strengthen the fulfilment of children's rights, ratify all core human rights treaties to which it is not yet a party, namely the Third Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communication procedure, the Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as well as the Optional

Protocols the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Convention against Torture and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

K. Follow-up and dissemination

76. The Committee recommends that the State party take all appropriate measures to ensure that the present recommendations are fully implemented by, inter alia, transmitting them to the Head of State, the Knesset, relevant ministries, the Defence and Security Forces, the Supreme Court and local authorities for appropriate consideration and further action.

77. The Committee further recommends that the combined second and fourth periodic report and the written replies by the State party and the related recommendations (concluding observations) be made widely available in the languages of the country, including (but not exclusively) through the Internet, to the public at large, civil society organizations, media, youth groups, professional groups and children, in order to generate debate and awareness of the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto and of their implementation and monitoring.

L. Next report

78. The Committee invites the State party to submit its next combined fifth and sixth periodic report by 2 November 2018 and to include in it information on the implementation of the present concluding observations. The Committee draws attention to its harmonized treaty-specific reporting guidelines adopted on 1 October 2010 (CRC/C/58/Rev.2 and Corr. 1) and reminds the State party that future reports should be in compliance with the guidelines and not exceed 60 pages. The Committee urges the State party to submit its report in accordance with the guidelines. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 67/167 of 20 December 2012, in the event that a report exceeding the page limitations is submitted, the State party will be asked to review and resubmit the report in accordance with the above-mentioned guidelines. The Committee reminds the State party that if it is not in a position to review and resubmit the report, translation of the report for purposes of examination by the treaty body cannot be guaranteed.

79. The Committee also invites the State party to submit an updated core document in accordance with the requirements of the common core document in the harmonized guidelines on reporting, approved at the fifth inter-committee meeting of the human rights treaty bodies in June 2006 (HRI/GEN/2/Rev.6, chap. I).

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
13 July 2015

Original: English

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Concluding observations on the report submitted by Israel under article 12 (1) of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography*

1. The Committee considered the initial report of Israel (CRC/C/OPSC/ISR/1) at its 2007th meeting (see CRC/C/SR.2007), held on 28 May 2015, and adopted the following concluding observations at its 2024th meeting (see CRC/C/SR.2024), held on 5 June 2015.

I. Introduction

2. The Committee welcomes the submission of the State party's initial report and its written replies to the list of issues (CRC/C/OPSC/ISR/Q/1/Add.1). The Committee appreciates the constructive dialogue held with the State party's multisectoral delegation.

3. The Committee reiterates its previous concern (see CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 3) that the State party did not provide information and data on children living in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT), including East Jerusalem, and in the Occupied Syrian Golan Heights, which affects the State's accountability for the implementation of the Optional Protocol. The Committee urges the State party to comply with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the OPT¹ and to abide by its obligations to ensure the full application of the Optional Protocol in Israel and in the OPT, including the West Bank, the Gaza Strip as well as in the Occupied Syrian Golan Heights.

4. The Committee reminds the State party that the present concluding observations should be read in conjunction with the concluding observations on the combined second to fourth periodic reports submitted by the State party under the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4), adopted on 14 June 2013, and on the initial report submitted under the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict (CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1), adopted on 29 January 2010.

* Adopted by the Committee at its sixty-ninth session (18 May–5 June 2015).

¹ See International Court of Justice, Legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, para. 163 (3) A.

II. General observations

Positive aspects

5. The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the State party in areas relevant to the implementation of the Optional Protocol, including:

(a) The amendment to Section 214(b3) of the Penal Law (Amendment No. 118, 2014 – Accessing obscene publications);

(b) The amendment to the Prevention of Sexual Harassment Law 5758–1998 (Amendment No. 10, 2013 – Section 3(a)(5A));

(c) The guideline of the Deputy Attorney General for Criminal Affairs of 11 December 2014, entitled “Treatment of cases regarding publication, possession and accessing obscene materials that include the image of a minor”;

(d) The amendment to the International Legal Assistance Law with regard to the conditions for assistance in confiscation and forfeiture, in October 2010;

(e) The enactment of the Assistance to Sex Violence Minor Crime Victims’ Law No. 5769–2008, in 2008;

(f) The enactment of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (Legislative Amendments) Law 5766–2006 (the Anti-Trafficking Law), in October 2006, and incorporation of most of its provisions into the Penal Law.

6. The Committee notes with appreciation the State party’s ratification of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, in July 2008.

7. The Committee welcomes the institutional and policy measures that facilitate the implementation of the Optional Protocol, including:

(a) The establishment of the Cyber Crime Division within the Police and the special team to investigate cybersex crimes among minors, in 2013;

(b) The establishment of the Special Inter-Ministerial Team to develop a collaborative action plan to improve ways to tackle child prostitution, in 2012;

(c) The initiation of the Plan of Proactive Detection as well as the Street Search and Open Space programmes by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services, which are designed to facilitate identification of minors involved in prostitution and their rehabilitation;

(d) The free psychological treatment programme for child victims of sex crimes, established by the National Insurance Institute and the Rashi Foundation and operated by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Services since 2008.

Data collection

8. The Committee is concerned at the absence of a comprehensive disaggregated data collection system covering all offences under the Optional Protocol.

9. The Committee recommends that the State party develop and implement a comprehensive data collection mechanism to ensure analysis, monitoring and impact assessment of all the areas covered by the Optional Protocol. The data should be disaggregated by, inter alia, sex, age, nationality, ethnic origin, socioeconomic background, urban and rural residence, with particular attention to children in the most vulnerable situations. Data should also be collected on the number of prosecutions and convictions, disaggregated by the nature of the offence.

III. General measures of implementation

National plans of action

10. The Committee regrets the absence of a comprehensive policy and strategy on children that includes all issues covered by the Optional Protocol.

11. With reference to its concluding observations under the Convention (CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 10), the Committee reiterates its recommendation that the State party adopt a comprehensive policy and strategy on children that include the necessary measures to be taken in all areas covered by the Optional Protocol and are supported by adequate human, technical and financial resources for their implementation. Particular focus should be placed on the prevention, protection, physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of child victims. The Committee also encourages the State party to ensure that such policy and strategy are regularly evaluated.

Coordination and evaluation

12. The Committee notes the information provided by the State party that many government agencies are involved in the implementation of the Optional Protocol. However, the Committee is concerned at the absence of an overall mechanism ensuring coordination among the various government agencies on the implementation of the Optional Protocol.

13. The Committee recommends that the State party designate a coordinating body capable of providing leadership and effective general oversight for the monitoring and evaluation of activities on children's rights under the Convention and its Optional Protocols. The State party should ensure that the coordinating body is provided with the human, technical and financial resources necessary for its effective operation.

Dissemination and awareness-raising and training

14. The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the State party to disseminate information, provide training, including to investigators working with and for children, police juvenile investigators, pedagogical psychologists, and raise awareness through prevention programmes at elementary and middle schools. However, the Committee is concerned that there is no overall plan for awareness-raising among the general public and that the efforts made do not cover all areas of the Optional Protocol.

15. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Further strengthen its efforts to systematically make the provisions of the Optional Protocol widely known to the public, particularly to children, in a child-friendly manner, their families and communities;

(b) Develop, in close cooperation with relevant government agencies, civil society organizations, the media, the private sector, communities and children, awareness-raising programmes on all issues covered by the Optional Protocol, as well as protection measures against offences under the Optional Protocol, including in domestic laws;

(c) Ensure that its training activities are systematic and multidisciplinary and that they include all areas covered by the Optional Protocol and are provided to all relevant professionals working with and for children, especially judges, prosecutors, social workers, law enforcement and immigration officials at all levels throughout the territory of the State party.

Allocation of resources

16. The Committee is concerned that the State party has not provided adequate information on the budget specifically allocated for activities under the Optional Protocol, the lack of which presents an obstacle to assessing the implementation of the Protocol.

17. The Committee recommends that the State party allocate sufficient and targeted resources for the effective implementation of the Optional Protocol.

Independent monitoring

18. While acknowledging the role of the various institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, the Committee is concerned that limited progress has been made by the State party since its previous recommendations under the Convention (see CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 17 and CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 16) to establish an independent mechanism with the mandate to regularly monitor and evaluate progress under the Convention and its Optional Protocols.

19. The Committee draws the attention of the State party to its general comment No. 2 (2002) on the role of independent national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child and recommends that the State party accelerate the process for the establishment of an Ombudsperson for children, in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles), to monitor and evaluate progress in the implementation of the Convention and its Optional Protocols at the national and local levels and to deal with complaints from children in a child-sensitive and expeditious manner.

IV. Prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (art. 9 (1) and 2)

Measures to prevent offences prohibited under the Optional Protocol

20. While noting the efforts of the State party to prevent offences prohibited under the Optional Protocol, the Committee is concerned that those measures do not cover all offences under the Optional Protocol. In particular, the Committee is concerned that:

(a) The State party has does not have sufficient programmes specifically targeting children in vulnerable and marginalized situations;

(b) There are not sufficient mechanisms in place to identify and monitor children at risk of becoming victims to the offences under the Optional Protocol;

(c) There is insufficient information on the scale of sexual exploitation of children, in particular child prostitution and child pornography, in the State party, including on the Internet.

21. The Committee recommends that the State party expand and strengthen its preventive measures to cover all areas of the Optional Protocol and in particular:

(a) Establish special prevention programmes targeting children throughout the territory of the State party, including children in vulnerable and marginalized situations, such as girls victims of sexual and domestic violence; children in street situations; children living in institutions; Bedouin, Palestinian and Arab Israeli children; and children of migrant workers and asylum seekers;

(b) Establish mechanisms and procedures for identifying children at risk of becoming victims of the offences under the Optional Protocol, in particular children in vulnerable situations, and provide them with psychosocial support and awareness-raising programmes;

(c) Carry out studies with a view to assessing the scale of sexual exploitation of children, in particular the sale of children, child prostitution and pornography, including on the Internet.

Child sex tourism

22. The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the State party to prevent child sex tourism, including the efforts by the Ministry of Tourism which led to the adoption of the World Tourism Organization Global Code for Ethics in Tourism by the Israeli Tourist and Travel Agents Association. However, the Committee is concerned at the lack of an effective regulatory framework and that measures taken to effectively prevent and combat child sex tourism abroad are insufficient.

23. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Establish and implement an effective regulatory framework and take all necessary legislative, administrative, social and other measures to prevent and address all cases of child sex tourism;

(b) Further strengthen its international cooperation through multilateral, regional and bilateral arrangements for the prevention and elimination of child sex tourism;

(c) Continue advocacy with the tourism industry on the harmful effects of child sex tourism and disseminate the World Tourism Organization Global Code of Ethics for Tourism among travel agents and tourism agencies;

(d) Encourage all stakeholders to become signatories to, and comply with, the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism.

Birth registration

24. The Committee is concerned that the lack of birth certificates, in particular for migrant, asylum-seeking and refugee children, may present an obstacle to ascertaining the age of victims when investigating offences under the Optional Protocol and to their accessing medical and rehabilitation services.

25. The Committee recommends that the State party urgently take measures to ensure that all children within the territory of the State party have access to birth certificates.

V. Prohibition of the sale of children, child pornography and child prostitution and related matters (arts. 3, 4 (2) and (3), 5, 6 and 7)

Existing criminal or penal laws and regulations

26. While noting the relevant provisions in the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (Legislative Amendments) Law 5766–2006 (the Anti-Trafficking Law) and the Penal Code, the Committee is concerned that the Penal Code does not adequately specify all offences under the Optional Protocol. In particular, the Committee is concerned that:

(a) Not all forms of the sale of children covered by articles 2 (a) and 3 (1) (a) (i) of the Optional Protocol are classified as offences distinct from human trafficking;

(b) Forced labour by children is not criminalized as a form of the sale of children;

(c) Offences related to child prostitution committed under sections 199, 201, 202 and 203 of the Penal Code carry double penalties only if the victim is under 14 years of age, or if he or she is a minor who is 14 years or older and under the care and responsibility of the offender.

27. The Committee recommends that the State party continue to revise and bring its Penal Code and other relevant legislation into full compliance with articles 2 and 3 of the Optional Protocol. In particular, the State party should:

(a) Define, regulate and criminalize the sale of children in accordance with article 3 of the Optional Protocol, including explicitly criminalizing forced labour of children as a form of the sale of children — a concept that is similar, but not identical, to trafficking in persons;

(b) Ensure that all children under the age of 18 are fully and equally protected by the Penal Code.

28. While noting the efforts of the State party to regulate international surrogacy arrangements, the Committee is concerned that there is no appropriate procedure for screening prospective parent(s) of children born to surrogate mothers abroad, aimed at preventing the hidden sale of children and/or possible sexual abuse.

29. The Committee recommends that the State party put in place more stringent policies to secure the protection of children born through international surrogacy arrangements.

Prosecution of perpetrators

30. The Committee is concerned that the number of investigated cases of the offences under the Optional Protocol is low, that only a small percentage of those cases lead to prosecution and that penalties for offences relating to child prostitution and child pornography are not always commensurate to the gravity of the crime.

31. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Ensure that perpetrators are fully investigated and prosecuted;

(b) Ensure that penalties for offences relating to child prostitution and child pornography are commensurate to the gravity of the crime and, in particular, increase the penalty for accepting sexual services from a minor.

Extraterritorial jurisdiction

32. The Committee is concerned about the lack of a specific legal basis on which extraterritorial jurisdiction for crimes under the Optional Protocol could be exercised.

33. The Committee recommends that the State party review its legislation in order to establish extraterritorial jurisdiction over the offences under article 3 (1) of the Optional Protocol, especially when the alleged offender is a national of the State party or a person who has his habitual residence in the territory of the State party or when the victim is a national of the State party.

VI. Protection of the rights of child victims (arts. 8 and 9 (3) and (4))

Measures to protect the rights and interests of child victims of offences prohibited under the Optional Protocol

34. While welcoming the wide array of measures aimed at protecting child victims and child witnesses in criminal procedures, including the adoption of the Law of Evidence Revision (Protection of Children) No. 5715–1955 (the Protection of Children Law) and the establishment of crisis centres, the Committee is concerned that provisions of the Protection of Children Law apply only to children under 14 years of age.

35. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Strengthen measures to protect the rights and interests of child victims of all offences under the Optional Protocol and, in particular, ensure that all children below 18 years of age benefit from full protection from offences under the Optional Protocol, including by bringing the Law of Evidence Revision (Protection of Children) No. 5715–1955 into full compliance with the Optional Protocol and other applicable international laws;

(b) Ensure the mandatory application of special protection measures in criminal proceedings to all child victims and child witnesses up to the age of 18;

(c) Ensure, through adequate legal provisions and regulations, that all child victims and/or child witnesses of crimes under the Optional Protocol are provided with the protection required by the Convention and the Optional Protocol;

(d) Take fully into account the Guidelines on Justice in Matters involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime (Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/20, annex).

Recovery and reintegration of victims

36. The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the State Party to ensure the recovery and reintegration of child victims of all offences under the Optional Protocol. However, the Committee is of the view that those measures can be improved.

37. The Committee recommends that the State party take all necessary measures to ensure that child victims of the offences covered by the Optional Protocol throughout the State party are provided with appropriate assistance, including for their physical and psychological recovery and full social reintegration, by, inter alia:

(a) Developing programmes to provide short-, medium- and long-term support for all child victims of offences under the Optional Protocol;

(b) Further strengthening throughout its territory, directly or through service providers, the specialized services and adequate assistance for children who have been trafficked, sold for sexual or economic exploitation or are otherwise victims of crimes under the Optional Protocol and ensure the allocation of adequate human, technical and financial resources for those purposes;

(c) Taking the necessary measures to facilitate and increase access to appropriate accommodation for child victims of offences under the Optional Protocol, particularly children in the most vulnerable situations, and ensure that such infrastructure is sufficiently and adequately available and well equipped.

VII. International assistance and cooperation (art. 10)

Multilateral, bilateral and regional agreements

38. In the light of article 10 (1) of the Optional Protocol, the Committee encourages the State party to continue to strengthen international cooperation through multilateral, regional and bilateral arrangements, especially with neighbouring countries, including by strengthening procedures for and mechanisms to coordinate the implementation of such arrangements, with a view to improving prevention, detection, investigation, prosecution and punishment of those responsible for any of the offences covered by the Optional Protocol.

VIII. Ratification of the Optional Protocol on a communications procedure

39. The Committee recommends that the State party ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure in order to further strengthen the fulfilment of children's rights in the State party.

IX. Follow-up and dissemination

40. The Committee recommends that the State party take all appropriate measures to ensure full implementation of the present recommendations by, inter alia, transmitting them to the relevant government ministries, the Parliament (Knesset) and national and local authorities, for appropriate consideration and further action.

41. The Committee recommends that the report and written replies submitted by the State party and the present concluding observations be made widely available, including through the Internet, to the public at large, civil society organizations, youth groups, professional groups and children, in order to generate debate on and awareness of the Optional Protocol, its implementation and monitoring.

X. Next report

42. In accordance with article 12 (2) of the Optional Protocol, the Committee requests the State party to include further information on the implementation of the Optional Protocol in its next periodic report to be submitted in accordance with article 44 of the Convention.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
25 March 2019
English
Original: Arabic
Arabic, English, French and Spanish only

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Initial report submitted by the State of Palestine under article 44 of the Convention, due in 2016*, **

[Date received: 21 September 2018]

-
- * The present document is being issued without formal editing.
 -  The annexes to the present report, containing the endnotes and the tables, are on file with the Secretariat and are available for consultation. They may also be accessed from the web page of the Committee.

GE.19-04901 (E) 170519 200519

* 1 9 0 4 9 0 1 *

Please recycle The recycling symbol, consisting of three chasing arrows forming a triangle.

Introduction

1. The State of Palestine acceded to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on 1 April 2014, as an expression of its respect for the principles and the spirit of the Convention. The present report was drafted in response to the commitments and in fulfilment of the duties incumbent upon the State of Palestine under the Convention, particularly its article 44. In addition to national measures, frameworks and benchmarks, the report covers in particular the legislative, administrative and judicial aspects relating to the provisions of the Convention.

2. The State of Palestine is under a colonialist, military occupation on the part of Israel and this report will throw some light on the colonialist policies of that occupation and the serious, systematic and widespread violations that infringe the provisions of the Convention. In fact, the Israeli occupation authorities deliberately and systematically target Palestinian children on a wide scale including through extrajudicial killings, arbitrary detention, displacement and forced migration with the aim of terrorizing an entire generation.

3. Following the accession of the State of Palestine to a number of international conventions and treaties, on 7 May 2014 the President of the State of Palestine issued a decree for the formation of a standing national committee at ministerial level to follow up on that accession. The committee is chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Migrants with members drawn from other ministries and competent institutions, and with the Independent Commission for Human Rights acting as observer, and its purpose is to monitor the fulfilment of obligations arising from accession to the treaties in question. The present report was drafted by a joint national committee, which was brought into existence by decree of the standing committee and is part of that committee. The joint committee is chaired by the Ministry of Social Development, which is the competent authority, and its members are drawn from the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Labour, the Ministry of Information, the Ministry of Culture, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the Supreme Judicial Council, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of the Interior, the Bureau of the Chief Qadi and the Sharia Courts, the Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees, the Ministry of Local Government, the Broadcasting and Television Authority and the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics.

4. The joint committee drafted the report in cooperation with a number of civil society institutions that work with children, which provided various kinds of data and information. The report was then submitted to relevant government and civil society institutions via a series of workshops organized in collaboration with the competent ministries and other official bodies, and with support from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and Save the Children.

5. The joint committee also includes Defense for Children International – Palestine Section, the SAWA Foundation, the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA) – Jerusalem, the Tamer Institute, the Women's Studies Centre, the Prisoners' Club and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

6. A draft of the present report was transmitted for consideration to representatives of civil society institutions, specifically Palestinian human rights and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Those representatives studied the text then participated in the national consultations conducted by the State of Palestine concerning the report. Given that Israel, the occupying power, bars civil society institutions in the Gaza Strip from accessing the West Bank, two national consultation meetings have been held: one at the office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Migrants, on 13 December 2017, with civil society institutions in the West Bank and Jerusalem; and the second by videoconference at the headquarters of the Independent Commission for Human Rights, on 6 February 2018, with civil society institutions in Gaza. The consultations were attended by representatives of ministries of the State of Palestine and of civil society institutions in the form of human rights organizations and NGOs working in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The substance of the report was discussed and civil society offered comments that facilitated the preparation of the final draft of the report.

7. During the drafting of this initial report of the State of Palestine under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, eight workshops were organized for children in Gaza and the West Bank including East Jerusalem with the intention of informing them about the drafting process and of canvassing their views about the extent to which the rights arising from the obligations of the State of Palestine under the Convention are being effectively applied. The workshops targeted children in marginalized areas, child victims of violence, children deprived of family care, and adolescents and children who have dropped out of school. A total of 118 children participated in the workshops. In addition, 14 children participated in the national consultations held to present the report.

8. The Government of the State of Palestine has sought to provide a favourable constitutional, legislative and procedural environment for the drafting of the present report and of reports under other treaties. This is in line with general comment No.2 of 2002 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child regarding the creation of national institutions to facilitate the implementation of the Convention, according to which the creation of such bodies falls within the framework of the obligations to which States parties subscribe when acceding to the Convention. It was in this context that the standing national committee was established in 2014 under the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Migrants to follow up on the accession of the State of Palestine to international treaties and conventions. In addition, a committee was established in 2017 under the Ministry of Justice to harmonize the domestic legislation of the State of Palestine with international treaties.

9. In drafting the present report, the State of Palestine relied on the provisions contained in the Convention itself, in particular articles 1 to 45, and on the general guidelines produced by the Committee on the Rights of the Child regarding the form and content of initial reports to be submitted by States parties under article 44 (1) of the Convention (CRC/C/5), which the Committee adopted at its fifty-fifth session in October 1991. Account was also taken of the Committee's general comments. The report covers the period from April 2014 to the end of 2017.

10. The submission of the present report does not exempt Israel, the occupying power, from reporting on its own compliance with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child in the Occupied Palestinian Territory including East Jerusalem, on the basis of its obligations and responsibilities as an occupying power, in accordance with international humanitarian law and international human rights law, as well as on the basis of the advisory opinion given by the International Court of Justice in 2004 on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The fact is that Palestinian children are victims of flagrant violations of their legally enshrined rights due to the manifest absence of international mechanisms to hold the occupying power to account for its daily actions against Palestinian people of all categories. Palestinian children are the principal target of daily operational practices in the occupation such as killings, detentions, torture and incursions into homes and places of education, despite the fact that children are a protected category under international law and custom.

Substantive information regarding the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

General measures of implementation (arts. 4, 42 and 44 (6))

A. Legislation

11. In the Palestinian Declaration of Independence, issued by the Palestinian National Council (PNC) in 1988, the State of Palestine proclaimed its commitment to the principles and goals of the United Nations and to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Declaration also served to announce the creation of the State of Palestine as a free and independent State based on the principle of full equality of rights and freedoms among all Palestinians, wherever they might be, within a democratic parliamentary system based on principles of social justice, equality and non-discrimination in public rights. The Palestinian Declaration of Independence confirmed the adherence of the State of Palestine to the human rights system as enshrined in international treaties and conventions, including the protection of children's rights, and established foundations to safeguard those commitments in the form of a legal system rooted in rule of law and an independent judiciary.

12. The Palestinian legal system is made up of a body of laws and legislation, which reflects the repeated periods of occupation and of foreign governance to which the State of Palestine has been subjected over the years. Laws from the Ottoman period, from the British occupation, from the Egyptian administration of the Gaza Strip and from the Jordanian governance of the West Bank are still in force.

13. The State of Palestine has shown particular concern over issues affecting children and the protection of children's rights, via its legal system as well as via its practices and policies. During a conference on Palestinian children on 5 April 1995, the late President of the State of Palestine, Yasser Arafat, announced the State's voluntary commitment to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and declared 5 April as Palestinian Children's Day. This was subsequently confirmed at the special session on children of the General Assembly of the United Nations in May 2002. As part of national efforts to promote children in Palestine, the Palestinian Children's Act No. 7 of 2004 was issued, subsequently amended by presidential decree in 2012 to bring it more closely into line with the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

14. Over the years, the State of Palestine has enacted a number of pieces of domestic legislation that contribute to promoting and protecting the fundamental rights of all citizens, including children. The Palestinian Basic Law as amended in 2003 has a particular focus on issues affecting children⁽¹⁾ and states that the State of Palestine has a duty and responsibility to provide them with comprehensive care and protection.

15. Amendments brought by the State of Palestine following its accession to human rights treaties have had the purpose of harmonizing domestic legislation with those treaties; abrogating the Jordanian Juveniles' Act No. 16 of 1954, which was still in force in the West Bank, and the Juvenile Offenders' Act No. 2 of 1937, which was in force in the Gaza Strip; and issuing a decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles, which had been worked on by a technical committee on juvenile justice.⁽²⁾ The provisions of the decree-law, which was approved on 4 February 2016 and published in the Official Gazette in March 2016, are similar to those of the Convention on the Rights of the Child in general and of the new criminal policy in particular. The decree-law envisages the creation of special police, prosecutors and courts for juveniles and highlights the need to take account of the best interests of the child in all legal and judicial proceedings.

16. Since its accession to international treaties and conventions, the State of Palestine has been endeavouring to provide training, within its own institutions, on human rights mechanisms and the drafting of official reports. During the period in which the reports to be presented to the treaty bodies were being drafted, the need emerged to establish a committee to examine and harmonize existing laws. In fact, in 2017, the committee for the harmonization of legislation was brought into being by decree of the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Migrants in his capacity as chair of the standing national committee of the State of Palestine for follow-up on accession to international treaties. The committee, which is chaired by the Ministry of Justice and has members drawn from relevant government and civil society institutions, undertakes to harmonize local laws and legislation with international human rights standards in general and with the Convention on the Rights of the Child in particular. The committee reviews the existing legislation of the State of Palestine then identifies the legislative amendments that need to be made pursuant to international treaties. The Criminal Code is one of the laws due to be reviewed and amended, because the Jordanian Criminal Code (Act No. 16 of 1960) is still valid in the West Bank and the British Mandatory Criminal Code (Act No. 74 of 1936) in the Gaza Strip.

17. Laws governing civil status currently applicable in the State of Palestine include numerous provisions that concern children. Articles 154 and 155 of the Jordanian Personal Status Code (Act No. 61 of 1976) govern the custody of children and the characteristics the custodian must have. It stipulates that “the custodian is to be of age and of sound mind and must not neglect the child”. Article 38 of the Code states that the father must provide financial support for the child while article 39 focuses on financial support for the child’s education. Article 170 concerns responsibility for the child’s medical treatment while article 171 covers financial support for the child in the event of the father’s death or incapacity to pay. The law applicable in the Gaza Strip is the Family Rights Act No. 303 of 1954, in which article 117 covers the lineage and article 118 the custody of the child.

18. The State of Palestine is concerned that persons with disabilities, particularly children with disabilities, should be able to enjoy all their human rights and fundamental freedoms. To that end a new law on persons with disabilities is currently being prepared that will be consistent with the relevant international treaty.

19. The Supreme Constitutional Court issued ruling No. 04/2017 in which it confirmed that international treaties take precedence over ordinary domestic legislation. According to the ruling, those treaties acquire greater force than domestic legislation particularly after they have been ratified and published and after they have gone through the formal stages required to be issued as domestic legislation, which is binding both on individuals and on the authorities. In addition, they should be consistent with the provisions of the Palestinian Basic Law. In March 2018, another ruling was issued by the Supreme Constitutional Court in which it provided an interpretation of article 10 of the Palestinian Basic Law as amended in 2003, which states: “Fundamental human rights and liberties shall be respected.”

20. In its ruling, the Constitutional Court considered the Palestinian Declaration of Independence, issued by PNC on 15 November 1988, not only to be an inseparable part of the constitutional system in Palestine but also the most exalted element in that system, followed by the Palestinian Basic Law. Since the Supreme Constitutional Court had also stated that international treaties take precedence over ordinary domestic legislation (laws and decree-laws) it follows that such treaties rank lower than the Basic Law but higher than other pieces of legislation in force in Palestine.

21. The ruling also underscored the need to introduce a body of internal legislative measures to facilitate the exercise of those fundamental rights and freedoms as part of the process of reviewing laws and legislation. The purpose of this is to ensure closer integration with the provisions of the international human rights instruments that have been ratified by the President of the State of Palestine.

Responsibility for implementing the Convention on the Rights of the Child lies with the judiciary and with the executive, as follows:

22. The judiciary: Following the enactment of the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles, the Supreme Judicial Council designated juvenile judges and a special court registry independent from other registries in all courts of first instance. Thus, each court now has a special judge for juveniles. On 8 February 2016, the Public Prosecutor issued a decree establishing a special prosecutor’s office to examine cases involving juveniles, endangered children and those at risk of delinquency. As part of this, investigations and court procedures remain confidential, the rights of the child are respected and ways are found to reform children and speedily reintegrate them into society, in accordance with the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Juveniles’ Act. In addition, the special prosecutor’s office may also file objections, appeals and requests for cassation against sentences and call for certain cases to be re-tried. It also cooperates with the Ministry of Social Development via child protection counsellors who follow up on cases involving delinquent children, in accordance with the law.⁽³⁾ The Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children currently has 34 members.

23. Sharia courts in the State of Palestine also protect the rights of children, particularly with the introduction of the Sharia Enforcement Act No. 17 of 2016. The Act, under which the sentences of sharia courts are enforced, affects families and children in matters such as financial support, custody medical treatment, education and the visiting rights of parents if the child is in the custody of just one of them, always with a view to protecting the interests of the child.

24. The executive: According to law, different ministries hold responsibility for the implementation of different children's rights, under the overall leadership of the Ministry of Social Development.⁽⁴⁾ They are: the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of the Interior including the police, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Labour, the Ministry of Local Government, the Higher Council for Youth and Sports, the Ministry of Culture, the Ministry of Information, the Ministry of Finance and the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics. There is also cooperation with other national and international institutions such as the Independent Commission for Human Rights, UNRWA and civil society organizations.

B. National strategies

A number of national strategies and plans have been developed that have a direct and an indirect bearing on the rights of children, as follows:

25. In 2010, the Ministry of Social Development rolled out its strategic plan for the protection of children 2011–2013. The plan was developed in cooperation with other governmental institutions that work to protect children such as the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Health and the Office of the Public Prosecutor, with international institutions such as UNICEF and Save the Children, as well as with NGOs active in the field of child protection. Although children were not themselves involved in the drafting process, the strategy was designed to harmonize with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and with relevant domestic laws, and to promote the achievement of Millennium Development Goals relevant to children, in particular the eradication of poverty, the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women. In addition, the strategy envisaged policies and policy interventions for the protection of children, and it designated the financial and human resources necessary for its own implementation and the bodies responsible for overseeing such implementation. It also included a sub-plan to follow up on and evaluate the implementation process with the aim of identifying loopholes and introducing the necessary amendments. Partners for the implementation of the plan were identified in government, civil society, the private sector and at the international level, and a series of indicators was developed with which to gauge impacts and desired outcomes. A number of interventions envisaged in the strategic plan have been carried out.

26. In 2012, working in partnership with the competent governmental organizations and NGOs, the Ministry of Social Development drafted the national juvenile justice strategy, which includes provision for the development of a legal environment supportive of juvenile justice as well as capacity building and professional skill enhancement for persons who work in that sector. Following the enactment of the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles, the strategy was further developed a view to facilitating the application of the law, and it was updated to cover the years 2016–2018.

27. In 2013, the Government of the State of Palestine drew up its national development plan 2014–2016. The plan acts as a strategic framework regulating priorities for government action, including social protection, as well as perfecting the delivery of rights-based and sustainable social services in order to contribute to the alleviation of poverty and the attainment of social justice among different groups. Also in 2013, the Ministry of Social Development – in line with the goals of the national development plan and with the participation of a national team made up of all institutions active in the field of social welfare – drew up its national social welfare strategy 2014–2016.

28. In 2015, the Ministry of Social Development prepared its plan of action for 2016. The plan covered a number of interventions in areas such as protection, care, training and awareness-raising directed at the various target categories of children, among them orphans, victims of violence of all forms, children born out of wedlock, adolescents and children with disabilities.

29. The transfer and networking system for the protection of children from violence, exploitation and neglect was reviewed in 2016. Established in 2008, it had previously been known as the transfer system. The system has begun to be tested by partners and, following the test period, it will be amended in line with the observations made by the child protection networks that actually use it. Following that, it will be submitted to the Council of Ministers to be approved under the law.

30. In 2017, in cooperation with partners, the Ministry of Social Development completed drafting its strategic plan for the protection of children 2018–2022. The plan was submitted to the Palestine Children’s Council, which is accredited to advise the Ministry in matters pertaining to children, and children themselves were able to identify their own priorities. The plan was then sent to be reviewed by UNICEF then to the Ministry of Social Development for approval by the Minister. It should be noted that the Palestine Children’s Council was formed by Defense for Children International in cooperation with Save the Children and, since 2017, it has acted as an advisory body for a number of governorates and ministries.

31. On 16 January 2017, the Council of Ministers approved the national strategy for development and intervention during early childhood 2017–2022, which was developed by the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, the Ministry of Social Development and the Ministry of Health, in partnership with the competent institutions.

32. In 2013, the Ministry of Education and Higher Education rolled out a policy on violence and discipline in schools. The policy aims to curb school violence and sets forth the measures to be taken against offenders. In 2014, the Ministry launched its national strategy for inclusive education, which envisages the right to education for students with disabilities.

33. The Palestinian police issued its general strategy for 2014–2016 setting forth its mandate under the supervision of the Director-General of Police and the Ministry of the Interior. The Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents is an inherent part of the police strategy.⁽⁵⁾

34. In mid-2017, the Office of the Public Prosecutor prepared an executive plan for the activities of the Office in the period 2017–2018.

35. The Supreme Judicial Council has drawn up an executive plan in line with the national strategy for justice and the rule of law 2014–2016. The plan, which aims to improve the quality of justice, covers the following themes: fair trial guarantees, specialized judicial institutions particularly in regard of cases involving children and families, and easier access to justice for women and children in marginalized categories and refugees.⁽⁶⁾

36. The National Council for Children: Under article 70 of the Palestinian Children’s Act, the Council of Ministers is to establish a body called the National Council for Children. The Council has legal personality and is formed and regulated in accordance with a statute, issued by the Council of Ministers, that sets forth its objectives, composition, duties and mandate. That mandate includes proposing strategies and public policies on the care and protection of children, then submitting them to the Council of Ministers for ratification and implementation.⁽⁷⁾ The National Council for Children was approved by the Council of Ministers on 11 May 2017 and ministerial representatives were delegated, and its first meeting was held in May 2018. According to its statute, the Council for Children is to meet every two months.

37. Practical difficulties in achieving the goals of the various plans have emerged. They include economic difficulties, legislative dysfunction, poor coordination and follow-up among partners, lack of effective participation by children in past years and an increasing population, particularly in the occupied Gaza Strip. All of this has made it difficult to meet the needs of many children. However, the chief difficulty resides in the inability of the Palestinian Government to exercise its role and authority over its own occupied territory and resources, due to the Israeli occupation, and its daily reality in which children are targeted and deprived of their legal rights. This has been emphasized by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in its concluding observations on periodic reports of Israel, the occupying power. In fact, according to the Committee, the illegal long-lasting occupation of Palestinian territory, the continued expansion of unlawful settlements and construction of the Wall into the West Bank as well as land confiscation, destruction of houses and livelihood of Palestinians constitute severe and continuous violations of the rights of Palestinian children and their families, feed the cycle of humiliation and violence and jeopardize a peaceful and stable future for all children of the region.

C. Data collection

38. The Public Statistics Act No. 4 of 2000 designated the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics as the official body with overall responsibility for gathering data and statistics within the State of Palestine.⁽⁸⁾ In 1997, the Bureau established a children's statistics programme with a view to providing data on Palestinian children and measuring the progress made towards fulfilling their needs.

39. The Bureau began gathering data on children's rights in 1999. In 2012, it developed a series of indicators on the fundamental rights of children with a view to helping governmental and non-governmental institutions monitor how the rights of Palestinian children are being implemented in line with the Convention on the Rights of the Child. This took place through the formation of a special working group in collaboration with Save the Children and with help from government institutions and NGOs that work with children. Each year, data is collected from the relevant bodies in accordance with the established indicators. Those were also used in the drafting of the present report. In addition, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics undertook a census of population and facilities in 2017.

40. Government institutions submit regular reports to the Council of Ministers to enable the Council to monitor how they implement their sectoral plans and any limitations they may face. Child-focused research and studies undertaken by civil society, international institutions, institutes of higher education and children themselves all help to provide information and data about the condition of children in Palestine.

41. The State acceded to all the human rights treaties at once, and did so only recently. As a result, administrative records were not ready and this has been the main challenge in the field of data collection. In addition, there is no centralized, comprehensive data-documentation system at the national level that covers all areas of the Convention, and not all cases are recorded by the competent ministries. Surveys that are carried out periodically have determinants that do not necessarily cover all categories of children, and this affects the representativeness and completeness of the information gathered.

42. The plan for the future is that the Ministry of Social Development will set up a national child protection database with support from Save the Children. The database will be created in stages, beginning with the establishment of a link between educational counsellors in the Ministry of Education and Higher Education and child protection counsellors in the Ministry of Social Development.

D. Coordination

43. The Ministry of Social Development is responsible for coordinating with competent institutions to ensure that children's rights in Palestine are duly fulfilled, in accordance with the Palestinian Children's Act, as amended.

44. At the national level, progress has been made in the area of coordination and cooperation in planning. Plans directly targeting children, such as the strategic plan for the protection of children 2013–2015, as well as other national sectoral plans that have goals related to children and their rights, such as the national social welfare strategy 2014–2016, were all drafted as a result of coordinated efforts between governmental institutions, civil-society and international partners. The plans were devised by national teams that included representatives from all those bodies and through special workshops.

45. A national transfer and follow-up system was developed in 2008 to ensure that services for children who suffer violence, neglect or abuse are integrated, coordinated and comprehensive. Institutions involved in the protection of children came together to develop the system and to define their own roles in such a way as to synchronize their activities and to ensure the best interests of the child.⁽⁹⁾

46. In order to develop the system of juvenile justice in Palestine, in 2010, the Council of Ministers issued a decree for the creation of the National Committee for Juvenile Justice.

47. In 2014, the National Committee for Child Labour was set up by decree of the Minister of Labour in partnership with civil society groups, trade unions and governmental institutions. The purpose of the Committee is to develop plans and policies to ensure that children are protected from economic exploitation.

48. In 2015, the Ministry of Social Development put together a national team made up of representatives from governmental institutions and NGOs that work with children. The team was created to ensure coordination and cooperation in the drafting of the official report under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to which end it organized numerous meetings and workshops.

49. The lack of coordination with or involvement of children in the planning process, coupled with generally poor coordination and follow-up on plans between partners are among the biggest coordinative challenges in the area of childcare. In that connection, efforts to involve children in planning processes began in 2016.

50. In order to ensure coordination for the future, committees are to be set up by official institutions to monitor, evaluate and issue reports on the implementation of sectoral plans. The committees will include representatives from all competent institutions.

E. Budget allocation

51. The total budget of the Government of the State of Palestine in 2018 was 16,559,061,000 shekels while the budget allocated to the social sector was 7,321,684,382 shekels, which represents 44.22 per cent of the total budget of the Government of the State of Palestine.⁽¹⁰⁾ For its part, the budget of the Ministry of Social Development stood at 859,251,863 shekels, or 11.74 per cent of the social sector budget and 5.19 per cent of the total government budget. The budget allocated to social assistance is part of the budget of the Ministry of Social Development; in fact, the amount allocated to cash assistance was 480,000,000 shekels in 2018, which represents 6.56 per cent of the social sector budget and 2.90 per cent of the total government budget.

52. The budget of the Ministry of Health was 2,087,818,000 shekels, or 28.52 per cent of the social sector budget and 12.61 per cent of the total government budget. The budget allocated for education in 2018 stood at 90,300,196 shekels, or 0.96 per cent of the total budget of the Government of the State of Palestine. In 2017, it had stood at 78,411,192 shekels.

53. The budget for leisure activities was divided between the Higher Council for Youth and Sports, with 08,553,907 shekels or 0.66 per cent of the total budget of the Palestinian Government, and summer camps, with 3,097,103 shekels of 0.02 per cent of the total budget of the Palestinian Government.

54. Children are among the categories benefitting from the various sectoral budgets in the State of Palestine, on an equal footing with other members of society; however, there is no specific budget for children's services.

55. The budgetary programme of the Ministry of Social Development has changed since 2010 and the budget is now allocated on the basis of programmes and performance, whereby the planning process includes a programme with goals to be achieved and a corresponding budget.

56. During the phase that the budget for programmes run by the Ministry of Social Development is being drawn up (the anti-poverty programme;⁽¹¹⁾ the programme for the protection, care and rehabilitation of vulnerable and marginalized groups;⁽¹²⁾ and the administration and planning programme⁽¹³⁾), each programme is classified in terms of its purpose, goals, outcomes and activities. That preparatory phase would be a good time to allocate independent budgets for children; however, the problem lies in the fact that the implementation phase of each programme constitutes a separate programme, which is not part of the same mechanism because the budgets required for each sector are classified as separate items and, when they are disbursed, only operational expenses, salaries and the purchase of services are shown. Thus, unlike the budget preparation phase, they do not appear as programmes for which disbursement has been made.

57. As regards follow-up and evaluation, once the approach to budget preparation had been adopted with its methodology of a budget for programmes, performance and items, and with the beginning of the process to develop and reform public finances, the idea arose of moving towards a budget that was both efficient and effective. The move towards a programme and performance budget was effected in 2012. The Ministry of Finance has provided technical assistance in various different forms to government ministries and institutions to promote the creation of programmes that reflect the nature of the activities of each institution and the services they provide, and to promote their capacity to manage available resources efficiently and effectively.

58. In order to ensure that goals have been achieved, the competent departments within the Ministry of Finance and Planning prepare analytical reports on the performance of ministerial budgets over a specific time period, then confront them with outcomes for the programmes and activities for each institution, as set forth in the Budget Act, using standard indicators for each outcome. This is a way of monitoring and evaluating performance for each outlay, irrespective of any information about budgets allocated for children.

59. The State of Palestine works to fulfil its commitments vis-à-vis children's rights, despite the difficulties it has to face in terms of available resources, reductions in foreign aid and the effect of those reductions on the delivery of public services, not to mention the lack of distinction between services provided to children and those provided to adults.

Tables 1, 2, 3 and 4, attached in the annexes, show the budgets and budget items for 2014 and 2015.

F. International cooperation

60. Since 1994, numerous international organizations have been providing aid to the Palestinian Government to help it develop legislation, regulations, plans and programmes in support of children in Palestine. They include the following:

- UNICEF has helped to support the State of Palestine in developing important legislation, regulations, plans and programmes, including the Palestinian Children's Act of 2004;
- Save the Children has provided support to a number of Palestinian ministries in programmes related to children and persons with disabilities. In collaboration with the Ma'an News Agency, it has promoted television series, discussions, advertisements and other visual media content on the subject of the rights of children and the rights of persons with disabilities. It has also provided training for professionals on how to adopt approaches based on children's rights and on how to interview children;
- The European Union supports the Ministry of Social Development in programmes related to persons with disabilities, including children, and in other programmes;
- The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) has provided support to the Ministry of Social Development with a view to improving juvenile justice. In addition, the Supreme Judicial Council and the Bureau of the Chief Qadi cooperate with UN-Women and UNDP on the "Sawasya" programme and European police forces provide support to the Palestinian police via a number of different programmes;
- Thanks to cooperation between the Ministry of Culture and the Government of Norway, a cultural fund has been created for a period of three years. In addition, the Ministry of Education and Higher Education is continuing to cooperate on a number of programmes with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and UNICEF;
- The International Labour Organization (ILO) is supporting the Ministry of Labour on a programme to protect children from economic exploitation;
- The Office of the Public Prosecutor has signed an agreement with the Italian Agency for Development Cooperation for the provision of capacity-building and technical support in the area of juvenile justice. Memorandums of understanding have been signed with the University of Perugia, the eCampus University and the Siracusa International Institute for Criminal Justice and Human Rights, in Italy.

61. The challenges in the area of international aid lie in the fact that it does not address certain basic needs, such as the provision of specialized human resources or the logistical requirements needed to expand and promote efforts in the area of children's rights. Furthermore, poor coordination between financial donors has at times led to problems in overlapping activities and difficulties in funding infrastructure, such as care and protection centres or centres for children with disabilities, in order to improve children's rights.

G. Independent monitoring

62. Monitoring by the State. The Ministry of Social Development follows up with the competent bodies on complaints regarding violations of children's rights and seeks to provide remedies. This takes place via the complaints department within the Ministry itself and via child-protection networks. Complaints are then referred to the child protection counsellor who is legally responsible for the protection of children and who coordinates with the competent bodies.

63. The complaints unit in the Ministry of Education and Higher Education follows up with the competent bodies on complaints regarding children's rights, to address those complaints in accordance with administrative and professional standards and rules.

64. The Palestinian police has a complaints system accessible via the police's Grievances and Human Rights Department. The system received 20 complaints in 2016 and 2017. A number of measures are taken, beginning with the formation of a team within the Department to investigate the complaint, gather all necessary documents and statements, examine the procedures followed by the Family and Juvenile Protection Department then forward recommendations to the Director-General of Police. The Family and Juvenile Protection Department is the body designated to deal with complaints involving children. It also acts to ensure that places of detention for juveniles are separate from places of detention for adults and that they respect the relevant international standards.

65. Procedures in regard of complaints from children regarding access to justice and court proceedings have been updated to reflect children's needs and posted on the website of the Supreme Judicial Council. This makes it easier for children or their legal representatives to lodge complaints, which can then be examined and pursued by the competent bodies.

66. A complaints department has been set up, based in the Office of the Public Prosecutor, to examine and pursue any violations against children and submit a report on the matter to the Public Prosecutor. The matter is then transferred to the office of the competent prosecutor and, following investigation, the complaint is resolved, either by holding the party responsible to account or by dismissing the matter due to absence of grounds or lack of evidence.

67. In 2017, the Office of the Public Prosecutor received three complaints regarding children's rights via civil society groups, lawyers and prosecutors. In accordance with due legal procedure, the complaints were dealt with by contacting the bodies concerned to verify the legality of the procedures taken. The first complaint concerned the detention of a youth by military intelligence; he was eventually released because he was being held by an unauthorized body. The second complaint concerned the detention of a youth by the preventive security department. Having looked into the matter, the public prosecutor decided that, in the light of the seriousness of the charges and in order to protect the juvenile from imminent danger, he was to remain in the custody of preventive security with the approval of his own family and on condition that he was held in an appropriately equipped location and that his educational and health needs were met. The third case involved a youth who alleged that he had been beaten by the police. An approach was made to the police and it emerged that the youth concerned had resisted arrest but that he had not been assaulted.

68. There is a complaints department within the Ministry of Justice's human rights unit. In addition, a special file for complaints involving children is currently being developed on the Ministry's website.

69. In order to protect children from economic exploitation, the Ministry of Labour receives and investigates complaints and pursues them before the courts. As a proportion of the whole, the number of complaints involving only children is extremely small.

70. The Ministry of Education and Higher Education has developed indicators on students – particularly students with disabilities – who suffer violence in any form. It also monitors cases in schools and has developed mechanisms for dealing with them. In addition, the Ministry has developed mechanisms to monitor all Israeli violations of education over the course of the year. These violations – which consist in attacking and closing schools, carrying out raids, arresting teaching staff and students, imposing house arrests, using schools as military posts and destroying Bedouin schools – affect the ability of the State of Palestine to fulfil its obligation to ensure that children are able to enjoy the right to education.

71. A national monitoring system is in place to monitor the rights of children on the basis of certain indicators. In 2011, following a recommendation from the Consultative Council for Official Statistics, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics established a cross-sectoral statistical monitoring system to act both as a comprehensive database and as a means of updating data. The Council of Ministers issued a decree to establish a national statistical monitoring team, to be led by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics with members drawn from various government agencies.⁽¹⁴⁾ The task of the statistical monitoring team is to contribute to the development of indicators for the monitoring system.⁽¹⁵⁾ The decree of the Council of Ministers also envisaged the creation of subcommittees for the different sectors and subjects covered by the system, including that of children and young persons.

72. In cooperation with Save the Children and with competent government ministries, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics has developed indicators for the Convention on the Rights of the Child. For the purpose of drafting the present report, indicators relative to the implementation of the Convention were also developed by UNICEF. The annual reports issued by the Central Bureau serve to throw light on the extent to which the Convention is being implemented in Palestine and are, in fact, part of the national monitoring mechanism on violations to the rights of children and an indicator on the extent to which the State of Palestine is respecting the rights set forth in the Convention.

73. Monitoring by the Independent Commission for Human Rights. The Independent Commission for Human Rights was set up by presidential decree in 1993.⁽¹⁶⁾ Article 31 of the Palestinian Basic Law of 2003, as amended, states: "An independent commission for human rights shall be established, its composition, duties and mandate to be defined by law. The commission shall submit its reports to the President of the National Authority and to the Palestinian Legislative Council." The Independent Commission acts as the official bureau for grievances in the State of Palestine and pursues complaints from citizens in regard of human rights violations committed by the State, including violations against the rights of children.

74. The Commission has issued a number of official annual reports on human rights in the State of Palestine, most of which include specific sections dedicated to the rights of children, in line with the Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Commission also produces legal reports on children's rights covering subjects such as child labour, violence and ill-treatment against children and children in conflict with the law in reform and social care institutions. In addition, the Commission runs training programmes, directed particularly at law enforcement officials, on children's rights, juvenile justice, monitoring mechanisms and how to receive complaints from children.

75. In 2016, with support from Save the Children, the Commission launched a special children's complaints programme. The programme, which covers the mechanisms whereby children themselves can submit complaints regarding violations of their rights, is still in the process of being developed.

76. Child-related plans for the future in Palestine include the formation of a council made up of children within the Independent Commission for Human Rights. The council would have the task of monitoring the status of child rights in national institutions and verifying the extent to which the environment is safe and supportive of the right of children to enjoy a higher degree of protection and participation. The council would also help to review legislation, laws and policies on children, to draw up child-related plans and programmes, and to help the Commission to identify priorities for children.

77. The Independent Commission received 311 complaints concerning children in 2014 and 260 in 2015. In 2016, 230 complaints concerning children were received in the West Bank and Gaza while 204 were received in 2017, 153 in Gaza and 51 in the West Bank.

Table 5 shows the complaints concerning children received by the Independent Commission for Human Rights.

78. The principal violations by Palestinian governmental institutions that have been the subject of complaints involving children are as follows:

- West Bank including East Jerusalem: Complaints in which the principal violation was related to children's rights numbered 43;⁽¹⁸⁾ 42 complaints concerned violations of the right to physical integrity,⁽¹⁹⁾ 13 concerned violations to the right to health⁽²⁰⁾ and 31 concerned the right to due legal process during arrest and detention;⁽²¹⁾
- Gaza Strip: Complaints in which the principal violation was related to children's rights numbered 156; 285 complaints concerned violations of the right to physical integrity, 3 concerned violations to the right to health and 85 concerned the right to due legal process during arrest and detention.

79. Monitoring by civil society organizations. The State of Palestine is making concrete efforts to create a climate of trust and cooperation between government bodies and civil society organizations and to establish continuous dialogue between the two sides with a view to protecting and promoting the rights of Palestinian children in the face of the violations they suffer as a result of the daily realities of Israeli occupation. In fact, civil society organizations monitor the extent to which children's rights are being enforced by government institutions and receive and corroborate complaints from citizens (including children) concerning rights violations they may have suffered at the hands of government bodies. Complaints are normally followed up with the government body concerned in order to stop the violation against the child and to promote cooperation with a view to guaranteeing children's rights in line with the Convention. After that, the progress achieved or results obtained are duly monitored.

80. A complaints service exists in the State of Palestine in the form of a telephone helpline run by an NGO, the SAWA Foundation, which is also a member of the child protection network.

81. The Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict brings together a number of international organizations, including UNICEF, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), Save the Children and Defense for Children International – Palestine Section. Its purpose is to monitor the six grave violations to which children are exposed during armed conflicts, which were defined by the Security Council with a view to protecting children during armed conflicts because of their particular vulnerability and to bringing an end to impunity. The six grave violations are: killing and maiming of children, recruitment or use of children as soldiers, sexual violence against children, attacks against schools or hospitals, denial of humanitarian access for children and the abduction of children.

82. Reports by the United Nations and by many different human rights organizations confirm that Israel, the occupying power, continues to kill and injure Palestinian children, to arrest them and subject them to torture and inhuman and degrading treatment of all kinds, to attack schools and hospitals, and to deny the access of humanitarian aid thereby affecting the lives and well-being of Palestinian children. In addition to that, children are suffering as a result of the illegal blockade that the occupying power is imposing on Palestinian civilians residing in the Gaza Strip, isolating them from the rest of the world and denying them access to humanitarian aid. Children suffer as a result of the policy of forced displacements and the destruction of homes. Responsibility for these racist practices against Palestinian children lies with the occupation, and the army and the colonists should be placed on the United Nations blacklist of groups and States that violate the rights of children.

83. The biggest deficiencies in the monitoring of children's rights arise from shortcomings in the documentation of violations against children in Palestine, the lack of specialized staff to work with children and the restrictions imposed on the Palestinian Government by the Israeli occupation.

84. The statute of the National Council for Children was approved by the Council of Ministers in May 2017. The Council includes all government bodies that work with children and has the Independent Commission for Human Rights as observer, in addition to civil society and academic institutions. Its purpose is, among other things, to monitor the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁽²²⁾ One problem that has been recognized is a lack of coordination among the institutions that monitor and follow up on complaints from children, while action to enable wide-scale access by children to mechanisms from submitting complaints is still in its early stages.

H. Dissemination and training

85. A number of governmental institutions and NGOs in Palestine work to raise awareness about children's rights, provide training on the Convention on the Rights of the Child and disseminate the Convention within Palestinian society. The training is directed at children themselves, at persons who work with children and at other community groups.

86. Subcommittees within the child protection networks – which include representatives from governmental and non-governmental institutions under the leadership of the Ministry of Social Development – play an important role in raising awareness about children's rights. The networks exist in all Palestinian governorates. In 2012, with support from UNICEF, the Ministry of Social Development printed and distributed the Palestinian Children's Act in the form of a booklet to workers in different institutions.

87. The institutions of State that are covered by the dissemination and training are: the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Migrants; the Ministry of Social Development including its child protection and welfare centres; child counsellors and others; the Palestinian police (Bureau for the Protection of the Family); the Office of the Public Prosecutor; the Supreme Council of the Judiciary including court judges and registrars; the Ministry of Education and Higher Education; the Ministry of Health; the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Labour; and the Independent Commission for Human Rights in its capacity as the national human rights institution.

88. Civil society institutions and international organizations that have been involved in dissemination and training are: Defense for Children International – Palestine Section, the Palestinian Centre for Democracy and Conflict Resolution, the Al Mezan Centre for Human Rights, the Tamer Institute, the Terre des Hommes Foundation, the Women's Studies Centre, the Shoruq Organization, the Palestinian Counselling Centre, the Palestinian Vision Foundation, the Qader Organization, YMCA – Jerusalem, OHCHR, UNICEF, Save the Children, the French Médecins du Monde, Spain, Médecins sans frontières, World Vision International, the Norwegian Refugee Council (NRC) and UNESCO.

89. The principal areas covered by dissemination and training activities are: the rights of children under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Palestinian Children's Act; violence against children and protection mechanisms; the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles; sexual abuse and protection against such abuse; case management; methodologies for drafting intervention plans; and national and international obligations resulting from accession to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict, including the drafting of official reports regarding the implementation of treaties and training in human rights-related concepts. Numerous other issues are also covered, among them juvenile justice; how to submit and follow up on complaints at the national and international levels; places of detention for juveniles; how to deal with children during periods of treatment; protecting children from online dangers; procedures whereby children can access the courts; and the right to education, which includes the national strategy for inclusive education, the promotion of discipline in schools, crisis intervention for children, etc.

90. The training is aimed at children of both sexes among them children with disabilities, children from marginalized areas, child victims of violence who are staying in protection centres, and children in conflict with the law being held in places of detention. It is also directed at parents, guardians and school students as well as at the public at large through television programming and other media outlets. The training also targets professionals who work with children including judges, prosecutors, police, inclusive education counsellors, education counselling supervisors, special education supervisors in the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, school teachers, labour inspectors in the Ministry of Labour, officials of the Ministry of Health, child protection counsellors in the Ministry of Social Development and lawyers.

91. Once the State of Palestine acceded to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Migrants – in collaboration with the Ministry of Education and Higher Education and the Independent Commission for Human Rights, and with technical support from OHCHR – issued a booklet containing the corpus of treaties to which the State of Palestine had acceded, and distributed it to ministries, schools and universities in all governorates.

92. As part of an information campaign related to reports on the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the Ministry of Social Development has been providing training on those instruments to groups of children and young people, in cooperation with the Higher Council for Youth and Sports. It has also run training workshops for persons who work with children. Once the drafting of the initial report under the Convention is complete, information about the Convention and the report will be disseminated widely among the public, children and the relevant organizations by the competent ministries.

Table 6 shows the training imparted to members of the police's Bureau for the Protection of the Family in 2014.

Table 7 shows the training imparted to members of the police's Bureau for the Protection of the Family in 2015.

Table 8 shows training and workshops offered to members of the Office of the Public Prosecutor.

93. The most significant shortcomings in the field of awareness-raising lie in the limited human and logistical capabilities of the institutions responsible for children, as well as a lack of training in disseminating a culture of diversity and an absence of mechanisms to respond to individual differences among children, including children with disabilities.

I. Cooperation with civil society

94. Some important examples of collaboration with civil society in the drafting of plans and the implementation of programmes affecting children are listed below:

- A memorandum of understanding between the Ministry of Social Development and Defense for Children International – Palestine Section was signed in 2004, to improve cooperation in the area of juvenile justice. In addition, an agreement was reached in 2016 whereby Defense for Children International supports the Ministry in the implementation of its strategic plan for juvenile justice, which it recently developed and updated;
- A memorandum of understanding has been signed with the SAWA Foundation, which provides a telephone helpline service for children;
- A memorandum of understanding has been signed with the Palestinian Counselling Centre, in order to consolidate cooperation in the provision of psychosocial services for children by the Centre;
- The Office of the Public Prosecutor has signed memorandums of understanding with the Ma'an News Agency and with a number of Palestinian universities;

- Government institutions and NGOs cooperate in the commemoration of Palestinian Child's Day with activities that seek to make children themselves more aware of their rights;
- Government institutions and NGOs work together to draw up plans affecting children;
- The child protection network, which is headed by the Ministry of Social Development, includes civil society institutions that are active in the field of child protection. The institutions work together – in the national transfer and networking system – to provide children with the services they require, using a comprehensive methodology that takes account of the best interests of the child;
- The Palestinian Government cooperates and coordinates with civil society organizations specializing in the area of mental health, such as the mental health office of the Palestine Red Crescent Society, in order for them to provide psychological support services to children in difficult situations who suffer mental problems;
- Training courses on juvenile justice and children's rights are organized in cooperation with civil society while legal aid is provided to juveniles in cooperation with Defense for Children International and the International Law Association.

95. The Palestinian Government provides financial support to certain civil society organizations that work with children. Services are purchased from service providers for 930 children at a total annual cost of 5,274,000 shekels.

96. There are 34 associations working with children in the southern West Bank, 8 in the central West Bank, 19 in the northern West Bank, 9 in East Jerusalem and 53 in the Gaza Strip.

Table 9 shows the associations working with children that received financial assistance.

97. The biggest challenge lies in the limited financial resources available, both to civil society organizations and to government institutions.

1. Definition of the child (article 1)

98. The Palestinian Children's Act defines a child as any human being under the age of 18 years. That definition covers, and thus protects, unborn fetuses, in addition to all persons under the age of 18. According to the final results of the 2017 population, housing and establishments census, there were 2,115,370 children under 18 years of age in the State of Palestine, including 1,083,720 males and 1,031,650 females. Children comprise 45.3 per cent of the total population of Palestine, 43.4 per cent of the population of the West Bank and 48 per cent of the population of the Gaza Strip.

Table 10 shows the number of children, disaggregated by age group, region and sex in 2017.

99. There are disparities with other laws in force in the State of Palestine with regard to certain issues relevant to the age of the child; those laws are not necessarily consistent with the aforementioned definition in terms of a minimum legal age and the responsibilities stemming therefrom. Those issues include:

100. The age of legal capacity: the Ottoman Civil Code of 1876, applicable in the State of Palestine, places children into different categories; the first category includes young children who have not attained the "age of discretion" and whose actions, according to article 966 of the Code, have no legal repercussions, even if authorized by the child's guardian. The second category includes children who have reached the "age of discretion" and who thus enjoy the right to take action that has legal repercussions if that action is beneficial, even if it is not authorized by the child's guardian, while their action has no legal repercussions if it causes harm.

101. Compulsory education age: pursuant to the Children's Act, the compulsory education age is from 6 to 16 years. The 2017 decree-law on public education states that education is obligatory until the end of the tenth grade.

102. Working age: the Palestinian Children's Act, and article 93 of the Palestinian Labour Code No. 7 of 2000, prohibit the employment of children under the age of 15. The Palestinian Labour Code describes working children as "juveniles". That term is to be modified as it is applied in the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles to children in conflict with the law. In article 1 of the Labour Code, a working child (for whom the Code uses the term "juvenile") is defined as: "a person who is at least 15 years of age but who is not yet 18 years of age". Articles 94–98 of the amended Palestinian Children's Act also prohibit the employment of children in hazardous work. This was confirmed by the Minister of Labour in Decree No. 1 of 2004, which sets forth the types of hazardous work in which the employment of children is prohibited.

103. Article 99 of the Labour Code stipulates that the provisions of the Code do not apply to children who work with their first-degree relatives, on condition that their work is at all times in line with appropriate health and social standards that ensure work has no negative effect on their mental and physical development or on their education. Children who work with their first-degree relatives are not subject to any work-related age restrictions.

104. Age for giving testimony: pursuant to article 83 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act No. 3 of 2001), in force in the State of Palestine, the minimum age for testifying in court is 15 years. However, such testimony is given only in exceptional circumstances and the individual concerned does not have to swear an oath before giving evidence.

105. Age of marriage: the minimum age for contracting a marriage for males and females is prescribed by the sharia courts, which have established that, if both spouses are Muslim, the bride must be at least 15 Islamic calendar years old and the groom at least 16 Islamic calendar years old. It should be noted that an Islamic calendar year is 354 days long and is divided into 12 months. Six of those months are 29 days long and the other six months are 30 days long. Article 7 of the Personal Status Code provides that, if the prospective husband is more than 20 years the bride's senior, the conclusion of the marriage is conditional on a judge confirming the consent of the bride, and that the marriage is in her interest.

106. For non-Muslims, the Syriac Orthodox Personal Status Code, while taking into account domestic laws, prohibits men under the age of 18 and women under the age of 16 from getting engaged or entering into a marriage. The Personal Status Code of the Catholic Denominations regulates personal status issues for adherents of the six Catholic denominations listed in article 1 of the Code, namely the Maronite, Melkite Greek Catholic, Armenian, Syriac, Latin and Chaldean sects. The law provides that, in order for an engagement to be valid, the parties must be of sound mind and discriminating and have entered into the engagement freely, and that the betrothal must be in accordance with the marriage laws of the Eastern Church, for Eastern Christians, and in accordance with Canon 1017 of the Latin Code of Canon Law, for Latin Christians.

107. The Sharia Court Council is to take action in the future to raise the age of marriage to 18 years for both spouses.

108. National penal laws criminalize underage marriage that has not been sanctioned by a judge or legal guardian. Article 156 of the Mandate-era Criminal Code, in force in the Gaza Strip, provides that any person who marries a girl under the age of 15 years commits an offence and shall serve a prison term of two years. The Jordanian Criminal Code stipulates that any man who marries a girl under the age of 16 years, any person who participates in such a marriage, any man who marries a girl under 18 years of age without the agreement of her guardian and any person assisting in that marriage shall be liable to a penalty of between 1 and 6 months' imprisonment.

109. A total of 24.2 per cent of women between the ages of 20 and 49 were married for the first time before they were 18 years old. In the West Bank, that figure is 21.4 per cent and in the Gaza Strip it stands at 28.6 per cent. ⁽²³⁾

110. Age of criminal responsibility: the Palestinian Children's Act has raised the age of legal accountability to 12 years. This is, moreover, affirmed in article 5 of the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles.⁽²⁴⁾ In accordance with instructions issued by the Public Prosecutor, the ages of juveniles and children are determined when they are brought before the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children for the first time; the date on which the relevant incident took place and the age of the juvenile at the time that the incident was perpetrated must also be determined.

111. Age for conducting business operations: The Jordanian Trade Act (No. 12 of 1966) stipulates that commercial responsibility is regulated by the Civil Code, which, in turn, stipulates that children under the age of majority may conduct business operations that involve small sums of money. The courts may permit children who are at least 15 years old to conduct business operations involving any amount of money on condition that consent for this is granted by their guardians, who may withdraw their consent and prohibit them from conducting of business transactions.

112. Consumption of alcohol and narcotic drugs: the Palestinian Children's Act prohibits children from smoking or consuming alcohol or narcotic drugs. The Anti-Smoking Act (No. 25 of 2005) prohibits the sale, distribution, display or advertising of tobacco products to persons under 18 years of age.

2. General principles (articles 2, 3, 6 and 12)

Right to non-discrimination (article 2)

113. The Palestinian Declaration of Independence of 1998 established the legal basis for equality and the prohibition of discrimination in all its forms in the State of Palestine. The Declaration states that the State of Palestine shall be for all Palestinians, wherever they may be, and therein they shall enjoy full equality in terms of their rights within the framework of a parliamentary democratic system established on the basis of social justice, equality and non-discrimination on the basis of race, religion, colour or gender. The amended Palestinian Basic Law affirms the principles of equality and non-discrimination enshrined in the Declaration of Independence, while article 38 of the Palestinian Children's Act⁽²⁵⁾ prohibits discrimination and stipulates, "The State shall adopt appropriate and effective measures aimed at the eradication of all forms of discrimination in enjoyment of the right to education and shall work to guarantee equal opportunities for all children."

114. Inheritance: inheritance rights in the State of Palestine are addressed as personal status matters. However, there is no uniform, modern and fair legislative framework for personal status matters in Palestine. In the West Bank, the applicable codes are the Jordanian Personal Status Code (Act No. 61 of 1976) and the Code of Sharia Legal Procedure (Act No. 31 of 1959), as amended. In the Gaza Strip the applicable codes are the Ottoman-era Palestinian Personal Status Code from 1917 and the Family Rights Code (Order No. 303 of 1954), followed by the Code of Sharia Legal Procedure (Act No. 12 of 1965) issued by the governor of the Gaza Strip, with supplementary provisions from the Ottoman Civil Code of 1876. Meanwhile, the Sharia Court of East Jerusalem operates according to the personal status laws applicable in the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, because that Court is still administratively part of that Kingdom's sharia justice system. Any amendments to the Kingdom's personal status codes are instantly put into force by the Court, which is currently enforcing the 2010 Jordanian Personal Status Code (No. 36 of 2010).

115. Custody: In accordance with the provisions of the laws in force, when a female child reaches the age of majority, she must be placed in the custody of her guardian, while a male may chose to remain in the custody of his mother or be subject to the custody of his guardian. This gives rise to a form of discrimination that favours male children. If the girl refuses to join her father or her guardian, then she will no longer be eligible to receive money from him.⁽²⁶⁾

116. Disability: article 2 of the 1999 Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act stipulates that persons with disabilities, including children, shall enjoy equal rights and shall not be discriminated against because of their disability.⁽²⁷⁾ Furthermore, the 2017 decree-law on public education provides that education is a right that shall be enjoyed by all individuals on an equal and non-discriminatory basis and without discrimination, and also stipulates that the Ministry of Education shall adopt an inclusive and supportive education policy that addresses the needs of all students.

117. The 2015 annual report of the Independent Commission for Human Rights stipulates that persons with disabilities, including children, are subjected to two types of discrimination: discrimination in terms of the obligations of the State towards them and its failure to uphold its commitments, and discrimination in terms of societal perceptions and treatment by members of society of persons with disabilities. These factors have repercussions on the enjoyment of their rights in all areas, including their rights to education, health, transport and accessibility.

Best interests of the child (article 3)

118. Article 4 of the Palestinian Children's Act stipulates that: "The following must be taken into consideration: 1. The best interests of the child in all measures taken in his or her regard by the legislative authorities, the courts, the administrative authorities or public or private social welfare institutions. 2. The psychological, mental, physical and moral needs of the child in accordance with his or her age, health status and other factors."

The Children's Act also upholds the best interests of the child if the child's parents separate and stipulates that the best interests of the child must be safeguarded if that child is separated from one or both of his or her parents and that the child has the right to maintain personal relations and direct contact with both parents on a regular basis.

119. The State of Palestine endeavours to uphold the best interests of the child in numerous areas, including by taking administrative steps that are followed up on by child protection counsellors at the Ministry of Social Development in order to protect children from physical or sexual violence, as well as from neglect or exploitation including in cases when the abuser of the child is that child's guardian and the interests of the child cannot be upheld while that child remains with his or her guardian or custodian. In such cases, the child protection counsellor and the Public Prosecutor will act on the complaint to protect the child's interests.⁽²⁸⁾ The child protection counsellor will also interview the child victim so that his or her views are taken into account when deciding the steps that should be taken in that regard.

120. In cooperation with the Office of the Public Prosecutor and child protection counsellors, the police provide ongoing protection to children whose lives are threatened, endeavour to uphold the best interests of those children and protect them from all forms of danger.⁽²⁹⁾

121. The child's best interests are determined through consultations involving the child protection counsellor, family protection police officers, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, educational counsellors and the authorities relevant to the situation of the child in question. A meeting is held so that the parties concerned can discuss the situation of the child, including his or her social, academic and psychological situation and needs. A decision regarding the child is made, and follow-up steps are taken. The child's views are taken into account in the procedures or the decision that is made, and procedures are conducted in accordance with the transfer and networking system guidelines followed by the child protection networks.

122. The Supreme Judicial Council seeks to take into account the best interests of the child and to give priority to those interests during proceedings, by giving consideration to the child's views and by appointing juvenile judges to issue a ruling in the child's case. The Bureau of the Chief Qadi has also taken action to uphold the interests of the child by issuing Circular No. 59/2012 on facilitating the visiting rights of parents, which includes a proposed interpretation of article 163 of the Personal Status Code of 1976, namely: "The mother or the father of the minor who has been given in charge to a party who holds the right to custody shall enjoy the right to see and to host the child once a week for a period of 24 hours, provided that the parties take into account the age and circumstances of the child. This shall uphold, first and foremost, the interests of that child and, secondly, the interests of the two parties". The hosting period may be extended upon agreement of the parties, with the provision of a legal guarantee in all cases to ensure the return of the child to the person granted custody of that child after the expiry of the hosting period. The Circular also takes into account the interests of the child by facilitating the provision of a suitable environment and location for parental visits, to which the father and mother and all other parties that enjoy custody rights are entitled.

123. Adult children are sometimes summoned to attend family conciliation meetings to discuss reconciliation between spouses in divorce proceedings. Those adult children can play a positive role in reconciling differences between their parents and safeguarding the best interests of the child in question.

Right to life, survival and development (article 6)

124. The Basic Law provides for the protection and comprehensive care of the child and his or her right to physical integrity. The Children's Act states that it is the duty of the Government to ensure, "the protection of the rights of the child to survival and to development as well as their right to live in a free, safe and developed environment. The Children's Act also stipulates that children shall enjoy the right to life.

125. Death penalty: the death penalty is neither imposed nor carried out on children in the State of Palestine. The decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles states explicitly that the death penalty shall not be imposed on a juvenile. Article 46 of that decree-law stipulates that, if a juvenile who is at least 15 years old but who is not yet 18 years of age commits an offence that is punishable by death, that juvenile shall be placed in a social care institution for a period of up to 9 years. In June 2018, the State of Palestine acceded to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty.

126. Abortion: The Palestinian legal system provides for the protection of all children, including unborn children. The Palestinian Children's Act defines a child as any human being below the age of 18 years, and therefore the rights of the child are applicable to all children, including those who have yet to be born. Article 8 of the Public Health Act (No. 20 of 2004) prohibits abortion and provides that it is forbidden to cause a pregnant woman to miscarry by any means unless two specialist physicians testify that that procedure is necessary to save her life, and unless prior written consent for the procedure is obtained from the pregnant woman. If she is unable to provide her consent, the written consent of her husband or her guardian shall be obtained. The abortion shall be carried out in a health institution. The penal laws in force also contain explicit provisions that penalize abortion and the provision of assistance in order to facilitate an abortion. The Code of Criminal Procedure provides for the implementation of sentence of the convicted pregnant woman to be postponed until her delivery and until three months after her delivery if she has received a custodial sentence.

127. Suicide: Palestine has taken a number of measures to reduce the incidence of child suicide. Those measures include awareness-raising campaigns conducted by various authorities in schools on the prevention of violence in general, including suicide prevention. The Ministry of Health has also established a national suicide prevention commission.⁽³⁰⁾ In cases of attempted suicide, the police ascertain that the attempted suicide involved no suspected criminal activity and the Office of the Public Prosecutor is informed accordingly. Furthermore, protection counsellors at the Ministry of Social Development, who enjoy a mandate to take action, monitor the situation and prevent further suicide attempts, are informed of the situation and work together with the Ministry of Education in accordance with specific procedures set forth in the national transfer and networking system guidelines.

128. Three child deaths by suicide (one by hanging and the others by strangulation) were recorded in 2014.⁽³¹⁾ Three female suicides were recorded in 2015.

129. Traffic accidents: One of the achievements of the Ministry of Health in 2009 was the establishment of the road accident monitoring programme, which includes a system for monitoring injuries. The Ministry of Health also conducts routine health education activities in schools that cover public safety, road safety and road accident prevention, and cooperates with the Ministry of Education to reduce the number of accidents near schools. In addition, the Ministry of Transport and Communications established the Supreme Traffic

Council in 2010 and has taken a number of steps to raise road safety awareness.⁽³²⁾ As for protecting children from traffic accidents, the police have held a number of awareness-raising lectures in schools on road traffic hazards with a view to educating children about traffic safety. Traffic accidents can cause disabilities among children. In 2014, of the 24.6 per cent of children aged 0–14 years who were involved in road accidents and sustained injuries therefrom, 0.4 per cent became disabled as a result of their injuries. According to statistics, 35 children under the age of 18 died as a result of road accidents in 2014, and 44 children died as a result of road accidents in 2015.

130. Domestic accidents: The Ministry of Health has launched an awareness-raising programme to prevent accidents among children, including accidents at home. Initiatives include the dissemination of educational materials and radio and television advertisements. All accidents, including those that occur at home, are reported to and recorded by the police. The data obtained on accidents is subjected to limited analysis for statistical purposes only.

131. Deaths and extrajudicial killings of children: the right of the child to physical safety and protection are among the basic rights guaranteed by the Palestinian Basic Law. Article 10 of the Basic Law provides that, “Fundamental human rights and liberties shall be respected”. Article 32 provides that, “Any infringement of personal liberty or violation of the right to privacy or of other public rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Basic Law or laws in force is an offence not subject to any statute of limitations with respect to civil or criminal proceedings.” The Palestinian Government shall ensure just reparation for any such harm suffered.” The right of the child to a fair trial is a constitutional right guaranteed by the Basic Law, which provides that all persons accused of crimes shall receive a fair trial in accordance with article 14, which, in turn, provides that, “Accused persons are innocent until proved guilty at a legal trial at which they have had the guarantees necessary for their defence”.

132. The Palestinian Centre for Human Rights in Gaza documented six child deaths and five cases of children being injured as bystanders in cases of killings, during family disputes, arms misuse, internal explosions and acts of property destruction in 2015.⁽³³⁾ The Independent Commission also recorded 49 child deaths in unusual circumstances in 2015⁽³⁴⁾ and 56 such deaths in 2014.

133. Execution of Palestinian children by the Israeli occupation forces: Israel, the occupying Power, grossly and systematically violates the rights of Palestinian children and commits daily crimes against them in violation of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, which obliges the occupying Power to ensure the well-being and safety of the civilian population under its occupation. Children are among those who are most likely to be affected by the daily attacks perpetrated by the Israeli occupation forces, and they are directly targeted in operations undertaken as part of a systematic and far-reaching occupation policy against the Palestinian people, and children especially, which causes deaths and injuries that very often result in disabilities.

134. According to statistics provided by the Palestinian Ministry of Health, 546 Palestinian children were extrajudicially killed by the Israeli occupation forces in 2014,⁽³⁵⁾ and 3,887 children were wounded in the Gaza Strip alone. Thirty-two children were killed and 594 were wounded in 2015. In 2016, 32 children were killed and 82 were wounded in the West Bank. More than half of those children were shot with live ammunition. Fifteen children were killed in 2017. The Prosecutor General has appointed a competent prosecutor to investigate crimes perpetrated by the occupation authorities.

Respect for the views of the child (article 12)

135. Article 12 of the Palestinian Children’s Act provides: “2. The views of the child shall be taken into consideration in accordance with his or her age and maturity. 3. The child shall be given the opportunity to express his or her views in judicial proceedings or with regard to social or educational measures related to his or her circumstances.”

136. As for respecting the views of the child in administrative procedures regarding child victims of community violence, and specifically in cases involving the transfer of a male or female child to a protection centre, the child’s views are taken into consideration by the child protection counsellor, although problems may sometimes arise in that regard. For example, a child that requires protection while in a protection centre may, when asked, state that he or she does not wish to be protected. In such cases, the psychological counsellor appointed to the case will work with the child with a view to balancing the child's interests and his or her views.

137. The police uphold the right of the child to be heard in all judicial and administrative proceedings. The child is given a simple understanding of the procedures, and the views and best interests of the child are taken into account, whether in connection with his or her life, education or residence. The police also take the necessary steps to protect children by ensuring that they enjoy access to urgent assistance, because ensuring that the child is heard facilitates efforts to resolve his or her situation.

138. The Office of the Public Prosecutor informs the juvenile of all the guarantees afforded to him or her by law, and particularly the guarantees provided under the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles.

139. As for ensuring respect for the views of children during litigation procedures, an opportunity is provided for them to express their views clearly and in confidence according to the specificities of the case, while ensuring that they are not subjected to any force or coercion, in accordance with Code of Criminal Procedure and the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles. This is one of the guarantees offered to accused persons in criminal cases. In addition to enjoying the right to a defence, the child also enjoys the right to speak before the sentence is pronounced.

140. Although article 12 of the Children's Act stipulates that the child shall be given the opportunity to express his or her views in judicial proceedings, the child's views are not taken into consideration by the judiciary if he or she has been the victim of exploitation, neglect or physical or sexual violence.

141. With regard to healthcare treatment, treatment is provided if consent is granted by the child's guardian; the child's views are not taken into consideration.

142. Children have not been involved in a systematic manner in the formulation of plans and strategies on children by government institutions, with the exception of the Higher Council for Youth and Sports, which involved groups of children in the process to draw up its annual plan for 2013. The Ministry of Social Development also involved children in efforts to draw up its national plan for the years 2018–2022. Initiatives to promote the involvement of children have also been launched by certain non-governmental organizations, and similar steps are now being taken by a number of governmental authorities, including the Ministry of Education and the governorates of Hebron, Bethlehem and Ramallah.

143. With regard to non-governmental organizations, Defense for Children International – Palestine Section is working to strengthen the participation of children and ensure respect for their opinions in all areas of their lives. To that end, it has established the Palestinian Network for Children's Rights, which brings together a number of grass-roots institutions located in the governorates of the country.⁽³⁶⁾

144. The establishment of student parliaments by the Ministry of Education, in cooperation with the organization World Vision International, clearly reflects the interest of Palestine in the right of the child to express his or her views. Children were also involved in the preparation of this report.

145. In April 2016, 70 child rights protection teams were established in all West Bank governorates by Defense for Children International, in cooperation with the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, where they were tasked with collecting information about and corroborating violations of children's rights.

146. In partnership with the Palestinian Network for Children's Rights and Save the Children, and with the support of the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, Defense for Children International facilitated the establishment of the first children's council in Palestine through elections held for this purpose: the Palestine Children's Council represents children, reflects their views and aspirations, and questions policymakers on the extent to which children's rights are respected and upheld in Palestinian society. The Council acts as an advisory body and provides recommendations to Defense for Children International, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Social Development and the organization Save the Children. The Council has also been accredited to act as an advisory body to Bethlehem, Hebron and Ramallah governorates

3. Civil rights and freedoms (articles 7, 8, 13, 17, 28 (2), 37 (a) and 39)

Birth registration, name and nationality (article 7)

147. The Palestinian Children's Act guarantees a child's right to be registered in the civil registry immediately after birth. Nationality is granted immediately to the child under the provisions of the said law, in addition to articles 17 to 19 of the 1999 Civil Status Code, which provides that a well-known person shall be entrusted with immediately notifying the Ministry of the Interior of the birth and providing information on the sex, name and condition of the child in a birth certificate provided by the health-care provider.⁽³⁷⁾ We note here that there is an inconsistency between the Children's Act, which requires immediate notification of birth, and the Civil Status Code, which states that notification must be given within 10 days. The Code will need to be amended in order to bring it into line with the Palestinian Children's Act.

148. The Ministry of the Interior operates in accordance with the Civil Status Code and its amendments, as well as the implementing regulations of the Code, which were approved by the Council of Ministers in 2009.

149. The rate of birth registration in Palestine (99.5 per cent), which is a component of the right to citizenship, is among the highest in the region according to the World Health Organization. In 2014, 78,174 births inside Palestine were registered in the birth register. A total of 12,519 births were registered outside Palestine in 2015. In 2016, there were 82,366 children born in Palestine and 11,898 children born outside the country. It should be noted that the parents of children born outside Palestine usually delay registering the birth of their children.

150. Registration procedures are the same for all Palestinians and no distinctions are made between them in order to ensure that all births are registered and facilitate procedures for citizens. The Palestinian Ministry of Interior has increased the number of civil registration offices and streamlined and accelerated registration procedures. If the child is registered within 10 days, no registration fees are charged and a free birth certificate is issued. After that, parents pay a penalty charge of up to 20 dinars for delaying the registration of the birth of their child.

Right to identity (article 8)

151. The right to identity is guaranteed to every child who has a parent with Palestinian identity. Both the father and the mother are entitled to register their children and to establish them as citizens. The father or mother of the child must also be registered in order for the child to obtain a national identification number, so that he can obtain an identity when he reaches the prescribed legal age. However, Palestinian identity and national identity numbers are linked to a population registry that is controlled by Israel, the occupying Power.

152. Article 16 of the Children's Act guarantees the right of the child to obtain a decent name that is neither degrading nor humiliating, and the parents of the child are obliged to uphold that right. The child is entitled to change his or her name by applying to the courts through his or her guardian or by requesting to change his or her name after reaching the age of majority. After obtaining a decision in that regard, the individual concerned is referred to the Ministry of the Interior. A court decision must be obtained providing for an individual's name to be changed by all government agencies.⁽³⁸⁾

153. A difficulty encountered in the birth registration process relates to the time taken by parents to register their children. To address that challenge, a number of actions have been taken by the Ministry of Interior to encourage people to register their children. Those actions include visiting mosques, particularly in villages, and using mosque pulpits to emphasize how birth registration facilitates efforts by the national authorities to plan for the future. The Ministry has also taken part in radio and television interviews on the subject, held networking meetings with municipalities and issued brochures to raise awareness among members of society and parents of the importance of birth registration.

154. The Ministry of the Interior is also planning to roll out an automated programme that will provide a direct link and facilitate cooperation with the Ministry of Health, so that births and deaths recorded by hospitals will be automatically registered in the population registry; this will facilitate the issuance of birth and death certificates, which will then be sent out in the post. The Ministry also plans to implement the same programme with the Bureau of the Chief Qadi to facilitate the registration of marriages and divorces. A challenge impeding the roll out of the programme is that a code must be assigned to each area of Palestine; this will require access to records controlled by Israel, the occupying Power, which are difficult to change without the agreement of the occupation authorities.

Preservation of identity

155. Article 7 of the Basic Law provides that: “Palestinian nationality is regulated by law.” Article 28 of that law states: “No Palestinian shall be expelled from the homeland, deprived of return, prevented from leaving, stripped of his nationality or handed over to any foreign party.” In accordance with article 28 of the Civil Status Code, Palestinians receive their identity cards when they reach 16 years of age. In order to obtain an identity card, he or she must provide a birth certificate in addition to documentation proving that one or both parents hold Palestinian identity.

156. Children under 16 years of age who are born abroad may apply for a Palestinian identity card provided that one or both of their parents have been given an official identification number. However, children between the ages of 16 and 18 who apply for an identity are not granted identity numbers or identity cards if they were born abroad to parents without Palestinian identity numbers. Palestinian nationality is given to children of a Palestinian mother and a non-Palestinian father.

157. The national registry and identity card system is associated with the Israeli occupation authorities, and therefore not all persons obtain identity cards even if they reside within the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In addition, children living permanently in East Jerusalem are not allowed to register in the Jerusalem registry if one of their parents is not resident in Jerusalem, and many Palestinian children are thus denied their right to live with one or both parents as a result of Israel’s rejection of family reunification requests. In that regard, the Committee on the Rights of the Child has urged the occupation authorities to take immediate steps to abolish all legal provisions that deprive Palestinian children of their right to be registered immediately after birth, their right to a nationality and their right to be cared for by their parents. The Committee has also urged the occupation authorities to transfer the population registry to the Palestinian Government.

158. With regard to children of unknown parentage, a manual on procedures to be followed with children of unknown parentage and children born out of wedlock has been developed by the Ministry of Social Development in partnership with the Ministry of the Interior and other partner institutions; the Ministry of Social Development monitors the child registration procedure, completes the birth notification form and places the stamp of the Ministry on that notification. After ensuring that the child’s file has been completed, the Ministry of Social Development sends the original file to the Ministry of the Interior, which registers the child and issues a birth certificate in his or her name.

Right to nationality (article 13)

159. The Palestinian National Charter of the Palestine Liberation Organization defines Palestinians as, “the Arab citizens who habitually resided in Palestine until 1947, whether those who were expelled therefrom or remained therein. Anyone born to a Palestinian Arab father after that date, in or outside Palestine, is Palestinian.” Article 18 of the Children’s Act provides: “Every Palestinian child shall have the right, immediately after birth, to Palestinian nationality in accordance with the provisions of the relevant law.” There is no Palestinian law on Palestinian nationality to date, because the State of Palestine is under Israeli occupation.

160. Palestinians in occupied Jerusalem must deal with numerous problems and inconsistencies when reporting and registering the birth of a resident child in the city. The occupation authorities have granted most Palestinians “permanent residence” rather than “Israeli nationality and have prevented them from obtaining Palestinian identity. Jerusalemites living abroad for more than seven years have difficulty registering a birth and obtaining birth certificates for their children from the occupying power, because their residency rights are liable to be revoked unless they are able to prove that East Jerusalem has been their “centre of life” for the previous seven years.

161. In its concluding observations on the periodic reports of Israel, the occupying Power, the Committee on the Rights of the Child considered the ban on the granting of Israeli citizenship to children born of an Israeli and a Palestinian parent, the decision of the Government of the Israeli occupation to stop processing so-called “residency” applications for Palestinian children since 2000 as well as the arbitrary revocation of residency and identity of those living in occupied Jerusalem, which have resulted in thousands of unregistered Palestinian children excluded from access to health and educational services as well as in thousands of children being prevented from living in dignity.

Freedom of expression and right to request, receive and impart information (article 13)

162. Article 19 of the Palestinian Basic Law provides that freedom of opinion and expression is a fundamental right that shall be enjoyed by all.⁽³⁹⁾ The Children’s Act also guarantees the right of the child to express his or her opinion and provides for the views of the child to be taken into consideration in accordance with his or her age and maturity.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Article 33 of that Act provides: “The child shall have the right to request, receive, transmit and impart all types of information and ideas provided that this does not run counter to public order and morality.”

163. A website for children has been created by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics and can be accessed from its web page. The website presents statistical data and figures in an articulate, attractive, clear and user-friendly format so that children, and particularly school students, can easily access statistical information. Furthermore, the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation broadcasts a special programme, entitled “Bayt Buyut”, that reaches out to children and promotes their creativity by giving children from different parts of Palestine the opportunity to engage with an important female broadcast journalist.

164. The amended decree-law on cybercrime, which was adopted in 2017, places certain restrictions on freedom of expression for both adults and children.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 14)

165. The Basic Law provides that Islam is the official religion of Palestine, and that respect for the sanctity of all other divine religions shall be maintained. Palestinian legislation also provides that a child shall be protected from any influence on his or her faith, and that children shall, in normal circumstances, adopt the religion of their fathers and continue to adhere to that religion until they attain the legal age of 18 years, at which time they shall be able to choose to exercise their religious rights.

166. If a child chooses to change his or her religion and his or her parents object, he or she can appeal to the courts. In addition, article 18 of the Basic Law provides that: “Freedom of belief, worship and performance of religious rituals are guaranteed, provided that they do not violate public order or public morals.” No judicial rulings have been made on that matter.

Freedom of association and of peaceful assembly (article 15)

167. Article 34 of the Children’s Act provides for the establishment of children’s associations, freedom to join associations and clubs, and freedom to hold public meetings. There are, however, no associations in Palestine that have been established exclusively by children. There are a number of associations active in areas of relevance to children, including associations that work with children with disabilities or provide rehabilitation services. As regards bodies whose membership is made up of children, reference has already been made in the present report to the Palestinian Children's Council.

168. With the support of World Vision International, the Ministry of Education started thinking of establishing student parliaments in 2002, and there are now approximately 50 student parliaments in the West Bank. The formation of those parliaments and parliamentary elections are held with the support of educational counsellors in schools. Internal regulations and guidelines for those parliaments have also been drawn up. The parliaments endeavour to address behavioural problems, reduce violence, support students' personal development, enhance communication between teaching staff and students and strengthen students' involvement in the educational curriculum.

Protection of privacy (article 16)

169. The Basic Law provides that adequate attention shall be accorded to the privacy of the individual, while the Palestinian Children's Act stipulates that the privacy of the child shall be respected, while taking into account the rights and duties of the child's parents and guardians.⁽⁴¹⁾

170. With regard to respect for the privacy of the child in judicial proceedings, if a child is brought before the judiciary, most hearings will be held in private if this is requested by the child or his or her legal representative, or if the judge deems that doing so is in the interests of the child, in accordance with decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles. In order to maintain confidentiality, it is prohibited for any person to access any electronic or hard copy information relating to child obtained by the judiciary and the Office of the Public Prosecutor, including information contained in claims and complaints, unless that person is involved directly in the case and has obtained prior authorization from the court. Anyone who accesses or discloses information or data relevant to the case is liable to prosecution under the law. The Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children has established an independent electronic portal to facilitate the work of juvenile prosecutors. All forms, records and notes can be uploaded to that portal in accordance with the law and members of the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children can carry out all proceedings in judicial cases involving juveniles and children electronically.

171. Under sharia law, court proceedings are normally held in public. They may, however, be held in closed session if the parties or the judge are of the opinion that this is in the interest of the family. Access to confidential information is only granted to the owners of that information.

172. Privacy is also guaranteed in situations in which social workers deal with cases of child abuse, and the code of conduct governing their work contains a specific section on that subject. Their files are kept confidential and every effort is made to ensure that no one can access them without special permission.

173. Numerous measures are taken to preserve the privacy of children in care institutions run by the State and only relevant parties are authorized to view a child's personal file. Children also enjoy the right to confidentiality insofar as their correspondence and communications with their families is concerned during their stay at the care institution. In terms of their living environment, a child residing in a care institution will share their room with others.

174. The Independent Commission for Human Rights documents cases of persons whose privacy has been violated, including children. The law protects the right of the child to privacy in cases where he is the perpetrator of an offence, a victim or a witness. The Mizan programme allows the user to keep any information specific to the child confidential to prevent its dissemination; that information is kept in a safe and confidential data storage file and is unavailable to non-authorized persons. Furthermore in that regard, little data is available from the children themselves about their perceptions of whether their right to privacy is being respected or not.

Access to information from a diversity of sources and protection from material harmful to the well-being of the child (article 17)

175. The Children's Information Service (a specialized department within the Ministry of Information) prepares reports on the fundamental rights of children and encourages audio, visual and print media providers to produce programmes and material for children. The Ministry of Information also instructs radio and television stations to pay attention to and promote respect for children's rights. Nonetheless, newspapers continue to provide only scant coverage of issues affecting children.

176. The overall strategy of the Ministry of Information is to support governmental and non-governmental bodies involved in efforts to raise awareness of and promote respect for the rights of children by focusing on child-related themes, using various media platforms to disseminate information relevant to those themes, working with the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation and promoting special programmes broadcast on International Children's Day and Palestinian Children's Day.

177. The Ministry of Information is also seeking to address the issue of the economic exploitation of children by providing training to media personnel and using the media to raise public awareness of that issue. In that connection, a workshop was held for Palestinian media personnel under the theme, "Together to stop the economic exploitation of Palestinian children" and a network of Palestinian journalists has been established to combat violence against children. The Ministry is also supporting the formation of national networks to combat economic exploitation, and awards prizes for investigative media reports on child labour.

178. The Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation broadcasts a number of daily programmes for children. Careful consideration is given to the educational, psychological and technical aspects of those programmes during the drafting and production stages. Experienced specialized writers prepare and draft scripts for those programmes and work closely with governmental and non-governmental institutions. Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation production teams focus on children's issues both during live broadcasts on the Palestine channel and in reports that are broadcast during children's programmes or as part of local news bulletins. The Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation also covers a wide range of international events related to children and has engaged directly with children by inviting schools to visit its headquarters so that school children can learn about the work done by its staff.

179. Palestinian television also allocates half an hour of airtime every day to children's programmes, which include cartoon series in addition to educational and entertainment programmes. All programmes, including those broadcast outside the period dedicated to children's programmes, comply with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which are used as a reference in that respect.⁽⁴²⁾

180. The telecommunications company Paltel provides citizens with Internet services in most parts of Palestine, either directly or through its authorized suppliers. Statistics for 2014 show that 48.3 per cent of Palestinian households have Internet access, which includes 51.4 per cent of households in the West Bank and 42.2 per cent in Gaza.

181. A draft law on the right to access information is currently being drawn up.

Blocking pornographic sites

182. A decision was taken in 2012 to prohibit pornographic sites with a view to protecting children, adolescents and the fabric of Palestinian society, and a ministerial decision was issued requiring Internet providers to block such sites. Article 36 of the Children's Act also provides: "It is prohibited to publish, display, circulate or possess any printed or audiovisual material aimed at arousing the instincts of children that may induce them to behave in a manner that is contrary to public order and morality or encourage them to deviate from the right path."

183. The Palestinian police and certain non-governmental organizations, including World Vision International, have held seminars to raise awareness among parents regarding the importance of monitoring their children's use of the Internet in addition to seminars on the need for Internet service providers to shut down pornographic sites.

National Libraries

184. The Ministry of Culture is supporting the expansion and diffusion of libraries. Children's activities have been organized during the Palestine International Book Fair since 2014 in the West Bank. The Book Fair was visited by 5,567 students and children from 154 schools from the various governorates in Palestine.

185. During the ninth Palestine International Book Fair, held in 2014, the Palestinian Ministry of Culture purchased books and publications worth $50,000, which were distributed to schools, kindergartens and cultural centres and disseminated on the Internet. During the tenth Palestine International Book Fair, held in 2016, the Ministry, supported by the President of the State of Palestine, purchased books and publications worth $100,000, which were then distributed to schools, kindergartens and cultural centres.

186. Children enjoy access to 104 public libraries in the West Bank, 46 public libraries in the Gaza Strip and 11 public libraries in East Jerusalem. The Ministry of Culture also oversees six libraries for the blind in the West Bank.⁽⁴³⁾ The Ministry plans to provide additional funding to cultural centres and libraries to enable them to update their stock, and will continue to support the country's Cultural Development Fund.

187. In cooperation with the Ministry of Education and other institutions, the Tamer Institute for Community Education, a non-governmental organization, works with children and encourages reading among children and adolescents through its provision of support to mobile libraries. The Institute, which is active in the West Bank and Gaza, seeks to foster a culture of reading among students and children and focuses on Arab heritage in its initiatives to encourage reading and learning.

4. Violence against children (articles 19, 24 (paragraph 3), 28 (paragraph 2), 34, 37 (a) and 39)

(a) Ill-treatment and neglect (article 19)

188. Under article 13 of the Basic Law, all forms of ill-treatment are prohibited. Article 29.2 provides that children have the right to be protected against abuse and cruel treatment, and this is reaffirmed in articles 42 and 68 of the Children's Act.⁽⁴⁴⁾ The Children's Act also obliges any person who believes that there is a threat to the safety of a child or that a child is placed in danger to inform the child protection counsellor accordingly. Anyone who is proven to have violated the Children's Act is liable to prosecution. Furthermore, the policy on violence and discipline in schools emphasizes measures and procedures to be taken against those who commit acts of violence in schools.

189. The Code of Conduct for care home staff expressly prohibits corporal punishment in care homes. Corporal punishment is also prohibited in care arrangements.

190. In accordance with its mandate under the Children's Act, the Ministry of Social Development oversees the social protection sector in Palestine, in partnership and coordination with other relevant institutions. The Ministry of Social Development has also set up a child protection department, which includes a number of child protection counsellors who, under the law, act as law enforcement officers to ensure compliance with the Children's Act and intervene to protect children in all situations in which their safety is threatened.

191. When a child protection counsellor receives any communication that a child is being subjected to violence or neglect, he or she meets the child and the caregiver to hear their statements and responses regarding the facts reported. The child protection counsellor then visits the place where the child is located, and carries out that visit either alone or accompanied by those who believe his or her presence is needed. In carrying out that visit, the child protection counsellor is required to show his or her identity badge to prove his or her status. If the counsellor is unable to enter the place in question, he or she may request assistance from the police. If the place is a dwelling, a judicial order will be issued to facilitate entry. Measures are then taken to protect the child, who may be allowed to remain with his or her family, be placed with another family or be placed in a temporary protection centre.

192. In 2009, the Ministry of Social Development launched a child protection network,⁽⁴⁵⁾ which brings together representatives of all government and non-governmental institutions concerned with the protection of children. The network operates in accordance with the national transfer and follow-up system and endeavours to coordinate the provision of services and streamline efforts by governmental and non-governmental entities to protect and care for children who have been subjected to various forms of violence. The network operates through technical committees that have been established in all the country's governorates, which provide protection, care and follow-up services to child victims of violence, in accordance with the intervention plan drawn up for the child in question and the child's best interests.

193. The network operates in accordance with the transfer system for child victims of violence which was reviewed by the Council of Ministers in late 2018 and renamed the "guidelines on the transfer and networking system for child victims of violence."⁽⁴⁶⁾ Those guidelines set forth the procedures that must be followed when dealing with child victims of violence, neglect or exploitation, the forms that must be completed, and the situations in which a meeting to discuss the situation of the child must be held. If the child is in danger, a meeting to discuss the child's case is held by staff at the Ministry of Social Development and partner organizations and the child is then transferred to a shelter. Protection arrangements are always in line with the provisions of the Children's Act. Table 11 sets forth the names of the institutions comprising the child protection network.

194. With the support of UNICEF, a database on children subjected to violence and children of unknown parentage has been created by the Ministry of Social Development. That database was created with the aim of strengthening the monitoring and evaluation system for those children and developing statistical indicators for all categories of children. In addition, questionnaires have been designed for all categories, as well as computer-based models and training courses on the use of the system for staff at the Department of Child Protection, child protection counsellors and protection centre personnel. The application and use of the database in the field was tested in 2016.

195. With the support of UNICEF, an evaluation of the child protection system in Palestine was conducted by the Ministry of Social Development in 2016. A number of recommendations were made regarding revisions to the guidelines on the transfer and networking system for child victims of violence. That evaluation led to the formulation of a national strategic plan for the protection of children for the years 2018–2022, which was drafted with input from with the participation of groups of children.⁽⁴⁷⁾

196. According to the annual reports of the child protection network in the West Bank for the years 2014 and 2015, a total of 1,010 children were subjected to sexual assault, physical abuse, economic exploitation, neglect and ill-treatment, including 572 male and 438 female children. In 2016, the total was 566, including 334 male and 232 female children. In 2017 the total was 387, including 214 male children and 173 female children. Table 12 shows how many children were subjected to various forms of abuse and ill-treatment.

197. The Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents, which was established by the Palestinian Police, has offices in all governorates. It provides protection and support to women and children and includes specialized and qualified personnel who wear civilian clothing while performing their duties. The Palestinian Police have also developed a standard procedure manual that addresses the procedures that officers must follow when dealing with children. The Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents ensures the personal security of child victims of abuse, their families and child protection counsellors during the intervention process, and also ensures that members of the child protection network are protected while carrying out their duties.⁽⁴⁸⁾

198. The Ministry of Health has trained medical and nursing staff and psychologists on the mechanisms of early detection of abuse, violence and neglect in children, in addition to the country's transfer and networking system. The Ministry also has a system for collecting and corroborating information on cases of abuse, violence and neglect in six governorates.

The Ministry of Health plans to train other staff in the remaining governorates and then expand its protection programme to cover the private health-care sector.

199. The Office of the Public Prosecutor received 1,224 complaints from children regarding other individuals in 2014. The details of the complainants and the accusations made by the children (child victims) are shown in table 14.

200. In 2013, the Ministry of Education developed a policy on school violence with a view to protecting students and teachers from various forms of abuse, including corporal punishment, and creating a non-violent environment conducive to education. That policy is based on the Public Education Act and the Children's Act, which provide that children have a right to protection and are entitled to learn in a safe and stimulating environment free of fear and intimidation.⁽⁴⁹⁾

201. The most recent survey of violence in Palestinian society conducted by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics (carried out in 2011) found that 20 per cent of school children between the ages of 12 and 17 had experienced violence at school. For the West Bank the figure was 21.6 per cent and for Gaza the figure was 22.7 per cent. The survey found that psychological violence was the most common form of violence perpetrated, with 25 per cent of the children who had experienced violence having been subjected to psychological violence perpetrated by other students, and 27.6 per cent having been subjected to psychological violence at the hands of teachers. In contrast, 21.4 per cent had been subjected to physical violence by teachers and 14.2 per cent had been subjected to physical violence by other students. Children who took part in the national consultations indicated that acts of verbal violence still take place in schools.

202. Psychological and educational counselling services are provided to students by educational counsellors, who work in schools with children who are subjected to abuse, violence and neglect. Cases that cannot be dealt with by educational counsellors are referred to child protection networks. A total of 1,100 educational counsellors work in public schools in the West Bank and Gaza. However, although they are present in more than 90 per cent of schools in the Gaza Strip, educational counsellors are present in less than 60 per cent of public schools overall. Educational counsellors act as representatives of the Ministry of Education within the child protection networks overseen by the Ministry of Social Development.

203. A number of institutions in Palestine undertake awareness-raising activities in schools and cultural centres, particularly in marginalized areas, with a view to educating children and parents about the need to protect children against violence, the role of the police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents and the child protection networks, reporting and complaint mechanisms, and measures to prevent violence within schools. Table 13 provides an overview of the stakeholders who have attended awareness-raising activities.

204. The Office of the Public Prosecutor has developed special procedures for dealing with cases of violence against children, including those involving complaints made by children and those in which complaints have been made against a child. The child in question is protected at all times. There are also two specialized departments within the Office of the Public Prosecutor that deal with cases involving juveniles and family violence. In February 2016, another department, named the Family Protection Office, was established within the Office of the Public Prosecutor.

Child victims of violence perpetrated by the Israeli occupation authorities

205. The Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees and the child protection networks endeavour to address the situation of child victims of violence perpetrated by the Israeli occupation authorities. Reports on those children are drawn up and disseminated by the Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees to facilitate their release from custody. If the Ministry believes that the released child requires psychological support, he or she is transferred to a partner institution within the child protection networks.

206. The Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees became a member of the child protection network committees in 2016. This is an important step in that the committees work with children who have been held in arbitrary detention by Israel and, as a governmental body, the Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees can provide legal support to children held in detention by the occupation authorities.

207. The Head of the Occupational and Social Counselling Department at the Commission immediately informs the child protection counsellor and transfers the child to the child protection network which addresses the situation and provides appropriate psychological assistance. In cases in which it is ascertained that serious ill-treatment and abuse has been inflicted on the child in detention, such as acts of physical torture or sexual assault, and that the child will require long-term treatment and psychological rehabilitation, the Commission informs the child protection counsellor and then refers the child to a mental health clinic run by the Palestinian Ministry of Health or another partner institution that provides mental health-care services.

208. Palestinian children are exploited by the Israeli occupation authorities as informants, whereby those authorities intimidate or threaten Palestinian children or take advantage of their mental state to encourage them to cooperate with them and work as informants. In exchange, the occupation authorities offer to release them from detention or provide them with a small allowance. All this leaves a long-term psychological impact on the child. Although it is difficult to corroborate such cases, Defense for Children International has, since 2006, corroborated 16 cases of children who have been pressurized or enticed to become informants but who have refused to do so.

(b) Measures to prevent and eliminate all forms of harmful practices, including female genital mutilation and early and forced marriage (article 24 (paragraph 3))

209. According to article 44 of the Children's Act, the forced marriage of a male or female child is a grave offence. Such marriages are prohibited and pose a threat to the child's psychological and physical well-being.⁽⁵⁰⁾ If it is proven that the marriage was contracted under duress, the marriage contract is annulled if the wife so requests. In such cases, the wife may refuse to conclude the marriage and to move to her husband's house, and she may request the annulment of the marriage contract. If she has married her husband of her own free will and is satisfied with the marriage contract, the contract becomes valid.

210. The marriage of girls and boys under the legal age of maturity still takes place in the State of Palestine. In 2015, some 20.3 per cent of females and 1.1 per cent of males who got married were younger than 18 years old.

211. According to the results of the 2017 population, housing and establishments census, 10.8 per cent of women aged 20–24 in Palestine were married before they were 18 years old. For the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, that figure was 8.5 per cent and for the Gaza Strip it was 13.8 per cent.

212. Female circumcision is not prevalent in Palestine.

(c) Sexual exploitation and sexual abuse (article 34)

213. Although sexual abuse and exploitation are forms of violence that are perpetrated against children, all relevant information in that regard is provided in the section entitled "Special protection measures".

(d) The right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, including corporal punishment (articles 37 (a) and 28 (paragraph 2))

214. Article 13 of the Basic Law and article 68 of the Children's Act expressly prohibit anyone from being subjected to any physical or mental coercion or torture or to any form of cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment. The accused and other persons deprived of their liberty, including children, are properly treated. The Child Act provides: "1. The child has the right to be protected from all forms of physical, psychological or sexual violence or abuse, neglect, negligent treatment, displacement or other forms of ill-treatment or exploitation." Furthermore, the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles provides: "Every juvenile shall enjoy the right to treatment commensurate with his age that protects his honour and dignity and facilitates his integration into society. The juvenile shall not be subjected to physical or psychological torture, or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.”

215. Prosecutors at the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children must conduct interviews with juveniles in a manner commensurate with their age. To that end certain parameters are established for the first interview with a juvenile, notably that the prosecutor will sit and talk to that juvenile in a certain manner and will involve him or her in the discussions and listen to his or her point of view. According to statistics, there were no documented cases of children reporting that they had been tortured by the Palestinian security services in 2014 and 2015.

The arrest and torture of Palestinian children by the Israeli occupation forces

216. According to statistics provided by from the Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees, 1,384 children were arrested in 2016, all of whom reported that they had been subjected, to varying degrees, to one or more forms of torture, maltreatment, humiliating treatment and deprivation of basic human rights.⁽⁵¹⁾

217. One the most important findings of the Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees report on children arrested by the Israeli occupation forces is that 324 out of the 429 Palestinian children arrested between 2012 and 2015 were subjected to physical violence. Israeli interrogators used verbal abuse and threats and solitary confinement to extract confessions from a number of children detained. All children convicted by the occupation forces between 2012 and 2015 received custodial sentences.

218. The Israeli occupation authorities impose two different and separate legal systems in the West Bank: settlers are subject to civil and criminal law while Palestinians are subject to military law. Palestinian children resident in occupied Jerusalem are subject to the provisions of the Israeli Juveniles Act, which are imposed on them in a discriminatory manner.

219. When compared with its application to Israeli children, the law is, in practice, applied in a discriminatory manner to Palestinian children living in Jerusalem who are in conflict with the law. The Israeli occupation police have denied the rights of Palestinian children living in Jerusalem during their detention and interrogation. Indeed, exceptions have become the norm when the occupation authorities deal with Palestinian Jerusalemite children and there is clear racial discrimination in the application of the law.⁽⁵²⁾ Although different legal systems apply to Palestinian children, whereby Palestinians in occupied Jerusalem are subject to Israeli civil law and Palestinians in the rest of the West Bank, Palestinian children in East Jerusalem and the West Bank are all subjected to ill-treatment from the moment of their arrest and throughout their interrogation. The placing of Palestinian children under house arrest is systematic practice of the occupying Power.

(e) Measures to promote the physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of child victims (article 39).

220. The Children’s Act guarantees care and rehabilitation measures for child victims of violence and children at risk of delinquency. Such measures include the placement of children in appropriate vocational, cultural, sports or social training courses and/or temporary placement in a family, social, educational or appropriate public or private health-care institution.

221. Through its various institutions, the Palestinian Government endeavours to reintegrate children into nuclear, extended or foster families. The placement of children in an institution or shelter is seen as an option of last resort. The situation of those children is monitored by families and psychological counselling services are provided to them and their families in coordination with competent civil society institutions. Child victims of violence, neglect, economic exploitation and underage employment are rehabilitated through a range of psychological, social and vocational rehabilitation measures.

222. The State also endeavours to rehabilitate child victims of economic exploitation and employment at vocational training centres run by the Ministry of Labour. A number of measures are taken to promote the reintegration of children into society, including reuniting those children with their families while ensuring that their families make a commitment that they will no longer allow their children to work, reintegrating those children into school, and providing financial assistance to their families if they are in financial need. If it is not possible to return a child to his or her family within an agreed time frame, he or she is placed in a child protection centre. Cases are also monitored by child protection networks in the various regions of the country.

223. A number of non-governmental organizations in Palestine offer psychosocial support services for children and the family, such as the Palestinian Counseling Center, which provides psychological and social support to children and their caregivers through 11 technical committees which form part of the child protection networks in the West Bank. The Palestinian Red Crescent Society also provides psychosocial services to children at eight centres throughout the State of Palestine.

(f) Telephone helplines for children

224. Although there is no government-run telephone helpline to assist and protect child victims of violence, a helpline is managed by the SAWA Foundation, a non-governmental organization. Every year, the Palestinian Child Protection Line receives between 1,500 and 2,500 documented calls regarding various types of violence. In 2014 and 2015, more than 60 per cent of callers were female, 72 of callers were under 21 years of age, and between 60 and 70 per cent of callers were from Gaza.⁽⁵³⁾

225. Depending on the needs of the child, some child victims of violence are transferred to child protection networks for follow up. The consent of victims is obtained before they are transferred.

226. The Government is seeking to address the serious ongoing and institutional challenges facing the national child protection system; The Ministry of Social Development, as the official body responsible for the protection of children, faces serious challenges in providing critical services to the large number of children in need of protection, social integration and rehabilitation due to its weak logistics capacity and insufficient human resources. Counselling services are not available in all public schools and action still needs to be taken to mainstream national preventive measures to reduce violence rather than to continue to provide treatment services to a growing number of child victims of violence. There is also a need for a unified national database shared by all child protection institutions.

5. Family environment and alternative care (articles 5, 9–11, 18 (paragraphs 1 and 2), 19–21, 25, 27 (paragraph 4) and 39)

(a) Parental guidance (article 5)

227. The Children's Act affirms the right of the child to be cared for, protected, raised and maintained by his or her family.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The Ministry of Social Development is responsible for providing social support with a view to strengthening family relations and supporting the rehabilitation of families, especially families living in difficult circumstances or which include family members who require special care. The Ministry also provides assistance to families in need so that they can become more active and productive.

228. The Ministry of Social Development has established the Department for the Protection of the Child and the Family, together with subordinate offices in each district. The Department undertakes preventative and treatment interventions to uphold the right of the child to live in a safe, appropriate and developmentally sound and protective environment. In the majority of situations, this is the family environment.

(b) Parental responsibility (article 18, paragraphs 1 and 2)

229. The Children's Act obliges both parents to work together in a responsible manner to care for, raise and educate their children, in accordance with their level of maturity and development.⁽⁵⁵⁾ Specific articles provide that parents and educators have a responsibility to provide care, support and guidance to children in their care. Article 21 of the Children's Act provides that caregivers who neglect their duty to care for a child are subject to punishment.⁽⁵⁶⁾ The Act also obliges caregivers to ensure that the child receives food, clothing, housing, education and health-care. If the father or guardian cannot afford to do so, the cost is covered by the Maintenance Fund.

230. The penal laws in force provide for the punishment of a parent or guardian who refuses or neglects to provide a child with food, clothing, bedding and other necessities, thereby harming the child's health, and of a parent or guardian who abandons a child under 12 years of age without a legitimate reason or reasonable grounds despite being able to support that child.

231. Article 31 of the Children's Code stipulates the categories of children entitled to social assistance. According to the Act, those are: "orphaned children, children of unknown parentage, children in social institutions, children without a provider, children with disabilities and chronically ill children, children whose homes have been destroyed or burned down, twins ages up to three years, and the children and families of those have been imprisoned, have disappeared or are unable to work due to illness or disability." In practice, financial assistance is not provided to all orphans.

232. Under the Civil Service Act, female employees receive leave with full pay for a period of 10 consecutive weeks before and after giving birth. A nursing mother has the right to leave work one hour before the end of the working day for a year following the birth of the child.

(c) Separation from parents (article 9)

233. The Children's Act provides that only in exceptional circumstances may the child be removed from his or her family or placed in one of the forms of alternative care. Such circumstances exist if there is a danger that the child will be mistreated or if the child has no family to care for him or her. The right of a child who is separated from one or both parents to maintain personal relations and direct contact with both parents is respected, unless it is contrary to the child's best interests.

234. Working with the police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents and pursuant to a decision issued by the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the child protection counsellor may remove a child from his or her family, provided that this provides better protection for the child and is in his or her interests. The removal of the child from his or her parents is seen as an option of last resort. Following the child's removal, a plan of action involving the child and the child's family is drawn up with a view to returning the child to the family. A judicial review is then conducted. The child is removed from his or her family only when there are no other options available. The situation of the child is evaluated in case meetings that are convened by the child protection counsellor together with other social partners.

235. There are two centres for the protection of child victims of violence in the West Bank, namely the Beituniya Centre in Ramallah for males and the Girls' Care Home in Beit Jala for females. The child protection counsellor works with those centres to ensure implementation of the intervention plans that are drawn up when children are admitted. Children at the centres remain in contact with their parents through telephone calls or visits, provided that this is in their best interest. A child at one of the centres is evaluated regularly, in accordance with his or her intervention plan, and implementation of the plan is assessed by the child protection counsellor who remains in contact with the child's family.

236. Child victims of violence and neglect are placed in those centres in order to provide them with temporary emergency protection and a series of services, including psychological and social rehabilitation services, which are provided in coordination with relevant social and psychological support institutions. The Girls' Care Home provided shelter and rehabilitation services to 34 girls in 2015, to 44 girls in 2016 and to 42 girls in 2017. The Beituniya Centre in Ramallah provided shelter and rehabilitation services to 20 boys in 2015 and to 70 boys in 2017.

Table 15 provides details on the number of girls admitted to the Girls' Care Home

(d) Family reunification (article 10)

237. Thousands of Palestinians are prevented from entering or leaving the country because of the Israeli occupation authorities, which exercise total control over the Palestinian population registry in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, as well as control over the issuance of identity cards and visiting permits. Palestine is also unable to facilitate the return of any Palestinian from the diaspora who wishes to return to its territory, even if the Palestinian is the husband or wife of a Palestinian who carries a Palestinian identity card.

238. Families in which one spouse is from Gaza and the other is from the West Bank may be broken up. Under arbitrary Israeli military laws, a resident of the West Bank can be deported to the Gaza Strip if the identity card was issued in Gaza.

239. The situation of the residents of occupied Jerusalem is the most difficult, since the Israeli Citizenship Act remains in force in the city, distinguishing between individuals on ethnic and national grounds. Palestinians from inside the Green Line who marry Palestinians from the West Bank or the Gaza Strip are also prohibited from granting their spouses Israeli citizenship or residency rights. This situation has resulted in the rejection of hundreds of family reunification requests and/or residency rights for their spouses and children.

240. Thousands of requests for family reunification and requests for personal identification cards have been submitted to the Palestinian Ministry of the Interior, but are still awaiting the approval of the Israeli occupation authorities. The Palestinian Government is unable to grant family reunification permits until it has received approval from the Israeli occupation authorities. Thus, the families in question either remain in the Occupied Palestinian Territory in a manner that Israel, the occupying Power, considers illegal, or they break up, with different family members scattered in the West Bank, Jerusalem, Gaza and abroad. The forcible deportation of Palestinians by the Israeli occupation authorities is an ongoing phenomenon.

(e) Recovery of maintenance for the child (article 27 (paragraph 4))

241. Article 29 of the Children's Code provides: "The father or guardian of the child is obliged to cover the cost of maintaining the child." If the father has the necessary resources, he shall bear primary responsibility for the child's maintenance. If he does not, responsibility shall fall to other parties, such as the child's grandfather, mother or uncle, in accordance with the Personal Status Code for Muslims. If the child's family is poor and cannot maintain the child on its own, or if the child has lost his father and has no one to support him, the costs of maintaining the child shall be covered by the Maintenance Fund.

242. Decisions are made with respect to child maintenance and support payments by Islamic and Christian religious courts. In accordance with the 1976 Personal Status Code, other relatives of the child may be required to maintain the child if the father dies or cannot afford to provide child support.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The resources of the Palestinian Authority Maintenance Fund are used to cover the costs associated with the implementation of rulings, including child maintenance payments, which are collected as fees by the religious courts. The Fund was established pursuant to a decree-law issued by the President of the State of Palestine in 2015.

243. As regards the children of a Christian family, the maintenance of the child is regulated in accordance with the provisions of the Personal Status Code for Christians.⁽⁵⁸⁾ Article 164 of the 1954 Personal Status Code of the Diocese of the Latin Patriarchate of Jerusalem provides: "All forms of maintenance shall be paid by the father to his poor underage son or daughter. When a male child reaches the age at which he can earn his own living, the father will help set him up in life. He will also marry off his daughter. If the father dies, the child will be maintained by his or her mother provided she has the means to do so and, if not, by the child's close relatives if they have the means to do so, and if they do not, by the child's more distant relatives." The Personal Status Code of the Catholic Sects⁽⁵⁹⁾ also stipulates that the father must pay for the maintenance of his children until his male children reach the age at which they can earn a living and until his female children marry. Pursuant to both the Personal Status Code of the Diocese of the Latin Patriarchate of Jerusalem and the Personal Status Code of the Catholic Sects, if the mother complains that the father does not provide any or only inadequate financial support for their child, the courts may order him to pay maintenance to the child's mother, which she can then spend on that child.

244. In cases in which the father fails to pay maintenance for the child, the Ministry of Social Development will provide assistance to the family if sufficient resources are available, and if the child's family is in need of assistance.

245. The Ministry provides its services to beneficiaries through a cash transfer programme called the National Programme for Social Protection, the Development Assistance Programme, which is administered by The World Food Programme, and the Emergency Programme. The Ministry also provides free health insurance, university and school fee exemptions and runs economic empowerment projects.⁽⁶⁰⁾

(f) Children deprived of their family environment (article 20)

246. The Ministry of Social Development endeavours to address the situation of children deprived of their family environment, and seeks to provide care to children who have lost their father or both of their parents. In cooperation with the Red Crescent Society of the United Arab Emirates, the Ministry provides maintenance payments to cover the cost of psychological and social assistance for orphaned children, including those with disabilities, and for their families.⁽⁶¹⁾ The Ministry also seeks to expand the scope of the financial support provided to orphans by strengthening partnerships with local communities and zakat committees. Children are entitled to receive maintenance payments if they lose their father or both parents.

247. Palestine provides financial support to the mothers of children who have lost their fathers, regardless of the mother's current marital status, by transferring funds to their accounts. In the case of orphans who reside in a care institution or who are looked after by a relative, the payment is made into the sharia court orphan fund. The party caring for the orphan obtains a certificate of guardianship from the sharia court and then receives the payment from the court. The Ministry of Social Development, working through specialized counsellors in the country's districts monitors marginalized groups, while the Ministry's Department of Orphans has established maintenance funds for orphans, families and orphans with disabilities to help them meet their basic needs.

248. In 2014 and 2015, the Ministry of Social Development provided maintenance for orphans, including orphans with disabilities, as well for families, with the support of the Red Crescent Society of the United Arab Emirates. Maintenance payments are approximately $600 per year, equivalent to approximately $50 per month. Orphans with disabilities are entitled to higher maintenance payments and receive $80 per month. As for an orphan who lives with a poor family, the family will receive a family maintenance payment (a new form of payment) of between $120 and $130 per month. The Red Crescent Society of the United Arab Emirates stopped paying maintenance payments in 2016. The Ministry has sought to find another source of funding to continue making maintenance payments for orphans and, in that regard, is awaiting an official response from the Oman Charitable Organization.

249. In addition to the Ministry of Social Development, the following bodies also contribute to the maintenance funds for orphans: the zakat committees, Human Appeal International (United Arab Emirates), Islamic Relief and the Attadamun Charitable Society. The Islamic Charitable Society in Hebron has used donations from within Palestine and from abroad to provide homes to 5,000 male and female orphans.

250. The sharia courts monitor the guardians and trustees of orphan children; the latter cannot dispose of the child's financial assets unless permission is granted by the sharia court following verification that doing so is in the child's interest.

251. Children of unknown parentage and orphans deprived of a family environment are sometimes cared for in private institutions or foster families under the supervision of the Ministry of Social Development; the situation of children deprived of their family environment is addressed by the official authorities, which entrust those children into the care of those institutions. There are five private child care institutions in Palestine.

252. Those institutions provide comprehensive protection and care to children deprived of a family environment, and provide many forms of care, including, in particular, healthcare, legal assistance, social and psychological care and educational support in both kindergarten and school. Each child receives the particular care that he or she requires, and those institutions provide the services of specialized staff, including nannies, (who can act as the child's mother) kindergarten teachers, specialists (in nursing, paediatrics, social and psychological services, occupational and motor therapy), as well as kitchen, cleaning and maintenance and other support staff.

253. The Ministry of Social Development was aware of 253 children whose fathers had died in the Gaza Strip and 117 children whose fathers had died in the West Bank in 2015. Table 16 shows the number of children in Palestine who are registered with the Ministry of Social Development as having lost either mothers or fathers. Maintenance payments were approved for an additional 137 orphans in 2015.

254. It is challenging to address the situation of orphans without a database containing information of all the support being provided to those children by the various entities and bodies active in that area. The Ministry's Department of Orphans is now selecting coordinators to develop statistics on orphans in care institutions in the West Bank, with a view to drawing up intervention strategies and monitoring institutions and associations concerned with orphans in order to ensure that they provide appropriate care. Children who have been separated from their parents (due to violence, or in order to provide them with protection, or for other reasons), are placed in the same facilities as children deprived of a family environment, including orphans and other children deprived of family care.

255. To support orphans over 18 years of age, work is underway to conclude agreements with Palestinian universities that will exempt orphans from paying university fees, which will help them complete their university studies, and arrangements are being made with the Red Crescent Society of the United Arab Emirates for the provision of awards to outstanding orphan students in State secondary schools.

Table 17 shows the number of orphans in various care institutions in the West Bank

(g) Periodic review of child placement (article 25)

256. As part of their review of the remedial measures taken to address the situation of child victims of violence, child protection counsellors undertake ongoing periodic reviews of the measures taken within the context of the transfer system and they verify that those measures are still appropriate to the needs of the child and continue to promote his or her best interests.⁽⁶²⁾

(h) Adoption (article 21)

257. Palestine has adopted laws to uphold the best interests of the child and his or her right to care. Article 32 of the Children's Act provides for the right of children deprived of their family environment to alternative care, either in a foster family or a public or private social welfare institution.⁽⁶³⁾ Adoption, in the universally recognized sense of the word, does not exist in Palestine. The alternative to adoption, for religious reasons, is the kafalah (sponsorship) or foster placement system.

258. Under the kafalah system, the needs of the sponsored individual are addressed fully, including his or her food and drink, clothing, education, and health care requirements. The sponsored child enjoys rights equal to the sponsor's own son with the exception of the legal rights stemming from family lineage such as those relating to marriage and inheritance. The following documents shall be issued for the sponsored child: a birth certificate providing an invented four-part name and reason for being placed in foster care. A passport may be issued for the child in accordance with the decision of the Child Placement Committee. No distinction is made among children in the application of those provisions. A Palestinian child can be adopted internationally provided that the adopting family is Palestinian family residing abroad.

259. The “foster system” is regulated by the Foster System Regulations, which were issued by the Cabinet of Ministers in 2013. Those regulations apply to children of unknown parentage and children deprived of care within their own families.

260. The regulations set forth the modalities by which families can apply to provide foster care, and the conditions that foster families must meet. The regulations also provide for formation of a foster care committee that is headed by the Ministry of Social Development and whose membership includes officials from the sharia judiciary, the Ministry of Interior, the Ministry of Awqaf and Religious Affairs and the Fatwa Council. The Ministry of Social Development child protection counsellor monitoring the placement of the child with the foster family also attends the meetings of the foster care committee.⁽⁶⁴⁾

261. The first phase of the foster care database has been completed by the Ministry of Social Development, and a trial of that database is being carried out by the competent department within the Ministry. In 2016, the Minister of Social Development approved a manual for working procedures with children of unknown parentage and children born out of wedlock.

(i) Illicit transfer and non-return (article 11)

262. The Children’s Act prohibits the abduction or unlawful separation of a child from his or her family. The police and the Office of the Public Prosecutor are responsible for ensuring the implementation of judgments in cases involving the abduction of a child. The perpetrators of those offences are liable to penalties ranging from fines to custodial sentences. Due to the Israeli occupation, the Government of Palestine has no control over entry and exit at its borders, and this impedes the extradition of persons accused of such offences.

263. There are cases in which a child is abducted by one of the parents, in order to prevent the child from joining the other parent; the abducting parent travels with the child in question. In order to avoid that situation, an administrative decision may be obtained from the sharia judiciary to prevent the child’s travel abroad without the consent of the other party. The Ministry of the Interior is informed of that decision and the child’s name is communicated to security officers at the country’s border crossings to prevent him or her from travelling. However, the prohibition on travelling can only be enforced at Palestinian border crossings and it has therefore not been possible to prevent all child abduction cases.

264. The State of Palestine has not yet acceded to the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction and the Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children, but will consider becoming a State party in the future.

(j) Children of those in prison

265. Article 31.4 of the Children’s Act stipulates that the criteria established by the State and its institutions for the provision of social support are applicable to the children of prisoners: “Children of the imprisoned, missing persons or persons incapacitated by illness or disability, who have no one to support them”.

266. The State of Palestine pays particular attention to the children of prisoners. Pursuant to the Correctional and Rehabilitation Centres Act, the Department of Correctional and Rehabilitation Centres coordinates with the Ministry of Social Development to ensure that the children of prisoners enjoy the right to privacy, facilitates special visits for children and ensures that visits take place in an appropriate environment that can help strengthen relations among members of the family.

267. Special care is provided to pregnant detainees and prisoners. In 2016 and 2017, three births took place in correctional and rehabilitation centres. Children stay with their mothers for the period specified by law. During their stay, those children are provided with social, material and health-care services and they receive the food and clothing that they require.

268. The Department of Social Welfare at the Ministry of Social Development in turn provides care and counselling services to prisoners held at correctional and rehabilitation centres and seeks to ensure that they remain in contact with their families, especially if children and women are involved. In 2017, the Department facilitated family communications and visits for 118 prisoners.

269. Ministry researchers assist female and child members of prisoners' families by signing them up for the cash and in-kind assistance provided by the Ministry. The personal needs of male and female prisoners and the needs of children living with their imprisoned mothers are addressed within correctional and rehabilitation centres. Transport is provided so that the families of prisoners can visit them in detention and a transport programme facilitated the visits of more than 100 children to see their mothers in these centres in 2016 and 2017. Cash assistance is provided to support the women and children in prisoners' families, and steps are taken to ensure that the personal and health-care needs of children living with their imprisoned mothers are met. In some cases educational grants are provided to the children of detainees, including for regular educational and vocational training courses.

270. Because Israel, the occupying Power, does not fulfil its obligation to care for the families of prisoners, as provided for in articles 81 and 98 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which underscore the responsibility of the occupying Power to provide for the support of those dependent on the internees if such dependents are without adequate means of support or are unable to earn a living. The Commission for Detainees and Former Detainees provides financial allowances to the families of prisoners and detainees held by the Israeli occupation forces, with the amount paid depending on the duration of their detention.

6. Basic health and social welfare (articles 6, 18 (paragraph 3), 23, 24, 26, 27 (paragraphs 1–3) and 33)

271. Articles 22 and 23 of the Children's Act enshrine the right of the child to the highest level of health care free of charge, in accordance with the Public Health Act.⁽⁶⁵⁾ In that regard, the State of Palestine has significantly improved child health and children's access to health-care services, and infant and under-five mortality rates have fallen over the past two decades.

272. According to data provided by the Ministry of Health, the main causes of infant mortality in 2014 and 2015 were respiratory diseases (31.6 per cent) followed by congenital malformations (22.9 per cent), premature birth and low weight (15.6 per cent), blood poisoning (13.0 per cent), sudden infant mortality (5.1 per cent) and metabolic disorders (3.2 per cent).

273. Many diseases such as neonatal tetanus, poliomyelitis, smallpox and measles have been eradicated. There were no deaths due to tuberculosis, measles or AIDS in 2015.

274. There are 2,529 doctors in Palestine (including general medicine practitioners and specialists), equivalent to 5.3 doctors per 10,000 inhabitants. Of these, 1,464 (57.9 per cent) are general medicine practitioners (3 doctors per 10,000 inhabitants), 878 (34.7 per cent) are medical specialists (1.8 per 10,000 inhabitants), and 187 (7.4 per cent) are dentists (0.4 per 10,000 inhabitants).

275. The Ministry of Health provides training to new health-care personnel on public health and primary health care programmes, as well as training to staff in various ministerial departments on new developments in the area of health care.

276. In terms of growth indicators, data for primary health care centres in 2016 indicated that 0.4 per cent of children suffered from wasting, with 24.9 per cent of those children suffering from severe wasting, and 0.5 per cent of children were underweight, with 30.8 per cent of those being severely underweight. The percentage of children who were overweight was 1.4 per cent, and 27.2 per cent of those children were obese. A total of 1.4 per cent of children were below average height for their age and 30.6 per cent of those children were significantly below average height for their age.

277. A total of 234 children were underweight, 135 children were severely underweight, 270 children suffered from wasting and 193 children were stunted in their growth. A total of 99 per cent of children were vaccinated against various diseases in 2014 and 2015.

278. In 2015, 99.7 per cent children were born in hospitals or other safe facilities. In 2016, that figure was 99.9 per cent, with only 0.1 per cent of births taking place at home. Some 5.9 per cent of newborn children in Palestine weighed less than 2,500 grams. The proportion of mothers who practiced exclusive breastfeeding was 28.6 per cent in 2015 and 11.3 per cent in 2016.

279. In 2015, maternal mortality was 24.7 per 100,000 live births. In 2016, it was 13.8 per 100,000 live births. Causes of death included pulmonary embolism, postpartum haemorrhage, cardiac arrest, vascular thrombosis and hypertension.

280. Before the conclusion of a marriage contract, the sharia courts provide that one of the parties to the marriage must undergo a test for thalassemia. The marriage cannot be contracted until the engaged couple have presented a thalassemia test certificate that has been certified by the Palestinian Ministry of Health. If the court learns that one of the parties to the marriage suffers from thalassemia, his or her fiancé must also undergo a test for the disease. If it is found that the couple both suffer from thalassemia, the conclusion of the marriage is strictly prohibited and the judge overseeing the case will inform the Bureau of the Chief Qadi of the outcome of the test and the names of the couple. An administrative circular prohibiting the couple from marrying is then issued and sent to other sharia courts.

281. The Ministry of Health exerts significant efforts to limit the spread of HIV/AIDS by conducting free laboratory tests in the various health districts, and by facilitating the provision of treatment for those infected with HIV at free private medical clinics, which also provide patients and their families with health-care advice. Awareness-raising programmes are also conducted on a regular basis for students in high school and at university to deepen their knowledge of how HIV is transmitted and the dangers associated with the virus.

282. If one of the parties to the marriage is a foreign national, he or she must take an HIV test and submit a certificate, as issued and certified by the Palestinian Ministry of Health, testifying that he or she is not infected with the virus. If he or she does not do so, the marriage cannot be completed.⁽⁶⁶⁾

283. The sharia courts issue rulings on husbands in favour of their wives' request in which the husband is required to pay for necessary treatment for his wife in addition to expenses incurred during childbirth, regardless of whether or not the wife has reached the age of majority. In addition, the sharia courts issue rulings compelling fathers to pay for the treatment of their underage children, in addition to their unemployed adult male children and their unmarried adult female children, if the children so request. A father has an obligation to pay for treatment. In cases in which there is no father, the courts may oblige children's grandparents, paternal uncles or mothers to cover the costs of treatment, in accordance with the circumstances of each case.

(a) Children with disabilities (article 23)

284. Articles 9 and 22 of the Palestinian Basic Law stipulate that all Palestinians are equal before the law and the judiciary, that there is no discrimination on the grounds of disability, and that they shall have access to education services and to health and social insurance. In the same context, the 1999 Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act and its implementing regulations of 2004 have established a legal framework on the rights of persons with disabilities within the Palestinian legal system, which provides that persons with disabilities are entitled to enjoy their basic rights on a non-discriminatory basis.

285. Articles 3, 8, 11, 28, 31 and 42 of the Children's Act provide that the State shall take appropriate steps and measures to ensure that children with disabilities receive all necessary support in all areas, particularly in connection with their rights to education and health and vocational rehabilitation, in order to enhance their autonomy and ensure their active participation in society.

286. The National Strategy on Disability sector was formulated in 2012 on the basis of a developmental rights model. The Strategy sets forth several intervention initiatives, including initiatives to mainstream the needs of persons with disabilities, adopt legislation guaranteeing equal rights for all, ensure that all persons with disabilities can live in dignity, change attitudes regarding disability so that it is seen as part of the natural diversity of society, ensure equal opportunities and access, and strengthen the relevant role of institutions.

287. According to the 2017 population, housing and establishments census, 0.9 per cent of children have at least one form of disability, including 0.7 per cent of children in the West Bank and 1.2 per cent of children in the Gaza Strip, and 1.1 per cent of male children and 0.8 per cent of female children are disabled.

288. The Ministry of Health seeks to provide the best possible health-care services to children, particularly children with disabilities, in accordance with the provisions of the Children's Act, which stipulates that health insurance shall be provided free of charge for all children under six years of age. For children between the ages of 6 and 18, preventive school health-care services, psychological health and dental services, and treatment for infectious and malignant diseases and school health emergencies are all provided without the need for health insurance coverage.

289. Children with disabilities are provided with primary health care in addition to public and preventive health-care services free of charge while they are in school. The services provided include psychosocial support, health education and vaccinations. Rehabilitation and physiotherapy services are also provided under the health insurance system in accordance with the service procurement policies of the Ministry of Health. In certain situations, the Ministry of Social Development will provide services to persons with severe disabilities through specialized institutions such as the Casablanca Center of Mental Disability in Salfit and through the purchase of those services from both the Orthodox Care Homes and the al-Ihsan Charitable Society.

290. The Ministry of Health does not provide aids or equipment to children with disabilities. The Ministry of Social Development provides medical devices and equipment, including wheelchairs, and hearing aids by purchasing the relevant services for persons with disabilities, including children, as part of its procurement programme. The Ministry of Health intends to update its policies on standards of supporting devices and rehabilitation services to ensure that persons with disabilities are provided with high-quality support and rehabilitation equipment that meet national standards at reasonable cost.

291. UNRWA incorporates disability issues in all its programmes, and provides rehabilitation services to refugees with disabilities that include vocational rehabilitation, home modification, speech, physical and occupational therapy, special needs education, the payment of transportation allowances and the provision of aids and prostheses. More than 2,000 males and females benefit from those initiatives each year, and more than 3,000 students with disabilities attend school and rehabilitation centres. UNRWA also provides training on working with persons with disabilities to technical and educational staff.

292. The Ministry of Social Development coordinates with governmental and non-governmental institutions to provide care and rehabilitation services to children with disabilities. It uses reports drawn up by the Ministry of Health to determine the nature and degree of disability and provide appropriate assistance. The Ministry also provides accommodation in care homes for people with severe disabilities.

293. The Ministry of Social Development is planning to launch a "Disability Card" programme for the provision of the services provided by the law. Under the programme, the Ministry will establish an integrated database of persons with disabilities that will include data on disability type and eligibility criteria, and will provide training to staff on the programme, in coordination with the Central Bureau of Statistics and with the support of Save the Children.

294. Children with disabilities receive cash assistance from the Ministry of Social Development. A total of 3,994 children in the West Bank and 7,149 children in the Gaza Strip received cash assistance in 2015.

295. Challenges impeding the provision of health and rehabilitation support services to children with disabilities include a lack of financial resources and specialized staff with the necessary skills to assist with children with disabilities, the failure of efforts to ensure that the health insurance policy covers the cost of medical aids and equipment and the numerous drugs needed by children with disabilities, a lack of relevant expertise and medical specialists, either for diagnostics or the provision of health and rehabilitation services, outdated criteria for diagnosing the type and severity of a disability, (which undermines the accuracy of medical committee reports and thus access by children with disabilities to appropriate services), and Ministry of Health hospitals and health-care centres and public roads and facilities that are not well-adapted to the needs of persons with disabilities.

Table 18 shows the number of children with disabilities by type of disability.

296. Education for Children with Disabilities: the Ministry of Education and Higher Education has begun to integrate children with disabilities into schools without specifying how curriculums should be adapted for persons with disabilities. The process begins with integrating children with more obvious disabilities, including oral/aural, motor and speech disabilities. Steps are then taken to integrate children with intellectual disabilities. No decision has been taken with regard to other forms of disability. However, it has proven difficult to integrate certain children with motor disabilities into sports classes, and playgrounds in certain schools are not well-suited for children with disabilities.⁽⁶⁷⁾

297. In the 2014–2015 school year, there were 7,552 students with disabilities integrated into public schools. These included 5,557 children in the West Bank (of whom 2,967 were male and 2,590 female) and 1,995 children in the Gaza Strip (of whom 1,031 were male and 964 were female).

Table 19 shows the distribution of students with disabilities in public schools by type of disability and region for 2015/2016.

298. In order to facilitate the integration of students into schools, the Ministry of Education appointed two counsellors for inclusive education⁽⁶⁸⁾ and, in September, officially launched an inclusive education policy. In coordination with other ministries, the Ministry of Education has formed an advisory committee to ensure that all programmes are in line with that policy.⁽⁶⁹⁾

299. The Ministry of Education provides certain educational aids and specialized equipment to persons with disabilities, including chairs, eyeglasses and hearing aids. The Ministry is also working with researchers to adapt the curriculum so that blind students can learn using Braille, and is now endeavouring to complete that process. However, physical environments are still not suitable for all categories of disability, because efforts have been focused on addressing the needs of individuals with motor disabilities rather than on addressing the needs of those with other forms of disability.

300. With regard to adapting schools so that they are accessible to children with disabilities, changes have been made to school toilets in 63.6 per cent of public schools in Palestine, and staircases adapted for children with disabilities have been installed in 53.3 per cent of those toilets. Such adaptations have been made to a higher proportion of toilets in public and UNRWA schools than in private schools. Although toilets suitable for children with motor disabilities have been installed in many schools, schools must take further steps to accommodate students with certain disabilities, such as taking steps to facilitate access to those schools and making adaptations to classrooms.

301. A general secondary examination for students with disabilities has been developed. To date, the exam is available for students with visual, auditory and motor disabilities.⁽⁷⁰⁾ The Ministry has also established classrooms for special needs teachers. Those classrooms are attached to regular schools and equipped with suitable furniture and relevant educational materials and games.⁽⁷¹⁾

302. There are 223 special needs classrooms in the West Bank and Gaza, in addition to three special needs centres (two in the West Bank and one in Gaza). In 2017, 1,703 special needs education staff members were employed by the Ministry of Education and Higher Education.

303. Factors impeding the enjoyment by children with disabilities of their right to education include a lack of equipment for children with disabilities in schools and the fact that inadequate steps have been taken to integrate children with disabilities into many schools, and particularly those with no evident disability, who are not easily identified and whose precise needs are often not determined due to a lack of approved tools for diagnosing those types of disability in Palestine. Furthermore, special needs classrooms have still not been integrated into the school system because there is no clear policy on how they should operate.

(b) Basic health (article 24)

304. Palestinian laws, and in particular the Basic Law, the Public Health Act, the Children's Act, the Health Insurance Act and the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act, guarantee the right of the child to an adequate standard of health on the basis of equality and without any discrimination on the basis of sex or disability.⁽⁷²⁾

305. The National Strategy for Child Health in Palestine, which applies to all children, including children with disabilities, complies with international standards and provides for international cooperation in that area whenever necessary.

306. The Ministry of Health provides health care, while at the same time it allows refugees to benefit from government services. The data collected by UNRWA, which provides health services to refugees, is kept separate from data collected by the Ministry of Health.

Survival and development (article 6 (paragraph 2))

307. To enhance the provision of postnatal care, the Ministry of Health has launched the "Child-friendly Hospital" initiative in government hospitals, hospitals run by the Palestinian Red Crescent Society, UNRWA hospitals and a number of private hospitals with a view to promoting breastfeeding. Seven hospitals, including private, government and UNRWA hospitals have been nominated "child-friendly hospitals". Seven health-care centres⁽⁷³⁾ currently monitor the growth and development of children, carry out early detection tests for disabilities and a number of diseases, and provide vaccinations. The Ministry of Health also provides services and health-care advice to mothers to promote their health and the health of their children.

308. A total of 739 primary health-care centres have been established, including 587 in the West Bank and 152 in the Gaza Strip. In 2015, there were 162,979 families with government insurance in the West Bank, including 12,515 families provided with free health insurance. In 2016, there were 214,982 families enrolled in the health insurance scheme, including 15,304 families provided with free health insurance. Pursuant to a presidential decree, all persons in the Gaza Strip are granted free health insurance.

309. The average maternal mortality rate in Palestine was 24.7 deaths per 100,000 live births in 2014. In 2016, the rate was 13.8 deaths per 100,000 live births.

310. In 2016, neonatal mortality was 5.5 deaths per 1,000 live births (5.3 per 1,000 live births in the West Bank and 5.6 per 1,000 live births in Gaza). Causes of death included prematurity, underweight, delivery complications and congenital malformations. The mortality rate of infants up to one-year-old was 10.5 deaths per 1,000 live births. The mortality rate of children up to the age of 5 years was 12.2 deaths per 1,000 live births. The mortality rate for children aged 6–18 years was 16.7 deaths per 100,000 children in the same age group in 2016. Accidents and external causes accounted for 38.9 per cent of deaths, neurological diseases for 22.8 per cent, congenital malformations for 11.4 per cent, and tumours for 8.4 per cent of deaths.

311. No deaths from poliomyelitis have been reported, nor has the Ministry of Health recorded any cases of infanticide.

312. Under the Children's Act, the Ministry of Health is obliged to take appropriate measures to enhance its health-care capacities in order to improve child nutrition and health. The Ministry has affirmed that food intended for consumption by children should contain substances that have a medical impact only for preventative purposes, and only if approval for this is obtained from the Ministry. The promotion of any breast milk substitute in any Ministry of Health institution constitutes a violation of the law and is prohibited.

313. The Ministry of Health provides maternal health care services, including sexual and reproductive health services, and family planning. The Ministry also carries out preventive health-care check-ups and provides pap smears to ensure the early detection of cervical cancers, and provides counselling on family planning, the prevention of sexually transmitted diseases and cancer and the importance of detecting those diseases in their early stages.

314. The Ministry of Health also provides a range of preventative health-care services in schools to prevent certain forms of disability. These include screenings for the early detection of visual and auditory disabilities, learning difficulties, oral and dental diseases and psychological and behavioural disorders. The Ministry transfers and follows up on cases to ensure that those who require treatment receive it. The Ministry also provides psychological support services for school students, especially students with disabilities, and conducts health awareness programmes on proper nutrition and other issues in all Ministry of Education schools, institutions affiliated with the Ministry of Social Development, including centres for juveniles, schools run by the Ministry of Awqaf and Religious Affairs, and vocational training centres run by the Ministry of Labour. The Ministry of Health also monitors vocational and technical education centres to ensure the safety of students, carries out preventive health checks for students and seeks to raise students' awareness of preventative health care measures and public safety.

315. Other preventative initiatives overseen by the Ministry of Health include the country's national immunization programme, which offers vaccinations against poliomyelitis, measles and other diseases, in addition to screenings to detect Phenylketonuria and abnormal levels of Thyroid-Stimulating Hormone. Those affected receive lifelong treatment free of charge. There are approximately 500 children receiving preventive treatment for Phenylketonuria in Palestine.⁽⁷⁴⁾

316. Following a number of cases in which babies have been born at checkpoints because of Israeli military closures and roadblocks, the Ministry of Health has stepped up its efforts to deliver emergency obstetric services in marginalized areas through the establishment of well-equipped safe childbirth and emergency delivery clinics and centres that are staffed with qualified health-care personnel, especially in areas in the Jordan Valley, which are sealed off with roadblocks manned by the Israeli occupation authorities.

317. The main obstacles to the provision of care and support include the limited physical, financial and human resources and capacities available to those endeavouring to provide assistance to persons with various disabilities, in addition to the fact that certain Ministry of Health centres for children with disabilities do not provide an appropriate environment for addressing those children's needs.

318. A total of 713 cases of children with mental health issues were registered in 2016, including 401 male children and 312 female children.

Prevention of drug abuse (article 33)

319. The Children's Act prohibits the employment or commissioning of a child to perform any form of any job, including in places where cigarettes or narcotic or psychotropic substances are produced, or to traffic in, possess, promote or transport those products. Perpetrators are liable to criminal prosecution and penalties are prescribed for offenders. The 2005 Anti-Smoking Act⁽⁷⁵⁾ contains provisions prohibiting smoking in school yards and kindergartens and the sale, distribution, display or advertising of tobacco to persons under 18 years of age. The Anti-Smoking Act also prohibits the import, sale or manufacture of imitation tobacco products, including sweets and toys that resemble any type of tobacco product.

320. Further to the adoption of the 2015 decree-law on the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in 2017, the State of Palestine acceded to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1953, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988.

321. The State of Palestine has taken several steps to improve the health practices of children and adolescents, including the establishment of committees comprising police officers and staff at the Ministries of Health and Social Development to monitor shops and stores with a view to preventing the sale of tobacco to children and adolescents. Talks on the dangers of smoking and alcohol consumption are also given to children in lower grades at school, while talks on the dangers of illicit drug use are given to children in secondary school. The police gave 448 talks in 2014 and 356 talks in 2015. Non-governmental organizations also raise awareness about the dangers of smoking and drug abuse by designing health education activities for school and university students. According to the 2015 Palestinian Youth Survey, 10.0 per cent of children in the 15–17 age bracket smoke, including 13.4 per cent in the West Bank and 5.0 per cent in the Gaza Strip. No recent surveys have been conducted by the Ministry of Health to assess the extent of drug abuse by children and adolescents.

322. During the national consultations held for the purpose of preparing this report, children reported that, despite the decision issued by the Governor of Ramallah and Al-Bireh in 2017 to tighten control over shops and cafes, children continue to engage in hookah smoking in cafes without the owners of those establishments checking their ages, and not all shops refuse to sell tobacco products to children.

323. In the context of drug abuse prevention, Palestine has established the National Supreme Council for Drug Control. The Ministry of Health has also established the Alternative Treatment Centre for the treatment of drug users and addicts, including children. Other centres will be established in the near future.

324. With regard to treatment services, particularly those designed for children, the Ministry of Health provides free psychosocial counselling, rehabilitation services and treatment and conducts the necessary tests for drug users.

325. With regard to treatment and rehabilitation centres for victims of drug abuse, there are two centres for adults and children, and a third centre is under construction. An evaluation of the services provided by these centres is being conducted. No statistics on victims of drug abuse are currently available.

Health challenges and efforts exerted

326. HIV/AIDS is not considered to be a problem in Palestine. Since 1988, 84 cases of HIV infection have been recorded, including seven cases in children. No cases of children with HIV/AIDS were registered in 2017. Early detection of the disease is carried out by means of a national counselling and voluntary testing programme in Palestine that targets individuals that are most at risk of contracting the disease. Sexually transmitted infections are diagnosed and recorded along with their causes or symptoms in accordance with World Health Organization recommendations; one case of a child infected with a sexually transmitted disease has been recorded.⁽⁷⁶⁾

327. The Ministry of Social Development provides cash assistance to chronically ill patients. In 2015, 4,486 children in the West Bank and 9,021 children in the Gaza Strip received monetary assistance because they were suffering from a chronic disease.

328. Due to the repeated Israeli attacks on the Gaza Strip, the health sector, which is often directly targeted, has been severely impaired. However, the Ministry of Health, through its service procurement department, deals with cases in the Gaza Strip that require referral to hospitals, including those that are not run by the Government.

Adolescent and reproductive health

329. Palestinian legislation, including the Children Act, the Anti-Smoking Act and the decree-law on the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, aim to protect adolescents and children and uphold their rights. In order to safeguard adolescents from various diseases, the Ministry of Health has conducted numerous courses and workshops and issued various publications on the prevention of communicable diseases and on the medical services provided by the Ministry. The Ministry also seeks to raise awareness in schools, and especially among children and juveniles in secondary school, regarding the importance of proper nutrition and physical activity. The Ministry also provides guidance on adolescent health, the dangers of early marriage and reproductive health issues.

330. A pilot youth-friendly health centre programme has been launched by the Ministry of Health in South Hebron Governorate and will be extended to other governorates in the next few years. The Ministry also provides counselling and psychological support in both secondary schools and at health centres.

331. Under Palestinian law, an adolescent girl who becomes pregnant is not permitted to have an abortion. If she performs the abortion herself or with the assistance of others, however, she benefits from mitigating circumstances. The law does not specify the age of consent for an abortion. The Ministry of Health has no data on pregnancies among adolescent girls and illegal abortions performed. Adolescent health and reproductive health are among the priorities addressed by educational counsellors in schools, and a national guidebook on adolescent health has been formulated and serves as a key reference document for educational counsellors and health-care workers.

Social services and standard of living

Social security and child care services and facilities (articles 26 and 18 (paragraph 3))

332. The decree-law on social security was issued in 2016. The Palestinian Government is also taking action to reduce the numbers of children who drop out of school in order to enter the labour market, including through anti-poverty programmes and the provision of assistance, health insurance and job opportunities for fathers and mothers.

333. Other social protection institutions, and certain non-governmental organizations, charities and UNRWA play a complementary role to that of the Ministry of Social Development, providing job opportunities and monetary assistance to poor families. Those initiatives have mitigated – albeit partially – the phenomenon of students dropping out of school to work so they can help their families.

Standard of living, (article 27 (paragraphs 1–3))

334. The Ministry of Social Development provides a range of relief and empowerment assistance services to poor and marginalized families living below the poverty line, including children within those families. The Ministry has granted an unconditional right to all families to request services provided by the Ministry, while the Council of Ministers has approved approaches for addressing the needs of families on a non-discriminatory basis.

335. The Ministry of Social Development provides assistance to the families covered by its programmes on a regular basis in order to safeguard the interests of children. That assistance includes emergency cash assistance, food aid, school fee exemptions and health insurance for those who require it. The Ministry also provides exceptions from customs duties to facilitate automobile purchases by families with children with disabilities. A number of religious, charitable and social institutions also provide in-kind, cash and food assistance to poor families.

336. The Ministry of Social Development has taken a number of steps to facilitate the development of a national poverty and marginalization database, such as drawing up a manual on the provision of emergency assistance.⁽⁷⁷⁾ Assistance is no longer provided if the Ministry concludes, on the basis of a field visit, that the recipient is no longer entitled to assistance.

337. Difficulties related to the provision of support sometimes arise. Usually this is due to insufficient funding from donors, which can result in delayed payments from the Ministry to poor families, who are then unable to cover their expenses.

338. A total of 71,455 children in the West Bank and 178,284 children in the Gaza Strip received cash assistance in 2014. In 2015, cash assistance was provided to 58,544 children in the West Bank and 193,505 children in the Gaza Strip, while in 2017, 58,708 children in the West Bank and 189,503 children in Gaza received that assistance. Total assistance in 2017 amounted to 518,397,372 new Israeli shekels (NIS).

339. If a child or juvenile is placed in foster care or a care home, child support officials can apply for assistance on his or her behalf. Assistance is provided on a monthly basis to children in care in accordance with the procedures stipulated in article 25 of the Foster System Regulations.⁽⁷⁸⁾ The Minister of Social Development must grant approval for assistance payments, which must be disbursed by the competent authorities in accordance with the applicable rules.

Education and recreational and cultural activities (articles 28, 29 and 31)

(a) The right to education, including vocational training and guidance (article 28)

340. The Ministry of Education in Palestine supervises public education in public, UNRWA and private schools. The Ministry is committed to carrying out its work and providing education for all people in Palestine, in line with article 24 of the Basic Law and articles 37 and 38 of the Children's Act, which affirm the right of all children to receive free education in State schools, without discrimination, until their completion of secondary-level education. The Children's Act also affirms that education is compulsory until the completion of higher basic level, at a minimum, in addition to the duty of the State to take all appropriate measures to prevent children from dropping out prematurely from school. Article 169 of the Personal Status Code provides that a father is obliged to pay for the education of his children.

341. During the 2002–2003 academic year, the Ministry of Education and Higher Education conducted a study to determine Palestinian standards for child-friendly schools. The Ministry then adopted those standards in its plans and programmes. The standards served as key monitoring and evaluation indicators for the second and third strategic plans. The Ministry has also drawn up the violence reduction policy for Palestinian schools and issued numerous regulations and instructions prohibiting all forms of violence in schools.⁽⁷⁹⁾ The aim of the violence reduction policy, which also aims to improve discipline in schools, is to improve safety for students and teachers, create an appropriate educational environment for students and teachers, strengthen school management with a view to achieving educational goals, support the creation of safe school environments, foster positive behaviour, and establish a system for the protection of students and all those employed in the educational sector.⁽⁸⁰⁾

342. With regard to school fees and school fee exemptions, it should be noted that the collection of financial donations from students takes place at the beginning of the school year, whereby a nominal fee is levied on students who are able to pay it, while students in particular financial difficulty, in addition to students with family members in prison or whose family members have been killed or injured in the national liberation struggle, are fully or partly exempt from paying the fee. Students receiving monetary assistance are fully exempt from the payment of school fees. However, the Ministry of Social Development pays 50 per cent of the total amount due for those students.⁽⁸¹⁾

343. Statistics show that basic infrastructure is available in most schools in Palestine, that 99.1 per cent of the schools in the West Bank are connected to the electricity network and that 91.2 of the schools in the West Bank are connected to the public water network. In the Gaza Strip, 90.0 per cent of schools are connected to a public water network, and 99.3 per cent are connected to a public electricity network. Due to the blockade and the illegal closure imposed by Israel, the Gaza Strip suffers from ongoing interruptions to its electricity supply. Water and sewage systems have also been destroyed.

Religious education

344. All Palestinian schools teach Islamic subjects to Muslims and Christianity to Christians, as with all other compulsory subjects. In the West Bank there are six sharia schools run by the Ministry of Islamic Endowments rather than the Ministry of Education. The curricula of those schools are the same as those followed by regular schools, except for differences in certain subjects, which are taught from a religious perspective. The Ministry of Education licences those schools as private schools that are under its supervision. In the Gaza Strip, public schools are run by the Ministry of Education, and offer various branches of study, including a sharia branch.

345. The net enrolment rate for primary education in Palestine was 94.2 per cent in 2014 and 94.6 per cent in 2015. The net enrolment rate for primary education in the West Bank was 94.1 per cent for males, as compared with 96.4 per cent for females. In the Gaza Strip, the primary education enrolment rate was 94.3 per cent for males and 95.9 per cent for females.

Table 20 shows total enrolment rates by educational stage, region and sex.

Table 21 shows the distribution of students by region, educational stage and sex in 2015/2016.

Early childhood education

346. Early childhood education is education provided to children between the ages of 4 years and 5 years, 5 months. Kindergarten education is still not particularly widespread and the kindergarten enrolment rate was 55.1 per cent in 2014 and 2015. More than 99 per cent of children enrolled attend private for-profit institutions rather than those that do not charge fees. There are no suitable kindergartens for children with disabilities.

347. The Ministry of Social Development endeavours to provide a safe environment for play, education and early childhood skills development by licencing suitable kindergartens. Those kindergartens are attended by children between the ages of 1 month and 4 years.

348. Committees that comprise a number of authorities and are headed by the Ministry of Social Development have been established in each of the Palestinian governorates.⁽⁸²⁾ Those committees monitor and carry out inspections in kindergartens to ensure that they meet health and safety standards, and submit recommendations to the departments of social development in a governorate.⁽⁸³⁾ The Ministry of Health, in partnership with the Trust of Programs for Early Childhood, Family and Community Education, has issued a guide on health issues for kindergarten educators in order to enable them to address the most important physical, dental, psychological and first aid issues that can arise in kindergartens.

349. The Ministry of Development has proposed that comprehensive surveys of all operating kindergartens should be conducted with a view to creating a database that can be used to help kindergartens meet licensing standards. However, to date, no standardized programme that sets forth how kindergartens should operate has been formulated.

350. In the context of Ministry of Education policy to provide education for all as a basic right, the Ministry has created a pre-primary grade (a grade for children before they begin primary education) in public schools in marginalized areas with a view to offering pre-school education to children in those areas. The Ministry is gradually extending that initiative to cover all schools, in accordance with educational needs.

Table 22 shows the number of licenced and monitored kindergartens in 2014 and 2015.

Table 23 shows the total enrolment rate in early childhood education for children between 4 and 5 years of age, disaggregated by sex.

Vocational and technical education

351. The Ministry of Education has developed a national strategy for vocational and technical education and training that is in line with global trends. That strategy has been reviewed by specialized teams composed of a wide range of public- and private-sector stakeholders. Vocational and technical secondary education is taught in vocational schools,⁽⁸⁴⁾ which aim to provide students with the knowledge and skills they need to enter the labour market or to enrol in higher education institutions.

352. Studies indicate that societal attitudes towards vocational education are not positive, and that the majority of parents would prefer that their children obtain a university education after high school rather than enrol in a vocational education course. Those attitudes were confirmed by children themselves in interviews conducted as part of the national consultations.

353. To help promote vocational education, raise awareness regarding certain trades and occupations, and underscore their contribution to the country's development, the Ministry of Education has introduced vocational courses for the seventh, eighth and ninth grades, so that students in each of those grades can learn about three trades or occupations practiced in the community.

354. In 2015 and 2016, the total secondary education enrolment rate in Palestine for males was 58.7 per cent and for females it was 78.6 per cent.

355. Some 2.94 per cent of all secondary school students were enrolled in non-commercial vocational education in Palestine, including 4.6 per cent of secondary school students in the West Bank and 0.51 of secondary school students in the Gaza Strip. It should be noted, however, that there are no vocational schools in Gaza.

356. One of the factors that discourage girls from enrolling in vocational and technical education is the low number of institutions that offer programmes that women have traditionally wished to take. That factor has limited women's vocational and technical education options for this type of education. Furthermore, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics, women made up only 19.1 per cent of the country's work force, with men making up the remaining 71.9 per cent.⁽⁸⁵⁾

357. Institutions providing education and vocational training services in the different regions include governmental, civil society, UNRWA and private-sector institutions. There are 18 vocational schools in Palestine, including 13 government schools with industrial and agricultural sections.

Table 24 shows the number of students enrolled in vocational and industrial education.

School dropouts

358. Palestine has made significant efforts to reduce school dropout rates, and seeks to address the impact of that phenomenon through outreach programmes and following up with individuals who have dropped out of school. Palestine has also introduced parallel education and literacy programmes.

359. The Ministry of Education has taken a number of measures to limit dropout rates. It has opened new schools and courses of study in remote areas, particularly for female students, and has provided new portable schools for nomadic Bedouin communities. Students who have left school in order to work are referred to the child protection network with a view to reducing child labour and educating those children regarding their right to education. The Ministry also runs programmes to integrate children with disabilities into schools.⁽⁸⁶⁾

360. The Ministry of Social Development has established youth social rehabilitation centres for boys and girls who drop out of school, and for children whose families receive social assistance. There are 13 of those youth centres in Palestine and they aim to provide children with social, educational, cultural and vocational skills, and empower them to play an active role in their families and within society.

361. The primary education dropout rate in the 2015–2016 school year was approximately 1.2 per cent for boys and 0.7 per cent for girls. The secondary education dropout rate was 1.3 per cent for boys and 1.1 per cent for girls.

Table 25 shows dropout rates disaggregated by sex and educational stage

362. The State of Palestine has given priority attention to the provision of high quality and comprehensive education for all in a national policy document entitled "Citizen First", which sets a policy agenda for the years 2017–2022. That priority attention stems from the Government's long-standing commitment to the provision of high-quality education for all Palestinians on a non-discriminatory basis, including for members of marginalized and vulnerable groups.

363. Palestine has taken a number of measures to ensure that children in marginalized areas receive an education, and has developed intervention plans in that area in coordination with the European Union and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA). Support provided to marginalized areas includes the allocation of buses to transport students from certain Bedouin communities to their schools, and the provision of mobile classrooms and the construction of schools made of corrugated iron in areas where buildings are threatened with demolition and the inhabitants are in danger of being forcibly removed by the Israeli occupation forces.

364. The Ministry of Education has paid particular attention to the provision of education in all circumstances, including in emergency situations. Palestine is a State under occupation and suffers from systematic and widespread Israeli violations of the right to education stemming, inter alia, from the killing of children, the arrest of students and teachers and attacks on schools.

365. Save the Children, in partnership with the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, and the Ma'an Development Center, has launched the Safe Schools project to keep children safe in schools and prevent interruptions to children's education during periods of violence. The project works with children, educational partners and local communities to raise awareness regarding the importance of sustaining the education process and endeavours to influence relevant local, national and global policies.

Education for children with disabilities

366. Palestine has been integrating students with disabilities into education since 1997, when the Ministry of Education adopted an inclusive education programme to integrate students with disabilities into public schools. The programme, which began as a three-year pilot project, was extended to all public education schools because of the difficult circumstances faced by the Palestinian people, particularly those caused by the Israeli occupation and its ongoing attacks and criminal actions, which have resulted in an increase in the number of persons with disabilities.

367. The future plans of the Ministry of Education with regard to children with disabilities include: completing the comprehensive national policy on inclusive education, which is now in its final stages, updating the skills of those working in the field of special education and increasing their numbers, and hiring specialists with training in all forms of disability, including autism and learning disabilities, as well as specialists who can address the needs of particularly gifted children.⁽⁸⁷⁾

(b) Aims of education (article 29)

368. The Ministry of Education has adopted its third strategic plan on the basis of a set of guiding principles, including the need to strengthen a sense of national identity and citizenship, the need to strengthen the society's system of values, and the importance of the rule of law.⁽⁸⁸⁾ The Ministry of Education has also worked to improve conditions for teachers and enhance their skill sets. Teachers must now have a diploma in education. The Ministry has also initiated a process for updating educational curricula, taking a number of key elements into consideration, including the need to involve and uphold the rights of children.

369. In 2013–2014, 31.1 per cent of qualified teachers had been awarded teaching diplomas attesting to the fact that they met national teaching standards, including 22.9 per cent of male teachers and 30.7 per cent of female teachers. Other relevant data is provided in the index of the teacher training strategy.⁽⁸⁹⁾ On average, there were 21.6 students per teacher at all stages of education during the 2015–2016 academic year: 20.6 students per teacher in public schools, 29.2 students per teacher in UNRWA schools and 16.2 students per teacher in private schools.

370. The Ministry of Education has been using information and communication technology to help achieve education for all objectives. The Ministry has striven to improve school environments, improve teaching methods, strengthen curriculums, promote the teaching of life skills, and develop children's relationships with local communities, and has taken other steps with a view to making schools attractive and child friendly. There are, moreover, 620 environmental clubs in public schools, which are overseen by the Department for School Health and which promote student interest in environmental and hygiene issues.

371. In order to fulfil the obligations of the State of Palestine under various human rights conventions, a decree-law was issued in 2017 public education, which regulated the education sector in Palestine in accordance with international principles. The decree-law addresses the issue of inclusive education, namely the education of all members of society irrespective of difficulties, disability or gender.

372. The aforementioned decree-law provides for penalties to be imposed on any parent or guardian who fails to enrol his son or daughter in an educational institution, namely “imprisonment for a period of up to one year, or a fine of up to 1,000 Jordanian dinars”.⁽⁹⁰⁾

373. Palestinian primary and secondary education curriculums address the issue of gender and aim to foster a stimulating environment for students by directing teachers towards the use of certain educational techniques. A comprehensive, integrated and standardized curriculum development plan is currently being developed.⁽⁹¹⁾

374. Attacks on the education sector by the Israeli occupation authorities: widespread and systematic Israeli rights violations, crimes and acts of destruction, particularly attacks on educational institutions and infrastructure, have had a significant impact on Palestinian educational institutions. This has led to overcrowding in certain schools; most schools and classrooms are housed in rented property and many schools must operate with double or even triple shifts. Schools lack specialized educational facilities such as libraries and laboratories, as well as appropriate health facilities. Violations and attacks take many forms and the Israeli occupation forces have also closed, stormed and laid siege to many schools. Those forces have also destroyed numerous schools, sometimes partially and sometimes completely. UNRWA schools have not been spared and have also been attacked and destroyed, resulting in the deaths of both students and teachers. This also occurred during the most recent attack against the Gaza Strip, which severely undermined education during the 2014–2015 academic year.⁽⁹²⁾

375. In 2016, a total of 89,799 male and female students and 5528.5 male and female teachers and educational sector employees were subjected to attacks by the Israeli occupation forces, whose actions resulted in deaths, injuries, arrests, detentions, the imposition of house arrest, delays at checkpoints and the denial of safe access to schools following the closure of checkpoints, gates in the wall and so-called “flying checkpoints”. A total of 162 schools were subjected to at least 346 attacks. Attacks included the storming of classrooms and firing live ammunition, rubber bullets and tear gas. The Israeli occupation forces caused physical damage to schools, partially or completely halting learning activities, ordered schools to cease operations and issued notices threatening schools with demolition. A total of 27 students were killed, including one student from a school in Jerusalem. One teacher was also killed.

376. Violations by the occupation authorities of the right to education in occupied Jerusalem: the multiplicity of authorities overseeing education in Jerusalem seriously impedes efforts by the Palestinian Ministry of Education to strengthen the education sector in Jerusalem for the following reasons:

- Because of the Israeli occupation, there is no unified administration to coordinate the authorities responsible for education. Education in Jerusalem is overseen by five authorities, namely the Awqaf (14 per cent of students), private schools (30 per cent of students), UNRWA (3 per cent of students), municipal and so-called Ma’arif (Israeli Government) schools (46 per cent of students) and semi-Ma’arif schools (so-called contractual schools) (7 per cent of students), which makes it difficult for the Ministry to intervene in and change the educational policies of those authorities;
- There is no unified curriculum for all authorities responsible for education in Jerusalem;⁽⁹³⁾
- There is a lack of qualified teachers and specialists due to the refusal of the Israeli occupation authorities to issue permits to teachers without Jerusalem identity cards to teach in the city, which is surrounded by the annexation wall and numerous military checkpoints, and is also due to the low salaries paid to employees at all Jerusalem schools. To address that challenge, the Ministry of Education has increased the salary of teachers working in Jerusalem above the salaries paid in the West Bank, in order to attract qualified teachers to schools in occupied Jerusalem.⁽⁹⁴⁾

(c) Cultural rights of children belonging to indigenous and minority groups (article 30)

377. Article 3 of the Children's Act provides that all children shall enjoy the rights provided by law, including cultural rights, without discrimination on account of national or ethnic origin, language, religion or any other reason that may lead to discrimination. Article 38 of the same Act also underscores the need to take appropriate and effective measures with a view to eliminating the various forms of discrimination that impede the enjoyment of the right to education.

378. In its concluding observations on the periodic reports of Israel, the Committee on the Rights of the Child reminded Israel, the occupying Power, of its duty to ensure that Palestinian children are educated with respect to their cultural identity, language and values and therefore urged Israel to cancel the prohibitions of using Palestinian curriculums. Israel, the occupying Power, continues to attempt to impose its curriculums on the occupied city of Jerusalem.

Human rights in national education

379. One of the objectives of the Children's Act is to "prepare the child for a free and responsible life within a harmonious civil society that balances an awareness of rights with respect for duties and upholds the principles of justice, equality, tolerance and democracy." To that end, the Ministry of Education aims, inter alia, to strengthen human and religious values, improve economic conditions by fostering comprehensive development, and adopt curriculums and teaching methods that provide for high-quality education. Those curriculums are based on intellectual principles that uphold respect for others and the values of peace, freedom, equality, democracy and human rights.

(d) Rest, leisure, play, recreation and cultural and artistic activity (article 31)

380. Article 40 of the Children's Act enshrines a child's right to play and rest, to engage in appropriate activities and to participate freely in cultural life and the arts.

381. The Ministry of Culture supports cultural centres, which play a key role in promoting children's cultural rights, and holds workshops in schools and kindergartens. There are 52 cultural centres for children in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem. Activities at those cultural centres include theatre and drama, drawing, plastic arts, embroidery, straw arts, music, creative writing, storytelling, singing, circus arts and contests.

382. In accordance with its strategic plan for the years 2014–2015, the Ministry of Culture supports activities that foster creativity and promote literary talent. The Ministry supports children's and youth publications in cooperation with a number of NGOs, including the Tamer Institute, leads cultural activities in schools and runs extracurricular programmes and competitions for students with a view to encourages reading among young people and children.

383. The cultural centres also hosted a children's film festival in the Gaza Strip in 2014. The Cultural Development Fund, which was allocated a budget of $2,015,500 by the Ministry for the years 2013 to 2016, also supports various children's activities in the fields of music, drama, art, theatre and creative writing.

384. The Higher Council for Youth and Sports runs a number of programmes that provide children with the opportunity to participate in a wide range of sports and recreational activities. Those activities include summer camps and extracurricular activities. The Higher Council, moreover, supports the participation of male and female children in national and international sports programmes.

385. The Higher Council for Youth and Sports promotes the participation of children in numerous programmes, including voluntary work campaigns, youth camps and training courses run by youth organizations. A children's parliament has been established in order to develop children's leadership skills. The Higher Council also manages sports fields and green spaces in cooperation with municipalities, local councils and sports clubs.

386. The National Committee for Summer Camps includes representatives of all governmental and civil society institutions involved in the organization of summer camps in Palestine. In 2010, the President of the State of Palestine issued a presidential decree that gave the Committee independent legal personality and the legal capacity to undertake all steps and actions to achieve the purposes for which it was established, under the supervision of the President. The Committee seeks to carry out its mandate by disseminating civic, cultural and scientific educational principles through extracurricular activities and by promoting respect for all concepts and values enshrined in the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Committee also formulates high-quality programmes and implements sports, artistic, cultural, community, environmental and health activities to develop the skills of children and promote capacity-building in institutions concerned with their welfare with a view to upholding children's right to survival and development as well as their rights to protection and to participate in society.

387. The objective of the Committee is to provide for the welfare of children, including children with disabilities, by organizing summer camps and extracurricular activities that provide opportunities for children to express themselves.⁽⁹⁵⁾

388. A total of 199 summer camps were held in 2016. Those camps, five of which were held in coordination with organizations for persons with disabilities, were attended by 18,578 children. A total of 19,365 children, including orphans and 240 children with disabilities, participated in 207 summer camps in 2017.

388. The main challenges impeding efforts to uphold children's rights to leisure and play include a shortage of personnel trained to work with children, especially in rural areas, the lack of adequate infrastructure for leisure time activities and the difficult economic situation of many families, which prevents many children from participating in extracurricular activities in the summer. Moreover, some communities lack facilities for children and there is only limited awareness among members of society of the right of children to participate in sports. Difficulties also arise because of the need to adhere to customs and traditions that discourage male and female children from participating together in extracurricular activities, and because of the pressure placed on Palestinian children, except, in some cases during summer vacations, by their very demanding school curricula, which leave little time for them to participate in such activities.

390. Future plans of the Higher Council for Youth and Sports include ensuring that the strategic plan that it is developing for the years 2017 to 2022 accelerates efforts to mainstream children's rights in all its programmes and activities.

Special protection measures (articles 22, 30, 32, 34–37(b) to (d) and 38–40)

(a) Refugee children (article 23)

391. Since 1948, the Palestinian people have been subjected to the most brutal and systematic forced displacement campaign by Israel and its terrorist groups. Most of the Palestinian people have become refugees as a result of the expulsion of more than 800,000 of the 1.4 million Palestinians living in historic Palestine from their villages and towns in 1948. Approximately 5.9 million Palestinian refugees were registered with UNRWA in 2017. UNRWA data reveal that Palestinian refugees comprise some 42.5 per cent of those living in Palestine and that 39.3 per cent of refugees residing in Palestine are under 15 years of age.

392. UNRWA was established as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly pursuant to General Assembly resolution 302 of 1949. UNRWA works closely with Palestinian ministries to provide assistance and protection to registered Palestinian refugees in the State of Palestine and in the other countries where UNRWA operates, namely Jordan, Lebanon and Syria. Its primary mission is to help Palestinian refugees to realize their full potential in terms of human development. UNRWA also endeavours to support the rights of Palestinian refugee children through its provision of services, particularly in the areas of education and health, and through its social safety net programmes and protection activities.

393. Protection services provided by the Ministry of Social Development are also extended to refugee children in camps in Palestine. UNRWA provides all services from its regular and emergency budgets, except for vaccinations and school books, which are provided by the Palestinian Government. The assistance provided by the Palestinian Government in camps is provided directly to the refugee affairs department in the camps and to the popular committees.

394. UNRWA provides free primary education to children in the occupied State of Palestine, and runs 96 schools in the West Bank⁽⁹⁶⁾ and 257 schools in the Gaza Strip.⁽⁹⁷⁾ In cooperation with national and international institutions, UNRWA has adopted a human rights-based teaching methodology.

395. UNRWA also provides education service at two vocational training centres in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, as well as opportunities for students to develop their skills through work placements.

396. The start of the 2014 school year was postponed for UNRWA school students in the Gaza Strip because of Israeli attacks on UNRWA schools, which resulted in damage to 91 of those schools.

397. In 2015, there were 20,113 boys and 28,771 girls enrolled in UNRWA primary schools in the West Bank,⁽⁹⁸⁾ and 128,591 boys and 121,527 girls enrolled in primary schools in the Gaza Strip. Illiteracy rates for Palestinian refugees were less than 4 per cent.⁽⁹⁹⁾

398. UNRWA aims to enhance the ability of students to speak and listen, and 78 school parliaments have been established in the West Bank.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ A number of initiatives have also been undertaken to enhance the quality of education and ensure a safe learning environment for students.

399. UNRWA provides primary health-care services for children in Palestine. In 2015, it provided health-care services to 68,870 boys and 69,827 girls in the Gaza Strip. In the West Bank, mobile clinics provide therapeutic and preventive health-care services to communities that find it difficult to access health-care services in Area C, including East Jerusalem.

400. UNRWA monitors infant and neonatal mortality rates among Palestinian refugees⁽¹⁰¹⁾ and also administers a comprehensive vaccination programme in coordination with the Palestinian Government. A number of agreements have been concluded between UNRWA and the State of Palestine on the provision of primary health-care services to children; important services provided include: Phenylketonuria screening, Ministry of Health approved immunizations, school health services, including check-ups and awareness-raising activities, growth and development monitoring and nutritional support services.

401. Fully 100 per cent of refugee children aged 18 months received all prescribed vaccinations in the West Bank in 2014 and 2015, while in the Gaza Strip 99.5 per cent and 99.8 per cent of children were vaccinated in 2014 and 2015, respectively.

402. All school children in the West Bank, including children with disabilities, receive preventive and therapeutic health-care services and take part in awareness-raising campaigns that aim to promote healthy behaviour. UNRWA has adopted a policy on disability and pays particular attention to children with disabilities to ensure that they are able to access the services they require, and also seeks to address their needs through its implementation of the inclusive education policy.⁽¹⁰²⁾

433. UNRWA provides social assistance to Palestine refugees in the State of Palestine, thereby establishing a social safety net for those in particular need, including children.⁽¹⁰³⁾

404. In 2016, UNRWA formulated a child protection framework, which affirms its commitment to strengthen the protection of children through its provision of services. UNRWA carries out child protection activities in cooperation with relevant stakeholders, including competent Palestinian ministries. In 2015, UNRWA was involved in 153 child protection cases in the Gaza Strip and 60 in the West Bank.

(b) Children belonging to a minority or indigenous group (article 30) and internally displaced children

405. Since the beginning of the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory in 1967, the Palestinian people have been subjected to a policy of forced displacement implemented through the confiscation of land, house demolitions and other practices of occupation and systematic rights violations, including the forced internal displacement of Palestinians and their families throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Most Palestinians are concentrated in Area C and in the Gaza Strip.⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ The recent Israeli attack on the Gaza Strip has displaced many Palestinian families from their homes.

406. In 2015, the Tamer Institute launched a project to provide protection and support in the area of education to children in Gaza. That project focuses on promoting the mental and social health of marginalized children in border areas and in creating safe learning environments.

407. In the light of its conviction that every human being is entitled to all rights and freedoms without distinction as to race, colour or national origin, the State of Palestine acceded to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination in 2014. However, because few anthropological studies have recently been conducted to investigate the race, colour, ethnic origin, nationality, descent and religion of various groups within Palestine, there are at present no accurate and comprehensive statistics on the minorities present in Palestine.

408. The racial, ethnic, and national groups that are categorized on the basis of descent or colour in Palestine include the Samaritans⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ and the Armenians⁽¹⁰⁶⁾. Members of those groups living in the State of Palestine adhere to Christianity and the Armenians continue to use the Armenian language and practice Armenian culture, customs and traditions. Other such groups include people of African descent,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ Syriacs,⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ Copts,⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ people of Maghrebi descent,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ and Gypsies.

409. The Mar Afram Syriac school is the only school that teaches Aramaic to its students. Several other schools and private educational institutions in Palestine focus on the education of certain ethnic and linguistic groups. Those schools include the following:

1. A school affiliated with the Ministry of Education for the Samaritan community, which teaches members of that community and other residents of Nablus who live near the Samaritan quarter;
2. The Sts Tarkmanchatz private Armenian school in Jerusalem;
3. Another Armenian school that trains monks and provides instruction in Christian teachings;
4. The Mar Afram Syriac school, which was established in 2003 and has 285 students. The school teaches children from kindergarten through to the tenth grade and is the only school that teaches Aramaic to its students.

410. Because rights are guaranteed by law for all citizens, all forms of discrimination among citizens in the application of national legislation and policies are prohibited.

(c) Street children

411. Article 32 of the Children's Act⁽¹¹³⁾ provides that family support and appropriate accommodation must be provided to the child, and that appropriate measures must be taken so that the child does not remain homeless in the street, either because of difficult economic circumstances or because he or she has been abandoned by his or her family.

412. The phenomenon of children living on the street is not widespread in Palestine. In recent years, the Ministry of Social Development has been made aware of a limited number of cases in which, because of family breakups, children have been found living on the street. In such cases, protection measures in the Children's Act are usually implemented, whereby the protection counsellor establishes contact with the family to learn whether the child can return to live with them and whether appropriate conditions and guarantees can be put in place to ensure that he does not return to the street. The case will be monitored by protection counsellor. If this is not possible, the child is placed in a social care institution until a permanent and appropriate situation is found and the child's situation will be communicated to a member of the child's extended family. If this is not successful, the child will be placed in a care institution until it is possible to place him in an appropriate family situation.

(d) Children in situations of exploitation, including physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration

(i) Economic exploitation, including child labour (article 32)

413. The Palestinian legislature endeavours to protect children from all forms of exploitation, including economic exploitation. Articles 42 and 43 of the Children's Act prohibits the exploitation of children by making them beg, their employment in circumstances that violate the law, and their engagement in work that would impede their education or threaten their physical or mental health or safety.

414. While children who work for their first degree relatives are excluded from the scope of the protections provided under the Palestinian Labour Code, the Children's Act addresses the situation of children employed by the heads of their households.⁽¹¹⁴⁾ Pursuant to the Labour Code, a fine of between 200 and 500 dinars is imposed on any employer who violates the provisions of the Code in that regard. If the perpetrator commits the offence a second time, the fine is doubled and then multiplied by the number of workers in respect of which the offence was committed.

415. The phenomenon of "disguised begging" is widespread in Palestine, whereby children engage, on a habitual basis, in the sale of certain simple goods in various locations, including at Israeli military checkpoints established by the Israeli occupation authorities to isolate Palestinian towns and cities from each other. Children engage in such activities with the primary objective of begging rather than working. The Ministry of Social Development coordinates with the police, the Ministry of Labour and other competent authorities in the governorates to investigate and monitor the situation of children who work in the streets as self-employed street vendors, and measures are taken to ensure that those children enjoy the protections prescribed in the Children's Act.

416. According to the police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents, there were 27 cases of begging in 2017, including 12 cases in which the beggar was male and 15 cases in which the beggar was female.

417. Obstacles impeding the protection of children from economic exploitation include the deliberate denial by the occupation authorities of access by the Palestinian police and the deliberate obstruction of their work, which impedes the arrest of those suspected of exploiting children by compelling them to work as street beggars, in addition to the flight of individuals wanted by the Palestinian police to areas under full Israeli control, where they go into hiding, which impedes the implementation of judicial rulings issued against them.

418. Palestinian children working in illegal Israeli settlements, who are usually employed on farms and construction sites, are subjected to various forms of psychological and physical violence upon their entry to and exit from those settlements. Children also engage in disguised begging by selling certain simple goods. This places them at risk of economic and physical exploitation. These cases are usually addressed in coordination with the Palestinian Ministry of Social Development, which takes all necessary measures when those children are handed over at the Jalamah checkpoint.

419. With a view to protecting children from economic exploitation, the Ministry of Labour monitors compliance with relevant laws in children's places of employment. A total of 81 labour inspections were conducted in 2017 and 96 inspections will be carried out in 2018.⁽¹¹⁵⁾

420. According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, 3.9 per cent of children between 10 and 17 years of age were in employment in 2016, including 5.3 per cent and 1.9 per cent of children in that age group in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, respectively. In 2017, approximately 3.4 per cent of children between 0 and 17 years of age (including 6.6 per cent of boys and 0.1 per cent of girls) were in paid or unpaid employment, including 4.6 per cent and 1.7 per cent of children in that age group in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, respectively. A total of 1.2 per cent of children were attending school while working, including 1.6 per cent of children in the West Bank and 0.7 per cent of children in the Gaza Strip.

421. Because of the deteriorating economic and political situation, children are increasingly vulnerable to exploitation by employers. The difficult economic situation in the Gaza Strip, which has worsened as a result of the blockade that has been imposed on the territory by Israel since 2007, has compelled many school children to look for work. Children work in numerous locations, including as street vendors, and are sometimes employed in particularly hazardous jobs, such as in the concrete and gravel crushing industries and in tunnels. Under the Palestinian Labour Code, it is prohibited for children to work in such jobs, which are categorized as forms of hazardous work. A number of other factors, such as weak workplace oversight, have also contributed to the rise in child labour rates.

422. The Ministry of Labour has opened vocational training centres in most governorates. It has also taken action to open new training centres to address identified needs, in line with available resources. The Ministry runs 13 employment offices in the West Bank and nine vocational training centres, including a multi-purpose centre in Halhoul. Steps are also being taken to open vocational training centres in Salfit and Jerusalem governorates.

423. The priorities established by the Labour Sector Strategic Plan and the Decent Work Agenda include qualitative and quantitative improvements to the inspections unit so that it can fulfil its mandate and its legal responsibility to regulate child labour and protect children from exploitation. Furthermore, the annual and periodic plans drawn up by the Ministry of Labour prescribe key activities and interventions to improve regulation in the area of child labour.⁽¹¹⁶⁾

424. In practice, all establishments are subject to the provisions of the Labour Code, while children are subject to special provisions that stipulate that no person under 15 years of age may work. Children must undergo a preliminary medical examination before starting work and must then undergo periodic medical check-ups.⁽¹¹⁷⁾ The Ministry endeavours to ensure that children in work participate in its vocational training programmes, and enrol in the trade and professional centres that it oversees.

425. The National Committee on Child Labour was established pursuant to Decree No. 80 of 2013 of the Minister of Labour. The Committee, which includes representatives from Government, and from workers', employers' and civil society organizations, develops plans and formulates policies to protect children from economic exploitation.⁽¹¹⁸⁾

426. The Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children, in partnership with the Police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents and relevant ministries, has intensified its regular and emergency field visits to work establishments. The Office carried out 20 such field visits in early 2017, which brought to light a number of cases of illegal child labour, in respect of which the necessary measures were taken.

427. No cases of children being used as slaves have been reported in the State of Palestine.

428. There are no legal provisions prohibiting children aged 15 and over from joining trade unions and associations. However, no clear regulations on that matter have been adopted by the country's trade unions.

429. The Palestinian Government carries out awareness-raising and vocational guidance campaigns within the workplace to raise awareness of minimum occupational health and safety standards and to ensure a safe working environment for workers in general and for working children in particular. Awareness campaigns on child labour are also organized in schools, universities and local communities.

430. In 2014, 12,937 individuals attended awareness-raising activities. In 2015, a total of 12,053 individuals attended those activities.

(ii) Use of children in the illicit production and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (article 33)

431. Please see the information provided above in section 7.

(iii) Sexual exploitation and abuse (article 34)

432. Article 42 of the Children's Act provides that the child must be protected from all forms of exploitation, including sexual exploitation. Article 44 of the Act prohibits children from being subjected to sexual or economic exploitation, which are among the phenomena that pose a threat to children's safety and physical and psychological health.

433. Under the penal legislation in force, prostitution is an illegal act. Inciting, coercing, practicing or abetting prostitution, or living off the proceeds thereof, is penalized in legal codes under the heading of incitement to obscenity or violation of ethics and public morality. That legislation prohibits the opening of brothels. Preparing, renting or acquiring any location to be used for prostitution, or contributing to the use of such location for the purposes of prostitution on a regular basis, is punishable by imprisonment of up to six months. That legislation applies to both children and adults.

434. Article 47 of the Children's Act provides that a child is at risk of delinquency if he is found, lives or works in an environment related to prostitution, fornication or immorality or if the child is in the service of persons engaging in those activities. The law sets forth measures that are to be taken by the protection counsellor to promote the welfare of the child.⁽¹¹⁹⁾ No cases of children engaging in prostitution were recorded during the reporting period.

435. The Child Protection Counsellor takes action in accordance with the Children's Act: he or she follows up on any communication regarding the abuse of a child within 72 hours of its receipt to verify the information contained therein. If the counsellor is able to confirm that information, he or she takes immediate action, in coordination with all relevant authorities, to draw up a protection plan for the child that provides an overview of the situation and sets forth the type of intervention and the most appropriate measures to be taken under relevant legislation and the approved transfer and networking system guidelines. In cases in which the life of the child is in danger, the child is placed in safe accommodation by the Ministry of Social Development, in coordination with relevant stakeholders.

436. In this context, Palestine has formulated a draft law on the protection of the family from violence, which provides legal safeguards for women and children within the family.

(iv) Sale, trafficking and abduction of children (article 35)

437. In late 2017, the State of Palestine acceded to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. Although Palestinian legislation does not address the crime of child trafficking, the Criminal Code contains explicit detailed articles that criminalize and penalize direct forms of human trafficking. Slavery is considered a human trafficking offence.⁽¹²⁰⁾ There have been no cases involving the sale or trafficking of children in the State of Palestine, and no cases involving the sale or trafficking of persons have been brought before Palestinian courts.

(v) Other forms of exploitation (article 36)

438. The Basic Law prohibits the exploitation of children for any purpose and also prohibits the carrying out of scientific or medical experiments on any person without prior consent. The Children's Act further affirms that prohibition for children. No complaints have been made concerning the exploitation of children in the media or in sports, or the exploitation of gifted children.

Children in conflict with the law and child victims and witnessesThe administration of juvenile justice (article 40)

439. Article 1 of the 2016 decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles⁽¹²¹⁾ defines the juvenile as, "a person who was under the age of 18 full calendar years when he or she committed a criminal offence or was at risk of delinquency." The age of a juvenile is established by referring to an official document. If there is no such document, the court or the Office of the Public Prosecutor will appoint an expert to determine the person's age scientifically. The age of criminal responsibility is 12 calendar years.

440. The State of Palestine began to focus on juvenile justice prior to its accession to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Ministry of Social Development established two centres, in the West Bank and Gaza, and, in 2010, the Council of Ministers issued a decree for the creation of the National Committee for Juvenile Justice under the aegis of the Ministry of Social Development. The National Committee, whose membership includes representatives of the Ministry of the Interior – Police Department, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Education, the Supreme Judicial Council, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Labour, the Ministry of Women's Affairs, the Ministry of Justice, The Independent Commission for Human Rights and Defense for Children International – Palestine Section, is responsible for identifying needs and priorities at the national level and developing plans and programmes.⁽¹²²⁾

441. In partnership with other relevant authorities and with the support of the European Union and UNDP, the Ministry of Social Development launched several initiatives in 2010 to facilitate the establishment of a comprehensive and integrated juvenile justice system. A manual was drafted setting forth procedures to be followed by all parties, in addition to draft guidelines on the transfer of juveniles that set forth the duties of the relevant stakeholders in the judicial system and other areas of government in order to facilitate the provision of integrated services to juveniles and ensure that situation assessments are conducted in a manner that upholds all their rights within an effective and integrated justice system.

442. In 2016, with the support of UNICEF, the Ministry of Social Development formulated and revised a strategic plan for juvenile justice and, on the basis of that strategic plan, drew up a five-year long-term plan together with a one-year road map, implementation of which has already begun. Furthermore, the establishment of a committee monitoring implementation of the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles was approved by the Minister of Social Development.⁽¹²³⁾ That committee monitors implementation of the aforementioned decree-law, the strategic plan for juvenile justice and its implementing plan.⁽¹²⁴⁾

443. The decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles, which entered into force in 2016, was drafted by a technical committee that was established by the National Committee for Juvenile Justice and replaced the laws on juvenile justice that were previously in force, namely the Jordanian Juveniles' Act and the Egyptian Juvenile Offenders' Act. The new decree-law is in line with international standards on juvenile justice and modern approaches to criminal law; it deals with offending children as victims rather than offenders, and provides for priority consideration to be given to alternative measures and forms of restorative justice.

444. Steps have been taken to formulate a draft executive plan for juveniles, draft guidelines for juvenile care homes, a standard procedure manual for juveniles, and a directory of alternatives to detention.

445. To prevent children from coming into conflict with the law, the Ministry of Social Development pays particular attention to some 400 children who have dropped out of school and are at risk of delinquency. They receive care at youth rehabilitation centres, attend vocational training courses and also receive special attention through regional child protection networks.

446. The Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children has established a register in order to monitor procedures involving children. The aim of the register is to ensure that no criminal proceedings against children at risk of delinquency are recorded and that they are not given criminal records. The register lists cases involving endangered children and children at risk of delinquency, and establishes mechanisms by which prosecutors can initiate technical measures in respect of those children.

447. There is as yet no database or national information system on juvenile justice in Palestine.⁽¹²⁵⁾

448. In most cases, children who are accused of committing offences or who are arrested are not dealt with or detained in the same way as adults. They are not physically restrained, for example. In addition, children are usually arrested by officers from the police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents and, if they are not, are transferred to officers from the Bureau following their arrest. The accused juvenile may, in certain cases, be arrested by the security services; this depends on the nature of the charges brought against him.

449. Juvenile welfare institutions in the West Bank and Gaza are monitored and subject to period inspections by the Independent Commission for Human Rights and non-governmental organizations, including Defense for Children International. Furthermore, in cooperation with the Human Rights Unit of the Office of the Public Prosecutor, public prosecutors conduct monthly inspection visits to care homes and juvenile detention centres in all governorates. Reports are filed on those inspection visits and steps are taken to follow up on any shortcomings or legal violations with the authority responsible.

450. A number of legal violations related to the living conditions of juveniles have come to light. In those cases, the Office of the Public Prosecutor contacted the competent authorities and monitored the situation until all issues were resolved.⁽¹²⁶⁾ Furthermore, a working group consisting of the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the police and the Ministry of Social Development is usually formed to address any issues that occur in places of detention.

451. A challenge impeding the application of the law in that regard is posed by the limited number of child protection counsellors working with juveniles. There are only 21 child protection counsellors in the West Bank, who are employed only on a part time basis and have other jobs and duties to perform.

452. Efforts to provide legal protection to Palestinian juveniles are also undermined by the Israeli occupation forces, which impede the transfer of juveniles between provinces, carry out extrajudicial killings of children and subject children to arbitrary detention and torture.

453. There are no provisions in Palestinian law concerning child witnesses.

The judiciary and fair trial rights

454. Pursuant to the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles, a special police unit has been established within the police force. The police Bureau for the Family and Adolescents has 11 offices in the State of Palestine, which are located throughout the West Bank.

455. As for measures taken by Palestine to establish a dedicated juvenile justice system, juvenile justice units comprising 34 prosecutors were established within the Office of the Public Prosecutor in 2016. Each criminal division includes a prosecutor from the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children, and juvenile judges have been assigned to each court of first instance and an independent registry established. A specialized juvenile court has been established in Dura in Hebron Governorate and a number of intensive courses have been held on juvenile justice and crimes against children.

456. Although the decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles contains provisions on the establishment of an integrated juvenile justice system, no steps have been taken to implement those provisions in the Gaza Strip.

457. On 4 March 2016, the Public Prosecutor issued a circular to all members of the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children providing that they shall only hear cases involving juveniles or children that are referred to them by the police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents. Official communications regarding that matter were also sent to all other relevant authorities.

458. In 2014, the juvenile police were notified of 2,677 cases. In 2015, they were notified of 2,696 cases in the West Bank. In 2016, they were notified of 2,211 cases, including 2,165 cases involving males and 46 cases involving females. In 2017, they were notified of 2,014 cases, including 1,978 cases involving males and 36 involving females. The offences perpetrated included theft, assault to public property and serious abuse.⁽¹²⁷⁾ No information regarding cases in the Gaza Strip is available.

459. A total of 850 cases involving juveniles were referred to the Office of the Public Prosecutor in 2014, and 24 of those cases were closed or retained by that Office. In 2015, 887 cases were filed, including 9 cases in which the juvenile concerned was a repeat offender. Thirty-four of those cases were closed by the Office of the Public Prosecutor. In 2017, the Office received 2108 cases, in which 97.4 per cent of those accused were male and 2.6 per cent were female.

460. Most cases (33 per cent) that are referred to the Office of the Public Prosecutor involve abuse, 14 per cent involve theft and 13 per cent of cases involve threats and menaces.⁽¹²⁸⁾

Table 26 shows the number of accused persons in 2017 disaggregated by sex and the type of offence committed.

461. The Supreme Judicial Council has developed a dedicated programme (the Mizan programme) to collect and analyse data related to cases, including those involving children. That data is disaggregated by age group, type of offence, gender and geographic region. The programme collects data on cases registered in the courts from the moment they are submitted until the end of the judicial process, including data on each trial session, the statements delivered in court and the duration of proceedings.

Fair trial guarantees for juveniles

462. Juveniles enjoy fair trial guarantees in the Palestinian judicial system. These include reading them their rights, and the provision of appropriate forms of assistance and other guarantees. The Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children endeavours to uphold the best interests of juveniles during the questioning and investigation stages. The child protection counsellor is required to draft a report on the basis of information available prior to and after the interrogation and to make decisions accordingly.

463. The right of juveniles to contact their parents is respected by all official authorities, as is their right to have their cases kept confidential through the use of electronic and hard copy archiving. The Public Prosecutor is prohibited from releasing any information that might identify a juvenile and from registering verdicts handed down in respect of that juvenile in a criminal record.⁽¹²⁹⁾

464. Juvenile cases are dealt with as a matter of urgency and a computerized system has been established to facilitate the conclusion of juvenile cases by recording the date of registration of the case and the date it is received by the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children. Juvenile cases are exempt from fees and charges; all proceedings involving juveniles and children are handled by the Office of the Public Prosecutor free of charge.

465. A number of circulars that have been issued by the Public Prosecutor to underscore that juveniles should only be placed under arrest as a last resort. The relevant authorities should coordinate with the child protection counsellor to ensure that, if at all possible, juveniles are detained in a social care institution. Juveniles in detention must be monitored and held separately from adult or convicted juvenile offenders during the period of their legal proceedings. A juvenile under the age of 15 may not be detained. Due to the aforementioned guarantees, there has been a significant reduction in the number of juvenile arrests, from more than 600 arrests in 2016 to fewer than 158 in 2017.

466. In-court detention facilities for juveniles are provided for the day of the trial. Children are held separately from adults. Refurbished buildings with facilities for children that comply with the highest standards, including special areas for the detention of children that are much more child-friendly than older facilities are provided in five courts in the various regions.

Table 27 provides statistics on cases involving juveniles that were referred to the police in 2016 and 2017.

Legal assistance

467. Measures taken by the State of Palestine include the provision of free legal assistance to children. The Public Prosecutor has issued instructions that no juvenile may be questioned without a lawyer being present.

468. Three lawyers have been appointed in the northern, central and southern West Bank as part of a programme that the Ministry of Social Development has been implementing in collaboration with UNDP since 2013. The programme has been further developed and institutionalized through the signing of memorandums of understanding with non-governmental organizations providing legal assistance services. Since it was launched, the programme has provided legal assistance to 919 juveniles.⁽¹³⁰⁾ The right to legal assistance through the appointment of a lawyer to represent the juvenile is guaranteed. If no resources are available to appoint a lawyer, the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children will provide free legal assistance to the juvenile at the expense of the State or by requesting civil society institutions to provide that assistance. Non-governmental organizations also provide legal assistance.⁽¹³¹⁾

Children deprived of liberty (article 37 (paragraphs b–d))

469. With regard to minors deprived of their liberty, the Dar al-Amal rehabilitation centre is a social welfare institution that accommodates male juveniles who have been arrested or detained in the West Bank, while the Dar al-Rabea Foundation accommodates male juveniles in Gaza. These institutions receive children between 13 and 18 years of age. There is no specialized institution to accommodate female juveniles.⁽¹³²⁾ In recent years, however, the Girls' Care Home has accommodated female children in conflict with the law. Those institutions are affiliated with the Ministry of Social Development.

470. Children in Dar al-Amal have the right to contact their families. The child receives legal and other forms of assistance. Guidelines have been formulated on procedures to be followed by juvenile care institutions and a file is kept on every juvenile.

471. Dar al-Amal accommodated 236 children in 2014, 170 children in 2016, and 205 children in 2017. One female child in conflict with the law was accommodated at the Girls' Care Home in 2014, but none were held there in 2015, 2016 and 2017. The low number of female juveniles in detention is due to the prevailing societal culture, which means that cases involving female children are, in most cases, resolved very quickly and before they reach the courts.

472. Juvenile accused persons are sometimes held in reform and rehabilitation centres but in separate accommodation from adult detainees.⁽¹³³⁾

473. In the past few years, efforts have been made to further develop Dar al-Amal. Approval has been granted for the Ministry of Education to provide educational services at the facility to the juveniles held there and a memorandum of understanding has also been signed with the Ministry of Health.⁽¹³⁴⁾

474. In order to facilitate the reintegration of juveniles into society, the Ministry of Social Development carried out a number of activities in 2016 to strengthen interactions between Dar al-Amal and broader society. The administration of Dar al-Amal organized visits for juveniles to a number of community institutions, including a home for the elderly, invited members of society to visit Dar al-Amal and involved the juveniles living there in the organization of traditional iftar breakfasts during the month of Ramadan.⁽¹³⁵⁾ Juveniles also took part in dance and musical activities.

475. The Palestinian Government is taking steps to ensure that, when they are arrested, juveniles are given a free medical examination by the Ministry of Health that includes clinical, laboratory and psychological tests. At the end of the examination, the Ministry will draw up a report. With a view to ensuring that the right of juveniles to protection during their detention has been upheld, they will undergo another medical examination upon their release. The Public Prosecutor has also issued written instructions stating that a medical and psychological examination of the juvenile must be carried out prior to the initial investigation, in coordination with the child protection counsellor and the juvenile police, that a medical report must then be submitted to Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children and attached to the case file, and that appropriate action must be taken in the light of that report.

476. Psychologists who can provide ongoing psychological counselling services are still needed at juvenile centres. The Ministry of Health is alerted to any difficult psychological cases involving juveniles. In that regard, staff at Dar al-Amal received training from the Palestinian Counselling Centre in April 2016, with the aim of updating and further developing the guidelines on counselling followed at their institution. Steps are also underway to formulate a five-year agreement with the Palestinian Counselling Centre on the provision of training to counsellors working at Dar al-Amal. A psychologist from Defense for Children International also visits Dar al-Amal on a weekly basis.

477. With regard to the ill-treatment of juveniles in detention, only one case of ill-treatment was reported; that case was reported by a child protection counsellor.⁽¹³⁶⁾ Defense for Children International followed up on the matter with the police, in cooperation with the child protection counsellor concerned.

478. Despite the establishment of the Dar al-Rabea Foundation in the Gaza Strip,⁽¹³⁷⁾ children placed under arrest continue to be detained in adult reform and rehabilitation centres. Juveniles are sometimes arrested with adults and held in police custody, including for periods that exceed legal limits, before they are transferred to the Dar al-Rabea Foundation.

479. Within the context of the partnerships it has established with local community organizations with a view to mobilizing free legal assistance, the Dar al-Rabea Foundation in Gaza works with a team of lawyers at the Palestinian Center for Democracy and Conflict Resolution to facilitate the provision of free legal assistance to juveniles who have been accused of an offence. The Foundation has also established a rehabilitation committee which follows up on juveniles' cases and works with the police legal office to address any legal abuses that occur.

480. In 2015, a total of 900 children were accommodated at the Dar al-Rabea Foundation, including some children who had been transferred to the Foundation on more than one occasion. Approximately 10 juveniles were detained in facilities that were not suitable for children, including adult correctional and rehabilitation facilities (prisons) and police cells. Fourteen juveniles were found guilty of offences by the courts and sentenced to periods of detention of between 3 and 9 months.

Table 28 shows the number of juveniles who have been referred to child protection counsellors and placed in the Dar al-Amal rehabilitation centre.

The sentencing of children, in particular the prohibition of capital punishment and life imprisonment (article 37 (a))

Diversion to outside the judicial system and alternatives to detention

481. Under the laws in force in Palestine, neither the death penalty nor the penalty of life imprisonment is imposed by the courts on children. Article 36 of the recently adopted decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles establishes alternative measures for juveniles under the age of 15 years, namely a reprimand, delivery into the custody of a third party, enrolment in vocational training, the imposition of specific obligations, judicial probation, placement under social supervision, placement in a social welfare institution or placement in a specialist hospital.⁽¹³⁸⁾

482. If a juvenile over the age of 15 years commits an offence for which a custodial sentence is prescribed as punishment, the judge may decide not to place that juvenile in a juvenile care home and substitute that penalty with one of the aforementioned measures or with another penalty that serves the public interest, in accordance with applicable laws. The judge may make use of restorative justice, which aims to rehabilitate the child who has committed the offence.

483. The Ministry of Social Development published a directory of institutions providing alternatives to detention in 2017 and, as an initial step, will select three institutions in each governorate and draw up memoranda of understanding with each of those institutions.

484. The decree-law for the protection of Palestinian juveniles provides for mediation and redress measures, particularly in cases in which only a misdemeanour has been committed. Article 23 of that decree provides: “(1) The Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children shall, on its own initiative and before the initiation of criminal proceedings, offer to mediate between the victim and the juvenile in cases involving misdemeanours and minor offences, provided that this is consented to by the juvenile or his or her guardian and the victim and provided that the Office of the Public Prosecutor determines that the process will remedy the harm suffered by the victim or end the disorder caused by the offence and contribute to the rehabilitation of the juvenile. To that end, the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children may avail itself of the services provided by the juvenile police, the child protection counsellor or an intermediary, provided that the juvenile acknowledges that he or she perpetrated the offence of which he or she is accused.”¹³⁹

485. The Public Prosecutor has developed a legal framework to guide the mediation process provided for in the decree-law, and has circulated that framework to all members of the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children in order to facilitate their work. A mediation model has also been developed for use by all juvenile prosecutors. In order to compel prosecutors at the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Children to conduct mediation, a standardized computer-based mechanism has been developed to impede judicial investigations of misdemeanours and minor offences until mediation has been attempted. No records or investigations are opened until after the completion of the mediation process.

486. To monitor the effectiveness of the mediation process, any mediation conducted by the Office of the Public Prosecutor is filmed and monitored by juvenile prosecutors. The extent to which the mediation follows established guidelines and the quality of the mediation process are assessed and a report on the mediation is submitted to the Public Prosecutor.

487. The Office of the Public Prosecutor, in cooperation with child protection counsellors, facilitated mediation for 576 children who had been brought before the courts in 2016. In 171 cases mediation resulted in the termination of criminal proceedings and the implementation of protection measures in respect of the accused juvenile. In the first quarter of 2017, mediation was used in 405 cases.

Training in juvenile justice

488. Many professionals working with juveniles, including school counsellors, members of the bar association, police officers, staff at the Ministry of Justice, protection counsellors, juvenile care workers, staff at the Ministry of Justice, children’s lawyers at the Ministry of Social Development, and staff at the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the judiciary, have received training in various areas relevant to juvenile justice, which is provided with a view to enhancing the professional capacities of all stakeholders in the juvenile justice system. Some of that training was carried out as part of a European Union project to support the establishment of the juvenile justice system in Palestine while other training was conducted by non-governmental organizations, including Defense for Children International, which conducted training on the basis of an agreement concluded between that organization and the Ministry. Advanced mediation training was conducted for members of the National Committee for Juvenile Justice.

489. A total of 56 prosecutors received training. Training was also given to 14 juvenile judges, with a view to enhancing their professional capacities and helping to disseminate their expertise among other judges in the various regions in Palestine. A total of 22 male and female staff working in various court departments concerned with children, including staff at the department for the execution of judgments and court registrars, also received training.

490. In the future, the Supreme Judicial Council intends to promote institutionalized specialization in the work of the judiciary, especially in areas of the law relevant to families and children. Efforts will also be exerted to strengthen legal assistance mechanisms and improve access to justice.

491. With the support of UNDP, a memorandum of understanding has been drawn up between the Supreme Judicial Council and the Ministry of Social Development on monitoring the implementation of all interventions related to juvenile justice and the integrated development of the juvenile justice system. In the future, the Police Bureau for the Protection of the Family and Adolescents intends to strengthen the Bureau to bring it into line with the highest standards on the provision of services, including by moving all activities related to the protection of families and juveniles, including the offices of specialized prosecutors and judges, forensic doctors and women's and children's protection counsellors, out of police directorates and into separate premises.⁽¹⁴⁰⁾

Physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration (article 39)

492. The Ministry of Social Development provides psychosocial support and rehabilitation services to victims of violence, exploitation and neglect by carrying out assessments to identify the support services that can provide appropriate psychological and social support to victims and by implementing transfer and psychological and social rehabilitation mechanisms. Support is provided, inter alia, to children who are victims of violence, abuse and exploitation, and to children who have been subjected to traumatic experiences when they were arrested or when hostilities occurred near their homes. The Ministry provides psychological and physical rehabilitation through child protection networks in the various regions of Palestine.

493. For child victims of violence and exploitation, if the parties at the meeting to discuss the child's case decide that the child should remain with his or her family, the child protection counsellor, in cooperation with relevant partners, will implement an agreed intervention plan. Psychosocial support is also provided to the child and his or her family to facilitate the child's reintegration. The Ministry of Development may provide monetary or in-kind assistance if the family is in financial difficulties.

494. Child victims of violence are placed in child protection centres, namely the Beituniya Centre for males and the Girls' Care Home for females, where they receive social and psychological support. They may also receive vocational rehabilitation services.

495. In 2017, 37 girls were discharged from the Girls' Care Home on completion of their rehabilitation programmes.

496. With regard to psychological support services, the child protection counsellor will make a presentation on the child's case to relevant partners and, if they agree, refer that child to the Palestinian Counselling Centre where he or she can receive psychological support, in accordance with a memorandum of understanding signed by the Ministry and the Centre. The child victim also receives psychological rehabilitation services if he or she has been placed with foster family or in a care home.

497. Unfortunately, the State provides no financial compensation to provide redress to the child. A civil claim for damages filed against the party that violated the rights of the child may be brought before a competent court.

(e) Children in armed conflict (article 38)

498. Palestine has acceded to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and will prepare a report on its implementation.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
11 November 2022

Original: English
English, French and Spanish only

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Combined fifth and sixth periodic reports submitted by Israel under article 44 of the Convention, due in 2018^{*}, ^{}

[Date received: 28 October 2019]

* The present document is being issued without formal editing.

 The annexes to the present report may be accessed from the web page of the Committee.

Contents

	Page
I. Introduction	3
II. General measures of implementation	3
III. Definition of the child	5
IV. General principles	5
V. Civil rights and freedoms	8
VI. Violence against children	11
VII. Family environment and alternative care	15
VIII. Disability, basic health and welfare	20
IX. Education, leisure and cultural activities	25
X. Special protection measures	28
XI. Follow-up to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the rights of the child on the sale of children, child prostitution and pornography (CRC-OPSC)	36
XII. Follow-up to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the rights of the child on the involvement of children in armed conflict (CRC-OPAC)	37

I. Introduction

1. Hereinafter are the combined fifth and sixth periodic reports of the Government of the State of Israel, submitted to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child, in accordance with the requirements of Article 44 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child (hereinafter – the “Convention” or the “CRC”) and the CRC Treaty-specific Guidelines (CRC/C/58/Rev.3).
2. Since the submission of our second to fourth periodic reports, many developments relevant to the implementation of the Convention and its protocols have taken place. This Report provides a comprehensive account of the most significant developments since 2014 until today. It also addresses the comments made in the Concluding Observations by the Committee (CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4), dated 4 July 2013 as well as its Concluding Observations on the Additional Protocols: CRC/C/OPSC/ISR/CO/1, dated 8 June 2015 and RC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/01, dated 14 March 2010.
3. Israeli Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) were invited to submit comments prior to the compilation of the report, through both direct application, and a general invitation posted on the Ministry of Justice (MoJ) website.
4. This Report was compiled by the Counselling and Legislation (International Law) Department at the MoJ, in cooperation with other Governmental Ministries and agencies.

II. General measures of implementation

Article 4

The Convention’s legal status

Incorporation of the Convention rights

5. The fundamental rights protected by the Convention are effectively protected through legislation, judicial decisions and otherwise. Israel has not enacted any further basic laws on the rights of the child since the submission of our previous report. However, many legislation amendments were enacted during the reporting period, as detailed in this Report.
6. On April 16, 2019 the Deputy to the Attorney General (Constitutional Law) published Guidelines for the implementation of the Indication of Information Regarding Legislation Influences on the Rights of the Child Law 2002-5762. These Guidelines relate to the legislative process, and requires the State to consider the legislation’s effect on children’s rights, in the spirit of the CRC. In the event that a law may negatively impact, directly or indirectly, the rights of children, the State is obligated to consider alternatives that will eliminate or mitigate such impact.

Independent human rights institutions

7. There are several national institutions that operate in Israel and provide services for the protection of human rights, such as the State Comptroller and Ombudsman, the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission (EEOC), the Commission for Equal Rights for Persons with Disabilities, the Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women (AASW) and others.

Dissemination, review and implementation of concluding observations

8. See Annex I.

Non-application of the Convention in the west bank

9. The applicability of the Convention to the West Bank has been the subject of considerable debate in recent years. In its Periodic Reports, Israel did not refer to the implementation of the Convention in these areas for several reasons, ranging from legal considerations to the practical reality. Moreover, in line with basic principles of treaty interpretation, Israel believes that the Convention, which is territorially bound, does not apply, nor was it intended to apply, to areas beyond a state's national territory.

Trainings on the application of the Convention

10. With reference to the Committee's recommendation regarding training programs for the legal profession and judiciary, a wide range of training days on Human Rights Conventions and specifically on the rights of the child have been held. For details, see Articles 28, 29 and 40 below.

Other human rights related conventions Israel has ratified in the reporting period

11. Since the submission of Israel's Second Periodic Report to the CRC Committee in 2010 (hereinafter: the "Second Report"), Israel became a party to several major international instruments concerning children. On November 2018, Israel joined the 2014 Protocol to the ILO Forced Labour Convention, 1930. In March 2016, Israel ratified the WIPO's Marrakesh Treaty to Facilitate Access to Published Works for Persons Who Are Blind, Visually Impaired, or Otherwise Print Disabled. On September 2012, the State of Israel ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

Consultation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs)

12. Israel acknowledges the key role played by NGOs in the development and implementation of the Convention. NGOs were invited to submit comments prior to the compilation of the Report, both by way of direct contact with them and by way of a general invitation to submit comments posted on the MOJ's website. Due consideration was given to the responses of the NGOs.

13. For additional information, see Annex I.

14. In 2012, a joint project was initiated by the Ministries of Justice and Foreign Affairs, with the Minerva Center for Human Rights at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, which aims to improve cooperation between State authorities and civil society organizations, specifically relating to the reporting process to the UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies. Following the completion of this draft report, NGOs were invited to comment on this draft prior to its submission and a round table with various NGOs took place on September 10, 2019. Their comments were transferred to the relevant Ministries for their response, and were given due consideration.

Dissemination, training and integration of the CRC into school curriculum

15. The CRC is distributed in child-friendly language to all educational institutions once every three (3) years (in Hebrew, English, Arabic and Russian). According to the Ministry of Education (MoE) directives, the values and principles of the CRC, such as the pupils' right to be heard and the respect of their best interests, are incorporated in the various study subjects, in the formal and non-formal level.

16. Furthermore, there are several international days in which the education system notes the rights of the child and human rights in general, such as the Universal Children's Day. During these days children all over Israel receive information on the CRC, with the assistance of relevant government bodies as well as NGOs such as the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), UNICEF, and the Center for Educational Technology.

17. In addition, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in collaboration with Israel's Agency for International Development Cooperation (MASHAV) carries out projects for children through its missions worldwide and also in Israel. For further information, see Annex I.

III. Definition of the child

Article 1

Definition of the child

18. The definition of a child was discussed in Israel's former reports. No change has occurred in the definition since the submission of the Second Report.

Raising the marital age from 17 to 18

19. In accordance with the 2011 Concluding Observations of the CEDAW Committee, the Knesset amended the Marital Age Law 5710-1950 (Amendment No. 6) in order to raise the minimum marital age from 17 to 18. Subsequently, a Family Matters Court is authorized to permit the marriage of a minor if she/he is above the age of 16 and if there are unique reasons to do so linked to the minors' best interest. The Court must hear the minor before deciding on this matter. With regard to the marriage of a minor below the age of 17, the Court must also request a social worker assessment.

20. Police Enforcement – The Police deal with violations of the Marital Age Law. Police officers hold periodic meetings with representatives of the Population and Immigration Authority (PIA) to ensure that they receive the relevant information. An investigation is initiated following every complaint submitted to the Police by the PIA. In the framework of the investigation, the parents of the minor, who are often directly involved in the marriage, are also investigated. In addition, all police districts are given lectures on the Law's implementation and enforcement.

21. Prosecution according to the Marital Age Law – In May 2018, the Attorney General's Guideline No. 4.1113 concerning the Attorney General's policy regarding applications for a marriage of minor permit was published. Also, in May 2016, the State Attorney published a Guideline entitled "The Prosecution Policy regarding the marriage of a minor's offence", setting out the Prosecution's policy in respect to this offence. For details, see CESCR Fourth Periodic Report (hereinafter: CESCR Report) Annex No. I, p. 39–40, 111–112.

IV. General principles

Article 2

Non-discrimination

22. Equality has been established as a fundamental principle in the Israeli legal system through legislation and extensive case law. The High Court of Justice (HCJ) plays a leading role in the promotion of the principle of equality through the development of jurisprudence when interpreting the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty. For further elaboration, see Israel's Core Document (HRI/CORE/ISR/2008) and its update (HRI/CORE/ISR/2015).

23. In May 2014, the Knesset legislated Amendment No. 3 to the Prohibition of Discrimination in Products, Services and in Entry into Places of Entertainment and Public Places Law 5761-2000 in order to include the prohibition of discrimination on the basis of age in the Law, which is relevant to minors as well as to elderly.

24. On March 24, 2014, Amendment No. 4 to the Pupil Rights Law 5761-2000 was approved by the Knesset. This amendment added sexual orientation and gender identity to the list of grounds upon which discrimination of pupils is prohibited.

Fight against racism

25. The recommendations of the Committee on Racism, Discrimination and Exclusion in the Healthcare System (see para. 28 below) include preventive measures such as designated training for pupils and active staff members, an awareness raising campaign for equality and a racism-free environment, and creating an open dialogue between different populations and healthcare staff.

26. On August 1, 2016, the Ministerial Committee for the Advancement of the Integration into the Israeli Society of Israeli Citizens of Ethiopian Origin, adopted the recommendations of an inter-ministerial team charged with forming an action plan to deal with racism against persons of Ethiopian origin, pursuant to Government Resolution (GR) No. 1107, and decided to implement several steps, including the establishment of a new governmental unit within the MOJ: the Unit for the Coordination of the Fight Against Racism (hereinafter: the “Unit”). The Ministerial Committee’s decision was adopted in GR No. 1958 (19.08.2016).

27. The Unit is in charge of supervising the implementation of the inter-ministerial team’s recommendations, receiving complaints concerning discrimination and racism and forwarding them to the relevant authorities, safeguarding the handling of these complaints, composing an annual report regarding the Unit’s responsibilities, and examining required legal amendments.

28. In December 2016, the Director General (DG) of the Ministry of Health (MoH) appointed a Committee on Racism, Discrimination and Exclusion in the Healthcare System, with the purpose of identifying the challenges in this field and their underlying causes, as well as recommending measures for their elimination. The Committee’s recommendations include preventive measures such as designated training for pupils and active staff members, an awareness raising campaign for equality and a racism-free environment, and creating an open dialogue between different populations and healthcare staff. For further information, see Annex I.

29. On the health services provided to minority groups such as centers for teenage Bedouin girls, mother and child health care stations (“Tipat Halav”) in the Bedouin local authorities, promoting health services within Bedouin local authorities, Promoting Health Services within the Druze and Circassian localities see CEDAW Sixth Periodic Report (hereinafter: “CEDAW Report”) Annex I, p. 63–65.

Article 3

Best interests of the child

30. Israeli Laws and policies support the broader consensus that the best interests of the child should be heard and considered in matters affecting her/him, as detailed in the Second Report.

Out-of-home care

31. On December 6, 2016 the Children Foster Care Law 5776-2016 entered into effect. Article 1 of this Law stipulates its purpose: to establish the rights of children in foster care and the duty of the State to ensure their best interests and rights, pursuant to the CRC, in recognition of their unique vulnerability and their right to receive special protection and assistance, without derogating from the responsibility, duty and right of their parents to ensure their best interests. The Law places an emphasis on the best interests of the child and incorporates in Section 4 a broad and comprehensive definition, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention, as interpreted by the CRC Committee in its General Comment No. 14 (2013)¹. For further information, see Annex I.

32. The best interests of the child is a guiding principle in any act being performed with respect to a child, under this Law. The Law provides detailed guidance to the decision-making bodies on how to determine the best interests of the child in the foster care context. According to Section 32 of the Law, the choice of a foster care family is carried out in pursuit of the most suitable foster care for each child, according to her/his best interests and specific needs. Wherever possible, placement will be among the child’s family members, carried out without separation between the child and her/his siblings and where possible – at a foster family residing within geographical proximity to the child’s parents or to members of her/his family with whom there are significant ties.

¹ CRC/C/GC/14, dated 29 May, 2013.

Article 6 (1)

The right to life

Capital punishment

33. As mentioned in our previous report, a death penalty cannot be imposed on a minor who committed the offense while she/he was a minor.

Steps to eradicate infanticide

34. In 2014 the Unit for Prevention of Suicidal Behavior was established in the MoH in order to implement the national action plan for reducing suicide and attempted suicide rates, which was established by GR No. 1091 (22.12.2013). For further information, see Annex I.

Promoting child safety

35. According to GR No. 4289 (19.02.2012), a multi-year plan for the promotion of child safety in Israel should be established. In March 2017, the “National Child Safety Program” was approved along with approx. 50 Million NIS (14 Million USD) five (5)-year budget. The inter-ministerial committee that compiled the program was headed by the MoH, and set two (2) main goals for the National Program: to reduce the rate of child mortality as a result of injuries, and reducing disparities in general mortality rates between Jewish and Arab children.

36. Furthermore, due to an increase in the number of infants that were forgotten in the car by their parents, leading to injury or death, the MoH and the National Road Safety Authority launched several campaigns to increase public awareness to this issue.

Article 12

Respect for the views of the child

Legislation

37. Israeli Laws and policies support the broader consensus that a child’s opinion should be heard and considered in matters affecting her/him, as detailed in the Second Report.

38. Section 11 of the Children Foster Care Law stipulates the right of a child to express her/his desire, feelings, opinions and standpoint on any matter concerning her/him. The child’s standpoint will be accorded the appropriate weight when adopting decisions by any competent body, although this body may not hear the child’s viewpoints if the body is convinced that the child will suffer significant harm from presentation of the matter before it, that exceeds the harm from its non-presentation.

Representing children in civil law and administrative proceedings

39. The Legal Aid Administration (LAA) at the MoJ is the main provider of legal services for children in child protection proceedings in Israel. The National Child Representation Unit (NCRU) within the LAA is providing high-quality, child-friendly, and accessible legal aid service for children and youth, free of charge, and promotes their right to access to justice, particularly in child protection proceedings.

40. As of August 2018, (following Amendment No. 20 to the Legal Aid Law 5732-1972), the NCRU also provides legal aid and assistance to children and youth victims of severe sexual abuse, both throughout the criminal law proceedings against the perpetrator, as well as during any legal or administrative proceeding connected to the penal proceedings (such as protection orders, civil tort suits, etc.). For further information, see Annex I.

Religion conversion

41. According to Section 13A of the Legal Capacity and Guardianship Law 5722-1962, the religion of a child shall not be converted, unless both parents have given their prior written consent, or that the court, at the request of one of the parents, or at the request of the child’s guardian, has given prior consent to the conversion. If the child has reached ten (10) years of age, her/his religion shall not be converted unless, in addition to the parents’ consent or the court's approval, she/he has also given prior written consent. For further information, see Annex I.

Respect for the views of the child in the educational system

42. Normative values derived from the CRC are incorporated to the MoE DG Directives. Thus, the need to ensure active participation of children, their ability to express views regarding decisions being made in their respect, and merely having adults listen to them – are basic components in the MoE policy. The inclusion of pupils constitutes an additional stage in the implementation of the right to education, which exists in two (2) levels: as a right and as a process.

43. The inclusion of pupils as an educational process began in 2000, with the Pupil's Rights Law. Inclusion enables children and youth to develop a sense of belonging, union, justice, responsibility, care and sensitivity. For further information, see Annex I.

Youth and pupils councils and youth movements

44. The Local Authorities (Youth Department Manager and Youth and Pupils Council) Law 5771-2011, stipulates that in each local education authority, a pupils and youth council will be established that shall be elected by pupils and youth residing in the locality. For further information, see Annex I.

V. Civil rights and freedoms

Article 7

Registration of children at birth, name and nationality

Certification of live births of foreign residents

45. Any birth in Israel, whether that of an Israeli resident or citizen or that of a foreign resident, is documented by the hospital in which the birth took place. The hospitals provide the parents a document entitled "Notice of Live Birth" which contains relevant details of the birth, including the date, place, names and nationalities of the parents etc. In the case of Israeli residents, births are also registered in the Population Registry and a birth certificate reflecting this registration is issued.

46. Following a petition to the HCJ submitted in 2013, the State of Israel decided to make changes to the "Notice of Live Birth" issued to foreign parents in order to ensure that it complies with the standards of an "Official Document", as defined by the Evidence [New Version] Ordinance 5731-1971, and enable its authentication with an Apostille. These changes enable parents to submit the "Notice of Live Birth" to the relevant authorities in their country of nationality (H.C.J 1528/13 Atani v. The Minister of Interior (22.12.2016)).

47. With regard to the name of the father, this is written in the relevant section of the "Notice of Live Birth", along with a clarification that it is based solely on the declaration of the parents.

48. Parents who are foreign residents may submit the "Notice of Live Birth" that they have been given by the hospital to the Ministry of Interior (MoI) in order to receive a document entitled "Affirmation of Birth in Israel – Replication of Notice of Live Birth". This affirmation includes the name of the father as stated on the "Notice of Live Birth".

49. Further to the ruling of the HCJ 6946/17 M.G. v. The Minister of Interior (22.11.2018) (see Annex III), this document is to be given to parents who are foreign residents until the MoH completes the computerization of the "Notice of Live Birth" which is currently given to parents as a hand-written form. The Supreme Court further determined that insofar as a declaration concerning the name of the father was wrongfully omitted from the "Notice of Live Birth" by the MoI, the parents may request the MoI to amend the Notice. The request will be examined in light of the evidence supporting it (H.C.J 6946/17 M.G. v. The Minister of Interior (22.11.2018); H.C.J 1528/13 Etni v. The Minister of Interior (1.6.2016); H.C.J 10533/04 Weiss v. The Minister of Interior (28.6.2011)).

50. Foreign residents are asked to sign a declaration whereby they are aware that the “Affirmation of Birth in Israel” document supplied by the MoI is not to be construed as agreement to their continued stay in Israel.

Registration of parents in identity cards

51. As of November 2014, following applications of same-sex families, the MoI has changed the registration of parents in Israeli identity cards. Currently the names of either both mothers or both fathers are preceded by the correct titles.

The right to know one’s parents

52. According to the Adoption Law, adoptees aged 18 and above requesting to inspect the Adoption Registry, can receive information from the “adoption file” on the reasons for their adoption, and with the consent of the biological parent, the details of the Adoption Registry. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 8

The right to acquire nationality and the protection of nationality

53. This issue was discussed in Israel’s Initial Report. No change has occurred in this area since.

Article 13, 14, 15

54. No changes have occurred in these areas since Israel’s Initial Report.

Article 16

The right to dignity, privacy and reputation

Protection of privacy – general

55. Section 5 of the Children Foster Care Law determines that at the time of exercise of rights and the provision of services to a child, principles on preserving the dignity of the child and protecting her/his privacy will be taken into account. According to Section 17 of the Law, it is the child’s right to freely file a complaint on any matter concerning her/him under the Law in a manner that shall protect her/his privacy.

56. In August 2015, a public committee, headed by former Supreme Court Justice Edna Arbel, was appointed by the Minister of Justice in order to review measures to protect the public, including Civil Service employees, from harmful publications and activities conducted online, such as bullying, defamation and privacy violations. The Committee is due to complete its work and publish its report in the near future.

Installation of cameras in educational institutions

57. In December 2018, the Knesset legislated the Installation of Cameras for the Protection of Toddlers in Day Care Centers Law 5768-2018. This Law aims to protect the safety of toddlers who are placed in day care centers by installing cameras, while preserving, to the extent possible, the dignity and privacy of the toddlers, the employees and any other persons in these facilities. The Law shall enter into effect on September 1, 2019 and shall apply gradually on all day care centers, except in day care centers operating in private homes, or in which more than 70% of the parents do not consent to the installation of the cameras. In order to protect the privacy of the toddlers, their relatives and the employees of the day care centers, the Law requires that the footage will be kept by the director of the day care for a period of time that will not exceed 30 days, while taking reasonable steps to prevent unauthorized access to the footage. Furthermore, viewing the footage, transferring or using it is allowed only in accordance with a court order.

58. In May 2015, the MoE's DG published a Directive regarding the placement of cameras in educational institutions, aimed to balance between the obligations to promote the pupils' welfare, and their right to privacy. The Directive guides the schools on ways to install the cameras: its use, locations and educational activities that should accompany the installation of cameras. The MoE does not view the installation of cameras as necessary means to prevent violence and protect the pupils' welfare. However, in such cases where local authorities or schools choose to do so, the Ministry determines that they are obligated to implement educational programs in order to fulfill the aforementioned.

Article 17

Access to appropriate information

Children's television programs

59. In 2017, the Broadcast Cable and Satellite Council (hereinafter: the "Council") amended the Telecommunications Rules (Bezeq and Broadcasts) (Broadcasting License Holders) 5748-1987 in order to explicitly obligate cable television services providers to allocate a minimum of 7% of their production budget to original Israeli youth's productions. The Council launched a television campaign to promote safe and balanced media orientation and use. It also launched a campaign aimed, inter alia, at informing parents of the option to block inappropriate programming from children on cable television channels in 2017. For further information, see Annex I.

The NCOPB

60. The NCOPB is a joint civil-police bureau dedicated to the prevention of crime and violence against children and adolescents online, led by the MPS and the Police. The NCOPB engages in forming a system for protecting minors against offenses of violence, sexual exploitation, sexual abuse, prostitution, pornography and child trafficking, and distribution of sexually oriented contents, up to assaults that are not criminal yet their impact may be most severe, such as excommunication, ostracism and shaming, insofar as such offenses take place in cyberspace.

61. The NCOPB was established in January 2016 by GR No. 1006 (17.01.2016). In order to operate the NCOPB, four (4) Government Ministries are cooperating with the MPS and the Police: The MoE, the MoH, the MoLSAaSS and the MoJ. For further information, see Annex I.

Prevention of distribution of harmful materials online

62. Furthermore, the MoJ runs a media campaign, including in social media and television, which raises awareness of the prohibition on the publication of videos which constitute sexual harassment pursuant to the Prevention of Sexual Harassment Law 5758-1998. This is according to Section 3(A)(5A) to the Law, that was added as part of Amendment No. 10 to the Law in 2014, which stipulates that the publication of a video which focuses on the sexuality of an individual in a way that humiliates her/him under the relevant circumstances, constitutes sexual harassment.

63. According to Amendment No. 49 to the Telecommunications (Bezeq and Broadcasts) Law 5742-1982, legislated in 2011, internet service providers are obligated to operate mechanisms for protection against profanities online and websites with harmful content, without additional fees, and to inform their subscribers of their availability. For further information, see Annex I.

VI. Violence against children

Article 19

Violence against children – abuse and neglect

Legislation amendments

64. In January 2019, Amendment No. 137 to the Penal Law 5737-1976 entered into force. It includes an extensive reform of homicide offences, the purpose of which is to create a cohesive set of homicide offences according to their severity. The Amendment replaces, inter alia, the separate offences of murder and manslaughter with a basic murder offence and a number of aggravating and mitigating circumstances for an aggravated murder offence and a mitigated murder offence. According to Section 301A(a)(8) of the amended Law, the murder or manslaughter of a child under fourteen (14) years old, a “helpless person” or a minor for which the offender is responsible is an aggravating circumstance. Section 368A of the Law defines “helpless person” as “a person who because of her/his age, illness or physical or mental infirmity, mental impairment, or any other cause, cannot provide for the needs of her/his livelihood, health or welfare”. The punishment for this aggravated murder offence must be life imprisonment.

65. In February 2012 the Knesset legislated Amendment No. 14 to the Center for Collection of Fines, Fees and Expenses Law 5755-1995, which entered into force on January 1, 2013. According to the Amendment, a child who the court ruled to be entitled to compensation in criminal proceedings as a victim of a crime, shall receive the compensation from the Center for Collection of Fines, Fees and Expenses, up to the amount of 10,000 NIS (2,790 USD). The Center will reimburse itself by collecting the payment from the offender at a later time. This Amendment is critical in providing the children their compensation in part, as most offenders are also sentenced to imprisonment which makes collecting the compensation difficult.

The Israeli authority for the prevention of violence, drugs and alcohol abuse

66. On February 7, 2018, the Authority for the Prevention of Violence, Drugs and Alcohol Abuse Law 5777-2017 entered into force. The Law established the Israeli Authority for the Prevention of Violence, Drugs and Alcohol Abuse (hereinafter: the Authority). For further information, see Annex I.

Article 24 (3)

Elimination of harmful practices

Preventing polygamy

67. In recent years the GOI has been enhancing its efforts to eliminate polygamy. The issue has been highly prioritized and accordingly, many efforts are invested in this field.

68. On January 29, 2017, the GOI accepted Resolution No. 2345, which established an Inter-Ministerial Committee designated for the issue of polygamy. The Committee includes the following Ministries: Education, Justice, Labor, Social Affairs and Social Services, Interior, Health, Agriculture and Rural development, and Public Security. The Resolution further calls for the establishment of a wide-ranging inter-ministerial team tasked with forming a strategic plan to encounter this phenomenon, and accordingly the Government will allocate the appropriate budget in the annual state budget of 2019-2020. The inter-ministerial committee included representatives of several NGOs.

69. The Inter-Ministerial Committee published its report in July 2018. Its main recommendations included improving data collection and reporting mechanisms in the relevant Government Ministries and law enforcement bodies, allocating additional budgets to the NII and to the Police for this purpose and carrying out additional research on the matter. It also recommended expanding education on polygamy and in general, especially among Bedouin communities, implementing a welfare support plan for women in situations of polygamy and their children, and expanding the role of the Sharia' Religious Courts on this matter.

70. Subsequently, in GR No. 4211 (25.10.2018), the DG of the MoJ was tasked with heading an inter-ministerial committee for the implementation of these recommendations.

71. On 2017 the Attorney General published Guideline No. 41112 titled "The polygamy offence" aimed to enhance enforcement of the polygamy offence, see CEDAW Report p. 14–15.

Article 34

Sexual exploitation and sexual abuse

Legislation amendments

72. Following the Concluding Recommendations of the CRC Committee in 2015 (CRC/C/OPS/C/ISR/CO/1, para. 31), in 2016 the State of Israel amended Section 203C of the Penal Law and increased the penalty for the offense of obtaining the service of an act of prostitution from a minor from three (3) to five (5) years imprisonment (Amendment No. 127). This Amendment changes the status of the offense to a felony, reflecting the gravity of the act. As a result, minors who were victims of such crimes are entitled to convey their opinion to the prosecutor before a decision regarding a plea bargain is made, and to convey their opinion before a presidential decision regarding a pardon of the offender, according to the Rights of Victims of Crime Law 5761-2001.

73. Furthermore, many other Legislation Amendments were enacted during the reporting period:

(a) On October 10, 2019, Amendment 139 to the Penal Law 5737-1977 entered into force. The Amendment extended the statute of limitations on sexual offenses to fifteen (15) years. This is due to the gravity of such offenses, as well as the unique characteristics and vulnerability of the victims of these heinous crimes.

(b) In July 2018, the Limitation of Return of a Sex Offender to the Victims' Vicinity Law 5765-2004 was amended. The Law as amended enables the Court to determine limitations on a sex offender, after the sentence or after the release from prison, which can include that the offender will not live, study, or work in the vicinity of the offense victim's residence, education, or work. The Law is intended to prevent psychological damage to the victim which may occur due to frequent meetings with the sex offender, in such cases where the latter returns to the victim's vicinity, in the street, local facilities, etc. The exceptionality of the Law requires special care in its implementation and interpretation.

(c) With regard to the definition of sex offender – prior to the amendment, the Law authorized the court to determine limitations to a sex offender only if the offender was an adult when the offense was committed. The Amendment expanded the definition of "sex offender" to include those who were minors when the offense was committed, provided that the offender served active prison sentence or was incarcerated in a closed facility, and turned 19 after being released. The Law further stipulates that when the Court wishes to impose limitations on a person who was a minor when the offense was committed, it would refrain, to the extent possible, from harming the unique needs relating to her/his rehabilitation.

(d) On August 3, 2017, Amendment No. 20 to the Legal Aid Law 5732-1972, concerning legal aid for persons who are victims of severe sexual crimes, including minors, entered into force. This Amendment grants free legal aid, without means or merit testing, to all victims of severe sexual violence, from the moment the indictment was filed throughout the legal proceedings. For minors who are victims of severe sexual crimes, legal services will be provided by the LAA at the MoJ. This Amendment is a significant step forward in order to implement and defend the rights of child victims in penal proceedings. Since this Amendment entered into force and until December 2018, 79 minors have been referred to the LAA to receive legal services.

(e) In June 2018, Amendment No. 132 of the Penal Law entered into force, adding a new offense prohibiting the publication of proposals to engage in prostitution (e.g. direct proposals, wanted ads etc.) (Section 205D). According to this offence, publishing such a proposal carries a maximum sentence of three (3) years imprisonment or a fine up to 226,000 NIS (62,700 USD), and if the proposal is aimed at a minor – a maximum sentence of five (5) years imprisonment or the abovementioned fine. If a corporation committed the offense, it carries double the said fine. This offence is also included in both Blocking of Telephone Numbers for the Prevention of Crimes Law and Authorities for Prevention of Internet Use for the Commission of Offenses Law, and it complements the 2011 addition of the offence of publication of prostitution services.

(f) In May 2018, the Knesset adopted Amendment No. 94 to the Courts Law, which stipulates that cases of causing a person to leave their country for prostitution or slavery, will be brought before one (1) judge instead of a panel of three (3). This enables better enforcement of these severe offences, by facilitating the early testimonies of witnesses in a prompt manner, before they leave the country.

(g) In March 2018, the Knesset enacted the Blocking of Telephone Numbers for the Prevention of Crimes Law 5768-2018, which authorizes a police officer to block a publicized telephone number (regardless of the means of publication), if he/she has reasonable grounds to believe that this phone number is used for the commission of crime. This further enables the removal of websites publishing the prohibited proposals, and the blocking of telephone numbers published in such publications.

(h) In July 2017, the Knesset legislated the Authorities for Prevention of Internet Use for the Commission of Offenses Law, which authorizes courts to issue an order for blocking access to a website or for its removal from the internet. Such an order will be issued if it is crucial for the prevention of an ongoing offense set in the Law's Addendum, such as offences relating to prostitution, child pornography, gambling and drugs and dangerous substances. This law enables the courts to issue one (1) of three (3) kinds of orders: order for restricting the access to the relevant website, order for restricting the possibility of locating the relevant website and an order for the removal of a website from the internet – provided that the relevant site is stored on a server in Israel or is under the control of a person who is present in Israel. The aim of the Law is to provide law enforcement authorities with additional tools to combat the phenomenon of prostitution of minors in the virtual world, as part of the overall ongoing efforts on the matter.

(i) For further Legislation Amendments, see Annex I.

Treatment of victims of sexual crimes

74. The MoLSAaSS is operating group intervention programs in various institutions, in order to assist minors who are victims of violence and abuse in their rehabilitation, mainly in the employment field, in preparation for normal functioning in the family, community and society. Furthermore, the MoLSAaSS operates institutions for emergency removal and immediate protection of children in imminent danger and additional therapeutic responses in the community to help minors who are victims of sexual assault. In the treatment centers, there are initiated activities of information, consultation and training that take place concerning sexual assault of children and means for identification, recognition and intervention in these cases. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 37 (a) and 28 (2)

The Right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

Prohibition against torture and cruel treatment

75. This issue was discussed in Israel's Initial Report. No major changes occurred in this regard since Israel's Initial Report.

Interrogators of the Israel Security Agency (ISA)

76. The ISA is responsible by law for the safeguarding of Israel's national security and state institutions from terrorist threats, espionage and other threats. The ISA and its employees act within the limits of the law and are subject to constant internal and external supervision and review, including by the State Comptroller, the State Attorney's Office (SAO), the Attorney General, the Knesset (Parliament) and every instance of the courts, including the HCJ.

77. The detainees undergoing ISA interrogation, including minors, receive all the rights to which they are entitled according to the applicable law and international conventions to which Israel is a party, including the rights to legal representation, medical care and visits by the International Committee of the Red Cross (hereinafter: the "ICRC"), if relevant.

78. The operative Guidelines of the ISA provide special protection to minors, which their age requires, in order to ensure proper protection of their rights and physical and mental wellbeing. Interrogations of minors take place pursuant to the approval of the highest position holders in the ISA and according to special Guidelines on the interrogation of minors. These interrogations are conducted by interrogators who undergo relevant training and the interrogation time frames and the sleeping hours are adapted to the needs of minors. Furthermore, minors are detained in accordance with the law and are held separately from adults, and any case of alleged wrongdoing by an ISA investigator can be referred to the Inspector for Complaints against ISA (the Inspector).

79. Moreover, as of January 2018, in accordance with the recommendations of several human rights treaty bodies and Israeli committees, cameras in ISA interrogation rooms broadcast regularly via closed circuit to a control room located in an ISA facility, where interrogations are not conducted. The control room is accessible and available to an external supervising entity on behalf of the MoJ at any time. The interrogators have no indication of when the MoJ supervisor is watching them in the control room. The supervising entity must report immediately to the Inspector if he/she believes that an exceptional incident has taken place during interrogation. During 2018, hundreds of control and supervision hours were conducted by the supervisors. For further information, see Annex I.

Alleged abuse in out-of-home facilities

80. The MoLSAaSS operates out-of-home facilities for children with disabilities. In these facilities any complaint received is immediately and thoroughly inspected by the supervisors in MoLSAaSS. In addition, the Children's and Youth Complaints Commission (hereinafter: the "Commission") for out-of-home placed children, which started its work in 2017 (see Article 25), operates in accordance with Section 56 of the Children Foster Care Law and was appointed by the Minister of Labor, Social Affairs and Social Services. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 39

Physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration

Programs for the reintegration of children

81. The MoLSAaSS initiated several unique programs in order to provide support and assist parents and families of children who are in conflict with the law and allow their optimal integration in the society. Some of the programs are tailored for children who are immigrants from the former Soviet Union, and children from Ethiopian descent. For further information, see Annex I. On the rehabilitation of children who are victims of violence, sex crimes, prostitution and trafficking see Articles 34, 19 and CRC-OP-SC.

VII. Family environment and alternative care

Article 5

Parental guidance and responsibilities

Parental consent for their children's medical treatment

82. The legal arrangements concerning medical treatment of children are based on the provisions of the Legal Capacity and Guardianship Law 5722-1962, which is the general law that also applies to parent-children relationships. In the healthcare system, these arrangements are usually expressed in the following matters:

(a) The parent is usually the one authorized to provide informed consent for medical treatment of a child;

(b) There is a presumption in law that a parent agrees to the action of the other parent. In cases of special medical treatment (such as a medical experiment) or if there is another basis for denying the presumption of parental consent – the consent of both parents is needed to provide medical treatment.

83. The MoH directed all HMOs to provide each parent independent access to the child's online medical file. This directive severs the dependency between the parents, solves the need to receive information from the other parent in cases of non-cooperation and conflict between them, and enables both parents to be involved in the medical care of their child.

84. In 2016, Amendment No. 9 to the Patient's Rights Law 5766-2005 added Section 16A which enables preventing a parent accused of or convicted in sexual abuse of her/his child from receiving medical information about that child, and keep her/him away from receiving medical decisions regarding the medical treatment of the child.

Special guidance programs for parents

85. The MoLSAaSS operates several programs for children and their families, in order to improve parental capabilities to families for all populations, including families living in poverty. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 9

Separation of children from their parents

Measures to ensure the protection of children living in prisons with their mothers

86. Section 2 of the Prisons [New Version] Ordinance 5732-1971 stipulates that female prisoners can raise their infant children (under the age of two (2)) in prison. According to various Israel Prisons Service (IPS) Directives, a prisoner with her infant will be kept in a suitable chamber approved by a physician. A newborn in prison or an infant who stays with his mother in prison, will receive all the necessary medical treatment, including appropriate nutrition, baby formula and vaccinations. The IPS medical staff will monitor the infant's condition, and in a case of such infant's illness, a pediatrician may be summoned to the prison. The treatment of the infant will take place in the prison, in a hospital or at Mother and Child Health Care Stations ("Tipat Halav"), all in accordance with the medical needs. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 10

Family reunification

87. The Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (Temporary Provision) 5763-2003 was extended several times, up until June 30, 2019. Due to the Knesset's dispersal the Law is further extended automatically until December 17, 2019. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 11

Illicit transfer and non-return

88. The implementation of The Hague Convention on the Civil Aspect of International Child Abduction is led by the Department of International Affairs in the SAO. When there is concern for the wellbeing of children during or after abduction cases, the SAO may refer the case to the welfare authorities to continue treatment as they deem fit. In some cases, the court prescribes in the ruling that the social services should be involved. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 18 (1) and (2)

Parents' common responsibilities, assistance to parents and provision of childcare services

The Family dispute settlement law

89. In 2014, the Family Dispute Settlement (Temporary Provision) Law 5775-2014 was enacted. This Law determines that spouses who wish to separate are first referred to a dispute resolution in one of the Family Assistance Units (FAU) of the relevant court. The parties are not able to turn to judicial means prior to doing so. After submitting an application, the FAU holds up to four (4) initial meetings with the parties which allow them to examine the possibility to turn to an alternative dispute resolution, other than litigation in court. The Law aims to reduce the complex implications of divorce litigation in courts, to all family members. It also assists in preventing discrimination against women in a judicial proceeding, in cases when women are in a weaker position than men and need to cope with the intense conflict and feelings accompanying the separation process. This Law requires preparation and training of professionals and entered into effect in July 2016. The Law was enacted as a temporary order valid for three (3) years.

90. For more information on parental custody in divorce, child support and the tender years doctrine, see CESCR Report, p. 19–20.

Article 20

Children deprived of a family environment

The Children foster care law

91. Article 1 of the Children Foster Care Law stipulates its purpose to establish the rights of children in foster care and the duty of the State to ensure their best interests and rights. According to Section 5 of the Law, in general, the following principles should be taken into account when adopting decisions or providing services to a child: preserving the dignity of the child and protecting her/his privacy; preserving equality between children, subject to the unique needs of each child; and ensuring the implementation of time schedules and limiting delays in the provision of services.

92. Section 13 of the Law establishes the right of a child to information. According to this Section a child has a right to obtain information, taking into consideration her/his ability to understand this information, at any stage of the placement process and residence at a foster family, about her/his situation, needs, the proceedings taking place, plans, decisions, the foster family, her/his rights, etc.

93. Another significant issue regulated in the Law is the status of biological parents and their participation. According to Section 33 of the Law, a parent has the responsibility, duty and right to maintain personal contact with her/his children placed in foster care, subject to the care plan determined for the child, and the decisions of the court. Any act or decision concerning the placement of the child will be made with the full recognition of the responsibility, duties and rights of the parents to their children and with them, wherever possible. The child's parents have a right to express their standpoint in the care planning processes and appropriate weight will be accorded to their opinion.

94. Furthermore, the parents of a child placed in foster care are given a right to obtain information on all matters relating to the care processes and decisions concerning the placement of the child in foster care, including: details about the foster family in which the child has been placed, the child's situation, including mental and physical state, school achievements, functioning, information about the termination or any material change to the foster care. This information will not be conveyed if there is real concern that it is likely to cause any harm to the child, or any other limitation has been determined under the court's instruction.

95. Generally, the placement of a child in foster care will be carried out while striving to obtain the consent of the parents wherever possible. If such consent is obtained, an agreement will be drawn up between the parents and the MoLSAaSS Social Services Department, consisting of the main elements of the care plan, the parents' consent to convey information about the child, information about the responsibilities, duties and powers of the foster family and so forth. Such agreement will be drawn up, wherever possible, even where the decision on the placement of the child was accepted without the parental consent.

96. On November 25, 2018 Foster Care (Permit Request) Regulations 5779-2019 entered into force. These Regulations clarified the requirements and the documents which must be filed in order to be considered a foster family. The documents ensure a thorough check of the applicants' intentions as well as their medical and economic situation, to assure the children's rights in their foster care are maintained.

97. For more information on the procedure of filing complains, see Article 25 and Annex I.

Article 21 Adoption

Recognition of parenthood in cases of adoption and surrogacy

98. Legal recognition of parenthood is conducted by different types of judicial orders:

(a) Biological parenthood is recognized by law, and is registered by the Population Registry without need for a court order. In cases of doubt concerning the identity of the biological parent, the parenthood can be proven through a genetic test, and a declarative court order may be issued relying on the test's results.

(b) Parenthood by way of adoption, which is not based on a genetic relationship between the parent and the child, is constituted by a judicial adoption order, pursuant to the Adoption of Children Law 5741-1981. The Law regulates the issue of intercountry adoption, in accordance with the CRC and 1993 Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption.

(c) Parenthood by gestational surrogacy conducted in Israel is constituted by a constitutive parenthood order, pursuant to the Agreements for Carrying of Embryos (Approval of the Agreement and Status of the Infant) Law 5756-1996.

Domestic surrogacy

99. On July 17, 2018, Amendment No. 2 of the Agreements for Carrying of Embryos (Approval of the Agreement and Status of the Infant) Law 5756-1996, was legislated by the Knesset with the purpose of, inter alia, strengthening the protection of the rights of the child, the surrogate mothers and the intended parents throughout the surrogacy process in Israel. Section 5 of the Amendment sets out detailed criteria for the qualification of the surrogate mother and the intended parents throughout the Law, such as age limits and the absence of a criminal record. In accordance with the recommendations of the CRC from June 2015, the Amendment stipulates that in cases where the Court or a social worker consider that a risk might be posed to the wellbeing of the child by the future parents, the social worker shall submit its assessment to the Court and request that the Court give due consideration to the assessment in making its decision on the issuance of the parenthood order.

100. The Law applies to women suffering from a medical disorder preventing them from bearing children, regardless of whether they have a spouse or are single. An ongoing petition regarding this aspect of the Law is pending before the HCJ, its main claim being that the Law discriminates against same-sex couples and single men, as it denies them access to surrogacy in Israel. The petitioners request to expand access to surrogacy in Israel to same-sex couples and single men (H.C.J. 781/15 Arad-Pinkas et. al. v. The Committee for Approval of Agreements for Carrying of Embryos et. al.).

Foreign surrogacy

101. Following a decision of the HCJ (H.C.J. 566/11 Doron Memet Meged et. al v. The Ministry of Interior et. al. (28.1.2014), see Annex III), for the first time, the requirement for an issuance of an adoption court order for the spouse of the biological parent was replaced with a judicial parenthood order, subject to the conditions set out by the Attorney General for the purpose of the issuance of the warrant, all in accordance with the best interest of the child.

102. In order for a judicial parenthood order to be issued in cases of foreign surrogacy, the stability of the couple's relationship and a mutual intent to raise the child must be proven, along with certain additional criteria. The criteria are examined in light of the best interest of the child. Furthermore, in order to ensure the protection of the rights of the child and the surrogate mother throughout the process, the applicants are required to prove the legality of the surrogacy procedure in the relevant country, the prior and informed consent of the surrogate mother to undergo the medical procedure and the latter's consent, following the child's birth, to give up the child. It is also required that the child be genetically related to at least one of the future parents, and that there will be no genetic relationship between the child and the surrogate mother. This is in order to prevent child trafficking and circumvention of adoption procedures. In addition, a social worker is required to examine the criminal record of the applicant and to verify that a child has not been removed from the custody of the applicant in the past. This is in order to ensure that no risk will be posed to the wellbeing of the child. Furthermore, the social worker may require a social worker assessment in order to ensure the best interest of the child. The social worker assessment is similar to the one required for adoption. However, the process is significantly shorter than that of adoption and the child is not registered as adopted.

103. In February 2015, following the former judicial development, the State has extended the judicial parenthood order to the spouse of a woman who chose to have a child through an anonymous sperm donation in Israel. In such cases, the order can only be issued in situations in which the sperm donor's identity is unknown to the parents. Similar to the conditions applied in cases of foreign surrogacy, a judicial parenthood order through sperm donation requires that the couple prove the stability of their relationship and their mutual intention to raise a child.

104. In April 2018, the MoLSAaSS, at the request of the Attorney General, appointed a professional inter-ministerial team for the review of the conditions for the issuance of a judicial parenthood order in cases of an anonymous sperm donation for couples in Israel or foreign surrogacy. Its members include social workers, professionals and legal experts from the relevant Government Ministries. The inter-ministerial team met with members of the academia, relevant professionals and LGBTQ community representatives, and concluded its work in October 2018. The team's report was fully adopted by the Minister of LSAaSS and the Attorney General recognized and presented it as the official view of the State of Israel in different legal proceedings involving the State. For further information, see Annex I.

The Gross committee on adoption

105. In 2007 an inter-ministerial committee on the adoption of children, headed by former vice president of the Tel Aviv-Jaffa District Court Yehoshua Gross (hereinafter: the "Gross Committee") was appointed by the Ministers of Justice and of LSAaSS. In 2016, the Gross Committee published its report, concerning adoption as a means of treatment of children at risk. Its recommendations, which include a proposal to replace the existing law on adoption, relate to all stages of the adoption procedure and to the different institutions involved therein, e.g., the courts, the social workers, etc. The recommendations include guidelines on determining the best interests of the child for the bodies involved in the adoption process.

Article 25

Periodic review of placement

The children foster care law

106. Any child placed in foster care or in out-of-home placement facilities can file complaints to the Commission independently (see para. 80 above), discreetly and freely, without any fear of harm of consequences. The Commission is accessible to children and includes the accommodations required according to the age, language and level of maturity of the child, and in the case of a child with disabilities – also to her/his disabilities. The results of the inquiry of the complaint will be passed on to the complainant and a copy will be passed on to the supervisor for follow-up on the necessary remedies.

107. Section 66(c) of the Law protects children against harm that might be caused to them due to filing a complaint and determines that such harm constitute a criminal offence with one (1) year imprisonment.

108. Under Section 50 of the Law, the MoLSAaSS has to maintain supervision of foster care agencies, foster care counselors and foster families and review their activities.

109. According to Section 54 of the Law, as part of the supervision, supervisors are authorized and given various authorities, including the authority to demand from any person concerned to pass on information or any document required by the supervisor to carry out her/his duties, and the power to enter places, and, inter alia, to visit the foster family home, even without prior coordination and at any time, if there is concern as to any harm to the well-being of the child placed with the foster family. Likewise, the supervisor may convey to the operating entity, the foster care counselor or the foster family written details of instructions that were not carried out and demand that they rectify shortcomings.

110. On March 30, 2019 the Foster Care Regulations (Complaint Mechanism for Children in Out-of-home Placement Facilities) 5779-2019 entered into force. These regulations set forth procedures to ensure that children in foster care and out-of-home placement are informed about the complaint mechanism. For example, the Regulations include the obligation to publish the Commission's information in a public and accessible place, in addition to ensuring each child placed in foster care receives the information in a manner and language suited for them. The Regulations further clarifies the various methods through which a complaint can be filed, and the parameters by which it should be assessed by the Commission. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 27 (4)

Standard of living

Alimony and child support

111. In 2013, the Execution Law 5727-1967 was amended (Amendment No. 42), and a new chapter was added – Enforcement and Collection of Children's Entitlement to Alimony – Temporary Provision, in order to assist women eligible for child entitlement to alimony. According to the Amendment, the Law Enforcement and Collection System Authority will manage the collection process for those eligible for child alimony through a special alimony procedure. In cases of an NII debt, the special procedure will be mandatory, while in cases of private debts, such procedure will be optional.

112. The Alimony (Assurance of Payment) Law 5732-1972 ensures that a woman, who won a child's entitlement to alimony ruling, whether she is divorced, separated, or a common-law spouse, has means of subsistence for her and her children when the debtor owing alimony does not fulfill his obligation. The Law allows a woman to apply to the NII for payment. For further information, see Annex I.

113. In 2012, the Shiffman Committee, a public inter-ministerial committee which was appointed by the Minister of Justice in 2006 in order to review the rates of financial child's entitlement to alimony, published its final report and recommendations. The recommendations included a draft bill regarding the formula that shall be used for calculating the rates of child's entitlement to alimony a divorced parent is required to pay for the benefit of their child.

114. In 2018, the Minister of Justice appointed a team of economic experts in order to reassess the Shiffman Committee's bill. The team's aim is to update the formula for calculating a child's entitlement to alimony with relevant factors such as the child's age and place of residence, in addition to the parent's income and number of children, with the purpose of better reflecting the cost of living. The team is expected to complete its work by the end of 2019.

VIII. Disability, basic health and welfare

Article 6 (2) Survival and development

Decreasing infant mortality rate

115. Measures taken by the MoH to decrease the infant mortality rate include pregnancy monitoring and postnatal monitoring of infants and toddlers in order to detect risk factors to the mother's and child's health, such as: domestic violence, mental illness and genetic diseases, and providing them with the necessary assistance. Postnatal care is provided by Mother and Child Health Care Stations ("Tipat Halav"), which provide counselling, pregnancy follow-ups, vaccinations, screening tests, and health promotion programs. For more information on infant mortality rate, see CESCR Report, p. 42 and Annex II.

Article 18 (3) Assistance to parents and provision of childcare services

116. Following the recommendations of a Public Committee on Poverty in 2013, the MoLSAaSS significantly lowered the contribution paid by parents of poor families for the day care of toddlers at risk pursuant to Infants at Risk (Right to Day Care Center) Law 5760-2000. Furthermore, a new procedure enables communities with a low socio-economic index to benefit from Government support of up to 100% of the cost of construction of day care centers. Further to GR No. 4193 (29.01.2012), more places have been offered to children of Arab women who are employed in part-time positions. For further information, see Annex I.

117. Additionally, Amendment No. 57 of the Women's Employment Law 5714-1954 enables the father to go on paid parental leave for a period of one (1) or more weeks (instead of a minimum of three (3) weeks). The purpose of this amendment is to encourage the exercise of this right by fathers, thus promoting greater involvement of fathers in raising their children. Furthermore, a father can take seven (7) days of parental leave simultaneously with his wife, and will be able to utilize them at any stage of the parental leave, according to the Law's provisions.

Article 23 Children with disabilities

Benefits for a disabled child

118. As a rule, children with specific disabilities and medical conditions are eligible for Disabled Children's Allowance. In some cases, the allowance can be received even from the age of three (3) months to assist the family in providing care to the child at home. Approximately 42,000 children receive disabled children's benefits through the NII.

119. The following significant amendments have been introduced in this field:

(a) In May 2018, an Amendment made to the Arrangements Law determined that an additional 26.09% of the General Disability Allowance will be paid to a child entitled to 188% of that allowance, and an additional 6.88% of the General Disability Allowance will be paid to a child entitled to 50% of that allowance.

(b) In July 2016, Amendment No. 2 to the National Insurance Regulations (Disabled Child) 5776-2016 entered into force. This Amendment adds new definitions to the categories defining children with various disabilities, while adding the category of “a child in need of regular medical treatment”. The Amendment further states that children in this category are entitled to 50% of the General Disability Allowance.

(c) On July 25, 2016, Amendment No. 2 to the National Insurance Regulations 5770-2010 entered into force. It created a benefit for a child requiring “constant medical care”. This is defined as a child who, according to doctor’s instructions, is unable to attend an educational institution for at least three (3) days a week, for at least three (3) consecutive months. The amount of the benefit for special arrangements has been increased to an amount equal to 188% of the General Disability Allowance. For further information, see Annex I.

(d) On June 30, 2015, Amendment No. 2 to the National Insurance Regulations (Disability Insurance) (Receiving Special Services) 5739-1978 entered into force. This Amendment granted children with severe disabilities, completely dependent on the assistance of others, benefits equal to the maximum rate of the “special services” pension. This is given to approx. 5,400 children.

Out-of-home placement for children with disabilities

120. The vast majority of children with disabilities remain with their families and receive support and services in the community. Only about 2,100 children are treated in out-of-home care facilities. These are usually extreme cases, where their families are unable to cope with the child’s complex needs, and therefore coming back to the family after placement in these facilities is rare. For further information, see Annex I.

Education of pupils with disabilities

121. On July 2, 2018, Amendment No. 11 to the Special Education Law 5758-1998 entered into force, as part of a large-scale reform in the special education system. The Amendment updates the scope of the authority granted to the local placement committees. According to the amended Law, the pupil’s parents, after receiving all the relevant information, shall decide whether their child will be enrolled as a pupil in a general educational institution, or in an institution for special education. The placement committee has discretion to decide otherwise, in cases where there is substantial risk that the decision of the child’s parents may severely harm his/her or others’ wellbeing. If no preference was expressed by the parents, priority should be given to placing the child in a general educational system. Furthermore, the Law as amended stipulates explicitly and transparently the type of services to which the pupil with disabilities is entitled. Such services are provided based, inter alia, on the pupil’s cognitive, emotional, lingual and social abilities.

122. In July 2018, the Equal Rights Regulations (Individual Access Adjustments for Parent and Child) 5768-2018 entered into force. These Regulations determine accessibility adjustments that pupils with disabilities are entitled to, and stipulates the educational institutions’ obligations to perform them. For further information, see Annex I and Israel’s Initial Report, p. 60–62, 83–85.

Article 24

The Right to health

The Early Childhood Council

123. In August 2017, the Knesset passed the Early Childhood Council Law 5777-2017, a new Law which directs the establishment of an Early Childhood Council. This Law aims to further the care of infants and their physical and intellectual development, ensure their physical and mental health and the fulfillment of their educational, social, physical and emotional needs and to provide an appropriate environment which will enable them to enjoy equal rights in adulthood. The Council has been established and operates under the direction of the MoE.

Encouraging breastfeeding

124. The MoH promotes breastfeeding and recommends exclusive breastfeeding for the first six (6) months following birth and breastfeeding combined with supplementation until the infant is twelve (12) months old. For further information, see Annex I.

Child and maternal health

125. The “Possible and Healthy” (“Efshari-Bari”) initiative aims to develop the well-being of toddlers by providing tools for improving the child-parent bond and for creating a family environment conducive to optimal parenting through a healthy lifestyle and attentive nourishment. The MoH and Joint Israel are leading this program based on an evidence-based model developed in the UK.

126. On the updated infant mortality rates, the efforts to decrease the rates in minority populations and vaccinations, see CESCR Annex I, p. 82–84.

Sexuality programs

127. The MoH offers annual lessons in schools on health issues which are relevant for children and youth, such as healthy lifestyles and nutrition, mental health, substance abuse and sexual health.

128. Furthermore, the MoLSAaSS participated in 2017-2018 in an inter-ministerial pilot concerning “education for healthy sexuality” which deals with the importance of access to information, contraceptive and treatment with respect to sexually transmitted diseases. For further information, see Annex I.

129. Note that girls and women up to the age of twenty (20) are provided with the option of purchasing contraceptives at a reduced rate as part of the subsidized medical services provided by the HMOs.

Sexual abuse and violence prevention

130. In addition to teaching content regarding healthy sexuality in the education system, on January of each year there is a week dedicated for prevention of sexual injury, in the schools which chose to participate. In recent years the focus is on normative sexuality and the line between normative sexuality and injury. The activities deal with questions about positive communication, consent, mutual relationship, etc.

131. The healthcare system has a national program for coping with violence, in cooperation with the MPS and the Police, which includes the operation of institutional committees for prevention of violence in all healthcare institutions. Trainings on these issues are held under the responsibility of MoH.

AIDS

132. From 1980 to 2016, there have been 324 reported cases of children, up to the age of seventeen (17), who are carriers of HIV. The majority of the cases are of children of Ethiopian descent. Some of the more recent cases are of asylum seekers and children with no legal status.

133. All children, regardless of their legal status, receive antiretroviral treatment and support at HIV clinics throughout the country.

134. Education in schools – schools discuss HIV/AIDS with pupils. Around the World AIDS Day, the MoE’s Psychology and Counselling Service uploads updated material to its website, including recommended workshops. Community organizations, such as the Israel AIDS Task Force, deliver training in schools. For more information on prevention of HIV/AIDS and support, see CESCR Periodic Report, p. 45–46. On the adequate and affordable access to safe water, see CESCR Periodic Report, p. 29–30 and Annex 1.

Article 26

Social security

Legislation amendments on child allowances and other financial assistance for children and their families

135. In March 2017, the National Insurance Law 5755-1955 was amended (Amendment No. 194) in order to add to the Law's definition of a 'child', persons who actively serve in national or community service and are under twenty-four (24) years old. According to the definition of the 'child' set in Section 238 of the National Insurance Law, a child is a person under the age of eighteen (18); a person under the age of twenty (20) who is enrolled in secondary school or in a pre-military preparatory school; or a person under the age of twenty-four (24) who actively serves in mandatory military service or serves in community or national service.

136. In February 2016, the Knesset enacted Amendment No. 169 to the National Insurance Law. The Amendment sets a uniform rate for the school funding grant allocated to children from the age of six (6) to eighteen (18), and replacing the previous arrangement.

137. In November 2015, the Knesset legislated Amendment No. 164 to the National Insurance Law, according to which each child is granted an additional monthly allowance in the sum of 50 NIS (14 USD) by the NII which is allocated to a special long-term savings account run by the NII under the child's name. The child shall receive his/her savings account upon reaching the age of 18 (with the parents' agreement), unless there is an urgent need justifying the withdrawal of the savings. However, incentives for the child to withdraw the savings at the age of 21 or later were also introduced, in order to encourage a wise use of the savings in his/her adult life. In addition, the parents of the child can designate another 50 NIS (14 USD) out of the regular monthly child allowance for this child's savings account. For further information, see Annex I.

138. For further information on the significant amendment on child benefits which include: uniform benefit, a minor convicted of security offenses, children in foster care, study grant, as well as other amendments on birth allowances, birth grants and maternity allowance, see CESCR Annex I, p. 34–35.

Article 27 (1–3)

Standard of living

Combating poverty

139. The MoH, the MoLSAaSS and the MoE marked the issue of developing poverty-awareness policy as a central goal in acting to reduce the economic gaps. The Ministries have been operating in order to reduce inequality and to provide specific response to socio-economically weaker populations.

140. The MoLSAaSS and the MoE added a budget to socio-economically weaker populations, thereby enabling narrowing social and educational gaps. In recent years, substantial parts of the resources added to the education system were differentially allotted while prioritizing the rural areas and the weaker social layers. For further information, see Annex I. For more information on the National Action Plan to Combat Poverty, see CESCR Annex I, p. 59–60.

Children and young adults at risk

141. On July 17, 2018, the Knesset approved Amendment No. 4 of the Infants at Risk (Entitlement to Day Care) Law 5760-2000. The aim of the Amendment is to improve and shorten the duration of the proceedings in cases of infants at-risk who are entitled to stay in day care. Furthermore, the Amendment expands the criteria for determining that an infant is at risk, by allowing the consideration of written medical information stating that the infant suffers from abuse, or based on information relating to gambling addiction of one of the infant's parents. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 33

Measures to protect children from substance abuse

The Authority's activities on drug abuse prevention

142. In the course of 2018, the Authority formulated a program for prevention of violence and use of drugs and alcohol in local authorities.

143. The Authority replaced the National Anti-Drug Authority (IADA), the former body dealing with similar issues. The IADA participated in the development of services for treatment and rehabilitation of youth affected by drug abuse. For examples, see Annex I.

144. On August 13, 2013, the Combating the Use of Dangerous Substances Phenomenon Law 5773-2013, entered into force. This Law provides effective tools for the enforcement agencies to cope with the phenomenon of New Psychoactive Substances – NPS, that are not included in the Dangerous Drugs Ordinance [New Version] 5733-1973. This Law broadly defines a dangerous substance, grants the Police power to seize and destroy a dangerous substance, and enables the relevant bodies to temporarily declare a dangerous substance as prohibited for distribution. The Law also stipulates that manufacturing, sale, display for sale, import, export, supply, trade or any other transaction and possession with the intention of making one of the said actions for a substance prohibited for distribution is a criminal offense with three (3) years imprisonment; and a person giving or soliciting a minor to obtain substance prohibited for distribution is liable for five (5) years imprisonment. For further information, see Annex I.

Changes in the enforcement policy of self-consumption use of cannabis

145. On July 19, 2018, Israel enacted the Dangerous Drugs (Special Fine Offense – Temporary Provision) Law 5778-2018, which entered into force on April 1, 2019. The Law adopts a policy of gradual administrative sentencing and criminalization as a last resort on the offense of possession or use of cannabis for self-consumption. The Law stipulates that the model of fines, defined in the Law for the first and second cannabis possession or use offenses, will not apply to minors under 18 years old when committing the offense.

146. The Law also stipulates that the special fine offenses will be recorded in a separate Police system (the “Special Police Register”) established for that purpose, and separated from the criminal records. The Special Police Register will be classified and no information from it will be provided unless according to the Law.

147. With respect to minors, the Law stipulates that the Special Police Register will include records of minors who committed an offense of possession or use of cannabis for self-consumption. Including such records will only be made under terms and circumstances determined by the Police, MPS and the MoJ in a protocol posted on the Police website. The special protocol for minors is expected to be published soon.

Educational programs for promoting healthy lifestyle and prevention of exposure of children to addictive substances

148. The MoE works together with the MoH as part of the national program “Possible and Healthy”, setting a joint goal: by 2020, all education institutions, schools and kindergarten, will act as health promoters.

149. For details on these programs, pupils involved in drug abuse, and a MoE Youth Leadership Program, see Annex I and CESCRC Annex I, p. 89–92.

IX. Education, leisure and cultural activities

Article 28

The Right to education

Legislation amendments

150. On October 2018, the Knesset legislated the Supervision of Toddlers' Day Care Centers Law 5768-2018, aimed to establish a legal framework for the operation of toddlers' day care centers, in order to protect the safety, rights and dignity of toddlers who are placed in these facilities. The Law defines the conditions required for obtaining a license for operating day care centers, the mechanisms for their supervision, and obligates the examination of the employees' criminal record and the safety of the facilities. Furthermore, the Law prohibits leaving a toddler without constant supervision during operating hours and imposes first aid training as a mandatory qualification for all employees. The Law provides numerous administrative enforcement tools and financial sanctions designed to encourage its application, and allows the Minister of LSAaSS to regulate the training, education and experience requirements of the staff working in the day care centers.

151. On July 16, 2018 the Knesset amended the National Education Law 5713-1953 (Amendment No. 17). According to the Law as amended, educating for a meaningful military or national civil service has been added to the purposes of the national education. Moreover, the Minister of Education is authorized to set regulations preventing the activity in education institutions of a person or body, which is not a part of the education system, if its activity is severely and substantially contrary to the purposes of national education, as detailed in Section 2 of the Law, or if it takes active legal or political measures outside of Israel against the Israel Defense Forces (IDF), regarding actions taken in the course of their line of duty, or against the State of Israel. Such regulations are yet to be introduced.

152. On August 7, 2017, the Knesset legislated the Supervision over the Operation of Afternoon Child Care Centers Law 5777-2017. This Law sets forth instructions regarding the supervision of afternoon child care facilities that are operated in educational institutions or by local authorities. The Law determines the conditions for the opening and operation of such facilities, as well as the required physical, safety and environmental conditions ensuring its proper operation, the requirements for the appointment and terms of employment of its employees, and the instructions regarding the services to be provided in these facilities.

153. On May 29, 2017, the Knesset legislated the Supervision of the Prices of Public Summer Camps Law 5767-2017. The Law stipulates that the Minister of Interior, after consultation with an advisory committee, is authorized to set a maximum price that a public summer camp can charge for the services it provides. "Public summer camp" is defined as a summer camp run by a public authority or anyone acting on its behalf, or operated in a public building or property. The Law applies to summer camps for children between the ages of three (3) years and seven (7) months to those starting the 7th grade, and contains provisions regarding the supervision of its implementation. For further information, see Annex I.

An action plan for the promotion of integration of pupils of Ethiopian descent

154. GR No. 324 (31.07. 15) adopted an action plan for the promotion of optimal integration of persons of Ethiopian descent in Israeli society. This plan includes, inter alia, the advancement of education, in many programs aimed to mitigate gaps and identify excelling pupils for further advancement. Specifically, the programs aim to elevate the grades of high-school pupils from Ethiopian descent on their matriculation certificate allowing them to advance to higher education. Such programs are executed in 35 local authorities and include over 10,000 pupils from Ethiopian descent. For further information, see Annex I.

Educational initiatives in the eastern neighborhoods of Jerusalem (ENoJ)

155. GR No. 3790 (13.04. 18) on the mitigation of the social and economic gaps and economic development of ENoJ, also addresses the education system in the ENoJ and establishes a sub-committee on education headed by the MoE DG, that is charged with forming a plan to advance the education system. The goals set for the advancement of education in the ENoJ include: strengthening the Hebrew knowledge among pupils, advancing technological knowledge, broadening the non-formal sectors of education and creating incentives for adopting the Israeli education program. The educational plan that shall be formulated by the sub-committee, in accordance with this Resolution, shall set the goals of each educational institution, based on their unique characteristics.

156. In February 2018, the Jerusalem Municipality published a multi-annual operative plan for reducing the classroom gaps in Jerusalem during the next five (5)-year term, following the decision in H.C.J 6183/16 Parents' Organization for the Education System v. The Ministry of Education. This program presents the classroom construction data in the Jerusalem Municipality, the unique challenges in building classrooms in Jerusalem, the actions required for lessening the shortage in classrooms, including budget and increasing efficiency of governmental and municipal processes. The goal of the Jerusalem Municipality five (5) years program for 2018–2022 is to add approximately 5,000 classrooms and kindergartens to the existing classes in Jerusalem, almost half of them in the ENoJ (for the Arab population in Jerusalem (2,350 classes)). The total program budget is approximately 9.015 Billion NIS (2.516 Billion USD) (excluding existing budgetary designations at a sum of 400 Million NIS (111.6 Million USD)). The program's implementation is carried out in cooperation with the relevant Ministries, while allocating the required budgets, removing barriers and improving the process. In addition, the MoE has informed the Supreme Court that the criteria for the allocation of the construction budget to municipalities has been amended to address the need in further classrooms country-wide.

157. For more on the education in the ENoJ, see CESCR Annex I, p. 99–103, and Annexes I and II to the current report. For more information on the right to education: on dropout rates, see CESCR Report p. 48–58, on the national expenditure on education, see CESCR Report, p. 53–55.

Article 29

The aims of education

Special programs to promote education for democracy

158. The MoE conducts advanced professional courses on democracy, civil education and fighting racism for supervisors, principals, and school and kindergarten teachers, with a scope of approximately 2,300 hours every year.

159. Recently, a MoE DG Directive was published in order to encourage promotion of open discourse and freedom of speech for education professionals and pupils. For further information, see Annex I.

Prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of gender, sexual orientation or gender identity

160. On March 24, 2014, Amendment No. 4 to the Pupil Rights Law 5761-2000 was legislated by the Knesset. This Amendment added sexual orientation and gender identity to the list of grounds upon which discrimination of pupils is prohibited. On August 2015 a MoE DG Directive (No. 5775/12) was published on this issue.

161. The education system deals with eradication of gender discrimination and nurturing a pluralistic and tolerant approach towards the LGBTQ community throughout the year, as part of the “Life Skills” program. Each year on May the education system discusses the LGBTQ in the classrooms, and special educational materials are published on the issue.

The dissemination of nutritional principles

162. On August 7, 2014 the Knesset enacted the Supervision on Food Quality and Proper Nutrition in Education Institutions Law 5774-2014, which authorizes the Minister of Education to set terms and conditions regarding the food and nutritional values of foods sold in education institutions. The Law also requires food suppliers to publish the nutritional composition of foods sold within the institution. The Supervision on Food Quality and Proper Nutrition in Afternoon Childcare Facilities Law 5777-2016, which was legislated in 2016, sets forth similar provisions regarding food served in afternoon childcare facilities.

163. As part of these efforts, in 2016 the Minister of Health appointed the Committee for Nutritional Regulation, headed by the DG of the MoH, in order to address unhealthy food consumption habits and to adopt additional policies, regulations and guidelines which promote healthy eating habits. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 30

Cultural rights of children belonging to minority groups

164. The MoCS runs many initiatives in order to promote the participation of children from a variety of populations in the Israeli society, in culture and sports activities. A number of sports projects for different populations were allocated a joint budget of more than 1.6 Million NIS (446,560 USD). An inter-ministerial program for the participation of persons with disabilities in sports was allocated a joint budget of 4.61 Million NIS (1.28 Million USD). For further information, see Annex I.

Sensitivity to cultural background of children

165. The MoLSAaSS is taking into consideration the sensitivity to children's culture in every decision concerning their treatment. This is manifested in all services: communal, regional or out-of-home. For example, the protection centers for child victims of sex or violence offenses are accommodated to the needs of the populations they serve: a center was established for the Arabic speaking population in the Galilee area, for the religious-Orthodox population in the Jerusalem area, and a unit inside it for Arabic speaking children in the ENoJ.

166. Furthermore, therapeutic solutions for children and youth who are victims of sexual abuse were established to accommodate various populations. The services are provided by the therapists with accommodation of the treatment language, treatment accessories and location of the therapeutic center.

167. Whenever the service is not designated to a specific population, there will be accommodation, if the needs of the children and families require it.

The Committee for the empowerment of the heritage of sephardi and mizrahi jews

168. This Committee was appointed in February 2016 in order to examine ways to enrich the national curriculum (especially in history and literature) regarding Mizrachi and Sfaradic Jewish culture. The recommendations, submitted in June 2016, included the recommendation to make the study of Mizrachi and Sfaradic history and culture compulsory in the Hebrew education system; creating an educational television series on the history of Mizrachi and Sfaradic culture; increasing research within humanity faculties; and establishing a Mizrachi and Sfaradic heritage museum.

Article 31

The right of the child to rest, play, leisure, recreation and cultural and artistic activities

169. There are approximately 8,075 sport facilities in Israel, such as gymnasiums, soccer fields, basketball courts and swimming pools, which are operated by localities, with partial funding by the MoCS, and the Sports Gambling Council. The MoCS also provides partial funding to children's theatres and youth dance schools which meet the relevant criteria.

Guidelines on the allocation of land for public use

170. The Planning Administration in the Ministry of Finance has published in 2016 Guidelines on the Allocation of Land for Public Use, which include allocation of land for purposes that especially benefit children and their wellbeing, such as: education institutions, community and youth centers, recreational and sport facilities, health facilities, welfare facilities and outdoor areas. According to these Guidelines, some of the parameters that should be taken into account by localities when allocating land for such purposes include the age groups in the relevant population and their size, and needs, including children. The Guidelines also include detailed directions as to the planning and building of each type of facility including schools, such as its size, location etc.

X. Special protection measures

Article 22

Child refugees and asylum seekers

171. According to PIA, there are about 5,950 children in Israel whose parents are asylum seekers, or that submitted an asylum request.

Health services provided to asylum seekers, including children

172. A range of medical services are available to asylum seekers in Israel, as follows:

(a) Emergency medical treatment – According to the Patient's Rights Law, in medical emergency situations, any person, regardless of their legal status in Israel, is entitled to receive unconditional medical treatment in hospitals in the following situations: inpatient admission in emergency cases, including surgery (no advance payment required); termination of pregnancy for minors and rape victims (funded by the MoH); giving birth, including intensive care for premature babies (no advance payment required);

(b) Family health stations – These provide preventive medical services to infants, toddlers and pregnant women, including routine immunizations. The service is provided free of charge. The MoH grants the asylum seekers' population with a preventative medicine services basket that includes: growth and development monitoring of infants and toddlers, and routine vaccines in the family health stations. The service is provided free of charge. Most asylum seekers are located and receive treatment in Tel Aviv-Jaffa mother and child healthcare stations. In addition, some seek treatment such as family health stations in other areas;

(c) General medical services – The “Terem” Clinic, located in the new Tel Aviv-Jaffa central bus station provides medical services to asylum seekers and children. It is funded by the MoH and operated by Terem healthcare chain. The clinic provides primary medical services including doctor's examinations, laboratory and imaging services. It includes a volunteer clinic where specialist doctors offer their services. The clinic handles roughly 37,000 appointments annually;

(d) Mental health services – The “Gesher” clinic, based in Jaffa, provides mental health services, including psycho-social assistance and pharmacotherapy. The clinic operates nine (9) hours a week. So far, the clinic treated over 700 patients in a professional and culturally-adjusted manner, with recognition of the need to provide an appropriate solution to this population. The MoH has recently completed a tender process for the provision of mental health services to this population instead of the Gesher clinic, with an emphasis on accessible, high-quality and available treatment, for the first time, all across Israel;

(e) Treatment for venereal diseases – The “Levinsky Clinic” of the MoH in Tel Aviv-Jaffa operates under the auspices of the Tel Aviv-Jaffa city council. It was established in 2002 for the diagnosis and treatment of venereal diseases. Services are provided free of charge and anonymously regardless of age, gender or legal status. The clinic operates five (5) days a week at various hours and inter alia, it deals with primary prevention, and subsequently, promotes secondary prevention. About 50% of the patients are Israelis, about 30% are Eritrean and the rest are tourists, citizens of other countries with no official status or immigrants from the former Soviet Union;

(f) Treatment for the homeless and persons engaged in prostitution – In the framework of the “Levinsky Clinic”, a mobile clinic provides services to the homeless and to women engaged in prostitution. Several thousands of persons receive treatment by this clinic annually;

(g) The Sheba Medical Center – This hospital, situated near Tel Aviv-Jaffa, operates a clinic for the uninsured, focusing primarily on oncology;

(h) Health insurance to children under the age of eighteen (18) of migrants and foreign workers and unaccompanied minors – Parents are entitled to purchase healthcare insurance for their children (under the age of eighteen (18)) in ‘Meuhedet’ HMO, with a cost of 120 NIS (32.5 USD) per month for the first and second child. The MoH subsidizes the insurance by additional 160 NIS (43 USD) per month. From the third child onwards – the MoH pays the full monthly premium for that child. The insured children are eligible to full service basket, similar to Israeli residents, except for the eligibility for treatments abroad. Nearly 80% of the children of this population are insured. As of June 13, 2018, 8,118 previously uninsured children were registered for the ‘Meuhedet’ health insurance;

(i) Maternity insurance – A female foreign worker or the wife of a foreign worker employed in Israel is entitled to a hospitalization grant (a grant paid to the hospital where the birth occurred to cover hospitalization costs) and a birth grant (financed by the NII). These allowances are paid even if the mother is unemployed. The insurance terms are similar to those of Israeli residents, with two (2) additional provisions – that the birth took place in Israel and that the mother or her spouse have at least six (6) consecutive months of employment in Israel (Section 40(a)(2) of the National Insurance Law). A female foreign worker who has been employed for the minimum period in Israel is also entitled to maternity allowance, under similar terms to those required of an Israeli resident.

(j) Health care to victims of trafficking – The shelters for victims of trafficking continue to provide medical care, psycho-social care and rehabilitation services. In addition, the MoH also funds an annual budget of approximately 3 Million NIS (837,300 USD) for healthcare services that are given to victims of trafficking in hospitals (visits to ICU, external clinics and hospitalization, pregnancy monitoring etc.). For further information, see Annex I.

Social rights of child asylum seekers

173. Education – The Compulsory Education Law 5709-1949 applies to every child residing in Israel, including children of asylum seekers. According to MoE data, all children of foreign workers and asylum seekers in Israel between the ages of three (3) and eighteen (18) are integrated into kindergartens and schools.

174. Childcare Support – According to recent assessments there are approximately 85 unsupervised private kindergartens (“babysitters”) in Tel-Aviv Jaffa, a decrease of about 100 such kindergartens from previous assessments. Approximately 1,800 infants and toddlers attend these kindergartens until 15:00, while in the afternoon several hundred children above the age of three (3) join them. On April 8, 2015, the Government approved Resolution No. 2487, providing additional childcare support services in Tel Aviv-Jaffa for infants and toddlers of parents without legal status. The Government allocated a budget of 14 Million NIS (3.8 Million USD) per year for four (4) years (April 2015-March 2019) for this purpose. This Resolution also set standards for operating the day care centres and stipulates MoLSAaSS supervision over them.

175. As of 2018, approximately 700 infants and toddlers of parents without legal status are enrolled in day care centres operated by non-profit organizations, which receive funding from the Tel Aviv-Jaffa Municipality pursuant to GR No. 2487 (08.04.15). The Social Services Department in the Tel Aviv-Jaffa Municipality, “Mesila”, also provides a number of afterschool facilities for children and operates parenting programs. The current assessment is that these efforts will enable approximately 1,100 infants and toddlers to attend appropriate facilities.

176. Children at risk – According to the MoLSSaSS DG Directive No. 100 for at-risk children and their families, all at-risk children regardless of their status, and their family’s status, have access to all services as is provided to any minor with civil status. As part of this initiative, 5 Million NIS (approximately 1.38 Million USD) are allocated every year for community-based solutions for these children and their families. Additionally, in 2019 ten

(10) new social workers positions were opened in local authorities with high concentrations of migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin in order to provide rehabilitation, support, and assistance to this population.

177. In 2018, the Tel Aviv-Jaffa Municipality treated 2,234 children and their families through the provision of emotional therapy, support groups, afterschool programs and parental training. In addition to individual therapy, group solutions are provided to both women and men on family health, family planning and relationships.

178. In addition, in Tel-Aviv-Jaffa and in some of the district authorities, MoLASaSS provides material assistance in addition to donations of food, diapers and infant formula.

179. Domestic abuse of migrant women – According to current procedures, the Police convene a meeting every six (6) months with officials from MoLASaSS and local authorities to discuss opportunities for cooperation and individual cases related to the management of domestic violence against migrant women. The last meeting was convened on July 9, 2019. Cooperation between the Police and the Local Authorities has proven successful and new therapeutic programs and frameworks have been established to protect vulnerable women and their children.

180. Furthermore, in order to facilitate the reintegration of these women back into the community following their treatment in the Ministry's shelters, a system of half-way houses where they can reside for an additional six (6) months at which they continue to receive assistance from a social worker was established. In 2018, twenty-four (24) migrant women were offered protection in the Ministry's shelters for battered women.

Inter-ministerial committee reviewing the social rights granted to migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin

181. In August 2017, an Inter-Ministerial Committee reviewing the social rights granted in Israel to migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin was established, at the request of the Attorney General. The Inter-ministerial Committee, headed by the DG of PIA, included representatives of the relevant Ministries: MoLSAaSS, MoH, MoJ, MoI, the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Construction and Housing. The Committee's main purpose was to examine the possibility of providing social, welfare and health services to migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin.

182. In July 2018, the Committee submitted its recommendations to the Ministers of LSAaSS and of Interior for examination. On February 28, 2019, the Minister of LSAaSS adopted the recommendations of the Committee concerning his Ministry. As part of this decision, the Minister ordered a partial provision of welfare services to migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin in need of out-of-home placements: victims of domestic violence, persons with disabilities and persons in street situations. The budget allocated for this is 36 Million NIS (10 Million USD) (out of which 20 Million NIS (5.5 Million USD) is allocated to the MoLSAaSS). As part of these services, a special program was set up in order to provide various welfare services for child migrants at risk who may not be returned to their countries of origin.

183. A petition on this issue was filed to the HCJ and is pending (H.C.J. 8907/16 Assaf – Aid Organization for Refugees and Asylum Seekers in Israel v. The Minister of Labor, Social Affairs and Social Services (pending)). In March 2019, the Government informed the Supreme Court that the Minister of LSAaSS agrees to the Inter-Ministerial Committee's recommendations to allocate funds (approx. 30 Million NIS (8.33 Million USD)) to secure social rights for certain groups of migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin. Most recently (July 2019), the Government informed the Supreme Court that it is looking into alternatives for purchasing a designated health insurance for migrants who may not be returned to their countries of origin, i.e., purchasing existing insurance packages for them or providing them with medical services through a different arrangement.

Article 32

Economic exploitation, including child labor

Protection of employed youth

184. On July 29, 2018, the Youth Employment (Prohibited and Restricted Employment) Regulations 5756-1995 were amended. These Regulations set a list of types of work in which it is prohibited to employ youth. This Amendment adds an overall prohibition on employment of youth in construction work (including work at construction sites), except for cases where the youth is employed as part of an internship or professional training.

185. Furthermore, a number of legislative amendments have been made to the Youth Employment Law 5713-1953, for example, a 2016 Amendment to the Law requires employers to refrain from employing youth until their identity card, or that of their parents that includes their details, has been shown to them (Section 27H(a)). This Amendment also redefined the term “medical certificate” so as to ensure that it includes only information concerning the youth’s fitness to work, in order to protect the youth’s privacy (Section 8(c)). Further Amendments are stipulated in CESCR Annex I, p. 47–49.

Children in street situations

186. The MoLSAaSS operates identification programs, field work and outreach to identify adolescents in distress, loitering and in extreme risk with the purpose of building trust and creating motivation to receive solutions. The Ministry also operates eight (8) shelters providing accommodation adolescents who have no families or are not in contact with their families. Furthermore, there are open centers within the community designated for adolescents at risk, danger and disengagements spectrum who dropped out of the education institutions.

Article 35

Child sale, trafficking and abduction

Reducing the purchase of sexual services

187. An inter-ministerial committee, headed by the DG of the MoJ was appointed in 2016 in order to review and provide recommendations of policy measures to reduce the purchase of sexual services.

188. The committee was comprised of leading representatives from various ministries and agencies: the Police, the MoJ, MPS, MoE, MoLSAaSS, MoH, Finance, Social Equality, and the Prime Minister’s Office. The committee held many sessions in 2016-2017 and heard various experts, NGOs, academics, and Knesset members. It also visited commercial sex venues and rehabilitation programs, and met with women in prostitution.

189. The committee found that there is basis for justifying the criminalization of clients of prostitution, but that the decision must ultimately be taken by the legislator, and recommended that if the Knesset chooses to criminalize prostitution, certain guidelines should be taken into account as to the legislative model. The committee’s report also includes comprehensive recommendations in the various fields covered by the teams, e.g., education, treatment and rehabilitation, alongside the criminal aspect, based on the conception that the reduction of the purchase of sexual services can only be achieved through the combination of those three (3) elements. In addition, the report addressed the link between prostitution and trafficking in persons.

190. In August 2018, following the recommendations of the above-mentioned inter-ministerial committee, a team headed by the MoJ DG was established in order to examine possible alternatives for the implementation of the committee’s recommendations. In December 2018, the team concluded its work and adopted an implementation program, which was included in GR No. 4462 (13.1.2019). The Resolution addresses the rehabilitation, treatment and education aspects, while the enforcement aspect will be addressed by the Police.

191. On December 31, 2018, the Knesset legislated the Prohibition of Consumption of Prostitution Services Law (Temporary Provision) 5779-2018, which prohibits the consumption of sexual services. The Law was legislated as part of the ongoing efforts of the State to reduce prostitution and provide assistance and rehabilitation to persons in prostitution. According to the Law, the offense of consumption of prostitution services, which includes the presence in a location which is used for prostitution, is an administrative offense that can be fined for 2,000 NIS (540 USD) for first time offenders and double the sum for repeat offenders. According to the Law, he/she who is present in a location which is principally used for prostitution will be seen as being there for the purpose of consumption of such services, unless proven otherwise. Nevertheless, the Law authorizes the State Attorney's Office to indict an offender, in which case the court could impose a fine of up to 75,300 NIS (20,350 USD). The Law further enables the Minister of Justice to set alternative penalties to fines within the Law's Regulations, by means of indictment. The Law will come into force in 2020 for a period of five (5) years. Its extension will be determined in accordance with research on its effects. In addition, the Ministers of Public Security and of LSASS will conduct periodic reviews of its implementation and the overall progress of the efforts to reduce consumption of prostitution. For further information, see Annex I.

Legal proceedings

192. In 2017 the MPS and the Police took initiatives to improve the available mechanisms to address the prostitution of minors. A main goal defined by the Police for 2018 was the implementation of treatment of minors who are exploited in prostitution and encouraging the opening of additional investigations.

193. Steps taken in recent years include: a letter from the State Attorney to the Head of the Investigations and Intelligence Division, reiterating the need to enhance enforcement efforts and make them a priority; meetings between the Prosecution and the Police representatives and the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (NATU) in order to examine the existing difficulties and explore other possible courses of action; the SAO examined investigation files where an indictment was not filed in relation to drawing conclusions and a forward-looking examination. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 36

Other forms of exploitation

Domestic violence

194. Each year during December the "Combatting Domestic Violence Week" takes place and the MoE publishes in the relevant website materials for teachers and educational staff. The issue is discussed during the domestic violence week and throughout the year as part of the "Life Skills program" provided to the pupils in the Education system. In 2015, a booklet translated into Arabic titled: "Friendship and intimate relationship without violence" was published among education staff in the Arab and Bedouin populations, as part of a recommended program for grades 10–11.

195. There are many steps taken by the Police in order to protect victims of domestic violence, including children, such as, inter alia, the establishment of family matters units in sixteen (16) police stations throughout the country in September 2019. Police officers who are social workers are placed in these units, in order to assess the damage caused to the entire family, while putting an emphasis on the post-traumatic treatment aspect. For further information, see CEDAW Report, p. 18–20 and Annex I, p. 20–22 and CESCR Report Annex I, p. 43–44.

Article 37 (b)–(d)The right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment*Indictment and testimony of children in sex or violence cases

196. On July 24, 2017, the Knesset enacted Amendment No. 17 to the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law 5715-1955. This Amendment aims to facilitate the testimony of children under the age of fourteen (14) in regards to offenses to which the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law applies, such as sex and violence offences and related offences. According to the Amendment, procedures in which children testify shall be prioritized, a juvenile interrogator shall be present when the child testifies, cross-examination shall only be performed by advocate defense attorney and a waiting room shall be designated for the testifying child. In addition, the court shall hear the child's testimony in consecutive sessions, limit the duration of the cross-examination and set out the procedure in order to ensure that the examination is comprehensible to the child.

197. Following this Amendment, on August 21, 2017, the President of the Supreme Court published a Directive on the Procedures regarding the Testimony of Children in Courts (Directive 1-17). The application of the Directive was extended to include all children under the age of eighteen (18) who are victims of the offenses stipulated in the Evidence Procedure Revision (Protection of Children) Law. According to the Directive, the child's testimony must be heard within 90 days from the day the indictment is filed; the court shall ensure that there is no interaction between the child and the suspect; the hearing in which a child testifies shall be scheduled as the first hearing on that day; and the child's testimony shall be given in one (1) day, or if that is not possible, in consecutive days, insofar as the best interests of the child so require.

198. Accordingly, the State Attorney published Guideline No. 6.13 (9.5.18) on the "Indictment and Testimony of Children in Sex or Violence Cases in which the Crime Victim, or a Major Witness is a Child". This Guideline deals primarily with setting shorter timeframes for the procedures in cases in which a child is involved, such as the filing of indictments, prioritizing such cases and hearing the child at the earliest convenience. This Guideline applies to children under the age of fourteen (14). However, efforts are made by the SAO to widen its scope to all children, on the basis of the aforementioned Directive of the Supreme Court on the matter.

Regulations for the evidence procedure revision (children protection)

199. On September 27, 2018 The Regulations for the Evidence Procedure Revision (Children Protection (Wording of the Notification of Rights to a Minor Suspect Prior to an Investigation)) 5778-2018 entered into force. According to these Regulations, minors who are suspects must be informed of their rights prior to their questioning and investigation: the right to remain silent, to consult with a lawyer in private prior to the investigation, to be represented by the Public Defender Office (PDO), to inform their parents on the investigation, and to request that one of the parents will be present at the investigation. In cases where it is decided according to the law to postpone the realization of some of these rights, the juvenile investigator must inform the minor. The Regulations include the specific wording the juvenile investigator shall use when informing the minor of his/her rights.

Representation of minors in legal proceedings by the PDO

200. Amendment No. 14 to the Youth Law amended The Public Defenders Office Law (July 30, 2008), entitling minors to legal representation in criminal proceedings by the PDO. For further information, see Annex I.

Minors in IPS detention facilities

201. The IPS is committed to fulfilling all of the needs of minors held in its facilities, including their basic needs: security, physical and mental protection, and nutritional needs in accordance with their developmental stage.

202. Education – Minors under the authority of the IPS are integrated into educational frameworks inside the prison, in order to complete their education, and take external tests and complete ten (10) and twelve (12) school years, depending on the period of their imprisonment. Minors with ADHD are offered special individual programs at the ADHD Center that has been operating since 2018 at the Ofek Prison.

203. Relationship with the Families – The IPS strives to strengthen the relationship with the minor prisoners' families and to turn them into an involved and supporting part of the minors' rehabilitation process, keeping in mind the long-term best interests of the minor. For further information, see Annex I.

Article 38

Children in armed conflicts

204. Over the past two decades, and in particular during the conflicts that took place in the Gaza Strip, children were especially vulnerable. During the 2014 Gaza Conflict, which lasted for 50 days, all residents living within 40 kilometers of the Gaza Strip were instructed to remain close to protected areas. Children living within a range of up to seven (7) kilometers from the Gaza Strip often remained in bomb shelters for the entire day in order to ensure they would not be in open areas during a rocket or mortar attack.

205. A study conducted throughout ten (10) years by the Israel Psych trauma Center at the Herzog Hospital in Jerusalem, which was published by Ynetnews in 2014 (based on findings prior to the 2014 Gaza Conflict), demonstrated the long-term effects of the constant rocket threat, as more than 70% of the children suffering from behavioral and emotional problems in 2004 as a result of rocket and mortar attacks continued to display such symptoms in 2011. Moreover, the study found that the rate of aggressive behavior displayed by children in southern Israel was three (3) times higher than in the general population.²

Article 40

Children in conflict with the law, and administration of juvenile justice

Inter-ministerial committee on minors recidivism

206. In September 2017, the Minister of Justice appointed an inter-ministerial committee to review the release of minors from detention, due to the high recidivism rates among minors released from detention (75% as opposed to 41% for adults). The inter-ministerial committee published its report in December 2017 and it was subsequently adopted by the GR No. 3711 (25.3.18), establishing a steering committee to determine which of the inter-ministerial committee's recommendations would be implemented immediately.

207. The Inter-ministerial Committee focused its work on the causes of recidivism among minors released from detention and an appropriate working strategy to decrease the current rates. The committee was composed of three (3) teams that dealt with the continuity of the treatment of minors, the release process of minors and the rehabilitation of minors.

208. The inter-ministerial committee found that overall, due to the short detention periods and subsequent short paroles, there are significant time constraints which limit the necessary rehabilitation assistance available to minors, aggravated by a general negative attitude of minors towards rehabilitation programs. Only a small number of the minors are released with a rehabilitation plan and most minors who are referred to out-of-home facilities do not stay there. For further information, see Annex I.

Head of Juvenile Justice (HJJ) and an Inter-ministerial coordinator (IMC) at the MoJ

209. In 2017, a new position for a HJJ was established in the SAO. This role includes instructing State Attorneys at the national level regarding juvenile justice and improving the measure of expertise in the field. The HJJ heads the National Youth Forum, which is composed of representatives from the District Attorneys' Offices and the relevant law enforcement and welfare bodies and is in charge of reviewing juvenile justice issues and implementing its principles. In 2018 and 2019 the HJJ conducted a seminar on children in conflict with the law for State Attorneys who are involved in decisions regarding arrest and the sentence of minors.

² <https://www.ynet.co.il/articles/0,7340,L-4555927,00.html>.

210. In 2018 an IMC was appointed in the MoJ for preventing children from coming into conflict with the law, pursuant to GR No. 1840 (11.08. 16). The functions of the IMC include holding consultations between the relevant professionals, holding training sessions, maintaining cooperation with NGOs and promoting projects and research in the field. The IMC is responsible for coordinating the activity of the Government bodies dealing with children in conflict with the law, with the main purpose of promoting the continuity of treatment and with a focus on prevention. The emphasis on prevention is based on the recognition that an early treatment which provides minors with the support system adjusted for their specific needs is proven to be the most effective long-term system to deal with minors in conflict with the law. Recently, the IMC established a youth forum in the MoJ for officials in the Ministry whose work effects youth, such as from the SAO and the PDO. For further information, see Annex I.

Restorative justice: Alternative models to the criminal proceeding

211. The Youth Probation Service in MoLSAaSS has developed, together with the Police, the MPS and the MoJ programs based on the principles of restorative justice. These programs are based on the restorative justice approach and serve as an alternative or supplement to the criminal proceedings, based on the premise that criminal proceedings alone do not suffice for coping with perpetrators and victims who are minors. For further information, see Annex I.

Minors and terrorism

212. Israel faces a complex and difficult reality of ongoing terrorism. Unfortunately, serious offenses have been committed by minors, including minors aged 13 and 14, and on occasion, the victims of these crimes have been minors themselves. Some measures were adopted in order to counter the recent wave of terrorism.

Amendments to the youth law

213. During the recent wave of terrorism, there has been an increase in the phenomenon of stone violence (e.g. throwing stones on cars, buses, pedestrians, and policemen), oftentimes by minors. Due to the serious nature of this kind of violence, which can result in grave damage to life and limb, offenders are often remanded to custody. However, it is common for offenders who are minors to be released on bail during the legal proceedings, in many instances with the agreement of the State.

214. For example, the Youth Law was amended to extend the court's power to impose a fine on the parents of a minor, in lieu of a criminal conviction, in order to include the power to impose such a fine even if the minor was convicted. In addition, a 2016 amendment established the possibility of sentencing a minor under the age of 14 to a prison sentence, on the condition that she/he be held in a children's facility rather than a prison until she/he reaches the age of 14. At the age of 14, the court may order her/his transfer to a prison, after considering the circumstances of the case, the effect of the prison on the minor, his/her age at the time of the offense and his/her personal circumstances.

The offense of stone-throwing

215. In addition, a parallel amendment was made to the National Insurance (Consolidated Version) Law 5755-1995, regarding a minor convicted of a security offense (as defined in the Counter-Terrorism Law) or of the offense of stone-throwing (as defined in the Penal Law) when committed with a nationalistic motive or in connection with terrorist activity, and sentenced to imprisonment. According to the Amendment, the parents of the minor are not eligible to receive NII payments which relate to the minor for the period of her/his imprisonment. These payments amount, on average, to about 160-200 NIS (44-54 USD) per month. During this time, the needs of the minor, as of all prisoners, are fully supplied by the State.

XI. Follow-up to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the rights of the child on the sale of children, child prostitution and pornography (CRC-OPSC)

The protection of children victims of trafficking or children of victims

216. The Government of Israel provides three (3) fundamental types of services to assist victims of trafficking in persons: medical care, legal aid and shelters. None of the services are contingent upon cooperation with law enforcement. In addition, the Government provides victims of trafficking special visas allowing them to work if they meet certain criteria.

217. Generally, the NATU, headed by the National Coordinator, is the primary government agency to coordinate anti-trafficking efforts on a national scale. The NATU was established according to a 2006 GR and it operates independently, under the MoJ. All Government agencies take an active part in anti-trafficking efforts, and the NATU is the leading Government agency which performs the overview functions in the realms of prosecution, protection and prevention. The NATU serves both as a coordination body and as a leader in policy development. Its mission is to promote cooperation between all relevant government authorities and also to serve as a bridge between Government authorities and non-Governmental organizations, as well as with relevant international bodies. For further information, see Annex I.

Sex tourism involving children

218. The Ministry of Tourism has taken action to tackle the issue of sex tourism within Israel as well as raise awareness on the subject within the tourism industry. For example, the Ministry encouraged several organizations in the tourism industry to join the Global Code for Ethics and led to the signing of the Code by the Travel Agents' Association.

219. Close cooperation is maintained on this issue with PIA, whose border control officers are on high alert for this sensitive issue, and will not admit a minor into Israel before confirming their reason for arrival. If there is suspicion of an illegal purpose, entry is refused, and PIA will, in most cases, notify the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, so that the relevant consul may be informed and legal follow-up be taken, if necessary. For further information, see Annex I.

Indictments and convictions on crimes in the additional protocol

220. The SAO gives special emphasis to those cases in which the victims of crime are minors, due to their particular severity. For further information, see Annex I.

International cooperation for the prevention, exposure and punishment of the crimes in the additional protocol

221. Israel takes an active part in the Global Alliance Against Child Sexual Abuse Online by the European Commission and the US, aimed to raise standards worldwide and unite efforts around the world to more effectively combat online sexual crimes against children.

222. Further international cooperation between police bodies and the MoJ in various countries in the world is taking place through the NCOPB headed by the MPS, as stipulated in Article 17. For further information, see Annex I.

Trainings and education on the CRC-OPSC

223. In the Education System – The Psychological Counseling Service in the MoE operates a unit that focuses on sex education and the prevention of sexual assault. The Unit operates several programs aimed to prevent trafficking in persons and prostitution. Lesson plans are adapted for pupils in high schools, regarding dangerous sexual behavior and the involvement in prostitution, both as being exploited in prostitution or as consumers of prostitution. The unit also develops guidelines for educators in order to aid them in the identification of pupils in distress, including those who engage in prostitution.

224. Trainings of Police Officers – In 2017, a seminar was held in the Ben Gurion University, in which 130 officers were trained on the topic of prostitution of minors. The purpose of the seminar was to enhance the cooperation, as well as recognition and treatment of this phenomenon. The seminar included officers from different Police departments, which were given lectures by the SAO, MoLSAaSS, MPS, the Police and “Elem” NGO.

Cooperation between the civil society and the government

225. Israel continues to encourage fruitful cooperation between NGOs and enforcement authorities. For example, a joint work protocol is being formulated with the aim of tackling the prostitution of minors. An additional cooperation led to the formulation of an information leaflet “Take note” on identifying victims of trafficking.

XII. Follow-up to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the rights of the child on the involvement of children in armed conflict (CRC-OPAC)

The number of recruits of minors

226. As mentioned in the Initial Report of Israel on the implementation of the CRC-OPAC submitted in 2008, and in accordance with the Israeli Declaration upon its ratification of the Optional Protocol, persons aged 17–18, who volunteer for early military service, on their own initiative, pursuant to their written request, and according to the provisions declared by the State of Israel, are limited to military training until they reach the age of eighteen (18), and do not take a direct part in combat duty.

227. The number of recruits of minors under the age of eighteen (18) during 2014–2018 was 1,092. The majority of these recruits are enrolled in military preparatory schools and programs for which they are required to undergo a one-day administrative induction into the armed forces for administrative purposes, while the rest of their military service is postponed. Moreover, the number of minor-recruits who are recruited to a combat unit out of the overall number of minor-recruits is only 50, and is in decline. The number of minor-recruits to combat units, was 22 in 2014 and five (5) in 2017.

Schools operated by or under the auspices of the IDF

228. The IDF has several schools and programs designated for youths aged 13.5-18, where specific professional and military professions are taught. Some schools operate as boarding schools, and some as daily schools. Enrollment in IDF operated schools is voluntary and pupils are allowed to quit these schools at any time they so desire. For further information, see Annex I.

The control of defense export

229. The control of defense export in Israel is regulated by the Defense Export Control Law 5766-2007, according to which export of defense and items of dual use which are intended for military use, are subject to licensing by the Ministry of Defense according to control lists. The decisions regarding defense export licenses are made in accordance with the defense export policy of the State. In the framework of this policy, many considerations are taken into account, including the implementation of human rights in the destination state and the recruitment of children and their involvement in armed conflicts.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
6 March 2020

Original: English

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Concluding observations on the initial report of the State of Palestine*

I. Introduction

1. The Committee considered the initial report of the State of Palestine (CRC/C/PSE/1) at its 2444th and 2445th meetings (see CRC/C/SR.2444 and 2445), held on 28 and 29 January 2020, and adopted the present concluding observations at its 2460th meeting, held on 7 February 2020.

2. The Committee welcomes the submission of the initial report of the State party and the written replies to the list of issues (CRC/C/PSE/RQ/1), which allowed for a better understanding of the situation of children's rights in the State party. The Committee expresses appreciation for the constructive dialogue held with the high-level and multisectoral delegation of the State party.

II. Follow-up measures taken and progress achieved by the State party

3. The Committee welcomes the progress made by the State party in various areas, in particular its accession to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communication procedure, to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, all on 10 April 2019, and its accession to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, on 18 March 2019. The Committee notes with appreciation the adoption of Decree-Law No. 4 of 2016 on the protection of Palestinian juveniles and of Decree-Law No. 8 of 2017 on public education, which stipulates the adoption of a policy on inclusive education. The Committee further welcomes the significant progress in the vaccination coverage of children and the high number of births attended by skilled health personnel.

III. Factors and difficulties impeding the implementation of the Convention

4. The Committee recognizes that the ongoing Israeli occupation of the territory of the State party, its building of new settlements and blockade of the Gaza Strip constitute a serious obstacle to the implementation of the rights enshrined in the Convention and lead to grave violations of children's rights, such as excessive use of force and abuse by Israeli security forces, including in the context of demonstrations and clashes, restrictions on children's freedom of movement, displacement, house demolitions and illegal settlements, arbitrary detention, ill-treatment, attacks on schools and hospitals, and denial of access to humanitarian aid. The Committee recalls the obligations of Israel, as the occupying Power, under international humanitarian law and international human rights law. It recognizes that the above-mentioned challenges limit the State party's effective control of its own territory and its possibilities to ensure children's rights. However, the Committee notes that the Convention is applicable in the entire territory of the State party. In this regard, the Committee regrets the State party's limited progress in resolving internal political issues that negatively affect children's rights and contribute to the political and geographic fragmentation in the State party. It notes that, owing to this fragmentation, children are subject to multiple legal systems that impede the full realization of their rights under the Convention.

* Adopted by the Committee at its eighty-third session (20 January–7 February 2020).

IV. Main areas of concern and recommendations

5. The Committee recommends that the State party ensure the realization of children's rights in accordance with the Convention, the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography throughout the process of implementing the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. It also urges the State party to ensure the meaningful participation of children in the design and implementation of policies and programmes aimed at achieving all 17 Sustainable Development Goals as far as they concern children.

A. General measures of implementation (arts. 4, 42 and 44 (6))

Legal status of the Convention

6. The Committee notes that the Convention and other international human rights treaties take precedence over national legislation after their official publication in the official gazette and incorporation into national law, according to decisions No. 4 (2017) of 19 November 2017 and No. 5 (2017) of 12 March 2018 of the Supreme Constitutional Court. The Committee is, however, concerned that, according to the Supreme Constitutional Court, the application of provisions of international treaties is dependent on their conformity with "the national, religious and cultural identity of the Arab Palestinian population".

7. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Expedite the implementation of the ministerial decision of 13 January 2020 to publish the Convention in the official gazette and to equally do so for other international human rights treaties;

(b) Take all other steps necessary for the incorporation of international human rights treaties into national law and their full application in the State party;

(c) Ensure that the interpretation of the Supreme Constitutional Court in its decisions No. 4 (2017) and No. 5 (2017) does not prevent the enjoyment of children of all rights enshrined in the Convention and in other international human rights treaties, ensuring primacy of the Convention over national legislation.

Legislation

8. While welcoming the Palestinian Children's Act No. 7 of 2004, amended in 2012, and the establishment of a committee mandated to harmonize national legislation with international treaties in 2017, the Committee is seriously concerned that:

(a) The Palestinian Legislative Council was dissolved by the Supreme Constitutional Court in its decision No. 10 (2018), and that since the Council's suspension in 2006, the State party legislates by decree-laws issued by the President, which are not recognized and applied in the Gaza Strip, leading to multiple sets of laws with varying degrees of protection;

(b) The Legal Harmonization Committee only reviewed selected legislation and that no mechanism and timeline have been established to fully harmonize national legislation with the Convention;

(c) There is no information on the timeline to review and adopt a number of draft laws, including the Decree-Law on family protection and the Decree-Law on the rights of persons with disabilities.

9. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Expediently schedule and organize national elections, including for the Palestinian Legislative Council, and ensure the recognition, harmonization and enforcement of child-related national legislation in all parts of the State party;

(b) Conduct a comprehensive review to fully harmonize its existing legislation with the principles and provisions of the Convention;

(c) Expedite the adoption of pending child-related legislation.

Comprehensive policy and strategy

10. The Committee notes the adoption of a strategic plan for the protection of children (2018–2022), the National Policy Agenda (2017–2022) and sectoral strategies on early childhood, education, health and juvenile justice, and also notes the ongoing review of the National Policy Agenda and sectoral strategies. However, the Committee is concerned that the State party has not:

(a) Adopted an overall policy on children’s rights, with a strategy and budgeted action plan;

(b) Allocated the required resources to implement and regularly monitor relevant strategies and policies.

11. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Prepare a comprehensive policy on children that encompasses all areas covered by the Convention and continue its efforts to revise existing policies and strategies;

(b) Develop a comprehensive implementation strategy for an overall policy and sectoral strategies, and a mechanism for monitoring and evaluation, supported by sufficient human, technical and financial resources.

Allocation of resources

12. The Committee notes the limited financial resources of the State party in the context of the Israeli occupation and its blockade of the Gaza Strip, and the State party’s reliance on decreasing international financial support. Nevertheless, the Committee is concerned that the preparation, approval, execution and monitoring of budgets lacks a child-rights perspective and the participation of civil society and children.

13. Recalling its general comment No. 19 (2016) on public budgeting for the realization of children’s rights, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Utilize a child-rights approach in the budgeting process by including specific indicators and a tracking system for the allocation and use of resources for children throughout the budget and in relevant sectors and agencies;

(b) Use this tracking system for assessment of how investments in any sector could serve the best interests of the child, ensuring the full participation of civil society and children in budget-related processes.

Data collection

14. The Committee notes the work of the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, but remains concerned that disaggregated statistical data on children's rights is not collected for all areas covered by the Convention and the Optional Protocols and is not sufficiently used in decision-making processes.

15. The Committee recommends that the State party ensure that statistical data and indicators cover all areas of the Convention, are disaggregated by age, sex, ethnic and national origin, urban or rural area, geographic location, and disability, refugee and socioeconomic status, and that they are used for the formulation, monitoring and evaluation of policies, programmes and projects for the effective implementation of the Convention.

Cooperation with civil society

16. The Committee notes the formal cooperation agreements established by the State party with civil society organizations working in the area of children's rights, but it is concerned that, according to information received, there have been cases of harassment and arbitrary detention of human rights defenders and civil society representatives working on children's rights in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

17. The Committee reminds the State party of the important role of independent civil society organizations and human rights defenders in promoting the human rights of children, and urges the State party to promptly and thoroughly investigate any cases of violence committed against human rights defenders and civil society representatives working on children's rights.

B. Definition of the child (art. 1)

18. Noting that the Personal Status Law, amended on 21 October 2019, increases the minimum age of marriage for girls and boys to 18 years, the Committee remains seriously concerned that the amended article 5 of the Law stipulates that sharia courts and other religious authorities may allow exceptions to the minimum age of marriage.

19. The Committee urges the State party to amend and harmonize its legislation to remove all exceptions that allow marriage under the age of 18 years.

C. General principles (arts. 2, 3, 6 and 12)Non-discrimination

20. The Committee remains deeply concerned about persistent de facto discrimination against some groups of children, particularly against girls, specifically with regard to custody, maintenance and inheritance, and against children belonging to the Bedouin communities, primarily living in Area C, concerning access to services and protection from stigmatization and violence.

21. The Committee recommends that the State party enact comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation; review its legislation and practices, with a view to prohibiting all forms of discrimination, particularly against girls; and strengthen the effectiveness of its social protection system for all children in disadvantaged or vulnerable situations, without discrimination.

Best interests of the child

22. The Committee is concerned that considerations of age and gender of the child often prevail over the best interests of the child.

23. Recalling its general comment No. 14 (2013) on the right of the child to have his or her best interests taken as a primary consideration, the Committee recommends that the State party ensure that this right is consistently applied in all judicial proceedings and decisions, and develop procedures and criteria to provide guidance to all relevant persons in authority for determining the best interests of the child in every area and for giving it due weight as a primary consideration.

Right to life, survival and development

24. The Committee is deeply concerned about the context of the Israeli occupation, the blockade of the Gaza Strip and armed conflict, which affects the right to life, survival and development of children, in particular:

(a) The high number of children killed and injured as a result of the Israeli occupation, its building of settlements and blockade of the Gaza Strip, as well as the participation of children in demonstrations and conflict-related activities against Israel in both the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, and reports that such participation has sometimes been encouraged and facilitated and that the death or injury of children has been glorified by authorities of the State party, de facto authorities in the Gaza Strip and non-State armed groups;

(b) The recruitment and use of children in hostilities by non-State armed groups operating from the territory of the State party and the attempt by Israeli forces to recruit Palestinian children as informants;

(c) The negative effect that the Israeli occupation, its building of settlements and blockade of the Gaza Strip, as well as the restrictions of movement and violence in the context of demonstrations, clashes, search and arrest operations, evictions and detention have on children's immediate and long-term psychological well-being;

(d) The high level of poverty, unemployment and reliance on food aid, as well as the inaccessibility of affordable and safe drinking water, particularly in the Gaza Strip, leading to an increase in malnutrition-related conditions among children and pregnant and breastfeeding mothers.

25. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Prevent children's participation in violence and apply all feasible measures to ensure their protection from the effects of hostilities and to care for child victims, which should include:

(i) The implementation of the code of conduct signed by all Palestinian parties and factions, which prohibits the use of children in any conflict-related activities, as stated by the State party's delegation in the dialogue;

(ii) The offer of guidance to children on safety and protection measures;

(iii) The provision of rehabilitation and psychological and medical health care;

(b) Fully implement the Palestinian Security Forces Military Service Act No. 8 of 2005 and article 46 (1) of the Palestinian Children's Act, which prohibit the recruitment and involvement of children in hostilities, and take prompt measures to investigate, prosecute and sanction the perpetrators in cases of child recruitment;

(c) Strengthen measures to address trauma experienced by children as a result of armed conflict and violence and its harmful impact into adulthood;

(d) Increase its investment in poverty-reduction measures and social welfare policies, including by strengthening the Palestinian Cash Transfer Programme and by improving its methods to assess multidimensional poverty, and to ensure that children living in poverty receive adequate financial support and have access to affordable food and safe drinking water.

Respect for the views of the child

26. Noting the existence of about 50 student parliaments in the West Bank, the Committee is concerned about the absence of a mechanism to systematically facilitate children's effective engagement with national processes on issues that affect them.

27. The Committee recommends that the State party establish a consultative mechanism or structure to involve children in all affairs affecting them, including in the design of laws, policies, programmes and services.

D. Civil rights and freedoms (arts. 7, 8 and 13–17)

Birth registration and name

28. The Committee is concerned that:

(a) The registration of children, particularly children of parents living outside of the State party, is often delayed and that fees apply if the registration is not made within 11 days of the birth;

(b) Children born to unmarried parents or as a result of incest cannot take their parents' name;

(c) Some children lack identification, because they do not have a birth certificate and/or their parents do not hold Palestinian identity, including because they reside outside the State party or in East Jerusalem, or stay illegally in the West Bank or the Gaza Strip, and that this can lead to family reunification requests being delayed.

29. Taking note of target 16.9 of the Sustainable Development Goals, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Consider waiving fees for late birth registration, in particular for families living outside of the State party, and continue its measures to promote birth registration;

(b) Adopt regulations to ensure that children born to unmarried parents have the right to take on the name of at least one of their parents and that children born of incest are afforded the same opportunity, where it is in their best interest;

(c) Continue its efforts to facilitate family reunification and to provide services, including education and health-care services, to children who lack identification.

Freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly

30. The Committee is deeply concerned that:

(a) National legislation, including Decree-Law No. 16 of 2017 on cybercrimes, in force in the West Bank, and the Criminal Code Ordinance (No. 74 of 1936), in force in the Gaza Strip, could be interpreted as allowing the limiting of the right to freedom of expression, including of children, and that according to reports received by the Committee, children had been arrested by the Palestinian Security Forces and the de facto authorities in the Gaza Strip for expressing their political opinions;

(b) Article 1 of the Bylaw No. 9 of 2003 of the Law on charitable societies and non-governmental organizations (2000) requires founders of an association to be at least 18 years of age.

31. The Committee urges the State party to ensure full respect for the right of all children to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly as guaranteed by the Convention, including by repealing all laws and regulations that restrict that right, by allowing children to set up associations and by ensuring children's access to information and material from a diversity of national and international sources.

Right to privacy

32. The Committee notes the measures taken by the State party to protect the privacy of children in the context of child justice, but remains concerned that the media often disseminate the names, photos and other personal details of children who have been injured, who have allegedly committed a crime or whose family member has allegedly committed a crime.

33. The Committee recommends that the State party expedite its work on a national policy to ensure the right to privacy of children in the field of media and the digital environment.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

34. While taking note of reports that legislation in the State party provides that a child should be protected from any influence on his or her faith, the Committee is concerned that any child who wants to change his or her religion can do so only if the parents do not object.

35. The Committee recommends that the State party respect the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and respect the rights and duties of parents to provide direction in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child.

E. Violence against children (arts. 19, 24 (3), 28 (2), 34, 37 (a) and 39)

Corporal punishment

36. The Committee is seriously concerned that:

(a) Children in the State party, particularly boys, are subjected to corporal punishment, especially in the home and at school;

(b) Corporal punishment is lawful under article 62 of the Penal Code No. 16 of 1960, in force in the West Bank, and is not explicitly prohibited in the Law on Education (2017).

37. Bearing in mind its general comment No. 8 (2006) on the right of the child to protection from corporal punishment and other cruel or degrading forms of punishment, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Amend article 62 of the Penal Code No. 16 of 1960 and the Law on Education (2017) to explicitly and fully prohibit all corporal punishment, however light, in law, in all settings, particularly in the home, educational and residential settings, and in all parts of the State party, and fully implement and enforce article 29 (4) of the Basic Law (2003) that prohibits corporal punishment of children;

(b) Strengthen its measures to develop awareness-raising and education campaigns that promote positive, non-violent and participatory forms of child rearing and discipline, and that underscore the adverse consequences of corporal punishment, targeting in particular children, parents, teachers and social protection professionals.

Abuse and neglect

38. The Committee notes with appreciation the steps taken by the State party to increase the protection of children, including its work on the draft Decree-Law on family protection and the establishment of a child protection department in the Ministry of Social Development, as well as a child protection network, a dedicated police bureau and a database on children subjected to violence. It also notes the existence of several complaint mechanisms, including by the Ministry of Social Development, the Ministry of Justice, the police and the public prosecutor. However, the Committee is concerned about:

(a) The high incidence of children being subjected to abuse, neglect and other forms of violence, particularly in schools by teachers and peers;

(b) The low rate of reporting of cases of violence against children;

(c) The underresourcing of the national child protection system, including the insufficient number of well-trained and specialized staff;

(d) The absence of information on measures to prevent violence against children and to address the specific needs of girls who are victims of violence, particularly the fact that they are being placed in the same facilities together with girls in conflict with the law.

39. Recalling its general comment No. 13 (2011) on the right of the child to freedom from all forms of violence and taking note of target 16.2 of the Sustainable Development Goals, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Effectively enforce article 29 of the Basic Law and articles 1 and 42 of the Palestinian Child Act concerning the protection of children against abuse and strengthen its measures to implement the policy on school violence (2013);

(b) Establish mechanisms, procedures and guidelines to ensure mandatory reporting of cases of child abuse and neglect, and continue training the professionals concerned to identify and adequately respond;

(c) Allocate adequate human, technical and financial resources to the national child protection system and other measures to protect children from abuse and neglect in order to ensure a comprehensive and effective child protection infrastructure;

(d) Further strengthen awareness-raising and education programmes, including campaigns, with the involvement of children in order to formulate a comprehensive strategy for preventing and combating violence against children, including a gender perspective.

Sexual exploitation and abuse

40. The Committee is seriously concerned that:

(a) Disaggregated statistical data on cases of sexual exploitation and abuse of children and on the number of investigations, prosecutions and their outcome are not systematically collected;

(b) A high number of children experience sexual violence, particularly in the school environment, and that child victims of such violence suffer from stigmatization and discrimination;

(c) Child victims of sexual violence often lack access to justice owing to recourse to customary mechanisms and that girls who are victims of sexual abuse, in particular rape, have reportedly been required to marry the abuser.

41. Taking note of target 5.2 of the Sustainable Development Goals, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Establish a national database of cases of sexual exploitation and abuse with a view to formulating evidence-based national policy;

(b) Develop programmes and policies, including awareness-raising activities, for the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse, including in schools;

(c) Ensure access to justice for child victims of sexual abuse, including by combating impunity of abusers;

(d) Establish a child-friendly and multisectoral investigation and prosecution with the aim of avoiding the retraumatization of child victims, and ensure their recovery, psychological assistance and social reintegration, including protection from stigmatization.

Harmful practices

42. The Committee is seriously concerned about the high number of marriages of girls under the age of 18 years, which are a result of insecurity and economic deprivation and lead to early childbearing and school dropout.

43. Recalling joint general recommendation No. 31 of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women/general comment No. 18 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (2019) on harmful practices and taking note of target 5.3 of the Sustainable Development Goals, the Committee urges the State party to take active measures to put an end to child marriage and develop awareness-raising campaigns and programmes on the harmful effects of child marriage on the physical and mental health and well-being of girls and boys.

F. Family environment and alternative care (arts. 5, 9–11, 18 (1) and (2), 20, 21, 25 and 27 (4))

Family environment

44. The Committee is concerned that:

(a) National legislation concerning family and personal status matters is fragmented in the State party and that provisions of the Jordanian Personal Status Law (1976) and the Egyptian Family Rights Law (1954), which are in force in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, respectively, allocate guardianship rights to fathers and specify the parent with whom children have to live in case of the divorce of their parents, without consideration of the best interests of the child;

(b) Maternity leave is limited to 10 weeks;

(c) A number of children are deprived of the care of at least one of their parents owing to restrictions by Israel on the freedom of movement to and from the State party and on residence in the State party or East Jerusalem.

45. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Harmonize national legislation concerning family and personal status matters and bring national legislation into line with the Convention and international standards, particularly concerning guardianship and maintenance of children;

(b) Increase the duration of paid maternity leave to at least 14 weeks, in line with international standards, and undertake all other measures to facilitate the equal sharing of parenting responsibilities between mothers and fathers;

(c) Take all possible measures to ensure that children are cared for by both parents.

Children deprived of a family environment

46. The Committee notes with serious concern that:

(a) The State party has not established a comprehensive database on children deprived of a family environment and on the support that they receive;

(b) The financial support to orphaned children ended in 2016 (CRC/C/PSE/1, para. 248);

(c) Children have reportedly been removed from their families without a court decision;

(d) Children with different needs, including children deprived of a family environment, child victims of neglect and abuse and children with behavioural problems or accused of offences, are placed in the same residential care institutions;

(e) Monitoring of residential and foster care of children deprived of a family environment is infrequent, in part as the result of an insufficient number of qualified child protection counsellors.

47. Drawing the State party's attention to the Guidelines for the Alternative Care of Children, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Collect data on children who are deprived of a family environment and the support they receive, including by finalizing the foster care database (CRC/C/PSE/1, para. 261), in order to facilitate regular monitoring of their situation;

(b) Ensure that all orphaned children receive social assistance, in line with article 31 of the Palestinian Children's Act;

(c) Ensure that removal of children from their families is based on a court order;

(d) Further support and prioritize family-based care for all children under the age of 18 years who cannot stay with their families, with a view to reducing the institutionalization of children, and ensure that children in residential care are housed and provided with services according to their needs;

(e) Allocate the human, technical and financial resources necessary to fully implement the Foster System Regulations (2013) and ensure periodic review of the placement of children in foster care and alternative care institutions, and monitor the quality of care therein.

G. Children with disabilities (art. 23)

48. While noting that the Decree-Law of 2017 on public education stipulates the adoption of a policy to implement inclusive education and that the General Directorate for Counselling and Special Education of the Ministry of Education conducts awareness-raising activities to combat stereotypes against persons with disabilities, the Committee is concerned about:

(a) The absence of information on the precise timeline for adopting the draft Decree-Law on the rights of persons with disabilities, for updating the national strategy on disability of 2012 and the national strategy for inclusive education of 2014, and for launching the “Disability Card” and an integrated database on persons with disabilities;

(b) Children with disabilities being subjected to stigmatization, discrimination, abandonment and concealment from society;

(c) Abuse and violence committed against adolescent girls with disabilities.

49. Recalling its general comment No. 9 (2006) on the rights of children with disabilities and recalling also the commitment made by the State party on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the Convention to draft a law on the rights of persons with disabilities, the Committee urges the State party to adopt a human rights-based approach to disability, establish a comprehensive strategy for the inclusion of children with disabilities in society that incorporates, inter alia, the development of accessible services, including health, education, social protection and support services, and:

(a) Expedite the adoption of the draft Decree-Law on the rights of persons with disabilities, the revision of relevant national policies and strategies and any other measures necessary, in cooperation with the council on persons with disabilities, to ensure that children with disabilities are guaranteed equal rights;

(b) Undertake awareness-raising campaigns in order to combat stigmatization, prejudice and multiple forms of discrimination against children with disabilities, promote a positive image of such children and their recognition as rights-holders, with respect for their dignity and evolving capacities on an equal basis with other children;

(c) Promptly investigate all cases of abuse and neglect committed against children with disabilities, paying special attention to those committed against girls and adolescents with disabilities, adequately sanction the perpetrators, and strengthen its efforts to protect girls with disabilities from abuse and neglect.

H. Basic health and welfare (arts. 6, 18 (3), 24, 26, 27 (1)–(3) and 33)

Health and health services

50. The Committee notes that the rates of maternal, infant and under-5 mortality have decreased and that persons living in the Gaza Strip, including children, are provided with health insurance free of charge. The Committee is, however, deeply concerned about:

(a) The insufficient availability of specialized medical care, particularly prenatal, delivery and postnatal care, and of medicine and medical equipment in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

(b) The devastating impact of the Israeli occupation and blockade of the Gaza Strip on the availability of and access to adequate health services, in particular the killing and injuring of health personnel, the damaging of health facilities by the Israeli security forces, the restrictions on movement from the Gaza Strip to the West Bank as well as within the West Bank, and the low rate of approval of applications by children to enter Israel for medical treatment.

51. Recalling its general comment No. 15 (2013) on the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Ensure sufficient budgetary allocations to health services and establish clear budget lines for children's health, and ensure access to antenatal, delivery and postnatal care;

(b) Take all steps possible to restore health services, where disrupted by the hostilities and the Israeli blockade of the Gaza Strip, and continue efforts to provide safe childbirth and emergency health services through the establishment of local clinics and health centres, particularly in areas where restrictions of movement are imposed by Israel.

Adolescent health

52. The Committee takes note of the Sexual and Reproductive Health Strategy (2018–2022) and notes the provision of free laboratory tests to curb HIV/AIDS. However, the Committee notes with concern:

(a) The criminalization of abortion by article 8 of the Public Health Act No. 20 of 2004;

(b) The high rate of adolescent pregnancies;

(c) That sexual and reproductive health education is not implemented in all schools and, where it exists, has content based on biological aspects only.

53. Recalling its general comment No. 4 (2003) on adolescent health and development in the context of the Convention and its general comment No. 20 (2016) on the implementation of the rights of the child during adolescence, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Decriminalize abortion in all circumstances and ensure access to safe abortion and post-abortion care services for adolescent girls, making sure that their views are always heard and given due consideration as a part of the decision-making process;

(b) Continue its efforts to ensure access to sexual and reproductive health information and services countrywide for girls and boys, including in schools, in particular access to modern contraception methods;

(c) Ensure an approach to sexual and reproductive health education that encompasses emotional, physical and psychological aspects.

H. Education, leisure and cultural activities (arts. 28–31)

Education, including vocational training and guidance

54. The Committee is extremely concerned about challenges faced in the realization of the right to education, including the detrimental effect of the Israeli occupation, its building of settlements and the blockade of the Gaza Strip. In particular, the Committee is concerned about:

(a) The limited access of children to quality education, the shortage of qualified teachers, the requirement for some students to pay school fees, the lack of water and sanitation facilities in schools, the low enrolment rate in early childhood education and the insufficient access to vocational education;

(b) The high percentage of children with disabilities who are out of school, the prevalence of segregated education and the absence of adapted curricula, specialized teachers and accessible school buildings;

(c) The prevalent attacks on school facilities and personnel by Israeli forces and non-State armed groups operating from the Gaza Strip, the use of schools for military or other purposes by Israeli forces and the disruption of education through law enforcement operations by the Palestinian security forces, resulting in children and teachers being killed or injured and school facilities being damaged, which leads to the overcrowding of the remaining schools and the absence of children from school;

(d) The detrimental effect of the rule by the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, according to which an absence from school of more than 30 days requires a child to repeat a class;

(e) Reports that the contents of some textbooks do not promote peace and tolerance as outlined in article 29 of the Convention.

55. The Committee urges the State party:

(a) Strengthen its efforts to improve the quality of education, ensure an adequate number of qualified teachers, develop a strategy on early childhood education and implement its national strategy for vocational and technical education;

(b) Provide inclusive education for all children with disabilities, including by finalizing the policy on inclusive education, and ensuring the training of teachers, the elaboration of adapted curricula and the reasonable accommodation of school infrastructure, paying particular attention to children with psychosocial and intellectual disabilities;

(c) Take all possible measures to protect students and teachers from the negative impact of the armed conflict on education, including preventive measures by the Palestinian security forces when undertaking law enforcement operations around schools, and by implementing its pledges under the Safe Schools Declaration, and ensure that non-State armed groups operating in the State party respect international humanitarian and human rights law and respect schools as protected objects;

(d) Provide children who cannot attend school owing to a lack of safety, whether at school or on the way to and from school, with continued learning opportunities and repeal the rule of the Ministry of Education and Higher Education that obliges such students to repeat a class;

(e) Ensure that the contents of school curricula are aligned with the aims of education as set out in article 29 of the Convention, in particular the promotion of peace and tolerance.

I. Special protection measures (arts. 22, 30, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37 (b)–(d) and 38–40)

Asylum-seeking and refugee children

56. The Committee is deeply concerned about the high number of refugee and internally displaced children in the State party owing to the Israeli occupation, forced displacement, evictions and armed hostilities. It notes with concern the dire situation of the majority of these children in refugee camps or living with extended family, including owing to overcrowding, poor living conditions, the unemployment of their parents, the discontinuation of cash payments by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, food insecurity and lack of privacy.

57. The Committee urges the State party to increase the allocation of human, technical and financial resources to support refugee and internally displaced children, particularly measures aimed at ensuring their physical and psychological well-being, including food security, and at facilitating the reintegration of their parents into the job market.

Administration of child justice

58. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Decree-Law No. 4 of 2016 on the protection of Palestinian juveniles. However, the Committee is deeply concerned that:

(a) The Decree-Law on the protection of Palestinian juveniles is not being implemented in the Gaza Strip and is not fully being implemented in the West Bank, owing to the absence of a dedicated budget and the unequal geographic distribution of institutions and services in the territory of the State party;

(b) The Palestinian Children's Act and the Decree-Law on the protection of Palestinian juveniles set the minimum age of criminal responsibility at 12 years, while the Juvenile Offenders' Law No. 2 of 1937, applicable in the Gaza Strip, sets it at 9 years;

(c) Children are sometimes held in centres for deprivation of liberty for adults and there is limited information on the use of non-custodial measures;

(d) Children in detention, both in the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip, are reportedly ill-treated;

(e) A large number of children are held in detention by Israel for security offences and are reportedly ill-treated and subject to violations of due process.

59. Recalling its general comment No. 24 (2019) on children's rights in the child justice system, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Bring its child justice system fully into line with the Convention and other relevant standards in all parts of the State party, including by providing the necessary human, technical and financial resources to fully implement the Decree-Law on the protection of Palestinian juveniles in all parts of the State party;

(b) Raise the minimum age of criminal responsibility to an internationally acceptable level of at least 14 years;

(c) Promote non-custodial and non-judicial measures, such as diversion, probation, mediation, counselling or community service, wherever possible, for all child offenders, and in cases where detention is unavoidable, ensure that detention conditions for children are compliant with international standards;

(d) Ensure that ill-treatment of children in places of deprivation of liberty does not occur, provide qualified and independent legal aid free of charge to children in conflict with the law and offer child-friendly and accessible complaint mechanisms;

(e) Continue to ensure the provision of legal support and other services to children detained by Israel and assist them through the provision of psychological support, rehabilitation, education and other measures, after their release.

J. Ratification of international human rights instruments

60. The Committee recommends that the State party, in order to further strengthen the fulfilment of children's rights, consider ratifying the following core human rights instruments:

(a) The International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families;

(b) The International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance.

61. The Committee urges the State party to fulfil its reporting obligations under the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, as the related reports have been overdue since 7 May 2016 and 29 December 2019, respectively.

V. Implementation and reporting

A. Follow-up and dissemination

62. The Committee recommends that the State party take all appropriate measures to ensure that the recommendations contained in the present concluding observations are fully implemented. The Committee also recommends that the initial report, the replies to the list of issues and the present concluding observations be made widely available in the languages of the country.

B. National mechanism for reporting and follow-up

63. The Committee notes with appreciation the National Standing Committee at ministerial level that was established by a presidential decree on 7 May 2014 and is in charge of following up on the accession of the State of Palestine to international human rights instruments. However, it notes that the National Standing Committee lacks sufficient human, technical and financial resources and does not yet function as a standing government structure to coordinate and prepare reports to and engage with international and regional human rights mechanisms, and to coordinate and track national follow-up to and implementation of treaty obligations and the recommendations and decisions emanating from those mechanisms. The Committee recommends that the State party allocate such resources and seek technical assistance from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. It emphasizes that the National Standing Committee should have the capacity to consult systematically with the Independent Commission for Human Rights and civil society.

C. Next report

64. The Committee invites the State party to submit its combined second and third periodic reports by 2 May 2025 and to include therein information on the follow-up to the present concluding observations. The report should be in compliance with the Committee's harmonized treaty-specific reporting guidelines adopted on 31 January 2014 (CRC/C/58/Rev.3) and should not exceed 21,200 words (General Assembly resolution 68/268, para. 16). In the event that a report exceeding the established word limit is submitted, the State party will be asked to shorten the report in accordance with the above-mentioned resolution. If the State party is not in a position to review and resubmit the report, translation thereof for the purposes of consideration by the treaty body cannot be guaranteed.

65. The Committee also invites the State party to submit a core document, not exceeding 42,400 words, in accordance with the requirements for the common core document contained in the harmonized guidelines on reporting under the international human rights treaties, including guidelines on a common core document and treaty-specific documents (HRI/GEN/2/Rev.6, chap. I) and paragraph 16 of General Assembly resolution 68/268.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Distr.: General
16 September 2024

Original: English

Committee on the Rights of the Child

Concluding observations on the combined fifth and sixth periodic reports of Israel*

I. Introduction

1. The Committee considered the combined fifth and sixth periodic reports of Israel¹ at its 2830th and 2831st meetings,² held on 3 and 4 September 2024, and adopted the present concluding observations at its 2846th meeting, held on 13 September 2024.

2. The Committee welcomes the submission of the combined fifth and sixth periodic reports of the State party and the written replies to the list of issues³ and the addendum to the list of issues,⁴ which allowed for a better understanding of the situation of children's rights in the State party. The Committee expresses its appreciation for the dialogue held with the delegation of the State party.

3. Nonetheless, the Committee deeply regrets the State party's repeated denial of its legal obligations under the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT) based on its position that the Convention "does not apply... to areas beyond a State's national territory" and "was not designed to apply in situations of armed conflict"⁵, and that international humanitarian law is the relevant and specific applicable body of law in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. The Committee also regrets the limited information it received on the situation of children living in the OPT due to such a position. The Committee is of the view that the State party's denial of the application of the Convention cannot be used to justify its grave and persistent violations of international human rights and humanitarian law. In this regard, the Committee recalls the jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), including its advisory opinion (AO) of 19 July 2024 on the legal consequences arising from the policies and practices of Israel in the OPT, including East Jerusalem, that "international human rights instruments are applicable 'in respect of acts done by a State in the exercise of its jurisdiction outside its own territory', particularly in occupied territories", that the protection offered by human rights conventions does not cease in case of armed conflict or of occupation, and that the State party remains bound by the international human rights treaties which the State party is party to in respect of its conduct with regard to the OPT. The Committee, aligning its position with the position of the ICJ, reiterates that the Convention applies to all children at all times and is directly applicable in all territories over which the State party exercises effective control, and reminds the State party of its legal obligations both under the Convention and international humanitarian law concerning children in the OPT.

* Adopted by the Committee at its ninety-seventh session (26 August – 13 September 2024).

¹ CRC/C/ISR/5-6.

² See CRC/C/SR.2798 and CRC/C/SR.2799.

³ CRC/C/ISR/RQ/5-6.

⁴ CRC/C/ISR/RQ/5-6/Add.1.

⁵ CRC/C/ISR/5-6, para. 9; CRC/C/ISR/RQ/5-6, para. 18.

II. Follow-up measures taken and progress achieved by the State party

4. The Committee welcomes the various measures taken by the State party to implement the Convention, including the Evidence Privilege Law (Mental Treatment in Criminal Proceedings Concerning Sexual Offences or Severe Domestic Violence Offences), Social Services for Persons with Disabilities Law, Authorities for Prevention of Internet Use for the Commission of Offenses Law, Early Childhood Council Law, Children Foster Care Law, Amended Pupil Rights Law, Amended Women's Employment Law, Amended Prohibition of Discrimination in Products, Services and in Entry into Places of Entertainment and Public Places Law, Amended Penal Law, Amended Legal Aid Law, Supervision of Toddler's Day Care Centers Law, Government Resolution No. 550 establishing a five-year plan (2022-2026) entitled "Tkadum – Progress", amended Youth Employment Regulations, and Government Resolution No. 2487 on providing additional childcare support services in Tel Aviv-Jaffa for infants and toddlers of parents without legal status.

III. Factors and difficulties impeding the implementation of the Convention

5. The Committee notes the particularly severe effects of the terrorist attack committed by Hamas and other Palestinian militant groups on 7 October 2023 and the ongoing armed conflict, which have led to serious violations of children's rights and constitute a considerable obstacle to the implementation of the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee emphasizes that the State party's continuing occupation of, and further expansion of illegal settlements in the OPT and the Occupied Syrian Golan Heights, constitute serious violations of the rights of children living in those areas and their families, and hinder the enjoyment of their rights under the Convention. In this regard, the Committee reminds the State party of the continuity of international human rights obligations and that the rights under the Convention and its Optional Protocols apply to all children at all times. The Committee also reminds the State party of its responsibility to protect the populations under its jurisdiction and in territories over which the State party exercises effective control, and to take immediate measures to stop the use of excessive and lethal force against civilians and to prevent further violence against children, including killing, injury, torture and ill-treatment.

IV. Main areas of concern and recommendations

6. The Committee reminds the State party of the indivisibility and interdependence of all the rights enshrined in the Convention and emphasizes the importance of all the recommendations contained in the present concluding observations. The Committee draws the State party's attention to the recommendations concerning the following areas, regarding which urgent measures must be taken: non-discrimination (para. 18), right to life, survival and development (para. 21), torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (para. 30), mental health (para. 38), administration of child justice (para. 49) and violations of children's rights in the OPT, including the Gaza Strip and the West Bank (paras. 51, 53 and 55).

A. General measures of implementation (arts. 1, 4, 42 and 44 (6))

Legal status of the Convention

7. The Committee urges the State party to ensure the full application of the Convention in the OPT – the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip – and ensure that all children under its jurisdiction and effective control are afforded the full enjoyment of the rights enshrined in the Convention.

Legislation

8. The Committee recalls its previous recommendations⁶ and further recommends that the State party:

(a) Fully incorporate the Convention into national legislation, and conduct a comprehensive review of all legislation to align it with the Convention and address any inconsistencies;

(b) Ensure the effective implementation of the guidelines for the implementation of the Rights of the Child Law, including assessing the impact of government bills on children's rights during the preparation phase, and developing mandatory child-rights impact assessment procedures for policies relevant to children;

(c) Ensure that all children in the OPT are treated as children and receive protection under the Convention.

Comprehensive policy and strategy

9. Recalling its previous recommendations,⁷ the Committee recommends that the State party develop and adopt a comprehensive policy and action plan on children's rights covering all areas of the Convention and its Optional Protocols, with the participation of children, that encompasses all areas covered by the Convention and its Optional Protocols and includes specific, time-bound and measurable goals.

Coordination

10. The Committee welcomes the establishment of the Government Unit for Coordination for the Rights of Children and Youth and the Director General's Committee on the rights of children and youth, and recommends that the State party ensure that they have the sufficient authority and resources to coordinate all activities regarding the implementation of the Convention across all sectors and at all levels.

Allocation of resources

11. Deeply concerned about the profound impact of the armed conflict on the resources available for children, the Committee recalls its previous recommendations⁸ and recommends that the State party incorporate a child rights-based approach into the State budgeting process and:

(a) Implement a tracking system for the allocation, use and monitoring of resources for children, with a view to eliminating disparities and ensuring equitability, and assess how investments in all sectors serve children's rights;

(b) Define budgetary lines for all children, paying special attention to those in disadvantaged situations who may require affirmative social measures, and ensure that those budgetary lines are protected even in situations of crisis.

Data collection

12. Recalling its general comment No. 5 (2003), the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Develop a central data collection system encompassing all areas of the Convention and disaggregated by age, sex, disability, geographical location, ethnic origin, nationality and socioeconomic background;

(b) Improve the collection, analysis and sharing of data on mental health, child justice and the situation of asylum-seeking and migrant children, children in the

⁶ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 11.

⁷ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 10; CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 13(b).

⁸ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 14.

OPT and other groups of children in disadvantaged situations, to strengthen the implementation of the Convention.

Access to justice and effective remedies

13. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Continue to ensure that all children have access to: (i) confidential, child-friendly and independent complaint mechanisms in all settings including schools, religious schools, military schools, alternative care and detention, for reporting all forms of violence, abuse, discrimination and other violations of their rights; and (ii) legal support and representation, age-appropriate counselling and remedies, including compensation and rehabilitation;

(b) Widely disseminate information about existing mechanisms for reporting violations, violence, abuse and all forms of discrimination, and provide sustainable funding to ensure such services are accessible, confidential, child-friendly and effective;

(c) Ensure systematic and mandatory training of all relevant professionals working with children on child-friendly procedures and remedies, children's rights and the Convention.

Independent monitoring

14. Deeply concerned about the absence of a national human rights institution meeting the requirements outlined in the Paris Principles, and the lack of independent investigations into allegations of human rights violations and war crimes perpetrated by the armed and security forces, the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Establish an independent institution for children, in full compliance with the Paris Principles, with the mandate to monitor and evaluate progress in the implementation of the Convention at the national and local levels and to receive, investigate and address complaints from children in a child-sensitive manner;

(b) Investigate allegations of human rights violations and war crimes perpetrated by the armed and security forces.

Dissemination of the Convention and awareness-raising

15. The Committee recommends that the State party strengthen its awareness-raising programmes, including campaigns, in cooperation with civil society organizations, to ensure that the Convention and the Optional Protocols are available in Hebrew, Arabic and accessible formats and widely known by children, parents and the general public.

Cooperation with civil society

16. The Committee is deeply concerned about legislation which reduces and restricts the activities of civil society working on children's rights, and harassment of and attacks against such organizations, thus contributing to family fragmentation, psychological trauma and suppression of children's rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly. Recalling its previous recommendations,⁹ the Committee further urges the State party to:

(a) Repeal laws and legal provisions that obstruct the work of civil society on children's rights, including the Budgets Foundations Law, the anti-boycott law, the Law of Associations, the Counter-Terrorism Law and the law on entry into Israel;

(b) Ensure that anti-terrorism legislation is not used to suppress children's right of expression and assembly and to privacy, and that anti-terrorism measures are proportionate and in line with the rule of law, human rights and fundamental freedoms;

⁹ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 18.

(c) Cease practices that amount to the intimidation, silencing or violation of the rights of child human rights defenders and civil society working on children's rights, including harassment, arbitrary arrest, detention, criminalization and their being labelled as "terrorists";

(d) Investigate promptly and independently all reported attacks and allegations of restrictions, intimidation, threats and harassment of non-governmental organizations, human rights defenders, including child human rights defenders, and civil society activists working in the field of human rights, and ensure that they have adequate access to justice and effective remedies, and that those responsible are held accountable;

(e) Ensure that civil society and human rights defenders, including child human rights defenders, are able to promote children's rights without being subjected to harassment;

(f) Increase resources provided to non-governmental organizations to monitor and promote children's rights, and systematically involve all non-governmental organizations working on children's rights, including those which monitor the situation of children's rights in the OPT, in the development, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of laws, policies and programmes relating to children.

B. General principles (arts. 2, 3, 6 and 12)

Non-discrimination

17. The Committee notes the establishment of the Unit for the Coordination of the Fight Against Racism and the action plan to deal with racism against persons of Ethiopian origin, but remains deeply concerned about:

(a) Persistent discrimination in law, including the Basic Law: Nation-State of the Jewish People, and in practice against non-Jewish children, particularly Palestinian, Bedouin, asylum-seeking children, children of migrant workers, and children in the OPT;

(b) Racist and negative stereotyping of such groups of children that has a discriminatory effect on their access to birth registration, education, health and other essential services.

18. The Committee recalls the findings of the ICJ AO of 19 July 2024 that the State party's legislation and measures imposing and serving to maintain a near-complete separation in the West Bank and East Jerusalem between the settler and Palestinian communities constitute a breach of article 3 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which refers to particularly severe forms of racial discrimination including apartheid. The Committee reiterates its previous recommendations¹⁰ and further urges the State party to bring an end to such legislation and measures that amount to racial segregation or apartheid, and in particular to:

(a) Include the prohibition of discrimination and the principle of equality in its Basic Laws, and undertake a comprehensive review of its legislation and policies, including the Basic Law: Nation-State of the Jewish People, to ensure that laws that discriminate against non-Jewish children are repealed without delay;

(b) Prohibit and eradicate policies and practices which disproportionately affect Palestinian children and children in the OPT, and ensure that all such children enjoy their rights under the Convention without discrimination;

(c) Ensure that measures to address violence against children devote particular attention to the racist and gender dimensions of violence;

¹⁰ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 22.

(d) Implement targeted policies and programmes to combat racist and xenophobic policies and practices, and to eliminate discrimination against children in disadvantaged situations, including children of Ethiopian descent and Palestinian, Bedouin, asylum-seeking, migrant and socioeconomically disadvantaged children;

(e) Conduct media campaigns to combat racist and negative stereotyping of children in disadvantaged situations, to change social norms and behaviours that contribute to discrimination and to promote tolerance and respect for diversity.

Best interests of the child

19. Recalling its general comment No. 14 (2013), the Committee reiterates its previous recommendations¹¹ to ensure that the right of the child to have their best interests taken as a primary consideration is consistently interpreted and applied in all policies, programmes and legislative, administrative and judicial proceedings affecting children, including in relation to placement in care, adoption, custody, mental health, child justice, asylum, and in its military governance of the OPT.

Right to life, survival and development

20. The Committee is alarmed about the impact of the armed conflict on the right to life, survival and development of children, including:

(a) The killing and injuring of children as a result of the long-term conflict, including the attack of 7 October 2023;

(b) The safety and well-being of the children who have been affected by the attack of 7 October 2023, including the 45 children who were abducted and returned and the two who remains as hostages, as well as the tens of thousands of children who have been evacuated from their homes, injured, lost family members and/or have family members still in captivity.

21. The Committee urges the State party to take effective measures to ensure continued access to healthcare, trauma-focused mental health services and housing for children and families affected by the attack of 7 October 2023.

Respect for the views of the child

22. Recalling its general comment No. 12 (2009), the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Promote the meaningful and empowered participation of all children within the family, communities and school settings and in policymaking at the local and national levels, such as by developing toolkits for consulting children on national policy issues and establishing mechanisms to ensure that children's views are systematically fed into public decision-making;

(b) Continue to ensure the right of all children, including younger children, children deprived of a family environment, children with mental health issues, and asylum-seeking and migrant children, to express their views and to have them taken into account in all decisions affecting them, including in courts and relevant administrative and judicial proceedings and regarding foster care, adoption, custody, asylum and admission in mental health facilities.

C. Civil and political rights (arts. 7, 8 and 13–17)

Nationality and birth registration

23. The Committee notes with concern the lack of progress in implementing the Committee's previous recommendations¹² to ensure access to birth certificates for non-

¹¹ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 24.

¹² CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 30.

Israeli, asylum-seeking and migrant children and Israeli nationality to children born to an Israeli parent and a parent from the OPT, and the system of issuing documents, passports and residence permits that establishes categories that violate fundamental rights, prevent family reunification and severely restrict the movement of children. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Repeal all legal provisions which result in denying the right of Palestinian children and children in the OPT to be registered immediately after birth, to acquire a nationality and to be cared for by their parents, regardless of where they were born, and address the discriminatory effect of notifications of live birth on non-Israeli children;

(b) Ensure the registration at birth and issuance of birth certificates for all children born in its territory, including Palestinian, asylum-seeking and migrant children, and their access to essential services, such as by including such children in the national identification system or issuing them with visas to ensure their inclusion into a common system of registration granting them access to health, welfare, education and other services;

(c) Ensure legal pathways for all children, including children of asylum-seekers without a regular residence status, to acquire residence status and nationality;

(d) Ensure that Israeli parents with a spouse from the OPT can confer Israeli nationality on their children.

Freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly

24. Noting with deep concern the ongoing repression of children's freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, particularly since 7 October 2023, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Ensure the right of all children to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, including by lifting the ban on demonstrations and protests, including in the OPT, and that children are able to express opinions that are critical of the State party without harassment, arrest or prosecution;

(b) Ensure that children are supported and encouraged to form their own associations and initiatives.

Access to appropriate information

25. Noting with appreciation the legal provisions protecting children in the digital environment and the establishment of the National Child Online Protection Bureau, the Committee recalls its general comment No. 25 (2021) and recommends that the State party:

(a) Ensure that laws and policies on access to information and the digital environment protect children from harmful content and online risks and respect their privacy;

(b) Improve digital inclusion for children in disadvantaged situations, in particular Palestinian and Bedouin children, and promote the equitability and affordability of online services and connectivity for such children;

(c) Continue to strengthen the digital literacy and skills of children, parents, caregivers and teachers.

D. Violence against children (arts. 19, 24 (3), 28 (2), 34, 35, 37 (a) and 39 of the Convention and the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography)

Abuse, neglect, sexual exploitation and abuse

26. Noting with appreciation the measures taken to support child victims of violence or crimes, including through specialized support for child victims with disabilities, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Strengthen the capacities of relevant professionals to prevent, report and respond to cases of violence;

(b) Promptly and effectively investigate and intervene in all cases of violence against children, including domestic violence and the sexual abuse and exploitation of children in and outside the home, in the digital environment, in alternative care settings and in schools, particularly in religious schools; ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice; and strengthen the mechanisms for monitoring cases;

(c) Strengthen measures to ensure that all children who are victims of or witnesses to violence have prompt access to child-sensitive, multisectoral and comprehensive interventions, services and support, including forensic interviews, medical evaluation, counselling and psychosocial support, aimed at preventing the secondary victimization of those children.

Corporal punishment

27. The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Continue to enforce the prohibition of corporal punishment in all settings;

(b) Strengthen public awareness-raising campaigns to promote positive, non-violent and participatory forms of child-rearing.

Harmful practices

28. The Committee notes that the age of marriage has been raised from 17 to 18 years of age, but is concerned that marriages above the age of 16 may be granted by a Family Matters Court. Recalling joint CEDAW general recommendation No. 31 /CRC general comment No. 18 (2019) and its previous recommendations,¹³ the Committee recommends that the State party further amend the Marital Age Law to prohibit all marriages under 18 years of age, without exception, and conduct awareness-raising campaigns and programmes on the harmful effects of child marriage on the physical and mental health and well-being of children.

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

29. The Committee notes the information provided by the State party that all detainees undergoing interrogation by the Israel Security Agency “receive all the rights to which they are entitled according to the applicable law and international conventions to which Israel is a party” and that children receive special protection under the agency’s operative guidelines.¹⁴ Nonetheless, the Committee remains gravely concerned about reports of the torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian children and children in the OPT during arrest and in detention, in violation of the State party’s international human rights obligations, including, inter alia, solitary confinement; the use of electric shocks, hand-ties and/or leg-ties; denial of food, water or access to toilets; exposure to elements; verbal and physical violence, including beatings, stripping, sexual violence and psychological intimidation; and attempted recruitment of child detainees as informants for the security forces.

30. The Committee is of the view that no national security concern or situation of armed conflict can justify the torture and ill-treatment of children and reminds the ¹³ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 47.

¹⁴ CRC/C/ISR/5-6, paras. 77-78.

State party that such practices are a serious violation of the human rights treaties which the State party has ratified, including article 37(a) of the Convention, and a grave breach of article 32 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The Committee further reminds the State party of its human rights obligations to prevent and eradicate the torture and ill-treatment of all children in the OPT, where it exercises territorial jurisdiction as the occupying power. The Committee reiterates its previous recommendations¹⁵ and strongly urges the State party to:

(a) Take all measures to end all forms of torture and ill-treatment, including sexual violence, against Palestinian children and children in the OPT; remove all children from solitary confinement; and halt and prohibit recruitment of child detainees as informants for the security forces;

(b) Monitor the implementation of the operative guidelines of the Israeli Security Agency providing for special protection to children; and provide unequivocal instructions to all branches of the armed and security forces on the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment, with a view to ensuring respect for international human rights and humanitarian law;

(c) End the practice of traumatizing Palestinian children, children in the OPT and their families with night raids and excessive and forcible home invasions by the armed and security forces, and ensure that searches in homes are conducted only according to judicial warrant;

(d) Ensure prompt, thorough, independent, impartial and transparent investigations into all incidents by the armed and security forces resulting in serious violations of international law; that perpetrators are held accountable; and that all victims and their families are provided with remedies and reparations;

(e) Ensure that children have access to confidential, child-friendly complaint mechanisms for the reporting of violations of their rights during their arrest and detention;

(f) Ensure that child victims receive appropriate assistance for their full physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration.

Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

31. Recalling its previous recommendations,¹⁶ the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Define and criminalize the sale of children in accordance with article 3 of the Optional Protocol as a crime separate from the crime of trafficking in persons;

(b) Ensure that all child victims, including victims of prostitution and regardless of age, receive equal protection under the Penal Code, are treated as victims and have access to adequate referral and community-based support services;

(c) Continue to ensure the early identification of children who are victims of offences under the Optional Protocol, referral to adequate services and support for social reintegration and physical and psychological recovery, and provision of remedies.

E. Family environment and alternative care (arts. 5, 9–11, 18 (1) and (2), 20, 21, 25 and 27 (4))

Family environment

32. The Committee notes the measures to encourage the use of paternity leave and provide childcare support, particularly for socioeconomically disadvantaged parents, but remains concerned about insufficient access of Palestinian, Bedouin and asylum-seeking and migrant children to childcare facilities and after-school care. Recalling its previous recommendations,¹⁷ the Committee recommends that the State party:

¹⁵ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 36.

¹⁶ CRC/C/OPSC/ISR/CO/1.

(a) Strengthen measures, including through sufficient resources, to ensure access to affordable childcare options for children of asylum-seekers, refugees, migrant workers and parents in socioeconomically disadvantaged situations;

(b) Ensure that all childcare facilities are registered and the quality of care monitored, including their adherence to the Supervision over the Operation of Afternoon Child Care Centers Law, with a view to replacing all unregistered facilities such as “babysitters” and “children's warehouses” with quality childcare;

(c) Increase the number of social workers, develop creative incentives for the profession, and ensure that they receive continuous capacity-building, including on mental health;

(d) Strengthen services for children at risk of separation from their family, including through family counselling, therapy and parenting education;

(e) Provide appropriate assistance and support to caregivers of children whose parents have been called for reserve duty in the military and ensure that such children have access to community-based psychosocial support.

Children deprived of a family environment

33. Recalling the Guidelines for the Alternative Care of Children, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Strengthen monitoring of the quality of care in alternative care facilities, including through sufficient human and financial resources, and conduct regular and substantive reviews of placements in care to facilitate the integration of children into their families and communities whenever possible;

(b) Continue its efforts to prioritize and ensure family-based and community-based care options for children who cannot stay with their families, including through capacity-building of relevant professionals on ensuring family-based and community-based care responses, the allocation of sufficient resources for foster care and adoption, and adequate training and support for foster and adoptive parents;

(c) Take effective measures to reduce the number of children under 6 years of age in residential care, and strengthen the foster care system, including by providing training and in-service support for foster parents and strengthening kafalah placement for Palestinian and Bedouin children;

(d) Adopt guidelines for determining the best interests of the child in adoption proceedings, in line with the recommendations of the Gross Committee, and ensure the provision of pre-adoption and post-adoption services and monitoring.

34. Noting with deep concern the disproportionate and adverse restrictions imposed by the Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (Temporary Provision), and the impact of the family reunification ban on the rights of Palestinian children and children in the OPT, including their right to a family environment, education, health and other essential services, the Committee reiterates its previous recommendations¹⁸ and strongly urges the State party to:

(a) Revoke its Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (Temporary Provision), in line with recommendations consistently made by other treaty bodies,¹⁹ and all policies and practices which prevent family reunification and are in breach of articles 9 and 10 of the Convention;

¹⁷ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 46.

¹⁸ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 50.

¹⁹ CCPR/C/ISR/CO/5, para. 45; E/C.12/ISR/CO/4, para. 41; CEDAW/C/ISR/CO/6, para. 41; CERD/C/ISR/CO/17-19, para. 25.

(b) Take immediate measures to ensure that all separated children of an Israeli parent and a parent from the OPT are reunited with both of their parents and siblings, and that all family members obtain proper registration to avoid further risk of separation;

(c) Review its system of family reunification involving unaccompanied or separated children, with a view to ensuring that all separated children have an unqualified right to apply for family reunification, based on the principles of equality and non-discrimination; that residency applications are considered with a consistent, expeditious and child rights-based approach; and that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration in all related decisions.

F. Children with disabilities (art. 23)

35. Noting with appreciation the measures taken to expand the scope and eligibility criteria for disability benefits, the Committee recommends that the State party continue to strengthen support for the social integration and individual development of children with disabilities, including children with autism and development disorders, and to enhance the access of such children to early childhood development programmes, personal assistance, rehabilitation and reasonable accommodation for their full inclusion in all areas of public life, including education, play and cultural activities.

G. Health (arts. 6, 24 and 33)

Health and health services

36. The Committee notes the National Child Safety Program and other measures taken to address child mortality, including due to accidents. Recalling its general comment No. 15 (2013), the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Ensure that children in disadvantaged situations, including Palestinian, Bedouin, asylum-seeking and migrant children and children without a regular residence status, have access to primary and mental health services, and that asylum-seeking mothers have access to prenatal health and postnatal services and facilities, including by addressing the financial, administrative and other barriers;

(b) Take effective measures to strengthen efforts to reduce infant and child mortality rates, particularly in Bedouin and Palestinian communities;

(c) Revise the 2017 circular on approved procedures regarding intersex to ensure that the performance of unnecessary medical or surgical treatment on intersex children is safely deferred until children are able to provide their informed consent, that incidents of unnecessary medical or surgical treatment are investigated, and that victims receive redress and psychosocial support;

(d) Strengthen measures to promote exclusive breastfeeding and implement the International Code of Marketing of Breastmilk Substitutes.

Mental health

37. The Committee is deeply concerned about:

(a) The negative impact of the attack of 7 October 2023 and the ongoing armed conflict on the mental health and well-being of children;

(b) The large number of children requiring mental health support, including children at risk of suicide;

(c) The long waiting lists for children seeking mental health services and the severe shortage of mental health professionals;

(d) Insufficient capacities of health professionals to provide trauma-focused care to children.

38. The Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Strengthen the availability, accessibility and range of community-based, child-sensitive therapeutic and trauma-focused mental health services, including by expanding the coverage of public mental health clinics, particularly in non-Jewish communities, and providing incentives for mental health professionals to work in communities in need;

(b) Urgently address the long waiting times for accessing mental health services, and ensure that the number of qualified medical professionals, including child and adolescent psychologists and psychiatrists, is sufficient to meet the mental health needs of children in a timely manner and close to where they live;

(c) Ensure sufficient screening for mental health issues and early prevention services in schools, including by expanding the mandatory coverage of educational psychological services to all children from ages from 3 to 18 and increasing the number of educational counselling hours;

(d) Provide training on identifying and addressing trauma and anxiety among children for relevant professionals including paediatricians, psychologists, care professionals and teachers;

(e) Establish an inter-ministerial and multisectoral body, as well as a dedicated position across relevant ministries, dedicated to addressing children's mental health needs;

(f) Continue to invest in preventive measures and address the underlying causes of suicide, self-harming behaviour and mental health issues among children, and ensure that children's perspectives are taken into account in the development of services available to them.

H. Standard of living (arts. 18 (3), 26 and 27 (1)–(3))

39. Noting with deep concern the large number of children living in extreme poverty, and the particular vulnerability of children living in ultra-orthodox communities, Palestinian, Bedouin and asylum-seeking children and children in the OPT, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Strengthen measures to end child poverty for all and ensure the right of all children to an adequate standard of living, including by ensuring equitability of resources allocated to food security initiatives, providing financial support to parents of asylum-seeking, migrant, Palestinian and Bedouin children and children living in ultra-orthodox communities, and ensuring their access to food, social security, housing, family benefits and child allowance, including by revoking the proposed bill to amend the National Insurance Law;

(b) Restore confiscated land to Palestinian and Bedouin families and families in the OPT; ensure that they are not deprived of access to safe drinking water, sanitation and food; and allow humanitarian agencies unimpeded access to families and children;

(c) Ensure that measures to combat poverty comply with a child rights-based approach and are in line with the Convention, including with regard to the principles of non-discrimination and best interests of the child, and have a particular focus on Palestinian, internally displaced and asylum-seeking children and children with disabilities.

I. Children's rights and the environment (arts. 2, 3, 6, 12, 13, 15, 17, 19, 24 and 26–31)

40. The Committee is deeply concerned about the environmental damage and carbon emissions generated by the State party's military actions in Gaza and the insufficient measures to address the negative impact of climate change on children's rights. Recalling its general comment No. 26 (2023), the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Expediently adopt the climate bill and allocate sufficient resources for climate change mitigation and adaptation measures, including by unfreezing the resources earmarked by the Environmental Protection Ministry for climate change adaptation;

(b) Strengthen measures to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions to ensure a pathway to net-zero carbon emissions by 2050 at the latest;

(c) Ensure that national legislations, policies and programmes addressing environmental protection and climate change, including the update to its nationally determined contribution, are developed and implemented with child rights impact assessments and taking into account the principles of the Convention and the needs and views of children;

(d) Put in place age-appropriate, safe and accessible mechanisms for children's views to be heard regularly and at all stages of environmental decision-making processes affecting them;

(e) Incorporate rights-based environmental education into school curricula at all levels and into the training of teachers;

(f) Assess the extent of the environmental degradation caused by the State party's military actions in Gaza, including soil, water and air pollution and damage to ecosystems, and develop remediation options, including safe removal of unexploded ordnances and the restoration of contaminated land and relevant infrastructure, in consultation with UN entities, relevant professionals, civil society and children.

J. Education, leisure and cultural activities (arts. 28–31)

Education: aims and coverage

41. Noting with concern the continued militarization of the educational system, the Committee recalls its general comment No. 1 (2009) and recommends that the State party:

(a) Ensure that implementation of amendment No. 17 to the National Education Law regarding "educating for significant service in the Israeli Defense Forces and for national-civil service" is in line with article 29(d) of the Convention, and that the education curriculum is aimed at the preparation of the child for a responsible life in a free society in a spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, equality of the sexes and friendship among all peoples, ethnic, national and religious groups and persons of Indigenous origin;

(b) Allocate sufficient resources for the implementation of the recommendations made by the Committee on Living in Partnership established by the State party;

(c) Address the segregation of students on racial or ethnic grounds and disparities in access to quality education in enrolment, in completion rates and in performance between children from different socioeconomic or ethnic backgrounds, in particular Palestinian, Bedouin, asylum-seeking and refugee children;

(d) Ensure the right of Palestinian children and children in the OPT to education that develops respect for their own cultural identity, language and values, including by eliminating educational policies that discriminate against Palestinian children, cancelling the prohibitions of using Palestinian textbooks and curricula and withdrawing the ban on education providers who do not recognize the Jewish character of the State and/or commemorate the Nakba;

(e) Facilitate the reconstruction of schools that have been destroyed or demolished in the OPT, and ensure that all schools, in particular in Bedouin communities, are equipped with air raid shelters.

Inclusive education

42. Noting with deep concern the barriers faced by children in disadvantaged situations in accessing inclusive education, often due to resistance by parents and public authorities, and the persistent practice of special schools for children with disabilities and segregated schools for Palestinian and asylum-seeking children, the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Strengthen measures, including through sufficient resources, to ensure inclusive education in mainstream schools for all children with disabilities at all levels, including by revising the policy on the placement of children with disabilities and guaranteeing reasonable accommodation regarding accessible infrastructure, adapted curricula and specialized teachers in integrated classes;

(b) Ensure the equal access of Palestinian, Bedouin, asylum-seeking, migrant children and socioeconomically disadvantaged children to quality education at all levels, without discrimination, including by ensuring equitability of the distribution of resources allocated to education and providing support for transportation to schools;

(c) Conduct awareness-raising activities for civil servants, local and central authorities, teachers and parents on the right and importance of all children to receive inclusive education in mainstream and integrated schools, and on their responsibilities in that regard.

Human rights education

43. Recalling its previous recommendations,²⁰ the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Develop educative materials, with the participation of both Israeli and Palestinian children, that foster respect for and the appreciation of racial, ethnic, cultural, gender and other diversities;

(b) Strengthen the teaching of children's rights, the principles of the Convention and peace education within the mandatory school curricula in all educational settings in both Israeli and Palestinian schools and in the training of teachers and education professionals, in line with article 29 of the Convention and taking into account the World Programme for Human Rights Education.

Rest, leisure, recreation and cultural and artistic activities

44. Recalling its general comment No. 17 (2013), the Committee recommends that the State party ensure that children affected by the ongoing conflict have access to after-school programs and inclusive sporting, recreational, leisure, cultural and artistic activities appropriate to their age.

K. Special protection measures arts. 22, 30, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37 (b)–(d) and 38–40 of the Convention and the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict)

Internally displaced children

45. While commending the State party for its efforts to support the large number of children who have been displaced as a result of the attack of 7 October 2023, the Committee recommends that the State party continue to ensure that such children receive the necessary support to access primary and mental health care, education and social protection services, and facilitate their resettlement in their original place of residence while guaranteeing their safety.

²⁰ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 66; CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 27.

Asylum-seeking and migrant children

46. The Committee remains deeply concerned about asylum-seeking and migrant children who do not have access to basic services including childcare, education, health services and social security, often due to their pending refugee status, and about the detention and ill-treatment of such children. Recalling its previous recommendations²¹ and joint CMW/CRC general comments No. 3 and No. 4 /No. 22 and No. 23 (2017), the Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Strengthen and ensure the effective implementation of its refugee determination procedure, including by ensuring that it complies with international refugee and human rights law, including expeditiously processing asylum applications and identifying durable solutions for asylum-seeking children;

(b) Remove the barriers faced by asylum-seeking children in accessing education, health-care services, housing, psychosocial support and social protection, and ensure that they have prompt access to such services without discrimination;

(c) Ensure that asylum-seeking children are not detained on the basis of their or their parents' migration status, including by repealing legal provisions that allow for the prolonged detention of children, and that there are alternatives to detention with the timely provision of safe and dignified accommodation.

Economic exploitation, including child labour

47. Noting with concern reports of children working in hazardous conditions in Israeli settlement farms, the Committee recommends that the State party improve the monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies on child labour, including in the informal and agricultural sectors and in territories over which the State party exercises effective control.

Administration of child justice

48. The Committee notes with appreciation the measures taken to bring the child justice system in line with the Convention, in particular to promote diversion and restorative justice and support the reintegration of children leaving the justice system. Nonetheless, the Committee regrets the State party's complete disregard of its recommendations made in 2002, 2010 and 2013 in relation to the arrest and detention of Palestinian children and children in the OPT and its persistent failure to end these practices, despite its obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law and repeated calls from treaty bodies, special procedures mandate-holders and United Nations entities. The Committee expresses its deepest concerns about:

(a) The continued abduction, arbitrary arrest, often during the night, and prolonged detention of large numbers of Palestinian children and children in the OPT by the armed and security forces, including as administrative detainees or "unlawful combatants," mostly without charge, trial or access to legal representation or contact with family members;

(b) Amendments to the Unlawful Combatants Law and Youth Law that violate children's rights;

(c) Reports of thousands of Palestinian children and children in the OPT who have been arrested often on an arbitrary basis or for allegedly throwing stones during the reporting period;

(d) The State party's refusal to provide information on the fate or whereabouts of the reportedly thousands of Palestinians, including children, held in Israel or the West Bank, amounting to enforced disappearances;

²¹ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 70.

(e) The detention in some cases of children forcibly transferred from Gaza and the West Bank to Israel;

(f) Trials of Palestinian children and children in the OPT in military courts.

49. Recalling its general comment No. 24 (2019) and the global study on children deprived of liberty,²² the Committee reiterates its previous recommendations²³ and strongly urges the State party to:

(a) Immediately end the arbitrary and administrative detention of children and release all Palestinian children and children in the OPT who have been arbitrarily detained;

(b) Urgently repeal legislative measures that are contrary to international human rights law, including: (i) amendments to the Unlawful Combatants Law allowing for detention without an arrest warrant for up to 20 days and denial of detainees' access to legal counsel for up to 75 days; and (ii) bills to amend the Youth Law to allow for the imprisonment of children from 12 years of age if convicted of an act of terror and to exclude children suspected of security offenses from the right to legal representation;

(c) Review all legislation, policies and practices, including the Incarceration of Unlawful Combatants Law and Military Order 1651, to comply with the State party's obligations under the Convention;

(d) End the arbitrary arrest and detention of children, and guarantee non-discrimination in the application of child justice standards to all Palestinian children and children in the OPT;

(e) Abolish the institutionalized system of detention and the use of torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian children and children in the OPT at all stages of the judicial procedure, including by: (i) preventing and investigating allegations of enforced disappearances; (ii) ending all forms of arbitrary detention and the forcible transfer of detained children; and (iii) ensuring that detention is used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time and is reviewed on a regular basis with a view to its withdrawal;

(f) Ensure that the child justice system is applied to all Palestinian children and children in the OPT, including children who are above 14 years of age, that they are not tried in military courts, that they are not treated as adults because they are of so-called "fighting age" and that the principle of the benefit of the doubt is applied in cases where the child's age is unknown;

(g) For the few situations where deprivation of liberty is justified as a measure of last resort: (i) ensure that children are not detained together with adults and detention conditions strictly comply with international standards, including with regard to the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment and access to education, health services and visits by the ICRC; and (ii) provide such children with fundamental legal and procedural safeguards, including information on the reasons for their arrest and detention, access to specialized legal assistance, independent interpretation, prompt appearance before a judge, and opportunities to maintain contact with their families;

(h) Establish an independent mechanism to monitor detention facilities, including through regular visits;

(i) Collect data and provide information on the precise number of Palestinian children and children in the OPT arrested and in detention and ensure that families are promptly informed about the fate and whereabouts of their detained family members, including through coordination with the ICRC;

²² A/74/136.

²³ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 74.

(j) Designate a child protection focal point to handle all cases of children detained during security operations, particularly in the OPT;

(k) Continue to actively promote non-judicial measures, including diversion and mediation, for children in the justice system and, wherever possible, the use of non-custodial measures such as probation or community service, and ensure that health and psychosocial services are provided;

(l) Strengthen rehabilitation and reintegration support for children leaving the justice system.

Violations of children's rights under the Convention in the OPT

50. The Committee notes that the State party "remains committed to doing its utmost to minimize harm to civilians" and "to facilitating humanitarian access to the civilian population of Gaza."²⁴ Nonetheless, the Committee condemns in the strongest terms the severe violations of rights under the Convention in the OPT, including the tremendous loss of life as a result of the State party's military actions. In particular, the Committee is gravely concerned about:

(a) Over 28,000 grave violations against children perpetrated by the Israeli armed and security forces between 2016 and 2023 verified by the United Nations, including the killing and maiming of over 10,000 children, 880 attacks on schools and hospitals, and 16,800 denials of humanitarian access;

(b) The catastrophic consequences to the right to life, survival and development of children as a result of the State party's military actions, including through military attacks and even by snipers and drones, and that women and children constitute most of the total fatalities since 7 October 2023;

(c) Denial of humanitarian access by armed and security forces, including denied coordination of humanitarian aid missions and prevention of access to medical care, and reports that thousands of permit applications made by children seeking access to specialized medical treatment were either denied or not approved on time;

(d) The resurgence of polio and medical complication, arising from inadequate medical care and rehabilitation following amputations and other surgeries, and the deaths and long-term health risks to babies born under such conditions;

(e) Impunity for armed and security forces responsible for children's deaths and injuries, and the lack of information on the number of investigations, indictments and convictions related to such cases since 7 October 2023;

(f) The lack of measures taken to compensate families of Palestinian children who were unlawfully killed by security forces in law enforcement operations;

(g) The negative impact of the State party's military presence and occupational policies and practices on the safety, well-being and rights of Palestinian children to housing, an adequate standard of living, food, water, sanitation and health care;

(h) The pervasive discriminatory effect of the State party's occupational policies on Palestinian girls, and the particular vulnerability of Palestinian girls to violence committed by both military officers and settlers.

51. Drawing attention to the AO of 19 July 2024 and the Orders of 26 January 2024 and 24 May 2024 of the ICJ on the application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide in the Gaza Strip (South Africa v. Israel), the Committee urges the State party to:

(a) Urgently take measures to ensure that children and civilian infrastructure are not targeted; that incidental loss of children's lives, injury to children and damage to civilian objects are not caused in violation of international humanitarian law; and immediately comply with the orders and advisory opinions of the ICJ;

²⁴ CRC/C/ISR/RQ/5-6/Add.1, para. 80.

(b) Ensure that the armed and security forces abide by their obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law, including by providing clear instructions to protect children in all circumstances and to prevent any possible killing and injuring of children, in line with the international humanitarian law principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution;

(c) Guarantee safe, unobstructed and unconditional access to health services, including emergency medical care, life-saving treatment, adequate medical supplies and trained personnel for all pregnant women and children in the OPT, with a view to ensuring that children's health and well-being do not suffer the consequences of the occupation, by, inter alia, (i) ensuring the timely transfer at checkpoints of pregnant mothers and children with their caregivers in need of medical care; (ii) removing restrictions or sanctions imposed on children who need to travel to receive medical care, allowing them to attend hospital appointments as often as needed and as scheduled by their physicians, and ensuring that they are accompanied by at least one parent; and (iii) granting long-term permits for children who are cancer patients or suffering from other serious illnesses;

(d) Carry out prompt, independent, effective and transparent investigations into the violations of international human rights and humanitarian law committed by the armed and security forces since 7 October 2023 and before that date, in cooperation with international fact-finding missions and the International Criminal Court to ensure accountability;

(e) Bring perpetrators of human rights violations to justice and provide compensation, recovery and social integration services for all child victims;

(f) Sign an action plan with the United Nations to end and prevent the killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals, and work with the Special Representative of the United Nations Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to urgently put in place measures to better protect children;

(g) Cooperate with, and support the work of, UNRWA in providing education and health services to Palestinian children; halt the demolition of and strikes against UNRWA-operated schools in Gaza; and ensure the safety of UNRWA operations throughout the OPT, including in East Jerusalem;

(h) Assess the impact of the State party's military presence and occupational policies on children in the OPT, including its movement restrictions, and ensure that children's best interests are fully considered in its military governance of the OPT;

(i) Collect data to track civilian casualties, disaggregated by type of weapon used, age, sex, disability and other relevant characteristics, to assess the intersectional harm to children caused by the use of explosive weapons in populated areas;

(j) Review policies implemented in the OPT that have a discriminatory effect on Palestinian girls, and revise them to ensure full protection from discrimination and gender-based violence.

Violations of children's rights under the Convention in the Gaza Strip

52. The Committee condemns, in the strongest terms, the State party's attacks against civilian targets in the Gaza Strip, which resulted in the deaths of more than 16,756 children and injuries of at least 6,168 children in Gaza between 7 October 2023 and 10 September 2024, with thousands more presumed dead under rubble. The Committee is gravely concerned about:

(a) The outrageously high number of children in Gaza who continue to be killed, maimed, injured, missing, displaced, orphaned and subjected to famine, malnutrition and disease, as well as the multiple displacements of the Gazan population, as a result of the State party's indiscriminate and disproportionate attacks on Gaza using explosive weapons with wide-area effects in densely populated areas and its denial of humanitarian access, with at least 1 million children displaced, 21,000 children reported missing, 20,000 children who have lost one or both parents, 17,000 children unaccompanied or separated from their families in Gaza, dozens of child deaths due to malnutrition and 3,500 children at risk of death due to malnutrition and lack of food;

(b) Attacks on and destruction of hospitals, schools, residential buildings, refugee camps and essential infrastructure, including power facilities and water tanks, by the armed forces, restricting access to health services, education and housing for the nearly 1 million children living in Gaza.

53. Drawing attention to resolutions 2712 (2023), 2720 (2023), 2728 (2024) and 2735 (2024) of the United Nations Security Council, the Committee reiterates its previous recommendations²⁵ and further urges the State party to:

(a) Ensure the right of all Palestinian children to life, survival and development, including by immediately ceasing the killing and injuring of Palestinian children in Gaza, ensuring safe and unrestricted humanitarian access to and within the Gaza Strip, and allowing entry of all construction materials necessary for Palestinian families to rebuild homes and civilian and public infrastructure;

(b) Exercise maximum restraint and use of intentional lethal force only when it is strictly unavoidable in order to protect life and apply preventive and protective measures to minimize damage and injury affecting children;

(c) Provide urgent assistance to the thousands of children who have been injured or maimed as a result of the military attacks, by providing the necessary equipment and specialized medical assistance to meet their needs, and provide support to orphans of war;

(d) Address and combat severe malnutrition among children, prevent malnutrition-related deaths, and ensure access to food and medical care for all affected children.

(e) Immediately cease all attacks against schools, hospitals and medical facilities, including ambulances and protected persons, in line with its obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law; facilitate the reconstruction of those that have been attacked; and take all necessary measures to prevent future attacks on hospitals and schools and ensure the safety of children in such environments; and endorse the Safe Schools Declaration;

(f) Ensure safe, rapid and unimpeded access for humanitarian aid and humanitarian workers throughout the Gaza Strip, and respect the humanitarian notification system with a view to maximizing the safety of aid operations and humanitarian workers;

(g) Ensure the delivery of fuel and other essential supplies to healthcare facilities and that hospitals are able to deliver necessary medical care and nutrition to children and other patients;

(h) Lift the ban on medical evacuations from Gaza, with a view to ensuring that all affected children can receive appropriate medical care;

(i) Ensure the right of Palestinian children displaced from their homes in Gaza to family reunification, and that unaccompanied and separated children and their parents have information concerning the whereabouts of their family members;

(j) Take targeted measures to ensure that children born in Gaza are registered immediately after birth and to prevent the loss of identity for children separated from their parents, including wounded children without surviving family members.

²⁵ CRC/C/ISR/CO/2-4, para. 26; CRC/OPAC/ISR/CO/1, para. 11(a); CRC/C/15/Add.195, para. 32(c) and (d).

Violations of children's rights under the Convention in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem

54. The Committee is deeply concerned about:

(a) The rise in the number of children who have been subjected to unnecessary and disproportionate lethal force by Israeli security forces, including as a result of the increased militarization of operations and use of airstrikes and heavy weaponry, in the West Bank including East Jerusalem and in the refugee camps in Jenin, Tulkarm and Nablus; the killing of 147 Palestinian children by Israeli security forces since October 2023; and in some cases the withholding of their bodies by the armed forces;

(b) The rise in killings of and violence against Palestinian children committed by settlers, particularly in the context of settlement expansion; the persistent failure of Israeli security forces to prevent and protect children from settler attacks; and impunity for perpetrators;

(c) The displacement of more than 1,000 children due to military operations, settler violence and punitive demolitions;

(d) Children residing in unsafe emergency shelters, with no measures in place to ensure their best interests or to prevent violence, including gender-based violence;

(e) Reports of harassment of and violence against children, including girls, by Israeli armed forces and settlers;

(f) The complete closure or restricted working hours of most checkpoints between the West Bank and East Jerusalem, and the discriminatory nature and disproportionate impact of movement restrictions on the rights of children, including incidents where movement restrictions have led to harm or loss of life;

(g) Threats to the right of education for children in the West Bank due to insufficient funding, shortage of schools, security concerns and school closures due to the State party's military operations.

55. The Committee urges the State party to consider the impact of its military actions and discriminatory policies and practices in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, on the human rights of Palestinian children, and in particular, to:

(a) Cease its military raids and attacks on Palestinian cities, villages and refugee camps, prevent incidents of the excessive use of force and ensure compliance with international human rights law and protection of children during security operations in the West Bank;

(b) Immediately return the bodies of killed Palestinian children and put an end to restrictions on Palestinian funerals and rituals of mourning;

(c) Ensure public order, put an end to the attacks on children and their families by settlers, and immediately halt the practice of providing them with weapons and enlisting them in the reserves of the Israeli security forces;

(d) Investigate and ensure accountability for all acts of violence committed by settlers against Palestinian children;

(e) Prevent the forced displacement of Palestinian children and ensure compliance with international law in protecting these children from such displacements;

(f) Ensure the safety and protection of children residing in shelters and other temporary accommodations, including by taking targeted measures to prevent violence and addressing safety concerns related to lack of privacy, overcrowding and insufficient night lighting;

(g) Fully and independently investigate all cases of violence, including harassment and gender-based violence, against children perpetrated by armed forces and settlers; bring the perpetrators to justice; and provide compensation, recovery and social integration services for victims;

(h) Prevent violations of the right to life as a result of movement restrictions, particularly the use of live ammunition by Israeli security forces, and promptly investigate and hold accountable those responsible for incidents where movement restrictions have led to harm or loss of life for children;

(i) Abolish movement restrictions which hinder children's access to education, health and other essential services, and strengthen transparency and communication regarding the operational practices of security forces at checkpoints and roadblocks to prevent discriminatory enforcement;

(j) Strengthen measures to address the school shortage in East Jerusalem and remove all restrictions on freedom of movement which prevent Palestinian children and teachers from accessing schools;

(k) Ensure that children can attend school without harassment, intimidation or violence, including by ceasing settler attacks against schools and the use of schools as outputs and detention centres, and ensuring that the settlers and security forces responsible for violence are held accountable.

Follow-up to the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict

56. Noting with deep concern the continuous use of children as human shields and informants, as detailed in the 2023 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, and that conscientious objectors seeking exemption must do so while still a child, the Committee recalls its previous recommendations²⁶ and recommends that the State party:

(a) Prevent and effectively enforce the prohibition of the use of children as human shields and informants, and ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice and punished with sanctions commensurate with the gravity of their crimes;

(b) Ensure that its policy on compulsory recruitment is consistent with the provisions of the Optional Protocol, including article 2, and consider raising the minimum age for voluntary recruitment into the armed forces to 18 years;

(c) Ensure that any military education is conducted in line with human rights values and article 29 of the Convention and that the educational content of such programmes continues to be monitored by the Ministry of Education;

(d) Endorse the Paris Principles and Commitments on Children Associated with Armed Forces or Armed Groups;

(e) Continue to cooperate with the Special Representative of the United Nations Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict;

(f) Ensure that the special military committee that assesses applications for exemption from military service on the grounds of conscientious objection includes at least one person with expertise in children's rights and child psychology.

L. Ratification of the Optional Protocol on a communications procedure

57. The Committee recommends that the State party accede to the Optional Protocol on a communications procedure.

M. Ratification of international human rights instruments

58. The Committee recommends that the State party, in order to further strengthen the fulfilment of children's rights, consider ratifying the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of

²⁶ CRC/C/OPAC/ISR/CO/1.

Their Families, and the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming to the abolition of the death penalty.

V. Implementation and reporting

A. Follow-up and dissemination

59. The Committee recommends that the State party take all appropriate measures to ensure that the recommendations contained in the present concluding observations are fully implemented and that a child-friendly version is disseminated to, and made widely accessible for, children, including those in the most disadvantaged situations. The Committee also recommends that the combined sixth and seventh periodic reports and the present concluding observations be made widely available in the languages of the country.

B. Next report

60. The Committee will establish and communicate the due date of the eighth periodic report of the State party in due course, in line with the envisaged predictable reporting calendar based on an eight-year review cycle and following the adoption of a list of issues and questions prior to reporting, if applicable, for the State party. The report should comply with the Committee's harmonized treaty-specific reporting guidelines²⁷ and should not exceed 21,200 words.²⁸ In the event that a report exceeding the established word limit is submitted, the State party will be asked to shorten the report. If the State party is not in a position to review and resubmit the report, translation thereof for the purposes of consideration by the Committee cannot be guaranteed.

²⁷ CRC/C/58/Rev.3.

²⁸ General Assembly resolution 68/268, para. 16.

International covenant on civil and political rights

Distr.
GENERAL

CCPR/C/81/Add.13
2 June 1998

ENGLISH ONLY*

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMITTEE

CONSIDERATION OF REPORTS SUBMITTED BY STATES PARTIES
UNDER ARTICLE 40 OF THE COVENANT

Initial report of States parties due in 1993

Addendum

ISRAEL

[9 April 1998]

* In view of the length of the document and the shortness of the period between the date of submission by the State party of the Revised Report and the date of examination by the Human Rights Committee, the present document is circulated in the language of submission only.

CONTENTS

	Paragraphs
Introduction	1 - 35
Article 1 Self-determination	36 - 41
Article 2 Implementation of rights in the Covenant . .	42 - 56
Article 3 Equal rights of men and women	57 - 105
Article 4 States of emergency	106 - 123
Article 5 Non-derogable nature of fundamental rights .	124 - 125
Article 6 Right to life	126 - 167
Article 7 Freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment	168 - 242
Article 8 Prohibition of slavery	243 - 255
Article 9 Liberty and security of person	256 - 309
Article 10 Treatment of persons deprived of their liberty	310 - 359
Article 11 Freedom from imprisonment for breach of contractual obligation	360 - 366
Article 12 Freedom of movement	367 - 392
Article 13 Expulsion of aliens	393 - 403
Article 14 Right to fair trial; judicial independence .	404 - 462
Article 15 Prohibition of ex post facto laws	463 - 474
Article 16 Recognition as a person before the law . . .	475 - 479
Article 17 Freedom from arbitrary interference with privacy, family, home	480 - 531
Article 18 Freedom of religion and conscience	532 - 580
Article 19 Freedom of opinion and expression	581 - 615
Article 20 Prohibition of propaganda relating to war and racial, national or religious hatred	616 - 628
Article 21 Freedom of assembly	629 - 641
Article 22 Freedom of association	642 - 691

CONTENTS (continued)

	Paragraphs
Article 23 Protection of the family	692 - 732
Article 24 Protection of children	733 - 800
Article 25 Access to the political system	801 - 821
Article 26 Equality before the law	822 - 861
Article 27 Rights of minorities to culture, religion and language	862 - 893

INTRODUCTION

A. Land and people

Geography

1. Israel's area within its boundaries and ceasefire lines is 10,840 square miles (27,800 sq. km²). Long and narrow in shape, it is some 280 miles (450 km) in length and about 85 miles (135 km) across at the widest point. The country may be divided into four geographical regions: three parallel strips running north to south and a large, mostly arid zone in the southern half.

Demographics

2. As of October 1997, the total population of Israel numbered 5,863,000 with over 4.7 million Jews (80.2 per cent of the total population), 872,000 Muslims (14.9 per cent), about 190,000 Christians (3.2 per cent) and around 100,000 Druze and other faiths (1.7 per cent).

3. The population of Israel increased in 1996 by 140,000, of whom 88,000 are Jews, representing a lower rate of increase than in 1995. In 1990-1991, at the height of immigration from the former USSR and the CIS, the average annual growth rate was 250,000. Since the beginning of 1990 the population of Israel has increased by a total of 26.3 per cent.

4. The birth-rate in 1995 was 21.1 per 1,000, while the infant mortality rate was 6.8 per 1,000. As of 1993, life expectancy for male Israelis was 75.3 years and for female Israelis 79.5 years. The total fertility rate was 2.9 per 1,000. 29.7 per cent of the population was aged 14 or younger while 9.5 per cent of the population was aged 65 or older.

5. Israel has a literacy rate of over 95%.

The Economy

6. Israel's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) in 1996 was 272.8 billion new Israeli shekels (NIS) (approximately US$ 85 billion) in 1995 constant prices. GDP per capita for this period was approximately 48,000 NIS (approximately $15,000). The external debt was $44.28 billion.

7. The dollar exchange rate at the close of 1990 was 2.048 NIS per $1, and at the close of 1995, 3.135 NIS per $1. The annual average of the dollar exchange rate in 1990 was 2.0162, and in 1995, stood at 3.0113. In 1997 the dollar exchange rate was about 3.5 NIS per $1.

Language

8. Hebrew and Arabic are the official State languages. They are primary languages of instruction in compulsory education, and either language may be used by a member of the Knesset (Israel's parliament) to address the House. Israel television and radio broadcast in Hebrew, Arabic and, to a lesser extent, English, Russian and Amharic.

B. General political structure

Recent history

9. The State of Israel was founded on 15 May, 1948. Israel represents the culmination of almost 2,000 years of longing on the part of the Jewish people for the reestablishment of an independent State. A guiding principle for all governments of Israel since its inception has been the "ingathering of the exiles", the historic return of the Jewish people to its ancestral land. This concept was enshrined in the Declaration of Independence and has continued to be a major component of Israel's national life to the present day. In the words of Israel's Declaration of Independence, the State "extend(s its) hand to all neighbouring States in an offer of peace and good neighbourliness."

10. In 1977 the late President of Egypt, Anwar Sadat, became the first Arab head of State to visit Israel. In 1979 a treaty of peace was signed between Israel and Egypt. The Madrid Peace Conference, convened in October 1991, was the first time that Israel, the Syrian Arab Republic, Lebanon, Jordan and the Palestinians had met in an open and public setting for the specific purpose of negotiating peace. In September 1993, Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization signed the Declaration of Principles in Washington D.C., and in November 1994, Israel and Jordan concluded a peace treaty, formally ending 46 years of conflict. In September 1995 Israel and the PLO signed the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza Strip and, pursuant to that agreement, a Final Status Agreement regarding these territories is to be concluded by 1999.

Structure of Government

11. Israel is a parliamentary democracy, consisting of legislative, executive and judicial branches. Its institutions are the presidency, the Knesset (parliament), the Government (Cabinet), the judiciary and the Office of the State Comptroller.

12. The system is based on the principle of separation of powers, with checks and balances, in which the executive branch (the Government) is subject to the confidence of the legislative branch (the Knesset) and the independence of the judiciary is guaranteed by law.

The presidency

13. The President is the head of State, and his office symbolizes the unity of the State, above and beyond party politics.

14. Presidential duties, which are primarily ceremonial and formal, are defined by law. Among the President's formal functions are the opening of the first session of a new Knesset, accepting the credentials of foreign envoys, signing treaties and laws adopted by the Knesset, appointing judges, appointing the Governor of the Bank of Israel and heads of Israel's diplomatic missions abroad, pardoning prisoners and commuting sentences on the advice of the Minister of Justice. The President's approval is required prior to dissolving the Knesset by the Prime Minister.

15. The President, who may serve two consecutive terms, is elected every five years by a simple majority in the Knesset from among candidates nominated on the basis of their personal stature and contribution to the State.

The Knesset

16. The Knesset is the House of Representatives of the State of Israel; its main function is to legislate. Elections for the Knesset and for the Prime Minister are held simultaneously. They are secret, and the entire country constitutes a single electoral constituency. Knesset seats are assigned in proportion to each party's percentage of the total national vote. A party's surplus votes, that is, those which do not reach the threshold for an additional seat, are redistributed among the various parties according to their proportional size resulting from the elections, or as agreed between parties prior to the election.

17. The Knesset is elected for a tenure of four years, but may dissolve itself or be dissolved by the Prime Minister, with the President's approval, before the end of its term. Until a new Knesset is formally constituted following elections, full authority remains with the outgoing government.

18. The Knesset operates in plenary sessions and through 13 standing committees: the House Committee; the Foreign Affairs and Security Committee; the Finance Committee; the Economics Committee; the Interior and Environment Committee; the Education and Culture Committee; the Labour and Social Affairs Committee; the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee; the Immigration and Absorption Committee; the Committee for State Audit Affairs; the Committee on the War Against Drug Addictions; the Science Committee and the Committee for Advancing the Status of Women.

19. In plenary sessions, general debates are conducted on government policy and activity, as well as on legislation submitted by the government or by individual Knesset members. Debates may be conducted in Hebrew and Arabic; simultaneous translation is available.

The Government

20. The Government (Cabinet of Ministers) is the executive authority of the State, charged with administering internal and foreign affairs, including security matters. Its policy-making powers are very wide and it is authorized to take action on any issue which is not delegated by law to another authority. The Government usually serves for four years, but its tenure may be shortened by the resignation of the Prime Minister or by a vote of no-confidence.

21. The Prime Minister is elected directly by popular vote, simultaneously with the Knesset elections. Until the 1996 elections, the task of forming a government and heading it was assigned by the President to the Knesset member considered to have the best chance of forming a viable coalition government.

22. The ministers are responsible to the Prime Minister for the fulfilment of their duties and are accountable for their actions to the Knesset. Most ministers are assigned a portfolio and head a ministry; others serve without a portfolio but may be called upon to take responsibility for special projects. The Prime Minister may also serve as a minister with a portfolio.

23. The number of ministers, including the Prime Minister, may not exceed 18, nor be less than 8. At least half the ministers must be Knesset members, but all must be eligible for candidacy for Knesset membership. The Prime Minister, or another minister with prime ministerial approval, may appoint deputy ministers, up to a total of six; all must be Knesset members.

The Judiciary

24. The absolute independence of the judiciary is guaranteed by law. Judges are appointed by the President, on the recommendation of a special nominations committee comprised of Supreme Court judges, members of the bar, ministers and Knesset members. Judges' appointments are with tenure, until mandatory retirement at age 70.

25. Magistrates' and District Courts exercise jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases, while juvenile, traffic, military, labour and municipal appeal courts each deal with matters coming under their jurisdiction. There is no trial by jury in Israel.

26. In matters of personal status such as marriage, divorce and, to some extent, maintenance, guardianship and the adoption of minors, jurisdiction is vested in the judicial institutions of the respective religious communities: the Rabbinical court, the Muslim religious courts (Shari'a courts), the religious courts of the Druze and the juridical institutions of the 10 recognized Christian communities in Israel.

27. The Supreme Court, seated in Jerusalem, has nationwide jurisdiction. It is the highest court of appeal on rulings of lower tribunals. In its capacity as High Court of Justice, the Supreme Court hears petitions in constitutional and administrative law issues against any government body or agent, and is a court of first and last instance.

28. Although legislation is wholly within the competence of the Knesset, the Supreme Court can and does call attention to the desirability of legislative changes. It also has the authority to determine whether a law properly conforms with the Basic Laws of the State and to declare a law void.

The State Comptroller

29. The State Comptroller carries out external audits and reports on the legality, regularity, economy, efficiency, effectiveness and integrity of the public administration in order to assure public accountability. Israel recognized the importance of State audit in a democratic society and in 1949 enacted a law which established the Office of the State Comptroller. Since 1971, the State Comptroller has also fulfilled the function of Public Complaints Commissioner (ombudsman) and serves as an address to which any person may submit complaints against State and public bodies which are subject to the audit of the comptroller.

30. The State Comptroller is elected by the Knesset in a secret ballot for a five-year term. The Comptroller is accountable only to the Knesset, is not dependent upon the Government, and enjoys unrestricted access to the accounts, files and staff of all bodies subject to audit. The Comptroller's activities are carried out in cooperation with the Knesset Committee for State Audit Affairs.

31. The scope of State audit in Israel is among the most extensive in the world. It includes the activities of all government ministries, State institutions, branches of the defence establishment, local authorities, government corporations, State enterprises, and other bodies or institutions declared subject to audit.

32. In addition, the State Comptroller has been empowered by law to inspect the financial affairs of the political parties represented in the Knesset, including election campaign accounts and current accounts. When irregularities are found, monetary sanctions are imposed.

Basic Laws

33. Israel has no formal constitution as yet. Instead, it has chosen to enact Basic Laws dealing with different components of its constitutional regime; these Basic Laws, taken together, comprise a "constitution-in-the-making".

34. The Basic Laws are adopted by the Knesset in the same manner as other legislation. Their constitutional import is derived from their nature and, in some cases, from the inclusion of "entrenched clauses" whereby a special majority is required to amend them. The following are the Basic Laws of the State of Israel: Knesset (1958); State Lands (1960); President (1964); State Economy (1975); Israel Defence Forces (1976); Jerusalem (1980); Administration of Justice (1984); State Comptroller (1988); Human Dignity and Liberty (1992); Freedom of Occupation (1992); The Government (1992).

35. There are currently three additional draft Basic Laws being circulated prior to their submission to the Ministerial Committee on Legislation: Draft Basic Law: Due Process Rights, Draft Basic Law: Social Rights, and Draft Basic Law: Freedom of Expression and Association.

Article 1 - Self-determination

36. Israel's recognition of the universal right to self-determination is embodied in its Declaration of Independence, which contains a clear commitment that Israel will be "faithful to the principles of the United Nations Charter".

37. The State of Israel maintains a democratic, republican form of government through a system of national elections which are prescribed by law. As discussed under article 25, every citizen of at least 18 years of age is entitled to vote, without distinction as to gender, race, colour, ethnicity, wealth, property or any other status (Basic Law: Knesset, sect. 5). The voting rate in national elections is generally very high in all sectors of the population. While a person may be denied the right to vote only by judgement of a competent court pursuant to valid legislation (Basic Law: Knesset, sect. 4), no statutory provisions have been enacted to enable denial of the right to vote.

38. The citizens of the State of Israel are able to determine their "political status" not only through election of the national leadership, but also through local and regional elections, which are discussed under article 25, and, indirectly, through the legislative process.

39. Reference is made to the Introduction of this report for a discussion of Israel's ongoing diplomatic efforts in the peace process.

Economic and Cultural Development

40. The right to pursue economic development has long been recognized in the case law as a basic pillar of Israel's liberal-democratic political order. Israeli legislation bearing on the right to economic development tends to grant these rights to individuals, and not to groups as such. Indirectly, however, the enjoyment of many fundamental individual rights discussed in this report, such as the right to freedom of speech, opinion and association, the protection of the right to property, the right to pursue a vocation, and the right to freedom of religion and conscience, create the groundwork on which groups may pursue their economic and cultural development. A draft Basic Law: Social Rights, which was prepared following Israel's ratification of the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and which is currently being circulated prior to submission to the Ministerial Committee on Legislation, should bolster that foundation. (Cultural and economic development in minority communities is discussed under article 27.) The State of Israel has combined a largely free-market economy with a scheme of basic civil and political rights to provide the basis for free and liberal pursuit of economic and cultural development. The only legitimate restraints on such pursuit involve fair and reasonable economic regulation, and measures necessary to protect national security or public welfare.

41. The State of Israel does not prevent the free disposition of the country's natural wealth and resources, nor those that may be owned by any distinct sub-group of the population. At the same time, Israel retains its prerogative to regulate the export of natural resources and to impose duties thereon.

Article 2 - Implementation of rights in the Covenant

42. International agreements are not, as such, part of Israeli internal law, and the Knesset generally does not legislate by way of direct reference to such agreements. Accordingly, the provisions of the Covenant have not been made a part of internal Israeli law by an enactment of the Knesset. However, the basic rights protected by the Covenant are to a very great extent already guaranteed by internal Israeli legislation or case law, and effective mechanisms exist for the assertion and enforcement of such rights, both in the courts and through other arms of government, as described under the other articles in this report. For this reason, among others, it has not been deemed necessary to enact implementing legislation to give effect to the provisions of the Covenant. Thus, as a matter of domestic law, the Covenant does not, by itself, create private rights directly enforceable in Israeli courts.

43. Of particular importance for the implementation of the rights guaranteed by the Covenant, and particularly for Israel's obligations under subsection 2 of this article, is the wave of legislative reform in that it has followed the enactment of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty. As discussed under many articles in this report, the fundamental rights guaranteed in that Basic Law not only form the basis for interpretation of previous legislation, and the limiting criteria for new laws; in addition, the Basic Law has itself stimulated numerous legislative efforts, in areas such as arrest and detention, searches and seizures, legal aid, restrictions on emergency legislation, privacy, imprisonment for civil debts, freedom of information, the rights of people with disabilities, and the rights of patients, which aim to give the fullest practical realization of the principles embodied in the Basic Law. The explanatory notes for the three draft Basic Laws (see para. 35) explicitly mention Israel's ratification of the Covenant, among other instruments, as a motivating consideration in developing these new constitutional laws.

44. The law enforcement authorities - primarily the Police and Prisons Service - have established a thorough regimen of training in the area of human rights in courses for officers and trainees. The curriculum at these courses, as described under article 9 below, includes study of relevant legislation and Supreme Court rulings, development of interpersonal skills, and lectures by representatives of non-governmental organizations working in the field of human rights.

45. Senior officials and legal advisers in numerous ministries and other government authorities were consulted during the preparation of this report. At these consultations, the obligations under the Covenant, as well as the interpretation of those obligations by the Human Rights Committee, were reviewed as they pertained to the activities of each ministry or authority. In addition, an interministerial task force has been set up to carry out ongoing reporting on the implementation of the rights guaranteed by the Covenant. It is anticipated that these internal reporting mechanisms will be the beginning of a process that will foster awareness of the rights and freedoms under the Covenant, both within government authorities and, gradually, among the general public. This report will be widely distributed to officials in all government ministries and authorities, to members of the judiciary, to NGOs, scholars, policy institutes, libraries and the like. Prior to appearing before the Human Rights Committee, the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs will hold a public seminar on this report, at which NGOs will be invited to offer comments and feedback. Until now, the work of publicizing the Covenant has been done for the most part by various NGOs working in the field of human rights, academic symposia and, indirectly, by the media, when the provisions of the Convention are invoked in certain petitions to the High Court of Justice. The Ministry of Education has circulated materials on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights for use in the public school curriculum.

46. The implementation by the State of Israel of its obligation to maintain equality in the enjoyment of the rights under the Covenant is discussed in detail under many of the other articles, particularly articles 3, 26 and 27.

Nationality

47. The State of Israel was expressly established as a Jewish, democratic State, which would be a homeland for Jews from around the world and at the same time would accord all of its citizens the full enjoyment of civil, political and social rights. In 1950, the Knesset enacted the Law of Return, 5710-1950, under which Jews who immigrate to Israel may be accorded the status of oleh (lit. "a person who ascends"), which automatically entitles them to citizenship, as discussed below, unless the person is deemed likely to endanger public health, the security of the State or public welfare, or the person is "engaged in an activity directed against the Jewish people" (Law of Return, sect. 2 (b)). The rights of an oleh are also extended to the spouse of a Jew, to the child and grandchild of a Jew and to their spouses, respectively (Law of Return, sect. 4 A).

48. In 1952, the Knesset enacted the Nationality Law, 5712-1952, which provided a new regime for granting citizenship in place of the institution of Mandatory citizenship, which had been annulled. Under the Nationality Law, Israeli citizenship may be acquired by birth; by residence; by a combination of birth and residence, by return, under the Law of Return; by naturalization; and by grant. All persons, regardless of religion or ethnicity, who are born in Israel - and, in most cases, also outside Israel - to a parent who is an Israeli citizen automatically are citizens themselves. In general, non-Jews can attain citizenship through birth, residence, or naturalization, while Jews attain citizenship primarily by birth or by return. The main difference between Jews and non-Jews in this regard relates to foreign nationals residing abroad who wish to come to Israel and to become citizens. In any case, the manner in which persons become Israeli citizens does not affect in any way the scope of their rights and privileges deriving from citizenship, such as the right to vote and be elected, or the right to hold public office.

49. Initially, citizenship by residence was granted to persons who held Palestinian citizenship during the Mandatory period; who were continuously resident in Israel from the establishment of the State until the entering into force of the Law (14 July 1952), or who entered Israel legally during that period; and who were registered as an inhabitant with the Population Administration shortly prior to the commencement of the Law. Citizenship was also granted to the children of persons who became Israel nationals by residence under the above terms (Nationality Law, sect. 3). Many Arabs, however, did not meet the criteria for citizenship by residence, particularly among those who entered or re-entered what had become the State of Israel following the War of Independence and during the four years until enactment of the Nationality Law; most such persons were initially granted permanent resident status. In 1980, the Nationality Law was amended to broaden substantially the category of persons who were entitled to citizenship by residence, by eliminating the requirement of continuous residence in Israel and extending citizenship to all descendants of persons thus nationalized by residence, instead of only to their children. As a result, almost all Arab residents of Israel are now citizens of the State.

50. Naturalization. The criteria for acquisition of citizenship by naturalization under Israeli law are modelled on those applicable in perhaps more than 100 other States. Under section 5 of the Nationality Law, a person over 18 years of age may attain Israeli nationality if he or she:

- (a) Is in Israel; and
- (b) Has been in Israel for three out of the five years preceding the application for citizenship; and
- (c) Is entitled to reside in Israel permanently; and
- (d) Has settled, or intends to settle, in Israel; and
- (e) Has some knowledge of the Hebrew language; and
- (f) Has renounced his or her prior nationality or has proved that he or she will cease to be a foreign national upon becoming an Israeli national.

These requirements are subject to several specific exemptions, and the Minister of Interior has discretion to exempt an applicant from several of the above conditions if there is a special justification for doing so. Upon being naturalized, a person's minor children automatically become Israeli citizens, except in rare circumstances (sect. 8).

51. Nationality by birth. A person born in Israel whose mother or father was an Israeli national will also be an Israeli national. If, on the other hand, that person is born outside Israel, then he or she will be granted citizenship unless his or her parent also acquired citizenship by birth abroad to an Israeli parent. Originally, the Law allowed the descendants of Israeli nationals living abroad automatically to be deemed citizens, regardless of how many generations had passed. In 1980, the Law was amended to limit such automatic conferral of citizenship to a single generation. The second-generation children may nevertheless become Israeli citizens upon application. It may be clarified that acquisition of Israeli citizenship by birth does not involve any distinction in law or in fact between Jews and non-Jews.

52. Two other avenues of acquiring citizenship were instituted by amendment to the Nationality Law. Under section 4 A of the Law, a person who was born after the establishment of the State in a place which was Israel territory on the day of his birth, and who has never had any nationality, may become an Israeli citizen, provided he or she has been a resident of Israel for at least five years preceding the application. In addition, the spouse of an Israeli national may obtain Israeli citizenship by naturalization, even if he or she is a minor or does not meet the statutory requirements for naturalization (sect. 7 of the Law).

53. Loss of citizenship. Under section 11 of the Nationality Law, an Israeli national may have his or her citizenship revoked in three sets of circumstances: if the acquisition of citizenship was based on the submission of false or fraudulent information, as discussed under article 13; if he or she performs an act "constituting breach of allegiance to the State of Israel"; or if he or she leaves Israel illegally for one of seven States mentioned in the Prevention of Infiltration (Offences and Jurisdiction) Law, 5714-1954, or acquires the nationality of one of those States. As a practical matter, a "breach of allegiance" has never been invoked to terminate the citizenship of an Israeli national, and the annulment of citizenship for illegal entry into prohibited countries is no longer applied. In addition, an Israeli national may voluntarily renounce his or her citizenship, or that of his or her children, under certain circumstances (sect. 10 of the Nationality Law).

54. Permanent residency status is granted by discretion of the Minister of Interior, as discussed under article 12.

55. So long as resident aliens are within Israel pursuant to a valid residency permit, they are accorded the full range of basic civil, political and social rights under Israeli law, except for those rights deriving from citizenship (such as the right to vote in Knesset elections and to run for election, the right to receive a passport, the right to hold public office, and the unlimited right of re-entry into the country after leaving it). Non-resident aliens enjoy full civil and political rights in their dealings with the justice and law enforcement systems, including the right to petition the courts, freedom from arbitrary arrest, the right to due process, the freedom from arbitrary or cruel and unusual punishment; they also enjoy full equality of the rights to freedom of speech, religion, movement, privacy, assembly, and other rights under this Covenant. In certain areas, typically related to employment or economic entitlements, non-resident aliens do not enjoy the same rights as citizens and resident aliens.

56. Remedies available under Israeli law for denial or removal of citizenship or permanent residency status are discussed under article 12. Remedies available for violation of the various rights under the Covenant in general are discussed under the particular article referring to the right in question.

Article 3 - Equal rights of men and women

Constitutional principles and legislation

57. In the absence of a written constitution, Israel has developed the basic constitutional principles of its legal system in an accumulating series of Basic Laws and through judicial interpretation. Except for a provision in Basic Law: Knesset requiring that national elections be "equal", the right to equality is not mentioned directly in any of the Basic Laws, including the two most recent Basic Laws dealing with individual rights, Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, and Basic Law: Freedom of Occupation. The reason for this exclusion, as a normative and practical matter, resides perhaps primarily in the systemic accommodation that Israel has maintained between its character as a liberal democracy and the prerogative it has granted to religious law in various areas of public and private life. While the right to equality is not expressly enshrined in the language of the Basic Laws, it has long been considered an "unwritten fundamental right" in Israel's constitutional order by the Supreme Court. The Court established this fundamental, if unwritten, right to equality by giving constitutive weight to the fact that Israel was founded as a democracy; it also took note of the passage in the Declaration of Independence stating that "The State of Israel will maintain complete equality in social and political rights for all citizens, irrespective of religion, race or sex." Although the Declaration does not itself have binding constitutional force, the 1992 Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty provides that the human rights it articulates shall be interpreted "in the spirit of the principles in the Declaration of Independence" (sect. 1). The trend of opinion among members of the Court appears to be that the basic right to human dignity includes various unenumerated rights, such as the right to equality. Until recently, the Court has taken the view that it may invalidate secondary legislation, such as administrative regulations, which violate "unwritten" fundamental rights, but not primary legislation enacted by the Knesset, in view of the Knesset's supremacy. In the aftermath, however, of the enactment of two Basic Laws mentioned above, the Court has held that it may now invalidate Knesset legislation which violates those fundamental individual rights beyond the extent allowed by the limitation clauses in those Laws.

58. Given the lack of a written constitutional right to equality, the principle of gender equality has been given form largely through specific legislation and case law. The first significant legislative effort to implement the principle of gender equality was the Women's Equal Rights Law, 5711-1951, which provides that one law shall apply to men and women regarding any "legal act", and that any law that discriminates as such shall not be binding. The law also equates the legal status of women to that of men. Although the law deals specifically with the rights of married women regarding property ownership, and with the rights of women as mothers regarding their children, it does not apply directly to matters of marriage and divorce as such. Moreover, the Women's Equal Rights Law is an ordinary statute, which in theory can be revoked or qualified by subsequent legislation. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court has accorded the law almost constitutional weight in its decisions, calling it "an ideological law, revolutionary, a change of social structure". Prohibition of discrimination on the basis of gender in the private sector is guaranteed in discrete areas by legislation, such as the Equal Employment Opportunities Law, 5748-1988, the Equal Pay (Male and Female Employees) Law, 5756-1996, which are discussed below, and to a certain extent by judicial decisions which have applied the non-discrimination principle in private settings. Other legislative enactments, described in the following sections, promote the equal status of women and men in a wide range of affairs, such as the rights of working pregnant women and mothers, affirmative action, the prevention of domestic violence, national security entitlements, and so on.

International instruments

59. Israel is a party to the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women and submitted its initial and first periodic report under that Convention in March 1997. Israel is also a party to the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, the Convention on the Political Rights of Women and the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women.

Participation of women in politics and public life

60. Voting. There is full equality between men and women regarding the right to vote and to be elected in Israel. Section 5 of Basic Law: The Knesset specifically states that every Israeli citizen aged 18 or older is entitled to vote, and section 6 of the law states that every Israeli citizen aged 21 or older is entitled to run for election. There is no noticeable difference between men and women regarding participation in the act of voting (approximately 85 per cent for both sexes). In the Arab community, women have a higher rate of voting in national elections (89.1 per cent) than men (80.5 per cent).

61. Women's representation in political parties and the Knesset Women operate within political parties under two categories: in specific women's sections and as individual members. Women may be considered to have a dual role, of recruiting support for the party among female constituents, and of promoting women's representation in the party. The introduction, in several political parties, of primary elections in 1992, in which only registered members of the party in question may vote for its candidates to the Knesset, has heightened the sensitivity to the significance of women party members. In a recent survey, 17.0 per cent of the men and 10.9 per cent of the women respondents reported actual membership in political parties. Moreover, 44.3 per cent of the women polled stated that they did not support nor were active in any political party. A small number of women hold high-ranking positions in Israeli political parties. These include Zehava Galon, the General Secretary of Meretz (Israel Democratic Party); Tamar Gozhansky, one of the leading members of Chadash (Democratic Party for Peace and Equality); Limor Livnat (Likud), current Minister of Communications; and until recently, Shulamit Aloni, who founded the Citizen's Rights Party and served as a Cabinet minister in the government headed by the late Yitzhak Rabin. None of the religious parties has had any female candidates in viable places on their party lists. In the 1996 elections, 69 women ran in party primaries. The Labour party secured 6 places (out of 44) on its Knesset candidates list; the Likud party placed 3 women (out of 42); and Meretz secured 3 places for women (out of 14) on its list.

62. The representation of women in the Knesset has varied between 6 and 10 per cent over Israel's history. In the 1996 elections, 9 women (out of 120 Knesset members) were elected to the Knesset, a slight decline from the level of representation in the previous Knesset. Many of the powerful positions in the Knesset have never been assigned to women. For example, there has never been a woman Knesset Speaker, though in quite a few instances women have served as deputy speakers. On the two most powerful Knesset committees, the Foreign and Security Affairs Committee and the Finance Committee, few women have been members. As in other countries, women are relatively well represented on committees responsible for matters related to traditional women's interests, such as education, welfare and social services. Women members of Knesset have been active in promoting bills and petitions dealing with the family, welfare, social and economic matters. In the present Knesset, elected in 1996, the nine women in the Knesset serve on one or more of the following Knesset committees: one woman heads the Absorption Committee and another heads the Science and Technology Committee; there is one woman serving on the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee; three women on the Labour Committee; three women on the Education and Culture Committee; three women on the Immigration Committee; two women on the Interior Affairs Committee; and several women on the Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women, including the Committee chair.

Women in government, local authorities and the civil service

63. Since the establishment of the State of Israel, one woman, Golda Meir, has served as Prime Minister, after having served as a Cabinet minister in a succession of governments and as a Knesset member for 20 years. Six women have served as Cabinet ministers, including one in the present government (out of 17 ministers). In addition, the Director-General of three government ministries, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Environmental Protection and the Ministry of Absorption, are currently women.

64. Women's representation on local councils has been quite limited, although it has risen steadily since the mid-1960s. As of 1993, roughly 11 per cent of local council members were women. Only six women have served as heads of local councils during Israel's history, none of them in a city with a population over 10,000. Currently, one woman is the head of a local council, and seven women serve as deputy mayors.

Figure 1. Women elected to local councils

65. As of December 1995, 59.4 per cent of all civil servants were women. However, women are under-represented in senior positions: in December 1995, only 10.5 per cent of senior staff (the top three grades in the four main managerial classifications) were women. At the same time, women made up 62.4 per cent of civil service employees in the lowest ranks (grade 8 and below). Recent data submitted by the Civil Service Commission to the Knesset Committee on the Advancement of Women show that significant progress was made between December 1994 and December 1996, during which period the number of women holding senior staff positions has more than tripled (from 25 to 85), so that women now make up 14 per cent of senior staff.

66. The participation of women in internal job tenders in the civil service has been increasing consistently over the last several years. In the four years between 1993 and 1996, the percentage of women candidates in such tenders has more than doubled (from 23.2 per cent in 1994 to 51.9 per cent in 1996), and the percentage of women appointed in such tenders has also more than doubled (from 26.1 per cent to 55.7 per cent over the same period). Participation by women in public job tenders for civil service positions rose much more gradually (up to 35.2 per cent of candidates and 36.7 per cent of appointees in 1995, and declined slightly in 1996. Between the change in the Civil Service Code in 1993, requiring representation of both sexes in tender committees, and 1995 there was an overall decline in the number of such committees composed of men only from 5.4 per cent to 1.6 per cent of internal tenders and from 33.5 per cent to 28.6 per cent of public tenders.

67. The judiciary and lawyers in the public sector The percentage of women in the judiciary is extraordinarily high compared to other areas of public life. In all of the different civil courts combined, there are 146 women judges and 229 men judges, such that 40 per cent of the civil judiciary in Israel is composed of women.

Table 1. Judges, by court and sex

	Female	Male	Total	% Women
JUDGES
Supreme Court	3	11	14	21
District Courts	23	67	90	26
Magistrates Courts	87	121	209	42
Traffic Courts	14	15	29	48
National Labour Court	1	3	4	25
Regional Labour Courts	18	12	30	60
REGISTRARS
Local Affairs Courts	28	22	50	56
Regional Labour Courts	9	2	11	82

Figure 2. Percentage of female and male judges in various courts

Women are also well-represented in public sector legal employment. The present State Attorney is a woman. Her predecessor was the first woman to serve in this position, and was later appointed to the Supreme Court. Four out of the five District Attorneys are women. In the District Attorneys' offices, there are 207 women lawyers as against 126 men, and 237 women attorneys working in other governmental offices compared to 115 men.

68. Representation in religious bodies. The Religious Judges Law, 5715-1955, the Rabbinical Courts (Jurisdiction) Law and the Druze Courts Law, 5722-1962, have been interpreted by Jewish, Muslim and Druze religious leaders to mean that only men can serve as judges in these courts. Over the last decade, however, there have been certain important developments in the representation of women in other religious bodies. Following two landmark Supreme Court decisions in 1988, women were granted the right to participate in the Committee for Selection of Chief Rabbis and the right to participate in municipal religious councils. In H.C.J. 953/87, Poraz v. Mayor of Tel Aviv, 42(2) P.D. 309, the Court affirmed the right of women to participate in the Committee for the Selection of the Tel Aviv Chief Rabbi, holding that the exclusion of women from such political committees dealing with religious matters constitutes unlawful discrimination. In H.C.J. 153/87. Shakdiel v. Minister of Religious Affairs, 42(2) P.D. 221, the Court granted women the right to be elected to the religious council of the city of Yeruham in southern Israel. The number of women serving on municipal religious councils remains small. Out of 139 such councils, only 12 include a woman.

69. Government corporations. Under a 1993 amendment to the Government Corporations Law, 5735-1975, men and women must be appropriately represented on the board of directors of every government corporation, and ministers must appoint directors from the less-represented sex until such representation is achieved. Two subsequent appointments of men to the boards of directors of the Israel Ports and Trains Authority and Israel Refineries, respectively, which had no women members, were invalidated by the Supreme Court. According to research conducted in 1996, 68 per cent of government corporations have taken some affirmative action in the aftermath of the above amendment. In 48 per cent of such corporations women have been appointed as directors where there were no women directors in 1993; in 21 corporations (18.9 per cent) which had women directors in 1993, their number has significantly increased. Still, there are 18 government corporations (16 per cent) in which there are no women directors, and in 12 corporations (11 per cent) the number of women directors remains the same. Overall, women still constitute less than 30 per cent of the directors in the majority of government corporations.

70. Women in the military and police. In general, men and women in Israel must perform mandatory military service, although the conditions of service vary between the sexes. Under the Defence Service Law, 5746-1986, men are subject to military service duties between the ages of 18 and 54, women between 18 and 38. The law also differentiates between men and women with regard to the length of mandatory service in the army, the extent of reserve duty obligations, voluntary service, and exemptions. Women are exempt from mandatory service if they are married, pregnant or mothers. There is a legislative exemption for young women who, for reasons of religion or conscience, do not wish to serve in the army. Some of these women perform national service for two years or a shorter period at an accredited institution. Ultra-orthodox males may be exempt from military service if they study in an institute of religious learning and agree not to work during the time they are studying; under this arrangement, such religious students may postpone their military service annually. Approximately 42 per cent of all conscripted soldiers in 1996 were women. While approximately 68 per cent of draftable women were conscripted (the remaining 32 per cent receiving exemptions of one form or another), 83.3 per cent of draftable men were enlisted.

71. In practice, the policy of the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) has been to discourage or forbid women soldiers from serving in combat positions, although they do hold combat-training posts. In a landmark 1995 decision, the Supreme Court held that women could not be excluded from serving as air force pilots based on budgetary and logistical considerations. H.C.J. 4541/94, Miller v. Minister of Defence, 49(4) P.D. 94. The army has since taken steps to implement the decision in the Miller case. Several classes of women have begun the pilot training course, and guidelines have been established to adapt army policy regarding women's service to the potential reality of women combat pilots. The representation of women in various branches of the IDF is shown in the following charts:

Figure 3. Percentage of women officers in service (mandatory and career), by corps

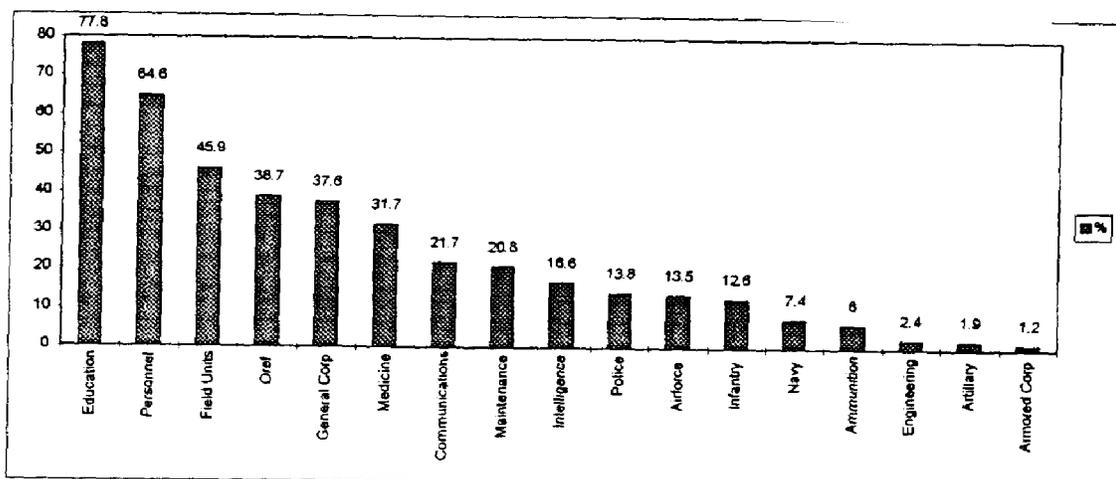

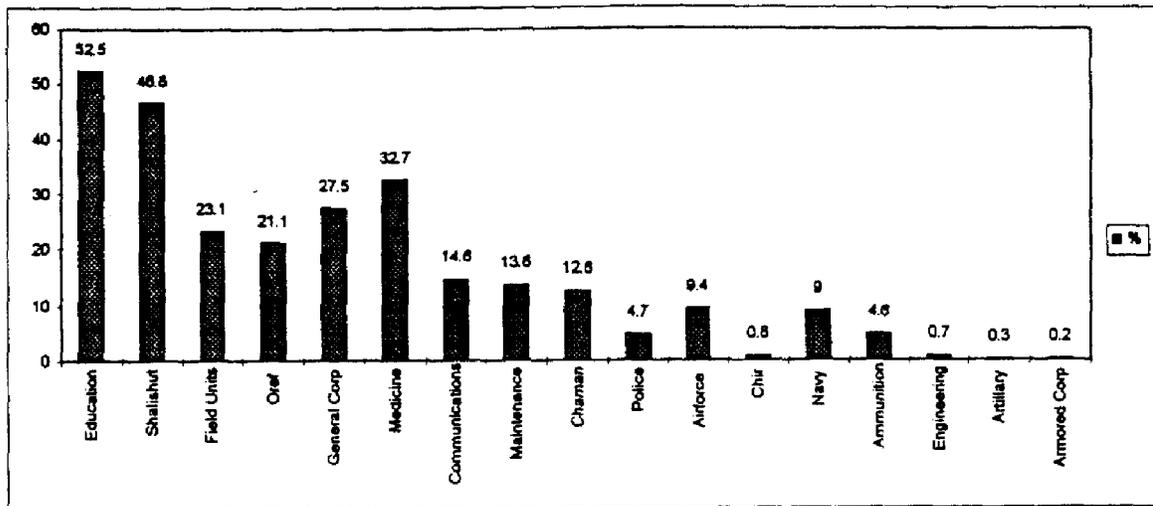

Figure 4. Percentage of women officers in career service, by corps

72. Because women do not serve in combat positions, they are often excluded from the upper echelons of the military hierarchy. In 1995, there were nine women holding the rank of colonel. The proportion of women officers holding the rank of lieutenant-colonel or lower, however, has risen significantly over the last decade.

73. According to Israel Police statistics, women constituted approximately 18 per cent of the police force in Israel as of December 1995. While the police has no official policy limiting women's service, previous army combat experience is either a precondition or a preferred qualification for many positions, including senior positions, effectively barring or hindering women from being able to serve in those positions. A pending 1996 petition to the Supreme Court by women who claimed discrimination against women in police hiring has led the police to establish a committee to investigate the hiring policies regarding women. As of the submission of this report, women serve as the head of the Personnel Division, the head of the Criminal Investigation Division and as the Legal Adviser to the Israel Police.

74. Other public institutions. The General Labour Federation (Histadrut), discussed under article 22, acts as an umbrella for the majority of labour unions in Israel. In 1995, the Histadrut added a provision to its articles of association requiring 30 per cent female membership in the leadership of every labour union under its auspices. At present, 10 per cent of all workers' committees are headed by women, and women comprise 17 per cent of their membership. Women hold managerial positions in many labour councils; altogether, 51 per cent of the personnel on labour councils are women.

75. Non-governmental organizations. Women are deeply involved in myriad non-governmental organizations which aim to influence the governmental decision-making process, both on issues relating specially to women and to the full gamut of social concerns. Some groups, such as the Israel Women's Network and the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, have played a highly significant role in the legislative process and in legal advocacy on issues related to women. Other women's groups, such as Women for Women, the Women's Organization for Political Prisoners, the Jerusalem Link, and the Association of Women for Peace, have focused their activities on promoting Israeli-Palestinian dialogue and influencing public opinion on Palestinian-Israeli issues.

Equality in employment

76. Until the end of the 1980s there were few statutes which dealt specifically with matters of gender equality in the workplace. The Employment Service Law, 5719-1959, which prohibits discrimination in job referrals on the basis of sex (sect. 42), and the Equal Pay (Male and Female Employees) Law, 5724-1964, requiring that male and female employees receive comparable pay for comparable work, were perhaps the most important early pieces of legislation. The Womens' Equal Rights Law, 5711-1951, while not dealing explicitly with labour-related issues, provided that "one law shall apply to men and women regarding every legal act". Although lacking the constitutional status of a Basic Law, the Supreme Court has interpreted this Law to contain norms of a constitutional nature and has held that, where possible, other laws should be interpreted in conformity with its provisions. In 1987, the Equal Retirement Age (Male and Female Employees) Law, 5747-1987, was enacted, prohibiting employers from forcing early retirement on women workers. The broader Equal Employment Opportunities Law, 5748-1988, prohibits discrimination in the workplace based on gender, sexual orientation, marital status, parenthood, race, age, religion, nationality, country of birth, political or other orientation. Neither governmental employers nor private employers with six or more employees may take the above classifications into account in matters of hiring, promotion, termination of employment, training, work or retirement conditions, except in special cases where the unique nature of the position makes those classifications irrelevant. Protections offered to women employees which take into account their special needs as women or mothers are not considered discriminatory, although the law specifies that any such rights offered to working mothers must equally be given to men who either have sole custody of their children, or whose wives work and have chosen not to make use of these entitlements or rights. The range of entitlements offered to pregnant women, new mothers and their spouses are discussed under article 23.

77. The Equal Employment Opportunities Law also recognizes sexual harassment as a form of discrimination in the workplace subject to criminal and civil sanctions. Although harassment is defined relatively narrowly and does not include the notion of a hostile working environment, the law forbids employers from penalizing employees or job applicants in any manner for refusing to accept proposals or advances of a sexual nature. A 1995 amendment to the law has placed the burden of proof upon the employer in civil sexual harassment suits; where an employee has proved refusal of a sexual advance, the employer must then prove that there has been no violation of the law (i.e. that the employee has not been penalized in any manner). The sexual harassment provision in the Equal Employment Opportunities Law applies to all employers, unlike the other provisions in the law, which apply only to those employers with five or more employees.

78. In the civil service, sexual harassment is a disciplinary offence under the Civil Service Code, which defines harassment more broadly than the Equal Employment Opportunities Law. The Code's definition includes any act with the characteristics of a sexual act, including speech or insinuation; it also covers acts by co-workers as well as superiors. In the case of harassment by a superior, the Code provides that the worker's consent is irrelevant, as is the question of who initiated communication of a sexual nature. A 1995 amendment to the Civil Service Code added the creation of a hostile working environment to the definition of sexual harassment, and provided for legal and professional aid to the plaintiff.

79. A bill which would provide criminal and civil sanctions against all forms of sexual harassment, and would hold employers responsible for not acting to prevent harassment in the workplace, is in its final legislative stages.

80. The Equal Pay (Male and Female Employees) Law, 1996, aims to promote equality between men and women in work compensation. Replacing a similar law from 1964, the new law widens the definition of discrimination, provides greater access to remedies, and implements a progressive notion of pay equity. While the earlier law dealt only with "salaries", the new law extends to "all other forms of compensation", including benefits, bonuses, grants, coverage of expenses and overtime, all of which previously were used by employers to evade the spirit of the law. Instead of requiring employers to pay workers in "essentially equal" positions at the same workplace equal salaries, the new law mandates equal pay for positions at the same workplace that are "equal in value", which is defined as jobs that demand equal qualifications, effort, expertise and responsibility. Any deviation from this standard of equality imposes a burden of proof on the employer that non-gender-related circumstances justify the difference in pay. Employees who are found by the labour court to have been underpaid under the criteria of the new law may sue for up to 24 months' back pay. Employees may not forfeit or qualify their rights under this law.

81. In general, women have become much more involved in the labour market in Israel over the years, but occupational segregation and gaps in pay between men and women remain fairly entrenched. Over the last decade, women's participation in the workforce (i.e. the percentage of women aged 15 and over who are working or unemployed) increased around 1 per cent annually, reaching 45.5 per cent in 1995. During that period, men's participation in the workforce has stayed more or less the same (62.6 per cent in 1995). Women composed 43.2 per cent of the total workforce in 1995, compared to 33 per cent in 1975. The increase in women's participation is evident in almost all age groups, except for the youngest and eldest. Jewish women's level of participation is higher than overall women's participation, reaching 50.5 per cent in 1995. At the same time, participation of Arab women in the workforce has increased, from 13.9 per cent in 1992 to 16.8 per cent in 1994. In 1994, roughly 24 per cent of women were employed full-time, and 16 per cent part-time; among men, 54 per cent worked full-time and 6 per cent part-time. Not surprisingly, the other major difference in work patterns between men and women was that 23 per cent of women in 1994 were classified as "homemakers", which is defined by statute as applying only to females. Homemakers are not considered part of the labour force, as they neither work for pay nor actively seek such work. Women's participation in the labour force is correlated dramatically with their educational level, much more so than is the case with men. In 1995, among Jewish women with 16 years of schooling and over, 77.5 per cent belonged to the workforce, as compared to 74.9 per cent of Jewish men with the same level of education; among Jewish women with 0-4 years of schooling, only 10.1 per cent participate in the workforce. Participation of married women has steadily increased, from roughly 25 per cent in 1967 to roughly 50 per cent in 1995.

82. Occupational distribution. Differences in employment patterns between men and women in Israel are shown in the following table showing the relative level of employment in various branches of the economy:

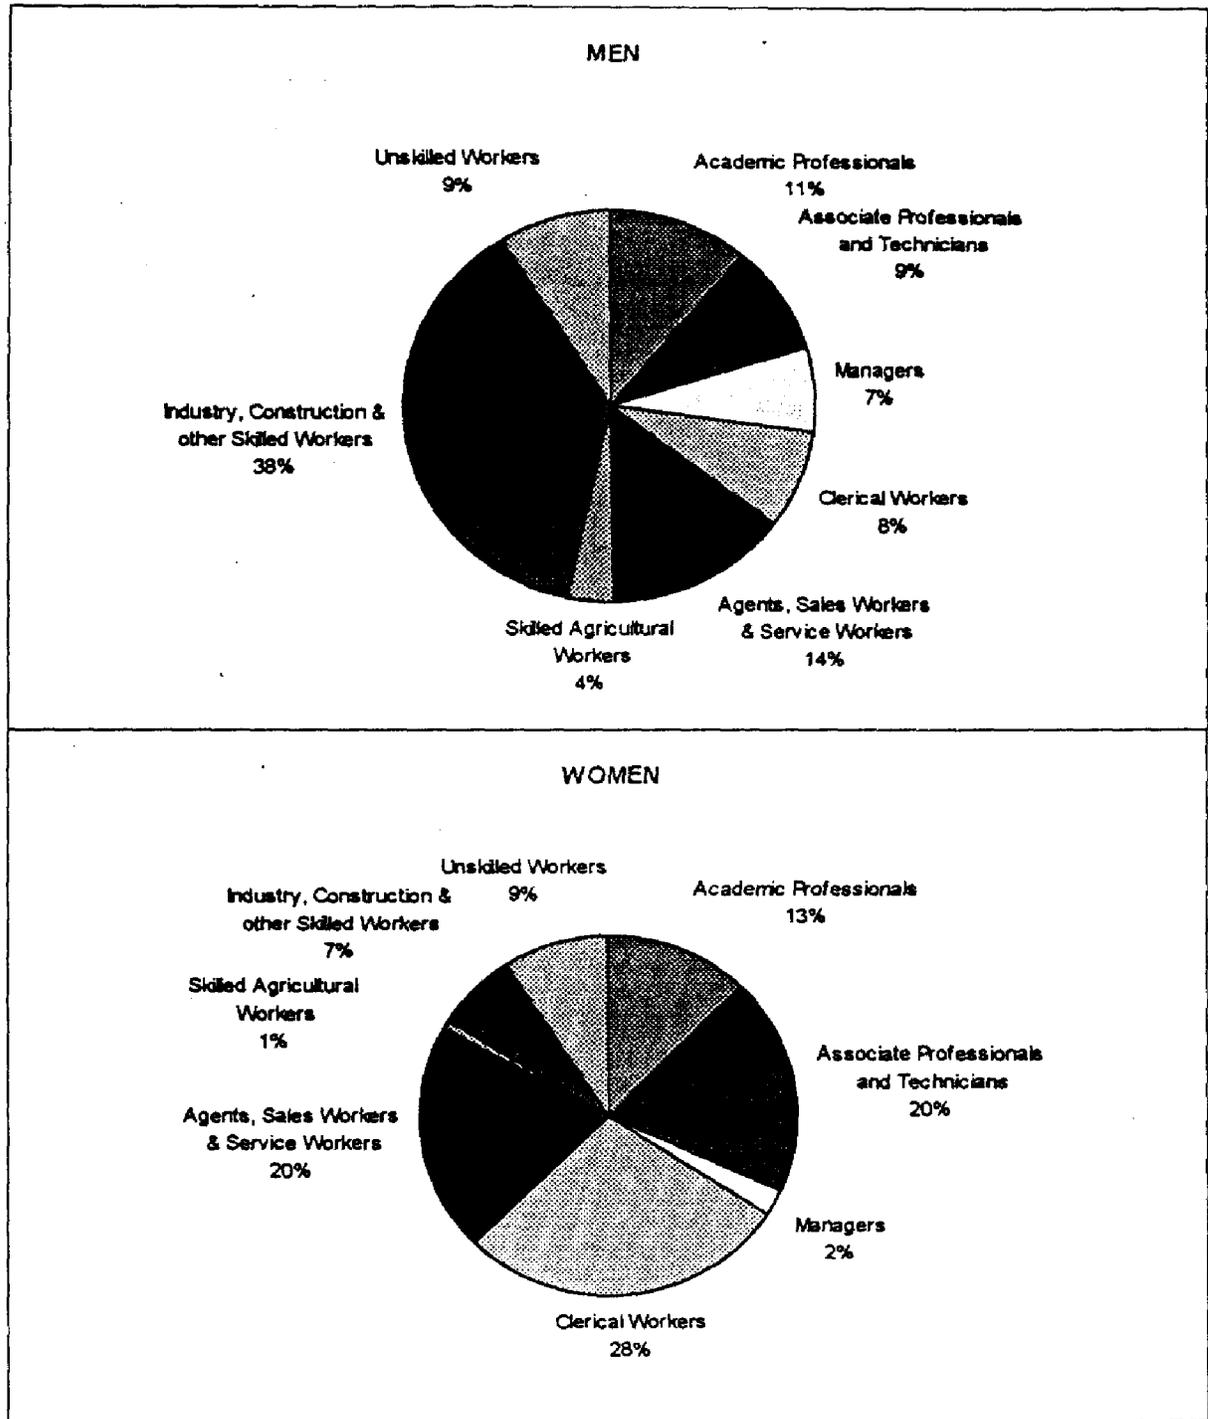

Table 2. Percentage of women and men in economic branches

Economic branch	% of total employed men in branch	% of total employed women in branch
Agriculture	4.2	1.2
Manufacturing	26	13.6
Electricity and water supply	1.5	0.3
Construction (building and engineering projects)	11.8	1
Trade and motor vehicle repair	14	11.1
Accommodation services and restaurants	4	4.4
Transport, storage and communication	7.8	3.3
Banking, insurance and finance	2.6	4.7
Business activities	8.9	9.3
Public administration	5.6	5.3
Education	5.4	21
Health, welfare and social services	3.8	15.6
Community, social and personal services	4.3	5.4
Private households with domestic personnel	0.2	3.6
Total	100	100

Work segregation is also evidenced by differences in distribution among occupational categories. In 1995, as shown in the pie chart below, close to 30 per cent of employed women were clerical workers (a figure that has remained unchanged since 1980), compared to 8 per cent of men; more than 20 per cent of employed women were agents, sales workers or services workers, compared to 14.4 per cent of men. A higher proportion of women than of men were academic professionals (12.5 per cent for women, 11 per cent for men) and associate professionals and technicians (19.5 per cent for women, 9.4 per cent for men). However, it should be noted that most women in these latter occupational categories are teachers, nurses, social workers and the like, primarily in the public services. Thirty-eight per cent of employed men worked in industry and other skilled labour, compared to only 7 per cent of employed women.

Figure 5. Employed persons, by last occupation

Source: Labor Force Surveys, 1995.

83. The "glass ceiling". Although thoroughgoing data regarding the ability of women to advance to senior positions in their place of employment are difficult to gather, available statistics indicate that a "glass ceiling" still exists for women in the Israeli workplace. According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, in 1995 6.9 per cent of all working men were managers, while only 2.2 per cent of all working women were managers. Of the total managerial segment of the workforce, 19.5 per cent were women in 1995, a slight increase from 1990 (18 per cent of managers were women). During the decade between 1980 and 1990, women made up more than 25 per cent of the increase in total managers.

84. Although women's representation in managerial roles has gradually increased, it is still quite low when compared to the increase in the general rate of women in the workforce. For example, the Union of Industrialists recently conducted a survey of 152 high-tech corporations, which revealed that 14 per cent of the managers in these companies are women, while in 51 per cent of such companies there were no women managers at all. On the other hand, among the larger corporations (100 employees or more), 44 per cent have more than one woman in managerial positions. In the civil service, roughly 60 per cent of all workers, but only 14 per cent of senior staff, were women, according to 1996 data.

85. Earning gaps. In all branches of the labour market, a male employee's average monthly income was 1.7 times higher than that of a female employee (1992-1993). This is partly explained by the differences in average weekly work hours, which were 46.3 for men and 34.1 for women. However, a large gap still exists in the average income per hour, which for women was 80 per cent of men's hourly income. This earning gap remains fairly constant when other variables, such as level of education, are taken into account. During the period between 1992 and 1994, the average monthly and yearly salaries of women in the workforce were 50-55 per cent of men's salaries. In 1995, 69 per cent of all employees who earned less than the minimum wage were women. Salary gaps between male and female full-time employees in the civil service have decreased from 29 per cent in 1988 to 24 per cent in 1996.

86. Employment of Arab women. Arab women in Israel, on the whole, are far less employed outside of the home than are Jewish women. Of the 350,000 Arab women who are of working age (over 15), roughly 83 per cent do not belong to the workforce, a slight decrease from the 1960s (approximately 91 per cent did not belong to the workforce). The rate of employment of Arab women living in cities is much higher than that of those living in villages, who comprise 90 per cent of all Israeli Arab women. Most Arab villages are located on Israel's periphery, far from centres of economic activity. In the past agriculture was an integral source of income for Arab villages, and Arab women were thoroughly involved in such agricultural work while maintaining their traditional role as housewives. Downsizing in the agricultural sector, which occurred as a result of the appropriation of farm lands, shifted the main economic focus of villages to work in the cities, leaving a vacuum in the job market for Arab women. While many village men moved into the modern workforce and left their villages to work in the Israeli cities, women remained at home to run their households and work the fields, without tangible compensation.

87. The first wave of Arab women seeking work outside their villages began in the 1960s, mostly in jobs at nearby Jewish villages or cooperatives which did not require any formal education or literacy. In the 1970s, Arab women began to take on blue collar positions in factories set up near their villages, particularly in the textile industry. By 1989, the percentage of Arab women who worked in the textile industry, either at factories or in cottage industries within the villages, reached 29 per cent. During the 1990s, more Arab women have entered the Israeli job market, particularly as unskilled labourers, to help their families shoulder increasing financial burdens. In recent years, more Arab women have been taking positions which require a high school education.

88. The reluctance of the traditional Arab communities to allow women to work outside their homes stems from religious, social and economic concerns. Particularly in the villages, the traditional Arab lifestyle places women in the home, not in the workplace or at school. Single Arab women, particularly at the lower and the higher economic strata, work much more frequently than married Arab women. The labour force participation of Arab and Druze women has been found to peak at ages 18-24, and to decline dramatically with marriage or the birth of a first child.

Education

89. Under the Compulsory Education Law, 5709-1949, all children must study between the ages of 5 and 15. Education is provided free of charge through the age of 17, and for 18-year-olds who have not yet completed the eleventh grade. The illiteracy rate (defined to include persons with up to four years of schooling) is higher among women than among men, although dramatic improvements have been made in this respect among all sectors of the population. Median years of schooling is lowest among Arab women (9.7 years in 1994, as compared to 10.6 years among Arab men); Jewish women and men have more or less identical median educational levels (12.2 and 12.3 per cent in 1993). However, there has been a steady and significant increase in the median educational level within the general Arab population, and when specific age groups are examined, among Arab women as well: in 1980, the median years of schooling was 6.4 for Arab women, 7.5 for Arab men, and roughly 11 years for Jewish men and women.

90. As of the 1994/95 school year, attendance rates of 14-to-17-year-olds in the Jewish educational system were 92.6 per cent for boys and 99.6 per cent for girls. In the Arab sector during the same year, 65.7 per cent of boys and 69.2 per cent of girls were enrolled in educational programmes. In all sectors, attendance rates have increased dramatically over time. Approximately two thirds of all matriculation examinees are girls, and a higher percentage of girls than boys pass their matriculation exams.

91. Secondary education in Israel is made up of different educational tracks. In the eighth or ninth grade students are placed on either a general or technological/vocational track, and proceed to separate high schools accordingly. Within each general track, the students select specific courses of study, such as sciences or humanities, or a specific vocational field, such as electronics, biotechnology and so on. Most of the students who take their matriculation exams have studied in the general high schools, as matriculation is a prerequisite for university education. As of 1985, 43.6 per cent of girls studied in the general track, while only 27.7 of boys did the same. Within the vocational tracks, machinery and electronics are almost exclusively male subjects, building and architecture are studied equally by men and women, and fashion and nursing/paramedical training are female-dominated fields, as are programmes for biotechnical engineers and technicians.

92. Everyone, regardless of gender, may choose to study or major in any subject in higher education. Opportunities are limited to the extent that certain departments have prerequisites such as a certain level of science matriculation, which many girls do not choose to take in high school. In 1995, 55 per cent of undergraduate university students in Israel, and over 50 per cent of graduate students, were women. The proportion of university degree recipients who are women is similar to the percentage of women students. At the doctoral level, 43.8 per cent of students are women. In the 1992/93 school year, 46.6 per cent of law students, 46 per cent of medical students, and 18.2 per cent of engineering and architecture students studying for a first degree were women. Women are highly represented in university programmes in education (84 per cent), the humanities (71.4 per cent) and the social sciences (59 per cent) while they are under-represented in technological fields (20 per cent). Women university students tend to receive their bachelor's degrees earlier than men (median age 26.0, compared to 27.6 for men), largely due to the fact that their mandatory army service is one year shorter than that of men. The median age for receiving master's degrees is virtually identical for men and women, and the median age for receiving doctoral degrees is a year lower for men than for women. In non-university institutions of higher education, women made up 64 per cent of students during the 1995/96 school year. More than three times the number of non-Jewish men receive higher education than do non-Jewish women.

Governmental review of legislation and practice affecting women

93. Commission on the Status of Women The International Women's Year in 1975 triggered the formation of an ad hoc Commission on the Status of Women, appointed by then-Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, and headed by Ora Namir, who later became Minister of Labour and Social Affairs. The Commission's main function was to investigate the status of women in Israel and to present the Government with proposals for social, cultural, educational, economic and legal measures necessary to promote equality between men and women in Israel. The Commission's 1978 report included a list of 241 recommendations for reform, only some of which have been implemented.

94. Women's status in the civil service The Israeli Government is the largest employer in Israel, and almost 60 per cent of civil servants are women. In 1989, a governmental commission investigating the civil service reported, among other things, on the status of women in the service, and concluded that discrimination against women is the main cause of their lower status in the service. To implement the commission's recommendations for the improvement of women's status in the service, a subcommittee was established (the Ben Israel Committee, after its Chairwoman) by the Ministry of Economics and Planning. In 1993, the subcommittee presented its reform proposals, which included specific provisions for ensuring women's participation in tender committees, and invalidating decisions of tender committees with no women members; improving the functioning of the supervisors on the status of women in the different ministries; and securing firmer treatment of sexual harassment. In addition, the proposals include the publication of a worker's rights manual for women employees, the preparation and dissemination of information regarding the status of women in the service to Knesset committees and women's organizations; and the joint establishment of a Progressive Employer Award to be granted by the Na'amat women's organization, the Union of Industrialists and the Union of Local Authorities to the public employer demonstrating a commitment to the advancement of women. Most of these proposals were incorporated into the Civil Service Code, and are in the process of being implemented.

95. Other changes in the Civil Service Code include the changing of provisions regarding family members who may accompany employees on overseas missions on gender-neutral terms, thus giving men and women employees equal opportunities to participate in overseas work, and allowing women employees with small children to choose whether or not to work overtime. In 1985, the Government, following one of the recommendations of the Namir commission, decided that a supervisor on the status of women employees would be appointed in each government ministry. These supervisors are responsible for promoting equal opportunities for women employees, monitoring obligations for representation of women on all professional and tender committees, developing special tracks for promotion of women, increasing the representation of women in senior positions, handling gender discrimination and sexual harassment complaints, and preparing annual progress reports. Such supervisors have been appointed in most ministries.

96. Recently, the Civil Service Commissioner created a new position for a Supervisor-General on the advancement of women in the civil service, who reports directly to the Commissioner. In 1996, a new unit was established on the Commission, which is responsible specifically for hiring and promoting women in the civil service, with a particular view to increasing representation in senior positions. The new unit also supervises the implementation of affirmative action policy under the State Service (Appointments)(Adequate Representation) Law (Amendment No. 7), 5755-1995. This law obligates the Civil Service Commissioner to use all necessary means to achieve appropriate representation of both sexes in the civil service. Its provisions are read to all tender committees at the beginning of every tender deliberation, including the requirement that preference be given to the candidate of the less-represented sex when candidate's qualifications for the position are similar.

97. The Prime Minister's Adviser on the Status of Women The Office of the Prime Minister's Adviser on the Status of Women, established in 1980, was initially given responsibility for advising the Prime Minister on all issues pertaining to women, and coordinating governmental actions in this regard. The office suffered from a dearth of funding until 1992, when the late Prime Minister Rabin abolished the Office of Prime Minister's Advisers altogether, including the Adviser on the Status of Women. In its place, he formed a steering committee to restructure the office of the Adviser and the function of the National Authority on the Status of Women, discussed below. Following the 1996 election, the Government appointed a new Adviser on the Status of Women, with responsibility for organizing a campaign against family violence and drafting Israel's report on the March 1997 session of the Commission on the Status of Women, in the aftermath of the Beijing Conference.

98. A bill currently under consideration in the Knesset calls for the establishment of a National Authority on the Status of Women. Under the proposed legislation, the Authority will have a mandate to formulate policy regarding gender equality and the elimination of discrimination against women; to coordinate and promote cooperation between national Government, municipalities and other bodies regarding the promotion of the status of women; to advise ministries on the implementation of equality laws and of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; to establish special programmes and services for women to promote gender equality; to create a research and public information centre; and to promote legislative measures for the advancement of women and the elimination of gender discrimination. The Knesset Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women is now preparing the bill for its final readings, and it is expected to be enacted in the near future.

99. The Knesset Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women In 1992, a broad coalition of women Knesset members created the Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women. This Committee has been instrumental in promoting important legislation bearing on women's status and in raising awareness of women's concerns. In January 1996, the Committee was granted the status of a permanent (standing) Knesset committee, with the following mandates: (a) to see to the advancement of women's equality in public representation, education and personal status; (b) to work toward the prevention of discrimination on the basis of sex or sexual orientation in all areas of life; (c) to reduce wage gaps in the economy and the labour force; and (d) to eliminate violence against women. The Committee is currently composed of 15 members, including 8 men, and has working subcommittees dealing with the advancement of women in the workplace, the advancement of Arab women, and personal status. Recently enacted legislation in which the Committee played a pivotal role includes, among others, the Equal Pay (Male and Female Employees) Law, 5756-1996; the State Service (Appointments) (Appropriate Representation) Law (Amendment No. 7), which introduces affirmative action into the civil service; the Prevention of Domestic Violence Law (Amendment No. 2), 5756-1996; and the Family Court Law, 5755-1995. Over 40 different legislative bills relating to the advancement of women's status have been enacted since the establishment of the Committee. The Committee has also used other parliamentary powers to pursue its mandate, such as the creation of the parliamentary investigative committee on the murder of women by their spouses. Furthermore, the Committee has been an important catalyst for activity on women's issues outside the Knesset, by maintaining close working relations with women's NGOs and with women in senior positions in business and academia. It thus serves as a forum where women's voices are heard, and for political mobilization on women's issues.

100. The Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs has a Division for Employment and Status of Women, which, among others, is involved in the development of child-care programmes, the supervision and subsidizing of child-care programmes operated by women's organizations, the provision of vocational training for women who are unskilled or who wish to enter non-traditional fields of work, and the dissemination of information regarding women's rights, with a focus on employment. Other ministries have staff members designated as responsible for overseeing the status of women employees in that ministry as well as any activities of that ministry which engage women's issues more generally.

101. In 1994, the Union of Local Authorities in Israel appointed an Adviser on the Advancement of Women in Local Authorities, in an attempt to provide a mechanism for addressing women's concerns at the municipal level. The Adviser is responsible for establishing Women's Councils in each local council in Israel; 70 such Women's Councils have been created thus far, including 8 in Arab local councils. The Adviser is also involved in promoting legislation dealing with women's daily concerns at the municipal level, and cooperates closely with the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs on issues such as shelters for battered women. The tasks of the local Women's Councils include coordination among all local women's organizations, implementation of educational programmes on gender equality, prevention of domestic violence and technological education for girls, improvement of day-care facilities, and provision of services for women with special needs such as single mothers, elderly women, immigrant women and Arab women. Each Women's Council is headed by a woman who also acts as the Adviser on the Status of Women to the head of the Municipal Council. Once again, the main obstacle facing the work of the local Women's Council is the absence of a dedicated budget, making the work of the councils largely voluntary.

Equal rights in the domestic sphere

102. Israeli law and practice regarding the equality between spouses, and between spouses and their children, are discussed under articles 23 and 24.

Impact of marriage on nationality

103. As discussed under article 2, the Nationality Law, 5712-1952, states that Israeli nationality may be acquired in one of four ways: by birth; under the Law of Return, 5710-1950; by residence in Israel; or by naturalization. Israeli citizenship laws do not differentiate between men and women. Both sexes have equal rights in regard to acquiring, changing or retaining their nationality. Neither the change of nationality by one member of a couple nor marriage to a non-citizen has any effect on one's citizenship. According to the laws relating to citizenship acquired by birth, both the father's and mother's citizenship carry equal weight.

104. Provisions in the Nationality Law dealing with the acquisition of citizenship by naturalization also uphold the principle of gender equality. Section 7 of the law provides that the spouse of a person who has applied for Israeli citizenship through the naturalization process may thus be granted citizenship even if he or she does not meet all of the statutory requirements for naturalization. Naturalization also confers citizenship on the minor children of the naturalized person who were residents of Israel at the time of his or her naturalization. However, if the minor citizen was a citizen of another country, and both parents were entitled to custody, but only one underwent the naturalization process, then the child will not obtain citizenship if one of the parents declares his or her opposition thereto. In any case, these provisions do not distinguish between parents on the basis of gender.

105. Under a 1980 amendment to the Nationality Law, if either parent was an Israeli citizen at the time of his or her death, then any child born after that parent's death shall be entitled to acquire citizenship.

Article 4 - States of emergency

106. The State of Israel has remained in an officially proclaimed state of public emergency from 19 May 1948, four days after its founding, until the present day. The original declaration of a state of emergency was issued by the Provisional Council of State in the midst of the war with neighbouring States and the local Arab population that had begun several months prior to the declaration by Israel of its independence on 14 May 1948. Since then, the state of emergency has remained in force due to the ongoing state of war or violent conflict between Israel and its neighbours, and the attendant attacks on the lives and property of its citizens. Upon ratifying the Covenant, the State of Israel made a declaration regarding the existence of a state of emergency.*

107. Concurrently with the achievement of peace agreements between Israel and Egypt in 1979, between Israel and Jordan in 1994, and the recent agreements between Israel and the PLO, an internal debate regarding the necessity of a state of emergency, and the scope of powers granted to the executive branch thereunder, has culminated in the enactment by the Knesset of two Basic Laws

* The text of Israel's declaration, dated 3 October 1991, is as follows: "Since its establishment, the State of Israel has been the victim of continuous threats and attacks on its very existence as well as on the life and property of its citizens.

"These have taken the form of threats of war, of actual armed attacks, and campaigns of terrorism resulting in the murder of and injury to human beings.

"In view of the above, the State of Emergency which was proclaimed in May 1948 has remained in force ever since. This situation constitutes a public emergency within the meaning of article 4 (1) of the Covenant.

"The Government of Israel has therefore found it necessary, in accordance with the said article 4, to take measures to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, for the defence of the State and for the protection of life and property, including the exercise of powers of arrest and detention.

"Insofar as any of these measures are inconsistent with article 9 of the Covenant, Israel thereby derogates from its obligations under that provision."

which significantly modify both the constitutional mechanism for maintaining a state of emergency, as well as the scope of the executive branch's discretion in promulgating emergency regulations. In the framework of those new Laws, which are discussed further below, the state of emergency currently exists by force of the declaration of the Knesset in May 1997, which is valid for a period of up to 12 months.

108. During the period of the British Mandate, numerous emergency or defence regulations were enacted by the High Commissioner on specific matters such as prohibiting the manufacture of explosives, overseeing the Mandatory police, and regulating immigration into the country. In 1945, these earlier regulations were superseded by the enactment of the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, which granted the Mandatory authorities extremely broad powers for the purpose of quelling riots and insurgencies and maintaining public order. Among other things, these regulations enabled the destruction and sealing of houses, administrative detention, trial of civilians for security-related offences in special military courts, prohibitions on freedom of movement of individuals or the general public, deportation, censorship, expropriation of private property, illegalization and prosecution of hostile organizations, restriction of the use of telecommunications, and so on. As with most other Mandatory and Ottoman legislation that was in force on the eve of Israel's proclamation of independence, the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, remained in force upon the establishment of the State. With several notable exceptions - most prominently the power to deport civilians under Regulation 111, which was repealed in 1982, and the power of preventive or administrative detention under Regulation 112, which is now regulated by the Emergency Powers (Detention) Law, 5739-1979 - these regulations remain in force in Israel to the present day.

109. On 19 May 1948, Israel's Provisional Council of State enacted the Law and Administration Ordinance, 5708-1948, which created the new legislative and executive branches of the fledgling State, provided for the continued validity of previous laws and legal institutions, and transferred governmental powers held by Mandatory authorities. Section 9 of this Ordinance, which is quoted in full below, authorized the Provisional Council of State to declare a state of emergency, and gave ministers in the Provisional Government the power to enact emergency regulations for the purpose of protecting the State, public security and the maintenance of essential services and supplies:

"9. (a) If the Provisional Council of State deems it expedient so to do, it may declare that a state of emergency exists in the State, and upon such declaration being published in the Official Gazette, the Provisional Government may authorize the Prime Minister or any other Minister to make such emergency regulations as may seem to him expedient in the interests of the defence of the State, public security and the maintenance of supplies and essential services.

"(b) An emergency regulation may alter any law, suspend its effect or modify it, and may also impose or increase taxes or other obligatory payments.

"(c) An emergency regulation shall expire three months after it is made, unless it is extended, or revoked at an earlier date, by an Ordinance of the Provisional Council of State, or revoked by the regulation-making authority.

"(d) Whenever the Provisional Council of State thinks fit, it shall declare that the state of emergency has ceased to exist, and upon such declaration being published in the Official Gazette, the emergency regulations shall expire on the date or dates prescribed in such declaration."

As mentioned above, the Provisional Government declared a state of emergency on the same day that it enacted the enabling provision. Section 9 of the Law and Administration Ordinance remained in force until June 1996, when it was replaced by new constitutional arrangements regarding emergency powers in Basic Law: Government, which are discussed below.

110. A significant change in the scope of executive emergency powers has recently been made in the new version of Basic Law: Government, which entered into force in June 1996. This Basic Law repeals section 9 of the Law and Administration Ordinance, replacing it with new arrangements regarding the duration of and power to declare a state of emergency, as well as substantive limitations on the content and application of emergency regulations, which aim at protecting human rights. Under section 49 of the Basic Law, the official state of emergency no longer continues automatically until repealed. Rather, the Knesset may declare a state of emergency that will extend for up to one year; the Government may also declare a state of emergency, which may last for up to one week, until approval by the Knesset. In addition, emergency regulations are to be issued by the Government, rather than by individual ministers, except when there exists an urgent and critical need to enact such regulations and the Government cannot be convened, in which case the Prime Minister may issue such regulations or authorize another minister to do so. Under the new Basic Law, moreover, the validity of all emergency legislation, including that of previously enacted laws extending the force of emergency regulations under section 9 of the Law and Administration Ordinance, is now contingent upon the Knesset's decision whether to declare a new state of emergency at the end of each 12-month period, which the Knesset did in mid-1997. In addition, particular emergency legislation may be annulled by the Knesset, and ordinary emergency regulations expire after three months unless extended by law.

111. The new Basic Law (sect. 50) specifically provides that emergency regulations may not prevent persons from seeking redress therefrom in the courts, nor may they set retrospective punishments or allow injury to human dignity. In addition, no emergency regulations may be promulgated, nor may any powers, arrangements or measures be exercised thereunder, except to the extent required by the state of emergency. Although the Supreme Court has not yet had the opportunity to interpret the effect of these limiting principles on emergency legislation since the enactment of the new Basic Law, the clear intent of the Knesset was to circumscribe the powers of the executive branch to impair enjoyment of fundamental human rights in a state of emergency, and to give the courts the necessary tools to enforce such curbs on executive discretion.

112. In Israel there are three principal types of legislation (statutes or regulations) which have application during a state of emergency. The first type consists of regulations enacted pursuant to the enabling legislation (i.e., until recently, section 9 of the Law and Administration Ordinance, and, since 1996, section 49 of Basic Law: Government) during periods when public security, the security of the State or the maintenance of supplies and essential services are seriously threatened, typically in time of war. For example, during the Gulf War in 1991, a series of emergency regulations were promulgated dealing with the maintenance of civil defence, the preservation of vital telecommunications capacities, the prohibition of firing employees due to their absence from work during the war, altering the school schedule, and the like. See, e.g., Emergency (Special Situation Period in Civil Defence) Regulations, 5751-1991; Emergency (Wireless Telegraph) Regulations, 5751-1991; Emergency (Telecommunications) Regulations, 5751-1991; Emergency (Prohibition of Termination of Employment during Special Situation in Civil Defence) Regulations, 5751-1991; Telecommunications (Installation, Operation and Maintenance) (Amendment) Regulations, 5751-1991; Emergency (Educational Institutions during Special Situation Period in Civil Defence) Regulations, 5751-1991. These regulations generally remain in effect for a brief period.

113. The second type of emergency legislation includes statutes which extend the validity of particular emergency regulations for a set period of time, or until the officially declared state of emergency ceases to exist. The regulations extended by this second type of emergency legislation deal with matters in which the need to safeguard public security, the security of the State or maintenance of supplies and essential services is of an ongoing nature, for example, regarding security at schools, regulating travel between Israel and other countries with which Israel is in an official state of war; and supervision of sea-going vessels. See, e.g., Emergency (Guarding of Educational Institutions) Extension Law, 5734-1974; Emergency (Departure Abroad) Regulations Extension Ordinance, 5708-1948; Emergency (Supervision of Sea-going Vessels) Extension Law, [Consolidated Version], 5733-1973.

114. Finally, several laws have effect during an officially declared state of emergency, although they are enacted as a normal statute, and not pursuant to the above-mentioned enabling provisions. As a formal matter, then, these laws are not emergency legislation, properly so-called; nor, as a rule, do they create arrangements which impair the enjoyment of rights under this Covenant. See, e.g., Supervision of Goods and Services Law, 5718-1957.

115. Over the past 50 years, government ministers have used their authority to enact emergency regulations in a broad array of matters. Though a complete discussion of all emergency regulations enacted during this entire period would well exceed the scope of this report, the following examples may serve to indicate the nature and variety of such regulations:

(a) Regulations allowing for uninterrupted operation of specific types of institutions, professions and industries declared "essential", such as the courts, various civil service positions, government companies, doctors and other health professionals, social workers, flour mills, the national telecommunications company, the sole electric utility company, the petroleum and gas industries, educational personnel, etc.;

(b) Regulations providing for security protection in the schools;

(c) Regulations requiring the registration of certain manufacturing equipment and allowing for its employment by the State in times of national emergency;

(d) Regulations relating to the use of sea-going vessels;

(e) Regulations to redress the effects of fluctuations in foreign exchange rates;

(f) Regulations raising the maximum age of reserve military service;

(g) Regulations providing for lodging certain types of workers in hotels;

(h) Regulations for preventing fires in agricultural areas;

(i) Regulations, which remained in effect only for several days, requiring the national broadcast authority, whose employees were on strike at the time, to air campaign broadcasts from various political factions in the period prior to Knesset elections;

(j) Regulations allowing police authorities to post stake-outs on roofs of private houses;

(k) Regulations regarding the treatment of goods not redeemed from the offices of customs authorities;

(l) Regulations reducing the amount of water allotted for agricultural, industrial and domestic use.

116. Entrenchment of certain statutes against emergency legislation Many, but not all, Basic Laws contain a provision which makes them invulnerable to alteration, modification or suspension by emergency regulations.* As these entrenchment provisions are themselves generally not susceptible to change by emergency regulations, laws containing them are thus not susceptible to change by the executive branch. In other cases, such as in Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, duly enacted emergency legislation may deny or restrict rights so long as such denial or restriction is for a proper purpose, and for a period and to an extent that is no greater than necessary.

* For example, see section 44 of Basic Law: Knesset, section 25 of Basic Law: President of the State, section 53 of Basic Law: Government, section 22 of Basic Law: Judiciary.

117. Judicial review of ministerial discretion The scope of ministerial discretion in enacting emergency regulations, and in issuing orders pursuant to emergency legislation, admittedly has been quite broad. Any person injured by such orders or regulations may apply to the courts, and principally to the High Court of Justice, for relief against improper exercise of ministerial authority. Prior to the enactment of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, in 1992, and the entering into force of Basic Law: Government in June 1996, the extent of the Court's intervention in ministerial discretion under emergency legislation was generally rather limited, in view of the broad discretion granted by the general statutory enabling provision (sect. 9 (a) of the Law and Administration Ordinance), or by the specific statutory powers in cases of administrative detention and supervision of goods and services. It may be said, nevertheless, that the Court's jurisprudence in this regard developed over the years, culminating in a series of important decisions in which the Court nullified ministerial regulations or orders made under emergency powers. In Poraz v. the Government of the State of Israel, H.C.J. 2944/90, 44(3) P.D. 317, the High Court invalidated emergency regulations promulgated by the Minister for Construction and Housing, which bypassed existing statutory arrangements for building permits, in part on the ground that it was not necessary to employ emergency powers when it was possible to achieve the same purpose through the ordinary, if slower, legislative process.

118. Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, enacted in 1992, which constitutes a charter of basic human freedoms, significantly enlarged the scope of judicial review of emergency regulations, and of official actions taken thereunder. Section 12 of this law provides as follows:

"12. Emergency regulations shall not have the power to alter this Basic Law, to suspend temporarily its force or to make it subject to conditions; however, when a state of emergency exists in the State by virtue of a proclamation under section 9 of the Law and Administration Ordinance, 5708-1948, emergency regulations may be promulgated by virtue of the said provision which may deny or restrict rights under this Basic Law, provided that such denial or restriction shall be for a proper purpose and for a period and to an extent that is no greater than required."

Among the rights protected by the Basic Law which are relevant for the non-derogation provisions of article 4 (2) of the Covenant, one may note the right to protection of life, body and dignity (sects. 2 and 4 of the Basic Law); the right to protection of personal liberty (sect. 5); and the right to privacy (sect. 7).

119. Judicial review: administrative detention The Emergency Powers (Detention) Law, 5939-1979, gives the Minister of Defence and the Chief of General Headquarters of the Israel Defence Forces the authority to order the detention of a person if the Minister has reasonable grounds to presume that such detention is necessary for reasons of State security or public safety. The term of such detention, if ordered by the Minister of Defence, may be for a renewable period of up to six months; if ordered by the I.D.F. Chief of General Headquarters, it may be only for 48 hours, and may not be renewed. The statute ensures ongoing judicial review of the administrative detention order. First, the detainee must be brought before the President of a District Court, and the Court may approve the detention order, annul it or shorten the period of detention (sect. 4 (a) of the above Law). If the detainee is not brought before the Court within 48 hours, then he must be released. In addition, the Law requires a reconsideration of the detention order by the Court at least every three months; once again, if such a hearing is not held within the three-month period, then the detainee must be released, unless there is another lawful ground for his detention. All decisions of the President of the District Court are appealable to a single judge of the Supreme Court. Under section 4 (c) of the Law, the President of the District Court "shall annul the detention order if it is shown that the reasons for issuing the order were not proper reasons of State security or public safety, or if it was issued in bad faith or was based on improper considerations". The Court hears appeals of administrative detention orders in closed-door session, and is empowered not to disclose to the detainee or his attorney evidence if the court is convinced that disclosure is likely to compromise State security or public safety.

120. Administrative detention orders are frequently challenged in the courts. In some cases, the courts have nullified the orders, either due to technical flaws or when the purpose of the detention is found not to be strictly related to requirements of national or public security (see, e.g., A.D.A 1/82, Kawasme v. Minister of Defence, 36(1) P.D. 666, in which the detention order was voided when its actual purpose was to detain the appellant until the end of legal proceedings). The courts have interpreted their authority under section 4 (c) of the Detentions Law to include a thorough examination of the validity of the purpose for the detention, the propriety of the Defence Minister's considerations, and the degree of necessity for such a limitation on personal freedom (A.D.A. 2/86, Anonymous v. Minister of Defence, 41(2) P.D. 508).

121. Since the early years of Israel's statehood, administrative detention has been employed against Jews and Arabs who, according to evidence submitted by the Minister of Defence, are active members of organizations which aim to undermine Israel's existence or the safety of its citizens through terror operations and by other means. In 1994, following the murder of 29 Muslim worshippers at the Patriarch's Tomb in Hebron, and following the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin in November 1995, tens of persons known or alleged to be active in incitement against the Arab population or the Government were placed in administrative detention, or had restrictions on their freedom of movement imposed on them under the Defence (Emergency) Regulations. The cases involving restriction orders are discussed under article 12 below.

122. Given the severity of the threat to human life posed by terror attacks, and of other actions aimed at undermining Israel's very existence, as well as the exceeding difficulty in preventing such acts, the policy of the State of Israel has been that its use of administrative detention, when efficient criminal prosecution or other measures are not possible, is consistent with its obligations under article 4 of the Covenant, in light of the availability of substantive judicial review available under the restraining provisions of section 4 (c) of the Emergency Powers (Detentions) Law and section 12 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty. Israel's employment of administrative detention is not done in a manner that amounts to discrimination solely on the basis of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin. The de facto discrepancy between the numbers of administrative detainees from different ethnic groups clearly derives from the inter-ethnic nature of the violent conflict that has attended Israel's entire life as a State. So long as the actual purpose of administrative detention orders, based on evidence reviewed by the President of the District Court, is to protect national security or public safety, then the de facto discrepancy in the numbers of detainees, does not, in itself, entail impermissible discrimination.

123. Limitations on emergency powers. The larger question surrounding the discussion of Israel's emergency legislation is whether, and to what extent, the formal state of emergency may be ended or modified. Emergency legislation was initially intended to enable maintenance of crucial services and public order when a state of war or violent conflict might prevent or seriously impair the normal operation of governmental institutions and services; indeed, as mentioned above, section 9 of the Law and Administration Ordinance was enacted in precisely such circumstances. Israel's history, however, has been rather anomalous in this regard: on the one hand, the State and its citizens have been subjected without cease to a grimly real existential threat, to an ongoing state of war with some of its neighbours whose policies still aim at Israel's destabilization or destruction, to campaigns of political violence which continue to exact a dreadful toll, and to full-scale armed conflict six times in nearly 50 years. On the other hand, aside from those periods of all-out war, Israel's civil and governmental institutions generally function uninterruptedly in normal fashion in the midst of the continuing conflict. As a matter of political reality, Israel's need for a formal state of emergency will abate when it succeeds in concluding and implementing formal peace arrangements in the region.

Article 5 - Non-derogable nature of fundamental rights

124. As mentioned above under article 2, the Covenant has not been made a part of internal Israeli law by Knesset legislation. Under Israeli doctrine regarding the enforceability of conventional international law, as articulated in decisions of the Supreme Court (see, e.g., C.A. 25/55, Custodian of Absentee Property v. Samra et al., 10 P.D. 1825, 1829; H.C.J. 606/78, Ayub v. Minister of Defence, 33(2) P.D. 113), the courts may consider and interpret the provisions of international human rights covenants when a claim is made that internal law is in violation of Israel's obligations under such covenants, but the concrete disposition of rights in any particular case is based on principles contained in Israel's internal law. As a formal matter, then, the provisions of the Covenant cannot be invoked in any judicial proceeding to justify any restriction of or derogation from existing rights granted under Israel's internal law. In several instances, the Supreme Court has looked to international human rights covenants, including the present Covenant, as a potential indicator of customary international law, which is considered part of Israel's internal law. See, e.g., Cr.A. 174/54, Stampfer v. Attorney-General, 10 P.D. 5, 15. But in no instance has the Court determined that the custom reflected in international human rights instruments justifies limitation of existing rights.

125. During the course of Israel's life as a State, the courts have built an edifice of human rights founded on the fundamental principle of statutory interpretation under which human rights must be given their full weight when they come into conflict with other legitimate values or interests, and that only when the competing interest is at least of equal weight with the human right, and it is impossible to realize both of them, may the human right be impaired. (H.C.J. 73, 87/53, Kol Ha'am v. Minister of Interior, 7 P.D. 871; H.C.J. 680/88, Schnitzer v. Chief Military Censor, 42(4) P.D. 617). The principle of non-derogation from human rights was codified in the limitation clause (sect. 8) of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, which prohibits any restriction of the rights articulated therein except by a statute which befits the values upheld by the State of Israel, and is intended for a proper purpose, and such derogation must be only to an extent no greater than necessary. These firmly entrenched principles of narrow construction of any legislation or official act tending to impair human rights are binding on all official authorities. By their nature, they are antithetical to any derogation from existing rights based on the argument that the Covenant does not recognize such rights or recognizes them to a lesser extent.

Article 6 - Right to life

Measures to reduce the threat of war

126. The State of Israel has made diplomatic achievements of historic importance aimed at reducing the state of war and violent conflict with other States in the region and with its Palestinian Arab neighbours. The peace agreement signed with Egypt in 1979, the peace agreement with the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan signed in 1994, and the series of agreements with the PLO, including the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Governing Arrangements signed in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, and the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995; are the major landmarks in Israel's pursuit of comprehensive arrangements that will ultimately eliminate the threat of war in the region. These bilateral agreements, and the larger process of which they form a part, bear a crucial import for the fulfilment of the provisions of this article. Israel's support of United Nations peacekeeping forces in Lebanon, in the Golan Heights and in the Sinai Peninsula may also be noted in this regard.

Reduction of infant mortality, epidemics and malnutrition

127. Under the National Health Insurance Law, 5755-1995, all residents are granted basic health care by right, regardless of ability to pay. Health care is generally organized through several health funds. In addition, the Ministry of Health and municipal governments subsidize health care for infants at drop-in mother-and-child-clinics, called tipat halav, which provide basic care and monitoring of the infant's development. Recent statistics indicate that over 90 per cent of infants under one year of age, in all sectors of the population, receive a basic battery of immunizations. During the years 1993 to 1995, between 91 and 94 per cent of Jewish infants, and between 93 and 98 per cent of non-Jewish infants were immunized against diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus, measles and poliomyelitis.

128. Israel's infant mortality rate fell by almost half between 1983 and 1996, when the rate stood at 6.8 deaths for every 1,000 live births (5.5 deaths among Jewish newborns, 9.9 deaths among non-Jewish newborns). The precipitous decrease in infant mortality over the last quarter decade, and the causes for such deaths, are shown in the following tables:

Table 3: Infant mortality, 1989-1995

	Total	Jews	Non-Jews
1989	10.1	8.2	14.7
1990	9.9	7.9	14.9
1991	9.2	7.2	14.2
1992	9.4	7.5	14.3
1993	7.8	5.7	12.8
1994	7.5	5.7	11.5
1995	6.8	5.6	9.6

Table 4: Average infant mortality, 1970-1995

Period	Number of infant deaths per 1,000 live births
1970-1974	21.9
1980-1984	14.4
1985-1989	10.9
1990-1994	8.8
1991-1995	8.1

Table 5: Infant mortality (rate per 1,000 live births) by religion and age of neonate at death, 1990-1994

	Total		Early neonatal mortality 0-6 days		Late neonatal mortality 7-27 days		Post-neonatal mortality 28-365 days
	Rate	Per cent	Rate	Per cent	Rate	Per cent	Rate	Per cent
Total	8.8	100	4.1	46.6	1.4	15.9	3.2	36.4
Jews	6.8	100	3.6	52.9	1.2	17.6	2.0	29.4
Non-Jews	13.5	100	5.3	39.2	1.9	14.1	6.3	46.7

129. Most cases of infant mortality occur within the first week of life. As the table above indicates, despite the dramatic drop in infant mortality in both the Arab and the Jewish sectors of the population, there remains a significant gap between the infant mortality rates in the Arab and Jewish sectors. Statistical analysis completed in 1992 regarding infant mortality rates in municipalities around the country found that the nine cities with the highest infant mortality rates (ranging from 16.8 to 24.6 per cent) were localities in which the majority of the population is Arab. A breakdown of infant deaths according to recorded causes generally parallels the substantial decline in overall infant mortality and indicates a lingering discrepancy in the frequency of certain particular causes between the Jewish and non-Jewish populations. As may be discerned from the following table, the frequency of non-Jewish infant deaths due to intestinal infectious diseases and pneumonia declined most dramatically over the 25-year period between 1970 and 1995, from a level several times higher than that among the Jewish population to essentially the same level. During the same period, the rate of infant deaths caused by congenital abnormalities, while decreasing 35 per cent in the non-Jewish population, remained substantially higher than that in the Jewish population, which declined 61 per cent over the same period.

Table 6: Infant deaths, by population group and cause

Cause of death	1970-1974	1980-1984	1985-1989	1990-1994
Jews
Total	18.6	11.8	8.8	6.8
Intestinal infectious diseases	0.6	0	0
All other infectious and parasitic diseases	0.4	0.2	0.1	0.1
Pneumonia	1.2	0.3	0.2	0.1
Congenital anomalies	4.4	2.8	2.3	1.7
Other causes of perinatal mortality	9.9	5.8	4.4	3.6
External causes	0.3	0.2	0.4	0.2
All other and unspecified causes	1.8	2.4	1.6	1.2
Arabs and others
Total	32.1	22.6	16.8	13.5
Intestinal infectious diseases	4.8	0.2	0.3	0.1
All other infectious and parasitic diseases	1	0.9	0.5	0.3
Pneumonia	4.4	1.8	0.6	0.2
Congenital anomalies	6.5	4.9	5.4	4.2
Other causes of perinatal mortality	10	7.3	5.3	4.3
External causes	0.7	0.6	0.8	0.5
All other and unspecified causes	4.7	6.8	4	3.8

Source: CSB, SAI 1996.

130. The mortality rate of Jewish female newborns and infants during the first year of life has been consistently lower than that of their Jewish male counterparts. In the non-Jewish sector, however, the average mortality rate of female infants passed that of male infants during the years 1989-1993, and has remained consistently higher than the mortality rate of non-Jewish male infants between their second and twelfth month of life. To combat infant mortality, the Ministry of Health undertakes widespread information campaigns, through its Public Health Services, to inform the population of risk factors for congenital defects, such as marriage between close relatives. In addition, the National Insurance Institute provides benefits to every woman who gives birth in a hospital, where the risk of perinatal mortality is lower. Israel's labour laws allow a pregnant woman to be absent from work for prenatal care, including for high-risk pregnancies, and nursing mothers are allowed to leave their workplace during the workday in order to feed their newborns, as discussed under article 24.

131. On the following pages is the table presenting main indicators of physical and mental health indicators for the Israeli population between 1980 and 1995, including live births, infant mortality, new cases of common diseases, hospital discharges, and other indicators.

Environmental pollution

132. Water pollution. Because water is scarce in Israel, considerable efforts are made to prevent water pollution, and effluents are recycled for secondary use, primarily in the agricultural sector. Standards of effluent quality are strictly monitored to prevent damage to public health and to crops. Water for domestic use is inspected and tested for bacteria and unwanted chemicals in compliance with regularly updated national standards and the recommendations of the World Health Organization. In 1993 and 1994, only 4 per cent of all test results indicated a possibility of contamination. Most households dispose of sewage through a central sewage system; some smaller settlements use septic tanks and cesspools, but they are gradually being linked to the central sewage system.

133. Air pollution. The main sources of air pollution in Israel are from energy production, transport and industrial manufacture. A new programme for the control of air quality was drawn up in 1994, to prevent air pollution through the integration of physical planning, monitoring, intermittent control systems, legislation and enforcement, reduction of pollution sources and the reduction of pollutant automobile emissions.

134. Israel's energy economy is based on fossil fuels, mainly oil and coal. Data on the amount of pollutants emitted into the atmosphere from fuel combustion show significant declines in levels of sulphur oxides and lead, increased emissions of carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxides and hydrocarbons, and no significant change in concentrations of suspended particulate matter.

Table 7. Selected HFA indicators for Israel

Indicator title	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
1. Demographic and socioeconomic
Mid-year population, total	3,879,000	3,949,700	4,026,700	4,076,200	4,159,100	4,232,900	4,298,800	4,368,900	4,441,600	4,518,200	4,660,100	4,946,200	5,123,500	5,261,400	5,399,300	5,539,700
Mid-year population, male	1,938,300	1,973,000	2,010,800	2,011,600	2,075,700	2,112,300	2,144,600	2,179,000	2,215,100	2,253,200	2,321,000	2,458,300	2,543,000	2,609,400	2,675,800
Mid-year population, female	1,940,700	1,976,700	2,015,900	2,026,000	2,083,400	2,120,600	2,154,200	2,189,900	2,226,500	2,265,000	2,339,100	2,487,900	2,580,500	2,652,000	2,723,500
Live birth, total	93,484	93,308	96,695	98,724	98,478	99,376	99,341	99,022	100,454	100,757	103,349	105,725	110,062	112,330	114,543	117,182
Live birth, male	48,144	47,204	49,366	50,838	50,914	50,911	50,936	50,559	51,603	51,638	53,013	54,141	56,603	57,775	58,855	60,155
Live birth, female	45,340	46,104	47,129	47,886	47,564	48,465	48,405	48,463	48,851	49,119	50,336	51,584	53,459	55,555	55,688	57,027
Total fertility rate	3.14	3.06	3.12	3.14	3.13	3.12	3.09	3.05	3.06	2.90	2.80	2.80	2.70	2.80	2.90
% Unemployed persons, total	5	5	5	5	6	7	7	6	6	9	10	11	11	10	8	6
Annual rate of inflation	133	102	132	191	445	185	20	16	16	21	18	18	9	11	15	8
GNP, US$ per capita	5,423	5,746	5,968	6,526	5,977	5,474	6,677	7,881	9,660	9,633	10,958	11,766	12,589	12,346	13,580	15,406
GDP, US$ per capita	5,615	5,887	6,151	6,729	6,240	5,699	6,922	8,140	9,911	9,887	11,223	11,987	12,822	12,522	13,752	15,660
GDP, PPP$ per capita	6,922	7,756	8,269	8,813	9,221	9,807	9,947	10,728	11,339	11,794	12,647	13,288	13,942	14,346	15,205	16,273
2. Health status
Number dead born fetuses, 1000 + grams	472	504	482	506	469	459	423	457	453	418	343	396	409
Number of deaths, 0 - 6 days, 1000 + grams		385	328	380	370	321	325	317	326	280	293	258	242	204	208	193
Number of livebirths, 1000 + grams		91,205	94,224	96,765	96,157	97,248	97,637	97,801	99,119	99,406	101,283	104,182	107,132	109,149	111,391	113,993
Number of deaths, 0 - 6 days, 500 + grams		629	550	608	575	551	525	522	469	461	460	414	408	339	365	331
Number of deadborn fetuses, 500 + grams	455	547	529	539	509	524	478	517	515	469	381	448	458
New cases, tuberculosis	249	227	232	222	257	368	239	184	226	160	234	505	345	419	343	392
New cases, hepatitis - total	3,924	4,525	3,146	3,898	4,965	4,558	3,208	2,058	2,813	2,452	2,650	1,751	1,353	3,547	3,891	2,308
New cases, hepatitis - A													1,037	3,041	3,483	2,165
New cases, hepatitis - B													139	138	132	69
New cases, syphilis					122	160	54	32	41	45				156	118
New cases, gonococcal infections					644	674	424	127	135	146	0	0	0	0	0	0

Indicator title	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
New cases, pertussis	19	25	62	78	7	24	47	96	7	260	189	35	99	138	71	59
Number of new cases, measles	215	228	7,864	129	137	3,005	1,951	438	178	29	212	991	66	141	1,565	28
Number of new cases, malaria							36	94	268	251	183	67	213	58	26	45
Number of new cases, diphtheria	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Number of new cases, tetanus	2	3	3	2	2	3	1	1	3	1	0	5	0	2	1	1
Number of new cases, acute poliomyelitis	11	8	5	4	1	2	0	2	16	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Number of new cases, congenital rubella							0	2				0	6	2	1	0
Number of new cases, neonatal	0	1	2	1	0	0	0	1	2	1	0	0	0	0	0	0
Number of new cases, rubella	881	451	602	2,302	7,189	556	284	4,220	1,718	354	99	437	2,145	104	62	46
Number of new cases, mumps	3,041	5,956	5,092	3,904	6,384	2,113	1,052	2,579	6,999	891	364	349	676	895	891	117
Estimated cumulative cases, HIV seropositive															2,000	2,000
New cases, clinically diagnosed AIDS		0	2	8	5	10	25	19	24	34	45	37	39	55	32	53
Hospital discharges: infectious and parasitic diseases								22,798							30,245
Hospital discharges: all cancers								30,632							54,374
Number of new cases of cancer, all sites, total	8,866	8,942	8,980	8,663	9,785	9,930	10,106	10,088	10,165	10,987	12,253	13,109	13,354	14,072
Number of new cases of cancer, all sites, male	4,400	4,409	4,393	4,273	4,794	4,883	4,961	4,992	4,878	5,283	5,820	6,117	6,389	6,694
Number of new cases of cancer, all sites, female	4,466	4,533	4,587	4,390	4,991	5,047	5,145	5,096	5,278	5,704	6,433	6,992	6,965	7,378
Number of cases, malignant neoplasms, total

Cont.

135. In 1994, 63 air quality monitoring stations were operating in Israel. All of these stations monitor sulphur dioxide, most monitor nitrogen oxides and particulate matter, and a few monitor ozone and/or carbon monoxide. Airborne chemicals at hazardous waste disposal sites are monitored. The limited information available indicates that sulphur dioxide levels are mostly below regulation limits, nitrogen dioxide is significantly above the limit in some areas, and ozone levels in most places exceed recommended limits.

136. Recognizing that its current monitoring network needs to be augmented to formulate a national air quality management programme, Israel has recently prepared a preliminary programme for a multi-million-dollar national air monitoring system with a central data storage and display centre. To implement this national programme, some 50 monitoring stations are planned, in addition to the 63 currently in operation. The network is to be constructed over a three-year period.

Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty

137. The right to life is enshrined in sections 2 and 4 of Basic Law: Human Liberty and Dignity, which provide:

"...

"2. There shall be no violation of the life, body or dignity of any person.

"...

"4. All persons are entitled to protection of their life, body and dignity."

Under the limitation clause of the Basic Law (sect. 8), the above rights cannot be impaired except by a statute which is intended for a worthy purpose, which befits the values of the State of Israel, and which limits the right to an extent no more than required.

Legislation directly or indirectly prohibiting deprivation of life

138. The Penal Law, 5737-1977, contains several specific sections prohibiting actions which result or are intended to result in loss of life, principally the following:

(a) Manslaughter (sect. 298) - maximum penalty 20 years' imprisonment;

(b) Murder (sect. 300) - life imprisonment;

(c) Procuring or abetting suicide (sect. 302) - maximum 20 years' imprisonment;

(d) Infanticide (sect. 303) - maximum 5 years' imprisonment;

(e) Causing death by negligence (sect. 304) - maximum three years' imprisonment;

- (f) Attempted murder (sect. 305) - maximum 20 years' imprisonment;
- (g) Written threat to murder (sect. 307) - maximum 7 years' imprisonment;
- (h) Carrying, selling, importing or exporting firearms without a licence (sect. 144) - maximum 3 or 15 years' imprisonment;
- (i) Carrying a knife outside of one's home without showing a lawful purpose (sect. 186) - maximum 5 years' imprisonment;
- (j) Selling, manufacturing or importing a knife for a purpose other than use in a profession, labour, business, home or other lawful use (sect. 185) - maximum 7 years' imprisonment;
- (k) Battery with aggravated intent (including causing an explosion or sending an explosive to a person (sect. 329) - maximum 20 years' imprisonment;
- (l) Placing an explosive with intent to cause injury (sect. 330) - maximum 14 years' imprisonment;
- (m) Reckless endangerment of a person's life on a transportation route (sect. 332) - maximum 20 years' imprisonment;
- (n) Endangerment of life through use of a poisonous substance (sect. 336) - maximum 14 years' imprisonment;
- (o) Reckless and negligent acts calculated to cause risk to human life (sect. 338) - maximum 3 years' imprisonment.

For certain offences, such as rape and battery, the maximum punishment is doubled if a firearm or other weapon is used during its commission. In general, solicitation, conspiracy, and complicity in the commission of any of the above offences are subject to a lesser punishment, usually half of the maximum punishment in the case of actual commission, except if the penalty for the offence is death or mandatory life imprisonment, in which case complicity in or attempt to solicit commission of the offence is punishable by 20 years' imprisonment; and if the penalty for the offence is life imprisonment, then the penalty for complicity or attempt to solicit is 10 years' imprisonment.

139. Under the Aviation (Offences and Punishment) Law, 5731-1971, a person who acts with intent to endanger human life on an aeroplane, or to cause injury to the person, to the aeroplane or any property on the aeroplane, is punishable by 20 years' imprisonment; if the act results in loss of life, the punishment is mandatory life imprisonment (sect. 18). The same penalties are imposed on a person who endangers safety at an airport in certain circumstances (sect. 18 A of the Law). Under this law, conspiracy, attempt, or solicitation to commit the above offences, or complicity in the commission thereof, bear the same punishment as if the offender actually committed the offence himself.

140. The Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945 define certain specific offences regarding illegal use or possession of firearms, use of explosives or inflammable objects with intent to kill or cause grievous bodily harm, and illegal possession of such explosives or inflammable objects (Regulations 58-59), which overlap similar provisions in the Penal Law. Finally, the Prevention of Terror Ordinance, 5708-1948, punishes activity, membership in or support of a terrorist organization, which is defined as "a group of persons which employs acts of violence which are likely to cause the death or injury of a person, or threats of such acts of violence."

Incidence of murder, attempted murder, manslaughter, and negligent homicide

141. The following table is a compilation of the incidence of reported cases of the four types of offence involving deprivation of life. It should be noted that the percentage of cases in which the suspect was apprehended is correct as of December 1995, except for the figures for 1996, which are updated to June 1996.

Table 8. Incidence of offences involving deprivation of life, 1991-1996 (first half)

Offence	Murder	Attempted murder	Manslaughter	Negligent homicide
1991
Reported cases	100	81	6	66
% apprehended	61%	81.5%	100%	89.4%
1992
Reported cases	91	112	19	53
% apprehended	73.6%	79.5%	94.7%	84.9%
1993
Reported cases	96	100	10	88
% apprehended	77.1%	84%	90%	79.5%
1994
Reported cases	114	122	11	72
% apprehended	75.4%	77.0%	63.6%	73.6%
1995
Reported cases	112	139	16	66
% apprehended	71.4%	48.2%	87.5%	84.8%
1996 (Jan.-May)
Reported cases	53	50	3	14
% apprehended	50.9%	48.0%	-	21.4%

Deprivation of life by law enforcement officials

142. Law enforcement officials in Israel, like nearly all public servants* are subject to the provisions of the criminal law, as well as to internal disciplinary regimes for unlawful actions. In addition to the general criminal prohibitions noted above, the Penal Law, 5737-1977, explicitly forbids a public servant from using force or violence, or ordering the use thereof, against a person in order to extract from that person or another person in whom he has an interest, a confession to a crime or information regarding that crime (277 (1)). Several parallel legal institutions function to investigate cases of deprivation of life by law enforcement officials, to impose liability and punish those found responsible, and to provide compensation for victims; as these institutions deal not only with deprivation of life, but with all forms of violence and mistreatment by public officials, they are discussed under article 7 as well as under this article.

Disciplinary and criminal proceedings

143. In any case in which the actions of law enforcement officials or security forces result in death, an internal investigation is conducted by the authority involved, regardless of any other external proceedings that may be initiated. If basis is found for disciplinary or criminal violations, then the case is referred to the appropriate authorities for investigation and trial, as described below and under article 7.

144. Disciplinary and criminal proceedings may also be initiated by complaints filed by citizens, typically victims of alleged mistreatment, members of their families or their legal representatives. Disciplinary investigations and trials are regulated by law in the case of the Israel Police, the Prisons Service and the Israel Defence Forces. Criminal matters relating to alleged offences by soldiers in the Israel Defence Forces are investigated and tried under the Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, including for the offences of murder and manslaughter. Until 1992, criminal investigations against public servants in the Israel Police and the General Security Service were carried out by internal investigations departments. To remedy the problems inherent in such an arrangement, an external body, the Department for Investigation of Police Misconduct (DIPM), was set up within the Ministry of Justice. This department has authority over investigations of suspected criminal activity by personnel in the Israel Police (including the Border Police) and the General Security Service, the liability for which bears a penalty of more than one year's imprisonment. To the extent that the Department's investigation reveals evidence of criminal liability, the Department transfers the case to a representative of the District Attorney or State Attorney's Office with a recommendation to file a criminal indictment.

* The only exceptions are judges, who are exempt from criminal and civil liability for matters relating to the performance of their office during the term of their tenure, and members of the Knesset, who are immune from legal proceedings in respect of acts relating to the performance of their mandate and may not be prosecuted for other acts, unless the Knesset votes to relieve them of their immunity in respect of the charge in question (Knesset Members (Immunity, Rights and Duties) Law, 5711-1951).

From the inception of the DIPM in 1992 until mid-1997, 10 criminal indictments were filed against police officers in cases involving causing of death while on duty. The overall statistics are discussed under article 7 below.

145. In the event that the Department for Investigation of Police Personnel closes a criminal investigation without indictment, a person aggrieved by the decision may appeal to the State Attorney's Office. Up until October 1995, out of 120 such appeals, one was accepted.

146. Under Israeli law, public servants may be exempt from criminal liability in certain circumstances. For instance, a police officer is exempt from criminal (and civil) liability in connection with carrying out an arrest which, in the opinion of the presiding court, was carried out in good faith and for the sake of public order (sect. 44 of the Criminal Procedure (Arrest and Search) Ordinance [New Version], 5729-1969). Similarly, a police officer may be exempt from criminal liability, including for causing death, for actions taken through reasonable use of force under orders from a senior commanding officer in dispersing a riotous disturbance by a group of people which threatens public safety or causes public terror, if the commanding officer has duly notified the group of his presence and ordered them to disperse and they continue in their reckless disturbance (sects. 153-154 of the Penal Law, 5737-1977). The use of force by the police officer in such circumstances is regulated, however, by the rules for the use of firearms, discussed in paragraph 148 below.

147. In addition, several affirmative defences to criminal liability may be claimed by police officers or members of the security forces on trial. Under section 6 of the Police Ordinance [New Version], 5731-1971, a police officer may be relieved of criminal liability if he acted properly under an order issued by a court or by the Chief Execution Officer, who presides over proceedings for execution of judgements. Generally, claims of self-defence (sect. 34 (10) of the Penal Law) or "justification" emanating from a legal obligation or authorization to perform the act involved (sect. 34 (13) of the Penal Law) are not infrequently invoked in cases involving the use of force which results in death.

Open-fire regulations

148. The rules of engagement applicable to the Israel Police are contained in various regulations and standing orders. If a police person acts in violation of these regulations, he or she may be subject to a disciplinary trial pursuant to the Police Ordinance; if as a result of the violation of the open-fire regulations, a criminal offence is committed, including manslaughter, murder or negligent homicide, the police officer may be tried in normal criminal proceedings.

149. The rules of engagement for the Israel Police authorize use of firearms in three sets of circumstances: in carrying out an arrest of a person suspected of a severe felony; in dispersion of reckless disturbances or riots; and as a means of protecting against imminent danger to human life or injury. The regulations specify that firearms are to be used cautiously, only as a last resort, and only in circumstances in which the danger emanating from the use of firearms does not bear a reasonable relation to the other danger which the police officer is trying to prevent. The police officer must assess the degree of necessity of the use of firearms at each stage of a particular event, and must refrain from using firearms immediately once the need to use them has ceased.

150. Use of firearms in carrying out an arrest. Under the police open-fire regulations, firearms may not be used in carrying out an arrest unless all of the following conditions have been met:

(a) The arrest relates to suspected commission of a felony, and either the felonious act or the perpetrator thereof significantly endangers the life or bodily integrity of a person;

(b) There is no other way to carry out the arrest;

(c) The use of firearms will not significantly endanger the lives or bodily integrity of passersby and innocent persons.

Once all of the above conditions have been met, the police officer must give prior warning of the intention to open fire. To the extent possible, such warning is to be given in two stages: first, by calling over a loudspeaker, if possible in the language understood by the suspect; then, if the police officer has grounds to believe that the suspect heard and understood the warning but did not stop, the officer may fire a warning shot in the air, taking adequate caution to prevent possible injury to persons or property. Police procedure No. 90.221.065, which further explains the open-fire regulations in operational terms, specifies the warnings to be given in Hebrew, Arabic and English. The police officer may be relieved of the duty to issue a warning when there is a serious, imminent danger to the life or bodily integrity of the officer or any other person, such as when the suspect is clearly identified as carrying firearms. If firearms are ultimately used, the police officer bears a further duty to use them with maximum caution, in a manner that will result in minimum injury to persons or property. Single shots may be fired, only at the legs of the suspect; it is forbidden to aim or shoot at the suspect's upper body.

151. Firing in the air to disperse rioters. In the case of a riot, which is defined as a group of people who have assembled to commit a crime, or for some other common purpose, and who behave in a manner that gravely violates public safety or order, firearms may not be used against people, but rather only to fire in the air. Firing in the air is prohibited unless the following conditions are met:

(a) A senior police officer orders the rioters to disperse, but they do not do so within a reasonable time from the giving of the order, and they continue severely to violate public order or safety,

(b) A warning is given regarding the impending use of force to disperse the riot, and less severe methods of force, such as water cannons or tear gas, have been used to no avail.

Firing in the air in such circumstances must, again, be done with maximum caution so as to prevent to the extent possible any injury to persons or property. The firing must be authorized by the commanding officer, and must be done in single shots. However, if, in the course of the riot, there arise lawful grounds to arrest a particular rioter, or circumstances that necessitate self-defence, then the police officer is authorized to open fire pursuant to the regulations applicable to such situations.

152. Use of firearms to prevent imminent danger to life Under the police open-fire regulations, firearms may be used in the event of a real danger of imminent injury to the life or bodily integrity of a police officer or of others, provided that there is no other way to prevent such injury. Use of firearms in such circumstances must not exceed what is reasonable for the purpose of preventing the imminent injury, and in such a manner that the damage that may result from the use of firearms does not outweigh that which the use thereof is intended to prevent. Police officers are required to fill out a report regarding every use of firearms, including accidental firings; in the latter case every police officer present during the accidental firing must fill out such a report. These regulations, which apply to the Israel Police and the Border Police, are taught to all police officers in training courses or sessions.

153. Israel Defence Forces. The open-fire regulations applicable to soldiers in the IDF are based on principles analogous to those incumbent upon the Israel Police and Border Guard. In general, the IDF open-fire regulations address two types of situations: arresting persons who are suspected of having committed a dangerous security-related offence, and defending against mortal danger. In the first class of case, the soldier may open fire only as a last resort, when all other means of apprehending and arresting the suspect have failed. Under the procedure for arresting a suspect, the soldier must first call out a warning; if that is to no avail, then he may fire a warning shot in the air in a manner that does not endanger any person or property; if the warning shot, too, does not suffice, then the soldier may direct fire, solely at the legs of the suspect. In the second class of case, when there is real, imminent danger to life, the soldier may open fire to injure the attacker, and him alone. Such self-defence is permitted if it conforms with the "necessity" defence as defined in the Penal Law. If the circumstances allow, the soldier must use his weapons in a graduated manner, according to the open-fire procedure for arresting a suspect described above. In both types of cases, it is forbidden to open fire if there is a danger of injuring innocent bystanders. In every case in which a person is injured, the soldiers must ensure medical treatment.

Investigation of Felonies and Causes of Death Law

154. Another significant instrument for investigating cases of arbitrary deprivation of life is the Criminal Procedure Amendment (Investigation of Felonies and Causes of Death) Law, 5718-1958. Under this law, a Magistrate's Court judge is empowered to undertake a thorough investigation of the reasons for a person's death when there are reasonable grounds to suspect that the death was not due to natural causes, or was caused by a criminal act, or the person died while detained, imprisoned, or hospitalized in a mental hospital or closed institution for developmentally disabled minors (sect. 19 of the Law). Application for such an investigation may be made by a relative of the deceased, as well as by the Attorney-General, a police captain or a doctor (ibid).

155. Once an application for an investigation is filed with the Magistrate's Court, all actions with regard to the corpse of the deceased are prohibited without permission from the investigating judge. When a person dies while in detention, imprisonment, hospitalization in a mental hospital or in a closed institution for retarded minors, the commander or director of the facility or institution has a duty to notify the police regarding the death. Breach of this duty is punishable by up to three years' imprisonment (sects. 22-23 of the Law). In the course of his or her investigation, the judge may summon and examine witnesses, order an autopsy or other examination of the corpse, and order the delay of burial or the removal of the body from the grave for the purpose of such an examination. The investigation continues until the judge determines that the reasons for death have been proved to his or her satisfaction, or, conversely, that the evidence does not prove a clear cause of death. In the latter case, the judge may suspend the investigation until further evidence is brought.

156. If the evidence brought before the investigating judge is sufficient to prove that a criminal offence was committed, he or she may order the District Attorney to issue an indictment for that offence (sect. 32 of the Law), without need for further investigation. Before ordering an indictment, the judge must allow the person suspected of committing the offence to raise claims and bring evidence in his defence. The proceedings in such investigations may be public or sequestered in whole or in part, at the discretion of the investigating judge. Similarly, publication of the proceedings or their results may be prohibited, in whole or in part, by the investigating judge (sect. 36), according to legal rules applying to publicity of court proceedings, which are discussed under article 14.

Compensation of victims

157. In cases of arbitrary deprivation of life, the estate or dependents of the deceased may seek compensation from the person who caused the death in the context of criminal or civil proceedings. If the act causing death constitutes a crime, and the perpetrator is convicted, the court which hears the criminal case may award compensation for injury or suffering up to a specified ceiling, without affecting the right to sue for civil damages (sect. 77 of the Penal Law, 5737-1977). In addition, a suit for compensation may be filed against the perpetrator or his principal for negligent causing of death under the Civil Wrongs Ordinance [New Version], with no ceiling on damages.

158. When the person allegedly responsible for causing death is a member of the law enforcement authorities, security forces, or other public servant, the estate or dependents of the deceased may sue both the perpetrator and the State for compensation (sect. 7 of the Civil Wrongs Ordinance, sect. 2 of the Civil Wrongs (Liability of the State) Law, 5712-1952). Compensation may be awarded for the full gamut of types of injury recognized by the law of torts in cases of negligent causing of death. However, the public servant and the State may be exempted from civil liability in certain circumstances, as follows:

(a) If the act in question was done within the scope of lawful authority, or in good-faith use of apparent legal authority (sect. 7 of the Civil Wrongs Ordinance, sect. 3 of the Civil Wrongs (Liability of the State) Law, 5712-1952);

(b) A public servant is not liable in tort for civil wrongs done by an agent that he appointed or by another public servant, except if he permitted or ratified the action explicitly;

(c) Similarly, the State or its authorities, like any other principal, are not civilly liable for an act of assault undertaken by a public servant, unless the authority explicitly allowed or ratified the assault (sect. 25 of the Civil Wrongs Ordinance);

(d) A police officer may claim a defence from civil liability for injury, including death, caused by reasonable use of force during dispersal of a riotous disturbance, provided that a series of earlier actions to disperse the disturbance are taken previously and the disturbance still threatens public order, as discussed above, and the open-fire regulations are not violated;

(e) A police officer may also claim a defence from civil liability if he acted properly pursuant to a court order or an order of the Chief Execution Officer (sect. 6 of the Police Ordinance [New Version], 5731-1971);

(f) The State is exempted from civil liability for injury emanating from an act of war taken by the Israel Defence Forces.

However, neither the State nor public servants are exempted from civil liability in cases of negligence.

159. Despite the above defences to civil liability, many suits for compensation are filed against public servants and the State for use of force which exceeds the scope of lawful authority, including suits for negligent homicide. In a substantial number of these cases, the State pays considerable compensation. At the time that this report was written, no official statistics were available on the overall number of such civil lawsuits and their outcomes.

160. Institutional reforms in law enforcement and educational programmes aimed at reducing the occurrence of violence and mistreatment by law enforcement authorities are discussed under article 7.

Death penalty

161. Although several provisions in Israel's criminal legislation allow for the imposition of the death penalty, as described below, the death penalty has been carried out only once since the establishment of the State, in the case of Adolph Eichmann. There are no persons who are currently appealing a death sentence. The most recent case was that of John Demjanjuk, who, after having been sentenced to death for war crimes, genocide and crimes against the Jewish people, was acquitted in 1993 on appeal to the Supreme Court due to a reasonable doubt as to whether he was indeed "Ivan the Terrible" from the Treblinka death camp.

162. Under Israeli legislation, the death penalty may be imposed in four instances. Section 1(a) of the Nazi and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law, 5710-1950, prescribes the death penalty for acts constituting crimes against the Jewish people committed during the period of the Nazi regime, and for crimes against humanity or war crimes committed during the Second World War. As is the case in other states that have enacted war crimes legislation in respect of acts committed during the Second World War, the above Law is based on the notion that the crimes that they prohibit constituted violations of the law of nations at the time they were committed.

163. In addition, pursuant to the United Nations Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, to which Israel is a party, the Knesset enacted the Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law, 5710-1950, sections 1 and 2 of which provide as follows:

"1. (a) In this Law, genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group (hereinafter referred to as group) as such:

"(1) killing members of the group;

"(2) causing serious bodily harm to members of the group;

"(3) inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction, in whole or in part;

"(4) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;

"(5) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group;

"(b) In subsection (a), child means a person under eighteen years of age.

"2. A person guilty of genocide shall be punishable with death; provided that if he committed the act constituting the offence under circumstances which, but for section 6 [which provides that certain defences normally available under the criminal law such as legal duty, necessity or compulsion do not apply to genocide], would exempt him from criminal responsibility or would be reason for pardoning the offence, and he tried to the best of his ability to mitigate the consequences of the act, he shall be liable to imprisonment of a term not less than ten years."

Persons found guilty of conspiracy or incitement to commit genocide, or of acting as an accomplice to genocide, are also subject to the death penalty by law.

164. Sections 97-99 of the Penal Law, as well as section 43 of the Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, prescribe the death penalty as the maximum punishment for offences constituting treason during wartime.

165. Finally, the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, allow for imposition of the death penalty for offences involving illegal use of firearms against persons, or use of explosives or inflammable objects with intent to kill or to cause grievous bodily harm (Regulation 58). In practice, however, the State Attorney's Office does not request the death penalty, even for the most severe offences.

166. The Youth (Judgment, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, 5731-1971, prohibits imposition of the death penalty on any person who was a minor at the time the offence was committed (sect. 25 (b)). There is no legislation specifically prohibiting the imposition of the death penalty on pregnant women. This issue has never arisen as a practical matter, as no woman has been sentenced to death since the establishment of the State of Israel.

167. In every case in which a death penalty may be imposed, the Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version], 5742-1982, requires an automatic appeal to the Supreme Court, even if the defendant has not appealed the sentence or conviction (sect. 202). As with any other convicted person, a person sentenced to death has the right to petition the President of the State for pardon, clemency, or commutation of sentence.

Article 7 - Freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

168. Israel is a party to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Israel's initial report under that convention was submitted in January 1994 (CAT/C/16/Add.4); Israel submitted a special report to the Committee against Torture (CAT/C/33/Add.2/Rev.1) in 1997. For a consideration of these two reports by the Committee, reference is made to documents CAT/C/SR.183 and 184 and Official Records of the General Assembly, Forty-ninth Session, Supplement No. 44 (A/49/46), paras. 159-171 (initial report); CAT/C/SR.295 and CAT/C/SR.295/Add.1 (special report). In addition, the obligations under this article relating to the prohibition of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are related to the discussion under several other articles, particularly articles 6 and 8 and paragraph 1 of article 10.

Legislative provisions bearing on the prohibition of torture and of cruel, unusual or degrading punishment

169. Current Israeli legislation does not contain an explicit definition of "torture" as such. Instead, a variety of statutory provisions cover all acts of torture and of cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment, as discussed below. As of the submission of this report, three legislative bills, relating to the prohibition of torture, the invalidation of confessions extracted through torture, and the regulation of the activities of the General Security Service (GSS) are in various stages of the legislative process.

170. Section 2 of Basic Law: Human Liberty and Dignity, which prohibits any "violation of the life, body or dignity of any person as such", and section 4 of the Basic Law, which grants all persons the right to protection against such violations, have constitutional status in Israel's legislative framework. The Supreme Court arguably has the power to void any legislation enacted after the entering into force of the Basic Law which violates the above provisions; previously enacted laws may not be deemed void by the Court for this reason, but they will be interpreted in accordance with the fundamental principles of the sanctity of life, integrity of the body and primacy of human dignity, broadly construed. These provisions in the Basic Law, then, may be deemed to constitute a general prohibition of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including torture, and are binding both on public and private entities.

171. Several provisions in the Penal Law, 5737-1977, prohibit actions that amount to cruel and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Section 277 forbids oppression by a public servant, as follows:

"A public servant who does one of the following is liable to imprisonment for three years:

"(1) uses or directs the use of force or violence against a person for the purpose of extorting from him or from anyone in whom he is interested a confession of an offence or information relating to an offence;

"(2) threatens any person, or directs any person to be threatened, with injury to his person or property or to the person or property of anyone in whom he is interested for the purpose of extorting from him a confession of an offence or any information relating to an offence."

Section 329 of the Penal Law prohibits causing harm with aggravating intent, as follows:

"A person who does one of the following with intent to disable, disfigure or do grievous harm to another or to resist or prevent the lawful arrest or detention of himself or another is liable to imprisonment for 20 years:

"(1) unlawfully wounds or does grievous harm to a person;

"(2) unlawfully attempts to strike a person with a projectile, knife or other dangerous or offensive weapon;

"(3) unlawfully causes an explosive substance to explode;

"(4) sends or delivers an explosive substance or other dangerous or noxious thing to a person or causes a person to receive any such substance or thing;

"(5) puts a destructive or explosive substance or a corrosive fluid in any place;

"(6) throws any substance or fluid mentioned in paragraph (5) at a person or otherwise applies it to his body."

Section 333 of the Law makes unlawful causing of grievous harm to another person punishable by seven years' imprisonment. Sections 368 B and 368 C prohibit assault or abuse of minors and invalids. Sections 378-382 proscribe assault, making it punishable by between two and six years' imprisonment. "Assault" is defined as directly or indirectly striking, touching, pushing or otherwise applying force to the person of another without his consent or with his consent obtained by fraud; it specifically includes "the application of heat, light, electricity, gas, odour or any other thing or substance if applied in such a degree as to cause injury or discomfort" (sect. 378). In addition, section 427 of the Law prohibits blackmail with use of force, including the administration of drugs or intoxicating liquors. All of the above provisions are applicable to law enforcement officials and members of the security forces.

172. In addition, section 65 of the Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, provides that a "soldier who strikes or otherwise maltreats a person committed to his custody or a soldier inferior to him in rank, or who abuses them in another manner, is liable to imprisonment for a term of three years."

173. Attempt, assistance, encouragement and incitement The general provisions of the Penal Law also provide for criminal liability of persons who attempt or assist or encourage the commission of any of the offences noted above, a matter of particular importance in cases of physical or psychological abuse. The following are the relevant provisions of Chapter Five of the Penal Law, entitled "Derivative Offences":*

"Title One: Attempt

"What constitutes an attempt

"25. A person attempts to commit an offence, if he - with intent to commit it - commits an act that does not only constitute preparation, provided the offence was not completed.

"Commission of offence is impossible

"26. For purposes of attempt, it shall be immaterial that the commission of the offence was impossible, because of circumstances of which the person who made the attempt was not aware or in respect of which he was mistaken.

* These provisions were enacted in 1994 as an amendment to the Penal Law. As no official translation of the amendment is yet available, the following is an unofficial translation.

"Special penalty for attempt

"27. If a provision sets a mandatory penalty or a minimum penalty for an offence, then it shall not apply to an attempt to commit that offence.

"Exemption for remorse

"28. If a person attempted to commit an offence, he shall not bear criminal liability therefor, if he proved that, of his own free will and out of contrition - he stopped its commission or substantively contributed to the prevention of results on which the completion of the offence depends; however, the aforesaid shall not derogate from his criminal liability for another completed offence connected to the same act.

"Title Two: Parties to an Offence

"Perpetrator

"29. (a) 'Perpetrator of an offence' includes a person who committed the offence jointly or who committed through another.

"(b) Participants in the commission of an offence, who perform acts for its commission, are joint perpetrators, and it is immaterial whether all acts were performed jointly or some were performed by one person and some by another.

"(c) A perpetrator of an offence through another is a person who contributed to the commission of the act by others who acted as his instrument, the other person being in one of the following situations, within their meaning in this Law:

"(1) he is a minor or mentally incompetent;

"(2) he lacks control;

"(3) he has no criminal intent;

"(4) he misunderstands the circumstances;

"(5) he is under duress or has a justification.

"(d) for the purposes of subsection (c), if the offence is conditional on a certain perpetrator, then the person in question shall be deemed to have committed that offence even if the condition is only met by the other person.

"Incitement

"30. If a person causes another to commit an offence by means of persuasion, encouragement, demand, cajolery or by means of anything else that constitutes the application of pressure, then he incites an offence.

"Accessory

"31. If a person does anything, before an offence or during its commission, to make its commission possible, to support or protect it, or to prevent the perpetrator from being taken or the offence or its spoils from being discovered, or if he contributes in any other way to the creation of conditions for the commission of the offence, then he is an accessory.

"Penalty of accessory

"32. The penalty for being an accessory to the commission of an offence shall be half the penalty determined by legislation for the commission of that offence; however, if the penalty set is:

"(1) the death penalty or mandatory life imprisonment, then his penalty shall be 20 years' imprisonment;

"(2) life imprisonment, then his penalty shall be 10 years' imprisonment;

"(3) a minimum penalty, then his penalty shall not be less than half the minimum penalty;

"(4) any mandatory penalty, then it shall be the maximum penalty and half thereof shall be the minimum penalty.

"Attempted incitement

"33. The penalty for attempting to incite another to commit an offence shall be half the penalty for the commission of the offence itself; however, if the penalty set is:

"(1) the death penalty or mandatory life imprisonment, then his penalty shall be 20 years' imprisonment;

"(2) life imprisonment, then his penalty shall be 10 years' imprisonment;

"(3) a minimum penalty, then his penalty shall not be less than half the minimum penalty;

"(4) any mandatory penalty, then it shall be the maximum penalty and half thereof shall be the minimum penalty.

"Exemption for remorse

"34. (a) If a person was an accessory or if he incited another to commit an offence, he shall not bear criminal liability for being an accessory or for incitement, if he prevented the commission of the offence or its completion, or if he informed the authorities of the offence in time, in order to prevent its commission or its completion, or if - to that end - he acted to the best of his ability in some other manner; however, the aforesaid shall not derogate from his criminal liability for another completed offence connected to the same act.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, 'authorities' means the Israel Police or any other body lawfully empowered to prevent the commission or completion of an offence.

"Other or additional offence

"34A. (a) If, while committing an offence, a perpetrator also committed another or an additional offence, and if, under the circumstances, an ordinary person could have been aware of the possibility that it would be committed, then:

"(1) the other joint perpetrators shall also bear liability for it; however, if the other or additional offence was committed intentionally, then the other joint perpetrators shall bear liability for it only as an offence of indifference;

"(2) a person who incited or was an accessory to it shall also bear liability, as an offence of negligence, if such an offence exists based on the same facts;

"(b) If the court found an accused guilty under subsection (a) (1) for an offence for which there is a mandatory penalty, then it may impose a lighter penalty on him.

174. Mention may also be made of a law enacted shortly after Israel's independence, which prohibited punishment by lashing and repealed all legislation from the British Mandatory period which provided for such punishment (Repeal of Lashing Law, 5710-1950).

Administrative guidelines for GSS interrogations

175. The State of Israel maintains that the basic human rights of all persons under its jurisdiction must never be violated, regardless of the crimes that the individual may have committed. Israel recognizes, however, its responsibility to protect the lives of all its citizens and residents from harm at the hands of terrorist organizations. To prevent terrorism effectively while ensuring that the basic human rights of even the most dangerous of criminals are protected, the Israeli authorities have adopted strict rules for the handling of interrogations. These guidelines are designed to enable investigators to obtain crucial information on terrorist activities from suspects who, for obvious reasons, would not volunteer such information, while at the same time ensuring that the suspects are not maltreated.

The Landau Commission

176. The basic guidelines on interrogation were laid down in 1987 by the Landau Commission of Inquiry. The Commission, headed by former Supreme Court President Justice Moshe Landau, was appointed following a decision by the Government to examine the General Security Service's methods of interrogation of terrorist suspects. In preparing its recommendations, the Landau Commission examined international human rights law standards, existing Israeli legislation prohibiting torture and maltreatment, and the guidelines of other democracies confronted with the threat of terrorism.

177. The Landau Commission set out to define "with as much precision as possible the boundaries of what is permitted to the interrogator and, mainly, what he is prohibited from doing." The Commission determined that in dealing with dangerous terrorists who are shown to represent a grave threat to the State of Israel and its inhabitants, the use of a moderate degree of pressure, including physical pressure, to obtain information crucial for the protection of life is unavoidable in certain circumstances. Such circumstances include situations in which the information sought from a detainee believed to be personally involved in serious terrorist activities can prevent imminent murder, or where the detainee possesses vital information regarding the activities of a terrorist organization which could not be uncovered by any other means (for example, the location of arms or caches of explosives intended for use in imminent planned acts of terrorism).

178. The Landau Commission recognized the danger posed to the democratic values of the State of Israel should its investigative authorities abuse their power by resorting to unnecessary or unduly harsh forms of pressure. As a result, the Commission recommended that psychological forms of pressure be used instead of physical pressure whenever possible, and that no more than "moderate physical pressure" be sanctioned in limited cases in which the degree of anticipated danger is sufficiently great.

179. In full awareness of the seriousness and sensitivity of the use of moderate pressure during interrogation, the Landau Commission set forth guidelines which provided for limited forms of pressure under very specific circumstances, to be determined on a case-by-case basis. The guidelines by no means authorize indiscriminate use of force. Rather, the Commission attempted to define those specific circumstances, and the interrogation practices permissible therein, so that, in the opinion of the Commission, "if these boundaries are maintained exactly in letter and in spirit, the effectiveness of the interrogation will be assured, while at the same time it will be far from the use of physical or mental torture, maltreatment of the person being interrogated, or the degradation of his human dignity."

180. To ensure that disproportionate pressure is not used, the Landau Commission determined several norms which have been adopted and are now in force, namely:

(a) Disproportionate exertion of pressure on the suspect is forbidden; pressure must never reach the level of physical torture or maltreatment of the suspect, or grievous harm to his honour which deprives him of his human dignity;

(b) The use of less serious measures must be weighed against the degree of anticipated danger, according to the information in the possession of the interrogator;

(c) The physical and psychological means of pressure permitted for use by an interrogator must be defined and limited in advance by issuing binding directives;

(d) There must be strict supervision of the implementation of these directives for GSS interrogators;

(e) The interrogators' supervisors must react firmly and without hesitation to every deviation from the permissible, imposing disciplinary punishment, and, in serious cases, causing criminal proceedings to be instituted against the offending interrogator.

181. In the second section of its report, the Landau Commission described the forms of pressure permitted for GSS interrogators and the circumstances in which they may be used. This section has remained confidential out of concern that, should the narrow restrictions binding the interrogators be known to the suspects undergoing questioning, their effectiveness would be vitiated.

Supervision and review of interrogative practices

182. The Government of Israel recognized the importance of establishing systems of review of interrogation practices to ensure that GSS investigators do not violate the guidelines. Initially, the GSS Comptroller was instructed to examine all claims of torture or maltreatment during interrogation. From 1987 until 1994, the Comptroller carried out this review function, initiating disciplinary or legal action against interrogators in cases where they have been found to have deviated from the legal guidelines.

183. The Department for Investigation of Police Misconduct In 1992, a special department was set up at the Ministry of Justice - the Department for Investigation of Police Personnel (DIPM) - to investigate allegations of criminal conduct by police generally. In 1994, in accordance with the recommendations of the Landau Commission that there be external oversight of General Security Service activities, responsibility for claims of maltreatment by GSS interrogators was also transferred to the DIPM, under the direct supervision of the State Attorney. As discussed under article 6, the activity of the DIPM appears to have had a significant deterrent impact on the incidence of intentional physical abuse of detainees and citizens by law enforcement officials, including GSS interrogators. Statistical information regarding the performance of the DIPM appears below under this article.

184. The State Comptroller's Office. In 1995, the State Comptroller's Office completed an examination of the GSS's investigator's unit during the years 1990-1992. The State Comptroller's findings, which were submitted to a special subcommittee of the Knesset State Comptroller Committee, found several instances of deviations from the Landau Commission's guidelines, and recommended measures to ensure compliance. The findings themselves have not yet been made public.

Ministerial scrutiny

185. In accordance with the recommendations of the Landau Commission, a special ministerial committee headed by the Prime Minister was established in 1988 to review the interrogation guidelines periodically.

186. In April 1993, the ministerial committee determined that several changes should be made in the GSS guidelines. On the basis of the committee's recommendations, new guidelines were issued to GSS investigators. The new guidelines clearly stipulate that the need and justification for the use of limited pressure by investigators must be established in every case, according to its own special circumstances. The guidelines emphasize that the use of exceptional methods is intended only for situations in which vital information is being concealed, and not as a way to humiliate or mistreat those under investigation. They place a duty on the investigator to consider whether the means of pressure the use of which is being contemplated is proportional to the degree of foreseeable danger of the activity under investigation. Senior GSS staff must approve in writing the use of measures deemed to constitute moderate physical pressure, once again on a case-by-case basis, in light of the above criteria. In any case, it is expressly forbidden to injure or torture suspects, to deny them food or drink, to refuse permission to use the bathroom, or to subject the person to extreme temperatures for prolonged periods.

187. Since then, the guidelines have been reviewed from time to time by the ministerial committee, in the light of conclusions drawn from recent experience. The ministerial committee also reviews, in real time, specific cases of persons under investigation who are known to be active members of the military arms of terror groups, and with regard to whom there are grounds to believe that they have knowledge of future terror attacks in the planning or execution stages.

Judicial Review

188. All complaints of alleged mistreatment during investigation may be challenged directly to the Supreme Court sitting as a High Court of Justice. Any party who believes he or she has been wronged - not only the detainee himself or his family, but, under the extremely flexible rules of standing in Israeli law, also virtually any person or group who claims an interest in legal or humanitarian issues involved - may have its petition heard by the High Court of Justice within 48 hours of being filed. Over the past few years several petitions have been filed with the Court seeking injunctions to forbid the GSS from using any force, or particular methods of pressure, throughout the investigation. The Court reviews each of these cases for their compliance with the detailed guidelines, and often, with the approval of the petitioner or his attorney, hears sensitive evidence in camera to examine whether the magnitude of foreseeable or imminent danger, and the grounds for believing that the suspect actually has vital information which is crucial to preventing such danger, are sufficiently clear to justify the use of the specific methods of interrogation in question. Two such cases are worth mentioning in detail.

189. In December 1995, the High Court of Justice issued an interim injunction on the basis of a petition brought by Abd al-Halim Belbaysi against the GSS (H.C.J. 336/96), forbidding the use of physical pressure against the petitioner during his interrogation. At the request of the GSS, this interim order was later cancelled after the petitioner, who had earlier signed a written declaration denying any connection to any illegal activity, admitted that he had planned the terrorist attack at Beit Lid on 22 January 1995 in which two suicide bombers killed 21 persons. Belbaysi confessed that three bombs had been prepared at his home, that he himself had hidden the bombs in the vicinity of Beit Lid and that on the day of the attack he had handed over the two bombs to the two suicide bombers and had driven them to the site of the attack. Belbaysi also provided information which enabled the authorities to retrieve the third bomb, containing 15 kg of explosives, from its hiding place. During the investigation it also became apparent that Belbaysi had additional information regarding grave terrorist attacks planned for the near future in Israel. To help uncover this crucial information, the GSS appealed to the Court to cancel the interim injunction. The Court accepted the GSS arguments, based on evidence presented, that disclosure of this information by Belbaysi could save human lives. In cancelling the injunction, however, the Court emphasized that the investigation could not involve torture or any other "measures which are not compatible with the law and the relevant guidelines" (H.C.J. 336/96, supra).

190. More recently, in the case of Muhammad Abdel Aziz Hamdan (H.C.J. 8049/96), the High Court issued an interim injunction similarly forbidding the GSS to use any form of physical pressure throughout his interrogation. In this case, within 24 hours, as a result of new inquiries and additional information regarding the petitioner, the GSS moved to cancel the interim injunction. Hamdan had previously admitted that he belonged to and was active in a cell of the Islamic Jihad; he had been among the activists deported to Lebanon in 1993, had served terms of imprisonment and administrative detention in Israeli jails, and had been detained by the Palestinian Authority in March 1996, together with other activists of rejectionist terrorist organizations. He was released from detention by the Palestinian Authority in August 1996. In October of that year, the GSS received information that raised definite suspicions that Hamdan possessed extremely vital information, the disclosure of which would help save human lives and prevent imminent serious terrorist attacks. It was at this point that the GSS applied to the Court to cancel the interim injunction. The GSS representative stated before the Court that the physical measures being contemplated did not amount to "torture" as defined in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; and that each of the measures fell within the defence of "necessity" specified in section 34 (11) of the Penal Law, as the conditions for such a defence existed in the circumstances. The Court agreed to cancel the interim injunction, holding, inter alia:

"After having reviewed the classified material presented to us, we are satisfied that the respondent does indeed have in its possession information on which a clear suspicion can be based that the petitioner possesses extremely vital information, the immediate disclosure of which will prevent the most serious attacks. Under these circumstances, we are of the opinion that there is no justification to continue with the interim injunction."

Once again, the Court stressed that "the cancelling of the interim injunction is not tantamount to permission to use interrogation methods against the petitioner which are against the law" (H.C.J. 8049/96, supra).

191. In several other cases, the Court issued interim injunctions forbidding the use of physical pressure during GSS interrogations, which remained in force throughout the investigation. See, e.g., H.C.J. 2210/96, Algazal v. General Security Service (not yet published). Another petition, which challenged the legality of the GSS interrogation guidelines then in force and demanded that the secret portion of the Landau Commission report be made public, was denied by the Court, inter alia, because it was not linked to the application of these guidelines in the circumstances of a particular case. H.C.J. 2581/91, Salkhat et al. v. State of Israel et al., 47(4) P.D. 837.

Treatment of Detainees

192. The discussion under this and the following paragraphs should be read in conjunction with that under article 10.

193. The fundamental right of detainees and prisoners to conditions ensuring basic maintenance of their human dignity has been articulated and enforced in a long line of judgements of the Israel Supreme Court. In Yusef v. Director of Central Prison, for example, the Court held that "the order of life in the prison by its nature requires an infringement of liberties which a free person enjoys, but such infringement must derive from the nature and needs of imprisonment, and not beyond that ... [t]he purposes of criminal punishment may not be achieved through violation of the prisoner's dignity or his humanity ... It is the right of every person in Israel who is sentenced to imprisonment (or lawfully detained) to be confined in conditions that allow for civilized human life ... Only 'the most serious reasons', such as special security measures that must be taken, may justify any deviation from this basic approach." (H.C.J. 540-546/84, 40(1) P.D. 567, 573. See also H.C.J. 114/86, Weill v. State of Israel et al., 41(3) P.D. 477 (minimal civilized arrangements include the right to conjugal visits).

194. Most of the basic conditions granted to prisoners and detainees as a matter of right, as well as limitations on measures that may impair their liberty or dignity and procedures for adjudicating prisoners' complaints, are provided for in legislation, primarily in the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, 5756-1996, and regulations thereunder. Other privileges or services have been given the status of a legal right by decisions of the Supreme Court, such as the presence in the prison facility of a social worker to deal with certain prisoner's concerns Yusef v. Director of Central Prison, supra).

195. Segregation and solitary confinement. Under section 21 (a) of the Prisons Regulations, 5738-1978, a senior prison official may order that a prisoner be confined separately from the rest of the prison population if he is convinced that doing so is necessary for reasons of State security, for maintenance of security, order or discipline in the prison, for protection of the safety or health of the prisoner or other prisoners, or at the prisoner's own request. This type of separate confinement is a preventive, not a punitive measure, and is to be distinguished from solitary confinement, which is discussed below. Segregation is to be used only when the purpose therefor cannot be accomplished by less restrictive means. Segregated prisoners have all of the rights and privileges of ordinary prisoners, except for conditions deriving by their nature from the fact of segregation. Such prisoners remain in their cells during the day hours, except for their daily excursion, family visits, medical care, visits with legal counsel, parole officer, social worker and so on. Such prisoners are always accompanied by a warden whenever they are outside of their cell. Prisoners convicted of a criminal offence who are held in segregation for more than three months may be granted additional privileges and personal effects (Part 14 of the Prison Commissioner's standing orders). The term of segregation is for 48 hours when ordered by a senior prison official; it may be extended for additional periods up to a total of 14 days with the consent of the director of the prison. Thereafter, separation may be extended only by order of the prison director, with the consent of the Commissioner of Prisons, provided that the justification for separation must be reviewed periodically (between 48 hours and 2 months, depending on the type of case in question), or at earlier intervals if the prisoner requests. Any prisoner who is confined separately for a period exceeding eight months may lodge an appeal to the Prisons Commissioner, who decides whether the separation will continue or cease. Certain classes of prisoners or detainees are segregated as a matter of law or policy from the rest of the prison population, such as known drug addicts or persons under administrative detention, and persons suspected or convicted of security-related offences.

196. Solitary confinement, on the other hand, is one of several punitive measures that may be imposed on a prisoner for violation of the prison code of conduct (sect. 56 of the Prisons Ordinance). Solitary confinement may be imposed only by the director or deputy director of the prison. As with all punitive measures, the decision to place a prisoner in solitary confinement may not be taken except following an investigation and a hearing at which the prisoner may hear the charges and evidence against him, and may defend himself properly (sect. 60 of the Prisons Ordinance). The maximum term of solitary confinement is 14 days, though the prisoner may not serve more than 7 days consecutively, and must be given a break of at least 7 days before solitary confinement is resumed.

197. All decisions regarding segregation and solitary confinement may be appealed directly to the appropriate District Court, and the District Court's decision may be appealed to the Supreme Court.

198. Contacts with the outside world Immediately upon the arrest of any person, notification must be made to a relative or other person close to the detainee regarding the fact of the arrest and the place of detention (Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, 5756-1996, sect. 33). Notice will also be given, at the detainee's request, to legal counsel of his choice, or, if the detainee does not have a lawyer, to one of the attorneys appearing on a list drawn up by the Bar Association and presented to the detainee. Notification of a person's arrest for certain security-related offences, or for other offences carrying a penalty of at least 10 years' imprisonment may be delayed for up to 48 hours by decision of a District Court judge, or be delivered only to a person whom the judge determines, if the Minister of Defence certifies in writing that national security requires that the arrest be kept secret, or if the Inspector General of the Israel Police certifies in writing that the success of the criminal investigation so requires. This period may be renewed, by application of the Minister or the Inspector General, for subsequent 48-hour periods, up to a total of 7 days, or, in rare cases of certain defined security-related offences, up to a total of 15 days (ibid.).

199. The rights of incarcerated persons to maintain contacts with the outside world vary according to the type of detention. The rights to conduct correspondence, use the telephone, have visitation as well as conjugal visits, and to leave the prison on furlough, are discussed under article 10.

Disciplinary and Criminal Proceedings and other Judicial Relief

200. As discussed under Article 6, the actions of law enforcement officials are subject to several overlapping legal institutions for review and sanctions. In general, each arm of the law enforcement authorities has disciplinary procedures, which may be initiated by the person claiming a violation, by other entities, or by the authorities themselves; all public servants are subject to the provisions of the criminal law; and detainees or prisoners may apply directly to the courts for relief against the action or decision in question.

201. Israel Police. Disciplinary proceedings are initiated by submission of a complaint to the disciplinary department of the Personnel Division at Central Headquarters or to one of its several branch offices. The Police may initiate disciplinary proceedings when it becomes aware of violations from other sources (e.g., statements of witnesses in the course of investigations, or information forwarded by police personnel). In addition, the Department for Investigation of Police Misconduct (DIPM) in the Ministry of Justice, which is responsible for most criminal investigations against police officers, transfers files to the Disciplinary Department of the Police both when the actions complained of fall short of a criminal offence but constitute a prima facie disciplinary violation, and also when criminal proceedings are brought against a police officer for actions which may entail parallel disciplinary sanctions.

202. If the Disciplinary Department, upon investigating the incident, finds that there is sufficient evidence of an infraction, then the matter is referred to a disciplinary tribunal, composed of either a single judge or a three-judge panel, depending on the gravity of the violation. See generally Police (Disciplinary Proceedings) Regulations, 5749-1989; Police (Definition of Disciplinary Offences) Regulations, 5715-1955; Police Ordinance (New Version), 5731-1971, chapter 5.

203. Alongside the disciplinary sanctions that may be imposed by a tribunal or single judge, the Police is bound to consider administrative sanctions against an officer who violates the law or internal standing orders. Administrative sanctions may be imposed at any time during the disciplinary or criminal proceedings, as well as after they are concluded. Such sanctions include dismissal from the police force, suspension, transfer to another position or department, demotion, postponement of promotion, and probation.

204. Criminal investigations against police officers may be initiated by a complaint filed with the DIPM by the victim or his representative, by the DIPM itself as a result of information submitted to it by independent human rights groups or by entities within the Israel Police. A preliminary screening is carried out by a DIPM staff lawyer, who decides either to open an investigation or to close the file if the acts accused of do not give rise to a criminal offence (in the latter case the file may be transferred back to the Police for appropriate disciplinary measures, as aforesaid). In the course of investigation, the DIPM staff takes testimony from the complainant, the suspect and other witnesses, as well as any other evidence relevant to the case. If the investigation indicates sufficient evidence of a criminal offence, then the file is transferred to the District Attorney's Office in the region where the offence occurred, or, in cases of unlawful use of force, to the State Attorney's Office, for a final decision as to whether to file criminal charges against the police officer. Under current guidelines, all criminal trials against police officers are prosecuted by the District Attorney's office. The DIPM may also decide that the police officer should stand trial in disciplinary proceedings for the unlawful use of force, in lieu of criminal proceedings.

205. Below are statistics compiled by the Israel Police and the DIPM regarding treatment of disciplinary and criminal complaints, respectively.

206. Between 1992 and July 1996, the DIPM investigated 211 cases involving the use of firearms, and 25 cases involving the use of force, or threat of using force, in order to extract a confession. In 1993, 15 officers were tried in criminal proceedings for involvement in offences amounting to assault; 12 of these officers were convicted, and 3 were acquitted. In 1994, 10 officers were convicted of such offences in criminal proceedings. In one noteworthy case, five police investigators in the Minorities Division of the Jerusalem Region were convicted in July 1995 for unlawful use of force in investigating suspects (Cr.F. 576/91, in the Jerusalem District Court). In September 1995 the defendants were sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment. The case is currently on appeal in the Supreme Court.

207. In 1994, 22 police officers were dismissed from the force, 2 of whom as a result of their involvement in violent offences (down from 18 dismissals as a result of violent offences in 1993); 13 others were dismissed for "unsuitability", which includes those who were involved in repeated incidents of unlawful use of force (in 1993, as a result of a special effort by the Police to remove the most problematic employees, 30 officers were dismissed for unsuitability). In 1995, 29 officers were similarly dismissed for unsuitability, and no officers were dismissed in 1995 as a result of violent offences. One officer was suspended in 1994 (out of a total of 20 suspensions that year) and 8 in 1995, as a result of involvement in violent offences; in 1993, no such suspensions were made.

Table 9. Unlawful use of force by police officers: number of complaints and results of investigation

Circumstances	1993	1994	1995	1996 a/
Investigation	119	95	97	70
Arrest	524	611	554	384
Conditions of detention	25	35	187	100
Refusal of citizen to identify himself or to accompany police officer	17	37	59	64
Search of suspect or premises	103	99	109	81
Violation of public order	110	122	233	106
Violation of order or discipline in a detention facility	44	34	26	35
Use of crude language	1	1	4	2
Traffic offences	101	120	161	113
Carrying out orders of the Execution Office (for civil judgement debts)	93	71	43	28
Holding persons in custody	103	40	47	54
Abuse of authority	283	286	334	70
Disputes between neighbours	2	6	4	2
Family disputes	1	1	1	1
Private disputes	4	5	4	13
On-duty dispute between two police officers	18	31	16	21
Argument between drivers	1	7	32	3
Training incidents	1	1	12	-
Demonstrations b/	-	-	1	32
Total files received	1 960	1 861	2 155	1 301
Referred for disciplinary trial	280	208	184	104
Final recommendation to file criminal indictment	52	40	53	20
Total files completed (including files from previous years)	1 979	1 876	2 001	1 428

a/ 1996 figures are for January-July.

b/ Demonstrations were inserted as a statistical category in 1996.

Table 10. Disciplinary investigations and results

	1994	1995
Disciplinary indictments filed (all offences)
Charge sheets (three-judge panel)	252	251
Complaints (single judge)	217	49
Disciplinary indictments adjudicated (all offences)
Charge sheets	301	215
Complaints	217	51
Files received from DAM.
Regarding use of force - recommendation to file criminal charges (Total number of officers involved)	41 (64)	50 (92)
Regarding use of force - with recommendation to file disciplinary charge sheet (Total number of officers involved)	168 (246)	127 (180)
Regarding use of force - with recommendation for trial before a single disciplinary judge (Total number of officers involved)	79 (93)	47 (55)
Recommendation to weigh disciplinary sanctions (Total number of officers involved)	307 (388)	366 (459)

208. Alongside the ordinary criminal and disciplinary processes described above, detainees held in police lock-ups have the right to file for habeas corpus relief against any unlawful treatment, including torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment on the part of police officers.

209. Prisons Service. Currently, the disciplinary and criminal investigation procedures regarding Prisons Service personnel differs from those followed with regard to police officers. Any prisoner or detainee under the care of the Prisons Service may file a complaint regarding ill-treatment or conditions of detention to the director of the prison. In cases involving use of force, a special committee within the Prisons Service investigates the complaint and transfers the file to the Attorney-General, who decides whether to institute disciplinary or criminal proceedings. Disciplinary trials are held before a tribunal within the Prisons Service, which is similar in structure and procedures to that of the Israel Police (see generally the Prisons Ordinance, sect. 101 et seq., and second schedule defining disciplinary offences; and the Prisons (Disciplinary Procedures) Regulations, 5749-1989), while criminal files are transferred first to the Israel Police, for completion of the investigation, and then to the appropriate District Attorney's office for filing a charge sheet.

210. General Security Service. Complaints by persons detained by the General Security Service regarding their treatment during investigation may be filed by the detainee or his legal representative, by local or international human rights organizations (complaints have been filed by the Public Committee against Torture in Israel, the Physicians' Association for Human Rights, Amnesty International, and the ICRC, among others). All complaints are examined by a complaints review unit within the GSS, which is subordinate to the State Attorney's Office. In the event that complaints are submitted to other governmental authorities, they are transferred to the above complaints unit, which is responsible for the initial investigation. Complaints that give rise to a suspicion that a criminal offence was committed are transferred to the DIPM at the Ministry of Justice.

211. In 1995, 81 such complaints were received regarding treatment of detainees during GSS investigations. Thirty-four of these complaints were filed by the detainee, 23 by the detainee's legal counsel, 9 by local organizations and 15 by international organizations. In some instances, several entities filed complaints regarding a particular case. In four cases during 1995, the complaints unit found deviations from lawful authority; these cases were dealt with administratively within the GSS, including sanctions against the persons involved. In one case, that of Samed abd al Harizat mentioned under article 6, a GSS investigator was tried in disciplinary proceedings before a special tribunal.

212. As discussed above, detainees in the custody of the GSS also have the right to petition the High Court of Justice directly for habeas corpus relief.

213. Israel Defence Forces. The IDF maintains a strict policy of investigating every claim of mistreatment of detainees by IDF investigators. Soldiers who are found to have deviated from IDF standing orders forbidding violence or the threat of violence in interrogations are either court-martialled or have disciplinary proceedings brought against them, depending on the severity of the charges. In 1991, the IDF also appointed a commission to review its interrogation practices and policies, headed by Major General (Reserve) Raphael Vardi, which resulted in the punishment of several interrogators. The Vardi Commission also submitted a list of recommendations designed to reduce the possibility of mistreatment by IDF investigators, which have been adopted.

Compensation to victims

214. Persons who have been subjected to torture or to any other unlawful mistreatment in violation of this article may, in addition to criminal, disciplinary or habeas corpus proceedings, initiate a tort action for damages against the perpetrators and against the State. In cases of assault, the State, like any other employer, is liable only if it has approved the unlawful assault or to have retroactively ratified it. In addition, victims may receive a certain degree of compensation in the context of criminal proceedings under section 77 of the Penal Law, 5737-1977, which empowers a convicting court to order the payment to the victim of a crime for damages or suffering. Such compensation is recovered in the same manner as a fine. Currently, the maximum amount payable to a particular victim is fixed at NIS 60,000.

Training of law enforcement officials

215. The Israel Police and the Prisons Service maintain thoroughgoing training programmes for personnel at all levels, in which their obligations regarding the respect and realization of civil and human rights are taught. These training programmes take three basic forms: required courses for all entry-level personnel, and subsequently for all personnel as a condition prior to promotion in rank; voluntary continuing education seminars on specific topics, which typically last between several days and one week; and periodic refresher courses.

216. Required courses for Israel Police personnel are taught at the National Police Academy in Shfar'am or at the Senior Officers' College near Netanya. All police employees must pass a two-month basic training course, which includes a total of 47 hours of instruction in the areas of professional ethics, providing service to citizens, police powers, use of force, unlawful commands, and disciplinary violations.

217. The required courses for sergeants, captains, and senior staff officers also devote between 42 to 80 hours to instruction regarding the above matters, as well as to modules on competence in human relations, conflict resolution, investigation of police personnel, media in a democracy, citizens' complaints, family violence, treatment of juvenile offenders, legal and practical duties deriving from the right to human dignity, and inculcation of awareness of human rights. In addition, continuing education courses on specific topics, such as methods of investigation, arrest and searches, and so on, involve practical instruction in observance of human rights.

Other institutional reform measures

218. In addition to the principal methods adopted in Israel to prevent the occurrence of torture or other ill-treatment of detainees, discussed above and under article 6, several important efforts at institutional and statutory reform which deserve mention are currently under way.

219. The Kremnitzer Committee. Following a report in 1993 by the Comptroller of the Israel Police which examined the systemic response to acts of violence by police personnel, the Minister of Police (now the Minister of Internal Security) appointed a public commission, headed by the former dean of the Law Faculty at the Hebrew University, Prof. Mordecai Kremnitzer, to propose a plan of action for dealing with the issue. The Kremnitzer Committee, as it is called, issued its report in June 1994, which included specific recommendations for the prevention and deterrence of violence by police officers. These recommendations may be summarized as follows:

- (a) Prevention of police violence should be achieved by:
 - (i) Improvement in screening candidates for enlistment;
 - (ii) Involving more women in detective and fieldwork, so as to "soften" the contact between the police and citizens;
 - (iii) Examining the disciplinary profile of police personnel prior to promotion;

- (iv) Placing emphasis on the responsibility of commanders to transmit the educational message directly to their charges, and especially regarding the equality of all persons and the rights of minorities;
 - (v) Videotaping investigations and field operations;
- (b) The response to incidents of violence should include:
- (i) Distinguishing between severe violence and the use of force which does not amount to severe violence; the former cases, according to the Committee's recommendation, should be adjudicated before a specially appointed Magistrate Court judge. If the police officer admits to the acts attributed to him, or if there exists unequivocal evidence against him, then he should be dismissed from the Police;
 - (ii) Any police officer who is convicted of severe violence should likewise be dismissed;
 - (iii) Occurrences of unlawful use of force which do not amount to severe violence should be dealt with in disciplinary proceedings or by senior commanding officers. Repeat occurrences should result in dismissal from the police force.

220. Following publication of the Kremnitzer Committee's report, the Israel Police adopted its recommendations, and the Minister of Police appointed an oversight committee to ensure their implementation. While the oversight committee has only recently begun to function actively, the Israel Police has taken several measures to implement the committee's recommendations, such as strict screening of candidates for enlistment in the police, including weighing of sociometric tests indicating capacity for self-control and interpersonal skills; periodic evaluations of performance; training workshops in questioning persons who are not designated as criminal suspects, as well as in prevention of violence, human rights and equality before the law (some of these workshops were taught by members of independent human rights groups); giving an annual prize for tolerance to particular precinct stations; publishing a newsletter on police ethics; and starting an experimental "community policing" project in 10 precincts. In addition, the disciplinary desk of the Israel Police was expanded to a full-fledged department, with added personnel, to improve the efficiency and quality of handling disciplinary complaints. The response of the Israel Police thus far in implementing the recommendations of the Kremnitzer Report has met with praise from at least one prominent independent civil rights group*.

* See Israel Human Rights Focus: 1996, Na'ama Yashuvi (ed.), Association for Civil Rights in Israel, June 1996, p. 130.

221. The Goldberg Committee. In 1993, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Police appointed a public committee, headed by Supreme Court Justice Eliezer Goldberg, to examine the efficacy of convictions based solely or almost solely upon the defendant's confession, the availability of retrial, and other topics relating to the rights of those investigated by the police. The Goldberg Committee's report, published in 1994, included recommendations aimed at ensuring that false confessions are not extracted by illegal means. Among other things, the Committee recommended employment of investigation techniques and technologies which have been developed elsewhere, and which have proven effective in fulfilling the purposes of the criminal investigation without resort to violence; increasing supervision of investigation by senior investigators; videotaping of any interview at which the interviewee's lawyer is not present; and giving the judge who presides over detention hearings more of a role in actively investigating the conditions of detention and the investigation.

222. A draft law is currently being prepared at the Ministry of Justice to implement the above recommendations of the Goldberg Committee.

223. Public Defender's Office. In 1995, a national Public Defender's Office was created by legislation. The major impetus for forming the new department derived from the difficulties encountered by the courts in appointing experienced criminal attorneys to represent indigent persons suspected of serious offences. While it is too early to assess the performance of the new, State-funded department, it is anticipated that the augmented protection of the rights of criminal defendants and detainees by a highly trained corps of criminal defence attorneys will result, among other things, in a decrease in violent treatment on the part of law enforcement officials.

Corporal punishment and correctional methods in the schools

224. Under Israel law, a teacher or administrator who employs corporal punishment against a student may be prosecuted for criminal assault and, in appropriate circumstances, sued for civil damages.

225. A 1991 circular published by the Director-General of the Ministry of Education and Culture outlines procedures for disciplining students. Corporal punishment is explicitly forbidden. Under the guidelines, the teacher must first discuss the disciplinary infraction with the student, either alone or with an educational adviser, psychologist, or the student's parents. Before imposing any disciplinary measure, the student must be given a chance to explain his or her actions. Permitted disciplinary measures include an oral warning or reprimand, a written warning or reprimand, deprivation of privileges, removal from the classroom, transfer to another class for a specified period, suspension for specified periods, transfer to another school, or dismissal from the school. Any disciplinary measure must be reported to the student's parents, and in cases of transfer to another school the parents must be given a prior hearing.

Expulsion to countries where a person might be subjected to torture

226. According to judgements of the Israel Supreme Court in specific cases regarding the legality of deportation, the Court has specifically held that no person may be deported to a country in which his physical safety cannot be guaranteed. Reference is made to the discussion under article 13 on this matter.

Commitment to psychiatric hospitals

227. The enactment in 1991 of the Mentally Ill Treatment Law, 5741-1991, marked a significant change of approach in protecting the rights of mentally ill persons, primarily with regard to involuntary commitment but also with regard to the patient's rights once hospitalized. Under the new law, the District Psychiatrist or someone authorized by him may commit a person to involuntary hospitalization only after having performed a psychiatric examination, which the person may be compelled to undergo. The law distinguishes between "urgent" and "non-urgent" involuntary hospitalization. In the first case, the District Psychiatrist may commit a person immediately to a psychiatric hospital if he determines that the person is mentally ill in such a manner that substantially impairs his judgement or his reality testing, and that as a result he is likely to pose an immediate physical danger to himself or to others.

228. The director of a hospital may involuntarily hospitalize a person for a period of up to 48 hours, even without an order of hospitalization from the District Psychiatrist, if he determines, on the basis of a medical, physical and psychiatric examination, that the person fulfills the criteria for urgent involuntary commitment. At the end of 48 hours, the person must be released, unless a commitment order has been issued within that time or the patient agrees to be hospitalized voluntarily (sect. 5 of the Law).

229. In the case of a minor, the District Psychiatrist may, at the request of a child welfare worker, order the child to undergo an urgent psychiatric examination prior to commitment if in his view there is prima facie evidence that the minor is mentally ill or mentally disturbed, and such illness or disturbance is likely to pose a physical danger (as opposed to an "immediate" physical danger) to himself or to others. All such examinations of minors must be performed by a psychiatrist specializing in children and adolescents (sect. 6 of the Law).

230. The District Psychiatrist may order a person who refuses to be tested to undergo a "non-urgent" involuntary examination if he deems that there is evidence to indicate that the person is mentally ill in such a manner that substantially impairs his judgement and reality testing; and that he is likely to pose a physical danger to himself or others that falls short of being "immediate", or his ability to take care of his basic needs is severely impaired, or he is causing severe mental suffering to others in such a manner that impairs his maintenance of a normal functioning, or he causes severe damage to property (sect. 7 of the Law). Such a "non-urgent" examination order remains valid for a period of 10 days, during which the person is to undergo the examination; if the examination bears out the conclusion that the person is in fact mentally ill in the above manner, and as a result is likely to pose a "non-immediate" danger to himself or to others, then he may be committed within 24 hours.

231. The District Psychiatrist may order the involuntary commitment of a person only for a period of seven days, which he may extend for another seven days at the detailed, written request of the director of the hospital in which the patient is confined. He must also notify the Attorney-General or his representative of any hospitalization orders. After the initial period of 14 days, involuntary hospitalization may be extended only by decision of the District Psychiatric Committee, which is composed of a lawyer and two psychiatrists, one of whom is a public servant (sect. 24 of the Law). The District Committee may extend the involuntary hospitalization for a period of up to three months, and thereafter for subsequent periods of three months, if they are convinced that the patient still meets the criteria for commitment mentioned above.

232. The new law also provides the District Psychiatrist with the power to order the patient to undergo involuntary outpatient treatment, instead of hospitalization, for periods of up to six months.

233. A hospitalization or involuntary outpatient treatment order issued by the District Psychiatrist may be appealed by the person committed or any other person before the District Psychiatric Committee. Appeals are heard within five days of their submission. In all proceedings before the Committee, the patient and his lawyer may be present, as well as additional persons at the Committee's discretion, and may raise claims on the patient's behalf. If the Committee decides to extend the involuntary commitment of a patient for a period exceeding three months, then the patient, his relative or guardian has the right to demand an additional hearing after three months have passed. All decisions of the District Psychiatric Committee are appealable as of right to the District Court, and thereafter to the Supreme Court by leave.

234. Judicial decisions interpreting the District Psychiatrist's powers of involuntary commitment have stressed that the evidence of the patient's inability to function, and of the danger posed to himself or to others, must be specific and well-founded in order to justify such a deprivation of liberty, especially in view of section 5 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, noted above. See, e.g., App. No. 81/92, Anonymous v. Attorney-General et al., P.D.M. 5753, vol. 3, p. 221 (judgement of the Jerusalem District Court). Mere general statements that a person has attacked others is insufficient; specific incidents must be described in detail, including dates, the severity of the incident, the persons involved, the degree of provocation, and so on (ibid.).

235. Over the period between 1988 and 1995, the number of involuntary hospitalization orders issued by the District Psychiatrist remained fairly stable, between 1,300 and 1,600 per year, while the total number of psychiatric hospitalizations rose steadily, from 11,286 in 1988 to 15,515 in 1995.

236. Court-ordered hospitalization. In the context of criminal proceedings, a court may order the hospitalization of a mentally ill detainee for the period of his detention, and may order the hospitalization or outpatient treatment of a defendant who is found unfit to stand trial due to mental illness. If a defendant has been found guilty of a criminal offence, but the Court declares that he is not eligible for punishment because he was mentally ill at the time he committed the offence, then the Court may order his involuntary hospitalization or treatment if he is still ill. The law imposes no time limit for such involuntary hospitalization; however, judicial decisions have clarified that court-ordered hospitalization may extend only so long as the convict poses danger to himself or to others. Cr.A. (T.A.) 613/95. Malca v. Attorney-General et al. (not yet published), issued 20 October 1995.

237. Restrictions on treatment and other rights of the patient All patients in psychiatric hospitals are entitled to send and receive closed letters, to have visitors, to maintain contact with persons outside the hospital and with their lawyers, and to hold personal effects and wear their own clothes, in accordance with terms set by the director of the hospital.

238. Solitary confinement and physical restraint of a patient may be done only to the extent required for his medical treatment, or to the extent necessary to prevent danger to himself or others. Such measures must be authorized in writing by a doctor, except in cases of emergency when a doctor is not present, in which case a nurse may order such measures (sect. 34 of the Law). If the nurse orders the patient to be placed in restraints, then a doctor must be found as quickly as possible to approve the measure; if the doctor does not approve the use of restraints, then the patient must be released from them immediately. Restraints may be ordered for a period of up to four hours, and then for subsequent periods of up to four hours, subject to an examination by a doctor at the end of each period (Regulation 29 of the Mentally Ill Treatment Regulations, 5752-1992).

239. Electric shock therapy may be used on patients only if the following conditions have been met:

(a) Three doctors at the hospital, including the hospital director or his deputy, the director of the department in which the patient is hospitalized or his deputy, and the director of the clinic at which the patient is treated, have all decided that electric shock therapy is indicated;

(b) The patient has undergone a physical examination by a doctor, and appropriate tests do not evince any contra-indications to electric shock therapy;

(c) The patient or his guardian has consented in writing, if the patient voluntarily hospitalized himself.

Electric shock may be administered only under anaesthetics, with necessary safety measures, and medications to relieve post-administration symptoms must be on hand.

Experimentation on human beings

240. The Helsinki Declaration regarding Guidelines for Doctors in Biomedical Research Involving Human Beings of 1964, as amended in Tokyo in 1975, has been implemented directly in Israeli legislation by the National Health (Medical Experiments on Human Beings) Regulations, 5741-1980, which actually includes the text of the Helsinki Declaration. Regulation 2 of the above Regulations stipulates explicitly that no medical experimentation may be done on human beings in a hospital in violation of the Helsinki Declaration.

241. Under the implementing legislation, medical experiments are defined as:

"(1) Use of a medication, radiation or a chemical, biological, radiological or pharmaceutical substance, in contradiction to the approval given for such substance by legislation, or when said use is not accepted in Israel for the purposes for which the use is requested, or has not yet been tried in Israel, and such use has, or is intended to have, an effect on the health, body or mental health of a person or employee, or a part thereof, including genetic structure;

"(2) Any proceeding, action or examination regarding a human being which is not commonly accepted."

Such medical experiments may be performed only if the Director-General of the Ministry of Health approves them. The Director-General's approval, in turn, is contingent upon fulfilment of the following conditions:

(a) The "Helsinki Committee" of the hospital in question has approved the experiment. This committee is composed of a member of the clergy or a lawyer, three medical directors of departments at the hospital with the rank of professor at a recognized medical school, one of whom is a specialist in internal medicine, and another doctor who represents the hospital's management;

(b) The Director-General is convinced that the experiment is not in violation of the Helsinki Declaration or the Israeli regulations;

(c) The Medications and Foods Department of the Health Ministry or the "Supreme Helsinki Council" has rendered its opinion regarding experiments involving genetic structure, artificial fertility treatments, or other types of experiments. The "Supreme Helsinki Council" is composed of one lawyer, one member of clergy, six professors, of whom three are medical doctors, and the Director-General or his representative, provided that they are also physicians.

242. Under article 9 of the Helsinki Declaration, which is an operative part of the regulations mentioned above, every person who may be a subject in a medical experiment must give his or her informed consent thereto, preferably in writing, and may cease to participate in the experiment at any stage. In cases in which the patient may have a relation of dependency with the doctor who requests his informed consent, or in which the patient might consent under duress, another doctor uninvolved in research must request the patient's consent. Persons lacking legal capacity may serve as subjects in medical experiments only if their legal guardian, or relative responsible for their welfare, consents on their behalf (article 11 of the Helsinki Declaration).

Article 8 - Prohibition of slavery

243. Israel is a party to the Geneva Slavery Convention of 1926 and the Amending Protocol of 1953 (ratified 12 September 1955); to the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (ratified 23 October 1957); to the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others (ratified 28 December 1950); and to International Labour Organization Convention No. 105 concerning the abolition of forced labour.

244. The principal legislative prohibitions against slavery or servitude are contained in the Penal Law, 5737-1977. Section 376 of the Penal Law, entitled "forced labour", provides: "A person who unlawfully compels another to work against his will is liable to imprisonment for one year." Other sections of the Penal Law, prohibiting kidnapping and false imprisonment, may be invoked against a person who detains or otherwise limits the freedom of movement of another person, including with the intention of imposing conditions of servitude or slavery upon him.

245. Slavery and servitude would also seem clearly to be prohibited by section 9 of Basic Law: Human Liberty and Dignity, under which "[t]here shall be no deprivation or restriction of the liberty of a person by imprisonment, arrest, extradition or by any other means". Furthermore, every employee is entitled to the full protection of Israel's labour laws, which provide extensive protection regarding hours of work and rest, overtime pay, vacation and sick days, payment of wages, prohibition of work on rest days and holidays, and many other substantive safeguards, including protection of the right to strike. These employment guarantees are discussed more fully in Israel's Initial and First Periodic Report under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (E/1990/5/Add.39), as well as under article 21 of the present report.

246. Israeli law does not allow hard labour to be imposed as the punishment for a crime. Incarcerated convicts are required to work at tasks or jobs which do not involve hard labour (Penal Law, sect. 48) unless an Exemptions Committee of the Prisons Service releases them from the obligation for reasons of rehabilitation, health or other reasonable grounds. In practice, prisoners are generally not required to work without their consent. Prisoners' hours of work and rest are subject to the same restrictions as any employee under the Hours of Work and Rest Law, 5711-1951, and they are paid at the minimum wage. Prisoners with health-related limitations may only perform work approved by the prison medical officer (Prisons Regulations, 5737-1978, regulation 14).

247. Detainees who have not been convicted of a crime, and persons sentenced to imprisonment in the context of civil proceedings (for example, due to contempt of court), may perform work only at their consent (Prisons Regulations, regulation 17).

248. All work performed by convicts, detainees and other prisoners is supervised by the director of the prison in which they are incarcerated.

249. The sentencing provisions of the Penal Law, 5737-1977, allow for two types of punishment, less severe than incarceration, which involve the performance of work. Under section 51 A of the Law, a court which has sentenced a criminal defendant to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months may, at the defendant's consent, decide to substitute incarceration for part or all of that period with "service work" outside the prison at a public institution or private workplace determined by the Director of the Employment Service. The convict may live at home during the period of "service work", and receives wages unless he or she is serving the sentence at a public institution. A person convicted of a crime but not sentenced to imprisonment may be required to perform "community service" work during his spare time at no pay, for a number of hours to be determined by the court (sect. 71 (A) of the Penal Law). "Public service" may also be imposed on a person whom the court has found to have committed a crime, without convicting him (sect. 71 A (b) of the Penal Law); generally, this provision is used as a measure of leniency, to enable the defendant to avoid having a conviction in the Criminal Register, even though the court could lawfully convict him. Public service works are supervised by parole officers of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs. Neither of the alternative sentences mentioned involve hard labour. Typically, they are performed at places such as hospitals, institutions for disabled youths, government boarding schools, and the like.

250. International Labour Organization Convention No. 105, to which Israel is a party, requires ratifying States to undertake to suppress and not make use of forced labour in five specific cases: as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system; as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development; as a means of labour discipline; as punishment for having participated in strikes; and as a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination. As discussed in Israel's periodic reports to the ILO under this convention, and in the preceding paragraphs, forced labour is not used in Israel, either generally or for any of the purposes prohibited by ILO Convention No. 105.

Military Service

251. Most Israeli citizens and some permanent residents are required to perform regular and reserve military service under the Security Service Law [Consolidated Version], 5746-1986. Those exempted from obligatory military service include those with physical disabilities or mental illness, and women who declare that requirements of religion or conscience prevent them from performing military service. A portion of women granted such an exemption choose to perform one or two years of "national service" at a public or private institution. Orthodox Jewish men who commit themselves study in a religious institution and not to work during that period receive annual postponements of military service upon application. Approximately 30,000 such postponements were granted in 1997. If the orthodox student receives annual postponements up until the maximum age of conscription, then he is fully exempted from military service. Some such students elect to postpone their service for several years while they pursue religious study exclusively, and then are conscripted later, generally for a shorter period than the usual three-year tour of duty.

252. Israeli Muslims are generally not conscripted into military service, though they may serve as volunteers. Druze and Circassian men perform regular and reserve military service, while Bedouins may serve as volunteers. Christians are generally not conscripted, unless they are olim under the Law of Return. The influx of immigration from the former Soviet Union has resulted in an increase of Christian conscripts, as in many of those families one or the other spouse, or parent, is Christian.

253. The period of regular military service for men who are conscripted between the ages of 18 and 26 is currently three years; those conscripted between the ages of 27 and 29 serve for a period of between 24 and 30 months. Women conscripts between the ages of 18 and 26 perform two years of regular military service; married women, mothers and pregnant women are released from their military service obligations.

254. After discharge from regular military service, men and women may be obligated under the Security Service Law [Consolidated Version], 5746-1986, to perform up to 30 days of reserve service. Under internal IDF guidelines, the actual length of annual reserve service, and the age until which one must perform it, are set according to the specific reserve position and rank of the soldier, among other factors. Under section 1 of the Law, men may be obligated to perform reserve service up until the age of 54, and women up until the age of 38. In practice, the vast majority of women soldiers are completely exempted from reserve service, while most of the remaining women soldiers may serve for brief annual periods up to the age of 24.

255. As mentioned in respect of article 4, emergency legislation allows for the call-up of employees and professionals in various institutions and industries deemed essential, to enable their uninterrupted operation when circumstances related to the state of emergency make it necessary to do so.

Article 9 - Liberty and security of person

256. From its inception, the State of Israel has regarded the right of personal liberty as fundamental to the nature of its political and social order. The Declaration of Independence of 14 May 1948, provides that the "State of Israel ... shall be founded on the principles of liberty, justice and peace as envisioned by the prophets of Israel ...". Until recently, in the absence of a formal bill of rights, this clause in the Declaration constituted the basis on which the Supreme Court developed rules for protection of personal liberty, including with regard to arrest and detention. At the same time, a thorough body of legislation was developed to ensure that restrictions of liberty in the context of arrest or detention are strictly circumscribed; the principal legislative landmarks in this regard were the Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version], 5742-1982, the Criminal Procedure (Arrest and Searches) Ordinance [New Version], 5729-1969.

257. With the enactment of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty in 1992, the right to personal liberty was accorded formal constitutional status. Section 1 of the Basic Law provides:

"Fundamental human rights in Israel are founded upon recognition of the value of the human being, the sanctity of human life, and the principle that all person are free; these rights shall be upheld in the spirit of the principles set forth in the Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel."

Arrest and Detention

258. The purpose of the Basic Law, as defined in section 1 A, is "to protect human dignity and liberty, in order to establish in a Basic Law the values of the State of Israel as a Jewish and democratic State". Section 5, entitled "Personal Liberty", stipulates that "there shall be no deprivation or restriction of the liberty of a person by imprisonment, detention, extradition or otherwise". This substantive right is qualified by the saving clause in section 8, which prohibits any derogation therefrom "except by a Law befitting the values of the State of Israel, enacted for a proper purpose, and to an extent no greater than is required, or by regulation enacted by virtue of express authorization in such Law". While legislation enacted prior to the Basic Law remains valid, it is interpreted in light of the substantive rights and principles in the Basic Law. New legislation, on the other hand, may be invalidated by the Supreme Court to the extent that it violates the principle of human liberty, including in the context of arrest and detention.

259. Following the enactment of Basic Law: Human Liberty and Dignity, several significant legislative efforts have been made in the area of arrest and detention, culminating in the enactment of a series of interrelated statutes, as well as new standing orders for the Police and Prisons Service. The most significant of such recent statutes for the purposes of this article, the Criminal Procedure (Powers of Enforcement - Arrest) Law, 5756-1996, comprehensively treats all phases of the detention process with the declared purpose of "ensuring maximal protection of a person's liberty and rights" (sect. 1 (b) of the Law). The provisions of the new statute apply to arrest and detention under any law, unless the other law specifically indicates otherwise.

Arrest by warrant

260. A judge may issue an arrest warrant only if he is convinced that there is a reasonable suspicion that the person committed a felony or misdemeanour, and that one of the following grounds applies:

(a) There are reasonable grounds to suspect that the suspect's release or non-arrest will result in the obstruction of the criminal investigation or trial, in the suspect's evasion of the investigation, trial or sentence, or will lead to concealing of property, tampering with witnesses or with evidence in another manner; however, in such cases the court must also be satisfied that the objective of the arrest cannot be achieved by setting bail or other conditions which will be less restrictive of the suspect's liberty;

(b) There are reasonable grounds to suspect that the suspect will endanger the safety of a person, public safety or national security;

(c) The court is satisfied, for special reasons that shall be recorded, that it is necessary to take investigative measures that cannot be taken unless the suspect is under arrest; in such cases the Court cannot order an arrest for more than five days, unless it deems that the investigative procedures contemplated cannot be carried out in that period, in which case it may order a longer period of arrest, or extend the original period, for a total of not more than 15 days.

(Criminal Procedure Law (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, 5756-1996, sect. 13.)

261. An application for an arrest warrant must be submitted in writing by a police officer, supported by a sworn statement or affidavit which confirms the facts and information on which the application is based. The application must include details of previous arrests, copies of previous applications for arrest warrants against the suspect in the same matter and the minutes of court hearings on those earlier applications (ibid., sect. 15). In urgent cases, the judge may hear the application for the warrant without seeing the copies of earlier warrant requests and minutes of the hearings, if he or she is satisfied that enough information has been submitted to enable a decision; in such instances, the length of the arrest cannot exceed 24 hours (ibid., sect. 15 (b)).

262. The Court bears a clear obligation to review the evidence on which the warrant application is based, and must issue a reasoned written decision (ibid., sect. 12).

263. The arrest warrant must include, in addition to basic identifying information, the arresting officer's identity, the description of the alleged offence, the specific grounds for arrest, the precise date and time when it was issued and when it lapses, as well as a statement of the arresting officer's obligation to bring the suspect before the court as soon as possible, unless the person is released before an initial hearing (ibid., sect. 18).

Arrest without a warrant

264. The new Arrest Statute sets out a series of strict procedural safeguards which must be followed in the event of arrest without a warrant. A police officer is empowered to arrest a person without a warrant if he or she has reasonable grounds to suspect that the person committed a felony or misdemeanour, and if one of the following applies:

(a) The person committed an offence for which he or she may be arrested in the police officer's presence or very shortly beforehand, and the officer believes that as a result the person is likely to endanger the safety of a person, public safety or the security of the State;

(b) The police officer has reasonable grounds to suspect that the suspect will not appear for the criminal investigation, or that the suspect's release or non-arrest will result in a disruption of legal proceedings, including concealment of property, tampering with witnesses or tampering with evidence in another manner;

(c) The person is suspected of having committed one of the following offences:

- (i) An offence which carries a sentence of death or life imprisonment;
- (ii) Certain security-related offences;
- (iii) Narcotics offences other than those involving use or possession for personal use;
- (iv) An offence committed with severe violence or cruelty, or with a firearm or other weapon;
- (v) A violent offence against a family relative under the Family Violence Prevention Law, 5751-1991;

(d) There are reasonable grounds to suspect that a person released on bail has violated the terms of the release, or is about to abscond from legal proceedings, or has escaped lawful custody;

(e) The police officer lawfully attempts to detain a person for questioning at the police station, but the person does not comply with the officer's instructions or interferes with lawful detaining for questioning;

Arrest without a warrant, on the grounds described above, may not be done if it is sufficient to bring the person to the police station for questioning (ibid., sect. 23).

265. Unlawful arrest and resistance to arrest At the time of arrest, the arresting officer must identify himself or herself to the suspect, inform the suspect immediately of the fact of the arrest, and, as soon as possible in the course of the arrest, explain the reasons therefor. If these requirements are not met, then as a rule the arrest is not lawful, and the suspect is not deemed to be in lawful custody. As a consequence of the fundamental right to liberty, any person may take reasonable actions to avoid or resist an unlawful arrest as he or she would against an assailant by fleeing, use of reasonable force or other means, and the arresting officer may be sued for assault or false imprisonment under the Civil Wrongs Ordinance (Cr.A. 136/51, Frankel v. State of Israel, 8 P.D. 1604). Full notification at the time of arrest may be delayed, however, if it is likely to undermine the carrying out of the arrest, to endanger the arresting officer's safety, to result in concealing of evidence, or if the officer's identity and the nature of the offence are obvious under the circumstances (ibid., sect. 24).

266. The powers of a police officer to arrest without a warrant may be delegated to other public servants by order of the Minister of Police (now the Minister of Internal Security). At present, arrest powers have been granted to 21 different groups of public servants, such as income tax investigators, port authority guards, municipal inspectors, civil guards, prison wardens, and so on.

267. Bringing the person under arrest to the police station Persons arrested without a warrant must be brought immediately to a police station and placed under the authority of the station officer in charge of investigations, or the station commander, unless the person is released beforehand. The duty to bring the suspect immediately to the police station may be qualified if the suspect is in urgent need of medical treatment, or if the police officer's presence is urgently needed in another place to prevent injury or death to a person, or severe harm to public safety or national security, if the needs of the investigation so require, or if the suspect consents to go with the officer to another place in order to seize evidence or prevent its destruction. As soon as such mitigating considerations have lapsed, then the suspect must be brought immediately to the police station (ibid., sect. 25).

268. Once the suspect is brought to the police station, then the officer-in-charge bears a duty to examine whether there were indeed adequate grounds for arrest without a warrant; if those grounds are not met, then the person must be released immediately, unless any of the grounds applicable to arrest with a warrant apply, in which case the officer-in-charge must explain these considerations to the suspect, and then arrest him or release him on bail. The officer-in-charge may not continue the arrest or release the suspect on bail, or set bail conditions, without first having given the person an opportunity to raise his or her claims, after having warned the person of the right to remain silent and that anything that he or she may say may be used as incriminating evidence, and that abstaining from responding to questions may be used as corroborating evidence (ibid., sect. 28 (a)). If the person's attorney is present at the time of the decision by the officer-in-charge, then he or she may also raise oral claims in regard to the arrest or release on bail (sect. 28 (b)). If the officer-in-charge decides to arrest the suspect, then he must immediately explain to the suspect that he is under arrest, the reasons for the arrest, the length of time until the suspect will be brought before a court or released, the suspect's right to have notice of the arrest sent to a close friend or relative and to his attorney, and the right to see an attorney, except in certain extreme circumstances, as discussed below (ibid., sect. 32).

269. In all cases of arrest without a warrant, the officer-in-charge of the police station must prepare a detailed report of all actions taken in respect of the arrest itself, notification of rights, the investigation, decisions regarding the right to meet with legal counsel, the suspect's statements, and so on (sect. 37).

270. Notification of arrest. If a person is arrested, notice must be given promptly to a friend or relative who can reasonably be located, unless the detainee asks that such notice not be sent (ibid., sect. 33). At the request of the person under arrest, notice will also be sent to an attorney of his or her choosing, or to one of the defence attorneys appearing on a list drawn up by the Bar Association and presented to the suspect; if the Minister of Defence gives written confirmation that State security so requires, then notice may be sent only to an attorney who has proper security clearance under the Military Justice Law, 5715-1955. By decision of a District Court judge, notification of a person's arrest for certain security-related offences or for other offences carrying a penalty of at least 10 years' imprisonment may be delayed for up to 48 hours, or be delivered only to a person whom the judge determines, if the Minister of Defence certifies in writing that national security requires that the arrest be kept secret, or if the Inspector General of the Israel Police certifies in writing that the success of the investigation so requires. If the Minister of Defence or Inspector General of the Police are still convinced that an additional delay is necessary for the above reasons, they may apply to the District Court for subsequent 48-hour delays, up to a total of seven days. In the case of certain defined security-related offences, notification may be delayed for a total of 15 days, provided that the Minister of Defence certifies in writing that national security so requires.

Consultation with legal counsel

271. The detainee has a right to consult freely with legal counsel with all due expediency. (ibid., sect. 34 (a)). With the exception of special cases described below, the detainee must be allowed to meet with his lawyer before a judicial hearing regarding the extension of his detention. Evidence gathered from the detainee through violation of the right to confer with counsel may be invalidated to the extent that the lawyer's absence "resulted in infringement of the detainee's free will in giving his confession". Cr.A. 533/82, Zakai v. State of Israel, 38(3) P.D. 66. Meetings with counsel must be held in conditions that ensure their privacy, while allowing supervision of the suspect's movements (Criminal Procedure Law (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, sect. 34 (c)).

272. The realization of the right to confer with legal counsel may be delayed in four sets of circumstances. A senior police officer, of the rank of superintendent or higher, may order, by a reasoned decision in writing, that the meeting with legal counsel shall be delayed for up to several hours if the person under arrest is in the midst of activities related to the criminal investigation, in such a manner that his or her presence is necessary for their completion, and the meeting with counsel will require delaying or postponing those investigative activities, and the officer-in-charge believes that such a delay or postponement is likely to endanger the investigation substantially. An officer-in-charge of similar rank may also order, by reasoned written decision, that the meeting with counsel be delayed for up to 24 hours from the time of arrest, if he is convinced that the meeting with counsel is likely to frustrate or to interfere with the arrest of other suspects in the same manner, or to prevent the discovery or seizure of evidence. The officer-in-charge may delay, once again by reasoned written decision, the meeting with counsel for up to 48 hours after the arrest, if he is convinced that doing so is necessary to protect human life, to prevent commission of an offence, or, in certain security-related offences, that the meeting is likely to interfere with the arrest of other suspects, to disrupt discovery or seizure of evidence, or to interfere with the investigation in some other manner, provided that the detainee has a reasonable opportunity to confer with counsel prior to the initial judicial hearing on his detention (ibid., sect. 35). Finally, persons who are detained on suspicion of involvement in a specific set of security-related offences may be denied the right to confer with legal counsel for a period of up to 10 days, if the officer-in-charge finds that one of the grounds for a 48-hour delay mentioned above apply. At the request of the person under arrest, notice of the postponement and its length must be given to a person of his or her choosing. The President of the District Court may order that a suspect in such security-related offences not meet with counsel for up to 21 days, if the application is made with the approval of the Attorney-General. Decisions delaying the meeting with counsel in security-related cases for up to 10 days may be appealed before the President of the District Court, or, in his or her absence, before the Deputy President, and may be appealed again, if necessary, to the Supreme Court. Decisions delaying the meeting with counsel for more than 10 days are appealable directly to the Supreme Court (ibid., sect. 35).

First judicial hearing

273. In nearly all cases, a person who is arrested other than in the presence of a judge, and whom the officer-in-charge at the police station does not release, with or without bail, must be brought before a judge as soon as possible, and at most within 24 hours of the arrest; otherwise, the arrestee must be released (ibid., sects. 17 (c), 29). The arrestee or his or her representative may immediately file a motion to release him on bail, in which case the judicial hearing often takes place well before the 24-hour period has elapsed.

274. There are three exceptions to the general requirement that a judicial hearing take place within 24 hours. If an officer in charge of the investigation concludes that urgent investigative actions be carried out, that they can only be done while the suspect is under arrest, and that they cannot be postponed until after the suspect is brought before the judge, then the judicial hearing may be postponed for up to an additional 24 hours. In the case of certain specified security-related offences, it is sufficient to show that urgent investigative actions are necessary to postpone the initial judicial hearing for the additional 24-hour period.

275. The second set of exceptions to the 24-hour limit relates to arrest just prior to or in the midst of the weekly Sabbath or religious holidays. If the 24-hour limit expires during the Sabbath or a holiday, then the person under arrest should be brought before a judge before the Sabbath or holiday commences - that is, before 24 hours have passed from the time of arrest - unless a senior police official confirms that, due to special needs of the investigation, it is not possible to do so, in which case the initial hearing must take place no later than four hours after the end of the Sabbath or holiday. Sometimes, however, the holiday itself lasts two days, or it falls immediately after the Sabbath. If these holiday and Sabbath days together last longer than 48 hours, and the arrestee was not brought before the court prior to their commencement, then the initial hearing must take place as soon as possible after the end of the Sabbath or holiday, or within 24 hours after the arrest, whichever is later; if the Sabbath and holiday together are longer than 72 hours, then the initial hearing must take place within 32 hours of the arrest. If, finally, the person under arrest requests that the initial hearing be delayed until after the end of the Sabbath or the holiday, then the initial hearing shall be held as soon as possible after the end of the Sabbath or the holiday (ibid., sect. 29).

276. The other exception relates to certain security-related offences, such as treason and espionage, in which case a senior police officer may order the person to be detained for up to 15 days before he is brought before a judge (see, e.g., Penal Law, sect. 125).

277. At the initial judicial hearing, which usually takes place before a single judge of the Magistrate's Court, the judge must first review the evidence brought by the police to see if there are indeed reasonable grounds to suspect that the detainee in fact committed a crime. The detainee or his counsel may cross-examine the police officer appearing on behalf of the State in this regard. In addition, the court must decide whether or not there exist legitimate grounds to keep the suspect in detention, which may be grouped roughly under three separate categories:

(a) To ensure the integrity and efficiency of the criminal investigation - for example, if there are grounds to believe that the suspect may flee, may destroy, tamper with or conceal evidence, or influence witnesses;

(b) The severity of the offence - in terms of its scope and nature, the damage allegedly caused, the punishment prescribed by law, or particular aggravating circumstances, such as alleged use of violence, employment of a minor or a mentally incompetent person to commit the offence, arrest in flagrante delicto for a serious offence, and so on;

(c) A special public interest in detention of the suspect - including judicial policy regarding widespread offences, such as car theft; concern that the suspect will repeat the offence.

278. The Court will also weigh "external" considerations, such as the detainee's age (Cr.M. 190/79, Doron v. State of Israel, 33(3) P.D. 889), health (Cr.M. 242/66, Amar v. State of Israel 20(4) P.D. 584), financial needs (Cr.M. 12/55, Abu Ghosh v. State of Israel, 9 P.D. 195), the need to care for children in the case of a female detainee (Cr.M. 82/83, Alia v. State of Israel, 37(2) P.D. 742), past criminal record (as an indication of the danger that the investigation may be subverted or that there is a public interest in detaining the person) (Cr.M. 1/73, Lavi v. State of Israel, 27(1) P.D. 254), use of violence by the police against the suspect during investigation (Cr.M. 34/79, Hazan v. State of Israel, 33(1) P.D. 557), the time that has elapsed between the commission of the offence and the detention hearing (Cr.M. 273/78, Attias v. State of Israel, 32(3) P.D. 582), the expected duration of the detention (particularly in cases where the offence in question is not very grave) (Cr.M. 693/84, Levitan v. State of Israel, 40(10) P.D. 551), and other considerations.

279. The court may decide to extend the detention, to release the suspect outright, or to release the suspect on bail; the court may impose conditions on the suspect's release on bail intended to ensure appearance for the investigation, such as depositing the suspect's passport, limitations on freedom of movement, partial or total house arrest, compliance with a "protective order" in cases of family violence, preventing the suspect from having contact with family members or from living at the family house, deposit of a weapon in cases of violent offences, treatment for drug abuse, or periodic appearances at the police station (ibid., sect. 48). The court may also issue an order preventing the suspect's departure from Israel, if there is a reasonable possibility that the suspect will not appear for the investigations, and his or her appearance cannot be ensured by bail or by other conditions. The new statute requires that all conditions of bail and release do not exceed what is necessary in order to achieve the purposes of imposing bail (ibid., sect. 47).

280. Period of arrest before indictment. In the event that the court does not release the suspect at the initial hearing, it may order continued detention for a period of up to 15 consecutive days. If, at the end of this period, the police still wish to keep the suspect in detention for purposes of the criminal investigation, then another hearing is held, and the court's decision is based on the standards noted above; however, the longer the detention, the more weighty the evidence that the suspect actually committed the crime must be in order to justify extending the remand. The total period of detention based on police requests may not exceed 30 days. Detention may be extended beyond the 30-day period only by a decision of the court upon a special motion signed by the Attorney-General.

281. A person under arrest will be released when the criminal investigation against him or her is completed, except if the prosecution notifies the court that a charge sheet is about to be filed, and the court is satisfied that there are prima facie grounds for remand until the end of trial, in which case the court may extend the arrest for a period of not more than five days, during which the charge sheet will be filed; these five days are not in addition to the 30-day period described above, but included within it.

282. Maximum period of arrest prior to indictment Except in certain security-related cases, discussed below, a person must be released from arrest, with or without bail, if a charge sheet has not been filed within 75 days from the time of arrest (ibid., sect. 59), unless a single justice of the Supreme Court orders that the arrest be extended or renewed for subsequent periods of not more than 90 days each.

Appeals

283. All decisions of the court regarding extension of detention, bail, or other conditions of release may be appealed to a higher judicial instance. If the detainee claims that there are "new facts" or "changed circumstances", if considerable time passed since the decision was handed down, or if the person is in detention because of an inability to post bail, then he or she has the right to a "reconsideration" of any decision before the same court that rendered it (ibid., sect. 52). The lower court's decision on "reconsideration" may itself be appealed to a higher instance. If the appeal is to the District Court, the detainee also has a right of second appeal to the Supreme Court.

Court-appointed counsel

284. Prior to the filing of a charge sheet, Israeli law requires court appointment of legal counsel for a person in detention who is mentally ill (Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version], 5742-1982, sect. 15: Mentally Ill Treatment Law, 5751-1991, sect. 18), or under 16 years of age, or when it is necessary to take testimony prior to filing the charge sheet, and the detainee is either blind, deaf, dumb or mentally disabled, or when the detainee is suspected of murder or another offence bearing a penalty of 10 years or more (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 15 (a)). In cases where there is no obligation to appoint legal counsel for a detainee, a court may decide at its discretion to appoint counsel if the detainee has insufficient financial means to do so, if the offence involved bears a penalty of at least 10 years' imprisonment, if the detainee is blind, deaf, dumb or mentally incapacitated, or if for any other reason the court deems that the detainee is unable to manage his own defence adequately (ibid.).

285. Since its establishment in 1995, the Public Defender's Office has established itself in several judicial districts, with on-call public defenders available to represent detainees, among others, at all stages of their detention, and representatives at the various courts to make the process of appointing defence counsel for detainees who qualify under the Public Defender Law, 5755-1995, more efficient.

286. The obligation to appoint counsel for a defendant after a charge sheet is filed is discussed below.

Arrest and detention under other legislation

287. In addition to the general authority noted above to arrest and detain criminal suspects, there are several specially defined circumstances in which police officers or other security personnel may arrest and detain a person for security-related offences.

288. Under sections 124-125 of the Penal Law, 5737-1977, a person suspected of treason or espionage under the relevant provisions of the Penal Law may be arrested and detained without bail for a period of up to 15 days before being brought before a judge by order of a senior police officer. On the application by the Attorney-General, a single judge of the Supreme Court may order the arrest of a suspect in such cases for a period of up to 30 days before a detention hearing on the merits, and may extend such arrest for additional periods of up to 30 days, provided the total period of arrest before the detention hearing is no more than four months.

289. The Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945 (hereinafter "DER") also have special provisions regarding arrest and detention of persons suspected of having committed an offence thereunder. Any soldier or police officer may arrest, without a warrant, a person whom they witness committing an offence under these Regulations, or whom they have reasonable grounds to believe has committed such an offence. When the offence involved is one over which jurisdiction lies with the special military court under the Regulations, then the arrest is made by a warrant, which may be issued by a Magistrate's Court judge, an officer of the IDF or the officer-in-charge of a police station (Regulation 16 (1) of the Defence (Emergency) Regulations). Most arrests made under the DER are treated like ordinary arrests - that is, the person must be brought before a Magistrate's Court judge or before the officer-in-charge of a police station immediately, and in any case must be brought before a judge within 48 hours to review the legality of the detention, as discussed below.

The only exception obtains with regard to offences under the DER for which jurisdiction rests exclusively with the special military court; in such instances, the president of the military court may approve a deviation from the normal procedures, and the person may be brought directly before the military court, instead of the Magistrate's Court, for review of the detention and further proceedings (DER, regulation 17).

290. It may be noted that Regulation 132 of the DER allows for arrest and detention for up to seven days, by order of a police captain, of a person who is found in "suspicious circumstances" and is not able to give an adequate account of his doings at that place.

291. Under the Search Powers in Time of Emergency (Ad Hoc Provision) Law, 5729-1969, police officers, soldiers, and authorized civil defence personnel may, in the course of carrying out searches during a time of public emergency, arrest a person who refuses to allow a search or to come in for questioning, and who is suspected of unlawfully harbouring a knife, firearm or explosive (Search Powers in Time of Emergency (Ad Hoc Provision) Law, sect. 2 (c)).

292. Administrative detention is discussed under article 4.

293. The Extradition Law, 5714-1954, provides for arrest, by written order of the Attorney-General or a senior police official, of a person when there are grounds to believe that he or she is subject to extradition. The person must be brought before a judge within 48 hours, and may be detained for additional periods of up to 15 days each. Any extension of detention beyond 30 days must be filed by the Attorney-General, and in any case a formal request for extradition must be filed within 50 days. See H.C.J. 182/72, Marenhal v. Attorney-General; Extradition Law, section 22.

294. Arrest and detention may also be employed by courts as a means to secure the orderly conduct of legal proceedings. For example, a court may issue a warrant to compel the attendance of a defendant or witness who has been summoned to a trial but failed to appear. If such a person is not released on bail by the police, then he or she may be arrested and brought before a judge, who may decide to detain the person, and for how long, or to release on bail. A judicial arrest warrant may be issued against a person in the context of contempt of court proceedings, either if that person does not appear in court for a hearing in proceedings against himself or herself, or refuses to comply with a judicial decision (Contempt of Court Ordinance, sect. 5).

295. The law and procedure regarding imprisonment of a judgement debtor is discussed under article 11; arrest of a person in the context of deportation proceedings is discussed under articles 12 and 13. Under the Rabbinical Courts Jurisdiction (Marriage and Divorce) Law, 5713-1953, a person may be imprisoned, at the request of the Attorney-General, in order to compel compliance with a Rabbinical Court order to give or accept a letter of divorce under Jewish religious law, or to release the widow of a man's brother from levirate obligations (halitza). A person may also be imprisoned as an alternative to payment of certain criminal fines.

Remand after a charge sheet is filed (until the end of trial)

296. In the event that the District Attorney decides to file a charge sheet against the suspect in detention, then a request may be filed with the court, together with the charge sheet, to remand the defendant until the end of trial. The standards for ordering detention until the end of trial, while similar to those for arrest during investigation, are stricter and more thorough in several basic respects, as is necessary in view of the severe restriction on liberty entailed by remand until the end of trial.

297. One precondition for detention until the end of trial is that the defendant must be represented by legal counsel at the remand hearing, unless he or she has clearly stated a wish to represent himself or herself. In the latter case, the court must try to convince the defendant to be represented by counsel, either of the defendant's own choosing or appointed by the court, and must be convinced that the defendant is in fact capable of adequately managing his or her own defence. If it is not so convinced, then it may appoint defence counsel on its own initiative. In practice, however, it is extremely rare that a defendant represents himself or herself at the remand hearing. The court will delay the hearing until the defendant (who wishes to be represented) has found counsel of his or her choice, or the court has appointed counsel to whom the defendant consents, for a period of up to seven days, which may be extended for additional similar periods not totalling more than 30 days. In the event of such delay, the court will hold a preliminary hearing without counsel to see whether the other criteria for detention are met, so as to determine whether there are grounds to detain the defendant until he engages counsel.

298. The first substantive requirement for remand until the end of trial is that prima facie proof exists of the defendant's guilt. Upon filing the charge sheet, and prior to the remand hearing, all evidence gathered during the police investigation that is not classified must be shown to the defendant and his or her legal counsel (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 74). The court undertakes a thorough investigation into the evidence assembled by the police, to decide whether, on its face, it indeed could support a finding that the defendant is guilty of the offence with which he or she is charged. Although the court will not consider evidence that would be inadmissible at trial, it does not enter into the credibility or weight of the evidence at this stage; rather, it reviews the evidence "as it is", including contradictory evidence and other flaws in the prosecution's case (Cr.M. 901/89, Ben Hamou v. State of Israel, 43(4) P.D. 526).

299. If the court is convinced that prima facie proof of the defendant's guilt exists, then it considers whether or not there are grounds justifying detention until the end of trial. Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law stipulates four general justifications for detention at this stage:

(a) If there is reasonable cause to believe that releasing or not arresting the accused will result in obstruction of justice, in the evasion of trial or punishment by the accused, in concealment of property, tampering with witnesses or with evidence in another manner;

(b) There is reasonable cause to believe that the accused will endanger the security of another person, public safety or the security of the State; certain serious offences are deemed to create a rebuttable presumption that such a danger exists;

(c) The court has released the accused on bail, but the bail has not been deposited to the court's satisfaction, or the defendant has violated a condition of his release on bail, or there exist other lawful grounds for cancelling bail.

(ibid.)

300. Even if the court is satisfied that there are grounds for detention as noted above (with the exception of violation of bail conditions), it may not order the defendant's detention unless it is convinced that the purpose of the detention cannot be achieved by release on bail and by imposing other conditions of release, such as restrictions on freedom of movement, which are less drastic a restriction on the defendant's liberty. As with hearings on detention during the investigation stage, the court will also consider "external" considerations, such as the defendant's personal circumstances, the time that has elapsed since alleged commission of the offence, and so on.

301. After weighing all of the above considerations, the court decides, as a matter of discretion, whether or not to detain the defendant until the end of trial, to release him on bail, or to release him without bail if the sufficiency of the evidence is doubtful.

302. If a defendant is detained after the filing of the charge sheet for a cumulative period of 30 days and the trial has not begun, then he or she must be released, unless the defendant or defence counsel requests a postponement of the opening of trial (ibid., sect. 60). A Supreme Court justice may extend the detention or order the detention anew, for subsequent periods of not more than 90 days at a time, even if the trial has not commenced (ibid., sect. 62). The trial is deemed to have begun when the charge sheet is read in court before the defendant (H.C.J. 304/72, Ze'evi v. State of Israel, 26(2) P.D. 490). When the defendant or his representative makes an initial appearance to claim that he is unfit to stand trial due to mental illness or disability, the trial will be deemed to have commenced for purposes of the 30-day requirement. (Cr.F. 336/66, Cohen v. State of Israel, 57 P.M. 321.)

303. If the defendant has been in detention for a cumulative period of nine months following filing of the charge sheet and the court has not issued a verdict, then the defendant must be released (ibid., sect. 61), unless a single justice of the Supreme Court extends or renews the detention for periods of up to 90 days.

304. As with detention decisions prior to filing the charge sheet, any decision regarding detention until the end of the trial or release on bail may be appealed to a higher judicial instance, before a single judge. If the jurisdiction over the offence in question lies with the Magistrate's Court, then the defendant may be able to appeal twice: if the decision on first appeal to the District Court is unfavourable, then he may appeal that decision before a single judge of the Supreme Court. The defendant also may file for a "reconsideration" of the decision in light of new facts or changed circumstances that ought to have a bearing on his or her detention or terms of release.

305. Compensation for unlawful arrest. Persons who are arrested and released without a charge sheet being filed against them may receive compensation from the State Treasury for the detention and for legal expenses if the court finds that "there were no grounds for the arrest" or that "other circumstances justify awarding compensation" (ibid., sect. 38 (a)). The court may also order the person who filed the criminal complaint to compensate the detainee if it finds that the complaint was groundless or made in bad faith. The amount of compensation is fixed in accordance with the average wage. In addition, the detainee may file a civil suit for false arrest under the Civil Wrongs Ordinance, in which case the amount of compensation is not limited by the regulations, but rather subject to the principles of tort law, and generally results in much more substantial compensation awards.

Minors and mentally ill persons

306. The Youth (Adjudication, Punishment, and Modes of Treatment) Law, 5731-1971, sets specific safeguards on arrest and detention of minors. Children under 14 years of age who are arrested must be brought before a judge within 12 hours of arrest, and only for "special reasons" may the officer-in-charge of a police station delay the initial hearing for up to 12 additional hours. Under current law, minors between the ages of 14 and 18 must be brought before a judge within 24 hours of arrest (sect. 10 (2) of the Law), unless such "special reasons" justify a delay of up to an additional 24 hours. Youth are held in a separate detention facility intended especially for minors, or at least in a separate wing of a prison or police lock-up where there is no contact whatsoever with the adult detainees or prisoners. Minors who are detained do not sleep at a police station if there is a detention facility for minors in the area. A minor may not be detained before indictment for more than 10 consecutive days, or 20 days in total, unless the Attorney-General so requests (sect. 10 (4) of the Law). In addition to the grounds for detention applicable to adults, a minor may be detained if doing so is necessary to ensure his or her personal security or to separate the minor from an undesirable person (sect. 10 (3) of the Law). Other special procedures applicable to minors are discussed under articles 10 and 24.

307. Mentally ill and mentally disabled persons Reference is made to the discussion of involuntary hospitalization of mentally ill persons under article 7.

308. In general, for the purposes of arrest and detention in the criminal process, mentally ill and mentally disabled persons are subject to the same law that applies to all adults. However, the Mentally Ill Treatment Law, 5751-1991, contains special provisions regarding the place of detention for such persons, medical examinations and appointment of counsel. If, on the basis of a psychiatric evaluation, the court deems that the suspect has a mental illness which requires hospitalization, then it may order that the suspect will be detained in a psychiatric hospital or in the psychiatric wing of a prison (sect. 16 (a) of the Mentally Ill Treatment Law). Such a hospitalization order may not be given except in the presence of the suspect's legal counsel; if he or she has no legal counsel, the court must appoint one (sect. 18 of the Mentally Ill Treatment Law). The suspect need not be present at such a hearing if the District Psychiatrist or his or her authorized deputy determines that the hearing cannot be held in the suspect's presence, or that the suspect's mental health would be harmed thereby. (ibid.). The suspect may appeal the hospitalization order to a higher judicial instance, or may apply for "reconsideration" of the order based on new facts or changed circumstances.

309. Appointment of counsel. Once a charge sheet is filed against a person who the court believes may be mentally ill, he or she must be represented by counsel in all proceedings. Prior to filing of a charge sheet, such a person must be represented by counsel not only in proceedings related to a hospitalization order, as noted above, but also in any other case in which a detainee is entitled to representation under applicable law. In practice, however, the court almost always will use its discretion to appoint counsel for a mentally ill person in all proceedings during the investigation stages.

Article 10 - Treatment of persons deprived of their liberty

310. As mentioned in the discussion under article 7 above, the right of persons under detention to conditions ensuring basic maintenance of their human dignity is acknowledged as a fundamental right in Israeli law. The enactment of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty in 1992 has spurred significant legislative reform bearing on the treatment of detainees, as well as policy changes in the education, hiring and training of police and prison personnel who deal with detainees. Some of these reforms are discussed under articles 7 and 9 above; others are examined below.

311. The Prisons Service operates 15 incarceration facilities in Israel, 3 of which function as detention facilities and 12 as prisons. From an administrative standpoint, these facilities are divided into three geographic regions (north, central and south), such that in each region there is one maximum-security prison and one detention facility. There is one incarceration facility, named Neve Tirza, for female convicts and defendants bound over until the end of trial. The Israel Police administers nine regional detention facilities; in addition, many of the 60 police stations across the country have several detention cells, generally used for brief detentions or prior to transfer to one of the regional facilities.

312. There is a certain overlap in the types of populations handled by the Police and the Prisons Service. In addition to convicted criminals sentenced to terms of imprisonment, the Prisons Service facilities are used for detention of persons imprisoned in the context of civil proceedings (such as non-payment of alimony or contempt of court); for certain suspects, defendants and convicts in security-related criminal cases; for administrative detainees; and for defendants remanded until the end of their trial. Suspects in security-related cases who have not been charged with criminal offences, as well as some who have been formally indicted, may be held during the course of the criminal investigation or the trial in either Police or Prison Service facilities; if such persons are convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, however, they will serve their sentence in a Prison Service facility.

Supervision by public authorities

313. Detention conditions and treatment of detainees are subject to several overlapping systems of review and supervision by public authorities. In addition to the investigation and prosecution of disciplinary and criminal investigations against law enforcement officials described under article 7, and the procedures for filing detainees' internal complaints or petitions to the courts regarding any matter related to their detention as discussed further on under this article, there are four existing layers of institutions with auditing authority over the workings of the prisons and detention facilities. First, the Israel Police and the Prisons Service maintain internal audit departments, which are charged with ensuring compliance with standing orders in force. Second, the State Comptroller has general authority to audit the operation of any official entity. It has used this power to investigate detention practices, though not, thus far, in relation to physical conditions of detention. In addition, both the Prisons Service and the Israel Police have independent, high-ranking governmental auditors with broad powers. Under the Prisons Ordinance, the Attorney-General and Justices of the Supreme Court are granted full auditing powers ex officio with regard to any prison facility in the country; District and Magistrate's Court judges have auditing powers over prisons within the area of their jurisdiction. In addition, the Minister for Internal Security has used his authority to appoint literally dozens of official auditors to investigate the operations of particular prisons. These appointed auditors are generally lawyers at the State Attorney's Office or one of the District Attorney's offices; but they have also included an auditor on behalf of the Israel Bar Association, the members of the Council for Criminology in Israel, and lawyers from various government ministries. Finally, two Knesset Committees - the Constitution, Legislation and Law Committee and the Interior Committee - have assumed auditing powers over detention facilities to ensure compliance with legislative requirements and protection of the rights of detainees.

314. Official auditors may enter prisons over which they are appointed at any time, and may examine conditions of detention, the treatment of prisoners, the orderly operation of the prison and the degree of compliance with any legislative or other provisions. The auditor may speak with any prisoner privately, and prisoners may themselves request an interview with the auditor. Prison officials are obligated to provide the auditor with any information or document at his or her request; security-related files, however, may be released only to auditors who are Supreme Court Justices (Prisons Ordinance, sects. 71-72 F).

315. Independent official auditors are also appointed by the Minister of Internal Security regarding police detention lock-ups. These latter auditors are selected from among lawyers at the Ministry of Justice, and have powers similar to those granted to Prison Service auditors. See Attorney-General Directive No. 62.003.

316. Over the past several years, conditions of detention at police lock-ups have been subjected to thorough scrutiny by governmental authorities as well as NGOs. During 1994 and 1995, the Israel Police and the Ministry of Police (now the Ministry for Internal Security) carried out its own investigation of physical conditions at detention facilities, and cooperated with investigations made by NGOs such as the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, and by the Israel Bar Association. Justices of the Supreme Court have made widely publicized visits to detention facilities, at which they have called for rebuilding or closing down particular facilities at which conditions were deemed inadequate. Many detention facilities have been found to be severely overcrowded, and to lack facilities and basic services necessary for maintaining reasonably satisfactory living conditions. Some detention cells lack toilets, and many cells have open toilets which are not separated from the rest of the cell; many cells have been found to lack adequate lighting and ventilation, clean mattresses and blankets; detainees are not generally given utensils for personal hygiene, such as soap, a toothbrush, toothpaste and towels. Detention lock-ups, unlike Prisons Service facilities, do not have social workers on staff, education and rehabilitation programmes or other social services. The inadequacy of facilities and services has especially serious consequences in view of the fact that a significant portion of the population at these lock-ups do not work, and may be detained for many months, or even over a year, until their criminal trial has been decided.

317. The Israel Police and other governmental authorities have taken concrete steps on several different fronts to improve conditions at detention facilities. In the aftermath of a series of investigative reports submitted by official and independent bodies in 1994 and 1995, as mentioned above, the Israel Police decided on a series of remedial actions, including massive reconstruction and refurbishing of physical facilities at detention facilities around the country. A $4.5 million refurbishment project has already begun at the Abu Kabir lock-up in the Tel-Aviv area, and similar programmes are planned for the Russian Compound lock-up in Jerusalem and the Kishon lock-up in Haifa.

318. These physical improvements have been accompanied by legislative reform, primarily the enactment of the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Detention) Law, 5756-1996, and detailed implementing regulations, which stipulate minimum conditions of detention and detainees' rights. As discussed in respect of article 9, this new statute sets minimum standards for all persons in detention; prior to its enactment, such standards had been codified and applied only for persons in the custody of the Prisons Service. Moreover, under section of the new statute and regulation 2 of the implementing regulations, detainees are to be held only at a detention facility which meets all of the requirements of the law regarding infrastructure, services and detainees' rights. The Minister of Internal Security may rescind his approval of a particular detention facility at his discretion, if the conditions or the detainees' ability to enjoy the full range of their rights under the new law are sufficiently inadequate. If, instead, the Minister orders that certain shortcomings at a facility be repaired to comply with the provisions of the law, and they are not so repaired within a reasonable time, then the Minister must rescind his declaration that the facility is fit for operation (Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest and Detention) (Conditions of Detention) Regulations, 5757-1997, regulation 2).

319. Physical plant requirements. Under the new law and regulations, each cell in a detention facility must have adequate lighting and a window affording adequate ventilation from the outdoors, or, if there is no such window, then reasonable alternate ventilation must be installed. Each cell must have a sink and toilet, and the toilet must be physically separate from the living area of the cell to enable privacy, as must showers, if located in the cell. Any cells lacking a toilet or sink may be used only for very restricted purposes and for a limited time period, mainly to prevent attempts to destroy or conceal evidence in a criminal investigation, particularly in narcotics cases.

320. All cells built after the enactment of the implementing regulations (May 1997) must have a table, seats, and shelves for the detainees' personal use, must have no more than four beds, must afford an average area of not less than 4.5 m² for each detainee, sufficient electric capacity to accommodate heating and cooling appliances, television, and other appliances that detainees are entitled to use. Showers must be separated from the toilet. To the extent possible, all refurbishments of existing detention facilities should observe the above criteria as well (regulation 3).

321. Hygiene and medical treatment. The new regulations require that every cell be painted at least twice a year, disinfected and fumigated at least once annually or according to the instructions of the physician of the detention facility. The detention facility must provide detainees in every cell with adequate materials to clean the cell, which they are obliged to do (regulation 4). Each detainee will be given a bed, mattresses and clean blankets, and a reasonable quantity of personal hygiene materials, such as soap and toilet paper. Detainees are entitled to shower once a day on hot days, except if they are suspected of attempting to destroy or conceal evidence held on or inside their body, in which case, they may be prevented from showering for no more than three days (regulations 6-7). Persons whose detention has been extended by a judge for a period exceeding 24 hours, and who are unable to have someone bring them a change of clothes, sheets, a towel and basic means of personal hygiene, shall be given all of these by the detention facility. Detainees are also guaranteed medical treatment as required to maintain their health, and to suitable health supervision as ordered by a physician (Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, sect. 9 (b) (1)).

322. Food and exercise. All detention facilities are obligated to provide detainees with three regular meals a day, of a type and quantity that will maintain the detainee's health. Detainees with special dietary requirements based on reasons of health may receive such food with the approval of the physician at the facility (regulation 8).

323. All detainees are entitled to a daily walk outdoors during daylight hours, if the conditions at the detention facility so allow; no person may be detained for more than seven days at a facility which cannot provide the opportunity for a daily constitutional outdoors, and must be transferred thereafter to a facility that can. However, the person responsible for investigation of a particular detainee who has not yet been indicted may, by a reasoned written decision, order the commander of a detention facility to restrict or deny the right to outdoor exercise if necessary to protect the integrity of the investigation. Detainees whose right to exercise has been restricted are still entitled to outdoor exercise, not necessarily during daylight hours, for one hour at least every seven days for a period of up to one month. A senior investigation official, having a rank of chief superintendent or higher, may extend the period of restriction on exercise for additional 15-day periods if necessary to protect the criminal investigation (regulation 9).

324. In addition, the commander of a detention facility may restrict the right to outdoor exercise of a particular detainee to protect his or her own safety, in which case the detainee will be allowed outdoor exercise of at least one hour every five days (ibid.).

325. Use of telephone. Every detainee who has been indicted has the right to use the telephone once a day. Detainees who have not yet been formally charged cannot use the telephone unless the official in charge of the criminal investigation decides that such use will not impair a criminal investigation in progress (regulation 10); however, unindicted detainees may file a written request to the commander of the facility to have a telephone message sent to his or her attorney, except in the extreme cases in which the detainee's exercise of the right to meet with counsel has been delayed (regulation 10).

326. Visitation rights. A detainee who has been formally charged may receive visitors, in addition to legal counsel, once a week for 30 minutes, unless extended by the commander of the detention facility. Those who have not yet been indicted may not receive visitors unless the official in charge of the criminal investigation confirms that doing so will not impair the progress of the investigation, in which case he may place conditions on the manner of visitation to ensure the integrity of the investigation (regulation 12). Administrative detainees are entitled to receive visits from immediate family members every two weeks; more frequent visits, as well as visits by persons other than immediate family and legal counsel, may be granted at the discretion of the director of the prison. The total number of visitors in any particular visit is limited to three persons in addition to the detainee's spouse and children, unless the prison director permits otherwise. As discussed under article 7, visitation rights of administrative detainees may be restricted only for reasons of State security. If such visitation rights are withheld for more than two months, the detainee may appeal before the Minister of Defence. All restrictions on the visitation rights of administrative detainees must be reviewed at least once every two months, if not earlier at the request of the detainee (Emergency Powers (Detention)(Conditions of Confinement in Administrative Detention) Regulations, 5741-1981, regulation 11). As with all decisions affecting the detainee, restrictions on visitation rights may be appealed before the District Court, and thereafter to the Supreme Court if necessary.

327. Correspondence. Under the new law, indicted detainees may send and receive letters, and may receive writing implements upon request; in cases of financial need, the detainee may be exempt from paying postal charges (regulation 13). Detainees who have not yet been indicted may send letters if the official in charge of the criminal investigation confirms that doing so will not impair the investigation; if correspondence is allowed, the official in charge of the investigation may impose conditions intended to ensure that the integrity of the investigation, including review and censorship of the detainee's letters (ibid.). Administrative detainees have the right to receive mail, and may normally send four letters and four postcards per month, not including correspondence with legal counsel or with official authorities

(Regulation 14 of the Emergency Powers (Detention) (Conditions of Confinement in Administrative Detention) Regulations, 5741-1981), or more with the permission of the prison director. The right of administrative detainees to send and receive mail may be restricted by the prison director if he is convinced that doing so is necessary for reasons of State security; in such circumstances, the prison director does not have to notify the detainee that a letter written by or to him has not been forwarded, except in the case of letters to or from family members (ibid.).

328. Furloughs. Detainees who have not yet been convicted and sentenced are not granted furloughs except by court order, or by special permission in extenuating circumstances. While the right of convicted and sentenced prisoners to furloughs is not provided for in primary legislation, furloughs are granted according to the provisions of Prisons Commission standing orders which have the status of law (sect. 80 C (a) of the Prisons Ordinance). Such prisoners are categorized, within 30 days of their incarceration, into one of three groups for the purpose of determining their rights to furloughs: those who may not be granted furloughs except by permission of the Minister of Internal Security, either because their leaving the prison may pose a danger to public order and security, or due to an outstanding arrest warrant, or those who are detained by virtue of an extradition or deportation order; those who may be given furloughs according to conditions determined by the Israel Police; and those who may be granted furloughs with no such conditions. In general, prisoners have the right to furloughs after having completed one quarter of their sentence, or three years, whichever is earlier. Prisoners who are sentenced to life imprisonment may be granted furloughs after seven years, even if their sentence is not commuted to a specific period by the President of the State. The length of the furlough is between 36 and 96 hours, and the frequency varies between once every three months and once a week (from Friday afternoon to Sunday morning), depending on the type of offence which the prisoner committed, his behaviour record in the prison, the type of rehabilitation programme in which the prisoner is participating, and other considerations. The interval between furloughs may be shortened in order to enable the prisoner to observe religious holidays outside of prison, or for family or medical reasons. In addition, furloughs may be granted even though the prisoner has not completed the minimum portion of his sentence, or even if the interval between furloughs has not transpired, in special circumstances, such as births, marriages or deaths in the family, memorial services, vocational testing, preparation of a rehabilitation programme, or medical reasons.

329. Persons imprisoned in the context of civil proceedings may be granted furloughs of 48 hours after having completed one quarter of his or her term of imprisonment or three months, whichever is earlier, and additional furloughs of 48 hours once every three months thereafter. If the term of civil imprisonment is four months or less, then the prisoner may be granted a furlough after having completed half of his sentence.

330. Conjugal visits. Under standing orders now in force, conjugal visits are allowed for criminal prisoners who are not eligible for furloughs. Prisoners who have non-married spouses are accorded the same rights to conjugal visits as married prisoners. Recently, the Prisons Service has broadened its conjugal visits policy, to enable such visitation during daytime hours, together with visits by the prisoner's children. A new facility dedicated to housing prisoners during their conjugal visits is being built at the Ayalon prison, and the Prisons Service has planned the construction of several more such facilities.

331. Religious observance. All detainees must be given the opportunity to observe the commandments of their religion, to the extent practicable. The participation of a particular detainee in group prayers may be restricted if the commander of the facility has reasonable grounds to believe that the detainee's presence will constitute a danger to the security or order of the detention facility, or to the detainee's own security (regulation 14).

332. Security detainees. The conditions of detention mentioned above apply to detainees suspected of security-related offences, with a few modifications (regulation 22), which allow restriction, for example, of the right to use the telephone and outdoor exercise. The use of other means of contact with the outside world (such as the use of a television or radio or receiving newspapers) may be restricted for security detainees who have not yet been indicted if the official in charge of the investigation believes that allowing such contact will harm the investigation (ibid.). The types of personal effects to which a security detainee is entitled, the special conditions for allowing or restricting their use to pre-indictment detainees, and the number or amount of such articles that may be held at any one time are stipulated in the new regulations.

333. The other principal policy initiative aimed at alleviating the stress on police detention lock-ups has been to examine the feasibility of transferring virtually all detainees and detention facilities to the Prisons Service. Although recent legislation requires detention facilities to meet the criteria discussed above, Prisons Service facilities are still better equipped to provide a full array of support services and facilities enabling reasonably dignified living conditions for detainees. Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that defendants remanded until the end of trial should be under the custody of the Prisons Service. Due to overcrowding, such defendants often remain in detention lock-ups for periods far longer than such facilities were intended to hold them.

334. The new policy of transferring responsibility for all detainees to the Prisons Service has been inaugurated in a trial programme at the Ohalei Keidar detention facility in the Negev region, under which suspects who have not yet been formally charged with an offence are being placed in the custody of the Prisons Service. The rights and conditions granted to detainees participating in the trial programme are thoroughly set out in joint standing orders of the Police and the Prisons Service. Among other things, a physician must confirm that the physical conditions in each detention cell will not harm the detainees' health; the cell must have sufficient lighting to enable reading without undue effort, must have sufficient ventilation approved by a physician, a sink and water faucet, a hot-water shower and toilet which afford privacy, an electrical outlet for use of appliances, a table or writing shelf and chair, and the detainee must be allowed to heat the cell subject to prison procedures. The cells must be painted and disinfected periodically, and the detainees must be given adequate means to maintain personal hygiene, including a daily hot shower and shave. Detainees must have a bed, mattress and blankets for his or her own exclusive use. Blankets must be laundered or changed periodically. Those detainees who do not have a towel, washing or laundering utensils and cannot obtain them from persons outside the detention facility may receive such utensils for personal use during the period of detention. Detainees are allowed to maintain religious observance, and to receive a special diet on religious grounds. They are entitled to at least three nutritious meals per day at accepted mealtimes, with no more than 6 hours between meals and no more than 12 hours from the final evening meal until breakfast the next morning; special diets must be provided by the detention facility if necessary for reasons of health. Detainees may wear their own clothes, and must be given proper clothing if they cannot procure such clothes by themselves. They are entitled to a daily walk outdoors for at least one hour, to prompt and adequate medical care, and to dental care when necessary.

335. The conditions of detention for incarcerated convicts, and for those defendants remanded until the end of trial who are detained in Prisons Service facilities, are governed by the Prisons Ordinance and regulations thereunder, as well as the new Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law discussed in the preceding paragraphs. In addition to those conditions of detention previously described under articles 7, 8, 9 and this article, the following rights and conditions for convicted prisoners (and remanded defendants in Prisons Service custody) may be noted:

(a) The right to visits from clergy, and to an organized room for group prayer;

(b) Educational programmes, with special emphasis on promoting literacy, use of the prison library, and special arrangements to allow for advancing the education of individual prisoners during their spare time;

(c) Rehabilitation programmes, both inside and outside the prison;

(d) Detainees in security-related cases are treated differently in some respects than the ordinary criminal population. Some of their conditions of detention are more generous, for instance with respect to visitation rights, the right to outdoor exercise, and the right to receive special food; other conditions, such as with regard to furloughs and use of telephone, are more restrictive.

336. Separation among detainee populations. In Prisons Service incarceration facilities, separation is maintained between male and female detainees, between convicted prisoners and defendants or detainees who have not been convicted, between minors and adults, between persons detained in the context of civil proceedings and other detainees, between administrative detainees and other detainees, and, to the extent possible, between first-time and recidivist offenders. Under the new Arrest Law, all detention facilities must maintain a separation between detainees and convicted prisoners, and, to the extent possible, between persons who have not yet been indicted and those who have, as well as between first-time detainees and recidivists. In practice, Jewish and Arab prisoners or detainees may be separated from one another, to a greater or lesser extent, if necessary to maintain order within the prison.

337. Security-related suspects, defendants and convicts are held separately from the rest of the population at the facility, both for their own protection as well as to maintain order among the detainee population as a whole. To the extent possible, prisoners who are undergoing drug rehabilitation are separated from the general prison population.

338. The confinement of mentally ill persons in psychiatric hospitals is discussed under article 7. Convicted prisoners who are found to suffer from mental illness are held at the mental health facility at Ayalon prison, which is staffed by Health Ministry employees while remaining under the overall administrative responsibility of the Prisons Service. Police detention lock-ups do not have separate wings or facilities for mentally ill detainees. Rather, to the extent that the concern is raised at any stage of the criminal process that a person detained for any reason may suffer from a mental illness, then the court or the District Psychiatrist may order that the detainee be transferred to a mental hospital and held there for observation under conditions of detention, in order to determine whether the detainee needs treatment for a mental illness, or whether he or she is fit to stand trial, accordingly.

Complaint procedures

339. Detainees held in police lock-ups and in Prisons Service facilities may avail themselves of several, parallel complaint procedures regarding their conditions of detention or their treatment at the detention facility. In addition to those disciplinary and criminal procedures against law enforcement officials described under article 7, detainees may file complaints regarding the conditions of their detention as described below.

340. Prisons Service. Persons in the custody of the Prisons Service may file a complaint with the director of the prison at which they are held in respect of the conditions of detention. Such a complaint may be filed in writing or, at specified times, orally. Upon submission of any such complaint, the director of the prison must investigate the matter and give an answer to the detainee within seven days, or, in urgent cases, within three days. Should the detainee not receive a response within that period, or should the response be unsatisfactory - or should the complaint involve the director of the prison himself - then the detainee may apply to the Prisons Commissioner, and the prison director is bound to deliver such complaints to the Commissioner. The Commissioner must respond to such complaints within 14 days, or within 6 days in urgent cases. The deadlines for response to complaints may be extended if the matter in question requires an in-depth investigation, either by law or as a practical matter. The complainant must be notified of the reason for the delayed response in such cases. See generally Prisons Regulations, 1978, regulation 24 A.

341. The standing orders governing the trial programme at the Ohalei Keidar detention facility mentioned above, require a warden to circulate among the detainees in that programme once a day, and to register any complaints regarding the conditions of their detention. Detainees may also file written complaints directly with the officer-in-charge. In either case, under these standing orders, a response must be given within 48 hours, unless, as above, a more thorough investigation is required by law or in practice.

342. In addition to the internal complaint procedure described above, detainees at Prisons Service facilities are entitled to file petitions against governmental authorities or officials "in any matter related to his imprisonment or detention" directly to the District Court in the region where the prison is located. In practice, such petitions are often heard at the prison itself by a single District Court judge who comes periodically to the prison for that purpose. The volume of such complaints has grown dramatically following the institution of hearings at the prison. It is estimated that approximately 10,000 petitions are filed and adjudicated annually, on matters small and large. Decisions of the District Court may be appealed by leave to the Supreme Court. In addition, the Supreme Court, sitting as High Court of Justice, retains residual jurisdiction over such petitions in appropriate circumstances (Prisons Ordinance, sects. 62 A-62 D).

343. Police lock-ups. Under current law and practice, detainees in police lock-ups may file petitions with regard to any matter related to their detention to the District Court where the lock-up is located. In practice, most detainees in police lock-ups must be brought before a judge periodically in any case to determine whether to release them or to extend the detention during the criminal investigation, and during these detention hearings complaints regarding conditions of detention are commonly raised and adjudicated. See Police Standing Order No. 12.03.01, Yalkut Pirsumim 4230, 5754 (14 July 1994), p. 4228.

Publicity

344. A loose-leaf folder outlining the rights of detainees and minimum conditions of detention in Prisons Service facilities is available in the library of every prison facility. Under the new statute dealing with arrest and detention mentioned above, a description of detainees' principal rights and duties must be posted in a prominent place at each detention facility (Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Detention) Law, 1996, sect. 9 (d)).

345. During the preparation of this report, a copy of the United Nations Minimum Standard Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, as well as the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, was forwarded to the Legal Adviser of the Prisons Service at his request, so that the Prisons Service can review the Minimum Standard Rules and the degree to which Israeli law and practice is in actual compliance with them. From the discussion under this article, it would appear that the criteria in the Minimum Rules are guaranteed by Israeli legislation and standing orders of the authorities involved.

346. Rehabilitation. The preparation of convicted prisoners for a successful, law-abiding life after imprisonment has always been one of the overarching policy priorities of the Prisons Service, and of the criminal process in general. Provided that the individual prisoner is willing to participate in rehabilitation programmes, the Prisons Service encourages enrolment in a variety of programmes designed to give the prisoner improved employment skills, and to ease the social transition to life in the outside world. While a full description of the rehabilitation programmes and activities currently operating would far exceed the scope of the present report, the following activities may be noted:

(a) Drug rehabilitation;

(b) Separation of chosen groups of persons from the rest of the prison population, based on good behaviour and other indicators;

(c) Work outside the prison: prisoners who have completed part of their sentence with good behaviour may be allowed to work for pay at an appropriate job outside the prison and near their home community, or to begin a course of study, either with or without an escort. Such prisoners in a "work rehabilitation" programme are separated from the rest of the prison population.

(Prison Regulations, regulations 50-60)

Treatment of juvenile offenders

347. In addition to the discussion of juvenile offenders below, reference is made to special laws and practices for the protection of juveniles, including in cases involving violence within the family, under articles 23 and 24.

348. Israeli legislation provides for special handling of juveniles throughout the criminal process in a manner that is intended to minimize recidivism and to promote rehabilitation. The Israel Police and welfare authorities follow detailed, binding procedures that aim, among other things, to prevent as much as possible the public exposure of the minor's involvement in criminal activity, his or her arrest, investigation, trial or treatment; and to remove non-recidivists as quickly as possible from the cycle of criminal behaviour (Police Standing Order 14.01.05, sect. 2).

349. Children under 12 years of age may not be held responsible for a criminal offence by law. As a consequence, Israel Police standing orders forbid the arrest, opening of a criminal investigation file, or the taking of fingerprints or photographs of such children (Israel Police Standing Order 14.01.05, sect. 3 (b) (1)). The statute of limitations on any offence allegedly committed by a minor is one year, except if the Attorney-General allows prosecution after such period (Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, 5731-1971, sect. 14).

350. Criminal proceedings involving juvenile suspects take place in special juvenile courts, which must hold their proceedings in a location where other trials are not taking place, or, if the same facility is used, then the juvenile proceedings must be held at a different time of day (ibid., sect. 8 (a)). In practice, certain District and Magistrate's Court judges devote part of their time to juvenile cases, which are generally heard in the regular court buildings outside of normal court hours. Proceedings are generally held in closed-door session (Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, sect. 9), and, in appropriate circumstances, in the judge's chambers (Juvenile Offenders Regulations, 1938, regulation 4). Juveniles are to be physically separated from the adult detainee population in all phases of the process: in transport to and from court hearings, in the holding cells at the court, and in detention facilities. With respect to the last, relevant legislation requires that minors be detained only in a separate detention facility, or in a separate wing of a lock-up that allows for total segregation, including prevention of all physical or eye contact, between the juvenile and adult detainee populations. The only current exception to this requirement applies in the case of detention at a police station for the purpose of investigation, in which case the juvenile must still be separated completely from adult suspects and detainees, albeit not necessarily in a separate wing or facility.

351. In practice, the severe overcrowding that has beleaguered Israel's detention lock-ups and prisons generally has had, in certain cases, the unfortunate result of making it virtually impossible to maintain total separation between the juvenile and adult populations. Furthermore, even in situations which allow for separation between juveniles and adults, the lack of space does not always enable separation among different types of juveniles needing special care or supervision. Two interrelated reforms are being undertaken to redress these inadequacies. The refurbishing programme mentioned above is intended, among other things, to bring physical conditions at detention facilities to the point where they enable actual compliance with the letter of the law. At the same time, a proposed amendment to the Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, prepared by the Ministries of Justice and Internal Security, requires dramatic broadening of the necessary separations between different juvenile detainees. Among other things, the proposed amendment requires that no juvenile be detained together with other juveniles during the first 24 hours of his or her detention; that no juvenile may be detained together with others if he or she is under 14 years old, or is suspected of having a mental or emotional disability, or whose safety may be at risk for any other reason; that a separation must be maintained between juvenile detainees more than two years apart in age; between minors suspected or previously convicted of sex-related or violent crimes from minors who have never been so suspected or convicted; between any two or more minors who, it is reasonably suspected, may become violent with one another; between first-time juvenile detainees and others; and between sexes. In light of the fact that these legislative changes will substantially raise the physical space requirements in every detention facility in the country, they are to enter into force no earlier than two years, and no later than five years, after their approval by the Knesset, without exempting authorities from compliance with the new provisions where physical conditions at the detention facility so allow.

352. Other special procedures regarding arrest and detention Among the practices employed with respect to minor suspects, one may note the following (see generally Police Standing Order 14.01.05):

(a) Generally, minors are to be brought to the police station for investigation by their parent or guardian, who must be present during the investigation if the minor is under 14 years of age;

(b) Investigations of minors must generally be done during the day, but not at their school, workplace or other place in which they might congregate with other minors;

(c) The police must notify the Youth Parole Office immediately of the arrest or investigation of a minor, must work together with the Youth Welfare officer throughout the handling of the case, and must keep the Youth Welfare officer abreast of all significant developments;

(d) With certain exceptions, the investigation of a minor is carried out by a specially-trained police youth officer;

(e) Police investigations officers have discretion to refrain from photographing minor suspects who are not known offenders, and to remove any photographs of the minor from official files in the event that the investigation file is closed without indictment; if the file is closed due to "absence of guilt", then such photographs must be removed from police records;

(f) Arrest and transport of minor suspects must be done in a manner that avoids, as much as possible, arousing the attention of passers-by. The police youth officer who carries out the arrest or transports the minor must be dressed in civilian clothing and use an automobile without police markings or licence plates;

(g) Minors are not to be handcuffed except in extraordinary circumstances, such as if the minor is known to be violent, has attempted to abscond from lawful custody in the past, or if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the minor will tamper with evidence. Minors under 16 years of age may not be placed in leg-irons, and if over 16 may have leg restraints only if the police officer in charge deems that there is no other way of safely transporting the minor;

(h) No information may be published, at any stage of the criminal process, which might lead to the identification of the minor, including the fact that the minor or his or her family are involved in criminal or immoral behaviour, that a court or welfare officer is involved in the minor's affairs, that the minor has attempted or committed suicide, or any information connecting the minor to examinations or treatment having to do with psychiatric illness or with AIDS.

353. The general statutory limits on the length of detention of juveniles are discussed under article 9 above.

354. Closing of criminal files before indictment or trial In practice, many criminal cases involving juveniles do not reach trial. The juvenile parole officer often gets involved early on during criminal investigations of minors, to examine the possibility of treatment programmes that may avoid the necessity of a criminal trial. In the great majority of criminal investigations against juveniles the file is closed without indictment, typically with the involvement of the parole officer. In certain types of offences, a practice has developed of "not opening" an investigation, with or without dispensations for treatment and follow-up. During 1996, for example, out of 15,881 cases referred to the Youth Parole Office after criminal suspicions were raised against juveniles, 8,522 cases were closed without having a formal criminal investigation file opened, while such files were opened in the remaining 7,359 cases. During that same year, an additional 1,841 criminal files against juveniles were closed without having a charge sheet filed, while 3,192 cases went to trial.

355. Sentencing. In the event that a court finds that a juvenile has in fact committed a criminal offence, it may determine, at its discretion, whether to convict and sentence the minor, to exempt him from liability outright, or to order him to undergo one or more modes of treatment aimed at rehabilitation (without conviction), as described in the next paragraph. No minor under the age of 14 years at the time of sentencing may be imprisoned. Judges, moreover, are mandated to take the offender's age at the time of commission of the offence into account in sentencing. As an alternative to prison, the court may order that a convicted juvenile be held in a closed juvenile home, which must provide for the juvenile's education, health care, psychological care, social activity, entertainment, and so on (Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) (Conditions for Holding Minors in a Home) Regulations, 5736-1976, regulation 7).

356. Treatment. Instead of traditional criminal punishments, the court, after having determined that a juvenile has indeed committed a criminal offence, and after reviewing the mandatory pre-sentencing report of a probation officer, may order juvenile offenders to undergo one of the following alternative methods of rehabilitative treatment:

- (a) Placing the juvenile under the supervision and care of an appropriate person other than his or her parent, and to limit the parents' guardianship rights accordingly during a specified period;
- (b) Sufficing with probation;
- (c) Releasing the minor subject to the offender's or his parent's written obligation, with or without a money guarantee, of good behaviour;
- (d) Placing the juvenile in a daytime juvenile home programme;
- (e) Placing the offender in an open or closed juvenile home for a specified period;
- (f) Paying a fine by the juvenile offender or his parent;
- (g) Compensation of the victim's damages.

(Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, sect. 26.) Under the proposed amendment to the Law, juvenile offenders may also be ordered to perform "public service works", such as working at a hospital or other welfare institution.

357. During 1996, of 1,150 criminal trials decided, 534 resulted in a supervision order, 112 in placement in a juvenile home, 63 in a treatment programme for the minor without any judicial order, and 447 in the other forms of treatment or sanctions; 153 minors were sentenced to terms of imprisonment.

358. The Criminal Register and Rehabilitation Law, 5741-1981, place firm restrictions on the disclosure of a juvenile's criminal record.

359. Another important facet of the rehabilitative treatment of juvenile offenders is mandatory follow-up treatment for offenders who have been placed in juvenile homes. Such follow-up typically lasts for one year from the date of release from the home, and is supervised by a "follow-up officer" under the aegis of the Labour and Social Affairs Ministry, who has authority to make decisions regarding the juvenile's residence, studies, employment and activities during his spare time (Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, sects. 38-39). Such follow-up treatment may be cancelled if deemed unnecessary by the court.

Article 11 - Freedom from imprisonment for breach of contractual obligation

360. The Execution Law, 5727-1967, which deals with the execution of civil judgements, allows for imprisonment of judgement debtors, including debtors in respect of contractual obligations, in certain defined circumstances for refusal to pay a judgement debt. A recent landmark Supreme Court judgement in 1993 substantially narrowed the use of imprisonment against judgement debtors, and led to a far-reaching amendment of the Execution Law in 1994, as described below.

361. Before the 1994 amendment of the Execution Law, section 70(A) provided that a judgement debtor could be imprisoned by order of the Chief Execution Officer, who sits in a judicial capacity, for a period of up to 21 days if two conditions were fulfilled: that the debtor has means to pay the judgement amount, and that "there is no other way" to force him to pay the debt. In practice, creditors often found that having an imprisonment order issued against the recalcitrant debtor was the surest way of ensuring payment of the judgement debt. As a result, orders of imprisonment came to be used with great frequency, often without undertaking any thorough formal investigation before the Chief Execution Officer regarding the debtor's ability to pay. In H.C.J. 5304/92, Perah Association v. Minister of Justice et al., 47(4) P.D. 715, the Supreme Court declared invalid a regulation under which an order of imprisonment may be issued if up until the date of the order the debtor did not show that execution of judgement was possible by other means. The Court held that imprisoning a debtor without first undertaking a full-fledged investigation which shows that the debtor can indeed pay the debt but refuses to do so, is inconsistent with the fundamental rights to liberty and dignity under sections 1 and 6 of Basic Law: Human Dignity, as it is tantamount to punishment for non-payment, rather than a means of ensuring execution of judgement. The Court further held that a judgement debtor who truly has no means to pay the debt may not be imprisoned.

362. Amendment No. 15 of the Execution Law (S.Ch. 1479 (5754), p. 284) introduced a new regime regarding investigation of a debtor's means and, on the whole, severely narrowed the availability of imprisonment orders, in accordance with the Perah judgement mentioned above. Under the amended section 70 of the Execution Law, a mere inability to discharge a debt is not a sufficient ground for imprisonment. An order of imprisonment may be issued against a judgement debtor only when the Execution Office holds the debtor in contempt because he has the means to pay the judgement debt but avoids doing so. Prior to issuing an imprisonment order, the Chief Execution Officer must hold a hearing in the presence of the debtor, in which the debtor is examined regarding all assets on the basis of an affidavit filed previously. If the debtor patently refuses to comply with the execution proceedings, for example by refusing to file an affidavit regarding his assets, then the Chief Execution Officer may order his imprisonment. During the investigation of the debtor's assets, the Chief Execution Officer may order the debtor to pay monthly instalments based on his ability to pay, or, if the debtor requests a long-term schedule and waives secrecy of his financial records, the Officer may declare that the debtor is "limited in means". Once this status is conferred on the debtor, his name is entered into a special register at the Execution Office, and he may be restricted from using credit cards or from serving as a manager or director of a limited liability company.

363. Following the investigation of means, the debtor may be imprisoned for contempt for a period of up to seven days in any of the following circumstances:

(a) He does not bring full and accurate information regarding his ability to pay the judgement debt;

(b) He has been shown to have the ability to pay the judgement debt, but does not comply with the order of payment by instalments;

(c) He does not comply with other decisions given by the Chief Execution Officer during the hearing regarding the ability to pay;

(d) He has actively concealed his assets.

In each of these instances, the Chief Execution Officer must consider the efficacy of alternative measures, such as attachment of the debtor's assets, before issuing an imprisonment order. If two years have passed since the last appearance of the debtor before the Chief Execution Officer, then he may not be imprisoned unless another hearing is held.

364. An order of imprisonment may not be issued against a minor or an incompetent person, or against a soldier in active service; nor may it be issued against a spouse, descendant or parent of the judgement creditor (except for execution of judgements awarding maintenance or alimony), or if the debt is for an amount less than 50 shekels (sect. 71 of the Execution Law). Debtors who do not pay court-ordered alimony or maintenance instalments to their spouse, parent, or minor or disabled child currently may be imprisoned for up to 21 days without a full-fledged investigation as to means, provided that a written warning has been sent to the maintenance debtor; the grounds and procedural safeguards relating to imprisonment of debtors in general do not apply, under current law, to maintenance debtors. It should be noted that in such cases a previous investigation will have been undertaken by the court as a basis for the award of alimony or maintenance. In any case, the maintenance debtor must still be brought before the Chief Execution Officer within 48 hours of arrest, and the Officer may annul the imprisonment order or shorten the period of imprisonment, with or without imposing payment or other conditions on the debtor, and may take any other decision which he or she deems appropriate.

365. Imprisoned debtors generally have the right to have their case reviewed within three days. They must be released before the end of the period stated in the order if they pay the debt or instalment for which they were imprisoned, or provide satisfactory security for payment, or show other cause why they should be released. Before the imprisonment order is executed, the debtors may of their own initiative make payment or offer security, or may apply to the Chief Execution Officer to give another reason why they should not be imprisoned, such as that they have been declared bankrupt in the interim.

366. One result of the amendment to the Execution Law, discussed above, is a sharp decline in payments by recalcitrant debtors. New legislation is currently being considered, which will promote collection of debts while ensuring that debtors are not imprisoned for the inability to pay them, but rather only in cases in which the debtor has the ability to pay but refuses to do so.

Article 12 - Freedom of movement

367. The legal landscape. Until 1992, the right to enter and exit Israel, as well as the right to freedom of movement within the State, were articulated and developed mainly through judicial decisions which interpreted legislation dealing with these matters. The Israel Supreme Court has held that "freedom of movement ... is a natural right, recognized ... in every State with a democratic form of government - of which our country is one - and the citizen does not need any special qualifications to be entitled this 'grant'". H.C.J. 111/53, Kaufman v. Minister of Interior et al., 7 P.D. 534. Any governmental action affecting travel is subject to review by the Supreme Court, which must be convinced by clear, unequivocal evidence that there exists a "genuine, serious concern" that national security or other equally crucial interests will be "substantially damaged" if the person's right to travel is not restricted. H.C.J. 448/85, Dahar et al. v. Minister of Interior, 40(2) P.D. 701.

368. With the enactment of section 6 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty in 1992, the rights to leave and to enter Israel were given a firmer constitutional grounding. Section 6 provides:

(a) All persons are free to leave Israel;

(b) Every Israel national has the right of entry into Israel from abroad.

These rights are subject to the limitation clause (sect. 8) of the Basic Law, which prohibits any impairment of the right except by a statute which befits the values of the State and is intended for a proper purpose - and then only to the extent required; or pursuant to such a statute which explicitly authorizes impairment of the right. In addition, section 12 of the Basic Law stipulates that emergency regulations properly in force may deny or restrict these rights only for a proper purpose, and for a period and to an extent that does not exceed what is necessary. The Basic Law is binding on all official authorities.

369. Legislation predating 1992 which deals with entry into or exit from Israel remains in force, but is now interpreted according to the principles in the Basic Law.

370. Freedom of movement within the State For all persons who are lawfully within the territory of the State of Israel, there is no requirement of registration in particular districts, and movement within the State is generally unrestricted. All residents of Israel (i.e. citizens, permanent residents who are not citizens and temporary residents) are required to register their address, or any change thereof, at the Population Registry. Aliens need not register their whereabouts while in the country.

371. The Mandatory Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, grant military commanders or ministers broad powers to limit freedom of movement by a variety of means for the purpose of ensuring public safety, national security, public order, or for quelling of riots and insurgencies (see Palestine Order in Council (Defence), 1937, section 6 (1), which authorized promulgation of the 1945 Regulations). Such measures include curfews (regulation 124), declaration of closed military zones (regulation 125), orders prohibiting an individual from entering specified places or areas or requiring a person to notify the authorities of his whereabouts (regulation 109), orders placing a person under police supervision and restricting a person's place of residence or movement outside of a specified place or area (regulation 110). The above measures are employed very sparingly within the State of Israel. In 1994, for example, one order placing an individual under police supervision was issued by the Military Commander for the Home Front; in December 1995, following the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, eight such orders limiting the freedom of movement of individuals were issued, four of which were extended in June 1996; in April and June 1996, a total of eight additional orders of restriction were issued against individuals. All of the above orders were issued against persons active in Jewish extremist groups. Some of the orders restricted the person's movement outside of a specified area, while others restricted their access to a particular place, such as the Temple Mount in Jerusalem.

372. In each of the above instances, the military commander, pursuant to guidelines issued by the Attorney-General, conducted prior consultations with the Attorney-General's representatives before issuing the orders restricting individual freedom of movement. Initially, a temporary order expiring after 14 days was issued, during which period the persons subject to the orders were granted an appeal hearing before a representative of the military commander. Such a hearing is granted in every case of an order restricting freedom of movement under the Defence (Emergency) Regulations. The military officer presiding over the appeal must have legal training, hold a rank of lieutenant-colonel or colonel, and must not serve as the commander's permanent legal adviser. As a result of this appeal procedure, the duration of two of the orders mentioned above was reduced from six to three months.

373. All orders restricting freedom of movement issued under these emergency regulations are appealable to the High Court of Justice, which will apply the standard of review mentioned above.

374. Movement of persons within Israel may also be restricted in the context of criminal proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Law, 5734-1974 or the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, 5756-1996. When a person is released from detention for the duration of a criminal investigation or trial, the court has authority to make the release conditional on limitations of the person's movement if necessary to protect public order or safety, to ensure the person's appearance at trial or at subsequent investigations, or to ensure that the criminal investigation is not undermined. Such restrictions on movement on released detainees may include house arrest, house arrest qualified with limited movement within a specified area during specific hours, or orders prohibiting entry to a specific place or area. The latter type of order may also be issued in the context of a civil court proceedings in domestic disputes, or in proceedings under the Protection of Privacy Law, as discussed under article 17.

375. Exit from Israel. All persons leaving the State of Israel must present a valid passport, laissez-passer or other travel document. Citizens with valid passports generally may leave the country freely, provided that if they still have an obligation to perform military reserve service, then they receive approval from the Israel Defence Forces; such approval is routinely granted unless the person has received a call-up order for reserve duty which is scheduled during the period of his absence from the country and has not secure a postponement of the order.

Restrictions on the right to leave Israel

376. No person may leave Israel directly for any of the countries specified in the Prevention of Infiltration (Offences and Punishment) Law, 5714-1954 (the current list includes Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen, Saudi Arabia and Iraq) without a permit from the Minister of Interior. Israeli nationals are likewise forbidden from entering the above countries without a similar permit.

377. Under section 6 of the Emergency (Departure Abroad) Regulations, initially enacted in 1948 and still in force, the Minister of Interior may forbid the exit of a person from Israel, if there is a basis to suspect that his or her exit is likely to harm national security. As noted above, in exercising authority under this provision, the Minister of Interior has an obligation to balance national security concerns against the basic right to freedom of movement, by finding clear evidence of a genuine, serious fear that national security would be "substantially damaged" if the person is allowed to leave the country (Dahar v. Minister of Interior, supra (petitioner denied exit permit to Romania based on evidence that purpose of petitioner's travel was, inter alia, to contact representatives of hostile organizations and bring funds into Israel for hostile purposes)). It may be noted that this decision was rendered before the enactment of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty.

378. The right to leave Israel may be restricted in the context of civil court proceedings. The court, or the Chief Execution Officer, may issue an order preventing departure abroad of a defendant or judgement debtor for a period of one year if there are genuine, substantial grounds to believe that the latter is about to leave the country and thereby frustrate the judicial proceeding or the payment of the judgement (sect. 361 of the Civil Procedure Regulations, 5744-1984; section 14 of the Execution Law, 5727-1967). In such circumstances, the defendant or judgement debtor may also be required to deposit his or her passport or travel document with the court. Such orders are issued not infrequently in the case of spouses who fail to fulfil alimony or child support arrangements. However, the courts will allow the person to leave the country if there are adequate alternative means to ensure his appearance at trial or payment of judgement, such as depositing a sum of money or bank guarantee with the court. Persons who are not Israeli nationals are very rarely prevented from leaving the country in these circumstances (M.C.A. 7208/93, Weisglass v. Weisglass, 48(4) P.D. 529).

379. The right to leave Israel may also be restricted for persons in the context of criminal proceedings, in order to guarantee appearance at trial, to prevent undermining of an investigation, to protect public order, or as a condition of probation.

Travel documents

380. Passports and travel documents are generally issued as a matter of course. Under section 6 of the Passports Law, the Minister of Interior has authority to refuse to grant or to extend the validity of a passport or laissez-passer, to attach conditions to the grant or extension of validity of a passport or laissez-passer, to cancel them, or to limit the range of countries for which they are to be valid. In exceptional circumstances, the Minister or his representative may cancel or refuse to issue a passport or travel document, or limit its validity solely to return to Israel from abroad. Examples of such exceptional cases include a person who has violated a court order prohibiting his or her exit, or that of a minor, from Israel; a person who was naturalized based on fraudulent representations, and whose nationality was subsequently revoked; or a person whose departure abroad, in the opinion of the Director-General of the Ministry of Defence, is likely to harm national security.

381. In many cases in which a passport is refused, the applicant is granted a laissez-passer, which will enable the person to depart from Israel but does not confer the right to a tourist visa in the countries with which Israel has bilateral entry agreements. A laissez-passer document may be given to Israeli citizens, at their request, in special circumstances, or to persons whose nationality is undefined or doubtful (Passports Law, 5712-1952, sect. 2 (b)). In general, a laissez-passer is not issued to a foreign national if that person's State has an official representative in Israel. Until recently, many laissez-passer documents were issued to foreign nationals, due to the lack of such official representation in Israel. Over the last several years, however, the frequency of such occurrences has drastically decreased, as most other countries now have official representatives, consular or otherwise, in the country. Arab residents of Jerusalem, many of whom are Jordanian citizens, nevertheless receive laissez-passer documents routinely.

382. Israel does not place any general restrictions, by law or policy, on the validity of passports for countries where armed hostilities are in progress, or where there is danger to the public health or physical safety of Israeli nationals, beyond the five countries noted above in the Prevention of Infiltration (Offences and Punishment) Law, 5714-1954.

383. Appeal procedures. When a passport has been denied, revoked or restricted, the person affected receives notice in writing. In all of the above instances, the decision of the representative of the Interior Ministry may be appealed directly to the Minister, and if the result is unfavourable, to the High Court of Justice. The appeal procedure before the Minister of Interior is informal, usually in writing, though the person affected or his or her attorney may be granted a hearing with the Minister's representative upon request. There are no formal provisions for bringing evidence, or the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses.

384. Entry into Israel. Any person who is neither an Israeli national or the holder of an oleh's certificate under the Law of Return, 5710-1950, must enter Israel by visa and permit of sojourn. For such persons, there are four general categories of visas and permits of residence under Israeli law: a permit of transitory sojourn (up to five days); a visitor's permit (up to three months); a permit of temporary residence (up to three years); and a permit of permanent residence (Entry into Israel Law, 5712-1952, sect. 2). Each of these permits may be renewed for periods prescribed by law.

385. Visitor's permits. Israel is party to bilateral agreements with some 70 other countries, in accordance with rules developed by the International Civil Aviation Organization, under which nationals of those countries automatically receive a three-month tourist visitor's permit, so long as they do not seek to work in Israel. Visitor's permits are issued in accordance with the purpose of the person's stay in Israel - for employment, for tourism, or as a volunteer. If the purpose of the person's visit to Israel is not clear, a visitor's permit will be issued for a period of up to one month, during which the person must apply to the appropriate authorities to clarify his or her status (Entry into Israel Regulations, 5734-1974, Regulation 5). Persons from countries with which Israel does not have such a bilateral entry agreement must secure a visitor's permit prior to arriving in Israel or at the border entry station, depending on the country in question.

386. Permits of temporary residence. There are four types of temporary resident permits which may be granted to aliens. If the applicant wishes to study at an educational or training institution in Israel, he or she must present confirmation from that institution showing that he has been accepted as a student, or other evidence proving that the person in fact intends to pursue a course of study in Israel; he or she must also show financial capacity for supporting oneself during the stay in Israel, and must have a valid travel document.

387. Temporary residence is also granted to clergy and other persons serving at religious institutions in Israel, including at hospitals and other welfare institutions operated by organized religious denominations. In practice, such temporary resident permits are renewed without any overall time limit so long as the applicant continues to serve at the religious institution. The policy of the State of Israel has been not to grant such religious personnel permanent residency status, to avoid possible claims of discrimination against any particular religious denomination. However, permanent residency is commonly granted to persons who have served at a religious institution in Israel for a long period, and wish to remain in Israel thereafter.

388. Persons who hold oleh visas under the Law of Return, and who wish to reside in Israel for a period of up to three years to consider the possibility of remaining as citizens, may be issued a temporary resident permit for that purpose. Finally, a temporary residence permit may be issued to an applicant who intends to come to Israel for a reason other than those mentioned above.

389. Permanent resident status is granted at the discretion of the Interior Minister. Olim who decline citizenship are permanent residents, as are residents of the Golan Heights and East Jerusalem who do not apply for citizenship. Permanent resident status may also be granted in cases of family reunification and on other humanitarian grounds. Although the Minister has no statutory obligation to give reasons for his decisions on such applications, the practice has been to give reasons to the extent possible. The criteria applied by the Interior Ministry in applications for permanent residency focus on the capacity to show that one's life, or that of one's immediate family, is centred, as a practical matter, in Israel. If a permanent resident leaves Israel for a period of at least seven years, or has become a permanent resident or citizen of another country, then his permanent residency status in Israel is deemed to have expired.

390. Diplomatic personnel. Foreign nationals who enter Israel with a diplomatic or service passport are exempt from the need to have a valid entry permit, provided their country has signed an exemption agreement with Israel. The Interior Minister may also exempt particular persons or groups from this obligation, if he deems it justified. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, as a practical matter, gives entry permits to diplomatic personnel serving in Israel.

391. Discretion of Interior Ministry. The Interior Minister has broad discretion in granting, refusing, revoking or extending residency permits. The applicant may be required to provide information and evidence as part of the process. By law, the Minister is obligated to show reasons for his decision only with regard to cancellation of a visa and entry permit held by a person who is lawfully in the State. In practice, especially since the enactment of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, reasons for decisions regarding visas and residency permits are noted in the applicant's file, and are generally shown to him or her upon request, unless special security considerations justify not disclosing the evidence on which the decision is based. All persons adversely affected by decisions regarding cancellation of visas or residency permits may appeal to the Interior Minister and, if necessary, to the High Court of Justice.

392. In accordance with section 6 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, no Israeli national can be deprived of the right to return to Israel.

Article 13 - Expulsion of aliens

393. Aliens who have entered and are inside Israel, lawfully or unlawfully, may be expelled only pursuant to deportation proceedings, as described below. Aliens who are denied entry at frontier stations may be removed from the country without full-fledged deportation proceedings, though their removal must be formally decided upon by the Minister of Interior or his representative (Entry into Israel Law, 5712-1952, sect. 10). A person who enters Israel other than through a frontier station may be deported either through regular deportation proceedings at the Ministry of Interior or, if applicable, by the Minister of Defence under the Prevention of Infiltration Law, 5708-1948. Persons whose Israeli citizenship has been revoked may also be subject to deportation, subject to various procedural safeguards.

394. Removal of aliens who are not permitted to enter Israel When a person comes to Israel and wishes to enter it, a frontier control officer may delay his entry until it has been ascertained whether he is permitted to enter, and he may indicate a place where such a person shall stay until completion of the examination or until his departure from Israel (Entry into Israel Law, 5712-1952, sect. 9). In practice, the person is detained at the border police facility at the point of entry, but the Entry into Israel Law also provides for detention at another police station, a prison, a quarantine or disinfection facility of the Ministry of Health, the vehicle on which he or she arrived at the border, or any other place deemed appropriate by the frontier control officer (Entry into Israel Regulations, 5734-1974, regulation 18).

395. Persons subject to deportation An alien who is in Israel without a valid permit of sojourn or residence is subject to deportation (Entry into Israel Law, sect. 13). In many such instances, the alien's permit of sojourn has expired and has not been renewed; in other cases, the Ministry of Interior cancels or shortens permits of sojourn or residence, on several possible grounds. A 1985 amendment to the Administrative Procedure Amendment (Statement of Reasons) Law, 5719-1958, requires that the Minister of Interior give reasons for any decision cancelling a permit of residence. The grounds for such cancellations are not stipulated by law; nevertheless, the Minister's decision must be based on proper, relevant reasons. Though no official statistics are currently available regarding the total number of cancellations, or a breakdown according to the reasons therefor, it may be said that in the vast majority of cases residency permits have been cancelled because the bearer has violated the conditions of his or her permit (for instance, by working in Israel despite having only a tourist visa), or has provided false information as a basis for receiving the permit. Other grounds for cancellation or curtailment include evidence that the person poses a risk to national security, public health or public order. Once a permit has been cancelled, and the person does not leave Israel voluntarily, then he or she is subject to deportation. The same is true for a person who has been recognized as an oleh under the Law of Return on the basis of fraudulent representations.

396. Deportation procedures Only the Minister of Interior, or one of several senior Ministry officials, may issue a deportation order. The order must be transmitted in writing. Once it is properly issued, a frontier control officer or police officer may arrest the person subject to deportation and detain him in the place and manner prescribed by the Interior Minister, until his voluntary departure or deportation from Israel. Such detention is not automatic; in practice, it is used in those instances when it is deemed necessary to enable the carrying out of the deportation order. Although the relevant regulations provide that detention may be in a police station, a prison, a quarantine or disinfection facility of the Ministry of Health, or another place which the Minister deems appropriate, the Minister must consider less restrictive alternatives, such as house arrest, posting of bond, regular reporting to the police, and so on. Al-Taye et al. v. Minister of Interior et al., H.C.J. 4702/94, 5190/94, 5448/94 (not yet published).

397. The deportation order may not be executed for at least three days from the date of notification (Entry into Israel Regulations, regulation 21), to enable the person subject to deportation or his or her attorney to appeal directly to the Minister of the Interior. As with appeals of cancellation of residency permits, the appeal of a deportation order does not involve a formal administrative or quasi-judicial hearing. The appellant's claims and evidence are submitted in writing, and the execution of the deportation order will be postponed at least until the appeal is considered and decided. In certain cases, the appellant or his or her counsel may hold an informal hearing with the Director of the Population Administration at the Interior Ministry or a representative of the Ministry's Legal Department. The evidentiary basis for the deportation order may be shown to the appellant, unless doing so would cause harm to national security.

398. Appeal of deportation orders to the Supreme Court If, as a result of the appeal to the Minister, the deportation order is not cancelled and the appellant does not agree to leave the country voluntarily, then he or she may file a petition to the High Court of Justice against the order. The petitioner may challenge not only the legality of ordering his or her deportation per se, but also the need for detention prior to deportation, the degree of restrictiveness of the conditions of detention and, in certain circumstances, the country to which he or she is to be deported. In accordance with article 33 of the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951, to which Israel is a party, no one may be deported to a country in which his life or liberty may be endangered. In the Taye case mentioned above, the High Court considered the deportation orders issued against 24 Iraqi citizens who had crossed the border illegally and were being detained in prison, some for periods exceeding two years, due to their refusal to return to Iraq, as they claimed that their lives would be endangered for political reasons if they returned. Moreover, attempts to find another country that would accept the deportees had proved fruitless. Although the Court held that the authorities were clearly empowered to deport the petitioners, it reiterated the acceptance of the principle of non-refoulement, interpreting it to entail not only that the Minister of Interior could not deport them to a country where their lives or liberty might be endangered, but also to any other country that could not guarantee that the petitioners would not be returned to Iraq. Regarding the prolonged detention of the petitioners, the Court further held that, if a deportation order is not executed within a reasonably prompt period of time, then continued detention must be justified by showing that there is a basis to believe that the detainee may flee to escape deportation, that if released he may harm public order or national security, or other similar grounds; otherwise, the authorities had to consider release under suitable conditions as an alternative to detention for those petitioners against whom there was no clear evidence that releasing them might impair national security. In fact, roughly 20 of these Iraqis were released from detention in late 1995, and many of them are still in Israel as of the submission of this report.

399. In the first stage of the petition to the High Court, an order to show cause (order nisi) may be issued, requiring the Minister of Interior or other authorities to show why the order should not be cancelled, its execution postponed until a different country of destination is found, or the conditions of detention changed. Usually the Court will issue a stay of execution of the deportation order together with the order to show cause. Prior to execution of the deportation order, the Minister must consider any new circumstances which might justify cancellation of the order.

400. Official statistics on the number of deportation orders issued and executed against persons in Israel, divided according to the reason for deportation, are currently available for 1993-1995, as follows:

Table 11. Deportations, 1994-1996

Reason for deportation	Number of deportation orders issued
	1994	1995	1996
Lack of valid permit of residence or work permit	571	712	1 787
Security-related	18	6	17
Criminal activity or conviction	56	78	120
Infiltration of border	54	79	52
Other	46	40	18
Total issued	745	915	1 992
Total executed	386	581	1 421

During the above years, the deportees came from more than 70 different countries.

401. According to the practice followed by the Ministry of Interior, when the citizenship of an Israeli national or the oleh permit of an oleh under the Law of Return is revoked due to fraudulent representations, the person is not formally deported, but rather is generally provided with a laissez-passer used for aliens and told that he should leave the country. In case the person encounters difficulties in finding another country that will receive him, the Ministry of Interior follows a policy of taking certain temporary measures that may help the person secure such an entry visa and enable him or her to subsist in Israel until the date of departure.

402. Under section 11 (a) of the Nationality Law, 5712-1952, an Israeli national who leaves Israel illegally for one of the States mentioned in the Prevention of Infiltration (Offences and Jurisdiction) Law, 5714-1954, is deemed to have renounced his Israeli nationality, which is deemed to have terminated as of the date of his leaving Israel. In the past, persons who came under this provision were subject to deportation upon return to Israel. In the last five or six years, however, this provision has not been applied, and in several instances persons whose citizenship had previously been terminated for this reason succeeded in having their citizenship restored to them. Thus, the deportation of former Israel nationals on these grounds no longer arises as a practical matter.

403. Persons who are deported from Israel under the Entry into Israel Law may be required to pay the expenses incurred from the time of their detention to the execution of the deportation order. If they are foreign workers illegally in the country, then their employers may be required to pay.

Article 14 - Right to fair trial; judicial independence

Organization of the judiciary

404. The structure and operation of Israel's system of courts of general jurisdiction are discussed in the Introduction to this report. The discussion under this article, therefore, should be read in conjunction with the relevant portions of the Introduction.

405. Israel has several court systems which, for the most part, have independent areas of original jurisdiction. The general court system, which deals with both civil and criminal matters, has three instances: Magistrates' Courts, District Courts and the Supreme Court (Basic Law: Adjudication, sect. 1 (a)). The Supreme Court sits in Jerusalem and currently has 14 judges. Its substantive jurisdiction lies in two main areas: as a court of appeal in civil and criminal matters from District Courts, and as the High Court of Justice in petitions against decisions of administrative authorities. In addition, it hears certain specified civil matters as a court of first instance, such as appeals of decisions by the Chairman of the Knesset Elections Committee regarding disqualification of political parties from running for national election, appeal of decisions made by the Health Ministry under the Physician's Ordinance, and sundry specific matters. Over the last several years, in an attempt to relieve the Supreme Court of part of its caseload, appeals of certain administrative matters, such as prisoners' petitions, tenders, and building and planning issues have been transferred to the District Courts as the courts of first instance (see, e.g., Prisons Ordinance [New Version], 5731-1971, sects. 62A-62D; Planning and Building Law, 5725-1965, sects. 255A-255F). A recent proposal by a committee headed by a Supreme Court Justice aims, among other things, at allowing the Supreme Court to focus more on cases raising questions of general legal import, for example by creating another judicial instance or reshaping the jurisdiction of the lower courts, have yet to be implemented.

406. Generally, the Supreme Court hears cases in panels of three judges, except when the President or Deputy-President directs that a larger bench preside (Courts Law [Consolidated Version], 5744-1984, sect. 26). The Court may, at the decision of the President of the Court, decide to rehear a case which it has already adjudicated, when the case raises significant legal questions of first impression. Such further hearings are heard by a panel of five or any larger, uneven number of judges (Courts Law, sect. 30). Judgements of the Supreme Court are binding on the lower courts, but not on the Supreme Court itself, which may alter its holdings in a further hearing of a particular case or in subsequent cases (Courts Law, sect. 20).

407. Geographically, jurisdiction is divided among five judicial districts, with District Courts in Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv, Haifa, Beersheba and Nazareth. District Courts have original jurisdiction over all criminal and civil matters which do not fall within the jurisdiction of the Magistrates' Courts, and general residual jurisdiction to hear any matter which is not under the exclusive jurisdiction of any other court or tribunal. If the District Court has concurrent jurisdiction with another court over a particular matter, then it may adjudicate the matter so long as it has not been heard by the other court or tribunal (ibid., sect. 40). The District Courts also hear appeals from Magistrates' Courts. The court sits in a three-judge panel when hearing appeals, as it does in the trial of serious criminal offences. Most other matters are tried before a single judge (ibid., sect. 37).

408. Magistrates' Courts have original jurisdiction over most criminal offences which carry a punishment of up to seven years' imprisonment. In certain specified offences punishable by more than seven years' imprisonment, the State Attorney may still file the charge sheet in the Magistrates' Court, provided that any sentence of imprisonment actually imposed will not exceed seven years (ibid., sect. 51 (a)(1)). In civil suits for money damages, the Magistrates' Courts have jurisdiction over claims of up to NIS 1 million (approximately $300,000). In cases concerning real property, Magistrates' Court jurisdiction extends over matters pertaining to "use or possession", as opposed to "ownership", regardless of the amount of money involved. As a rule, cases in the Magistrates' Court are heard by a single judge, although the judge hearing the case or the President of the Magistrates' Court may direct that the case be heard by three judges (ibid., sect. 47).

409. Youth Courts under the Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, 5731-1971, and the Youth (Modes of Treatment and Supervision) Law, 5720-1960, operate within the framework of the Magistrates' Courts. Particular Magistrates' Court judges are empowered to handle a broad range of matters relating to the protection and treatment of minors in need, as well as criminal cases involving juveniles. Magistrates' Court judges are also empowered to try traffic offences, as defined by legislation (Traffic Ordinance [New Version], sect. 23) as well as other offences relating to motor vehicles.

410. In addition, Magistrates' Courts function as small claims courts for claims of less than NIS 8,000 (approximately $2,400). Such claims are always heard before a single judge; the courts are not bound by the rules of evidence and procedure; legal counsel is allowed only by permission of the judge. Small claims judgements may be appealed by leave to the District Court.

411. Under recent legislation, special Family Courts have been set up within the Magistrates' Court system, with specially appointed judges to deal with cases of adoption, custody, and other matters involving juveniles (Family Court Law, 5755-1995).

412. The Minister of Justice has also established Courts for Local Matters, which have jurisdiction over building offences, municipal offences and other specific controversies. The geographical jurisdiction of these courts may exceed that of the regional Magistrates' Court, and may include several local authorities (ibid., sects. 54-55).

413. Labour Courts. The Labour Court system consists of two instances. Regional Labour Courts hear cases involving employer-employee relations, tort actions related to labour relations, benefit fund disputes, certain social security matters, labour-related crimes and disputes related to specific collective agreements. The National Labour Court hears appeals as of right from the regional courts, and has original jurisdiction over disputes involving general collective labour agreements or between labour organizations. In appeals on criminal matters, the National Labour Court is bound by the law of criminal procedure and evidence, and its judgements are appealable by right to the Supreme Court. All other judgements of the National Labour Court may be challenged only by a petition to the High Court of Justice, which will review such judgements on restricted grounds of administrative legality (see, e.g., Chatib v. National Labour Court, 40(1) P.D. 673 (1986)). Except in the case of criminal appeals, as mentioned above, the rules of evidence and procedure are generally looser in the labour courts than in the courts of general jurisdiction.

414. Regional Labour Courts usually hear cases in three-member panels: one presiding judge and two "public representatives", who need not have legal training. The National Labour Court sits at first instance in a seven-member panel: three judges, two employees' representatives and two employers' representatives. In criminal appeals, the court sits as a three-judge panel; and in other matters, as a five-member panel, consisting of three judges, one employees' representative and one employers' representative, unless the President of the court decides upon a seven-member bench (Labour Courts Law, 5729-1969, sects. 32-36, 18-20).

Military Courts

415. The Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, creates six courts martial of first instance: the District Courts Martial, Naval Court Martial, Field Court Martial, Special Court Martial and Traffic Court Martial (Military Justice Law, sect. 183). The Naval Court Martial and Field Court Martial are established ad hoc for each case; the other courts martial are permanent. The Special Court Martial is empowered to try officers of the rank of lieutenant-colonel or higher on any charge, and any soldier charged with an offence punishable by death. Naval Courts Martial may be constituted on a naval vessel outside the coastal waters of Israel to try a soldier for an offence committed on that vessel, only if postponing the trial could severely harm discipline on the vessel and if the vessel is not expected to return to coastal waters within 21 days. Field Courts Martial are constituted only in periods of actual combat (Military Justice Law, sects. 461-474, 471).

Courts martial in general may not include judges whose rank is lower than that of the accused. The judge with the highest military rank presides. District Courts Martial sit in three- or five-judge panels, the majority of whom are officers, and at least one of whom is a legally trained military judge (ibid., sects. 201-202). A Naval Court Martial always sits as a three-judge panel, at least one of whom must be an officer. A Field Court Martial is composed of three judges, at least two of them officers, and one, if possible, having legal training (ibid., sect. 465). A Traffic Court Martial always sits as a single judge (ibid., sect. 209 B).

416. The decisions of all of the above courts are appealable to the Appeals Court Martial, which generally hears cases in a three-judge panel. In exceptional cases, the Appeals Court Martial will sit in a panel of five, either when the President of the Court so decides, when the Military Advocate General believes that the case involves novel legal issues, when the judgement being appealed involves the death penalty, or where the bench itself decides to expand its composition. Appeals from Traffic Courts Martial are typically heard by a single judge (ibid. sects. 210, 214-215 B).

417. Until 1986, judgements of the Appeals Court Martial were appealable on restricted grounds of administrative legality to the Supreme Court sitting as the High Court of Justice, for example in cases of patent error on the face of the record, lack of functional jurisdiction or violation of the rules of natural justice. Under a 1986 amendment to the Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, judgements of the Appeals Court Martial may be appealed by leave to the Supreme Court when the case raises legal questions of significant novelty or complexity (ibid., sect. 440 J).

418. A separate military court exists pursuant to the Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945, for trial of any offences under those regulations (Defence (Emergency) Regulations, sects. 12-15, 1945 P.G., supp. 2, p. 855). Many of these offences are parallel to those in the general penal law, and jurisdiction is concurrent with the general court system. Decisions of the military court established under the Defence (Emergency) Regulations may be appealed to the Appeals Court Martial.

419. The proceedings of courts martial are not entirely independent. All sentences imposed in a final judgement of a court martial must be brought before the proper "confirming authority" - either the IDF Chief of General Staff, the Minister of Justice or the military head of the judicial district, according to the type of case involved - who may either confirm the sentence, mitigate it, or amend it in almost any way he sees fit (Military Justice Law, sects. 442-444 A). These "confirming authorities" are bound to review the opinion of the military prosecutor prior to making their decision, but they need not give reasons for their decision. In addition, the heads of judicial districts, who need not have legal-training, may decide that a certain matter will be tried in disciplinary proceedings rather than in a court martial, or that a trial will be heard in camera, or to quash a charge sheet filed in a court martial subject to the consent of the military advocate (ibid., sects. 151, 171, 324 and 308 (a)).

Religious courts

420. During the British Mandatory period, the jurisdiction of the religious courts of various officially recognized communities, or denominations, was defined in the Palestine Order-in-Council, 1922-1947.* This Order gives the religious courts jurisdiction over matters of marriage and divorce, and "matters of personal status" of varying scope, depending on the court in question. Since establishment of the State, specific statutes were enacted for some of the recognized religious communities: the Kadis Law, 5721-1961 (for Muslims), the Druze Religious Courts Law, 5722-1962 (for Druze); and the Dayanim Law, 5715-1955 (for Jews) under the Rabbinical Courts Jurisdiction (Marriage and Divorce) Law, 5713-1953. The religious courts of the officially recognized communities still operate under section 54 of the Order-in-Council mentioned above. The substantive matters adjudicated by the different religious courts, and the overlap between the activity of religious and general courts, are discussed in greater detail under article 18.

421. In special cases, when the parties to a legal proceeding in respect of personal status belong to different religious communities - thus raising a conflict or ambiguity of the different religious courts over the matter - each party may appeal to the President of the Supreme Court who, after receiving substantive legal opinions of the different courts, will decide which court will have jurisdiction. Similarly, when it is not clear, due to the differing religious affiliations of the parties, that a dispute relating to "personal status" falls within the jurisdiction of any religious court, based on the substantive law of each denomination, then the President of the Supreme Court refers the matter to the decision of a special tribunal, composed of two Supreme Court judges and one judge whose religion is that of a religious court whose jurisdiction is in question (Palestine Order-in-Council, 1922-1947, sect. 55). Neither of the above arrangements will apply, however, in cases concerning the dissolution of marriage between two people of different religions. In such cases, the Attorney-General asks the religious court or courts involved for their opinion; on the basis of these opinions, the President of the Supreme Court decides which religious court shall have jurisdiction, or may refer the case to the civil District Court (Jurisdiction in Matters of Dissolution of Marriage (Jurisdiction in Special Cases) Law, 5729-1969, sects. 2, 6, 23).

Appointment of judges

422. All judges in courts of general jurisdiction in Israel are appointed by the President of the State, after having been selected by a nine-member Judicial Selection Committee. The Selection Committee is composed of three judges of the Supreme Court, including the President of the Court; two representatives of the Bar Association, two members of the Knesset appointed by the Knesset, and two ministers elected by the Cabinet, including the Minister of Justice, who serves as Chair of the Committee (Courts Law [Consolidated Version], 5744-1984, sect. 6). Decisions are made by majority vote, except when the judicial candidate is an eminent jurist who has not practised as an attorney for the minimum period ordinarily required, in which case seven out of nine members of the Committee must approve the appointment. In practice, appointments are not made without the consent of the Supreme Court judges on the Committee. Thus, a delicate system of balances on the Committee has been sustained over the years, in which the Justice Minister retains the procedural prerogatives of his capacity as Committee Chair, but the votes of the politicians on the Committee have not been controlling. As a result, it may be said that judicial appointments in Israel are made, both as a formal and a practical matter, not on ideological or political grounds, but rather on the basis of professional merit.

* In addition to the Jewish and Muslim denominations, the following communities were officially recognized under Mandatory legislation: the Eastern Orthodox, Latin (Catholic), Gregorian-Armenian, Armenian Catholic, Syrian Catholic, Abyssinian (Oneatic), Greek Catholic, Maronite, and Syrian Orthodox. Palestine Order-in-Council, 1922-1947, second schedule. In the early 1970s the Evangelical Episcopal Church and the Baha'i faith were recognized as religious communities. Kovetz Hatakkantot 2037, 5730 (7 May 1970), p. 1564; Kovetz Hatakkantot 2673, 5731 (11 March 1971), p. 628.

423. The promotion of sitting judges to higher courts is also handled as part of the Committee's powers. The presidents of the different courts, however, are appointed by the Minister of Justice with the consent of the President of the Supreme Court, from among judges already sitting on the same court (Courts Law, sect. 9). On the Supreme Court, the practice has been to appoint the President and a Deputy President on the basis of seniority: when the President retires or ceases to serve for any reason, then the Deputy President with the most seniority on the Court is appointed President after the justice with the next-highest seniority is appointed as Deputy President.

424. When the Minister of Justice sees the need to appoint one or more new judges, a notice is published in Reshumot, the official gazette, and the Judicial Selection Committee is convened. Candidates may be proposed by the Minister of Justice, the President of the Supreme Court, or jointly by three members of the Selection Committee (ibid., sect. 7 (a)). A person who wishes to be considered for a judicial appointment will apply to the Courts Director, who is responsible for all administrative work related to the deliberations of the Selection Committee. Typically, dozens of applicants will apply for each vacant position. The Committee divides itself into two or more subcommittees composed of a Supreme Court Justice who acts as Chair, a member of the Knesset, and a representative of the Bar Association. Once the Courts Director has verified that the candidate has complied with the minimum qualifications required by law, the candidate has a personal interview with the subcommittee, at which legal questions are asked, as well as other questions intended to garner a general impression of the candidate's fitness for the bench. The candidates are asked to provide references, including judges; if they themselves are judges seeking appointment to a higher court, the opinion of the president of the court on which they currently sit will be requested. The representatives of the Bar Association, for their part, request an opinion on the candidate's suitability from the Bar Association District Committee in the area where the candidate practises. In addition, candidates who are sitting traffic judges, Magistrates' Court judges or Regional Labour Court judges must submit several judgements which they have handed down during the two years prior to their application for appointment. The meetings of the Judicial Selection Committee, as well as any information concerning the candidates, are confidential (see generally Adjudication Rules (Rules of Procedure of the Judicial Selection Committee), 5744-1984, Kovetz Hatakkanot 2370). Public notice of the Committee's selections is made prior to their actual appointment, so that members of the public can object to or comment on the impending appointment.

425. Judicial appointments are made for life, until mandatory retirement at the age of 70. A judge may retire early with a pension if he or she has served the minimum number of years set by law (ibid., sect. 13). Under a 1984 amendment to Basic Law: Adjudication, a judge may be removed from office prior to retirement if the Judicial Selection Committee so decides by a vote of at least seven out of nine members (Basic Law: Adjudication, sect. 7 (4); Adjudication Rules (Working Arrangements Regarding the Termination of Office of a Judge in Accordance with a Decision of the Judicial Selection Committee), 1986, Kovetz Hatakkanot 498). However, this dismissal procedure has never been employed since its enactment. Normally, judges whose functioning has been found to be defective are approached informally by the president of the court on which they sit, or the President of the Supreme Court, in an effort to resolve the problem. The Basic Law also provides for early removal from office by decision of a special disciplinary tribunal appointed by the President of the Supreme Court, and composed of either three or five judges (including two or three Supreme Court judges, respectively) (Basic Law: Adjudication, sect. 13 (c); Courts Law, Part Five).

Substantive judicial independence

426. Basic Law: Adjudication formally mandates that any person having judicial authority shall be "bound to obedience solely to the law" (sect. 2). Similar statutory provisions provide for the adjudicative independence of judges of religious and military courts (Military Justice Law, sect. 184; Dayanim Law, 5715-1955, sect. 14; Kadis Law, 5721-1961, sect. 9 (for Muslim judges)). In addition, a series of legal rules and practical arrangement help promote the substantive independence of the judiciary, as described below.

427. Criminal and civil immunity. Judges in Israel are liable to criminal prosecution for offences not related to the discharge of their duties; except for any explicit contrary statutory provision, they enjoy immunity from criminal prosecution for any act done in the course of discharging judicial duties, even if the judge "exceeded his power or refrained from acting as he was required to do" (Penal Law, 5737-1977, sect. 23). A judge who commits fraud or bribery, however, in the discharge of his official functions will not enjoy immunity from criminal prosecution (Cr.App. 26/66, Taher Hamed v. Attorne-General, 20(3) P.D. 57). A criminal indictment against a judge cannot be filed except by the Attorney-General personally, and must be heard before a three-judge panel of the District Court, unless the judge agrees to be tried in the ordinary manner (Basic Law: Adjudication, sect. 12). Until 1981, this procedure was followed even in cases of simple traffic violations by judges. A judge who is formally indicted for a criminal offence may be suspended by the President of the Supreme Court pending outcome of the trial (ibid., sect. 14).

428. Judges also enjoy immunity from civil liability for tort actions relating to acts or omissions in the discharge of judicial authority (Civil Wrongs Ordinance [New Version], sect. 8). It is not clear whether this civil immunity extends to instances of bad faith on the part of judges. (See G. Tedeschi et al., The Law of Torts (2nd ed., Jerusalem, 1976), p. 395.)

429. Transfer to other courts. A judge in a court of general jurisdiction may be transferred to a court in another locality upon the consent of the presidents of both courts concerned (Courts Law, sects. 36, 46). A permanent transfer to another court, however, may be done only with the consent of the President of the Supreme Court, or by decision of the judicial Disciplinary Tribunal. Thus, decisions regarding transfer of judges in general courts are made solely by other members of the judiciary. Dayanim, or judges in Jewish Rabbinical Courts, may be permanently transferred to another court by the Minister of Religious Affairs only with the consent of the President of the Supreme Rabbinical Court (Dayanim Law, 5715-1955, sect. 19). On the other hand, Kadis, or judges of the Muslim religious courts, may be transferred to another court permanently without need for consent of representatives of the judiciary (Kadis Law, 5721-1961, sect. 16).

430. Judicial salaries are normally determined by the Finance Committee of the Knesset. They are adjusted periodically according to the increase in the average wage, except when a larger, general increase in salary scales is voted by the Knesset Finance Committee. The Finance Committee cannot reduce the salaries of judges alone. Currently, the total budget for the courts system is included as part of the overall budget for the Ministry of Justice, which can lead to involvement by members of the executive branch in funding for the courts.

431. Sub judice rule and contempt of court. Two statutory restrictions on public comment regarding the courts and judicial proceedings help safeguard substantive judicial independence: the sub judice rule, which prohibits any comment that may influence the conduct or the result of a matter pending before the courts, and the prohibition of scurrilous attacks on judges (Courts Law, sect. 71; Penal Law, sect. 255). As with laws regarding protection of privacy, discussed under article 18, there is a statutory exception to the sub judice rule for publication in good faith of anything said or any event that occurs during a public court hearing. The rule has been interpreted by the Supreme Court to require a "reasonable likelihood" that the publication in question will influence the conduct or result of the proceeding (H.C.J. 223/88, Sheftel v. Attorney-General, 43(4) P.D. 356). Similarly, the prohibition against scurrilous attacks on judges exempts frank criticism in good faith on a judicial decision concerning a matter of public interest. Although the Supreme Court has interpreted this prohibition rather strictly, Cr.A. 364/73 Seidman v. State of Israel, 28(2) P.D. 620, in practice there are exceedingly few criminal investigations or trials under this provision.

Right to fair trial

432. Public access to court proceedings. The fundamental right to a "public hearing" in both criminal and civil court proceedings has been given constitutional status in Israeli law in section 3 of Basic Law: Adjudication, under which "a court will adjudicate in public except if stipulated otherwise in a statute or if the court orders otherwise pursuant to a statute". Even prior to enactment of the above Basic Law, the Supreme Court buttressed the importance of public hearings in Israeli law:

"It is a fundamental legal rule that the Court shall deliberate publicly. This principle is one of the pillars of criminal and civil procedure alike, and one of the most important instruments that aim to ensure fair and impartial legal proceedings. By virtue of this principle the operations of the Court, on the one hand, stand exposed to public scrutiny, in respect of objective management of the proceedings, adjudicative competence and discretion. On the other hand, the parties are placed before the public, which hears the proceedings and, aware of the facts presented before the court may, on the basis of information at its disposal, duly offer rebuttal evidence. Thus, perhaps, parties may be deterred from offering to the presiding judge unexamined or unreliable facts." Cr.App. 334/81, Haginzar v. State of Israel, 36(1) P.D. 827, 832.

433. The Courts Law [Consolidated Version], 5744-1984, after reiterating the general principle of open legal proceedings, sets out several specific exceptions to this principle: the court may decide that part or all of a certain matter may be heard in camera if it is necessary to do so to protect State security, to prevent harm to foreign relations, to protect morals, to protect the interests of a minor or incapacitated person, to protect the interests of a complainant or defendant in a sex-related crime; or if a public hearing may deter a witness from testifying, or from testifying freely (Courts Law, sect. 68 (b)). Motions for interlocutory decisions, including temporary orders, may be heard in camera with no need for justification by the court. The court may use its discretion to order hearings in camera "only after a good deal of deliberation and sparingly" (L.C.A. 176/68, Anonymous v. Anonymous, 40(2) 497, 499). Most "family matters", as defined by the new statute setting up a separate family court jurisdiction, are to be heard in camera unless the court decides otherwise (ibid., see also Family Court Law, 5755-1995).

434. Specific persons may be prohibited from entering the courtroom if, in the opinion of the court, that person's presence will deter a witness from testifying (ibid., sect. 69). Even when a hearing is held in camera, the court may permit certain people to be present during the entire hearing or part of it.

435. In criminal proceedings, the general rule is that the defendant must be present personally at all hearings (Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version], 5742-1982, sect. 126). The courts generally have interpreted this rule strictly to mean that unless explicitly permitted by law, a defendant cannot waive the right to be present at proceedings against him, and the court may not allow him to do so (Cr.App., 247/66 Sa'ada v. State of Israel, 20(4) P.D. 36). In a recent case, however, the Supreme Court ruled that a defendant should not be required to attend all hearings if his personal appearance is not necessary. Even the voiding of an indictment in the defendant's absence must undergo a re-examination to ensure that his rights and interests were adequately protected (Cr.App. 95/72, Zindoleker v. State of Israel, Daf Lepraklit 90). In certain limited circumstances, the court may allow part of a criminal proceeding to take place without the defendant. The "commencement of the trial", that is, the first hearing at which the charge sheet is read to the defendant, who then enters his initial plea and may raise other preliminary claims, may be held without the defendant in the case of petty crimes and misdemeanors to which the defendant has already confessed in writing to all the relevant facts, provided the defendant has been duly summoned; or when the defendant asks to be represented by legal counsel at the hearing and the court is convinced that no injustice will result (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 128). Similarly, the court is authorized to hold a specific hearing in the absence of the defendant in cases of petty crimes or misdemeanors when the defendant has been duly summoned and the summons explicitly notifies him that the court may hold the hearing if he does not appear (ibid., sect. 130). However, if the defendant, having been summoned, credibly notifies the court in advance that he or she will be unable to attend the hearing for reasons not within his control, then the court will not conduct the hearing in his or her absence.

436. In any case, even if the defendant has confessed to all the facts alleged against him or her, the court may not impose a sentence of imprisonment on a person unless the defendant has first been given the opportunity to appear before the court, either by directly or through legal counsel, and raise claims in respect of the punishment to be imposed (ibid., sect. 129); and if the defendant is convicted without being present in court, under the limited exceptions above, then under no circumstances can he be sentenced except in person and after he has had the opportunity to raise sentencing claims (ibid., sect. 130). Moreover, if the defendant appears at any stage, even after conviction, after the court has held hearings in his or her absence, then the court must inform him or her of the right to ask that the hearings or conviction held in his or her absence be nullified; the court will grant his request if it is convinced that there was a reasonable explanation for the defendant's absence - or even if there is no such reasonable explanation, but the court nevertheless deems it proper to do so.

437. A court may also hear part or all of a criminal trial in the absence of a defendant upon the explicit request of defendant's counsel, if the court believes that holding the trial in the defendant's presence will be harmful to his or her physical or mental health (ibid., sect. 132). In certain offences involving State security, such as treason and espionage, the court may order that the defendant or counsel be dismissed from the courtroom for any part of the proceedings, if it deems that there is no other way to prevent State security from being compromised (Penal Law, sect. 128). When the court uses this discretionary authority, however, it must ensure that the defendant's capacity to defend against the charge sheet is not thereby impaired; the court may, for example, appoint a special defence counsel with security clearance for the purpose of a particular proceeding, or allow the defendant to choose special counsel for that purpose (ibid.). In addition, certain traffic offences and other minor crimes punishable by a fine may be tried in the defendant's absence, provided the defendant has had an opportunity to respond to the charges (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 240).

438. Publication of any information regarding a matter which the court hears in camera, either by law or by its own decision, is forbidden without the court's permission. In addition, there is a statutory prohibition on publishing the name, likeness, address or any other potentially identifying information of any juvenile who is a defendant in any criminal proceeding, or a juvenile complainant or victim in any trial for sex offences (Courts Law, sect. 70). The court also has the discretion to forbid publication regarding court proceedings if necessary to protect the safety of a party, a witness or another person whose name has been mentioned in the course of the proceedings (ibid.). If necessary to protect the integrity of the criminal investigation, the court may also forbid publication of the name of a suspect or other information which may make it possible to identify him or her, so long as the suspect has not yet been formally charged.

439. In practice, appeals to the Supreme Court of decisions by the Israel Bar Association Disciplinary Tribunal are generally heard in closed door session, and the name of the attorney is not published. Disciplinary proceedings against civil service employees used to follow the same practice until a 1977 statutory amendment which made those disciplinary proceedings public (See Civil Service (Discipline) Law, 5723-1963).

440. In all criminal trials the court must maintain minutes which reflect "all that was said and occurred" during the trial, to the extent that it "relates to the trial" (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 134). Should the judge decide that a particular matter which he or she is requested to record in the protocol does not "relate to the trial", and thus need not be recorded, he or she must so indicate in the protocol, to preserve a record of the request and the refusal to record the matter in question, for purposes of appeal (Cr.App. 288/55, Horowitz v. State of Israel, 10 P.D. 483). A mistake in the protocol may be corrected upon request of one of the parties up until the time for appeal of the judgement has elapsed (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 137). Upon permission from the secretariat of the court, any person may investigate the protocol of a legal proceeding if there is no other justification for forbidding publication or publicity of the proceedings.

441. Judicial bias and recusal. Until 1992, there were no statutory provisions allowing for disqualification of judges for bias. Judges who did not recuse themselves, for example because of a family or business relation with one of the parties, were virtually never disqualified: the Supreme Court had held that motions for disqualification must be submitted to the judge whose removal was being sought; thus, as interlocutory decisions in criminal trials are not appealable under Israeli law, the decision of the judge on the issue of his personal disqualification was final as a practical matter. At the recommendation of the Supreme Court, among others, Cr.M. 525/63, Samuel v. Attorney-General, 18(3) P.D. 452, the Courts Law was ultimately amended to provide for disqualification of judges. Under 77A of that law, a party may request that a presiding judge disqualify himself or herself if there are circumstances "which tend to create a substantial suspicion of bias". Once such a motion is filed, the judge must decide it immediately, before making any other decisions; this decision is appealable to the Supreme Court (ibid., Criminal Procedure Law, sects. 146-148). Motions for disqualification may be raised once the trial has commenced. Another mechanism which may be employed to reduce the possibility of bias, generally before the trial begins, is a motion to the President of the Supreme Court to order a change of venue in a case being heard in the lower courts. If the trial has already commenced, then the President of the Supreme Court may issue such an order only with the consent of the judge who has begun hearing the case (Courts Law, sect. 78). In practice, the Police or the District Attorney may transfer a criminal file to another district at the investigation stage, or after the police have recommended filing a charge sheet, if there are objective grounds to presume that holding the trial in the defendant's home district may make it difficult to have an impartial trial.

442. Presumption of innocence. In 1994, the Penal Law was amended to include the fundamental presumption, thoroughly established in the case law, that the accused in a criminal case is innocent until his guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt (Penal Law, sect. 34T). The basic structure of the criminal process, beginning with the initial burden imposed by law on the prosecution to prove its case against the accused, through the right of the accused to bring evidence in his defence, without requiring him to prove his innocence, and culminating in the court's decision based on a strict standard of criminal liability, is both shaped by the presumption of innocence and gives the presumption its practical embodiment. The accused has the right to deny all or part of the facts alleged in the charge sheet, with the result that the prosecution will have to prove the guilt which it ascribes to him (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 152(a)). Even if the defendant admits all of the facts alleged in the charge sheet, he may still claim any of a number of preliminary claims that may relieve him of criminal liability (ibid., sect. 124).

443. Right to be informed promptly of charges As discussed under article 9, suspects who are arrested, with or without a warrant, must be informed at the time of arrest of the reason for the arrest. If the arrest is by warrant, then the suspect must receive a copy thereof, which includes a summary of the charge. Similarly, if the police officer in charge of a police station decides to keep a suspect under arrest for a period of up to 24 hours or to release him or her on bail, the arrested person must be informed of the charge of which he is suspected in a language which the suspect understands. In detention hearings prior to filing a charge sheet, the suspect will learn of the charges of which he or she is suspected at the time of periodic hearings before a judge. If the suspect is in fact indicted, then he or she must be served promptly with a written summons to trial, accompanied by a copy of the charge sheet which, among other things, describes all material facts constituting the offence, and indicates the time and place of alleged events to the extent that they can be ascertained (Criminal Procedure Law [Consolidated Version], sect. 85).

Right to prepare defence and communicate with counsel

444. Review of prosecution evidence and materials Immediately upon being formally charged with a felony or misdemeanor, the defendant has a right to inspect and copy all "investigation material" in the prosecutor's possession (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 74). This right to inspect the investigation material entails a duty on the part of the prosecution to prepare such investigation material in a form that can be reviewed by the defendant, e.g., by setting all substantive testimony of witnesses into writing. Only statements by witnesses on formal matters which are insignificant to examination of the charges need not be set in writing, but the prosecutor must notify the defendant or his counsel reasonably in advance of trial of the name of the witness and the nature of the testimony on such formal matter (ibid., sect. 77). The right to inspect investigation material does not, however, include material which may be privileged by law, such as correspondence between attorney and client, psychologist and patient, or material the non-disclosure of which may be permitted for reasons of national security (ibid., sect. 78). In any case, the prosecution may not introduce any such secret evidence, either written or oral, at trial if the defendant has not had a reasonable opportunity to review and copy them, unless the defendant has waived this right (ibid., sect. 77).

445. Should the prosecution not promptly or properly honor the defendant's right to inspect the prosecution's evidence, the defendant may apply to the trial court to enable inspection of the material in question. Under a recent amendment to the Criminal Procedure Law, decisions of the trial court on the right to inspect prosecution material are subject to interlocutory appeal, unlike most intermediate decisions in criminal trials (ibid., sect. 74). Prosecution material that must be made available to the defence has been deemed to include agreements with prosecution witnesses (Cr.App. 79/73, Lavi v. State of Israel, 28(2) P.D. 510), investigation files against other persons which have relevance for the defendant's guilt or innocence (Cr.App. 179/78, Gavron v. State of Israel, 34(2) P.D. 692), internal police correspondence and evaluations, if it is shown that they are "relevant" to the investigation or the indictment (Cr.App. 364/73, Zeidman v. State of Israel, 28(2) P.D. 627), and, in some cases, investigation files against witnesses (H.C.J. 233/85, al-Hozayil v. Israel Police, 39(4) P.D. 124, 130).

446. The rights of persons in detention to meet with legal counsel during the criminal investigation are discussed under articles 9 and 10 above. Once a person is formally charged with an offence, he or she is to be allowed all reasonable opportunities to communicate with his or her legal counsel and to meet with him in order to prepare the defence (Prisons Ordinance, sect. 45). An attorney whom a prisoner has asked to see may visit him or her every day, except Saturdays, and at any reasonable hour, provided that the prisoner has given advance notice of such meeting. The meetings between the defendant and counsel take place in a specially designated area where privacy may be ensured to the extent that security conditions at the jail and considerations of State security so allow (Prisons Regulations, 5738-1978, regulation 29).

447. Right to trial without undue delay. Under the Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Arrest) Law, 5756-1996 (sects. 59-61), a suspect must be released if he is not formally charged within 75 days of arrest; if the trial does not begin within 30 days of the indictment, provided the defendant is in detention, unless the defendant or his or her counsel requests a postponement; and if a final judgement is not handed down within nine months. Once the indictment is filed, the court is to schedule the beginning of trial for the earliest possible date under the circumstances (Criminal Procedure Regulations, 5734-1974, regulation 19). If the charge sheet is filed by the Attorney-General or the State Attorney's Office, then at least 14 days must elapse between service of the charge sheet upon the defendant and commencement of the trial; if the charge sheet is filed by a prosecution department of another government authority, such as the police or tax authorities, then at least seven days must elapse after service of the charge sheet. With the defendant's consent, these minimum periods may be shortened (ibid., regulation 20 A). In other, minor offences, a trial may be held shortly after service of summons on the defendant, provided the defendant has adequate time to arrange to come to court, and does not wish to postpone the trial in order to hire defence counsel or to summon witnesses (ibid., regulation 44). Once the evidentiary hearings have commenced, the court must continue the trial without interruption until it is finished, unless it finds that it is "impossible" to do so (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 125). In practice, the sheer volume of cases on the dockets of the general courts make it unfeasible to hear every criminal case without interruption.

448. Other procedural mechanisms which aim at promoting the efficiency of criminal trials include the opportunity for the defendant to admit all or part of the facts in the charge sheet, which then need not be proved by the prosecution; the necessity of raising at the first hearing preliminary claims against the indictment which, if accepted by the court, would terminate the trial, such as lack of jurisdiction, defects in the charge sheet, immunity, a former acquittal or conviction regarding the same acts, and so on (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 149); and the joinder, in certain circumstances of several defendants and offences in a single trial (ibid., sects. 86, 95).

Right to counsel

449. The right of a defendant to be represented by legal counsel in criminal proceedings has long been recognized as fundamental in Israeli law, and thus may be restricted only by explicit statutory authorization (H.C.J. 344/65, Hijazi v. Minister of Justice, 19(4) P.D. 203). Typically, a defendant engages legal counsel of his or her own choice, who, once empowered by the defendant, may represent him or her before any State or local authority and any other body or person carrying out public functions by virtue of law (Chamber of Advocates Law, 5721-1961, sect. 22). Moreover, the attorney, once appointed, must represent the defendant in all stages of the criminal proceeding, including appeal, and may not be released from representing him without the court's permission (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 17(a)). The defendant is limited in his or her choice of counsel to accredited members of the Israeli Bar Association, except in trials against foreign nationals for offences punishable by death under the Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law, 5710-1950, or the Nazi and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law, 5710-1950, in which case a foreign defence counsel may be appointed by approval of the Minister of Justice. Such foreign defence counsel was permitted in the trials of Adolph Eichmann and John Demjanjuk, the two cases prosecuted under those laws. The only limitation on the right to be represented by counsel of one's choice occurs when the Minister of Defence certifies in writing that considerations of State security make it necessary that the defendant be represented only by a person with security clearance to act as defence counsel (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 14; Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, sects. 311, 318). In a trial for espionage or treason, the court may rule, as mentioned above, that the defendant or counsel may be dismissed from the courtroom if there is no other way to prevent compromising the security of the State. In such circumstances, the court must ensure that the defendant's right to defend himself is not impaired, and may appoint defence counsel for that particular proceeding, or allow the defendant to choose counsel with appropriate security clearance. Such cases are exceedingly rare.

450. Appointment of counsel by the court: right to defend oneself If the defendant has not engaged counsel on his or her own, the court bears an obligation to appoint counsel if the defendant is charged with murder or another offence punishable by death or life imprisonment, or if he or she is charged in the District Court with any offence punishable by at least 10 years' imprisonment; if the defendant is less than 16 years of age and the proceeding is not held in Youth Court; if the person is deaf or dumb; or if there is concern that the defendant is mentally ill or disabled (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 15). There is no obligation to appoint counsel in criminal appeals. In addition to those cases in which the court must appoint counsel, the court may also appoint counsel at its discretion, at the request of the defendant, the prosecutor, or at its own initiative, if the defendant does not have the means to pay for legal counsel according to criteria set out in legislation (ibid., Defence Counsel Law, 5755-1995). A Public Defender's Office was established by legislation in 1995, and has begun to operate in certain parts of the country, with the intention of gradually expanding its reach to the entire population in all judicial districts. The costs of appointed counsel, as well as other costs of legal defence, such as remuneration to witnesses, is paid out of the State treasury.

451. In principle, whenever the court bears an obligation to appoint counsel for the defendant, as mentioned above, the defendant may not refuse the appointment, nor may the court hold a hearing in the absence of counsel (Cr.App. 859/78, Zaideh v. State of Israel, 33(3) P.D. 255). Even if the defendant does not want to be represented by counsel but prefers to represent himself or herself, the court must not only explain to the defendant that he or she is entitled by law to appointed counsel, but must attempt to convince the defendant to agree to the appointment (Cr.App. 383/87, Hajaj v. State of Israel, 42(4) P.D. 57). The court will usually appoint counsel without the defendant's consent, in the hope that appointed counsel will find a way to convince the defendant of the efficacy of legal representation (ibid.). Only if the court is convinced that there is absolutely no possibility of cooperation between defendant and appointed counsel, such that the appointment will be wholly ineffective, may the court allow the defendant to represent himself at trial. Before allowing the defendant to appear pro se, however, the court must be convinced that he can reasonably manage his or her defence. In any case where the defendant is not represented by counsel, the court must make special efforts to make up for the defendant's lack of legal expertise by guiding the defendant in detail with respect to his or her rights, to legal issues invoked in the case, to the risks involved in different courses of action; to summoning and cross-examining witnesses; and to raising any claims against the prosecution's case (Criminal Procedure Law, sects. 143, 152, 161).

452. Right to examine witnesses and to confront adverse witnesses In principle, the defendant is entitled to call and examine witnesses on his or her behalf who have not already testified as a witness for the prosecution, and to cross-examine prosecution witnesses, subject to general restrictions of the law of evidence and criminal procedure. The court may deny this right only when it deems the evidence to be brought by the witness to be irrelevant or inadmissible, or when it concludes that the defendant requested a particular summons for reasons other than clarifying the questions raised by the case (ibid. sect. 106). Prior to service of summons on a witness, the defendant typically has to deposit with the court a certain amount of money, or furnish security for the witness' expenses. Defendants who are unable to post such security, or who have had counsel appointed by the court, will be relieved of this obligation (Criminal Procedure Law, sects. 105-111, 172-181).

453. Right to interpreter. Should it come to the attention of the court that the defendant does not know Hebrew, it must appoint a translator who is paid out of the State treasury, or, alternatively, the judge will act as a translator. Evidence presented to the court in a language other than Hebrew or some other language familiar both to the court and the parties, must be translated by a translator and read into the record in Hebrew, unless the court directs otherwise (ibid., sects. 140-142).

454. Protection against self-incrimination During the criminal investigation, as at trial, the defendant (or suspect) has a right to be silent. At trial, the court bears a duty to inform the defendant that he or she has the right either not to testify on his or her own behalf, or to testify, in which case he or she may be cross-examined (ibid., sect. 161). The Court must also explain to the defendant that a decision not to testify may be deemed to support other incriminating evidence against him or her (ibid., sect. 162). An absence of such explanation to the defendant of his rights may, under certain circumstances, be grounds for invalidating a conviction (Cr.App. 555/77, Rabi v. State of Israel, 32 (2) 769).

455. Appeal of conviction and sentence. All judgements in criminal cases may be appealed by right to the next highest judicial instance (Courts Law, sects. 41, 52). The defendant and the prosecution may appeal both the conviction and the sentence imposed by the trial court. Any judgement which imposes the death penalty is subject to automatic appeal, whether or not the defendant himself wishes to appeal (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 202). If the right of appeal is to the District Court from one of the lower courts, then the defendant may have a second appeal, to the Supreme Court, if leave is granted either by the District Court or the Supreme Court. Such permission for a second appeal will be granted if the appellant raises "an important legal question that justifies an additional appeal" (Cr.M. 167/79, Ferdman v. State of Israel, 34(1) P.D. 730); if such a second appeal is the only way to prevent a particularly unconscionable and unjust result (Cr.A. 465/70, Arbib v. State of Israel, 25(1) P.D. 557); or if extraordinary circumstances justify doing so, e.g. when the judgement on first appeal is substantially unclear, or was heard in the absence of the defendant (Cr.App. 185/64, Biton v. State of Israel, 18(4) P.D. 366). In both cases - appeal by right and by leave - the court must explain to the defendant the nature of the right to appeal and the deadline for doing so.

456. Although the court of appeal generally tends not to intervene in the factual findings of the trial court, which are based, among other things, on the trial court's impression of the credibility of testimony given in open court, the appeals court may allow new evidence to be brought during the appeal if there was no way the evidence could have been brought earlier, and the new evidence would likely have a substantial bearing on the defendant's guilt or innocence, such that admitting the new evidence is "necessary in the interests of justice" (Courts Law, sect. 211; see also Cr.App. 476/79, Boulos v. State of Israel, 35(1) P.D. 793). In such cases, the appeals court will generally remand the file to the trial court for the hearing of evidence and issuing of a new judgement. On the same rationale, the court of appeal may reach a different conclusion from the facts found by the trial court, or may decide that those facts cannot support the conclusions reached by the trial court (Courts Law, sect. 212). In general, the appeals court may accept or reject all or part of the appeal, may amend the judgement of the trial court, issue another judgement in its place, or remand the case to the trial court with instructions (ibid., sect. 213). The appeals court may also convict the defendant of a different crime than that of which he was convicted by the trial court, provided that the facts proven at trial support such a conviction, that the defendant has a chance to respond to such "new" charges, and that the sentence will not exceed that maximum allowable under the offence with which he or she was originally charged (ibid., sect. 216).

457. Further hearing. During the period of the British Mandate, decisions of the Supreme Court were appealable to the Privy Council in London. An analogous procedure was reintroduced into Israeli law by the institution of the further hearing, under which the Supreme Court may reconsider with an expanded odd-numbered panel of judges certain legal issues that it has previously decided by a three-judge panel, or even in some cases by a five-judge panel, if it deems those legal issues to be of particular importance, difficulty or novelty, or if the rule laid down by the three-judge panel conflicts with earlier decisions of the Court. A further hearing may be ordered by the three justices when they hand down their decision on appeal, or by the President of the Supreme Court at the request of either of the parties (Courts Law, sect. 30). The further hearing is not, strictly speaking, another appeal: it will not be granted for the purpose of reviewing the severity of the sentence or the correctness of factual findings (F.H. 6/82, Yanai v. State of Israel, 36(3) P.D. 94, 99; F.H. 13/72, Tal v. State of Israel, Daf Lepraklit 95). On the other hand, a further hearing will not be held if the decision therein cannot influence the ultimate outcome of the criminal proceedings (F.H. 516/91, Benderly et al. v. Pension Fund of Members of Egged Ltd., 45(3) P.D. 356, 360).

458. Retrial. The President or Deputy President of the Supreme Court may order a retrial of a criminal conviction, upon request of the defendant, his or her descendants, or the Attorney-General, in any of the following four instances:

(a) A court has determined that any of the evidence brought during the trial of the defendant is false or forged, and there are grounds to believe that the absence of such evidence might have altered the outcome of the case in favour of the sentenced person;

(b) Facts or evidence have come to light which, by themselves or together with other material that was already before the trial court, is likely to alter the outcome of the case in favour of the sentenced person;

(c) Another person has in the meantime been convicted of the same offence, and from the circumstances that came to light at the trial of that other person it appears that the person originally convicted for the offence did not commit it;

(d) A substantial suspicion has arisen that the conviction has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

(Courts Law, sect. 31 (a) (1)-(3)). The right to request a retrial is independent from the right to various appeals discussed above: a convicted person may ask for a retrial regardless of whether or not he or she has appealed the judgement, or whether the time for appeal has lapsed. A retrial may be heard by the Supreme Court or a District Court, regardless of where the trial was originally heard. If the retrial is heard by a District Court, then its judgement on retrial may be appealed to the Supreme Court as of right, in the same manner as any criminal judgement by a court of first instance (Courts (Procedures in Retrial) Regulations, regulation 13).

459. Compensation for person unjustly convicted If the conviction of a person is quashed on retrial, and the person has served at least part of the original sentence, then the court may make any order it deems fit to indemnify a sentenced person. If the accused has died in the interim, the court may issue such an order to the benefit of the accused's descendants or another third party (Courts Law, sect. 31). In addition, the defendant may have a cause of action in a suit for damages under the Civil Wrongs Ordinance against the persons or entities, both private and public, who were responsible for the miscarriage of justice through malice, negligence or oppression.

460. Double jeopardy and related rules Under sect. 5 of the Criminal Procedure Law, a person may not be tried for an act "if he has previously been acquitted or convicted of an offence constituted by the same act". Pursuant to this general principle, a defendant may raise the preliminary claim, immediately following the reading of the charge sheet in open court, that he or she has already been acquitted or convicted for the same act, or that another criminal trial is pending against him in respect of that act (Criminal Procedure Law, sect. 149 (5)-(6)). The Law creates one exception to the rule: if the act in question has resulted in the death of a person who was still alive when the defendant was originally tried, then the defendant may be tried in connection with the same act, provided that the first trial ended in conviction. Annulment of a charge sheet for any reason will not prevent a subsequent indictment for the same act, as it is deemed not properly to constitute a "judgement of acquittal" (Cr.App. 250/77, Kryzcyński v. State of Israel, 32(1) P.D. 94). The Supreme Court has drawn a doctrinal distinction between the statutory protection against subsequent indictment, which is based on the principle of res judicata, and the common-law "double jeopardy" rule, which derives from the desire not to put a defendant under risk of conviction for the same act more than once (Cr.App. 72/60, Attorney-General v. Geoaya, 14 P.D. 1093). The "double jeopardy" rule is deemed to include those situations in which a defendant has been properly charged with an offence but the trial did not end in a judgement of acquittal or conviction; it does not include cases in which a charge sheet is annulled, in which proceedings are suspended indefinitely or otherwise "interrupted" but the law contemplates the possibility of "resuming" the proceedings (ibid.). Due to the narrow range of application of the double jeopardy rule in Israeli law, it has not yet been accepted as the basis for quashing an indictment in any particular case, even though the courts acknowledge the existence of the rule (see Y. Kedmi, On Criminal Procedure (Updated edition, Tel Aviv University, 1993, pp. 589-590).

461. Juveniles in the criminal process. The law and practice relating to the treatment of juveniles in the criminal process are discussed in detail under article 10 above. The courts in Israel are bound not only to observe the explicit special statutory provisions regarding juveniles in the criminal process, but must take the minor's age into account in every stage of the process (Cr.M. 190/79, State of Israel v. Doron, 33(3) P.D. 589, 590). Mention may also be made of special rules allowing the parents or another person associated with a juvenile defendant to be involved as a sort of quasi-party in the criminal proceedings, by giving them the right, upon court permission, to file motions and examine witnesses, or to require their presence at court hearings (Youth (Trial, Punishment and Modes of Treatment) Law, 5731-1971, sects. 19, 28-29). The court may also order that the juvenile be absent from the courtroom for a particular hearing or part thereof if it deems it in the child's best interest to do so (ibid., sect. 17).

462. The Israel Bar Association. The organization and functions of the Bar Association are determined in the Chamber of Advocates Law, 5721-1961. The Israel Bar is a corporation; its actions are subject to the review of the State Comptroller, which gives it the character of a quasi-public institution for certain purposes, such as jurisdiction of the High Court of Justice over the legality of decisions by the Bar's administrative bodies. The principal statutory functions of the Bar are to accredit attorneys, to supervise the apprenticeship ("articling") of articulated clerks prior to their qualifying examinations, and to hold disciplinary proceedings for actions of its members. In practice, the Bar is highly active in many areas of legal endeavour and in public life generally. It is thoroughly involved in the legislative process, commenting on legislation when it deems fit, forming special committees which draft legislation, lobby Knesset members and participate in other aspects of the legislative process. The Bar also refers applicants to mediation by lawyers according to fields of specialization, has published the official reports of Supreme Court judgements, offers continuing education courses for practising attorneys, maintains dozens of active committees in such areas as human rights, judicial administration, international relations, and so on. Two representatives of the Bar Association are voting members of the nine-person Judicial Selection Committee, which decides on the appointment of all judges in the courts of general jurisdiction. Attorneys are bound by law to act faithfully and diligently in the best interest of their clients (Chamber of Advocates Law, sect. 54). The ability of attorneys freely to assist their clients is safeguarded, to a certain extent, by the attorney-client privilege, under which the attorney may not disclose any matters or documents exchanged between himself and his or her client which are related to the attorney's professional representation of the client, unless the client waives this privilege (ibid., sect. 90). Other guarantees that enable lawyers to assist their clients are discussed under articles 9 and 10.

Article 15 - Prohibition of ex post facto laws

463. The principle prohibiting ex post facto legislation is firmly rooted in the legal tradition of Israel. The Talmud, in a passage often quoted in Israeli case law, states "There shall be no punishment without prior warning" meaning that no person may be punished for conduct which was not a crime at the time of commission.

464. Until 1994, there was no Israeli legislation generally prohibiting retroactive application of substantive criminal law norms. However, the principle of non-retroactivity has long been accorded the status of a constitutional principle in the case law. In Hacksteter v. State of Israel, the Supreme Court held that:

"Even if Israel still has no legislative provision prohibiting retroactive application of the criminal laws, it is clear that the rule that there is no punishment except according to the law valid at the time of commission of the offence, is the law in Israel ... [and is] a constitutional legal rule in a State in which the rule of law obtains, so long as legislation does not stipulate otherwise." (Cr.A. 557/71, Hacksteter v. State of Israel, 26(2) P.D. 240, 245)

See also H.C.J. 221/51, Aslan v. Military Governor of the Galilee, 5 P.D. 1480, 1486.

465. In two instances, specific criminal legislation stipulated that provisions more lenient than the laws they replaced could be applied retroactively. Under section 42 of the Penal Law Amendment (Modes of Punishment) Law, 5714-1954, the substantive provisions of that law, which deal with maximum and minimum sentencing guidelines for different types of offences, would apply to a person who committed an offence prior to its entering into force if such provisions "benefit or are more lenient to him".* Section 25 (b) of the Youth (Adjudication, Punishment and Treatment) Law, 5731-1971, prohibits imposing the death penalty, and "notwithstanding any other law" provides that there is no obligation to impose a sentence of life imprisonment, mandatory imprisonment or a minimum punishment on a person who was a minor at the time he committed the offence. This provision replaced an earlier one which prohibited imposition of life imprisonment on offenders who were minors at the time of conviction. The Supreme Court held that the later, more lenient sentencing provision applied retroactively to persons who committed the offence prior to its enactment. Cr.A. 485/76, Vanunu v. State of Israel (unpublished).

466. The only legislation of general application bearing on ex post facto laws until the 1994 amendment of the Penal Law, 5737-1977, could be found in section 10 of the Law and Administration Ordinance, 5708-1948, which provides that "legislation shall enter into force on the date of publication", but allowed for the possibility of retroactive application as of a specific earlier date; and in section 22 (3) of the Interpretation Law, 5741-1981, under which "repeal of a law shall not affect a right or duty under the repealed law or a sanction for violation thereof".* The latter provision would seem to imply a prohibition of all retroactive application of criminal law norms, including those that were beneficial to the offender. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court sometimes interpreted criminal legislation to require retroactive application of a more lenient sentencing provision, without explicit statutory authorization. Cr.A. 348/67, Anonymous v. Attorney-General, 22(1) P.D. 225, 232.

*This provision was not included in the general Penal Law, 5737-1977, even though the other provisions of the earlier statute were incorporated therein, as the 23 years that elapsed until passage of the Penal Law made what was essentially a transitional provision irrelevant as a practical matter.

467. Amendment No. 39 of the Penal Law, which came into force on 23 August 1995, introduced several general provisions regarding retroactive application of the criminal law which, taken together, bring Israeli legislation into strict compliance with the obligations under article 15 of the Convention. Sections 3-6 of the Penal Law provide as follows:

"3. (a) Legislation that creates an offence shall not apply to an act committed prior to the date of its publication according to law or the date of its entering into force, whichever is later.

"(b) Legislation that determines a punishment for an offence which is more severe than the punishment applicable at the time the offence was committed shall not apply to an act perpetrated prior to its publication according to law or prior to its entering into force, whichever is later; however, a revaluation of a fine shall not be deemed an increase in punishment.

"4. If an offence is committed and its prohibition is repealed by legislation, criminal liability for its commission shall be annulled, proceedings that have been commenced shall be ceased, the execution of any sentence shall be terminated, and there shall be no further future consequences deriving from the conviction.

"5. (a) If an offence has been committed with regard to which a final judgement has not yet been given, and the definition of the offence or the liability or punishment therefor is changed, the legislation that is more lenient on the offender shall apply; 'liability therefor' shall include the application of exceptions to criminal liability for the act.

"(b) If a person has been convicted of an offence by final judgement, and afterwards a punishment is determined by legislation for that offence which is more lenient in degree or in type than the punishment imposed on him, his punishment shall be the maximum punishment determined by the subsequent legislation, as if it had been imposed from the beginning.

*In 1994, the words "or sanction for violation thereof" were stricken from this provision by amendment, in the context of Amendment No. 39 of the Penal Law, which is discussed in the next paragraph. S.Ch. 1335 (5754), p. 358.

"6. The provisions of sections 4 and 5 shall not apply to an offence under legislation which is to remain in force for a particular period, or which by its nature may change from time to time."

S.Ch. 1335 (5754), p. 358. It may be noted that the retroactivity provisions cited above also apply to the substantive provisions of Amendment No. 39 itself, which introduce new defences to criminal liability and several changes in the facts necessary to establish criminal liability, both in general and with respect to specific offences. Most of the substantive changes in Amendment No. 39 define standards more lenient on criminal defendants than those in prior legislation.

468. Military Courts. The non-retroactivity provisions in Amendment No. 39 of the Penal Law were not explicitly integrated into the Military Justice Law, 5715-1955, or other legislation dealing with adjudication in Military Courts. In practice, however, the general provisions of the Penal Law are applied in the Military Courts. Prior to the enactment of Amendment No. 39, the Military Courts applied the principle derived from case law which forbade retroactive application of substantive criminal law norms. Now they will also apply the principles contained in sections 3-6 of the Penal Law.

469. Although the retroactivity provisions of the Penal Law are still quite new, their effect may be illustrated by the following example. In a case still pending before the Jerusalem Municipal Court, the defendant was previously convicted of building without a permit, in violation of the Building and Planning Law, 5725-1965, and currently is being tried for non-compliance with a court order to remove the portion of her house that was built without a permit. During the course of trial, Amendment No. 39 came into force. The amendment includes not only the general provisions regarding retroactive application of criminal law norms that are more lenient on the offender, but also a new de minimis exception to criminal liability, under which a person shall not bear criminal liability for an act that, in view of its nature, circumstances, results and the public interest, is of minor import (sect. 34Q). The defendant was specifically allowed to claim an exemption from liability under section 34Q. Cr.A. 22/96, Witt v. State of Israel (Jerusalem District Court) (unpublished). In several other cases in which the defendant has been charged with incitement or attempt to commit an offence for actions preceding the enactment of Amendment No. 39, the new provisions in that amendment regarding exemption due to evidence of remorse have been deemed to apply retroactively.

470. The Nazi and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law, 5710-1950, was enacted to prosecute those guilty of crimes against humanity and war crimes committed during the Second World War. The application of the Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law, 5710-1950, enacted pursuant to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, is not limited in time, and may be applied retroactively. As with similar legislation in other countries, these laws are founded in the notion that the crimes prohibited by them are deemed to have constituted a violation of the law of nations at the time when they were committed, including during the Second World War. They therefore comply with the provisions of article 15 (1).

471. Under section 50 of the new Basic Law: Government, emergency regulations cannot impose "retroactive punishment". Therefore, even though emergency regulations take precedence over ordinary legislation, they cannot impose criminal norms retroactively. As Israel has been in an officially declared state of emergency during the whole course of its existence, the retroactivity provisions in the Penal Law apply, as a practical matter, during a state of emergency. The question whether emergency regulations may restrict the retroactive application of criminal norms that relieve an offender from liability or impose a lighter punishment - or whether such a restriction is itself a form of "retroactive punishment" - has yet to be brought before the courts.

472. The prohibition of ex post facto laws does not apply under Israeli law to procedural criminal law norms, nor to the law of evidence, but rather only to substantive norms. Any change in the law of criminal procedure or evidence will apply to proceedings that began before such change, unless explicitly indicated otherwise in legislation. C.A. 238/53, Cohen and Buslik v. Attorney General, 8 P.D. 4, 35; F.H. 25/80, Katashvili v. State of Israel, 35(2) P.D. 457.

473. Basic Law Bill: Due Process Rights. In February 1998, the Ministry of Justice completed its draft of a new Basic Law which articulates fundamental individual rights related to legal proceedings, including the freedom from retroactive punishment. Section 7 of the Bill provides:

"(a) A person will not bear criminal liability for an act or omission which was not an offence according to law at the time of the act or the omission.

"(b) A person shall not receive a punishment more severe than that to which he would have been subject under the law at the time of commission of the offence; however, revaluation of fine amounts according to the rate of inflation is not deemed a more severe punishment."

474. Enactment of Basic Law Bill: Due Process Rights will give the prohibition on ex post facto laws fully entrenched constitutional status, which, among others, will enable the Supreme Court to declare invalid any legislation which does not meet the criteria of its limitation clause.

Article 16 - Recognition as a person before the law

475. All human beings within the jurisdiction of the State of Israel are recognized as persons before the law. Sections 1 and 2 of the Capacity and Guardianship Law, 5722-1962, provide:

"1. Every person shall be capable of having rights and obligations from the completion of his birth until his death.

"2. Every person shall be capable of performing legal acts, unless he has been deprived of that capacity or it has been restricted by a statute or by the judgement of a court of law."

These principles apply to aliens, who are granted most basic constitutional rights and are entitled to the protection of the courts; they also apply to prisoners and detainees, as discussed in greater detail under articles 7 through 10. As mentioned under article 8, involuntary servitude is directly prohibited by law, and slavery is deemed prohibited by relevant sections of the Penal Law, 5737-1977.

476. The recognition of every person before the law is given explicit constitutional footing in the draft Basic Law: Due Process Rights, which reiterates the principles cited above in sections 1 and 2 of the Capacity and Guardianship Law. As of the submission of this report, the draft Basic Law is being circulated prior to submission to the Ministerial Committee on Legislation.

477. Under the Capacity and Guardianship Law, persons who are declared incompetent, such as the mentally ill or disabled, and minors do not lose their status as subjects before the law. Rather, the performance of any legal acts affecting them, the discharge of legal duties and the enjoyment of their legal rights must be realized in most circumstances through their legal guardian.

478. With the exception of the right to enter Israel, which is guaranteed to citizens and permanent residents, the fundamental rights protected by Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty are granted to all persons, regardless of nationality, mental capacity, or any other characteristic.

479. In addition to the above legislative provisions, the recognition of the property rights of married women was specifically articulated in the Women's Equal Rights Law, 1951, as follows: "A married woman shall have full capacity in respect of property and of actions relating thereto as if she were unmarried; and property which she acquired prior to marriage shall not be affected by the marital bond" (sect. 2).

Article 17 - Freedom from arbitrary interference with privacy, family, home

480. The right to privacy was accorded constitutional status in Israel with the enactment in 1992 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, section 7 of which provides:

"(a) All persons have the right to privacy and to the confidentiality of their lives.

"(b) There shall be no entry into the private domain of a person without that person's consent.

"(c) No search shall be conducted in the private domain or on the body of a person, nor in the body or belongings of a person.

"(d) There shall be no violation of the secrecy of the spoken utterances, writings or records of a person."

481. Under the limitation clause in section 8 of the Basic Law, the privacy rights in section 7 may not be impaired except pursuant to a statute which reflects the values of the State of Israel and is intended for a proper purpose, and to an extent no more than necessary. It should be noted that the Basic Law does not define "privacy" as such: it does not set out general minimum conditions for determining when the law will treat a person's actions or utterances as private; nor does it define the boundaries of a person's "private domain", his "home" or his "family" in which the right is realized. Rather, the Basic Law articulates the general right and adds three specific prohibitions, which do not comprise a closed set of situations in which the right to privacy is recognized. The full ambit of the right to privacy, as well the scope of lawful intervention into a person's private domain, is developed in a legal landscape defined by several principal statutory landmarks: the Protection of Privacy Law, 5741-1981, the Secret Monitoring Law, 5739-1979, the Prohibition of Defamation (Prohibition) Law, 5725-1965, and criminal statutes dealing with searches and seizures.

482. The Protection of Privacy Law. As with section 7 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, mentioned above, the Protection of Privacy Law, 5741-1981, does not define the right to privacy; rather, it defines the following 11 types of violations of privacy which, if done without consent, give rise to criminal and civil liability:

- (a) Spying on or trailing a person in a manner likely to harass him, or any other harassment;
- (b) Listening-in prohibited under any law;
- (c) Photographing a person while he is in the private domain;
- (d) Publishing a person's photograph under such circumstances that the publication is likely to humiliate him or bring him into contempt;
- (e) Copying or using, without permission from the addressee or writer, the contents of a letter or any other writing not intended for publication, unless the writing is of historical value or 15 years have passed from the time of writing;
- (f) Using a person's name, appellation, picture or voice for profit;
- (g) Infringing a duty of secrecy determined by law in respect of a person's private affairs;
- (h) Infringing a duty of secrecy determined by express or implicit agreement in respect of a person's private affairs (civil liability only);
- (i) Using, or passing on to another, information on a person's private affairs otherwise than for the purpose for which it was given;
- (j) Publishing or passing on anything obtained by way of an infringement of privacy under paragraphs (a) to (g) or (i);

(k) Publishing any matter relating to a person's intimate life, state of health, or conduct in the private domain.

483. The Protection of Privacy Law, sections 1-2, provides several defences to and exemptions from liability, such as when the invasion was done in good faith in various circumstances,* when it involves a matter of public concern

*Section 18 of the Protection of Privacy Law provides as follows:

"18. In any criminal or civil proceeding for infringement of privacy, it shall be a good defence if one of the following is the case:

"(1) the infringement was committed by way of a publication protected under section 13 of the Defamation (Protection) Law, 5725-1965;

"(2) the defendant or accused committed the infringement in good faith in any of the following circumstances:

(a) he did not know and need not have known that an infringement of privacy might occur;

(b) the infringement was committed in circumstances in which the infringer was under a legal, moral, social or professional obligation to commit it;

(c) the infringement was committed in defence of a legitimate personal interest of the infringer;

(d) the infringement was committed in the lawful pursuit of the infringer's occupation and in the ordinary course of his work, so long as it was not committed by way of publication;

(e) the infringement was committed by way of taking a photograph, or of publishing a photograph taken, in the public domain, and the injured party appears in it accidentally;

(f) the infringement was committed by way of a publication protected under paragraphs (4) to (11) of section 15 of the Defamation (Prohibition) Law, 5725-1965;

"(3) the infringement involved a public interest justifying it in the circumstances of the case, provided that, if the infringement was committed by way of publication, the publication was not untruthful."

Section 19 of the Law, entitled "Exemption", provides:

"19. (a) No person shall bear responsibility under this Law for an act which he is empowered to do by law.

"(b) A security authority or a person employed by it or acting on its behalf shall bear no responsibility under this Law for an infringement reasonably committed within the scope of its or his functions and for the purpose of carrying them out.

which justifies the invasion of privacy, an interference deemed trivial, or an invasion of privacy by security authorities reasonably committed in the proper course of fulfilling their duties (ibid., sects. 6, 18). In the latter case, a "reasonable" invasion of privacy by security authorities is deemed to require a balancing, in the circumstances of each instance, between the right to privacy and the end for which the information in question is sought.

484. The applicability of the defences in section 18(2) of the Law to the activity of private investigators has generated a certain amount of controversy in Israeli courts. For example, the District Courts are divided on the question whether a private investigator who photographs a married woman in a hotel room in an intimate situation with her lover, for use by her husband in a judicial proceeding, is liable for invasion of privacy. One decision of the Jerusalem District Court has held that the investigator would have a valid defence in such circumstances, because he was acting on behalf of the husband, who had a legitimate interest in proving the fact of his wife's infidelity in the context of the judicial proceeding (S.A. (J-m) 31/92, Frisch v. Private Investigators Disciplinary Committee P.M. 5752(2), p. 508). Two more recent decisions, however, have reached the opposite conclusion, based on a balancing of the right to privacy against the public interest in bringing of evidence before judicial instances (Cr.F. 4593/93, State of Israel v. Hatoukha et al. (Tel-Aviv Magistrates' Court, unpublished); S.A. (J-m) 628/92, Disciplinary Committee under the Private Investigators Law ex rel. Attorney General v. Frisch). In the aftermath of these conflicting decisions, a committee was established to review the existing defences to invasion of privacy and to recommend possible changes.

485. Any material obtained through an infringement of privacy under the Law is inadmissible as evidence in a court proceeding without the victim's consent, unless the court allows use of the material for reasons which it records, or, of course, unless the infringer is a party to the judicial proceeding and can claim a valid defence or exemption under the Law (Protection of Privacy Law, sect. 32).

486. Civil or criminal liability for infringements of privacy which are published in a newspaper may be imposed not only on the person who brought the information to the newspaper, but also the editor, the person who actually decided on publishing the damaging information, and the publisher. For other types of published material, civil and criminal liability may be extended to the printer and distributor (ibid., sects. 30-31).

"(c) For the purposes of this section, 'security authority' means any of the following:

"(1) the Israel Police;

"(2) the Intelligence Branch of the General Staff, and the Military Police, of the Israel Defence Forces;

"(3) the General Security Service."

487. Recent amendments to the Protection of Privacy Law, which regulate the dissemination of personal information held by public authorities or in databases, as well as direct mail, are discussed below.

Search and seizure in criminal proceedings

488. In the past, Israel Police personnel had the authority, as part of their powers of arrest and detention, to carry out a search of a person's body. This power was used, among others, by Prison Service officials to carry out searches inside the body to obtain concealed evidence, such as the use of an enema to find narcotics. In a landmark decision in 1979, the Supreme Court ruled that absent the consent of the person being searched, the power to carry out bodily searches extended only to searches on a person's body, and not to any intervention into the body itself. H.C.J. 375/79, Katalan v. Prisons Service, 34(3) P.D. 294.

489. In March 1996, the Knesset enacted a new statute which deals specifically with searches of a person's body. The Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Search of a Suspect's Body) Law, 5756-1996, defines precisely which actions constitute external or internal searches of a person's body, and prescribes exacting procedural requirements for allowing and carrying out such searches.* Only those types of "internal" and "external" searches specifically contemplated by the Law may be performed, and then only under the circumstances prescribed in the Law. The closed set of "internal" searches includes a blood test, internal imaging of the body by ultrasound, x-ray or scanner instruments, and gynaecological examinations, including removal of substances (ibid., sect. 1). Prior to carrying out any search, the person must be asked if he or she consents. "External" searches may be performed even if the suspect refuses to give his or her consent, subject to several procedural requirements. If, on the other hand, the suspect refuses to undergo one of the "internal" searches contemplated by the law, then the law enforcement authority must receive permission from the Court to undertake the search. The Court will not grant a permit if there is an alternative, less invasive way to accomplish the purpose of the search.

490. Under the new Law, the refusal by a suspect to undergo an internal body search of the types permitted in the Law can add incriminating weight to the

*An "external search" is defined by the new law as one of the following: frontal examination, including a photograph, of a person's naked body; taking an imprint of any part of the body; removing a substance from underneath the fingernails or from the nostrils; removing hair, including roots; removing material found on the surface of the skin; examination of skin; urine or saliva samples, breath analysis; removing cells from the internal part of the cheek. Criminal Procedure (Enforcement Powers - Search of a Suspect's Body) Law, sect. 1.

For example, a police captain must give written approval for the external search, must give the suspect an opportunity to explain his or her refusal, and must explain to the suspect the manner in which the search will be carried out, and the fact that a refusal to undergo the search may have incriminating evidentiary weight if the suspect is ultimately tried. A doctor must confirm, after examining the suspect, that there is no health-related impediment to carrying out the search. In addition, even external searches generally must be done by a person of the same sex as the suspect, and must not be done in the presence of others if it involves exposure of any bodily parts that normally are not exposed (ibid., sects. 2-5).

prosecution's evidence, if the search is not undertaken because of the suspect's refusal. No such evidentiary effect will obtain if the police did not request a permit for an internal search (unless the police do not do so because the delay involved in getting a court permit will likely harm the evidence), or if the court did not issue a permit for an internal search upon request, or if necessary medical approval is not given for an internal search. Refusal by a person suspected of an offence involving dangerous drugs (not including personal use) or offences involving severe violence to undergo an internal search when the Court issued a permit to do so, or to undergo an external search in a manner preventing the police from carrying out the search reasonably, is liable to two years' imprisonment.

491. The powers given to police personnel under the new Law, and the procedures it sets out for bodily searches, apply in substantial part to searches by prison wardens, certain customs inspectors, and military policemen (sects. 17, 18, and 22 of the Law).

492. Search of a person's home. The Israel Police may carry out a search in a person's private domain, including in his or her home, in two overarching sets of circumstances: to prevent the imminent commission of a crime, when the police officer has a reasonable suspicion that a crime is being committed, or has just been committed, in a particular place; and to secure evidence which cannot otherwise be obtained in the course of a criminal investigation. A search warrant from a court is necessary only in the latter case. Motions for warrants are typically heard ex parte, and routinely granted.

493. A person's home may also be searched without his consent in the context of proceedings to collect a civil debt through the Execution Office. Specially appointed deputies of the Execution Office may enter into a judgement debtor's home or yard to find movable property and other assets which may be garnished to ensure repayment of the debt. In certain circumstances, they may also enter the home or personal domain of third parties who have movable property owned by or owing to the debtor. To carry out such a garnishment order, the court deputies have the right to use reasonable force, including to break the locks on doors (Execution Law, 5727-1967, sect. 22).

Electronic surveillance: wiretapping and eavesdropping

494. The Knesset has recognized that personal privacy can be seriously infringed through the use of electronic devices to track the movement of persons or things and to intercept private communications. Some forms of surveillance are dealt with by the Protection of Privacy Law discussed above. The Secret Monitoring Law, 5739-1979, was enacted for two principal purposes: on the one hand, to protect the individual against invasion of privacy by preventing private or unregulated eavesdropping into his or her personal communication without his knowledge, by listening in on the telephone or other telecommunications instruments, or by placing a microphone near that person, and by setting strict criminal penalties for illegal eavesdropping. At the same time, the Law establishes procedural requirements for eavesdropping by certain official authorities for purposes of State security or prevention of crime and apprehension of offenders.

495. The Law defines eavesdropping as any listening in, recording or copying of a conversation or electronic transmission of information, by mechanical means, without the consent of either party to the conversation or either the sender or receiver of the transmission. The types of transmissions covered by the Law have recently been broadened to adjust to technological developments, and now include cellular telephones, wireless communications, facsimile, telex, teleprinter or communications between computers (Secret Monitoring Law, sect. 1).

496. Eavesdropping by the Israel Police. The Law empowers the Israel Police to carry out eavesdropping for the purpose of preventing crime or apprehending offenders, after having received a permit from the President of the District Court. Such permits are valid for up to three months, and may be extended (ibid., sect. 6). In deciding whether to grant the permit, the judge must consider the degree of invasion of privacy entailed by the type of eavesdropping requested. Refusal by the court to issue a permit may be appealed to the Supreme Court by the Attorney-General. The Inspector General of the Police must file a monthly report to the Attorney-General regarding the eavesdropping permits issued under the Law, and the terms of those permits (ibid.). The number of wiretap permits given to the Police has averaged roughly 1,000 - 1,100 annually over the last several years. Roughly half of these wiretap permits are given in connection with drug-related offences.

497. The Inspector General of the Police may authorize a wiretap for up to 48 hours if he deems that it is urgently necessary to prevent a crime or apprehend offenders and that it is not possible to receive a permit quickly enough in the circumstances. In such cases, the Inspector General must notify the Attorney-General immediately regarding the issuing of the permit, and the Attorney-General may cancel it at his discretion.

498. In the annual report published by the State Comptroller in 1991, police practices relating to eavesdropping were critically reviewed. Among other things, the Comptroller's report found that wiretap permits were not always used according to their strict terms, as the Police had tended to record all conversations made on a particular telephone line, not merely those made by the particular person with regard to whom the permit was granted. The report further found a lack of oversight regarding the volume of wiretap requests and permits, the number of arrests, indictments and convictions made as a result of the wiretaps, and the number of persons or telephone lines involved. To respond to these problems, the Secret Monitoring Law was amended in 1995 to tighten the scope of and procedures for police wiretap permits. New internal police directives require the approval of a senior police official to apply for a wiretap. In addition, the Law requires an annual report by the Inspector General of the Police to the Constitution, Law and Justice

Committee of the Knesset regarding the number of requests and permits in the reporting period, as well as the number of persons, telephone lines and telecommunications devices covered by the permits.

499. General Security Service. The heads of the General Security Service and of Military Intelligence may authorize eavesdropping to protect national security, upon approval of their written request by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Defence. As with police wiretaps, security-related permits are valid for up to three months, but may be renewed. In urgent circumstances, the head of the security apparatus involved may authorize a wiretap for up to 48 hours (ibid., sects. 4-5). Under the 1995 amendment to the Law, the Prime Minister or Defence Minister may also authorize a wiretap of employees in the defence establishment in order to prevent leaking of sensitive security information. The 1995 amendment also requires the GSS to present an annual report regarding its surveillance activity to a "mixed committee" composed of the Knesset Defence and Foreign Affairs Committee and the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee. The report is presented in closed-door session.

500. In addition to wiretapping by the above authorities, the Law allows the Chief Military Censor to eavesdrop on international conversations to or from Israel for purposes of censorship; internal eavesdropping on police or military communications systems; listening-in by properly authorized personnel to ensure proper functioning of telecommunications lines; and amateur radio frequencies (ibid., sect. 8). Conversations heard in the public domain do not require a permit if the eavesdropping is done by properly authorized police or security personnel for the specific purposes contemplated by the law, or if a person is openly making a recording in good faith for purposes of publication or research.

501. Except for the exemptions noted above, any electronic eavesdropping without a permit is a criminal offence, as is the wilful, unauthorized use or disclosure of any information obtained by electronic eavesdropping, even if the eavesdropping itself was legal. It is also an offence to install any instrument for use in unlawful eavesdropping. Despite the threat of criminal liability, unauthorized wiretapping and eavesdropping have unfortunately become quite common in Israel. Much of the illegal activity is performed by private investigators for their clients, in the context of marital conflicts, or for commercial and political espionage. Over the past several years a significant number of complaints have been filed with the Police by politicians and members of the media regarding suspicion that their conversations are being tapped. Of particular note is the uncovering of large-scale wiretapping of journalists at Israel's two major daily newspapers, Yediot Ahronot and Ma'ariv, allegedly at the behest of the editors-in-chief of the two newspapers, who were indicted along with other persons in 1995, and some of whom were recently convicted.

502. Amendment of the Secret Monitoring Law The sweeping amendment of the Secret Monitoring Law in 1995, noted above, attempts to address the burgeoning phenomenon of unauthorized surveillance. Among other things, the amendment increased the maximum sentence for violations of the law from three years' imprisonment to five, and provided for cancelling the professional licence of a private investigator convicted under the Law. The definition of eavesdropping was extended to include newer telecommunications media such as facsimile, computers, and satellite transmissions. The standards for admissibility of evidence was loosened somewhat: whereas the Law formerly imposed an absolute prohibition on the use of evidence obtained by an illegal wiretap, it now allows the use of such evidence in certain exceptional circumstances when the evidence is sought for use in a trial, or, in the case of the Police, for the investigation of a serious felony carrying a sentence of at least seven years' imprisonment. The Attorney-General, the State Attorney, or, in military court proceedings, the Military Advocate General, must give prior approval of all requests to submit such evidence to the court. On the other hand, if the eavesdropping is performed unlawfully by a person who is otherwise entitled to request a permit, then evidence obtained thereby may be used in a trial for a serious felony only if the eavesdropping was done by mistake and in good faith, with presumed legal authority. In either case, the court, to admit such wiretap evidence, must show why the need to uncover the truth should prevail over the right to privacy in the circumstances of the case. Lawfully obtained eavesdropping evidence, on the other hand, may be used in any criminal proceeding (ibid., sect. 13).

503. Another significant change under the 1995 amendment allows for eavesdropping by police or security personnel on privileged communications between a person and his lawyer, psychologist, doctor or member of clergy, which hitherto had been forbidden. Under current law, the President of the District Court may permit a recording or other surveillance of such privileged conversations if he or she is convinced that there is a reasonable suspicion that the lawyer, psychologist, doctor or clergy member is personally involved in murder, manslaughter, a drug transaction or a felony involving damage to State security, and that the wiretap is necessary or essential for preventing or investigating the offence (ibid., sect. 9 A (a)).

504. Correspondence. The term "correspondence" may be deemed today to include communication by facsimile and electronic mail no less than sending of letters and other articles by post. Electronic correspondence is regulated for the most part by the Clandestine Listening Law, discussed above.

505. Under Regulation 89 of the Mandatory Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, the Postal and Telegraph Censor, which operates as a civil department within the Ministry of Defence, has the power to open any postal articles and inspect them in order to prevent harm to State security, to public safety or public order.

Protection of personal information in databases

506. The State of Israel has recognized the need to regulate the use of personal information contained in private and public databases. One part of the Protection of Privacy Law deals with protection of personal privacy in databases. All databases not exempted from the purview of the Law must be registered in a central registry. Under section 7 of the Law, a "database" is defined to include any computerized compilation (not including private personal computers) of information on the personality, personal status, intimate affairs, state of health, economic position, vocational qualifications, opinions and beliefs of a person. However, the Law does not require registration of personal databases containing less than 10,000 names; databases containing only information previously published or made available to the public; or databases in which the information was given by the persons listed therein by consent and which is not used for direct mailings. Compilations that include only a person's name, address and means of establishing contact are not regulated, so long as the information in the database does not include anything which, if disclosed, would constitute an invasion of privacy. The Registrar of Databases may refuse to register a database if there are reasonable grounds to believe that it will be used for illegal ends, including the invasion of privacy, or if the database was itself compiled by way of invasion of privacy.

507. The holders or managers of databases bear a statutory duty not to use or send any information on the database except for the purpose for which it was established; to give basic information about the database when approaching persons to ask them to give information about themselves for inclusion in the database; to allow individuals to examine information about themselves which is included in the database and to request corrections of the information; and to maintain security of the information on the database against illegal use, copying or tampering. Certain entities, such as banks, insurance companies, credit rating services, public bodies, and any entity that maintains more than four databases which are owned by more than one party, must appoint a properly qualified person to maintain security of the information on the database. The duty to allow inspection of personal information does not apply to databases compiled by security authorities, including the Israel Police, the Intelligence Branch of the IDF General Staff, the IDF Military Police, the GSS, the Ministry of Defence, certain military industries, and the Mossad, or to those possessed by the Prisons Service or tax authorities. The law also provides that a person may be denied the right to inspect information about him- or herself in a database if considerations of State security or foreign relations so require (ibid., sect. 13).

508. Under a new amendment to the Protection of Privacy Law, which entered into effect in April 1997, any direct marketing activity, by telephone, mail or otherwise, which uses personal information from a database must clearly and prominently note the database from which the personal information was taken, and must notify the recipient of his or her right to be stricken from the database. All persons have the enforceable right to have personal information about them stricken from a database, or to demand that such information not be disseminated, or that it not be sent to particular persons or categories of persons (sect. 17 F of the Law).

509. In practice, the regime created by the Protection of Privacy Law for registration and oversight of databases has thus far been implemented only partially. Approximately 5,200 databases are registered as of submission of this report, which, by all accounts, is far from the actual number of currently existing databases covered by the Law. While the Office of the Registrar of Databases has fairly broad supervisory powers under the Law, a significant increase in budget and personnel has been necessary to help ensure fuller compliance with the law. Recognizing this need for added resources, the Knesset recently amended the law to mandate formation of a "monitoring unit" the size of which "shall fit the monitoring needs". The Registrar must now prepare an annual report for submission to the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee of the Knesset by the Council for Protection of Privacy, which will describe the enforcement and monitoring activities during the preceding year (sect. 10 A of the Law).

Disclosure of information by public bodies

510. The Protection of Privacy Law also creates arrangements regarding sharing of personal information by various public bodies. As a general matter, public bodies may not disclose personal information to other public bodies unless such information was already lawfully published or made available to public inspection, or the person involved consents. The Law grants an exemption to security authorities, which may receive or disclose personal information in order to fulfil their functions, so long as such disclosure is not otherwise prohibited (sect. 23 B of the Law). In addition, public bodies may share information if it is deemed necessary to carrying out their functions or compliance with the Law. If the sender of the information is not a ministry or other national official institution - for example, a municipal authority or government corporation - then the transfer of information must itself be properly within the powers and function of that institution. The exemption for non-security-related public bodies does not apply if the personal information was originally given to them on condition that it would not be disclosed.

511. Public bodies cannot disclose personal information from their databases to private entities.

512. Information regarding criminal record The Israel Police maintains two types of databases regarding criminal records. The first, called the "criminal register", includes information on criminal convictions and sentences, decisions of unfitness to stand trial due to mental illness or disability, and other punishments and court orders connected with criminal proceedings (Criminal Register and Rehabilitation Law, 5741-1981, sect. 2). The GSS, the Military Police, and the Field-Security Department of the IDF, as well as the Israel Police, have direct access to this database, and are empowered to pass on information from it to 30 different government bodies for which information on a person's criminal record may be relevant in carrying out their functions. These 30 bodies also may receive information on criminal files still pending against a person.

513. The Police also maintains records of a range of other information regarding criminal proceedings which are not included in the "criminal register". Information regarding decisions not to investigate or to indict a person - for example due to lack of evidence, lack of guilt, or lack of a public interest in prosecution - or of a decision to suspend criminal proceedings, may be disclosed only to the Attorney-General or his deputies, a parole officer, a scientific researcher, or the security authorities who have direct access to the register. Files closed for "lack of guilt" are stricken from the police register, and the name of the suspect in the file is deleted from computerized databases. In the case of files closed for lack of evidence or public interest, the suspect can apply to the head of the Investigation Division of the Police seven years after closure of the file to strike the file from the register. In general, the Law also provides for prescription of convictions, that is, the period after which information about a person's conviction may not be disclosed and that person bears no duty to disclose the fact of the conviction; and for striking convictions from the criminal register. The period for prescription varies with the severity of the sentence, and the time for striking the conviction from the register is typically 10 years after the date of prescription (sects. 14-16, 19-20). Once a conviction is stricken from the register, the person is deemed not to have been convicted; any evidence disclosing the fact of a conviction which has thus been stricken from the register shall not be admissible, either in court proceedings or before any public servant or entity, unless disclosed by the person whose conviction has been stricken; and the person bears no duty to answer any questions about the conviction.

Privacy of medical records

514. The recently enacted Patient's Rights Law, 5756-1996, contains provisions ensuring the privacy of medical information and records. Under section 19 of the Law, all medical personnel or employees at a medical institution are obligated to maintain the confidentiality of all information regarding a patient that they learned in the course of carrying out their duties; the attending physician and the director of the institution bear a further duty to ensure that all workers under their authority fulfil their duty of confidentiality.

515. Medical information regarding a patient may be disclosed to third parties only in clearly circumscribed circumstances defined in the Law, such as when the physician or institution bears a legal duty to do so, when the disclosure is necessary for treating the patient, or a statutory ethics committee decides, after hearing the patient's claims, that disclosure of the information is crucial for protecting the health of another person or of the public, and that the need for disclosure outweighs the interest in non-disclosure (Patient's Rights Law, sect. 20). In any case, the disclosure must be to an extent no greater than what is necessary for the matter at hand, and with maximal avoidance of disclosing the identity of the patient (ibid.)

Information protected by professional privilege

516. The law recognizes several types of professional privilege that safeguard information regarding a person that has been communicated to his or her doctor, lawyer, psychologist, social worker or priest. Under the Evidence Ordinance [New Version], 5731-1971 (sect. 48), a lawyer and his or her employees bear no duty to disclose information or documents exchanged between the lawyer and client or a person on behalf of the client as evidence in legal proceedings, so long as that information is related to the matter which the lawyer is handling for the client; the lawyer bears a positive ethical duty not to disclose such information. The attorney-client privilege is deemed to be that of the client, so that if the client waives the privilege, then the lawyer may be obligated to disclose such information in legal proceedings. Physicians, as noted above, bear a statutory obligation to maintain the confidentiality of medical information regarding their patients. In legal proceedings, physicians may be compelled to disclose medical information without the patient's consent if the court decides that the need for disclosure for the purposes of justice outweighs the interest in maintaining the patient's privacy (sect. 49). A similar privilege applies to psychologists and social workers (sects. 50-50 A). Clergy have a stronger privilege regarding any matter which they are told by a person at confession, so long as applicable religious law forbids disclosure (sect. 51).

Individual freedom of information

517. As of the submission of this report, the Constitution, Law and Justice Committee of the Knesset has completed the preparation of a Freedom of Information Act, and it is expected to be enacted within a few weeks. The bill was introduced by the Government, spurred by a sustained campaign by a coalition of NGOs led by the Public Committee for Freedom of Information. It will allow every person to receive information from public authorities, with an exemption for the release of information that would constitute the invasion of another person's privacy.

Unlawful attacks on honour or reputation

518. The Prohibition of Defamation Law, 5725-1965, imposes both criminal and civil sanctions for defamation, libel or slander. Defamatory matter is defined under section 1 of the Law as "anything the publication of which may -

"(1) lower a person in the estimation of others - or expose him to hatred, contempt or ridicule on their part;

"(2) bring a person into disrepute because of acts, conduct or qualities attributed to him;

"(3) injure a person in his office, whether it be a public or any other office, or in his business, vocation or profession;

"(4) bring a person into disrepute because of his origin or religion, sex and sexual orientation, race, or place of residence."

519. Publication may be not only by speech or writing, but also by a painting, an effigy, a gesture, or any other means. To constitute a publication, the defamatory matter must be intended for a person other than the injured party, or, if in writing, it must be likely under the circumstances to reach someone other than the injured party. Criminal defamation may be claimed where the defamation was made with intent to injure and is published to two or more persons other than the injured party. To make out a civil claim, the defamatory matter must reach at least one person other than the injured party. Both civil and criminal claims are limited by certain exemptions and defences. The exemptions apply to publications made by official authorities in their capacity as such, or in the proper course of official proceedings, as well as accurate and fair summaries of what was said or occurred at court hearings or before a governmental commission of inquiry.

520. If the defamatory matter was true, and its publication was in the public interest, then the defaming party may claim an affirmative defence to criminal and civil liability under the statute, provided that the publication did not exceed what was necessary from the standpoint of the particular public interest invoked (sect. 14 of the Law). Another statutory defence to liability is that the publication was made in good faith under any of the following circumstances (sect. 15 of the Law):

"(1) he did not know and need not have known of the existence of the injured party, or of the circumstances which imply defamation or its attribution to the injured party;

"(2) the relations between him and the person to whom the publication was addressed imposed on him a legal, moral or social duty to make the publication;

"(3) the publication was made in order to protect a legitimate personal interest of the accused or defendant, of the person to whom the publication was addressed or of someone in whom that person had a legitimate personal interest;

"(4) the publication was an expression of opinion on the conduct of the injured party in a judicial, official or public capacity, in a public service or in connection with a public matter, or on his character, past actions or opinions as revealed by such conduct;

"(5) the publication was an expression of opinion on the conduct of the injured party -

"(a) as a party, the representative of a party, or a witness, at a public session in a [judicial or quasi-judicial] proceeding ...

"(b) as a person whose case is the subject of an inquiry, as the representative of such a person or as a witness at a public session of a commission of inquiry ...

or on his character, past, actions, or opinions as revealed by such conduct;

"(6) the publication was a criticism of a literary, scientific, artistic or other work which the injured party had published or publicly exhibited, or of an act he had performed in public, or - insofar as pertinent to such a criticism - an expression of opinion on the character, past, actions or opinions of the injured party as revealed in such a work of art;

"(7) the publication was an expression of opinion on the conduct or character of the injured party in a matter in which the accused or defendant was a superior of the injured party, by law or contract, and the publication was justified by his being a superior as aforesaid;

"(8) the publication was a complaint against the injured party in a matter in which a person to whom the complaint is submitted was a superior of the injured party, by law or contract, or a complaint submitted to an authority competent to receive complaints against the injured party or to investigate the matter which is the subject of the complaint;

"(9) the publication was an accurate and fair report of a public meeting or of any such meeting or session of a body corporate as the public had access to, and the publication was in the public interest;

"(10) the publication was made for the sole purpose of denouncing or denying defamatory matter published previously;

"(11) the publication was merely the delivery of information to the editor of a newspaper in order that he might examine the question of its publication in the newspaper."

521. The Law also establishes statutory presumptions regarding good faith. Among other things, the publication is presumed to have been in bad faith if it is untrue and the writer either did not believe it to be true, or did not take reasonable steps prior to publication to ascertain whether it was true or not; or if the defendant intended to inflict greater injury by the publication than was reasonable in defending the values protected by any of the good faith defences mentioned above.

522. Section 4 of the Defamation Law makes it a criminal offence to defame any group as such. Criminal proceedings may be initiated for "group defamation" only upon the approval of the Attorney-General.

523. The protection of a person from false and defamatory attacks on his honour or reputation is tempered by the fundamental principle of free expression, which entails, among other things, the right to speak and write without fear of civil or criminal liability. As interpreted in judicial decisions, the right of free speech significantly shields persons engaged in critical, even derogatory speech, particularly where that speech concerns a public figure. The balance struck by the Supreme Court between the right to free speech and the right of a public figure to his reputation has evolved over the years. In one landmark case, the Court, reversing on rehearing its own decision in the same case, held that the competing rights hold more or less the same normative weight, but that the importance in a democratic society of scrutinizing the conduct of public officials should not devolve into a "right to slander under the guise of fair comment". and thus a journalist may claim the defence of good faith expression of opinion only if the "factual" and "opinion" parts of an article are clearly separated (F.H. 9/77, Israel Electric Company et al. v. Ha'aretz Newspaper Publishing Co. et al., 32(3) P.D. 337). In a later case, the Court held that the free speech principle has greater normative weight, as a general matter, than the right to honour or reputation of a public figure. As J. Barak, reasoned:

"In the public and political realm, it is difficult to sever the link between an opinion and the person who expresses it. Hence the social need to allow freedom not only of opinions, but also with regard to officials who serve as their mouthpiece ... Bodies and persons who hold public office or positions in which the public has an interest, take upon themselves by their very position and role certain risks related to attack on their reputation. Of course, this does not justify injuring their reputation, which is their most treasured asset, but it does weaken the weight that ought to be given to this consideration in relation to free expression ... The proper response to defamation is to disclose its falsity, and to bring the truth to light. And it is precisely the public figure who has the wherewithal, the knowledge and the access to the media, and with these he has the capacity - more than a 'private' person - to defend his reputation properly."

Avneri v. Shapira, 43(3) P.D. 840.

Invasion of privacy of the family

524. Removal of child from parental custody. As discussed under articles 23 and 24, under the Youth (Care and Supervision) Law, 5722-1962, the courts have the power to intervene in a variety of ways in the parental guardianship of their children, if it believes that a parent cannot adequately care for or supervise the child; if the child's physical or mental health has been or may be harmed for any reason; if the child is found loitering or begging; or if the child lives in a place that is used continually for the commission of crimes. The court, in such circumstances, may order that the child be removed from parental custody if it deems that there is no other way to ensure proper care and supervision. It may also place the child under the supervision of a welfare officer, and require the parents to comply with any directives regarding the child's care, including that the child undergo psychiatric observation or care.

525. Family violence. In 1991, the Knesset enacted the Family Violence (Prevention) Law, 5751-1991, which grants the courts broad discretion to grant urgent relief in order to protect persons who have been or may be threatened by violence from other family members. Among other things, the court may issue protective injunctions, under which the person suspected of violence against a family member may be prevented from entering the family home, from coming within a specified distance from it, from coming into contact with family members, or from carrying weapons. Until enactment of the Law, the availability of such an order removing a violent family member from the home was fairly restricted, typically as a subsidiary form of relief in alimony disputes, and only then in limited circumstances.

526. Family privacy and the law of evidence The Evidence Ordinance [New Version], 5731-1971, provides that a spouse, parent or child may not testify in a criminal trial against the spouse, child or parent, respectively (sects. 3-4). Such testimony is admissible, however, in trials for violent crimes, neglect of children, sexual offences within the family, offences against minors and invalids, or obstruction of justice or witness tampering related to any of these offences.

527. Court proceedings in many family-related matters, such as adoption, custody contests between parents and trials of minors, are generally heard in closed-door session.

Reproductive privacy: abortion

528. Until 1977, Mandatory legislation criminalizing abortion remained in force. Current law enables legal abortions at recognized medical institutions, but not without encroaching upon the autonomy and privacy of the pregnant woman. For an abortion to be performed legally in Israel, it must first be approved by a statutory committee composed of three persons, at least one of whom is a specialist in obstetrics and gynaecology and another a registered social worker, and at least one of whom must be a woman. Moreover, under the Penal Law, 5737-1977, only certain specific grounds can justify approving an abortion: if the woman is under the legal age of marriageability or over 40; if the pregnancy is due to relations prohibited by the criminal law, to incest, or to extramarital relations; if the child is likely to have a physical or mental defect; or if continuing the pregnancy is likely to endanger the woman's life or cause her physical or mental harm (Penal Law, 5737-1977, sect. 316).

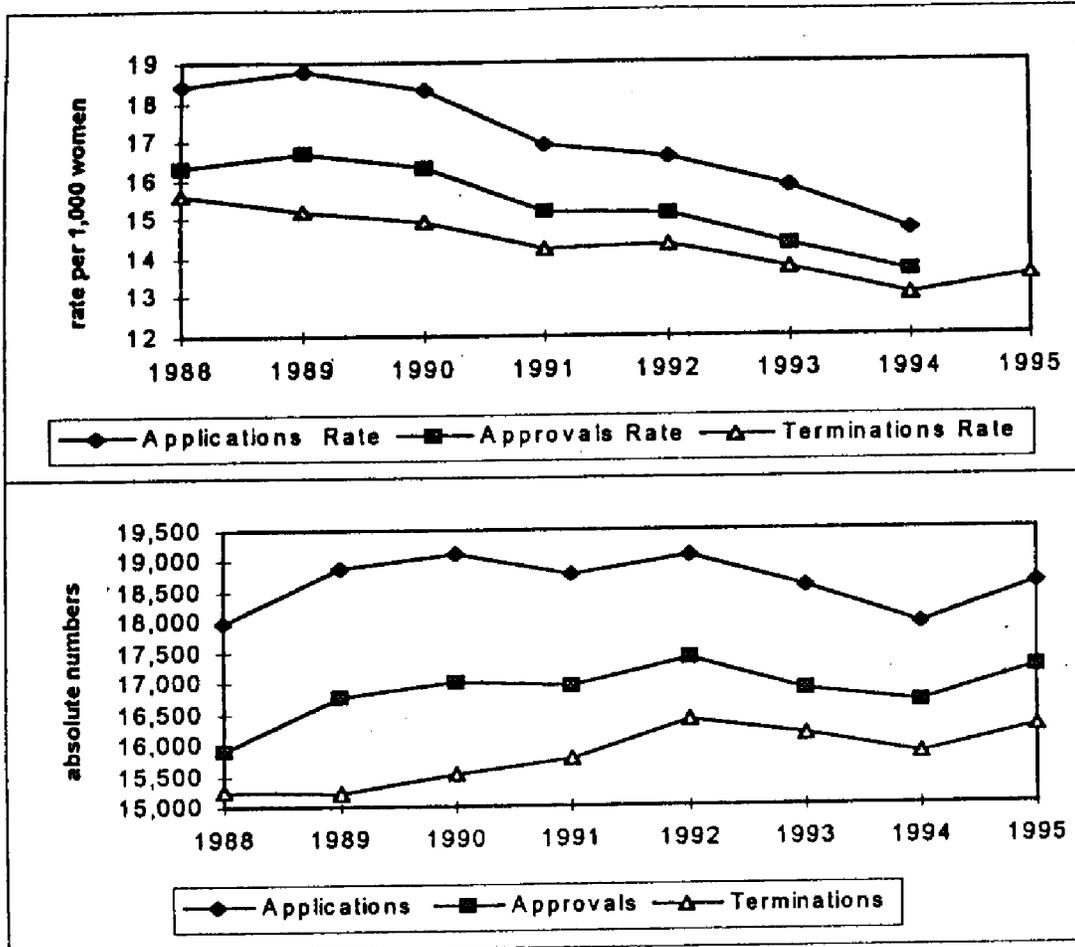

Table 12: Terminations of pregnancy in hospitals, by cause

Year	1980-1983	1987-1988	1990	1993	1994	1995
Applications			19,121	18,568	17,958	18,586
Approvals			17,020	16,855	16,650	17,211
Actual terminations	61,444	30,545 ^{b/}	15,509	16,149	15,836	16,244
Article:
Woman's age	6,827	3,405	1,717	1,778	1,538	1,629
Out-of-wedlock pregnancy	23,301	13,370	6,417	7,063	7,239	7,747
Malformed foetus	9,326	6,203	3,116	2,837	2,779	2,704
Danger to woman's life	21,543	7,498	4,259	4,471	4,280	4,164
Rates per 100 live births	16.1	15.3	15	14.4	13.8	14.2
Percentage of known pregnancies ^{a/}	13.8	13.3	13.1	12.6	12.1	12.4

^{a/} Live births and terminations of pregnancies

^{b/} The report of one of the commissions in 1987 was incomplete; 72 procedures are estimated to be missing.

Figure 6: Applications for abortions, approvals, and actual terminations

529. No approval for an abortion is needed other than that of the committee, even if the woman seeking the abortion is a minor. Upon applying to the committee, the woman seeking the abortion must meet with a social worker, who is directed by law to explain the physical and emotional dangers of abortion, and is also instructed by the Ministry of Health to attempt to convince her to choose an alternative solution to the unwanted pregnancy. The woman must also meet with a doctor who explains the medical risks involved. The reports of both the doctor and the social worker must be reviewed by the committee before it makes its decision. The woman must also give her written consent to an abortion after the physical and mental risks have been explained to her.

Table 13: Applications to commissions for termination of pregnancy (1995)

Marital status and religion	Total	To age 19
Absolute numbers
Total	18,145	2,318
Married women	8,457	105
Unmarried women	6,668	2,193
Religion:
Jewish	15,305	2,136
Muslim	863	51
Christian	493	13
Rates per 1,000 women
Total	13.0	10.4
Married women	12.8	9
Unmarried women	13.2	10.5
Religion:
Jewish	13.5	12.3
Muslim	4.5
Christian	10.5

530. Applications for abortion of a pregnancy that has developed beyond the twenty-third week must be reviewed by a special committee, composed of the director of the medical centre to which the application has been sent, the director of the maternity ward, the director of the neonatology ward, the director of a genetics centre, and a chief social worker. Thus far, six such special committees have been formed. It should be noted that a minor may give her consent to an abortion without requiring approval of her parent or representative.

531. Since 1980, the number of legal abortions performed in Israel has fluctuated between an estimated 14,000 to 19,000 per year.

Article 18 - Freedom of religion and conscience

532. The State of Israel was founded as a home for the Jewish people, in which freedom of religious worship and conscience would be guaranteed to members of all faiths. The full fabric of the relationship between religion and State in Israel is quite labyrinthine. History, political expediency, party politics, the lack of a constitution which specifically deals with freedom of religion, and the broad power of the Knesset to legislate in religious matters have resulted in a patchwork of laws and practices that are not easily susceptible to generalization. Although the Declaration of Independence defines Israel as a "Jewish State", and the recent Basic Law: Human Dignity refers to a "Jewish and democratic State", there is no established religion in Israel, properly so-called. Nor, however, does Israel maintain the principle of separation between matters of religion and the institutions of Government. Rather, the law and practice in Israel regarding religious freedom may best be understood as a sort of hybrid between non-intervention in religious affairs, on the one hand, and on the other hand the interpenetration of religion and Government in several forms, most notably by legislation establishing the jurisdiction of religious courts of the different faiths in specified matters of "personal status"; by government funding of authorities which provide religious services to several of the religious communities; and by a series of legal institutions and practices which apply Jewish religious norms to the Jewish population. While it may be said that Israel has been quite successful in guaranteeing the freedom of religious practice and the use of sites holy to the three monotheistic faiths, particularly for the non-Jewish communities, it is more difficult to claim that "freedom from religion" is fully protected, particularly for the Jewish population.

Historical background: organization of the religious communities

533. The relationship between religion and State in Israel is to a great extent an outgrowth of the regime instituted during the Ottoman period and maintained during the British Mandate. The Ottoman order was grounded in a social structure in which homogeneous religious minority communities existed within a Muslim society. These non-Muslim religious communities, called millets, were led by religious dignitaries who were responsible to the Ottoman Government, and generally enjoyed a fairly high degree of independence in managing their communal religious affairs.* Muslim law (Shari'a), which was one of the three branches of the Ottoman legal system, applied to all questions of personal status involving Muslims, including marriage, divorce and succession. The courts of the recognized non-Muslim communities were granted judicial autonomy in matters of personal status for persons who belonged to their community. The jurisdiction of these community courts depended on the scope of rights granted to the community in question, which varied. In general, non-Muslim communities were granted jurisdiction in matters of marriage, divorce and maintenance, as well as the power to regulate their internal affairs, such as education and charitable institutions.

* One noteworthy exception in this regard was the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate. Following the death of the reigning Patriarch in the 1870s, internecine conflict surrounding the election of his successor developed into prolonged rioting and violence. To help restore order, the Ottoman Grand Vizier promulgated in 1875 an ordinance, which was actually a lengthy telegram, setting out, among other things, the procedures for electing the new Patriarch. This conflict over succession of a deceased Patriarch repeated itself in the 1930s, during the British Mandate, resulting in two additional Mandatory ordinances regarding the election of the Patriarch and the management of the Greek Orthodox Church. These ordinances have never been repealed or superseded, and thus, somewhat anomalously, remain part of the law of the State of Israel. L.C.A. 688/91, S.B.C. Establishment Inc. et al. v. Greek Orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem (Takdin - S.Ct. 91 (2), p. 2,797 (non-compliance with Ottoman and Mandatory ordinances regarding election of the Greek Patriarch may be grounds for disqualifying the Patriarch as a proper party in a lawsuit).

Certain communities also had jurisdiction in matters of succession. Ottoman law did not apply to foreign nationals who were subject to the consular courts.

534. The British Mandatory authorities adopted the Ottoman system and kept it largely intact: the applicable law in matters of personal status was the religious law of the community to which the individual belonged, and jurisdiction lay with the religious courts of that community.* Muslim courts were given jurisdiction with regard to those foreign nationals whose national law made them subject to Muslim religious jurisdiction, as was the case under the Ottoman system. Matters of personal status affecting all other foreign nationals were handed over to the newly established District Courts, unless the foreign national consented to the jurisdiction of a religious court.

535. One of the principal problems of the Ottoman-Mandatory system was that it largely did not provide for persons who belonged to none of the recognized communities, either because they espoused no religion or disavowed the one into which they were born, or their religion was not practised in the country, or their religion was practised but their community not officially recognized. Such persons were deprived, among other things, of the right to marry unless they adopted the religion of a recognized religious community.

536. Following the establishment of the State of Israel, the Knesset maintained the three underlying principles of the status quo: religious law in matters of personal status, communal jurisdiction and preferential treatment of foreign nationals. As discussed in more detail below, the principal change that occurred following independence was the subsuming of Jewish communal religious institutions into official State bodies, with authority over the entire Jewish population, and the piecemeal enactment into legislation of certain religious practices under Jewish religious law (Halakha). Three additional religious communities have been recognized - the Druze (in 1957), the Evangelical Episcopal Church (in 1970) and the Baha'i faith (in 1971). Several other religious communities are not officially recognized - Anglicans, the Church of Scotland, Lutherans, Unitarians, Baptists, Quakers and others - and thus no local religious tribunal has

* Under the British Mandate, the recognized communities included the Eastern (Orthodox), Latin (Catholic), Gregorian Armenian, Armenian Catholic, Syrian (Catholic), Chaldean (Uniate), Greek Catholic Melkite, Maronite, Syrian Orthodox, and Jewish (Knesset Israel). Palestine Order in Council, 1922, as amended in 1939, Second Schedule. As under the Ottoman system, the Muslim population was not defined as a "recognized community"; this difference in appellation did not impair the power of Muslim courts to rule in matters of personal status involving Muslims.

 The British Government made an initial attempt to deal with this problem in 1939 by adding article 65 A to the Palestine Order in Council, under which "provision may be made by ordinance for the celebration, dissolution and annulment of marriages of persons neither of whom is a Muslim or a member of a religious community and for the granting by the courts of orders or decrees in connection with the marriages of such persons, their dissolution or annulment." No implementing legislation, however, was ever enacted by the Mandatory authorities.

jurisdiction over their members in matters of personal status. This lack of official recognition does not affect the ability of these communities to practise their religion freely or to maintain communal institutions. In certain ways these smaller, unrecognized communities are freer for their lack of official status, not being subject to regulation in any matter relating to religious practice or law. The principal consequence of non-recognition is that they do not receive government funding for their religious services, as do many of the recognized communities. Their institutions do, however, receive various tax benefits and exemptions.

537. The Muslim community. During the Mandatory period, the Supreme Council for Muslim Religious Affairs was established to manage Muslim matters, including the control of wakf affairs (wakf: property, including religious sites, held in trust for the benefit of the Muslim community or individuals) and Muslim courts. The members of the Supreme Council were initially elected, and then for a brief period were appointed by the British High Commissioner. Following a period of violent unrest in 1936-37, wakf matters were removed from the control of the Council and transferred to a special committee appointed under the Mandatory Defence Regulations (Muslim Charities), 1937. Upon the establishment of the State, the Supreme Council and the special committee ceased to function and the Muslim community was left without a religious organ or communal religious institutions.

538. The Muslim religious courts were re-established by legislation in 1961. These courts have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of personal status over all Muslims, including foreign nationals who are subject to the jurisdiction of Shari'a courts under their national law. In fact, the scope of powers of the Shari'a courts is broader than all other religious courts in Israel, a vestige from the Ottoman and Mandatory periods. As organs of the State, the Muslim courts are funded through the Ministry for Religious Affairs; its judges (kadi) are State employees, appointed by the President of the State upon the nomination of a nine-member committee which parallels the selection committee for judges in the rabbinical and civil courts. The terms of office for kadi mirror those of judges in the other court systems, and are similarly aimed at ensuring judicial independence.* In matters of personal status, the Shari'a courts apply Muslim law as consolidated in the Ottoman Law of Family Rights of 1917, with modifications deriving from Israeli legislation in specific matters. While the Shari'a courts enjoy substantive independence in deciding the cases before them, they may be said to suffer from two principal problems. First, the law does not require that kadis have legal training, or any minimum level of education, as a condition for appointment, resulting in a bench of uneven quality. In addition, the Muslim religious court system has not received adequate government funding to maintain an efficient level of judicial administration. Efforts to remedy these problems are discussed below.

539. The Israeli Government, which assumed the powers of the British High Commissioner under the 1937 regulations mentioned above, has not used its powers to reconstitute the special committee for management of wakf affairs.

* Terms of judicial tenure, and judicial independence generally, are discussed under article 14 above.

Rather, under the Absentees' Property (Amendment No. 3) (Release of Charity Property and its Use) Law, 5725-1965, ownership of wakf property has passed to the Custodian of Absentee Property. The Law requires the setting up of a committee of trustees for each of the Muslim communities in Tel-Aviv-Jaffa, Ramle, Lod, Haifa, Acre, Nazareth and Shfar'am. These committees are not elected, but appointed by the Government. The law empowers the Custodian to release wakf property and to transfer it to the trustee committees, which are directed by the Law to manage the property and use its income on behalf of the Muslim population for educational grants, professional training, health, religious studies, maintenance of religious rites or customs, aid to the poor, and other purposes sanctioned by the Government. The income from wakf property not transferred to the trustee committees must nevertheless be used only for the above purposes. Wakf properties in Jerusalem - including the Temple Mount, holy to Muslims and Jews alike - are not subject to the above arrangement. Rather, they continue to be managed by the Jerusalem wakf committee, which was appointed by the Jordanian Government until the formation of the Palestinian Authority.

540. Apart from the Jerusalem wakf, religious services in the Muslim community are generally maintained and funded locally by residents of the towns and villages, with some funding from the Government, which pays the salaries of the prayer caller (muezzin) and clerical leader in many towns, and also distributes funds for repair and maintenance of mosques, graveyards and other sites of religious import.

541. The Christian communities. Compared to the other religious communities in Israel, the Christian communities maintain the highest degree of independence in managing their affairs. With the exception of the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate, as discussed above, the 10 recognized Christian communities have no statutory provisions regulating their internal constitution, as none of them has applied either to the British High Commissioner or to the Israeli Government, under the Religious Communities Ordinance, for confirmation of their rules of organization. However, religious marriages between Protestants, whose communities have not been "recognized", are celebrated, registered and recognized by the relevant government agencies. While the judgements of the religious courts of the recognized communities have the same status and force as any judgement issued by the civil courts, the organization and activity of the Christian courts - unlike their Muslim and Druze counterparts - are not provided for in Israeli legislation, but are wholly an internal matter for each Church. Some of the Christian communities in Israel are controlled and directed by their higher religious authorities in Arab countries; the Government has consistently maintained a policy of not intervening in such control, and allows visits by religious figures across the border to enable these communities to manage their affairs.

542. The Christian communities receive a minimal amount of funding from the Government for repair and maintenance of churches, graveyards and other religious sites.

543. The Druze community. In 1957 the Druze community applied for and received recognition as a religious community from the Minister for Religious Affairs. The community is headed by a Religious Council appointed by the Minister for Religious Affairs, and has its own system of religious courts, established under the Druze Religious Courts Law, 1962. These courts have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Druze, as well as in matters relating to the creation and administration of Druze religious trust charities. In other matters of personal status, the Druze courts have jurisdiction by consent of the parties. The Government has undertaken recently to increase significantly the amount of funding directed towards religious services for the Druze community. In 1997, the total amount of funding will reach approximately NIS 8 million ($2.4 million), as part of a much larger funding programme for the Druze and Circassian communities generally, which is discussed under article 27.

Funding of non-Jewish religious services

544. In comparison with funding of Jewish religious institutions, the non-Jewish communities are rather severely undersupported by the Government. The Muslim community, for example, which comprises roughly 16 per cent of the general population, received in 1996 an amount equal roughly to 2 per cent of total funding for religious services by the Ministry for Religious Affairs.

Table 14. Funding of religious services to non-Jewish and Jewish sectarian communities (in thousands of shekels), 1994-1996

Type of funding	1994	1995	1996
Religious courts	3 200	4 757	5 006
		640 a/	640
Development of religious sites	824	2 300	6 920
Muslim religious services	10 200	11 733	14 221
Druze religious services	158	308	1 056
Christian religious services	357	652	1 083
Samaritan religious services	33	50	52
Karaite religious services	469	698	727

a/ In 1995 and 1996 an extra NIS 640,000 were added to the operating budget of the religious courts for computerization and rental fees.

545. The problem of underfunding has perhaps been greatest in the Muslim and Druze communities, for two reasons: their religious courts are State organs, and thus rely on Government funding for their operation, and, unlike most of the recognized Christian communities, they do not receive substantial support from a central religious organ, either abroad or within Israel. The Ministry of Religious Affairs has recognized the need to improve the level of funding for religious matters to the non-Jewish communities. In August 1995, the Ministry published a detailed plan, entitled "One Law", which set out to achieve gradual equality in the services given to the non-Jewish and Jewish communities, both by substantial increases in funding and by institutional reforms. For the Muslim community, the plan includes, among other things, the establishment of a national Muslim Religious Council, improvement of terms of employment of Muslim clergy who are employed by the State, substantial increases in funding to Muslim holy places, establishment of an organization that would handle all matters relating to the annual pilgrimage to Mecca (haj) by Muslim Israeli citizens, establishment of a centre for development of religious services and structures for the Muslim community, improvement of physical plant and computerization of the Shari'a courts, adding more kadi positions, establishment of a code of ethics for kadis, and an amendment of the Kadis Law, 5721-1961 to require legal or other academic training as a minimum requirement for appointment of kadis. For the Druze community, the plan included the addition of two kadis, one of whom would serve as the director of the Druze religious courts, finding new quarters for the Druze courts and computerizing them, and establishing a Druze religious council which would manage the religious affairs of the Druze in Israel. For the Christian communities, the plan included the participation of the Ministry for Religious Affairs in the cost of repairing certain Christian holy sites, churches and graveyards. The recommendations of the above plan have been implemented only partially. Funding for religious services to the Muslim and Druze communities has been increased, some 50 new positions have been filled for clergy and administrative staff, and the budget for repair of religious buildings has also been augmented. In particular, the allocations of the Ministry of Religious Affairs for development of religious sites and buildings in the Druze and Circassian communities were increased from NIS 910,500 (approx. $300,000) in 1995 to NIS 7.7 million (approx. $2.41 million) in 1996, and a projected NIS 8.4 million (approx. $2.5 million) in 1997.* The recommendations regarding institutional and legal reform, however, have not yet been implemented as of the submission of this report.

Jewish religious institutions and the State

546. To understand the degree to which Israel implements its obligation under this article with regard to the Jewish population, it is necessary first to delineate some of the main features of the complicated institutional and legal context in which Jewish religious law operates in a "Jewish and democratic" State.

547. Judaism has always been at once a religious doctrine and way of life, a race, a nation (am yisrael), a shared culture and history. Until the modern era, virtually the entire Jewish people lived according to the precepts of Jewish religious law (Halakha), which encompasses not only a religious doctrine and form of worship, but a comprehensive body of binding laws extending to every area of private, religious and civic life. Religious life took place within traditional communities in the various countries to which the Jewish people were dispersed, and these communities had clerical institutions with effective power to interpret and enforce compliance with the religious law. Within this self-contained legal and social system, certain secular laws promulgated by the gentile rulers in places where Jewish communities dwelled were recognized as binding in various degrees. While throughout its history Judaism has been witness to heterodox doctrinal factions, such as the pre-Paulian Christians, the Essenes, and the seventeenth century Sabbatean movement, and to differences of religious doctrine within the mainstream communities, it has been primarily over the last 250 years that Jews around the world have developed a spectrum of approaches to religious practice, ranging from total non-observance to complete observance of Halakhic law. In the West, the Reform, Conservative and Reconstructionist movements emerged as voluntary alternatives to orthodox religious practice. For most of the twentieth century, and especially following the annihilation of European Jewish communities during the Second World War, the vast majority of the world Jewish population has not been orthodox in religious practice.

* The Circassian community, which is grouped together with the Druze community for administrative purposes, essentially consists of one town, Kfar Kama, which received NIS 500,000 in funding from the Ministry of Religious Affairs in 1996, and a significant portion of the population of another town, Rehania.

548. In the land of Israel, even prior to the establishment of the State, the lack of a complete overlap between Judaism as a people and as a religion has taken on a more pronounced, political cast than elsewhere. Although Zionism as an ideology and political movement had deep roots in the Jewish tradition, in which the return to the Holy Land and re-establishment of the ancient religious order has held a central eschatological role, Zionism was in practice largely a non-religious movement, with a minority of religiously observant members; in the eyes of many of its adherents, moreover, it was viewed explicitly as an alternative path of collective self-realization to the rigorously observant life of Jewish communities in the Diaspora. This dominant strand of Zionism sought to create a homeland for the Jewish people as a whole, regardless of their level of religious observance. On the other hand, the orthodox Jewish communities viewed the establishment of a Jewish homeland through the prism of the religious tradition, in which it was clear that the comprehensive system of Halakha, emanating under orthodox doctrine from divine revelation at Mount Sinai, would be the law of the land. In scholarly debates through the centuries, the notion of a Jewish Government in the land of Israel based upon a secular outlook was never even considered. See, e.g., Maimonides, Law of Stolen and Lost Things, V, 11; Maimonides, Commentary on the Mishna, Nedarim 27 b. Thus, the emergence of a largely secular Zionist movement and the establishment of a Jewish State based on secular laws which are to a great extent inconsistent with Halakha set two legal orders against one another, each demanding primacy. Some segments of the orthodox community do not recognize the legitimacy of the State's secular institutions, preferring, for example, to bring their disputes before rabbinical tribunals rather than the civil courts. At the same time, religious political parties have been represented in every Knesset since the establishment of the State - they comprise roughly one fifth of the current Knesset - and take a substantial role in the administration of Government at all levels. The religious parties work through the political and legislative processes to further the adoption of Jewish religious law as the law of the land, or at least the law that binds the Jewish population, in a variety of areas. Most of the observant community, however, as well as the State itself, have attempted to accommodate the two competing systems of law within a democratic framework.

549. The nature of the accommodation between Jewish religious law and the institutions of the secular State is based upon the following principles:

(a) As it does with regard to the other recognized religious communities, the State recognizes the jurisdiction of the Rabbinical Courts over all Jewish citizens and residents (not only those who were voluntary members of the community, as during the Mandatory period) in matters of personal status, including exclusive jurisdiction over matters of marriage and divorce. These courts decide according to the precepts of Halakha;

(b) In certain other matters of personal status the provisions of Halakha are binding and are applied even in the civil courts;

(c) The State confers powers upon the Chief Rabbinate, which is organized under law and supported by State funds;

(d) At the local level, the State confers powers on religious councils, which are similarly organized under law and funded in part by the State;

(e) The State attends to religious education, and there is a network of State religious schools in addition to the State non-religious schools and independent religious school systems, which also receive government funding in many cases;

(f) The Ministry of Religious Affairs may use part of its budget for the religious needs of the Jewish community, as it may do for other religious communities, and the Minister may enact regulations with a religious purpose if so authorized by the Knesset;

(g) The Knesset has enacted laws with a religious background regarding the Sabbath and Jewish holidays, dietary laws, and other matters;

(h) The Israel Defence Forces has a chaplaincy, and applies Jewish dietary laws to the entire army;

(i) The actions of all State institutions that act in the religious sphere - both government offices and organizations operating under colour of Knesset legislation - are subject to review by the High Court of Justice, including in matters related to the application of religious law;

(j) The provisions of certain secular laws, such as regarding equal rights for women, adoption of children and spousal property relations, are binding on the religious as well as the civil courts. According to Supreme Court precedents, a judgement of a religious court contrary to such secular provisions of law is in excess of its jurisdiction. (See H.C.J. 202/57, Sidis v. President of Supreme Rabbinical Court, 12 P.D. 1528.)

550. As discussed in more detail below, these arrangements are not always easily reconciled with the broad principle of religious freedom. While it should be emphasized that the State protects the freedom of Jews and non-Jews alike to engage in their chosen form of religious practice or worship, and that in most cases the application of religious precepts by institutions of the State, such as in the prohibition of work on religious days of rest, does not compel Jews or non-Jews to violate the precepts of their chosen faith, it remains the case that some religious norms - primarily in matters of personal status, such as marriage, divorce, conversion and burial - are applied in a manner that infringes upon the right of persons not to be bound by religious laws which they do not espouse. In addition, the non-orthodox Jewish communities have had to struggle to attain a level of recognition equal to that of the orthodox communities in matters of worship and religious authority.

Legal sources guaranteeing religious freedom

551. Article 83 of the Palestine Order in Council, 1922, enacted during the Mandatory period, provides:

"All persons in Palestine shall enjoy full liberty of conscience, and free exercise of their forms of worship subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals. Each religious community recognized by the Government shall enjoy autonomy for the internal affairs of the community subject to the provisions of any Ordinance or Order issued by the High Commissioner."

The individual right to freedom of religion is not specifically mentioned, but is included in the broad term "freedom of conscience", which encompasses all forms of belief and points of view. C.A. 450/70, Rogozinski v. State of Israel, 26(1) P.D. 129, 134. During the Mandatory period, article 17 of the Order-in-Council provided that any legislation limiting absolute freedom of religion and worship in all forms, except as necessary to ensure public order and morals, should be null and void; it also prohibited legislation discriminating in any manner between persons on grounds of nationality, religion or language. Since the establishment of the State, however, the Order-in-Council no longer occupies the supreme position which it held under the Mandate: although it still is binding on the executive branch, the Knesset, by virtue of its sovereignty as a legislative body, is not prevented from passing laws in contravention of it. Israel's Declaration of Independence specifically guarantees freedom of religion and conscience to all citizens of the State, without regard to religion, race or sex. However, as noted elsewhere in this report, the Declaration does not have the force of a Constitution or an ordinary statute; the principles which it enunciates are basically of declarative effect, although they have served as an important interpretive tool in the formation of Israel's development of human rights. Indeed, it may be noted that one of the most recalcitrant problems that has prevented the consolidation and enactment of a constitution since Israel's founding has been the difficulty of resolving at the political level the fundamental tension between orthodox and secular conceptions of a Jewish State, as discussed above. Although the Supreme Court, in the absence of a proper constitution, has established several fundamental human rights in Israeli law by giving constitutive weight to the fact, as stated in the Declaration of Independence, that Israel was founded as a democracy, it has ruled that it will interpret statutes in a manner which accords with the Declaration and upholds freedom of conscience and religion in its entirety only to the extent that there is doubt as to the legislative will of the Knesset in this regard (ibid., p. 136).

552. The enactment in 1992 of Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty may well help provide a firmer constitutional foothold for the protection of religious freedom. Although the Basic Law does not explicitly mention religious freedom as one of the fundamental rights protected therein, it does provide that fundamental human rights shall be interpreted "in the spirit of the principles in the Declaration of Independence" (sect. 1), which, as mentioned, specifically include the freedom of religion and conscience. Moreover, the express intention of the Basic Law is to establish "the values of the State of Israel as a Jewish and democratic State" (sect. 1 A); setting aside for the moment the difficulties in reconciling these two defining characteristics of the State, the constitutive principle of democracy, which the Supreme Court has used to buttress the existence of the right to freedom of religion and conscience, has now been given clear grounding in a constitutional statute. While the Court has not yet ruled squarely on the issue, several decisions and other writings by some of the Justices indicate support for the view that the general right to human dignity protected by the Basic Law includes freedom of religion and conscience (as well as other freedoms contained in the Declaration, such as the right to equal treatment and freedom of speech), which thus has the status of a supreme, constitutional legal norm. See, e.g., H.C.J. 5016/96, Horev v. Minister of Transportation (97 Takdin 421 (1997)) ["Religious coercion constitutes a violation of human dignity" (Barak, P.)]; H.C.J. 5394/92, Huppert v. "Yad Vashem", 48(3) P.D. 353.

553. Specific laws protecting freedom of worship, holy places and religious sentiments. Apart from the general guarantees of religious freedom described above, several specific statutory provisions help ensure the freedom of religious worship and the safekeeping of and access to holy places for members of all faiths in Israel. Several of these are contained in sections 170-173 of the Penal Law, 5737-1977, as follows:

"170. A person who destroys, damages or desecrates a place of worship or any object which is held sacred by a group of persons with the intention of thereby reviling their religion or with the knowledge that they are likely to consider such destruction, damage or desecration as an insult to their religion is liable to imprisonment for three years.

"171. A person who willfully and without proving lawful justification or excuse disturbs any meeting of persons lawfully assembled for religious worship or wilfully assaults a person officiating at any such meeting or any of the persons there assembled is liable to imprisonment for one year.

"172. A person who, with the intention of wounding the feelings of a person or of reviling his religion or with the knowledge that the feelings of a person are likely to be wounded or his religion likely to be insulted thereby, trespasses on any place of worship or burial or any place set apart for funeral rites or as a depository for the remains of the dead or offers any indignity to a human corpse or causes disturbance to any persons assembled for a funeral is liable to imprisonment for three years.

"173. A person who does any of the following is liable to imprisonment for one year:

"(1) publishes any print, writing, picture or effigy calculated to outrage the religious feelings or belief of other persons;

"(2) utters in a public place and in the hearing of another person any word or sound calculated to outrage his religious feelings or belief."

554. The Protection of Holy Places Law, 5727-1967, expands on the sanctions contained in the Penal Law by mandating that holy places of all religions be protected from any "desecration or other violations", and prohibiting any act that might impair the free access of members of all religions to their holy places or "anything likely to violate the feelings of the members of the different religions with regard to those places". Desecration or other violations of holy places are punishable by seven years' imprisonment; impairment of free access and violation of feelings as mentioned above are punishable by five years' imprisonment. It should be noted that the protection of religious feelings of religious groups under this law, unlike the parallel provisions in the Penal Law, does not require actual criminal intent or knowledge, but suffices with constructive knowledge by the offender that such an emotional violation is likely to be caused as a result of his conduct. In addition, several other statutes aim to protect holy sites against physical harm by requiring the consent and guidelines of the Minister of Religious Affairs as a precondition to the performance of certain actions in or near a holy place, such as excavations (Mines Ordinance, sect. 8 (1) (a)), drainage plans (Drainage and Protection Against Flooding Law, 5718-1958, sect. 22 (a)), water and sewage systems (Water Law, 5719-1959, sects. 70-71; Local Authorities (Sewage) Law, 5722-1962, sect. 14), declaring the site a national garden (National Parks and Nature Reserves Law, 5723-1963, sects. 4-5), vacating and demolishing houses (Building and Evacuation of Rehabilitation Areas Law, 5725-1965, sect. 51), and so on. Furthermore, most of the holy places are also antiquities sites, and thus are protected by similar provisions in the Antiquities Law, 5738-1978.

555. In practice, the access to holy places and freedom of worship for members of all faiths is very strictly guarded, with a few exceptions relating to the maintenance of public order or morals. Within the Christian community, there are no holy sites at which freedom of access and worship is restricted by the State. It may be noted that the physical control over some parts of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the nearby Deir Sultan chapel, the Tomb of St. Mary and the Church of the Ascension have been the subject of centuries-old internal disputes between different Christian denominations, and give rise to a certain limitation on freedom of access to members of rival denominations; the State, however, has adopted a consistent policy of non-intervention in these disputes.

556. The Temple Mount. Access to the Temple Mount, Judaism's holiest site and the third-most holy site to Muslims, has been treated with special caution and sensitivity due to the extreme volatility of the religious and political passions that surround the place, which have more than once erupted into violence. For this reason, among others, in the aftermath of the June 1967 war in which Israel took control of the Old City of Jerusalem, administration of the Temple Mount was left in the hands of the Muslimwakf. Moreover, the Government made the extraordinary decision to prohibit Jews from praying on the Temple Mount, as opposed to merely visiting the site. In the many petitions which have been filed over the years on behalf of Jewish groups seeking to pray on or near the Mount, the Supreme Court has held that while Jews have the fundamental right to pray on the Temple Mount, the realization of that right is conditional upon the approval of the government authorities, who must decide in each case whether an exception may be made to the general policy against allowing Jews to realize their right to pray, for reasons of public order and safety. In general, the Court decides in such cases whether the realization of the right of Jews to worship where they choose bears a "near certainty" of severe violation of public order or safety, and whether time, place and manner restrictions may enable a realization of the right without thus endangering public order. The Court has dismissed a series of petitions by Jewish groups seeking to pray on the Temple Mount; in one case the Court allowed a single Jew to pray on his own on the Temple Mount, provided that the prayer did not amount to "a demonstration", later limiting this right of individual prayer by holding that it could not be performed with prayer accessories such as a prayer book, prayer shawl or phylacteries. H.C.J. 99/76, Harluf Cohen v. Minister of Police, 30(2) P.D. 505; H.C.J. 67/93, "Kach" Movement et al. v. Minister for Religious Affairs et al., 47(2) P.D. 1. In other cases the Court has allowed Jewish groups to pray outside one of the gates to the Temple Mount subject to restrictions of time, place, number of worshippers and so on. See, e.g., H.C.J. 292/83, Temple Mount Faithful v. Commander of Police for the Jerusalem Region, 38(2) P.D. 449. On the other hand, the Police reserves the right to exclude individual Muslims from entering the Temple Mount for prayers when it deems it necessary to do so to maintain public order and safety, typically during periods of particularly heightened tension or unrest, when thousands of worshippers come for Friday prayers. Under current practice, the Police maintain checkpoints outside the gates to the Temple Mount, and thewakf screens entrants inside the gates on "religious" grounds, such as appropriateness of dress or exclusion of non-Muslims during prayer times.

557. Adjoining the Temple Mount on the west side is the site known as the Western Wall, widely considered to be the most important existing place of prayer for Jews. During virtually the whole period since the destruction of the Second Temple in 70 A.D., Jews were not allowed to enter the Temple Mount by those who controlled it, and this remnant of the retaining wall of the ancient Jewish Temple became the most tangible link to the bedrock of the Jewish religion and history. Because of its centrality, the Wall has recently become the focus of conflicts regarding the right of all Jews to conduct prayer services according to their chosen manner of worship.

558. In 1989, a group of women who sought to pray at the Wall in a manner unacceptable to the majority of orthodox Jewry, carrying the scrolls of the Torah, wearing prayer shawls and reading from the Torah, were violently evicted from the Wall area by orthodox worshippers. Two groups of women, who came to be known as the "Women of the Wall", petitioned the High Court of Justice to allow them to worship as they wished. H.C.J. 257/89, 2410/90, Hoffman v. Custodian of the Western Wall, 48(2) P.D. 265. During the hearing of the petition, the Regulations for the Protection of Holy Places for Jews, 5741-1981, were amended to prohibit the "conduct of a religious ceremony [at the Western Wall] in a manner not in accordance with the practice of the place, which violates the feelings of the worshipping public towards the place". A divided Court rejected the womens' petitions, subject to the recommendation of the President of the Court that a public committee be set up to find an arrangement which would not prevent the women from praying as they wished, and at the same time would reduce the injury to the feelings of the orthodox majority of worshippers at the Wall. The Committee thus established during the course of the legal proceedings also considered a request by Reform and Conservative Jewish groups to hold prayer services according to their custom in the rear section of the Western Wall plaza, after attempts to do so were disrupted due to the fact that these groups conduct their services without any physical separation between men and women. In April 1996, the Committee recommended that an "alternative plaza" be established for the prayer services of the women and Reform groups, outside of the Old City walls; it also recommended that the Reform and Conservative groups not be allowed to pray in groups according to their custom in the Wall plaza itself, even during separate prayer times. As of the submission of this report, a permanent solution has yet to be reached on the matter, which pits the right to freedom of worship of different segments of the Jewish community against one another. The division of opinion among the members of the three-judge Supreme Court panel rather aptly reflects not only the tension between these statutory rights, but also the underlying tension between religious and secular conceptions of the Jewish homeland. One of the Justices, D.P. Elon argued that the womens' manner of prayer violates Jewish religious law, such that allowing it would be tantamount to a desecration of the holiness of the site. Because allowing the women to pray as they wished, in Justice Elon's view, would violate the freedom of worship of orthodox persons, it was necessary to find "the broadest common denominator among all worshippers"; and as the vast majority of worshippers at the Wall are Orthodox, Justice Elon argued that their interest should be preferred, both because of the fear of violation of public order that the womens' services would arouse, and because such services would effectively prevent the orthodox worshippers from holding their services at the site. J. Levin, in a minority opinion, rejected the "broadest common denominator" approach of Justice Elon as giving a monopoly to one religious outlook on the issue over all others; instead, he argued that the proper balance must be found to enable all Jewish groups to pray in groups at the Wall without overly violating the feelings of other worshippers. P. Shamgar joined Justice Elon's opinion, but maintained that the "broadest common denominator" requires finding arrangements that "ensure freedom of access and freedom of worship to everyone, without forcing a unique form of conduct on those who do not desire it and without harm to the feelings of the faithful".

559. The rule in the "Women of the Wall" judgement may not extend beyond the special case of the Western Wall. In an earlier decision, for example, the Court declared null and void the refusal of a local religious council to lease a public hall to a non-Orthodox group for holiday prayer services due to its deviance from orthodox practice. H.C.J. 262/62, Peretz v. Kfar Shmaryahu Religious Council, 16 P.D. 2101.

Imposition of secular norms in contravention of religious law or custom

560. In certain instances, overriding public policy interests are deemed to justify the imposition of certain secular norms on the entire population, as is the case with the criminal prohibition of bigamy. In rejecting an appeal against the prohibition of bigamy as constituting religious compulsion against the Muslim community, for whom bigamy is not forbidden by religious law, J. Silberg, noted that "the meaning of 'freedom of religion' is not freedom to do what the religion allows, but rather freedom to do what the religion requires". H.C.J. 49/54, Milchem v. Judge of the Shari'a Court, 8 P.D. 910, 913. Over the years, however, the Court has fully recognized the right to freedom from religion in such a manner that this earlier holding may not still be controlling (see H.C.J. 5016/96, Horev v. Minister of Transportation, supra).

561. Until 1980, the Anatomy and Pathology Law, 5713-1953, permitted the performance of autopsies without the prior consent of the deceased or the consent of his or her family. Following vehement opposition to the law by the Orthodox Jewish community, the law was amended to prevent autopsies in the event that a family member or, in appropriate circumstances, a relative, opposes such a procedure, except when it is necessary to use part of the body of the deceased to save another human life. The problem becomes more thorny when the secular norms are imposed upon authorized religious institutions rather than private persons. To take one example, the Supreme Court held the Rabbinical Court, in adjudicating questions of division of marital property in the context of a divorce suit, must rule in accordance with civil law principles guaranteeing the woman's right to an equal share in the marital estate, based on the notion that marital property issues are not among those issues of "personal status" which are to be governed by religious law. H.C.J. 1000/92, Bavli v. Great Rabbinical Court of Appeal, 48(2) P.D. 221. Such a decision departs from the principles of Jewish law, under which the divorcing husband must pay his wife the amount stipulated in the formal religious marriage contract, unless released from that obligation according to other Halakhic principles.

562. Employment and days of rest. The State of Israel fully guarantees the right of employees to observe the holidays and days of weekly rest prescribed by their religion. The Law and Administration Ordinance, 1948, provides that "Sabbath [Saturday] and Jewish festivals ... shall be the established days of rest in the State of Israel. Non-Jews shall have the right to observe days of rest on their Sabbath and holidays." The Hours of Work and Rest Law, 5711-1951, gives every worker the right to a day of weekly rest which shall not be less than 36 consecutive hours. Non-Jews may choose the day on which they take their weekly rest, either on Friday, Saturday or Sunday (sect. 9); this rule allows employees to adapt their work schedules, if they wish, to that of an employer who observes a different day of rest. Moreover, employers are forbidden from refusing to hire an employee who, upon being hired, notifies the employer that he or she will not work on the weekly day of rest for reasons of religious observance; nor may employers require an employee to obligate to work on the day of weekly rest as a condition of employment. These restrictions do not apply to enterprises responsible for public security, State security, public health or the provision of certain essential services, as well as hotels and the electric utility. The law further forbids employment of workers, or the performance of work by owners of workshops or industrial undertakings, on the day of rest unless a permit is received. The Minister for Labour and Social Affairs issues permits for Sabbath work if he is convinced that interruption of work will impair the defence of the State, the protection of property or bodily integrity, or if it will cause significant economic loss or substantially impair the provision of essential services. A ministerial committee is authorized to give general permits to classes of enterprises, which it has done, for example, for hotels and guest houses, medical institutions and lifeguards. Members of cooperative societies, such as kibbutzim, may perform work on the Sabbath which is connected with maintenance of necessary services.

563. Public restrictions on the Sabbath and holidays While the right of individual employees to observe their religious holidays and rest days is protected as described above, the mandatory closing of businesses and services on the Jewish Sabbath has been the source of contention between the religious and secular segments of the Jewish community. Until the late 1980s, local and municipal authorities tended to prohibit opening of businesses on the Jewish Sabbath and holidays by virtue of their general authority to oversee the opening and closing of various businesses. In 1987, for the first time, the Jerusalem Magistrate's Court held that a municipal regulation forbidding the opening of cinemas on the Sabbath was ultra vires, and that municipalities could properly enact such regulations only if explicitly empowered to do so by the Knesset. Cr.F. (Jerusalem) 3471/87, State of Israel v. Kaplan et al., P.M. 5748, vol. 2, p. 265. Following this judgement, the Knesset amended the Municipalities Ordinance to give municipalities such explicit authority to take account of considerations related to religious tradition in ordering the opening or closing of businesses on the Sabbath. Municipalities Ordinance (Amendment)(No. 40) Law, 5750-1990. As a practical matter, cinemas in the larger cities, including Tel Aviv, Haifa and, to an extent, Jerusalem, are open on the Sabbath eve. In one city, Netanya, a municipal regulation was enacted to prohibit operation of cinemas on the Sabbath eve unless their operation is intended "for cultural or educational needs". In a petition challenging the validity of these regulations, the Supreme Court ruled that cinema is undoubtedly a "cultural and educational activity", and thus would not be prohibited. H.C.J. 5073, 5609, 5799/91, Israel Theatres Ltd. et al. v. Netanya Municipality, 47(3) P.D. 192.

564. Public bus transportation does not operate on the Sabbath, except for the cities of Eilat and Haifa, according to long-established custom which has not been altered by municipal by-laws. In those cities in which public bus transportation does not operate, there are private bus and taxi companies which, to a certain extent, serve the needs of the secular population. The Ben-Gurion International Airport has incoming and outgoing flights on the Sabbath, but El Al, Israel's national airline, has no flights on the Sabbath, by virtue of a government decision; nor does Israel Railways operate on the Sabbath.

565. Another hotly contested issue, primarily in Jerusalem, has been the closing of traffic arteries which pass through Orthodox Jewish neighbourhoods on the Sabbath and holidays. Many side streets in such neighbourhoods have long been closed on the Sabbath, so as not to violate the sanctity of the Sabbath for the Orthodox community, for whom all manner of labour (including motor transportation) is prohibited on the Sabbath. Over the past several years the principal conflict has been over the efforts to close a major traffic artery, Bar Ilan Street, during the Sabbath or at least during prayer times. Several petitions have been filed in this matter to the High Court of Justice (see, e.g., H.C.J. 5016/96, Horev v. Minister of Transportation, supra), and two separate public committees have been formed to recommend solutions to the problem. The Court has ruled that the Transportation Inspector, who is authorized to decide on closing major traffic arteries, may take the needs of the religious public into consideration, but must balance those needs against the freedom of movement of the non-Orthodox community. The street is currently closed during times of prayer, and open during the rest of the Sabbath.

566. While Israel recognizes the need to balance between the needs and interests of religious and non-religious communities in imposing general restrictions on the Sabbath such as those described above, the restrictions themselves do not impair the freedom of religion the secular community as such - certainly in the sense of the freedom to practise their religion in the manner they choose, but also in the sense of freedom from religious compulsion, provided that reasonable alternatives exist for the activities and services so restricted.

567. Conversion. In general every person in Israel has the right to change his or her religion, and the State intervenes neither in the individual's decision to adopt or change religion, nor in the decision of a particular religion to accept any person as a member. H.C.J. 1031/93, Pesarro (Goldstein) v. Minister of Interior. In certain circumstances, however, a formal official approval of conversion may be demanded, such as when the conversion would result in the conferral of particular rights as a result of one's religious status (primarily under the Law of Return). (ibid.) One must distinguish here between recognition of conversion by the secular organs of the State and approval of a change in religion for purposes of matters of personal status, which are determined by religious law. In Israel, the religion and nationality of every resident and citizen are registered in the Population Register, and these details appear on one's identity card. While the State may act to ensure, for example, that conversions to Judaism have not been made fictitiously for purely economic reasons, i.e. to receive the economic benefits given to an oleh under the Law of Return, the registration as Jews of persons who have converted to Judaism under the auspices of non-Orthodox religious bodies has been and remains a controversial issue, due to the opposition of the Orthodox religious parties to recognizing such conversions. In the late 1980s, the Supreme Court ruled that the conversion to Judaism of an oleh, so long as it were supported by a document evidencing conversion by any Jewish community abroad, Orthodox or not, would be sufficient for registration as a Jew. H.C.J. 264/87, Sephardi Torah Guardians Movement v. Director of Population Administration et al 43(2) 726. In the Goldstein case noted above, the Supreme Court ruled, in a majority decision, that the Ministry of Interior also had no authority to refuse to recognize non-Orthodox conversions to Judaism performed inside Israel for purposes of recognition as an oleh under the Law of Return. However, the Court stopped short of ordering the Interior Ministry to register the petitioner as a Jew and to give her the status of an oleh. Under current law, then, the legitimacy of a non-Orthodox conversion to Judaism may not be denied by State authorities acting under colour of a civil, secular law. On the other hand, the Rabbinical Courts, which apply Jewish religious law in matters of personal status, do not recognize persons converted by a non-Orthodox body as Jews. Thus, a person who was converted to Judaism abroad by a non-Orthodox body, who immigrated to Israel under the Law of Return and who was registered as a Jew in the Population Register will be unable to marry in Israel if the Rabbinate does not recognize the conversion.

568. The application of religious law to matters of personal status also affects the right of secular Jewish families who adopted children abroad to convert them to Judaism according to their chosen manner of observance. Rabbinical courts tend to pose Orthodox conditions for the conversion of such children, such as the observance of dietary laws and Sabbath, and the obligation to give the child an Orthodox education. As of the submission of this report a petition is pending in the High Court of Justice which seeks recognition for non-Orthodox conversions of such adopted children. The right of adoption generally, it may be noted, is reserved in Israel to a wife and husband together, and if the adoption is to be done in Israel the child must be of the same religion as the parents. Such requirements pose special difficulty for couples who do not share the same religion, or for those whose marriage may not be recognized by the law of the religion in question, or in the case of a child whose religion is not clear.

569. As of the time of submission of this report, legislative efforts are being made by religious parties to require all conversions to Judaism performed in Israel, at least, to be approved by an Orthodox body. At the same time, a committee appointed by the Prime Minister is attempting to work out a compromise arrangement.

570. Burial. As a practical matter, until very recently, all cemeteries in Israel, except those of kibbutzim, have been managed by religious institutions of the various religious communities. If a person who dies is not a member of a religious community which administers graveyards, or has expressed the wish not to be buried according to religious tradition, a special solution must be found, often at the kibbutzim. Jewish burial grounds are managed by officially appointed Orthodox burial societies (hevrot kadisha), which will bury only those who are Jewish according to Orthodox religious law, and according to an Orthodox ceremony. In a 1992 judgement, the Supreme Court ordered the Minister for Religious Affairs to recognize a non-Orthodox Jewish burial society, and also ordered the Israel Land Administration to allot land for such a non-Orthodox graveyard. In April 1996, the first "alternative" graveyard for Jews was inaugurated in Beersheba. Additional licences for alternative burial services have been granted in Jerusalem and Haifa. During that year a new law was enacted guaranteeing the right of citizens to be buried according to their chosen manner of observance in alternative graveyards (Right to Alternative Civil Burial Law, 1996). The Law requires that such alternative graveyards be established in various areas around the country, sufficiently distant from one another so that all those who wish to take advantage of the new arrangement may reasonably be able to do so.

571. Public restrictions related to Jewish dietary laws To a certain extent, Jewish dietary laws are applied by Knesset legislation or municipal by-laws to the general public or to the Jewish community. For example, public institutions which are not located in non-Jewish towns or localities, such as hospitals, the army, and government offices, serve kosher food (i.e. food which meets Jewish religious dietary laws) to enable religious Jews as well as non-religious Jews and members of other faiths to use these facilities. In addition, certain tenets of the Jewish dietary laws are enforced to varying degrees over the Jewish population. For example, the Swine-Raising Prohibition Law, 1962, forbids the raising, maintaining or slaughtering of pigs except in specified (generally Christian) towns, scientific research institutes and zoos. Local and municipal authorities may, by municipal legislation, restrict or forbid the sale of pork and pork food products within their jurisdiction. Local Authorities (Special Authorization) Law, 5716-1956. Although many cities have enacted municipal regulations forbidding the sale of pork under the above Law, these regulations are generally not enforced. In two currently pending court cases, sweeping prohibitions on the sale of pork have been challenged as unreasonably extreme in infringing upon the freedom from religion of the secular public and the "freedom of occupation" of storeowners who wish to sell pork.

572. Jewish dietary laws are also imposed on the importing of all meat from abroad. Because of a relative shortage of grazing land, most beef in Israel is imported from abroad, primarily from Argentina. Until 1992 the Government managed the import of meat, and allowed only kosher meat (that is, meat slaughtered and prepared according to the requirements of Jewish religious law) to be brought into the country. When the Government decided to privatize the importation of meat, it undertook to enact implementing legislation which would grant import licences only to those who obligated to import kosher meat exclusively. The Supreme Court overturned this decision as an excessive infringement on the freedom of non-Orthodox persons not to be subject to religious norms, and indicated that the decision also unduly restricted the freedom of occupation of companies who wished to import non-kosher meat. In the aftermath of this judgement the Knesset enacted a law which forbade importation of meat to Israel without a kashrut certificate from the Chief Rabbinate, and a parallel amendment to Basic Law: Freedom of Occupation, which specifically empowered the Knesset to enact laws in contravention of the Basic Law. As of the submission of this report, a petition is pending in the Supreme Court regarding the legality of the new laws.

573. Jewish dietary laws also forbid Jews from eating leavened bread or other foods which do not meet special strict dietary norms during the holiday of Passover. In 1986 a special law was enacted forbidding Jewish storeowners to display leavened bread publicly for purposes of sale or consumption. Passover (Prohibition of Hametz) Law, 5746-1986. In practice, however, this law does not prevent the sale of leavened bread or other "not-kosher for Passover" products in restaurants or in many stores, and the law does not apply in non-Jewish cities or neighbourhoods.

574. The Chief Rabbinate is responsible under law for giving certificates of compliance with Jewish dietary laws to restaurants and banquet halls. Such regulation is intended to ensure that any person who observes the religious dietary laws can rely on the proprietor's representation that the food is in fact kosher. However, under current practice the Rabbinate may condition the issuing of a kashrut certificate on matters of religious law unrelated to the dietary laws themselves; for example, it will refuse to grant akashrut certificate to a restaurant which is open on the Sabbath, even if the dietary laws are strictly observed. In this manner, the control by the Rabbinate of kashrut supervision constitutes a preference of Orthodox Jewish practice over non-Orthodox Jewish practice, such as that of traditional but non-Orthodox Jews who may keep the dietary laws but be willing to eat at a place which is open on the Sabbath. The Supreme Court has demonstrated a willingness to intervene in certain cases of imposition of other religious norms by means of withholding the kashrut certificate. In H.C.J. 465/89, Raskin v. Jerusalem Religious Council, 44(2) P.D. 673, the Court, in accepting the petition of a belly-dancer against the policy of the Jerusalem Religious Council under which it refused to issue kashrut certificates to proprietors of banquet halls or restaurants that allowed "immodest" performances (including belly-dancing), held that the authority to issue kashrut certificates does not empower the Rabbinate to enforce a particular type of behaviour at the place in question, even if such behavior violates their religious precepts.

575. The right to marry. Israel entered a reservation upon ratifying the Covenant, explaining that matters of personal status are governed in Israel by the religious law of the parties concerned, and that to the extent that such law is inconsistent with its obligations under the Covenant, Israel reserves the right to apply that law.

576. Under the religious law applied in matters of marriage and divorce, many couples are prevented from being able to realize their right to marry in Israel, including couples who belong to different religions, or persons who may not marry the person of their choice due to prohibitions deriving from religious law. Many persons, particularly immigrants from the former Soviet Union and Ethiopia, who have been granted oleh status and registered as Jews in the Population Registry, are nevertheless not considered by the Rabbinate to be Jews according to Halakha and thus may not marry in Israel. These limitations on marriage have potential implications on the rights of any children born to parents whose marriage may not be recognized under religious law. In addition, Jewish religious law severely limits the ability of women in certain circumstances to get a divorce if the husband refuses, or to annul the marriage in the event that the husband's mental illness prevents him from being able to give a decree of divorce, or if the husband disappears but his death is not strictly confirmed.

577. Participation of women and non-Orthodox representatives on religious councils. Local and regional religious councils, which operate pursuant to the Jewish Religious Services Law, are responsible for the carrying out of certain religious functions in their community. Among other things, the religious councils are involved in the performance of wedding ceremonies, maintenance and operation of ritual baths (mikvot), support for synagogues and other religious institutions, and arranging cultural activities of a religious nature. These religious councils have been controlled exclusively by members of the Orthodox community. In a landmark Supreme Court judgement in 1988, the Court ordered a religious council to take on a woman as a member, whose appointment they had opposed precisely on those grounds. H.C.J. 153/87, Shakdiel v. Minister of Religious Affairs et al., 42(2) P.D. 221. Several petitions have also been filed against the refusal to appoint non-Orthodox representatives to several religious councils. Although the Supreme Court has more than once invalidated the appointment of religious councils in Jerusalem and elsewhere, in which a non-Orthodox candidate was rejected because his or her form of religious belief and practice approach was deemed unacceptable by members of the council, the various entities responsible for appointing the religious councils in Jerusalem and Tel-Aviv (that is, the municipal council, the local rabbinate and the Minister of Religious Affairs) have not yet implemented the Court's decisions. H.C.J. 699,955,1025/89, Hoffman et al. v. Jerusalem Municipal Council et al. 48(1) P.D. 678. On the other hand, these petitions have resulted in the appointment of Reform and Conservative Jewish candidates to the religious council in Haifa, Netanya and elsewhere.

578. Funding and support of non-Orthodox institutions Until very recently, local and national government funding for Jewish religious services was considered virtually the exclusive domain of Orthodox Jewish institutions. As a result of a petition filed by Reform institutions, the Ministry of Religious Affairs amended its funding allocation criteria to guarantee funding of Orthodox and non-Orthodox institutions on an equal basis. The allocation of public land for use by non-Orthodox religious institutions on an equal basis with Orthodox institutions has also been the source of controversy in several towns and cities.

579. Education. The State maintains two parallel educational systems - State (secular) and State Religious. In addition, officially recognized alternative schools have been established by the Reform and Conservative Jewish movements at the primary and middle-school level, and certain Orthodox communities maintain their own educational institutions, some of which are recognized by the State. Some non-Jewish communities also maintain religious schools. Parents are free to choose which school their children will attend.

580. Conscientious objection. As discussed under article 8, women have a statutory right to claim exemption from military service due to reasons of conscience. Men may be exempted from military service at the discretion of the military authorities.

Article 19 - Freedom of opinion and expression

581. Introduction. As with other fundamental rights, the right to freedom of opinion and expression is not explicitly protected in Israel by constitutional legislation. On the basis of the commitment to maintain a democratic polity in Israel's Declaration of Independence, the Supreme Court has developed and buttressed the freedom of speech and opinion in its various manifestations when interpreting statutory provisions granting official powers over specific forms of expression. The right to free speech has long been recognized as a supreme, constitutional norm, and any limitations on its exercise for reasons related to public order or the rights and reputation of others must meet strict standards of scrutiny regarding their justification and scope. While Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty, enacted in 1992, does not directly articulate the right to freedom of expression and opinion, it has been suggested that these rights fall within the ambit of the general right to human dignity protected by the Basic Law, as the stated purpose of the Law is to protect and entrench the right to human dignity as required in a democracy and in the light of the principles contained in the Proclamation of Independence. See, e.g., L.C.A. 2687/92, Geva v. Walt Disney Co., 48(10) P.D. 251; H.C.J. 2481/93, Dayan v. Wilk et al., 94(1) Takdin 1170; C.A. 105/92 Re'em Engineers and Contractors Ltd. v. Upper Nazareth Municipality, 47(5) P.D. 189, 201. The explicit judicial inclusion of the right to free expression within the scope of the Basic Law would enable the Supreme Court to invalidate new Knesset laws or ministerial regulations which do not meet the strict doctrinal limitations on official interference in freedom of expression which have been developed by the Court.

582. At the same time, a new draft Basic Law: Freedom of Expression and Association prepared at the Ministry of Justice is being circulated prior to submission to the Ministerial Committee on Legislation. The draft Basic Law articulates a basic right to freedom of expression and opinion, including the right to publish information and opinions, as well as to the related freedoms of assembly, procession, demonstration, association, and creative expression.

583. Certain aspects of the right to freedom of expression and opinion are discussed under articles 17 (the right to privacy and reputation), 18 (freedom of religious expression), 20 (racist or inflammatory speech), 21 (the right to demonstrate and to hold assemblies), 22 (the freedom of association) and 25 (freedom of political expression in the electoral process, including campaign financing). The discussion under the present article will address those facets of the freedom of expression not discussed elsewhere in this report.

584. Freedom of expression: the "near certainty" test With several exceptions which are discussed below, freedom of expression may be restricted by official action only if, in the specific circumstances of the case, the speech in question gives rise at least to a "near certainty" that the public peace, broadly construed, will be endangered, and only if other means to lessen the severity or the likelihood of such a violation of public peace are of no avail. H.C.J. 73/53, Kol Ha'am Ltd. v. Minister of Interior, 7 P.D. 871, 888. Over the years, the "near certainty" test has been used to balance the fundamental right of free expression against other properly compelling governmental interests which fall under the general rubric of "public peace", such as the security and existence of the State, public order and safety, and the respect for public morals and sentiments. In certain contexts, the "near certainty" test has been tightened to require that the anticipated violation of the public peace be not only virtually certain to occur, but also "severe and serious" in itself, to justify a prior restraint on expression. See, e.g., H.C.J. 14/86, La'or v. Council for Review of Films and Plays, 41(1) P.D. 421, 432 (reversal of decision banning public performance of a play). The application of this doctrine to various forms of expression is discussed below. As discussed under article 20, in criminal prosecutions stemming from prohibited forms of speech, such as incitement to racism, a less demanding standard of proof is applied than the "near certainty" test for prior restraints.

585. The near certainty test is not applied to certain classes of instances where the freedom of expression clashes with other compelling interests which the court has deemed to have equal status, or where the legislature has indicated its preference for a different balance between the contending interests. In balancing between the integrity of the judicial process and the principle of free expression - primarily in the context of the prohibition on publishing accounts of matters which are sub judice under the Courts Law [Consolidated Version], 5744-1984 - a "reasonable possibility" that the publication in question will substantially affect the integrity of the proceedings is sufficient to justify a restraint on expression. Cr.A. 696/81, Azulai v. State of Israel, 37 (2) 565. When the freedom of speech collides with the right to privacy or reputation, the Supreme Court has held that time, place and manner restrictions should be employed so as to allow substantial realization of both basic rights. C.A. 723/74, Israel Electric Company Ltd. v. Ha'aretz Publishing Ltd., 31(2) 281; F.H. 9/77 Israel Electric Company Ltd. v. Ha'aretz Publishing Ltd., 32(3) 337.

586. Legislative prohibitions on specific types of speech Certain types of speech are expressly forbidden by Knesset legislation. Among others, the Prevention of Terrorism Ordinance, 5708-1948, prohibits written or oral publication of any praise, support or encouragement of violent acts which are likely to cause the death or injury of a person, of threats of such violent acts, or of terrorist organizations (sect. 4). The name, picture, address or other identifying information regarding a minor who is either a defendant or witness in a criminal trial, or a complainant or victim in criminal trials involving certain sex-related offences, may not be published without explicit permission of the court (Courts Law [Consolidated Version], 5744-1984, sect. 70). Similar provisions require confidentiality with respect to the names or other information enabling identification of adopted children and their adoptive or biological parents (Child Adoption Law, 5741-1981, sect. 34). The Denial of the Holocaust Prohibition Law, 5746-1986, prescribes a maximum punishment of five years' imprisonment for publications which deny or minimize the extent of the crimes against the Jewish people and humanity committed during the Nazi regime in Germany, with the intent of defending perpetrators of such crimes or of praising or identifying with them; indictments under this law may be filed only with the consent of the Attorney-General. In addition, various provisions in the Penal Law, 5737-1977, prohibit seditious utterances, incitement to racism, insult of a public servant, and speech which is calculated to outrage the religious beliefs of those who hear it.

587. In addition, several specific matters, such as the deliberations and decisions of the Ministerial Committee on Security Affairs and other information bearing on State security have been declared secret by decision of the Government, to the extent that such publication of such information is not permitted by the responsible minister. See, e.g., Yalkut Hapirsumim 1611 (1970), part 2, p. 1590; Yalkut Hapirsumim 1287 (1966), part 2, p. 1874.

588. Political expression. Since the beginnings of free speech jurisprudence in Israel in the early 1950s, and increasingly during the 1970s and 1980s, the freedom of political opinion and of expression of a political nature has been rigorously defended by Israeli courts as essential to the existence of democracy. The Supreme Court has consistently upheld the principle that freedom of expression entails the freedom not only to express popular opinions, but also those which the majority despises (E.A. 2,3/84, Neiman v. Chair of the Central Elections Committee of the Eleventh Knesset 39(2) P.D. 225, 277), as well as the freedom to criticize government action (H.C.J. 351/72, Kenan v. Council for Review of Films and Plays, 26(2) P.D. 811). The Court has overturned a blanket ban by the Israel Broadcast Authority on television appearances by the late MK Meir Kahane based on the content of his political views (H.C.J. 399/85, Kahane v. The Managing Committee of the Israel Broadcast Authority, 41(3) 255). As discussed under article 20, the Court also annulled the disqualification of Rabbi Kahane's Kach party and of the Progressive List for Peace from running in Knesset elections based on the content of their political platforms, however objectionable they were to certain segments of the population (E.A. 2,3/84, Neiman, supra). In the aftermath of the latter decision, the Knesset amended Basic Law: Knesset and the Knesset by-laws to enable disqualification of a party's list of candidates if its platform clearly may be shown to be racist, to violate democracy or to negate the existence of the State as the State of the Jewish people. During the subsequent Knesset election campaign, the Court upheld the disqualification of the Kach party list on grounds of racism, and denied a challenge to the approval of the Progressive List for Peace. E.A. 1/88, Neiman v. Chair of the Central Elections Committee of the Twelfth Knesset 42 (4) 177. In addition, the Penal Law was amended to prohibit publication of any utterance for the purpose of inciting to racism (sect. 144 B), whether or not the publication is true or actually resulted in racism.

589. In general, the prosecutorial policy of the Attorney-General's Office has been to protect the principle of free speech by refraining as much as possible from filing criminal charges for speech which may fall within the offences noted above. On the basis of this policy, the Attorney-General decided not to indict a former Chief Rabbi who declared that Jewish religious law requires soldiers to refuse to obey any order to evacuate Jewish settlements, and the Attorney-General's decision was upheld by the Supreme Court. H.C.J. 588/94, Schlanger v. Attorney-General, 48(3) P.D. 40. This prosecutorial policy underwent a certain change over the past several years, particularly following the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin in November 1995. Earlier that year, for the first time, a person was charged and convicted of publishing incitement to racism, based on an article discussing the religious law relating to the killing of non-Jews (Cr.F. (J-m) 251/94 State of Israel v. Elba (4 April 1995)); the trial court held that to convict the defendant it was not necessary to prove a "near certainty" that the article in question would lead to further racist acts. Similarly, three persons were convicted of publishing praise for acts of violence after having voiced support for the massacre of Muslim worshippers at the Tomb of the Patriarchs in Hebron in 1994 (Cr.A. 116/95, Tadmor v. State of Israel (7 September 1995)). Two youths who, several weeks prior to Prime Minister Rabin's assassination, published and distributed a flyer picturing Rabin in an S.S. uniform were convicted of defamation, insult of a public official, support of a terrorist organization and defacing of property, and received suspended sentences of imprisonment. In addition, several rabbis were investigated on suspicion of issuing religious rulings mandating the killing of Rabin, but were not indicted due to insufficient evidence. In these and other cases, the Attorney-General deemed that the speech in question gave rise to a near certainty of a violation of public order. A directive was subsequently issued which made the opening of any investigation into cases involving suspected praise of the assassination conditional on the consent of the head of the Israel Police Investigations Department.

Freedom of the press

590. Licensing of print media. The legislative framework in which the print media operates in Israel dates from the Mandatory period, and may be said to stand somewhat at odds with the full-bodied protection of freedom of expression developed by the Supreme Court in post-independence Israel. The Press Ordinance, 1933, was enacted by the Mandatory authorities in the aftermath of the 1929 riots by the Arab population, and was motivated to a significant degree by the findings of a commission of inquiry which held that inflammatory articles in the press played a crucial role in inciting the passions of the population. See Report on the Commission On the Palestine Disturbances of August 1929 (the "Shaw Report"), Cmnd. 3530, p. 90, 167. Later on, as the tensions between the Mandatory authorities and the local population intensified, the British High Commissioner enacted additional administrative restrictions on licensing of print media in the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945. Under the still-valid Mandatory legislation, both newspapers and printing presses which publish them must have a licence to operate; newspapers are defined very broadly as "... any publication ... published in Palestine for sale or free distribution at irregular or irregular intervals" (Press Ordinance, sect. 2). Licensing thus became an effective means of regulating almost all print media in the country, with the exception of books and one-time pamphlets. A licence is granted only if the proprietor and editor meet a series of qualifications, such as having reached 25 years of age, passed matriculation exams and showing ability to speak, read and write in the language in which the newspaper is printed; the Minister of Interior has discretion to waive these personal requirements.

591. The ministerial control over issuing and repealing of newspaper licences under the Mandatory legislation is very broad. The District Commissioner at the Ministry of the Interior may refuse to issue a licence, and need not give reasons for its decisions (Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, Regulation 94). Persons who publish or edit a newspaper without a licence are subject to criminal sanctions. In addition, a licence may be suspended or annulled on a broad array of grounds, some of which are purely technical, such as if the licence is not used for three months after being issued, if notice is not given of the appointment of a new editor or of the intention of the owners of the paper to leave Israel, if the owners of a daily newspaper fail to publish at least 12 consecutive issues, excluding holidays, in each calendar month, or if non-daily publications do not fulfil comparable frequency requirements. Under section 19 of the Press Ordinance, the Minister of the Interior may suspend publication of a newspaper if, in his opinion, it has published information which is likely to endanger the public peace, seditious expression, or "false news ... or rumours calculated ... to create alarm and despondency"; while the Minister may warn the paper in advance of his intention to suspend publication, he is not required to do so. The courts are empowered to close down or suspend the activity of newspapers and printing presses, as well as to disqualify a person from owning or editing a paper, if they were convicted of seditious libel (Press Ordinance, sect. 23). Newspapers are also obligated under the Press Ordinance to publish any denial issued by the Government pertaining to information previously published in the paper, as well as any official announcements free of charge. In addition to governmental control of local newspapers, the Press Ordinance empowers the Minister of Interior to regulate the entry of foreign printed material into the country which is deemed likely to endanger the public peace.

592. Since Israel's independence, the administrative and criminal sanctions of the Mandatory legislation regarding licensing of newspapers have largely fallen into disuse, and, with a few exceptions, their application has been significantly narrowed by the case law. The requirement to print official announcements and responses has never been enforced. Criminal sanctions for sedition or for publication without a licence have very rarely been employed. Due to the extremely broad definition of newspapers in the Press Ordinance, the licensing requirement is often not applied, particularly with regard to smaller publications. Beginning with the landmark Kol Ha'am judgement in 1953, in which the Supreme Court overturned the closure of the Hebrew and Arabic Communist dailies for severe criticism of then-Foreign Minister Abba Eban, the power of the Minister of Interior to suspend publication of a newspaper has been made subject to the "near certainty" test discussed above. Over the last 20 years, the Supreme Court has only once upheld, despite the doctrines protecting freedom of expression, the closure of a newspaper under section 19 of the Press Ordinance due to the near-certainty that continued publication would endanger the public peace. H.C.J. 644/81 Omar International Inc., New York v. Minister of Interior, 36(1) P.D. 227, 234. In 1994, the licence of Al-Biyan, an Arabic newspaper published in Jerusalem, was permanently revoked due to suspected connections with the Hamas terrorist organization. On the other hand, the parallel power of the District Commissioner under the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, to order the closure of a newspaper or to revoke its permit without giving reasons therefor has been used several times since Israel's independence. While the Supreme Court has repeatedly and severely criticized such sweeping power as "a drastic, even draconian provision, enacted by a colonial regime, [which] does not accord with fundamental principles of a democratic State regarding freedom of speech and expression" (see, e.g., H.C.J. 2/79, Al'Asad v. Minister of Interior, 36(1) P.D. 505, 513), the extent of judicial review of such decisions is limited in those instances in which the District Commissioner does not give reasons for the closure. As an admittedly partial remedy to this problem, the Court generally uses its powers to inspect, in camera, privileged security-related information on which the Commissioner has based his decision, to review whether it indeed justifies such a drastic restriction on the freedom of expression. See, e.g., H.C.J. 322/81, Mah'ul v. District Commissioner, Jerusalem District, 37(1) P.D. 789.

593. Military censorship and the "Editors' Committee". In addition to the powers of the District Commissioner mentioned above, the Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, also give the Chief Military Censor broad powers to oversee publications in the print and electronic media. Under those regulations, the Censor may require any person involved in publication of information or opinions to submit such material for his review and approval, and the Censor may forbid publication of any material which "is likely, or may be likely, to injure ... the defence of Israel, the public peace or public order" (Regulations 87 (1), 97 (1)). The Censor also has the power to confiscate or forbid the use of printing presses used to publish material which he has not previously approved. Moreover, one may not publish any notice or other symbols indicating that the Censor has amended an article or broadcast prior to publication, without the Censor's consent.

594. The Supreme Court has strictly limited the powers of the Censor to impose administrative sanctions against the press. In the landmark Schnitzer case, the Court overturned the decision of the Censor to forbid publication by a local Hebrew-language paper of an article highly critical of the head of the Institute for Intelligence and Special Functions (the Mossad) shortly before the end of his tenure. Dismissing claims that the publication would harm the functioning of the Mossad at all levels, and that by focusing attention on the head of the Mossad it would substantially endanger his personal security, the Court held that only a near certainty of a substantial, grave injury to public peace or State security could justify prior censorship. H.C.J. 680/88, Schnitzer v. Chief Military Censor, 42(4) P.D. 617.

595. In practice, the Censor does not exercise his powers against those newspapers which are members of an informal "Editors' Committee" which maintains an agreement with the Minister of Defence regarding censorship matters. The Editors' Committee originated in 1950, and included the major Hebrew-language dailies as well as the English-language daily Jerusalem Post. Under this agreement, the Censor obligated not to impose administrative sanctions, such as closure, against the member newspapers, and to disqualify only distinctly security-related information from publication, as opposed to information bearing on the maintenance of public peace and order; the newspapers, on their part, agreed to self-censorship in military matters that might harm State security, and not to file petitions against the Censor's decisions in the High Court of Justice. The agreement was amended several times over the years, and gave rise to different treatment between those papers which were members of the Editors' Committee and those which were not.

596. In the aftermath of the Schnitzer judgement noted above, the agreement between the "Editors' Committee" and the Minister of Defence was amended to restrict the Censor's powers only to those instances in which there is a "near certainty that the publication will result in serious harm to the security of the State" (sect. 1 of the agreement); moreover, military censorship would not be applied to "political matters, opinions, interpretation, evaluations or any other matter unless they contain or allow one to derive security-related information" (sect. 2 of the agreement). Until recently, the agreement provided for internal review of the Censor's decisions, by a special committee composed of one representative of the military, the press and the public, respectively, in lieu of review by the High Court of Justice.

597. With regard to those newspapers which are not party to the "Editors' Committee" agreement, the Censor typically issues an order requiring the editors to submit news articles on matters specified in the order.

598. The "Editors' Committee" agreement was substantially amended in May 1996, following a report prepared under the auspices of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee. Among other things, the agreement preserves the right of all media to file petitions against the Censor in the High Court of Justice; it clarifies the limitation of military censorship to matters clearly related to State security; it allows all media to quote freely from items previously published in Israel or abroad; and it established a Censorship Appeals Committee, headed by a retired Supreme Court Justice. Under the procedures in the agreement, the Censor cannot appeal decisions by the Committee, while the newspaper can appeal to the Supreme Court if it wishes. The new "Editors' Committee" agreement applies to all media in Israel, whether or not they are members of the "Editors' Committee".

599. Broadcast Media. Until the late 1980s, there was only one television station, a public body under the auspices of the Israel Broadcast Authority, and several radio stations, including "Kol Israel", also part of the Broadcast Authority, and "Galei Zahal", run as a division within the Israel Defence Forces. Between 1986 and 1990, the Knesset enacted several laws which provided for cable television broadcasts, including original programming, pay-per-view television, and the creation of a second television channel in which programming is carried out by private franchisees. Cable broadcasts bring unedited programming by satellite from around the globe into the homes of Israelis, including from Jordan, Morocco, Turkey, the Russia Federation, several European countries, India and the United States. In 1995, the Government began to issue franchises for local radio stations around the country. These developments have changed the face of broadcast media in Israel, and by greatly expanding the range and variety of sources of broadcasted information, they have made an important practical contribution to the freedom of expression in Israel.

600. The Israel Broadcast Authority (IBA) is a public body which operates under the Broadcast Authority Law, 1965. It bears a statutory obligation to broadcast "reliable information" on current events and "to make room for appropriate expression of different views and opinions current among the public" (Broadcast Authority Law, sect. 4). Because of its statutory role as a forum for different views and ideas, the Broadcast Authority bears not only a duty to broadcast, but also to enable reasonable reception of its broadcasts, so that it may effectively promote the principle of free expression. H.C.J. 3472/92, Brand v. Minister of Communications, 47(3) 143. The Authority's policies are determined by a managing committee and a plenary appointed by the Government from various political parties according to their representation in the Knesset. As a public authority, its actions are reviewable for administrative legality by the High Court of Justice.

601. The willingness of the Supreme Court to intervene in the Authority's broadcast decisions depends in part on the type of expression involved. If the broadcast decision is based on artistic or professional considerations, then the Court will almost never intervene in the exercise of the editor's discretion. In contrast, if the IBA decides not to broadcast a commercial advertisement, his decision may be reviewed for discrimination or reasonableness. H.C.J. 606/93, Kidum Enterprises and Publishers (1981) Ltd. v. Broadcast Authority, 48(2) 1. Decisions by the Authority to prevent airing of a particular person or political group on content-based grounds have been overturned twice by the Court, first in the decision during the early 1980s not to air interviews with persons who were associated with the PLO, which Israel had not yet recognized at the time (H.C.J. 243/82, Zichroni v. Managing Committee of the Broadcast Authority, 37(1) P.D. 757), and later in the refusal of the Authority to broadcast interviews with MK Meir Kahane, so as to prevent exploitation of government-controlled media for purposes of racist incitement, as discussed above under this article. In general, however, the Court will intervene in the Authority's broadcast decisions only in rare instances, when the harm to important public interests is quite severe. See, e.g., H.C.J. 606/93, Kidum, supra; H.C.J. 2437/92, Lev v. Minister of Education and Culture, 46(3) P.D. 756 (petition against changing the day of broadcast of a particular news programme denied); H.C.J. 1/81, Shiran v. Broadcast Authority, 35(3) P.D. 365 (a documentary on Zionist history which allegedly failed to present adequately the contribution of Oriental Jewry did not give rise to patent illegality or a near certainty that the public peace would be violated, which would justify a court order to prevent the broadcast).

602. Whereas the IBA is funded by a license fee on all television owners and a tax on car owners, the new second television channel and local radio stations established under the Second Television and Radio Broadcast Authority Law, 1990, are operated by private franchisees and funded through sale of commercial broadcast time. In recognition of the power given to the franchisees, and the risks of concentrating ownership of the media in the hands of a small number of dominant economic enterprises with vested economic or political interests, the law places a series of restrictions on the franchisees, regarding both the ownership of the company holding the franchise and the content of broadcasts. No company may hold a franchise to broadcast on the second television channel or local radio if it also holds a franchise for cable broadcasts; if a single person has more than 30 per cent of a particular form of control in the company; or if more than 24 per cent of the franchisee is owned by a newspaper publisher or a company that owns a controlling share of a newspaper (sect. 40 (B) of the Law). In addition, a local radio franchise may not be given to any person or entity which has an ownership interest, directly or indirectly, in a newspaper or a company that holds a television broadcasting franchise (sect. 40 (C) of the Law). Similar provisions apply to cable franchisees. Concession holders are expressly forbidden from broadcasting any "incitement to racism, discrimination or substantial harm to a person or a group of people on the basis of their religious, national, sexual or ethnic affiliation, their way of life or origin"; nor may they broadcast any party-political propaganda, except for approved election broadcasts during Knesset campaigns. The owners of the franchise are strictly forbidden from airing their own personal views, as well as those of the directors or other parties holding an interest in the franchisee. The managing council of the Second Broadcast Authority has promulgated detailed ethical rules which impose upon franchisees, inter alia, a duty to promote responsibly the principles of free expression and the right of the public to receive information, including the right to express deviant or unpopular views (Second Television and Radio Authority Rules (Ethics in Television and Radio Broadcasts), 1994, sect. 2); the duty not to refrain from airing "information for which there is a public interest" (sect. 3 of the Rules); the duty to maintain fair, objective, accurate and balanced broadcasts (sects. 5-7); and the duty to provide persons criticized with an opportunity for proper response (sects. 9 and 10).

603. All Israeli broadcast media are subject to military censorship in security-related matters in the same manner as the press, as well as to regulation regarding the content of films, dramatic and artistic programmes, as discussed below under this article. Foreign broadcast media, however, are not subject to military censorship.

604. The right to receive information. In a long line of precedents, the Supreme Court has clearly articulated the right of the public to receive information as an essential facet of the freedom of expression, and hence crucial to the maintenance of a democracy. This "right to know" has been held to entail the publicizing of the decisions and actions of government authorities and the access of the media to information held by public bodies on matters of public interest, even absent a specific statutory duty of disclosure. H.C.J. 5771/93, Citrin v. Minister of Justice 48(1) P.D. 661. It also has been held to require the disclosure to individuals of information affecting them personally, such as employers' files, medical reports or information relating to legal proceedings to which the person is a party. See, e.g., H.C.J. Shapira v. District Committee of the Chamber of Advocates, Jerusalem, 25(1) P.D. 352 ("documents received by the authority in the course of exercising its authority under law must be open before the involved party"); H.C.J. 337/66, Fital v. Appraisal Committee, Holon Municipality, 21(1) P.D. 69. Only if the disclosure of such information is expressly prohibited by law, or would violate compelling interests such as the right to privacy, State security, foreign relations, or certain private economic interests, or the information is privileged under law, may the right to receive information be qualified. Perhaps the most distinctive application of the public's right to know occurred in the Shalit case, in which the Supreme Court held that agreements between political parties, Knesset factions or individual Knesset members pertaining to the formation of government coalitions must be made public, unless there is a near certainty that certain fundamental public interests will be severely harmed. H.C.J. 1601/90, Shalit v. Peres et al., 44(3) P.D. 353.

